provost (pro-vist) n. Scottish version of mayor, being chief magistrate, chairman of the town council and civic head (from Old English).

the Provost (thu-pro-vist) n. Hawick's first Provost was George Wilson in 1861 after the council was reconstituted following the Police and Improvement Act of that year. The normal term of office is 3 years. After Reorganisation in 1975, it was decided to continue to appoint a local Councillor to perform the ceremonial role. The title used was Ex-Provost, while the old Provost (Atkinson) continued, then the new incumbent was named Honorary Provost. The duties of the current Honorary Provost include chairing the Provost's Council, acting as civic head during the Common Riding, selecting the Common Riding Chief Guest and representing Hawick as civic head at Common Ridings and similar ceremonies in neighbouring towns. The following is the full list: George Wilson 1861–68; George Hardie Fraser 1868–71; John Nichol 1871–74; Edward Wilson 1874–75; Robert Ewen 1875–78; Robert Fraser Watson 1878–87; Robert Milligan 1887–90; George Hogg 1890–93; Walter Scott Barrie 1893–96; Robert Mitchell 1896–1902; John Melrose 1902–19; George Heron Wilson 1919–22; James Renwick 1922–28; William Scott Nichol 1928–31; David Fraser 1931–38; J.A.C. the Provost's Breakfast (thu-pro-vists-brek-fist) n. ceremonial breakfast taking place traditionally in the Town Hall on the Friday morning of the Common Riding, and including the Magistrates, Councillors and other invited guests. The event was inaugurated by Provost Watson in 1885 at his home at Wilton Bank, and held in the Council Chambers from 1888. Unlike most other events, speeches are prohibited. The Cornet and his guests breakfast separately, formerly in the Tower Inn.

the Provost's Chain (thu-pro-vists-chān) n. chain of office of the Hawick Provost, first worn by Provost Melrose in 1906 along with the ceremonial robe. It was purchased through public subscription, initiated by the Callants' Club. The design is in the 'renaissance' style, in 15 carat gold, wighing about 30 ounces. It consists of 30 parts linked together, 14 of which are shields for the names of Provosts, 8 are thistles with the motto 'Nemo me impune lacesset' and the last 8 are circular wreaths of oak leaves bearing an ornamental 'H' and mural coronets with the sword and scales of justice. The monogram of the Provost forms the back link of the collar, while the badge of the Callant's Club in enamel forms the front link. The badge that hangs from the chain measures $4\frac{1}{2}$ by 3 inches and is an enamel version of the Burgh Arms. The design and manufacture were by Brock & Son, goldsmiths of Edinburgh. The Chain was in regular use until 1974, when it disappeared during the Common Riding Ball. Worth an estimated £7,000 at the time, its disappearance was a great mystery. The Callants' Club presented a replacement chain in 1979. However, the original was sent anonymously to the Provost in 2002.

the Provost's Cooncil (thu-pro-vists-koon-sul) n. Hawick Honorary Provost's Council, a group consisting of a number of local councillors with sepecific duties during the Common Riding. This body officially invite a young man to be Cornet each year, and its main objective is to fulfil Hawick's civic functions and ceremonies. It was formerly a sub-committee of the Town Council, but after Reorganisation became an honorary body, consisting of the regional (8 members) and community councillors (4 members) from the Hawick wards, who elect the Honorary Provost and 4 Honorary Bailies from among themselves.

the Provost's Lamp (thu-pro-vists-lawmp) n. an ornamental lamp which used to be mounted outside the Provost's house during his term of office, and at one time would be alight as a sign that he was at home. The first Provost who had the lamp was Robert Fraser Watson in 1882. Since Reorganisation it has been kept inside the Town the Provost's Room (thu-pro-vists-room) n. an upstairs chamber in the Town Hall, formerly used by the Provost and containing a complete set of photographs of Hawick's Provosts.

the Provost's Tent (thu-pro-vists-ten') n. refreshment tent in the centre of the racecourse at the Mair, where the Provost and councillors entertain their guests, a tradition started by Provost Renwick in the 1920s.

Prowett (prow-i') n. John William David (1826–90) son of framesmith William, he was perhaps born in Galloway. He married Jessie Leithead, who was from Hawick and their children included Henry, Jessie A., John, Elizabeth, William Ferdinand, Ann Catherine Mary and Alice Grace. He was living in Hampshire in 1861, with occupation 'Engineer Rn'. He is surely the 'Mr John Prowitt, engineer in H.M.'s navy' who in 1872 donated to the Museum: '28 Chinese and other copper coins, and a wooden shoe, from China; spear head, from Easter Island, Pacific; piece of lava and piles of hair, from the Sandwich Islands; piece of copper ore, from Chili; fish hook of the natives of Vancouver's Island; two figure paintings, from Jelta, on the Black Sea; and alligator's egg; and 3 curious sea shells'. He emigrated to America with his family in 1880 and died in Nebraska. His wife returned to Britain and died in Southsea in 1895. William (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick. He was involved in 1830 with an improvement whereby old frames could be made wider for producing shirts and undergarments rather than just hosiery. He was listed as a framesmith on O'Connell Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on O'Connell Street (labelled 'Prowat's backhouse') with his wife Mary and children Mary, John and Ann. By 1851 his wife was a widow, listed as a lodging house keeper, living with her son William's family and 8 lodgers. Their children included: William (b.1821/2), also a framesmith; Mary; Ann, who married Alexander Campbell in Hawick in 1846; and John (1826–90), who was an engineer in the Royal Navy. William (b.1821/2) born in Traqueer, Kirkcudbright, he was son of William and continued his father's framesmith business. In 1851 he was at 2 O'Connell Street (perhaps the modern No. 11). He married Sarah Anne Fabian and their children included: Mary Jane (b.1846/7); William Henry (b.1848/9), probably the Marine Engineer living in Southampton in 1891; and John Dodd (b.1850/1).

prowsie (prow-see) adj., arch. particular in dress or in work (also 'prossie'; noted by J. Jamieson).

the Pru (thu-proo) n. popular short form for the Prudential Life Assurance Company, in Hawick referring to the building by the 'coffin end' at the Horse. Although the insurance company moved out in the 1970s, the balcony still contains the word 'Prudential' carved in stone.

the P.S.A. (thu-pee-es-ā) n. organisation formed locally in 1910 to provide activities for the male youth of Hawick. The idea started in the Midlands of England in 1875, to provide non-denominational Sunday afternoon meetings to encourage young men away from public houses, the 'Pleasant Sunday Afternoon' brotherhood. A P.S.A. club started in Hawick in the 1890s, but that floundered and it was more firmly established in 1910. This was partly instigated by Hawick's Rev. William Ainslie, making inquiries about the Birmingham-based movement. Originally the Hawick club had a connection with the Congregational Kirk, but soon became an autonomous organisation. The club organised indoor games and other activities for young men. In particular it has a 'semi-junior' rugby team, for 16 to 18 year olds, founded in 1919 by D. Paterson, D. Stavert and Bailie A.J. Hislop. This makes them the oldest semi-junior rugby team in Scotland. The male voice choir was formed in 1932, with first conductor being William Elliot and first accompanist Robert Little. The clubrooms were on Teviot Crescent, providing indoor games facilities for boys from the age of 12. It was run by volunteers, basically providing a boys 'youth club', before local authorities thought about such things. The clubrooms had 7 billiard tables, carpet bowls and table tennis. The club also had a cricket team, a drama group and an orchestra at one time, and held an annual New Year's bowling tournament. When the clubrooms closed in 1961 the building was acquired by Barrie's knitwear and later demolished to make way for a supermarket. The rugby team and choir survive to this day (the choir being the only remaining P.S.A. choir in Britain). The rugby team won the semi-junior league in 1927/8, eventually winning 15 Border league championships and 2 Scottish championships. They were the first local junior rugby team to have their own pitch, acquiring some waste ground at Burnfoot in 1958, and building facilities there in 1960. The team is nicknamed 'the Peeskees', and plays in navy blue shirts with a gold hoop and navy socks with gold tops. Highlights include winning the Scottish Youth Championship in 1986/87 and again in 2003/04. In 2005 they played Hawick Wanderers in the Scottish Under 18 Cup at Murrayfield. In 2016 the rugby team effectively merged with the Wanderers, becoming Hawick Youth Rugby, with the teams training together and swapping roles as 'A' and 'B' teams in alternating years. Minute books and team photographs exist from 1919, and a booklet 'Memories of a Great Club' was printed for the 75th anniversary in 1994.

the P.S.A. Choir (thu-pee-es-ā-kwIr) n. male-voice choir associated with the 'Pleasant Sunday Afternoon' club. The choir was set up in 1932. The first conductor was William Elliot and the first accompanist was Robert Little (both men being organists in the Congregational Kirk). Later conductors included Bert Hutchison, Albert Budge, Eric Whitehead, W.R. Smith, Jeff Panes, John Leishman, Basil Deane, Ian Seeley, Susan Booth, Isaac MacRae and Ann Witherington. Accompanists have included Robert Little, Adam Ingles, A. Whitelaw, Agnes Young, Peggy Hunter, Nan Ellis, Brian Bonsor, Betty Scott, George Duthie and Linden Warburton. The choir has performed over the years with the Hawick Drama Club, Hawick Orchestral Society and the Saxhorn Band. During the war they performed concerts to raise money for the Red Cross. They have sung with many special guests, including Dame Isobel Baillie. They hold an annual dinner in November.

pu (poo) v., arch. to pull – '...The pith o' ideas pu'd a hauf-crack't brain frae' [JoHa], 'The guidman he pu'd doon the gun frae her staund ...' pubs (pubs) n., pl. public houses, establishments where alcoholic beverages are served. Hawick has had (at least) its fair share of these over the years, and they have formed a central part of the social and political life of the town. In earlier times there were many licensed establishments in some back room, known only by the name of the proprietor. In the year 1838/9 the number of licenses granted to inn-keepers, grocers and others in Hawick Parish was 53, with the vast majority undoubtedly in the Town itself. An incomplete list, including some popular names as well as official names (but excluding hotels and private clubs) is: the Albion Bar; the Athole Bar; the Balmoral; Barclay's; the Black Bull; Blondette's; the Blue Anchor; the Blue Bell; Bogart's; the Bridge Bar; the Britannia Airms; the British Public Hoose; the Buck Inn; the Bull & Butcher; Burnfit Roadhoose; the Burns Inn; Callaghan's; the Cannon Inn; Clinty's; the Coach an Horses; the Commercial Inn; the Cross Keys; Dalton's; Diesel's; the Douglas Airms; the Drop Inn; the Drumlanrig Bar; the Ewe an Lamb; the Exchange; the Ex-Pat; the Fiddle Inn; the Fleece Inn; Frankie's; Gentie's; the Glencairn Bar; the Golden Fleece; the Grapes; the Gretel; the Half-Moon Hotel; the Hare an Hoonds; the Harrow Inn; the High Level; Holland Hoose; the Imperial; the Inn Place; the Irish Harp; Jock Reid's; the Kazba, the King's Heid; the Mansfield Bar; the Mayfield Bar; the Melgund; the Monkeys; the Nag's Heid; the No. 10; the Oak Trei; the Office; the Ordnance Airms; the Pick Inn; the Plough Inn; the Punch Bowl; the Queen's Heid; the Railway Hotel; Robbie's; the Royal; the Royal Oak; the Salmon Inn; Scrumz; the Somewhere Else; the Stag's Heid; Stampers; the Station; St. Leonard's Vaults; the Swan Inn; the Teribus Airms; Thorterdykes; the Trinity Bar; the Trough Inn; the Union Inn; the Waverley; the West End Bar; the White Hart; the White Swan; the Wulton Bar – 'The pubs are bad – but clubs are worse, the people all did cry, Suppress the clubs, they're worse than pubs, they sell drink on the sly' [JCG].

puddin (pu-din, pu-dn, poo-din) n. sausage meat pudding, e.g. 'white puddin' – 'They'll hae oor puddens oot by turns, We'll get oor paiks! A' owre-the-heid o' Rabbie Burns, Yon king o' raiks!' [DH], 'For puddins black and white, Which were a sheer delight, Even the nuns came up fri St. Margaret's Home' [IWL].

Puddinburn (pu-din-burn) n. Puddingburn, a former tower and settlement off the Hermitage Water in Castleton Parish, perhaps close to the modern Paddington Sike. It could be the earthwork near the confluence of Paddington Sike with the Hermitage Water. It may be the 'Pantodene' listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 8 shillings and with tenant William Elliot. An English letter of 1584 mentions 'the Armstronges of Tinnes alias Puddyborne'; this makes it clear that at that time the Armstrongs of Tinnis and of Puddingburn were one and the same; this may suggest that Puddingburn was close to (or another name for) the Tinnis Burn, and not near Paddington Sike at all, or else simply that the Armstrongs of Tinnis also had a seat at Puddingburn. 'Sim of Puddinge burne' is mentioned in an English letter of 1600. It is probably the place transcribed as 'Podotoun' among the possessions of Francis Beattie in 1632. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. This was once a stronghold of the Armstrongs and mentioned in the ballad 'Dick o the Cow'. A note in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) records that the farm was then on the lands of Reidmoss (even though that lies far to the south), with the old farmhouse converted into a sheepfold – 'Then Dickie's come on for Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. E'en as fast as he might drie. – Now Dickie's come on for Pudding-burn, Where there were thirty Armstrongs and three. Fala, &c.' [CPM]. The poem also contains a reference to a habit of the Armstrongs that you would get no dinner if you failed to come when first summoned – 'Then it was the use of Pudding-burn, Fala, &c. And the house of Mangerton, all haill, These that came na at the first ca' They got nae mair meat t' the neist meal' [CPM] (labelled 'Paddowdemi' on Blaeu's 1654 map, it is possible it is the 'Potterlamport' on Sandison's c.1590 map and it is 'Paddiden' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Paddington Sike).

puddle (pu-dul) v., arch. to muddle along, mess about, work ones feet up and down – '... How still the puddlin' feetie lie, the buffy hands at rest!' [JT].

puff-an-darts (puf-in-dawrtz) n., arch. once popular game in which darts were propelled at a target by blowing through a small tube – 'There's pethers and potters, and gingergread stan's, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans ...' [DA].

puffed (pufd) adj. out of breath, exhausted – 'A'm fair puffed', 'A'm awfi puffed efter comin up they stair'.

Puffin Billy (pu-fin-bi-lee) n. nickname given to the first locomotive that was brought to Liddesdale in advance of the opening of the railway. It was said to be as big as a traction engine and with a 6-foot high chimney. It was an enormous struggle to bring it from Carlisle by road, with many mishaps along the way, including the death of the man in charge of the operation, Bill Smith, when it fell on top of him. It was brought to a location near Saughtree School where it was used as a sawmill for the railway works, and then taken by means of a temporary rail line from near the junction of the Caldron Burn and the Liddel to join the Border Counties Railway, where it was used in the construction project.

the Punch Bowl (thu-punch-bōl) n. inn situated at the rear of 27 High Street in the mid-19th century.

Punch Bowl Close (punch-bōl-klōs) n. 19th century popular name for the passageway at 27 High Street, which led to the Punch Bowl Inn. The name continued to be used long after the inn had closed.

punct (pungkt) n., arch. a point, item – '... And to the obseruing, keiping and fulfilling of al and sindry the punctis and artikillis abune vrittine ...' [SB1519].

punctually (pungk-tew-a-lee) adv., arch. strictly, to the point, with full attention – '... were most sharplie rebuked for breach of Sabbath, and both promised to keep ye Sabbath most punctually in time coming' [PR1724].

pund (pund) n. a pound weight (not now used for the monetary unit) – 'This morning it was the butchers, For half a pund o' mince ...' [AY], 'Sic days are gane, Alas, lang since – We dice wi daith For a pund o mince ...' [DH], note that the singular form is often used for the plural – 'hei weighs toonty pund mair is hei did last year', 'Sir, you'll receive my twa pund ten, Wi' what you call expenses, Sometimes misfortune humbles men, And brings them to their senses' [JR], 'Which sair'd his house o' meal an' groats, An' farm'd it a' for sax pund Scots' [JR].

pund (pund) n., arch. a pound in money (usually Scots money in older texts) – '... ane hundretht pundis at the compleitting of the said mariagis ...' [SB1519], '... sal pay 5 pundis for the blud, and 5 pundis for the bludwyte ...' [BR1640], '... and taking furth thereof nine or ten pundis money, quhilk she declared she had given for wairs to sindries ...' [BR1641], 'I'll gi' thee fifteen punds for the good horse, Fala, &c. To mak' that crown a pund, my Jamie gade to sea, And the crown and the pund were baith for me' [CPM], 'At last she took heart, and did stoutly declare – I'll hae five punds and ten at Copshawholm Fair' [DA] (the plural was usually spelled 'pundis' in the oldest documents).

punk (pungk) n., arch. a sound made by plucking a fiddle string – '... He'd gi' a punk, and look sae queer, Without a joke, You'd swore he spoke words plain and clear, At ilka stroke' [CPM].

puppy (pu-pee) n., arch. a poppy.

Purcell (pur-sel) n. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. Her lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £15. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1707 for weaver James Jolly, in 1708 for Andrew Richardson and Isobel Purcel (who was probably related to him), in 1711 and 1718 for weaver David Reid, and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the James born in 1678 to John and Cathering Scott. He was on the short-list for candidates to be Cornet in 1712 and was Cornet in 1713. In 1713 he was described as a wright who was one of the tradesmen chosen by the minister and heritors of Hawick to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He may have witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1731. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for George Richardson (probably his nephew). He may be the same James who was born in 1678 to John and Catherine Scott. He gave a house to James Richardson, son of his nephew George, who gave evidence regarding the Common in 1767. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a wright among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Catherine Scott, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670), Elspeth (b.1672) and James (b.1678). He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Stavert in 1684 and for weaver Andrew Dodds in 1689. Patrick recorded in 1567, along with Hector Turnbull 'in Turnbull' (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as other Turnbulls and Olivers from the same place. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. His name is given as 'Part Pursell' (spelled 'Pursel', 'Pursell' and 'Pursil').

Purdie (pur-dee) n. Richard (1805–70) originally from England, he was baker in Hawick who was an elder in the Relief Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead and working as a weaver. But by 1851 he was a baker at No. 3 Loan. He was listed as a baker on the Loan in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of weaver Walter Scott, and sister of William Scott, who became a successful businessman in New York. They appear to have had no surviving children. William (18th C.) resident at Todshaw. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1763), Walter (b.1765) and Mary (b.1767).

Purdom (pur-dum) n. Alexander (d.c.1788) son of Bailie Walter. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He married Meiron (or Marion) Scott of Boghall in 1725; her father was Richard Scott. Their children included: Christian (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); Richard (b.1731), probably the merchant in Hawick; John (b.1734); Margaret; and William (b.1741). The witnesses in 1728 were Henry Orrock and Dand Gray and in 1741 were 'late Bailie' Walter (his father) and merchant William Oliver. Alexander (b.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the son of shoemaker William who was born in 1771. He is probably the Alexander, son of William, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 and who was elected Cornet in 1797. He was listed as a shoemaker in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He is recorded as Bailie in 1824. He was recorded as a shoemaker on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Probably the same man was the shoemaker who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the 'A. Purdom' who owned property at about 48 High Street (and next to Robert's property at 46) on Wood's 1824 map. On of his children was buried in 1829. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Charlotte Smith and their children included Helen Elizabeth (b.1825) and William (b.1827). Alexander (19th C.) son of joiner Richard, he married Margaret (or Marion) Hunter in Hawick in 1850 and they emigrated to Canada. Their sons Thomas and Alexander established a legal firm of Purdom & Purdom in London, Ontario, and they had 2 other sons, Richard (b.1850) and John. Archibald (1762/3–1849) mason in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories (as 'Purdon', which must be an error). He was recorded as a head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. In the 1841 census he was living in the village with his children Isobel (or Isobel, 1804/5–83) and Gideon. He married Margaret Miller, who died in 1820, aged 44. His son Gideon erected a memorial to him and his wife in Ettleton Cemetery. Arthur (1819/20–63) son of Robert, labourer in Castleton. He was a Sergeant in the 9th Lancers, serving in the Punjab and through the Indian Mutiny. He retired in the position of Quartermaster-sergeant. In 1861 he was living with his parents at Longhaugh Cottage and listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. Charles McLaren, J.P. (1864–1928) son of Thomas. He became a joint agent of the National Bank of Scotland. Crystal (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Cristale Purdoun' along with 'John Purdoun' in a 'respite' of 1516 to William Elliot of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots, together with a large number of other men bound to them. David (15th C.) landowner in the Liddesdale area, who held the lands of 'Dalman', 'Bluntwood' and 'the Crouke'. In 1476 these lands were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may have been ancestor of the local Purdoms. Findlay (1867–1913) son of Town Clerk Thomas. He was a farmer at Tushielaw and at Borthaugh. He was one of the founding members of the Teviotdale Harriers in 1889. He died in Vancouver and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with Jamie, as well as 2 Waughs. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. Henry Leman 'Harry' (b.1879) son of Town Clerk Robert. He attended classes at St. Andrews University in 1896/7. He became a traveller with William Watson & Sons. He served with the K.O.S.B. during WWI. James 'Jamie' (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Waughs. His name was given as 'Jamy Purdome'. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. James (17th C.) proprietor of Milsington recorded in the 1650 list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley. He may have been married to Margaret Nichol and had sons Robert (b.1640) and James (b.1643). The baptism in 1640 was witnessed by Robert Scoon and Adam Laidlaw. In 1652 there is an account with the Buccleuch papers of the losses and damages he had sustained 'by the English army since Martinmas 1650'; this was probably Cromwell's army. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'John Purdoum' in a 'respite' in the Register of the Privy Seal given to Robert of Larristons and a large number of his kin and associates. 'Cristale Purdoun' is also listed. John (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving livestock eating someone's grain. He may well have been the father or grandfather of the Schoolmaster. John (1642/3–c.1725) Schoolmaster in Hawick in the latter part of the 17th century and early 18th. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1669 and took up his position in Hawick in that same year, following Mr. Chisholme, who briefly held the position after Walter Martin; he was thus perhaps the third of Hawick's Parish Schoolmasters.

He remained in the position for 54 years and finally retired in 1723 at the age of 80. For most of this time he taught in St. Mary's Kirk itself, with the graveyard as the school playground. He also served as reader in the kirk, as well as Session Clerk (writing the entries in the parish records in a beautiful hand for decades, ending at about the time of his death). He was already referred to as 'Mr' in 1673, 1675, 1676 and 1680 when he witnessed baptisms for James Newbie, John Elliot of Brugh, William Moscrop and William Laing. In 1674 he witnessed the baptism of a son of Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick, carried out by Rev. Francis Scott of Minto (and later Hassendean), with other witnesses being Rev. James Gledstains of Yetholm and Rev. John Chisholme of Lilliesleaf; they were presumably all strong Epicopalians. He was apparently injured during the siege of Drumlanrig Tower by the Covenanting army in 1679. He witnessed a baptism for George Young and Janet Purdom (perhaps his sister) in 1680. He was 'Mr John Purdom' in 1682 when he witnessed a couple of baptisms (one along with Walter) and in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for mason David Rutherford and in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Hardie. Also in 1689 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for Thomas (who was therefore presumably a close relative). In 1694 he was listed as 'Mr John Purdim' on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly in 1700. It is possible that he had an influence (in the pro-Covenanter direction) on the young Robert Paterson ('Old Mortality'). For about the last 12 years he taught in the Parish School at the same time as the Grammar School existed, although he had a diminished salary, and complained that he was 'deprived both of learning humanity (i.e. Latin) and of ye ordinary salarie (having no salarie allocat to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord's day, forenoon and afternoon, and being clerk to ye session)'. A further complaint was that even apart from the Grammar School, there were others teaching privately in the Town; this came to a head in 1713, when he had the Session proclaim that no one else 'should in ye future teach farther than ye Psalm-Book'. There were regular entries in the Session Records of small payments to him for teaching poor children. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Simon Mark. In 1722 he was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a schoolhouse for 4 years 'when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk'. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for John Simpson and in 1723 another for surgeon Walter Scott. He is probably the person referred to as 'Jo Purdom' in the 1723 Session records. In 1724 he was allowed £6 Scots for the rent of a house for the rest of his life (which proved not to be very long); the entry's tone suggests that he was still serving as Session Clerk at that time. It may be that the last entry in the 1711–25 book marks the end of his time; certainly the entries in 1726 are in a different hand. He is likely the John (recorded in the baptismal register as 'Mr', suggesting a position of importance in the Town) who married Margaret Scott and had children: Walter (b.1678); Janet (b.1680); Margaret (b.1680), who probably died young; James (b.1683); Margaret (again, b.1685), who married tailor Thomas Wilkie in 1720; and Elizabeth (b.1687), who may have married merchant William Chisholm. The 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter (probably the Bailie), suggesting he was a brother or other close relative and the 1685 baptism by Bailie William Laing and 'Mr' Walter Gledstains (presumably the Town Clerk). He appears to have married a second time, with children (to 'Mr' John, making it clear this was him) including Walter (b.1700), Marion (b.1705) and Anna (b.1709), with no mother named. The witnesses in 1700 were 'late Bailie' William Laing and James Falsyde and in 1709 were Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and Walter Elliot, Bailie Depute of the Regality of Hawick. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Little and their children included John (b.1760). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Beattie in Roberton in 1776 and their daughter Janet was baptised in Castleton in 1777. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Braidlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside along with William (possibly his brother). He was listed as manufacturer at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 (but not listed in 1840). The manufacturing business lasted until about 1837. He was listed along with William as a joint proprietor on the 1837 electoral roll. He may be the John who was married to Joan (or Jean) Douglas and had children Elizabeth, Euphemia, William, John, Agnes, Mary and Joan in the period 1816–32; Joan lived with her children at Damside in 1841. John (b.1821/2) son of John and Joan Douglas. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on Wilton Path, helped by his mother and his sister

Euphemia. He was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He is listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861, probably near the south end of the east side. In 1857 he donated to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox, found in Wulliestruther Moss. John (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Nichols and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1843. John (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Jessie Elliot and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1845. John Ritchie, O.B.E., J.P. (1862–1935) 4th son of Thomas, he was Depute Town Clerk in 1888, joint Town Clerk with his brother Robert from 1912, and then on his own 1924–36. He was honorary recruiting officer in WWI, Secretary of the War Memorial Committee, as well a Chairman of the War Pensions Committee, for which service he received the O.B.E. in 1920. He was also Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. In his younger days he was a keen member of the Volunteers and interested in sports, particularly golf and hiking. He married Annie Hume Turnbull (1865–1916), daughter of dyer Alexander Turnbull and Janet Armstrong Hume. Their only son was Capt. Thomas Laurence. Margaret (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1684 when her unnamed child was baptised. No father's name was given, and it is unclear if this was an error or the father was deceased or the child born illegitimately. The witnesses were William (probably a close relative) and George Young. Richard (b.1731) tailor and merchant in Hawick, son of Alexander and Marion Scott. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Chisholme. In 1779 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for William (who may have been a relative). He married Jane Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1761); Alexander (b.1762); Marion (b.1764); John (b.1766); Margaret (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1768); Marion (again, b.1772); Thomas (b.1773); Marion (again, b.1774); and Richard (b.1775). The witnesses in 1761 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were John Scott (presumably related to his wife, perhaps his father-in-law) and Thomas Wilkie, in 1764 were John Scott (again) and William (probably his brother), in 1766 were John Scott and Walter (probably another relative), in 1772 were James Scott (perhaps related to his wife) and Alexander (probably his father) and in 1773 were John Scott (again) and Thomas Wilkie (again). He was deceased in 1805 when the deaths of his daughters Marion and Agnes are recorded. Richard (1776–1841) joiner of Kirkstile. He was son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. In 1801 he was a wright on the ballot list for the Militia. He was listed on Silver Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 his address was given as 'Kirk Sytlefoot'. His wife was Isobella Elliot (c.1790–1845). His children were: Richard, joiner and lay preacher; John, shoemaker; Alexander, who emigrated to Canada; Jane; and Agnes. One of his children was buried in Hawick in 1829. Richard (1817/8–77) joiner on Kirkstyle, like his father. He was also known as a lay preacher. He was listed as a joiner on Silver Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He was an early member of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, who gave many teetotalism speeches around the area. He played an active part in the local Good Templar movement in the mid-19th century. He was one of the first Deacons in the Evanglical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848, was one of the first Trustees and the 2nd Secretary and 2nd Treasurer, and was the leading elder in the 1860s. In 1867 he donated 'two small serpents' to the Museum. He married Margaret Elliot in 1848 and their children included: Isabella (b.1849/50), who married George Wintrup; Richard; Elizabeth (b.1853/4); and Mary (b.1855/6). Some of his correspondence and diaries are in the Borders Archive. Robert (d.c.1686) tenant at 'Cartarburnfoot' when his will was recorded in 1686. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Grieve and their children were: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1674). Bailie Robert (1777–1862) son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver, he was a farmer and resident at 46 High Street. He appears on the 1797 Lieutenancy Book as son of Bailie Walter, in 1798 he is recorded having paid £10 to avoid serving, but in 1799 was balloted again, providing mason Thomas Scott as a substitute. He was Cornet in 1803, and later became a Magistrate. His father and paternal grandfather had both been Bailie Walter, inn-keepers in Hawick and 'Hilliesland Lairds', keeping cows in fields up past the Wellogate and selling milk in the town (and a pond beyond Hilliesland was popularly called 'Purdom's Pond' until fairly recent times). When Cornet, he was said to have been thrown from his horse near Hagishaa and taken into a house there to recover. As a result the route out to the Moor was changed to go along the now familiar Nipknowes road. He was the last of the family to hold the orchards and lands near the foot of what became Croft Road. He is shown on Wood's 1824 map as owner of fields and trees around Mart Street and North Bridge Street, as well as the property at 46 High Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is listed as a High Street farmer in Slater's 1852 directory. By 1851 he was listed as a retired farmer. In 1817 in Hobkirk Parish he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith and Mary Scott ('the Flower of Rankleburn'). Their children included: Walter, farmer; Thomas, Town Clerk; Mary, who married Robert Scott, farmer of Kinninghall and later Falnash; Agnes; Alexander; Robert; and several children who did not long survive. A daughter of his died in Hawick in 1840. A portrait of him exists. At the time of his death was the oldest living Cornet, Burgess and Magistrate. Robert (1792–1861) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was at Bygate in 1841 and Longhaugh in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes (1792–1880), daughter of William Beattie; she died at Hillside, Hawick. Their children included: Robert, who died in infancy; John (b.1817); Arthur (1818/9–63), who was Quartermaster-sergeant in the 9th Lancers; Laidlaw; William (1821/2–99), who died at St. Leonard's Cottage; Isabella (1823/4–36); Robert (again, b.1831); Agnes (b.1834), who married William Laidlaw; and perhaps a second Isabella. The family are mostly buried in Ettleton Kirkyard. Robert (1846–1924) eldest son of Thomas, he attended Wilton School and went on to become a local solicitor and banker. He may be the 'Master Robert Purdom' who in 1858 presented to the Archæological society a stag's antler dug up on Hilliesland Moss by his great-great-grandfather. He may be the Robert who was in Edinburgh in 1866 when he donated to the Museum an 'old deed, about 200 years old'. He was Depute Town Clerk in 1868 and served as Town Clerk 1886–1924. He turned down the chance of carrying the Flag at the Nipknowes in 1891, stating that he felt the official connection between the Town Clerk and the Common Riding had ceased about 50 years earlier. He gave a speech at the first public Colour-Bussing concert of 1894, thus being a predecessor of the Chief Guest. He was instrumental in founding the Golf Club in 1877, placing the notice asking for interested parties to meet in his office. He was the first Secretary and Treasurer of the club and also became Club Captain. In addition he was Secretary of the School of Art and of the Cottage Hospital. He was the main trustee for the estate of John Farrar Blenkhorn. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. In 1873 he married Helen Emma 'Nellie' Leman, daughter of a doctor in Ballarat, Victoria (and she died in 1924). Their children were: Thomas (b.c.1874), who moved to New Zealand; Henry Leman (b.1879), who was a traveller with William Watson & Sons; Robert Leman (1884/5–1917), also known as 'Robin', who died in WWI; Angus, who worked as a tea planter; Emma Mabel, who married Capt. Walter Francis Cochrane, Gala manufacturer, was mother of the epepidemiologist Archibald ('Archie') Leman Cochrane, and secondly married John Locke, Royal Navy engineer; and Elizabeth Neish, who married Rear-Adm. G. Pirie Thomson. He lived at Westwood, which was built for him about 1880. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. Robert Leman 'Robin' (1883/4–1917) son of Robert. He served in WWI with the 11th Battalion Royal Scots and was killed at Kemmel Hill. He is buried at Faubourg d'Amiens Cemetery, Arras. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Thome Purdoun in Brumesheilbrig'. He was listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. Thomas (17th C.) 'litster' who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the' Thomas listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1695 he witnessed a baptism for William Hodge. He married Margaret Bell and their son Walter was born in 1689, with another John (with no mother given) born in 1693. The witnesses in 1689 were Walter and Schoolmaster John (who were both surely related). Thomas (1820–86) 2nd son of Robert, he was an accountant and agent for the National Bank of Scotland, and head of a legal business. He was a Councillor from 1854 and Chief Magistrate in 1859 when he became a Life Member of the Archæological Society. He served as the last Junior Magistrate of Hawick in 1861 on the old 'eternal' council, and was heavily involved in putting the 'Police Act' into operation. He was elected to the new council for South High Street Ward that same year and became Senior Magistrate. He was then Town Clerk from 1862 (succeeding from James Wilson) until his death in 1886. He was an Assessor for the county of Roxburghshire. He also acted as secretary for the Border Union Railway committee in their contest with the Caledonian Company for the Hawick to Carlisle line. He was known as a powerful public speaker and was also an occasional lay preacher. He served as one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union

(later Congregational Kirk, from 1848. Additionally he was a Life Member of the Archæological Society by 1863. In 1845 he married Elizabeth Wilson Neish (daughter of a Dundee manufacturer), and she died in 1859, aged 38. Their children included: Robert, of Westwood, who succeeded as Town Clerk; Hannah (or Anna) Maria, who died in 1887; William Neish, who died aged 23; Thomas Edie; and Mary Smith (d.1932), who married Algernon Fielden Ramsden of Worksop. He secondly married Hannah (1827–98), daughter of Peter Findlay and brother of John Ritchie Findlay, proprietor of the Scotsman newspaper. Their children were: John Ritchie, also Town Clerk; Charles McLaren, banker; Walter Alexander, electrical engineer of Australia, who married his cousin Mary Smith Purdom; Edward, who died young; Findlay, farmer of Borthaugh, who died in Vancouver; Elizabeth Findlay, who married Dr. George Wade of Melrose and moved to Tasmania; and Arthur Muirhouse, who died in infancy. He died at Croydon and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall, painted by Frank Watson Wood. Thomas Edie (1853–1942) 3rd son of Town Clerk Thomas. He became a doctor and died in Croydon. His children were Robert Ramsden, Ethel Mary, Lillian Frances, William Percy, Elizabeth Winnifred, Arthur, Constance Hannah, Harold Neish, Elsie, Reginals, Gwendoline Mary and Irene Margaret. Capt. Thomas Laurence (1892–1927) only son of Town Clerk John Ritchie. He was a squadron leader in the Royal Air Force during WWI and was awarded the Military Cross for having 'shown the most exceptional gallantry and daring in engaging enemy aircraft'. His only daughter Dorothy Hume married Percival Charles Edward Wilkinson of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Walter (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Marr. Their children included: John (b.1648); William (b.1651); and Thomas (b.1654). He may be the Walter who was elected to the Council in 1648. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptism in 1654 for Robert Turnbull and for John Scott. He could also be the Walter who was one of Hawick's Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1708) recorded as Magistrate in 1668, 1674 and probably later. He was described as a 'late bailie' when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. In 1674 he was Bailie when William Hall drew his sword at him and threatened to shoot him. Also in 1674 someone was fined for disobedience to the Magistrates for not giving him his horse to ride to Jedburgh to deal with the Town's affairs. He was probably the 'Baylyea Purdome' (and likely an ex-Bailie at that point) recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was 'late baylyea in Hawik' in 1686 when he pursued a criminal case against John, son to litster James Scott and pedler William Hardie, for stealing money from his house, 'and violently brakening up of his doore and chestes with iron instruments or oyreways'. In 1693 Andrew Scott was fined for coming to his house 'under cloud of night, and abussing not only the houss, but the company'. He was 'late baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/94. In 1694 he is listed as 'Bailyea Purdim' on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water'. He had lands at the eastern end of the town boundaries. This land had formerly belonged to the Laird of Horsleyhill and was on the eastern boundary of what became Dickson's nursery-ground (i.e. just west of Oliver Place). He could have been the Walter who was married to Christian Tait and had children: Margaret (b.1671); Walter (b.1673); William (b.1674); Robert (b.1676); Bessie (b.1677); Jane (b.1679); and William (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Scott and Alexander Hislop. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Hardie in 1676. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for John Blake and Andrew Jardine in 1673 and William Taylor and William Swan in 1680. He could also be the Walter who witnessed the baptism of one of Schoolmaster John's children in 1687 (suggesting they were brothers perhaps), another couple in 1682 (one along with John) and one in 1688 (for merchant John Scott). Bailie Walter R. (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was an inn-keeper in Hawick and also held the orchards and lands at the eastern end of Town. He may have been the Walter born to Walter and Christian Tait in 1673. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Robert Tinlin and Christian Purdom (perhaps his sister). In 1708 he was fined for causing a disturbance in St. Mary's by insisting on sitting in his father's former seat, although the Council had resolved that the right to sit there was held by the current Bailies; along with Robert Scott (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in the jail. He is probably the Walter whose servant James Dickson was married in 1713. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, herd in Commonside and was probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for weaver Walter Douglas and for candlemaker John Scott, in 1722 for Simon Miller in Hawick Shiel and for Walter Scott in Acreknowe, and for Walter Scott of Burnfoot in 1723. He was probably the Bailie Purdom who witnessed baptisms in 1725 for Thomas Hardie, in 1726 for merchant William Chisholme and Elizabeth Purdom (surely related to him) and in 1728 for Walter Paterson. He was also a Bailie himself, mentioned in the period 1722 to 1737. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptism for Adam Kersel and for Adam Scott in 1731. In 1715 he was given custody of one of the keys to the Charter Chest (and so was presumably on the Council). In 1717 he was already an elder, recorded as one of the people to collect money from the East part of the Town. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and also in that year was appointed to try to collect money for a new Kirk clock. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. In 1722 he was a senior elder involved in appointing the new minister. And in 1722 he was elected as Session Treasurer. In 1727 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of William Ekron and in 1728 witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Scott. He may be the Mr. Purdom of Hawick who married Margaret, 4th daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. His children included: Walter, who probably died unmarried; and Alexander, who married Meiron Scott of Boghall in 1725. He may also have been the Walter listed as a 'Dragoon' in 1700 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses carrier Henry Paterson, Henry Orrock and flesher Robert Smith. James (b.1719), born in Hawick with no mother's name given may also be his child. In 1728 he was 'late Bailie' and husband of Janet Scott, when their daughter Jean was baptided; the witnesses were William Oliver and Alexander '. . . ' (possibly Purdom, i.e. his son). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet McVittie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobel Scott in 1716 and their son William was born in 1724. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Walter (b.1724). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1722 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott. Their children included Jean (b.1728). Bailie Walter (1728–1807) eldest son of Alexander. He was a Bailie several times in the period 1780–1800. In 1755 he is probably the Walter, one of 2 young men selected to accompany the 'burleymen' and 'spademen' to mark the boundaries of the Common. In 1764, along with Robert Oliver (probably his father-in-law), he was witness for a baptism for Walter Wilson and Catherine Oliver (his sister-in-law). He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for Richard Scott in 1757, with the other witness being Walter Scott of Boghall (related to his mother), and another for Richard (his brother) in 1766. In 1779 he and Richard witnessed a baptism for William (their brother). He is probably the 'Baillie Purdom' recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, listed right after shoemaker William. He is probably the Walter who subscribed to the fund for the Slitrig Brig in 1776. He may be the Walter listed among local men who contributed £1 1s to the war effort against France around 1800. In 1763 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was sister of 'Haunless Wat's wife, and niece of 'Auld Cash' (this probably being the father of the more familiar 'Auld Cash'). Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1763); Marion (b.1765); Alexander (b.1767); Robert (b.1770), who died young; Richard (b.1773), joiner; Elizabeth (or 'Betty', again, b.1774), who married Andrew Oliver; Robert (b.1777), farmer, Cornet and Magistrate; and Walter (b.1779), tobacconist. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1774 were merchant Walter Wison and William .... He may be the Walter whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1782. Walter (18th C.) known as 'The Muckle Laird'. In the baptismal record of 1765 he is 'Senior'. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms for miller John Scott in 1776 and 1778. In 1758 he married Robina (or 'Rabini') Scott, who was related to the local family of millers, probably the daughter of miller James Scott born in 1735. Their children included: Janet (b.1759); Walter (b.1760); James (b.1761); Thomas (b.1763); James (again, b.1765); Robert (b.1765, twin of James); Margaret (b.1767); Jane (b.1769); and Elizabeth (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1759 and 1760 baptisms were miller James Scott (probably his wife's father) and merchant Thomas Wilkie (whose wife was a Purdom). The witnesses in 1765 were merchant Thomas Wilkie and wright James Scott. It is possible that he was the son of Walter and Janet Elliot born in Hawick in 1724. Walter (b.1776) son to shoemaker William. He was recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men in the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still on the list in 1801. Walter (b.1779) younger son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was a tobacconist at 1 High Street and also became a Bailie himself. He was a tabocconist on the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. He is listed as a tobacconist on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at the Mill Port (i.e. 1 High Street) in 1837 in the account of the riots at the election of 1837, when it is said that he tried to help Thomas Scott, farmer at Little Cote. He was living at 46 High Street in 1841 (with his brother Robert's family). He died unmarried. Walter (b.1818) eldest son of Robert. He was a farmer at Easter Wooden, Eckford. In 1844 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter John Grieve; she died in 1847. In 1850 he secondly married Isabella Turnbull (b.1830) from Jedburgh. Their children were: Robert (b.1852), spectacle-maker of Sutton Coldfield; James; Agnes; Mary Smith, who married her cousin Walter Alexander; Walter; and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1860). One of his daughters became Mrs. Dunn. Walter (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston. He was one of the first Trustees of St. George's Kirk. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Jean Stewart and their children included: Janet (b.1653); and John (b.1655). He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for William Ruecastle in 1671, for Robert Paterson and for Bailie William Scott in 1683, and for Margaret (perhaps his daughter) in 1684. He could be the William who was charged in 1685 with 'breach of waird and severall abuses committ aggt. the baylyeas'. He was also a witness in 1685 to insults made by ex-Bailie Robert Wright against Bailie James Scott. In 1686 he and Alexander Hislop were appointed by the Bailies to 'search the meall markitt'. He might also be the William mentioned in the Burgh Records in 1686 when 2 new marchers of the boundaries within the town were appointed; he was stated to have been a former marcher, along with John Hardie and William Paisley. He witnessed a baptism for Alexander Young and Marion Stewart (probably a relative of his wife) in 1682; the other witness was George Young (married to Janet Purdom, who may thus have been his son-in-law), and probably another for Andrew Cook. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Stewart (perhaps related to his wife) and another for a Mr. Reid. In 1684 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Stavert and John Tinlin. William (1741–1818) son of Alexander and Marion Scott. He was a shoemaker recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the William who in 1778 witnessed a baptism for George Deans, junior. In 1767 he married Elizabeth (or 'Betty', 1746–1818), daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson). Their children included: Agnes (b.1769); Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1774); Walter (b.1776), probably the son of the shoemaker listed among those on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; Marion (b.1779); and Betty (b.1782). The witnesses in 1779 were Walter and Richard (probably his brothers). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for merchant Richard (probably his brother) in 1764. William (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside, along with John. Their business lasted until about 1837, when it was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the elector called Purdom who was said to have died in consequence of the injuries he received when attacked at the 1835 election in Hawick. William (1821/2–99) son of Robert, who was a labourer in Castleton Parish. He married Kitty Elliot (1819–99) and they had a daughter, Mary Murray. He, his wife and daughter Mary all died at St. Leonard's Cottage and are marked on a gravestone in Ettleton Kirkyard (formerly spelled 'Purdem', 'Purdholm', 'Purdholme', 'Purdim', 'Purdome', 'Purdum' and other variants).

Purdom's (pur-dumz) n. Thomas Purdom & Sons, estate agents at 10 Oliver Place, with family ties to the Purdom Town Clerks.

Purdom's Pond (pur-dumz-pōnd) n. popular name for a small body of water beyond Hilliesland, called after the Purdom family who once farmed fields there. The name was still in use in the mid-20th century.

Purves (pur-vis) n. James (1798/9–1878) cabinet-maker of Hawick, born in Dalkeith. He was listed as a joiner on the Mid Row in Slater's 1852 directory. He donated to the Museum a 'silver key and lock of bunker in Queen Mary's room' in 1857 and rocks in 1858. He married Janet Cunningham, who died in 1875, aged 79. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan (which could be the same location). His children included Eliza (who married William Elliot), Margaret, Jemima, James and Marion. Johnstone (19th C.) shopkeeper on the Front Row, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as witness to the bond of assurance for the Turnbulls in 1595. He is referred to as 'Rauff Purces in Minto'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Helen married William, son of carrier John Gledstains. William (16th C.) apothecary mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. William 'Blinnd Wullie' (1752–1832) son of John and Margaret, he was born in Newcastle and was blind from birth. He became known as an itinerant singer and fiddler, his favourite song being 'Buy Broom Busoms', which he claimed to have written (but probably just adapted). His characteristic cry of thanks was 'God blish the king – God blish the King; never sheed him – never sheed him; poor shoul – poor shoul!' Although based in Newcastle he travelled widely, and was a regular visitor at the Fleece Inn in Hawick. He presented the landlord there, George Hunter, with a snuff box 'in deep appreciation of his friendship'. William 'Billy' (1784–1853) from Auchendinny in Midlothian, he grew up in Newcastle and was once the most famous clown and showman in the Borders. He regularly toured around the south of Scotland and north of England, putting on all kinds of shows, including conjouring, ventriloquism, freak-shows, small circuses and plays. He acted, sang local ballads, played the bagpipes, danced and told jokes. In Hawick he stayed at the Fleece Inn, where he performed in the ballroom for 3 nights and moved into the larger Town Hall for another 3 nights; the landlord of the Fleece Inn, George Hunter, waived his bill, and Purves purchased a silver-mounted snuff-box for him. On another occasion he performed in a theatre in Hawick where Albert Mills was later built. He was buried in Hartlepool. Dr. William Brown (1799–1852) from Edinburgh, he married Margaret (1798–1855), daughter of John Laidlaw, who was from Weens. He contracted a disease related to his work, which killed both him and his wife. Their children were: John, who died young; Alexander, W.S., who was a lawyer in Edinburgh and purchased an estate in Peeblesshire; and Dr. William Laidlaw (1842–1917), who was an ear surgeon and golfing pioneer. After his death, his 2 sons were raised by their maiden aunts Jane and Euphemia Laidlaw. William (1814/5–1902) born in Melrose, he was a whip-maker on the High Street. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835, when he was at Damside; by 1840 he was listed living in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and in Slater's 1852 directory. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841 (perhaps near No. 5), and around 12–14 in 1851, when he was employing 4 men. In 1861 he was at 1 High Street, listed as a whipmaker, grocer and fruiterer. He was described as 'of a simple, happy disposition naturally'. He is said to have given up most of his activities to pursue a spiritual calling, including singing religious songs. He may be the William who donated a coin to the Museum. He married Christian Douglas, who died in 1875, aged 62. Their children included Isabella Scott, who married James Gowans and an unnamed son who died in 1840. Sir William, C.B.E., D.S.O. (1931–) son of a tenant farmer, he was born in Kelso, but from 1932–42 the family lived in Bedrule, where his mother was a teacher. He worked as a banker, working largely in the far east, becoming Chairman and C.E.O. of The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. On returning to the U.K. he was involved in overseeing the trnsition of Hong Kong to Chinese control. He was on the committee of the Scottish Rugby Union, became a Trustee of the National Museums of Scotland and was Vice President of the National Trust for Scotland. He (also 'Purvis').

Purvinen (pur-vi-nin) n. former name for lands in southern Liddesdale, perhaps where Heugh Head is marked on modern maps, on the south side of the Tinnis Burn. In the rental roll of 1541 it is 'Purvenen', when leased, along with Whisgills and 'Vtnomound', to Bartholomew and Ninian Armstrong. In 1634 the 40-shilling lands of 'Purviven' were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. In 1642 John of Gervald (2nd son of Sir William of Cavers) was granted lands of Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greena) and 'Purvinen' in Liddesdale 'in fee', with his father having the 'liferent'. John Forester of Stanegarthside inherited the lands of 'Greina, Purviven and Burnemouth' from his uncle Nicholas in 1693 (it is 'Peruieen' on Blaeu's c.1654 map; the origin or meaning of the name are obscure).

pyated (pI-i'-eed) adj., arch. piebald, particoloured (see also pyety).

Pyat Knowe (pI-i'-now) n. hill to the south-east of Dod, with the Pyatknowe Sike rising on it. There was formerly a farmstead here, where John Henderson was living in 1787 and Archibald Henderson in 1801. A shelf on the north side contains the remains of a fairly well-defined settlement, about 75 m by 45 m. The interior contains 2 courts, as well as 2 circular depressions, although these are probably quarry pits. There is also a second probable settlement nearer to the summit, this being oval in shape, about 65 m by 40 m, with an entrance at the west side. The Catrail crosses to the south of the hill, connecting to Barry Sike (it is 'Pyetknow' in 1787).

Pyatknowe Sike (pI-i'-now-sīk) n. small stream that joins the Dod Burn near the Pyat Sike Plantation, south-east of the farmstead of Dod. There are several linear earthworks in the area, crossing part of White Hill to the north-east. Although it has been suggested that some of these may be connected with the Catrail, or with the nearby fort and settlelement, there is no evidence for these claims. The fort lies to the north of where the Sike meets the Dod Burn. It measures about 60 m by 45 m and is almost entirely covered by a later settlement. To the south of the Sike, on Pyat Knowe are the remains of 2 more settlements.

the Pyat's Nest (thu-pI-its-nest) n. former name for Pyat Knowe, the hill south-west of Penchrise Pen, crossed by the Catrail, and containing the remains of a settlement (it is 'the Pyot's Nest' in 1880).

[ECS] (cf. quaestion).

Quakers (kwā-kurz) n. religous group, more properly known as the Society of Friends, which reached its peak of membership in the late 17th century. It was influencial in Britain in the 18th and 19th centuries through the adherence of many manufacturing families. In Hawick interest began when William Wilson visited a meeting in Glasgow in August 1797, leading to his membership in 1802, followed by many in the Wilson and Watson families. There were also significant visits by prominent Friends, such as prison reformer Elizabeth Fry, with at least 20 Public Meetings being held in Hawick. The group met in William Wilson's house from 1802 until a Meeting house was built on Buccleuch Street from 1821, with the first Meeting there in 1823. This was a plain building (a sketch of which exists), set back from the street, to the west of the Roman Catholic Chapel. Its location is shown on Wood's 1824 map, and it is listed among places of worship in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1839 the meeting house was described as being attended by only 2 families. The building ceased to be used for this purpose in 1844, after which it was used as a temporary hospital for the 1849 cholera epidemic and as James Murray's 'Hawick Academy'. It was demolished in 1866. In an ecclesiastical survey of Scotland in 1815 there were only 5 meeting places in the country, Glasgow, Hawick, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Kinmuck – '... Frae a man that is nae Quaker' [AB].

Quaker's Close (kwā-kurz-klōs) n. mid-19th century popular name for the close at 13 High Street, once the residence of manufacturer William Wilson, who was a Quaker. Also known as Wilson's Close, it was a private passageway that extended much of the way down to the river.

Quarrelhaa (kwa-rul-haw) n. name for 2 former cottages on the edge of the Harwood-on-Teviot lands, near the stream separating the farm from Chapelhill. They had already disappeared by the mid-19th century, although tailor John Elliot and family is still recorded there in 1841 and 1851. It is said that they were built to check on encroachments of livestock between the farms, and hence the name (although there is also a disused quarry nearby).

Quarry (kwa-ree) n. Andrew (18th C.) from Bowden Parish, in 1787 he married Agnes Hood, who was from Hawick Parish. They had at least 3 children in Bowden.

Quarry Rig (kwa-ree-rig) n. ridge just to the south of the upper part of the Ale Water, being the north-east spur of Deep Slack. A linear earthwork here extended for about 400 m, joining the head of the Hoscote Burn with the Ale Water. Although suggested (by Lynn) to be part of the Catrail, it is probably of more recent and less significant origin. It has now been obliterated by forestry.

quarter (kwar'-ur) n., arch. fourth part of a unit of volume or weight – 'For five quarters of cheese £3, 16s.' [BR1638], 'Th' breid in Glesca bein' reduced a ha'penny th' quarter laif' [HEx1921], fourth part of land, perhaps referring locally to a quarter of a 'particate' – '... one Walter Paterson, laird of Burnflat, and tenent of a quarter land in Hawick ...' [C&L1767], a quarter of a year – 'She has had another daughter since they came. She is about a quarter old' [TEL].

quarter days (kwar'-ur-dāz) n. four days formerly regarded as ending a quarter of the year. This was when rents and other payments became due. In Scotland they were traditionally Candlemas, Whitsunday, Lammas and Martinmas.

quarter-maister (kwar'-ur-mās-tur) n. a quarter-master, an official in an incorporated trade, responsible for collecting dues and looking after business affairs. In Hawick this was specifically the name given to the 2 representatives of the 5 (later 7) incorporated trades. They were added to the Town Council in 1739 and remained on it until the council was reorganised in 1861. In 1749 the Council decreed that they should be elected annually before Michaelmas. In 1781 it was formalised that they should be elected on the day before (i.e. Thursday) the election of the Bailies in October. They were also known as 'deacons of trade' or just 'deacons' – 'The quarter-masters of the weaver trade complain upon two of their craft, that, ... appealed against a fine, for disobedience to the trade, of four groats to the bailies, and eight pence to the quarter-masters ...' [JW1676], 'Complaines John Swan and Robert Tinline the two quartermasters of the trade of weivers within the toune for themselves and in name and behalf of the corporation thereof' [PR1716].

Quartersides (kwar'-ur-sīdz) n. former name for a small piece of land in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 it was valued at £50, along with Ryechester, when owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. It was recorded in the county valuation of 1788 being owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 having been purchased by Sir John Buchanan Riddell.

quarter wage (kwar'-ur-wāj) n., arch. wages or allowance for a quarter year – 'Walter Bryson addressed the Session desiring that supplie may be given to him for helping to pay the quarter wage for one of his twins latelie brought forth . . . ' [PR1725].

Quartus (kwawr-tis, kwawr'-is) n. pen-name of William Landles for his weekly notes of a religious flavour published in the Hawick News in the 1970s and 80s. They were collected into three books, 'I to the Hills' (1979), 'All Good Gifts Around Us' (1982) and 'Roving Commission' (1992).

queen (kween) n., arch. school-girl who gave the master the largest sum of money on Candlemas Day, gaining certain privileges. The custom was said to have been abolished in about 1887.

Queen (kween) n. Manasses (b.c.1790) from Ireland, he was a blacksmith in Hawick. He lived on the Round Close in 1841 and had moved to Wilton Kirkstyle by 1851. Living on Langlands Bank in 1861, he was a former framesmith. His wife was Mary, and their children included John, Ann, George, Christian, William, James and Alexander.

the Queen (thu-kween) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being 'the King') who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century.

Queen Caroline (kween-kaw-ru-līn) n. Caroline Amelia of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, wife of King George IV. The marriage was not happy, and their relationships were a great scandal of the time, the couple being separated for 25 years. In 1820, with the death of George III, she was effectively put on trial, claiming her right to be Queen, against the wishes of the new King. There was great commotion in Hawick, as elsewhere, with the Liberals supporting the Queen and the Tories favouring the King. A message of support was sent by the town to the Queen, which was apparently the first she had received. Supporters illuminated their windows the night the trial result was announced, and some non-supporters had their windows smashed.

Queen Mary see Mary Queen o Scots

Queen Mary's Burn (kween-mā-reez-burn) n. stream joining the Hermitage Water west of the Castle, presumably named by an association with Mary Queen of Scots visit to Hermitage.

Queen Mary's Well (kween-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on Hawthronside farm, where it is traditionally claimed that Mary Queen of Scots stopped to drink on her ride between Jedburgh and Hermitage Castle. The location is the second field from the farmhouse on the right-hand side of the road when going from Hawick to Bonchester. The field was also known as 'Queen Mary's Field'. The spring was widely used in the mid-19th century, and still existed in the early part of the 20th century, although the effects of drainage had moved its location somewhat (also known as 'Mary's Well').

Queen o' Fairies' Hole (kween-ō-fā-reez-hōl) n. natural hole in the hillside in Liddesdale, on the south-west of Hunter's Hill, to the east of Castleton.

The Queen o' the Auld Scottish Border (thu-kween-ō-thu-awld-sko'-eesh-bōr-dur) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written in 1995 and dedicated to Ian Landles. It was first performed by Elliot Goldie at the 1514 dinner of 1995 and included on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry', sung by Michael Aitken. It is the 3rd of the 5 Hawick songs written by Seeley, and probably the one that has been performed the most.

Queen of the Border (kween-ov-thu-bōr-dur) n. documentary film made in 1948. It was made by the Crown Film Unit, in association with the Board of Trade and the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers' Association. It lasts 10 minutes and focuses on the Common Riding and knitwear.

Queen o the Borders (kween-ō-thu-bōr-durz) n. local epithet for Hawick – 'The Queen of the Borders, this fine gallant town, How strong her devotion, how great her renown' [WFC].

Queen's Drive (kweenz-drīv) n. long U-shaped road, part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the visit by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in 1947. It was apparently originally to be called 'Elizabeth Drive'.

the Queen's Heid (thu-kweenz-heed) n. the Queen's Head, a pub at the corner of the High Street and the Cross Wynd, address 32 High Street. The original building exists on a photograph from 1868. The building was rebuilt in 1886, when the proprietor was Robert Young and a projecting bowed corner was added later. It can also be seen in a photograph of 1903. Rugby trophies won by the Wanderers are on display here. The Labour Party used to meet in the upstairs rooms, and this is where Hawick Royal Albert were formed in 1946. The building is listed grade B.

the Queen's Mire (thu-kweenz-mīr) n. boggy area between the Priesthaugh and Braidlie Burns, so called because of Mary Queen of Scots 40 mile ride via there from Jedburgh to Hermitage to visit Bothwell in 1566. For many generations afterwards people could point out the spot where her horse was said to have become stuck. She is also supposed to have lost her pocket watch on the ride, this being found here about 250 years later by a shepherd (but also said to have been found by a shepherd at Penchrise in 1817). Based on Blaeu's map of 1654 (itself based on decades earlier manuscripts) it may have formerly been called 'Mosspatrick'.

queer (kweer) adj., arch. entertaining, amusing, humorous – '... They get some queer story frae Eppy M'Gee' [JT], very great, considerable, particularly in the phrase 'queer lot' – 'There must bei a queer lot o' money in th' world yet – notwithstandin' short time an' bad trade' [HEx1921].

queer (kweer) n., arch. choir, the part of a church east of the nave, particularly referring to part of a pre-Reformation building. The gallery in St. Mary's had this name, this being the area with bench seating, some of which was rented annually to the highest bidder – 'Accompt of the money requisite for helping and pointing the kirk and queer of Hawick' [PR1713], '... had possessed the place near to John Elliot's seat in the queer ...' [PR1715], 'For avoiding confusion, the communicants are to go out att the Queer door' [PR1718] (also spelled 'queir', 'quire', etc.; in the pre-1763 Hawick Kirk this part was separated by the chancel arch).

the Queer Door (thu-kweer-dōr) n. former name for the entrance to the pre-1763 St. Mary's Kirk, which went through the chancel or 'queer' – 'The toun officers to wait upon ye Queer door during ye Service' [PR1718].

Quin (kwin) n. Roger (1850–1925) Border poet and wanderer, described as 'the homeless poet'. His grandfather was described as a travelling tinker from Ireland, who married an aunt of Esther Faa-Blyths, Queen of the Gypsies. It is said that as a boy he was allowed to hold the skull of Robert Burns when he was reintered along with his eldest son. He wrote 'Borderland and Other Poems' (1910, 1933) and 'Midnight in Yarrow and Other Poems' (1918). A plaque near Galashiels reads 'Here Roger Quin author of the Borderland gazed on Scotland's Eden', and there is a street in that town named after him.

Quinn (kwin) n. Edward 'Eddie' (1898–1982) well-known local accordion player, born in Berwickshire, he worked as a farm labourer at Carterhaugh for much of his life and retired to Eckford. He made two 78 r.p.m. recordings, released in 1929 and 1930. 'Quinn's Band' was popular at dance venues throughout the Borders in the 1930s and 1940s. Patrick (b.1836/7) from Ireland, he worked on the Border Union Railway. In 1861 he was a labourer living at 1 Slitrig Bank. In 1865 he donated a Scottish coin to the Museum.

the Quins (thu-kwinz, -kwunz) n. Hawick Harlequins, a 'junior' rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. Their clubrooms are at 6 Baker Street and their matches are played at Wilton Lodge Park. Their strip consists of a black, blue and gold hooped shirt and black socks. The name originally derived from the motley collection of shirts that they wore. They were the first local rugby team to play in Wales, in 1950. One of their highlight was playing in the Scottish Bowl final at Murrayfield in 2002. The unofficial club theme song is 'The Mighty Quin(s)'. 'The first 50 years: Hawick Harlequins R.F.C.' was written by G.W. Fraser and '75 Years of Hawick Harlequins Rugby Football Club' was compiled by G. Robertson.

quinter (kwin-tur) n., arch. a female sheep in its third year – 'Every shepherd of the south of Scotland can tell us that a hogg is the name given to a young ewe during the first winter of her existence, that during the second winter she is called a gimmer, during the third a quinter, and thereafter she becomes a ewe' [RG].

the Quintinshill Rail Disaster (thu-kwin'-inz-hil-rāl-dee-zaw-stur) n. tragedy of May 1915 on the Caledonian line, just north of Gretna Green. A packed troop train ran into a stationary local train, and an express ran into the wreckage. A total of 227 people were killed, making it Britain's worst ever rail disaster. At least 3 men with a Hawick connection died.

quit-claim (kwi'-klām) n., arch. the act of renouncing a claim, v., arch. to renounce a claim, declare someone discharged from an obligation – '. . . quitclaimis the said Michaell Scot his airis, executoris and assignais be tenor of this present acquitans command' [SPB1536]. quoad sacra (kwō-ad-sak-ru) n. ecclesiastical term for a church which is not the main parish church, but used for the convenience of some of the parishioners. This was the term applied to St. Mary's after the Old Parish was built.

the Quoitin Club (thu-kwoi'-in-klub) n. the Buccleuch Quoiting Club, a sporting organisation, with the game consisting of metal hoops or horseshoes being thrown at a metal stake. It was popular in the late 19th century, with pitches on Buccleuch Street, adjacent to the Buccleuch Bowling Club green. The club fell apart around WWII through lack of support, and the pitches were converted into the Henderson Garden. There was also another Club in the Mansfield area for a while, and in addition the game was played in Denholm.

the Quoitin Haugh (thu-kwoi'-in-hawf) n. popular name for the grassy banks of the Teviot between the Teviot Bridge and old suspension bridge in Denholm. Quoits were played here during the latter part of the 19th century until WWI. The field was also used for other sporting events, and also for church services in the summer. At the Denhom Ride-out the horses are usually held there.

quoits (kwoits) n., pl. game in which curved iron projectile are thrown at a stake in the ground in order to try to encircle it, also known as 'horseshoes'. The game was popular in Hawick from the late 19th century until the 1930s, with a pitch on Buccleuch Street. There was also an area in Denholm used for the same purpose and a field next to Roberton Kirk used in the early 20th century.

quot (kwot) n., arch. the portion of a dead person's estate payable fpr confirmation of the testament – 'To be deuidit in thrie pairtis the deidis pairt is, iiijc lxv£ iiijs. Quharof the quot is, xxiij £ vs.' [SB1574].

the Rabble Meetin (thu-raw-bul-mee-tin) n. name used to refer to the public meeting of 1887 which elected the new Common-Riding Ceremonial Committee.

the Race Ball (rās-bal) n. former name for the Ball, used until the 1880s, with the earlier name being the 'Cornet's Dance'.

the Race Committee (thu-rās-ko-mi'-ee) n. Committee responsible for organising the Common-Riding Race meetings, formed probably in the early 19th century, and originally having more influence than the Ceremonial Committee (which was only formally established in 1887). In 1865 they took over from the Cornet the task of collecting race funds, which in 1883 was replaced by an entrance charge for the Muir. The Provost usually served as the President, with the Secretary also being Clerk of the Course. In 1908 it became a sub-committee of the main Common-Riding Committee.

Race Course Park (rās-kōrs-pawrk) n. name for a field to the north of St. Leonard's Park racecourse, between the enclosures known as 'Bailie's Hill' and 'Nipknowes Field'.

the Racerigg (thu-rās-rig) n. former name, used in the 18th century, for part of the Common. The precise location is unknown, but it may have been where races were once held near Pilmuir Rig. It was stated in 1767 that it marked the southern end of the region of the Common where the Town Herd would typically use for the Hawick livestock (also written 'Racerig').

the Races (thu-rā-seez) n. a race meeting has long been associated with the Common Riding, now being an instrinsic part of the Friday and Saturday festivities. The first explicit record of the races is in 1723, but they were probably happening much earlier. There were prizes from early times, some provided by the Town, e.g. in 1723 a 'saddle exposed to be run for in May last' is described, in 1725 the Council gave £2 'for this year's plate' and in 1727 'the cup for the race' is recorded. Early races may have been held at the Deidhaugh, but the first known location was at the Vertish, ending in 1819. For the next two years they were on a field behind the Vertish Hill, then moved to Pilmuir Rig in 1822 and remained there until 1853. These were the Friday morning races, which had no accompanying family entertainments, those being associated with the afternoon races. In the early 19th century they started at 11 a.m., with the crowds returning to Hawick for dinner (early in those days), before the afternoon races at the Haugh, which started at 5 p.m. Both morning and afternoon races, as well as the, games, took place on the Common Haugh itself in 1854. The afternoon's events at the Haugh started with a 3-lap race by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. Sports and other amusements also used to continue on the Haugh on the Saturday. Both the Upper and Under Haughs were used, with movable fences between them. In 1854 the Haugh was used for the last time (in the afternoon only), and the new racecourse at St. Leonard's used for the first time (in the morning only). From 1855 all the races have been held at St. Leonard's, with Saturday races started in 1868. In 1856 there was a steeplechase for the first time and a hurdle race was run in at least the year 1860. Races for larger prize money were often involved two or three heats. There were also foot races held at the Moor until 1863. In the latter part of the 19th century the Saturday was considered to be 'ladies day' (after the Ascot tradition), with the women of the town dressing up in their finery. Until 1865 most of the funds for the races and the games were collected by the Cornet and the Right-Hand man. Thereafter official collectors were appointed, with admission to the Moor introduced in 1883, and racecards first issued in 1889. The Races were last held under Jockey Club rules in 1876, and with the disbanding of the British Racing Club in 1895, the Races were then held under local rules. The Races were first filmed in 1900.

rack (rawk) n., arch. a stretch, a shallow wide ford, especially where the person crossing has to take a slanting course – 'They led him thro' the Liddel-rack, And also thro' the Carlisle sands' [T], 'Rack. A very shallow ford, of considerable breadth, Teviotdale' [JoJ], a cart-wheel rut, capacity for expansion, elasticity, v., arch. to wrench, sprain, overstrain – 'Hae mercy, Sirs, your wit – don't rack it, To thresh a poor unlearned jacket' [JR], '. . . the skirls an the dirls, the raameen an the raackeen an the cammelleen, the daads an the dunts an the skraucheen an the skreeveen' [ECS], 'A've gaen an rackeet masul wui raxin owre fer owre' [ECS], to stretch – '. . . He'll shew the curse that Job invokit, When raucking patience, clean outraukit, Brak through her brand' [JoHa], 'rackin the rowins' means to stretch the loosely carded wool so as to make the yarn of uneven thickness, to fret, worry unnecessarily – 'Ee needna rack eersul aboot eet; ee'll sei it'll be aa better orbelang' [ECS] (cf. rax).

Rackesse (ra-kes) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Adame Rakkis in Thorlieshope' in 1611 when he was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He may have been related to the Armstrongs nicknamed 'Rakkes' (and spelling variants) at about the same time. George 'Geordie of the Hillhouse' (17th C.) thief from Liddesdale who is recorded in the 17th century. In about 1645 he, along with Lancie Armstrong of Catheigh and others, stole about 80 cows and oxen from England, and on the way back to Liddesdale returned the few animals beloning to a poor English minister, after he agreed to take snuff with them. It is unclear if his surname is a mis-transcription of a more familiar name. Robert 'Hobbie' (17th C.) recorded in 1633 as 'Hobby Rackes'. His shepherd Archie Armstrong 'called Hollas, who duelltt in the Mearburnheid' was captured for having a stolen cow in his possession (it is unclear if this corresponds to a more familiar surhame).

rackit (raw-kee', -ki') pp., adj., arch. wrenched, sprained, twisted – 'Or ease their bosoms rackit sair, Wi' disappointment ill to bear' [RDW], 'A've gaen an rackeet masul wui raxin owre fer owre' [ECS] (also rackt).

rack-peen (rawk-peen) n., arch. a rack-stick, pin for tightening a rope by twisting.

E'en let him pop, I'm little rad I founder, Though excommunication grace the ban' [JoHa], 'In lith an' limb we're soon' an' hale, Sae troth we're little ra'd o' smoorin' ' [JoHa] (also written 'raad').

Rad (rawd) n., arch. popular term for a Radical in the early-to-mid 19th century – 'One of the 'Rads' told the writer that once a tail came off in his hands ... ' [RM].

Radcliffe (rawd-klif) n. Sir Cuthbert of Dilston (d.1545) son of Sir Edward. He was Sheriff of Cumberland, like his father. He also served as Deputy Warden of the English Middle Marches 1540–3 and Captain of Berwick 1544–5. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Haddon Rig in 1542. He was described as 'a wise man well learned and well minded to justice but no adventurer to the field'. He married Margaret, daughter of Lord Clifford and was succeeded by his son Sir George. James (b.c.1770s) spinner in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. It is possible that the same James married Violet Nichol in Langholm in 1797. Sir John (c.1480–1527) from Crosthwaite in Cumbria. He was an English commander of part of the force that raided the Borders under Lord Dacre in 1513. His detachment of 500 men burned 'the town of Dyker', which was probably Dykeraw in Southdean Parish, explicitly 'thei layed corne and straw to the dore and burnit it both rofe and flore and so smoked them out'. They then burned Southdean and Lustruther towns, taking prisoners and goods. Thomas 3rd Earl of Sussex (c.1525–1583) also Viscount Fitzwalter and Lord of Egremont and Burnell. He was Lord Deputy of Ireland and became Lord Chamberlain under Elizabeth. His mother was Elizabeth Howard, sister of the Surrey who fought at Flodden. He was President of the 'Council in the North' 1568–72, suppressing a revolt of northern English earls. He then led part of the English force that invaded across the Border in 1570, along with Lord Hunsdon. They were responsible for the razing of many towns and buildings in Teviotdale, including Hawick on April 18th and Branxholme the following day, this requiring gunpowder. Apparently (according to Stowe's Chronicle) the Hawick people unthatched their houses, burned it in the streets and fled, leaving nothing for the English army. There is a tradition (recounted by Robert Wilson) that the townspeople attacked enemy patrols into the night, but there is no evidence to support this. His force also destroyed the Kerr strongholds of Ferniehirst and Crailing, while simultaneously Scrope's men laid waste to the Scottish West March. As many as 300 villages and about 50 towers were destroyed (formerly 'Ratcliff').

rade (rād) pp., arch. rode – 'They rade the proper place about: But the laid he was the wiser man, For he had left nae gear without' [CPM], 'An' efter prigging doon its price, A bargain forthwith made; Bestrode its back, an' homeward bound Wi' conscious pride he rade' [FL], 'He cantered awa' on his pony fu' gay, He sang to himsel as he rade doon the brae' [JJ], '... an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid' [ECS], 'We rade a' nicht i' the dark, And swam the Eden in flude ... ' [TK], 'The day they rade the mairches The wather was its best ... ' [WL] (also written 'raed' and 'raid'; the past participle is 'ridden' as in English).

radeness (rād-nis) n., poet. fear, fright – 'An' he saith untill them, Why are ye fu' o' radniss, O ye o' little faith?' [HSR].

radge (raj) n. a crazy or irrational person, rage adj. crazy, wild, mad, furious, randy (probably from Romany).

radgy (ra-jee) adj. randy, sexually aroused, lewd.

radio (rā-dee-ō) n. a new-fangled invention whereby sounds carried by modulated electromagnetic waves can be transmitted over a wide area and received in people's homes. It arrived properly in Hawick in the 1930s, and Reid's Relay helped Teries improve their reception. The 1934 Colour Bussing was broadcast by the BBC, and selected items from the 1937 Common Riding were also recorded and broadcast later. Local radio programming arrived in the 1980s.

Radio Borders (rā-dee-ō-bōr-durz) n. local independent radio station, operating out of Tweedbank, set up in 1989.

Radio Roxburgh (rā-dee-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. set up in 1985 to serve Hawick Cottage Hospital, it ran until 1989.

Radio Tweed (rād-ee-ō-tweed) n. part of BBC radio Scotland, with a small amount of local programming at certain times of day. It began operating in 1983.

radness (rawd-nis) n., arch. fear, apprehension – 'An' he saith untill them, Why are ye fu' o' radniss, O ye o' little faith?' [HSR].

Radolphus (raw-dol-fis) n. (11th/12th C.) first Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk, established about 1113. He resigned in 1117 and returned to Tiron in France (may be spelled 'Rodolphus' or written 'Radulph'; the modern version is 'Ralph').

Radolphus (raw-dol-fis) n. (13th C.) Rector of Hawick church who witnessed a charter of Laurence Avenel in the period 1260–68. His name is recorded as 'Radulphus rectore ecclesiae de Hawic'. It is possible he is the same Master 'Radulf' who held Lochmaben Church and was in litigation over Guisborough (in Yorskshire) in 1255/6 when he was ordered by Nicholas de Moffat (Archdeacon of Teviotdale) to submit answers at Roxburgh regarding the litigation. In 1259 perhaps the same man, kinsman of Robert 'de Prebenda' (Bishop-elect of Dunblane) was granted permission to hold another cure in Scotland. It is possible he was the Englishman 'Ralk de Prebanda' recorded being liable for rent in Nottignhamshire in 1260.

rae (rā) n., poet. a roe deer – 'My beloefet is like ane rae or ane yung hart . . . ' [HSR], 'Billhope braes for bucks and raes, And Carit-rigs for swine, And Tarras for the guid bull-trout, If it be ta'en in time' [T].

Rae (rā) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is recorded as 'Ree'. Agnes (d.1795) recorded as a midwife in the Hawick register of deaths. She could also be the person recorded when 'Agness Rea's Mother' died in 1781. Andrew (16th C.) rented part of Standhill to John Turnbull of Knowe in 1659. This name is possibly an error for 'Ker'. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Rigg (i.e. Caerlenrig) in 1730 when his son William was baptised. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as 'Servitor to Harwood' when his daughter Jean was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who might be his included 'Nanse' (b.1741), Thomas (b.1744) and Helen (b.1746). Andrew (18th/19th C.) carter at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. In the 1799 list he was recorded as tenant in Turnpikeside and in 1801 as 'Husbandman'. He may be the Andrew who married Isabel Curle in Southdean in 1803 and had children including James (b.1805), John (b.1810), Mary (b.1813), William (b.1821) and Andrew (b.1826). James (b.1802), baptised in Southdean, with no mother's name given, may also have ben his child. Colin (19th C.) married Sarah Little in Hawick in 1851. Davie (1972/3–) professional sprinter. He moved to Hawick at about the age of 8 and became involved with the Teviotdale Harriers, but switched to sprinting, becoming part of the Billie Edgar school and later training with Alan Scott. He won the British Youth Sprint Championships in 1989 and 1990 and in 1999 won the British 90 m, 100 m, 110 m and 200 m championships. He also won 3 Hawick Games sprints. He took up coaching in 2008. Douglas (19th C.) married Mina Lamb in 1844, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Douglas (19th C.) married Isabella Waldie in Wilton in 1850. George (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Ferguson and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: John (b.1805); Alexander (b.1807); Martha (b.1809); Betty (b.1811); William (b.1814); Helen (b.1819); and Margaret (b.1821). He could be the weaver George in Hawick who was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and as a labourer in 1801. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Christian Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1819); Anne (b.1822); and Thomas (b.1824). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) carter at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Hector (c.1683–1639) received his degree from Edinburgh University in 1603 and became minister at Nisbet in 1608. He was translated to Hownam in 1609 and signed the National Covenant in 1638, probably in Hawick. Hugh (c.1340–bef. 1405) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, whose name was often written 'Raa'. He was related to John, eldest son of Robert II (who became Robert III) and may have been related to Bishop William Rae. He was described as 'not a priest' in 1363 and said to have unlawfully held the Church of Lilliesleaf for 2 years, when it was confirmed to Walter Eaglesahm. However, he was confirmed in the benefice in 1366 and appears to have still held it in 1389. Egglisham'. In 1382 he was 'Hugh Ra', subdean of Glasgow, when he was given permission by the Bishop to hold a second benefice. He was Henry 'Raa' when appointed to the benefice of Cavers Parish in 1387, after Matthew Glendinning was promoted to Bishop of Glasgow. He was there described as 'kinsman of John, eldest son of king Robert'. In 1389 Henry Wardlaw was given the vicarage of Cavers, void after he obtained the church of Strathhaven. He was also referred to as subdean of Glasgow. His death by 1405 made the

Subdeanery of Glasgow vacant. However, the exact year of his death is unclear, and there is no record of him after 1389. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Branxholme, signed in Edinburgh in 1500. His name was recorded as 'Jacobo Raa'. Probably the same 'Jacobus ra' was recorded in 1502 when he was presented by the Lord of Buccleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his 'suitor' for the lands of Eckford. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as 'Jacobo Ra eius seruo', presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Bessie (b.1716); Maddie (b.1719); James (b.1721); and Helen (b.1725). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); and James (b.1777), baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He could be the James, son of Walter and Margaret Gardner, baptised in Hawick in 1743. It is also possible that his children (with no mother's name given) included: Robert (b.1768), baptised in Cavers; Elizabeth (b.1769), baptised in Bedrule; John (b.1771), baptised in Bedrule; Jean (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1774), baptised in Bedrule; and Jean (again, b.1779), baptised in Cavers. The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Walter Rae (perhaps his father). James (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Redheugh. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He could be the James, son of William and Rachel Scott who was born in Hawick in 1764. His son William (a stockingmaker) died in 1838. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Crozier in 1790 and their children included: Janet (b.1790); Rachel (b.1795); Margaret (b.1797); John (b.1800); and William (b.1802). The witnesses in 1790 were shoemaker Robert Oliver, junior, and William Park. He could be the James who (along with Robert Oliver) in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Elder. He seems likely to be the same man as the shoemaker. He may be the friend of Caleb Rutherford, who helped him reach down a chimney with a cleek and steal the pot hanging over the fireplace of a carrier's house in Bourtree Place. James (b.1777/8) born in Maxton Parish, he was a labourer in Cavers Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Westside with his wife Betty Henry and children Margaret (b.1834/5) and Agnes (b.1837/8). In 1847 the Kirk Session agreed to give him and his wife 4 shillings per week on the condition that they gave up their right to their house (which had belonged to his father-in-law). He is probably the James who took part in amateur theatrical performances in about 1820. He may be the James mentioned in a letter of 1824, where he sent messages to his friend George Laidlaw in Delaware County, New York. James (19th C.) married Beatrix Stewart in Hawick in 1846. James (19th C.) married Isabella White in Hawick in 1852. James (20th C.) plumber in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1923. This year is often referred to as the 'Plumber's Year' because of the torrential rain, which blew away the shelter at St. Leonard's. Janet 'Jenny Saut Haa' (d.1758) elderly wife of the owner of the Salt Hall, who cut her throat in the eastern attic of the Salt Hall in 1758 (or perhaps 68), causing uproar when she was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. With the minister away, the authorites allowed the burial there, against some popular feeling. On the following morning the coffin fell upon her husband (whose name is not recorded) when he opened the Saut Haa door. the coffin was reburied, but appeared again the next day. It was then temporarily buried at the most northerly point of Wilton Common, until the minister returned and insisted on burial back in the churchyard. Her final burial place was in the area reserved for unchristened babies in the churchyard. There are similarities with the story of Tibbie Tamson in Selkirk. Jean (1731/2–1838) resident of Deloraine, who reached the age of 106. During 'the forty-five' she helped at Branxholme to hide cattle and household goods from the Highlanders. She was a great-great-grandmother, and there were 5 generations alive at once. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, mentioned in a Session record in 1635. He is probably the John whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included Walter (b.1631) and Isobell (b.1632). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their son Walter was baptised in 1654. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Hadden in Hawick in 1706. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as 'creeple in ye toun' in a baptismal record. He was also described in 1723 as 'creeple in this toun' when money was given for a coffin for his child. He married Helen 'Furgrie' in 1708 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1708); Helen (b.1711); and Jean (b.1714). The witnesses in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and James Falsyde and in 1714 were 'customer' Andrew Scott and 'offcier' Alexander Young. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Lymiecleuch in 1731 when his son Thomas was baptised. John (18th C.) married Margaret Anderson in Cavers in 1729. John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1730. John (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Minto in 1733. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1744. He married Helen Cook in 1744 and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1744, with witnesses James Dryden and James Scott (and his name appearing to be written 'Real'). On the same day he witnessed a baptism for James Blaikie in Appletreehall. John (18th C.) married Violet Scott in Hawick in 1760. John (18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Bedrule in 1771. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Scott in 1769, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Beatrix was baptised in Hawick in 1773. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1780. His children included Anna (b.1776) and William (b.1780). He was surely related to Thomas, who lived in the same place. His daughter Anna may be the wife of Robert Gledstains who emigrated with her family to Delaware County, New York in 1817; he first daughter was Violet, suggesting that this may have been his wife's name. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Murray and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1783); and Nelly (b.1785). John 'Jock' (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. A story is told of Rev. Charters of Wilton finding him up his fruit tree – ''What are you doing there, John?' 'Naething ava', sir'. 'Strange man, John, all that trouble for nothing'' [BP]. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (b.c.1780) carter in Hawick. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot and again in 1801. He was at about 6 Kirkwynd in 1841. Walter, a shoemaker who lived next door, was probably his brother. His wife was Margaret and their children included: William; James, shoemaker who married Isabella White; Douglas; John; Walter, who married Ann Samuel; and Isabell, who married Thomas Borthwick. It is possible that he is the son of Thomas and Mary Scott baptised in Hawick in 1779. John (b.1781/2) cotton handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with Jemima (either his daughter or granddaughter). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret 'Cummin' in 1805 and their son John was baptised in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish in 1807 and their children included: Thomas (b.1807); and Andrew (b.1809). John (18th/19th C.) listed as a poulterer on the Sandbed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Probably the same John is a 'salt and egg dealer' at the Kirkgate in 1837. John (b.1801/2) stocking weaver in Hawick. He was living at about 29 High Street in 1841 and 42 or 44 High Street in 1851. He married Isabella Turnbull and their children included: Elizabeth and Jane (b.1840); and Isabella (b.1842). John (b.1803/4) born in Cavers Parish, he was a stocking needle maker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the Howegate in Slater's 1852 directory. Probably the same John was one of 5 men tried for rioting and assault at the 1837 election in Hawick; he was found guilty and 'put to the horn'. He was also recorded in Hawick Jail in 1849 and 1850. He lived on the Kirk Wynd in 1841, with his wife Catherine, on the Mid Raw in 1851 and was boarding on O'Connell Street in 1861. His wife Catherine (b.1799) was daughter of Arthur Balbirnie, writer of 'The Auld Sang'. He had a daughter who died in 1838. John (19th C.) married Mary Wood in Wilton in 1828. John (b.1805/6) carpenter and cabinet-maker in Hawick, born in Wilton Parish. He was on the Crescent in 1841, in the Village in 1851 and on Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Elizabeth Miller in Wilton in 1832 and their children included Thomas (b.1832/3), John (b.1834/5), William N. (b.1843/4), Mary N. (b.1845/6) and Walter. John (b.1815/6) originally from Aberdeen, he was a woollen cloth finisher in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at '6 House, Weendland'. In 1839 he married Isabella Kennedy, from Hawick, and they had a son Hugh. He also had step-children Margaret and David Wilson. He is probably the John of Weensland who donated a Turkish coin to the Museum in 1872. John (19th C.) listed in Slaters' 1852 directory as an earthenware dealer on the High Street. There is a separate listing for a High Street greengrocer of the same name.

He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (b.1825/6) wool spinner in Hawick, born in Wilton. In 1861 he was living at 11 Back Row, 'Second Back House'. He married Elizabeth Ann Ekron in 1847 and their children included: John (b.c.1847); Margaret (b.c.1848); John (b.1850), baptised in Hawick Free Krik; and Jemima (b.1853), also baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; Mary (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); James (b.1860); and Janet (b.1865). John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Welsh in Hawick in 1845. John (19th C.) married Helen Gentle in 1847, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. John (1897/8–1975) born in Hawick, he was a plumber. He was Cornet in 1923 and later lived at Towerburn. His year was known as one of the wettest ever, with jokes made about his occupation. He married his Cornet's Lass Isabella 'Bella' Neish Elder (who died in 1989, aged 87). John 'Jock' (20th C.) pipe major of the Scout Band in the years 1960–62. He once had the honour of being Solo Piper at the Edinburgh Tattoo. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Mr. ?? (18th C.) owner of a large tract of land stretching between where Havelock Street and Dovecote Street now are. The land was ultimately divided, part becoming Dovemount, and being the site of the well that supplied much of Wilton for more than a century. Robert (17th C.) married Bessie Gray in Roberton in 1679. Robert (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Loan, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Kirkton according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Eastcote according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Robert (b.c.1790) gardener at Dovemount. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John and Isabella. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included: Andrew (b.1636); and Thomas (b.1639). Thomas (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Slaidhills. His son Alexander was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1707. He could be the Thomas whose daughter Margaret married James, son of Walter Scott in Hawick in 1717. Thomas (18th C.) resident at Milsingtonshiel in the 1760s and 1770s when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Thomas at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1774 when his son Thomas was baptised. It seems likely that these were all his children (baptised in Roberton Parish, with no mother's name given): John (b.1762); Margaret (b.1763); James (b.1765); Betty (b.1767); Jean (b.1771); and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1780 for James Knox. He married Janet Murray in 1774, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Thomas (b.1775) and James (b.1779). Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Mary Scott in 1775 and their children included: Andrew (b.1778); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1778 were Joseph Goven and Mungo Armstrong. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1772, 1775 and 1778. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Jean (b.1772); Janet (b.1773); Agnes (b.1775); and Gilbert (b.1778). Thomas (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785, when his name is recorded as 'Rhea'. He also paid in 1787 and 1791. He was a carter in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who married Janet Gledstains in Hawick in 1799. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Aitchison in Hawick Parish in 1797. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Scott in 1792. Thomas (18th/19th C.) weaver in Damside in Wilton. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Probably the same Thomas was weaver at Roughheugh according to the ballot in 1799. He was confusingly recorded separately at Roughheugh in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was a weaver at Damside. Perhaps the same Thomas married Christian Murray in 1801 and had children, baptised in Wilton, including: Thomas (b.1803); John (b.1805); Christian and Janet (b.1812); James (b.1814); Douglas and Walter (b.1820). Thomas (b.c.1770s) labourer at Birkwoodfoot according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. It is possible he is the same Thomas imprisoned for sheepstealing. Thomas (18th/19th C.) probably from the Teviothead area. He was charged with sheepstealing from Phaup in 1818. He was caught because of selling the skins in Hawick and jailed in Jedburgh, as recorded in a letter sent from Teviothead to his friend Thomas Elliot in New York state. In the prison record he was 'Cottar and Labourer, Fellchurch, Cavers'. Although there is a suggestion that he was hanged, in fact he was transported to Australia in 1819. Thomas (19th C.) married Agnes Henry in Cavers in 1831. Thomas Ian (1926–89) educated partly at Hawick High School, he studied history at St. Andrews University and eventually became keeper of manuscripts at the National Library of Scotland. He wrote 'The Administration of the Scottish Frontier 1513–1603' (1966), 'Scotland at the time of Shakespeare' (1965), edited 'The union of 1707 its impact on Scotland' (1974), co-edited 'The Burgh Court book of Selkirk, 1503–45' (1960). He also wrote several other articles, including some for the Transactions and was a member of the Archæological Society. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Harvey and their children included: Robert (b.1689). Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Margaret Gardner and their children included James (b.1740), William (b.1741), James (again, b.1743), an unnamed child (b.1745), George (b.1758) and Agnes (b.1762). The 1743 baptism was witnessed by shoemaker John Scott and merchant William Riddell, and the 1758 one by shoemaker George Gardner and William Veitch. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick. He was fined and imprisoned in Dumfries in 1760 for attacking Leonard Fleming, an excise officer. When his sentence was done he was to be set on the pillory at Dumfries with a label on his breast reading 'I stand here for having been guilty of committing a most atrocious battery upon the person of an excise-officer when in the exercise of his duty'. He could be the same man as the Hawick tailor. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Whitfield in 1772. He married Ann Walker in Ashkirk in 1770 and their children included: Gilbert (b.1770), baptised in Ashkirk; William (b.1773), baptised in Wilton; James (b.1775), baptised in Selkirk; Adam (b.1777), baptised in Selkirk; Anne (b.1780), baptised in Selkirk; John (b.1786), baptised in Yarrow; and Jane (b.1789), baptised in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1772 were Walter Scott and James Robson. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. Walter (b.c.1785) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd. In 1841 he is recorded at about 6 Kirk Wynd and in 1851 and 1861 is at 12 Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Mary and children included Thomas, Robert, Andrew and Margaret. He was surely related to John, the carter who lived next door, perhaps his brother. He was one of only 11 residents of the Town who were on the 1803 Militia list and still alive in 1862. Walter town street sweeper, who came 2nd in the 2004 Citizen of the Year vote and joint 3rd in 2005. William (d.1367) Precentor of the Diocese of Glasgow, he was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1338, following the death of John Wishart. He was consecrated in 1339 and remained Bishop until his death. He thus had authority over Teviotdale. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow belonging to him stolen from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His name is given as 'Willelmo raix'; however, it is possible he is the same man recorded as William 'rany' in 1493. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stoddart and their children included John (b.1648) William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1703, who was also from Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) married Jean Gowanlock in Kirkton in 1707. William (17th/18th C.) carrier of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Hasswell in 1707 and their children included: James (b.1707); Marion (b.1708); William (b.1711); John (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Walter (b.1716); William (b.1719); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1711 were Francis Gledstains and smith John Scott and in 1713 were merchants Robert Robson and William Craig. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1713, with no mother's name given. William (18th C.) married Bessy Gledstains in Minto in 1738. Their children probably (although with no mother's name recorded) included: Isabel (b.1739); James (b.1742); William (b.1743); James (again, b.1746); Betty (b.1748); and John (b.1750). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Anna was baptised in 1739. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott in 1756 and their children included Jane (b.1757), Marion (b.1759), James (b.1764), Agnes (b.1768) and William (b.1770). William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1786. William (b.c.1770s) spinner in Hawick. He is listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. William (b.c.1780) resident of Dryden in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (19th C.) married Mary Ann Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1826. Their children born in Roxburghshire were: Jean (b.1831);

Janet (b.1832); and John (b.1834). In 1835 they emigrated to the Montreal area, following the Dryden family a year earlier. They then moved to North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. 7 other children were born in Canada. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Mitchellhill and their son William was baptised in 1822. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Little in Roberton in 1832. William (19th C.) married Margaret Nichol in Cavers in 1836. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in Southdean in 1837. William (b.1808/9) from Saline in Fife, he was a master gardener in Wilton. In 1861 he was living in Upper Damside with his wife Helen, who was from Kelso. William (b.1812/3) painter on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 48 High Street, with his wife Mary. They had a daughter Isabella S. The death of his aunt Agnes Rae is recorded in Hawick in 1838. He may be the William who married Mary Filmer in Wilton in 1840. William (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was shepherd at Ruecastle in 1851 and at Bairnkine in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Oxnam) and their children included Isabella, Jane, George, Walter, John, Mary and Alexander. William (b.1816/7) fuller in Hawick. He was a widower living on Dickson Street in 1861. His children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included John (b.1846), Sarah Wilson (b.1849), Andrew (b.1851), Robert and William. William (19th C.) married Jane Ormiston in Hawick in 1845. William (19th C.) married Agnes Bell in Hawick in 1851 (formerly spelled 'Ray', 'Re', 'Rea', 'Roe', etc.).

Raeburnfit (rā-burn-fi') n. site of a small Roman fort in Dumfries & Galloway, where the Rae Burn joins the White Esk, a few miles north of Eskdalemuir. It marks the end of the Roman road from the upper Borthwick valley via Craik Cross. There may have been an extension of this road over Groundistone Height to Harelaw and towards Newstead.

Raegill Bogs (rā-gil-bogz) n., pl. marshy area to the south of Hermitage Castle, just by Toftsholm Sike. There is an example of a 'burnt mound' there, as well as the remains of 4 shieling-huts and an area of enclosed rig.

Rae-knowe (rā-now) n. rising ground on which the farmhouse of Nether Bonchester stood, near the present-day Bonchester farmhouse.

Raesknowe (rās-now) n. farm on the Allan Water, behind Newmill, on the opposite (east) side of the Allan Water from Allanhaugh tower. It was a home of the Scotts in the 16th century, and afterwards a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1579 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh sold the annual rent of the land for £100 from Walter Scott of Todrig. In a 1627 valuation it is described as paying 'presentlie in stok and teynd 26 bolls; estimat in stok to 14, and 3 in parsonage, 4 lbs. in vicarage'. David Scott of Raesknowe, related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, is listed as one of the 'pensioners of Buccleuch' by Scott of Satchells. It is shown in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 231 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Newbigging, the Allan Water and the Teviot, and with Reasknowe Mill being a separate farm at its south end. The former small tower there was already in ruins by 1663. In the period 1690–96 the farm was jointly leased by Walter Bell, John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1698 it was leased by John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1694 the householders listed there were Walter Bell, David Graham, John Armstrong and George Wilson (shepherd). Robert Gledstains was a tailor there in at least 1700–19. John Armstrong was still there in 1706. Robert Graham was there in 1708. John Graham was tenant there in about 1710 and William Reid in 1719. In the 18th century the area was a small thriving hamlet, which had a man appointed in 1723 to teach the poor children of the neighbourhood. William Anderson was there in 1742. Archibald Douglas was farmer there in 1797 and George Heatley was living there in 1801. A bronze jug was dug up there around 1835, having 3 feet, a handle and a spout, probably mediæval (also called 'Raesknowes'; it is 'Raisknowis' in an undated 16th century document, 'Reahousknow' in 1579 and 1582, 'Raisknow' in 1627, 'Raesknow' in 1640, 'Raeknow' in 1641, 'Raeknowes' in 1690, 'Raeknow' in 1692, 'Reasknow' in 1694, 'Raes Knoll' in 1704, 'Raes-knowes' in 1717, 'Raesknows' in 1718, 'Roseknow' in 1797 and 'Raes Knowe' in 1841; it is marked 'Reesknow' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but incorrectly placed in the middle of Hawick Moor; the name may related to roe deer).

Raesknowe Mill (rās-now-mil) n. former corn mill on the Allan Water, north of the farm of Raesknowe, an alternative name for Allanhaugh Mill. It is shown in 1718 as a separate farm to Raesknowe, consisting of 14 acres on the haugh opposite to where the Rampy Sike meets the Allan, with the mill itself at the east side, near where the foot of the North Burn. The mill lade appears on the map, starting near Lochburnfoot and running along the east side of the Allan, to join again after the mill (it is Raesknows milne in 1718).

Raeson Park (rā-sin-pawrk) n. street off the right of Stirches Road, built in 1928 and named after builders John Rae & Son, Victoria Road.

Raff (rawf) n. Rev. Eric Maitland Kirk (1892–1927) son of William Watson of Melbourne and Victoria Black, and grandson of William of Woodlee, Forres. He was educated in Melbourne, graduating in 1915 and being ordained there the following year. He was then at Efate Island, New Hebrides Mission until 1923 and came to Scotland the following year, becoming assistant at St. Michael's, Dumfries and then was appointed to Rosyth. He became minister at St. Mary's in March 1926, but died at Bournemouth only a year later. He married Ruth, daughter of John Baird.

raffle (raw-ful) n., arch. a lottery, in the 19th century specifically an event organised to raise money for people in ill-health or who were emigrating etc., prizes being won by dice throws.

ragabuss (raw-ga-bash) n., arch. a ragamuffin, good-for-nothing – 'He was nothing but a liar and a reprobate, and a Jacobite villain and knave, and . . . a ragabast [sic]' [Ash1712], adj. very poor, destitute – 'Rag-a-buss, A designation given to those who are very poor, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'rag-a-buss', 'ragabash', etc.).

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bus) n. nickname of an itinerant around the early years of the 19th century. He engaged Wull Slush in a steeplechase on foot at the Common Riding one year (when held at the Vertish), the race degenerating into a fight. It is unclear what his real name was.

Ragarth (ra-garth) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located on the Kershope burn and attached to the estates of Mangerton. They are recorded as being worth 7 shillings and 6 pence in a rental list c.1376 in the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 'Ragarth, Sorbe, Sorbetrees' was part of the property of the Laird of Meriantoun, valued at 10 merks, and separately 'half of Regarthe' was also listed, with a value of 5 merks. It is 'Raegirth' on Blaeu's c.1654 map, on the north side of the Kershope Burn, east of Kershope (it is possible it is related to Raegill Knowes, close to Kershope Bridge).

Ragarthshaw (ra-garth-shaw) n. former farm in Liddesdale, in the 'Quarterium de Ludne' according to a c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 6 shillings. It was presumably near the main farm of Ragarth (recorded as 'Ragarthschaw').

raggit (raw-gi', -gee') adj. ragged – 'I doot the sight nae pleasure can thee gi'e: My raggit breeks, bedaub'd wi' dirt an' soil' [JoHa], 'O! raggit poverty! o' rascals chief, How many waes thou brings to mortal man!' [JoHa], 'A raggit cout a race has won, And sae might little Jock' [JT].

the Raggit Schuil (thu-raw-gi'-skil, -gee'-skil) n. former name for Drumlanrig School applied by those from elsewhere in the town. The name was also used for the Mission School of Allars Kirk, which was on Allars Crescent in the 1870s, with Mr. Robert Grieve sometimes acting as teacher.

the Ragman Rolls (thu-rawg-min-rōlz) n., pl. list of names of those Scots swearing allegiance to Edward I of England. The smaller roll was signed at Norham in 1291, and the larger one at Berwick in 1296, after Edward was victrorious at the Battle of Dunbar. There were more than 1,500 names of Scottish landowners, clergymen and Burgesses, making this a valuable historical record. The attachment of seals also gives a unique insight into the heraldry of the time. The communities of Jedburgh and Roxburgh were among burghs that paid homage. The roll includes the following local men, (a sub-set of those described as 'of Roxburgh County' unless otherwise stated): Adam, Parson of Fouldone or Souldone (probably 'Soudon'); Emme de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Rogier de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Alisaundre de Bailliol (or 'Bailiol' or 'Bailiol' of Cavers); Walter de Boredon; William de Bradeleye (possibly Braidlie on Hermitage); Thomas de Chartres; William de Chartres; John de Chesolm (from Berwickshire); Richard de Chesehelm; John Comyn de Badenach (senior and junior, Barons of Bedrule); Johan de Conevethe (Parson of Ancrum); James de Crak (in Selkirkshire, possibly Craik); Simon de Cresseuelle (possibly Cresswell in Hassendean Parish); Robert de Dene (Parson of Wilton); Gwy de Denum (Denholm); Randulf de Derum (possibly an error for 'Denum'); Philip de Dryden; Johan de Ethereston (possible Adderstone); William de Fausyde (possibly in Southdean Parish); Richard de Flex; Herbert de Gledestan (of Lanarkshire, direct ancestor of the local family); Adam de Gourlay; Robert Grundi de Neuton (who possibly gave his name to Groundistone); Aleyn Gurnay (possibly 'Gourlay'); Johan de Harden; Robert de Hawyk (or 'Hauewyk'); Adam de Hep (probably 'Heap', but perhaps 'Hepburn'); Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston (probably 'Hermiston' near Lilliesleaf); Adam de Hodolm (of Dumfriesshire, probably holder of Kirk Borthwick); Wautier de Holcote (Hoscote perhaps?); Henry de Hommes (possibly Whames on Borthwick Water); Robert de Huntelegh (presumably Huntly); Philip de la Ley; Johan de Lillesclif (Lilliesleaf); Johan de Lillesclyue (in Peeblesshire, possibly the same man); Agneys Louel ('qe fu la femme Henry', i.e. widow of Henry Lovel); Morice Louel (Parson of Little Cavers); Thomas de Rillewod (possibly 'Rulewood'); Robert fiz Rauf (Parson of the Church of St. Cuthbert of Ewesdale); William de Rotherford (Parson of 'Lillesclyue', i.e. Lilliesleaf); Adam de Roule; Aleyn de Roule (Parson of Roule); Thomas de Roule; William de Rouley (possibly an error for 'Rule'); William de Rucastel; Adam de Rukelton (probably Riccalton, but also could be Riccarton); Adam de Rykeldon (probably the same man); Sir Hugo Rydel (probably related to the Riddells of that Ilk); Richard Le Scot de Murthoxtoun (later of Rankleburn); Walter Le Scot (of Peeblesshire, probably Scotstoun or Kirkurd); William Scot (of Roxburghshire); Sire Johan de Seint Michel; Johan de Seint Michel (separately); Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe (possibly Mervinslaw); Sir Nicholaus de Soules; Thomas de Soules; John de Stonesleghe (probably Stonedge); Marie de Synton; Ingram de Toftes (possibly near Kirkton); Robert de Toftes; William de Toftes; Robert Waugh (or 'Walgh' or 'Walugh') de Hep (probably Heap); Richard de Witton (Parson of Hawick); possibly William Woodburn (Parson Minto); and possibly others who are harder to identify with the Hawick area (the origin of the name may be from the ribbons attached to some of the seals).

raid (rād) n., arch. a foray on horseback, mounted attack – 'Now Liddesdale has ridden a raid, But I wat they had better staid at hame . . . ' [CPM], 'But yet for a his cracking crouse, He rew'd the raid of the Red-Swire' [CPM] (note that this word was revived by Sir Walter Scott and became standard English for a sudden attack in general).

the Raid o the Redeswire (thu-rād-ō-thu-reed-swīr, reedz-wIr) n. sometimes referred to as the last battle between Scotland and England, taking place near the Carter Bar in 1575. The event was apparently an accidental skirmish, taking place at a Warden Court, held at the Carter Fell, when hostilities suddenly broke out between the two sides. Sir John Carmichael led the Scots who beat Sir John Forster's men, with the timely arrival of the Jedburgh contingent with their cry 'Jethart's here', turning the battle. The Hawick men there were led by Little Gladstain 'good at need', with the 'Laird's Wat' of Goldielands also present, along with many Elliots, Armstrongs, etc. Sir John Heron, one of the English leaders, was slain, and the Warden taken prisoner. It is said that 5 Scotsmen and 6 Englishmen were killed. The battle site, near the Carter Bar, is commemorated by the Redeswire Stone and is the destination for the most arduous ride as part of the Jethart Callant's festival. It is recorded months later that proclamations were posted at the Mercat Cross of Hawick and other towns, instructing anyone who had taken goods from the Englishmen during the skirmish to return them and prohibiting anyone from raiding into England or to threaten the peace. A romanticised version of the tale is told in a ballad of the same name. This exisits in part of the 'Bannatyne Manuscript'. It was first printed as 'The Ballad of the Reid-Squair' in Ramsay's 'Ever Green' (1724), and appears with the same verses, but slightly altered words, in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) and later in Scott's 'Minstrelsy'. The manuscript appears to have been written about the late 17th century, but almost certainly was transcribed from a version passed through oral tradition. It contains a much larger number of names than most ballads (although some of them are somewhat garbled), and hence must have been written by someone in remembrance of the events of 1575 – 'Then Tividale came to wi' speed, The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi' Cranstane, Gledstain, good at need, Baith Rewle Water and Hawick town' [T], 'The seventh day of July, the sooth to say, At the Reid-swair the tryst was set; Our Wardens they did fix a day, As they appointed, so they met' [CWS] (there are many spelling variants, the manuscript of the ballad reading 'Rid Square').

Ralph's Acre (rawlfs-ā-kur) n. lands adjacent to Trinitylands, mentioned in the rental returns for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. This could be the same place referred to as 'Blaikie's Acre' in the 16th century.

Ralphtree Grain (rawlf-tree-grān) n. small stream in Liddesdale which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows into Todhunter Grain and then the Tinnis Burn. An old sheepfold shows that shepherds worked in even as remote a place.

Ralston (rawl-stin) n. John (19th C.) resident of Riccarton Station in 1868.

Ralton (rawl-tin) n. former lands in Liddesdale, to the south-west of Redheugh. Modern maps show the farm of Raltonside on the Ralton Burn. George Armstrong was recorded there in 1502 and Ingram Armstrong in 1535, along with Robert and Archibald Armstrong. In 1541 the lands were valued at 3 pounds and 7 shillings, with tenants Robert, Ninian and Thomas Armstrong. Ingram Armstrong there is recorded in a 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire and related areas, along with John alias Ralton. This is probably the 'Rouraltonholme' possessed by John Scott in 1632 and also the 'Ratounholme' listed among the lands of Kerr of Ancrum on the same document. Rig lines have been seen to the north-west of Raltonside, and there is also an old boundary bank there (it is 'raltoun' in 1502, 'Railtoun' in 1535, 'Raltoun' in 1541 and 'Raltoun' and 'Reltoun' in 1585).

Ralton Burn (rawl-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Roan Fell and Millstone Edge, on the border of Roxburgshire with Dumfriesshire and gather's several other streams before passing Raltonside farm, joining the Ryedale Burn and running into the Liddel Water between Sandholm and Newcastleton. The area has the remains of several farmsteads, as well as boundary banks, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds. Near the head of the westernmost feeder stream are a couple of shepherd's cairns (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rampsligill see Ramsiegill

Rampy Sike (rawm-pee-sī) n. small stream that runs roughly north-east to joint the Allan Water near Allanhaugh Bank. There is a small, roughly oval-shaped enclosure there, of indistinct enough form that it is hard to guess its age. On the haugh opposite where the sike joins the Allan Water was formerly the site of Raesknowe Mill.

ram-race (ram-rās) n., arch. a short burst of speed, like a ram uses in charging, a headlong rush – 'He took a ram-race and smashed open the door' [HAST1868], an impetuous progression, anything done at unreasonable speed – 'Howt! Thay sang that chorus fer owre quick. Thay made a perfeet raam-race o'd' [ECS], 'It was a Day's Dander A wanteet, an no a raam-race duist' [ECS], 'The band [=choir] made a perfec' ram-race o' the chorus' [GW].

Ramsay (rawm-zee) n. Sir Alexander of Dalhousie (d.c.1342). He fought at Borough Muir, was involved with the capture of Leuchars castle and relieved the siege of Dunbar Castle. He harassed the English in the Borders, often with a relatively small force, and was made Warden of the East March in 1340. He was known as a paragon of chivalry, being a champion on the jousting field. At Easter 1342 he captured Roxburgh Castle from the English and was rewarded by David II with the Keepership of Roxburgh Castle, and the Sheriffdom of Teviotdale that usually went along with it. Sir William Douglas, who was already Sheriff of Teviotdale, was outraged at this and had Ramsay captured while holding court at St. Mary's Kirk in Hawick a few months later (there is some uncertainty about whether it was 20th or 21st June). Several of his followers were slain and he himself was wounded and imprisoned in the dungeons of Hermitage Castle, where he starved to death. He is said to have survived for 17 days by eating grain that fell through from the granary above. In the 1790s a local mason apparently broke into Hermitage vaults, finding human bones, as well as a bridle, saddle and sword; it was said that these were the remains of Ramsay. The bit that was found was presented by Sir Walter Scott to the Earl of Dalhousie, Ramsay's direct descendant. Ramsay Road in Hawick was named after him in 1933. Allan see James Dalgleish. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule. His wife Margaret Scott died in 1723, aged 65, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Rev. Andrew Mitchell (1809–69) from Tollcross in Glasgow, he became the 4th minister of the Relief (Allars) Church in 1833. He was the first President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, leading to some dispute over the use of Allars Kirk for meetings. He also allowed his church to be used for Revival meetings, against the wishes of many in his congregation. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed on the Crescent. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street. He resigned in 1846, and left Hawick, with a large crowd seeing him off at the Tower Knowe. He moved to Australia to became Minister of Collins Street Church in Melbourne. In about 1850, along with 3 others, he formed the United Presbyterian Church of Victoria. He married Isabella Milne and their son Robert was a politician and lawyer in Australia. An early photograph of him exists. Sir George of Dalhousie (d.c.1629) son of James of Cockpen, he was 2nd Lord Ramsay of Melrose. He gained the lands and title in 1618 from his relative John, Viscount Haddington and Lord Ramsay of Barns. He is recorded in 1613 collecting the vicarage teinds from Thomas of Turnbull of Knowe. This suggests that he already had patronage of Hassendean Kirk at that time. He became Earl of Holderness and sold the lands of Melrose to Sir Thomas Hamilton. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas, and was succeeded by his son William, who became Earl of Dalhousie. George (19th C.) member of Roberton Free Kirk. He married Ann Pate and their children included Janet (b.1848), James (b.1850) and Elizabeth (b.1852). James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1806 when his marriage to Barbara Morton announced in Melrose Parish. John (c.1580–1618) Viscount of Haddington, Earl of Holderness. He was son Robert of Wyliecleuch. In 1609 he was granted the lands and income from Melrose Abbey, becoming Lord Melrose. This included the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean. The grant was at least partly because of the help he had given the King in the Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600. In 1618 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his relative Sir George of Dalhousie. John (17th C.) Hawick resident who was among the many men listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (18th C.) surveyor of coals, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1755. He was probably not from Hawick, but it is unclear where he was from or what his conection with Hawick was. In 1757 there is a record of 5 shillings 'Spent with Mr Ramsay the coalman (coal-viewer)', this being related to 'the petition for the coals' that the Town Clerk had sent. It is unclear exactly what this was about, but he is also recorded being paid 10 shillings and 5 pence in the same year. John M. (b.1885) uncle of Jessie MacDonald, he grew up in Denholm, served in WWI, was a postman for the Stobs area and lived at Orchard Terrace in later life. He wrote an account of Denholm in the years around 1900 for the Transactions. Robert (1842–82) son of Rev. Andrew Mitchell, who was minister of Allars Kirk. He was born in Hawick, but the family emigrated to Australia when he was about 5 (one of his siblings dying on the voyage). He studied law at Melbourne University, became a solicitor and became involved in politics as secretary for a committee trying to abolish state funding of religion. He served as a member of the legislative assembly of Victoria from 1870, being heavily involved in education and the separation of church and state. He was also partially responsible for the police actions that led to the capture of the Ned Kelly gang. He married Isabella Catherine, daughter of Robert Urquhart. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was buried in Melbourne general cemetery. William (d.c.1695) tenant in Bedrule Mill. He married Margaret Turnbull. In 1695 he and his wife left 500 merks for the poor of the Barony of Bedrule, with the family of Cavers Carre as trustees. He is probably the William recorded in Bedrule Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William 'Wull Slush' (d.c.1830) known as a vagrant and drunkard. Although not born in Hawick, he travelled around upper Teviotdale for the period roughly 1790–1830. He was said to have been from either Carluke in Clydesdale or brought up at Heriot's Hospital in Edinburgh. Not known for his beauty, he was described as being 'as unprepossessing in his looks as it is possible to conceive, and his raiment was in classic keeping with his countenance'. He claimed to have a sister who was far uglier than himself. He had a squint, with one eyelid almost covering his eye, and a lower lip that drooped noticeably. He also lost the use of his legs through frostbite, and afterwards went about on a donkey. A story is told of how he once stood in for the driver of the cart between Edinburgh and Hawick, but was so drunk from stopping at every inn that by the time he reached Dovemount he mistook the gable of Wilton Kirk for another possible watering hole. He spent much of his time in the Black Bull, or sleeping it off in Hawick Mill. One year, when the Common-Riding Races were at the Vertish, he came across another beggar, called Ragabuss, and the pair race for tuppence in a steeplechase on foot, which degenerated into a fight. He once insulted Blind Wullie Craw (as recounted by William Norman Kennedy), who immediately threw off the lines 'O! Hush, hush, Wull Slush, Wull Slush, The Ostler o' Black Bull, As lazy a loon as what's i' the toon, And his head's like a weel picked skull'. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, and an article by William Norman Kennedy in the first Archæological Society Transactions. He is probably the William whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1828. William (b.1802/3) born in Sprouston Parish. In 1851 he was a proprietor of 94 acres at Calaburn in Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth (who married brickmaker William Taylor) and Christian. William (b.1851) born at Armadale, West Lothian, he was the last preacher at the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, which closed in the 1920s. He also served as an elder in the United Free Church there. He was 'colporteur' for the Religious Tract Society as well as School Attendance Officer. He married Christian Wilson in 1872. Their children were Peter (who married Helen Stoddart in Hawick), Christina, George Wilson, James, Jane, John, William and Jessie (who married Thomas Ramage in Hawick).

Ramsaycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead above Merrylaw, reached by the side road from Teviothead, and lying just north of Rashiegrain and the source of the Teviot. The areas of Ramsaygrain West and Ramsaygrain East lie to either side. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick the lands were listed among those held by the Baron 'in property'. The lands were included in the list of property of the Baron of Hawick (Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1572 and 1594. Douglas of Drumlanrig has a 'horning' in 1607 against William Scott of Gledstains to remove from these and other lands, followed by a further action in 1610 for Scott and James Gledstains of that Ilk owing him taxes. Robert Grieve was tenant in 1609. 6 cattle were stolen from the Laird of Falnash there in 1621. Half of the lands there were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. John Bell was recorded 'in Ramsiecleughburn' in 1678. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. James Anderson was tenant in at least 1699–1720 and William Anderson in 1704. By 1707 it was valued along with Hislop at £549 4s. The lands were owned by Michael Anderson of Tushielaw and Hislop in the early 18th century. Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw was owner in 1788. John Armstrong is recorded as farmer at 'Ramseycleughburn' in 1797 and Alexander Armstrong in 1801. William Riddell (brother of Henry Scott Riddell) was tenant there in the mid-19th century. In 1811 the lands of 'Ramsaycleuchburn' were valued along with Hislop at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersons of Tushielaw. This area was part of the western extremity of Hawick Parish until Teviothead was formed in 1850. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building at Ramsaycleuchburn (the origin of the name is possibly Old English 'hramsa cloh', meaning 'the ravine of the wild garlic', although the terran does not seem very suitable; it is easily confused with Ramseycleuch in the Ettrick valley; it appears in 1511 as 'Ramsy Clewis' and 'Ramsyclewis', 'Ramsiclewis' in 1514, 'Ramsay Clewis' in 1572, 'Ramsay Clewis' in 1594, 'Ramsay clewch' and 'Ramsecleuch' in 1609, 'Ramseclewis' in 1610, 'Ramsayclewchis' in 1615, 'Ramsecleuch' and 'Ramsayclewis' in 1621, 'Ramsaycleuche' in 1674, 'Ramescleuch' in 1675, 'Ramsecleuch' in 1695, 'Ramsaiclthghburn' in 1704, 'Ramsaycleughburn' in 1714, 'Ramsa cleuch (burn)' in 1716 and 'Ramsacleuchburn' in 1720; it is marked 'Rapshycleuch' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Ramsay Road (rawm-zee-rōd) n. street behind Moat Park, built in 1927 and extended in 1969. The housing overlooking the 'Scer' is sometimes known as the 'Haggis Haa' scheme. It was named after Sir Alexander Ramsay, who was captured in St. Mary's Kirk in 1342 and probably taken this way en route to his final demise in Hermitage Castle – 'For haddock, plaice and cod, They came fri Ramsay Road . . . ' [IWL] (since it is beside the old highway where he made his last fateful journey).

Ramseycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, near the village of Ettrick. It was formerly owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane. John Scott of Thirlestane had a 'tack' from Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1535 and Robert Scott of 'Schastaine' in 1557. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter in about 1620, and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. A 'pendicle' called 'Timahauchis' is also mentioned at that time. Adam Bellenden was there in 1728, Adam Scott in the 1780s and George Grieve in the 1860s (it probably has the same origin as Ramsaycleuch, with which it is easily confused; it is 'Ramseclewis' in 1535, 'Ramseclouch' in 1557, 'Ramsecleuch' in 1564, 'Ramsaycleuch' in 1568, 'Ramseclewis' in 1573, 'Rampsiecleuch' in 1577, 'Ramiscleuch' in about 1622, 'Ramsieclewis' in 1641 and 'Ramescleuch' in c.1680; 'Rampshycleuch' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Ramsiegill (rawm-zee-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but it was in the hills somewhere to the west of Riccarton. It is listed as 'Rampysgill' in about 1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section called 'Ermyldoune', and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. 'William Elwald in Ramsigill' is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1510 and on a rental roll of 1541. 'Hobbe Elwald of Ramsegill' is among men the King ordered to be apprehended in 1532. Robert in Ramsiegill and 'Old' Robert of Ramsiegill are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. 'Gavin o Ramsiegill' was one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick by the Regent Moray in 1567. 'Gavin's Jock' from there was recorded in 1574 and 1582/3. 'Ill Rob of Ramsigill' was convicted for theft in 1580/1. Jock Elliot of Ramsiegill is listed in 1583 as one of the Elliots of Burnhead. Hob and Rowie Elliot 'of Ramsegill' signed a bond for the behaviour of all the Elliots of Ramsiegill in 1584, along with Airchie of the Hill and Will's Hob. And a number of Elliots from there were named in a bond of 1587. Hob and Gavin separately accused the English of raids on their lands there in the 1580s. The man who hanged himself when imprisoned in Hawick steeple in 1612 may also have been from this family branch (it is marked 'Rampsligill' on Blaeu's 1654 map in the hills to the east of Roughley Burn, between 'Ernitlon' and 'Lires'; it is 'Ramsigill' in 1510, 'Rammisgill' in 1541, 'Rampsegyll' and 'Ramsygell' in 1563, 'Ramsygill' in 1569, 'Ramsigill' in 1580/1, 'Rampsygill' in 1581 and 'Ramsgill' in 1583; the origin may be similar to that of 'Ramsaycleuch', i.e. related to the Old English for 'wild garlic'; there is also a 'Ramsgill' in North Yorkshire).

ramstam (rawm-stawm) adj., arch., poet. haphazard, rash, heedless, unceremonious – 'Hei'd littl need be hen-herteet that hed ti beer the ramstam onfaa . . . ' [ECS], 'My strength was renewed, but the haugh was plewed, And I made but a ramstam rin . . . ' [WaD], 'He wasna blate, he was rale ram-stam, He'd swallowed a wee thing mair than a dram' [WL], n., poet. haphazardness, chaos – 'And roun and roun the warld may spin Wi' its ram-stam and steer . . . ' [WL].

ramstougar (rawm-stoo-gar) adj., arch. rough (in various sensese), coarse (of cloth), characterising a particularly masculine woman, vulgar, heedless, harebrained, rowdy, quarrelsome (all of these meanings noted by J. Jamieson).

rand (rawnd) n., arch. a narrow strip, a streak of a different colour in cloth, a streak of discoloration in anything imperfectly cleaned or dried (noted by J. Jamieson; see also randit).

Randal (rawn-dul) n. John (19th C.) probably son of Joseph. In 1877 he donated to the Museum a large collection of items from New Zealand, specifically geological specimens, shells and coral, as well as parts of birds and trees. Joseph (b.1795/6) from Airdrie, he was a glazier and photographer in Hawick. He was a pawnbroker in Falkirk in 1851, but in Hawick by 1861. His wife Isabella was from Falkirk and their children included Joseph, Henry Hume, Agnes, John, Alexander and Joseph (again). One of his children is probably the 'Mr Randalls, painter' who donated 4 American coins to the Museum in 1872.

randan (rawn-dan) n., arch. spree, particularly in the phrase 'on the randan', meaning being involved in a wild celebration (noted by E.C. Smith).

randit (ran-dee', -di') adj., arch. streaked, striped, dyed a variegated colour – 'Randit, ill-wuishen claes' [GW], 'Randit tweeds, bread, butter' [GW], 'Ma froak hesna dyed weel at aa; it's awfullies randeet' [ECS], 'That wumman's claes ir no haaf seindeet; they're hinging oot i the gairdeen aa randeet' [ECS] (see rand).

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. (d.c.1185) son of Dunegal (of Stranith, or Nithsdale), and brother of Duvenald (or Donald), Duncan and Gillespie (or Gillepatric), he was Lord of Stranith or Nithsdale. He married Bethoc, who was probably connected with the Barony of Bedrule, and he may have gained lands there through marrying her. His wife may have been a daughter of Fergus, Earl of Galloway and Princess Joan of England. However, both their histories appear to be sometimes mixed up with others. Not long after the founding of Jedburgh Abbey (perhaps around 1150) the couple granted a carrucate of land (60 acres) in Rughechestre' (possibly Ruecastle) to Jedburgh Abbey, confirmed later by William the Lion. He also granted lands in Dumfries to Kelso Abbey and is recorded in transactions related to other lands in Dumfriesshire. His name appears as witness to several charters in the early 1160s. His son and heir was Thomas and he may also have had a daughter (perhaps Fiona) who married Reginald, Lord of the Isles. His mmediate descendants took the surname 'Randolph' and were ancestors of the Earls of Moray or Murray.

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. Thomas (d.1262) son or perhaps grandson of Randolph, whose name is sometimes given as his surname. He was a Clerk in the court of Alexander II. He held the Barony of Nithsdale, but also had lands in Norfolk and Lincoln. He probably had a connection with Roxburghshire and perhaps Bedrule, like his parents before him. He also appears to have served as Sheriff of Dumfriesshire. His name appears in several charters in the 1220s to 40s. His wife was Juliana, but nothing else is known about her. Their children included: Sir Thomas, who succeeded; and Sir Nicholas, who was taken prisoner at Dunbar in 1296 and probably died in the Tower of London. Both he and his wife were buried on the same day at Melrose Abbey. Sir Thomas (d.bef. 1306) son of Thomas and descendant of Randolph, Lord of Stranith. The family held lands in Bedrule, although there is no record of a direct connection in his time. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded as such when witness to a document for Kelso Abbey in 1266 and served until at least 1269. He was Chamberlain of Scotland in about 1269–78. He was present at the Convention of Brigham in 1289/90 and when John Balliol paid homage to Edward I in 1292 and in 1294 he accompanied the English King to France. He married Isabel, who was probably half-sister of King Robert the Bruce. His son Sir Thomas became 1st Earl of Moray and signed the Declaration of Arbroath. He also had a daughter Isabel, who married William Murray, ancestors of the Earls of Annandale.

randy (rawn-dee) adj., arch., poet. wild, disorderly, disreputable, aggresively rude – '... How can these randy Liars then, Make the Scots to be a start-up Clan' [CWS], '... strictly discharging all her Majesty's leidges within ye shyre to resett Gipsies, Vagabonds, Randie beggars, and idle persons ...' [PR1711], 'Now randie Tibbie takes the road, Wi' a' her neebour wretches' [JoHa], 'Cam' ye straight alang the toon, Or doon the randy raw? Ha'e ye seen a truant loon Playin' at the ba'' [JT], 'But while the randie poor were thus sent to the right about, cases of real distress met with sympathetic help' [JVV], 'The inn was thrang wi' singin, The randy clash rang high ...' [WL], n., arch. a scolding woman, a mischievous girl – '... That, faith, the randie's grown sae rude, Sae careless, fearless, haughty, proud ...' [JoHa], 'What! Luck, here too! thou paintit twa-faced randy, Squirting thy humbug i' my vera lug?' [JoHa] (also written 'randie').

rang (rang) pp., poet. reigned – 'But whan he heard that Archelaus rang in Judea in the room o' his faether ...' [HSR].

range (rānj) v., arch. to search, probe, rummage – 'A'll mebbies finnd eet if A range the kist' [ECS], 'Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed' [ECS], 'A've ranged a' the drawers, an' canna find it' [GW], to agitate water, especially to scare fish from hiding places, to poke the ashes from between the bars of a grate so that the air can circulate – 'Taik the poker an range the bars o the feier' [ECS].

rankest (rawng-kist) adj., arch. stongest, most vigorous – most densely growing, most luxuriant – 'The rankest poison in the world is the broth of a brode sow a-breeming' [JL], densely growing, luxuriant – 'Wherever they could find the rankest and richest spots of grass and speat, they unscrupulously swashed them down ...' [HSR].

Rankilburn (rawng-kul-burn) n. older spelling for the valley of the Rankle Burn, also known as Buccleuch. The precise boundaries of the lands are not known, but certainly larger than the lands later known as Buccleuch. This was once a separate parish, which was merged with Yarrow in 1621, but then disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick in 1650. It appears that in 1236 the lands belonged to Nigel de Heris, the King's forester. The land probably passed to the Scotts some time shortly after 1249, perhaps as part of the appointment as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. Sir Richard Scott was the first known Laird of Rankilburn in the late 13th century. The first residence was probably on the motte at Phenzhopehaugh, later moving to 'Buccleuch Castle'. There was also a chapel on the Rankle Burn, the cemetery of which was the final resting place for many early generations of the Scotts of Buccleuch. When the lands were inherited in 1492 they were said to be then waste, but normally valued at £20. They were still listed separately from Buccleuch in the family lands inherited in 1517 and 1553/4 and the lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. – 'Of Ettrick's-hue he took a view, Than to the left hand did turn, Where he did see that Forrest hie, Which then was called Rankelburn' [CWS], 'Past the tiny torrent whose waters churn Where the first Buccleuch had kneeled; Past the crystal cascades of Rankleburn, And the winding way with its every turn Fresh visions of charm revealed' [TK] (it is 'Rankilburne' in 1415, 1463, 1484 and about 1580, 'Rankylburne' in 1415 and 1491/2, 'Rankilburn' in 1491/2, 'Rankilburn' and 'Rankylburne' in 1517 and 'Rankilburne' in 1528, 1537, 1574 and 1634; it is is incorrectly labelled 'Ranald Burn' and 'Randle Burn' on Gordon's c.1650 maps, then marked 'Rankilburn' and 'Bourn of Rankilburn' on Blaeu's 1654 maps and mis-transcribed as 'Kankisburn' on Moll's 1745 map).

Rankilburn Chaipel (rawng-kul-burn-chā-pul) n. former chapel near the old seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn. It was also known as 'Buccleuch Kirk'. The chapel was situated at the confluence of the Rankle Burn and the Kirk Burn, about 5 miles up from the Ettrick, with Kirk Hill and Priest Sike to the east. When it was established is unclear, but possibly around the 12th century when the motte was built at Rankilburn (later called Phenzhopehaugh); it was included among the churches of Teviotdale Archdeaconry in Bagimond's Roll of 1275, when valued at 5 shillings 4 pence. In 1415 the tithes for Bellendean were transferred to it (when the Scotts of Rankilburn swapped Bellendean for the lands of Glenkerry with the monks of Melrose Abbey). It is marked 'Rankilburn K.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, and 'Ruins of Buccleugh Kirk' on Ainslie's 1773 map; today there is a D-shaped sheepfold (or perhaps shelter for cattle drovers) enclosing much of the site, which has been planted with coniferous trees. The turf-covered footings of the former chapel can still just be made out, these being modest in size, about 10 m by 5 m, to the south-west of the sheepfold. The wall at the east end has been robbed (probably to help contruct the small rectangular shed in the corner of the sheepfold), and there is an earthen bank between these remains and the Kirk Burn. Together with another low bank inside the sheepfold, these may be former boundaries for the kirkyard. A survey in 2011 found no evidence of further enclosures that had been suggested in earlier descriptions (including a different location for the church in the north-east corner of the sheepfold reported in 1962). Scott of Satchells says in 1688 that 'The Houses Ground-work yet is to be seen, And at that Church, I many times have been, A burial place it yet keeps out, For any poor folks that lyes round about'. He claims that 9 Lairds of Buccleuch were buried there, perhaps starting after David and ending with the permanent move to Branxholme. There is a tradition that the last Scott burial was within 3 yards of the east door of the church. It is stated that the chapel was already long ruined by about 1585 when the site was visited by a young Walter of Buccleuch along with Sir Robert of Thirlestane and others, finding 'the Font-stone within the Kirk, and a Cross before the Kirk-door', as well as several tombstones, including one with the arms of Buccleuch. There was a legend of a blue marble font (in which generations of Scotts had been baptised) being buried among the ruins, but no such relic has been found. In 1801 the site was visited by a party including Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, but they found nothing of any significance. William Scott (from Burnmouth) stated in 1821 that 'frequently human bones are washed away by the encroaching of the stream'. An open-air Cameronian communion service was held near here in 1844, attended by hundreds of people. The Ordnance Survey name book in 1858 states that 'the marks where houses seem to have stood are still visible on the Burn Side', but if there was once a hamlet there, there is no evidence apparent today. There was an excavation around 1877, but little was discovered. John White was Rector, and after his death Walter 'de Hassinden' was appointed to replace him in 1432. The Rector in 1453 was James Spottiswood, and the Reader in 1491/2 was John Scott. David Scott of Buccleuch left money for the church when he died in 1491/2. Following the ruin of their nearby manor, the Scotts abandoned the area for their new seat at Branxholme, and the church probably fell into disuse at that time. In 1537 Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk invested Simon Scott in the benefices of Rector 'by touching the kirk door, the font, the altar, the chalice, the books and ornaments' of the kirk there. In 1574 John Scott, minister of Ashkirk had oversight there. After the Reformation the parish was united with Yarrow and then Ettrick and was not considered large enough to require a reader (it was 'Rankelburne' in 1275, 'ecclesiae de Rankilburn' in 1453 and 'Rankilburn' in a Church of Scotland document of 1586; it is 'Rankilburn K.' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Rankilburn Pairish (rawng-kul-burn-pā-reesh) n. former small parish, sometimes referred to as Buccleuch, consisting of the land between the Rankle Burn and the Tima Water. Its establishment is unclear, but it certainly existed before 1415. In the early 17th century it was united with Yarrow, but in 1650 it was annexed instead to Ettrick. At that point it consisted essentially of the lands of Deephope, Mount Common, Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Annelshope, East Buccleuch, West Buccleuch, Tushielaw, Cacrabank and Crosslee.

Rankin (rawng-kin) n. James (19th C.) police offer at Forkins in the 1860s. Rev. Lisa-Jane minister of Wilton. Robert (19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. 'Robert Rankin & Co.' was listed at Teviot Square in Slater's 1852 directory. William (19th/20th C.) blacksmith at Bedrule in the early 1900s.

rankit (rawng-kee', -ki') pp., adj. ranked, lined, set in rows – 'But tho' I get my hurdies whankit, An' wi' the hare-brain'd core be rankit . . . ' [JR]', 'The yoke-a-tulie rankit up, And doon the Loan like fire' [JT], 'Door an dochty, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter's Wardens o the Mairches' [ECS].

the Rankle Burn (thu-rawng-kul-burn) n. stream that rises in Craik Forest and flows roughly north to meet the Ettrick at Cacrabank, near Tushielaw. The valley of the Rankle Burn is synonymous with the Buccleuch area, and was the original family seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn or Buccleuch. A description of Selkirkshire in 1649 states that 'the Water of Ranklehurn coming fra Muddhave Loch [presumably Moodlaw Loch] enters' Ettrick. Scott of Satchells says that there was once a mill on the burn. There is a ballad called 'The Maid of the Rankle Burn' (it is marked 'Bourn of Rankilburn' on Blaeu's c.1654 map, 'Ranckill B.' on Adair's c.1688 map and 'Rankgle Burn' on Ainslie's 1773 map; see also Rankilburn).

rannel-trei (ra-nul-trī) n., arch. a beam, or branch-stripped tree, forming the roof-tree of a house – 'And oure the auld man's rigging back She laid her rannel-tree shanke' [JTe], '. . . An' bringe the cruke, an' eke the lynkis Doon frae the rannel trie' [WiSp].

ranshackle (ran-shaw-kul) v., poet. to ransack, search thoroughly – 'I'll ranshekel the hale house till I find it' [JoJ] 'And whan they cam to the fair Dodhead, Right hastily they clam the peel; They loosed the kye out, ane and a', And ranshackled the house right weel' [T] (also written 'ranshekel'; cf. ramshaickle).

rant (rawn') v., arch. to romp, roister, indulge in boisterous fun, sing or play a lively tune – 'The rantin' sangs, the leeberal drams . . . ' [RM].

rantie (rawn-tee) adj., poet. frolicsome, boisterous – 'We've rowthie baith o' brose an' kail, Whilk mak's us chuffie, sleek, and rantie' [JoHa].

rap (rawp) v. to knock on a door (more common than 'knock'; cf. chap; noted by E.C. Smith; see also rappit).

rape (rāp) adv., poet. quickly, rapidly – 'Then rude and rape a bairnie scream'd' [JR].

Raper (rā-pur) n. Robert (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when his will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. Given that the name is otherwise unknown, this may be a transcription error, but otherwise he may have been a servant of Lord Minto.

Raperlaw (rā-pur-law) n. farm roughly between Minto and Lilliesleaf villages. The lands there were a possession of Jedburgh Abbey from its founding in the 12th century until the Reformation. Humphrey of Raperlaw is recorded as a witness in about 1201. Reginald of Durham, in his collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, recounts a tale of a woman from here, crippled from birth, who was cured after spending the night at Cuthbert's chapel on the Slitrig (probably at Cogsmill). Matthew Lamb was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5, as well as George and James Davidson. George Davidson had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him there before 1502. In 1564 George Turnbull's quarter was leased to William Gray and William Redford, Henry [. . .]son's quarter together with John Middlemas' half to Andrew Gray, George Gray and Thomas Allan. The 'lands and toun of Rapperlaw' were part of the lands sold to Adam French in 1567 and still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Hob Turnbull was there in 1579. James Turnbull was 'called of Rapirlaw' in 1619. The lands there were inherited by William Middlemas of Chapel from his father, also William, in 1622; it appears that at that time it was part of the Barony of Raperlaw. The farm was feued by Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning to Turnbulls and Davidsons in 1632. William Wood was tenant there in 1634. In the 1643 county valuation, the owners of lands recorded there were James Middlemas of Raperlaw (valued at £416), Walter Turnbull (valued at £100 10s), Adam Turnbull (valued at £104), Andrew Davidson (valued at £65), William Turnbull (valued at £104) and David Davidson (valued at £195). Lands there (or perhaps the superiority) were owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the later 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Walter Scott of Alton owned lands there valued at £416 in 1678, as well as James Middlemas (£134 18s 6d), Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (£104), Andrew Davidson (£65), Robert Elliot in 'Wyliespeel' (£104) and John Douglas (£195). Some of these parts were later known as Greenhouse and Catshawhill. Thomas Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter, along with George Young, a servant to George Gray, who was also a tenant there. Robert Paterson was there in 1689. James Runciman was blacksmith there in 1694, with other householders at that time being William Chisholme, Walter Middlemas, James Middlemas, John Gray, John Riddell, John Robson and James Scott (and John Turnbull among the 'deficients'). It may have been sold by the Scotts of Alton to the Horsburghs of that Ilk about 1710. A 'Plan of Nether Raperlaw and Falahill', property of Gilbert Elliot of Minto, was drawn up in 1766. 'Scott of Alton's Lands in Raperlaw' are referred to in 1788 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £416 and listed under Lord Minto. William Thomson was tenant there in at least 1799–1801 and George Hope was servant in 1801, while Robert Smail and Robert Wight were servants ar 'Reperlaw Tounhead' (the origin is probably Old English 'rapera hlaw', meaning 'rope-maker's hill'; it first appears as 'Raperlau' in about 1150, then 'Raperslau' or 'Rapeslawe' in about the 1170s, 'Raperell' and 'Rapereslaw' in about 1200, and has its modern spelling from 1315; it is transcribed as 'Raparlaw' in 1502, 'Ryperlawe' in 1548/9, 'Rapirlaw' in 1619, 'Raperlaw' in 1622, 'Reaperhall' and 'Reperlaw' in 1670, 'reper law' and 'Reaperlaw' in 1678, 1684 and 1689, 'Repertslaw' in 1684, 'Roperlaw' in 1797 and 'Repperlaw' in 1799; it is marked 'Reperlaw' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and also on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Raperlaw (rā-pur-law) n. Humphrey (12th/13th C.) listed in the period 1200–02 as witness to the grant of lands near Maxton to Melrose Abbey. His name is listed as 'Umfr' de Raperell'. Also in about 1200 he was granted lands at Coldingham, when he is listed 'Vnfrido de Rapereslaw'. Robert (d.c.1237) cleric who is recorded being 'de Raperslau' and other variants. His name surely derived from the lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He qualified as 'Master' sometime in the 1410s. He held a canonry of Dunkeld from about 1420. He witnessed several charters related to Dunkeld, some associated with Archibald of Ednam.

rappit (ra-pee', -pi') pp. rapped, knocked struck – 'I rappit lang, then rappit strang, But answer I gat nane' [WaD] (see rap).

rap up (rawp-up) v., arch. to rouse by knocking, knock up – 'But Wull pled for them to rap up Geordie Oliver, of the Wester Toll Bar . . . ' [RM].

ra-ra-rae (r-ra-rā) n., arch. gout weed, Ægopodium Podagraria, a tall plant with tiny white flowers, formerly used by children in Hawick to adorn themselves with on the eve of the Hiring Fair, marching and chanting 'Ra-ra-rae, the nicht afore the Fair! The drum's i' the Walligate, the pipes' i' the air. Silk an saiteen, Goold an' naiteen; Tig! – for the morn's the Fair Day!' [GW].

'. . . a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, rash an stuffy' [ECS] (also written 'rasch').

rash (rawsh) n., arch. rush, marsh plant – 'No rashes wild on thee are seen, Or aught that would defile thee' [DA], '. . . which was thatched with rashes against the winter's storms' [BM1907], used in the phrase 'the rash buss keeps the cow', meaning a time of peace from marauders – 'Syne warded them, whilk made the rest keep order, Than might the rash buss keep kye on the Border' [T].

rashie (raw-shee) adj., arch. full of rushes (also written 'rashy'; it occurs in place names, e.g. Rashiegrain and Rashy Hill).

Rashiegrain (raw-shee-grān) n. farmstead near the head of the Teviot, beyond Merrylaw. The lands there formed part of the estate of the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Wormscleuch and Commonbrae, valued jointly 'in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb'. It could be the 'Rashlie' listed among lands around Teviothead that were part of the Barony of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. John Scott was there in 1702. By 1707 it was valued along with Commonbrae at £261 19s 4d. Andrew Anderson was Laird in 1708 when he served as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. George Dickson was herd there in 1725. Thomas Little was tenant there in 1740. The lands were valued at £261 19s 4d in the 1740s. An unspecified matter of discipline occurring there came to the Hawick Session's notice in 1752. William Anderson was owner in 1761. The farm was purchased in 1771 by Bailie Thomas Turnbull, along with other neighbouring properties. In 1788 it was owned by William Turnbull of Rashiegrain. Robert Armstrong was there in 1799 and John Elliot and William Hall in 1801. In 1811 it was still valued (with Commonbrae) at about £262. The Hope family were living there in 1841. A receipt relating to the poor rates from there in 1875 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. 'Rashiegrain Height' is an area south of there, by Pikethaw Hill, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway – 'The waters o' the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They're clear as crystal rill' [WL] (spelled 'Rashygrain' etc. in older records, it is 'Raschegrane' in 1627, 'Raschiegren' in 1674, 'Raschegrain' in 1675, transcribed 'Rasheglen' in 1695 and 'Rashlie' in 1698, and 'Rashigrane' in 1708; 'rashie' means covered in rushes and 'grain' is an old Scots word for a branch of a stream).

William (b.1759), Agnes (b.1761) and Walter (b.1765), with no mother's name given, are probably also his children. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Betty (b.1796); and Andrew (b.1800). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Mathieson and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Andrew Henderson and Robert (who was surely a relative). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Isobel Oliver and their children included: Isobel (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1772). Janet (b.1767), with no mother's name given, was probably also his daughter. James (d.bef. 1811) farmer in lands to the east of Hawick. He was living at Ormiston in 1781 and was farmer at Kaimend, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as tenant at 'Combend' in 1801 and also in 1811 when his brother Robert died. In 1801 his sons William and James were both listed on the Militia ballot in Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Hermiston and their children included: William (b.1777); and James (b.1781). It seems likely he was a son of William from Lilliesleaf Parish. James (1781–1863) son of James. He was listed at Kaimend on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, along with his brother William. He was later a farm labourer at Honeyburn and also lived at Hummelknowes. In 1808 in Cavers he married Helen, daughter of shepherd Walter Baptie and Hanna Hogg. Their children included: James (b.1808); Walter (b.1811); Hannah (b.1813), who married Alexander Waldie; William (b.1815), who married Mary Moscrop in Kelso; Robert (b.1817), who was a stable-keeper in Kelso; and Isabella (b.1823), who married William Mill in Hawick. He died in Kelso. James (1808–87) son of James. His children were born at Hassendeanburn, then Wilton, and finally Victoria (Australia). He married Barbara Andison in 1843 in Denholm. Their children were: Esther (b.1844), who married James Douglas Turnbull; Helen (b.1847), who married Henry Campbell from Ayrshire; Hannah Wilhelmina (b.1849); Adam James (b.1856); and Bella (b.1859). He died in Australia. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Winthrope and their children included: Janet (b.1771); William (b.1773); George (b.1779); and George (again, b.1784). He could be the Robert, son of William, born in Lilliesleaf in 1740. Robert (d.1811) brother of James, farmer at Kaimend. He could be the same as the Robert of Lilliesleaf Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1738); Robert (b.1740); an unnamed son (b.1742); and Agnes (b.1746). William (1777–1851) elder son of James. He was a farmer, born in Cavers Parish, who moved to the Jedburgh area. He was a labourer at 'Cambend' (i.e. Kaimend) in Cavers Parish listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. He was listed at Kaimend on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, along with his brother James. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Wilson, baker in Hawick. Their children were: James (b.1803), who lived near Duns; Walter (b.1805), tenant farmer at Thickside; Margaret (b.1807), who married Thomas Waddell; Isabella (b.1811); Janet (b.1814); and William (b.1816), a shepherd near Duns. He died at Thickside, Jedburgh. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Wilton Manse according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Kerr and their daughter Janet Elizabeth was baptised in 1849 (also written 'Rathy').

rationin (raw-shi-nin) n. a system for sharing out limited supplies of food and other goods, especially during war-time. This happened during and after both World Wars, with queueing becoming a part of everyday life in Hawick.

rattan (raw-tin) n., arch. a rat – 'They've crush'd an' spoilt her brand new cap, Her bonnet's a bamboozl'd, As flat as ony rattan trap, An' a' her ringlets toozl'd' [JoHa], '...and he was as completely trapped as a ratten could be' [BCM1881] (also spelled 'ratten', etc.).

Rattlin Roarin Willie (raw'-lin-rō-rin-wi-lee) n. song popularised by Burns, which is supposedly local, being about events that happened to William Henderson of Priesthaugh in 1627. Willie, a local ballad-maker and brawler, slew 'Robert Rule' somewhere near Allanhaugh. Burns heavily edited it and added a third stanza in praise of his friend William Dunbar, which has disguised its origin. But Sir Walter Scott added 4 further verses about Willie's capture by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and 'young Falnash' (probably Archibald Elliot). The Presbytery records show that William Elliot was wanted for the murder of William Henderson in 1627, surely the basis for the song. The tune also has various versions, existing as the air of the song, as well as for both the pipes and the fiddle. Whether the origin was with Willie himself or someone else is unknown. Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee published a study of the song in 1886 – 'Rob Roole he handled rude And Willie left Newmill's banks Red-wat wi' Robin's blude' [T].

rauchle (raw-kul) adj., poet. bold, impetuous – 'Auld Britain's sons are yet fu' yauld . . . He'll find her yet the same in war – A raucle, ready-haundit kimmer' [JoHa], 'Rauchle gulls daily re-anoint Enthroned King Edward . . . ' [DH] (also written 'raucle').

raucht (rowcht) pp., arch. reached, extended, seized, stretched – 'He girt his broadsword to his side – That friend of proven worth; He raught his hagbut from the wall, – Preparing to go forth' [JTe], 'Than saith he til the man, Rax furth thine han'. An' he raught it furth . . . ' [HSR], 'An' he raught furth his han' towaird his discipels, an' said, Behald, my mither an' my brithren' [HSR] (also written 'raught'; past tense of rax or reach).

Raufson (rowf-son) n. John (14th C.) owner of lands in 'Ermildon' (i.e. somewhere around Anrton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. 'Terra Johannis Raufson' is listed there with a value of 16 shillings.

How the jockies in their fury Rave an' ruggit' [RH] (also written 'raive'; this is the past tense of rive, which can also be 'rived'; cf. the past participles reen and 'riven' as in English).

Ravenburn (rā-vin-burn) n. former shepherd's cottage on the farm of Hyndlee, situated to the east of the Note o' the Gate, now deep within Wauchope Forest. It appears to be 'Reavinburne' in 1694, when there was a hearth listed there, among the farms of the Laird of Harwood. The shepherd there in the mid-1800s was Walter Cavers. The stream there is the Raven or 'Reaven' Burn, which forms part of the headwaters of the Jed.

Raven Burn (rā-vin-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Jed Water. Causeway Sike, Yellow Sike, Hay Sike, Piper Sike and Raven Sike all join it before the former farmstead of Ravenburn. It runs roughly northwards, joining several smaller streams to become the Jed near Westshiels.

Ravenswud Junction (rā-vinz-wud-jungk-shin) n. Ravenswood Junction, a junction of the Waverley Line with the Berwickshire Railway, between Newtown St. Boswells and Melrose, near the Leaderfoot Viaduct. The line connected Hawick with Greenlaw, Duns and Chirnside and ran from 1856 until part was washed away in a flood in 1948. The name came from the nearby house, built in the 1820s by Major John Scott (later of Woll) on the estate formerly known as Old Melrose.

raw (raw) n. a row – 'A cood wale oot Rule Waeter's coorse feine, – merkeet wui raws on raws o treis' [ECS], 'Fowr in a raw = four abreast' [ECS], 'A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses' [ECS], 'They gaed twae in a raw' (= two abreast)' [GW], 'Aw'll gie ye a' twa or threi raws Aw wrote tae send oot tae oor laddies in Canada' [JEDM], 'In that Kirk-yard, in mony a raw, Hae mouldered hearts without a flaw . . . Raw (raw) n. former name for the area of Netherraw and Upper Raw on the Hermitage Water ('Rha' is on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Raa' on Visscher's 1689 map, while Blaeu's 1654 map shows both 'N. Ra' and 'O. Raa').

Raw (raw) n. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded as 'Jake Rawe Martyn Crossers servaunte' in 1544, when he was among a large number of Scotsmen who swore allegience to Henry VIII. It is possible that the Martin Crozier was the one who resided at Earlside, but it is possible another Martin is meant. Thomas (19th C.) merchant and commission agent in Hawick. His estate was sequestered in 1885. He was a member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880.

Rawflat (raw-fla') n. farm between Old Belses and Bloomfield in the southern part of Ancrum Parish. In 1502 Bartholomew Turnbull was tenant and Thomas Turnbull in 1540. It was recorded being in the Barony of Primside in 1579 when Walter Turnbull yielded some of the crops and income from his half of the lands in order to repay a debt to Allan Deans from Hawick. Walter Turnbull was Laird there when ordered to vacate the lands in 1581. However, later in 1581 he was murdered by a band of other Turnbulls, and then his wife 'and hir puir bairnes' were harassed by Turnbulls firing their weapons at the farm. 'Jaquie Laidlaw' was a tenant in 1601 and Walter Turnbull was 'younger of Raflat' in 1603. It is also recorded in a criminal case relating to 1612, when it was owned by the Davidsons and farmed by William Rutherford. The lands were sold by Walter Turnbull to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623, and at that point were still in the Barony of Belses. Some time after that they were included in Ancrum Parish. It was inherited by Robert Bennet from his father Ragwell in 1670. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the later 17th century. John Wilkie, younger, was there in 1685. They were given to Rev. Joseph Leck of Yetholm in 1739. In 1788 the lands were valued at £500 and owned by 'Miss Ainslie'. Peter Brown was the tenant in the early 1800s. The farm passed from John Edmund Elliot to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. It may once have been referred to as 'Milton' (it is 'Rowflat' in 1502, 'Rawflat' in 1538, 'Raflat' in 1603, 'Raflatt' in 1612 and 1632, 'Raeflat' in 1617 and transcribed 'Reuflat' in 1678 and 'Ranflat' in 1684; it is 'Raflett' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map, marked as a fortified house, although a little too far south).

reader (ree-dur) n. a lay preacher who assists the Minister in Church. In earlier centuries the term referred to someone appointed to read the scriptures instead of the ordained priest or minister. In many post-Reformation churches there was a minister in charge of several parishes and a separate reader for each parish, often having been Catholic priests, and allowed to continue to preach, but barred from administering the sacraments; uch appointments stopped following an Act of the General Assembly of 1581. The office of reader was officially abolished after the adoption of the Westminster Directory in 1645, but nevertheless continued in practice. The term later came to be used to refer to the Precentor. In Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries the Reader (who was usually the Schoolmaster and Session Clerk) would read the scripture aloud for the congregation for up to an hour before the regular service began, and also during the interval in the lengthy services.

the Read Roads (thu-reed-rōdz) n. name sometimes given to the former road passing from upper Teviotdale into Ewesdale. The road is mentioned in a travel account of 1629. It was the principal road from Carlisle to Hawick before about 1765 when the turnpike was opened. All traffic would have been on foot or horseback. Many miles of the old hollowed out tracks can be seen on the hillsides around Linhope and Mosspaul. A good stretch is visible looking back from Linhope as the track stretches over part of Lightning Hill towards Phaup, close to the route that the Mosspaul Ride-out usually takes. There is also a suggestion that it may have partly followed the course of a road built by the Romans, connecting the Lower Esk with Teviotdale, via Eweslees, Ewes Doors and Caerlenrig. Another (or related) road has been traced over the pass from Ewes Doors, via Haggis Side and Corbie Shank.

ream (reem) v., arch., poet. to froth, overflow, cream, form cream – 'A reamin' horn the board to grace' [JR], '... And fill wi furthy glee A reamin' cup, That I may drink A blythe New Year to thee' [JT].

rector (rek-tur) n. a cleric in charge of a parish, a high-school Headmaster.

the Rector (th-rek-tur) n. Headmaster of Hawick High School, see the Pesh.

Rectors (rek-turz) n., pl. Headmasters of Hawick High School. The term was also used in its clerical in Hawick before the Reformation, and also for the incumbent of St. Cuthbert's Episcopalian Church. The educational term is synonymous with (but perhaps more respectful than) 'The Pesh'. In Hawick the title was first used in the Grammar School, and then in the 'United Schools' when it merged with the Parish School, and thereafter in the Buccleuch School and High School. A full list is: James Innes 1710–18; Robert Chisholme 1718–21; James Anderson 1722–46; William Dyce 1746–73; George Lamb 1773–88; Thomas Barrie 1788–98; James Kirk 1798–1818; James Murray 1818–53; Anthony Dodds 1853–90; William Pitcairn 1890–95; James Brand 1895–1906; William Lyndsay Thompson 1908–19; A.M. Redeswire (reed-swIr) n. marshy area at the head of the Rede, being formerly a pass through the Cheviots, near to the Carter Bar. A description of Roxburghshire in 1649 gives this location as the source of the Oxnam Water, but it is more the source of the Jed – 'And when they reach'd the Redswire high, Soft beam'd the rising sun; Bit formless shadows seem'd to fly Along the muirland dun' [JL], 'All the magical names were on my map – Eildon, Carterhaugh, Caerlenrig, Reidswire . . . ' [DH] (see the Raid o the Redeswire and Reid Swire; it is 'the Redswyre' in 1649).

Redford (red-furd) n. former name for an area near the modern Redfordgreen. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, mentioned many times in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1448, and consisting of 3 steadings. In 1459 they were let to David Scott. In 1480 they were granted to the Laird of Cranston. In 1486 the 3 steadings were leased again to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch, 'without grassum on account of their waste condition'. It was leased by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1499 it was occupied by Robert Scott in 1499, when let to Patrick Home (the King's Comptroller), on the refusal of Robert Scott. It was still Crown property in 1502 and in 1510 the 3 steadings of 'Hyndhop, Dricleuchschell, et Redefurdegrene' were feued to Alexander, Lord Home (it is 'Redefurde' in 1459 and 1480, 'Redfurde' and 'Reidfurd' in 1490, 'Reidefurde' in 1492, 'Redefurd' in 1499 and 'Redefurde' in 1502).

Redford (red-furd) n. Alan (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains. Andrew (18th/19th C.) father of Andrew, farmer at Hermiston. He was probably the Andrew recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and earlier owned by James (probably his father). He is probably the resident of Lilliesleaf listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. In 1799 he was 'Portr.' (presumably 'portioner') in Lilliesleaf when his son Andrew was on the ballot for the Militia. He married Isabel Stewart and their children included: James (b.1768); Andrew (b.1778). He may be the Andrew whose son James was baptised in 1763. Andrew (b.1778) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of Andrew and Isabel Stuart. His is son of 'Portr.' Andrew at Lilliesleaf on the 1799 Militia ballot and 'Junr. Port.(́probably 'portioner') at Lilliesleaf on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was tenant farmer for John G. Stewart of Hermiston. He is probably the Andrew who is recorded owning part of Davidson's lands of Greenhouse in 1811, with his heirs being listed in 1874. He was at Hermiston in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 450 acres at Hermiston, employing 8 labourers. His wife was Isobella Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1805), who probably died young; John (b.1806/7); James (b.1809), farmer; Charles (b.1813), also died young; Andrew (again, b.1815); George (b.1817); Charles (again, b.1822); Jessie (b.1826/7), who married Walter Govenlock; Margaret; and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In the 1851 census he and his wife were recorded at the Maxwellheugh Tollbar House. He married Janet Grieve and their children included: James (b.1830), also a tailor; and William (b.c.1832), a draper. His widow was in Kelso in 1861, visiting her sister Jane Weatherstone. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Francis (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. In 1690 in Ashkirk Parish he witnessed baptisms for William Scott and for John Murray and Margaret Redford. He is probably the Francis who married Bessie 'Allion' in 1699 and whose son William (b.1699) was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. He may also be the Francis who earlier married Isobel Chisholme in 1688 and whose children included Jean (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk, with witnesses William Scott and John (surely a relative). George (b.1817) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Isabella Scott. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1861 and was unmarried. James (16th C.) recorded being in Hassendeanburn in 1579 when he and his daughter Margaret sold a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf to John. The price was 20 merks, a cow and a stone of wool. John was surely a relative, but the relationship is not recorded in the transaction (which took place in Selkirk). He may be the Redford recorded as witness to a sasine for William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf in 1580/1. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1637) and Bessie (b.1638). His name is listed as 'Reidfurd' and 'Readfurt'. James (17th C.) married Bessie Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. Perhaps Margaret (b.1646) was his daughter. James (17th C.) married Margaret Dodds in Roberton Parish in 1686. His wife was from Bedrule Parish. Their son William was born in 1688. In 1686 (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Roberton Parish. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written 'Reedfoord'. It is possible he is the same as James, tenant in Headshaw. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with his name written 'Ridfoord'. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Headshaw in 1703. He married Catherine Minto and their children included: John (b.1703), baptised in Ashkirk. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son James was baptised in 1743. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Walker and their children included Margaret (b.1760). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Stewart and their children included Patrick (b.1759). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Jean Waugh and their son James was baptised in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as former owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and later owned by Andrew (probably his son). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William was baptised in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 the family were living on Damhead and he was an agricultural labourer. They emigrated to Canada in 1842. He married Margaret Wilson in 1820 and most of their children were baptised in Lilliesleaf: James (b.1821), who became a Canadian M.P.; Andrew (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Elspeth (b.1830); and William (b.1833). He is probably the James, married to Margaret Neil, whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1818. He may be the servant if that name who was recorded at Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. James (b.1809) farmer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and probably a descendant of the earlier James. In 1851 he was living on Main Street, farming 100 acres and employing 4 people and was still there in 1861. His wife was Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Lauder of Earlston. Their children were Helen (b.1853) and Andrew (b.1855). James (1821–1908) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of James and Margaret Wilson. In the 1841 census he was living in Wilton Damhead and working as a 'Writer's Cl.', presumably in the office of one of the Hawick lawyers of the time. He emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings in 1842. In 1851 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Gouray. He worked as a teacher, lumber merchant, manufacturer, land speculator and banker. He was involved in local affairs in Perth, Stratford and Downie and became M.P. for North Perth 1867–72. He moved to Austin, Texas in 1876, where he died. James (b.1830) tailor in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew. He took over the business from his father, on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Janet Haldane from Ancrum. Their children included Helen (b.1852), Janet (or Jessie, b.1854), Andrew (b.1856), Elizabeth (b.1860), Euphemia (b.1862), James (b.1864), William (b.1866), Jane (b.1869) and John (b.1871). Janet (16th C.) recorded on the list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Sir John (15th C.) cleric associated with Cavers Parish from about 1426. His name is written 'de Redford'. John (16th C.) rented an acre of land called 'Coit acre' and another rig of land from William Middlemas, farmer at Friarshaw in 1563 for 11 years. He may be the John who in 1579 purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from James (who was probably related) in Hassendeanburn. He is probably the John in Lilliesleaf whose daughter Janet had a marriage contract in 1582 with John, son of Thomas Smail, also in Lilliesleaf; he promised to pay £60 as part of the arrangement. He could be the same John who was granted a half husbandland of land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. John (17th C.) married 'Heilling Jonkesone' in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. His wife's name may have been Helen Jenkins or Johnson. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Ashkirk Parish, written up in the 1718 Presbytery records for a dispute with Adam Scott (tenant of Woll). He accused Scott of insulting remarks directed to the elders, while he himself was accused of drunkenness and disparging remarks made towards Scott. In 1724 he was sent to the synod with money 'for helping to Build Meeting Houses at Babingtoun and Brandon In Ingland'. He is recording collecting money for the Parish in 1727. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1689. Presumably the same John married Agnes Veitch in 1693 and had children: Francis (b.1699); Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); and an unnamed son (b.1714). John (18th C.) tenant in Synton Mill. In 1755 he had a bond with the officials of Selkirk, with the discharge being in 1760. He had further discharges with Selkirk in 1761 and 1765. He may be the resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Mary Scott and whose children included: Francis (b.1739); Janet (b.1744); Agnes (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). Magaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk PArish. In 1639, along with Marion and 3 other women, she appeared before the Session 'and gave in sufficient excuse that they could not come to the communion, their bairns all lying in the pocks [presumably smallpox or similar]'. Marion (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. She was forgiven for not coming to communion in 1639 on account of her child 'lying in the pocks'. Margaret, who was also listed, may have been her sister or sister-in-law. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Mark in 1655 and their children included Janet (b.1656), Thomas (b.1658) and Isabel (b.1661).

The witnesses in 1656 were Thomas Maben and James Wallace and in 1661 were Adam Ogilvie and James Miller. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Walker and their children included Bessie (b.1654). Robert (d.bef. 1494) recorded in a case at the Justiceaire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Nicholas and John, sons of Matthew Turnbull in Hassendean, had remission for his murder. It is not recorded where he was from. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk who worked in one of the mills. In about 1640 he and John Neil were accused of 'keeping the mill going in tyme of preaching'. He 'denyit that he knew the mill was going on ye Lord's Sabbath, but that it was his man, John Neill'. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, in 1483, relating to lands in Hassendean. William 'Will' (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with William Gray. This was specifically the quarter belonging to George Turnbull. William (16th/17th C.) witness in 1607 to a sasine whereby John Scott gained possession of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. His surname is recorded as 'Reidfurd'. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Wester Lilliesleaf. He gave evidence at the 1628 trial for witchcraft of Isobel Howison, stating that in the previous year, he had a sick cow and his mother sent for Howison, who cured the cow with a charm, but Howison herself fell ill. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel 'How' 'Houie' or 'Hoy' in 1652. Their children included James (b.1657) and John (b.1661). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Dunlop and their children included Robert (b.1661). William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hassendeanbank when his will was recorded in 1688. His name is written as 'Reidfoord'. He could be the William 'Reedfoord' recorded as a witness to baptisms in Roberton in 1680 (although crossed out) and 1681. In 1686 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Roberton Parish. William (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He probably lived near Hassendean Mains. He could be the same as the tenant of Hassendeanbank. William (17th C.) married Bessie 'Vogan' in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1688). He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at Essenside in 1702 and was tenant in Easter Essenside in 1709 and 1717. He married Helen Gray and their children included: James (b.1702); Elizabeth and Margaret (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); John (b.1713); Magdalen (b.1714); and Elizabeth (again, b.1717). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Margaret Redford and Robert Gray, respectively, who had children a little later in Ashkirk Parish. He may be the William who, along with John, collected money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (b.1699) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of Francis. He married Janet Tait in 1726. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1724 as a collector of money for the Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In the 1740s he was owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £10. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of lands still valued at £10 that had much earlier belonged to Alexander Hood. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 it is recorded that William Riddell of Camieston owned 'William Redford's Lands in Lilliesleaf, formerly Hood's Lands', which had been acquired by Edgar Hunter. William (b.1831/2) son of tailor Andrew and brother of James. He worked as a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He married Helen Robson and their children included Andrew and Jane (also written 'Readfurt', 'Reedfoord', 'Redfoord', 'Refoord', 'Reidfoord', 'Reidford', 'Reidforde', 'Reidfuird', 'Reidfurd', 'Reidfurde', 'Ridfoord', 'Riedford', 'Rudfoord', etc.).

Redfordgreen (red-furd-green) n. area off the B711 between Alemoor and Buccleuch. The farms of East and West Redfordgreen are here, and it was also once the site of a country school. The farms formerly belonged to the Parish of Yetholm. The area was once owned by the Crown and split into the 3 steadings of Redford, feued by Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 it was 'occupyit be the kingis gudis', paying rental of £15 13s 4d. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1711–24, John Anderson and Robert Inglis in 1723 and Walter Park in 1734. Adam Scott was tenant at East Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel in 1716. The teinds were valued at £28 13s 4d in 1785 and 1802. It was valued, along with Drycleuchshiel at £169 6s 8d in 1785 when held by James Lauder of Carolside and in 1802 when held by Capt. Venner. Henry Thomas Rutherford was owner in the early 19th century and David Scott was tenant at about that time. The term 'the forty thieves of Redfordgreen' was used around the 1830s to refer to 'faggot' (i.e. artificial) voters after it was purchased by the Buccleuch estates – 'By Borthwick Wa's and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch . . . ' [WHO], 'Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen' [WL] (it is 'Redefurdegrene' in 1510, 'Reidfurdgrene' in 1541, 'Reidfurdgrene' in 1621, 'Reidfuirdgrein' in 1633, 'Readfurd-grein' in 1655, 'Redfurgreen' in 1693, 'Reidfordgreen' in 1711, 'Riedfourdgreen' in 1723 and 'Reidfourdgreen' in 1724; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map; see also Redford).

Redfordgreen Schuil (red-furd-green-skil) n. former country school on the moors at Redfordgreen. The building was in Selkirkshire, but also served some of the remote parts of Roberton Parish. The school operated from 1885–1955. A grassy mound is still visible in the field, and a small cairn was placed there in recent years. A book 'Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955' (1995) was written by Kathleen W. Stewart. The Borders Archive holds the school admission book for 1885–1935 and log books for 1885–1955.

Redheugh see Reidheugh

redin (ree-din) pp. redone – 'it's nae guid, it'll jist heh'i be redin'.

Redpath (red-, reed-path) n. village between St. Boswells and Earlston, still having its planned form around a single south-facing main street.

Redpath (red-, reed-path, -peth) n. Adam (1776–1823) hedger at Weens estate. He started there in 1805. He had a sister Margaret. He married Jane Cook, who died in 1841, aged 67 (who was said to be insane in later life). Their children included: William (b.c.1804), forester at Weens; John (b.c.1805), who lived for a while at Bonchester Bridgend; Betty (b.1809), spend most of her life as a servant at Weens; George (b.1811); Helen (b.1813), married Robert Smith and lived at the Sclenty, Blacklee and Denholm; Adam (b.1817), who died in infancy; and Margaret, a housemaid at Weens, who married a Yorkshireman and moved to Aldborough. He died at Sclenty Hall. After his early death his 2 sons William and John together took over his job for a while, with William eventually taking over himself. Many of the family are buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Adam (b.1838) son of William and Mary Smith. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. Later he was in Noble's factory in Hawick. Anne, R.S.A., O.B.E. (1895–1965) born in Galashiels, 2nd daughter of Thomas Brown, a textile designer, and Agnes Milne. Her family moved to Hawick when she was 6 years old, after her father was offered the job of head of design at Glebe Mills. She attended Hawick High School in the period 1901–13 and then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art (concurrently with teacher training at Moray House). Graduating in 1918, she won a scholarship to visit Europe. She returned to France in 1920 with her husband (an architect who worked with the Imperial War Graves Commission), and they lived there until 1934. Her first exhibition was in 1921, and she also decorated family furniture with flowers and birds, which would later feature in her still life paintings. In 1934 her husband's millionaire employer lost his fortune and the family returned to Britain, she and her sons to Hawick and her husband to a job in London. She lived at 52 Orchard Terrace and on Beaconsfield Terrace. She was also President of Hawick Art Club. In this period she painted many landscapes around Hawick, and exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy. She became best known for her vividly colourful still lifes, replete with familiar household objects, often in disconcerting combinations, with 'The Indian Rug' and 'Still Life with Orange Chair' perhaps best exemplifying her unique style. She soon became one of Scotland's best known artists. She was President of the Scottish Society of Women Artists 1944–47 and in 1952 was the first female painter to be elected to the Royal Scottish Academy. Further trips to the continent inspired a change in style and she produced distinctive Mediterranean landscapes. She became an O.B.E. in 1955 and was also granted an honorary degree from Edinburgh University. In public she was known for her extravagant hats and designer clothes. Her self-portraits are in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum. She later moved to Edinburgh. She suffered several heart attacks in later life, but continued to develop her artistic output, her last phase focusing on paintings of church interiors in Lisbon and Venice. In 1929 she married James Beattie Michie at Teviothead Kirk. She died following a fall at her home, 7 London Street, Edinburgh and was cremated. Books on her include 'Anne Redpath 1895–1965, her life and work' (1996) by Patrick Bourne, 'Anne Redpath' (1974) by George Bruce and 'Anne Redpath, 1895–1965' (1996) by Philip Long. David (b.1814/5) from Eccles, he was farm steward at Galalaw in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Janet, George and Robert. James (18th C.) gardener at Stobs. His surname is recorded as 'Rippeth' in the baptismal records for his children in Cavers Parish. His children included: James (b.1725); Helen (b.1727); Janet (b.1729); and an unnamed child (b.1734). James Laidlaw (1912–2004), O.B.E., born at 9 Park Street, he became a captain of the local knitwear industry. He left school at 14 for an apprenticeship in the warehouse of Barrie & Kersel's and would eventually become Managing Director of essentially the same company. He played for Hawick R.F.C., as well as Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club, and was an accomplished sprinter. He moved to the London sales office in 1938, then joined the R.A.F., serving for 3 years in India, where he was awarded the Burma Star. After the War he rejoined his old company, working as a traveller, particularly in Scandinavia. He became President of the Hawick Knitwear Manufacturers' Association in 1956 and in 1967 became Managing Director of Barrie Kn itwear Ltd. He was a founder member (and later Chairman) of the Scottish Knitwear Council. In 1978 he was awarded the Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal for services to the textile industry and he retired in 1979, when he received the O.B.E. He served as President of the Callants' Club in 1981 and for 1981–97 he was Chairman of the Abbeyfield (Hawick) Society. John (b.c.1805) son of Adam and younger brother of William. He worked as a labourer in the Bonchester Bridge area, living for a while at Bridgend. He was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. Margaret (b.c.1785) sister of hedger Adam. In 1841 she was living at Sclenty Hall and listed as 'Independent'. Also there were Jane (perhaps her mother) and the younger Elizabeth and Margaret. Neil (d.1988) from Hawick, he served in the Gordon Highlanders during WWI and was one of the last surviving holders of the 14–15 Star. He later became a strong pacifist and leading member of the local Labour Party. However, during WWII he served as a Lieutenant in the Home Guard. He worked as a foreman at Braemar. An enthusiastic supporter of athletics, he became Secretary of the Scottish Games Association. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (19th C.) land steward of Bonchester Bridge who was an elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. Samuel (18th/19th C.) servant in Pinnacle, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798, when he was balloted. Later in 1798 he is listed among those who 'did not answers to their Names when called' and by 1799 he is listed as a deserter (with John Oliver, joiner in Ancrum, balloted in his place). Thomas Kinmont 'Kim' (1925–2018) born in Aberdeen, son of William, he was nephew of artist Anne. He was educated at Hawick High School and partly raised by his aunt Anne, particularly after the death of his mother when he was 14. He graduated from Edinburgh College of Art in 1948. He served with the Royal Corps of Signals in WWII and trained as a teacher at Moray House. He was a secondary school art teacher for 35 years, starting in Galashiels. Several exhibitions were held of his art, which was strongly influenced by his aunt. His work can be viewed in several galleries, including the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. He was a member of the New Scottish Group and the Scottish Society of Artists. He married 3 times and had sons Tom and Adam. William (18th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1771. William (18th/19th C.) married Mary Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1831. William (c.1805–86) born in Earlston, son of hedger Adam, he was forester at Weens. When his father died young in 1823, he and his brother John took over the job on one man's wages, but after a couple of years he took over entirely. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed as a hedger at Weens, and in 1861 was a forrester there. He continued to work for the Cleghorns and Tancreds of Weens for his whole working life. He was made an Elder of the Kirk in 1838. He was said to have a dour temper and not to be liked by everyone. He spent some time in an asylum, later living with his daughter Mary in Denholm. He married Mary Smith, who died in 1869, aged 57; her brother was William Smith who married Mary Laidlaw from Weensmoor. Their children included: Ann (b.1833), who worked for a while as laundry maid at Weens, later living in Denholm, died unmarried; Jane (1835–74); Adam (b.1838), servant at Weens and worked for Noble's in Hawick; Mary, in service at Weens, married Mr. Dodds; Thomas, gardener at Blennerhasset, Aspatria; and Elizabeth (b.1846), moved to Yorkshire. He died in Denholm at the age of 82 and is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (??–??) High School mathematics teacher of the mid-20th century, nicknamed 'Ghandi'.

the Reel (thu-reel) n. another name for the Bull Reel, particularly as danced by the Cornet, Principals and ex-Cornets shortly before midnight during the Ball. It is not danced by the other participants, who just watch the proceedings. It is started with the Cornet presenting his sash for his Lass to wear, and the men putting on white gloves. The Principals start the Reel, with the ex-Cornets joining in order of their year of office. The dance is also repeated in front of the Tower on the return from the Moat after dawn, but this time only by the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men. It is also danced in front of the Tower after the Handing-Back on the Saturday. Before 1855, when there were Races held at the Haugh, the Cornet and his followers would dance the Reel at the Haugh after the Dinner on the Friday, and this was repeated after the Dinner was resurrected in 1886. They would dance in the middle of the gymnastic track and this would signal the start of the Games. The Reel was first danced at the Ball (by the ex-Cornets) only in 1891. The origin of the Reel is uncertain.

reen (reen) pp., arch. riven – 'An', behald, the veil o' the temple was reen a-twae frae the tap til the boddum' [HSR] (also written 'ri'en'; past participle of rive, although 'riven' is also used).

reens (reenz) n., pl., arch., poet. reins – 'For thou hest hauden my reens . . . ' [HSR], '. . . for the richteous God tryes the hairts an' reens' [HSR].

Rees (rees) n. Helen Christina Easson (1903–70) born in Newcastleton, daughter of Dr. Rufus Easson Evans. She drove ambulances during the London Blitz. She wrote fiction under the pesudonym 'Jane Oliver', mainly historical novels and short stories. Her books include: 'To-morrow's Woods' (1932); 'Business as Usual' (1933); 'Cook Wanted' (1933); 'Evening of a Martinet' (1934); 'Cuckoo in June' (1935); 'Barrel Organ Tune' (1935); 'The Ancient Roads of England' (1936); 'Mine is the Kingdom' (1937); 'Reluctant Adonis' (1938); 'Not Peace, but a Sword' (1939); 'Queen of Tears' (1940); 'The Hour of the Angel' (1942); 'In no Strange Land' (1944); 'Isle of Glory' (1947); 'Sing, Morning Star' (1949); 'Eaglet and the Angry Dove'; 'Faraway Princess'; 'Queen Most Fair'; 'Watch for the Morning'; 'Young Man with a Sword'; 'Pattern of Chivalry' (1955). She married John Llewelyn Rees (also written 'Rhy's), who died serving in WWII in 1940. In 1942 she set up the John Llewellyn Rhys Prize for young writers, in memory of her husband. Her manuscripts and papers are in the Heritage Hub.

reeshle (ree-shul) v., poet. to rustle – 'A reeshlin' noise' [GW], '. . . That reeshles throwe the breckan' [WL], 'The wund gangs reeshlin' throwe the bents Cryin' 'I dinna ken . . . I dinna ken . . . Unless it's Auld Nickie Ben' ' [DH], n. a rustling sound or movement (also reesle).

reesle (ree-sul) v., arch. to rustle, rattle, make a crisp crackling noise – '. . . a stane-nappin injin gaed-on . . . – nickerin – dirrlin – snokerin – an reesellin' [ECS], to shake impatiently, rattle vigorously – 'A hard the kye reeslin' aboot the wire-fence' [GW], to beat – 'Gin I get had o' my nibbie, I'se reesle yer riggin for ye' [JoJ], n. a rustling sound – 'Aa heirs a reis'le at the door' [JAHM] (cf. reeshle).

reest (reest) v., arch. to be restive, refuse to go forward (said of a horse) – 'The meir reistit. A reistin' horse' [GW], to arrest, to seize goods – 'Ti reest a person's belongings = to execute a warrant for their seizure; to 'poind' his gear' ' [ECS], n. the act of stopping short, baulk – 'Ti taik the reest (of a horse) = to shy; rear; to refuse to proceed. Of persons cf. taik the rewe' [ECS] (also written 'reist').

reest (reest) v., arch. to cure by smoking – 'He has aye plenty hanging reested in the mill-kiln' [BCM1880].

reeve (reev) n., poet. enclosure for cattle, fancifully applied to a hill-fort, refuge – 'The Lord is my rok, an' my reive, an' my deliferer' [HSR], reevick (ree-vik) n., arch. a flimsy piece of material, especially muslin cheese-cloth – 'As thin as a reevick' [GW].

'My guidniss, an' my reive; my hie towir, an' my deliferer . . . ' [HSR] (also written 'reive').

reeze (reez) v., arch. to break wind, flatulate – 'To Reeze behind, To let wind go, Roxb. Whence the phrase, a reezing horse for one that is healthy' [JoJ].

reezie (ree-zee) adj., poet. dizzy, giddy, lightheaded, capricious – 'Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle, And clew a poet's reezy noddle' [JR]. referrit (re-fe-ri', -ree') pp., arch. referred – 'The above compearit and denyit that they flaucht any more on the Satterday before ye communion fra sax hours at morning . . . ' [Ash1640].

the Reformation (thu-re-for-mā-shin) n. name usually given to a movement of religious reform that swept across Europe in the late 16th century, leading to the Church of Rome being replaced with the Protestant Church. One of the major reasons was a perceived abuse of clerical power, but mixed up with power struggles among the nobility. Lutheran doctrines from the continent led to early matryrs, with Archbishop David Beaton consequently killed by rebels in 1545. John Knox, with his Calvinist ideals became leader from 1555, and the Church was completely reformed by an Act of 1560, although not fully established as 'the true and only Kirk of Christ within this realm' until 1567. St. Mary's, like other churches, must then have been transformed into a much plainer and more severe church, suitable for Presbyterian worship. After the Reformation there was a shortage of suitable ministers, so there was an arrangement whereby several parishes were combined under one minister, assisted by a number of readers (most of whom had been pre-Reformation Roman Catholic priests). It is thus hard to distinguish who acted acted as preacher for the local parishes at the end of the 16th century. The use of the terms 'pastor', 'reader' and 'vicar' in that period, as well as 'minister', add to the ambiguities.

the Reform Bill (thu-ree-fōrm-bil) n. parliamentary bill introduced by Prime Minister Earl Grey in April 1831, being possibly the first voluntary scheme of government reform. After much political wrangling it finally passed in June 1832 and became the Reform Act. In 1812 the entire county of Roxburghshire had only 143 voters (up from 105 in 1788), of which a mere 2 or 3 were in Hawick. Hawick people were much involved in the political discussion, with several pro-Reform resolutions being made at public meetings, some of which were passed on to Parliament or the King. A holiday was declared when news reached Hawick of the Bill's initial passing by the Commons in 1831. Trades and societies paraded the streets and bonfires were lit at the Tower Knowe and the Cross. Parliament was then dissolved and new elections called the day after the Hawick May Fair, when a contingent of about 1,000 Hawick men marched to Jedburgh. Defeat of the Bill in the House of Lords led to near revolution around Britain, including in Hawick. Final passage of the Bill was cause for perhaps the largest celebratory parade Hawick has known, in August 1832, organised by a special Reform Committee. The day started with 10 drummers and fifers parading through the town at 6 a.m. and 9 a.m. Bells were rung, the Flag was displayed from the Town Hall, and the flags of the trades and societies hung along the High Street. The crowd was estimated at 10–12,000, and the parade itself, starting at 1 p.m., consisted of over 1200 people in 16 separate sections, accompanied by 3 bands. This included the local landed (Whig) gentry, the Cornet, Magistrates and Council, Tradesmen's guilds and Freemasons. The parade ended at the Sandbed, where the participants were met by smartly-dressed women and girls bearing flowers. 1,146 people then dined in the open air on the Upper Haugh, catered by 8 of the Town's hotels. The Chief Magistrate was in the Chair, and other guests included Capt. George Elliot, Sir William F. Elliot, James Elliot of Wolfelee and George Cleghorn of Weens. There were also speeches by Robert Wilson and Rev. James Henderson. There was then a further march back to the Tower Knowe, and celebrations continued in various inns. As a result of the Bill the County had 1316 voters, and Hawick itself had 300 voters added to its electoral roll. However, a Commons Select Committee investigated abuses of the Bill through 'fictitious voters' being added, specifically joint proprietors of property arranged between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. At the election of 1835 there was a procession of voters and supporters from Hobkirk, Kirkton and Cavers marching into Hawick, accompanied by bands and banners. When it became clear that Lord Scott (the Tory candidate) was going to win, the crowds became quite unruly and the Riot Act was read, with a troop of the Scots Greys being called. The Reform Act of 1868 gave the vote to all male householders, and at that time the Hawick Burghs constituency was formed – 'Huz and Mainchester carried the Reform Bill' [T].

the Reform Committee (thu-ree-fōrm-ku-mi'-ee) n. body in the late 1820s and early 1830s composed of townsmen campaigning in support of the Reform Bill.

refreshment (ree-fresh-min') n. a euphemism for an alcoholic drink.

reft (reft) pp., poet. torn, rent, pulled assunder – 'The blasts o' the winter, sae bitter and keen, Had reft the sward o' the brightest green' [JT], '... I sadly mourn for my ain true love That was reft away frae me' [JCG].

refugee (re-few-jee) n. a young person sent to a rural area from a city to protect them from air raids etc., particularly during World War II, also sometimes referred to as an 'evacuee'. In Hawick they were usually children from the Edinburgh area. There were also Belgian refugees at Silverbuthall during WWI; they arrived about 1915, and most of them returned to Belgium in 1919.

regaird (ree-gārd) v., n. regard – '... and onlawed, conforme to the acts of the towne, in regaird of thair own confessions ...' [BR1679], 'No sermon, in regaird Mr Douglass who was appointed by ye Persbyterie was labouring under a fever' [PR1712], '... who was most sharplie rebuked in regaird both that he is a magistrate in this toun and one of ye number of ye Elders' [PR1716], '... næther carist thou for ony man: for thou regairdistna the person o' men' [HSR], 'Daurin the whummlin flude withoot regaird For ocht, bar rinnin fish, this side o Hell' [DH], 'Wi sma regaird For Hawick toon And even less For Maggie Broon ...' [DH], '... an' was enlichtened on the poseetion as regairds the Common-Ridin' ' [BW1939].

Regal Bailie (ree-gul-bā-lee) n. also called a Bailie of Regality, title sometimes used for the representative of the Lord whose lands included a burgh, with certain administrative and legal powers in that burgh, including collection of rents, taxes at fairs, etc. The Douglases of Drumlanrig appointed a local man to hold this position up until they relinquished the Barony in about 1670. In Hawick this was for a long time the Chamberlain of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The office was appointed by the Duchess of Buccleuch until she failed to take the test legislated by Parliament for Charles II. So in 1686 the office was granted to Walter Scott of Alton. Gideon Scott of Falnash held the office in 1700. Hawick's Regal Bailie remained a powerful local figure until the abolishing of regalities by Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act of 1747 – 'Gedeon Scott of Falnash, regal bailie to the Duchess of Buccleuch ...' [BR1699] (see also Bailie o Regality and Baron Depute).

regality (ree-ga-li'-ee) n. an administrative and legal area, typically larger than a barony, and usually given by the Crown. The jurisdiction of a regality superceded that of the Sheriff of the County. The Lord of the Regality had a distinct court, with its own clerk and officers, overseen by a Bailie of Regality. There were formerly 7 such jurisdictions in Roxburghshire, namely Glasgow (the former lands of that Bishopric), Hawick, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddesdale, Melrose and Sprouston. Hawick was formerly referred to as a Regality, presumably because it was administered as the equivalent of a Royal Burgh, even although it is unclear whether it was created as such by the Crown. The first such mention appears to be in 1358 (although since this is along with Sprouston, and it may be that only Sprouston was a regality at that time, with Hawick being just a 'free barony') is unclear if they were both distinct regalities). Hawick was reerected into a free barony and regality in 1686, since it has fallen to the Crown after the death of the Duke of Monmouth; this new charter granted the barony and regality to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. It ceased to be a regality when heritable jurisdictions were abolished by Parliament in 1747, with the Duke of Buccleuch being compensated £400 as a result – 'Annent the egregious and insolent abuse committ by Walter Rowcastell upon William Scott, regall baylyea of the regallity of Hawicke ...' [BR1693].

Reggs (regz) n. former name for a farm in the hills above Newmill. It is described in the survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, where it is also listed as 'Riggs'. At that time it extended to 84 acres, was bounded by Castlehill, How Meadow and Branxholme Muir and contained no farmhouse. It probably corresponded to the place marked 'Waes' just below Chapelhill on Blaeu's 1654 map (the origin of the name is uncertain, but perhaps just 'rigs').

Reginald (re-ji-nuld) n. of Durham or Coldingham (d.c.1190) mediæval hagiographer, who gave one of the first mentions of Hawick in his account of the miracles of St. Cuthbert, written in the 1160s and 1170s. Reginald's work is partly a recounting of stories told by Aelfric (or Aelred) of Rievaulx, a monk from Durham who travelled around the 1040s; but other parts of Reginald's book are contemporary (he was certainly alive in the 1150s), and hence the date of the local tales is hard to pin down. In fact the last 6 chapters cover stories relevant to Teviotdale, the chapel in the Slitrig, Dolphinus (Rector of Cavers), etc. The story with the most specific Hawick connection concerns Seigiva and Rosfritha, said to be from Hawick (and thus, probably the first known residents) who witness the mysterious appearance of a candle at a chapel dedicated to St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley (identified with a site at Cogsmill). He also wrote histories of St. Godric (with whom he spent time personally), St. Oswald (King of Northumbria), and possibly St. Ebba.

region (ree-jin) n. one of nine units into which Scottish local government was split following Reorganisation in 1974. Each region was divided into separate 'districts', Hawick being in the Borders Region until further reorganisation in 1995.

Regional Cooncil (ree-ji-nul-koon-sul) n. the higher level of local council between May 1975 and April 1996, Hawick's council being that of the Borders Region with headquarters in Newtown St. Boswells. Regional councils were responsible for education, social services, roads and transport. Both District and Regional Councils were replaced by unitary authorities in 1996, Hawick lying within the juristiction of the Scottish Borders Council.

the Registrar's (thu-re-jee-strawrz) n. Registrar's office, where civil weddings took place. From 1974–97 it was located at 12 High Street, which is now a grade B listed building. Latterly the office has been within the Town Hall. The first Registrar in Hawick was Schoolmaster Anthony Dodds 1854–87, following the Registration Act of 1854. James Shiel was appointed as the first Registrar of Wilton about the same time. Both of these men would operate out of their own homes, on Allars Crescent and Laing Terrace, respectively.

registrat (re-jis-trat, trāt) pp., arch. registered – '... and consentis that thir presentis be insert and registrat in the bukis of Counsale ...' [SB1599], '... be insert and registrat in the Books of Council and Session ...' [BR1672], 'Disposition by the last named James Wight ... and registrate in the sheriff-court books of Roxburgh' [DCW1764].

regrat (ree-grat) n., arch. regret – '... so farre sympathisez with yow ... as to afford yow, att least, some regrate' [SB1670].

regrait (ree-grāt) v., arch. to regret – 'Being acertenit be my seruand of the slauchter of zour frind, quhilk I regrait from my verry hart ...' [SB1584].

regratin (ree-gra-tin) n., arch. the act of reselling, buying a commodity in order to profit from reselling it – 'Various persons are fined 'for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty's Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers' [JW1699].

regretit (ree-gre'-ee', gre-ti') pp., arch. regretted – 'But oo've never regretit oor jauntie that day – It was graund, man, an' noo as aw close, aw man say ...' [BM1900].

reid (reed) adj. red – 'hei hed a right reid nose on um', '... of having ane reid petticoat upon her when come from Jedburgh qh should have belonged to the sd Kathrine Bower' [BR1686], 'The sun was reid as a furnace mouthe, As he sank on the Ettricke hyll; And gloamyne gatherit from the easte, The dowye world to fill' [JTe], 'For in the han' o' the Lord ther is ane cup, an' the wine is reid ...' [HSR], 'The reid hairst moon climbs steep and slow a far September sky ...' [JYH], '... till the brae-face was traisselt an the gress ran reed wui bluid' [ECS], 'Hei girned at the reid, an' grat at the blue ...' [DH], 'Frae reid to creamy-white ... Daft berries for daft days ...' [DH], 'The reid rose dwines and her petals lie ...' [WL], '... To catch a glimpse yont the grey reek O' the distant ruifs o' reid' [WL] (also spelled 'reed').

Reid (reed) n. Agnes 'Nanny' (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Stirches in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Rev. Alan David (b.1963), born in Hong Kong, son of Ian Alexander and Anne Grizel Cochrane. He was educated in Broughty Ferry and Dunblane. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1985 and B.D. from Edinburgh University in 1988. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery in 1888, was assistant at Howe of Fife 1988–89 and in 1989 was ordained as minister of the combined charges of Castleton, Saughtree and Newcastleton Congregational Church. In 1993, he became minister of Liddesdale, the united charge of Newcastleton and Canonbie. In 2008 he moved to Kinross. Rev. Alexander (d.1640s) minister at Ashkirk. His early history is not known, but he was admitted in 1619. He donated £11 merks towards the building of Glasgow University Library in 1636. His is probably the name transcribed 'M. Reid, Ashkirk' (probably 'Mr.' is meant) on the 'Confessions' of Faith, signed in Hawick in 1638; Robert Cuthbertson signed beside him as Reader, suggesting he had an assistant at that time. An entry in the Parish records from 1639 than there was 'no session this day the Reider being at Yarrow communion' may have been a jibe aimed at him sometimes reading his sermons. He was present during the admission of Harry Elliot as minister of Bedrule in 1640. He witnessed a baptism for Rev. Robert Cunningham of Hawick in 1640 (who also married a Shaw, and so possibly their wives were related). In 1648 his son William became an apprentice in Edinburgh with George Reid (who may have been a relative), the apprenticeship being transferred to John Reid when George died. He married Janet Shaw and their children included: John; William, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648; Isobel (b.1634); Alexander (b.1635); Anna (b.1637); Elspeth (b.1638); Jean (b.1640); Christian (b.1644). He died sometime between 1645 and 1649. Andrew (17th C.) listed as undermiller at Borthaugh among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hassendean Knowe, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the lawyer who paid the horse tax in Jedburgh in the 1780s. He could be the 'Mr. Reid' whose servant John Armstrong was recorded at Knowetownhead in 1797. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Blyth and their children included: Jean (b.1708); John (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Helen (b.1715); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1708 were weavers John Stevenson and John Richardson, in 1711 were Andrew Jardine ('older') and wright James Purcell, in 1713 were Robert Turnbull and Robert Rodger, and in 1718 were wright James Purcell and weaver Michael Jolly. He is probably the David 'Red' who witnessed a baptism for Walter White in 1728. David (b.c.1780) slater working with Robert Smith according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick. Derek Robert Headteacher of Burnfoot New Community School, appointed in 1996. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 2002 for sevices to education and was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2006. Rev. Edward Thomas Scott (1871–1938) Rector of St. Cuthbert's Kirk 1903–1910. He came from a well-known Glasgow family, with 3 of his brothers being Deputy Lieutenants of that city. He had previously been assistant at St. Paul's and then St. Mary's Cathedral, both in Edinburgh. For most of his incumbency in Hawick he was assisted by Rev. A.L. Ross. His time as Rector was marked by acclaimed Evensong services, which attracted people from other local churches. There were several improvements to the church during his time, including chairs to replace the pews, and his gift of an oak chancel screen. He also became Chaplain to Episcopalians at Stobs Camp. He left to become Rector of St. Bride's in Glasgow, later becoming Dean and Bishop of that Diocese and later Bishop of St. Andrews. Esther (d.1888) worked at Wester Nurseries from the age of 8, but then took over as servant to Peter Wilson's family from Jean Renwick about 1830. The pair completed a continuous service of 106 years. She can be seen in a portrait with the family. George (b.c.1780) servant to John Donaldson at Swanshiel according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. George (19th C.) married Mary Linton in Wilton in 1840. George (d.1923) local businessman. He was Secretary of the Hawick Baptist Kirk for 10 years and Sunday School Superintendent for 6 years. Gordon (1943–) born in Hawick, educated at Hawick and Gala, then at Edinburgh and Oxford Universities, continuing to train as an Episcopalian minister. He became Curate of St. Salvador's Church in Edinburgh in 1967, then served as Chaplain of Salisbury Theological College and Rector of St. Michael's & All Saints Church, Edinburgh from 1972. He also served as a member of Lothian Regional Council and Convenor of Lothian & Borders Police Board. He was Provost of Inverness Cathedral 1984–87 and joined the Diocese of Gibraltar in Europe (the Church of England Diocese that covers continental Europe) in 1988. He lived in Gibraltar and Milan, and looked after chaplaincies all over Italy and Malta. He then became Rector of St. Clement's in Philadelphia. Helen (d.1800) Hawick resident whose death is recorded. She is listed as 'Called Helen and the Cudy', presumably meaning that she had a donkey. J. (19th C.) listed in Slater's 1852 directory as an 'eating house keeper' on the Cross Wynd. James (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Penchrise. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (18th C.) tenant at the Flex in 1743. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Andrew (b.1743); and Janet (b.1749). The witnesses in 1743 were William Scott, also tenant in the Flex, and James Hume in Whitlaw. Probably the same James was recorded at Lochburnfoot in 1745 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish, and at Braidhaugh when his daughter Helen (b.1747) was also baptised in Cavers. John, who was also at Lochburnfoot in 1745, was probably his brother. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Orr and their children included: James (b.1778); William (b.1784); Elliot (a daughter, b.1787); and Euphan (b.1792). The 1787 baptism was 'before the Congregation'. He was living at Dovemount in 1787. James (b.1770s) labourer at Newton in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He may be the son of James baptised in Wilton in 1778. Rev. James (18th/19th C.) tutor at Minto House according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. This meant that he was aged between 19 and 29 at that time. Perhaps he was the same 'Mr. Reid' whose servant at Knowtownhead was listed on the Militia ballot in 1797. It is unclear where he might have been a minister after his position at Minto. James (b.c.1780) labourer at Whitropefoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. James (b.c.1790) miller at Newmill on Slitrig. He was there in 1841. During the 1846 flood he lost a whole field of turnips, which were said to be the best in the Slitrig valley, as well as half a field of potatoes. He married Margaret Haddon, and their children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish) included: Agnes (or Nancy, b.1819); William (b.c.1820); John (b.1823); George White (b.1825); Walter (b.1829); Elizabeth (b.c.1831); Margaret (b.c.1833); James (b.c.1836); and Gilbert (b.c.1840). He is probably the James, son of William in Acreknowe, baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1788. James S. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Penchrise. His brother John farmed at Barnes, which he took over after his brother's death. He won several sheep prizes around the 1910s. Jessie Crawford describes him as 'dour as ditchwater and as hard as nails'. John (16th C.) presented as Rector of Ashkirk in 1552. Nothing else appears to be known about him. John 'Jock' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Jak Reid' and he was probably related to 'Pait', who was also listed. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as resident of the lands of 'eister ...' [possibly Moormaw] in a decrete of 1607 against him, Robert Scott of Burnhead and others. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, with his name recorded as 'Rid'. He married Isobel Mathieson and their son James was baptised in 1656. The witnesses were Thomas (surely a relative) and James Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret 'Betie' and their son John was baptised in 1670. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Lazen' and their son Walter was baptised in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Adderstonelee on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written 'Rid'. John (17th C.) resident at Hawthornside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was surely related to Thomas, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwickshiels in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: thomas (b.1701); Helen (b.1703); John (b.1704); James (b.1706); and Thomas (again, b.1706). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Grieve and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1710. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Raesknowe. He married Isobel Beatie (or 'Betie'), who was a schoolmistress. In 1721 the Hawick Session requested that he produce a testimonial from his previous parish, since his wife had asked for money for teaching poor children. In 1723 he was described as 'a well aged man, capable to teach at ye said toun', when the session agreed to encourage him to teach the poor children in Raesknowe. However, his wife may be the Isobel 'Betie' who was charged with fornication in 1723 and in 1725 was cited to appear for her fourth such offence, 'as soon as she is out of childbed'. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1742 he was at 'Harden ...' when his son Charles was baptised. He is probably the John who married Margaret Donaldson in Roberton in 1740. Margaret (b.1741), baptised in Roberton, was likely also his child. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick and then Cavers Parishes. In 1745 he was living at Lochburnfoot, where James was also living, perhaps his brother. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: John (b.1735); John (again, b.1739); Helen (b.1740); Margaret (b.1745); John (again, b.1747); and Janet (b.1750). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included John (b.1756). John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1761 he married Janet Anderson, from hawick Parish.

John (18th C.) married Jane Hume in Hawick Parish in 1770. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Berryfell in 1776 when his son Robert was baptised. John (18th/19th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was written 'Read'. Probably the same John was 'Chaise Driver Cavers' when listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'New Appletreehall', recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 4 horses. He could be the John Reid, who was bankrupt by 1817 when there was a court case over an 1802 bill he had with John Allan, involving Adam Ormiston, and John and Thomas (his brother-in-law) Ainslie. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomline and their son George was baptised in 1839. Rev. John (19th C.) minister recorded at Castleton in Slater's 1852 directory. It is unclear which church he may have been minister of, but it is possible he was one of the supply ministers for the Congregational Kirk. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Barnes near Stobs. He remained a bachelor. He was a good friend of Dr. Barrie and Finlay Purdom, and was said to be fond of a bottle. When in Hawick he stabled his horse at the Tower Hotel; one day he ignored the advice of the hostlers to take a carriage home and mounted his horse while quite drunk, which subsequently reared and he died in the pend. After his death the farm was taken over by his brother James S. John (19th/20th C.) butcher on the High Street. His brother James died in the South African War in 1901. Johnston (b.1800/1) servant at Wilton Lodge in 1861. She was still there in 1868 when 'Mrs Johnstone Reid, Wilton Lodge' donated coins to the Museum. Katherine (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded as priest at Hassendean Kirk in 1539. He may have been the actual minister there at that time, with Sir John Duncan and Sir George Scott squabbling over the main benefice. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. She was named in 1645 'for biding in houss, and going to Lessudden to sheir in time of harvest'. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Peter 'Pate' (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as 'Pait Reid' and probably related to 'Jak', who was also listed. R. (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. R.E. (19th/20th C.) President of the Toronto Hawick Common Riding in at least 1926 and 1927. He was presumably originally from the Hawick area. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Langholm, he was rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session in 1709 for having an irregular marriage. Robert (1734/5–1822) labourer at Boghall. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert (b.c.1770s) recorded as house servant and groom at Stirches in 1788, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was recorded as a servant at Heap on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and explicitly a servant to 'Mr Hall' at Heap on the 1801 Militia ballot. Perhaps the same Robert was a servant at Silverbuthall, who married Christian Anderson and had children John (b.1810) and Richard (b.1812) baptised in Wilton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) served as overseer for collecting marl from Groundistone and Blackcleuch for the Buccleuch estates, in the period 1799–1807. He may be the same Robert recorded as farmer at Chesters (Southdean) in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Janet Rae in Wilton in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Lewis in Wilton in 1816. Robert 'Rob' (b.1791) son of William and Jean, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a stockingmaker who lived at Roadhead and was known as 'General Reid' of Roadhead. He led the Hawick contingent to the Carterhaugh Baa game of 1815, gaining his nickname there. The death of his dog Flora inspired one of the few surviving poems of James Hogg; apparently he had the family bible bound in the dog's hide after she died. He is listed as a stocking-maker at Roadhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is recorded at Roadhead in 1841, 1851 (by which time he was a widower) and 1861 (when he is listed as 'Wool Frame Work Knitter'). He married Esther Cairns in Wilton in 1818. Their children included William, George, Thomas, Alexander and Jane. He is probably the stockingmaker whose child's death is recorded in 1838. Stan (20th C.) organiser of dances in the Drill Hall, popular on Saturday nights in the 1930s – 'Ee got intae Stan Reid's for a tanner And a pass oot on the back o' eer hand' [AY]. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Turnbull is recorded in 1682. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hawthornside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to John, who was also listed there, as well as

Thomas, who was at Hawthornside a few decades later. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Hawick Parishes. In 1733 he was recorded at 'Eal...' (either Eilrig or Alemoor). In 1746 he was at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). He married Agnes Borthwick in Roberton in 1733 and their children included: Mary (b.1733), baptised in Roberton; Janet (b.1738), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1746), also baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1746 were Francis and Thomas Elliot at Harwood. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Ormiston in 1726, 1727, 1729 and 1737. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane Elliot in Cavers in 1725. His children, baptised in Cavers, included: Bessie (b.1726); Jane (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); James (b.1731); Bessie (b.1733); Janet (b.1734); and Thomas (b.1737). He is surely related to Walter, who was at Ormiston at the same time. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was herd at Hawthornside in 1739. His children included James (b.1739) and Elspeth (b.1744). Thomas (18th C.) along with Thomas Blyth he rented Appletreehall, Knowetownhead and part of Clarilaw from Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1763. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and several other baptisms in Wilton Parish in 1769 and 1770 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). Thomas (18th C.) married Mary Black in Hobkirk in 1766. Thomas (19th C.) tenant of St. Leonards farm in the late 19th century, when the ordering of the Curds and Cream became a more formal event. It was probably his wife who was painted with Betsy the cow by J.E.D. Murray in 1889 – 'And hearken ye, hearken ye, friend Tam Reid, Speakin' loud's a wee thing risky; Some like when here, A drap o' good cheer, So dinna forget the whisky!' [JEDM]. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ormiston, where his is recorded in 1735, 1737 and 1742. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Thomas (b.1731); John (b.1735); Agnes (b.1737); Isabel (b.1739); and Agnes (again, b.1742). He is surely related to Thomas, who was at Ormiston at the same time. Walter (d.bef. 1808) roadman in Hawick. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in 1808. Walter (b.c.1805) mason in Wilton, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at Kirkstyle (probably the north side of Princes Street, near Dickson Street). He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Ballantyne in Wilton in 1832 and their children included John, Walter B., Elizabeth, Robert and Robert Ann. In 1851 his widow was 'proprietor of houses' at the same address. Walter (19th C.) farmer at Acreknowe. He was there in 1841, with 4 female servants in his household. His widow was still at Acreknowe in 1851. He married Margaret Aitkin and their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Elizabeth Frances (b.1824); William (b.1825); Gilbert Aitkin (b.1827); Walter (b.1833); Margaret (b.1836); James (b.1838); and Elizabeth Frances (b.1842). William 'Willie' (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'Wille Redde servaunte to John Crosser', among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. Many of the relevant Croziers were connected with the Slitrig valley at that time. It is possible his name was 'Reddy' or some other variant. William (17th C.) son of Rev. Alexander of Ashkirk. In 1648 he became a merchant's apprentice with George Reid in Edinburgh. When George Reid died, his apprenticeship was transferred to John Reid; these men could all be related. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hummelknowes. In 1709 he married Isobel Leyden, the marriage being recorded in Cavers Parish. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for William Helm in 1731. He married Helen Armstrong and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1721). The witnesses in 1719 were Beadle John Scott and William Hislop. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1757, 1763 and 1773 and 1775. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Margaret (b.1755), Isobel (b.1757), Agnes (b.1759), John (b.1761), Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1773) and an unnamed daughter (b.1775). He may be the William, married to Jean Scott, whose son Gilbert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1769. William (18th C.) recorded at Acreknowe in 1788 when his son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish and in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William, baptised in Kirkton in 1794 was probably also his child. He is probably the William who married 'Angus' Cavers in Kirkton in 1787. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Dodburn, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Dodburn in 1797. William 'Wull' (c.1769–1846) sexton and Beadle at Wilton for about 50 years and great-grandfather of James Turnbull. In 1835 he was Church Officer at Dovemount, and in 1840 and 1841 was at Roadside. In the 1841 census he was listed at Gibsnose, with his wife Jane. He was one of the people chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton. One of his responsibilities was ringing the church bell, and he is said to have complained about how infrequently he got to ring the bell, just before his own funeral. He was known as a great wit, and was unkindly rumoured to be in league with grave-robbers – 'Wull Reid, hei lifts th' deid; Collins does the same; Jimmie Riddle is a sweep And resurrection man' [T]. He married Jean (or Jane) Reid their children included: Robert (b.1791); Jean (b.1793); Janet (b.1795), who married their neighbour Thomas Dryden; Thomas (b.1800); William (b.1804); and John (b.1806). William (b.1794/5) farmer at Winningtonrig. He was there in 1841 and 1851 with his son William; in 1851 he was farmer of 600 acres and employer of 7 people. William (b.1803/4) mason in Wilton. He was listed at Damside in 1840, with the address changed to Roadside, where he was in 1841. In 1851 he was a journeyman mason on Wilton Kirkstyle. His wife was Mary and their children included Helen, William, John, Jane and Walter. Rev. William (b.1823/4) from Forfar, he was a 'probationer' of the Free Church in Newcastleton in 1851. Since that church was only established in 1850, he was probably the first person to minister to the new congregation. He is recorded giving a temperance talk in Newcastleton in 1852, and in a directory of that year is incorrectly listed as 'John'. William (b.1825/6) son of Walter, he took over as farmer at Acreknowe. In 1851 he was farmer of 1200 acres at Acreknowe, and employing 6 farm labourers. William J.S. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article 'Drumlanrig and the Charter' for the 1938 Transactions (formerly written 'Red', 'Reed', 'Rid', etc.).

Reid Acre Brae (reed-ā-kur-brā) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

reid-avised (reed-a-vIzd) adj., arch. red-faced, embarrassed aspect (cf. black-avised).

the Reid Book (thu-reed-book) n. name sometimes given to the handbook-sized set of words for the most popular Hawick songs, published in 1957 along with 'The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection'. Carried around and dog-eared over 3 decades it was replaced by the 'Blue Book' in 1978 and then the 'Green Book' in 2001.

reid-cap (reed-kawp) n., arch. a cruel, mischievous spirit with long teeth, said to inhabit old towers – 'Redcap is a popular appellation of that class of spirits which haunts old castles. Every ruined tower in the south of Scotland is supposed to have an inhabitant of this species' [JL], 'Now, Red-cap he was there, And he was there indeed; And grimly he grinn'd and glower'd Wi' the red cowl on his head' [T] (cf. Robin Reidcap).

Reidcleuch Edge (reed-klooch-ej) n. Redcleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is Red Sike.

reid-coat (reed-kō') n., arch. the scarlet ladybird. Local children used to pick it up and throw it in the air singing 'reed-coat, reed-coat, fly away, An' make the morn a sunny day!' [GW].

reid-hand (reed-hawnd) adj., arch. a legal term from the 15th and 16th centuries, meaning caught in the act of a crime, used throughout Scotland. This led to the present use of the phrase 'caught red-handed', which was adapted into English, especially after being popularised in Sir Walter Scott's novels.

reid-keel (reed-keel) n., arch. ruddle, red pigment – 'Ruddle is 'reid keel', plumbago is 'black keel'' [JAHM].

Reidheugh (reed-, red-hewch) n. Redheugh, ancient seat of the Elliot family, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. Scott of Satchells suggests that the Elliots received Redheugh from Robert the Bruce in about 1320. The name first occurs in a rental roll of Liddesdale in about 1376 (worth 15 shillings, 'per forincecum seruicium reddendo x s'). An Elliot of Redheugh is referred to around 1400. There is also a story, apparently from a manuscript of the Blackadder family, of an Elliot of Redheugh called 'Chieftan of the South', who was killed in battle along with his 3 sons, but had a daughter Mary who married Cuthbert Blackadder of that Ilk and had a son who was alive in 1447. However, the first definitive record of this being the family seat is when 'Robert elwald of ye Redheuch' is mentioned in 1476. A precept for the lands is recorded in 1489, although the date of the original charter is unknown. Robert, the 17th chief lived mainly at the new Larriston house, so Redheugh became less prominent. That Robert failed to have a male heir and the lands went to his daughter Margaret, who married a son of Eliott of Stobs, whose descendants were the Elliots of Larriston. Thomas Armstrong is recorded as possessor of the lands in 1632. The farm itself was valued at £96 11s in 1678, when disjoined from the former estate of Elliot of Larriston. Robert of Larriston went bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, but they were repurchased by William Elliot (descendant of the Falnash branch) in about 1730 for his 2nd son, Robert. Around this time the present house and barn were built, with the north and east sides of the farmhouse perhaps incorporating earlier walls. The farm was still valued at £96 11s in the 1788 county valuation and 1811 Land Tax Rolls. George Oliver and Francis Armstrong were servants there in 1799 and Walter Armstrong in 1801. The farm suffered greatly in the flood of 1846. Robert's grandson Robert died in 1915 and in 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold the farm to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Thomas Scott sold it to Sir Gilbert Eliott, 10th Baronet of Stobs in 1946. The farm has been modernised, with a small loch created by damming the Rede Burn. A clan museum is also situated there. The precise location of the original tower is uncertain, with locals pointing out one site in the 19th century (recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858) to the south near the railway viaduct, another just to the east of there, where there are some foundations and a third to the west of the farmhouse, where there is an enclosure where a plaque has been placed marking this as the 'Site of Redheugh Tower' (although there is no real evidence for this). On the opposite side of the Hermitage Water there is another site claimed to be home of 'Jock of the Park'. And north-west of the farmhouse there is an area of rig lines and field systems (also spelled 'Redheuch' and sometimes erroneously 'Redhaugh'; the origin of the name is probably just 'red height', i.e. the height above the Rede Burn; it is 'Redehugh' about 1376 and is recorded regularly from at least 1476; it was 'Redehuch' in 1489, 'redheuch' in 1502, 'Redheucht' in 1508, 'Redeheuche' in 1510 and 1515/6, 'Reidheuch' in 1526, 'the Redhwych' in 1546, 'the Reidhewcht' in 1547 and 1548, 'Reidheuch' in 1550, 'Reidhuche' in 1557, 'Reideuch' in 1561, 'Riedheucht' in 1563, 'Ridhewcht' in the 1570s, 'Reidhewch' in 1573, 'Reidheuch' in 1574 and 1591, 'Ridhewcht' in about 1580, 'Reidhewch' and 'Readhewghe' in 1584, 'Reidheuch' in 1581, 1583/4 and 1584/5, 'Reidhewch' in 1602, 'Reidheuche' in 1607, 'Reidcleuch' in 1608, 'Reidhewch' in 1613, 'Reidheuch' in 1619, 'Ridheuche' in 1624, 'Reidheuche' in 1632 and 'Reedheugh' in 1694; it appears on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Reedheuch', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Ridheuch' and is 'Redheugh' by the time of Stobie's 1770 map).

the Reid Lion (thu-reed-lI-in) n. the Red Lion Inn, at the Sandbed in the early 19th century, with proprietor Robert Scott. It is unclear where this was, with the possibility that it was an alternative name for one of the other Sandbed pubs. The phrase was also a nickname in use for someone in Hawick in the early 19th century.

Reidmoss (reed-mos) n. Redmoss, farmstead in Liddesdale, just north of Whisgills, on the Tinnis Burn. It was at one time part of the farm of Flatt. It is probably the 'Redemoss' listed in about 1376 (in the charters of Douglas of Morton) as a 12-shilling land. In 1541 it was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and valued at 30 pence. Other lands of the same name are also listed in 1541 as being vacant. It is stated (in a note in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784) that the former farm of Puddingburn was on its lands. Thomas Wilson possessed these lands, along with Over and Nether Whisgills, in 1632. It is described in 1718 in a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, when along with Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead and Side it consisted of 2390 acres. William Anderson died there in 1781. Thomas Telfer was shepherd there in 1797, Adam Telfer in at least 1799–1801 and John Armstrong in 1801. There were Turnbulls there in the mid-19th century and Adam Scott was farmer in 1868. David Anderson wrote a song about the old tree his grandfather had planted there. There are remains of other buildings on the Tinnis Burn to the north-west, as well as old rig lines and boundary banks in the area (it is 'Reidmoss' and 'Reidmoos' in 1541 and 'Ridmos' in 1632; it marked 'Redmoss' on Stobie's 1770 map).

reid-ribbon (reed-ri-bin) adj., arch. bloodshot (of the eyes), having heavily inflamed eye-lids – 'Reed-ribbon-een = bloodshot eyes, especially when the lids are inflamed' [ECS].

the Reid Rose (thu-reed-rōz) n. the Red Rose, Hawick's first Chinese restaurant, on Baker Street in the 1960s and 70s.

Reid Rowan (reed-row-in) n. burly riever mentioned in 'The Ballad of Kinmont Willie'. Whether he represents a real person is unclear, but the likelihood is that he was an invention of Sir Walter Scott. The name was subsequently given to strong horses in the district – 'Then Red Rowan has hente him up, The starkest man in Teviotdale – 'Abide, abide now, Red Rowan, Till of my Lord Scroope I take farewell' ', [T], 'But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth' [WHO].

Reidscar Sike (reed-skawr-sīk) n. Redscar Sike, small stream in upper Liddisdale, rising on Lamb Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn.

Reid's Close (reedz-klōs) n. former passageway on the High Street, probably at No. 77. It is recorded on the 1861 census.

reidshank (reed-shawngk) n., poet. a highlander – '... An' that's as true as I'm a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater' [JoHa].

the Reidskins (thu-reed-skinz) n. nickname of the Y.M. Rugby Club.

Reidsmuir Plantin (reedz-mewr-plawn'-in) n. Redsmuir Plantation, small wood between Tythehouse and Harwood, on the south side of the Harwood Burn.

Reid's Relay (reedz-ree-lā) n. radio and television cable company, which helped provide Teries with decent signals in the middle of the 20th century. This included some council houses that were refused permission to erect aerials in the 1960s. In the 1930s the firm of George Reid Radio received the BBC signal on a 75 ft aerial, off Croft Road, behind their North Bridge Street premises, and relayed the signal around town by means of cables. The sets to receive the signals required no electrical power, and gave much better reception than a radio set. When TV arrived in the 1950s Reid's installed a TV receiving mast above the Wellogate, and most Hawick households rented their sets and cable connections from Reid's, although another local firm (Lawrence's) competed (with a mast at Crumhaugh Hill). The end for the company came with the erection of new BBC and ITV masts at Ashkirk and Lindean, and the booster on the Miller's Knowes.

Reid Swire (reed-swIr) n. former name for the hill on the Border, essentially synonymous with the Carter Bar. This is where the River Rede rises, and was the location of the fray of 1575 – 'On July seventh, the truth to say, At the Red-Swire the tryst was set: Our Wardens they affix'd the day, And as they promis'd, sae they met' [CPM] (see also Redeswire).

Reidswire see the Raid o the Redeswire

Reidswyre see the Raid o the Redeswire

reid waimb (reed-wām) n., arch. the char, Salvelinus alpinus, said to be caught in the autumn in the stream between St. Mary's Loch and the Loch o' the Lowes – 'In the Water betwixt the Lochs of the Lowes, there is a sort of Fish taken something more than a Herring called Redwaimbs qlk are never seen nor taken but betwixt All-Hallows, and Martimass, the space of ten days, being very savoury meat' [MGC1649].

reid-wud (reed-wud) adj., arch. excessively angry, insane – 'The copper-nosed Kers, the towzy Turnbulls, and the red-wudd Ridderfords' [ES], '... His wee ambitious heart maist like to burst Wi' red-wud rage ...' [JoHa], 'Here am I sittin' doon to write, Red-wud wi' spleen, pang fu' o' spite' [JoHa], working at top speed – 'Ee're aither reed-wud or stane-tired' [GW] (from Old English).

reik (reek) v., arch. to fit out, rig – '... and debursed be the town of Hawick in reiking out of the soldiers, in maintenance and arms ...' [BR1644], to get ready for marriage – 'A' reekin' ready for a wife an' kirk. O, for a parish, what he would bestow on't' [JoHa], 'She was grand reekit oot for the kirk' [GW] (also written 'reek').

Reinle (rīn-ul) n. Dr. Karl E.T. (b.c.1865) from Lucerne, Switzerland, he graduated from Basel University. He came to Hawick in 1894 and was organist at the Old Parish Church until 1901, when Adam Colledge took over. He was also a private music teacher of piano and voice. He was a close friend of Adam Grant, Dr. Barrie and J.E.D. Murray. He was still in Hawick in 1905, but what happened to him after that is unclear.

He married Jane Edgar and their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Janet (b.1850); and James (b.1853). James (1843–1910) born in Roberton, son of William and Jane Nichol. He was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He conducted business in Dumfries for a while, returning to Hawick in 1888 to found James Renwick & Co., Ltd, hosiery manufacturers of Commercial Road. He may also have had Mansfield Mills built (or extended) on Mansfield Road. He was associated with the temperance movement and East Bank Church. In 1869 he married Jeanie Laing (1843–1927), who was grand-daughter of James Hogg, writer of 'Teribus'. He had 4 surviving sons, 2 of whom (James and Robert Hogg) continued in the hosiery business. His 7 sons were: William (1870–c.82); Adam (1872–c.84); James (b.1874), who died in infancy; James (b.1875), who followed him into hosiery manufacturing; Robert Hogg (1877–1949), also a hosiery manufacturer; George; and William (b.1833). He died at Wilton Hill. He may be the stockingmaker who donated a copper coin to the Museum in 1872. James (b.1875) son of James and Jane Laing. He was a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, writer of 'Teribus'. He was educated in Dumfries and at Teviot Grove, then worked in the family hosiery firm, becoming a partner. He represented Teviot Ward on the Town Council for 22 years from 1906, was elected Magistrate and was Provost 1922–28. His Provostship saw the High Street paved with setts, completion of the expansion of the sewage works, and the building of Moat Crescent and Renwick Terrace, the latter being named after him. He was also Chairman of the committee that built the first council houses at Oliver Park. A keen Common Riding supporter, his son James junior was Cornet while he was Provost, and he started the tradition of the Provost's Tent. He opened 'the Hut' in the year that his son was Cornet. He was Chairman of the Unionist Association for many years, as well as a Callants' Club President and was an elder of the East Bank Church. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was on the committee that formed Hawick's first Scout troop on 1909 and was one of the first 2 scoutmasters in Hawick. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell's visit to Hawick in 1910. He married Miss Lefevre of Canterbury in 1902. They lived at Fernbank on Wilton Hill. James (20th C.) son of Provost James. He worked for the family knitwear business and moved to London to represent the firm there. His son Geoffrey was a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, who was murdered by a fellow soldier while serving in Germany. James 'Jim' (1953–) Hawick rugby player, at Centre, a born West-Ender and electricity linesman by trade. Educated at Drumlanrig and the High School, He originally had success at swimming, competing in the Scottish under-14 championship. After leaving school he played rugby for the P.S.A. and the Harlequins. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 18, going on to win 7 top-flight titles. He first appeared for Scotland at the age of 19, and eventually gained 52 caps. He was also represented the British Lions and Barbarians. He retired from rugby in 1984, following a knee injury. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2018. His children are Scott, Andy, David, Lindsey, Neil, Stuart and Alex. His children included: John (b.1706); and Thomas (b.1708). John (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. In 1706 he is recorded being 'a workman sometimes in Chisholm', suggesting he may be the same man as the younger John recorded in Wilton in 1694. He married Jean 'Lazon' and their children included Margaret (b.1706). The witnesses in 1706 were John Armstrong in Raesknowe and Bailie George Martin. Margaret (b.1712), baptised in Roberton Parish, could also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Miller, who was also from Roberton. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1730); William (b.1736); and John (b.1739). Robert (b.1727), baptised in Kirkton, could also be his child. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hardie and their children included Henry (b.1729). John (18th C.) one of the earliest known of the Hobkirk Renwicks. His children included Robert (b.1726). He could be the John in Mackside whose wife Bessie Miller is recorded dying in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. Other children baptised in Hobkirk who could be his included John (b.1728), Margaret (b.1735), Francis (b.1736), Robert (b.1740) and Helen (b.1740). John (18th C.) Town Drummer of Selkirk, recorded in 1727 and 1733. He was probably related to James, who was recorded as Selkirk's Town Drummer in 1758. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Binks in 1730 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his, include William (b.1736) and John (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1745). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Phaup in 1749. He married Helen Laurie and their children included Christian (b.1749), James (b.1751), Margaret (b.1754) and Jane (b.1757). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Henderson and their children included Jean (b.1760), Jean (again, b.1762), Helen (b.1764), Thomas (b.1766), James (b.1769) and Jean (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Isobel Elliot from Roberton Parish in 1762. Their children included: Michael (b.1763); Betty (b.1765); and Agnes (b.1775). John (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1797. He married Euphan Matthewson in Ashkirk Parish in 1795. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Thomas (b.1797); James (b.1799); Alexander Walter (b.1802); Janet Elizabeth (b.1805); and Ann Scott (b.1812). The witnesses in 1797 and 1799 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Walter Pringle. John (b.1816) son of Matthew, he was a dyker in Hobkirk Parish. He married Janet Hall, sister of James Grieve's widow. He had a daughter and emigrated to canada, along with his brother George. John Elliot 'Elliot' (1936–2006) son of Jock and Maimie, he was educated in Hawick and apprenticed as a printer with the Hawick Express. He was one of the founders of Buccleuch Printers. He was long associated with the Salvation Army, being bandmaster there for 37 years. He also played in the Saxhorn Band and in the band of the Royal Tank Corps during his National Service. He was also a member of the Rotary Club, achieving a 'Paul Harris Fellowship', the highest honour given to Rotarians. He married Margaret in 1956 and they had a daughter, Linda. Joseph (b.c.1807) fuller in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, being a fuller at Damside in 1835, and a cloth dresser at Dovemount in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a daughter, also Elizabeth. Margaret (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Hassendeanbank. Margaret D. (b.1828/9) daughter of William and Janet. She was born in Jedburgh and lived in Minto. There she ran a school around the 1860s, separate from the Parish school, and probably for girls. Martin (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary's Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as 'Martino Ranwik'. Matthew (18th/19th C.) lived at Bonchester and Drythropple. He married secondly Helen Robson. They had twins John and Mary and also a son George, both sons becoming dykers. Michael (18th C.) recorded in Hartwoodmyres in 1772. In that year he was witness to a baptism in Selkirk for John Sword and Margaret Renwick in Selkirk. Michael (18th C.) another early Renwick of Hobkirk. He lived at Kirknowe and later at Howahill and Unthank. His children included John (b.1753), Margaret (b.1757) and Robert (b.1771). He was probably related to Andrew, who live at Howahill and then Stonedge, and had children Helen and Thomas. Miss ?? (19th C.) daughter of Thomas. She took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge, probably in the 1860s. The letter carrier appointed was James Watson. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries they were both relieved of their positions. Moses (1771–1851) son of Robert. He was a thatcher by trade. He was a servant at Forkins according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He married Violet Temple and they had a dozen children: Robert, shepherd at Dryhope; James, emigrated to America; John, who married Janet Henderson and emigrated later in life; Jessie, married blacksmith Robert Scott; Betty, married Lanton blacksmith Thomas Anderson; Helen (or Nelly), married Andrew Kerr, Jedburgh mason; Mary, married Robert Flick; Violet, married William Redshaw from Kalewater; Isabel, Margaret and Cecily, all of whom emigrated; and Charlotte, who married Robert Rutherford. Oliver (d.2008) grew up on the Cavers estate. He was childhood friend and business partner of Jack Fraser. The pair took part in the 1982 and 1992 rallies of Austin 7 enthusiasts from John o' Groats to Land's End. He married Margaret and had children Kathleen, James and Marjorie, and step-son Mark. Richard (c.1769–1839) son of Robert. He became a thatcher like his brother Moses. He was Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk. He married Janet Parker from Northumberland, and they lived at Mosshouses. Their children were: Robert, who died in Rulewater aged 73; George, who lived in Edinburgh; Thomas, who married Margaret Telfer; Mabel, who married Robert Henderson and emigrated to Canada; and Betty, who married John Baptie and later in life lived in Denholm. He is probably the labourer Richard, living at Forkins, who was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798; however, later in 1798 he was declared unfit to serve and excused, with John Scott, servant at Hallrule, balloted in his place. Richard (1850–1915) born at Town-o-Rule, only son of Thomas and grandson of Richard. He was a foreman surfaceman on the railway. He lived at Hassendean and in Denholm, and was heavily involved in the Kirk there. He married Margaret Turnbull, also from Rulewater, and she died in 1922, aged 71. Their children were William, gardener at Holyrood; Richard, who worked for the North British Railway; Thomas, also worked for the railway; John, a joiner in Winnipeg, Canada; James, in the Hawick Post Office; Robert, an engineer; Peter, who worked in Denholm; George; Lizzie; Jessie, who married John Phillips; and Maggie. He was killed while on duty near Hassendean Station during a snowstorm, and there is a memorial stone to his memory in Denholm cemetery. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Roberto de Ranwyk' in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Humphrey 'de Ranwyk' is also listed before him, so presumably his father or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet (with no surname recorded) and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1677. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Brown in Roberton Parish in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam Brown 'Headhouse'. In 1712 he and George (also a flesher) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Hardie. Along with George he also witnessed baptisms in 1720 for fellow flesher John Little, in 1721 for William Wright and Christian Renwick (who was surely related to him), and in 1722 for weaver George Wight. He could be the Robert, son of George, born in Hawick in 1670. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children, baptised in Hawick, included George (b.1700) and William (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John Scott, merchant William Scott and cooper John Turnbull. He could be the Robert who received a bible as part of poor relief in Hawick Parish in the 1720s. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at 'Hill', which must have been somewhere in Rulewater. His wife 'Marjory Sorry' (1701/2–62) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in at least the period 1724–36. He may be the Robert who in 1723 witnessed a baptism for James Beattie, innkeeper in the Sandbed. He married Elizabeth (or 'Lizabeth') Little, probably in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife's name given). Their children included: Robert (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1724); William (b.1726); Elizabeth (b.1728); Mary (b.1730); Robert (again, b.1733); and Thomas (b.1736). The witnesses in 1724 were George and William Renwick (who were surely related), in 1728 were William Wright and John Simpson, in 1730 were John and James Gardner, in 1733 were James Gardner and William Wright and in 1736 were John and James Gardner again. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1753 and 1757. His children included: Helen (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1757). Robert (b.1740) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John, claimed to be a descendant of James, one of the last Covenanter martyrs. He lived in a cottage at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish. He may have married Janet Parker. His sons were Richard and Moses and he also had at least 1 daughter. Robert (18th C.) travelling merchant of Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1789 when his daughter Mary married James Rannie. The same Robert was probably married to to Elizabeth Roger, and their children were: Elizabeth (b.1760); Margaret (b.1761); Mary (b.1768); Margaret (again, b.1770); Jane (b.1772); and Agnes (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were shoemaker William and another Robert (both of whom were probably related to him) and in 1774 were Robert and William Roger (surely related to his wife). His wife was probably the 'Lizzie' Roger who died in Hawick in 1808, with her husband Robert Renwick described as 'Pigman' (or maybe 'Pegman'). He witnessed a baptism for weaver William Rodger (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1764. He may also have been the merchant Robert who married Elizabeth Scott and had children Helen (b.1777) and Robert (b.1781). The witnesses in 1781 were merchant William Brown and shoemaker William Renwick. He may also be the weaver recorded in 1781 when his son Robert died in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Johnston. He married Agnes (also recorded as Janet) Bunyan and their children included Elizabeth (b.1773); William (b.1774); Ann (b.1779); Alexander (b.1780); and Janet (b.1784). The death of his son Alexander was recorded in 1800. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Lairhope in 1786. He married Janet Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1786, with witnesses 'Congregation of the Chapel' (probably meaning those who attended the chapel at Caerlenrig). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1790 and 1792 he witnessed baptisms for James Renwick and Mary Renwick (one of whom he was surely related to). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Hawick in 1793. Robert (18th C.) listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Weens in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Probably the same Robert was recorded in the 1801 Militia ballot as son-in-law to Robert Barrie at Langraw. His is probably the Robert whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Margaret (b.1802), Robert Barrie (b.1804), George (b.1806), Robert Barrie (again, b.1808), Janet (b.1810) and John (b.1812). Robert (d.1809) Hawick resident who was father of David, John and Thomas, according to his death record. He is probably the Thomas who married Janet Laurie in Ashkirk in 1761 and had children: David (b.1762); Thomas (b.1765); John (b.1767); John (again, b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); and Thomas (again, b.1774). Robert (d.bef. 1790) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Tudhope in Hawick Parish in 1766 and she died in 1790. Their children included William (b.1767) and Helen (b.1771). He may be the same man as one of the other Roberts. Robert (19th C.) born in West Linton, he worked at Hawick Mill. He was there in 1841 and 1851, when his uncle John Oliver was the miller. He wrote a letter about the flood of 1846, which survives as a useful eyewitness account. Robert (b.1839) born at Town-o-Rule, son of Charles and Margaret Hislop. He married Isabella Scott and their children included Robert. Robert (b.c.1865) son of Robert and Isabella Scott. He lived at Langraw Scaur in Hobkirk Parish and was tenant at Weens Nursery. Robert Hogg (1877–1949) son of James and Jane Laing, born on Allars Crescent. He was brother of Provost Renwick and a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, author of 'Teribus'. He was educated in Dumfries and then Hawick. He worked with Aitken the drapers and then joined his father's hosiery firm, later becoming Director. He was keen on golf, gardening and music. He was organist at St. Andrew's Kirk for more than 25 years (until an injury to his hands prevented him from playing). He was instrumental in organising the Border Music Festival, being President, Chairman and Secretary, and reviving it after WWII. He was President of the Callants' Club, President of the Rotary Club, a member of Lodge 111 and member of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers' Association. He was a Special Constable during both World Wars. In 1919 he married Mary Lillico Tully, daughter of tailor William Lillico Tully. Their children were: Doris (b.1920); Sheila (b.1921); Robert Stanley (b.1924), who continued in the family firm; and William Cecil (b.1926), who farmed at Wester Essenside. He lived at Wellogate Bank. Simon (16th/17th C.) resident of the Trows who was recorded in 1618 as witness to a sasine for the Kirklands of Cavers, including Crook. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant of Simon Armstrong of Calfeild. He is listed as 'Thom Rannik his man' in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. Thomas (18th C.) tailor at Ashkirk Mill. He married Janet Laurie and their children included David (b.1762), Thomas (b.1765), John (b.1767), John (again, b.1769), Elizabeth (b.1771) and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Janet Rae in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Goodfellow in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason at Menslaws. He was recorded at 'House at Guide post' on the Militia ballot for Bedrule Parish in 1801. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He could be the Thomas listed as 'Ind.' at Bedrule Mill in 1841. He is probably the Thomas whose children Francis (b.1802) and Jessy (b.1804) were baptised in Bedrule Parish. Thomas (b.c.1775) tailor on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was recorded at about 8 Sandbed, with his wife Mary (who was a midwife) and son William. His son Thomas died in 1808. Thomas (18th/19th C.) labourer recorded in Barnhills in 1799. Thomas (1817/8–1906) one of the Forkins Renwicks, he was son of Richard. In 1861 he was a labourer living at Birneyknowe. He is recorded in charge of the post office at Bonchester Bridge in the early 1860s. He married Margaret Telfer, daughter of a Teviothead shepherd. His daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge and his son Richard worked for the railway. He died at the age of 88 and is recorded on the family headstone in Denholm cemetery. He is probably the 'deaf man named Thomas Renwick' who was among the last residents of the old hamlet of Unthank. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Walter (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. William (17th C.) married Margaret Hislop in Ashkirk Parish in 1651. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Martin and their children included John (b.1671). The baptismal witnesses were Robert (surely a relative) and Adam Martin (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He witnessed baptisms in 1689 (along with William Donald) for William Allan and in 1691 for John (probably a relative). Probably the same William married Janet Scott, and their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included Isobel (b.1690), Agnes (b.1693) and David (b.1696). The witnesses in 1690 were Robert Scott and John Renwick (probably related to his wife and him). William (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Boyd. Their children included: Walter (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Robert (b.1740); William (b.1742); and Gideon (b.1744), probably the butcher. The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1740 (along with fellow flesher Thomas Waugh) for cooper William Richardson. He may also be the shoemaker William who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for another Robert in 1772 and the shoemaker William who witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert in 1781. William (18th C.) married Margaret Cessford in Hobkirk in 1733. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1749 he married Margaret Miller, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included Janet (b.1760) and Jane (b.1768). William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1781 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert (who was probably a relative). In 1784, along with flesher Gideon (probably his brother) he witnessed a baptism for James Mossman and Janet (possibly his sister). William (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Greenriver in 1797, when he was working for James Chisholme. William (18th/19th C.) butcher recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'; he was there described as '(Butcher) Shoemaker', presumably meaning that he was formerly a butcher and now a shoemaker. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Betty Ferguson, who was also from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) mason in Bonchester according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (b.1808/9) from Jedburgh, he was a mason in Minto. His wife was Janet and their daughter Margaret D. was a teacher (formerly spelled 'Ranick', 'Renick', 'Rennick', 'Rennicke', etc.).

Renwick's (re-neeks) n. hosiery manufacturers of James Renwick & Co. Their main premises were on the west side of Commercial Road from 1914, this being built in 1888 for William Galloway & Sons. They later moved to a factory near the top of Mansfield Road, called Mansfield Mills, which closed in 1992. This later became Jaeger, and was more recently converted into flats. A book of knitting patterns from the 1920s was saved by Gerry Graham, featured in the 'Antiques Roadshow' in 2020.

Renwick Terrace (re-neek-te-ris) n. street off Rosebank Road at the top of the Loan, built in 1928 and named after Provost James Renwick.

Reorganisation (ree-or-gi-I-zā-shin) n. name usually given to the major shake-up of local gorernment in 1974, following the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1973. This abolished town and county councils, replacing them with 'districts' and 'regions'. It was sometimes jokingly referred to as 'Disorganisation'. This system in turn was overhauled in 1995/6 in favour of a single-tier system, which lumps Hawick governance in with other Border towns in the Scottish Borders Council.

repentance (re-pen'-ins) n., arch. the act of penitence, public atonement for transgressions before a congregation. For centuries, until into the 1800s public atonement was a major part of community life in Hawick. Infringements liable to this punishment included adultery, 'irregular' marriages and other crimes. In the early 1700s the penitent would stand at the Kirk door in sackcloth for an hour before the third bell was rung, then after the congregation and minister had entered, they would be led into the Kirk to the 'stool of repentance' or 'pillar', standing bare-headed through the sermon and thereafter berated publicly. Sometimes the Session required this process to be repeated for many Sundays in a row. These practices ended in the established church in about 1800, but lasted about 30 years longer in some of the local diseenting churches – '. . . and was ordered to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days . . . Restinoth (res-ti-noth) n. Thomas (14th C.) recorded in an inventory of charters from the reign of David II. His surname is also transcribed as 'Roscina', but it is unclear if either of the transcriptions are accurate. He was granted the lands of 'Newtoun' in 'Bothrull' in Roxburghshire by William, Earl of Douglas.

the Restoration (thu-res-to-rā-shin) n. popular name for the period in Scottish history when Charles II was restored onto the British throne after the defeat of the Cromwells. This marked the revival of the Scottish Parliament, but also an escalation of persecution of the Covenanters in the 'Killing Times'. The term applies both to the event of 1660 itself, as well as to the entire period between then and the 'Glorious Revolution' of 1688.

resurrectionist (re-zu-rek-shin-ist) n., arch. a grave-robber or body-snatcher, particularly in the early 19th century. There was a scare throughout Scotland in the 1820s, following the celebrated cases of Burke and Hare and others. Two Berwickshire doctors were arrested in 1820. In Hawick an association of householders was formed for watching the cemeteries. Small houses were built at the entrances of both Hawick and Wilton churchyards, with 3 men on watch each night, patrolling every 15 minutes. No graves in the town were desecrated, although there were plenty of rumours and practical jokes.

the Return (thu-ree-turn) n. 'the Return from Hornshole', a statue unveiled at the south end of the High Street in 2014, as part of the 'Big Return' celebrations. It was sculpted by Ruaraig McIver of Beltane Studios, taking 18 months to complete, using about a ton of bronze and was paid for by the Common-Riding Ceremonial Committee. It consists of a group of 5 figures: a youth carrying the Flag; an elderly woman and man; and 2 children. The seniors were modelled on Hawick's Helen Ford and Jimmy McEwan, the youth on the rider of Beattie's Horse monument, and the children on children in Peebles.

Return from Hornshole (ree-turn-from-hōrnz-hōl) n. song written by Alan Brydon. It was first performed at the 1514 Club's 'Hawick Sings' concert in 2011 by his daughter Cheryl. Ian Seeley provided a piano accompaniment, which is somewhat complicated and even he describes as 'a specialist, or art, song'.

Return to Hawick (ree-turn-too-hIk) n. painting by Tom Scott, full title 'Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514', completed in 1898. It is also sometimes referred to as 'Return from Hornshole'. The painting was commissioned by the Town and 260 high quality lithographic copies were made, along with other copies later. The original is in the Museum, held by the Hawick Common Good Fund. It was formally presented at the 1898 Colour Bussing by Thomas Shaw M.P. People from Bowden acted as models, with Mr. Cockburn of Kippilaw carrying the flag. Other identified people are Harry Putillo as the old man with the pack, Madge Dalgleish as the fair-haired girl beside the youth, 'Pa' Hume as the bearded man and Bettie Jamieson as the pretty maid in the rear.

Reuben Watts (roo-bin-wats) n. pseudonym used by Daniel Marriot – 'Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam'l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim' [HI] (also sometimes written 'Watt').

Revel (re-vul) n. Elizabeth 'Bet' (19th C.) maker of sweets, including 'rock bools', living at the eastern end of the north side of the High Street in the latter part of the 19th century. She may have been the Eliza born in 1837, daughter of Archibald, or one of several other possibilities (the family lived in both Hawick and Wilton) – 'Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a'; Jenny's Penny wi' plaid o' check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law' [HI]. Francis (b.1779/80) from England, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. He lived at about 77 High Street in 1841 and 1851, along with his wife Elizabeth (or 'Betsy'). They had a son Hendry and a grand-daughter Eliza. Their son Francis died in Hawick in 1840. Francis (1843/4–81) probably a cousin of 'Bet'. He married Sarah Ann Campbell, who died in 1916, aged 74. Their children were Archibald, Agnes and Francis (who died in infancy). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (b.1807/8) from Jedburgh. He was a tailor at about 62 High Street according to the 1841 census and at No. 23 in 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater's revellin (re-ve-lin) n., arch. an occasion of making merry, instance during which people revel – 'Whereas there have been formerlie several enormities, debates and revellings committed at ye rideing of ye marches of ye Common belonging to this toun . . . ' [PR1725].

Revie (re-vee) n. Rev. Peter (1888–1967) born at Kilchenzie near Campbelltown in Argyll and Bute, he was educated in that area and at the University of Glasgow, where he graduated M.A. in 1911. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Kintyre in 1914, became assistant at Paisley St. George's in 1914 and was ordained as minister of Colinsburgh in 1915. In 1924 he took over the joint charge of Colinsburgh and Lathones in 1924. In 1926 he became minister of Orrock Kirk and remained until 1931, when he moved to Kilmarnock Portland Road. He married Mabel Walker (1900–69), daughter of Rev. Peter MacDonald from Edinburgh. They had at least 1 son and 1 daughter.

the Revolution (thu-re-vo-loo-shin) n. religious and political change in Britain in 1688 and 1689, leading to the removal of James II, a Catholic, and his replacement by William I (of Orange) and his wife Mary II, both Protestants. It is sometimes known as 'the Glorious Revolution' or 'the Bloodless Revolution'. It also led to the throwing out of the Episcopalian system and the setting up of the Reformed, Established, Presbyterian Church of Scotland in 1690. As a result of these changes there was a dearth of Presbyterian ministers, which left Hawick Parish vacant for about 2 years, while Wilton, Cavers and Hobkirk were vacant for 5 years. Formerly Episcopalian ministers who refused to 'pray for William and Mary' were denied their livings. In the 33 parishes in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Selkirk and Kelso, only 3 ministers (at Kirkton, Abbotrule and Ancrum) obeyed the order, the others being ejected. This included John Langlands of Wilton, Thomas Somerville of Cavers and John Liddle of Hobkirk. The Scottish Episcopalian Church took a long time to re-establish itself. These events also affected Scottish history for the next several decades, with Stuart sympathisers, Jacobites, staging uprisings in the Highlands.

rewaird (ree-wārd) n., arch. a reward – '. . . an' in keepin' o' thame ther is grit rewaird' [HSR], '. . . Trewlie ther is an rewaird for the richteous' [HSR], v. to reward – '. . . happie wull he be that rewairds ye as ye hae serfet us' [HSR], 'The Lord rewairdet me akordin' til my richteousniss . . . ' [HSR].

Rewcastle see Ruecastle

rewe (roo) v., arch. to regret, repent – 'Turn agayne, O Lord, howe lang? an' let it rew thee anent thy servents' [HSR], 'The Lord heth swurn, an' wullna rew . . . ' [HSR] (also written 'rew' and 'rue'; see also take the rue).

rewel (roo-ul) v., arch. to become entangled, to entangle, ravel (noted by J. Jamieson; also written 'rewl'; cf. revel).

' [Buc1696], 'And finding that several of the persons to whom they have sent the poors money are Deficient in the payments of their Rexive Annual-rents . . . ' [Bed1724] (used in legal documents as an abbreviation).

rhone see rone

the Rhymer (thu-rī-mur) n. another name for Thomas the Rhymer.

Rhymer's Croft (rī-murz-kroft) n. former lands in Ashkirk. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the lands (and others in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. It was part of the estate of Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk in the early 1800s. It is unclear exactly where it was situated (it is 'Rymerscroft' in 1753 and 'Rymers Croft' in 1779).

Rhymer's Glen (rī-murz-glen) n. supposedly the place where Thomas the Rhymer was transported to the land of the fairies for 7 years, being a small burn that flows towards the Tweed south of Melrose – 'The Huntly burn sings low and sweet, The Ryhmer's glen is green, And on its bank this night I'll meet My winsome Fairy Queen' [JT].

rial (rI-ul) n., poet. a member of a royal family or the nobility – 'Mak' thair riolyse like Oreb, an' like Zeeb . . . ' [HSR], 'Til bin' thair kings wi' cheens, an' thair riolyse wi' fettirs o' ern' [HSR].

rib (rib) n. a raised ridge in knitted fabric. Formerly these were knitted on separate machine from the main items, and the workers were paid higher wages than those working the standard frames.

ribbin (ri-bin) n. ribbing, a set of raised ridges in knitwear, common on cuffs and other spcific parts of a garment, often described as '1/1', '2/2', etc., depending on the stitches used.

rib dragger see dragger

ribe (rīib) n., arch. a colewort with a tall stem, a cabbage plant that has failed to grow a useful head – 'Ribe, Rybe, A colewort that frows tall with little or no leaf. Cabbages, that do not stock properly, are also called ribes, Roxb.' [JoJ].

rib tops (rib-tops) n., pl., arch. ribbed part at the top of a sock or other item of hosiery (noted by E.C. Smith).

Riccalton (ri-kul-tin) n. farm high up on the Oxnam Water. This is probably the place referred to in a charter to the Riddells of that Ilk in the mid-12th century. 2 men from here (Adam 'de Rukelton' and Adam 'de Rykeldon', possibly the same name twice) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Gilbert 'de Rikelton' is recorded in the early 14th century. The farm belonged to Lord Jedburgh in the 17th century and the Marquess of Lothian in the 18th century (not to be confused with 'Riccarton', although the origin of the name may be similar, here probably being 'Ricela's hill' from the Old English personal name plus 'tun' for 'hill'; the name is first recorded as 'Richeldoun' in 1150).

Riccaltoun see Riccarton

Riccarton (ri-kar'-in, -kar-tin) n. town around the station on the Waverley Line, about half way to Newcastleton, being a junction with the line linking to Hexham. Before the railway it had no settlement, but it developed into a small village with as many as 120 residents. The main housing consisted of 2 terraces of housing and 4 semi-detached cottages. It had its own school and a branch of the Hawick Co-op. The farm of the same name is about 1½ miles down the Riccarton Burn on the main road, and has the remains of the old peel tower located further up the burn. The tower measures about 13 m by 9 m, now partly covered with a sheepfold, and with 2 rectangular platforms to the north, which were probably other buildings. A stone disc, probably found near here, is in Hawick Museum. The present farm was formerly marked as 'Nether Riccartoun', with 'Over Riccartoun' at the ruined tower (but still about a mile from the railway village). The lands here are recorded as being worth 7 shillings in a rental list of about 1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 they were valued at 40 shillings and tenanted by Elliots and Croziers. Will Crozier was there in 1590. Adam Beattie was tenant in 1694. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, covering 852 acres, bounded by Pinglehole, the Liddel Water, Taylorcleuchhead, Roughlee and Laws. The farmhouse at that time is shown fairly close the modern farm buildings. James Wardlaw was there in 1748 and Ninian Elliot in 1778. The Grieves of Branxholme Park farmed there in the late 18th century and in 1800 it was leased to surgeon Charles Maxwell (son-in-law of Jardine of Thorlieshope). After that Jardines were the tenants. Walter Jackson was there in 1821 and Charles Jardine in at least the 1850s and 60s. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. The Riccarton-Hexham line closed in 1956, and the village was abandoned after the Waverley Line closed in 1969. Very little remains to suggest the former size of the community. Synonymous with 'the middle of nowhere', no road served the area until 1963 when a forest track was opened. A book 'Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village' was written by Kit Milligan in 1994. Graptolites and other fossils have been found in the rocks of the area – 'Now Riccarton, to some folk, is juist a godless plot o rilway lines, a limbo for locomotives, clappit doon withoot regaird for the comfort o man nor beast on the top o a bare hill' [DH] (there are other Riccartons near Kilmarnock, Linlithgow and Hamilton and a Riccalton in Oxnam Parish; the name probably derives from Old English 'Richard's farm', with perhaps a Scandinavian influence on the personal name; it first appears in 1296 as 'Ricardeston', is 'Ricarden' around 1376, 'Ricardtoun' in 1541, 'Rikkirtoun' in 1611 'Rickerton' in 1694, 1797 and 1821, and 'Rickertown' in 1778; Gordon's c.1650 map shows 'O. Riccartoun' and 'N. Ricartoun' and Blaeu's 1654 atlas shows 'N. Riccarton' and 'O. Riccarton', the latter probably being the location of the peel tower, while 'Rickerton' and 'Rickertone' appears on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and 'Rickertown' is on Stobie's 1770 map).

Riccarton (ri-kar'-in, -kar-tin, -kal-) n. Rev. John (d.1800) only son of Robert. He was licensed by the Presbyterian Classis in Northumberland in 1749 and ordained in 1755 as minister of South Shields. He was then Chaplain at the 'chapel-of-ease' in Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) from some time in 1764 or perhaps early 1765. He was presented (by George III) as minister of Hobkirk in mid-1765 and became minister there at the end of that year. He farmed the lands of Unthank for some time. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–87. In 1799 there are documents relating to the value of the teinds for the lands of Harwood, suggesting a dispute between him and Sir William Eliott of Stobs on the one hand, and William Elliot of Harwood on the other. In 1780 he married Helen Irvine (or Irving, who died in 1827) and their children were: Janet, who died aged 23; Robert; Ann; William; Patrick; John, who was also a minister; James Thomas, who died aged 22; and Adam Alexander (d.1826), the last surviving son, who died in Jamaica. He wrote an account of Hobkirk Parish for 'Sinclair's Statistical Account' and edited and published the works of his father in 1771–72. Rev. Robert (1691–1769) minister of Hobkirk for 44 years. He was born when his mother was said to be 50, at Earlshaugh in Jedburgh Parish, where his father was a farmer. His surname is also sometimes written 'Riccalton'. He spent his early years at Venchen near Yetholm and was said to be able to read the Bible before he was 5, and was later educated at Jedburgh Grammar School and Edinburgh University. However, he never attended Divinity Hall, having to return to run the farm after his father's death. Nevertheless, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1717, called to Mertoun in 1718, but instead became assistant at Bowden. He was ordained at Hobkirk in 1725 and remained there until his death. He was descibed as 'a man of uncommon penetration and good taste' who was 'an original, independent, and acute reasoner'. He is 'Mr. Robt. Rickeltoun the mance' who paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He is recorded paying the Hobkirk portion of money for the 'Lowland Burser' in 1729. He had financial discharges from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1752 and 1759. He was an early friend of poet James Thomson, and his own poem 'A Winter's Day' (first published in 1726) inspired Thomson's famous 'Seasons'. He wrote 'A Sober Enquiry Into the Grounds of the Present Differences in the Church of Scotland' (1723), which related to the contemporary 'Marrow controversy'. Other publications on theological topics include 'The Politick Disputant' (1722), 'Letters to a Friend' in the 'Edinburgh Christian Instructor', 'An Enquiry into the Spirit and Tendency of on Theron and Aspasio . . . ' (published anonymously, 1762), 'Dissertation on the Conduct of the Sanhedrim, and Advice offered by Gamaliel' (1769) and his collected works, which were published by his son in 3 volumes in 1771/2. In 1724 he married Ann (or Anne), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Palacehill, and she died in 1764. Their children included: Jean (b.1726); Robert (b.1727), who must have died young; Margaret (1731–86), who married William Armstrong, Schoolmaster in Hobkirk (and was mother of Hawick's postmaster Robert Armstrong and Maj.-Gen. Adam Armstrong); John (d.1800), who succeeded as minister of the Parish; Anne; Helen, who married James Murray, minister of Hallstone in Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Irvine, Schoolmaster in Wilton. Some biographical notes on him were written by Rev. Thomas Somerville of Jedburgh (who was born in Hawick), who considered some of his views 'wild and mystical', but also referred to his 'benevolent heart' and 'taste for what was beautiful and sublime in the works of nature'. He was also described as having 'a large fund of originality rather than a highly cultivated understanding'. He was succeeded in Hobkirk by his son John in 1765 and died in 1769. An obelisk was erected in his memory by the Hobkirk heritors. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being 'of Rykylton' in 1454 when he attached his seal to a bond for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also the last listed member of the 'retour of service' to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibale Douglas in 1464/5; his name is given there as 'Thomas of Riklintoune'. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is 'Riklyntone of that ilk' (also written 'Riccaltoun', 'Riccalton', 'Rickletoun' and variants).

Riccarton Burn (ri-kar'-in-klooch) n. stream that rises near Riccarton Junction and flows southwards to join the Liddel Water near Riccarton farm.

Riccarton Cleuch (ri-kar'-in-klooch) n. former name for lands near Riccarton. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale they are valued at 40 shillings, with Croziers as tenants. 'Richardtoncleucht' was the nickname of Andrew ('Dandy') Crozier, who was one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1586 it was referred to as a 'fourtie schilling land' when partly occupied by Simon Elliot and released to the Elliots by Francis, Earl of Bothwell (it is 'Ricardtoun Cleuche' in 1541 and 'Ricartoun Cleucht' in 1586).

Riccarton Cottages (ri-kar'-in-ko'-ee-jeez) n. cottages near the farm of Riccarton in Liddesdale. They are situated on the east side of the B6357. Road contractor Adam Moor and his family lived there in 1861.

Riccartonfit (ri-kar'-in-fi') n. Riccartonfoot, former farm in the Riccarton area. In 1624 Adam Usher and his son Will were convicted of stealing sheep from there, among other crimes; the tenants were Archie Henderson and John Robison. It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1670 (it is 'Rickartounfoote' in 1655 and 'Rickartonefoot in 1670).

Riccarton Hope (ri-kar'-in-hōp) n. small stream that runs roughly eastwards to the south of Bell Hill to join the Riccarton Burn.

Riccarton Junction (ri-kar'-in-jungk-shin) n. station on the Waverley Line (Border Union Railway) at the junction with the Hexham line (Border Counties Railway), also known as Riccarton, although that name had formerly applied to the peel tower and farm more than a mile further down the Riccarton Burn. The station building (now demolished) included the Cooperative store and village pub. As well as the station there were also 2 signal-boxes (also demolished), an engine shed, turntable and several nearby footbridges, as well as major culverts along the line. It was opened in 1862 as simply 'Riccarton Station', with the 'Junction' being added by the North British Railway in 1905. It closed in 1969. Only the remains of the platforms and footings of the stationmaster's house survive.

Riccartonlee (ri-kar'-in-lee) n. former name for lands near Riccarton, recorded in 1541 as 'Ricardtounlie', with a value of 5 shillings, and at that time vacant.

Riccarton Mill (ri-kar'-in-mil) n. farmstead on the Liddel Water, to the east of the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. There was presumably once a corn mill there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1797 and his son James was listed there on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories (incorrectly as 'Bickerton Mill'). Another James Armstrong was there in 1852. It was said that at least one person had drowned in the mill lade. It was a public house up until around the 1870s. It is the spot to which Dandy Dinmont directs Harry Bertram in Sir Walter Scott's 'Guy Mannering' – 'But ye can come ower the night as far as Riccarton, where there is a public; or if ye like to stop at Jockey Grieve's at the Heuch' [SWS] (it is 'Rickertownmill' on Stobie's 1770 map and 'Rickarton Mill' in 1821).

Riccarton Schuil (ri-kar'-in-skil) n. former school in Riccarton Junction. It closed in 1963, the same year as the Beeching Report. The remaining children travelled by train to Newcastleton or Hawick. The school and schoolmaster's house survive at the south-east corner of the village. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1878–1962.

Riccarton Sike (ri-kar'-in-sīk) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, south of Saughtree. It rises on Yarrow Knowe and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water. Note that it is on the south side of the valley, while Riccarton itself is on the north.

Riccarton Toll (ri-kar'-in-tōl) n. former toll house on the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. Mason John Turnbull was living there in 1801. Christian Armstrong was toll-keeper there in 1851. It is marked 'Riccarton Bar' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The buuilding was serverely damaged in the great storm on 1846. The house still exists.

rice (rīs) n., arch. a branch, stick – 'He travelled with two long sticks – 'rices' they were called' [RM], twigs collectively, brushwood – 'The calculation of the stake and rice stands thus: Rice at 1s. per cart, 3d. per rood; stakes, eight to the rood, 6d. . . . ' [RJE], '. . . a cart filled with the small branches of the ash-tree, with the leaves on, – 'ash rice', as he described the material to me' [RB] (also spelled 'rise' or 'ryce', and sometimes plural).

Rice (rīs) n. John (19th C.) married Margaret 'Walsh' in Hawick in 1853.

Richard see Richard Hassendean

Richard (ri-churd) n. Dean of Eskdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, listed as a witness 1195/6. He is the only named person who held this office. However, his surname is unknown.

Richard (ri-churd) n. recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk and chaplain to the Bishop of Glasgow in 1258 when he witnessed a charter. He is recorded as 'Ricardo vicario de ecclesia de Askirke'. It is possible that he came from the family of Ashkirk of that Ilk.

Richard (ri-churd) n. recorded as Parson of 'Sowdone' (i.e. Southdean) in 1526/7. At that time he witnessed a document relating to Walter Scott of Branxholme, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. No surname is given.

Richard III (ri-churd-thu-third) n. Richard Plantagenet (1452–85) he was the 4th surviving son of Richard, 3rd Duke of York and Cecily Neville. He had a withered arm and crooked spine, hence his nickname 'Crookback'. He was Duke of Gloucester and King of England 1483–85, his role in the 'Princes in the Tower' incident being a matter of debate. From 1470–83 he was Warden of the English West March, and in 1482 led an invasion into Scotland that took Berwick and Edinburgh. He was the last King of the House of York, and well known as the subject of a Shakespeare play.

Richardson

(ri-churd-sin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as an innkeeper in 1718. He married Isobel Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1699 and their children included: Christian (b.1709); James (b.1711); Adam (b.1716); and Adam (again, b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailie George Martin and flesher James Halliday, in 1716 were the same witnesses as for other baptisms that day, and in 1718 were John Gardner in the Sandbed and flesher Robert Renwick 'there' (suggesting they all lived at the Sandbed). Adam (17th/18th C.) Elder of Bedrule Kirk in 1729. Adam (18th C.) recorded in the Town Treasurer's book in 1775 for the 'libel' against him 'for going by the Court with the bailies, before and after the court, 2s. – of which he paid 16d.'; it is unclear which court this was or what the trial was about. The same amount is also recorded in 1756 for the same purpose. He could be the merchant Adam who married Elizabeth Scott in Hawick in 1755 and whose children included Elizabeth (b.1756), Joan (b.1759) and Isobel (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were William and Walter Scott. Adam (18th/19th C.) draper at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Agnes (17th C.) servant of Rev. John Scott of Hawick. In 1659 she accused Thomas Oliver of coming to the minister's house to take his horse and then striking her 'with the branke [bridle] of the naige ... upon the head, to her great hurt'. Alexander (19th C.) listed as 36th member of the Archæological Society in 1856. He donated fossils and coins to the Museum in 1857, fossils in 1858, coins in 1859, more coins in 1853 and served on the Society's committee. Allan (1942–) member of the Hawick Cycling Club. He won a national title and became the first member of the Hawick club to compete for Scotland on both the road and the track. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the Andrew who in 1703 and 1713 witnessed baptisms for weaver Jasper, who was surely related; the other witness in 1703 was weaver Thomas, who was surely also related. He married Isobel Purcell and their children included: George (b.1703); Bessie (b.1706); Catharine (b.1708); and James (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Michael Briggs and Jasper Richardson (surely a relative) and in 1708 were wright James Purcell (probably related to his wife), and weavers Jasper and John (who were surely related to him). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His got married in 1722 (with no wife's name recorded). Andrew (c.1790–1869) born in Roxburghshire, son of farmer James and Isabel Scott. He served with the Dumfries Militia, and was at Edinburgh Castle in 1814 when he married Margaret Pollock. He was later a stockingmaker, needlemaker and woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. He may be the Andrew who was listed among people who recovered from cholera in 1832. He was living on Green Wynd in 1841. His children included: James (1816–74), who married Janet Kyle; Andrew (b.1824), married Mary Paterson; John (1826–95), china merchant, married Harriot Miller; David (b.1830); Alexander (1833–72), married Christina Burns; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); and George (b.1841). Andrew (1799–1876) said to be from Edinburgh. He was painter of 'Hawick' from about 1835, which was engraved as the frontispiece to Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (by J. Bower). It is a view from Easter Martin's Hill, to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farmhouse and is also known as 'Hawick from Crumhaughhill'. It was presented to the Museum by W.E. Wilson. Probably the same Andrew was also active in the England and in the New York area, painting landscapes and coastal views, such as 'View from Froster Hill, Gloucestershire', 'The Bergen Homestead' and 'View near Bridgeport, Connecticut'. Andrew (19th C.) foreman at Robert Ewen's hosiery factory on the Mill Path, recorded in 1866. Ann (18th C.) recorded in 1758 when she hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. Bruce Cornet in 2000, hence sometimes referred to as the Millennium Cornet. He also marked the boundaries again the following year, when the full-scale Common Riding was cancelled because of foot and mouth. Catherine nee Scott (1777–1853) daughter of Capt. James, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. She went to India to stay with her uncle Lord Harris, and there married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson of the East India Company Marine. She returned to Scotland after the death of her husband and lived at Forge, near Canonbie. She was locally known as a writer, and was a friend of the Carlyles. She wrote 'Adonia: A Desultory Story' (1801) and 'Poems' (1828). Frazer (b.1829/30) originally from Edinburgh, he was a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Teviot Square and in 1861 was at 5 Tannage Close. In 1860 he donated to the Museum a 'Russian Crucifix from Inkerman' and in 1865 donated 'a large antique key found in the neighbourhood, and a portion of a Russian bell from a church in Sebastopol'. He acted as Halberdier in the latter part of the 19th century, for many years along with Thomas Cook. There is an early photograph of him with his halberd. In 1875 it is reported that he appeared in the 'much disputed new suit!' His wife was Agnes and their children included Frazer, Jane R., Richard W. and Adam. His forename is also spelled 'Fraser'. Gavin Gala man who wrote 'For King and Country and the Scottish Borderers' (1987), an account of the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, and 'After Gallipoli' (1992), an account of their activities in the rest of WWI. He has been a regular speaker at the Archæological Society. George 'the Blue Laird' (b.1705/6) of the West End. He is probably the George, Burgess and 'Indweller in Hawick' who gave evidence at the court case in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. He was at that time stated to be a widower and staying in part of a house rent free from his son James, given by his uncle James Purcell. He lived in Hawick all his life, except when he was in service as a boy and 'has been at the Common-Riding of Hawick every year since he could ride a horse'. His daughter Christian died in 1803, by which time he was already deceased. James, who was also called 'the Blue Laird' was perhaps his son. He may be the George, son of Andrew, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the carrier (also recorded as a 'workman') George who married Betty Shiel and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1734); John (b.1741); James (b.1743); and James (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were late Bailie Walter Graham and servant John Nichol and in 1747 were mason Andrew Napier and wright James Purcell (his uncle). George (b.c.1785) recorded as 'independent' on the 1841 census. His land behind the Back Row is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He was perhaps son of James and grandson of George (both of whom were called 'the Blue Laird'). George (1793–1871) son of William and Margaret Laing, he was born in Minto or Yarrow Parish. He may be the ploughman at Borthwickshiels recorded on the 1812 Militia ballot in Roberton Parish. He is recorded as an agricultural labourer at Wester Parkhill in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 he was at Deanburnhaugh with his son-in-law. Minto Parish and lived at Hummelknowe Mill when young and later at Parkhill. He married Elizabeth Haliburton, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1824, aged 30. Their children, baptised in Roberton, included: Margaret (1816–1894), who married roadman William Robson and died at 13 Dakers Place; William (1818–1825); Helen (1820–42); Henry (b.1821); and John (b.1823). In 1825 (recorded in Wilton and Roberton Parishes) he secondly married Elizabeth Henry, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1846, aged 64. He died at Deanburnhaugh and was buried at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. George Wilson (1830–92) son of manufacturer John and Helen Anderson. He was born in Hawick and was a wool merchant. He emigrated to Canada, married Mary Ellen Craigie and died in Brant, Ontario. Henry (b.1801) son of James, who was Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott, from the Milsington Scotts. He was a farmer, living at 37 Loan, recorded as farmer of 15 acres in 1861. He rented several fields from the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Beatrix (or Beatrice) Miller, and their children included: William, who emigrated to Australia in the 1850s; Margaret; Henry (b.1830), who also emigrated to Australia; Robert, who also went to Australia; James (b.1836/7), who was Cornet in 1862; and Walter. He donated a 'Nova-Scotian copper coin' to the Museum in 1876. James (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town. He is recorded holding part of the lease there in 1675 and 1677; in 1677 he was renting along with his mother (whose name is not given). He is surely related to the John senior and John younger, who were tenants in 1671 (perhaps his father and brother). He could be the James, married to Catherine Turnbull (or Rule) whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1671. James (17th C.) resident at Howcleuch in Roberton Parish. He is recorded there in 1683 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He was 'weadua', i.e. widower, so his wife must have died in childbirth. The witnesses were James and Robert Nichol. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Bessie Margaret was baptised in 1695. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He could be the son of Bailie Patrick baptised in Hawick in 1686. In 1712 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He was 'tenent' in 1717. He is listed as 'Tenent' in 1725 when he (along with mason Andrew Turnbull, whose wife was also an Aitken) witnessed a baptism for John Hardie and Isobel Aitken. He is probably the James who married Bessie, daughter of William Aitkin in 1715 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish include: Bessie (b.1716); Agnes (b.1717); Mary (b.1719); Isobel (b.1721), who probably married merchant James Ekron; Helen (b.1723); Patrick (b.1726); William (b.1728), possibly the manufacturer at Whisky Houses; and Elizabeth (b.1731). The witnesses in 1717 were merchants William Gardner and James Aitkin. He is probably the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for cooper Alexander Weens in 1713 and recorded as 'tenent' when he witnessed another baptism for Alexander Weens in 1721. James 'the Blue Laird' (d.1824) probably son of George, who also had the same nickname. He was probably a minor land-owner, like the 'Hilliesland Lairds'. He is probably the James, son of George, who received a house (with a yard behind it) from George's uncle James Purcell. This is probably the land belonging to George marked behind the Back Row on Wood's 1824 map, adjacent to George Richardson's land (who may have been his son). He married Elizabeth ('Lizzy') Nimmo (or 'Nimo') and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1768). He may be the James whose son George died in 1776 and whose unnamed child died in 1795. James (b.c.1753) son of William, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He had a brother John and sister Elizabeth, who married William Wilson. He was Cornet in 1777 and known as 'Auld Jamie' in later life. He waved the Flag over the new Slitrig Brig when it was opened in his year as Cornet. Along with William (either his father or brother), he ran the firm of wool merchants and manufacturers based at 'Whusky Hooses'. The firm manufactured carpets for a while, and also dealt in salt, tar and whisky; it went into bankruptcy around 1812–21. A letter from him to a Selkirk merchant in 1795 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for merchant George Gray, and could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Young. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1791–97 when he paid the Horse Tax. In 1796 he was recorded as 'Wool Stapler' (i.e. trader in wool). He contributed (£1 1s), with William, to the subscription to support the war with France around 1800. He first married a Brydon, but they had no issue. Secondly, in Roberton Parish in 1790, he married Jane (b.1762), daughter of William Scott, tenant of Milsington. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: William (b.1791); John; Walter (b.1792), stockingmaker; Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1794), who probably died young; James (b.1796), of Salthall; Isabella, who married baker Walter Wilson; Henry (b.1801), farmer on the Loan; Thomas (b.1806), carrier and coal agent; and James' (again, b.1808). The witnesses in 1792 were William and Walter Richardson (probably his father and brother) and in 1796 were William (presumably his father) and hosier William Wilson. He could be the James of Walter's Wynd whose wife died in 1822, aged 59. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendeanbank. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (b.1767) farmer in Hawick, son of John and Isobel Scott. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1787 and she died in 1818. Their children included Andrew (b.c.1791), who was also a farmer. James (b.c.1780) carrier in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He could be the son of carrier John baptised in Hawick in 1781. James (b.c.1780) servant at Dykes in Cavers Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children (with no mother's name given), included: John (b.1796); and Isabel (b.1800). James 'Lang Jaymie' or 'Jaymie o Sauthaa' (b.1796) presumably a tall individual, who lived with his family at Salt Hall. He was son of James, Cornet in 1777, and a nephew of Elizabeth Richardson, who married manufacturer William Wilson (although there was a second James, baptised in 1808 to the same parents, making his birth year uncertain). He worked as a warehouseman in a wool factory. He is recorded at Salt Hall in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Helen Ballantyne, sister of 'Wat the Drummer'. Their children included: James; Jane; Margaret; Isabella (b.1830/1), who married John Edgar; Helen (b.1833/4); Walter (b.1835/6); John (b.1837/8); William (b.1841/2); Thomas (b.1843/4); and Elizabeth (b.1845/6). James (b.1800/1–32) from Hawick, brother of spinner John. He served with the 78 Regiment, the Ross-shire Buffs from the age of 17. He died in Colombo, Sri Lanka. James (b.1802/3) from Ireland, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at Wilton Dean with his wife Sarah and son James. James (b.1805/6) frameworker, originally from Ireland. He was living in the Mid Row in 1851, with his daughter Catherine, housekeeper Jane Bell, niece Margaret Giddons and a lodger. James (b.1808/9) from Smailholm, he was a shuttlemaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Slitrig Crescent and employing 2 men. In Slater's 1852 directory he is described as a cooper and shuttle-maker on the 'Front row', as well as being listed as a 'turner'. His wife was Isabella (from England) and their children included Betsy, Peter, Thomas, Isabella, Helen, David and Margaret. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Ann Chaldwick. Their son William was baptised in 1823. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Janet Aitkin. Their son William was baptised in 1832. James (19th C.) married Christian Baptie in Wilton in 1833. James (b.1809/10) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row, in 1851 on Under Damside and in 1861 on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Mary Ann (from Leith) and their children included: John (b.1831/2); William (b.1833/4); Esther (b.1838/9); and Gordon (or Jordan, b.1840/1); Isabella (b.1842/3); James F. (b.1848/9); and Mary (b.1853/4). James (b.1813/4) grocer and tea-dealer at 73 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Janet Kyle and their children included: Andrew (b.1845); James Kyle (b.1847); George (b.1850); Margaret Pollock (b.1852); Francis Kyle (b.1854); Janet (b.1856/7); and William (b.1859/60). He may be the James of the High Street who donated fossils to the Museum in 1865 and a Danish coin before that, and whose wife previously donated an American coin. He may also be the James who in 1876 donated a 'piece of encrinitic marble'. James (19th C.) married Isabella Park in Hawick in 1844. James (b.1823/4) son of Walter, he was born in Hawick. He was a frameworker. In 1847 he was in Hawick Jail. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter Isabella (b.1856/7). In 1861 he was a widower living at 7 O'Connell Street with his daughter, father, brother Thomas and a domestic servant. James (b.1834/5) son of carter Thomas, he was a railway labourer in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at the back house of 16 Howegate. His wife was Jessie from Jedburgh and their children included Thomas (b.1859/60). James (b.1834/5) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Tannage Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included Joan (b.1857/8). James (b.1836/7) son of farmer Henry, he was a stone mason, and also farmed fields up the Loan, succeeding his father. He was Cornet in 1862. He can be seen in what is the second earliest known Common Riding photograph, standing with a group of his supporters, with a top hat and full beard. He had daughters Wilhelmina B. and Beatrice Miller. James (b.1847/8) son of James and Margaret Fairgrieve. In 1883 he married Sarah, daughter of Henry Shaw. James (b.1851) son of Walter and Mary Murray. He worked as a wool-sorter and served as Beadle for Hawick Parish Church. He had a son Robert, who married Ethel, adopted daughter of postmaster James Orr. James M. 'Jimmy the Printer' (d.2001) first apprentice with the printing firm of Scott & Paterson, where he was a compositor from 1921. He was founder of Richardson & Son printer's business in Dovemount Place in 1946, the firm later moving to Loch Park. He coined the phrase 'a day oot o Hawick's a fortnight wasted'. Jamie son of Murray and grandson of Jimmy. He was Cornet in 2009 and works as a printer. Janet (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Probably the same Janet 'Ritchieson' is recorded in 1684 when her sub-tenant Jean Hardie was attacked in the night, with John, son of litster James Scott, trying to break down her door. Jasper (17th/18th C.) weaver of Hawick. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1703, 1706 and 1708 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew (surely a relative); in 1703 the other witness was Thomas (also a weaver). In 1709 he and John (surely also a relative) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1706 he married Margaret Briggs (probably from the weaving family) and their children included: Bessie (b.1707); Thomas (b.1709); Michael (b.1710); George (b.1713); Frederick (b.1713); and John (b.1715). The witnesses in 1709 were Michael Briggs and merchant Francis Elliot, in 1713 were Andrew (surely a relative) and John Pringle, and in 1715 were James Scott 'Doctor' and wright James Purcell. John (16th C.) saddler mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574, when he was still owed money from the Laird of Buccleuch. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. John (17th C.) 'maltman' who was listed as a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1628–33, responsible for part of the rents of Branxholme and Wilton. In the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is 'John Ritchiesone, maltman to my Lord Bukcleuche' and owed the Earl some rental money. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rosie Graham and their children included James (b.1636) and Helen (b.1644). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet 'Bowston' and their children included Hugh (b.1644) and Janet (b.1646). John (17th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who served as Town Clerk in 1638, and probably for a few years before. He is recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1637. He is recorded as 'John Ritchartsonne, clark' in one of the first entries in the earliest existing Town Book in 1638. He is also there listed as a notary, along with Gilbert Watt, on the short-list for next Town Clerk (with Watt being selected). He was listed as 'notar publick' at the signing of the 'Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union' (Covenant) in 1638. He was 'notar' when elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the same as 'John Ritchisone, officiar and clerk in the defunctes baroune courtes' who was owed his yearly fee in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. John (17th C.) listed as 'John Ritchiesone elder' in 1671, when, along with his son John, he leased part of the farm of Branxholme Town. It seems likely that James, who was farming at Branxholme Town in 1675 and 1677, was another son. It is possible he was the John, married to Helen Routledge, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Rosie (b.1649), Janet (b.1651) and Bessie (b.1654). He is probably the John who in 1673 witnessed (along with Patrick Scoon) a baptism for James Martin (who could have been his son-in-law). John (17th C.) son of John, he was listed as 'younger' in 1671 when he was tenant of part of Branxholme Town. He is probably the John who was married to Bessie Hope, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Bessie (b.1670) and John (b.1673). The Hopes were also tenants at Branxholme Town. John (17th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Roberton in 1686. John (17th/18th C.) son of Patrick, who was a Bailie in Hawick. In 1706 he became an apprentice merchant with William Crooks in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Cavers Parish in 1703. He could be the John whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1706); and Robert and Margaret (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Bell in Bedrule Parish in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for Andrew (who was surely related to him) and for weaver David Reid and in 1709 for merchant Walter Bryson. He is probably the John who along with Jasper (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism for weavers Andrew Jardine in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Kirkton in 1712, with the bride's name not recorded. John (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1721. Their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1722. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1723 he and Agnes Waddel had a son John baptised in Hawick. They were labelled 'Fornicators' and the witnesses were glover James Waddel (surely related to Agnes) and Beadle John Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son William was baptised in 1737. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose marriage (to an unknown woman) was recorded in 1746. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isobel Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1769); William (again, b.1772); and James (b.1781). The witnesses in 1764 were James Scott and James Glendinning and in 1772 were David Laing and James Glendinning. He may be the John who in 1761 witnessed a baptism for Charles Rutherford and Janet Richardson (perhaps his sister). He may also be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in Hawick in 1766. His wife died in Hawick in 1790. John (18th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Isabel was baptised in 1790. John (b.1756) son of William of the Whisky Houses mill. His brother James was Cornet in 1777 and his sister Elizabeth married manufacturer William Wilson. He is described in Wilson's history as 'John Richardson, father of John the elder'. He may be the Hawick resident John recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1781. John (18th/19th C.) one of the 'Hilliesland Lairds', being tenant of 3 fields in that area. One of his fields contained 'Katie Veitch's Chair'. He was involved in smuggling and for a while had a horse called 'Paddy', which had been a charger with the Irish cavalry. It is said that on one occasion the bugle sounded on the Tower Knowe for a troop of dragoons and his horse took off, with him riding bareback, galloping down from the Braid Roads to meet the soldiers. John (18th/19th C.) married Jean Armstrong in Wilton in 1804. John (1780–1864), W.S., Scottish lawyer, who worked in London as a parliamentary solicitor from 1806. He was an occasional poet and friend of Sir Walter Scott. He lived at Kirklands near Ancrum, purchasing the estate in 1830, spending the autumn months in residence until his retirement, and dying there.

John (1788/9–1874) spinner in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Back Row and in 1861 was 'Formerly Wool Slubber' at 10 Back Row. He married Esther Robson, who died in 1830, aged 44. Their children included: James (b.1808), baptised in East Bank Kirk; William (1808/9–71), tailor and clothier, who died at Blackburn, Lancashire; Isabella (1814/5–54), who died at Doon in Canada; Andrew (b.c.1815); John (b.1817), who died in infancy; John (again, 1819/20–88); Esther (b.c.1826); Agnes (1825/6–1906); and Robert (1828–77). His family are buried at St. Mary's. John (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jessie Rodger and their daughter Margaret was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1828. It is possible that his wife was the Jessie 'Kedzie' who married a man of the same name in 1824, the marriage recorded in East Bank Kirk and Wilton Parish. John (1799–1869) son of Walter, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. His mother was Christian Gledstains, daughter of the Town Clerk. In 1841 he was a warehouseman living on Slitrig Crescent. In 1851 he was hosiery worker who was living at Ladylaw Cottage in Wilton. By 1861 he was at Wellington Street. He may be the John who was the 14th listed member of the Archæological Society and who donated a Swedish coin and 4 copper coins to the Museum. He married Helen Anderson (who died in 1871, aged 70); she may be the daughter of James Anderson and Janet Rankin baptised in Lilliesleaf in 1801 and their marriage may be the one with 'Isobel' Anderson recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1822. Their children included: Walter (b.1824), hosiery warehouseman; James (b.1825); William (b.1827), hosiery manager; John (b.1829), who probably died young; George Wilson (b.1830), wool merchant; Elizabeth (b.1833); and Archibald (b.1837). He was cousin of James, who lived at the nearby Salt Hall at the same time. John (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Barbara Scott and their son Adam was baptised in 1840. John (b.1805/6) from England, he was a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Fore Raw and in 1861 was a widower at 9 O'Connell Street. His wife was Helen and their children included Barbara (b.1851/2). He also had step-children Janet and Isabella Aitken. John (19th C.) inn-keeper of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square in Newcastleton. He was listed as proprietor in 1852, but must have been absent for the 1851 census, when his wife was innkeeper. He married Elizabeth, from Bewcastle. Their children included Margaret, Diana, Jane, John and Helen. John (1819/20–88) son of John and Esther Robson, he was a mill manager of William Laidlaw & Sons. He lived on Dickson Street. In 1851 he was a power-loom weaver living at 4 Weensland Road and in 1861 he was living in Weensland and working as a 'Machine Manager Woollen Mill'. He married Elizabeth Henderson in 1842, who died in 1907, aged 84. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: John (b.1844), who died at Parramatta, Australia; Janet (b.1846); Esther (b.1847); Elizabeth (b.1850); Thomas Henderson (b.1853); Catherine (b.1855/6); and Isabella, James and Robert W., who all died young. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (19th C.) lived on Waverley Terrace. In 1874 he donated to the Museum a 'fossil horn, found in the Solway, and four copper coins'. John (1826–95) son of Andrew and Margaret Pollock. He was a china merchant in Hawick. He had a house built on the Kirk Wynd in about 1879. His shop, 'Richardson's China Warehouse' was at No. 8 Kirkwynd and can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (with his wife standing outside). In 1851 he was a woollen slubber living on the Loan and in 1861 was at 12 Back Row. In 1857 he was recorded as 'Manager of a Wool Factory' and living at 12 Loan. In 1848 he married Harriet (1827–1910) daughter of Robert Miller. They had at least 12 children, including: Andrew (1850–57); Catherine (b.1852); Robert (b.1854); Elizabeth (b.1858/9); Andrew (again, b.1860); Harriet (b.1862); Margaret (b.1862); Margaret (again, b.1865); and Joan (b.1867). Some were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (19th C.) married Janet Inglis in 1842, the marriage recorded in Hawick and Ancrum Parishes. John (19th C.) married Helen Montgomery in Hawick in 1850. John (b.1839) son of carter Thomas and grandson of James, wool merchant. He worked as a spinner, and then farmed at Newmill-on-Slitrig. He married Betsy, sister of James Elliot of Flex. His sons James and John farmed at Hummelknowes. Bailie John, J.P. (d.1918) heavily involved in religious and temperance matters in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of George Barclay. Their children were George (who died in infancy), James (headmaster of Preston Street School in Edinburgh), Janet (who married James Edgar) and Mary. John (1859–1892) son of Robert, was a manufaturer in Hawick. He took over from his father as partner in Noble & Richardson in 1877, then became partner in Messrs. Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. in Galashiels in 1880, originally operating at Abbots Mill in Galashiels and opening Eastfield Mills in Hawick in 1883. His partner John Farrar Blenkhorn was married to his sister, while their first manager was his cousin George Hunter. He was also Lieutenant in the local Border Rifles (volunteers). He married Lizzie Maxwell (daughter of the proprietor of the Maxwell Hotel in Gala), and none of their children survived to adulthood. The family lived at 19 Buccleuch Street (Welch's). Suffering from ill health, he travelled to warmer climates (Australia, New Zealand and South Africa) for his last 4 years, dying of influenza at Berbeton, Transvaal. Margaret (18th/19th C.) dressmaker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Mark (1966/7–) brought up in Hawick, he attended Burnfoot, Trinity and the High School. He was an apprentice butcher at Miller's, then worked as a nursing assistant at Dingleton Hospital, later moving into property development. In 2016 he co-founded Group S.R.S., which provides home care and support services throughout Scotland. Murray local printer of Dovemount Place. He was one of the founders of the Border Horse Racing Association in 1972 and a keen 'flapping' rider and organiser. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as 'guid broder' (i.e. brother-in-law) of Hector Turnbull in Belses. The pair, along with Hector's son Dand, were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton. They were denounced as rebels. Presumably he was married to a sister of Hector Turnbull, tenant in Belses. In 1586/7 he is 'Pait Richesoun', brother-in-law to 'Ekkie in Belses', when listed among Border criminals who were given one more chance to find sureties. Bailie Patrick (d.c.1706) merchant in Hawick. He was recorded as a Hawick Magistrate in 1694 and 1703. He owned a tenement to the south of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He was 'present baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). In 1694 it is recorded that he settled his account 'for all that he has paid for the town's use, for great bell, little bell, steeple, and tolbuith, and all other things, being £38 : 19 : 6 Scots'. He is probably the 'Patrick Ritchisone' who is listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott. In 1699 he and Robert Hardie petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the 'fredom of trade' tax. He witnessed baptisms for weaver David Miller in 1700, for Bailie George Martin in 1702, for flesher John Tudhope in 1702, for workman Robert Henderson in 1703, for Burgh Officer Alexander Scott, for merchant William Dickson, for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for 'Walter Scott herd' in 1704 and for Bailie George Martin and for Anthony Haig in 1706. He also witnessed several baptisms in 1705, and could be the Patrick who witnessed a baptism in 1687. His wife was Bessie Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1686); John (b.1688), who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1706; and Elizabeth (b.1692), who married tailor Robert Chisholme in 1716. He is referred to as deceased in 1707 when expenses incurred earlier, during his Bailieship, were discussed by the Council. Richard (16th C.) recorded as 'master Richart Richartsoun' in 1530 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott and Janet Ker. His name appears just before the Vicar of Hawick. Richard (b.1809/10) from Kelso, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, listed on Pigot's 1837 directory. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Jane and their children included William, Isabella, Mary and George. He is probably the 'Mr Richardson, Lilliesleaf' who in 1858 donated to the Museum a 'Sprig of Geranium from Napoleon's Tomb St Helena'. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Annandale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. He received some of the benefices of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale from 1552. However, this overlapped with John Hepburn, so it is unclear who was really in the office. He resigned in 1565. He was also referred to as Dean of Teviotdale in 1552. Robert (17th C.) leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1690, with Thomas Briggs as cautioner. He was listed at Branxholme Town among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (1828–1877) son of John and Esther Robson (whose memorial stone can still be seen at St. Mary's). He became a clerk with Andrew Oliver, auctioneer's, and was also assistant to Robert Armstrong in the Post Office. He then became head cashier with a firm in London (Scott, Bell & Co.). He is probably the 'Mr R. Richardson, London' who became a member of the Archæological Society in 1861. He moved to Liverpool for a few years (working for Leech, Harrison Forwood), and was then was sent abroad for business. He was in Liverpool in 1866 when he donated to the Museum '4 ann-piece of Shah Allum, Persic characters; two Indian coins, Persic characters; Spanish coin of Philip V.; and series of 5 Turkish coins', plus 'Roman coin found at Malta, native Indian anna and half anna, Balboosh characters; and 1 pie, modern Indian'. In 1870, after about a year in India, he returned to Hawick because of failing health. He then went into partnership with Robert Noble, forming Richardson, Noble and Co., at Stonefield Mills, moving to Glebe Mills in 1873. The partnership was suggested by his brother-in-law John Hunter; they met for the second time in Hunter's house, trying to conclude their business agreement quickly because both had another engagement that night, only to discover that they were both being admitted as members of Masonic Lodge 111. However, he died after only a few years in business in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of William Lawrie and half sister of William Fredrick Diener. He secondly married Jessica, daughter of Andrew Irvine of the Savings Bank. His children were: Minnie, who married John Farrar Blenkhorn; John, partner in Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co.; Ettie Isabella; William Fredrick; and Margaret Lawrie. The family were living at Wilton Hill when he died at only 48. He is buried in the Wellogate. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1685 he was a witness to insults made by ex-Bailie Robert Wright against Bailie James Scott. In 1686 he was fined 'for his contumacie in disobeying the Baylyea Layng his order qn. charged to the tolbuith; as also, in ane oyr tenn pound for breach of wiard and takin away of the tolbuith door-key'. In 1690 he gave evidence that candlemaker John Turnbull insulted Thomas Beattie, with Turnbull being accordingly fined. In 1703 he (along with Jasper, also a weaver) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew; the 3 men were presumably all related. He is probably the Thomas, married to Helen Swan whose children included: George (b.1683); Catherine (b.1683); and Thomas (b.1686). Thomas (b.1806) younger son of James, who was Cornet in 1777. He was a carrier and coal agent in Hawick. He was listed as a 'Carrier's Porter' on the Mid Raw in the 1841 census. He may be the grocer on the Howegate listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was a carter at 14 Howegate in 1861. He later stayed at Fiddle Inn (7 Loan). He may be the Thomas who donated a Danish coin to the Museum in 1867. He married Agnes Park and their children included: James (b.1834); William (b.1836); John (b.1839), farmer at Newmill-on-Slitrig; and Agnes (b.1842), who became Mrs. Oliver of the Railway Hotel in Jedburgh, and later Mrs. Lamb of the Waverley Hotel in Hawick. Thomas (b.1843/4) woolsorter in Wilton, son of James. He was known locally as a runner. In 1862 he raced Matthew Storey in a head-to contest over 125 yards and lost, with Storey repeating his performance in a similar race in 1864. He may be the Thomas who donated a coin to the Museum in 1866. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. It is possible he was the same man as the manufacturer, but would only have been about 18 when the book was published. Probably the same weaver Walter was recorded in 1797 when his employee Thomas Clerk was listed among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Walter (1766–c.1808) son of William and Isabel Henderson. Like his father, he was a manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He is probably the Walter recorded in Hawick as owner of 2 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the manufacturer who paid the horse tax in the same year. Also in 1797 his servant Thomas Collier was among the men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1801 his employee John Leyden. In 1794 he married Christian, daughter of Town Clerk John Gladstains, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Ann (b.1794); Isabel (b.1796); William (b.1797), who went to London and became a merchant in Glasgow; John (1799–1869); James (b.1801), a hatter in Liverpool; and Elizabeth (b.1802). The witnesses in 1794 were William (his father) and Walter Laidlaw. After his death, in 1815, the mill was sold to Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. Walter (19th C.) married Elizabeth Lewis in Hawick Parish in 1816. Walter (1824–88) son of John, he was a hosiery warehouseman. He lived at Waverley Cottages. In 1847 he firstly married Mary Murray, and their children were: John (b.1848), father of James of the Salvation Army; James (b.1851), woolsorter and Beadle at Hawick Parish Church; Mary (b.1855); Walter (b.1857); and Walter (b.1859). He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Henderson, dairyman. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Alton in 1709 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Howcleuch in 1734 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. William (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1741 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant John Cavers. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Anderson and their children included George (b.1738) and William (b.1740). Adam, (b.1736), with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1740 were fleshers William Renwick and Thomas Waugh. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret (or Mary) Hislop. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1744); Mary (b.1745); and Isobel (b.1747). William (18th C.) wool merchant and manufacturer at Whisky Houses, said to he Hawick's first woollen manufacturer. His son James was Cornet, as well as later being business partner with another son Walter (with whom he is sometimes confused). He may be the son of merchant James who was baptised in Hawick in 1728. He was recorded as a carrier in 1761. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for smith Robert Young in 1762. In 1787 he was granted land and a waterfall at the top of Slitrig Crescent by the Duke of Buccleuch. He then had the Whisky House Mill built for him in 1788 for the manufacture of cloth. This factory represented one of the important early steps in Hawick's tweed industry. He made a kind of blue cloth, and travelled to Leeds to learn the techniques for finishing his cloth. He later manufactured 'duffle' for women's petticoats, as well as carpets and muslin woven for a Carlisle firm. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He witnessed a baptism for his son Walter in 1794. He is probably the William listed as 'Merchant' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 5 work horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He witnessed a baptism for his son James in 1796 (when recorded as 'Wool Stapler' (i.e. a trader in wool). He may be the member of Hawick Curling Club listed in 1812. In 1752 he married Isabel Henderson (from the farming family at 53 High Street, probably daughter of James), and she died in 1778. Their children were: James (b.c.1753), who was Cornet in 1777; John (b.1756); Peter Patrick (b.1759), who had no issue; Elizabeth (b.1761), who probably died young; Walter (b.1766), who took over as manufacturer at Whisky Houses; Betty (1772–1815), the eldest surviving daughter, who married manufacturer William Wilson; Robert (1776–1781); and William (d.1808), merchant in Hawick. The witnesses in 1761 were carrier James Scott and blacksmith Robert Young (who had also married a Henderson), in 1766 were James Henderson (probably his father-in-law) and Robert Young (again) and in 1772 were John Aitkin and Robert Chisholme. William (d.1808) Hawick merchant, son of manufacturer William. He married Isabella (1771–1807), daughter of James Dickson of Alton. Their son William inherited Alton after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, and took the additional name of Dickson. He may be the Richardson whose property is marked around 51 and 55 High Street. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whithope in 1808. He married Margaret Laing and their children included: Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (1774/5–1840) resident of Hummelknowe Mill. In Minto Parish in 1793 he married Margaret Laing and she died in 1831, aged 65. In 1833 he emigrated to Canada, where died. A commemorative stone was erected in Borthwick Waas Cemetery by their son Robert of Oxford County, Canada West. Their children included: George (b.1793); John (b.1795); Alexander (b.1797); Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Renwick and their children included: John (b.1808); and Gideon (b.1810). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hill Place Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. William (1797–1877) son of Walter and Christian Gledstains, he was born in Hawick. He is said to have gone to London, but became a merchant in Glasgow, variously listed in the census reports as a 'Drysalter', 'General Merchant', 'Wine Merchant' and 'Iron Merchant'. He may be the 'William Richardson, Jun.' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza Muirhead in 1823 and had children Walter, George, Jane, William and Christina Gladstone. William (b.c.1805) from the Morebattle area, he was a joiner in Hawick. He was living on the Round Close in 1841 and at 4 Backdamgate by 1851. He was listed as a joiner and a wheelwright on the Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed as a joiner and cartwright, employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret Kerr from Kelso. In 1846 all of the wood from his yard at the foot of the Crescent was carried away in the flood. Their children included: Peter (b.1836); Euphemia (b.c.1839); James (b.1841) also a joiner; Elizabeth (or 'Betsy', b.1844); Margaret (b.1846); and Euphemia (again, b.1849). William (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Leishman and their children included: James (b.1833); and Robert (b.1835). William (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1859 he donated 3 Chinesse pictures to the Museum. It is possible he was the butcher from Lilliesleaf who was a boarder at 41 High Street in 1861. William (1827–90) son of John. He was hosiery manager at Walter Wilson & Sons on Allars Crescent. In 1861 he was living at 39 High Street. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer Robison (whip and thong maker), and she died in 1905, aged 79. Their children included: John (b.1853), who died in South Africa; Ebenezer Robertson (b.1856/7); William James (b.1858/9); Helen Anderson (b.1861); and Elizabeth, who died in infancy. His grave in Wellogate Cemetery is marked with an obilisk (formerly spelled 'Richardsone', 'Richardsonne', 'Richartson', 'Richartsonne', 'Richartsoun', 'Richiesone', 'Richison', 'Ritchardsone', 'Ritchartsonne', 'Ritchieson' and 'Ritchiesone').

Richardsons (ri-churd-sinz) n. Richardson & Son, printers in Hawick. The firm was established by Jimmy Richardson in 1946, with his son Murray and grandson Jamie continuing the family tradition. Now situated in Loch Park, it is the only printing business based in Hawick.

Richardson's Hill (ri-churd-sinz-hil) n. former name for a hill just to the south-east of Hawick, exact location unknown – '... and when the burgesses' cows from the Moor, crossing the Slitrig, would ramble at large along Hardie's and Richardson's Hills to the Orchard marches' [HAST1861].

Richardtoncleucht (ri-churd-tin-kloocht) n. nickname of Andrew ('Dandy') Crozier, one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. His name presumably came from Riccarton Cleuch in Liddesdale, or perhaps Richard's Cleuch near Overton Bush in the Jed valley (see Riccarton Cleuch).

Richie (ri-chee) n. Hendry Sanforth (19th C.) brother-in-law of William Lindsay Watson, for whom he was appointed as a trustee in 1849. He was a manufacturer and perhaps a Quaker, from Deanfield (probably in Perthshire, not in Hawick). He married Margaret, daughter of William.

Richmond (rich-mind) n. James (1834–1923) son of Rev. John, he was born in Southdean. He studied at St. Andrews University 1849–51. In 1851 he emigrated to Australia, becoming a leading sheep breeder in New South Wales. He died in Kincairney, Perthshire. Rev. John (1784–1854) son of Rev. Dr. James of Irvine. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1804, was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1809 and was ordained as minister of Southdean in 1810 (being presented by Archibald, Lord Douglas, for whose family he had been tutor). In 1847 he retired to St. Andrews because of poor health and died in Edinburgh. He married Catherine Mitchell (who died in 1887, aged 89) in 1825. Their children were: Isabella Georgine; Margaret Cunningham; James, who became a sheep-farmer near Dunblane and in Australia; John, died young; George Mitchell, army Lieutenant in India, killed in action near Peshawar; and Catherine, died an infant. He published 'Ode to the Memory of Thomson, in the Temple of the Muses at Dryburgh Abbey' (1818), 'A Sermon on Regular Attendance on Divine Worship, in Connexion with the Spirit of the Times' (1820). He also wrote a description of Southdean Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1834 and he left many poems in manuscript form. Sir Thomas (d.1317) English leader from Yorkshire. He took part in the siege of Carlaverock Castle in 1300. In 1317 he led a part of the English force under the Earl of Arundel, which totalled perhaps 10,000 men. Sir James Douglas organised an ambush near Lintalee, with escape was prevented by twisting together the branches of young birch trees. He himself was killed, it is said by Douglas. William (b.1828/9) from Mauchline in Ayrshire. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with Thomas Masterton. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as 'Richmond & Masterton' in Slater's 1852 directory (also written 'Richmont').

Rickerby (ri-kur-bee) n. Jane (b.1825/6) from Langholm, she was a dressmaker on the Howegate in 1851. She lived with her sister Mary Ann, who was a milliner. They were listed in Slater's 1852 directory.

rickety-rackety-roo (ri-ki'-ee-ra-ki'-ee-roo) adv., arch. unsteady on the feet, particularly said of furniture.

rickit (ri-kee', -ki') pp., poet. ricked, to stack hay – 'Or stackit the peats on the crane-cover'd flowes, Or rickit the hay in the flower-laden howes' [JoHa].

rickle (ri-kul) n., arch. a pile, loose heap (of stones or peats), loose collection of things in general, v. to heap, form into a stack – 'When are ye gaun to rickle your peats' [JoJ], poet. to rattle bones – '. . . Ricklin' an' rattlin', cauld an' dry Wi' cricklin' riot' [WP], 'The Mune is but a rickle o' stane – I maun gang oot, I maun gang oot, Her wunds they nidder till the bane . . . ' [DH].

rickle o banes (ri-kul-o-bānz) n. someone who is unhealthily thin, an emaciated person, a skeleton (the word 'rickle' mostly survives in this phrase).

ricmatic (rik-mu-teek) n., arch. group of people or things, sum total, entirety, caboodle – 'An' then the confusion – the hale rick-matick Juist lookit as if't had been steered wi' a stick!' [BM1900], 'But the bonniest lass o' the hale ricmatic Is the lassie that works in the mill' [WAP] (there are spelling variants; corruption of 'arithmetic'; note the stress on the first syllable).

riddance (ri-dins) n., arch. intervention in a quarrel – '. . . but when he heard ane crying murther he straight way went up to make riddance and to allay tumult' [PR1716].

Riddell (ri-dul) n. hamlet about 8 miles north of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, on the Ale Water, off the B6400. The surrounding area is the old estate of Riddell, formerly a barony, which is now well wooded, and contains the ruins of the main mansion (incorporating the older peel tower) as well as a more modern tower, built nearby on the site of a mediæval motte and bailey. It was the home of the Riddells of Riddell from probably the reign of David I (the mid-12th century, when it was referred to as 'Wester-Lilliesleaf') until they were effectively ruined following the death of Sir John in 1819, and it was sold to the Sprots in 1823. The short version of the story of the loss of the family home is that in the late 18th century Sir John changed the course of the river in order to improve the view, and became bankrupt in the process. In the early 13th century part of the 'demesne' lands were stated to be below 'Harekamb'. The farm was burned in a raid by Turnbulls in about 1502, in which perhaps 480 sheep were stolen, along with 2 cows and goods, and a horse killed. The Laird of Riddell was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. The main lands were referred to as 'Riddell Mains' in 1643 and valued at £910, part of an estate of £1654. In 1675 there was a garrison of soldiers there, to watch out for local gatherings of Covenanters. By 1678 the estate's value was £1765. Tax was paid on 11 hearths on the estate in 1694, with John Winthrope, William Archibald and Alexander Kennedy being recorded there. Robert Arres was recorded as tenant there in 1789. Residents in 1799 included gardener Robert Scott, ploughman Henry 'Carudas', servants Adam Scott, Andrew Walker, Thomas Gowans, hind William Wilson, ploughman Gilbert Gray and smith William Irvine. Carter John Smith and servant John Laidlaw were there in 1801. Riddell House was an extensive mansion, destroyed by fire in 1943, although the remains can still be seen. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. There are 2 lodge houses for the estate, called 'East Lodge' and 'West Lodge'. The estate also contains stables, a deer larder, two 18th century bridges and other old buildings. There was formerly a chapel on the estate. The mausoleum of the Sprot family lies within woodlands on the estate. The current farmhouse was built by Mark Sprot in 1826 as an estate office and extended in 1898; it contains a Sprot armorial panel, as well as some stones in the garden from the earlier mansion. A ridge about 700 m east of the present farm contains a roughly oval fort (about 100 m by 50 m in size) with double ditches. Another fort, about 400 m northwest of the old house, above Riddellbank Wood, was revealed in aerial photography. A stone cist was unearthed near Willowbog Plantation on the estate around 1920 and reconstructed in the kitchen garden, although it has now disappeared. Court rolls for the barony court for 1698–1712 are in the National Archives – '. . . To ancient Riddel's fair domain, Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from lakes did raving come; Each wave was creased with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed' [SWS] (the origin is probably Old English 'rydde dæl', meaning 'valley cleared of trees', the name being transplanted by the 'de Rydale' family, who held extensive lands in England; it is 'Redoll' in 1435, 'Redale' in 1436/7, 'Reddail' in 1479/80 and 'Riddale' in 1502 and 1534; it appears on Frederik de Wit's map of c.1680 and is labelled 'Riddell or W. Lilsly' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Riddell (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddle) Adam (13th C.) recorded as 'Adam de Ridal' in an English document of 1279 involving an inquest into lands in Ireland. Adam (16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He was part of an inquest into ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533 (in which his nephew George also took part). Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1781. He married Isobel Learmonth in Roberton in 1774. His children included Jane (b.1776) and Nelly (b.1781). Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Cairns and their children included: Mary (b.1805); George (b.1809); Agnes (b.1811); Nelly (b.1813); and Margaret (b.1816). Adam (b.1782) born in Kirkton Parish, son of George, he was a joiner at Overhall Cottages in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed there at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Robert, Janet, Georgina and Jessy, as well as an adopted daughter Isabella Aitchison. Agnes (17th C.) recorded 'in Ashkirk" in about 1640 when she was cited for not keeping the Sabbath. In particular she 'compeared and confessit ye breach of ye Lord's Sabbath in gatherin of shairin' and 'is ordainit to satisfy ye pillar, and pay of penalty 12s'. Agnes (17th C.) widow of Hawick merchant James Brydon, who is listed on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. She is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. She may have been a shopkeeper of some sort on the High Street. Her children with James Brydon included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). Agnes (d.bef. 1741) daughter of Henry and brother of William, portioner in Bewlie. She inherited the lands of Bewlie from her brother in 1695, specifically the 5-pound land of Bewlie and half of one of the cottage-lands in Lilliesleaf. She is described as 'portioner' of Bewley' in 1699. She married John Nisbet, W.S. of Nisbetfield and their daughter Agnes married Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden). In 1723 her heir is recorded as her cousin, Francis Riddell, brewer in Prestonpans. Christian and Jean Riddell (and their husbands) are recorded as her heirs in 1741. Agnes (b.1810/1) wife of Lilliesleaf joiner William. She was listed as a midwife in the 1851 census. She was a widow living at about 61 High Street, with her children Janet, Rachel and James. She may be the dressmaker of the same name listed on the Howegate in Slater's 1852 directory. Alan (13th C.) recorded in about 1240 as witness to a charter for lands of Prenderguest, among the documents of Coldingham Priory. He witnessed another gift of land in Coldingham in the period 1248–60. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Alexander (17th C.) miller at Newmill (on Teviot) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed baptisms for John Dryden in 1675 and 1683. He may be the Alexander, married to Isobel Little, whose daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1672. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1698 as 'Mr' when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Alexander (b.c.1780) servant at Longnewton Mill on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish. Andrew (16th C.) witness to a sasine in 1559 for land in Wilton. This was attached to a sasine with Robert Riddell mentioned, so it is likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Possibly the same man is described as 'Andrew Riddill of that ilk' when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Rule Water in 1568. Perhaps the same Andrew was brother to Walter of that Ilk in 1579 when he was loaned £50 to Walter Scott of Todrig, receiving the annual rent of the lands in the form of meal and malt. His brother Robert was also mentioned about the same time. Probably the same Andrew, brother of Walter of that Ilk witnessed a transaction for Walter Scott of Todrig in 1581/2. Andrew (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of James Langlands of that Ilk. He was recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Andrew of that Ilk (1549/50–1632) son of Walter, with his mother probably being Agnes Ramsay. He was heir apparent Andrew of Walter in 1581 when he received sasine (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk; William in Lilliesleaf was one of the witnesses. In 1581 he witnessed a bond of caution for Elliots, when he was listed as son and heir of Walter of that Ilk. In the 1580s he was a 'tutor' for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm, to whom he was related through his paternal grandmother. In 1590 he was 'apparent of that Ilk' when he served as cautioner for Andrew Ker of Newhall. In 1590/1 he was recorded as a curator for James Pringle of Smailholm. He was served heir to his father in 1592 and obtained a charter in 1595/6 from the Commendator of Glasgow, as heir to his father Walter (making it unclear if Walter was still alive at that time). In 1592 Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk (who was married to his sister Janet) served as his cautioner in a bond of loyal behaviour. He served as cautioner for Pringles in 1598. He was the first to acquire the Haining estate from the Scotts (perhaps about 1627). He is recorded in a bond of 1600 for lands in Lilliesleaf and also in 1600 was on the 'retour' for the Kers of Cessford. In 1602 he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was also named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. In 1610 he was recorded along with other Riddells, swearing not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. His cautioner was James, merchant in Edinburgh, who was probably a relative. He himself acted as cautioner cautioner for his son John in the same case. In 1611 he was commended by King James VI for his industry as convenor of the Justices of Roxburghshire. In 1617 he was appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was at the Convention of the Estates in 1617. In 1618 the Douglases of Friarshaw complained about verbal and physical attacks by him and his associated Andrew of Lilliesleaf and Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill; in particular they claimed that he threatened the life of George Douglas of Friarshaw at Lilliesleaf Kirk. In about 1620 he had a charter for half the lands of 'Cringillis' from the Commendator of Melrose, and another charter for Allanshaws, 'Woplaw' and the west part of 'Langlie' from James Cairncross of Colmeslie. In 1620 he acted as bailie for Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, in a charter he granted to Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands; at the same time his daughter Jean was contracted in marriage to Walter, son of Sir Walter of Goldielands. He was probably the Laird of Riddell who represented Roxburghshire in the convention of 1617 and in Parliament in 1621. He also sat as one of the Lords of Secret Council in 1622 (and probably other years). In 1622 he gained possession of 'Trinlinknowis' from Alexander Pringle and his wife Bessie Scott. In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing 4 cows and an ox from his lands, and sheep from his lands of Whitton. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft; for the case of one of them, Isobel 'Howetsone', several letters exist from him to officials in Selkirk. Also in 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire, his son John also being listed there as 'fiar'. Also in 1628 he wrote to the Bailies of Selkirk about casting divot's on their common. He purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from William, son of Martin Elliot and Agnes Lorraine (as confirmed in a service to Walter of that Ilk in 1702). He was 'of Haining' in documents from the early 1600s relating to transactions with Andrew Scott of Wemyss. He was referred to as Baron of Riddell, and apparently refused to accept a baronetcy. He may be the Andrew of that Ilk recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over casting divots, in an undated document. He married a Pringle of Galashiels, who was either his first or second cousin. He was succeeded by his son Sir John (for whom there is a marriage contract in 1600 with the daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston). He later married Violet, daughter of William Douglas of Pumpherston. His other children were: William of Muselee, who started that branch of the family in the Borthwick valley; James of Maybole (possible ancestor of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell); Walter (or perhaps Robert) of Hartside; Andrew of Haining, who inherited that estate; Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Edgerston and/or Archibald Porteous, minister of Oxnam and was recorded in a deed of corroboration in 1673; Isabel, who married Robert Kerr, brother of Thomas of Cavers Carre; and Jean (1600–60), who remained unmarried, and is buried at Jedburgh Abbey. Other daughters may have married Walter Scott of Goldielands (although this may be an error for the marriage contract between his daughter Jean and Scott of Goldielands, which perhaps was never fulfilled) and John Baillie (ancestor of the Baillies of Mellerstain). In 1642 his widow Violet Douglas complained to the Privy Council about an attack on her tenants at Hartside. He is buried in the family aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard (where until fairly recently the inscription was quite legible), alongside his 2nd wife Violet. Andrew of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill when there were complaints made against them by the Douglases of Friarshaw. It was specifically claimed that they put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglases and also that he and Simon removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas' farmers. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Andrew of Haining (1605/6–41) son of Andrew of that Ilk and his 2nd wife Violet Douglas. He is recorded as Andrew of Haining (along with David of Haining) in 1634 in a document preserved in Selkirk. He was served heir to his father in 1636. He was said to be a 'favourite son' of his father. Along with his father and mother, he has one of the earliest legible panels in the Riddell aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. The initials 'I.S.' accompany his, probably those of his wife, who was Jean Stewart of Traquair (after his death his widow married Sir William Douglas of Kelhead). He was probably the 'Andro Riddell' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1638 he was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He was appointed Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire (or 'the forest') 1639–41. He married Agnes of Fawside and their children included: John of Haining, who succeeded; Violet, who was the 3rd wife of Sir Robert Dalzell of Glenae; and Walter, recorded in a deed in 1673. He is buried in the Riddell Aisle at Lilliesleaf, with the inscription 'whose life was short and good'. It is possible he was the Andrew 'of Hayning' whose son Andrew became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1653. Andrew (17th C.) described as 'now indweller in Over Quitton' in 1652 when he married Elizabeth ('Bessie'), daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was probably related to the Riddells of Riddell and Whitton. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid for the 'fewary of Lilslie' in Lilliesleaf Parish. Probably the same Andrew was portioner of Lilliesleaf in 1678 when he served as tutor to John, son of the deceased William Gray in Lilliesleaf; in 1683 and 1684 he is described as uncle to this same John Gray (perhaps meaning that his wife was a Gray) in other discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk, and then had the discharge in his own right (presumably meaning he had inherited the lands). It is unclear how he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. He may be the Andrew who died in 1701 and whose headstone is in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. Andrew (17th C.) son of Walter, who was brother of John of Haining. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); and Robert (b.1671). Andrew (17th C.) listed as being 'in Little-Cavers' among men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed right after John, to whom he was presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Walter Miller in 1690 and another (along with John) in 1691 for Walter Murray (also in Dryden). He and John witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedie in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Bessie Dodds and had children in Ashkirk, including: Marion (b.1687); John (b.1690); Thomas (b.1693); and Andrew (b.1699). The witnesses in 1690 were John (probably a relative) and Thomas Kedie (who was also at Dryden). Andrew (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. Andrew (d.c.1698) recorded being 'of Newhous' in 1698 in a list of wills registered with the Commissariot of Peebles. This was probably the Newhouse in Lilliesleaf

Parish. He could be the Andrew, who was resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew of Haining (17th/18th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1696, this including 2 cottage-lands at Lilliesleaf Mill as well as the Haining and other lands in Selkirkshire. In 1701 he (or perhaps his sister Madgalene) sold Haining to Andrew Pringle of Clifton. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Goldielands. In 1702 he was recorded as 'Subtenent in Goldilands' when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant in Alton Croft. He also witnessed baptisms in 1703 for William Wilson in Fenwick, in 1704 for Robert Stoddart (tenant in the Flex) and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for Walter Wilson, for William Douglas of Bonjedward and for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1706 for William Scott in Branxholme and for Robert Rutherford, in 1707 for weaver John Briggs, in 1708 for William Gledstains, for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger and for Dand Gray in Whitlaw, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Walter Scott in Goldielands and for Walter Glendinning (along with Walter Scott in Goldielands), in 1713 for John Elliot, tenant in Goldielands and in 1716 and 1718 for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh, and in 1718 for weaver William Crozier. He was also recorded at Goldielands when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Henderson in 1706, blacksmith George Scott in 1707, Walter Scot in Crumhaugh, Thomas Turnbull (herd in Southfield) in 1708 and William Scott (tenant in Whitchesters), for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for John Scott 'Wyndhead' and merchant William Black in 1711. Given all these records, he must have been a Kirk Elder or similar. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711 and in 1718. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1738. He married Marion Watson and their children included: William (b.1735); James (b.1737); Anne (b.1738); Agnes (b.1740); Helen (b.1743); and Andrew (b.1745). The witnesses in 1738 were William Ogilvie in Hoscote and John Scott 'late Bailie' and in 1743 were ex-Bailie John Scott and writer Thomas Winthrope. Andrew (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. Some children who could be his are Magdalene (b.1738), George (b.1741), Janet (b.1744), Andrew (b.1748), Magdalene (b.1754), Robert (b.1756), George (b.1760) and Janet (b.1766). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jean Telfer and their son Walter was baptised in 1770. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Thomas (b.1771); and Margaret (b.1772). Andrew (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf. His son George was baptised in 1789. Other children who may be his include Andrew (b.1784), Andrew (b.1785), James (b.1787), Jean (b.1794) and Magdalene (b.1799). Probably the same Andrew is recorded in Lilliesleaf in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. An account of his to Thomas Inglis from 1794–96 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. Andrew (b.1796/7) from Selkirk, he was farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in 1851 farming 450 acres, employing 10 labourers and in 1861, as farmer of 400 acres, employing 9 men. He was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Agnes, John (who took over the farm), Jane, George and Janet. Rev. Archibald (1635–1708) 3rd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell, and brother of Sir John, 3rd Baronet. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and followed Covenanter principles. He became minister at Kippen near Stirling in about 1670. However, these were turbulent times and he came to be persecuted as a preacher of field conventicles. Orders for his arrest were issued in 1674 and he fled from Kippen, but preached secretly in various places. In 1678 he was one of 5 ministers who preached for 3 days in a field at East Nisbet for over 3000 people. He was said to have taken part in conventicles locally and like his brother William, he was eventually imprisoned for his Covenanting principles. He was outlawed in 1679, after the confrontation at Bothwell Bridge. In 1680 he was captured by Col. Henry Ker of Graden, a prominent Jacobite and his brother James Ker; this was while returning from Moffat Well with Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was imprisoned in Jedburgh, after his watch, sword and money were taken from him. He was then taken to Edinburgh Tolbooth, and examined 3 separate times, although nothing could be found to connect him with the Battle of Bothwell Brig. Nevertheless, he refused to take the oath, and so after 9 months was moved to the Bass Rock, spending 3 years there. In 1681 he was allowed to visit his dying mother at Riddell House and was only finally released on condition of sailing to the plantations in America, his wife dying on the disastrous journey on the 'Henry & Francis'. He served as minister at Woodbridge in New Jersey (for fellow Scots) for about 3 years, returning to Scotland after the Revolution. However, the ship he was on, bound for Scotland, was seized by the French, and he was held prisoner (along with his 6 year old son) in deplorable conditions in a French dungeon for 2 1/2 years before being exchanged for 2 Catholic priests. He was minister of Wemyss from 1691, Kirkcaldy from 1697 and Trinity College (Edinburgh) from 1702. His first wife was Helen, daughter of Rev. Henry Aitkenhead of North Berwick and his 2nd wife was Jean Ker. His children included: Capt. Walter (d.1738), who retook his ship 'the Phoebe' from the French, acquired the Barony of Granton and was probably the son who was captive in France with his father; Dr. John (d.1740), an Edinburgh physician; Janet, who married James, son of Sir James Dundas; and Sarah, who married Rev. John Currie of Oldhamstocks. His sister Alison, married Gabriel Semple, who was another well known field preacher. He was buried at Old Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Nichol and their children included James (b.1684). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthaugh. His daughter Isobel was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1704, with witnesses Walter Scott in Drinkstone and William Henderson. He is probably either the Archibald who married Katherine Kirkwood in Wilton in 1702 or the Archibald who married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1703. He was probably related to William, who was recorded at Borthaugh in 1707. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme Town, who moved to Roberton Parish. In 1723 James Crow (perhaps his former employer) pleaded with Hawick Session to provide support for him, since he 'hath none to help him in his distressed condition and indigence save his son of 17 years who is servant in Shielswood'. He is probably the same Archibald listed as resident of Castleside (near Branxholme) on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Lamb. Their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1703. Robert (b.1706) was probably also his child. Sir Auskittel of Riddell (d.c.1180) 2nd Laird. He was probably son of Gospatric of Brawby and brother of Walter and Robert. However, other accounts suggest he was son of Philip and brother of Gervase, Walter and Ralph. A bull of Pope Adrian IV in 1156 records him as brother and heir to Walter of Riddell in the lands of 'Wituness, Liliscliffe, Braehebe, et cetera' (Whitton in Hownam Parish, Lilliesleaf and Brawby in Yorkshire). A papal bull from the next Pope also confirmed these lands, and refers to his son and heir as Walter. Hence he was also either brother or nephew of Gervase. In 1159 he witnessed a charter of confirmation granted to the monks of Kelso by Malcolm IV. There was also an agreement between him and Uchtred, priest of Lilliesleaf, confirmed by Pope Alexander III in about 1160. In about 1208 Robert of Barnoldby confirmed his grant of Whitton (in Hownam Parish) to Melrose Abbey; these lands were granted for his soul, as well as those of Patrick and his son Walter. He married either Ascernia de Stonegrave or Elean, daughter of Robert de Morville (or perhaps both). His name is written 'Askitil', 'Anskettil', 'Anskitill', 'Ansketin', 'Ocitel', etc., and this forename does not appear to have used again in the family. The next generation appears to be confused, with different charters stating that Patrick and William were both sons. It seems likely that his children included Walter, William, Patrick, Eda and Maud. Another son may have been Ralph, but this is less clear. He may also have had a daughter Adeliza, who married 'Henricus de Haga', one of the early Haigs of Bemersyde. Borthwick (b.1800/1) 2nd son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott, he was born in Teviotdale. He was farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish. He was a player of the bagpipes, and known as 'Riddell the Piper'. He was said to be the best player of the small pipes in the Borders. He played at the wedding of a son of the Duke of Buccleuch and when a daughter of the Earl of Minto married Lord John Russell. There is a record of him being at a celebration (for the return of a Teri from America) in the Fleece Inn in the late 1840s at which he sang 'Clean pease strae'. He published at least one poem and there is a tune called 'Borthwick Riddell's Hornpipe'. He was at Dryden in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 60 arable acres and 300 acres of hill land. He was already a widower by 1851. Maj. Charles of Muselie (1759–1849) eldest surviving son of Patrick and Margaret Balfour. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the 'Charles Riddle in Sinton a Batchelor' who was taxed for having a female servant in 1786 and 'Charles Riddal in Sinton' taxed for both male and female servants in 1787–93; he thus must have lived at Synton for a while. He was also at Synton on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of Muselee in 1788

(when it was in Roberton Parish, valued at £100), as well as part of Bewlie (valued at £330), lands that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf (valued at £106 13s 4d), Ryechester and Quartersides (purchased from Hunter of Linthill, valued at £50) and teinds in Lilliesleaf (valued at £95 1s 2d). He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and was then described as being 'Once in Buccleugh's Fencibles. A brother a Writer. Moderate estate. A batchelor'. In 1793 he received some lands in Dryburgh from Henry Erskine of Sheffield. He was Major in the local militia 1799–1809. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798 and was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and was listed as owner of Muselee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Sometime before 1813 he sold some lands in Lilliesleaf Parish (including Ryechester Quartersides) to Sir John Buchanan Riddell of that Ilk, but still held onto the main lands of Bewlie there. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, dealing with rents in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Peblesshire and Eskdale, in the period 1808–36; he was then replaced by William Ogilvie. During some of that period he lived at Branxholme, and was present at the banquet held in the Duke of Buccleuch's honour in 1839. He was a member of the Forest Club. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823 and in 1825 subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. In 1830 he chaired the meeting of the freeholders of Roxburghshire at which Henry Francis Scott, younger of Harden was re-elected as M.P. He was listed among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He lived to be about 90 (although there is some uncertainty over his birth date) and died unmarried. Muselee was inherited by his niece. Maj.-Gen. Charles James Buchanan (1817–1903) 3rd son of Sir John Buchanan, he was baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was educated at Eton and in private schools, then in 1832 entered the Royal Military Academy in Woolwich. He joined the Royal Artillery, serving in Quebec and Jamaica before being invalided home, having been promoted to Lieutenant. He grew interested in terrestrial magnetism and meteorology and became Director of an observatory in Toronto (from 1840), part of an effort organised by the Royal Society. Invalided home again, he was appointed Assistant Superintendent of the Ordnance Magnetic Observatory at the Royal Military Repository in Woolwich (about 1842–46). In 1842 he was elected as a Fellow of the Royal Society and published 'Magnetical Instructions for the Use of Portable Instruments Adapted for Magnetical Surveys and Portable Observatories' (1844). He was then Deputy Quartermaster-General at Woolwich during the Crimean War, served during the Indian Rebellion of 1857/8 and commanded the siege artillery during the capture of Lucknow. He achieved the rank of Major-General, was mentioned 3 times in dispatches and was appointed C.B. He married Mary (d.1900), daughter of Field-Marshal Sir Hew Dalrymple Ross and they had a daughter. He died at Chudleigh, Devonshire and is buried there. A portrait of him was painted in 1877 by an unknown artist. David (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and 'Clerklandes'. David (b.1830/1) from Eskdalemuir, he was a shepherd at Larriston Rig in 1861. His wife was Mary and they had children William and Mary. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (16th/17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1628 she gave evidence regarding the trial of Isobel Howison for witchcraft. She stated that she fetched Howison to see the child of Andrew Riddell, but she 'wold not come bot bade looke weill to the bairne and thairafter the bairne dyed schortlie'. Elena (16th C.) nun at Coldstream Priory 1537–63. She was probably from the families of Riddell of that Ilk. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (16th/17th C.) married to George Robson, from the Lilliesleaf area. She is probably distinct from the other Bessie in Lilliesleaf, since both of them gave separate evidence in the 1628 trial for witchcraft of Isobel Howison. She said that when Howison had been giving a charm to the son of William Middlemas, she then came into her house looking for her child, 'and att that tyme the bairne tooke suddenlie seeknes after this Issobell Howetsone reproved hir for saying scho had done some evill to hir bairne and within halfe a year hir bairne tooke seeknes and dyed'. Francis (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was living at Crook in 1737. He married Martha Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1733 and their children included: Agnes (b.1734), baptised in Kirkton; William (b.1737), baptised in Cavers; Helen (b.1741), also baptised in Cavers; and Margaret (b.1744), baptised in Hawick. He could be the son of William baptised in Hawick in 1710. Francis 'Frank' (b.1724) born in Hawick, and said to be descended from the Riddells of that

Ilk. He worked as a gardener. The details of his family were recorded in a bible belonging to the Fairgrieve family in Bridgeton, Maine. In 1746 he married Annie Neal. Their children included: John (b.1758), who was a gardener and sexton; and Walter (b.1760), who moved to Carlisle. He may be the same man as Francis in Ashkirk Parish. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded at Whitslade in 1753 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. Probably the same Francis married Janet Miller and had children, baptised in Ashkirk, including Helen (b.1755). Walter (b.1749), Janet (b.1751) and William (b.1753), baptised in Roberton, were probably also his children. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) had a charter giving a pasture in Primside to Kelso Abbey during the reign of William I, probably between 1185 and 1204. He also witnessed a charter to Melrose Abbey by Anselm de Mow in the period 1170–90. He was probably related to other Riddells, and appears to have been from Roxburghshire. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Geoffreys, although a direct connection with the Lilliesleaf branch seems likely. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) probably descended from Hugh, Lord of Blaye in England, with his mother also being an English Riddell. He appears to have united the lands of Wittering and Cranston. Through his wife Hawissa, daughter of William Peverel, he gained further lands in Essex. He was succeeded by another Geoffrey (or Galfridus). Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) referred to as 'Gaufred de Riddell', he was a younger son of Sir Patrick. He received some of his father's lands during the reign of Alexander II. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) from Berwickshire. Some time before 1233 he was witness to a document for Coldingham Priory. In about 1232 the Priory of Durham granted the marriage of his heir and custody of the lands of Flemington (in Lanarshire) to Sir William of Bondington. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Geoffrey (13th C.) son and heir of John, with his mother being 'Hauwysia', according to a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire. His wife was 'Mabilia' who has sasine of the lands of 'Belyn' and 'Olerun'. He may be the same as one of the other Geoffreys. Geoffrey (d.1261) head of the main line of Riddells in England, son of Geoffrey. He held the Lordships of Wittering and Blaye, as well as Cranston in Scotland. He is recorded in connection to the peace settlements between England and France. He is recorded in a document at Dunwich in 1258. He was succeeded by his son Geoffrey. Geoffrey (d.c.1288) eldest son of Galfridus and head of the main English family branch. He is mentioned with reference to the conflicts between England and France, and probably still had connections with Scotland. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His sons probably included Geoffrey, Sir Hugh and Sir Nicholas. Geoffrey (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus, whom he succeeded in 1288 to the Barony of Blaye in England. He also possessed Wittering, as well as Cranston in Scotland, and probably other lands. He is listed as 'Galfridus Ridel' in a 1297 mandate to restore lands to Scotsmen who had sworn fealty to King Edward. He had a daughter, Alicia, but the family estates went to his brother Sir Hugh. Geoffrey of Riddell (d.c.1325) possibly son of Sir William and brother of William, whom he succeeded as 8th of that Ilk, although these generations are uncertain. He was also known as 'Galfridus', a family name that connects him with his Norman ancestors. He was probably succeeded by his son Sir William, while Sir Robert and Richard may also have been his sons. He may have had a daughter who married John Ainslie of Dolphinston. He may be the same 'Geoffry Ridel' recorded in 1297 when his lands in both England and Scotland were restored by Edward I because he was in that King's service abroad; in 1298 the same man was recorded as valet of Simon Fraser, when they were both with Edward in Flanders. He made gifts to Kelso and Melrose Abbeys during the reign of Alexander III. Sir Geoffrey (d.1346) son of Sir Hugh, head of the main English line. He was Baron of Montclare and Lord of Wittering and Cranston. He acquired Wittering from his father in 1316, following an earlier charter of 1292 and restoration of the forfeited manor in 1298. He fought against Robert the Bruce, and lost his Scottish possessions afterwards. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Hugh, who petitioned to have his Scottish lands returned, but this was unsuccessful. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 receiving the Clerkship of Lilliesleaf Kirk from the Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding the deceased Thomas Riddell. Note that the Clerk at that time was like the assistant priest. He was listed as a scholar and was no doubt a younger son of the Laird of Riddell. In 1522 he was succeeded by John, son of John Riddell of that Ilk. George of that Ilk (16th C.) son of John, he was succeeded by Walter, who was either his son or his nephew. It may be that he was acting as Laird during the dotage of his father, but this is unclear. He could be the George who witnessed a document for the dispute between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533 when he was heir apparent to his father. In 1535 he was son and heor of John of that Ilk when he presented a precept of sasine for lands in Purveshill; his wife was there stated to be Elizabeth Ker. He may have been the George who was 'Bailie in that part', along with William, according to a document of 1535 relating to Harden (into which family at least one of his aunts had married). It is possible he pre-deceased his father, but in any case the next in succession was Walter (but it is unclear if he was his son or other male relative). George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. George (16th C.) recorded in 1579 being in 'wester Eschiside' (presumably Essenside) when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. This was for the sale of a piece of land in Lilliesleaf by James Redford in Hassendeanburn. George (16th C.) recorded being 'in Riddale in Lillisle' in 1580 in a marriage contract for his daughter Isabel. She was to marry George Rutherford in Bewlie, with the agreement that if no heirs were produced and George died first, then she was to have half of his possessions and get the 'toquhergud' back (consisting of 3 draught oxen, 3 cows with calves, 20 sheep and 20 merks). The witnesses were his son John, Robert in Clerklands, John in Lilliesleaf Mill and James Henderson in Lilliesleaf. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Phaup in 1679 and their son William was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were James Shiel and James Sanderson. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for William Todshaw in 1686. George (d.c.1688) tenant in Lustruther when his will was recorded in 1688. George (18th C.) recorded at Newton in Kirkton Parish in 1786 and 1787. His children included: Margaret (b.1786); and Peggy (b.1787). He was surely related to John, who was farmer there at the same time. George (d.bef. 1809) resident of Howahill. His son Robert (a wright) died in Hawick parish in 1809. He may be the George who married Margaret Hobkirk in Hobkirk Parish in 1769. George William nee Hutton (1807–71) son of George Hutton of Carlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford. He was a banker of Newmarket-on-Trent and Magsitrate for Notts, Carlton-on-Trent. In 1835 he married Mary, who was heiress of Muselee, being daughter of Walter and niece of Maj. Charles. He assumed the additional surname of 'Riddell' in order to inherit the lands through his wife. These lands included Whitfield in Wilton Parish. After Mary died, he secondly married Hannah-Elizabeth, widow of J.O. Lambert, and theirdly married Janetta-Gonville Bromhead, Baroness. He was succeeded by his son, also George William, and had another son, Edward Mitford. The surname in these couple of generations is often hyphenated as 'Hutton-Riddell'. George (19th C.) married Betty Shortreed in Wilton Parish in 1829. Capt. George William Hutton (1836–1915) son of George William Hutton, who had married Mary Riddell, the niece and heiress of Charles of Muselee. He thus inherited the Muselee lands and may later have lived there. He was educated at Rugby and was a Captain in the 16th Lancers. He sold the Dryburgh estate, as well as Bewlie and Bewlie Moor. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of Todshaw and Muselee in Roberton Parish, as well as Whitfield in Wilton Parish. In 1877 he married Evelyn Mary Craven, daughter of the Earl of Craven. Their children included Capt. George Hutton and William Hutton, who was an artist. His name is sometimes hyphenated 'Hutton-Riddell'. Gervase (11th/12th C.) one of the earliest Scottish family members, likely moving north along with other supporters of King David I. His name was recorded as 'Gervasius' or 'Geraisus'. He was probably son of Philip, and surely from the Norman 'de Rydale' family who held lands in England. He witnessed a charter of David I in 1116. He was made High Sheriff of Roxburgh about the same time, the earliest known in that office. He is recorded as Sheriff in a charter of 1138/9 and witnessed several other charters for King David in the early 1140s. He may have married Christian de Soulis, who was a donor to Jedburgh Abbey, granting a third part of the village of 'Hernwingeslawe' (possibly Mervinslaw). He and his brother Radulf (or Ralph) gave the church of Abbotrule to Jedburgh Abbey (although it is also suggested that this was Abbotsley in Huntingdonshire). A son Hugh is said to have been the progenitor of the Riddels of Cranston Riddell (although the origin of that branch is a matter of debate). His son (or possibly brother) Walter was granted a charter of the lands of Lilliesleaf. He may have had other children, including 'Jordanus' and Adeliza (who married Henry 'de Haga', 3rd Laird of Bemersyde). He died at Jedburgh Abbey, probably following the custom in those days of the rich and secular bestowing gifts on ecclesiastical institutions in return for atonement. It is also suggested that he may have been unrelated to Walter 'de Riddale', and was instead ancestor of the Riddells of Cranston Riddell, who did not use the 'de' prefix in their name. Henry of Wittering (15th C.) esquire recorded in a quitclaim of lands in Leicestershire. Henry 'Harry' (d.bef. 1670) eldest son of Walter. He was 'portioner' of Bewlie from 1663. He witnessed a contract for lands in Hobkirk Parish along (for Lorraine of Appotside) with his father in 1654 and others in 1656 and 1659. He also witnessed the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. The Archbishop of Glasgow ratified his lands at Bewlie in 1665 and in the same year there was an agreement between his tenants James Wright, Walter and George Davidson with the tenant of John Riddell of Muselee over boundaries betwen them. He was deceased by 1670 when his son and heir William infefted his widow in the five-pound land of Bewlie. He married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1562. His children were William, Marion and Agnes (whose 'tutor' was Walter Riddell, younger of Riccalton). In 1686 Agnes married John Nisbet, lawyer in Edinburgh; she was later heir to her brother William. Rev. Henry Scott (1789–1862) son of Henry, merchant in Glasgow. He was a contemporary of the author of 'Scotland Yet' and so sometimes confused with him. He originally trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to James Thomson and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1811. He resigned his Commission in 1825 and retrained as a minister, being licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1829, ordained at Longformacus in 1830 and translated to Duns in 1843. In 1818 he married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Gilchrist of Edinburgh. In 1831 he secondly married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of John Home of Stirkoke in Caithness. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Laing and their son James was baptised in 1822. Rev. Henry Scott (1798–1870) minister and song-writer. He was born at Sorbie in Ewesdale (and there is some confusion over the year of his birth), his parents Robert Riddell and Agnes Scott, being from Teviotdale. His father was a shepherd, who moved from Sorbie to Langshawburn in Eskdalemuir (when he was a child), later moving to Capplefoot (Hoddam Parish) then Deloraine in Selkirkshire. He had brothers who later lived at Dryden, near Selkirk, and Brookside in East Lothian (this elder brother moving to Ramsaycleuchburn). He was educated in short stints at Davington, Roberton and Newmill and heard James Hogg, the 'Ettrick Shepherd' singing in his house when he was a child. He was said to have an amazing memory, allowing him to recall songs and ballads after hearing them just once. At about age 15 he became shepherd at Deloraine and while there started to scribble in a diary. He wrote some satires on people who had offended him and although he kept them under his hat, they blew away and some were read by the very subjects of the pieces, causing him to be reprimanded by his employer. After 2 or 3 years he moved to Todrig, where he got to know William Knox. He was at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. After his father died, when he was 18, he resolved to study for the ministry, and so attended Biggar School and later Edinburgh University (and St. Andrews for a year), eventually being licensed by Biggar Presbytery in 1830. It was at Biggar that he became to be known as a poet, publishing 'The Crook and the Plaid', and several articles for 'The Clydesdale Magazine'. Before finishing with university he published 'The Songs of the Ark' (apparently inspired by Prof. Wilson), which represents his longest poetic work on a single theme. He moved to live with his brother at Ramsaycleuchburn (near Teviothead) in 1831. After the local minister died, he was appointed as preacher at Caerlenrig Chapel of Ease (i.e. Teviothead Church) in 1832 (or perhaps 1833). He stayed at the Flex in his early years, walking 9 miles to church, and writing several songs there, including 'The Hames of Our Ain Folk'. The Duke of Buccleuch later built him a cottage at Teviothead, where he remained for the rest of his life (and where he died). He was listed at Caerlenrig in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1839 he helped with the description of Cavers Parish, written by Rev. Strachan for the New Statistical Account. During his decade as active minister he wrote very little in the way of verse, but focused on sermons and pastoral work for his congregation. In 1841 he suffered what would later be called a nervous breakdown, and spent more than 3 years in the Crichton Royal Institution at Dumfries (he was missing for the 1841 census). He then returned to Teviothead, but continue to be affected by depression, he did not resume his full ministerial duties, with other preachers taking over some of his duties until the first minister of the newly created Teviothead Parish was appointed in 1850. In 1844 he published a doctrinal volume, and in 1847 he published a volume of collected verse, as well as an extensive essay on the Ettrick Shepherd (with 2 later articles for the Hawick Archæological Transactions). Many of his poems, written at Teviothead, were first published in the Hawick Advertiser. In later years he became involved with the Border Counties Association, became interested in local archæological excavations and wrote about Cavers Parish for the Sinclair's 'Statistical Account of Scotland'. He took part in several events in Hawick, including the Burns Centenary, laying the foundation stone of the Old Parish Church, giving lectures, and awarding the prizes for the Auld Brig poetry competition. He was also Bard for the St. John's Masonic Lodge of Hawick, and his masonic brethren visit Teviothead annually to remember him. He was presented with a harp (inspired by the lines of 'Scotland Yet') by Bailie Paterson in 1859 (and this is now in the Museum). William Scott also presented Mrs. Riddell with an oil painting of her husband (perhaps the portrait by John A. Horsburgh, which is in the Museum). Another portrait (by Lancelot Watson in 1889) hangs in the Museum, which also has his home-made compass and caliper set, as well as his shepherd's crook. He was still recorded at Teviothead Cottage in a directory of 1868. In 1868 he wrote an article on James I for the Archæological Society Transactions. He was involved in an excavation of the cairn at Cromrig in 1869. His attempts at biblical translation into Lowland Scots (printed privately for Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte) were an early philological influence on James Murray. The volumes comprise the Gospel of Matthew, the Psalms and the Song of Solomon; they seem far from being pure samples of local speech, but are nevertheless invaluable since they come from decades before most published examples of the Hawick area dialect. He was writer of the words for 'Scotland Yet', probably Scotland's most popular song of the latter half of the 19th century, and considered by many as the national anthem of its day (and recorded by Scocha in 2004). His publications include 'Stanzas on the Death of Lord Byron' (1825), 'Songs of the Ark; with other poems' (1832), 'The Christian Politician; or the Right Way of Thinking' (1844), 'Poems, Songs and Miscellaneous Pieces' (1847), 'St. Matthew translated into Lowland Scotch' (1856), 'Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch' (1857), 'The Song of Solomon in Lowland Scotch' (1858), 'The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell' (2 volumes, 1871) and 'Scotland Yet and Other Verses' (1898). His translations of biblical passages into 'Lowland Scotch' are interesting for the wealth of dialect words that they contain; however, with little precedent to build on, the translations are a strange mixture of genuine Borders vernacular, words taken from earlier Scots works and oddly spelled English. His verses 'Woman', 'Hail Scotland – Doughty Auld Scotland', 'Walk the Wuds wi' me, Mary', 'Will ye Gang to the Greenwood wi' me?' and 'The Green Forest Dell' were published in 'Living Bards of the Border' (1859); this was the most from any one contributor. In all, he composed over 200 songs, with manuscripts unpublished at his death including 'Malcolm of Wharden', 'Melvina of Eller' and 'The Dutiful Daughter', this last being a play in 5 acts. In addition he published an article on 'Store-Farming in the South of Scotland' and another on 'Foot-rot in Sheep'. In 1869 he attended the opening of cists discovered at Teindside and wrote 'The Grace of the Unknown' to mark the event. In 1833 he married Eliza (1796–1875), daughter of William Clark, merchant in Biggar. Their children were: Walter Francis Montagu Douglas (1834–77), obviously named after his patron, who worked for the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank; William Brown Clark (1836–56), who was a poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20; and Robert H. (c.1840–87), who was a sheep-farmer in Australia. His own death came fairly suddenly, his last letter being an apology for being unable to attend the meeting of the Border Counties Association held in Hawick 2 days before he died. He was described as 'striking, tall in stature, a large head adorned with long weird locks flowing down over broad shoulders, impressed even the most casual passer-by'; but he was also 'shy and modest in bearing and conversation'. A painting of him by John Horsburgh is in the Museum. A photographic portrait of him also exists and a bust is in Lodge 111. A 50 ft (13 m) high conical memorial cairn on the slopes of Dryden Fell above Teviothead is visible from the A7, erected in 1874, repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999; a wreath is traditionally laid there on the Saturday after Hawick Common Riding. Centenary celebration were held in Hawick and at Sorbie in 1898, and a plaque was placed there by the Callants' Club in 1928. He died at Dryden Cottage, which also has a commemorative plaque, placed there in 1898 by Lodge 111 – '. . . Her own loved Teviot, ripple, onwards clear. She prayed with zeal – the listening gods gave ear, And sent a hand to set her hill-harp free. Who was the minstreal? Riddell, it was thee' [JoHa], 'Henry Riddell is a name Puir auld Hawick micht fairly claim, 'Scotland Yet', a nation's pride Was inspired by scenes that bide 'Mang the hills o' Teviotside, Rich auld Hawick' [TK], 'A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale, The wimpling waters seem to mourn the Bard of Teviotdale' [JT]. Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89) 4th son of Sir John Buchanan. He was born posthumously, like his father. He worked with the Indian Service, rising to the rank of General and served as Post Office Director for India. He was awarded the Star of India. Hugh (12th/13th C.) possibly the 2nd son of Sir Auskittel and brother of Walter. He is recorded as 'Hug Ridel' during the reign of William I, when he was witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow, regarding lands in Ashkirk Parish. He was 'Hugone Ridel' when he witnessed another charter of William I and one for the church of 'inchethor'. He was probably the Hugh who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King William, after he was captured at Alnwick in 1174. He donated the church of Cranston to Kelso Abbey in about 1190, and is stated by some accounts to be the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston-Riddell. Probably the same 'Hugone ridal' witnessed an earlier charter in the reign of King Malcolm, one from about 1151 for the Church of Brinkburne and another for the Priory of Durham. Hugh of Wittering (d.bef. 1233) owner of lands in Northamptonshire. He is recorded receiving sasine of 'Witeringa' in 1188. His widow Sibilla was involved in land claims in 1233 and 1254. His son and heir was probably Richard, who was recorded being 'in the power of the King of Scotland' in 1233. He could be the 'Hugh Ridel' who witnessed a document (around 1206–14) for Earl David (later King of Scotland), regarding lands gifted to a church in London. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in 1236 when William Avenel made a claim against him for fees from lands in 'Mideltun'. It is unclear where this was, or how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is listed as 'Dominus Hugo Rydel, miles'. He is probably the 2nd son of Geoffrey, who succeeded to the estates of the main branch of the English Riddells on the death of his brother, also Geoffrey. He also held the lands of Cranston in Scotland. It appears that for staying too long in Scotland, King Edward II took away his lands of Wittering and gave them to his son Geoffrey. However, he had other lands in Northumberland, obtained from his kinsman Sir William. He is probably the 'Master Hugh de Rydale' who is recorded in a Northumberland document of 1270. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Huwe Rydel' in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. From Edinburgh, his entry is separate from 'Dominus Hugo'. But he could be the same man as the entry for 'Hughe Rydel, tenant le Roi, du Comte de Edeneburgh'. His seal consists of 'a pile in base and a chief' with the name 'S'HVGONIS RYEDEL'. Sir Hugh (13th/14th C.) holder of the manor of 'Wytering' (i.e. Wittering) in Northamptonshire. He granted it to his son and heir Geoffrey in 1296, but was dispossessed in 1296 as a supporter of John Baliol, when he was 'in Scotland'. He is probably the 'Hugh de Rydal' when he was involved in a raid on a house in Berwick in 1296. He was involved with the wars in Scotland, being in Dunbar in 1300/1 and also in Galloway and at Falkirk. In 1305 he petitioned Edward I for the return of his lands of Wittering, which his son Geoffrey had destroyed, and while 'his Scottish lands are in the enemy's hand'. Probably the same 'Sir Hugh Ridel' was recorded in 1310/1 when his wife Mary Comyn asked for support for her and her family at Berwick. In 1315 he was 'Rydel, sometime lord of Wytering' when his grant to his son was confirmed by Edward II. He granted Wittering to his son Geoffrey in 1316. He may be the same as one of the Hughs who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was probably the Hugh son of Richard recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. He may have been grandson of the Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in document relating to 'Wyterine' in Northamptonshire in 1233 and 1254. He may be the Sir Hugh who died in 1318, a pensioner of the house of Wenlock. Hugh (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1329, where he is 'Hugoni de Ridell' and 'Hugoni Ridale'. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (d.1363) son of Geoffrey, from whom he inherited the family lands of Montclare, Wittering and others in Northamptonshire. In 1335 he petitioned to recover the Scottish lands of Cranston lost by his father. He died without issue, whereupon his lands were inherited by Sir Nicholas, whose grandfather Sir Nicholas was his grandfather's brother. After that the representative of this main family line was Sir John, who did briefly recover Cranston, but must have sold or list it shortly afterwards. At this point the senior branch of the family in Scotland became the Riddells of that Ilk, based in Lilliesleaf. Hugh (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1534 as 'sir Hugh Riddaill'. He was presumably a cleric of some sort. Hugh (17th/18th C.) recorded as

'farmer in Flate' in 1720 when his son John became a baxter's apprentice in Edinburgh. This could be Flatt in Liddesdale, with James, son of the deceased John 'tenant in Flett' also becoming an apprentice in Edinburgh in 1710 and probably related. Isobel (14th C.) probably wife of a Murray. She was said to have died 'vested and seised' in the land of Cranston-Riddell before 1358, when the land was confirmed to William, son of Roger Murray, with the original grant made by John Murray of Cranston. Isobel (17th C.) daughter of James, portioner of Lilliesleaf and wife of Adam Haig in Belses. In 1656 she was served heir to her father in his 16-shilling land within Lilliealeaf. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. James of that Ilk (d.c.1510) probably grandson of Quentin or perhaps Mungo, or perhaps son of Mungo and grandson of Quentin. He also had a brother, Thomas. His ancestry can be traced back to 'Geraisus de Rydale', who married Christiana de Soulis in the early 12th century; but from this point on the genealogy is much more secure. He was one of the first of the family to be referred to as 'of that Ilk', although the lands near Lilliesleaf were in the family for many previous generations. In 1471 he inherited the lands of 'Quhittounis' (i.e. 'Whitton' near Morebattle) and 'Westerlillisclef' (i.e. Wester Lilliesleaf). He is probably the 'James Riddale' who was witness to a Cranston sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6 and the 'James Riddale' who witnessed the 'retour' for the Kers and the lands of Borthwickshiels in 1471. In 1477/8 he made an arrangement with John Waugh, over the lands of 'Unerquhitone', clearing debts with William Pringle; James kept Under Whitton, while John received lease of a 'husbandland' of land in 'Esterleleselef'. In 1478/9 Margaret Murray resigned her lands of 'Unirquhitone' to him. And in 1478 he is referred to as 'of that Ilk' when he leased 'Plewolande' in 'Ovirquyttoun' to John Davidson in return for borrowing money. He also witnessed a charter to David, son of David Scott of Buccleuch for lands in Selkirk in 1478. In 1479 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Cessford. In 1483 he is recorded as 'Riddale of Quhittowne' when witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. An instrument of resignation of 1485 is recorded for the lands of 'Unerquhittone' with the Davidsons. He also witnessed a sasine in 1487 for the lands of Boonraw. In 1489, along with Walter Ker of Cessford, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He was recorded as Laird of Riddell and Whitton in 1493 and in that same year was the Laird fined for non-presence at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with Gilbert 'Hoigsone' acting as his suitor. In 1494 he was 'Jacobum Riddale de Quhittoun' on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Lindsay. His children were: John, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1585), who married Walter Scott of Synton or perhaps Walter of Harden; and Christian, who also appears to have married Walter Scott of Harden. It also seems that there was a slightly earlier marriage between a widow of Riddell (said to have been a Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably Elizabeth) and a Scott of Harden; these marriages between Riddells and Scotts of Harden could be conflated. James (16th C.) younger son of John of that Ilk. A document in the Selkirk Protocol Books records how in 1545 he gave 30 shillings of land and half the houses of 'le ester place' (perhaps Easter Lilliesleaf) in liferent to his wife Janet Ker. The witnesses included George Ker of Gateshaw (probably related to his wife) and Walter (heir apparent to John of that Ilk). James (16th C.) recorded in Clerklands in 1563 when his son Robert witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. This was for William Davidson and made by Walter of that Ilk, who was probably a relative. James (16th C.) tenant in Maxton. In 1580 it is recorded that he had borrowed money from John in Newton Mill, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife Janet Ormiston and son Patrick, he gave sasine of half of St. Boswell's Mill to John. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. On the same day in 1580 he also delivered £40 in redemption money to Robert, brother of Walter of that Ilk. The sasine was witnessed before David in St. Boswell's and William in Maxton. James of Maybole (17th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of that Ilk. It is unclear if his lands were at Maybole in Dumfriesshire or somewhere else. It has been suggested that he might have been ancestor of Robert, father of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. James (d.bef. 1656) portioner of Lilliesleaf. In 1656 his daughter and heir Isobel, wife of Adam Haig in Belses, inherited his 16-shilling land within Lilliealeaf. James (17th C.) probably son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, who resided at Appotside in the Rule valley. He was witness to discharges of Hobkirk teinds in 1659 and in 1660, when he was described as 'of Harrit' (presumably 'Harwood'). In another document he signed as 'son lawfull to Elispethe Haistie in Harwood'. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Bessie (b.1648). In 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th C.) shepherd at 'Bosathill' (i.e. Bowset Hill) in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was 'deficient' in paying the tax, and his entry reads 'to Ingland'. James (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 his widow Bessie Scott was leasing a third of the farm of Wiltonburn; she may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. In 1734 there is a record of the funeral of Bessie, who may have been his daughter (or wife). James (17th C.) recorded near Larriston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was recorded having a kiln. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) stepson of William Rodger, chapman in Hawick, and son of Andrew Riddell. In 1700 he was banished from Hawick for sheep-stealing, being described as 'ane common vagrant and notorious thieffe, not only through the haill shyre of Teviotdale and borders betwixt the kingdoms of Scotland and England, but also in the burgh of Jedburgh out of which his father, Andw. Riddell was banished wtin theiss two or three years or yrby for theft'. James (d.1736) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn when he got married in 1718 (with no wife's name listed). Perhaps the same James, married to Bessie Scott had children Bessie (b.1726) and Margaret (b.1728) were baptised in Wilton. His death in 1736 at Wiltonburn is listed in the Wilton Parish records. James (18th C.) wright at Branxholme Park. He was there according to a Roberton baptism in 1737. In 1740 he was at 'Park' when he witnessed a Hawick baptism for William Brown and Helen Riddell (who may have been related to him). His children included Walter (b.1737), baptised in Roberton. His unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1740, with witnesses herd James Armstrong and John Brown. It is possible that he was the James who married Isobel Dryden in Roberton in 1732. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1727 and 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1734. In 1726 he married Isobel Williamson, who was from Stow. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included some of (with the rest likely being children of the wright at Branxholme Park): Thomas (b.1727); William (b.1729); Robert (b.1731); Helen (b.1733); Nelie (b.1734), although this baptismal entry appears to be crossed out; Margaret (b.1734); James (b.1735). James (18th C.) recorded at Menslaws in 1746 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Laidlaw. The witnesses were mason Andrew Wilson and merchant Francis Gledstains. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Elliot and was at Priesthill in 1777 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Other children baptised in Castleton included: John (b.1768); Mary (b.1770); William (b.1772); Thomas (b.1775); Henry (b.1784); and James (b.1791). He was probably the shepherd in Liddesdale who was shepherd in Liddesdale who was said to be from a family that lived on the banks of the Liddel for many generations, and were related to the other Roxburghshire branches; he was said to have had sons James (b.1781, possibly an error), who emigrated to Canada, Henry, William and Thomas. Col. James (d.1804) son of Sir Walter. He served in the army in Holland. He was entered onto the Roxburghshire voters' roll in 1780, when listed as a Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1788 he was listed with the same rank and 'In the service of Holland' among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir John Scott of Ancrum (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was later factor of the Riddell estates. He could be the James who is recorded owning half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Tinlin and their children included: Helen (b.1762); Walter (b.1764); John (b.1766); John (again, b.1771); and Margaret (b.1779). He could be the same James as the farmer at Leaheads. Sir James Buchanan (1765–84) 8th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his brother Sir Walter. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, but drowned while swimming in the River Brunswick at age 19 after being Baronet for only a few months. He was succeeded by his brother Sir John Buchanan. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Leaheads in Wilton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His servant William Tait was recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (18th/19th C.) married Mary Easton in Wilton in 1796. James (b.1786/7) carter in Lilliesleaf. His sister Martha married Robert King. He lived with his sister and her family, probably on the north side of Main Street. James (b.1791) son of Liddesdale shepherd James. Although it is said that he was born in 1781, he is surely the James whose baptism is recorded in Castleton Parish in 1791 (unless this is an error). He joined the army and lived in Berwickshire. He married Isabella, daughter of George Hogg (an army officer) and Margaret Van Buren (from Hackensack, New Jersey). He was living at Ednam in 1835 when he emigrated to Canada with his family. His chilidren included: James Van Buren, who died young; George Hogg, who also died young; and Dr. Alexander Dow (b.1824), who became a doctor in Compton, Quebec. James Scott (1780/1–1835) resident of Castleton Parish. He died at Larriston Rigg and was buried in Castleton. His children Isabella (1809/10–37) and John (d.1837) died of smallpox on board the Cornubria on the coast of New Brunswick. He is probably the James, married to Isobel Armstrong, whose son John was baptised in Castleton Parish in 1813. James (19th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Hobkirk Parish in 1826. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Rae and their children included: John (b.1817); James (b.1819); William (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); and Margaret (b.1831). James (b.1807/8–bef. 61) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer at Lochburnfoot in 1851. He married Jane (or Jean, b.1809), daughter of Castleton shepherd James Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Eliza (1833–81), who married Andrew Stark; Christian (b.1835); William (b.1839); Mary (b.1842); James (b.1845), who married Jessie Scott; and Jane (b.1855). His wife was a widow living at Calaburn in 1861. James (b.1811/2) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer at Peel in 1861. He was unmarried and living with a housekeeper. He may have been related to Thomas who was at Peel in 1841 and John who was there in 1868. James (19th C.) married Agnes Scoon in 1849, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (b.1836) son of John Lamb and Agnes Riddell, he was born at Timpendean. He was a grocer, butcher and farmer in the Morebattle area and later moved to Newcastleton. In 1867 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Cavers, carter in Newcastleton. Their children were Adam, Violet Turnbull, Agnes Isabella, Elizabeth Jane, Margaret and Robina Cavers. James (b.1839/40) son of John and Lillias McAllister. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Wallace and Helen Waugh. James (b.1845) son of James and Jean Elliot, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was a ploughman in Lilliesleaf and later a carter in Edinburgh. In Cavers Parish in 1866 he married Jessie (1844–99), daughter of James Scott and Agnes Bell. Their children were Agnes Giles (b.1867), James (b.1869), Jane (b.1871), Robert (b.1874), Janet (b.1874), Elizabeth (b.1880) and William (b.1886). Janet (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Janet (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who was given poor money in 1722. Jean (1600–60) daughter of Andrew of that Ilk. She died unmarried and was buried in Jedburgh Abbery, with the inscription 'Here lies a religious and virtuous gentlewoman, Jean Riddell, daughter of Sir Andrew Riddell of that ilk, ...'. Jean (b.c.1655) eldest daughter of Walter of Minto. She married Sir Robert Laurie, 1st Baronet of Maxwelton. They had 3 sons and 4 daughters, one of whom, Annie, was famed for her beauty. William Douglas of Fingland composed the verses 'Annie Laurie' in her honour in about 1700 (but failed to woo her, since she married Alexander Ferguson of Craigdarroch). Jean 'Jeannie Ma Lord' (18th/19th C.) married name of Jean Oliver. John (d.bef. 1235) recorded in a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire, involving his wife's dower lands in 'Hadecote'. His wife was 'Hauwysia' and his son and heir was Geoffrey. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johannem de Ridel' in the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. This was regarding a piece of land in Denton on the Tyne, which had also belonged to his father John. 'Ela, uxor Johannis de Rydale' is also recorded separately, and so either his wife or wife of another John. In the same records 'Walterus de Chendal' is accused of striking his servant, who was also called 'Johannem de Ridal'. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother 'Hawysia de Newenham' and her lands in 'Rodewood'. John of Ayton (13th C.) recorded as witness to several charters involving the lands of Renton and Ayton in Berwickshire in about 1298, preserved among the documents of Coldingham Priory. He also held lands in 'Flemington'. It is unclear how he was related to other early Riddells. John (d.c.1328) Scotsman who forfeited lands in 'Graystok' in Cumberland according to a document of 1358. It was stated that 'his heirs dwell in Scotland, and at the time of his death were adherents of the Scots, and still are'. John (14th C.) recorded as 'Johanni de Rydalle' in 1362/3 when David II granted him the lands of Cranston in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) resident of lands in Lauder, recorded in 2 charters of 1501. John of that Ilk (d.c.1545) son of James. In 1502 he was 'junior of that Ilk' when listed along with Douglases and others from the Jedburgh area as people guilty of (and with remission for) attacking Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. In 1503 he had sasine for the lands of Whitton and Wester Liliesleaf. In 1507/8 he was a witness to the document for Scott of Whitchester relating to the tower 'between the bridges' in Hawick. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the 'Larde of Riddale' who was on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He may also be the Laird of Riddell who was fined in 1510 for not appearing at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh, for his lands of 'lilisclef'. He was a witness in 1529 to the indenture to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. He may also be the John who in 1529/30 witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvod'. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw's dispute with Isabel Murray. He granted part of the land at Lilliesleaf to Patrick Earl Bothwell in 1534. Also in 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he was witness to a charter of George, Lord Hume, confirming the lands of Harden to William Scott of Harden, and was also witness to Simon Scott of Fenwick resigning Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden in 1540. In 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He may be the Riddell of that Ilk who married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (who later married William Scott of Harden and Todrig); Scott of Satchells said she had one daughter to him. He was possibly succeeded by his son George or his grandson Walter, but these generations are unclear. Documents of 1533 and 1535 list George as his heir apparent, while in 1545 (according to the Selkirk Protocol Book) his heir was then Walter (who must have been either his younger son, or son of George, and hence his grandson). His younger son James (who married Janet Ker) is also recorded in 1545. In 1551 the lands of Bewlie went to William, brother of his heir Walter; it is unclear whether he was already deceased at this time. Other possible children included John and William. In 1579 at Riddell his son Walter witnessed a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig, with his son Robert also a witness; the same day another son of his, Andrew, made an arrangement with Walter Scott of Todrig, with Andrew's wife Margaret Ker, and her mother Elizabeth Ker, also mentioned. John (16th C.) son of John of that Ilk. In 1522 he succeeded George Riddell (probably his uncle or other near relative) as Clerk of Lilliesleaf Parish, as confirmed by James Beaton, Archbishop of Glasgow. This means he was acting as assistant Priest, or at least held a small benefice for this position. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 being formerly in Ashkirk Mill when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) tenant in Newton Mill. In 1580 it is recorded James in Maxton had borrowed money from him, but was unable to repay it, so with the consent of his wife and son, James gave him sasine of half of St. Boswell's Mill. The instrument was signed at Riddell, before Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk, and so it seems likely they were all related. He was in Newton when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He may be the John in Dryburgh Mill recorded in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Elizabeth and Thomas Cochrane, who was also in Newton. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Mill in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. John (16th C.) son of George in Lillisleaf. In 1580 he witnessed the marriage contract for his sister Isabel. Sir John 1st Baronet of Riddell (d.1636) eldest son of Andrew of that Ilk. In 1602 his father resigned lands in Lilliesleaf to him and his wife. In 1611 he was cautioner for Robert Davidson in 'Fallawis' and for Andrew Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1610 he and his father had a bond not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. In 1616 he had an inhibition from the Lords of Council regarding lands in Hownam. In 1617 he and his father were appointed to a 3-man panel to try some Elliots for sheep stealing. He was still 'apparent of that Ilk' in 1619 when he complained about a dispute in Morebattle Kirk. He was a juror at the 1623 Commissioners' Court when he was still 'appeirand of yat ilk', and was voted as 'chanceller' of the assize. He was probably the 'Riddell, appeirand of that

Ilk' who was appointed as a new Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. In 1623–24 he was involved in a court case over teinds for the lands of Over Whitton. In 1624 he was foreman of a jury in Edinburgh for a Liddesdale cattle-stealing case. In 1628 he was 'apparent of that Ilk' when charged to be part of a local Commission to hold courts. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628, with his lands erected into a barony and regality of New Riddell (comprising 16,000 acres on the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). Also in 1628 he was one of the major landowners of Roxburghshire who convened to elect M.Ps., his name recorded as 'Jhone Riddell fear of that Ilk', his father still being the Laird of Riddell. These proceedings were quite protracted, and he even refused to serve when selected. In 1600 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston and Blackbarony; the husbands of her sisters included the Earl of Ancrum, Patrick Murray of Phgiliphaugh and Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Capt. John, an officer in the army in Holland; Sir William, who became Governor of Desborough or Doesburgh in Holland; Thomas; and Ann, who married Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir James Anstruther, widow of James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose Abbey; they had one daughter, who married David Barclay of Colernie. One of his daughters may have married John Scott of Gorrenberry. John of Muselee (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s, also holding the lands of Bewlie. He was son of William and Bessie Ainslie and grandson of Andrew of that Ilk, and was served heir to his father in 1653. He was recorded paying £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663; he may also be the John who paid tax on £52 in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Cringles. In 1665 his tenant John Dodds made an agrement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over the boundaries between them. He had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1653 and 1662. He was also recorded in 4 deeds in 1663. In 1669 his relative John of Haining assigned to him and his eldest son william the liferent of the lands of Trinlyknowe. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. Also in 1678 he paid the land tax on Muselee in Hawick Parish and on part of Bewlie (formerly owned by the Turnbulls) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He appears to have married Elizabeth Haliburton in 1639 and only a few years later married Grezil, daughter of Rev. P. Schew. His children included William (who probably died young) and Patrick (who succeeded). He also had 3 daughters. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Donaldson and their children included Janet (b.1679). John (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed along with Andrew, to whom he was presumably related. In 1691 he and Andrew witnesed a baptism for Walter Murray, who also lived at Dryden. He and Andrew witnessed another baptism for Daniel Kedie in 1694. In 1698 he is recorded as 'Elder in Dryden'. He married Janet Matheson and their children included Jean (b.1698). John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the 'deficient who can not be found out'. He may be the same John in Headshaw Mill who was also listed among 'ye poor'. He may be the John who (along with James Kennedy, who lived at Ashkirk Mill) witnessed a baptism for William Donald in 1690. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John 3rd Baronet of Riddell (d.1700) son of Sir Walter. He was sometimes referred to as 'Bluebeard' because he had 4 wives. He was served heir to his father (and grandfather Sir John) in 1669, including several lands in Lilliesleaf Parish and elsewhere. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Morebattle and Hownam Parishes, as well as tax on land valued at £1765 in Lilliesleaf Parish (having sold Riddell Mill, but purchased lands from the feuars of Lilliesleaf). In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was apparently a zealous Covenanter, being imprisoned (in the Tolbooth of Haddington) for his principles, and probably also for supporting his brother, Rev. Archibald. In 1684 he was fined the most of any Roxburghshire heritor, the huge sum of £52,000. However, he received a remission from the King in 1687. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was also appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. an M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1690 and served until his death. He married Agnes, daughter of Gideon Scott of Highchester and Harden in 1659. She received lands in Whitton 'in liferent' from his father in 1659. She must not have survived long, since in 1661 he secondly married Helen, daughter of Sir Alexander Morrison of Preston Grange; they had a son and a daughter together. He thirdly Margaret Swinton of that Ilk, with whom he had another son and daughter. And lastly the widow of Watt of Rosehill, formerly Miss Hepburn (this only about a year before his death). His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Christian, who married Henry, eldest son of Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean; William (d.1700), who died without children; and Margaret. He may also have had a daughter Helen, who married Robert Kerr of Cavers Carre, and another son, Alexander. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Perhaps he is the same John, tenant in 'Minto-milne' recorded in 1710 when his son Patrick became a barber's apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Mervinslaw among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682, and another for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell (who was probably related to him). He may be the John who in 1683 witnessed as baptism for James Brydon and Agnes Riddell. He could be the John who married Anna Agnes Dickson, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1679), Robert (b.1681), Helen (b.1684) and Walter (b.1686). John of Haining (d.bef. 1696) son of Andrew of Haining and grandson of the first Riddell (of Riddell) to hold the Haining estate. He was served heir to his father in 1643. He was recorded in the county valuation in 1643, his part of Bewlie being valued at £390. In 1659 there was a dispute with Selkirk over 'whether corn and wood cut on the Common was for the use of English soldiers'. In 1660 there was a complaint about a servant of his taking divots from Selkirk Common. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663 and Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire in 1665. He is probably the Laird of Haining recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, along with his mother, when they paid tax on £390 in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Sheriff Principal and also Provost of Selkirk. In 1667 he was involved in a dispute over rights on Selkirk Common and there was a 'bond of inhibition' with the Burgh. In 1669 he assigned the liferent of Trinlyknowe to his relative John of Museleee; this was with the consent of his wife, Anna Bennet. In 1671 he made an agreement for setting up a stud of horses for the King's use. He was recorded in deeds in 1673 (with his brother Walter also mentioned). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In late 1684 he was 'playing at the curling' with William Scott, younger of Harden and others, when William escaped from the soldiers who had been sent to apprehend him. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis, in 1685. In 1688 Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him. He married Anna Bennet (probably daughter of Robert Bennet and Anna Douglas of Cavers) and was succeeded by his son Andrew, who was served as his heir in 1696. His grand-daughter Magdalene married David Erskine of Dun and sold the estate to the Pringles. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for three hearths, since he was 'wt tuo kilns'. This suggests he was a miller or some other kind of tradesman. He was probably related to Walter, who was at Whithope Mill in at least 1714–29. John (d.bef. 1710) recorded as deceased 'tenant in Flett' in 1710 when his son James became a wigmaker's apprentice in Edinburgh. This could be Flatt in Liddesdale, with John, son of Hugh 'farmer in Flate' also becoming an apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720 and probably related. John of Muselee (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Patrick and Maria Elliot. In 1701, along with his brother William, he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. He is recorded in a document of 1710 involving an exchange of the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish with John Nisbet. In 1707 he and John Nisbet were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1715 and 1716 he witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton. In 1706 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Walter Riddell from Lilliesleaf, who was tenant farmer at North Synton. Their children were: Patrick (b.1707), who succeeded; Walter (b.1709); Andrew; William (b.1713), who moved to Berwick, where he became a successful merchant; Barbara (b.1715); John (b.1717); Alexander (b.1719), baptised at North Synton; James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Thomas (b.1724), who was also a merchant in Berwick; and an unnamed daughter. His lands of 'Musely' were valued at £491 1s 2d in the 1740s. He is probably the John 'of Mewslie' recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Dr. John (d.1740) son of Rev. Archibald and grandson of Sir Walter of that Ilk. He was an Edinburgh physician. In 1709 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, by right of his father, who had been a minister in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Salenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1710. Perhaps the same James was at Borthaugh in 1712 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Anna (b.1701), baptised in Roberton, may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1703 when someone was ordered by the session to marry his daughter Margaret. He could be the tenant in Mabonlaw who witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a servant in Commonside in 1708. He married Janet Young and their children included: Robert (b.1708); an unnamed child (b.1719); Walter (b.1722); Janet (b.1726). The witnesses in 1708 were James Grieve and Walter Purdom in Commonside. John (17th/18th C.) recorded living in Branxholme Town in 1713. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Robert Thomson and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) miller, probably at Newmill. In 1724 he was witness to a Hawick Parish baptism there. He may be the John who married Mary Scott and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1724) and Walter (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 wer William and Robert Thomson (perhaps the tenants at Newmill). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 and Harden in 1733 and 1736. His children included Agnes (b.1731), Henry (b.1733) and Margaret (b.1736). John (18th C.) tenant in Whithope Mill. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. He was surely related to Walter, who was there in the 1710s and Walter who was there in the 1770s. John (d.bef. 1747) eldest son of Sir Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He was an advocate and said to be highly accomplished. He is probably the John 'of that Ilk' whose lands in Morebattle were valued at £500 in the 1740s. He died before his father, so that his younger brother (also Sir Walter) succeeded to Riddell. He is probably the John, younger of Riddell, who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. Sir John (d.1768) 6th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding from his father Walter, his elder brother Walter having died first. He was a merchant in Curacao, returning on his father Walter's death. He was 'of that Ilk junior' in 1761 when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1762 he married Jane Buchanan, daughter and heiress of James Buchnan from Sundon, Bedfordshire; he granted her a bond of provision for lands in Riddell in 1768, and she died in 1798. In 1772 he succeeded to the Buchanan estates on the death of his wife's brother. He died at Hamstead in Middlesex, after being Baronet for only about 3 years, leaving a young family. His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Sir James Buchanan, who succeeded his brother; and Sir John Buchanan, born posthumously, who also succeeded to Riddell. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1768. After his death his wife, referred to as Dame Jane Riddell, still held rights over part of the estate. She must have been he Lady Riddell who was recorded in 1794 paying the tax for having 4 male servants at Riddell. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife was Jean Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); Janet (b.1755); William (b.1757); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. It is possible he is also the John, married to Jean Scott, whose son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1744. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Winthrope and their children included John (b.1771), Mary (b.1774), George (b.1776), Margaret (b.1780) and William (b.1783). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Stoddart in Wilton Parish in 1770 and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1774). John (18th C.) farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–89. His daughter Maragret was born in 1786 and son John in 1787. John (18th C.) resident in Catslack in 1794 when he was recorded in Selkirk in a dispute over non-payment of a bill. John (b.1758) son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He was a gardener and also sexton (but it is not clear for which church). In 1780 he married Peggy Parris and they had 12 children: Ann (b.1784), who died young; Isabella (b.1786), who also died young; Janet (b.1788), who married Michael Dryden; Francis (b.1792), who married Euphemia Scott, drove a mail coach for about 19 years, and died in Northumberland; Isabella (b.1795), died young; James (b.1797), who married Janet Rae and worked as a coachman; Adam (b.1798), who married Martha Leatherhead and moved to Edinburgh; John (b.1801), who was killed in a threshing mill at the age of 19; Jean (b.1804), who married John Watson from Selkirk; Katherine (b.1806), who married weaver John Fairgreaves and emigrated to Bridgeton, Maine; John (again, b.1809), who worked as a coachman and married Barbara Hall; Mary (b.1810), who died young. He may be the John recorded in Hawick in 1791 in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. John (18th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1791 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Jean (b.1793), Agnes (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Anne (b.1800). Sir John Buchanan (1768–1819) 9th Baronet of Riddell, youngest son of John the 6th Baronet, being born posthumously. He succeeded from his 2 elder brothers. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Riddell estate, as well as Cringles and Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish and Whitton in Hownam Parish. He was said to be a man of elegant, but stiff manners, and who was a benefactor of the working classes. He was known as a keen agriculturalist with ambitious ideas, some of which led to the ruin rather than improvement of the Riddell estate. More than 300 acres of trees were planted during his time as Laird, 3 gate lodges were built and 2 new approaches to the estate. Both he and Lady Riddell (presumably his mother) were listed in the Carriage Tax Roll of 1792/3 and 1797/8 and paid tax for male servants and horses in 1794 and 1797. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of no fewer than 39 farm horses, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses (with Lady Riddell listed separately in 1794, with 4 carriage horses). He also paid tax for having 9 non-working dogs at Riddell in 1797. Also in 1797 he was in trouble following an allegation from a soldier who had robbed him that Riddell had made 'a beastly suggestion' to him. He served on the Militia committee for Roxburghshire in at least 1797–1801. He purchased Wheatfield House, Hepple, from the Duke of Portland in 1804. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary. He tried to seek support from the Duke of Buccleuch to stand as an M.P. in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. He was eventually elected M.P. for the Linlithgow Burghs (which included Selkirk) 1812–19. The election of 1818 is reported to have involved many behind the scenes machinations, as well as bribery and other dirty tricks; however, he was not a very regular attendee in Parliament and never took part in debates. In about 1803 he raised 64 volunteers in the Parishes of Lilliesleaf and Bowden, who mustered at the False Alarm in 1804; he was later Colonel of the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia, based at Kelso. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He still owned the lands of Over Whitton and others in Hownam Parish according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811; he also owned the lands of Bank, Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, Hoglairburn and parts of other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was a major heritor of Ashkirk Parish, as recorded in a complaint of 1814 about payment for work done on the Manse. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. Sir Walter Scott stated that he 'bored everybody to death'. In 1805 he married Frances, daughter of Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, and she died in 1868, aged 90. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf) were: Frances Jane (b.1806), born in Edinburgh; Harriet (b.1807), born at Riddell House; Emily (1808–81), who married John Adams; Walter Buchanan (1810–92), who succeeded; Jane (b.1812); Rev. John Charles Buchanan (1814–79), Rector of Harrietsham in Kent, whose son John Walter succeeded later; Charlotte Mary (1816–69); Gen. Charles James (1817–1903), who served with the Royal Artillery; and Henry Philip Archibald (1819–89), who was born posthumously, like his father, worked with the Indian Service, and was awarded the Star of India. John (1766–1840) 5th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was involved with the founding of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He farmed at Timpendean, later moved to Grahamslaw and then became collector of taxes. He was probably the John who was listed as a member of the Yeomanry Cavlary at Timpendean on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Jedburgh Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811; he was listed as 'J. Riddell, Esq. Timpendean. He died unmarried in Jedburgh. John (b.1770s) resident of Commonside. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior, Journeyman Mason' in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (b.c.1770s) servant at 'Longtoun' according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. John (c.1780–1851) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Wauchope. He may be the servant at Wauchope recorded on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He spent 37 years as shepherd at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish) and then rented the farm of Berryhall next to Abbotsford. In 1841 he was at Clarilaw with his wife and daughter Betty. His wife was Margaret Turnbull (1777–1862) from Hawick, and they must have married when he was quite young (although not in 1791, as sometimes suggested). Their children included: Walter (1800–81), who married Margaret Baxter, and was a farm labourer in Bowden and later at Philiphaugh; Margaret (1802–94), who married stone mason Walter Ballantyne of St. Boswells; James (1804–1902), shepherd at Girrick, near Kelso; Robert (1807–67), who married Elizabeth Dickson and emigrated to Canada; William (1809–c.77), shepherd at Muselee, who emigrated to Australia; John (1812–76), who married Margaret Grieve and died at Faldonside; Elizabeth (b.1814), who died at about the age of 30; Jane (b.1817), who married Andrew Scott and died in Hawick; and Turnbull (c.1823–91), who married Helen Clarkson. Many member of the family are buried at Bowden. John (1785–1862) son of Henry of Little Govan and Anne Glassford, he was descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, where he specialised in peerage cases and was known as an antiquarian and genealogist. He died unmarried in Edinburgh. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Whillans in Cavers Parish in 1789. Their children included: Andrew (b.1795); Susannah (b.1797); Agnes (b.1799); John (b.1801); and Hannah (b.1803). John (b.1790/1) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eastfield in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 180 acres and employing 2 labourers. His wife was Agnes and their children included Archibald, Isabella, John and Thomas. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Blackburnfoot in 1841. He married Margaret Scoon and from Canonbie and their children included: Christian (b.1821); an unnamed child (b.1823); Janet (b.1831), who married Walter Blake in 1856; Anne (b.1834); and Margaret (b.1836/7). John Scoon (probably his father-in-law) was living with the family in 1841. His wife was head of the household (hence he was presumably deceased) on Douglas Square in 1861. John (d.1843) joiner in Lilliesleaf, eldest son of William. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betsy') Turnbull. His children included: William (b.1816), who was also a joiner; Jean (b.1819); and Mary, who had a baby the same day that her father died. John Carre (1809–79) 3rd son of Thomas of Camieston. He was born at Linthill. He was educated in Edinburgh and in 1839 emigrated to Australia with his cousin Thomas Ferrier Hamilton. The land that the pair purchased (between Melbourne and Bendigo) was called Riddells Creek. He became a member of the Victoria Legislative Council and then the Victorian Legislative Assembly. Rev. John Charles Buchanan (b.1814) 2nd son of Sir John Buchanan, 9th Baronet. He was educacted at Eton and Cambridge and was a Fellow of All Souls' College. He became Rector of Harrietsham in Kent and was Honorary Canon of Canterbury. He was heir presumptive to the Barony, since his elder brother Walter Buchanan had no children. He had 8 children of his own, and his son John Walter succeeded. John (b.1832/3) son of Andrew. He took over as tenant farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in the 1860s, and was also a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. John (19th C.) farmer at Peel in Liddesdale in 1868. John (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, in Cavers Parish, in the 1860s. John (19th C.) resident of Philadelphia. In 1867 he donated to the Museum and American coin from the time of George III and a Confederate bond for 1000 dollars. He probably had a local connection. Sir John Walter Buchanan (1849–1924) 11th Baronet of Riddell, son of Rev. John Charles, he succeeded his uncle, Sir Walter to the Baronetcy of Nova Scotia. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became a barrister. He served as High Sheriff of Northumberland. In 1874 he married Sarah Isabel, youngest daughter of Robert Wharton. He was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan, who married Rachel Beatrice Lyttelton. Sir John Charles Buchanan (1934–2010) 13th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father when only 5 months old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, being 2nd Lieutenant in the King's Royal Rifle Corps and then qualifying as a chartered accountant. He served as Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales 1985–90 and Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland 2000–09. He was also on many other boards and committees and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1969 he married Sarah, daughter of Baron Richardson of Duntisbourne and they had 3 sons, including Walter John Buchanan, who succeeded. Sir Jordan (12th C.) probably a son of Sir Auskittel. Although he appears to be directly descended from the Riddells of Riddell, it is unclear how he was related to other Riddells in the north of England. He was most likely named after Jordannus de Fleming, who could have been his uncle. He witnessed a grant to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1160, and another grant of lands in Berwickshire and Roxburghshire to Walter, son of Alan the Steward in 1161/2. He witnessed a confirmation of donations to Dunfermline Abbey in about 1166 and another charter of lands in the Lothians and Fife at about the same time. He was also witness in 1173/4 for lands in Angus. Probably the same man was Sheriff in Northumberland, with estates at Tilmouth in Durham. His wife's name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Walter. Margaret (d.c.1631) sister of William of Greatlaws. She married Andrew Duncanson, minister at St. Boswell's. In 1630 she was served heir to her brother's lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish, but died soon afterwards. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded in connection with money Sir Gilbert Eliott gave to the Hawick Kirk Session for keeping her in Wilton, suggesting she was supposed to be resident in Hawick Parish. Another record refers to her as 'being mad'. Mary (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'born at Havicke, goeing to see her father's friends at Howpasley' in 1700. She was listed among a group of 'vagabond persons wanting testificatts', who were suspected of being thieves at Hawick fair and were released from the Tolbooth after agreeing never to return to Teviotdale. Mary (17th/18th C.) also known as Margaret, she married John Scoon, who farmed at Branxholme Town. In 1705 she was renting part of Branxholme Town, with her cautioner being Walter (probably her brother or other close relative). She was still renting part in 1708 and is recorded along with her son (whose name is not given), leasing part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1711 and 1712. By 1714 she was renting part of the farm with Robert Scoon, making it clear that this was her son. The pair were in arrears until at least 1718 and in 1719 she was replaced as tenant by Walter Scoon. Mary (1809–52) only daughter of Walter, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Muselee. Her mother was a daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. In 1835 she married George William Hutton, who was a banker at Newark (son of George Hutton of Chorlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford of Mitford Castle). Their son was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell, who succeeded to the Muselee estates on the death of her uncle Charles in about 1849. They had another son, Edward Mitford Hutton Riddell. Matthew (13th C.) recorded as 'Matheo Rydel' when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Ayton. This was sometime in the period 1247–60. A Matthew from the previous century was Abbot of Peterburgh. Michael (14th C.) witness to a charter of Adam de Roule for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354. He is recorded as 'Michaele de Rydale', and was probably part of the Riddles of that Ilk. Perhaps the same Michael 'Ridel' was a juror in Roxburgh for an English inquistion in 1335/6 regarding expenses at Jedburgh Castle. Mungo (d.1471) recorded as 'Mungo de Redale' in 1436/7, when Richard 'de Lylliscleue' resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to him as his superior. In 1435 he is 'Mungo de Redoll' when he gained lands in the Regality of Sprouston from 'Marioun Wedale', widow of John; he held his court at 'Westirlellyscleff' (i.e. 'Wester Lilliesleaf'). He may have been succeeded by his grandson (or son) James. However, his relationship with the nearly contemporary Quentin is unclear. One possibility is that he was Quentin's son (and therefore James' father), and that they were both referred to as 'of Riddell' for several years; another possibility is that they were brothers, and shared the lands of Riddell and Whitton in some way. If he was James' father, then he also had a son called Thomas, who was James' brother. Mungo (16th C.) described as 'Sir Mungo Riddele, chaplain' when he was witness to a document in 1556 relating to the lands of Nether Harden. Given that all the other witnesses were fairly local it is reasonable to assume he was attached to one of the nearby churches, say Wilton or Ashkirk. His name occurs after that of Walter of that Ilk, who may therefore have been his father or brother. Mungo (16th C.) recorded in Lessuden in 1581/2 when he witnessed 2 transactions in Selkirk. Perhaps the same Mungo was recorded in the same year in a marriage contract for his sister Marion with his step-sister Janet Kyle. Sir Patrick of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 4th Laird, son of Ausketill (although some sources suggest he was son of Walter). He made donations to Melrose Abbey, including lands at Lilliesleaf and Whitton. In 1208/9 he confirmed the granting of lands at Whitton to Melrose Abbey, which had originally been granted by Auskittel (probably his father). In 1454 James II confirmed his grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey, his name being given as 'Patricius de Ridale' and the land being 'ywittuna'. He married Christiana de Vesci (or 'Vesey')

of Alnwick, one of whose relatives (possibly her father) married Margaret, an illegitimate daughter of William the Lion. He was succeeded by his son Walter. It is sometimes claimed that another son was William, who married Matilda Corbet, but he actually seems to have been a brother. Another son may have been Gaufred. His seal bore a lion 'passant', not on a shield, and the words 'SIGILLUM PATRICII DE RIDALA'. Patrick of Riddell (15th C.) recorded in 1438 when he was on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn. It is unclear how he might be related to other Riddells of that Ilk, particularly Mungo and Quentin, who were Lairds at about the same time. Patrick (d,bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when George Haliburton in Dryburgh entered his son William into his lands in Mertoun. It seems likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Patrick of Muselee (d.1698) son of John of Muselee and Grizel Schew, he was probably the 3rd Riddell of Muselee. He was the 2nd son, but succeeded to Muselee and Bewlie, since his older brother William had died first. He leased Roberton from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 9 years. He was on the Commission of Supply for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the 'muslie Elder' who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1681 in Roberton Parish he married Maria (or Mary) Elliot; she was from Beechwood, daughter of Thomas of Bewlie and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and hence related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1682); John (b.1683), who succeeded; Margaret (b.1684); Thomas (b.1685); Elizabeth (b.1686); and William, recorded in 1701. The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas and William Elliot (perhaps his father-in-law and brother-in-law) and in 1686 were William Elliot and Robert Scott. He was succeeded by his son John, while his grandson William was ancestor of the Riddells of Berwick. In 1697 a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, and he himself was buried there in 1698. His name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708, although he was deceased by then and so his son John is probably meant. Patrick of Muselee (1707–72) son of John of Muselee. He was probably the Patrick 'of Newslie' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Patrick who paid the window tax on Headshaw in 1748 and on 'Adzhall' in Ashkirk Parish in 1753. He could be the Patrick who owned lands in Lilliesleaf Parish valued at £140 14s 2d in the 1740s. In 1752 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows. Their children included: John (b.1754), who died young; Charles (b.1756), also died young; Walter (1758–1809), who was a lawyer; William (b.1759); Charles (b.1759), who succeeded; Thomas (1761–1849), with the East India Company; John (1766–1840), who farmed at Timpendean; and one daughter. It is unclear if he was born in 1707 or 1709. Peter (13th C.) recorded as valet of Sir Henry de Pinkeny in a 1298 roll of war horses used on Edward I's expedition into Scotland. He is recorded as 'Peter de Ridale'. Possibly the same 'Petrum de Rydale' is recorded along with his brothers Thomas and Robert in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. Philip (11th/12th C.) possibly ancestor of the local Riddells. He was probably son of Galfridus (otherwise known as Geoffrey), who accompanied William the Conqueror, gaining large English estates. He was probably brother of Hugh, who gained extensive lands in Northamptonshire, as well as Cranston in Midlothian. It is likely he was father of Gervasius, who received lands in Roxburghshire from David I. Other sons were probably Walter, Auskittel and Ralph. Philip (13th C.) Burgess of Berwick. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital, which is undated, but probably shortly before 1270. He was recorded as a merchant in Berwick in 1276 and burgess there in 1277, 1281 and 1283. He was Mayor of Berwick in 1291, as recorded in one of the Ragman Rolls. It is unclear whether he was the family chief at the time, but he is referred to as 'Philippo de Redale'. He was also recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1292, and in 1293 had a letter of safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of 'Domus Dei' in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of a grant to the hospital there. He was also on a jury in Berwick in 1302 and may be the 'Philippum de Rydale' on the 1276 assize roll of Northumberland. He was mentioned in a petition in about 1334 from the House of God in Berwick, stating that he had formerly purchased land in Scotland and England to support them. Quentin of Riddell (15th C.) first of the family to be designated 'of that Ilk'. His name is also written 'Quintin', and this was a new forename for the Riddell family. He may have been son of Sir William, but this is unclear; most family histories leave room for at least one other generation around this time. In 1418 he was 'quintino de redale' when witnessing a document for Melrose Abbey. He was in possession of Riddell in 1421 when an inquistion was held. He was also recorded as 'Quintin Liddale of that ilk' as part of panel to decide on Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was succeeded by his son, whose name is unknown, and then by his grandson James. His relationship with Mungo is unclear (and confusing, since he appears to be almost contemporary). He probably had a daughter who married John Scott of Synton. Ralph (12th C.) witness to several documents in about the last couple of decades of the 12th century, particularly lands in Lilliesleaf and Whitton involving Melrose Abbey. The earliest of these is probably the settlement between the Abbey and Uhtred of Grubet in 1181–86 and the latest was a confirmation of lands resigned to Patrick of Riddell, which was after 1214. His name is usually recorded as 'de Ridale' or variants, and in a 1454 confirmation of the 12th century grant of Whitton to Melrose Abbey he is listed as 'Radulfo de Ridale'. He was also witness to a charter between Ranulph de Soulis and Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s. Probably the same Ralph was the perambulator of lands on the Kale Water granted by Uhtred of Grubet to Melrose Abbey in the period 1181–86. He appears to have been brother of Gervase, and hence a son of Philip. Richard of Wittering (13th C.) owner of lands in Northampton, who was surely closely related to the Border Riddells. He was recorded in a record of Henry III in 1241/2. It seems likely that his father was Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in a document relating to 'Wyterine' in Northamptonshire in 1254. His son Hugh was recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. Richard (14th C.) possibly a younger son of Geoffrey of Riddell, and hence brother of Sir William and Sir Robert. However, precisely how he was related to earlier and later Riddels of that Ilk is unknown. There is no record of a wife or family. He witnessed 2 charters to Ker of Altonburn in 1357/8 and 1358. Note that an earlier Richard was recorded about the 1230s, associated with Preston in East Lothian. Robert (13th C.) witness in about 1250, along with William, for a charter of Lempitlaw to Soutra Hospital. His name is recorded as 'Roberto Redale'. Also in 1254/5 he was recorded in a charter for the lands of Mow and in about the 1250s witnessed a gift of lands in Berwick to Coldstream Priory. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Cumberland in 1271/2. Perhaps the same Robert was witness in 1279–86 to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. The phrase 'Curia de Sprowyston' comes after his name, although it is unclear if he was the 'curate' of Sprouston, or some unnamed person. He was probably brother or son of William. Sir Robert of Riddell (14th C.) probably related to the nearly contemporary Richard of Riddell, but the succession in these generations is very uncertain. It is possible that he was a younger son of Geoffrey, succeeding after his brother Sir William. However, it may be that he was never Laird himself. He witnessed a charter of lands in Mow granted to Kelso Abbey. He also acted as a cautioner of the Laird of Mowe who was a hostage in England. Robert (d.c.1581) brother of Walter of that Ilk, in 1559 he was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden. He was Bailie of the Barony of Wilton. He may also be the Robert who received part of his father's lands at Minto. It is possible he was the 'Berte' who witnessed a transaction between Thomas Gray and Thomas Smail regarding a tenement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Also in 1563 he is recorded as brother of Walter of that Ilk when he witnessed a transaction for finding a wife for William Davidson. He may have been son of Walter and Mariotta Pringle (although these generations are not clear). Perhaps the same Robert, brother to Walter of that Ilk was witness in 1579 to a transaction between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig; he was also witness to another transaction involving his brother Andrew, with their mother Elizabeth Ker also mentioned. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother to Walter of that Ilk when he was involved in a transaction for land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he was at Riddell to witness an agreement between James in Maxton and John in Newton Mill. He was 'brother-german to Walter Riddell, of that Ilk' when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1581. Robert (16th C.) son of James in Clerklands. In 1563 he witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf, for William Davidson, made by Walter of that Ilk. He was probably the Robert in Clerklands who in 1580 witnessed a marriage contract between Isabel, daughter of George in Lilliesleaf and George Rutherford in Bewlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded at the Fanns in Ashkirk Parish in 1661.

He married Janet Bell and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Bell (probably related to his wife) and William (probably his won relative). Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Newbigging when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newbigging this was. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably tenant in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, with James Davidson (probably also Newbigging) as the other witness. He may be the Robert who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for Walter in Hawick in 1684, and another for William Bell and Marion Riddell. Robert (17th C.) married Janet Sanderson in Roberton Parish in 1683. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. He could be the Robert who married Janet Sanderson and whose children included: Janet (b.1684); and Robert (b.1686). Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those 'not Listed yet payd yr'. Robert (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in 1705. The marriage was proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Newmill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) and at Allanhaugh Mill in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Tudhope in Raesknowe. It is possible that the same Robert was miller at Falnash in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart, smith at Falnash. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1716, 1718 and 1722. He is probably the Robert who married Bessie Sinton in Roberton in 1707. His children probably included Christian (b.1708), John (b.1709), Isobel (b.1716), Agnes (b.1718), Walter (b.1720) Robert (b.1722) and James (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1717, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He was recorded living at the Sandbed in 1718 and 1736. He married Margaret Oliver in 1718, the marriage being recorded in Hawick (and perhaps also Wilton, but with no wife's name given). Their children included: Andrew (b.1719); Bettie (b.1720); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1733); and John (b.1736). The witnesses in 1719 were Robert Scott 'Crawship' and John Turnbull 'cuper older', in 1720 were James Purcell and Robert Roger, and in 1736 were William Riddell (surely a relative) and Thomas 'Gillas'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at East Burnfoot in 1721 and 1729. He married Isobel Riddell (probably in 1718, although no wife's name is recorded) and their children included: Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); John (b.1723); Walter (b.1729); and George and William (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were another Robert Riddell and Alexander Moore, and in 1729 were George Stewart and James Scott. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for George Stewart in Groundistone and in 1732 one for Walter Riddell. He was probably related to Walter, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lang in Minto Parish in 1731. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish recorded 'at Park' in 1744. He married Bessy Lawson and their children included: Jean (b.1733); John (b.1735); William (b.1737); Bessy (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1733 were John Telfer and James Beattie and in 1744 were shoemakers John and Thomas Scott. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Whitehaugh Mill. He took out a one year lease on Highchesters Mill in 1743. He may be related to the Robert who was later at Todshawhillshiel. Rev. Robert (c.1710–60) 6th and youngest son of Sir Walter, the 4th Baronet of Riddell and Mary Watt of Rosehill. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1732, was presented to Lilliesleaf by Robert, Duke of Roxburghe in 1737 and ordained that year. He remained as minister there until his death. In 1748 he paid the window tax for 'the mance' in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is said that he was sometimes interrupted in his sermons by his father, who was very fastidious about points of scripture, saying 'Robert, that won't do'. In 1755 he married a distant cousin of the Granton Riddells, Esther, daughter of Dr. John Riddell (and she died in 1803). They had no children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Miller and their children included Janet (b.1758). Probably the same Robert was herd at Fanns in 1762 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. Robert (18th C.) married Jean Stevenson in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. Robert (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Jean Arthur is recorded in 1781. Robert (18th C.) married Jane

Thomson in Hawick in 1775. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1786 and Todshawhillshiel in 1788 and 1790. His children included William (b.1786), John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branxholme. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirknowe in 1790 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. His other children probably included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), William (again, b.1794), John (again, b.1796), Adam (b.1798), William (again, b.1798), Betty (b.1800), George (b.1802), Janet (b.1804), an unnamed son (b.1806), Betty (again, b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). Robert (18th C.) married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. Robert (d.1809) wright, son of George, who lived at Howahill. He is probably related to the Robert in Hobkirk Kirknowe recorded about the same time. He have been the Robert, son of George born in Hobkirk Parish in 1771. He married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, as well as the death of his son James in 1808 and his wife Mary Gledstains in 1810. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Mill according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may have been son of Walter, who was tenant at Southdean Mill at about the same time. He was 'Husbandman' at Southdean Mill on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in South Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer at Raesknowe in 1838, when he witnessed a baptism. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Jean Turnbull in Southdean in 1803. They had unnamed children baptised in 1804, 1805, 1806 and 1814. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant in Chesterhill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) said to have been a native of Teviotdale, he was father of Rev. Henry Scott. He was described as 'a man of strong though uneducated mind'. He was shepherd for a long time at Langshawburn, where he was visited by Walter Scott, Pulteney Malcolm and James Hogg. He was shepherd at Sorbie (in Ewesdale) when his famous son was born. While there it is said that he planted some saplings on a hillside above Wrae, saying that he wished to live long enough for his coffin to be made from the wood of the mature trees. He then moved to Capplefoot, on the Water of Milk. While there he hired a teacher to instruct his children. Later he returned to the Ettrick to work for Scott of Deloraine, who he had been with in his younger days. He married Agnes Scott, who was also from Teviotdale. They had 6 sons and a daughter: William; Borthwick (b.1794), who farmed at Dryden, Ashkirk, and was renowned as a piper; Henry Scott (1798–1870), minister at Teviothead and song-writer; Robert (1800–67), who emigrated to America and died in Rockton, Canada; Alexander Hay, who farmed in Cumberland; Walter (d.1834), who died unmarried; and Mary, who married a Jones. Robert (1800–67) born in Teviotdale, he was 4th son of shepherd Robert and brother of Rev. Henry Scott. He farmed in Cumberland for a while and then emigrated to America. He married Margaret Johnston in 1819, the marriage being recorded in Roberton Parish. They had 10 children, including Nancy, Euphemia, Benjamin, Thomas, Robert, Ann and Walter. He died in Rockton, Ontario. Robert (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen White and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1826. Robert (b.1839/40) son of farm labourer Walter, and descended from Hobkirk shepherds. He apprenticed as a blacksmith with Thomas Kedzie in Selkirk, but also worked in Hawick. He then worked in Edinburgh, Stirling and Glasgow before emigrating to America in 1864. He spent time in Michigan, Canada and Minnesotta, returned to Scotland and then went back to Canada in 1870. In 1872 he started his own wrought-iron fencing business in Chatham, Ontario. He married a Miss Tocher and had 5 children. Roger (13th/14th C.) obtained a charter of the lands of Fala from James, Lord Douglas in 1321. His son John is recorded in 1358. Simon of Lilliesleaf Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 along with Andrew of that Ilk and Andrew of Lilliesleaf when there were complaints made against them by the Douglases of Friarshaw. His name appears as 'Sym Riddell of Lillislie Mylne'. It was specifically claimed that the Riddells put their sheep on a field of wheat belonging to the Douglases and also that he and Andrew of Lilliesleaf removed the ploughs from some of the Douglas' farmers. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Riddell. Rev. Simon (1677–1743) probably descended from a branch of the Riddells of that Ilk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1695, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1699 and ordained at Tynron Church in 1701. In 1715 he marched to Stirling with some of his parishioners in defence of the King and the Protestant cause and in 1740 he was one of the 15 ministers who dissented against the resolution to depose the 8 Seceeding ministers. He could be the 'Mr Riddell of Newhouse' whose lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £579 8s 4d in the 1740s. He married Annie Riddell, who was heiress of the lands of Newhouse near Lilliesleaf. Their only son Walter married Annie Riddell, heiress of Glenriddell. Steven (16th C.) recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569. He was listed along with James Langlands as heralds in Roxburghshire, 'Ane of the Wardane Officiaris to be maid Messinger'. It seems likely he was from the Riddells of that Ilk. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as brother of Geoffrey in the period 1165–1204. He witnessed his brother's charter for 2 oxgangs of lands in Primside. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as being 'de Rydell' in the 1330s when he was witness to a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh and preserved in the chartulary of Dryburgh. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Riddells. He could be the Thomas who forfeited the lands of 'Synlawys' in the Barony of Oxnam, which were granted to William Stewart of Jedward in 1384. Thomas (14th C.) Burgess of Berwick, recorded as 'junior' in 1365. He was a prisoner in the 'Marshalsea' in 1370. He was involved with a debtor's lands of Sunlaws in Roxburghshire, acquiring these lands along with Little Newton (on Eden) by 1379. Probably the same Thomas'Riddle' forfeited lands in Berwick, which were granted to John Renton during the reign of David II. Thomas (14th C.) recorded in c.1380 as the possessor of the lands of 'Little Neuton next Roxburgh'. His surname is written 'Ridelle'. He may have been the same man as Thomas 'de Rydell'. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of James of that Ilk. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany during the time of revolt, as well as for stealing sheep. His surety was his brother, the Laird of Riddell. Thomas (d.c.1514) listed as deceased in 1514, when he was succeeded in the position of Clek of Lilliesleaf by George Riddell. He was probably a member of the family of Riddell of that Ilk, holding the benefice of assistant priest in the Parish. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of William in Lilliesleaf. In 1592 he was signatory to a caution by Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of James Scott of Whithope. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was baptised in 1634. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. Probably the same Thomas had a son Alexander baptised in Hawick in 1695, with no mother's name recorded, and witnesses James and John Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710. His children included: Isobel (b.1705); and twins Robert and Alexander (b.1710). Thomas (17th/18th C.) sometime tenant in Bewlie. In 1716 he had a tack (jointly with George Cumming) for lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield; after a year he was to assume the lease fully for another 8 years. This was specifically for 'a dwelling house, barn and stack yard and half a cottage in the town of Bewlie, half the said Mr. John's lands in Bewlie, half the meadow and half the muir of Lillislief with the teinds'. In 1721 the last 3 years were cancelled. Thomas (1696–1750) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. The lands of Camieston near Newtown St. Boswells were acquired for him and he became the first Riddell Laird there. It is possible that he was the 'Mr. Riddell of Camiestoun' who purchased the Kirkland of Bewlie from the Duke of Roxburghe. He may be the Thomas who paid the window tax at 'Ferningtoun' in Roxburgh Parish in 1748. In 1740 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of daughter of Rev. William Hunter, minister of Lilliesleaf. His children were: Walter (b.1742), who died young; Margaret (1744–71), who died unmarried; Eleanor (1745–1815), also unmarried; William (b.1746), who succeeded to Camieston and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; Thomas (1748–56); and Robert (1750–93), who served with the East India Company and perished on the 'Duchess of Athole', being in temporary command when fire broke out, and refusing to abandon his ship. Thomas (18th C.) married Jean Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1749. Capt. Thomas (d.1805) 5th son of Walter of that Ilk. He was an officer with the Honorable East India Company, being Captain of the Adm. Pocock 1762–71. The British Museum has a journal from one of his voyages. He purchased an estate in Berwickshire, which he renamed 'Beesborough'. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Laughlan MacLauchlan and their children included: Capt. Thomas of Beesborough (d.1802); and Gen. Henry James (1781/2–1861), who became Commander-in-Chief in Scotland. A portrait of his wife, painted by Raeburn, was loaned (by Walter Riddell Carre of Cavers) to the Museum for its exhibition in 1866. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1818). Thomas (1761–1802) 4th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He joined the East India Company, rose to the rank of Major and died in India. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Jane Govenlock, who was from Hawick Parish. Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Byreholm according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Probably the same Thomas was a 'Driver' at 'Wheathaugh' on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Perhaps the same Thomas married Janet Brydon and had a son Adam (b.1794), baptised in Castleton Parish. He may be the 60-year-old Thomas living at Peel in 1841, along with his wife Jean and (probably son) James. Thomas of Camieston (1777–1826) eldest son of William of Camieston. He qualified as Writer to the Signet in 1805, but never followed this profession. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father) when still younger of Camieston. In 1805 he married Jane, daughter of William Ferrier, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Gen. William (1805–75); Walter of Cavers Carre (1807–74); John Carre (1809–80), who emigrated to Australia, where he was a member of the Parliament of Victoria; Capt. Thomas (1810–54) of the Bengal Infantry; Lillias Wallace (b.1812), married Ross Watt and emigrated to Victoria; Robert (1813–39), who died in India; Elizabeth Carre (1816–44), who died unmarried; Georgina Vereker (b.1818), who married Malcolm McNeil Rind; and Jane Ann (d.1859), who married Elijah Imprey. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in 1818. Thomas (19th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Cavers Parish in 1831. Their children, baptised in Jedburgh Associate Kirk, were James (b.1833), John (b.1835) and Thomas (b.1839). Thomas (d.1843) 2nd son of Lilliesleaf joiner William. He was a thatcher. He married Rachel Stirling and their children included William (b.1803), who was a joiner. Thomas (b.1815/6) born in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 32 acres at Chesters. He married Jane Maben in 1848 and their children included Jane (b.1849). Thomas (1815–62) born in Lilliesleaf, son of Isabella, with the father's name unknown. He emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working in the mills. He married Sarah S. Henderson and their children were James, Walter and David. He drowned after falling overboard from a steamer between Fall River and New York. Thomas (b.1818) son of Thomas and Janet Scott, he was a stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1841 he was living with Robert Scott in Denholm. In 1861 he was listed on Main Street as 'Stocking maker & Grocer'. Also in 1861 he donated 2 Scottish copper coins to the Museum. In the 1860s he is in a trade directory as a stocking-maker, suggesting he ran his own business. He married Janet Dow and their children included Thomas, John, Robert S., James and George. Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Sharp in Hawick Parish in 1846. Thomas (19th C.) married Isabella Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1848. Walter (d.1150s) described as 'de Riddale, of Whitunes' when he received a charter of half of 'Eshetho' (i.e. 'Eschetho', probably the same as Lintobank) and 'Lillisclive' (Lilliesleaf) from David I sometime in the period 1124–53. This is recorded in a 'transumpt' of 1506 (i.e. a legal copy of the frail document was made in Jedburgh at that time). He may thus have been the first Baron of Riddell and Whitton. He was probably a close relative of Gervase, who witnessed some charters along with him; he may have been brother of Gervase (or perhaps his son), and hence a son of Philip. He is further recorded as 'Waltero de ridalis' and similar in several surviving charters he witnessed in the reign of David for St. Andrews Priory and other religious houses. A bull from Pope Adrain IV in 1156 confirms his brother and heir Auskittel in several lands. This suggests he died without any sons. However, he is known to have married Ethride de Percy, sister of the Lord of Oxenham. Walter of Riddell (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Auskittel. A Bull of Pope Alexander III (sometime before 1181) confirms him in the lands of 'Lillescleve', half of 'Langetun', 'Witun' and 'Brahebi' (Brawby in Yorkshire), which his father and forebears held of the church of Hexham. He married Guynoldu, daughter of the Earl Gospatric. They had at least 2 sons: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; and Ralph, said to have been progenitor of the Northumberland branch of Riddells. Walter (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Jordan, perhaps the first generation of the Riddells of the Newcastle area. He succeeded his father in the lands of Tilmouth in Durham and the Lordship of Whickham. He was Sheriff of Northumberland and was succeeded by Sir William. Walter of Riddell (13th C.) 5th Laird, son of Sir Patrick and Margaret de Vesci (or 'Vesey'). He confirmed his father's donations to Melrose Abbey, and gave other benefactions to both Melrose and Kelso. The gift to Melrose Abbey was part of Lilliesleaf and made some time before 1253; this charter also mentions land he had previously granted to Alexander, brother of Henry of Ashkirk. He married a daughter of Hugh de Gifford. He had 2 sons, Sir William (who succeeded) and Patrick. His seal bore an eagle with wings elevated, not on a shield, and the words 'SIG[ILL. WA]LTERI DE RI[DA]LE'. Walter (16th C.) younger of Riddell, son of John. He died before his father, and the title was inherited by his son Walter. However, these generations are confused, and it is also possible that his brother George inherited, or was at least the effective Laird during the minority of his son Walter. His wife's name is said to have been Jane. If he was father of Walter of that Ilk who was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579, then he also had sons Andrew and Robert. Walter of that Ilk (d.c.1580) probably son of Walter, he succeeded to the Lairdship from his grandfather John. George, who also appears to have been acting as Laird before him, was either his father or uncle. He may the 'lard of Ryddell' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He was witness to a charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden in 1556 and is also mentioned in 1559 when his brother Robert was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden (although it is possible this is 1550). In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1563 he was 'wadset' lands at 'Hungrie Hills' and near the Kirk of Lilliesleaf by William Middlemas. Also in 1563 he offered 2 potential wives to William Davidson, who held lands of his in ward and relief; witnesses included his brother Robert, as well as Robert, son of James in Clerklands. He is probably the 'Lard of Riddel' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. He served as surety for the Elliots in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He was on an assize in 1577. He is probably the Walter of that Ilk whose brothers Andrew and Robert are recorded in transactions in Selkirk in 1579. In 1543 he married Mariotta (or Marion), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. In 1545 he and his wife were granted lands near Roxburgh 'in conjunct fee'. He was probably succeeded by another Walter, and also had sons Robert and William (who witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, by which time his son was Laird). His seal bore a chevron between 3 ears of rye and the words 'S' VALTERI RIDDEL', while his wife's had 3 shells on a 'bend sinister' and the words 'S' MARION HOPPRINGIL'. Walter of that Ilk (d.bef. 1592) son of Walter. He is probably the Walter who in 1581 witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. Also in 1581 his heir apparent Andrew received sasine (in the name of his daughter Janet, Andrew's sister) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He was listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court James Davidson in Whitton. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council and in 1590 was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. John Ramsay of Dalhousie was cautioner for him in 1590. Note that these generations of Walters seem confused in some family histories. He married Agnes, daughter of George Ramsay of Dalhousie, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He probably also had 2 daughters, one of whom married Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre and Nether Howden. His wife may have been the Lady Riddell whose conduct was singled out when the Presbyterians complained to the King about continuing supporters of Catholicism. He and his son Andrew were 'tutors' for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. His son Andrew and brother William both witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, while he was Laird. In 1595/6 (suggesting he was alive then, but perhaps just confirming an earlier grant) there is a charter for the Barony of Lilliesleaf in which he is granted thr $3\frac{1}{2}$ husbandlands of Lilliesleaf, called 'West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris' and 6 husbandlands and 2 cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf, with Lilliesleaf Mill; his son Andrew and brother William are also listed. Walter (d.bef. 1642) referred to in 1600 as 'fiar of that Ilk', along with his wife Agnes, when they received the lands of Bewlie. He may have been a son of the Laird of Riddell, or else descended from the earlier Riddells who had farmed at Bewlie. He is probably the Walter referred to in 1642 when his son William gave Bewlie to his brother Walter. Walter (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He was mentioned in the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison. It was stated that Sandy

'Hines' wife said that Howison had given medicine to his wife and received nothing for it. Walter of Woodhouse (16th/17th C.) appeared at the Privy Council in 1616 to represent William Allan and himself in a complaint against the Douglases of Friarshaw. He was probably also the Walter of 'Ridhouse' (assuming this was a transcription error) who, along with the Laird of Riddell, had had their tenants oppressed by the Douglases. He was also a member of the assize at the Commissioners' Court in 1623 and was voted as Chancellor of the panel. It is unclear where 'Wodhouse' was and he may be the same as one of the other Walters. Sir Walter 2nd Baronet of Riddell (d.c.1669) son of Sir John. He was knighted by Charles I during his father's lifetime. In 1632 there is a discharge to him from Violet Douglas, widow of Andrew of that Ilk and their 1st and 2nd sons Andrew of Haining and Robert of Hartside. He was served heir to his father in 1636; this included Lintobank, Boosmill, Easter Clerklands, Greatlaws and West Lilliesleaf (called 'Murieknow'), as well as Over and Nether Whitton. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1628–1633, and he also represented Roxburghshire 1646–47 and 1650. In 1640 he had a contract with Walter Scott of 'Burnside' (perhaps Burnfoot) concerning Chapel and other lands in Lilliesleaf. He was a supporter of the Covenant. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1643 his estate of Riddell (consisting of Mains of Riddell, Bank, Clerklands, Riddell Mill and Lilliesleaf Mill), valued at £1654; he was also owner of part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish (valued at £273), as well as of Whitton in Morebattle Parish (valued at £1600). In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he probably the 'W. Riddell' among local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £6,600 (the second largest amount in Roxburghshire). He is recorded in a charter of 1659 involving his daughter-in-law Agnes Scott and lands in Whitton. He paid tax for his rentals in Hownam (£3382) and Lilliesleaf (£1629) in about 1663. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of William Rigg of Aithernie in Fife, said to be a very pious woman and aunt of Katherine Rigg, 'the Good Lady Cavers'; this may have been in 1630. Their children were: Sir John, who succeeded; William of Friarshaw, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell; Archibald (b.1635), Covenanting preacher, who married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton; Thomas, who may have married Agnes Scott and died childless; Andrew; Agnes, who married James Scott, brother of Sir William of Harden in 1659; Sarah, who married Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton in 1656; and Alison, who married Rev. Gabriel Semple of Jedburgh (once a preacher of field conventicles). Note there are conflicting accounts of his children, particularly the daughters. His son Sir John was served as his heir in 1669. His wife's will is recorded at the Commissarriot of Peebles in 1682. Walter of Belses (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to the Riddells of Riddell and of Minto. He may have been the same Walter who was given the lands of Belses by his brother William (son of Walter) in 1642; if so he was described as 'in Longhauche'. He was also possibly the 'portioner of Bewlie' who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. He may be the same Walter as the 'portioner of Lilliesleaf' who in 1643 held '20 soums' valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26. He was also involved in a 'wadset' over lands at Fernielees and Templehall (in the Rule valley) with William Earl of Lothian in 1649; Sir Walter of that Ilk is also mentioned. and so was clearly distinct. He extended the loan to the Earl in 1652, when he was described as 'now indweller in Appotsyde'. In the 1652 marriage contract of Margaret Riddell and Robert Elliot, he is described as uncle of Margaret and brother of William, deceased portioner of Bewlie. He also witnessed a contract of 'wadset' for the Lorraines of Appotside in 1654, also signed by his eldest son 'Harie' (i.e. Henry), as well as further contracts in 1656. He was mentioned in discharges of 1655 for uplifting the teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse and in further discharges of 1657 and 1658; he acted as 'bailie in that part' for Elliot of Harwood and was tenant at Appotside. In 1656 he witnessed the ratification of William Elliot of Harwood in his Rulewater lands and another sasine relating to Harwood was witnessed by his sons Henry and Walter. His sons William and Henry witnessed separate documents 1659, and all 3 sons witnessed a document relating to Appotside in 1656. He is probably also the Walter who rented land from John Turnbull of Firth in 1645. He may be the Walter recorded as portioner in 1678 when he ownedlands in Bewlie and also for the 'heritors' of Raperlaw, amounting to £273, as well as Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £407 15s); however, that seems more likely to be the next generation. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, and younger brother of William. He is recorded as 'in Langhauche' and 'baillie in that part to the said Williame Ellot' when he was witness in 1637 for Elliot of the Binks purchasing Harwood. The Langhaugh may have been the one in Liddesdale or in Hobkirk (probably the latter). In one of the 1637 documents he is transcribed as 'Liddell'. He also witnessed other agreements relating to vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1638 and 1648, and a discharge to him and others for the teinds in 1649. In 1642 he was 'in Longhaughe' when his brother disposed to him his five-pound land in Bewlie and half a cotland in the Barony of Lilliesleaf. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Murray. Their son Robert was baptised in 1650. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Chisholm. Their son Robert was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Robert and Andrew Chisholme (who were surely related to his wife). Walter of Minto (c.1620–c.84) writer (i.e. solictor) in Edinburgh. He was probably 2nd son of son of William of Newhouse and grandson of William of Muselee (although these generations are confused). He purchased part of the Minto estate from John Turnbull of Minto in 1676 (confirmed in 1681). He leased the lands of 'Kaimes and the Hills' to William Mather of Lanton in 1683. Also in 1683 has a disposition for Minto to his son-in-law Thomas Rutherford. There was a dispute among his children over the inheritance, but eventually Minto passed to Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1687 and not long afterwards sold to the Elliots. He married Catharine Nisbet in 1652 in Edinburgh, and secondly married Isabel Riddell. His children were: James (d.1687), who died young; Jean, who married Robert Laurie in Edinburgh, and was the mother of the Annie Laurie who inspired the song; Susanna, who married Thomas, brother of John Rutherford of Edgerston; Catharine, who probably died young; Grizel (b.bef. 1687), who was to have succeeded if she married a Riddell; John, who may also have died young; Elizabeth, who married James Dallas in Edinburgh; and Agnes. His daughters cleared all their interests in Minto in the 1690s. Walter (d.bef. 1673) son of Andrew of Haining and brother of John of Haining. He married Christian Hunter, who is recorded along with their son Andrew in a deed of 1673. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1686 he married Margaret Ker in Wilton. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray and Alison Riddell (probably a relative) in 1688. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of John 'in Beirhope'. He is probably the Walter, 'portioner of Beulie' who witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. He was 'portioner' of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, with land valued at £273. He (or a descendant) received part of the lands of Bewlie in 1687. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scoon and their children included: Robert (b.1674); an unnamed child (b.1677); another unnamed child (b.1679); Bessie (b.1681); and Helen (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and William, who were surely related to him. Walter of Newhouse (b.1645/6). In 1689 he was named among the officers of the local Militia, charged with defending the kingdom. Along with William Turnbull of Sharplaw he was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanter soldiers whe travelling between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean and brought to Lilliesleaf Moor; there they were released, but immediately taken prisoner at gunpoint by Thomas Turnbull of Standhill and others, who took their horses and held him until the preaching was over. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. He is probably the Walter of Newhouse who married Christian Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1684. In 1693 his uncle John Reid granted him a tenement in Selkirk. He was 'Walter ridell of Neuhous' in 1694 when he paid tax on 4 hearths in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear if he is the same man as Walter (b.c.1620) of Newhouse who appears to have died in the 1680s. His daughter may have been Annie, who married Rev. Simon. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter 'Dusty Fit' (d.bef. 1723) miller of Allanhaugh Mill in the years around 1700. He may have been related to the later tenant at Southdean Mill. He was listed at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was taxed for 3 hearths because he was 'wt tuo kilns', suggesting that he was the miller there at that time. Probably the same Walter rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1690–98. He was at Allanhaugh Mill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He may be the Walter who acted as cautioner for Margaret in 1705, when she leased part of Branxholme Town farm. He is probably the miller at Allanhaugh Mill called 'Dustyfit' who was there around 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. In 1708 he and James Paterson were 'undermillers' when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott wright at Millport. He is probably the 'undermiller in Hawick' when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Elliot, 'tacksman of ye mill' and James Paterson, 'undermiller in ye sd town'. In 1711 he was still undermiller in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Aitkin, other undermiller at Hawick (with miller Walter Elliot as the other witness). His children included Anna (b.1700), with baptismal witnesses Henry Orrock and William Riddell (who was surely related). Bessie who married another Walter Miller (at Philhope Mill) in 1709 was his daughter. He was recorded as deceased and 'sometimes in Allan-haugh mill' when his daughter Mary married William Helm in 1723. William, who was tenant at Allanhaugh Mill and became a Burgess in 1729, was probably his son. Margaret, who married John Scoon, may have been a daughter of his (since his name appears as a witness to one of their children's baptisms). It is possible that 2 different generations of miller are compounded here. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Margaret, who was also listed there. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Graham and their daughter Anna was baptised in 1700. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Wright and their son Walter was baptised in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller at Philhope Mill, as recorded in 1709. He married Bessie Riddell, daughter to Walter, miller at Allanhaugh Mill in Hawick in 1709. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Isobel (b.1707); Bessie (b.1709); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie Walter Elliot and miller James Paterson. He may be related to other millers of the same surname. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Murray and their daughter Alison was baptised in 1711. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Helen Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1716. Walter of Newhouse (d.1742) apprenticed to John Wilkie, he became Writer to the Signet in 1742. He married Jean Pringle. It is unclear how he was related to the other Riddells of Newhouse. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the same Walter listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Young in 1728. He married Marion Liddell and their children included James (b.1687), Jean (b.1699), William (b.1702) and Helen (b.1703). The witnesses in both 1699 and 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant John Forman and in 1709 were baker John Whillans and Henry Orrock. Probably the same tailor Walter secondly married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1704. Walter of Friarshaw (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. In 1701 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in right of his deceased father William, who was an advocate. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Walter (17th/18th C.) from the Lilliesleaf branch of the family. He was tenant farmer at North Synton. In 1706 his eldest daughter Margaret married John of Muselee. Sir Walter of that Ilk (d.1747) 4th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father Sir John in 1700. In 1695 he would have been the 'younger' of Riddell who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also 'younger of that Ilk' in 1695 when he contributed £400 to the Darien Scheme. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1700 he was recorded in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. In 1702 (by 'act of Council') and again in 1706 (by right of his deceased father) he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. In 1706 he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest; this presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. In 1727–28 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington in a land dispute. His lands in Morebattle were valued at over £5000 in the 1740s. In 1692 he married Margaret, daughter of John Watt of Rosehill; she was a daughter of his step-mother. His children were: John, an advocate who pre-deceased him; Sir Walter, who did succeed; Thomas of Camieston, whose son William married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; William, who moved to Bermuda; Robert, minister of Lilliesleaf; Ann (or perhaps Jane or Elenor), who married John Carre of Cavers; Sarah, who married John Forest; and Christian, who died young. He is said to have been very pious and somewhat eccentric, for example on occasion interrupting his son Robert's sermons, saying 'Robert, that won't do!', and he refused to stop people coming onto his land, saying 'The Earth is the Lord's!' James may have been another son, who moved to Ireland, was knighted, and wrote his name 'Riddall'. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope Mill in at least the period 1714–29. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1714); Marion (b.1717); Anna (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Walter (again, b.1729). He is easy to confuse with another Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time; he is probably the one who married Helen Scott in Roberton in 1712. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw. His daughter Marion was baptised at the end of 1717 in Roberton Parish; this was 9 months after another Marion was baptised, daughter of Walter in Whithope Mill (so it is fairly clear that this was a different man). He could be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert and Andrew. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, who may have been his, included: Margaret (b.1712); Walter (b.1720); and Walter (again, b.1725). He is probably the Walter who married Margaret Simpson in Roberton in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthaugh in 1723 and 1724. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in Borthaugh. In 1719 he married Mary Storie. Their children included: Robert and William (b.1720); twins Gideon and Andrew (b.1723); Walter (b.1724); Isobel (b.1727); Margaret (b.1729); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were George Bell and Tom (or similar) Turnbull, in 1724 were Walter and John Scott and in 1729 were James Scott and Robert Cowan. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at East Burnfoot in 1725, Galalaw in 1732 and Hornshole in 1737. He is probably the William who in 1735 witnessed a baptism for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Margaret (or Marion) Waugh in 1724 and their children included Robert (b.1725), Janet (b.1727), James (b.1730), Bessie (b.1732) and Margaret (b.1737). The 1737 baptism was separately recorded with 'Margaret Riddell' as the mother, with witnesses Robert Scott and John Sinton. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott and in 1732 were Robert Riddell (probably a relative) and Adam Wright. He was probably related to Robert, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. The funeral of Janet in Burnfoot Mill was recorded in 1750 and may have been his daughter. Sir Walter of that Ilk (1695–1765) 5th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He was recorded as a merchant in Eyemouth in 1727 when listed (along with his brother John) among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, and was father of Gen. Henry James Riddell, Commander of the forces in Scotland; and Andrew. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Alton in 1738. In 1737 he married Agnes Wilson and their children included: John (b.1738); and Janet (b.1740). The witnesses in 1738 were Andrew ... and John Kersel. Walter of Newhouse and Glenriddell (d.1788) son of Rev. Simon. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Annie, daughter and heiress of Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, a very distant cousin. He thereby became Laird of Glenriddell in Dumfriesshire. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He may be the Riddell of Newhouse who sold lands in Lilliesleaf Parish to Rev. William Campbell. His children were: Robert, who succeeded, was a great friend of Robert Burns, married Miss Kennedy, and died without children; Walter, who succeeded after his brother and married Maria Woodley, daughter of the Governor of St. Kitts, Leeward Islands; Sophia; and Alexander. Walter (18th C.) resident at Whithope Mill in 1767 and 1774 when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included Walter (b.1767) and Jean

(b.1774). He is surely related to the earlier Walter and John in Whithope Mill. Walter of Friar's Glen (1758–1809) 3rd surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. He married Christian, eldest daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. Their children were: Patrick, who died unmarried; and Mary (b.1809), who married George Hutton, and whose son Capt. Hutton Riddell inherited Muselee. He died the same year as his second child. Walter (b.1760) 2nd son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He married Janet Hamilton and moved to Carlisle. Their children were: James (b.1784), who had 3 daughters, including Jennie, who married John Hislop; Frank (b.1786), who was a store clerk in Leith and died unmarried; Willie (b.1789), who settled in Carlisle; Isabella (b.1791); Margaret (b.1793); and Walter, who was born in Hawick, was training for the ministry, but died young. Sir Walter Buchanan (c.1764–84) 7th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir John, who died when he was quite young. Said to be of delicate health, he died just about when he reached majority. He was succeeded by his brother Sir James. His tutors, who dealt with rentals of his properties etc., were James Riddell and Archibald Buchanan. Walter (18th C.) recorded as 'of Muselee' in a marriage bond of 1769 for his daughter Agnes with John, son of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He may have been a younger son of John of Muselee. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Commonside in 1785 and 1788. He married Betty Glendinning and their children included: Janet (b.1775); John (b.1778); Betty (b.1780); Rachel (b.1783); Janet (again, b.1785); Mary (b.1788); and James (b.1791). The witnesses in 1785 and 1788 were the whole congregation and in 1791 were Archibald Elliot from Bowanhill and John (probably a close relative). Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope for about 50 years. He was shepherd there according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His son John was shepherd at Clarilaw. He could be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother's name given) included: Robert (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1783); John (b.1784); William (b.1788); and James (b.1796). Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. A note says 'Peace officer', suggesting perhaps that he might not need to serve on account of already working as an officer in the parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Southdean Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He may have been father of Robert, who was recorded at Southdean Mill in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Walter (b.c.1785) 3rd son of William, he was a joiner in Lilliesleaf like his father. He was recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living with Elizabeth, probably his daughter. His sons included: William, who married Margaret Lambert and emigrated to Philadelphia; and Walter, who also emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (1798–1863) son of Hawick shoemaker William and Jean Goodfellow. He worked as a spinner in Wilton. In 1835 he was listed at Dovemount amount heads of households in Wilton Kirk, and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as living in Hawick. On the 1841 census he was on O'Connell Street and in 1851 was on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Andrew, Thomas, Jean, Janet and John. Walter (1800–81) eldest son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer near Hawick and then at Philiphaugh. In 1841 he was living at Eastfield in Bowden, in 1851 at Philiphaugh Cottages and in 1861 at Old Broadmeadows. He married Margaret Baxter and their children included John, Mary, James, Margaret, Robert and Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. Walter (19th C.) married Elizabeth Young in Lilliesleaf in 1841. Walter see Walter Riddell Carre. Sir Walter Buchanan (1810–92) eldest son of Sir John Buchanan, who died when he was young. He was born at Riddell House, and educated at Eton and Oxford. Although he became the 10th Baronet in 1819, the family sold the Riddell estate in 1823. However, he did succeed to the smaller estate of Hepple in Northumberland. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1834. He was Magistrate and Chief Steward in Northumberland and Judge in North Staffordshire, as well as serving as an M.P. He gave a lot of help to Rev. G.T. Ridlon, in his compilation of a family history, published in 1884. He married Alicia Ann, youngest daughter of William Ripley in 1850, but they had no children. He was succeeded by his nephew Sir John Walter Buchanan, son of Rev. John Charles. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (1834–77) eldest son of Henry Scott, minister of

Teviothead. He worked with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. He is surely the 'W. Scott Riddell, Esq., Shanghai' who in 1871 donated to the Museum a 'Chinese compass'. by 1875 he was in London when he donated a 'Chinese great coat and hat, to suit'. He married Agnes, daughter of David Arnot, minister of St. Giles. He was obviously named after his father's patron. He died in London. Walter (b.1837/8) son of William, he was born in Lilliesleaf and was a baker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 25 High Street with his siblings. In 1866 he donated to the Museum 'an old coin, found in the Slitrig'. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan (1879–1934) son of John Walter Buchanan, he was 12th Baronet of Riddell. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became Principal of Hertford College there. He was also Chairman of the University Grants Committee. In 1919 he married Rachel, daughter of Cahrles Lyttelton, 8th Viscount Cobham. They had 8 children, and he was succeeded by Sir John, who was an infant at the time. Sir Walter John Buchanan (1974–) 14th Baronet of Riddell, son of Sir John Charles Buchanan. He has been Managing Director of the companies Cluff Geothermal Limited and Lilliesleaf Limited. His son Finlay John (b.2001) is heir apparent. William (12th C.) witness to documents for 'Morgrundus' Count of Mar, relating to St. Andrews Priory, where he is 'Willelmo de ridal'. This was probably around the 1170s. He may be the younger son of Galfridus/Geoffrey who was Lord of Farringdon in Northamptonshire and Primside and Glengarnock in Scotland, who served in the court of William I and died in 1214. William (12th/13th C.) son of Ausketill and brother of Patrick. In some genealogies he is stated to be a son of Patrick, but this appears to be incorrect. He married Matilda Corbet, to whom he granted several pieces of land in dowry. He received part of the lands of Whitton, although he had no heirs, so all these lands reverted to the head of the family later. His wife is recorded yielding up lands to her Lord, Patrick of Riddell in the early 1200s; her son seems to have been Alexander Seton, and so presumably she secondly married a Seton. He may be the same as the son of Ansketill (recorded as Walter) who had a papal letter of protection in about 1170. This mentions that the same family still held lands at Brawby in Yorkshire. Sir William of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 6th Laird, son of Walter and grandson of Patrick. He is said to have been knighted at a young age by Alexander II. He married Isabella, daughter of William, Parson of Hownam. In the early years of the 13th century his wife Isabella gave a piece of land in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This charter mentions several family members, proving 4 successive descents. However, the heir of Sir William is uncertain, as are the next few generations. He may have been succeeded by another William. He is probably the 'domino Willelmo de Redale' who witnessed a charter of lands in Lempitlaw to Soutra around 1250; 'domino Roberto Redale' was also listed, so presumably his son or brother. William (13th C.) listed among the jurors at Corbridge in Northumberland in 1256 as 'Willelmus de Ridal'. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the same as the 'Willelmo Redale' who witnessed a charter for the lands of Lempitlaw in about 1250. Sir William (13th C.) listed in the period 1279–86 when he was witness to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. He also witnessed the previous grant of the same lands by John de Vescy and its confirmation. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. William (13th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as 'William de Rydale', a Burgess of Inverkeithing. There are 3 other entries for men of the same surname, all called Hugh. Sir William (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1301 when there was an arrangement to swap him (as an English supporter of Edward I) for 2 Scottish prisoners. Probably the same 'Willelmo Redell' was a witness in 1302 to the granting of the half-barony of Minto from Walter Boredon to Philip de la Ley. In 1305 there was a warrant of Edward I to pay him for assisting Robert Hastings at Roxburgh Castle. And in 1306 there was a letter asking for his protection (as well as others) from the Chancellor of England, since he was helping keep down Edward's enemies in Scotland. He may be the same man as Sir William of Tillmouth and Twizel (son of Walter), who was appointed Sheriff of Northumberland in 1314 and was one of the custodians of Norham Castle; his children included William (who succeeded) and Hugh. William (d.1328) son of Sir William of Tillmouth, who held lands in the Durham area. He was Constable of Norham Castle and High Sheriff of Northumberland, and played a role in the managing of the Marches for King Edward II. Part of his lands was held by his brother Hugh, whose descendants were later Sheriffs and Mayors of Newcastle. His lands were eventually inherited by his 3 daughters, Isabel, Constantine and Joan. This branch of family usually spelled their name 'Ridell'. William (13th/14th C.) possibly son of William and hence 7th Riddell of that Ilk. However, this period in the genealogy is difficult to follow, and there may well be additional generations, since some accounts suggest impossibly long lifespans. He probably died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Geoffrey. William (14th C.) Keeper of Barnard Castle. In 1330 he was allocated money for the rents of lands in County Durham in the period 1319–23. Sir William (14th C.) possibly eldest son of Geoffrey and brother of Sir Robert and Richard. However, these generations are quite confused. He may have been knighted by David II and died in the reign of Robert II. He was probably father of Quentin or Mungo (or both). William (15th C.) recorded as 'Wil. Ridile' in 1498/9 when he witnessed a charter in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same 'Willelmi Riddale' had an escheat in Lanark recorded in 1501. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William (16th C.) described in a sasine of 1535 (relating to Harden) as 'Bailie in that part' along with George. He was probably a son of the Laird of Riddell (although which one is unclear). William (16th C.) probably a younger son of John of that Ilk. He is described in a document of 1551 receiving the lands of Bewlie from John of that Ilk and his heir Walter, who was his brother. He may be the brother of the Laird of Riddell who witnessed a transaction in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1564. William of Bewlie (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, and probably son of the previous Walter. However, it seems hard to separate different Williams and Walters around this time. He may be the William who warranted the lands in Lillieleaf that William Middlemas leased to John Donaldson in 1580. He witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. He was 'in Lyllisle' in 1581 when he witnessed a sasine for Andrew, heir apparent of Walter of that Ilk (in the name of his sister Janet) for the lands of Wester Horsburgh in Peeblesshire from Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He may be the same William 'in Lillslie' who was involved in an action with William Middlemas in 1589. He could be the William 'in Lilleslie' whose son Thomas was signatory in 1592 to a caution for James Scott of Whithope, signed at Cavers Carre. In 1595/6 he was brother of Walter of that Ilk when he had confirmed to him the '5 pound lands of Bewlie and the half cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf'. William (16th C.) probably the name of William 'Rydlie' who was accused in 1590 of rieving crimes along with Martin's Airchie Elliot and Hob of Bowholm Elliot. He may also be the 'William Rydlie of Hawcuppe' accused of rieving in 1590, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Nixons, Shiels and others; it is unclear where 'Hawcuppe' may have been. William (d.c.1630) recorded being granted the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of the deceased George and his lands were '6 husbandlands'. He may have been son of George of that Ilk who is recorded several decades earlier. His sister Margaret, wife of Rev. Andrew Duncanson, was served heir to his lands in 1630. William (16th/17th C.) miller at Todrig Mill. In 1617 there was a complaint by Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, that he was responsible for the death of her only son. He was said to have been encouraged regularly by Walter Scott of Harden to harass her family; this was presumably part of a family feud connected with the death of Walter Scott's son Walter. In fact Mary Scott claimed that he was with the Scotts of Harden, fishing on the Ettrick on the lands of Scott of Bonnington, when the younger Walter was killed in a fracas. He was later part of a group of Scotts of Harden and their supporters who drove her off the land of Newhouse. William of Muselee (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of that Ilk, with his mother being a Pringle. He received the lands of Newhouse (in Lilliesleaf) as his inheritance. He also had a charter of Muselee in 1618. He married Bessie Ainslie. Their sons may have been John of Muselee and William of Newhouse (although these generations are confused). Helen, a direct descendant, married William Crawford, minister of Wilton, in 1716. William (d.bef. 1652) son of Walter. He is probably the William 'portioner of Bewlie' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he gave his five-pound land of Bewlie and half a cotland to his brother Walter in Langhaugh. He married Helen Scott. In 1652 there is a marriage contract of his eldest daughter Margaret with Robert, 2nd son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. William of Newhouse (17th C.) probably younger son of William of Muselee. His 2nd son was Walter, who purchased the Minto estate. William (17th C.) son of Walter of Bewlie. In 1649 he became an apprentice merchant with James Ker in Edinburgh. He may be the same as (or easily confused with) other Williams associated with the area. William of Bewlie (d.c.1695) son and heir of Henry. He was confirmed in the lands of Bewlie in 1669 and in 1670 gave part of the lands to his mother, Janet Scott. His sister Agnes succeeded to his lands in 1695 and married John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He is probably the resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John, 1st Baronet of Riddell and brother of Walter, 2nd Baronet. He was knighted by Charles I and served in the army in the Netherlands, being appointed Governor of 'Desborough' (probably Doesburgh). He married Wendelina de Bercham (or perhaps Buchan) in 1654. He had sons Walter and William, who moved to New Jersey, and other sons, Richard and John Frederick. His daughter Anne Catherine married Nicholas, son of Francis Bowyer and became heiress to her brother John Frederick (in 1677) and sister Margaret. William of Friarshaw (d.c.1693) 2nd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell. He acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Dumfriesshire and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell. He was an advocate, perhaps being the William, writer in Edinburgh, who was deputed by others to subscribe to the Darien Scheme in 1696. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope. Their son Walter was the first of the Riddells of Glenriddell (formerly Gilmerston) in Dumfriesshire. Walter was served as his heir in 1693. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included: Thomas (b.1694) and William (b.1697), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1706), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1697 were William Scott and John Turnbull and in 1706 were John Scott 'whitegates' and John Scott 'younger Soger'. William (17th/18th C.) son of Patrick of Muselee and brother of John of Muselee. In 1701, along with his brother John, he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of George. He may have been the William, son of George and Janet Phaup who was baptised in Roberton in 1681. He was living at Appletreehall in 1722. He witnessed a baptism for John Thomson (in Drinkstone) in 1722. He married Isobel Morrison in 1707 and their children included: Janet (b.1716); William (b.1717); John (b.1720); and Mary (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were John Thomson and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) living at Borthaugh in 1707 according to the Roberton Parish records. His wife Isobel had acted as midwife for the wife of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were smith Robert Miller and Thomas Scott in Brieryhill. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1713 and 1719 he witnessed baptisms for gardener James Dunn and in 1723 another for James Stot, miller in Weensland. He married Agnes Nichol in 1704. Their children included: Margaret (b.1705); John (b.1708); Agnes (b.1717); William (b.1719); and Helen (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were gardeners James Dunn and James Falsyde and in 1712 were gardener James Dunn and weaver James Sanderson. Walter (b.1700), John (b.1706), Francis (b.1710), Janet (b.1712), Andrew (b.1713), Janet (b.1715), Robert (b.1715) and Janet (b.1717), baptised in Hawick Parish, could also be his children (although there may be 2 families here). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Armstrong in 1704. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he married Margaret, daughter of David Minto and their children included: David (b.1714); Margaret (b.1719); and an unnamed son (b.1721). William (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'fornicator' in 1725 when his son James with Euphan Telfer was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were another William (perhaps a cousin or other relative) and John Graham. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Greenshiels in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) and another in 1717 for weaver Robert Wight. In 1717 he was abused in the street by 'Jafra the Piper'. He married Magdalene Deans and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1738); Henry (b.1739); and Isobel (b.1741). The witnesses in 1738 were shoemaker Robert Minto and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was probably son or brother of Walter, 'Dustyfit'. In 1729 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick and referred to as 'late in Allanhaughmilne'. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1700. He is one of 2 Williams in Allanhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for John Scott, millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for tailor Walter Rae and another in 1745 for wright James Roger. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752); this was along with Charles Tudhope, who also witnessed the same baptism in 1745. He may be the merchant who supplied pipes to William Scott of Whitehaugh before his death in 1750. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1761 for William Gledstains and Katherine Riddell (perhaps a relative). It is possible he was the William who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and the William who witnessed a baptism for James Brown (also a shoemaker) in 1780. William (18th C.) married Elizabeth Thomson in Minto in 1734. William (18th C.) resident of Woodfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Elliot and their children included Mary (b.1756) and James (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Patrick Scott and George Hart. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1766 when his son John was baptised. He may be the William who married Mary Thomson in Roberton in 1753. His children were probably Robert (b.1753) and John (b.1766). He may be the William who in 1771 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. He could be the William from 'Newmills' recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. William (d.1788) described in 'Dodsley's Annual Register' as dying at Selkirk at the incredible age of 116. He was said to have been a smuggler in his early life, and a great lover of brandy. He was also meant to have been a heavy drinker, who went through binges lasting several days. He married 3 times, the last being when he was 95. It is unclear how he was related to other local Riddells. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Affleck and their children included Margaret (b.1769), John (b.1772), Barbara (b.1775) and Anne (b.1780). William (18th C.) 4th son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He emigrated to the West Indies, settling in Bermuda, where he was a merchant. He married Dinah Darrel and their children included John, Margaret, Robert, William, Sarah and Elizabeth. One of his descendants wrote a medical thesis. It is thought that this branch died out after only another couple of generations. William, W.S. of Camieston (1746–1829) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded since his older brother had died young. He was educated in Edinburgh and trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Thomas Cockburn and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1770. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was listed in 1788 as owner of 5 acres in 'Annay' in Melrose and Camieston in Lessuden Parish, as well as £390 of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He may be the William of George Square, Edinburgh, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He served as a Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in at least 1798. He acquired the farm of Union Hall (also known as Linthill) in Lilliesleaf Parish, from his mother's family, the Hunters; however, in 1822 he sold it to William Currie, along with lands in Chapel, 'Mr. Scott's Acres in Lilliesleaf' and Porteous Croft' (according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He also sold parts of Bewlie, which were later owned by Thomas A. Riddell Carre. He was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire in 1788 and was further was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1776 he married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Thomas (1778–1826), who succeeded; John (1779–1814), who served with the East India Company and died on the way home; Jane (1781–1849), who died unmarried; Adm. Robert (1782–1860), a decorated naval officer, who succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre and took the additional surname 'Carre'; Elizabeth (1785–1846), also unmarried; and Margaret (1787–1843), also died unmarried. William (18th C.) wright of Hawick, recorded in 1792 when his daughter Helen married Robert Boa in Edinburgh. He could be the same as the William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick in 1794 when his daughter Isobel married David Simpson in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) joiner in Lilliesleaf. He was said to be a descendant of the Riddells of Riddell. He married Margaret Hervey and their children were: John, who was a joiner; Thomas, a thatcher; Walter, who married Batsy Young; Mary, who married Glasgow merchant Thomas Cochran; and Margaret, who married tailor James Walker. William (d.1800) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths. He was listed as father of Martha and Mary, so the rest of his family were presumably deceased by then. William (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Rutherford in Cavers Parish in 1789. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Hermitage, born in Roxburghshire, and said to be a direct descendant of the Riddells of that Ilk. He married Catherine (or 'Kitty') Brydon and they had 9 children: John (b.1798); William (b.1801), who married Jessie Watson and emigrated to Canada; Janet (b.1803); James; Thomas, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada and married twice; Willhelmina; Mary, also moved to Canada; Anne, emigrated to Canada and married Hugh Smith; married Robert Craig and emigrated to Canada. It seems likely he was the William resident of Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 (meaning he was born in the 1770s), and who was a 'Driver' in Newcastleton on the 1801 Militia ballot. William (d.1827) shoemaker of Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier William. He married Jean Goodfellow in 1796, and she died in 1838. Their children included wool-spinner Walter (1798–1863). William (b.c.1780) ploughman at Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (1789–1867) eldest son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott. He was a shepherd at Bellendean, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He was also shepherd at Bellendean at the time of the Carterhaugh Baa (1815), when he played for the Yarrow side, being known as one of the best runners in the district; he would have hailed a ball had he not been pursued by a farmer on horseback. He and Henry Scott farmed together at Ramsaycleuch. He married Elizabeth Milne (1799/1800–53) in 1831. His wife is recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1841 with 5 children. He was still recorded in a directory of 1868 as farmer at Ramsaycleuchburn. Their children (all of who were born at Ramsaycleuchburn except the first) included: Margaret (b.1831); Robert Borthwick (1833–62), who died unmarried; William Milne (1835–1913), who farmed at Ramsaycleuchburn after his father and died at Bucklands Cottage; James Scott (b.1837), who moved to Cumberland; Jessie (b.1839), who married William Easton; Agnes Scott (b.1842), who married Thomas Irving of Langholm, and secondly married James Lunn, also from Langholm; and Eliza (1844–52). Most of the family are buried at Teviothead. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (18th/19th C.) sheriff officer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first (and perhaps only) time in 1838. Maj.-Gen. William of Camieston (1805–75) eldest son of Thomas of Camieston and descendant of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. His brother was Walter of Cavers Carre. He entered the East India Company's military service in 1823, joining the 2nd Battalion of the 30th Native Infantry, rising through the ranks until achieving command of the regiment. He commanded the 30th Regiment of European Infantry during the Indian Mutiny, and was involved in many other important campaigns. He received several medals and retired from service in 1861, returning to live at Camieston. Afterwards he played an active role in the activities of the 3rd Roxburghshire Rifle Colunteer Corps. He was also Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. His father Thomas had married a sister of Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill; after Col. Hunter's death his father succeeded to the estate of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, but it was sold before he succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Capt. John Wilkie, and she died in 1905, aged 85. They had 9 children, and he was succeeded by his only surviving son, William. He was buried at Bowden. William (1801–83) son of William and Catherine Brydon, he was born at Hermitage. He married Jessie, daughter of John and Euphemia Watson, from Oxnam Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1831 and was a farmer in Beverley, Ontario. His children were William, John, Euphemia and James. William (b.1803) son of Thomas and Rachel Stirling. He was a joiner in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a wright. He married Agnes Deans in 1832 and their children included: Thomas, a carpenter who emigrated to America; James, also a carpenter; Janet; Walter, a baker; and Rachel. He was deceased by 1851, when his wife and 3 children were living in Hawick. William (b.1816) carpenter in Lilliesleaf, son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull and grandson of joiner William. In 1841 he was a journeyman, living with Elizabeth, who was probably his mother. In 1851 he is listed on the south side of Main Street. He married Esther Thomson in 1843 and their children were: Jane (b.1844), who married James Hogg; John (b.1846); Betsy (b.1849); Andrew (b.1852); George (b.1854); Walter (b.1856); and Ellen (b.1858). William Brown Clark (1835–56) youngest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He was born at the Flex. He attended John Watson's Institution in Edinburgh, and then went to the University there. He was described as a student and poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20. His poem 'The Lament to Wallace' appeared in some collections of Scottish verse (formerly spelled 'Reddail', 'Reddall', 'Reddale', 'Reddell', 'Reiddall', 'Ridale', 'Riddaile', 'Riddaill', 'Riddall', 'Riddale', 'Riddel', 'Riddele', 'Ridel', 'Ridelle', 'Rydal', 'Rydale', 'Ryddell', 'Rydel', 'Rydell', 'Ryedale', etc.).

Riddell-Buchanan (ri-dul-bew-ka-nin) n. compound surname adopted by some generations of the Riddells of that Ilk, after they inherited Buchanan estates through marriage in 1772. Its use was abandoned by more recent generations, who reverted to the use of 'Riddell', with

'Buchanan' as an additional middle name (see Riddell).

Riddell Carre (ri-dul-ker, -kar) n. Adm. Robert (1782–1860) 3rd son of William Riddell of Camieston and Elizabeth Kerr, daughter of John of Cavers Carre. He was a Captain in the Royal Navy, entering in 1796 and being present at several battles, including Copenhagen and Algiers. He eventually had the rank of Admiral. He succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate following the death of his uncle Alexander in 1817, and his mother in 1828. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Walter. Thomas Alexander (1831–1905) son of Walter. He succeeded to Cavers Carre on the death of his father in 1874. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was listed as owner of lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Colonel in the 4th Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers and served with the East India Company. He was also a Captain in the Ayrshire and Wigtonshire Militia. He was a Justice of the Peace, was on the county council for Lilliesleaf and was Chairman of Bowden Parish Council. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1865 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alfred T. Fellows from near Nottingham; her brother was the archæologist Sir Charles Fellows. He was succeeded by his son Ralph Gervase, and also had daughters Elizabeth Olive Geva and Grizel Geva. Walter (1807–74) 2nd son of Thomas Riddell of Camieston, and descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was born in Edinburgh and educated there. He worked as a merchant at East India House in London for 20 years. In 1848 he retired to Hertfordshire and in 1860 he succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre after the death of his uncle Robert. He then took the additional surname 'Carre'. In 1866 he loaned to the Museum a portrait of the mother of General Riddell; he also gave a talk about prominent Borderers to the Society after the close of the 1866 exhibition. He moved back to Scotland permanently in 1869. He was a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He devoted much of his time to researching the families and characters of the Borders. He contributed to local newspapers, as well as 'Notes and Queries', and was in demand as a popular lecturer. A collection of his writings was published after his death, 'Border Memories; or, Sketches of Prominent Men and Women of the Border' (1876), edited by James Tait of the Kelso Chronicle. In 1830 he married Elizabeth Riddell MacLauchlan, only surviving child of Lieut.-Col. Lauchlan MacLauchlan. He secondly married Mary Falconer, daughter of William Currie of Linthill. His son Capt. Thomas Alexander succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate. He was buried at Bowden.

Riddell Chaipel (ri-dul-chā-pul) n. former chapel said to have stood on the lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, later called Riddell. The location was supposed to be near the old ash tree not far from the gate leading from the Easter Lodge to the mansion house, a little south of the site of the old tower. The field in which the ruins were located was known as 'Chapel Park'. There is a report of 2 stone coffins being unearthed from the foundations around 1850, one containing a pot with ashes and pieces of armour, and the other containing bones of gigantic size.

Riddell Hoose (ri-dul-hoos) n. former mansion house on the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish, It replaced an earlier house, which in turn replaced the castle, which probably dates to Norman times. The original tower-house was probably constraucted around the 14th century, enlarged in the 16th century and again in the 17th, making a long southerly front of 2 storeys. It was listed among the principal houses on the Ale in 1649. A third Storey was added in the 18th century, along with a north-west wing, with a north-east wing added in the 19th century. Tax was paid on 47 windows there in 1748. It was largely destroyed by fire in 1943, although it exists in photographs and drawings. The estate office, built in 1826, is now the main house of the estate, with lintels marking its construction and rennovation in 1898 and the arms of the Sprots built into a gable (see also Riddell Toor).

Riddell Mains (ri-dul-mānz) n. former name for the main lands in Lilliesleaf Parish held by the Riddells of that Ilk. In 1643 it was valued at £910, being the bulk of the property of the Laird at that time. It was still listed in the same way in 1788, when owned by Sir John Riddell. It was probably equivalent to what was later just called 'Riddell'.

Riddell Mill (ri-dul-mil) n. former corn mill on the Riddell estate, on the opposite side of the main farm. The mill was water powered and fed by a small lade that is now covered. The mill building survives, although all fittings have been removed and it is now in use as a barn. Situated in a bend in the Ale Water, at the foot of Dunstane Height, it was formerly also known as Dunstane Mill. In 1643 the 'Town Mill and Mill thereof' was valued at £247, among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk. However, it was sold before 1678, with value of £167. Thomas Lawrie was there in 1785. It was recorded as 'Lands of Townmill, and mill thereof' as part of the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788. John Haldane was miller there in 1841, James Haldane in the 1850s and Alexander Lauder in the 1860s. The name was also used for a water-powered saw-mill, built on the Riddell estate in the early 19th century.

the Riddells (thu-ri-dulz) n. family of Riddell of that Ilk, who gained lands at Riddell, in Lilliesleaf parish around the middle of the 12th century and were granted a baronetcy in 1628. About 1823 the estate was sold to the Sprots. For several centuries the family were buried at Lilliesleaf. The family has a Norman origin and received the lands of Rydedale in Yorskshire, being given the designation 'de Ridel' for several generations. Tradition (encouraged by Sir Walter Scott) told of stone coffins at Riddell bearing the dates 797 and 937. However, there is no reason to believe that the family's origins can be traced back quite so far. The early history of the family is confused by the contemporary use of the same name by different men, with early Christian names including William, Geoffrey (or Galfridus) and Hugh. The history is further complicated by the family's habit of calling their lands after themselves (rather than the other way around), and it seems clear that the Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish was not the original family home. The name occurs in England at the time of William the Conqueror, when lands were granted in Northumbria, following the Battle of Hastings. Another branch of the family appears to have remained on the continent, settling in Italy in the 11th century. Meanwhile the English family moved to Scotland along with David I, Gervase being the first Scotsman. The lands they were granted near Lilliesleaf appear to have been named after their former designation. The arms of Riddell of that Ilk shows 3 ears of corn (or rye) and a red chevron. The family motto is 'I hope to share' and the crest shows a greyhound. Some papers from the Riddells of Riddell are held in the Northumberland Archives (formerly spelled 'Ridel', etc., and interchangeable with 'Riddle').

Riddells Creek (ri-dulz-kreek) n. small town in the state of Victoria, Australia, located between the cities of Melbourne and Bendigo. It was named by John Carre Riddell, who was born near Lilliesleaf.

Riddellshiel (ri-dul-sheel) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Clerklands. The woods to the north are called Riddellshiel Plantation, and a small lake to the west is Riddellshiel Moss.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddelstead, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Riddale Steid' on the 1541 rental roll. It is there said to be hereditary property of the Laird of Glendinning, held of the Lord of Liddesdale.

Riddell Toor (ri-dul-toor, -tow-ur) n. former peel tower on the Riddell estate. The name is also used for the more modern tower built nearby, referred to as the General's Toor. The first fortified house on these lands was probably built shortly after the Riddell family acquired the lands in the 12th century. But the existing structure is probably from the 14th century, and was only revealed after the mansion burned down in 1943. The surviving walls are in the south-west corner. There is also evidence of 16th century stonework. The tower was probably converted into a mansion house in the 17th century, making a long southern front of 2 storeys, with a 3rd floor added in the 18th century, along with further wings in the 18th and 19th centuries. The ruins are now among mature woodland to the north-east of the main farmhouse.

ridder (ri-dur) n., arch. someone who acts to separate combatants – '...and that he was the Ridder who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan' [PR1716].

Riddington (ri-din-tin) n. Anthony (1911–98) from Countesthorpe, Leicestershire. He was a professional cricketer, who played for Hawick & Wilton in the 1930s.

Riddle (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddell) Andrew C. (b.1856/7) son of tailor William. He worked as an engineer on the Aberdeen steamships and emigrated to Australia. He married Georgina Johnstone. He could be the Andrew who in 1874 donated a silver coin to the Museum. George John (1830–1920) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was a tailor and clothier and cousin of John, also a tailor in Hawick. His sister Helen married John Graham of 'Graham's Hotel'. He married Margaret, daughter of William Clark and Jane Murray, and she died in 1921, aged 91; she was a cousin of the father of Sir James A.H. Murray. The couple celebrated their golden wedding in 1900, when they had 5 sons, 2 daughters and 19 grandchildren, and they lived to see their 70th wedding anniversary. Their children were: John, fishmonger, who married Helen Elliot; William, joiner in Birkenhead, who married Jean Roberts; Andrew C., engineer on the Aberdeen steamships, who emigrated to Australia and married Georgina Johnstone; James, stockingmaker, who married Mary Elliot; Thomas, a tailor, who married Margaret Dalgleish; George, Co-op store manager in Newcastleton; Jane, who married hosiery manager Robert Hamilton; Robert, bank clerk in South Africa; Anne, hosiery worker; George J., Secretary of the Universities Club, Edinburgh, who married Lily Mackenzie; Isabel, 'Bella'; William, chemist, who married Hilda Evans; Elliot, with the Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto; Jean, who married accountant Percy Howard of Langholm; and Alexander Westwater, a chemist. Helen 'Ellen' (b.c.1813) born in Hawick, daughter of tailor Walter. She was proprietor of a grocer's shop at 24 High Street, who also kept boarders. She started by selling 2d mutton pies at weekends, the business being carried on by her niece (of the same name) as a confectioner's, and later by other family members. It was popularly known as 'Ellen Riddle's' for about a century. She is recorded as a High Street grocer on the 1851 census, living with her brothers Francis and Walter, and nieces Helen and Isabella. Probably the same Helen is recorded in Slater's 1852 directory as an earthenware and glass dealer on the High Street, as well as a grocer. In 1861 she was recorded as a 'wool framework trimmer' at 24 High Street, living with her niece Ellen and 3 boarders. Helen (b.1845/6–1914) daughter of tailor John and Margaret Armstrong. She was niece of the earlier Helen, from whom she took over the grocer's and pie shop at 24 High Street. Already in 1851 she was living with her aunt Helen (and uncles Francis and Walter), as well as her younger sister Isabella, at 24 High Street (a few houses along from her parents and siblings). She was still living with her aunt in 1861 and in 1871 she was 'Pie-Baker' and head of household, living with her sister Mary Ann and brother Frank. James Haining describes her in the 1930s as maker of 'celebrated pies still remembered'. In the latter part of the 19th century the back of the shop was also used as a meeting place for debating societies and other groups. J. (18th/19th C.) clogger in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. James (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver in Hawick. The death of his infant daughter is recorded in 1822. James (b.1822/3) wool spinner in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his mother Euphemia and others at about 23 High Street. In 1861 he was living at 13 Howegate. In 1867 he donated to the Museum an 'ancient silver coin found in Glebe Allotments'. His wife was Margaret and their children included John and Margaret. James (19th/20th C.) Master at Ashkirk School in Slater's 1903 directory. He also served as Registrar and Poor Inspector for the Parish. John (b.1800) born in Selkirk, probably son of William and Agnes Hutton. It is said that the family came from Carterhaugh in Yarrow. He was a tailor in Hawick at 12 Howegate. He is listed as a tailor on the Mid Row in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on the Howegate in 1837. He is also listed as a Howegate tailor in Slater's 1852 directory, with his son John listed as a tailor on the High Street. He was still on the Howegate on the 1861 census, and was listed as a tailor and grocer. In 1867 he donated to the museum 'The History of Plants', published in the 16th century. He married Isabella Richardson. Their children included: John (b.1819), also a tailor; William (b.1821); James (b.1822); Isabella (b.1824), who married wool merchant James Melrose; Thomas (b.1826); Agnes (b.1828; George John (b.1830); Helen (b.1831); and Catherine (b.1839), who married wool-spinner Walter Scott. John (b.1811/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor on Walter's Wynd in the 1851 census. He was thus one of 3 contemporary Hawick tailor's with the same name! His wife was Ellen and their children included Isabella and John. John (b.1819) son of Howegate tailor John, he was a tailor on the High Street. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 28 High Street, a master tailor employing 3 men; in 1861 he was listed as a tailor and clothier at 24 High Street. He married Margaret (perhaps also called 'Mary') Armstrong in 1843; she was sister of ironmonger John Armstrong and died in 1888, aged 66. Their children included: Helen (b.c.1846), who grew up with her aunt Helen and took over the pie-making business; Isabella (b.c.1848); Walter (b.c.1850); Mary Ann (b.c.1853), who married William C. Simpson and continued pie-making; Francis (b.1855); Margaret (1857–96), who married joiner George Gall; Lancelot Armstrong (b.1859); Agnes (b.1862); and John Armstrong (b.1865). John (b.c.1820) shoemaker at 8 Howegate. His wife was Maria, and their children included: Thomas; Frederick; and Cecilia. He could be the John who donated a model of Hermitage Castle to the Museum in 1863. John Turnbull (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-1800s, nicknamed 'Tip-madaisy'. Mary Ann (1852/3–1931) daughter of tailor John. She married William C. Simpson. She continued the confectionary side of the business run by her sister and aunt (both called Ellen Riddle) at 24 High Street. Walter (1789–1849) son of William, he was born in Selkirk. He became a tailor of Hawick and was a trustee of the Relief Kirk. He is listed as a tailor on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may have been related to John, who was also a Hawick tailor at about the same time. In 1841 he is listed at about 23 High Street. He married Isobel Kedzie, whose family came from Slaidhills, and she died in 1838, aged 51. Their children were: Helen, who was a grocer (of pie fame); William (b.1822/3), a tailor, who emigrated to London, Ontario; Francis, joiner; Walter, blacksmith; and Isabel. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Tait and their children included: John (b.1728); and John (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1728 appear to be John Scott and John Paterson. William (b.1822/3) son of tailor Walter. He married Wilson Stuart in Hawick in 1846. He emigrated to Canada, and settled in London, Ontario. William (19th/20th C.) joiner, with business where the Burgh yard was later located. He was a Councillor and J.P. and was for a long time Session Clerk and elder of Allars Kirk. He was probably descended from tailor Walter.

ride (rīd) v., arch. to fix boundaries, especially by perambulation, pp., arch. be ridden – 'The said day the Baylyeas and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June . . . ' [BR1705], '. . . did appoynt and ordaine the Common to ryd upon Fryday come eight dayes, being the tuenty-sixth of May instant and current' [BR1710], '. . . alledgeing that the spaidmen, thorough their inadvertence att the rydeing of the Common upon Friday last byepast, had transgressed and encroached upon his property' [BR1713] (also written 'ryd' and 'ryde', the word was used to describe the circuit of the itinerant High Court of the Judiciary in the 15th century, and was used in the context of boundary marking in Selkirk in the early 16th century; from Middle English; note the confusion with the word 'ride' meaning to go on horseback, which may have been confounded with this word in references to the 'common riding'; note that the past participle use transposes the usual object into a subject, cf. belang).

ride (rīd) v., arch. to ford a river on horseback, be fordable – 'But when the land-sergeant the water saw, It winna ride my lads, quo' he . . . ' [CPM].

ride oot see Ride-oot

ride-oot (rīd-oo') n. one of a series of practice rides before the main riding of the marches in one of several Border towns.

Ride-oot (rīd-oo') n. Ride-out, an organised visit to one of a number of local villages or farms on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the weeks between the Picking of the Cornet and the start of the Common Riding. They are essentially practices for the big weekend, and are not part of the official Common Riding, being organised by the Cornet. The first Ride-out seems to have been held in 1891 (with Andrew Haddon as Cornet and J.E.D. Murray as Right-Hand Man) and was an outing to Lilliesleaf by 5 consecutive Cornets, followed 2 weeks later by another ride-out via Branxholme, Northhouse, Skelfhill and Priesthaugh to St. Leonard's. The first Ride-out to Mosspaul was in 1901, James Sutherland's year. The Tuesday Ride-outs were originally held so that shopworkers and others could attend on half-day closing, with the mill-workers being able to attend on Saturdays. Women have been officially allowed on most Ride-outs since 1997. They extend over either 5 or 6 weeks, depending on when the Picking is. The venues are chosen each year by the Cornet (with advice from the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father). The first Ride-out has been to Bonchester since about the last war. The premier event is the ride to Mosspaul, which is 2 weeks before the Common Riding. After the last Saturday Ride-out, the Principals stop off at Hornshole. There are sometimes special one-off rides because of the place of residence of the new Cornet. Locations have included Bonchester, Cavers, Cogsmill, Denholm, Ettrickbridge, Harden House, Hermitage, Lilliesleaf, Mosspaul, Newmill, Philhope Bridge, Roberton, Skelfhill, Southfield, Teindside, Teviotdale Lodge, Teviothead, West Buccleuch and Wolfelee. Each ride-out starts with a muster in Allars Crescent, leaving from Backdamgate. The Right-Hand Man acts as front marshal and the Left-Hand Man as back marshal. There are usually lots of cars packed with picnics which go to meet the riders at the appointed location. There is normally a sing-song in the village hall or similar, and before leaving, the 'Big Fower' sing 5 verses of 'Teribus' while mounted. On returning to town, the Principals dismount at the Backdamgate and usually carry children on their shoulders round to the steps of the Tower where there is a strive and more song singing. A junior ride-out (for primary school pupils) was started in 2010 – 'oo yaise the sorta 'no the ful shillin' kinda general English ... 'twae horses short o a rideoot', that wud be a Hawick yin' [IWL] (the usualy plural is 'Ride-oots', although 'Rides-oot' might be more correct English).

ride the fair (rīd-thu-fār) v., arhc. to open a fair by riding in procession. Magistrates from Jedburgh rode the market at the Winter Fair in the early 18th century and had to be rescued from the crowd by the Hawick Magistrates! Similarly the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to ride the fair one year and had to be rescued from the Bailies, with some resulting injuries – '[The Burgh Magistrates proceeded to] ryde the fair' [BR1672] (also ridin the fair; note that this meaning of 'ride' always referred to being on horseback, unlike in common riding).

ridin (rī-din) n. the Riding of the Marches, or Common Riding, the annual marking of a town's boundaries, traditionally on horse-back – 'The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoune ...' [BR1645], 'The laird of Cowdhouse was present at the riding of the marches, along with the other gentlemen the deponent has condescended on' [DCW1765] (note that the original meaning had nothing to do with horses, see ride).

the Ridin o the Mairches (thu-rī-din-ō-thu-mār-cheez) n. the central part of Hawick Common Riding, performed by the Cornet and his followers on the Friday of Common Riding week. The riders mount at St. Leonard's (after the Chase) and proceed to the furthest point of the Common, via Wulliestruther and Acreknowe (the Cornet passes along the Hawick side, the others free to choose), for the ceremonial 'Cutting of the Sod'. The cavalcade proceeds to the Moor for the Races, then rides via Crumhaughhill to Myrselawgreen. The Principals next perform the Dipping of the Flag at the Coble Pool. Afterwards the whole party goes to the Millpath for the proclamation that the marches have been ridden and the Song-singing. Before the Division of the Common in 1777 the entire Common boundary would be marched, and many marker turfs or stones positioned, as well as neighbouring sheep and cattle driven off. Sometimes this would be done on foot over the few days before the ceremonial riding. The ceremony is believed to have taken place since at least the 16th century, but could be even older. The Council used to appoint 12 Burleymen to assist the Bailies in riding the marches, the appointment being a courtesy one after the Division, and the last appointments being made in 1854. Footmen as well as horsemen are recorded as part of the procession in 1725. The practice of riding armed with pistols was officially discontinued in 1784. In the years 1900–04 and 1921 it was switched to the Thursday morning and in 1910–13 it was moved to the Saturday. J.E.D. Murray carried it on himself during WWI and Chap Landles led the unofficial rides during WWII, while in 2001 there was an organised walk round the marches in November (see also the Common Ridin).

ridin the fair (rī-din-thu-fār) n. right of announcing a fair on horseback and collecting the duties. In Hawick there was a dispute between the Bailies and the 'tacksman of the customs' in 1673 and thereafter it was the Hawick Magistrates who 'rode the fair'. A few years later the Magistrates of Jedburgh tried to ride the fair in Hawick, but were repulsed by an angry mob. The Chamberlain of the Duke of Buccleuch then tried to re-assert authority by riding the fair himself, but a riot broke out. After further disputes over the customs, these were bought outright by the Town Council in 1862 (see also ride the fair).

ridin the mairches (rī-din-thu-mār-cheez) n. ceremonial marking of the boundaries of a town Common. Scottish towns with this tradition include, Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar, as well as the towns of the Borders.

Ridley (rid-lee) n. John (b.1794/5) civil engineer from England. He was living at Thorlieshope in 1861, but probably only there temporarily for hunting. His wife was Mary. Nicholas 'Nick' (1929–1993) Baron of Liddesdale, born in Northumberland, he was educated at Eton and Oxford University. He became an M.P. in 1959, held several appointments under Edward Heath and then became a great supporter of Margaret Thatcher. He was Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (in the years before the Falklands War), Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Secretrary of State for Transport (authoring the Ridley Report on how the Conservatives would deal with the Unions), Secretary of State for the Environment (where he popularised the phrase 'NIMBY', but reduced public funding for environmental protection) and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (which he was forced to resign after likening Helumt Kohl to Adolf Hitler).

He was also responsible for introducing the 'Poll Tax'. In 1992 he was created a life peer, choosing the title 'Baron Ridley of Liddesdale', despite objections from Scottish politicians. His puppet image on 'Spitting Image' always had a cigarette in its mouth, and he died of lung cancer shortly after being elevated to the Lords.

rieve (reev) v., arch. to plunder, rob, raid, rustle – 'God send the land deliverance Frae every reaving, riding Scot: We'll sune hae neither cow nor ewe, We'll sune hae neither staig nor stot' [LHTB], '... On their rieving raids through the glens and glades' [TK] (also written 'reive' and sometimes 'reave'; cf. reave and raif).

Rieve (reev) n. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Meadshawshiel in 1794. He married Mary Balmer in Roberton in 1789 and their children included: Agnes (b.1791); Margaret (b.1794); Joan (b.1801); and James (b.1805). John (18th C.) workman in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Douglas and their son John was baptised in 1743. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1735 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He is probably the John who married Margaret Dalgleish in Roberton in 1734. John (18th C.) tenant in Howcleuch. He married Esther Glendinning in Hawick in 1761; she died in 1807, aged 66, and is buried in Borthwick Waas. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Margaret (b.1763); Betty (b.1765); James (b.1772); and Esther (b.1779). Witnesses in 1765 and 1772 were the whole congregation. Additional children who might have been his (baptised in Southdean and Roberton) included: John (b.1767); and Nelly (b.1777). He may be the John who in 1767 witnessed a baptism for herd John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1742. He is probably the William who married Bessie Murray in Roberton in 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1740); and Andrew (b.1742) (also written 'Reive' and 'Reve').

riever (ree-vur) n. a plunderer, robber, marauder, freebooter – 'They deem you the children of rievers, Unkempt, as of old, and rude; Still bound to vie with friend or foe, In keen and narrow feud' [FH], 'Whan thou sawist ane reyffar, than thou becamist airt an' pairt wi' him ...' [HSR], 'On lone hill-sides and by fast rushing rills, Reivers and warriors now at peace are sleeping ...' [TK], '... an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid' [ECS], '... The nag of the reiver was well nigh spent, With a dragging hoof and his nose to the bent' [WHO], 'And when reivers rode and mosstroopers trod To victory or defeat On their reiving raids through the glens and glades Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet' [TK], 'A haunted land, where stalks the spectral form Of buckled reiver, driving stolen kine' [WL], 'Oo're born o rievers, Oo're no receivers, Oo gie the orders, Oo er the Borders' [DoS], 'A'm a drunkard, a Reiver, I cannot defend A user o' women, a killer o' men' [DoA] (also written 'reiver' and 'reaver').

rievit (ree-vee', -vi') pp., poet. robbed – 'The gangs o' the wicket hae reifet me; but I haena forgotten thy law' [HSR].

rife (rīf) adj., arch. plentiful, abundant – 'The hearts o' twa – a man an' wife – Wha through a lang, lang weddit life, Conjointly faced the varying strife O' changing fate, An' died, at length, their love as rife, As when they met' [JoHa] (this meaning rare in standard English).

riff see ruif

Riffy (ri-fee) n. John (18th C.) apparent name of a witness in Hawick in 1725, for the baptism of a child of George Dickson, herd in Rashiegrain. It is possible that what is meant is 'Rieve' or something else.

the Rifle Club (thu-rī-ful-klub) n. Hawick Miniature Rifle Club was in existence in the early 20th century, patron Lord Roberts.

the Rifle Volunteers (thu-rī-ful-vo-lin-teerz) n. an alternative title for Hawick Volunteers, also known as the Border Rifles, they eventually became the Territorial Force of the K.O.S.B.

rift (rift) v. to belch, burp, eructate – 'Behald thaye rift owt wi' thaie mooth; swords ar in thair lipps ...' [HSR], '... wui the weeks o eis mooth aa froe, an riftin gas till eis een grat' [ECS], n. a belch – 'the Great Rift Valley must be an awfi noisy pliss'.

rig (rig) n., arch. a ridge, space between furrows of a field, section in a field – 'Thou waterist the riggs o't abundentlie; thou settelist the furs thero' ...' [HSR], 'Coma awa' Kristy, Keep up yer rig' [GWe], 'Across the rig wi' lightnin' speed The glintin' sickles flew' [JT], a ridge of high ground, long narrow hill, surviving in several place names, e.g. Caerlenrig, Eildrig, Ninestane Rig, Outerside Rig, Pilmuir Rig, Southdean Rig, Wauchope Rig, Woll Rig, etc.

Rig (rig) n. name formerly used locally to refer to Caerlenrig, Woll Rig and Winningtonrig (also written 'Rige' and 'Rigg').

the Rig (thu-rig) n. former shepherd's cottage at Southdean Rig in Southdean Parish. Robert Thomson was shepherd there in the mid-1800s.

rig an fur (rig-an-fur) n., arch. the ridge and furrow of a ploughed field – 'For in my own time Corn little there hath been, There was neither Rig nor Fur for to be seen' [CWS], '... and on the north end of some ground that bears rigg and fur, lying betwixt that march and the burn; and from the north-east corner of the rigg and fur-land, they walked ...' [DCW1765], '... and he carried on folding, plowing, and sowing round the inner Grayhill to near the Craigiewell, where the rigg and fur still appears' [DCW1765], the ribbing pattern of knitted stockings, corresponding to 'purl and plain' – 'Her lang lantren chafts left a howe roun' her mou', Her rig-an'-fur cheeks had a leathery hue' [BM1901], 'Clinty ... attired in sleeved waistcoat, knee breeches, blue-grey rig and fur stockings, and red night-cap' [RM] (noted by E.C. Smith).

Rigby (rig-bee) n. Hugh J. (19th/20th C.) worked as postman in Denholm. He also had a small photography business on the Poplars for a while. He married Jessie, daughter of Bedrule Schoolmaster William MacNeill.

Rigend (rig-end) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish. John Cavers was there in 1771. It is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when James Nichol was farmer. It was probably near Coldhouse (it is 'Rigg End' in 1771).

Rigfit (rig-fi') n. Rigfoot, farm in Ewesdale, on the Meikledale Burn to the west of Meikledale. William Graham was there in 1821. Henry Anderson was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 (also written 'Riggfoot').

Rigg see Rig

Rigg (rig) n. James (17th C.) distant cousin of the Riggs of Atherne. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. His lands of Carberry are near Musselburgh. It is unclear what his local connection was. Katherine see Lady Katherine Douglas.

riggin (ri-gin) n. the ridge of a roof or the roof itself, also applied to roofing material or rafters – '... except for the screws and riggings of houses within the Burgh belonging to Burgesses' [BR], '... puss had 'hirpled thrice withershins' round house, and then suddenly made a spring to the riggin ...' [EM1820], 'In some auld howlet haunted biggin', Or kirk deserted byn its riggin'' [GWe], 'Caleb seeing the desperate emergency of the case, muttered in Jamie's ear – 'Now, ye soul, up the rigging wi' ye, and cleek up the frying-pan'' [WNK], 'May poortith lean, wi' viage mean, Ne'er come within thy biggin; I hope that ye will never see It rest upon your riggin'' [DA], 'An on A snodged ma leifih-lane, till the riggens an ruiffs o Denum ... cam in sicht' [ECS], 'And then, I trow, we're proud to see Upon the riggin's resting ...' [TCh], '... And Back-Brae craws on the riggin'' [DH], arch. the spine, back-bone – 'And oure the auld man's rigging back She laid her rannel-tree shanke' [JTe], 'And she lap sae yald, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle' [JTe], 'She had neirly flung the sportsmen a', An' howffed i' the howdie's biggin', Hadna' the maister's heavy kent Fawn whack upon her riggin' [WiSp], the crest of a road or other figurative uses – '... to help and mend the channels and caussays from their respective foordoors upon each syd of the street to the tope rigging of the cassay ...' [BR1715].

riggin-stane (ri-gin-stān) n., pl. ridge stone of a roof – 'Mending the sclate roof and pointing the rigging-stone and scues of the said Kirk' [1735/HAST1926].

riggit (ri-gee', -gi') adj., arch. standing out in ridges, protruding – 'There, find ye that, my harden't, hornie loof, An' riggit ribs, where snurk'lt skin is fatit To lanely hing ...' [JoHa] (see rig).

Right-Haund Man (rī'-hawnd-mawn) n. Right-Hand Man during the Common Riding, being the previous year's Cornet. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet, and provides assistance to the new Cornet. He rides with the Cornet during many of the ceremonial events, wearing the same green coat etc. He acts as front marshal during the Ride-outs. Occasionally someone has served twice as Right-Hand Man, such as William Stoddart in 1875, and W. Lockie Thorburn after WWII. Mr. Lunn stood in as Left-Hand man in 1875, even although he had not previously been Cornet, and Robert Anderson stood in as Right-Hand Man in 1897, the year before he was Cornet! It is unclear at what point the positions of Right- and Left-Hand Man became 'official' during the Common Riding. 'The Cornet and his two men' are referred to in 1809, there is a photographic portrait of the 1857 Cornet and his 2 supporters, and a painting of 1846 showing the 'Big Threi' crossing the Teviot.

rigbody (rig-bo-dee) n., arch. the band over the saddle of a working horse used for supporting the shafts (cf. rigwuddy).

rigwuddy (rig-wu-dee) n., arch. a strap suspended over a carthorse's saddle for holding the shafts (there are spelling variants; also rigbody).

Riley (rī-lee) n. George (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. Martha (b.c.1780) grocer and lodging keeper, recorded at about 25 Howegate in 1841. She had a son, William, who was a shoemaker. She was probably the widow of George. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary O'Brian in 1849. Perhaps the same Thomas was an unmarried gardener from Ireland, living as a lodger on the Loan in 1851 (also written 'Rilley').

rim (rim) n., poet. a ream of paper – 'A thousand Rim of Paper it would not contain, To justifie the worthy Shepherd Swain' [CWS].

ring (ring) n., arch. a smart blow – 'A ring i' the lug' [GW], v. to strike the head or ears, causing them to ring.

ring (ring) v., poet. to reign, exercise rule – 'God rings ower the heæthin: God sits apon the throne o' his haliness' [HSR].

the ring (thu-ring) n., arch. a ring dance, traditional dance in a circular formation – 'This dance is still retained among the Scotish highlanders, who frequently dance the Ring in the open fields, when they visit the south of Scotland as reapers, during the Autumnal months' [JL].

Ringan (ring-un) n. pet form of the Christian name 'Ninian' (also written 'Ringand' and 'Ringane').

Ringan Red (ring-un-red) n. fictional character in John Leyden's 'Lord Soulis', who is the champion of the Lord of Hermitage – 'Syne he's ca'd on him Ringan Red; A sturdy kemp was he, From friend or foe in border field Who never a foor would flee' [JL] (also 'Red Ringan').

ring an wheel (ring-an-wheel) n., arch. a military manoeuvre for resisting cavalry – 'And charging past, with rapid stride, They formed the ring-and-wheel, And cheered with lusty Border pride From out their fort of steel' [JI].

the Ring i the Haugh (thu-ring-i-thu-hawch) n. former popular name for the area at the Common Haugh where men used to gather to play 'pitch and toss' during the 19th century – 'The Duke o' the Dean comes staggerin' doon; O' the ring i' the Haugh auld Broughton's boss, And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin' siller that's squandered at Pitch and Toss' [HI].

ringle-eied (rinng-ul-īd) adj., arch. having a wall eye, with an eye squinting outwards – 'Ringle-eied = having an eye asquint, so as to display much white' [ECS].

Ringlees Knowe (rinng-leez-now) n. area on the eastern slopes of Berryfell Hill, between the Slitrig and Rule valleys, just north of Fernielees Sike. There are the remains of a small settlement here, about 50 m by 35 m, partly destroyed by quarrying. To the south is a 0.8 m-high stone, which has been set up, probably as a marker.

ring-tails (ring-tālz) n., pl., arch. arrears in rent, odd pieces of business left when a firm is wound up, left-overs, remnants – 'Ring-tails, Small remnants of an thing; as, in relation to drink, it is said, 'Tak aff your ring-tails, and brew again', Roxb.' [JoJ].

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. parish and market town in Hampshire, with the same name as lands to the south of Hawick. Ringwood is recorded as early as the 10th century, with a grant by King Edgar to the Church of Abingdon. Just before the Norman Conquest it was held by Tostig, who was Earl of Northumbria, and brother of King Harold. Given Tostig's connection to Northumbria, and the fact that he held extensive lands elsewhere, there is a possibility that the Teviotdale Ringwood was named after the English one by either him or some other common landowner. The origin of the name is suggested to be 'rima wuda', meaning 'border wood'.

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. hunting dog owned by Dr. Grant of Hawick in the mid-19th century. He was a sire of 'Bugle', costing 30 shillings, arrived late one night and by morning had bittern essentially everyone in the household. It took some time to train in odedience, joining the hunt at 13 months and was the biggest hound in the doctor's otter-hunting pack. He produced several black-and-white puppies with 'Rally'. The dog is described in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865). Another dog of the same name was owned by Ballantyne of the Shaws, which won first prize at Bellingham Show and hunted for its 10th season in 1864.

Ringwud (rinng-wud) n. another name for Ringwudfield.

Ringwud (rinng-wud) n. Oswulf (12th C.) son of Uchtred, he was listed as a witness to the grant of King David to Melrose Abbey in about 1145. He granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the reign of King Malcolm. This was probably sometime between 1153 and 1165. The grant was with the consent of his son, also Uchtred, and also Uchtred's son Uchtred, with a confirmation in the period 1165–68. It is unclear to what family these men belonged or why they previously held these Teviothead lands; however, the family names are similar to relatives of Gospatric, Earl of Northumbria and also of Dunbar; a later Gospatrick also witnessed the confirming charter in about 1166. He was mentioned in a charter of the 1360s confirming Ringwoodfield to Melrose Abbey, with his name there being 'Osulfo de Rengwude'. Uchtred (11th/12th C.) father of Oswulf. He probably owned the lands of Ringwoodfield, as well as lands elsewhere. It is possible that he was the first baron of those lands. Uchtred (12th C.) son of Oswulf. He gave permission for his father granting the lands of Ringwoofdield to Melrose Abbey.

Ringwudfield (ring-wud-feeld) n. Ringwoodfield, area on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley, formerly in Cavers Parish, once a Lordship. It was long a property of Melrose Abbey, described as lying upon the 'Alwent (Allan) and Teviot' and given to the monks by Oswulf during the reign of Malcolm IV (mid-12th century). The boundaries of the lands are briefly described, but most of the names are now unfamiliar – 'Blachapol', 'Bollinesburn', 'Crumbirche', 'Pennango', 'Brunemore' and 'Blackaburne'. The grant was remade by Philip de Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland just a few years later. It was confirmed by Uchtred, son of Oswulf (and his son Uchtred) in about 1160. In about 1358 the specific lands of Penangushope and Caldcleuch, within this barony, were granted to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas. There were further confirmations in the reigns of Alexander II and David II. It is recorded as 'Ringwood' in 1360 when Sir William, Earl of Douglas, charged Sir William of Gledstains, his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, to defend the Abbot and Convent of Melrose as lords of the lands there. The Abbey presumably held the lands throughout the 15th century, and David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were made bailies in 1484. In a document of 1500 it is referred to as 'the lordship of Ryngwodfield'. It contained (at least) the lands and steadings of 'Ryngwodchat, Stobycot, the Burghe, Prysthauch, Cauldcluch, Standholm, Penangushop, Sowdinryg and the Bowenhyl' (now mostly familiar places), which were leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500. His son, Sir Walter, was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, in 1519 and reappointed in 1524. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller's expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Rodono); it seems likely that this was because Scott of Buccleuch had temporarily forfeited the lands to the Crown. In 1540 the 'fermes' were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £52 6d; in addition the King's shepherds were paid for various amounts of grain in the lands of 'Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn', 'lie Burgh' and 'Vestcotrig et Southcothrig et Bolburg' (with transcription errors). The 'lands of Ringwoodfield and the office of bailiery of Melroseland' are recorded in the Scott retour of 1553/4; the lands were then valued at £52 Scots. In 1558 the Prior of Melrose complained about Walter Scott of Branxholme possessing the lands 'in Ryngwodfeld' and the bailiary of other lands of the Abbey. In about 1564 the lands were valued at £3 6s 8d, and included Brugh, Stobcote, Ringwoodhaugh, Bowanhill, Grange, Priesthaugh, Penangushope, 'Woisterrie' [probably Westcoterig], Northhouse, Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch; Sir Walter Scott inherited them from his grandfather at this time. Sir Walter Scott (the 'Bold Buccleuch') inherited the lands from his father in 1574. In 1621 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose, when it is listed as Cauldcleuch, Northhouse, 'Crawshope', Stobicote, Brugh, Soothdeanrig, 'Coilburn', Westcoterig, 'Rowanhill' [probably Bowanhill], Priesthaugh and Penangushope'. In 1660 the lands are recorded being put in 'wadset' to pay the fine imposed by Cromwell on Scott of Buccleuch; it was still technically in the Lordship of Melrose and consisted of Cauldcleuch, Priesthaugh, Northhouse, 'Coliburne', Stobicote, Doecleuch, Soothdeanrig, Brugh, Fairnyside, Peelbrae, Penangushope, Langcleuchside, Phaup, Linhope and Frostylee. In the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch it appears to no longer be a Lordship, but it heads a list of farms that were mostly formerly contained within it and now referred to as lying within the Lordship of Melrose, namely 'Ringwoodfeild, Caldcleuch, Northous, Thirlestane, Braidhauch, Crowishoipe, Stobit-coat-burgh, Suddinrig, Coatburne, Westcotrig, Bowanhill, Preisthauch, and Pannangoishope'; essentially the same list occurs in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch. It is recorded again in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693 (transcribed 'Kingwoodfield'); it is then within the Lordship of Melrose. The name does not occur after the 17th century, but is crudely the same as 'Teviotdalehead', as used by the Buccleuch estates. It seems likely that if there was a tower house it was on the land of 'Ryngwodchat', which may be an error for 'Ringwoodhaugh'; this possibly corresponded with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. It is possible that the former chapel at Northhouse was associated with the Lordship. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken 'Ringwoode fell' for the farms of Berryfell, and 'Ringwood Hatt' for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is 'ringwude' in the 1160s, 'Ringwde' in about 1170, 'Ryngwodfelde' in c.1358, 'Rengwude' and 'Rengwodfeld' in c.1360s, 'Ringwodfeld' in 1484, 'Ryngwodfeild' in 1500, 'Ringwodfeld' in 1519, 'Ryngwodfeild' and 'Ringwodfeild' in 1524, 'Rigwodfeld'in 1538, 'Ringwodfeild' and 'Rinvodfeild' in 1553/4, 'Ringwodfeild' in 1557, 'Ringvodfeild' in 1564, 'Ringwodfeld' in 1574, 'Ringwodefield' in 1634 and 'Ringwodfeild' in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwudhaugh (ring-wud-hawch) n. Ringwoodhaugh, probable name for a steading near Ringwood Hill, recorded as 'Ryngwodchat' in 1500. In 1557 it was 'Ringwodhat' when Adam Scott of Allanhaugh paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is 'Ringwoodhauch'. It may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh.

Ringwud Hill (ring-wud-hil) n. Ringwood Hill, hill which lies directly south of Newmill and above Broadhaugh farm, reaching a height of 247 m. Its name is surely connected with the ancient lands of 'Ringwood' or 'Ringwoodfield' in upper Teviotdale, once owned by Melrose Abbey.

rin-im-ower (rin-im-ow-ur) n., arch. a children's game resembling 'King's Covenanter', involving trying to capture opponents as they cross a street, with the captive replacing the captor (noted by J. Jamieson; elsewhere called 'Willie Wastle', 'Tom Tiddler's Ground', etc.).

Rink (ringk) n. farm, near the confluence of the Tweed and the Ettrick. Rink Hill, above the farm is the site of an extensive hill-fort and settlement, sometimes called 'Rink Camp' (described by Alexander Michie in the Archæological Society Transactions in 1870). Part of a quern found there in about 1860 is in Hawick Museum. The farm is also where the Hawick Farmers' Club instigated an annual sheep market in October 1779, which became one of the biggest in the South of Scotland. The land here belonged to the Laird of Edgerston.

Rinkvale Cottages (ringk-vāl-ko'-ee-jeez) n. group of houses between Wellogate Place and Dalkeith Place in the Terraces, built by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company. It was named in 1889 from the fact that curling was once played on the neighbouring pond at Loch Park.

rinnal (ri-nal) n., poet. a runnle, stream – 'Grit rinnals o' water rin doun mine eyne . . . ' [HSR].

rinner (ri-nur) n. a runner – 'hei was a keen rinner when hei was young', 'when hei saw the polis comin, hei din a rinner', 'Rinners are swarmin' like bees in a hive . . . ' [JoHa], arch., poet. a streamlet – 'On the other side of the runner of the bog along the march' [C&L], 'His eyne ar als the eyne o' dows bie the rinners o' waters . . . ' [HSR], 'Ther is ane rivir whase rinners sall mak' gladsume the citie o' God . . . ' [HSR].

risp (risp) n., arch. a long, coarse grass growing in boggy areas, either Carex cæspitosa or Phragmites communis – 'Both when he was casting peats in the Woolaw-moss, and at other times, he used to cut risp in said moss for his horse' [DCW1765].

Rispylaw (ris-pee-law) n. former fortified house and farm on the Hermitage Water, roughly where the modern Braidlie farm is located, and near to an old drove road. The hill just above Braidlie is 'Rispy-Law'. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is described as 'A farm than no man doth know ye mrches of' (marked on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Rispilaw', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Rispylaw' and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as 'Rispelaw'; probably from 'rispie', meaning 'having long, coarse grass').

Ritchie (ri-chee) n. Rev. John (1669/90–1744) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1697, he was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1701 and became minister of Minto Parish in 1703. He remained as minister until his death, although he had 2 separate assistants in the 1740s. He was one of the men appointed to examine Hawick's new candidate for Schoolmaster in 1718, and preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Barbara Ainslie (daughter of Rev. James and cousin of Rev. Walter), who died in 1715, aged 45. His sister Elizabeth married Andrew Ogilvie (Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch) in Minto in 1714 (also written 'Richie').

rither (ri-thur) adv. rather – 'where wud ee rither gaun yer holidays, Spittal or Whitley Bay?', 'what's gaun on, or rither, what's no gaun on?', 'There's naewhere A wad rither be . . . ' [IWL], other – 'rither is Hawick, where wud ee like ti bide?' (cf. the locally less common raither).

Ritson (rit-sin) n. Chris Cornet in 2013. In September of his year, he carried the Borderers (Flodden quincentenary) Flag as it toured Border towns. William (1811–95) born in County Durham to a Methodist family, he became a railway contractor and was one of the main men behind the construction of the Border Union Railway. He is particularly remembered for being in charge of the contstruction of the Shankend Viaduct and Whitrope Tunnel. He lived at Woodley Field near Hexham.

rittin-spade (ri'-in-spād) n., arch. a spade used for 'ritting' (also called a ritter).

rive (rīv) v., arch. to tear, tug firmly, pull asunder – 'Agnes Scott is convicted of . . . thrusting her hand in his mouth and ryveing out of his cheiks' [BR1695], '. . . and ryveing of the locke of the tolbuith doore, and ryveing up the daills of the loft of the sd. tolbuith . . . [DH], n. a tear, rent – '. . . for that whilk is putten in til fill it up takith frae the garmint, an' the rive is made waur' [HSR] (formerly spelled 'ryve' and sometimes 'reive'; the past tense can be 'rived' or rave, while the past participle forms are reen and 'riven').

Riversdale Mills (ri-vurz-dāl-milz) n. 19th century hosiery factory on Mansfield Square, between Eastfield Mills and the railway. It was constructed around 1888 for William Kedie & Co., which was then essentially an offshoot of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. It was sold to Innes, Chambers & Co. around 1909. It was later the main site for Lockie's, and more recently Monk Cotton (also sometimes erroneously referred to as 'Riverside Mills', perhaps because of similarly named mills in Selkirk and Jedburgh).

Riverside (ri-vur-sīd) n. street in Denholm, off the Minto Road, also called 'Riverside Drive', with construction beginning in the 1930s and being completed after WWII. The land here was originally the North Crofts, given by Douglas of Cavers in 1862 for allotments.

Riverside Caravan Park (ri-vur-sīd-ka-ru-vawn-pawrk, -ku-ra-) n. caravan park between Hawick and Denholm, adjacent to Hornshole, established in the 1960s and much expanded in recent years, including the inclusion of lodges in addition to caravan sites. There is a footbridge accross the Teviot near there (note the older pronunciation of 'caravan' with accent on the 2nd syllable).

Riverside Drive (ri-vur-sīd-drīv) n. street in Denholm, on the west side of the village, between Sunnyside and the river.

Riverside Mills see Riversdale Mills

Riverside Tweeds (ri-vur-sīd-milz) n. Riverside Tweeds (Hawick) Ltd., a small textiles company, which ran 1968–80, with records in the National Archive.

road (rōd) v., arch. to run along in front of the gun-dogs and hunters instead of taking flight, to follow game running in this way (noted by J. Jamieson).

road-end (rōd-end) n., arch. place where a smaller road meets a main road, neighbourhood, locality, vicinity of one's home – '... an aamaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther-oot ti waal an glowr at the unordnar munsie' [ECS], 'There was Jock, wui Robbie an Yid, an kens whae forby, stannin at the road-end' [ECS] (synonymous with gate end).

Road End (rōd-end) n. former placename near Newcastleton, possible the same as Steeleroad-end. William Elliot was recorded there in a directory of 1868.

Roadheid (rōd-heed) n. Roadhead, road leading up from the Cauld, previously known as 'Blaikie's Brae'. The name was formerly applied to the top of that road, e.g. to the houses at Norwood that are above Roadhead, and on some old maps (e.g. the 1859 and 1890 Ordnance Survey maps) is marked at Langlands Road. Hence there is some confusion about whether the name applies to the whole of that road, or just the top part. It was adopted as a street name around 1890. There was once a draw well (possibly Hawick's only one) situated there. The road is shown in a photograph dating from about 1885. William Dalgleish is recorded there in 1791 (the name derives from being at the head of what was previously described as 'the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands').

Roadheid Brae (rōd-heed-brā) n. Roadhead Brae, another name for Roadheid.

Roadheid Cottage (rōd-heed-ko'-eej) n. former small cottage at Roadhead, which bore the date 1765 on a door lintel and survived until at least the late 19th century.

the Roadhoose (thu-rōd-hoos) n. popular name for one of a number of pubs, in recent times referring to Burnfoot Roadhouse or to Thorterdykes.

road-reddins (rōd-re-dinz) n., arch. road sweepings.

Roadside (rōd-sīd) n. place name used in Wilton in the 19th century, apparently referring to part of the modern Princes Street, perhaps corresponding to Ladylaw Road. It may at some times have been used as an alternative name for Roadhead; however, in the 1790s both names were used at the same time and hence they were different. Walter Scott and William Nichol were recorded there in 1791 and Hector Blaikie in 1797 and 1801.

the Road Trustees (thu-rōd-trus-teez) n., pl. body set up following the Turnpike Acts of the late 18th century. They were responsible for raising money through tolls and spending it to improve roads, bridges etc. (as well as to pay off any subscribers). This led to a huge improvement in the quality of local roads. The also contributed to the construction of many new local bridges from the 1770s onwards.

Roan (rōn) n. farm to the west of the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, on the Ryedale Burn. There was formerly a tower here, possibly on a mound in front of the modern farmhouse. The tower still existed in the early 18th century, although there is now no sign of it. Simon Armstrong, younger of Whithaugh was there in 1592/3 and 'Sym Armstrong of the Rone' is recorded in 1601. James Scott of Bowhill is recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, paying tax for 3 hearths. William Mitchelson, Patrick Nichol and James Turnbull were also recorded there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 2695 acres, bounded by the Liddel Water, Blackburn, Tarras and Foulshiels. It was at that time the farm was combined with Woolock and the main farmhouse was in the same place as the modern one. John Laing paid tax on 25 windows there in 1748. James Grieve was farmer here in at least 1788–97, Robert Elliot was shepherd in 1797 and James Muir was a servant in 1799 and 1801. Thomas Thomson was there in 1821. A different Robert Elliot was farmer there in the first half of the 19th century and James Douglas was tenant in the 1860s. It could be the 'Ran...' recorded in that area on a rental roll of c.1376 – 'The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o' The Roan Scartit in wi' a pencil' [DH] (also 'the Roan', it is 'the Rone' in 1592/3; marked 'Renn' on Blaeu's c.1654 map and is on Stobie's 1770 map).

Roan Fell (rōn-fel) n. high ground near the head of the Hermitage Water, between Millstone Edge and Hartsgarth Fell. It lies on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and reaches a height of 568 m – 'See! they have gained the Roanfell's heathery crest, Not in a line, but hound to hound abreast' [HNo] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie's 1770 map).

roar (rōr) v. to cry loudly, bawl – 'hei wasni juist greetin when they got bate, hei was roarin', 'But she ... roared and grat, an' grap ma airms' [HAST1868], 'What's she roarin and greetin at?' [ECS], 'When they sortit the muddle oot at last, The lassies grat and roared ...' [DH].

the roarin game (thu-rō-rin-gām) n. soubriquet for curling, played on various ponds around Hawick from the earliest years of the 19th century and dying out in the early 20th.

Roarin Willie (rō-rin-wi-lee) n. nickname for William Campbell.

roast (rōst) n., poet. a roost, particularly in the phrase 'rule the roast' – '... as this House of Representatives must evidently continue to 'rule the roast'' [RW].

roast (rōst) n., arch. rust – 'Layna up for yoursels thesauers upon yirth, whare maethe an' ruost deth corrup' [HSR], v., arch. to rust.

Rob (rob) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Robert.

Robb (rōb, rob) n. Janet (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'ane young woman from Aberdeine' in 1700. She was listed among a group of 'vagabond persons wanting testificatts', who were suspected of being thieves at Hawick fair and were released from the Tolbooth after agreeing never to return to Teviotdale. William Cuthbert (20th C.) High School English teacher (nicknamed 'Pongo Robb'), author of several educational books in the 1930s to 50s. He also wrote the 'Touchstone' column in the Hawick Express, years??.

Robber's Law (ro-burz-law) n. occasional version of Rubserlaw – 'And well this night may Robber's Law Take off his hat and loudly craw; I see him now his head high raise, Just like Mount Ætna in a blaze' [MP].

Robbie Barrell (ro-bee-baw-rul) n. nickname for Robert Scott, one of the many of the same name in the mid-1800s.

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. nickname for a supporter of Hawick Rugby Football Club – 'And though players come and players go, Wi my last braith I'll prophesy – They may fade away, when they've had their day, But there'll aye be a Robbie Dye!' [DH] (the name is recorded at least as early as the 1950s, and based on some early supporter, although popularised in the mythic poem by Davod Hill).

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. poem by David Hill, first published in the Hawick Express in 1957 under the pseudonym 'HAB'. It is included on 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry' (2006), recited by Bert Armstrong.

the Robbie Dyes (thu-ro-bee-dIz) n. nickname for Hawick R.F.C., derived from the popular name of an early fanatical supporter of the Club.

Robbie Hunter's Well (ro-bee-hun'-urz-wel) n. popular name for a former public pump well, situated against the side of a house at the foot of the Back Raw.

Robbie's (ro-beez) n. modern bar and diner at 8 High Street, run by Robbie Watt. In 2004 it became the Tower Inn.

Robbie Scare a Hair (ro-bee-skār-a-hār) n. nickname for auctioneer Robert Scott (presumably because of his lack of hair).

Robbie Scott (ro-bee-sko') n. name occurring in a version of a song by Jock Gray, probably from the early 19th century – 'And the laddie he's but young, And the laddie he's but young, And Robbie Scott ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [DJG] (note that in another version the name is 'Rob Rodger', so this may be simply an error).

Robbie Speedy (ro-bee-spee-dee) n. former nickname – 'Dan Narry and Kit i' the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O'clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock' [HI] (also written 'Speedie'; possibly related to the Spalding family, cf. Chairlie Speedy).

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-thu-kow) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – 'Here's Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here's baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o' the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe' [HI].

Robert (ro-bur') n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Robert I (1274–1329) known as 'Robert the Bruce', he was great-grandson of David I, he was King of Scotland 1306–1329. He refused to meet the English on even ground, and achieved immortal fame for leading the 1314 defeat of the English at Bannockburn, which made Scotland a sovereign nation. He granted part of Branxholme to Walter Comyn and the rest to Henry Baliol in 1307, and split the Barony of Wilton between Gilbert Maxwell and Henry Wardlaw at about the same time. He also granted part of Kirkborthwick to William Barbour, and moved it from Roxburghshire to Selkirkshire. He visited Jedburgh at least once late in his life, granting a charter there in 1329. His heart was supposedly returned from the Crusades by Sir James Douglas and reputedly buried under the chancel's east window at Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him – '... Repeats the tles of old heroic times, While Bruce and Wallace consercrate the rhymes' [JL]. Robert II (1316–90) called 'the Steward', he was the only son of Walter, the 5th High Steward of Scotland and Marjorie daughter of Robert I. He played a strong role in the government of Scotland under his younger uncle David II, being Regent along with John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. He was one of the Scots leaders at Halidon Hill, and escaped from the Battle of Neville's Cross. Imprisoned for rebellion against David, he eventually succeeded to the throne in 1371 after David's death. Confusion over the legality of his marriage with Elizabeth Mure later led to disputes among his descendants. Robert III (c.1340–1406) King from 1390. He was the son of Robert II by his mistress Elizabeth Mure, later legitimised by marriage. He was disabled by being kicked by a horse. Born John, he changed his name on assuming the throne. The kingdom was effectively ruled by his brother Robert, Earl of Fife and later Duke of Albany. He married Annabella Drummond. His son David, Duke of Rothesay became lieutenant of the kingdom, but died mysteriously at Falkland Palace in 1402. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, James I.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (10th/11th C.) carpenter of Hassendean, who witnessed a charter in about the 1220s. He is recorded as 'Roberto carpentario'.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (12th C.) son of Guy, he witnessed a document as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1147. This was confirmation of a gift to Coldingham Priory that Gospatrick, brother of Dolphin, had given to Edrom and Nisbet; his name is given as 'Roberto filio Widonis'. The same Robert also witnessed other documents relating to lands in Scotland, the last being in about 1170. This included renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the period 1165–68 and a papal document referring to his gift to Newbattle Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear if he was part of some well known family.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (13th C.) recorded as Parson of Ewesdale in about 1245. He was witness to a charter where William of Conisbrough granted his lands of 'Rig' (probably in Dumfriesshire) to his daughter Alicia and John Fraser. He seems likely to be related to the later Robert who was also Parson at Ewes.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (13th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as 'Robert fiz Rauf persone del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Ewytesdale'. He was thus presumably son of Ralph and served as Parson of the Nether Kirk of Ewes.

Robert (ro-bur') n. (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Roberto bercario' in the town of Minto in 1302. He was a to the granting of the half-barony of Minto to Philip de la Ley by Walter Boredon. The word 'bercario' may have meant he was a tanner.

Robert Hill (ro-bur'-hil) n. hill shown being near the source of the Slitrig and Rule Waters on Gordon's map c.1650, between the 'Maidens papes Hills' and 'Wriggs Hill' (i.e. Wigg Knowe). It is unclear which hill this would be, since there is no similar modern name of any significant nearby hills. Perhaps Wyndburgh Hill (the highest in the area) is meant, or its southern ridge, being composed of Outer Knowe Head, Crow Knowe and Kiln Knowe, suggesting a connection with 'Robert's Linn' below. This is probably the 'Robertis hill' mentioned in the 1562 document describing disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule; this was adajcent to the lands of Windburgh Hope. It may be the 'Roberthill' that was among lands sold in 1607 by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. It is also probably the place mentioned by Scott of Satchells in relationship to the Scotts of Thirlestane – 'John's son, Robert, was a warden in his time, The fight of Robert's hill he did gain; He for his king and country did maintain the truth; He married Scot, daughter to the laird of Buccleugh' [CWS].

Robert of Heap (ro-bur'-ō-heep) n. holder of the lands of Heap (or 'Hepe') before about 1431, as mentioned in a grant transferring the lands from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

Roberton (ro-bur'-in) n. village about 6 miles west of Hawick along the Borthwick, centre for the surrounding parish. As a place name it has existed since at least the 14th century. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott in the 14th century (as recorded in 1410), and it is possible they were named after him. Sir William Gledstains acquired the lands in the last years of the 14th century and the Gledstains of that Ilk retained the lands through the 15th century. John Scott of 'Weltoun' and 'Valis' acquired the lands in 1502 and later in the 16th century there was a celebrated faster called John Scott who came from the area (and possibly the same family). James Scott, last of Roberton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1627. There were 9 'communicants' recorded living there in 1650, namely John Hume, Margaret Walker, Patrick Hume, Robert Hume, Walter Telfer, Margaret Wilson, Malie Brown and Bessie Scott. The Parish was formed in 1689 out of parts of the surrounding parishes and after much dispute. In 1694 there were 7 hearths recorded there. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. Robert Scott was recorded as a resident in 1743. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Adam Scott of Galalaw (in 1785) and Robert Pott of Galalaw (in 1802) paid the Land Tax of £100. The present church, built in 1863/4, replaces a 17th century building, which stood behind the present Manse. This church was built in a time of religious and political upheaval in Scotland, before the new parish of Roberton was created. The church is built on what appears to be a former settlement, which may have been the 'Robert's Town' from which the village takes its name. The farm there was part of the detached section of Hassendean Parish until 1690. The present village contains the Forman Hall, designed by J.P. Alison about 1922, and used for community events, as well as a stone pillar War Memorial. The police station there closed in 1931, but the small primary school remains. 'Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton' was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and 'Roberton: the making of a parish' by George O. Wood in 1992 – 'Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse' [WSB] (the name first appears in a charter of Robert III, probably in the late 1390s, it is 'Robertistoun' in 1430 and is usually spelled 'Robertoun' or 'Robertoune' until the late 17th century, with Scott of Satchell's writing 'Robert-toun' in 1688, 'Robertoun' in c.1680 and 1710 and 'Robertown' still recorded in 1743; it is marked 'Roberston' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Robertoun' on Adair's c.1688 map, as well as Gordon's manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin is simply 'Robert's farm', possibly referring to Robert Scott, mentioned in 1410 as a former owner).

Roberton (ro-bur'-in) n. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletrrehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as 'Roberton'. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Jamie see Tammie. Tammie (19th C.) local character of unknown age whose portrait is in the Museum, painted by Andrew Kennedy and donated by him in 1863. It was formerly labelled 'Jamie', but the name is clear in the Transactions for 1863. He was probably a pedlar from Roberton whose first name was Thomas.

Roberton Burnfit (ro-bur'-in-burn-fi') n. former farm just near Roberton, which was part of Hassendean Parish until 1689. It was mentioned in the 1694 Hearth Tax recods. It was distinct from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, a mile or so up the valley. John Gowans was there in 1720, John Taylor in at least 1725–26. William Lawson and John Gowans were there in 1743, Thomas Govenlock in 1752, Walter Scott in 1763–65, David Scott in 1767–74, Adam Robson in 1775 and Adam Riddell in 1781 (it is 'Robertown burnfoot' in 1772).

Roberton Cleuch (ro-bur'-in-klooch) n. name given to the deep wooded part of the Glen Burn, just to the north of the B711 through the village.

Roberton Cleuchfit (ro-bur'-in-klooch-fi') n. former piece of land near Roberton. It is possibly the same as 'Roberton Burnfit' or could be the land on which the house known as 'Cleuchfoot' was built. It is described (perhaps in the 17th century) as a 'pendicle of Robertoun', once owned by Walter Scott of Woll and then by Alexander Scott of Galalaw.

Roberton Free Kirk (ro-bur'-in-free-kirk) n. original official name for the Snoot Kirk.

Roberton Glebefit (ro-bur'-in-gleeb-fi') n. name for houses in Roberton at the foot of the Glebe road. Margaret Laidlaw was a grocer there in 1841, and Thomas Murray and family were also living there.

Roberton Kirk (ro-bur'-in-kirk) n. church in Roberton village. The present church dates from 1863/4, designed in Gothic style by David Rhind.

It is a rectangular building with small buttresses and a porch, with the bell hung over the gable. It has 2 memorial stained-glass windows and a war memorial in the grounds. The earlier church stood at the top of Manse Brae, where the cemetery is still located (and was marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was built in 1658/9 following complaints by Borthwick residents of the lack of a nearby church, which led to decades of dispute with Hassendean. A stone dated 1659 is built into the cemetery wall. It is recorded being repaired in 1721 and rethatched in 1738 and 1769, but the thatch replaced with slates in 1770. Flagstones were first laid on the church floor about 1789. The old graveyard is part of the modern one, and is the burial place of Chisholmes of Chisholme, Lockharts of Cleghorn and Potts of Todrig and Borthwickshiels. This replaced the earlier cemetery at Borthwick Waas, while the church replaced Kirk Borthwick, which formerly stood opposite that cemetery. The church bell has an inscription reading 'For the Tolbuith of Melros – 1649' and the initials of John, Earl of Haddington. It may have been brought from Hassendean (along with the new roof) in 1690, and may also have spent some time in the river near Hornshole (according to tradition). The oldest surviving communion token is small and made of lead, bearing the inscription 'R.K.' and the date 1705. The history of the earlier church, the formation of the Parish of Roberton in 1690, and the suppression of the Parish of Hassendean is complicated, and mixed up with national (as well as local) politics. In the early years the glebe and manse were far from ideal; a new glebe was arranged in 1721. The Manse was repaired in 1827 and it is stated in 1834 that the glebe consisted of 16 acres, and crossed the county boundary, so that the Minister could vote in both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. An ornate piece of stonework (a scroll capital), unearthed in an adjacent field in 1963 (and now in the Museum), may come from Hassendean Kirk. Note that a separate Free Kirk congregation was set up after the Disruption of 1843, this being known as 'the Snoot Kirk' and used until 1927, with the congregation merging with that of the main church in 1930. Roberton church was linked with Teviothead 1966–72, then linked with St. Margaret's and Wilton South 1972–83. It became formally united with St. George's West in 1984, which was renamed Teviot Parish in 1996 A roll of the ministry is: John Colt, from c.1663; Thomas Shiels 1689–c.93; John Ferguson 1696–99; Robert Scott 1700–1727; Henry Erskine 1728–73; James Erskine 1774–86; James Hay 1786–1825; William Berry Shaw, assistant 1801–12; Alexander Nivison 1826–44; Charles Kinnear Greenhill 1845–86; Mercer Hall 1887–1927; Æneas E. McInness 1894–1929; Cyrus M. Mortimer 1930–54; James B. Primrose 1955–60; Samuel Weir 1960–65; Robert McConnell 1966–83; Neil R. Combe 1984– .

Roberton Moss (ro-bur'-in-mos) n. boggy area to north of Roberton village. After drainage changes, a small body of water was formed there, called Roberton Moss Loch In the first Ordnance Survey Book of Reference it was 'Roberton Moss Lake' and 2 acres in size, but it appears on later maps as Borthwickshiels Loch. The filter works for Alemoor Loch were built there.

Roberton Pairish (ro-bur'-in-pā-reesh) n. parish around Roberton village and the Borthwick valley, created in 1689 from parts of the neighbouring parishes, including Hawick, Wilton and disjoint parts of Hassendean, including the area immediately around the village itself. Todshaw and neighbouring farms came from Hawick Parish, with Milsington, Girnwood and other farms coming from Hassendean, and Harden, Highchesters formerly being in Wilton. This followed about 3 decades of dispute, with Roberton Kirk being built in 1659, during confusion over the secession of Scott of Buccleuch (who owned much of Hassendean), but then material from the new Kirk being removed to repair Hassendean, following a decision in favour of Hassendean in 1666. The Revolution of 1688/9 and the restoration of Presbyterianism saw a successful petition to create Roberton as a Parish. The moving of the old church roof from Hassendean to Roberton in 1690 incited violence from the parishioners of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The Parish was about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, bounded by Ettrick, Yarrow, Ashkirk, Selkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Cavers and Eskdalemuir. The Parish long had part (about half) within Selkirkshire, but it was moved entirely into Roxburghshire in 1891. Parish registers go back to 1680, but the early ones are fairly incomplete, and the first part is really for Hassendean. An early Parish record is of £38 being stolen from the poor box in the unoccupied Manse in 1700. The Parish may have started within the Presbytery of Jedburgh (where it was recorded in 1706 that one new parish did not have a schoolmaster), but soon became part of Selkirk Presbytery. The first meeting to assess the Parish poor was in 1740. The records have significant gaps in the 1740s, 1750s and 1760s. The population in 1755 was 651. Note that there is a separate parish of the same name in Lanarkshire, which sometimes causes confusion.

Roberton Place (ro-bur'-in-plis) n. private housing built in 1970 at the top of the West End, off Longbaulk Road, and named after the village of Roberton.

Roberton Schuil (ro-bur'-in-skil) n. school in Roberton village. It was noted at the General Assembly in 1724 that all parishes in the Presbytery had schools except for Roberton and Ettrick. Walter Heatlie was schoolmaster in 1727. The first record of a teacher being appointed was in 1765, and a new schoolhouse was built in 1790. In 1834 it was reported that 'one-third of the parish is so situated that the children cannot attend', since they are 'at a distance of five and eight miles'. This situation was probably the reason for the establishment of small schools at Howpasley and Redfordgreen. A new schoolhouse was finished in about 1835. In 1836 it is recorded that there were 60 pupils in attendance. The present school building was erected in 1875 and long served as the local primary school, with several attempts to close it, and closure finally coming in 2010. The Borders Archive has School Board minutes for 1873–1919. The Schoolmaster's house in the 1830s contained 5 rooms, including kitchen. Robert Miller was Schoolmaster in at least the period 1798–1807 and probably until 1822. Andrew Hogg was master there in the 1820s, until about the mid-1830s, and Thomas Anderson from 1833 until the 1860s.

Robert Paiterson Place (ro-bur'-pi'-ur-sin-plis) n. Robert Paterson Place, housing development at Burnflat, built in 2006 and named after the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott's 'Old Mortality', who was born there.

Roberts (ro-burts) n. Rev. John (1906–1965) born in Liverpool, son of John and Jane Hughes. He was educated at Cardiff High School, at Cambridge University (where he graduated B.A. in 1928) and Westerminster Theological College (1928–31). He was licensed by the Presbytery of London North in 1931 and served as a field missionary 1932–39. He became minister at Otterburn and Birdhope Craig in 1939 and served in Civil Defence during WWII. In 1951 he became minister of Southdean Kirk and remained until 1965. His time as minister included the period when Southdean first became linked with Edgerston in 1960. In 1931 he married Phylis Aylmer (b.1907), daughter of John Owen. Their children were John Clarke (b.1934) and David Owen (b.1943).

Robert's Hill see Robert Hill

Robert's Linn (ro-burts-lin) n. waterfalls off the Slitrig, where the Newcastleton road crosses a deep ravine. This area is famous for jasper, which was used to make the first Burgh Seal for example, and also for fossils. Further up the stream can be seen signs of the former lime-workings that gave their name to the Limekilnedge. The Catrail ends near here, leading to speculation that the falls had some special significance for our early ancestors. The area is also sometimes known as 'the Linns'. The high bridge there was rebuilt in 1903 using girders salvaged from the Tay Bridge disaster. A story circulated that it was bombed by a Zeppelin during WWI, but this was unsubstantiated. The bridge collapsed and was rebuilt as an embankment in 1982. There was once a farmstead in the area, where Robert Elliot and family were living in 1794 – 'Ca'in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o' Robert's Linn . . . ' [DH] (also written 'Robertslinn'; the stream there may be the one marked 'The Ryillyn B.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, suggesting either an error or a different origin for the name; it is 'Robertsline' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Robertson (ro-burt-sin) n. Alastair S., M.B.E., elder son of Nichol. He served as an apprentice designer with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., then worked with Munrospun in Galashiels, before joining Walker, Caledon, tweed manufacturers of Belfast, where he became Managing Director. He was a keen rugby player for Hawick junior teams, and also in Northern Ireland and served in the Royal Navy during WWII. He married Mairi Charlton from Ireland. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as 'Roberton'. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jeany Blaikie and their children included Thomas (b.1807). Alexander (b.1795/6) born at Makerstoun, he was blacksmith at Minto. He was recorded there in the electoral roll of 1837 and was still there in 1851. He married Isabella Blyth and their children included: Jane Tait (b.1831); Thomas (b.1833); Margaret (b.1834); Alexander (b.1836);

and James (b.1840). Alexander (b.1801/2) from Pencaitland, he was gamekeeper at Commonside in 1851 and 1861. He was living at Commonside Cottage since at least 1841. He was probably the Alexander who was the 28th listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856. In 1861 he donated a raven to the Museum an in 1865 his wife donated 3 silver and 6 copper coins. In 1869 it is recorded that he, his wife an daughter were present at the excavation of the cist found at Teindside. He also pointed out the apparently artificial cairn on Cromrig, which was also excavated in 1869 (found to be natural, but containing an ancient burial). In 1834 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Govenlock, innkeeper at Mosspaul. Their children included: James (1835–1918), lawyer in Edinburgh; Robert (b.1837); Alexander (b.1838); John (b.1840); Margaret (b.1845); and William (b.1847). He could be the Alexander who was the 28th listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gledstains and their children included Janet (b.1852). Andrew (d.bef. 1808) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Jackson, who died in 1808. Their children included: Andrew (b.1763); Barbara (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Elizabeth (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Andrew (again, b.1773) Andrew (b.1770s) labourer at Appletreehall. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Walter was also listed as a labourer there and was surely related. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. Derek (1965–) born in Hawick, grandson of Wullie 'the Voo'. He is an ambulance paramedic, working in Hawick but living in Newcastleton. He wrote The Men Who Marched Away – Liddesdale and the Great War' (1992), 'All These Fine Fellows: Hawick and District and the Great War 1914–1918' (1999) and the mammoth work 'Hawick & District and the Great War 1914–1918' (2018). Rev. Edward Macallan (b.1928) educated at Aberdeen and Oxford Universities, he became an Episcopalian minister. He was at Bristol and Swindon before coming to Hawick, where he was Rector at St. Cutherbert's Kirk 1960–69. He left to take up a Scholarship at Queen's College, Brimingham, moving to Alloa, where he worked as a teacher, before taking charge of Bathgate 1978–82, moving to Strathtay in 1982, Auchterarder in 1990 and retiring in 1993. Eric 'Pinner' (??–) son of Wullie 'the Voo'. He has been Captain of Hawick Golf Club and British one-armed golf champion (having lost an arm in an accident at Hawick Station). He is father of Margaret and Dawn. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Deanbrae in 1722 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (1835–1918) born in Teviothead, son of Alexander. He was baptised at Mosspaul and educated at Teviothead Parish School and then in Melrose. He studied law at Edinburgh University, became a member of the General Council there in 1861, was a law agent from 1871 and served as Clerk of the Royal College of Surgeons for 50 years. He was a member of the Edinburgh Border Counties' Association, attending their first dinner and being Treasurer 1875–89. He was at school with the sons of Henry Scott Riddell and liked to recall being at the inauguration ceremony for the Ettrick Shepherd's statue at St. Mary's Loch in 1860. He married Margaret Nicolson (1853–1927). He died at his home at George Square, Edinburgh. Jessie (19th C.) from Kelso, she came to Hawick to assist in the shop of George Turnbull the draper at 14 High Street. John (17th C.) born at Flatt, son of Englishman Francis 'Robson'. He lived at Colterscleuch according to Capt. Scott of Satchells. He was in some way acquainted with Scott and known as a generous host: 'Ant it is true, John Robertson, Is a Comerad good enough, And for House-keeping he excels, He dwells in Cauterscleugh; Wheat-bread, Salt-beef, Mutton, and old Cheese, I rydding by, he did my hunger ease, With Capon, and Lamb, Brandy and good Ale, He feasted me in May, as I had been an Earl'. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Janet Riddle died in 1810. John (b.1813/4) from Edinburgh, he was a cabinet-maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 30 High Street with his wife Elizabeth (from Kirkton) and children Agnes Hall and William. John 'Jackie', 'the Voo' (1921–2019) son of John Proctor, he was known locally as a singer and Common-Riding stalwart. His brother Wullie also had the same nickname (which was not there in the previous generation). He was brought up in Drumlanrig Square and attended Drumlanrig School. He was an apprentice slater, served in the R.A.F. during WWII and in the 1950s opened an electrical shop near where he grew up. A great Common Riding supporter, he followed on horseback until he was 86. He may have been the last person to remember meeting J.E.D. Murray. He was Acting Father in 1968 to Elliot Hutton. He was member of the Common-Riding Committee from 1966, was President of the Mosstroopers' Club in 1973 and Callants' Club President in 1986. He became known as the most knowledgeable person about details of the Common Riding. The avenue at the Nipknowes that the followers take was informally named after him. He married Margaret Hibbert and their children were: Jim, who was Cornet in 1977; John, who was Honorary Provost in 2002; and Margaret, who became a teacher. He had the rare honour of becoming Jubilee Acting Father in 2018. John (??–) son of Jackie. He was a local Councillor and became Honorary Provost in 2002. Nichol (20th C.) apprenticed to Forbes Nursery, he served in WWI with the 1/4th KOSB. He was wounded on that fateful day of 12th July 1915 and invalided home. One of the last local survivors of the Gallipoli campaign, he wrote about his experiences afterwards. Peter H. (19th/20th C.) grocer who was Cornet in 1899, with his uncle James A. Henderson as his Acting Father. He was Cornet the year of the earliest film clips of the Common Riding, this being a hot and sunny weekend. He was also a member of the Teviotdale Harriers. He served as Acting Father to Francis A. Henderson in 1922. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Flight in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (1830–97) son of the shepherd at Branxholme, he was assistant teacher in a school run on Episcopal principles, taught by Rev. Campbell in Hawick High Street around 1850. He went to South Africa as a missionary, being transferred to Zululand (once a separate country) in 1860, where he founded the first mission of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This was at Kwa Magwaza, the mission being later destroyed in the civil disturbances. He lived and worked with the Zulu people for many years, gaining the native name 'Unzimela'. He also (anonymously) compiled and published 'Zulu Izaga, that is proverbs, or out-of-the-way sayings of the Zulus; collected, translated, and interpreted, by a Zulu missionary' in Durban in 1880. Around 1891 he moved to Tahlwati where he founded a mission using his wagon, and where a church was later built in his memory. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702. He married Jean Turnbull in Cavers 1700. His children probably included: Thomas (b.1700); Ann (b.1702); Margaret (b.1704); and Alexander (b.1718). Walter (b.1770s) labourer at Appletreehall. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Andrew was also listed as a labourer there and was surely related. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. William (17th C.) servant of Robert Grierson from Clarilaw. In 1684 he was listed among local men listed as being fugitives because of attending field conventicles. It is unclear whether this is the Clarilaw near Hassendean or the one in Bowden Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Ann (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); William (b.1724); and Hugh (b.1725). Perhaps the same William married Margaret Taylor in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Binks in 1755. Perhaps the same William was a wright in Cavers in 1757. He married Jane Beattie and their children included: William (b.1755); Elizabeth (b.1757); William (again, b.1758); and John (b.1763). William (1720–97) from Dunfermline, he was brought to Hawick by local interests in 1752 to start carpet manufacturing and was entered as a Burgess in 1756. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others, renewing the partnership ten years later. The Hawick Carpet Company lasted until 1806. In 1763 he was rewarded with £40 from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures for mechanical inventions (a new kind of 'throw mills' and a machine for teasing wool) improving carpet manufacturing. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in Hawick in 1765. In 1770 he was the first feuar, from the Langlands Estate, of the lands of Roughheugh, where Rosalee Brae now is; he is still listed as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and still recorded that way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (even although he was deceased by then). In a description of Hawick's trade in about 1777 it is stated that his company had 14 looms weaving carpets. He purchased part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Christopher Atkinson in 1777. He may be the William who witnessed a baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780, performed by Rev. Williamson (of the East Bank Kirk). In 1789 and 1790 he paid tax in Hawick for having a female servant. He is listed as a carpet manufacturer on the 1787–90 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the 'Mr Robertson' who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1795 and probably the manufacturer William who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was a trustee of the East Bank Meeting House, and at one point complained about the meagre allowance allowed for boarding visiting preachers. He appears to have had a son, also William, with whom he is probably sometimes confounded. He may be the weaver William (some of the birth entries being written 'Robson') married to Jane (or 'Jean') French, whose children included Isabel (b.1756), William (b.1760), John (b.1761) and Ann (b.1763); Jean French died in Hawick in 1782. William (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. William (18th C.) quartermaster of the Scots Greys, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. William (18th/19th C.) son of William, the instigator of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He may be the William, son of William and Jean French born in Hawick in 1760. It is possible that he was the 'W. Robertson, carpet manufacturer' recorded as Cornet in 1778. He is 'Mr William Robertson, jun. Hawick' in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum'. In an 1803 list of volunteers he is recorded offering to provide a volunteer. In 1789 he married Janet, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Their children included: Mary (b.1790); Jane (b.1794); and William (b.1795). He may also have been the William whose son John died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the deceased William 'Robison', 'Carpetweaver', whose son William's death is recorded in Hawick in 1806. Perhaps a relative was the William in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. William (19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1837 he was listed as leaving from the Grapes on alternate Tuesdays, bound for Glasgow, and on alternate Thursdays for Langholm, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. William (b.c.1810) from Eccles, he was farm overseer at Northhouse. He was an agricultural labourer at Mowhaugh in Morebattle Parish in 1841, at Northhousehaugh in 1851 and a smith at Sourhope Farm Steward's House back in Morebattle Parish in 1861. His wife was Jessie (from Kelso) and their children included Isabel (b.1830/1), Anne (b.1832/3), Mary (b.1837/8), Joanna (b.1838/9) and William (b.1845). William (19th C.) worked in the office of the Hawick Advertiser. He emigrated to Toronto. In 1866 he donated to the Museum '3 flint arrow heads, found in the Township of Blenheim, Count of Oxford, Canada West. William 'Willie' (b.1845) son of William, who was farm steward at Northhouse when he was born. Rev. Henry Scott Riddell was minister at Teviothead when he was growing up there. He finished his schooling at Stitchel and Nenthorn, then became an apprentice with Rutherford, publishers in Kelso, shifting to Redpath & Co., hardware merchants and eventually becoming a partner. He later started his own business in Glasgow, specialising in flies and fishing equipement. He became well known as an angler, being association with several related organisations. He was also President of the Glasgow Border Counties Association. He married and had 3 sons and 1 daughter. Rev. William (1876–1950) born in Killean Parish, son of Robert, he was educated at Rhunahaorine School, Campbeltown Grammar School, Glasgow University (where he graduated M.A. in 1900) and St. Andrews University. He was licensed by the Presbytery of St. andrews in 1906, was assistant at St. Paul's in Leith and ordained at Shapinsay in 1908. He served in France during WW!, where he was wounded, and he was Chaplain to the Forces in 1920. He moved to Olrig in 1920 and Dallas Old in 1925. In 1931 he become minister of Kirkton, where he served until 1940. In 1908 he married Jessie M. Douglas and their children were Robert (b.1909) and Thora Annie Douglas (b.1916). William G. (??–??) 'Bill' or 'Wullie', High school teacher and columnist for the Hawick News, writing the 'G.R.' column as well as covering rugby. He was also heavily involved with the Common Riding, being Secretary of the Committee in the 1950s. William S. 'Willie' (1904/05–91) owner of W.S. Robertson (Outfitters) Ltd. at 13–15 High Street from the 1930s until his retiral in 1973. He was an enthusiastic viola player with the local opera and retired to Dunbar. William 'Wullie', 'the Voo' (1912–2000) well known Westender, brother of Jackie. The origin of his nickname is unknown, and it was also later applied to his brother. As a boy he witnessed the terrible charabanc disaster at the Vertish in 1919. He was a dispatch rider for the R.A.F. during WWII and later worked with the Gas Board. He was known for performing the 'Canoe Song' from 'Sanders of the River'. He also scratched 'Voo' into many trees up the Westend, several marked after his death with small brass plaques. His wife's name was Cathy and his son was 'Billy Voo'. Rev. W.M. (19th/20th C.) minister of Hawick Baptist Kirk 1916–19. He was said to a fervent evangelical preacher, who sometimes packed the Theatre or the Town Hall. He served in France with the Soldiers' Christian Association for several months in 1918. He left Hawick for Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool. He may be the minister of the same name who was at Mount Pleasant in Vancouver from 1927.

Robert the Bruce (ro-bur'-thu-broos) n. Scottish hero, otherwise known as Robert I.

Robin Reidcap (ro-bin-reed-kap) n. legendary servant of Lord Soulis, supposedly dwarfen and with vampire-like fangs, whose ghost is said to inhabit Hermitage Castle today – 'Lord Soulis he sat in Hermitage Castle, And beside him Old Redcap sly – 'Now, tell me, thou sprite who art miekle of might, The death that I must die!' ' [JL], 'For doon i the dungeons Gleg Reid-cap still lurks, In plain disregaird For the Office o Works!' [DH] (cf. reid-cap).

Robin Reidbreest (ro-bin-reed-breest) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

robin-rin-the-hedge (ro-bin-rin-thu-hej) n., arch. goose grass, 'sticky wullie', Galium aparine – 'The species known as Cleavers, or 'Robin-rin-the-hedge' . . . ' whence its adhesive seeds cling to the clothes of the passer [JAHM] (also lizzie-rin-the-hedge; see sticky wullie).

Robinson (ro-bin-sin) n. Elizabeth 'Liz' Area Librarian for Hawick in the period 1978–80. G. Allen (19th/20th C.) photographer in Hawick in the late 1800s and early 1900s. He trained as a photographer with Russell & Sons of London. At various times he was based at Burnlington House on North Bridge Street, as well as at East Bank House and on the Exchange Arcade.

Robison (ro-bee-sin) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Marion Cowan in Roberton in 1729 and their. daughter Agnes was baptised in 1731. Andrew (19th C.) grocer, tea, wine and spirit merchant at 23 High Street in the 1850s and 60s. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. Ebenezer (b.1795) whip and thong maker, son of Elizabeth. He was listed in Wilton on Pigot's 1837 directory and at Wilton Path in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on Wilton Damside and on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861 (although these are probably the same address). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Park from Lilliesleaf in 1821. Their children included: Ebenezer; Andrew; Elizabeth, who married William Richardson; twins Barbara and Margaret; Mary; Agnes; and Janet. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Chisholme and their children included Agnes (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1691), with witnesses Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. George (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John was previously married to a Paisley and had a daughter Anna baptised in 1691. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Paisley and their children included Jean (b.1689) and Anna (b.1691). James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Janet (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot in 1623 along with Archie Henderson when they had 2 sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1694); James (b.1696); and Beatrice (b.1699). In 1694 the witnesses were James Grieve and Andrew Scott. Probably the same John witnessed a baptism for Robert Paterson in 1691. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant at Braidlie in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) married Bess Nichol in Roberton in 1727. Their children included: Janet (b.1729), baptised in Roberton; and James (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk. Marshall (1787–1862) born in Hawick, although no baptismal record exists, he emigrated to Canada, where he was a farmer in Harvey, New Brunswick. He married Jane Dickson (who was from Northumberland) and they lived in Wooler before moving to Canada in 1842. Their children included William, Margery, Dorothy, Marshall, Jane and Stephen. His name is also written 'Robinson'. Matthew (17th C.) resident of Liddesdale who was mentioned in about 1645. According to the Buccleuch records 'One Matthew Robison and his brother had just returned from an excursion into the Debateable Land after some cattle of their own, and had a sleuth-hound with them'. The hound was sent off to search out some thieves who had been challenged 'at Catheugh and Cringleford, until they came to Carshop, from whence they stole threescore sheep'. Ralph (18th/19th C.) overseer for George Douglas of Cavers. He was 'Mr Ralph Robieson in Cavers' when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1794. George (b.1791) was also his son. In 1806 he was residing at Berwick when he was found guilty of theft, fraud and breach of trust. Robert (17th/18th C.) wright in Branxholmtown. In 1722 he is recorded refusing to pay a penalty and so being summoned to appear before the Session. He is probably the Robert 'servant to John Pringle wright in Hawick', who married Isobel Rae from Branxholmtown in 1721. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1722, with witnesses merchant James Aitkin (whose wife was Helen 'Robson') and merchant James Beattie. Robert (b.1832/3) powerloom tuner in Hawick, originally from Stirling. In 1861 he was living at 12 Sandbed. His wife was Betsy (from Branxholme Bridge) and their children included James (b.1859/60). Thomas (16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Robisoune' in 1631 on a list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Yethouse in Castleton Parish. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he was rebuked before the congregation for 'Sabbath-breaking' and in 1697 he was chastised for 'travelling with a load on the Lord's day'. William (b.c.1795) plasterer in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on O'Connell Street with Mary, probably his wife. William (19th C.) recorded as 'missionary, Branxholm' in 1872 when he donated to the Museum a 'piece of Indo-Australian telegraph cable' (also spelled 'Robisone'; it was probably once interchangeable with Robson).

Rob o the Bent (rob-ō-thu-ben') n. nickname for one of the Hawick men called Robert Scott.

Rob's Cleuch (robz-klooch) n. small stream in the Rule valley, which rises on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill. On the south side is evidence of a former settlement, largely obliterated by cultivation, but still observable as a roughly circular hollow. Near the head of the cleuch are the remains of a farmstead, which Walter Deans suggested may be the original site of Bonchester farm (also written 'Rob's Cleugh').

Robsland (robz-lind) n. alternative name for Brighoose.

Robson (rob-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Esther was baptised in 1730. Adam (1720–1805) son of Adam and Jean Beattie. He married Helen Hume and their children included: Janet (b.1761), who married John Elliot; Jean (b.1763); Adam (1765–c.1844), who married Mary Pott and emigrated with his family to settle in Lanark County, Ontario; Mary (b.1767), who married a different John Elliot; and Helen (b.1775). Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1768); John (b.1770); Mary (b.1772); Andrew (b.1773); Janet (b.1777); and Margaret (b.1784). Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1775 and Borthwickshiels in 1785. He married Helen Geddes in Roberton in 1769. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Janet (b.1770); James (b.1772); John (b.1775); Adam (b.1779); Robert (b.1777); George (b.1782); and Patrick (b.1785). Adam (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He could be the Adam who married Janet Murray in Hawick in 1778 His unnamed son died in 1787. Adam (18th C.) gardener and 'Chaise Driver' for Adam Scott of Galalaw in 1785 and 1786. This was in Roberton Parish, so he was probably working at Borthwickshiels. Adam (1765–1885) born in Castleton Parish, son of Adam and Helen Hume, who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He worked for a while as a shepherd for his brother-in-law John Elliot (2 of his sisters had married John Elliots!). He married Mary, probably daughter of Thomas Pott. They had 11 children, with 6 emigrating with them to Canada in 1817, and settling in Lanark County, Ontario. Their sons John and James had already travelled to Canada a year or so earlier. Their children included Adam (b.1790), Mary (b.1791), Isabell (b.1793), Thomas (b.1795), John (b.1797), Mary (again, b.1799), Janet (b.1801), Margaret (b.1804), Peter (b.1806), Jean (b.1808) and Robert (b.1813). He died in Drummond, Quebec. Adam (b.c.1770s) recorded as 'Hostler Cross Keys Inn' in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He could be the son of James and Betty Cook who was baptised in Hawick in 1779. Adam (b.1786/7) born in Castleton Parish, he was a carter. He was listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was also listed as a carter in Newcastleton in 1861, when he was living at about 17 South Hermitage Street. He married Jess (or Jessie) Temple and their children included John (b.1827), Jean (b.1830), Robert (b.1832), Alexander (b.1834), James (b.1836), Barton (b.1840) and Elizabeth (or 'Bessy, b.1843). He may be the Adam of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Adam (b.c.1795) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at Bowknowe in 1841. His wife was Jean and their children included Helen, Janet, James and George. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Jess and their son John was baptised in 1827. Adam (1861–aft. 1901) youngest son of William and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Galashiels. His wife was Phillis and they had a daughter Margaret Douglas. Adam (19th/20th C.) joiner of the firm A. & J. Robson. His brother was John, partner in the firm, and their sister Mary married Robert Edgar (cousin of the Hawick Express editor). He married Janet Laidlaw Wilson, who died in 1940, aged 87. Adam (1928/9–2007) born and educated in Hawick, and then at Edinburgh College of Art, where he played rugby. He then switched to the Linden, before becoming a famous wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. from 1952 to 1961. He also gained 22 Scottish caps and went on to be President of the Scottish Rugby Union. He was also President of the Scottish Schools Rugby Union. He was Art Master at Dollar Academy for 32 years, also widely exhibiting his paintings, with one prominent in the Health Centre, and his tribute to Tom Scott (1997) on display in Drumlanrig's Tower. He was Callants' Club President in 2002. He married Netta Renwick and their children were Shona and Judith. He wrote 3 books, one being a history of the Edinburgh Borderers rugby club. Robson Court is named after him. Alexander (18th C.) labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Mary (b.1788); Jean (b.1790); and James (b.1793). Alexander 'Alec' (b.1846) 2nd son of blacksmith Thomas. He was a stone mason, known as a great athelete and authority on coins. In 1873 in Wilton he married Helen Brodie (b.1852) and their children included Mary Gowenlock Newton (b.1874). He died in Australia. Alexander 'Alex' (1924/5–44) son of Hugh and Minnie from Hawick. He served as a Private in the 5th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. and who was killed in the liberation of the town of Brunssum in the Netherlands. Allan Watt (d.1981) son of William S., he was born and brought up in Hawick. His studies at the Art College in Edinburgh were interrupted by War Service, but he continued after the War to train in art and teaching. From 1949 he was Head of the Art Department at Perth High School. He developed a strong interest in nature and botany in particular. He joined the Perthshire Society of Natural Science in 1954 and for many years was Chairman of the Botanical Section. He was also an area recorder for the Botanical Society of the British Isles and helped preserve many valuable plants in and around Perthshire. He illustrated his father's books: 'The Story of Hawick', with about 17 pen and ink sketches; and 'Hawick Place Names', with 'Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions', showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1537 Charter. His original 'scraperboard' images of 'Auld Hawick' are in the Museum collection. He married Jessie and had a son Alan. Andrew (17th C.) listed along with James Small in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son John was baptised in 1635. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Jackson and their daughter Barbara was baptised in 1765. Andrew (b.c.1770s) baker in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Probably the same Andrew was listed as a labourer on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the Andrew who married Mary Moffat and whose son James was baptised in Castleton in 1798. Andrew (b.c.1780) resident of Branxholme Town according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. Walter was also there at the same time and so perhaps a brother. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included Gavin (b.1806) and Betty (b.1808). Andrew (19th C.) coal merchant in Hawick in the late 1800s. Andrew (c.1889–1949) born in Hawick, he was an engineering apprentice with his father, who was a foreman with James Melrose & Sons. He then worked for a steel manufacturing firm in Middlesborough before studying engineering at Edinburgh University. He spent 12 years as Principal of West Hartlepool Technical College and in 1933 became Principal of Handsworth Technical College in Birmingham. He was an active member of the Institution of Production Engineers. He returned regularly for Hawick Common Riding and spent many holidays in Rulewater. He was married twice and had a daughter. Charles of Samieston (1770–1830) son of James, who was tenant of Belford and Chatto. He was one of the founding members of the Jedforest Club. He was a Captain in the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire militia. He also served as Collector of Supply for the county and was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He married Martha, eldest daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. A small portrait was painted of him around 1800. Rev. Charles (b.1861) from Hawick, son of James and Jessie Inglis. His family attended the East Bank

Kirk. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1885 and was ordained as minister of Clune Park Port-Glasgow in 1889. In 1893 he moved to Pollok Street Church in Glasgow and in 1899 to Inverness Antiburgher church. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Oldsteson' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this farm is. He is recorded along with William, who was presumably his son or brother. James was also there, as well as David Hall. Euan (1954–) born in Corbridge, Northumberland, he was M.S.P. for Roxburgh & Berwickshire 1999–2007, and has also been Scottish Liberal Democrat Chief Whip. He stood unsuccessfully for the European Parliament in 2009. Francis (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Flatt and 'Schortbus' in southern Liddesdale in 1632. He is probably the Englishman, father of John 'Robertson', who is described by Walter Scott of Satchells – 'And for his Father Francis, I knew him well enough, to be a Gentleman, Store-Master To Walter Earl of Buckcleugh'. Gavin (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the Gavin born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1781 to Robert and Elizabeth Grieve. George (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with John, plus Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. George (b.c.1780) servant at Hyndlee according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Southdean Parish. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholm. He was one of the founders of the Denholm Subscription Library in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the 'Cadger' listed on Main Street in the 1841 census. George (b.c.1808) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Kirk Wynd and described as 'Frame Work Knitter – Woollen & Chelsea Pensioner'. He married Agnes Donaldson, who had previously been married to the oldest son of James 'Pawkie' Paiterson. George (b.1831/2) quarry worker in Denholm. He lived in an old house by the school gates. When that was demolished he lived in the White Swan. His wife Matilda came from Cupar in Fife and they had a son, James. George 'the Prince' (19th C.) resident of the Canongate in Denholm. He worked on the railway. Helen (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1693 she 'confessed she bought from James Thompson, in Hassendeane, and creillfull of salt in quiat in the middst of the markitt, and was yrfor guiltte of forstaling the marcatt, and fyned in tenn pound scott yrfor'. This shows that buying privately was considered to be an offence at that time. Henry 'Harry' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in Beirhoip', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He presumably lived at Beirhope near Hownam. Isabella 'Bella' (19th/20th C.) resident of a house on the Kirk Wynd, near where the Drums and Fifes start on the Thursday night of the Common Riding. She would regularly come out to offer a tray of rum and milks to the band. Her son Dod was a founder member of the 1514 Club. James (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1595/6 his son William was granted lands in the village. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Oldsteson' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Cuthbert and William, and so probably closely related. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Jane (b.1670); and James (b.1678). James (17th/18th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same James was in Highchesters in 1711 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scott in Drydenburn, but was 'in ye paroch of Robertoun'. He could be the same as the James who lived at Highchesters. James (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was recorded being 'nou in Flanders' when his son James was baptised in Hawick; the child was 'begotten in fornica[tio]n' with Margaret Scott and Margaret's brother Robert made 'faith for the education of the child'. The witnesses were gardener James Falsyde and glover John Hart. James (b.c.1710) tenant of Langlands at Calaburn in Wilton Parish. He was living at Calaburn in 1748 and was still at Calaburn in 1765 when among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. It was stated that he was at that time 'the present common herd, and tenant of Cala-burn'; this meant that he had a responsibility for driving the animals of other tenants to and from Wilton Common before it was divided. He also gave evidence in the court case in 1764, describing how he had been tenant in Calaburn for 20 years and telling of his recollections of the use of the Common. He married Margaret Easton and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Robert (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); Marion (b.1750); Margaret (b.1752); John (b.1754); and Jean (b.1757). The witnesses in 1748 were John and Robert Scott. It seems likely he was the

James, son of James, who was baptised in Roberton in 1711. He is probably also the James who had earlier children baptised in Roberton: James (b.1737); Adam (b.1738); Thomas (b.1740); and William (b.1743). James (b.1710/1) son of a shepherd. He moved to Newbigging near Hawick when his father became shepherd in 1726, staying 6 years, then being shepherd for 2 years at Raesknowe and 2 years at Acreknowe and Winnington Rig. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time and living at Templehall. He may be the same man as James, who also gave evidence in 1764 in the case for the division of Wilton Common. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Pringle in Roberton Parish in 1761. Their children included: John (b.1761); Agnes (b.1768); and Jean (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Easton and Thomas Hoy. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae at Whitfield in 1773. He may be the James who paid for the use of the Wilton mortcloth in 1794. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Cook in 1778 and their son Adam was baptised in 1779. James (d.1781) recorded as servant of 'Mr. Dickson' when he died in Hawick. This was presumably the minister of Bedrule, who had died in 1787. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwick Burnfoot in 1780. His children included James (b.1776), Thomas (b.1778) and Charles (b.1780). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded at Dykeraw in 1778. He married Janet Watson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1778. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Linthill. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (b.c.1780) barber on the High Street in Hawick, probably at No. 32 on the 1841 census. James (b.1788/9) from Elsdon in Northumberland, he owned the farm of Waterside near Letham. In 1851 he was living there with his wife Janet and daughter Matilda. He married Janet Lachlan (from Dalkeith) and their children included: William (b.1808), 1st son; Robert (b.1810), 2nd son; and Mary (b.1812). James (18th/19th C.) recorded at 'Newroad' in 1826 when the death of his wife is recorded in Hawick. James (b.c.1800) originally from Yarrow, son of Robert. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Branxholme and he was shepherd at Branxholme 'Gate' (probably the Lodge) in 1851. He married Isabella Oliver in Ancrum, and their children included: Robert (b.1830); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1832); Joan (b.1835); Williamina (b.1838), who probably died young; and Jeany. James (19th C.) second official singer of Hogg's 'Teribus' at the Common Riding. He could be the same James who is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory as a cart and plough wright on Buccleuch Street, or the James living on Green Wynd on the 1841 census, or even the blacksmith, father of the composer William Inglis. James (b.1816) blacksmith in Wilton, he was son of Hawick blacksmith Thomas and Elizabeth Bookless. He was on Wilton Place in 1851 and Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jessie Inglis in 1841 and their children included: Margaret; Thomas; Eliza; William Inglis (b.1853), who became a professor of music; James Alexander (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); and Charles (b.1861), who became a minister. James (19th C.) grocer in Cavers or Minto Parish, recorded in 1852. James (b.1852/3) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was known as an authority on local antiquities, particularly arrow-heads. He was also noted as a prize-winner at flower shows. He married Janet Oliver, from Denholm, and she died in 1932, aged 80. Their eldest daughter was Mary. They are buried in Denholm. James (b.1855) youngest son of William 'Billy Buttons' and related to the Denholm blacksmiths. He had brothers John (Hawick Town Councillor) and William and a sister Beatrix. Like his father and brothers, he started off as a stocking-maker. He later became a teacher and private tutor. He was an expert on local history and wrote extensively about the Scottish Borders, producing several books including 'Border Sketches' (1891), 'Churches and churchyards of Teviotdale' (1893) and 'Border Battles and Battlefields' (1897). He also wrote 'Teviotside legends & stories' (1895) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth. He died in Hawick. James Scott (1921–2010) born in Hawick, son of William Scott. He attended Hawick High School and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He won a Rockefeller Foundation Studentship to continue his studies in New York, and survived his ship being torpedoed on the way. Back in Edinburgh he graduated M.D. in 1945, then served as Captain in the R.A.M.C., worked in Edinburgh and then went to Harvard University, where he carried out renal research. He married Mary MacDonald, who was a pathologist. In Britain he set up the Acute Renal Failure Service and was significantly involved in the first kidney transplants. He also advised on dialysis treatment protocols for avoiding infection. After brief appointments at Harvard and in Australia, he became Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1977, as well as President of the Renal Association. At Edinburgh he also revised the undergraduate medical curriculum and was editor-in-chief for an influential medical text book. He was a member of Edinburgh's New Club. John (16th C.) recorded in 1538 along with George, plus Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. John 'Jock the Laird' (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose. His nickname is recorded as 'Jok the Larde'. William is also mentioned, and surely a relative. John 'the Pudge' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) cook to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in 1646. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Paisley and their daughter Anna was baptised in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1694); James (b.1696); and Beatrix (b.1699). John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and was elected Cornet in 1711. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for glover John Scott. He could be the John, son of Robert and Helen, born in Hawick in 1689 or the John, son of William and Helen Muir born in 1685. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson. He is probably the John who married Isobel Huntly and whose daughter Anne was baptised in Hawick in 1718. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Nichol and their children included: James (b.1733); and Helen (b.1735). John (1773–1834) 2nd son of James of Samieston. He was tenant farmer at Belford. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club and served with the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He married Esther, younger daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. Their elder son was Dr. James Robson-Scott of Ashtrees and their younger son was Thomas Robson-Scott of Newton. He died at Belford. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Essenside according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. John (b.c.1780) labourer at Wester Barnhills according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish. John (b.1780s) son of a blacksmith in Denholm, probably Thomas. His brother Thomas was also a blacksmith there. He was an apprentice stocking-maker in Denholm, but was apparently noticed on the Green by Lord Minto, who suggested he joined the Royal Navy. He rose through the ranks, but was demoted when he allowed a deserter to escape. He spent some time at Portsmouth, where he got married to Mary Buchanan and had a son, William. He then spent 6 years serving in India, took part in the capture of Algiers in 1812 and was on the ship that took Napoleon to St. Helens. He returned to Denholm with his wife and son, 'Billy Buttons'. John (b.1803/4) born in St. Boswells, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1837. He was listed as a joiner in 1841 and innkeeper in 1851. In Slater's 1852 directory he was innkeeper at the Cross Keys. He was said to be perhaps the only voter in the village of Lilliesleaf who was a Tory. He married Jessie Cockburn in 1832 and their children included William (b.1833) and Helen (b.1835). In 1861 his wife was running the inn, and so he was presumably deceased (or travelling). John (19th C.) married Isabel Laing in Bedrule in 1834. John (b.1818/9) born at Wells, he was an agricultural labourer in Bedrule Parish. In 1851 he was living at 'Bedrule Hinds House' and in 1861 was farm steward at Bedrule. He married Elizabeth Henderson in Wilton in 1840. Their children included George, Margaret and John. John (1826–99) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. His father and brother Thomas were blacksmiths at Teviothead and elsewhere. He was blacksmith at several places, but lastly (and for the longest period) in Denholm. He was originally based on Main Street, but in 1864 moved to the Quarry Road, where he built a new smiddy, house and stable. At the age of 17 he married Mary Newton, from Gordon in Berwickshire, and she died in 1883, aged 60. He had many sons with her (8 of whom survived), including: George, who died young; Thomas (b.1844/5), blacksmith at 46 High Street; Alexander (b.1846, 'Alec'), who died in Australia; John (b.1848/9), also a blacksmith, died in Penicuik; Robert (b.1851), mason in Hawick; Robert Newton, monumental sculptor;

James (b.1853/4); William Hardie (1856–1927), who died in Canada; George (b.1858); and Mark Newton (b.1861), who became a minister. The average height of his sons was 6 ft 1½ in. He also remarried and had more children. John (b.1845/6) born at Wilton Dean, he was eldest son of William, and grandson of John, who was in the Navy. His brothers were William, Precentor at Bedrule, and James, local historian. He worked as a stocking-maker and stone hewer. He was Precentor in the Denholm Free Kirk for 13 years. He moved to Hawick, where he was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward and was heavily involved in religious and temperance movements in the town. He was associated wht West Port Church, Hawick Home Mission, the Sabbath School Union, the Poorhouse Committee and the Parish Council. He married Janet Oliver from Cavers. John (b.c.1850) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was also a blacksmith and known as an athlete. He died in the prime of life in Penicuik. Mark (b.1803/4) son of John, he was born in Crailing Parish. In 1851 he was a 'Wood Forester' living at Ashkirk Cottage with his children Margaret (housekeeper there), Thomas and Janet, father John and lodger. Mark Newton (1861–1939) youngest son of John, who was blacksmith at Denholm, and Mary Newton. He was born and attended school in Denholm, then moved to Hawick at 16. He was a teacher there for over 8 years. He wrote poetry and also produced an article on 'Lower Rulewater and its Associations' for the Archæological Society. From 1886 he resolved to do 'home' missionary work and was stationed at Fisherrow, Musselburgh. Afterwards he was Presbyterian Minister in County Durham and Congregational Minister at Sanquhar and Cumnock. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick in the early 1900s. As well as publishing many poems in the local press, he also contributed some articles on Border life and scenes. He privately published 'Some Denholm Families'. His first wife and child died about 2 years after he was married. Like his brothers, he was tall, being about 6 feet 3 inches. Mary nee Waugh (b.1864) daughter of Andrew Waugh and Agnes Purdom. She was assistant nurse at Weens for several years. She married Will Robson and their children included John, Agnes Purdom and Janet Oliver. Dr. Michael J.H. (1933–2017) Hawick Museum curator and contributor to the Archæological Society Transactions. He was also a founding member of the Borders Family History Society. He retired to the Isle of Lewis. He wrote several short books, including: 'Tibbie Shiel' (1986); 'Ride with the moonlight: the Mosstroopers of the Border' (1987); 'Sheep of the Borders' (1988); 'No road this way after dark: George Harkness's reminiscences of Liddesdale' (1989); 'Break with the past: changed days on two Border sheep farms (Langburnshiels and Riccarton) with The record book of the Riccarton Mill Club' (1991), 'Surnames and clansmen : Border family history in earlier days' (1998); 'Dykes, ditches and disputers: a history of boundary and field enclosures in the Borders' (2004); and others relating to the Highalnds and Islands. He was involved in the founding of the Turnbull Clan Association, was the clan newsletter's first editor and was working on a history of the Turnbulls when he died. Miss S. singer at Colour Bussings and other functions in the early 20th century. Mungo (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. Patrick (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. He was also on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick in 1437. Peter (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shepherd at Boghall and then Hermitage Bridgend. He was also an elder at Castleton Kirk. He was listed as male head of his family at Boghall in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes, from Heiton. Their children included Peter, John, James, Agnes and Helen. Robert 'Rob' (16th C.) called 'Fwll Mowth' in a bond of 1562, where William Oliver in Lustruther and Gavin Oliver in West Houses have to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Robert (17th/18th C.) carter and merchant in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was a Burgess of Hawick. Probably the same Robert was a merchant in 1699 when he witnessed a baptism for smith James Scott. He witnessed a baptism for fellow carrier James Wilson in 1701 (where he is recorded both as a carter and as a merchant). He is probably the merchant Robert who witnessed baptisms for smith James Scott in 1704, for piper William Turnbull in 1706, for workman Robert Gledstains in 1708, for carrier James Wilson in 1712 and for carrier William Rae in 1713. John Scott was his servant in 1711 (when he witnessed a baptism for him) and Thomas Huntly (who gave evidence relating to the use of the Common in 1767) was his servant in 1715. He is probably the Robert listed as a merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1718 for tailor Robert Chisholme, in 1719 for Andrew Waugh, tenant in Hawick, and in 1720 for carrier James Henderson and for smith Thomas Huntly. He and another Robert (presumably his son) were the 2 merchants who witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous in 1720. He is probably the Robert, married to Helen Robson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Marion or Margaret (b.1686); Walter (b.1687); John (b.1689); Isobel (b.1691); and Helen (b.1693). The witnesses in 1689 were Robert Douglas and Robert Wilson. Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, probably son of Robert. In 1720 the pair of Roberts witnessed a baptism for carrier George Porteous. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert Chisholme and in 1722 another for John Laidlaw in Hawick Shiel. Robert Newton (b.1851) born in Eccles, he was 4th son of Denholm blacksmith John. He trained as a stone-hewer at Denholm Hill Quarry and became a monumental sculptor in Hawick. He was an active member of Allars Kirk and the Archæological Society, being particularly involved in cleaning up and preserving the remains of Southdean Kirk. He carved the WWI alabaster and bronze WWI memorial tablet for Allars Kirk. He also worked on the Johnnie Armstrong memorial at Teviothead. He married Janet Oliver, from Appletreehall. In later life he had a long, flowing beard (it is said, to protect him from stone dust), making him look patriarchal. Simon 'Syme' (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with John Oliver in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. Thomas (16th C.) leased 'ane quarter and halff quarter of Todrik' (i.e. Todrig) from Thomas Scott in 1538. described as 'in Langnewton' in a 1612 document Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Langnewton' in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); Dand (b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were William Turnbull (probably related to his wife) and John Noble. In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for William Collin in Horsleyhill, in 1683 others for William Turnbull and for Adam Craig and in 1687 for Walter Runciman. He also witnessed a baptism in 1686 for John Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and Margaret Dodds. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as occasional tenant in Bewlie in 1716 when he leased lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. Thomas 'Tam o the Yett' (18th C.) former resident of Liddesdale, said to be an ancestor of the blacksmiths of Denholm. A story is told of how a Liddesdale minister examining children asked who the strongest man was, and was given his name as the reply. He may have been a descendant of Thomas 'Robison', farmer at Yethouse. Thomas (d.1805) son of Thomas, he was probably farmer at Calaburn. He witnessed a baptism for Richard Young (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1774. He married Isobel Young in Hawick Parish in 1764. Their children included: Margaret (b.1765); Isobel (b.1767); James (b.1770); William (b.1771); William (again, b.1772); Alexander (b.1776). He died at Calaburn, with his wife following a few days later. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet Anderson in Ewes Parish in 1783. Their children, baptised in Langholm, included Christian (b.1788), Mary (b.1790), James (b.1792), Thomas (b.1799) and William (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His shop was in a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning. He was probably father of the later blacksmith of the same name, as well as John, who was in the Navy. Thomas (b.c.1790) master blacksmith at Denholm, probably the same man named on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His brother John was in the Navy. In 1815, he married Isabella ('Bell') Hardie, from Dargues in Redewater. They had 6 daughters and 4 sons: Thomas (b.1816), blacksmith at Teviothead and in Hawick; James, possibly blacksmith in Middlesburgh; Ann (b.1818); William (b.1824), also a blacksmith in Denholm; John (b.1826), blacksmith in several places, but longest at Denholm; Mary; Isabella, who married William Easton from Yetholm; Betty; Catherine; and Helen, the youngest. He may be the smith of that name who was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He could be the same Thomas who donated a stone ball, found in Denholm, to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1777/8–1844) Hawick blacksmith, listed on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1837 he was on the High Street and is recorded at about 9 Brougham Place on the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Bookless, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included: Helen (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); Elizabeth (1814–28), who probably died young; Isabel; James (b.1816); and William. He is buried at St. Mary's. He was probably related to the other Robson blacksmiths. He may be the 'Tam

Robson' who supervised the roasting of an ox at the Tower Knowe for the celebration of the coming of age of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Hardie in Cavers Parish in 1815. Thomas (19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the 'Woollen Slubber' living on the Howegate in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Thomas and Walter. Thomas 'Tam' (19th C.) carrier of the mail between Langholm and Hawick. He was a keen fisherman (described in John Hyslop's 'Echoes from the Border Hills'), and it was said that if the trout were biting then the letters to Hawick would be late! Thomas (b.c.1815) from outside Roxburghshire, he was an excise officer living on the Howegate in 1841. The other residents were probably wife Jane, mother Barbara, sister Jane and daughter Isabella. Thomas (1816–81) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. He was blacksmith at Teviothead and then at 54 High Street. He is listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater's 1852 directory. He later moved to 5 Teviot Road and became a retailer. In 1871 he donated to the Museum an 'antique key and fragment of old sword blade' and in 1872 he donated a 'stuffed monkey'. He married Catherine Waugh, from Southdean Parish, who died in 1906, aged 88. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.c.1843), who married William Wilson, Hawick rag and waste merchant; Thomas (b.1839), who died young; Robert (b.1840), who died aged 15; another Thomas (who also died young, like his following 4 siblings); William; Catherine; Robert; John; and Isabella (b.1850, died aged 26). Thomas (1819–94) born at Cappuck, he later farmed at Menslaws. He was recorded at Menslaws in a directory of 1868. He married Eliza Wilson Cockburn (who died in 1906) and their children were Agnes Cockburn (who died young), Catherine Home (who died in 1958), Janetta (who died in 1969) and Thomas Cockburn (who died in 1931). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (b.1817/8) carrier, son of carter Richard. He lived in Jedburgh and is recorded in 1852 operating a weekly service to Hawick, leaving from the Horse Market. In the 1860s he was operating a twice weekly service between Hawick and Jedburgh. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Branxholme. In 1872 he was 'formerly missionary in Africa' when he donated to the Museum 'a collection of African spears'. Thomas (c.1845–c.1925) eldest son of John, blacksmith at Denholm. He carried on a blacksmith's business at 46 High Street. Later he worked at Weensland Mills. He had some musical talent and was Precentor at East Bank Kirk. He was also a noted angler and authority on local natural history. He died in Hawick at more than 80 years old. Thomas Cockburn (1869–1931) born at Menslaws, son of Thomas and Eliza Cockburn. He was Manager of the National Bank of Scotland in London and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (19th/20th C.) of Weensland, responsible for stuffing a large fraction of the Museum's bird collection. He could be the same as the Thomas (d.c.1925) who worked at Weensland Mills. Walter (15th C.) described as 'in Harden' in 1493 when he was accused at a Jedburgh court of conspiring with Archibald Armstrong (who was already 'at the horn') in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. Walter Ker served as surety for him. It is unclear if this is Harden on Borthwick Water or another one. Walter (17th C.) described as a merchant in a Magistrates Court case of 1642 when Andrew Deans was ordered to pay debts and expenses to him. Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1656 for John Porteous. He could be the Walter, married to Marion Henderson, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Isobel (b.1648), John (b.1650), Robert (b.1652) and William (b.1654). Walter (b.c.1780) resident of Branxholme Town according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Andrew was also there at the same time and so perhaps a brother. He may be the Walter who married Betty Mitchellhill and had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including: Andrew (b.1809); and Helen (b.1811). Walter (19th C.) shepherd at Cleughhead in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. He may be the Walter, married to Margaret Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Isabel (b.1833), Helen (b.1835), Janet (b.1836), Peter (b.1838), John (b.1841), Margaret Murray (b.1843) and Walter (b.1845). Walter (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Richardson and their children included Margaret (b.1842), Anne (b.1847), Walter (b.1850) and George (b.1853). Walter 'Wattie' (20th C.) fiddle player from Denholm. He often played along with Tom Hughes in the 1970s. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as a witness in 1524 to the agreement between Martin Douglas and James Routledge, regarding lands at the Crook in Cavers Parish. William (16th C.) probably in Hawick in 1561 when he made an agreement with David Todrig over lands in Selkirk. He is recorded as 'William Robesone in Hauyk'. William (16th C.) charged with the murder of William Hall 'of Wollie' (probably Wolfelee) in 1573. He was recorded being 'in Rochthewchmylne' (probably Roughheugh Mill) and James Langlands of that Ilk acted as surety for him, and so he was probably a local man. Langlands had to pay 20 merks to Hall's only daughter when Robson failed to appear. William (16th C.) tenant in Langnewton. In 1581 there was a marriage contract for his first-born son William and Elizabeth. He gave to the couple 'half a cotland with onsets, tofts and crofts' in Langnewton, with the liferent reserved for him and his wife Katherine King. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when his lands in Langnewton were mentioned in a marriage contract involving George Brig and John Melrose; 'Jock the Laird' is also mentioned, and probably a relative. In 1590 he was listed among tenants in Langnewton who complained about attacks by the Kers of Newhall; James was also listed and presumably related. In about 1590 he may be the 'Williame Mader of Langtoun' listed among landed men of the Borders. William (16th C.) eldest son of William in Langnewton. In 1581 he was contracted to be married to Elizabeth Brydon, daughter of the deceased John John Brydon in Rutherford and Margaret Ker. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as 'son of James there'. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robison and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Mure' and their son John was baptised in 1685. William (17th C.) married Agnes Riddell in Roberton in 1684. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane French and their children included Jane (b.1756) and William (b.1760). William (18th C.) married Isabel Turnbull in Cavers in 1782. William (18th C.) married Mary Rutherford in Bedrule in 1793. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gowanbrae in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Longburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He could be the William whose children Elizabeth (b.1800) and William (b.1801) were baptised in Hobkirk. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Mary Oliver and their children included: Peter (b.1808); and an unnamed child (b.1811). Perhaps the same William was recorded as a servant at 'Lowgate' in Southdean Parish on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) from Falstone in North Tyne, he lived at Waterside in Southdean Parish. In 1809 he married Barbara Baptie, who was from Bucham. Their children (baptised in Byrness) included: Isabel (b.1809); and Janet (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Cowan and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included twins Jean and Isabel (1819). William (18th/19th C.) married Mary Linton in Southdean in 1817. William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Ritson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1824. William (19th C.) married Janet Fairgrieve in Wilton in 1826. William (19th C.) married Ann Purdom in Hawick in 1837. William Hutchison 'Billy Buttons' (b.1811/2) son of John of the Navy and grandson of the Denholm blacksmith. He was born in England, while his father was stationed there. His nickname came from the coat, festooned with military buttons, which his mother made for him when he was a child. He lived up the Doctor's Pend in Denholm and later had the house called Rosebank built. In part of that house he ran a small stocking-maker's with his 3 sons. He later moved to Westgate Hall and finally to Hawick. He would carry his wares throughout the Borders and into England, where he was known as 'Stocking Wullie'. In Wilton in 1845 he married Janet Cairns, from Hawick Muir. Their children were: John (b.c.1846), who was a stocking-maker and hewer and married Janet Oliver; William (b.c.1850), also a stocking-maker; Beatrix (b.c.1853), who married Bailie Kennedy; and James (b.1855), stocking-maker, teacher and local historian. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son James was baptised in 1841. William (19th C.) married Ann Scott in Hobkirk in 1843. Their children, baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish, included: George (b.1843); Thomas (b.1846); and Betsy Scott (b.1854). William (19th C.) married Janet Cairns in 1845, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. William (19th C.) married Mary Haig in 1845, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. William (19th C.) married Euphemia Hogg in Wilton in 1846. William (b.1813/4) farm labourer in the Teviothead area. In 1841 he was living at Commonside Lynn, moved to Hayknowe and by 1861 was farm steward at Broadhaugh. He firstly married Ann, and secondly Margaret Wylie. His children included John, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary, William, James and Andrew (1859–1930), who emigrated to Illinois. William (1814–81) born at Falstone in Northumberland, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Woolhope. In 1844 he married Margaret (1819–97), daughter of Newcastleton joiner John Douglas. Their children were: William (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); John (b.1848), Robert (b.1849); Janet (b.1850) and John (b.1852), who all died young; Robert (1853–1930); James (1856–89), law clerk in Edinburgh; Hector (1857–1901), ironmonger in Wigtown and Stirling; Walter (1859–1932), bank clerk in Lanarkshire; and Adam (b.1861), solicitor in Galashiels. William (b.1824) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie, he was also blacksmith in Denholm, on Main Street. He married Agnes Miller (sister of John Miller) in Cavers Parish in 1854. Their children included: Robert (b.1849); Thomas (b.1852); James (b.1854); William (b.1856); John Hardie (b.1859); George (b.1862); Isabella (b.1866); and Agnes (b.1868). William (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen 'Bucham' and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1850. William Cairns 'Billy' (b.1849/50) 2nd son of William, 'Billy Buttons', and grandson of sailor John. He was born in Kirkton Parish. He had brothers John, who was a Councillor in Hawick, and James, who wrote local history books. He worked as a stocking-maker. He was Precentor at the Old Chapel in Denholm and at Bedrule Kirk. In 1872 he married Helen, daughter of William MacNeil, teacher at Bedrule. His son John was born in Eccles in 1882, and he had a grandson, also Billy, who was a teacher in Cumnock. He lived to about 80, settling in Leitholm and becoming a noted antiquary. William Inglis (1853–1891) son of blacksmith James. He composed music for 'Up wi' the Banner' and 'Hawick Among the Hills'. Born in Hawick he apprenticed as a blacksmith, and later worked as a frame-smith, but his career eventually turned to music. By 1881 he was advertising himself as an instructor for the 'Tonic Sol-fa College' at 1 Laing Terrace. He also led St. Mary's choir. In 1882 he won a Curwen Scholarship of the Tonic Sol-fa College in London. There he became a member of the London Musical Composition Club, graduated from the Tonic Sol-fa College and was appointed by the U.P. Church as a music teacher. In 1883 he became leader of psalmody at Queen Anne Street U.P. Church in Dunfermline, and later taught in Glasgow and Govan. For his last 7 years he was choirmaster at Free St. George's Church in Glasgow. He was appointed as Professor of School of Music for Scotland at the Glasgow Athenæum (later the Royal Scottish Academy of Music). He adopted his mother's maiden name as a middle name, presumably to distinguish himself from other Williams. He married Nancy Scott and their son, William Scott wrote 2 books on Hawick in the mid-20th century. He died in Cambuslang and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. William Hardie (1856–1927) younger son of Denholm blacksmith John. He emigrated to Canada in 1881. He was known as an expert on Canadian fossils, with his collection given to the Ottawa Museum. He died in British Columbia. William (19th C.) Hawick cyclist, who lived at Havelock Street. He can be seen in a photograph of 1899 with his trophies. He may be the same as the engineer and sawmill owner. William (19th C.) engineer of Hawick, and member of Allars Kirk. He may be the William whose sawmill is listed on Havelock Street in a 1900 directory. William B. (b.c.1900) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. He was just 15 when he enlisted. William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of William Inglis and Nancy Scott. He worked as an advertising manager. He wrote 'Hawick Place Names' (1947) and 'The Story of Hawick' (1937, revised 1945 and 1947). He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He married Elizabeth Hannah Watt and their son James Scott was Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University (formerly spelled 'Robesone', 'Robesonn', 'Robsone', 'Robsonne' etc.; see also Robison and Robertson, which were formerly not distinguished).

Robson Court (rob-sin-kōr') n. part of the Meadows, refurbished in 1986 and named after rugby player Adam Robson.

Robson's (rob-sinz) n. former sawmill on Weensland Road. Its traction engine can be seen in a photograph of 1913. This is probably the same company whose sawmill was on Havelock Street in 1900.

Robson-Scott (rob-sin-sko') n. Dr. James of Ashtrees (1814–83) eldest son of John Robson (son of James of Samieston) and Esther Scott (daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel). Educated in medicine, he joined the East India Company and went to Madras about 1836, later being appointed surgeon with the 4th Madras Infantry, and retired in 1858. On his return to Britain he took the additional surname of Scott, having inherited the lands of Ashtrees from his uncle John Scott of Riccalton. He lived at Belford, Morebattle, where he had been born. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He joined the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club, becoming President. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He married Marianne, daughter of James Grant of Correemony, Inverness-shire. His children were: Maj. James S., who succeeded to Ashtrees; and 2 daughters, one of whom married John Corse Scott of Synton. He died following an illness contracted while visiting his brother at Newton, and is buried in Hownam kirkyard. John Alexander of Newton and Menslaws (1858–1940) eldest son of Thomas. He was educated at Fettes College and Edinburgh University. He travelled extensively, and had a collection of stuffed birds, which he shot himself. He also bred horses, including 'Gold', who won the Ascot Gold Cup in 1890. In 1887 he married Margaret Suter, 2nd daughter of William Lang, and she died in 1940. Their children included: Theresa Dorothy (1888–1967); and Marjorie (1891–1967); and Thomas Selby (1894–1914), who was killed in WWI. His children are recorded as followers of the Jedforest Hunt. His sister-in-law Florence Lang married his brother Thomas of Lethem. Marjorie (1891–1967) daughter of John. On the death of her father she took over running the farm of Newton (where she lived with her sister Dorothy) and also the family stud. When she died Newton was inherited by her cousin John Lang. She is buried in Bedrule Kirkyard. Thomas of Newton, Bedrule (1815–93) 2nd son of John Robson and Esther Scott and brother of Dr. James. He inherited Newton from his uncle Thomas Scott, taking the additional Scott surname. He leased the farm at Lethem (which had long been in the Scott family), as well as several other sheep farms, and was an authority on sheep-farming. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He found a hammer of felsite on his farm in the mid-19th century. In 1861 he was farming 8500 acres at Lethem and employing 28 people. He was recorded at both Lethem and Newton in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of the lands of Newton on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1857 he married Mary Anne Leslie, daughter of Rev. T. Wight of Oxnam (who was born in Midlem and educated in Lilliesealf), and she died in 1897. Their children were: John Alexander of Newton; Esther Anne; Thomas William of Lethem; Sarah; Charles George; and Lilias. The family have an enclosure in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas William 'Tom' (b.1866) younger son of Thomas of Newton. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hunt 1894–97 and Master of Hunt 1903–32. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. He lived at Lethem and also at Lanton Tower, which he purchased. He farmed at Lethem, Southdean and Peel. In 1892 he married Florence Jane, daughter of William Lang, who was a cousin of Andrew Lang's; his sister-in-law Margaret married his brother John of Newton. He secondly married Violet Cunningham. His children included John (killed following illness in WWI), Tom, Esther and William Douglas. His children Esther, John and Tom were all followers of the Jedforest Hunt when young. There is a signed portrait of him in the Horse & Hounds Inn at Bonchester. Thomas Selby (1894–1914) son of John, he attended Rugby School and was killed in WWI. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots and was recorded missing at Wytschaete, Flanders. There is a memorial plaque to him inside Bedrule Kirk. William Douglas (1901–81) youngest son of Tom, born in Southdean Parish, he became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London 1968–73. He wrote several works on Goethe and translated Sigmund Freud into English, his wife Elaine helping him in some of this work.

Robsteed (rob-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as 'Robsteid', and listed along with the other lands of 'Cleirlandis, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss', with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Rob the Clocker (rob-thu-klo-kur) n. nickname of Robert Wulson of the mid-1800s.

Rob the Heckler (rob-thu-hek-lur) n. resident of Denholm in the 19th century. A story is recounted (in the Border Counties' Magazine) of his youthful love for his native village. His father sent him to start service somewhere near Lilliesleaf, and when he got to Hassendean he looked back and said 'O ma bonny Denholm! aw'll never sey ye mair!' His father left him at his new place of employment, but was surprised to find him already back in Denholm when he returned home. His nickname presumably comes from the former manufacturing of lint.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lārd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who farmed at Binks.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lārd) n. nickname for Robert Scott, a man of gypsy descent who was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be 'keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh' about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lārd) n. nickname used locally in the 19th century. This may be the same man as Robert Scott, farmer at Binks – 'Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird' [HI] (note that one version of the poem has 'Jock the Laird').

Rob wi the Dog (rob-wi-thu-dōg) n. nickname of Robert Oliver.

Rob Young (rōb-yung) n. blacksmith Robert Young, mentioned in the song 'Pawkie Paiterson' – 'Auld Rob Young o' the Back Raw's there, Biddy the Hawker's sellin' preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there's baith Jock and Sandy Weens' [HI].

Rochead (roch-heed) n. John Thomas (1814–78) Edinburgh-born architect, who trained with David Bryce before established his own practice in Glasgow. Here he designed many of the grandest Scottish buildings of the latter part of the 19th century, e.g. St. John's Free Church. In Hawick he was responsible for designing the Corn Exchange, St. Andrew's Free Church and several mansions, including Silverbuthall House, Hillhead House, Langlands Park, Heronhill, Mansfield and Thornwood. He was also responsible for the design for the Wallace Monument in Stirling. At the Museum's temporary exhibition of 1866, 'John Davidson exhibits a series of models in stucco, of cornices, corbals, and other plaster work, executed and principally designed by himself, and from sketches by Mr J.T. Rochead'. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a 'lithograph of the Wallace Monument at Stirling'.

rock (rok) n., arch. distaff in spinning, the staff holding the unspun flax or wool – 'But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An' that was a bad beginnin' o't' [T], '... by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there ... ' [BR1693] '... And thus she sung, and twined her rock, When at the door a feeble knock' [JTe], '... Yet aye I'll mind her rock an reel, Her stories, an' her spinnin'-wheel' [JJ] (from Old Danish).

the Rock (thu-rok) n. feature indicated on Wood's plan of 1824, marking the northern end of the Little Haugh. It was situated somewhere between the current Little Haugh and the Drill Hall area, on the land once occupied by Teviot Crescent Mills, and was presumably a rock of some sort.

rock bool (rok-bool) n., arch. a hard boiled confection. Miss Lamb's, from Needle Street, were famous in the early 19th century – 'Bet Revel's 'rock bools' were the best sweets he ever tasted' [JTu], 'The 'bit' of old Needle Street will appeal to all lovers of 'rock bools' [V&M], 'Rock bools – Hawick's distinctive sweetmeat' [ECS], 'Ee'd better heide thae rock-bools, or the bairns 'll kinsh thum' [ECS] (see also Hawick Balls).

rockety-rowe (ro-ki'-ee-row) n., arch. an amusement among children involving a rocking motion, also known as 'wey the butter, wey the cheese' – 'And the old bairns' game of 'rockety-rowe', when two would stand back-to-back with their arms linked and by stooping alternately, raise each other from the ground, chanting: 'Wei butter, wei cheese, Wei a pund o' cannle-grease, Yowe up, mei doon, This is the way to London toon' ' [DH] , a rolling gait – 'Thom sailor has a rockety-rowe o' a walk' [GW], a vehicle with a rocking motion, v. to rock, sway, adj. rocky, rickety, wobbly.

rocklay (rok-lā) n., poet. a kind of short cloak with a long cape, a mantle – '... vielence kivers thame as ane rocklay' [HSR], '... an' let thame kiver thamesel's wi' thair ain confuushon as wi' ane rocklay' [HSR].

the Rocks (thu-roks) n. name of a small field opposite old Cavers Kirk.

Rocksteid (rok-steed) n. former lands in 1632, listed among the possessions of Francis Beattie in Liddesdale. It is recorded as 'Twa steids Over and Neather, with the pertinents' thairof called Roksteid', along with 'Neirland' (probably Netherraw) and 'Podotoun' (probably Paddington).

Rockvale (rok-vāl) n. name for group of houses on Liddesdale Road (previously Lynnwood Road), being Nos. 1–6. The first house (No. 4) was built sometime before 1857 and took the name in the 1880s, the others being built in 1926. They were originally reached from the main road via a footbridge over the mill lade. The row of houses was retained when others around it were demolished in the 1980s (the origin is presumably from the rocky protuberance, now a disused quarry, overlooking the valley).

Rockview (rok-vew) n. house in Denholm, off Minto Road, which was a blacksmith's in the early 20th century.

Rockville (rok-vil) n. another name used for Rockvale.

Roden (rō-den) n. Andrew (b.1832/3) from Dumfries, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 12 Kirkwynd with his wife Jane, son Samuel and brothers Alexander and John. In 1862 he donated a coin to the Museum.

roddin (ro-din) n., poet. a track, path – '. . . gae they wayes furth bie the fit-roddins o' the flok' [HSR].

Rodds (rodz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as 'Roddis'. At that time the tenants were John and James Elliot and the lands were valued at one merk. It is unclear where this is, but it was listed between Ramsiegill and Roughley, so it is possibly the same place as 'Reddadenn'.

rode (rōd) pp., arch. marked boundaries, perambulated – 'Depones, He knows not by what authority the marches were rode at that time, nor what was the cause of riding; nor does he remember what particularly passed among the gentlemen at riding the marches' [DCW1765] (see ride).

Rodes (rōdz) n. former farm near Southdean, although the precise location and name are uncertain. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and John Storie in 1694 (it was 'Roods' and 'rods' in 1694).

Rodger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in Clarilaw. It is possible he is the Andrew, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Roberton (but probably Hassendean), included Isobel (b.1683) and Margaret (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Henderson and John Armstrong. He is probably the Andrew who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 and witnessed another for John Turnbull in 1688. Andrew (b.1682) son of William, he was born in Hassendean Parish, which became part of Roberton. He was farmer on the Cavers estate who, before about 1737, made early winnowing machines or corn fanners, inspired by descriptions of a Dutch model (perhaps communicated to him by Douglas of Cavers). These may have been the first mechanical means of separating grain from the chaff in the whole of Britain. Another version tells how in 1733 he found a machine discarded in Leith by James Meikle (brought back from Holland) and made one of his own 4 years later, supplying them for £3 each by 1740, having given up his farm and moved into Hawick. He thereafter sold them in the area, although there were religious objections that they were supplanting the Lord's creations (i.e. the corn should be 'fanned by God's wind on the hills'); for some time in Hawick, when anything went wrong it was blamed on 'the deil or Andro Rodger' and the machine was called the 'deil's wind'. He was censured by the Kirk Session and suspended from Kirk privileges. In 1723 he obtained a property in the Sandbed from his uncle James Rodger, which had previously belonged to Langlands. On either this property or elsewhere at the Sandbed he established a shop. His descendants traded in fanning machines there for about the next 100 years. He was involved in a dispute with the Hawick Parish Session, resulting in him giving a them a bond in 1724 for a property at the Sandbed, described as formerly consisting ' of all and haill of these two old ruinous houses and barn sheds, with the yard and pertinents thereof, lying upon the west side of the water of Slitrig, in that part thereof called The Sandbed, betwixt the said Sandbed in the east, the tenement of Patrick Richardson, Bayley, upon the south, the garden of Charles Scott of Goldielands on the west, and the corn barn and yard pertaining to William Layng upon the North part thereof in the parish of Wiltoun, which ruinous houses have been taken down and rebuilt. The new buildings are occupied as the Parochial School of Hawick'. This was where the Grammar School would be built, presumably with his own business premises adjacent. Andrew Turnbull and John Pringle were charged with valuing his house for the Kirk Session. A portrait of him exists (he is also referred to as 'Rogers' and sometimes called 'William'). He was recorded living at Cavers itself in 1723 when one of his children was baptised. He was said to have lived at Cavers Mains or Little Cote. He is probably the Andrew, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Marion (b.1711), William (b.1713), James (b.1715), Margaret (b.1717), Betty (b.1720), Robert (b.1723), an unnamed child (b.1725), Hugh (b.1727) and Ann (b.1729). He was at Eastcote in 1727 when his son was baptised. Andrew (d.1819) flesher in Hawick, who had sons Robert and John. He is probably the Andrew, married to Betty Grieve, whose children included: Jean (b.1769); an unnamed child (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); William (b.1773); and Robert John (b.1775). The first child was baptised in Wilton Parish and the rest in Hawick. The witnesses in 1771 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Andrew whose uncle Andrew Scott died in Hawick in 1778. Andrew (b.1785) son of John and Catherine Cairns, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. In 1816 he married Margaret Smail in Selkirk. Their children included: John (b.1822), born at Hyndlee in Southdean; and Jessie (b.c.1831), born in Southdean. It seems likely that Andrew (b.c.1829), born in Southdean Parish, was also his son. Andrew (b.1801/2) born in Traquair Parish, he was a shepherd at Sundhope and also toll-keeper at Fiddleton around the 1860s. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Priesthaughshiel. In 1851 he was at Sundhope and in 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Fiddleton, with his son James as the toll-keeper, and his daughter Joan also there. His wife was Violet Rae and their first 6 children were baptised in Yarrow Parish, then 4 in Ewes Parish and the rest in Castleton and Cavers. They included Margaret (b.1824), James (b.1826), William (b.1828), Andrew (b.1829), Violet (b.1830), John (b.1832), Walter (b.1834), Elliot (b.1835), Isabella (b.1837), Robert (also known as Rutherford, b.1839), Isaac (b.1842), Adam (b.1844), Euphemia (b.1846) and Joan (b.1847). Andrew (b.1816/7) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 he was a handloom weaver living on the Back Raw, in 1851 was a stockingmaker on Burn Road in the Dean and in 1861 was a frame-worker living on Dean Road. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betsy') Scott in Wilton in 1839 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1840); Helen; Robert; Isabella; Gideon; Mary; John; and James. Andrew (b.c.1825) flesher on the Howegate. He may have been related to the earlier flesher of the same name. In 1841 he was listed along with his siblings Walter, Nancy, Helen and Elizabeth. He was at about 23–25 Howegate in 1851, along with his sister Helen. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory (as 'Rodgers') on the Howegate. Andrew (b.c.1829) born in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he was a farm labourer at Greenhead Cottages, Selkirk and in 1851 was a shepherd at Sunderland farm. His wife was Margaret from Ashkirk and their children included Philadelphia (b.c.1850), Margaret and Mary. Andrew (b.c.1830) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was a game watcher. In 1851 he was living with his in-laws at Netheraw in Castleton Parish. He married Frances Rodger and their children included Andrew and Matthew. Andrew (b.c.1835) born in Edinburgh, son of Andrew from Earlston. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Havelock Street. His wife was Euphemia (from Langholm) and their children included Andrew. Rev. Ernest Ormrod (1885–1964) born at Woolston, Hampshire, son of Rev. W.A. Rodger and Emily Annie Ormrod. He was educated in Stranraer and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Glasgow Presbytery in 1919, served with the K.O.S.B. as a Lieutenant in France, became assistant at Barony Parish, Glasgow, and was ordained as minister of Aberfoyle in 1919. He moved to Giffnock in 1922, resigned in 1948 and then became minister of West Linton Trinity in 1952. He then served (in a limited-term appointment) as minister of Wilton South Church 1959–62. In 1915 he married Annie, daughter of Archibald MacColl and they had a daughter Margaret Vivienne Ormrod (b.1918). James (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the James who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 in Roberton Parish (but actually the Hassendean part). James (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Kirkton Parish in 1721. Perhaps the same James was recorded in Cavers in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is possible he was the James who in 1723 sold his property in the Sandbed to his nephew Andrew. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at 'Utter Parkhill' in 1782 and Parkhill in 1784. His children included: James (b.1779); Jane (b.1782); and Helen (b.1784). James (b.1826/7) son of Andrew, he was born in Selkirk Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as toll-keeper at Fiddleton, living there with his father as well as his sister Joan. James (19th C.) married Jessie Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1853. James (19th C.) flesher on the Howegate. In 1866 he donated an Australian hat to the Museum and in 1872 he donated a volume of the Kelso Mail. He went bankrupt in 1873, with the Commissioners for his estate being John Nichol and Walter Forsyth. Maj. James (1864/5–1930) worked in the woollen industry. He married Bella, only child of A.K. Innes. He was probably son of John and Margaret MacRaw. Janet (d.1787) servant of Dr. William Scott, who lived at Brieryhill. She died in Hawick. John (b.c.1750) resident of Whitmuir Hall when his 2 sons were baptised in Selkirk Parish. In 1778 he married Catherine (1752–1816), daughter of James Cairns; she was born at Dodhead and died at Oakwood Mill. Their children included: Andrew (b.1785), who lived in Southdean Parish; and John (b.1787). John (1787–1869) son of John, he was born at Whitmuir Hall. He was a labourer at Howpasley on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. In 1809 he married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Brunton at the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. Most of their 10 children were born at Howpasley and baptised at the East Bank Kirk: Christina (b.1810); Henry (b.1813); Nelly (b.1814); Helen (b.1817); Mary (b.c.1820); John (b.1822); Peter (b.1824); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1826); Dickson (b.c.1828); and James (b.c.1830). He emigrated to Canada and died in Blenheim Township, Ontario. John (b.1770s) butcher recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. Robert, also a butcher, was listed with him, suggesting they were brothers. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was still listed in 1801, but now as a carrier. Probably the same John was a butcher of the Back Row, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed on the Howegate. Matthew 'Mat' (d.1968) joiner in Deanburnhaugh. He took over from Adam Elliot. Peter (b.c.1780) stocking-maker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as a weaver in Whitchesters in 1704. In 1704 he also witnessed a baptism for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He gave evidence in 1710 relating to a fight in St. Mary's between 2 other weavers. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. He married Janet Glendinning in 1701 and their children included: William (b.1704), Janet (b.1706) and Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and James Grieve in Commonside and in 1708 were gardener William Scott and carrier Henry Paterson. Robert 'Duke' (18th/19th C.) possibly the same Robert recorded as butcher at the Back Row in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He took over as town drummer from Caleb Rutherford, about 1830. He may be the butcher, recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; John was listed along with him, suggesting they may have been brothers. In 1799 he was a butcher among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and was still listed in 1801 (again along with John) – 'Rob Rodger, he ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [RM]. Robert (b.1822/3) framework knitter in Hawick, son of William. In 1851 he was living on Upper Damside. He married Marianne (or Mary Ann) Welsh in Wilton Parish in 1845. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1848/9), William (b.1851), Helen (b.1853/4), Andrew (b.1856/7) and Mary Ann (b.1859/60). Walter (b.c.1820) flesher on the Howegate. He was living at about No. 17 in 1841, along with his siblings Nacny, Andrew, Helen and Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included: Robert (b.1670); William (b.1672); Bessie (b.1674); and John (b.1684). He may be the William who was fined in 1688 for allowing his horse to graze in Bailie Thorbrand's crops. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (but probably the part that was Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1682), probably the inventer of winnowing machines; James (b.1684); and Elizabeth (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were James and Andrew, who were surely related to him. The 1687 witnesses were 2 William Turnbulls. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and Margaret Scott. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Murie' or Moore and their children born in Hawick Parish included: Bessie (b.1687); and an unnamed son (b.1688). In 1690 his wife was prosecuted along with Margaret Nichol for stealing meal from Walter Scott of West Port; both women were put in the stocks and also made to stand at the Mercat Cross. William (17th C.) 'pedder' (i.e. pedlar) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the William married to Helen 'Murie' or the one married to Janet Dryden. Probably the same William was recorded as a chapman in 1700 when his step-son James Riddell was banished from Hawick for sheep-stealing. William (17th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for Ashkirk Parish. This suggests he was probably a Kirk elder. He is probably the William who married Margaret, daughter of William Scott, in Wilton Parish in 1711. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: William (b.1717); and Bettie (b.1719). Andrew (b.1712), baptised in Wilton was probably also his child. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Parkhill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the William whose wife Mary Stavert died in 1795. William (d.1805) described as 'weaver and shopkeeper to Mr. Oliver'. It is unclear which Oliver this was. Perhaps the same weaver married Helen Scott in 1763 and had children: Margaret (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1768); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Scott and Robert Renwick (who married Elizabeth, perhaps his sister). William (d.1837) wright of Hawick, probably a descendant of Andrew. His employee, wright John Scott, was listed among Hawick men balloted for the Militia in 1797. It is possible he is the 'Roger' whose premises near the top of Walter's Wynd are shown on Wood's 1824 map. William (b.1789/90) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row in Hawick, in 1851 was living at No. 14 Burn Row in Wilton Dean and in 1861 was still living in the Dean. His wife was Helen and their children included: Isabel (b.c.1821); William (b.c.1822); Robert (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (b.c.1827); John (b.c.1831); and James (b.c.1832). William (b.1818/9) grocer and frameworker in Wilton, son of William. In 1851 he was at 'Upper row No. 1' in the Dean and in 1861 was still living in the Dean. He married Mary Bell in 1848, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Mary, William, Helen, George and Isabella. He is probably the William who in 1871 donated to the Museum a 'leather snuff-box of Hardy Bell's grandfather, and a Bible' inscribed with the name 'John Moor' at Howcleuch in 1758 (also written 'Rodgar'; see also Roger).

Rodgers (ro-jurz) n. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Kirk Wynd in Slater's 1852 directory. Mary (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories.

Rodgerson (ro-jur-sin) n. Craig (1977/8–) son of Robert, he went to Trinity and Hawick High School. He played rugby for the Albion, P.S.A., Trades, Y.M. and Hawick R.F.C. He was Cornet in 2004. He is a plumber, lecturing at the Borders College and having his own business. He was President of the 1514 Club in 2014. He married his Cornet's Lass, Amy Warden, from Skelfhill farm and they have a son, Hector.

Rodgie (ro-jee) n. Rev. Andrew (1777–1861) from Abernethy, son of Thomas and Margaret Wright. He was minister of the Green (or West End) Church for 53 years, ordained in 1807, following the death of Rev. Dr. Young. He may have been in Hawick since late the previous year, having also been called to Jedburgh. He was well known for receiving the Cornet and his supporters every year at Myreslaw Green, sending his servant round with the bottle, giving them 'A guid, cauld cauker, Frae a man that was nae Quaker', in a verse that may have been added to Balbirnie's 'Auld Song'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed at Myreslawgreen in Pigot's 1837 directory. Often referred to as 'Rodgie o the Green', he was known for insisting on strict observance of the Sabbath (which included no fiddling, secular singing, cooking or walking). In 1856 he was presented with a purse containing 90 sovereigns on the occasion of his jubiliee. He married Isabella Summers in Hawick in 1825 and they appear to have had 4 children: Isabella (b.1826); Margaret (b.1828), still living in Hawick in 1861; Thomas (b.1831), who died young; and Mary (b.1837), also died young. A portrait of him exists. His mother-in-law died in Hawick in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in the cholera outbreak). His wife is recorded in about 1874 (along with Janet Brown, perhaps a relative) as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. William (1836/7–73) said to be from Hawick, he may have been related to Rev. Andrew. He worked as a banker in Bombay. In 1863 in Hawick he married Mary Elisabeth, daughter of Dr. Walter Graham. He is recorded being present at the famous otter hunt organised at Hawick in 1863. He died of dysentery in Jerusalem on his way back from Bombay. A cross was erected in the cemetery at Jerusalem in his memory (also written 'Rogie').

Rodman (rod-mun) n. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he had remission for crimes. He was listed as being from Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep and cattle from 4 separate farms. His surety was Thomas Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hundalee. He was separately listed in 1494/5 when he had remission for stealing sheep from 2 other farms, with his surety being Thomas Rutherford in the Grange of Abbotrule. This surname seems to be otherwise unknown in the area.

Rodono (ro-dō-nō) n. house on the western bank of St. Mary's Loch. The estate was an ancient barony dating to at least 1236, and was long held by the monks of Melrose. There was a nearby chapel (at Chapelhope, at the head of the Loch o the Lowes). In 1442 it was listed among lands whose fees were held by Melrose

Abbey. In 1484 it was contained in a list of lands to which the monks appointed David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert as Bailies, with Sir Walter Scott appointed to the same office in 1519. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller's expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Ringwoodfield) and in 1540 the 'fermes' were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £82 12s 8d. In 1557 Robert Scott of Bowhill paid rental to Melrose Abbey for lands here, namely 'Langbank', 'Quhithoup', 'Litillhoup' and 'Mekillehoup'. The lands were valued at £25 in about 1564 and in that year 'the lands of Rodono, viz. the lands of Langbank, the lands of Qhhithop, the lands of Litilhoip otherwise called Rodono Chapell, and the lands of Mekillhoip' were resigned by John Lamb, Burgess of Edinburgh, into the hands of James, Earl of Murray. In 1566 Queen Mary and her husband Darnley held a council here, when they mentioned the scarcity of deer seen on the royal hunting trip and emphasised the penalties for others shooting the animals. When it was bought by John Scott of Teviotbank in the mid-19th century he revived the old name. The mansion was built in 1866 for this John Scott (also called 'of Rodono'), but he died before it was completed. It was then owned by Thomas and William Turnbull of Fenwick and sold in 1890. The Earl of Wemyss rented it out as a hunting lodge. For a while it was leased by Robert Pringle, of Pringle of Scotland, who used the name for his factory in Hawick, as well as for the unshrinkable process Pringles applied to underwear. It later became a hotel, known for wild society functions, with stories of a Model-T Ford being driven out onto a frozen St. Mary's in 1934 to later sink, and also said to be where Mandy Rice-Davies of the Profumo affair is alleged to have hidden out in the 1960s. It was sold by Lady Elizabeth Benson in 1994 and renovated in about 2000 – 'Near him stand Bourhope and Corsecleuch hills, And beyond, the Capper Law, Rodono (with tiny glistening rills That a spate to mountain torrent fills), And behind,the Pauper Law' [TK] (the name probably comes from the old Scots for the rowan tree; it was 'Rodanoch' in 1235/6, 'rodono' in 1442, 'Rodonow' in 1484, 'Rowdonov' in 1519, 'Rodonoland' in 1524, 'Rodonoland' in 1525 and 1553/4, 'Rodonald' in 1538, 'Rowdonald' in 1540, 'Rowdono' in 1557, 'Rodonaldland' in 1574 and 'Roddono' in 1670).

Rodono (ro-, ri-dō-nō) n. Rodono Mills, part of the Pringle's knitwear operation on Teviot Road. The original buildings of Walter's Wynd were built for John Nixon & Sons in 1869 and renamed 'Rodono' by Pringle's (after the hunting lodge at St. Mary's Loch, which Robert Pringle leased). There was a fire there in 1939, destroying the offices and much of the company archives. The buildings were developed to their final massive (and architecturally unremarkable) size through extensions in 1952, 1955, 1958 and 1968. However, it was closed in 1976 due to costs, with all the machinery being moved to Glebe Mills and administration to Victoria Mill. The building was demolished in 1980/1. The rubble was used to fill part of Weensland dam and raise the ground level opposite the sewerage works. The land was used for the new Health Centre in 1989. The name was also adopted as a trade name for the shrink-resistant process applied by Pringles to underwear from 1899.

Rodono Mills see Rodono

Roger (ro-jur) n. Parson of Rule. He may be the earliest known priest of Hobkirk Parish. Sometime in the period 1165–78 he witnessed a charter for Richard Comyn, relating to Holyrood Abbey and land in West Lothian. His name is given as 'Rogero' and he was 'persona' of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted a stone of wax annually to the church of St. Cuthbert in Durham.

Roger (ro-jur) n. grieve of Hassendean who witnessed a charter around the 1220s for the family 'of Hassendean'. His name is given as 'Rogero'. It is possible that his ancestors became Grieves.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Douglas (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 he witnessed baptisms for wright William and in 1793 he (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for the same William, who was surely related (probably his cousin). He and Robert subscribed to the fund for the Slitrig Brig in 1776. He married Elizabeth Harkness and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1806. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Thomson. In 1724 he married Janet, daughter of merchant James Simpson. Their children included: Janet (b.1725); Margaret (b.1727); and John (b.1729, although the name is hard to read). The witnesses in 1725 were merchant William Oliver and carrier John Simpson and in 1729 were 'Mr' (probably Andrew) Haliburton and the Laird of Harwood. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Haig and in

1745 another for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for James Stoddart. He may also be the James who in 1774 witnessed a baptism for James Easton from Branxholme. He subscribed to the fund for the Slitrig Brig in 1776. He married Janet Dickson. Their son Andrew was born in 1745, with the witnesses being merchants Charles Tudhope and William Riddel. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for carrier John Simpson. He married Jean Haig and their children included: Mary (b.1745); and Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker Thomas Scott and weaver Robert Douglas. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Craw and their son John was baptised in 1674. Robert (16th/17th C.) of Burnfoot Mill. He is mentioned in the 1612 complaint of the Baron of Hawick to the Privy Council, regarding taxation in Hawick and the imprisoning of the Baron's officer, Alexander 'Wischart' in St. Mary's steeple. The Magistrates were let off this latter charge, since Wischart was guilty of striking Roger, presumably at the market while trying to collect customs. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He married Helen Duncan and their children included Janet (b.1701) and John (b.1703). The witnesses in 1701 were weaver John Swan and Robert Langlands. Robert (d.1808) wheelwright in Hawick, son of Andrew. His father could have been Andrew 'Rodger', manufacturer of agricultural implements from the early part of the 18th century. He is probably the Robert who married either Elizabeth Wallace or Margaret Davidson or Betty Grieve. He and Douglas subscribed to the fund for the Slitrig Brig in 1776. He is probably the Robert, who, along with Douglas, witnessed a baptism for wright William in 1793; he may have been brother of Douglas and cousin of William. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth Wallace in Hawick in 1768. Their children included Ann (b.1770). Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1772. Their children included William (b.1773). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Betty Grieve. Their son Robert was baptised in 1775. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Joan Stewart. Their son James was baptised in 1810. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (d.1482) court musician of James III. He was kinghted and appointed to the Privy Council. The King gave him the estate of Traquair in 1469. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King's enemies. In 1478 he disposed of Traquair for only 70 merks to James Stewart, Earl of Buchan, uncle to the King. However, a few years later, when the King was on an expedition against the English, he was one of the royal favourites who were captured by a group including the Earl of Buchan, and hanged at Lauder bridge. William (15th C.) leased the lands of Winterburgh in 1488, along with Robert Scott, with Sir David Scott as pledge. The lease continued in 1490 and 1492. Probably the same William was bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Wilzem Roger' in 1500 when he was one of the witnesses for a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope. Probably the same man was witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for their lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1730); Isabel (b.1731); Isabel (again, b.1732); William (b.1739); Robert (b.1741); Andrew (b.1745); and Janet (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1731 were James Purcell and Thomas Scott, in 1739 were merchant John Cavers and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1745 were merchants Francis and John Ruecastle. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1763 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Margaret (b.1764), Elizabeth (b.1768) and William (b.1770). William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for John Laing. He married Marjory, daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson) in 1776 and their children included: Agnes (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1781); Janet (b.1785); Ann (b.1787); Willelmina (b.1789); and Marjory (b.1793). The witnesses in 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 were Bailie Walter Hardie and Douglas (who was surely related) and in 1793 were wrights Robert and Douglas Roger (perhaps his cousins). He is mentioned as a wright in Hawick in a Selkirk court case of 1809. He may have been son of James. William (18th/19th C.) describer of a version of how Hawick men accounted for themselves at Flodden, as recounted in Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (1850). He may be the same William who married Marjory Donaldson (sister of Agnes, Isabella, Elizabeth and Jane), and had 7 children, including Janet, who was the 2nd wife of manufacturer Alexander Laing. He may also be the William who is shown as owner of property on Slitrig Crescent on Wood's 1824 map (see also Rodger; formerly sometimes 'Rocher').

rogerowse (ro-gu-ows) adj., arch. given to freedom of speech, outspoken (noted by J. Jamieson).

Rogers (ro-jurz) n. Ann (b.c.1790) milliner at 26 High Street, along with Mina. They are recorded on the 1841 census. Rev. Douglas Malcolm (1916–95) born in Leeds, he was trained at Yorkshire United Independent College and became minister of Providence Chapel, Cleckheaton in 1948. Thereafter he served as minister in Halifax and Sunderland, before becoming minister at Hawick Congregational Kirk 1969–71. After Hawick he was minister at Girlington, Yorkshire. He married Edith Doreen Speck.

Rogerson (ro-jur-sin) n. John (19th C.) married Agnes Kerr in Roberton in 1830. John local teacher who co-wrote 'Jimme Guthrie, Hawick's Racing Legend' with journalist Gordon Small in 1997. Thomas (19th C.) general agent in Dundee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825, suggesting that he had a local connection. In 1827 in Langholm he married Janet Elizabeth Renwick. In 1839 he was in Dundee jail, fighting his creditors.

Rogie see Rodgie

rogues-money (rōgz-mu-nee) n. a tax raised on counties for the expense of arresting and imprisoning criminals. The local use and administration of these funds appears to have been a matter of some debate – 'Paid Mr Weir, to carry his expenses to Jedburgh for the rogue-money relating to the brig' [BR1740].

the Rogues' Cairt (thu-rōgz-kār') n. springcart that used to be sent round to the neighbouring parishes for transporting prisoners to Jedburgh Jail. This started around the 1840s.

the Rogues' Hole (thu-rōgz-hōl) n. occasional name used for the Town prison (e.g. in 1782), being under the former Town House (also called the Thiefs' Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Roll-aboot (rōl-u-boo') n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – 'Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lilts a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot' [HI].

the Roll o Honour (thu-rōl-ō-o-nur) n. record of local men who fell in the 2 World Wars, held in the Museum. The original was executed by Graham Johnston, W.R. Lawson and William Wallace MacGregor. It consists of 8 pages of illuminated vellum in a stand of oak, containing the names of 693 who were killed in WWI. The names are arranged alphabetically by Regiment. James Haig executed a similar design for the WWII roll.

the Roll o the Clans (thu-rōl-ō-thu-klawnz) n. list of prominent and landed men in the Borders and Highlands in the records of the Privy Council for 1590, with an abbreviated version in the records of the Scottish Parliament for 1587. Its full title is 'The Roll of the Clannis that hes Capitanis, Cheiffis, Chiftenis, quhomeon they depend, oftymis aganis the willis of thair Landislordis, alsweill on the Bordouris as Hielandis, and of sum special personis of branches of the saidis Clannis'. Like other records of the time, it shows that Border families were considered to be clans as much as their Highland cousins. It also forms an invaluable record of local lairds at the time, listing about 100 Lairdships in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire, naming many men explicitly. The 1587 document lists those in the Middle March as: [Francis Stewart] Earl of Bothwell; [Sir Andrew Kerr] Laird of Ferniehirst; [Archibald Douglas] Earl of Angus; [Sir Walter Scott] Laird of Buccleuch; [Sir William Douglas] Sheriff of Teviotdale; [Walter Turnbull] Laird of Bedrule; [Hector Turnbull] Laird of Wauchope; [William Maxwell] Lord Herries; [Walter Scott] Laird of Howpasley; George Turnbull of Hallrule; [Walter Ker] Laird of Littledean; [Sir James Douglas] Laird of Drumlanrig; and [Walter Chisholme] Laird of Chisholme. The document of about 1590 is headed 'Landit Men' and contains more names in each area, as well as covering the whole of Scotland. In the 'Roxburgh and Selkirk' section there are 101 men on the list, some named explicitly and some with just the Lairdship given. Locally the list includes the Lairds of Aikwood, Alemoor, Allanhaugh, Barnhills, Bedrule, Belses, Bewlie, Billerwell, Bonjedward, Braidlie, Buccleuch, Burnfoot, Cavers, Chamberlain Newton, Chisholme, Dryhope, Falnash, Glack, Gledstains, Goldielands, Haining, Hallrule, Harden, Hartsgarth, Hartwoodmyres, Harwood, Hassendean, Headshaw, Horsleyhill, Howpasley, Huntly, Langlands, Mangerton, Minto, Newton, North Synton, Reidheugh, Riddell, Roberton, Stirches, Stobs, Synton, Thirlestane, Timpendean, Tofts, Toor, Tushielaw, Wauchope, Whithaugh and Whitriggs.

Romanno (rō-maw-nō) n. Matthew (15th C.) notary responsible for the sasine for the Cousinlands, sold by Margaret Cousin to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. The 'precept' was witnessed in Hawick, and the sasine itself signed at Branxholme. He was described as a presbyter of Glasgow diocese, and so was probably a local church official. He wrote his name as 'Matheus de Romanox'. He also wrote the sasine for Simon of Routledge selling the Birkwood and Burnflat to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448.

Romanno Bridge (rō-maw-nō-brij) n. village in Peeblesshire, in the northern part of the Scottish Borders, south of West Linton. The 'bridge' is over the Lynne Water. The Romannos of that Ilk came from here. John Scott in Whitehaugh had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The lands were owned by the Murrays from 1513 until 1676. In 1677 it was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shaws (it is 'Rommanos' in 1502 and 'Ralmanno' in 1526).

the Romans (thu-rō-munz) n., pl. empire builders based in Italy, who conquered England, and made in-roads into Scotland. They occupied parts of Britain from the middle of the 1st century to the beginning of the 5th. Agricola's conquest of the North started in 78 C.E., as part of which he built the forts at Raeburnfoot and Newsteads, driving a wedge between the Selgovae and Novantae tribes. Although there was no major Roman settlement in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick, there are many signs of nearby Roman habitation, including at Ruberslaw, Craik Cross and Aikwood. There is a Roman road running from Raeburnfoot to the Borthwick valley via Craik Cross, although it is unclear where it continued on the near side of Craik. However, in 1948 the remains of a stone-built culvert (used to divert the stream under the road) was discovered on the left bank of the Borthwick after flooding, midway between Craik and Northope Haugh; this has subsequently washed away. There has been a suggestion of a continuation of this road up the Borthwick valley and then via Blawearie to Hangingshaw Hill, then between Woo Law and Groundistone Height, proceeding to Harelaw, and connecting to Newstead. There is another possible Roman road connecting Eskdale with Teviotdale, running via Ewes Doors to Caerlenrig. Several Roman altar stones were reused in the building of Jedburgh Abbey. Trimontium near Melrose was an important fort in the 1st and 2nd centuries. Hadrian's Wall is about 40 miles to the south, and Dere Street only about 12 miles to the east. At Teviothead a Roman coin (of Vespasian) was found in 1856, another before 1863 on Ruberslaw, and more recently a denarius of Augustus was found near Fulton Tower. Tiles from Bremenium were donated to the Museum in 1858 and pieces of pottery, other items from Uriconium in 1861 and a buckle and ring from Chollerford in 1900. A 'Roman finger ring' was found at Chapelhill hill-fort in the 19th century, but subsequently lost, and it was said that a possibly Roman bronze vessel was 'given in exchange for a few coppers to a travelling tinker' and also lost. A bronze swastika brooch from the late 2nd century was found at Denholmhill around 1930. Nearer to Hawick, 2 temporary Roman camps were revealed by aerial photography in the 1960s, these lying near Cavers Mains and Eastcote farms. The Romans pulled out of the Borders by 369 C.E., which was effectively the start of the Dark Ages, and the period of Roman occupation was quickly forgotten. However, there have been several local finds of artefacts. The leg of a large bronze statue was found at Milsington in 1820, along with the bronze base of another statue (suggested to be loot from a site in England, and described in 1887/8). A bronze horde was unearthed on Ruberslaw in 1863 (consisting of parts of several vessels, handles, etc., 2nd century, now in the Museum), as well as a 'first brass' of Vespasian found nearby, 2 bronze coins uncovered on Hallrule farm, and a couple of dressed stones from near the summit. More recently a Roman coin was found in a garden at Maclagan Drive, and a Romano-British carved stone at Appletreehall. And in 2011 a horde of 228 coins from the time of Vespasian to Commodus were found on Synton Hill – 'Lords of the earth, the Roman legions wheel Their glittering files, and stamp with gory heel, Bathe the keen javelin's edge in purple dew; While Death smiles dimly o'er the faulchion blue' [JL].

Romish (rō-mish) adj. relating to the Church of Rome, usually used disparagingly by Protestants – '. . . att this time we are threatened with an invasion from Spain, the greatest enemies in ye Romish church and bloody Irish combined' [PR1719].

rone (rōn) n. a gutter on a roof for carrying away rainwater – 'yer rone's ful o leafs, an witter's poorin ower the side', '. . . Wi sparras cheepin gleg the room (thu-room) n., arch. the parlour or sitting-room, the better room in a house (noted by E.C. Smith).

roon (roon) adv., prep. round – 'To sum up the matter – there's nane roon' aboot . . . ' [JoHa], '. . . frae my mortall faes wha ar roon aboot me' [HSR], 'Thaye cam' daylie roun' aboot me like water; thaye cam' roun' an' roun' thegither' [HSR], 'This life is but a shiftin' scene The world gaes circlin' roon' ' [JT], 'Where are pleasures bright and gay In a care forgettin' roon' ' [TK], 'We'll follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet roon' ' [DJ], 'As roon it ran wi stertan een, A waesome squeal the craiter gien' [DH], 'A' roon' aboot stude the muckle black birds . . . ' [DH], '. . . That huddle roun' Winnington Rig' [WL] (also spelled 'roun'; cf. roond).

roond (roond) adj. round – 'it's a roond circle if ever A saw yin', n. a round – 'the next roond's on yow', adv. round, around – 'A came roond ti your bit, bit ee wereni in', '. . . An' bids thy followers roond thy banner rally' [JoHa], '. . . To be a laddie racing roond The auld Mid Raw' [JT], 'When Spring cam' roond, it was my dread . . . ' [IJ], 'Aw'd like tae tell o' the beauties aw've seen That's aw roond dear auld Hawick' [AY], 'Still each year as June comes roond, Ee'll finnd mei early doon the Toon' [ABo], v. to round – 'can ee roond that off ti the nearest shillin?', 'He roonded on me shairply 'Aye, but Bosells Fair was waur!' ' [WL], prep. round, around – '. . . The burn that roond it rins' [JEDM] (sometimes written ' 'roond').

roondaboot (roon-du-boo') n. a roundabout, merry-go-round, traffic circle – 'the roondaboot was his doonfaa on his driving test', '. . . hei'd hev ti wait at yon roondaboot at Galalaw . . . ' [IWL], adj. roundabout, indirect – 'she hed sic a roondaboot way o pittin things, A never kent what she was on aboot'.

roondaboot (roon-du-boo') n., pl. a circular earthwork – 'There are a great many roundabouts in the parish, commonly called Picts Works' [RAB].

Roondaboots (roon-du-boots) n. Roundabouts, former name for a house in Chesters in Southdean Parish. It is listed on the census for 1841 and 1861 and on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It may be the place also known as Turnpikehead.

the Roond Close (thu-roond-klōs) n. probably the oldest of the High Street closes, at No. 17, named after the rounded archway for which it was once notable. It also once held one of the minor gates giving access to the town. Staples for the iron gate were visible until about 1840. The building to the east bears a triangular stone with the inscription 'J.S.M.D. Feare Gode. 1600' (presumably the initials of the couple who owned the house then), taken from the front of the house when it was rebuilt in 1871. A pended house once probably defended the close and was said to have had a lintel bearing the date 1601 when rebuilt in the early 1850s (it is unclear if this is the same as the stone with the date 1600). It was also known as the Wide Close in the early 1800s, and around this time contained a public house (called the Royal Oak or Blue Bell). In the mid-19th century it contained Brunton's contractors and joiners. Many of the houses were demolished in the 1930s, followed by the lower cobbled area, including the I.O.G.T. hall and further buildings after the War, to make way for the Rodono Mill factory. Steps were built to retain the right of way, and Rodono itself was demolished in 1980, and the Health Centre built in its place.

Roond Croft (roond-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land near Hawick, referred to by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900. The location is uncertain, but perhaps close to the Common, or possibly related to an earlier form of the Roond Close.

roonders (roon-durz) n. rounders, a children's bat and ball game – 'Hei taught oo rugby, cricket, roonders, Country dancin, softba', gym And A dinni mind tellin ee A was gliffed stiff for him' [IWL].

Roondhaugh (roond-hawch) n. Roundhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by the Scotts of Woll in 1609 when it is 'Roundhauch'. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the lands (and others in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. It was part of the lands purchased by the Cochranes in 1795.

the Roond Room (thu-roond-room) n. room within the Tower Hotel formerly used for functions, e.g. the reception on Picking Night in the late 19th century.

Roond Sike (roond-sīk) n. Round Sike, small stream in the headwaters of the Thorlieshope Burn in upper Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Roond Table (thu-roond-tā-bul) n. Hawick Round Table, part of an international organisation with charitable and social aims, which began in 1927. The local branch is No. 532, part of area 39, and has met for many years in the Buccleuch Hotel, typically twice a month. It is allied with the Rotary Club, which is restricted to men over the age of 45.

roose (rooz) v. to annoy, anger, provoke, rouse, become agitated, grow angry – 'hei wadni half'd been roosed if hei'd fund oot', 'hei got awfi roosed if ee caaed eet a festival', '... roosty (roos-tee) adj., arch. rusty – 'But a splice or twae here An a roosty nail there' [??].

rooth (rooth) n., arch. rowth, an abundance, plenty – '... thou hest gien my feet routh o' roome' [HSR], '... And routh o' joys, the hearts to cheer, O' lads and lassies braw' [JT], '... twae wi nae official Lass, But wi a routh o lasses welcome to bob and scrammle Alang wi the lave ...' [DH] (also spelled 'routh'; cf. ruith and rowth).

roothly (rooth-lee) adj., poet. rowthly, plentifully, abundantly – '... eet, O frien's; drynk, yis, drink routhlie, O beloefet' [HSR], 'Thaye sall be routhlie satisfiet wi' the fatniss o' thy hous ...' [HSR] (also spelled 'routhlie', etc.).

roothness (rooth-nis) n., poet. abundance, fullness – '... but trustet in the routhniss o' his riches, an' strencthenet himsel in his wicketniss' [HSR].

Ropelawshiel (rōp-lu-sheel) n. cottage in Craik Forest, recorded from at least the early 18th century. It is located where the Ropelaw Sike joins the Rankle Burn, and within the boundaries of the former farm is the source of the Rankle Burn. It was used for several years as a cottage by Chay Blyth and is now a holiday home (the origin of the name may be from roplaw, a young fox; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Roper (rō-pur) n. Moses (c.1815–91) born to an African American mother and a slave-owning father, he grew up as a slave, being tortured after many attempts to escape. Finally escaping successfully, he made it to New York and later sailed for Britain, where he settled in London, learned to read and write and published a narrative of his life's story. He gave many lectures around Britain, starting in 1836. He spoke at the Green Kirk in Hawick in March 1846. William (19th C.) Hawick man who emigrated to Highlandville, Massachusetts. He returned for the Common Ridings of 1887 and 1888, and sang a Hawick song (to the tune of 'Bonnie Dundee') at the 1888 Dinner. He is probably the son of Joseph recorded aged 7 on the Mid Raw in 1841. He may be the William listed among Hawick men who met with Robert Ewen in Guelph on his Canadian tour of 1878; he is recorded singing 'Teribus' along with fellow Teri George Murray.

Rope Sike (rōp-sīk) n. stream that rises between Windburgh Hill and Brown's Hill and flows roughly to the south to meet the Flosh Burn near Langburnshiels.

roplaw (rop-lu) n., arch. a young fox (said to be only a Teviotdale word, noted by J. Jamieson; it is possibly the origin for 'Ropelawshiel').

ropple (ro-pul) v., arch. to run or grow up rapidly (of vegetation) – 'Roppled up, grown up with rapidity, large, but not strong in appearance, Teviotd.' [JoJ].

ropple (ro-pul) v., arch. to pull the edges of something together in sewing, frequently in the phrases 'ropple up' or 'ropple thegither' – 'Ropple, To draw the edges of a hole coarsely together; as of a stocking, instead of darning it, Teviotd.' [JoJ] (cf. thropple).

Rorrison (rō-ree-sin) n. Robert (b.1827/8) from Dumfries, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 9 Kirkwynd. His wife was Janet and their children included James, Anne, Helen, Robert and William. In 1865 his son James donated to the Museum a 'figure of Chinese Mandarin carved in steatite'.

Rosalee (rō-za-lee) n. house built in the mid-19th century on the slopes above Langlands Road near Ladylaw. It was the home of the Rev. John Thomson and his family – 'Sae ilka true Teri three cheers let us gie, For the Mr. and Mrs. o' fair Rosalee' [VW] (sometimes written 'Rosalea').

Rosalee Brae (rō-za-lee-brā) n. road above Langlands Road leading to Rosalee, Ladylaw and some other large houses. The 'Dog Hoose' used to stand on the left side of this road and 'Saut Haa' on the right.

Rosalee Cup (rō-za-lee-kup) n. locally ladies bowling trophy.

Roscins (ros-kinz) n. Thomas (13th C.) granted the lands of 'Bethrull' in Roxburghshire in 1357 by William, Earl of Douglas. This seems likely to be the same as Bedrule. However, there is no other record of a surname like 'Roscins' connected with this area.

Rose (rōz) n. Arthur (1634–1704) son of the minister of Birse, his name is also written 'Ross'. He graduated from Marischal College in 1652 and became minister of Kinearny in 1656. He then became minister of Old Deer, then Rector of Marischal College, minister of St. Mungo's, Bishop of Argyll and Bishop of Galloway. In 1679 he succeed Andrew Burnet as Archbishop of Glasgow. And in 1684, after Burnet's death, he succeeded him as Archbishop of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. After Parliament abolished Episcopalianism in 1689 he continued to preach secretly as an Episcopalian and died in the Canongate. He is buried at Restalrig.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. name given in 1865 to the houses built at Thorterdykes in the years 1861–64 on part of the old Tryst ground, and also on the land known as Haggishaa. The houses were built by Thomas Reid, mason and farmer at St. Leonard's. The name may derive from thickets of wild roses previously growing there.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. house in Denholm. It was built for William Robson, who was a stocking manufacturer in the village. It was later home of John W. Turnbull, clothier.

Rosebank Road (rōz-bawngk-rōd) n. name given in the early 20th century to the road between the Loan and Burnflat Brae, after the houses called Rosebank, which already stood there. The north side was built up in 1927 and the south in 1929. The street is where the riders divide for the Chases, married men to the front and single men to the rear.

Rosecroft (rōz-kroft) n. house on the Dean Road just outside Denholm, which was formerly called Rosebank. It once housed a stocking-shop.

Rosedale (rōz-dāl) n. Turgis (d.bef. 1131) referred to in a charter of about 1125. He was Lord of Liddel, holding lands in what would later be called Liddesdale, and was probably a descendant of the earlier Baron, Turgis Brundis. He founded the house of Augustinian canons of Liddel (an offshoot of Jedburgh Abbey) in a place that came to be known as Canonbie. He gave the religious house of Liddel (as well as the church of 'Kirchanders', i.e. Kirkandrews) to Jedburgh Abbey when it was founded in about 1138. He was succeeded by his son William. William (12th C.) son of Turgis, who was Lord of Liddel, he was a baron from Yorkshire. He is recorded as being 'de Rossedale' in a grant of about 1160 in which he gave his lands of Kershope to the hospital of St. Peter in York. The grant is confirmed in a copy made in the early 14th century, which describes the boundaries of the lands, giving some interesting historical details. The grant is confirmed by Malcolm IV, and there are referred to as 'Greshoppa' (but surely the same place). In the 1150s he founded the Cistercian priory usually called Rosedale Middleton. Along with his wife he also granted lands of 'Greshoppa' in Yorkshire to the same religious house, as confirmed by King Malcolm. He may be the 'Guido' who, with the consent of his son Radulf, gave 42 acres (where the Esk and Liddel join) to Jedburgh Abbey, along with free fishing from the ditch of Liddel to the church of Liddel. His wife was Godehild and he had a son, Turgis, who is the last known member of the family.

Rosemary's Baby (rōz-mā-reez-bā-bee) n. horror novel by Ira Levin, published in 1967 and made into a movie in 1968. The novel contains a sentence about the mail that Rosemary notices outside a neighbour's apartment: 'They got air mail letters from a surprising variety of places: Hawick, Scotland; Langeac, France; Vitória, Brazil; Cessnock, Australia'. It is unclear why Levin chose to include Hawick in this list.

Rosenberg (rō-zen-berg) n. one time pseudonym of Adam Grant. Sometimes also 'M. Rosenberg', it was used by him in for example, 1898 and 1900, for attribution as composer for 'Hawick' and 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best'. Presumably Grant believed that a Germanic name added musical gravitas. The name continued to appear up until about WWI, even although Grant was using his own name on other publications from the early years of the 20th century. It is probably a coincidence that Mrs. Roseburgh, who lived near Galashiels, signed her poetry 'M. Roseburgh' in the mid-to-late 19th century (or else the name is a coincidence).

Rosenberger (rō-zen-bur-gur) n. Frederica 'Mrs. R.' (20th C.) from Budapest in Hungary, she left because of Nazi persecution. She worked with Walter Marcus in Vienna and followed him to London in 1939. She became manageress of the Marcus factory in Hawick, which was set up in 1940. Her husband failed to secure a work permit for Britain and her 2 children, Vera and Bob were sent over using church groups and the Red Cross. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but a brilliant dressmaker. The family lived in the West End. She moved to London after retiring, but regularly returned to visit Hawick. Robert 'Bob' son of Mrs. Frederica, the Hungarian manageress at Marcus's dress-making factory. He was taught at the High School and Edinburgh University, becoming a Professor of Bacteriology.

the Rose o Teviotdale (thu-rōz-ō-teev-yi'-dāl) n. local temperance society of the late 19th century, one of the lodges of the Good Templar movement.

Rosevale Cottages (rōz-vāl-ko'-ee-jeez) n. group of houses off Mansfield Road, on one side of Rosevale Street, built in 1882, and named in 1883. The end gable wall of No. 6 has a thistle-shaped ornament, with the date 1882.

Rosevale Street (rōz-vāl-stree') n. short street between Mansfield Road and Mansfield Square, named in 1888, either for thickets of wild roses that grew there or just invented. The housing here was built by Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. to provide convenient housing for workers at Eastfield Mills.

Rosfritha (rōz-fri-tha) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Sægifa) at the Chapel of St. Cuthbert (identified with a site near Cogsmill) mentioned by a contemporary historian as coming from 'Hawich'. This was written around the 1170s, and referred to an earlier time, possibly much earlier. Hence the pair are (assuming they existed) the first named residents of Hawick. The story was that they went to the old chapel on the feast day of the saint, to join others in celbration, after the previous fast day. However, in the evening their candle went out, and after some remonstration, they prayed to Cuthbert, at which a new lighted candle appeared. Sir James Murray called his 4th daughter 'Rosfrith', inspired by this story (also transcribed as 'Rosfrith').

rosit (ro-zi') n., arch. resin, rosin, the material rubbed on the bow of a fiddle or on a shoemaker's thread – 'A name wi' a scrauch o' rosit in't, the skirl o' tormentit gut . . . ' [DH] (also written 'roset').

rosity (ro-zi'-ee) adj., arch. of the nature of resin or 'rosit', covered in resin – 'He fastened a strong rosetty end round the envenomed fang, and tied the other tightly over the instep of his foot' [WNK], – '. . . the space within and around these was built up with whins and rositty faggots' [JAHM] (also written 'rosetty').

rosity-fingers (ro-zi'-ee-fing-urz) n., arch. name applied to someone who is light-fingered or sticky-fingered.

Ross (ros) n. Rev. Alexander L. (19th/20th C.) assistant minister of St. Cuthbert's 1904–09. He was on the committee that formed Hawick's first Scout troop in 1909. His time as Curate in Hawick ended when he became Rector at Rosyth. Andrew (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh, the 'Ross Herald', i.e. one of the officers of the Court of the Lord Lyon. Around 1903 he was charged by the Town Council with researching into the historical basis for the Hawick Flag. His report endorsed the views of Craig & Laing and others, resulting in the square blue and red flag being replaced with a more accurate duplicate of the 1707 flag – 'a pennon, azure, a saltire or'. Rev. Donald George (1874–1948) born in South India, son of John and Julia Swanson Keith, he was educated in Thurso and in Edinburgh. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1895. He was licensed by the Free Church Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1899, was assistant at North Leith Free Church 1899–1900, was ordained at Irvine

Free Church in 1900 and moved to Glasgow Pollok Street in 1907. He became assistent minister at St. George's Kirk from 1911, taking over as senior minister on the death of Rev. Johnman in 1923, and remaining until 1935. He came to Hawick from Pollok Street Church in Glasgow. Although he was formerly the assistant, due to the declining health of the senior minister, he in fact took on most of the ministerial duties. He 'kirked' the Cornet in 1912 and 1914, and oversaw the construction of the new church 1913–16. He served as Chaplain to the Forces in 1915. He was the first minister of the church to reside at the new Manse at Broomieknowe. He served as Presbytery Clerk. He was apparently a great elocutionist and gave very powerful sermons. He married Williamina Martin in 1900 and they celebrated their silver wedding anniversary in 1925, but his wife died in 1934. Due to declining health he resigned in late 1935 and retired to Edinburgh. In 1936 he secondly married Dora Agnes Swanson, daughter of the minister of Cray. There is a memorial window to him in the church and another to his wife. Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Rae in 1793, but her death is recorded in 1795. J. Ian (1941/2–) from Hawick, he grew up at Hassendeanburn and worked in a grocer's shop in Hawick while at school. After school he was an apprentice compositor at the Hawick News. He later worked as a proofreader in several places, including Kenya and Zambia. He came back to Hawick in 1986. Sgt. James (18th/19th C.) professional soldier with the Royal North British Fusiliers. He was brought to Hawick in 1798 to work with the new Hawick Military Association of volunteers. James (b.1791/2) from Ashkirk Parish, he was a tailor. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at Cappercleuch in Peeblesshire. His wife was Helen and their children included Eliza, James, Walter, William S., Catherine S. and Thomas. James (b.1829/30) from Dumfries, he was a 'Woollen Cloth Fine-drawer' living at '1st Ho east of Bridge St' in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, James, William, Mary and George T. James (19th C.) Precentor at Hawick Free Kirk, coming from Free St. David's in Edinburgh in 1856 and serving until 1879. He may be the James of Melgund Place who in 1872 donated a collection of curiosities to the Museum. This included an oak snuff box, inscribed 'Respect me for what I have been, the time when I was a young and hopeful plant of Nature. In the course of years I grew tall, was cut down by the hands of man, and became an arch of the Cathedral of St Giles's ...'. Other items were a block of timber said to be one of the piles for the Roman bridge across the Tyne at Newcastle (unearthed in constructing a new bridge) and a 'small piece of the block on which Mary Queen of Scots was beheaded at Fotheringay Castle in 1587'. Rev. John Wallace (1886–1974) born at Turakina, New Zealand, son of Rev. John, he studied at the University of Wellington and Knox College, Dunedin, and was licensed in 1913. He served as Chaplain-Captain in the New Zealand Expeditionary Force 1914–20. Apparently unpopular with the men on a troop ship sailing to Suez, the captain threatened to throw him overboard! He served as Chaplain with the 5th Royal Scots at Gallipoli. He returned to New Zealand in 1919, but later attended classes at New College, Edinburgh and was inducted minister at Burnmouth, Berwickshire in 1922. He became minister of Denholm Kirk from the time of the reunion (1929, when it became part of the Church of Scotland) until 1953. In 1957 he moved to London to live with his daughter. In 1922 he married Ruth Marjorie (1895–1930), daughter of Rev. R.B. McGlashan of Gatehouse-of-Fleet. Their children were: Jean Ruth Williamina (b.1923); John Murdoch (b.1926); and robert Peter Reid (b.1926). He died at Lewisham, London. Margaret 'callit Nuris' (17th C.) local woman who was attacked by Bailie James Burn in April 1641, having her forehead cut in the process. Burn accused her of being a witch, for being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was fined and put in the stocks, which must have been unheard of for a sitting Bailie. Her nickname was presumably 'Nurse'.

the Rotary Club (thu-rō'-u-ree-klub) n. international social and charitable organisation of businessmen and professionals, began in the U.S.A. in 1905, typically restricted to men in their 40s or above. Hawick is in District 1020, and the local club regularly met in the Buccleuch Hotel. The club planted 25 hawthorn trees in the Park in 1977 for the Queen's Silver Jubilee.

Rotherstone (ru-thur-stōn) n. William (14th C.) stated in an English document of c.1380 to have been owner of the lands of 'les Welles' in the Barony of Cavers. His surname is written 'Rothrestone', but since this name is otherwise unknown, it seems possible it is a mistranscription.

Rotten Moss (ro'-in-mos) n. area to the west of Whitfield and east of Pisgah Hill. It is marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common and on the modern Ordnance Survey map (the name possibly refers to stagnant water).

Rotten Moss Sike (ro'-in-mos-sīk) n. former name for the small stream that rises in Rotten Moss on the former Wilton Common and runs through Todshaw Dean.

Rottenraw (ro'-in-raw) n. former name for land near Hundalee, once a home of the Rutherfords. In 1638 it was given by John Rutherford of Rottenrow to Robert Scott ('in Burnfutt near Tiviot') who was marrying his daughter Anne (spelled 'Rattinraw' etc.).

Rotten Sike (ro'-in-sīk) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, rising near the boundary with Dumfriesshire and running north-east past the farm of Whisgills to join Tinnis Burn.

Rotten Sike (ro'-in-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Knowe and joining the Tweeden Burn north of Tweedenhead farm.

rouch (rowch) adj., arch. rough – '... ane peck of insufficient humillcorn meill, out of which there was dight ane choppin dish full of rouch seids' [BR1675], 'Ay whow, bairns, it's a rouch nicht. How the wund's souchin' i' the chumla heid!' [JAHM], '... And it's dreich, gey dreich on this rouch hill heid Whaur the cauld air gars ane nither' [WL] (also spelled 'rowch').

Rouchchesters (row-ch-ches-turz) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. This was probably the 'Rughechestre' where Richard, son of Dougal and his wife Bethoc, gave a piece of land to Jedburgh Abbey in 1165. The precise location is unknown, but it was listed between Strange and Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants was Patrick Oliver and the lands were valued at 12s 6d. It is possible that there is confusion here with Ruecastle (it is 'Rughechestre' in about 1165 and 'Rouchchesteris' in 1541).

Rouchhirst (row-ch-hurst) n. former farmstead on the Jed Water, just to the south of Auld Jedburgh. In 1541 the tenant was John Laidlaw and the lands were valued at 12s 6d. The tenants there in 1669 were Thomas, Martin, Lyle and Thomas (junior) Laidlaw and in 1694 were Thomas and John Laidlaw. This may be the 'Roughchestre' which was burned by the English in 1544 (it is 'Ruchhirst' in 1669; it appears on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Rucchhirst').

Rouchhope (row-chup) n. former place name in Hobkirk Parish, near to Hyndlee. These were the lands of 'Rughope' granted to William of Wauchope in the early 14th century. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands were owned by the Turnbulls in the mid-16th century. The lands were purchased by William and Robert Chisholme (of Stirches) in 1684. Thomas Telfer was there in 1799. The ridge to the west of the Note o' the Gate road just south of Wigg is still 'Rough-hope Rig' on the Ordnance Survey map (it is 'Rouchope' in 1538 and 1541, 'Ruchhoip' in 1539 and 'Roughope' in 1799; Pont's sketch of c.1590 and Blaeu's 1654 map appears to label either Wigg Burn or Hyndlee Burn as 'Rucchoop B:' and 'Rucchhoope B.', repsectively, and somewhere even higher up is labelled 'Ruchswyre' on Blaeu's map).

Rouch-heuch see Roughheugh

roudes (row-dis) n., arch. a strong masculine woman, an old, ill-natured woman – 'O never vex ane roudes auld, Although she rax your faithe, For, late and air, revenge she'll seek, When least you dread the skaith' [JTe], adj. applied to an old woman with masculine characteristics – 'A gey roudes boody' [GW].

rouen (row-in) pp., adj., arch. torn, riven, ripped – 'Rouen, Rent, torn, riven; especially applied to old pieces of dress, and to wooden dishes when split, Roxb.' [JoJ] (a past tense of rive).

rough (ruch) adj., arch. bounteous, well-supplied, especially with plain fare – 'A rough table (gh in rough is guttural) = a well-laden table, bering a variety of dishes; a table 'groaning under the weight of good things' ' [ECS].

Roughcleuch Rig (ruf-klewch-rig) n. ridge to the east of Linhope farm, lying between Lightning Hill and Wether Law.

Rough Gill (ruf-, rowch-gil) n. small stream in western Liddesdale, rising on Cooms Fell and running roughly south-eastwards to eventually join the Black Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grān) n. small stream in upper Liddisdale, rising on Mid Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on the large scale 1899 Ordnance Survey map.

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grān) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Hartsgarth Fell and runs roughly to the north-west to join Chapel Grain and then the Twislehope Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

rough-heid (ruf-, rowch-heed) n., arch. a turf or divot, especially a piece of peat cut from the surface and with the grass still attached – 'These are to give notice to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they are discharged from casting dry land soads of any part of the Commonty or roughheads (except roughheads in the Mosses), and from casting turfs or diviots on the Common ...' [BR1816], 'An' divots an' roughheads gotten where the modern's now ca' Teviot Square' [WNK].

Roughheugh (ruf-hew, rowch-hewch) n. former name referring to the area in Wilton between Howlands and Easter Howlands, and from Ladylaw to Lockieshedge, lying 'contiguous to the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton', and bounded on the south by Wilton dam. So it extended roughly from Wilton Path to Old Wilton Churchyard, on both sides of Princes Street. The name was also used for the corn mill there, and the later hosiery mill. The name dates at least to the mid-17th century and is preserved in a house on Greensidehall Road. In 1650 there are 14 'communicants' recorded on a map of local parishes, when it is 'rouch-heuche'; they are Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet 'Symontonn', John Redford, Thomas Clerk, Mary Armstrong, John Clerk, Isobel 'Howatson', Robert Riddell, Margaret Shortreed, Janet Ellioe and Janet Redford. John Miller was recorded there in 1724 and George Wallace in 1737. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Haugh lying 'between Dangerfield and the reugh heugh land as described by hillocks'. The lands were part of the estate of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold off in parts around 1780: the Waulk Mill to John and William Thomline; the Corn Mill to Robert Scott; and other parts to James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson. John Clerk was living there in 1780. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) the lands are listed as consisting of the Waulk Mill and Corn Mill and 7 other parts, owned by John Thomline (plus William by 1811), Robert Scott, James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson; together they were valued at around £140. The Laird of Langlands held some enclosures in the area, which were sold off to Rev. John Thomson in the mid-19th century. By the early 20th century the name was no longer in use (the origin is presumably from the roughness of the land around the steep bank).

Roughheugh Haugh (ruf-hew-hawf, rowch-hewch-hawch) n. former name for part of the Under Haugh – 'There's teuch sauchs growin' i' the Reuch Heuch Hauch' [JAHM], 'It is a common Hawick puzzle to try Englishmen with 'Reughheugh-haugh' (reauch-heauch-hauwch), but I have found by experience that no Scotchmen but those from our own dales can pronounce this word' [JAHM] (also written 'Reugh-heughhaugh'; this also inspired the Hugh MacDiarmid poem 'The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch').

Roughheugh Mill (ruf-hew-mil, rowch-hewch-mil) n. former corn mill, near the south end of Commercial Road. It was formerly a possession of the Baron of Wilton, specifically Langlands of that Ilk. It was recorded in an agreement involving Langlands in 1581. It is shown in a crude sketch of 1810, with the miller's cottage alongside (and a water wheel, with the adjacent waulk mill also having a water wheel). It is labelled 'Rough Heugh Mill' on Wood's 1824 map. The building that held the water wheel was once on the Burgh boundary with Wilton; in the early 1700s the Flag used to be unfurled and given 3 cheers there after the visit to the Coble Pool on Common Riding Friday. William Cavers was miller there in 1694, with Simon Wright the under-miller, and Thomas Rutherford also listed there. William Scott was there in 1709. Alexander Scott (probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester) was tenant in the mid-18th century and then his son Robert Scott was tenants after him; Robert is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 18th century sasines, lands feued at Howlands came with the stipulation that a quantity of oats had to be ground at the mill and a contribution made for each new millstone. In 1811 it was valued at £26 9s. It was still an active mill in the 1820s, when Pigot's directory lists the millers as Walter Chisholm and David Fiddes. Thomas Goodfellow and David Fiddes were millers there in 1837 and 1841, with John Fiddes there in 1851. Soon after it (or a building on an adjacent site) became a waulk mill, carried on by John Wilson after William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851. Langlands Mill was constructed on the site in about 1860. John Wilson was listed as owner of the land there in about 1874 (also spelled 'Rouch-heuch', etc.; it is 'Reuchouchtmiln' in 1581, 'Roughheughmiln' in 1797 and incorrectly written 'Roughhead mill' in 1837).

Roughheugh Peth (ruf-hew-peth) n. Roughheugh Path, an old name for Wilton Path or the Peth. It is so marked on Wood's 1824 map.

Rough-hope (ruf-hōp, rowch-up) n. former farm in the upper Borthwick valley, lying on the Rough-hope Burn, to the south of Eildrig. These are the lands of 'Reuhop or Philop' sold by John Turnbull to Martin Elliot in 1579. James Oliver was there in 1785 and James Lunn and family in 1796 (it is 'Roughshope' in 1795).

Rough-hope Burn (ruf-hōp-burn) n. stream that rises on Philhope Fell, running roughly north-west to join the Eildrig Burn, and hence the Borthwick Water. There are some old field boundaries about half-way up the stream. The stream fed the reservoir, later known as Philhope Loch, which was used to boost the level of the Borthwick Water and the Teviot.

Rough-hope Rig (rowch-up-rig) n. ridge just to the west of the B6357, shortly before coming to the Note o' the Gate pass. There is a picnic spot near there. On the ridge is a linear earthwork, about 400 m long, running from the Wigg burn north-east to the main road.

Rough Joke (rowch-jōk) n. nickname for John Oliver in the late 1700s.

Rough Knowe (rowch-, ruf-now) n. hill between the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, to the east of Ladhope. It reaches a heigh of 481 m and contains a block that acts as a triangulation point.

Roughlaw Sike (rowch-law-sīk) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It is mentioned in a charter of 1606, defining the west side of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. It is unclear where this is exactly, but perhaps the small tributary of the Hallrule Burn that runs past Heathfield cottage (it is 'Rowchelawsyke' in 1606).

Roughlee (ruf-lee, rowch-lee) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, between Falside and Edgerston. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester Roughlee. Simon Young from there had remission for pludering neighbouring farms in 1493, John Young for similar crimes in 1494/5 and Simon again in 1502. The lands of 'Wester Rouchleis' were valued at 20 shillings in 1538, with 'Mydrouchleis' at 30 shillings and 'Rowchlenwke' at 40 shillings. The 20 shilling land of 'Rouchleis vocatarum Westir Rouchleis' is recorded in 1539, as well as the 30 shilling land of Midroughlee and the 40 shilling land of Roughleeneuk. William Douglas was allowed the 'fermes' from there for 1538 and in 1539 claimed £10 pertaining to his inheritance. 'Lyonell Ollyver' is recorded there in 1544. Michael and John Young was there in 1571/2. David Laidlaw was there in 1588. Robert Douglas of Brieryyards was infefted in the lands in 1588 and was served heir to his father John in 1606. The cottage there was once part of Falside farm. This is probably the 'Ruchlie' recorded in 1669 when the tenants were Robert and John Storie and Adam Bell. Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Oliver were tenants there in 1694. The ancient settlement on the eastern slope of the hill to the east of the current farmstead may be the former Easter Roughlee; it consists of a roughly oval enclosure, with 2 possible hut sites inside, but has been largely destroyed by forestry plantation. A little to the west is Roughlee Strip, where there are 2 enclosures visible in aerial photographs. To the north there was a plantation bank, now covered with forest. Further south, on a shelf overlooking the Jed Water, are the remains of another farmstead – 'And her eye was fixt on the Klesly brae 'Till the red sun glinted fair; – On the Roughlee height, where now in sight, A knight did onward bear' [JTe], (also written 'Roughlea', it is 'rouchlie' in 1493, 'rouchlee' in 1494/5, 'rouchle' in 1502, 'Rouchleyis' in 1538, 'Rowghleis' in 1544, 'Rowchleis' in 1571/2 and 'Roughlie' in 1694; 'Eister Rowchlie et Wester Rouchlie' are recorded in 1606; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Ruchlie' and on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Rucchly').

Roughleeneuk (rowch-lee-newk) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, to the east of Roughlee. It was valued at 40 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. It was burned by an English raiding party in 1544. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. Ninian, John and Lyle Young were tenants of 'Rouchneuck' in 1669 and Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. Andrew Ker 'of 'Roughlienook' was recorded as deceased in 1731. George Davidson was farmer there in at least 1790–91. James Davidson ('Dandie Dinmont') lived there in the late 1700s and William Scott was farmer there in at least 1794–97. George Scott was farmer there in at least 1797–1801, Charles was also tenant in 1799 and Walter Scott was a shepherd in 1801. The farmstead was still marked on maps in 1863, and is still visible in aerial photographs, with a plantation bank 150 m to the south (it is 'Rowchlenwke' in 1538, 'Rouchlenewke' in 1539, 'Rowle Newke' in 1544, 'Rowchlienwik' in 1606, 'Roughlinouck' and 'ruchlinuck' in 1694 and 'Roughlawnook' and 'Roughleenook' in 1797; probably the place marked 'Nuik' on Blaeu's 1654 map, it is 'Roughleenock' on Stobie's 1770 map; 'neuk' could just refer to a remote place).

Roughleeneuk Hill (rowch-lee-newk-hil) n. Roughleenook Hill, hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 241 m, in a bend of the Jed Water to the east of Roughlee. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map showed a farmstead there, comprising 5 buildings and an enclosure, the outlines still visible in aerial photographs.

Roughley (ruf-lee) n. farmstead to the east of Hermitage, off the Roughley Burn. The tenants of the Englishman John Thirlwall were given protection by Edward III in 1365, suggesting that these lands were formerly among those held by Comyn. In 1541 the tenants were Ninian and John Elliot. Anthony Elliot was tenant there in 1622. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1632. John Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 160 acres, bounded by Laws, Riccarton, Taylorcleuchead, Shaws, Millburnholm and Stitchelhill. The farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one and another house was marked, perhaps around Dean's Cleuch. Henry Haliburton was there in 1778. The farmer in 1794–97 was Robert Turnbull. James Turnbull was a servant there in 1799 and Ninian Scott was a shepherd in 1801. John Little was shepherd in 1835. There was once a large burial cairn there, which was dismantled, the cist found inside being acquired by Sir Walter Scott – 'When three long years were come and gone, Two shepherds sat on Roughly hill; And ay they sigh'd, and made their moan, O'er present times that look'd so ill' [ES] (the name probably comes from the Old English 'ruh leah', meaning 'uncultivated clearing'; it appears as 'Routhlie' in 1541, 'Rouchlie' in 1622, 'Ruchlie' in 1632, 'Roughlaw' in 1694, 'Roughlie' in 1778 and 'Rouglee' in 1797; it is 'Rucchly' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Roughlee' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Roughly' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Roughley Burn (ruf-lee-burn) n. major stream in upper Liddesdale, rising in the hills to the east of Whitrope and running south, fed by many smaller 'sikes' and 'gills' to join the Hermitage Water at Shaws.

Roughley Glen (ruf-lee-glen) n. former name for part of the Roughley Burn.

Roughley Sike (ruf-lee-sīk) n. small stream that rises on the western slopes of Arnton and fell and runs to the west to join Roughley Burn.

rough runch (rowch-runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum.

Roughside Hill (ruf-sīd-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Synton Mossend, on Ashkirk farm. It reaches to more than 270 m.

Rough Slack (rowch-slawk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Birny Fell and running south to join Ralton Burn.

the Rough Wooin (thu-ruf-woo-in) n. soubriquet for the rampage of English armies in 1544 and 1545 throughout the Scottish Border country. This was an attempt to force the Scots to allow the wedding of King Henry VIII's young son Edward to the infant Mary Queen of Scots. Among other places, the abbeys of Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Melrose were left in ruins, and in Hawick Drumlanrig's Tower was about all that survived the conflagration. The attacks were led by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and looted, along with 192 towers and villages in the Borders, with around 400 Borderers being killed. The devastation was even worse in 1545, when Teviotdale was laid waste, including Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassendean and Brieryyards among other villages.

rouk (rowk) n., arch., poet. mist, fog, smog, drizzle, vapours – 'He gars the rouks ascen' frae the en's o the yirth . . . ' [HSR], 'Fire an' hail; snaw an' rouk; stormie wund fu'fillin' his wurd' [HSR], '. . . where yin canna sei bye yin's neb for skomfeeshin rowks an drowes' [ECS], 'Whan the smuiky rowk fyles a'thing' [GW], '. . . to repay us for a' the derk and weet, the glaur and rouk, o wunter' [DH], . . . Herd them cannily, stot and stirk, Frae Tweedside braes in the rowk and mirk' [WL] (also written 'rowk').

rountree (rown-tree) n., poet. rowan, the mountain ash – 'A rountree bus' oot o'er the tap o't, A glassy pule to kep the lap o't [JBS], 'And tho' rowntree was tied to the coo's horns an' tail, Her udder gaed eild ower the milk-maiden's pail' [BM1901] (also written 'rowntree'; cf. rauntrei).

roup (rowp, roop) n., arch. an auction – 'his goods an effects wull be selt be public roup', '... and after ye roup, the money then gotten should be given in' [PR1722], 'Received roup of the seats in the kirk for 1755 ... 0 10 6' [BR1755], '... While high-bred dame – bereft o' hope – Is doomed to stand a public roup – The highest bidder gets her' [JR], 'A sale o' furniter, a roup O' spuds at Black's Hotel. I'll tell ye a' aboot it if Somebody brings my bell' [WP], v. to sell by auction. Up until the early 19th century 'Roups' in Hawick were announced after Sunday services at the Wester kirkstyle by the town bellman, standing on the 'loupin-on stane'. By the mid-19th century this practice had been replaced by a printed notice attached to the church door – '... that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be rouped ...' [PR1722], '... by the rouping of his eight-day clock upon the Tower knowe' [RM], v., arch. to cry hoarsely (from Old Norse; also spelled 'rowp').

roupit (row-pee', -pi') pp., arch. cried hoarsely – 'She ran up to the pat an' tried to coup it, While ever anon she raired an' she roupit' [BM1901].

Routin Burn (row'-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, stream that rises on Roan Fell on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, and flows into Hartsgarth Burn. Along the stream lie 2 shepherd's bothies, 2 sheep-folds, 6 shieling huts, a pen and a 'knocking stone'.

Routin Burn (row'-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, small stream in the headwaters of the Twislehope Burn. It rises near Pike Fell on the border with Dumfriesshire, only a couple of miles west of the other stream of the same name.

Routledge (row'-, rowt-, roo'-lij) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s as 'Jamie's Adam Rootledge'. He was one of a group of Englishmen complained of by Thomas Armstrong of Tinnisburn for stealing livestock from him. He could be the 'Addame Rutledge of the Neteclughe' listed among Routledges of the English Border in 1583. Andrew (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650, for Alexander Turnbull and Isobel Scott. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His name appears as 'Routlage' right after John, who was presumably related. Arthur Septimus (b.1865) son of John and Agnes Bell. The family lived on Bridge Street. He is probably the 'Septimus' who donated a copper coin to the Museum in 1877 and the 'Mr S. Routledge, Wilton Hill' who donated a Spansih silver coin also in 1877. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded along with John in 1473 as a deputy of the Constable of Bewcastle. How he was related to the Hawick members of the family is not known, but these appear to be the first recorded members of the family near Bewcastle (possibly the eponymous home). Around 1478 they were let the lands and castle of Bewcastle by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, with instructions that they maintain the Border there. During a land dispute of 1538 an old witness in Bewcastle stated that '... 60 years bipast when Liddisdale men came into England and were sworn to King Richard at Carlisle' that 'let all the lands of Bewcastle to Cuthb and John Routlege, Robt Elwald, and Gerard Nyxon, and before that' ... 'as well the said castle as all the lands belonging to the same of long time lay waste'. David (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale. He was witness to Adam Hepburn being served as heir to his father Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. He is recorded as 'Dauid Routlech, sergeando', suggesting he was a local official of the area. Probably the same David was also witness to William Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. He may be the same man as the Bailie for Douglas of Cavers. David (15th/16th C.) bailiff and later factor for James Douglas of Cavers. Possibly the same David 'Rucclarch' or 'Rutlethe' held 8 particates of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter; these were on the south side of the public street, and represent one of the largest amounts of any single owner. He may be the David 'Routlesche' who in 1512 he was directed to be one of James Douglas of Cavers Bailies to give sasine of Denholm to William Cranston. He may be the same David who was listed on a pardon by James V in 1526, along with a great many Scotts, Kerrs, Pringles, Turnbulls and Elliots, as well as John, Archibald and Simon 'Routlage'. Probably the same David was listed among tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court case of 1541. Probably the same David was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550 (for the lands of Colifort). Isobel (16th C.) widow on the English side, recorded in 1581. Her house was apparently raided by 30 Elliots, who stole 4 oxen, 6 cows, her only horse and all her possessions. James (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and Simon son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. Probably the same James was also called in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5. James (16th C.) holder of half of the lands of Crook. In 1523 he was 'living near the Trows' when Martin Douglas paid him redemption money for Crook. In an instrument of resignation of 1529/30 (not a century earlier as apparently written), William 'Routlech', son of the deceased John resigned all rights to these lands, the 'kyndness' of which was held of this James. He was surely related to John and William, as well as to other nearly contemporary local Routledges. He may be the 'Jacobi Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland for 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He could be the James ('on trows') who, along with John (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance. Along with Simon he was allowed to compone in 1510 for the crime of resetting, supplying and communing with rebels. James of Todhills (16th C.) from Cumbria. In 1540 the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants complained about a raid he led into Rulewater, where 'Thome Oliver' and 'Will Kowman' were slain at Abbotrule. John (15th C.) recorded in 1471, along with David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong, when they gave pledges for Walter to appear at court in Selkirk. He was probably related to Walter in some way. John (15th C.) recorded in 1473, along with Cuthbert as deputies to the Constable of Bewcastle. John (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was called by the Sheriff, William of Douglas, but failed to appear. At the same time Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon were also called. He could be the John 'in trows' who, along with James (in the same place) , served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance; he seems to be distinct from John, son of Simon in the Trows, who is recorded separately in 1502 (and may have been his nephew or similar). John (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. John 'Black John' (15th/16th C.) Englishman who along with John Dalgleish and others was brought with his accomplices to burn Branxholme some time prior to 1510. In that year Dalgleish was convicted of this and other crimes and sentenced to hanging if he could not find sureties. He is recorded as 'Black John Rouclesche' (which in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials' is suggested to be 'Roughcliffe, or Rowcleff', but seems clearly to be a transcription error for 'Routlesche') and was a 'traitor of Levin'. He was probably related to the Simon and Matthew who burned the Scott's seat at Buccleuch about 20 years earlier. John (d.bef. 1530) 'kyndlie' tenant of half of the land of Crook in Cavers Parish. He may have been son of Simon in the Trows. He was succeeded in this tenancy by his son William, who resigned his rights to his superior (Douglas of Cavers) in 1529/30. They had the 'kyndness from James, who must surely have been a relative; his surname is recorded as 'Routlech'. Probably the same John 'rouclisch' failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon, were also called and failed to appear, and were surely related. Probably the same John is recorded as son of Simon (who was 'in le trowis') in 1494/5 when he failed to appear again, with Douglas of Cavers being fined; his father Simon, as well as James and Simon (perhaps his brothers) were also called at the same Justice-aire. He may be the 'Johannis Rutlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. In 1502 he is recorded as son of Simon in the Trows 'nunc in le cruk' (i.e. now in the Crook) when he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, and was fined for not appearing. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Archibald is listed after him and so probably related. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) son of Mungo, an Englishman. He was entered as a prisoner to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1562, by Archibald Elliot of Falnash and his son. John (16th C.) listed in 1585 as 'Jjonn Rowclege' among a list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell who had respite for all their crimes. He is listed along with Armstrongs from around Eskdale. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Elliot of Copshaw, recorded in 1605. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a grocer and spirit merchant of the High Street recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was living at about No. 50 with his wife Margaret in 1841. His widow Margaret was still living there in 1851. He may be the same John who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left, along with Rev. Wallace, in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Peggy, daughter of stockingmaker William Beck; she secondly married M. Thompson. They had no children. John (19th C.) farmer at Greenholm in Liddesdale in 1868. He could be the John who married Agnes Bell and whose children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included: Frederick Octavius (b.1867); Catherine Edith (b.1868); Frederick (again, b.1869); Constance (b.1870); and Alice Nora (b.1871). Other childern probably included Arthur Septimus (b.1865), John, William and Florence. The family may have later lived in Hawick; his wife may be the 'Mrs Routledge, Wilton Hill' who in 1877 donated 'beads made from the cedars of Lebanon', while Master Frederick' donated 2 coins. Lancelot (17th C.) recorded as 'Rutlitch in Appiltrielewis' (presumably Appletreeleaves in Melrose Parish) in 1643. Mals (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. It is unclear if her first name was short for something more familiar. Margaret (b.1786/7) married John, who was a grocer and spirit merchant. By 1851 she was a widow living on the High Street. She was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. Martin (16th C.) Procurator of the Scottish Nation in the University of Orleans from 1537. He described himself as being of the Clan Scott and was the last of his family to sign his name 'de', in his case 'de Rotheluge' in 1538. Matthew (15th/16th C.) son of Simon, who was tenant at the Trows. In 1494 there was a decree against them to repay the value of the livestock and goods they had taken or destroyed from the house and farm at Buccleuch. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Simon at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, when he was surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He may be the 'Mathei Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with James, John and Simon (with his name appearing first), as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He was recorded again at the Justice-aire in Hawick, as son of Simon in the Trows, when he was once more surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. Matthew (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is listed in the sasine of the Barony of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name is recorded as 'Matheo Rouchligis'. He may be the same Matthew, son of Simon, who was charged with pludering and burning Buccleuch in 1494. Nichol (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Nicholl Routleche' along with a number of Nixons and others of Liddesdale who has remission from their crimes from the Privy Council in 1516. Richard (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Richardo rutlethe in Cruik' when witness to a Cavers charter in 1618. Richard junior was also a witness and presumably his son. He was surely related to Simon in Crook, recorded in 1592. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry. His only surviving son Jack was a Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. who was killed in 1917. Robert (14th C.) recorded as 'Roberti Ruloche' or 'Rowlock' when he had a charter for Threepwood in Lanarkshire in the time of David II. He also had a charter for 'Alite de Qhhithead' in Perth at about the same time. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Thorlieshope who appeared before the Commissioners' Court in 1623. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1650s. Whether he was a descendant of the earlier Routledges is unknown. He married Isobel Huntly and their children included Bessie, James (b.1657) and Michael. Simon (15th C.) Burgess of Hawick who was listed among the witnesses to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there recorded as 'Simone Rowtleg'. In a charter of 1433 he is referred to as 'Simon of Routluge burgess of Hawik' when William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick feued the lands of 'Byrkwode called the oxgang' (near the present day Duke's Wood) and the lands of Burnflat to him. He is also mentioned in a deed of 1447 as a Burgess, when he conveyed part of the land of the Branxholme estate to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The land was known as 'Cusingland' and was the dowry of his wife Margaret (or 'Mergrete') Cousin (or 'Cusyne'). In 1447 he also feued Birkwood (incorrectly transcribed in one record as 'Birdwood') to Sir Walter, and is again referred to as a Burgess of Hawick, and as a Bailie in the 1448 sasine. In 1453 he was one of the 2 Bailies who witnessed the first known sasine for a 'tenement' in Hawick. In 1455 he is one of the Burgesses of Hawick listed on the notarised document attesting that John of St. Michael had inherited his father's lands of Whitchester; he is there referred to as 'burgensis ac sergendus' of the Barony of Hawick, this second title presumably equivalent to Bailie or Baron's Bailie. He is mentioned again in 1456, this probably referring to him witnessing an earlier retour for Whitchesters; there he is 'Symon de Routluge de Hawik'. He is one of the earliest recorded people with this surname, and also the earliest known Burgess of Hawick. He may be closely related to the Simon Simon (15th C.) witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas in 1464/5. He is recorded as 'Simone de Routlagh' and one of the 'scutiferis' (i.e. 'esquires'). Since the sasine was made at Cavers, he was surely a nearby landowner, but it is unclear whether he is the same as the earlier Burgess and Bailie of Hawick or the later Simon from Trows. It may be the same man who was 'Simone Routelych' when he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. Simon (15th C.) possibly related to the earlier Simon. He is recorded in 1484 on the panel of inquest for James Douglas as heir to his father Sir William of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick. He may also be the 'Symone Rowclugh' recorded in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Simon 'rouclisch' who William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was called to enter at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, and not appearing, Douglas was fined (similarly John, James son of Simon, and Simon son of Simon, were all failed to be entered, and were surely closely related to him, Simon and James probably being his sons). He may be the same Simon 'in the trowis' who was subject was charged with plundering Buccleuch in 1494 along with his son Matthew (with their sureties the Douglases). He is recorded as 'Symonis rouchlisch in le trowis' at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his sons John and Simon also failed to appear at the same Justice-aire, as well as James (probably also his son). Simon (15th C.) recorded as 'Symon routlage i the trowis' (and probably not 'prowis' as stated by William Fraser) in 1494 when Walter Scott, grandson of Sir David of Buccleuch, obtained a decree from the Lords of Council against him for the theft and plunder ('spuilzeit') of the manor and farm of Buccleuch. His son Matthew is also mentioned. Presumably this happened before David Scott died 2 or 3 years earlier. They stole 5 horses, 40 cows, 40 sheep, 2 oxen, large quantities of food etc., including 80 stones of cheese and butter, and ruined the manor, leaving 'nocht on bed or baulks'. Given the similarity of the names (Simon and Matthew), it seems likely this family was closely related to that of the Hawick Burgesses, possibly the same. Their residence appears to have been the Trows (and not 'Prows', known to be connected with the Bewcastle branch of the family), since Douglas of Hornshole acted as surety for the 1494 decree. He may be the 'Symonis Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, James and Simon and many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. His son Matthew is recorded in 1494/5 and 1502. His son John, 'now in le cruk' (although it is unclear whether this refers to the father or the son) is recorded in 1502, when he was fined for failing to appear in court. Additionally, he is 'in le trows' in 1502 when John and James in Trows served as surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and were fined for his non-appearance. Perhaps the same Simon 'in le cruik' is recorded in 1510 along with James, when they were allowed to compone for the crime of resetting, supplying and communing with rebels. It seems likely that Simon in Trows and Simon in Crook were the same person. Simon (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and James son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. In 1494/5 he failed to appear again (as well as his father Simon and James and John, who were probably his brothers). Simon (16th C.) tenant in Crook in 1592. He is recorded as a witness to the instrument of sasine in which Martin Douglas inherited Crook from his father. He was surely related to John, who was associated with Crook about 60 years earlier, and probably also a descendant of Simon, tenant in the Trows. He was surely also related to Richard in Crook, recorded in 1618. It is possible he is the same man as Simon in the Trows. Thomas (16th C.) subject of a bond for him to be entered as a prisoner in 1561/2. The bond was between several Elliots (Archibald of Falnash, Archie's son Gavin, John of Copshaw and Elder Will) Sir John Kerr and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Elliots promising to deliver him to 'the irn yettis of the Fairnehirst', and was signed at Hawick. A few months later Elliot of Falnash in another bond entered John, 'son to Mungo Routlache, Englishman' as a prisoner, so this seems likely to have been a relative. The same man (or a son perhaps) could have been recorded in 1581; in a raid by the Elliots of Liddesdale, a Thomas of 'Todholes' (i.e. Todhills in Cumbria) was taken prisoner and his horses and oxen stolen. This same Thomas of Todhills complained in 1582 of having livestock and goods stolen by 'Kinmont Jock, Eckie of Strubholm and Jock Armstrong of Calfhill'. The same Thomas of Todhills was injured in another raid by the Armstrongs of Mangerton, Whitehaugh etc., in 1583; several other Routledges were targeted, including George of 'Greinhilesh' and Anthony of 'Nutticleugh', with Alan being killed and William, John and another Thomas being injured 'in peril of death whereof one hath his legge cut of'. Walter (15th) recorded in 1471 when John, as well as David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong gave pledges that he would appear at court in Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1640s and 50s. He may have been related to the contemporary Robert, and possibly was a descendant of the earlier local Routledges. He married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included 2 Michaels, Janet, Isobel and Margaret (the surname probably comes from the place in Cumberland; there are many older spellings, including 'Rootledge', 'Rouchligis', 'Rouclesche', 'Rouclisch', 'Routelych', 'Routhlethe', 'Routlage', 'Routlagh', 'Routlaige', 'Routlach', 'Routlache', 'Routlech', 'Routleche', 'Routlege', 'Routlesche', 'Routlich', 'Routlooch', 'Routluge', 'Rowclugh', 'Rowtleg', 'Rowtlugh', 'Rutledge' and 'Rutlethe').

the Routledges (thu-rowt-li-jeezj) n. prominent family in the Debateable land, near Bewcastle, which spread to much of the Borders. The only remnant of the potential early seat of the family is the name of the Routledge Burn, a couple of miles east of Kershopefoot; nearby is the hamlet of Routledgeburn, Routledge Burn Bridge and Routledge Rigg. The earliest known member of the family is 'Simon de Routledge', a Burgess and Bailie of Hawick, recorded in several documents of the 1440s and 1450s. Simon and his son Matthew lived at the Trows, and were charged in 1494 with plundering the manor and lands of Buccleuch. There is a record of a payment made from the Treasurer of Scotland to 'men of Levin callit Rowtleyche' in 1491. Another early member of the family is John 'Routlech', who was already deceased in 1529/30 when his son William resigned his 'kyndlie' tenancy of half of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish, which they held of James (surely another relative). There were other people with this surname, probably closely related to the earlier Simon, holding prominent positions in Hawick over the next century. David held 8 'particates' of land in Hawick's 1537 Charter, probably the largest of any single landowner). Sir Christopher Dacre, with a band of 500 men, set upon them in 1528, and although he failed to dislodge them from the lands of Tarras, the family appear to have dispersed afterwards. There were later Routledges in Hawick, e.g. the families of Robert and Walter in the 1640s and 50s, but whether directly related to the earlier Burgesses is unknown.

Routlin Sike (row'-lin-sīk) n. former name for a small stream on the east side of the Slitrig. In a charter of 1550 it is 'routlyn syik', forming the northern boundary of the lands of Colifort.

rovin (rō-vin) n., arch. a roving, a set of lightly twisted fibres in the process of being spun, also called a 'slub' or 'slubbing' – 'The rovings were pieced together by boys on a leather rubber at the back of the Billies . . . ' [JGW].

row (row) n., arch. a bread roll, small, round breakfast loaf – 'There's naething A leike better for ma brekfist as a new rowe' [ECS], 'A gowpeenfih berries or a penny gray rowe' [ECS], 'Where are yon rowes that garred the hert rejoice? What wairpit Breid Board said they had to go?' [DH].

rowan (row-in, row-an) n. a slender tree with white flowers and red berries, the mountain ash, formerly believed to ward off evil – '... or even the rowan tree, or mountain ash, used against the charms of witchcraft' [EM1820], 'In Keeldar's plume the holly green, And rowan leaves, nod on' [JL], 'Where the rowan and the weeping birk perfume th evening air, Where the primrose and the cowslip mix, their beauties blooming fair' [JoHa], 'But the kind auld miller isna there wi' shooders strang and wide, He sleeps aneath a rowan tree upon yon green hill side' [VW], 'The munelicht glintin' on een sae fair, The lips like rowans, the gowden hair' [WL] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong; cf. rountree and raun-trei; Scandanavian origin).

Rowan (row-in) n. James 'Jim' (1943–2008). He grew up in Slitrig Crescent, served an apprenticeship at Woodcock's, and served with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. He ran the Hawick Motorcycle Centre, worked as an engineer with Pringle's and later opened The Photo Shop on the High Street. He often contributed letters to the local press. He married Irene Gentleman. He moved to the Leicester area to be near his son Mark and died there.

Rowanhill (row-in-hil) n. former lands in the upper Teviotdale, listed as part of the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and in 1693. It seems likely this is a scribe's or transcriber's error for Bowanhill. However, it is not impossible that it could be associated with Rowantree hill, although this is probably on the wrong side of the Teviot valley or Rowantree Knowe on the right side (it is 'Rowandhill' in 1693).

Rowantreihill (row-in-trī-hil) n. Rowantree-hill, probable name for a farm in Jedforest. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 2 steadings and valued at 44 shillings. In 1541 John, Marion and Adam were tenants of part of the lands paying 22s, John and Robert Oliver were tenants in another part paying 11s and Robert 'the Sheriff' Oliver was tenants in the last part paying 11s (it is 'Rowntrehill' in 1538 and 1539 and 'Rownetrehil' and 'Rontrehil' in 1541).

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-trī-sīk) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream that rises on Rowantree Knowe and flows roughly northwards to join the Dod Burn.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-trī-sīk) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Know and flowing westwards to become part of Ashy Butn and then Whithaugh Burn.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-trī-sīk) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale rising on Hazelyside Hill and flowing roughly north east to join the Black Burn.

row a nievefi (row-a-neev-fi) v., arch. to turn round every cut of corn (during harvest) so all the stalks can be intermingled in order that many can be held in one hand before laying in the band (see row).

Rowbank (rō-bawngk) n. house on Drumlanrig Square that has the back on the Square and the front overlooking the mill behind.

Rowcastle see Ruecastle

row-chow-the-bacca-wheel (row-chow-thu-ba-ki-wheel) n., arch. a children's game in which a chain of children surround a large child, called the 'pin', then sway around until everyone falls in a heap (noted by J. Jamieson, who states that it is derived from 'imitation of the process of a tobacconist in winding up his roll round a pin').

rowd (rowd) pp., adj. rolled, wrapped – 'The bairn'll taik nae ill; ee hev um weel rowd up' [ECS].

Tost and retost, retost and tost again, With rumbling and tumbling on the rowling Main' [CWS], '... an, dicht as A micht, dreeps rowld doon owre brow, haffets an chowks, forbye' [ECS], '... an a gledge doon inti the Rule as it ran rowlin ti link in wui Teiot' [ECS], n. a roll – 'Nocht for yon rowel o whurly-whas – But still the singing clear and shair ...' [DH] (also written 'rowel'; cf. row; E.C. Smith notes that compared with 'row' the verb 'ti rowl is more commonly used for to roll').

the Rowly-Powly Loft (thu-row-lee-pow-lee-loft) n. popular name for the old 'High Loft' in St. Mary's Kirk, before it was rebuilt in the 1760s. It is recorded that in 1755 3s. 2d. was received from Adam Kersel for this loft (presumably for his right to sit there). It is ucnlear who it was built for.

rowme (rowm) n., arch. a holding of land, especially a bounded area used for crops or grazing, a farm – 'Item, he levis to Willie of Allanehauch, the Kirkland, his awne rowme' [SB1574], '... [Hoscote] ane rowme of Wat Scott of Hardenis' [1580 record], 'The Larde of Gledstanes for hymselfe and his rowmes, the Larde of Harret for hymselfe and his rowmes ...' [CBP1584], '... under the higheste paine of our lives or els att leaste the banishment of our rowme for ever ...' [CBP1597], 'The paroche is 8 mylles in lenth, so there are some rowmes 8 mylles or thairby from the kirk ...' [PR1627] 'Item, whatsomever person that mindes to big ane house, he sall haif half gewill of his nichbour's rowmes ...' [SB1640], 'The particular valuatiounes of the particular rowmes of ye said parochine' [BR] (also written 'roum', 'room', etc.).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small village that is all that remains of an important historic site. It was created a Royal Burgh in the early 12th century, with its castle used as a royal residence, and was one of the four Royal Burghs in the 13th century, being then probably the fourth most populous town in Scotland. It was a walled town with 3 churches, schools and at one time the Royal Mint. James II was famously killed here in 1460, and after the Scots captured it they had it demolished. The village went into decline after that, but there was still a Franciscan convent there in the early 1500s. The area was devastated by Hertford's men in 1545. The village itself is built on the site of the overflow of the old town, and was thatched until the 1950s. The graveyard contains the burial vault of the Kers of Chatto as well as the grave of Andrew Gemmels (the original for Sir Walter Scott's 'Edie Ochiltree'). A nearby railway viaduct was constructed from 1847, but 9 men lost their lives when part of it collapsed in 1849. A short history was written by Brian Wain in 1983 – 'For soon, where scenes of seeter beauty smile Around the mounds of Roxburgh's ruin'd pile, No more the mistress of each lovely field, Her name, her honours Teviot soon must yield' [JL], 'Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh's tower: Where you take, lowver-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppice and bower' [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'Hroc burh', meaning 'the fortified dwelling belonging to Hroc'; the name is recorded from the early 12th century, in the earliest records being 'Rokesburgh' and variants; it occurs on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Rosburgh'; an example of 'Hroc' occurs in the Domesday book for Suffolk and in compound form in other parts of England).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small town in Central Otago on the South Island of New Zealand. It lies on the Teviot River (now called the Clutha), and was also once called Teviot itself, with Ettrick and Mount Benger nearby. It was named by some of the early settlers and was an important centre during the local gold rush of 1862. Streets in the town include one named after Hawick, as well as Abbotsford, Ancrum, Berwick, Branxholm, Cheviot, Edinburgh, Ednam, Hermitage, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddle, Melrose, Scotland and Tweed.

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. John (d.1196) Canon of Glasgow, who witnessed several charters from the 1160s. He was probably promoted to Canon by Herbert of Selkirk, Bishop of Glasgow, who was formerly Abbot of Selkirk (when it moved to Kelso). He witnessed the confirmation of the royal charter to Selkirk in the late 1160s. Possibly the same Master John held either the Church of Lessuden or Longnewton in about 1176 (although it is possible that this was instead John of Lilliesleaf). He was appointed Treasurer of Glasgow Diocese in 1195/6, but only held the appointment for a few months before dying at Melrose Abbey. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Isobel Marshall in 1714. His children included Thomas (b.1715), William (b.1717), John (b.1718), James (b.1721), Helen (b.1725), Thomas (again, b.1732), Robert (b.1730). He was an Elder in Bedrule Parish in 1722, 1731 and 1735. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (d.1813) farmer at Ruecastle, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1794 and 1797. He was recorded as owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He is probably the William who married Annie Rutherford in Ancrum in 1783; she was daughter of an agricultural implement maker. Their children probably included: James (b.1793), Jean (b.1795) and Andrew (b.1797), baptised in Bedrule; and possibly Annie (b.1784), James (b.1787), Thomas (b.1788) and John (b.1791). One of his children was Janet (b.1799), who reached the age of 100 in 1799 (living at Kipilaw Mains), as described in the Border Magazine for that year. He was said to have died after attending to the sick bed of his master, the Laird of Knowesouth. After his death the family moved to Dolphinstone farm, but abandoned it after a few years. Thereafter his wife and some children moved to Galashiels. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stitchelhill. He is listed as male head of household there 1835–41. He emigrated to America in 1842.

Roxburgh Castle (roks-bu-ru-kaw-sul) n. former fortified structure, also called Marchmount, built above the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed. It was used by King David I in the early-to-mid 12th century, but may have existed in some form before that. It passed back and fourth between Scotland and England several times, with the English holding it about as often as the Scots. Alexander II was married in the Castle in 1239. A large number of Scottish charters and other records were removed there on the orders of Edward I in 1292, before subsequently disappearing forever. Robert the Bruce's sister Mary was hung there in a cage from 1306–10 on orders of Edward I. Sir James Douglas recaptured it in 1313, but the English held it from 1334 until 1460. A bridge connecting the area with Kelso was destroyed in 1398 and its successor destroyed by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1411. During the 1460 siege James II died when one of his cannons exploded; a yew tree in the grounds of Floors Castle marks the spot. In 1499 James IV granted the site of the Castle to Walter Ker of Cessford. Queen Mary of Gueldres dismantled it, but it was rebuilt by the English in 1547. When the Scots regained it for the last time they razed it themselves, around 1550 – 'Roxburgh! how fallen, since first in Gothic pride Thy frowning battlements the war defied, Call'd the bold chief to grace thy blazon'd halls, And bade the rivers gird thy solid walls!' [JL].

Roxburghe Drive (roks-bu-ru-drīv) n. one of the bigger roads through Stirches, being he continuation of Hazelwood Road. It was built in 1976 and named after the 9th Duke of Roxburghe, George Victor Robert John Innes-Ker, who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council (often erroneously written 'Roxburgh').

the Roxburgh Roondie (thu-roks-bu-ru-roon-dee) n. local brie-like cheese made at Standhill farm by Jim and Anne Shanks from 2007.

Roxburghshire (roks-bu-ru-shir, roks-bu-ru-shIr) n. former county which included Hawick, Jedburgh and Kelso. It was the southernmost county of Scotland and was bounded by Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Selkirkshire and the English Border. It contained what was formerly Teviotdale and part of Liddesdale and was divided into over 30 parishes. Jedburgh was the county town, although there was a proposal around 1891 to change this to Hawick. The area was 669 square miles, although changes to the boundaries means this number does not apply to all times. The county is full of archæological remains, including Bronze Age burial cairns, British forts, Roman camps and roads, vestiges of settlements and peel towers. The county is named after the formerly important town and Castle of Roxburgh. The population was 34,704 in 1755, 33,721 in 1801 and 37,230 in 1811, 40,892 in 1821, 43,663 in 1831, 46,025 in 1841, 51,642 in 1851, 54,119 in 1861, 53,974 in 1871, 53,442 in 1881, 53,741 in 1891, 48,804 in 1901, 47,192 in 1911, 44,989 in 1921, 45,788 in 1931 and 45,562 in 1951.

Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry (roks-bu-ru-shir-jen'-ul-min-in-yō-min-ree-kaw-vul-ree) n. local volunteer regiment that existed 1797–1828, also known as the Roxburghshire Yeomanry or the Roxburghshire Light Dragoons Yeomanry Cavalry. Hawick was the main rallying point for the upper troop. In 1798 the Burgh gave them £25 to purchase drums and fifes. The western Captain-commandant was William Elliot of Harwood, while William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae served as Colonel. Their uniforms consisted of scarlet jackets laced with white cord, blue collars and cuffs, black leather helmets with a bearskin crest and a red and white heckle feather, white breeches and black boots.

the Roxburghshire Militia (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-mi-li-sha) n. volunteer regiments of the early 19th century, formed in 1809 after the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers had been disbanded. The 1st Regiment was headquartered at Jedburgh, and contained many local men, while the 2nd Regiment was based at Kelso. The 1st Regiment had Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) as Lieut.-Col., with James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) as Major and the first Captain was Walter Scott of Wauchope. They were disbanded in 1828 (note that several different names were used for these units).

Roxburghshire Nursin Association (roks-bu-ru-shir-nur-sin-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. nursing association formed in 1900 to provide for nursing needs in local country areas. Fees were paid to join the association and only members could benefit from its services. It operated until the National Health Service was set up in 1948.

the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-rī-ful-vo-lun-teerz) n. formal name for the Border Rifles, a volunteer outfit founded in 1861.

the Roxburghshire Word-Book (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-wurd-book) n. the most useful resource for words that are peculiar to various parts of the county, written by George Watson and published in 1923. Words that are local to the Hawick area are denoted '[W]', for Western Roxburghshire. As well as the word list itself, the introductory sections compile a huge amount of information about pronunciation and other facets of Roxburghshire vernacular. The book was compiled by Watson from the help of many communicants (most of whose names are unknown) from various parts of Roxburghshire, this following articles and lists of words that he published in the local press to encourage people to help him. Earlier books of poetry are much used to provide examples, and phrases from Elliot Cowan Smith are often included (sometimes without attribution). Watson was from Jedburgh and worked for the Oxford University dictionary project, effectively following in the footsteps of James Murray.

Roxburghshire Yeomanry (roks-bu-ru-shir-yō-mun-ree) n. another name for the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry.

Roxburgh Viaduct (roks-bu-ru-vI-a-dukt) n. disused railway viaduct across the Teviot, by the village of Roxburgh. Built in 1847–50, it has an interesting iron footbridge built into it at the level of the river bank. It consists of 14 arches on a curve. The collapse of one of the piers in 1849 led to the deaths of 8 workers, with nothing to commemorate their sacrifice.

Roxburgh Volunteers (roks-bu-ru-vo-lun-teerz) n. name given to several distinct (but inter-related) volunteer military units. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry was first set up in 1794 and disbanded in 1802, to be re-formed as the Roxburghshire Corps of Genetlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, lasting until 1828. The Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers was formed in 1803 during the perceived threat of French invasion. It was initiated by Walter Scott of Wauchope, who became their captain, received regimental colours from Miss Elliot of Minto and were consecrated by Rev. Arkle, minister of Hawick. The age limits were 17 to 55 and a large number joined in 1803, including 25 from Wilton. They were mobilised during the False Alarm of 1804. The unit disbanded in 1809, but was essentially replaced by the Roxburghshire Militia the same year. Another volunteer unit, called the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk Volunteer Rifle Corps was set up in 1859, with Hawick units, the 4th and 5th being set up in 1860 and 1861. The 4th absorbed the Denholm Company in 1863 and the 5th was disbanded in 1867. The 4th Roxburgh Corps became D and E Companies of the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk (The Border) Rifle Volunteer Corps in 1880. They become part of the K.O.S.B. from 1887, with K Company formed in Hawick in 1892, and the whole set of Companies renamed the 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. in 1908 – 'On the mountains of Cheviot now present to our eyes, The deeds if our ancestors we fondly recognise; Their spirit we will cherish, it will vanish all your fears, For it glows in the hearts of the Roxburgh Volunteers [T].

Roxbury (roks-bu-ree) n. suburb of Boston, Massachusetts, which was apparently named for the many rocks there (although a connection with our county is not impossible). The town of West Roxbury (annexed to Boston in 1874) was the site of the Boston area Common Ridings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This was organised by Hawick exiles under the auspices of the Scottish Border Club. It consisted of sports (races, baseball throwing etc.) and other events on Common Riding Saturday, with the location Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. There is a photograph of the 1886 celebration. Ex-Cornet Walter Irvine attended in 1888. There are American Cornets recorded from 1877 until at least 1926.

Roxmount (roks-mown') n. former farm a mile or so south-east of Hawick (marked on Stobie's 1770 map close to the modern farm of Kaimend).

the Royal (thu-roi-ul) n. pub at 22 Howegate in the latter 19th and early 20th centuries. It was also known as 'the Royal Bar'. The proprietor for many years was John Barclay.

the Royal Bank (thu-roi-ul-bawngk) n. the Royal Bank of Scotland erected an impressive building at 12 High Street in 1857/8, designed by Peddie & Kinnear, constructed by James Harkness, with ornamental work by Alex Pirnie. On the top corners of the building can be seen the monogram 'P K' and the year '1857'. It is a Category B listed building. The location had previously contained 2 adjacent hostelries, the Ordnance Arms and the Harrow Inn. The first agent was James Carmichael, solicitor, and later Haddon & Turnbull took over. The building was turned into the Registry Office and later education service offices. More recently it became the restaurant the Night Safe, with the old night safe still surviving on the street. Meanwhile the Royal Bank had another office at 4 Tower Knowe. After it merged with the Commercial group in 1969 it obtained the property at 31 High Street (built as the National Bank about 1870). It stretches over 31, 33 and 35 High Street, and is a grade C listed building.

royal burgh (roi-ul-bu-ru) n. a town granted its charter by the Crown rather than the local

the Royal George (thu-roi-ul-jōrj) n. former popular name for the 'Whusky Hooses Mill' which stood opposite St. Cuthbert's Church, also known as 'the George'. It was presumably named after the famous Royal Navy vessel of the same name, which was the largest warship in the world when it was launched in 1756. The ship fought in the Seven Years War and became infamous when it sank in 1782 during routine maintenance with the loss of more than 800 lives. A 'walking stick made from a spar of the Royal George, at one time the property of Sir Walter Scott' was donated to the Museum in 1866 by millwright Andrew Leyden.

Royal Highlanders (roi-ul-hI-lin-durz) n. three officers of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment, Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie, were made Honorary Burgesses in 1802. This was when they passed through Hawick on their way back from Egypt after having 'immortalised themselves in defeating the French Invincibles'.

the Royal Mail (thu-roi-ul-māl) n. name of a stagecoach operting out of Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh from the Tower Inn every day at 9.30 a.m., going via Selkirk and Galashiels, and leaving for London at 12.30 p.m., via Langholm and Carlisle. The other coach operating at the same time was 'the Standard'.

the Royal Oak (thu-roi-ul-ōk) n. former hostelry near the top of the Round Close in the 19th century, also known for a while as the Blue Bell Inn. It can be seen in a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw. James Elliot, proprietor, was considered to have provided the finest spread of the local innkeepers at the Reform Bill open air dinner of 1832. Elliot was listed as vintner on the Round Close in Pigot's 1837 directory. It could have been where Mary Hunter was publican on the Round Close in 1841. Also the name of a separate local pub on Wilton Path at roughly the same time, and another small licensed house on the north side of Buccleuch Street in the mid-19th century (the name is shared with hundreds of other pubs in Britain and refers to the tree in which Charles II hid from Cromwell's army).

rubbin-oot-indie (ru-bin-oo'-in-dee) n., arch. an India-rubber, eraser.

Ruberslaw (roo-burz-law) n. hill about 4 miles due east of Hawick, lying on the boundary of Cavers and Hobkirk parishes. It reaches a height of 424 m (1392 ft), and is the most prominent landmark in Roxburghshire. It was long considered to be an extinct volcano, but the reality is that the geology is much more complex (although the rocks are predominantly basaltic, the shape probably came from erosion). It is topped by an Iron Age fort, and was also used as a Roman signal station. The fortifications on the hill-top were first described by A.O. Curle in 1905. There was an extensive stone citadel on top (about 72 m by 32 m), defended by a wall, with an entrance on the north-east side. There is also an annex on the south side, including the plateau below the summit. These were probably rebuilt from the stones of the Roman signal station, as a Dark Age 'nuclear' fortification. with Roman stone. A less well-defined outer wall is probably part of an earlier Iron Age structure. A cairn on the east side was removed in the late 19th century. The summit also has a modern triangulation pillar. Part of the slopes formed the common land for the feuars of Denholm. A horde of bronze vessels was unearthed there in 1863 (including a jug handle, decorated with grotesque figures of 2 dwarfs and a bird) and are in Hawick Museum, as well as 2 stones with diamond-shaped carvings. Several flints found there are also in the Museum. Other flints and an arrowhead are in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, as well as an unfinished stone axe. A Roman coin was also found here in the 19th century. In a wood near the head of the Hawk Burn is a 'burnt mound'. Pine trees on the north side are said to be remnants of the ancient Caledonian forest. The hill was used for Covenanters' meetings of the mid-17th century, at Peden's Pulpit (a rocky cleft at the south-west side of the summit) and elsewhere on its slopes. Part of the slopes were used as Common land in Denholm and in the 18th century; each feuar's allotment was marked out with stones. A song, 'The Hunting of Ruberslaw', about a fox hunt there, was written down by Bailie T.S. Smail of Jedburgh, as recited by 2 old men in about the Ruberslaw Hoard (thu-roo-burz-law-hōrd) n. hoard of bronze objects discovered on the eastern slopes of Ruberslaw in 1863. The objects were donated to Hawick Museum by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee, later being studied by staff at the National Museums of Scotland and then being displayed at the Trimontium Trust's Museum. The pieces are: 2 'paterae' (sauce-pans), one decorated with a 'thyrsus' (staff surmounted by vegetation); a patera base; parts of a jug, including an elaborate handle; a shallow dish; a bowl about 1-foot in diameter; and fragments of 2 scabbard mounts. They are believed to date from the 2nd century.

1900 – 'Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Etrick-head; – Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade's dead' [CWS], 'Oft have I wandered in my vernal years Where Ruberslaw his misty summit rears' [JL], 'Dark Ruberslaw, – that lifts his head sublime, Rugged and hoary with the wrecks of time! On his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years' [JL], 'The e'enin' stern has risen ayont auld Ruberslaw, An' I've trystit wi' my lassie to meet her i' the shaw' [JJ], 'Did you see the shadow's speeding On the slopes of Ruberslaw?' [RSC], '... Waiting helpless the beak and claw Of the carrion birds of Ruberslaw!' [WHO], '... where Ruberslaw's summit stands oot and looks doon on the wild lovely Border and Denholm's wee toon' [GM], 'Rest on the heights an' look ayont Where Ruberslaw shows green, An' a' the countryside displayed Aroon' the Border Queen' [WFC], 'When Rubers Law has on his cap, The Dunion on her hood, A' the auld wives on Teviotside Are sure ti hae a flood' [T], 'If you can see Ruberslaw it's going to rain and if you can't see Ruberslaw it's already raining' [IWL] (sometimes written 'Rubers Law', it is mistranscribed as 'Ralburghlaw' in a 1649 description of the county; it is marked 'Rubburlaw hill' on Pont's manuscript map of the 1590s and drawn as a steep hill, with something represented on top; it is also on a manuscript map of Gordon in c.1650 as 'Rubburlaw hill', but is absent from Blaeu's 1654 atlas and did not appear in a published map until Stobie's map of 1770; the origin of the name is unknown; it should not be confused with 'Rubislaw' near Aberdeen).

Ruberslaw Drive (roo-burz-law-drīv) n. street in Denholm, running parallel to the Loaning and connected with Ruberslaw Road. An amusing fact is that you cannot actually see Ruberslaw from here.

Ruberslaw Hoose (roo-burz-law-hoos) n. house in Crieff near Perth. It was built in the late 18th century, being a branch of the Commercial Bank from 1811, and then was a home of Sir William Eliott of Stobs from at least 1878, when his first wife died there. It is unclear who named the house (but the connection to the Eliotts of Stobs seems unlikely to be a coincidence).

Ruberslaw Pairish (roo-burz-law-pā-reesh) n. combined parish consisting of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule, set up in 2003, and extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean in 2004.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, named after the prominent hill. It was built in 1951, with additional houses added in 1957.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-rōd) n. street in the south-eastern part of Denholm, built on the site of a former livestock market. The private housing development there dates from the 1970s. Ruberslaw Drive leads off to the south.

rubiator (roo-bee-ā-tur) n., arch. a bully, a violent, swearing person – 'He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator' [JoJ], '... 'cause she wadna pit some mair trycle on a daud o' peasebanno' the muckle black ill-faured rubiator was ryving at' [WNK], 'Hei cam in leike a roobeeaater (a violent bully), an cowpeet the taibl yownt owre' [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Rubstic (rub-stik) n. race-horse, trained locally by John Leadbetter. It won the Grand National in 1979, being the first Scottish horse to do so.

ruck (ruk) n., arch. a rick, stack of hay – 'O! as we ran about the rucks o' hay! I hinna seen sincesyne a blyther day' [CPM], 'lang Johne turnbull in quhitrig – IIII oxin II ky a hors a ruk of corne' [CoJ1503], '... where there waur, on the other side o' the hedge, a fine crap o' new cut hay, put up in rucks' [AAH].

the Rude Day (thu-rood-dā) n. mediæval festival of the Exultation of the Cross, celebrated on 14th September (3rd May in England), supposedly the date of the discovery of the 'true cross'. It was important locally before the Reformation and is recorded in the mid-16th century as a day sometimes chosen for signing documents etc. It was the occasion of a Fair in Jedburgh, the day in 1601 being marked by a skirmish, when a group of about 30 Turnbulls from the Minto area came to town seeking Thomas Ker (brother of the Probvost). At the end of the fight Ker and his servant were dead, along with 2 of the Turnbulls, and several men were left seriously wounded (still referred to in the 1622 Circuit Court records; also spelled 'Rood').

Rudd (rud) n. Charles Clifford (b.1811/2) from Yorskshire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police in 1851. He was living at about 3 Tower Knowe. He was also listed as Superintendent in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a son Thomas Frederick. By 1861 he was a widower working as Police Constable in Jedburgh.

rue-claw (roo-klaw) n., arch. a mild sore made worse by scratching.

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. hamlet a mile or so north-east of the Dunion, formerly in the Barony of Bedrule. A piece of land there was granted by Lady Bethoc and her husband Rudolph to the monks of Jedburgh when that abbey was founded (as confirmed in several later charters). There is a suggestion that an area of elevated land to the east of the farm may have been the site of a tower. There is also a tradition that the local courts of justice were held there until moved to Jedburgh. William 'de Rucastel' is recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The Fletcher family held part of the lands from before 1464 until they sold them to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1558/9. In 1491 there was a 'procuratory of resignation' by Thomas Dickson of Ormiston, to resign (presumably a different part of) these lands into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh; they appear to have been gained by John Rutherford of Hundalee. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. The village there was burned by an English party led by Philip Dacre in 1513, including 2 towers, burned by Sir Thomas Wharton's men in 1543 and burned again by Hertford's men in 1545. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the Abbot of Jedburgh. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1619. It was among lands granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre in 1623. Lands there were held by Lord Jedburgh in 1629. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned lands there, which he feued in 1632. In 1643 the lands there were valued at a total of £459, owned by Thomas Rutherford, Andre Turnbull, Laird Storie, Alexander Miller, George Fletcher and the Earl of Traquair. In 1665 Thomas, son of John Rutherford was served heir to his father's 7-pound-10-shilling lands there, with 'lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle' as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle. Residents in 1722 included Margaret Best, Janet Riddell and Robert Young and in 1726 included James Curry and family, Isabel Best and Andrew Rule. There was a small school here in the 18th century, perhaps the same as the one said to be at Newton; James Currie was teacher there in 1759. In 1788 the main part of the lands was owned by John Rutherford of Knowesouth and valued at £396 13s 10d (with teinds of £70 6s), part owned by Thomas Rutherford valued at £41 3s 10d, a small part owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters (that had been acquired by Bennet of Chesters) valued at £37 2s 4d and a another part owned by Thomas Storie valued at £18. William Roxburgh was there 1794–97 and in 1797 William Young was also farmer there, plus George Black also lived there. The residents in 1799 included hind John Mitchel, servant George Black, labourer James Carr and servant William Young. The farm was part of the estate of Knowesouth, until sold by the heirs of Capt. Rutherford to George Pott of Dod. Part of the lands were acquired by Bennet of Chesters before 1811 and combined with his estate, with the rest being owned by Rutherford of Knowesouth; together the parts were valued at about £510. Gideon Pott acquired further parts from William Oliver Rutherford and from Thomas Storie. The area may be the origin of the similar surname. A cist was found a few hundred yards to the south, containing an urn that was said in 1949 to be preserved in Monteviot House. A stone axe found enarby is in the National Museum of Antiquities. In a field about 500 m to the north are the possible remains of a settlement. A former resident, perhaps fictional, is mentioned in the ballad 'The Grey Peel' (as recited by 'Matthew Gotterson') – 'An' gallopin' up comes Ruecastle Hew, On his Bewcastle naig o' the guid steel grey. An' Fernihirst grim, but ever heart true, Whase ready Kerr hand redds mony a fray' [T] (the name probably derives from Old English 'ruh' and Anglo-Saxon 'ceaster', meaning 'rough fort', suggesting an early fortification of some sort there; it is written 'Reucastel', 'Reucastle', 'Rewcastle', 'Rowcastel', 'Rowcastle', 'Rochcastell', 'Rouchcastell', 'Rowcastel', 'Rowcastell', 'Rowcastill', and variants; it is first recorded as 'Rughechestre' in about 1140 and is 'Rucastle' in the 13th century; it is 'Roucastell' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Row-castell' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Roucastell' on Blaeu's

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. Adam (d.1705) recorded as 'merchant of Hawick' when he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1692. He may be related to the Adam who was born to William and Marion Scott in Hawick in 1650 and may be the Adam whose children included: an unnamed child (b.1690); Mary (b.1692); and James (b.1693). He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Adam who is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Scott. According to his will, he married Janet, daughter of William Paterson in 1686. He was a merchant in Hawick, but at some point moved to Edinburgh. where he died. Elizabeth nee Kelly (18th C.) wife of Bailie Walter, whom she married in the early 1750s. She was apparently the first Hawick citizen to travel out to America and return safely! She was at that time 72 years old and visiting her son John, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. Francis (17th/18th C.) saddler in Hawick, he was probably closely related to Robert. He could have been the Francis born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1678. He is probably the Francis who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for merchant David Young in 1705, for shoemaker Walter Leyden (along with Bailie Robert) in 1717, for merchant William Dickson in 1718 and for candlemaker John Scott in 1720. In 1723 he was entered as a new elder of Hawick Kirk and was a candidate for Session Treasurer in 1725; he was recorded as Trasurer in 1728. He witnessed baptisms in 1725 for workman William Henderson, for Town Officer John Stewart and for merchant John Clerk (along with Bailie Robert), in 1726 for flesher Robert Wilson and probably (the record is hard to read) along with Robert, for wigmaker Francis Miles, in 1727 for carrier George Porteous, in 1728 for Walter Elliot and for Robert Hewison (both along with the Bailie), in 1730 for 'junior surgeon' Walter Scott and in 1732 for John Telfer (along with Henry Orrock). He is also mentioned in reference to the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. He may be the Francis, saddler in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He witnessed a further baptism for gardener William Paterson in 1743, in which he was also listed as a saddler. He is recorded as a merchant in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with merchant John. He is probably also the saddler Francis who witnessed a baptism for Gideon in 1745; Gideon thus seems likely to have been closely related. In 1747 he was recorded as a saddler who (along with carrier John) witnessed a baptism for wright Henry Haliburton. He may have been the Francis who died around 1750 and gave his estate to Francis, young son of Bailie Gideon (perhaps therefore his brother). George (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. He may be the George who was married to Isobel 'Merlay' and had a son Hector in Hawick in 1636. George (17th C.) married to Janet Gilbertson, they had daughter Janet in Hawick in 1653. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1648. Bailie Gideon (b.1713) son of Robert, he was a Magistrate in Hawick roughly in the 1730s and in 1740. He may have been the Gideon who was Cornet in 1730. He witnessed a baptism for mason Andrew Turnbull in 1732. He was probably the (ex-)Bailie Ruecastle involved with overseeing work to rebuild the Bailies' seat in St. Mary's in 1734 and building a new Parish School in 1739. He was 'present Baillie' in 1741 and in 1743 when he witnessed baptisms for writer James Weir and Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and also 'late Bailie' in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir, and also when his own child's baptism was recorded. He appears to have died shortly before 1751, when the Hawick Session agreed to act as trustees for his minor son Francis, who had been left the estate of another Francis (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Watson, who may be the daughter of John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) baptised in 1710. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Francis (b.1734); Thomas (b.1735); John (again, b.1738); Anne (b.1740); Francis (again, b.1741); Anne (again, b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Gideon (b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were writer Thomas Watson (surely related to his wife) and merchant Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir, and in 1745 were former Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis (who was surely closely related to him). He may be the 'Bailie Gideon' who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although he appears to have been deceased before then). Gideon (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick when he paid the Horse Tax in 1790–92. He also paid the dog tax in

Hawick in 1797. He contributed £1 to the subscription to support the war with France around 1800. He is probably the son of Gideon, born in 1747. Hector (17th C.) married to Isobel Minto, their children Grizel and Francis were baptised in Hawick in 1645. Hector (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Marion Brown and their children included Bessie (b.1687) and Hector (b.1688). An unnamed child (b.1690) and Andrew (b.1692), with no mother's name recorded, were probably also his children. He may have been son or grandson of George. He is probably the 'Hector Reucastell younger' listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 (suggesting that his father may have also been Hector). John (16th C.) recorded in Hawick's 1537 charter as 'Rowcastell'. He owned a 'particate' of land on the north side of the High Street. He may have been the ancestor of the later Ruecastles of the Town. John (17th C.) one of a list of 16 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he is among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (b.1657) son of Robert and Janet Tweedie, born in Hawick. Probably the same John became a cooper's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. He may be related to the later Bailie John. John (17th/18th C.) described as 'servitor' to carrier Walter Ruecastle in 1716, when he and William Douglas had complaints made against them for sitting in seats in St. Mary's that were reserved for the incorporated trades. The 2 of them even broke open the door to the balcony when it was locked by Robert Jolly. He was presumably the same John who was involved in a scuffle with Robert Jolly in 1716 in the Wester Loft of St. Mary's during the Sunday service, when 'Jollie did thrust him hard by his feet upon his belly'. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Chief Magistrate of Hawick around the 1710s, recorded as such during the swearing of the oath of allegiance to King George by the Council and Burgesses in 1714. It is unclear how he is related to the other Ruecastles (but based on his marriage record he was 'nephew to Walter Ruecastle att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick'); it is possible he was son of Adam, who died in 1706 (which would explain why his uncle rather than father is mentioned in the marriage record). He is probably the merchant John who in 1719 married Bessie (or Betsy), daughter of Walter Paterson of Burnflat, and had children: Margaret (b.1721), who probably married Walter Henderson; Bessie (b.1727); Walter (b.1729), baker and magistrate; John (b.1731); Jean (b.1735); Isobel (b.1739); Bessie (again, b.1740); Beatrix (b.1742), who probably married clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull; and Janet (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (both 'present Bailies'). Given the birth years it seems likely he is also the John whose children recorded with Bessie Scott (perhaps an error, or indicating his wife had previously been married) were: Anna (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725), who may have married James Paterson, 'Ilka Thursdi'. The witnesses in 1725 were Walter (perhaps his uncle) and John Scott (possibly related to his wife). In 1729 he was listed as a carrier, and the witnesses were John Miller and John Telfer. He is probably the merchant John who witnessed baptisms for workman Gilbert Oliver in 1741, for flesher George Deans, merchant Robert Scott, flesher Walter Sheen, gardener Robert Balmer and flesher William Renwick in 1742, for carrier John Pott and Schoolmaster Walter Turnbull in 1743, and for Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. In 1744 he witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tudhope and James Paterson (who married Helen, probably his daughter), as well as for weaver John Gray and for shoemaker Thomas Scott. In 1745 he also witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with fellow merchant Francis. He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism for William Leithead in 1741 and another for wright Henry Haliburton in 1747. John (18th C.) elder of Hawick Session, recorded in 1751. He was in care of a horse belonging to the Session, with instructions to sell it, and also appointed as a trustee for the affairs of the deceased Bailie Francis Ruecastle. Since he was not referred to as a late Bailie, then he may not have been the same as the earlier Bailie John. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter in 1758. John (1755/6–1808) son of Walter. He went to America, serving in the U.S. Army during the American War of Independence, becoming a Captain. He married Phoebe Thomas of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. When his mother went out to visit him she was apparently the first Teri to take a trip out to America and return safely. Marion (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1683 she gave a declaration that wright Francis Gledstains had assaulted Bailie James Thorbrand. Probably the same Marion

'Rowcastell' was recorded in Hawick in 1697 when she and others complained that Margaret Drummond and Elizabeth Miller had stolen items from their houses, as well as from Bailie Laing's cellar. Mrs. ?? (17th/18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the early 1700s. She is recorded several times in the Parish Records in connection with payment for drinks associated with Kirk Session events, such as funerals and the 'roup' of seats in the gallery. She may have been related to the John who was Bailie. Robert (17th C.) described as 'viatore', i.e. 'traveller' when he was witness to a 1622 sasine for land in Hawick owned by Allan Deans. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with making a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott and had son James in Hawick in 1636. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Gledstains. Their daughter Isobel in Hawick in 1646. Robert (17th C.) selected as one of 2 people in Hawick to collect the 'stent' on the west side of the water in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ordered in 1655 to pay Walter Stavert money borrowed when he when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh and for a leg of mutton. He is described as a traveller in 1655 when someone was ordered to pay him for carrying wool to Edinburgh, 'for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick' and 'for ane dry killit fische'. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Scott. Their children included George (b.1648), Janet (b.1648), Bessie (1650), an unnamed child (b.1653) and Walter (b.1655). Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick married to Janet 'Twiddie' (i.e. Tweedie). Their son John was baptised in Hawick in 1657; he was probably the John who became a cooper's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Isobel Scott. Their children included William (b.1654) and Robert (b.1656). The witnesses in 1654 were Thomas Scott and John Scott (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Wintrop. Their children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1674). Robert (17th C.) married to Agnes Mow, their son William was born in Hawick in 1673. Robert (d.c.1688) tailor in Hawick. His will was recorded in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1688. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. He could be the Robert recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He served as Magistrate between about 1690 and 1710, certainly recorded in 1697, 1707 and again around 1709. He may have been the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Wintrop, who was born in Hawick in 1670 (although there are other Roberts recorded being born in 1648 and 1656). He may be the Robert recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun' and probably from the west side. It is possible that he was the Robert, who, along with Walter, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He is probably the Robert who in 1696 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott. He is probably the Robert who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism for merchant David Young in 1705. He was Bailie in 1707 when along with the other Bailie, Robert Brown, he was fined by the Council for 'the publicke undenyable and unaccomptable abuse ... att the rydeing of the Commone', with the pair 'strikeing att others' horses with thair whips and staves'; the nature of the incident is not described, but it seems likely it was related to the near riots that happened at the previous year's Common Riding over carrying the Flag. He may be the 'Baylyea Roucastell' who was given one of the keys to the Charter Chest in 1710. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Gledstains, John Scott 'Whitegates' and tailor William Donald (along with Bailie Robert Brown) in 1707, for Walter Gledstains (junior of Hilliesland) in 1708, for Walter Gledstains, 'Walter Alison', for Henry Orrock and for merchant William Dickson in 1709, for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1711, for Bailie James Burn in 1712 and for Bailie George Martin, John Aitkin in Allanhaugh Mill and Bailie James Scott in 1714. He was 'late bailie' in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. He witnessed further baptisms for weaver Robert Turnbull in 1716, for shoemaker Walter Leyden (along with saddler Francis) in 1717, for smith William Whillans in 1720, in 1722 for Walter Scott in Acreknowe, in 1723 for shoemaker Walter 'Lithen', in 1725 for merchant John Clerk (along with Francis again), in 1728 for Walter Elliot and for Robert Hewison and in 1733 for carter Adam Scott. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the Councillors given a key to the Charter Chest. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. In 1713 he was one of the men selected to identify the boundaries around the Common

Haugh after a complaint by the Laird of Langlands. In 1715 he was given custody of 'the charter little chest', with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the keys. He was probably the Bailie Ruecastle charged in 1717 with collecting money from the area between the Cross to the bridge. And in 1718, when he was a Magistrate, there was a serious dispute with ex-Bailie Graham, who accused him (apparently at a Council meeting) of being a thief and worse; the exact nature of the argument is not recorded, but it was resolved after the Minister intervened. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721. Another dispute of 1722 led to him having all the elders publicly questioned about whether they had 'heard him speak opprobriously and disparageinglie of Mr Robert Cunningham our minister'. He continued as Magistrate in the 1720s and was also Parish Treasurer in the 1720s. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Moss in 1725. He may be Bailie and the Robert who witnessed baptisms for merchant David Johnston in 1729 and 1731; he also witnessed a baptism for Andrew Young in 1729. He married Anna Elliot and their children included: Mary (b.1700); Anna (b.1704); Beatrix (b.1705); William (b.1709); and Gideon (b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Graham and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Patrick Richardson and George Martin, in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Baillie Walter Elliot (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1709 Bailies Walter Elliot, James Burn and Walter Graham. He may be the Robert whose daughter Jean married Robert Ogilvie in 1720. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish (with no mother's name given) were probably also his: Anna (b.1702); Anna (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1711). It is also possible he was father of Bailie John, who was probably born in the 1690s. Simon (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott, their children included William (b.1635) and an unnamed son (b.1641). Walter (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined for insulting and assaulting the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. It seems that Scott was in the 'houss' (i.e. probably pub) of William Elliot, sorting out some financial business between him (Walter) and John Hardie, when he came in, calling the Bailie 'ane fals judge', and when there was an attempt to remove him he 'instantly, insolentlie, and most violentlie fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head'. As well as being fined, he was ordered to go to the stocks. The financial dealings also involved his father, who was presumably alive at the time. He could be the same man as the carter. Walter (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the Walter listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded as a carrier of Hawick when he married Abigail Lamb in Edinburgh in 1694. He could be the Walter who was born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1674 (although there are other possibilities). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for cook James Wright in 1712. In 1713 he was a 'carier' when he witnessed baptisms for 'drummer' Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex) and for weaver John Bridges (who lived at the Easter Kirkstyle). In 1716 his 'servitor' John 'Roucastle' was one of the people who the weavers complained were using their assigned seats in St. Mary's; this John could have been a close relative. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Richard Miles in 1705. It is possible that he was the Walter, who, along with Robert, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He is probably the Walter 'att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick' whose nephew John married Bessie Paterson in 1719; he was presumably thus brother of John's father, possibly Robert. Bailie Walter (1729–c.1795) son of John and Bessie Paterson. He was a baker of Hawick who was a Magistrate during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and served through the 1750s and 1760s. He witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Henderson and Margaret Ruecastle (probably his sister) in 1757, for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1759. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull (probably his brother-in-law) in 1768. He was witness for baptisms for Archibald Paterson in 1775, 1777, 1780 and 1781 and for James Dickson in 1777. He married Elizabeth Kelly (or 'Bettie Kellie') and had 13 children, including: Robert (b.1756); James (b.1758); Walter (b.1759); Charles and William (twins, b.1761); Barbara (b.1762), who married Robert Howieson; Walter (again, b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); Christian, who married Andrew Haddon (from Selkirk); and John, who was a Captain during the American Revolutionary War. The baptismal entry for the twins reads 'Gemini'. The 1758 baptism was witnessed by John (probably his father or brother) and James Paterson (perhaps his uncle), the 1759 and 1766 ones by John (again) and Walter Henderson. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'de Rucastel' when he swore allegiance to Edward I of England in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal was oval, showing a figure with a branch in the right hand, a scroll in the left, and a kneeling figure on the left, with the name 'S'WILL'I D'RUCASTELE'. He is also recorded receiving a pension from King Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. Whether he had a direct connection with the Hawick family of 3 centuries later is unknown. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. He is also mentioned in a Magistrates court case of 1642 when Thomas Oliver is accused of using irreverent language towards him, particularly calling him 'man-sworn'. He is probably the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the William who was Bailie in the 1650s. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in 1652. He is probably also the William recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He could be the William who was married to Marion Scott and had several children in Hawick, including William (b.1639), Margaret (b.1643), Marion (b.1643), Walter (b.1646), Robert (b.1648), Adam (b.1650) and James (b.1652). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Deans and James Scott (who may have been related to his wife). William (b.1650) born in Hawick, he married Janet (or 'Jenet') Richardson in 1674. Their children included Marion (b.1669), Janet (b.1671), Walter (b.1674), Isobel (b.1675), William (b.1677) and Francis (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Dickson and William Purdom. He may be the writer who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott in 1707. William (b.1761) son of Walter and Elizabeth Kelly and twin of Charles. He is probably the William from Hawick recorded in a legal matter in Selkirk in 1791 (also spelled 'Reucastell', 'Rewcastel', 'Rewcastell', 'Rewcastle', 'Roucastell', 'Roucastle', 'Rowcastell', 'Rowcastill', 'Rowcastle', 'Rucaslle', 'Rucastle', 'Ruecazie' and other variants in earlier documents).

Ruecastle Burn (roo-kaw-sul-burn) n. stream that rises on the western side of the Dunion and flows in a roughly north-western direction, passing the hamlet of Ruecastle to join the Knowesouth Burn and eventually the Teviot. At Worm Rig there are remains of ancient earthworks. Near Knowesouth is Ladies' Well.

Ruecastle Moor (roo-kaw-sul-moor) n. former name for the moor near Ruecastle. It was 'Rowcastell Mure' in 1616 when Douglases from Friarshaw were accused of threatening Gilbert Watt to meet them in combat there. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 'darg of turf annually' here.

the Ruecastles (thu-roo-kaw-sulz) n. family that was prominent in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries, but then entirely disappeared. The surname surely derives from the area of Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. William 'de Rucastel' is listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and had a pension from Robert the Bruce. The eponymous lands were in other hands by the mid-15th century, but there are no instances of the name until 'Rawcastill' appears as a landowner on Hawick's 1537 Charter. Then Thomas, Margaret, Agnes and Nicholas Ruecastle were married in Hexham in 1581, 1586, 1590 and 1596, respectively. The Hawick branch is recorded continuously from the 1630s, and furnished many Magistrates, Councillors and Elders. They were probably all from a single local male ancestor. It seems likely that the Northumbrian branch was also related, however some of the occurences further afield may have an entirely different origin. There is a vast range of spellings in early records of the name. Modern variants include 'Rowcastle', 'Rewcassell' and 'Reucastle'.

the Ruecastle Tenement (thu-roo-kaw-sul-te-ne-min') n. former popular name for the building at 7 High Street, before the British Linen Bank purchased the land in 1862 and rebuilt on it. It was built around 1690, and was a 3-storey construction. The Ruecastle family, which provided several Hawick Bailies, had lived there for 3 generations. It can be seen in an 1860 photograph, showing the shops of W. Douglas, saddler, J. Kemp, cooper and Wm. Rutherford on the ground floor. It was demolished in 1861.

ruefi (roo-fi) adj., poet. rueful – 'He sees that sae will be the case, An' wi' a lang-drawn ruefu' face' [RDW], '. . . an' saufes sic as be o' ane rewfu' speerit' [HSR], '. . . I wull be rewfu' for my sin' [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

ruet (roo-ee', -i') pp., poet. rued, repented – 'He answiret an' said, I wullna: but efterwaird he ruet, an' gaed' [HSR].

ruff (ruf) v., arch. to beat a drum, n., arch. the beat of a drum, the drum roll preceeding a proclamation, v. to applaud, signify approval.

ruffie (ru-fee) n., arch. a knitted neck ruff – 'That hyimm-made ruffie o yoors looks nane sae unheelint' [ECS].

ruffin (ruf-in) n., arch. an encore, ovation – 'Ruff um in! Gie (or gae) um a ruff-in!' [ECS] (also written 'ruff-in').

the Rufus Trophy (thu-roo-fis-trō-fee) n. trophy competed for at the Common-Riding Race meeting. It was first raced for in 1934, replacing the Medway Cup, which had been won outright (after 3 victories) by ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart on Rufus. The first winner was the same rider on his horse Rufus! It was won outright and replaced by the Horneshole Stakes in 1950.

Rufy (roo-fee) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'Johannem ruffy' at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander Weens of that Ilk failed to produce him to answer to the murders of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods escheated to the King. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rutherford. He was recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. He was presumably related to Thomas who was also put to the horn for the same crime. Thomas (15th C.) member of the 'retour of inquest' in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He must have been a prominent Roxburghshire Laird of the time. However, it is unknown where exactly he was from or whether his surname was a variant of something else. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Adam, brother of William Douglas of Cavers, failed to enter him into the court for his part in the murder of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugutive and his goods forfeited.

rug (rug) v., arch. to tug, pull roughly, plunder, spoil – 'When frae temptation bolted snug, Wi' commentators at his lug, Which he from shelves in thraves did rug . . . ' [JR], n., arch. a pull, tug, a bite of grass (of a farm animal), feed – '. . . unless when he brought them on to the several ground to give them a rugg for a part of the day' [C&L1767] (noted by E.C. Smith; see also ruggit).

rug an rive (rug-in-rīv) v., arch. to tug, tear, pull at with great force or persistence – '. . . and most violentlie fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head . . . ' [BR1693], '. . . onlawed in ane ryott committ upon John Aitken, by rugging of his hair and ryveing of his gravatt' [BR1693], 'Swearin' an' tearin', they rug an' they rive, Wha to be foremost wi' Meggie M'Givelry' [JoHa], '. . . And boulevards o' blankets ruggin' and rivin' ' [DH].

rugby (rug-bee) n. a religion practised by many people in Hawick, with its main church at the foot of Mansfield Road. It is often referred to as 'the rugby'. The game was first introduced only in 1872, so for hundreds of years before that Teries must have had little to cheer about! The game was introduced locally when the Cricket Club decided to purchase a ball for the younger players to exercise with in the winter months. The club itself was formed in December 1873, with Robert Michie as Captain. The first organised game was against Langholm in 1874. George Wilson was a mainstay of the early committee, which was reorganised in 1885. At that time 'Hawick' (playing at the Volunteer) and 'Hawick and Wilton' (playing at the cricket field) were formed separately. They played matches against each other and the St. Cuthbert's team for a few years, but by 1892 only 'Hawick Football Club' survived. Although the official game started only in the late 19th century, the local tradition of 'Baa' games goes back probably several centuries. There is a record of a 'match at football' that took place near Kielder Castle in about 1790, with a huge crowd from Liddesdale and another from North Tyne each selecting 20 men who played an exhausting 5 games. There is also a description by Robert Wilson of a game ('the pledges') played by Hawick youths in the 18th century, which bears some striking similarities, although without the ball (also sometimes 'the rugby').

the Rugged Causey (thu-ru-gid-kaw-zee) n. former popular name for a Roman road running through Roxburghshire. This is according to Walter MacFarlane's 'Geogaphical Colelctions', published in 1908, but from about 1680. It may be the same as another road, e.g. Dere Street.

ruggit (ru-gi', -gee') pp., arch. tugged, pulled roughly – '. . . saying that he maliciously and unreverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat' [Ash1639], 'How the jockies in their fury Rave an' ruggit' [RH] (see rug).

ruggy (ru-gee) adj., arch. tangled, knotted, difficult to comb – '. . . wui a toozy, taaty heed that wad be richt an ruggy ti redd' [ECS].

ruibbish (ri-beesh) n., arch. rubbish – 'Thraw that ruibbish aback o the feier' [ECS].

Ruickbie (rik-, rook-bee) n. James 'Jamie' or 'Reubie' (c.1757–1829) born in Innerleithen, he lived much of his life in and around Hawick. The identity of his parents is unknown, but either his father or uncle was an earlier James of whom a story is told of how he used to go to the Pirn plantation to preach loudly to himself, with the Laird there overhearing him one day and saying 'Man, Jamie, ... ye should mind that the Lord's no deef'. He was a miller to trade, being the assistant at Nisbet Mill and then working at Newmill. He was known as 'the miller lad that can write a letter'. It was said that he 'never was a buirdly miller' and thus looked for another occupation. He became a toll-keeper, at Haremoss (for a year), then Colterscleuch (for 12 years), then at Langholm and finally at the West-End toll-bar in Hawick. Entirely self-taught, he wrote a good deal of poetry, and also played the fiddle. He settled in Hawick as landlord of the Harrow Inn (at 12 High Street), where he enjoyed the friendship of other more distinguished writers. He belonged to the Burgher (East End) congregation in Hawick and started a Sunday School at Newmill. He was also listed as a volunteer in 1803. He would recount a tale of a girl from Innerleithen who was carried away by the fairies and later turned up in Plora Wood after prayers offered by 7 ministers; he claims to have known this girl personally when she was an old lady and he was a boy. He was one of the earliest local poets to publish his work, some of it in dialect. An 8-page pamphlet of his, 'An Elegy on the death of Whisky' was printed in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1801. His 3 published collections are 'Way-side Cottager, consisting of pieces in prose and verse' (1807, while he was still at Colterscleuch), 'Poems, chiefly in the Scottish dialect' (1815, while he was at the Harrow Inn), and 'Poems' (1826). This last volume contained tributes from some of his contemporaries. A few of his poems were quite popular locally, particularly 'The Bottomless Pit, or the Lawyer Outwitted' and 'The Vulture and Raven or the Dinner Arrested'. He also wrote some lines about his contemporary, James Hogg (of 'Teribus'). He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. His prose pieces include attacks on cruelty to animals and on the slave trade, complaints about drunkenness and a tribute to peace. He described himself as 'diminutive, thin-visaged, sallow-complexioned' and 'clothed in a ragged great coat, a snuffy-breasted doublet, and a sea-green cap' with a cheek bone 'best adapted to whet razors on!' He married Margaret Govenlock in 1787 and their daughter Margaret married Robert Govenlock of Mosspaul Hotel. The first Mrs. Ruickbie may have died in 1797. He probably later married Jean (or Jane) Wilson, who died in 1836 and their children included Alexander (b.1812). There seems to be uncertainty about whether he died in 1828 or 1829. He is buried at St. Mary's, although the grave appears to have been unmarked. A portrait of him exists, painted when he was about 50. Robert Murray wrote an account of his life in 1864; at that time he had a living granddaughter, (Elizabeth Govenlock) who was Mrs. Robertson of Commonside Cottage. The Museum has a manuscript copy of his 'Ode to Jedburgh Abbey', donated by Mr. Davidson of Glasgow in 1861 – 'Farewell, then, Old Bard! I have learned by the fate That goodness and genius conjoined cannot save From neglect the possessor, but often await On him scorn and contempt, til shut out by the grave' [WiSp], 'Milton, Homer, and Virgil, Were the chief of poets in those days; Now James Ruickbie comes in Ding dang, and wears the bays' [T] (also written 'Rucbie' and variants; it is uncertain how his name would have been pronounced by his contemporaries, rū-bee also being possible).

ruif (rif) n. a roof – 'what were ee daein up on yon ruif?', 'as long as ee bide under ma ruif, ee'll dae is a say', '... on ti bowkin lums an platchin cloots an ruiffs an waas baith suitteet an ratcht ...' [ECS], 'The sklater cam ti sort the ruif' [ECS], '... To catch a glimpse yont the grey reek O' the distant ruifs o' reid?' [WL], '... wi a last gledge at St. Mary's clock keekin owre the ruifs like a sma local moon' [DH], 'Song Singin' akin tae stance on cliff, Took place on Tibbie the Fiddler's rif' [MB], 'Doon the close and then on up the stair On the ruif, A'm happiest when A'm up there' [IWL], '... sung every year since it was first belted oot frae the thatched ruif o a hoose' [IHS] (also spelled 'rif' and 'riff').

ruif-trei (rif-trī) n., arch. main beam of a roof, hence figuritively referring to a home – '... under the roof-tree of this lecture room, I first received the germs of elementary education' [JoA].

ruind (rūnd, rind) v., arch. to cough hoarsely, make a disagreeable crunching noise, n. a hoarse cough – 'A ruind o' a cough' [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith; also roond).

ruinds (rūndz, rindz) n., pl., arch. strips of cloth, the selvage of a web of cloth – 'Ruinds = short strips and odds and ends of cloth, often sewn into rugs and mats; properly the selvage of tweed cut down' [ECS].

ruindy (rūn-dee) adj., arch. hoarse – 'A ruindy cough' [GW].

Ruins Moss (roo-inz-mos) n. former name for the area of 'moss' just to the south of the road to

ruise (rūz) v., arch. to praise, extol – 'I mind when he ca'ed me his Nannie, An' ruis'd sae my bonnie black ee' [JoHa], 'Never huivvin ti ruize Jethart high' [ECS], 'Huz Teries ruize high oor bonnie toon' [ECS], n., arch. conceit, high opinion – 'Hei hes a guid ruise o' his-sel' [GW], 'Monie a creestin bit wui a guid ruice o itsel . . . ' [ECS] (from Mediæval English; also written 'ruice' and 'ruize'; cf. raise).

ruit (ri', rū') n. a root – 'A tripped ower a muckle trei ruit', 'if ee stand there ony langer, ee'll take ruit', 'It's no' because the gowans braw are bonnie 'roond its ruit, For we hae seen them bloom as braw in mony a ither bit' [JoHa], 'I'd lived on nought but ruit an' weed, Acorns an' nuts an' ither seed' [WP], 'I've lived in it a good while now, and I doot I've ta'en ruit!' [DH], '. . . clearin' the soil away, till ye can sei if the ruit hes the richt bend' [DH], 'A'thing is buddin' flooer, ruit and hedgeraw . . . ' [WL], '. . . The rits theresel were a fit long So it didnae tell a lie' [AY], 'The amount o yirth stickin teh the ruit o the runt was coonteet tae' [BW1961], arch. the lowest classes, root of society – 'A'm a rael Wast-ender, born i the verrih ruit' [ECS] (also spelled 'rit').

Rule (rool) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Adam Reuel of Stawelle' in 1225. He was brother and heir of Richard and resigned the lands of Balmerino in Fife in favour of Queen Ermengarde (widow of William the Lion and mother of Alexander II). In the period 1211–33 he witnessed charters for St. Andrews Priory, where he is 'ade de Rule clericis'. Adam 'de Roule' (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with 'Allyn', parson of the church of 'Roule' in Roxburghshire. Thomas of Rule was another signatory, so perhaps related. He gained lands at Molle (south of Morebattle) through marriage. About 1300 he granted some of these lands to the monks of Kelso Abbey, with witnesses including both Hugh and William 'de Roule'. In 1317 he granted his 'manor of Roule' to Adam de Yetholm, the charter made in Nottingham. Probably the same Adam 'de Rule' was recorded (along with William) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1, and also witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden at about the same time. He married Johanna, daughter and heiress of Sir Henry of Halyburton, and widow of Ralph Wyschard. Adam (14th C.) granted his lands of Altonburn to John 'of Coupland' in about 1354, with his name given as 'Adam de Roule'. 3 years later these lands passed to John Ker (who thus became the first Ker of Altonburn); witnesses to this deed included William of Gledstones and William 'de Roule'. He may have been the same as Adam of Yetholm, son of Alan of Rule. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Adam Roull in Abbotroul' in the Curcuit Court of 1622 when Walter Kerr of Linton was found guilty of stealing 6 sheep from his land at Cosserhill. Alan (13th C.) recorded in charters of the early 1200s, during the reign of Alexander II. He witnessed 2 charters for the nuns of Coldstream in about 1205 and another for a gift of half of the lands of 'Eschirche' (Ashkirk) to the Bishopric of Glasgow. In the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage dowry charter for a daughter of Philip de Valognes, with other Roxburghshire men also listed. He appears to have at this time been an English subject. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry's brother Alexander some time before 1249. Alan 'of Roule' (13th/14th C.) possibly the same man as the parson of the church at Rule who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1296 his wife Alicia was forced to give up her dower lands in 'Dovanby' in England; this was part of a long list of followers of John Baliol who were thus ordered by Edward I. In 1317 he granted his 'manor of Roule with Neyfs and their sequals' to Adam of Yetham. This may have been his son Adam of Rule, who granted the lands of Altonburn (near Yetholm) to the Kers. Alison (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir William Ogilvie of Strathearn, who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. In 1507 they were granted the Barony of Strathearn, it is said because she was the first to inform the King of the birth of a son by his wife Margaret Tudor. She was also named along with her husband in several other charters in the period 1508–13. She appears to have been a member of the court and friend of the Queen. She died before her husband, and they had only one child, John. It is unclear how she was related to other Rules. Andrew of Primside (d.bef. 1439) owner of significant lands in the Regality of Sprouston and the Barony of Plenderleith. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules, but it seems likely he was a descendant of Alan of Rule. He borrowed £100 from Andrew Ker of 'Aldtonburne' (Attonburn, near Yetholm, which had been acquired from the Rules in the previous century) in 1430 (or perhaps 1413) and let lands in Primside to him in the meantime, the money to be repaid at St. Mary's in Hawick. In 1430 he sold 'ten husbandlands of the Maynis' in Primside to Andrew Ker, with the permission of his son George, this being confirmed in 1432 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He resigned his lands to George, his son and heir, in 1432. George had married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Cessford. However, George must have died before him, and he had no other surviving sons, because his 4 daughters (Marjorie, Isabella, Janet and Ellen) became co-heiresses of his lands of Hownam, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, and each got one quarter of Primside. In 1439 Andrew Ker was granted $^3/_5$ of the land outright, from his daughters Marion, Janet and Ellen (with the consent of their husbands); it is unclear what became of the other $^2/_5$. In 1443 the Mains of Hownam, and lands of Plenderleith and Hyndhope, which had belonged to the 4 co-heiresses, passed to Andrew Ker. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ruecastle, recorded receiving poor money from the Bedrule Session in 1726. He could be the Andrew whose son William was baptised in 1693. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Janet (b.1707), Walter (b.1713), Andrew (b.1715), Robert (b.1719) and John (b.1723). Andrew 'Dan', (d.1918) 3rd son of Robert and Jane, grandson of John, Inspector of Poor, and nephew of Private Harry. He was born in Hawick and joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He was awarded the Military Medal, General Service Medal and Victory Medal and was killed in action near the end of WWI. His name is recorded on the Vis-en-Artois Memorial. Bernard (14th C.) recorded as 'de Roule' in 1364 when he resigned his lands of 'Fouceroul' (now 'Folla Rule') in Aberdeenshire. Brian (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Fiftelar', i.e. probably a fife player, at the Scottish court in 1506. His name is recorded as 'Bryane Roule'. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Ellen (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Janet. In 1439 she is 'Elena Roule of Prymside' when she appointed her husband Thomas Young, along with Stephen Scot, Thomas Gledstains and others, as procurators when she resigned her part of Primside into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. The sisters' lands of Primside were granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, and other charters transferring their lands to the Kers followed in 1443 and 1454/5. George (d.bef. 1440) son of Andrew of Primside. His father resigned his lands of Primside to him in 1432. He married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn (and Cessford). Ker gained the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule's daughters in 1439/40, suggesting that both father and son were deceased by then. George (15th C.) recorded as witness to charter by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78. John 'Roule' was also a witness, suggesting they were related. He is probably the same man as George of Edmondsfield. Perhaps the same George was Bailie in that part for David Ranton of Billy (in Haddingtonshire) in 1478, with his brothers Patrick and John as witnesses. George 'of Edmondisfield' (15th C.) recorded in 1489–90 when he was involved in a court case with Archibald, Earl of Angus, relating to the lands of Bonkle. He was probably related to Andrew of Primside. He was appointed by the 5th Earl of Angus as Bailie of the Barony of Bonkle, but later ejected from this office. There was an inquest for his son George inheriting Edmondsfield in 1505. George (16th C.) minstrel appointed by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Perhaps the same George witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1539. George (16th C.) witness to a document of the Riddells of that Ilk in 1551. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Elizabeth Nichol, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1799); Margaret (b.1801); Walter (b.1803), carter in Hawick; Thomas (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1810), who married Alexander Pringle Scott; George (b.1815); Jane (b.1818); and Isabel (b.1821). George (b.1815) son of George and Elizabeth Nichol. He was partner in Rule & Leyden, dyers of Teviot Road. The business later amalgamated with British Cotton & Wool Dyers, Ltd. He was a dyer journeyman on the Crescent in 1841. He married Margaret Pringle in 1837 and their children included: George (b.1837); Margaret (b.1838); John (b.1841); Elizabeth (1843–1913); buried in Wellogate cemetery; Jane (b.1845); Frederick (b.1849); Adam (b.1851); Helen (b.1853); and Isabella (b.1855). Their daughter Elizabeth died in 1913 aged 70 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He is probably the son of George and Elizabeth Nichol born in Hawick in 1815. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded as 'Domino Gilberto de Rowle' when he witnessed a charter for Coldstream Priory. This was dated between 1248 and 1289.

Harry (1875/6–1917) son of John, Inspector of Poor in Hawick. He served with the Army Service Corps, HQ 52nd Lowland Division. He married Elizabeth Linton, and their children were John, Jim and Janet. He died at sea when the S.S. Ivernia was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Greece. His name is recorded on the Mikra Memorial. Henry (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'de Reuel' in the period 1188 when he was witness to several benefactions of William the Lion to the monastery of Arbroath. He was granted the lands of 'Cultrach', which included Balmerino, in Fife. He was present at a court in Kinghorn in 1204. He must have been directly related to Richard (possibly his son) who is also recorded as witness in a similar period. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Orm of Abernethy. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Hugo Rouel' in 1260 when he was listed as a master of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Hugonis de Roule' in 1320/1 when his seal was attached to a charter of Sprouston. Adam and William are also mentioned in the charter, and so they were surely all related. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded as 'Umphra Rewll' in a long remission for any past crimes for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. Given the others with whom he is listed, he probably lived near Langholm. Isabella (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjorie, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a coheiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by then. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Jacobo Rowle' in 1526 when he was a witness for a document for Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. He was 'James Rowill' in another in 1530, and also for others in 1531. He may be the 'Jacobo Roull' when he witnessed a sasine for the baronies of Lugton and Langnewton in 1522. James (16th C.) recorded as 'Roull' when he was a tenant of Kelso Abbey in 1567. James (17th/18th C.) herd in Whitslade. In 1698 in Ashkirk Parish he married Janet, daughter of James Jackson, cottar in Dimpleknowe. Their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1699. Janet (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Ellen. Their are documents transferring their lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Her name is given as 'Jonet of Roule'. John (14th C.) recorded as witness to a 'quitclaim by Robert de Colleuyll' to Roger of Alton, regarding revenue of lands for Kelso Abbey, in 1328. His name appears as 'Johne de Roule'. He was the deceased 'Joannis de Roull' some time during the reign of David II when his lands were granted to Godfrey 'de Turribus'. He could be the John whose son William was recorded in 1369. John (15th C.) recorded as a priest in the King's household in 1468. He was also recorded as a Prebyter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1468. Probably the same John (along with George) was witness to charters by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78, and was Steward of Alexander, Duke of Albany in 1479. He may be the same 'John Laird of Rule' listed among a set of Scottish ecclesiastics appointed as ambassadors for appeasing the truce on the Border. And in 1476 there is a summons for 'John of Roule' and others for stealing horses from Sir John of Swinton; there is a confirmation of this in 1477. He may also be the 'John Roule' who witnessed a document relating to Home of Crailing in 1479. John (16th C.) witness in 1523/4 to a charter of his sister Margaret for lands in Linlithgowshire. Another witness was James Ramsay, Prebendary of Corstorphine. This establishes a connection with Corstorphine, where the poet 'Gentill Roull of Corstorphine' had his praises sung by William Dunbar a generation earlier. Perhaps the same John was witness to a document of Kirkintilloch Church in 1523. Sir John (16th C.) Prior of Pittenweem before 1526. He was an ally of Cardinal Beaton. He had at least 4 sons, John, James, William and Ninian. John (16th C.) tenant of Newtown in Roxburghire, recorded in 1531. John (16th C.) signatory of the band of Dumfries in 1570. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Elspeth Nichol and their children included: Agnes (b.1671), an unnamed son (b.1671) and Stephen (b.1675), all baptised in Hawick Parish; and Bessie (b.1684) and John (b.1686), baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses in 1686 were James Turnbull and James Veitch. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was shepherd at Mervinslaw in 1709. Alexander, son of a shepherd at Mervinslaw (with the father's name blank) was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1706. John (17th C.) listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls John (18th C.) resident of

Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1742 when his daughter Janet was baptised. His children inclded: John (b.1731); James (b.1739); and Janet (b.1742). John (18th C.) married Margaret Lang in Minto Parish in 1787. John (18th C.) wright in Nether Bonchester. His son John was baptised in 1788. John (19th C.) married Jane Hume in Southdean Parish in 1841. John (19th C.) Inspector of Poor, Collector of Poor Rates and Clerk to the Burial Ground for Hawick Parish towards the end of the 1800s. He wrote the poem 'Song by a Callant Abroad'. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in 1868, and probably wrote the history published in 1889. It seems likely that the same John Rule was also editor and part owner of the Hawick Express in the late 19th century and who was recorded as 'Editor' at 72 High Street in 1875. His children included Harry (killed at sea in 1917) and Robert. Margaret (b.1801/2) grocer on the Backdamgate. In the 1851 census she was living with her sister Isabella, and was unmarried. She was listed as a shopkeeper on 'Back Damgate' in Slater's 1852 directory. Marjory (15th C.) daughter of Andrew (possibly the oldest). She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Primside, Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Isabella, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Martin (16th C.) recorded as 'Roule' when he was owner of a tenenment in the 'Walkargait' in Jedburgh in 1574. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith in 1499. He was also Provost of Dalkeith in 1478 when he witnessed a declaration by his brother George, Bailie for David Ranton of Billy. Another brother, John, was also witness. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as serving in the King's spicery in 1499 and 1500. He was paid his fee according to the Exchequer Rolls, with his surname written 'Roule'. Probably the same 'Pait Roule' was recorded in 1497 when money was sent from the King's Treasury to him, lying sick in Ayr. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as 'Pait of Roull'. James and 'Philes' were also listed. Richard (12th/13th C.) probably son of Henry and Margaret Abernethy. He is recorded being present at the court of King William at Alyth in 1180, where his name is 'Reuel'. He witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s. In 1205 he was witness to a charter of William the Lion at Forfar. He also witnessed several gifts of the King to the monastery of Arbroath in the period 1188–1214. Henry, who is a witness at about the same time may have been his son or other close relative. Perhaps the same Richard is recorded in charters during the reign of Alexander II, i.e. 1214–49. This was at the same time as Alan and Thomas of Rule. Adam, brother and heir of Richard, is recorded in 1225. Richard (13th C.) recorded in connection with the lands of Bunkle, Berwickshire, in 1247. Richard (13th C.) witness to a renewal of lands in Mow granted to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Heiton in the period 1269–89; he is listed as 'Ricardo de Rule'. In the period 1270–90 he confirmed a grant of a 20-shilling land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Roull' when he had remission for wheat 'fermes' in 1496 for the lands of 'Osanisden'. Robert (13th C.) recorded as 'de Ryhull' in about 1240 when along with his wife Christiana, he held half of the lands of North Middleton in Northumberland. Robert (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1391 as 'a rebel and traitor' when his lands of 'Promset in Tevydalle' (Primside) were forfeited to Thomas 'Sparrowe, late prisoner with the Scots'. Robert (15th C.) Chaplain of the church of St. Nicholas in Aberdeen in 1444. He is recorded as Chaplain there in 1468. Robert (15th C.) recorded in a Berwickshire inquest in 1464. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rewcastle. In 1502 in Jedburgh he was surety for Andrew Storie, who was also a resident of Rewcastle, when they were fined for non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) Border minstrel who was supposedly slain by William Henderson of Priesthaugh near Allanhaugh in 1627, as immortalised in the ballad 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. It is possible he was connected with George, who is recorded as a minstrel hired by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in charters between 1214 and 1249. For example he was witness to Petronella, daughter of Adam Herring of Minto, when she granted land in the Borthwick to Melrose Abbey. He may be the same Thomas of Rule recorded on a jury in Northumberland in 1231 and as a witness of a grant to the canons of Kirkham in Northumberland in 1256. Thomas (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I by signing the Ragman Rolls of 1296. Another signatory was Adam of Rule, as well as William 'de Rouley'. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as Rector of Cambuslang (Lanarkshire) in 1329. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as 'Rouk' (possibly just a transcription error) during the reign of

David II, 1329–71. He resigned his lands of Butland or Butelend in the Sheriffdom of Edinburgh to James Douglas of Strathbok. He may also have resigned his lands of 'Little-Rulwod'. Possibly the same Thomas 'of Roulwode' forfeited certain lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed the grant of the Forest of Ettrick to John Ker in 1358 and was juror at Roxburgh in 1361. And he may be the Thomas who was on an English jury in 1367 deciding which lands had been taken from English subjects by Scotsmen. Thomas (14th C.) witness to a court case in Dundee in 1348. He is recorded as 'Ruwell'. Thomas (14th C.) recorded in 1367/8 among deceased men whose lands may have been taken from them because of their support of the English King. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Aberdeen in 1390, and as a Bailie in the period 1406–35. He was Provost of Aberdeen in 1417. In 1424 he was still recorded as 'of Rowle' when witness to a charter in Aberdeenshire. Thomas (15th C.) eminent ecclesiastic, contemporary with the Provost of Aberdeen of the same name. In 1429 he became a Canon of Glasgow Diocese. In the period 1426–32 he was annually the ambassador to England, designated Chaplain to the King of Scots. In 1429 he was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1438 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in a Northumberland record of 1523. Thomas (16th C.) listed among tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (18th C.) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Burnfoot in Wilton. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation 'Subst.' suggests that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with John Goldie, cabinet-maker in Edinburgh, acting as his substitute. The fact that he was 'Serving by Subst.' was confirmed on the amended list of 1799. Waldeve (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s, recorded as 'Waldevo de Rula'. His name is also translated as 'Waltheof'. Walter (14th C.) Precentor of Glasgow Diocese mentioned in the period 1321–33. For example he witnessed the document of 1329 where the Bishop of Glasgow confirmed the founding of a chantry at Roxburgh Church by Roger of Alton. He was surely directly related to other early 'de Rules'. Walter (14th C.) recorded as 'de Roull' in 1387 when there was a petition for him to be granted a Canonry of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII. He already held a position at the church of Tarbolton. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish son of William, painter in Jedburgh. In 1798 he was listed as substitute for John Claperton in the ballot for the Militia. However, in 1801 was declared as a deserter. Walter (b.1803) carter in Hawick, son of George. In 1861 he was living at 2 Allars Crescent with his mother Elizabeth, brother John and sister Elizabeth (widow of Alexander Pringle Scott). William (13th/14th C.) witness to a grant by Adam 'de Roule' of lands of Molle to Kelso Abbey about 1300. Another witness was Hugh 'de Roule', hence all 3 are likely to have been closely related. He may also be the William 'de Rouley' who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1302 'William de Rue' was King's Clerk to Edward I at Roxburgh. About 1304 he is mentioned in a charter of donation granted by Robert 'Wischart', Bishop of Glasgow. This refers to land 'of Bromilaw' bordering his lands. He is probably the William 'de Rule' who is recorded (along with Adam) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. It has been suggested by some that he may be the same as the William who became the first Turnbull. William (14th C.) recorded as 'de Roule' in 1357/8 when he was witness for the lands of Altonburn passing to John Ker, with William of Gledstones, James of Lorraine and Alexander of Flex being other witnesses. The lands had passed from Adam of Rule in 1354, so this may have been a relative. He also witnessed a further charter of related lands in 1358, passing from William of 'Blakdene'. In 1361 he was on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Makerstoun. In 1369 he was 'Willelmi de Rowele', son of John, when he resigned lands in 'Hunedoun' to Melrose Abbey. Some time during the reign of David II he was granted lands forfeited by 'Joannis de Uluistoune'. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to charters in Edinburgh in 1465 and 1471. William (b.c.1805) born in Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker living at 5 Round Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861 and still there in 1875. By 1861 he was employing 2 men. He is probably the Wiliam who in 1873 donated to the Museum a 'stone vessel found on the home farm of Sir William Armatrong'. His wife was Margaret from Langholm. Their children included Alexander, Hendry, William, John, twins Thomas and Walter, and Mary. He donated coins to the Museum before 1865 and geological specimens in 1870. William (19th C.) married Mary Hume in Hawick Parish in 1854 (spelled 'Reule', 'Reull', 'Roul', 'Roule', 'Roull', 'Roulle', 'Ruile', 'Rowle', etc. in early records).

the Rule (thu-rool, -rowl) n. popular name for Rule Witter – 'Between ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fring'd with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull . . . ' [JL], 'On these sweet scenes I love to ponder, And each fair spot in memory see; So dear must be, where'er I wander, The valley of the Rule to me' [FMC], 'I love to walk in summer-time, When evening winds are cool, Beneath the blooming hawthorn-trees that deck the banks o' Rule' [HAd1859], '. . . As he crossed the Rule, girth deep at the ford, A rider rose dark from the haugh and roared With a voice that shivered the still night air And startled the wild fowl, 'Who goes there?' ' [WHO].

Ruleburn (rool-burn) n. former name for a farmstead in Southdean Parish. Labourer Robert Minto was living there in 1801.

Rule Hervey (rool-her-vee) n. earliest known name for the lands of Abbotrule Parish, first recorded in about 1165 in a charter to Jedburgh Abbey by William the Lion. These lands, 'in the forests and plans, of meadows and pastures and waters', were granted to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in exchange for a 'ten pound' land in 'Hardinghestorn' (Northamptonshire). The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from 'Rule Bethoc', i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as 'Rulam Herevei' in about 1165).

Rulehaugh (rool-hawch) n. area of flat land near the mouth of the Rule Water, possibly lower down in former times before the course of the rivers altered. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands of 'Rulehalch' to the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1395 there was a duel there when Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) was challenged by Thomas Struthers (an Englishman), with Sir Archibald Douglas and Sir Henry Percy (the two March Wardens) as judges. Struthers was killed in single combat. It is possible this was the same as the Deadhaugh, where Turnbulls supplicated to James IV in 1510. About 80 sheep from here were swept away during the flood of 1846 (it is 'Rulehalch' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Rules (thu-roolz) n. once important family whose name was connected with the area of Rulewater. Adam and Thomas 'de Roule' from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. They held the lands of Altonburn, Primside, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, all of which were disposed of by 4 co-heiresses around 1440. There were also Rules in Aberdeenshire from early times. It is unclear what fraction of the world's Rules are descended from this local family.

Rule's Land (roolz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Ruecastle in the Parish of Bedrule. They were feued by Rev. Joseph Tennant of Bedrule from Thomas Hamilton in 1632 (called 'Roullis land').

Rule-Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Ruletoon (rool-tin, -toon) n. Ruletown, former name for farms and lands in Hobkirk Parish, at Town-o-Rule. Both Ruletownhead and Ruletownfoot were recorded in the 17th century. In 1694 James Grieve paid tax for 4 hearths there 'for himself & cottars', with William Turnbull also a cottar there.

Ruletoonfit (rool-tin-fi', -toon-) n. Ruletownfoot, former farmstead that was once part of the Abbotrule estate. Its precise location is unclear, but presumably associated with Ruletownhead. It may be the place transcribed as 'Reidetoun fute' where Thomas Turnbull was in 1615. Adam Turnbull and Beatrix Lorraine were there in 1643, each with lands valued at £10. On the 1694 Hearth Tax records, John Lorraine was listed there, with Andrew Mathew and William Blaikie as cottars. Separately Thomas Turnbull and Thomas Scott are listed as tenants there in the Hearth Tax rolls, with James Oliver, James Wilkie and James Turnbull being cottars there, and Adam Sharp 'deficient' in not paying the tax (it is 'Roultonfitt' in 1643, 'Roultounfute' in 1662 and 'Roultounfoott' in 1694).

Ruletoonheid (rool-tin-heed, -toon-) n. Ruletownhead, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam and Walter Turnbull were tenants there in 1643, when it was valued at £140. It had the same value in 1678. It later became part of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the late 17th century part of it was owned by Helen Turnbull, along with West Fodderlee. In earlier times the farm seems to have been incorporated into West Fodderlee, the Grange and Bowatsyde. In 1788 it was owned by the trustees of George Dickson and valued at £96 11s. George Elliot was there in 1794 and John Walker in 1797, with James Dalgleish being shepherd in the same year. Robert Rutherford was a servant there in 1801. In 1811 it was listed (in 2 parts, split between Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes) along with 'Bossithill' and Burnkinford, among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, having a combined value of about £224 and previously being owned by George Dickson and George Elliot. By about 1874 it was owned by David Henderson, including a part formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull (valued at £96 11s). The tenant was Tom Brown in the mid-to-late 19th century, then passing to the Douglas family. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £300. It seems there was once also a corn mill here (also formerly written 'Ruletonhead' and 'Rule-town-head', it was 'Roull tounehead' and 'Roultonhead' in 1678).

Rulewater and its People (rool-wa-tur-and-its-pee-pul) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens, published in 1907. It contains a truly extraordinary number of anecdotes from the general area of the Rule valley, as Tancred systematically described the histories of all the major families of Hobkirk Parish, in addition to much of Bedrule and Southdean. Importantly, the book does not just focus on the histories of the 'gentry', but includes all social strata. A facsimile edition was published by Borders Regional Library in 1992.

Rule Witter (rool-wi'-ur) n. the Rule Water, a tributary of the Teviot, joining it from the south near Spittal-on-Rule. It is formed by the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns. An account of Roxburghshire in 1649 states that it 'begins at Wauchophead and runs down to Tiot entering in therein at the Spittle of Reule being eight miles of length'. The region gave rise to a surname, with the first recorded 'Roules' being in the mid-12th century. A history of the parishes along the Rule valley was written be George Tancred in 1907 and republished in 1992 – 'Then Tividale came to wi' spied; The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi' Cranstane, Gladstain, good at need, Baith Rewle water, and Hawick town' [T], 'All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnbull's name, And among the proud of the Borders best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame' [WHO], 'He's lang since left Roull's smilin' scene, An' fairy nuiks o' prattlin' Jed, An' Oxnam's pines an' banks sae green, An' wimplin' Kale's soft dreamy bed' [WP] (also sometimes one word 'Rulewater/Rulewitter'; formerly spelled 'Roull', 'Rowll', etc.; it is 'Ruiale' in about 1406, 'Watter of Rowle' in 1530, 'Reullwater' is recorded in the 17th century and 'Water of Reule' in 1649; it is 'Roul fl.' on Gordon's c.1650 map; the origin may be the old Celtic for 'steep slope').

Rulewitter Court (rool-wi'-ur-kōr') n. Rulewater Court, a street planned for Stirches and appearing on Burrow's street map of Hawick, although never built.

Rulewitter Floor Show (rool-wi'-ur-floor-shō) n. also called the Hobkirk Flower show, this is an annual event. It was started in the mid-19th century by John Halliday and Sandy and James Mathieson.

Rulewitter Rifle Club (rool-wi'-ur-rī-ful-klub) n. Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club, established following a meeting of 1905, called by Mr. Carr-Ellison of Greenriver. Mr. Waldie of Braidhaugh gave a piece of land on his farm for a rifle range. The original membership was 30, with office-bearers being Sir Robert Usher of Wells, George Tancred of Weens, Major E.H.M. Elliot of Wolfelee. It is the last item to be described in Tancred's book on Rulewater, but it is unclear if the club lasted very long.

Rulewud (rool-wud) n. Rulewood, former farm in the Rule valley, probably once owned by the Rule family. 'Thomas de Rillewod', who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, may have been owner of these lands. Thomas 'of Roulwode' is recorded resigning some lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. It was later home to a local branch of the Gourlay family. Henry Gourlay granted the lands to his son John in 1380, confirmed in 1390. In 1387 John was served heir to his father Archibald. John Gourlay of Rulewood is recorded in the 1490s and several times until 1509 when William Lord Herries of Terregles granted these lands to him. He was deceased by 1521 when his son John was granted lands at Kirkton, and this John was served heir to the lands in 1525. This John also appears in 1533, when he was on an inquest along with William Turnbull 'in Roulwod'. The lands were listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10. William Turnbull was tenant in 1516. It was burned by Hertford's men in 1545. 'Roulwodesyde' is recorded in the Baronial dispute of 1562, and is described as being the east part of the lands of Hallrule; the 'Woulroidisflat' mentioned there may be related, assuming an error. William Turnbull 'of the Tour of Roulwode' is recorded in 1622. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. The '40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower' was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It later became part of the estate of Wells and was described in 1738 as 'all and haill the land of 'Roulwood', otherwise Huntlyhill' (it was 'Roulwod' in 1497/8 and 1509/10, 'Roullwoide' in 1508, 'Rowlewod' in 1526, 'Rowlewood' in 1545 and 'Roulwode' in 1622; see also Little Rulewud).

Rulewud (rool-wud) n. (Rulewood) Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Hugone de Rulewde' in about 1230. He was then witness to a grant of lands in Camieston. Thomas (13th/14th C.) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as 'Thomas de Rillewod', but it seems likely that 'Rulewood' is meant. His name is listed separately from Thomas de Rule, but close in the list to that of Adam of Rule; however, it is unclear whether they were related. Perhaps the same Thomas is mentioned in an English record of 1335/6, in relation to his forfeited tenements of land in the Barony of Cavers. There his name is 'de Roulwode' and 'de Roulewode'.

rum an milk (rum-in-milk) n. traditional Common Riding drink. The Drums and Fifes are given this as a reward after marching round the former tolls on the Friday morning. The origin and history are unclear, but it is said that one of the members of the Drums and Fifes was given (or asked for) milk with his rum to settle his stomach, since he was not feeling well; the drink caught on with the rest of the band, and then with Common Riding supporters in general. There is a reference in reports of the Common Riding of 1890 to 'a liberal supply of fresh milk and other customary refreshments' for the Thursday morning 'Hut'. The traditional rum has for many years been 'Skipper Rum'. Bella Robson would regularly come out of her house on the Kirk Wynd to offer a tray to the band in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

rumberella (rum-bur-e-la) n., arch. an umbrella – 'Gies the siller, an' ye'se get yer rumberella' [WNK]. Note the umbrellas were not used locally until the late 18th century; the first one seen in the Yarrow valley, for example, was in 1779 (perhaps in a joking sense).

Rumblin' Brig (rum-blin-, rum-lin-brig) n. one of the most familiar tunes played by the Drums and Fifes (along with 'Dumbarton Drums' and 'Teribus'). The tune appears to be peculiar to Hawick, although there are other tunes known elsewhere that have a similar name. The tune is played on Picking Night on the march to the Cornet's house if the route takes the band to the south. It was combined with 'Dumbarton Drums' in the Scocha song 'Bottles at Dawn'.

rumgumption (rum-gump-shin) n. common sense, gumption – 'she hedni enough rumgumption ti bide away fri um', 'Rumgumption, Rummilgumption, Rumble-gumption, ... the remark commonly made as regard to one who is viewed as having more sound than sense, 'He has a gude deal o' the rumble, but little o' the gumption', Roxb.' [JoJ] (also rummlegumption).

Rummie Riddell (ru-mee-ri-dul) n. nickname for a local innkeeper around 1800, presumably someone called Riddell – 'When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An' up the muirlan' striddle, Ye canna lang be at a loss, Ca' in to Rummie Riddell' [JR] (note this is printed 'R—e R—l' in the published version, although it is not hard to fill in the blanks).

rummle (ru-mul) v. to move or search through something clumsily, to rummage – 'she was rummlin throwe her drawers looking for the scissors', 'Burns gush it oot, as red they're rumlin', Aiks creak it, crash it, as they're tumlin' ' [JoHa], 'He rummled 'lang the riverside, Ne'er saw the grey trout scuttling by ... ' [WFC], to rumble – 'ee're juist openin yer mooth an lettin yer belly rummle', 'Auld Time revolves his rum'lin wheel; There's a younger race at han' ... ' [AO], '... maist deeved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz' [ECS], 'The Laird's lauch rummled wi' muckle glee, But the leddy glowered wi' an angry ee' [WL], n. a clumsy search or movement, a rumble – 'oo heard the rummle o thunner', 'Did ee ever hear the rumml o a yoke-a-tuillie doon the Loan skly?' [ECS], 'The rummel when ee went throwe a tunnel Ee'd been warned when the train gien a whustle' [AY], a fidget, one who moves constantly or clumsily – 'ee're an awfi rummle, can ee no sit still?' (also spelled 'rummel').

rummlegumption (ru-mul-gum-shin) n., arch. gumption, common sense, disturbance, commotion – 'I can cure all sorts of diseases, from the howt, rowt, and the gout, to the rumblegumptions of the big toe' [RM] (also rumgumption).

rump (rump) v., arch. to pull up violently by the roots – 'Rump oot thae weeds' [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith).

Rumpie Laidlaw (rum-pee-lād-law) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the late 19th century, presumably for a mmber of the Laidlaw family – 'Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird' [HI] ('Rumpie' may refer to having one's hair cut very short).

runagate (ru-nu-gā') n., arch. a renegade, deserter, vagabond – '. . . for injuring of the said Gilbert Watt, in calling of him ane twa facet thief, and ane runnigat beggar fra toune to toune' [BR1645].

runch (runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum, or wild mustard, Sinapis arvensis; the first of these was also 'yellow runch' and the second 'rough runch' – 'The Runches, comprising both the Field Mustard and the Jointpodded Charlock, the garlic-tasted Jack-by-the-hedge, and several others come under this category' [JAHM], 'I noticed some 'runch' (Sinapis arvensis) as a turnip weed here' [BNC1889].

Runciman (run-see-mun) n. James (17th C.) smith in Raperlaw recorded at on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths there. His name is written 'Runciaman'. He is probably the James who owned a 'quarter of land' in Nether Ancrum, valued at £13 6s 8d, listed as a former owner in 1788. Patrick (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men, mostly associated of William Douglas of Cavers, who had remission in 1488/9 for supporting James III. His surname is recorded as 'Runsyman'. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for the Routledges of Crook, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He must have been a local landowner, tenant or church official. He represents an early example of this surname, which is recorded as 'Runseman'. He may have been related to the earlier Patrick. Walter 'Wat' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Watt Runseman'. Walter (18th C.) recorded as 'Runchiman' in 1686 when he married Janet 'Reedfoord' in Roberton Parish. Their son Thomas was born in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Robson and Thomas Hardie. Helen (who married John Douglas in Roberton in 1687) and Bessie (who married Thomas Hardie in the same year) were probably his sisters. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Wat (formerly 'Runchiman', 'Runciaman', 'Runseman', 'Runsyman', etc.).

rung (rung) n., arch. a staff, strong stick, cudgel, wheel-spoke – '. . . much more primitive . . . than the sword . . . such as . . . 'ane rung' ' [DMW], '. . . and the sd Robt. Scott yrupon stroke wt ane great rung the said William Douglass' [BR1685], '. . . by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there . . . Russell (ru-sul) n. Alexander (1808/9–bef. 1851) from Ancrum, he was a gardener in Wilton. In 1851 he is listed as a gardener on Upper Damside, employing 2 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Alexander, Robert and Jane. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living on Wellington Street. Rev. David (1783/4–1868) from Tollcross, he was a schoolteacher, and then was ordained at Colinsburgh Relief Church in Fife in 1811. He moved to Hawick in late 1812 to become the first minister of the new Relief (later Allars) Kirk. He married Agnes Clark Scott and their son was the engineer, naval architect and mathematician, John Scott Russell (1808–82); however, the marriage seems likely to be the one to 'Elisabeth Clark' in Glasgow in 1806, with the baptism being the one in Barony Parish in 1808, with the same mother's name given. While in Hawick he remarried, to Ann Titterton, and their children included: David (b.1813) and George (b.1817), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1819), baptised in Dalkeith; and James (b.1822), Edward (b.1824), Henry (b.1826) and Elizabeth (b.1830), baptised in Errol. He introduced one of the earliest Sunday Schools (both locally and nationally). Following ongoing dispute over his stipend he resigned in 1819 and later moved to Errol near Perth. While in Errol a peddlar from the Hawick area was made welcome in his home and introduced to some of his friends to buy his wares, his son John being present at the time. He was unable to carry out his ministerial duties following some kind of 'mental ailment' in 1847. He seemed able to carry on in about 1849, but the same affliction returned by 1854, and he was 'dead to the world' for many years before his death. A photograph of him exists. Ella (d.2004) Hawick dressmaker. She worked for dressmakers W. & O. Marcus. It is said that Walter Marcus referred to her as 'Alice', since there were already too many Ellas working in the factory! After Marcus' closed in 1964, she set up her own business at Loch Park, operating as 'Alison Russell', this running for about 20 years. In 1986 she married Heinz Melchert, whom she had met in his early days in Hawick, having settled after being a German prisoner of war. Frances, Countess Russell, see Frances Elliot. Francis (1814–95) son of Dr. James (Professor of Clinical Surgery at Edinburgh University) and Eleanor Oliver (daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre). He trained as a lawyer, was called to the bar in 1836 and in 1860 became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire, serving until 1885. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and lived at Jedbank until retiring back to Edinburgh. He married twice. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Fulton. In 1502 Matthew and Martin Oliver in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from him. George (1903/4–67) born in Hawick, he was educated at Wilton and was an apprentice gardener at Wood's Nursery. He worked as a gardener at Langlee. During WWII he served as a constable with the Hawick Police. After the War he worked for Lyle & Scott's. He was an enthusiastic member of Lodge 111 and was also made an honorary life member of Lodge 424. He ran with the Teviodale Harriers and was also a keen motorist in later years. He was a member of the Archæological Society and interested in the history of Hawick. He married Elizabeth ('Lizzie'), daughter of Francis Scott and sister of local historian Dick Scott. They had one child, Isabella ('Isla') who was a police officer in Liverpool. The family lived at 8 Oliver Cresent. He died after collapsing of a heart attack at his niece's wedding in Hawick. Isabella Edmondson 'Isla' (1934–2021) only surviving child of gardener George, who served in the Hawick Police during WWII. Her mother was Lizzie Scott, sister of local historian Dick Scott. The family lived at 5 Trevelyan Terrace and then 8 Oliver Crescent and she was educated at the Buccleuch School and Hawick High. After school she worked for Marcus, dressmakers on Commercial Road, along with her cousin Ella Russell. At the age of 20 she responded to a recruitment campaign by Liverpool City Police and left Hawick to begin an entirely new career. She joined at a time when female police officers were rare, but she managed to thrive in this male-dominated environment, her height and calm demeanour probably being strong assets. She was one of the first women in the country to be posted into a traffic department and rose through the ranks of what became the Merseyside Police, becoming one of the first women acting as Sergeant and later Inspector in charge of a largely male department. She eventually reached the rank of Chief Inspector, first in the Traffic Department and then the Warrant Department, this probably being the highest rank achieved by a woman in any force in Britain at that time. After 30 years of tireless service, she took early retirement in 1985. She was involved with the Soroptimists voluntary organisation, which works internationally to ensure that the voices of women and girls are heard. Along with her doubles partner, Marie Lupton, Isla took part in table-tennis tournaments, winning the national competition for police officers on several occasions. In Liverpool, Isla called her house 'Haaick', and it also became home to her mother after the untimely death of her father in 1967. She later moved to Tarleton (near Preston) and then back to her native Hawick in 2014. Always retaining close ties with Hawick, she was a member of the Archaeological Society for more than 50 years. Rev. James (b.1808) son of Robert and Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick. He attended school at Yarrow, under the instruction of James Scott. He was minister at Yarrow and wrote 'Reminiscences of Yarrow' (1886), which contains anecdotes about many local people of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He had a cousin, Robert Laidlaw from Philiphaugh. He married Janet Margaret Shand. His children included Robert and John Harvey Shand (1861–84). James 'Jimmy' (1867–1956) son of artist John Bucknell. His mother died of smallpox in Edinburgh and the family moved to Fochabers, Morayshire. His great delights were fishing and poaching. He learned painting in his father's studio. He moved to Glasgow, painting commissions of fish and countryside scenes. In 1918 he and his wife moved to Bonchester Bridge, where they lived above the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Later they moved to Weens Cottages ('the Sclenty') and lastly lived in Denholm. In Rulewater he acted as telegraph boy until he was about 80. He continued to paint almost up until his death. His paintings were signed 'J.B. Russell', distinguishing them from those of his father. From a Catholic family, he married Protestant Annie Hendry, keeping the marriage secret for years. They had children: Peggy (b.1900); Hendry Smith (1906–88); and William Hendry (1915–41), also known as Dovish, who died in Greece in WWII. He painted the caricature of the 'Rulewater Foothunters' in the Horse and Hounds. His painting of Wilton Lodge gatehouse is in the Museum, as well as another of a bridge. James 'Jimmy' (d.1939) from Peebles, he was a motor engineer, graduating from Heriot-Watt. He worked with Croall Bryson in Hawick and was a great friend of Jimmy Guthrie, who was godfather to one of his children. He built a model car for his daughter and reconstructed a crashed biplane, which he flew on trips to Europe. He married Edith, daughter of Hawick poet Tom Ker. Their children were: Margaret; and Jocelyn (or 'Jocey'). He lost money in the Wall Street Crash and moved to Leeds, where he us buried. James Lyon 'Jimmy' (1935–) son of Hendry Smith and Isabella Lyon, and grandson of the artist James, he is a social scientist born in Wilton. He lived in Denholm and Rulewater until 1960, later splitting his time between Rulewater and Ireland. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews and Ph.D. from Strathclyde and worked at the University of Ulster, specialising in issues related to children. He carried out survey research for several government agencies and other organisations, particularly in Northern Ireland. After retirement he carried out personalised funerals for people without church connections in the Edinburgh area. He wrote the words and music for the song 'The Burn 'at Rins Throu' Binster'. He also wrote an article on 'The Rulewater Foothunters' for the Scots Magazine in 1987. In 1960 he married Heather Begg and had children Fiona Jane, Roisin Anne and Kevin. John (16th C.) farmer at Over Billerwell. His barn is mentioned in 1562 as part of the dispute over lands in the Barony of feu-Rule. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Kirkton in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1772. In 1760 in Ashkirk Parish he married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') daughter of George Thorburn; she was sister of Jean Thorburn, who married John Anderson, farmer at Newton. Their children included: Helen (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1764); John (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768);

George (b.1771); Betty (b.1772); and possibly Isabella. The witnesses in 1772 were James Dryden and James Scott. Lord John (1792–1878) M.P. from 1813, he was a supporter of extending the franchise and granting religious equality, being one of the drafters of the Reform Bill. He served as Home Secretary, Secretary for War and the Colonies, and Leader of the House of Commons, before becoming Prime Minister in 1846–52 and again briefly in 1865–66. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick during a stay at Minto House in 1840. In 1841 he married the 2nd Earl of Minto's daughter, Lady Francis Anna Maria. John Scott (1808–82) born in Parkhead, son of Rev. David, his mother (a Scott) dying at an early age. His father became minister of the Hawick Relief Kirk in 1812, where he remarried, and remained until 1819; thus the family must have spent more than 6 years in Hawick. The young John went on to become a naval engineer and architect. He added the middle name Scott while a student, perhaps for his mother's family, but locally it was said that he was named after Dr. Walter Scott of Whitehaugh; indeed his baptismal record in the Parish of Barony states his mother's name as 'Elisabeth Clark' (and not Scott). He is remembered as the discoverer of the 'solitary wave', the full significance of which was not explained and generalised until the 1960s; it gave rise to the mathematical concept of the 'soliton', which has diverse applications, such as in optics. Rev. Robert (1766–1847) born in Fife, one of a family of 11, he attended Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. He taught at a school biefly and was a private tutor for the Napiers at Merchiston Hall, near Falkirk. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1788 and ordained as minister of Ettrick in early 1790. He was a regular visitor at Wilton Lodge, which his patron Lord Napier purchased; the room he used there was known as 'the prophet's chamber'. He moved to Yarrow in 1791, succeeding Dr. Cramond and remained there until he died. In 1805 he became Chaplain to the Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly and obtained a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1811. Rev. Campbell of Lilliesleaf referred to him (somewhat facetiously) as 'the beauty of holiness'. He married Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick; she died in 1843. His son James succeeded him as minister of Yarrow and wrote 'Reminiscences of Yarrow' (1886). He also had another son Walter and a daughter who predeceased him. He was rarely ill, never spending a whole day in bed in his life, and not requiring a doctor until 3 days before his death. When he died he was 'father of the Synod'. Robert (19th C.) tinsmith at 4 Bourtree Bank. He married Janet, daughter of jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were James A. (a plumber), Robert (an ironomger) and George (a plumber, who emigrated to America). Rev. Thomas (1830/31–80) from Bucklyvie, son of John, who was the minister there. He became the 6th minister of Allars Kirk in 1857. He was recorded in 1861 as 'Minister of Crosswynd United Presbyterian Church', living with his wife Anne W. and children Euphemia M., John W. and William J., along with 2 servants. He moved to Albion Chapel, London in 1863, then to Forest Hill, Sydenham in 1870, although he was only there 2 years. In 1872 he ceased to be recognised as a minister of the U.P. Church. Rev. William Cuthberstson (1839–90) born in Coupar, Angus, son of Schoolmaster John. He was educated in Edinburgh New College 1864–68, where he trained for the Free Church ministry. He was based at Lauder before being ordained as 3rd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1872. In 1878 he married Janet Calvert, daughter of George Scott (who was visiting her aunt and uncle in Lauder), postmaster at Mimico, Canada. They had 2 children: William Cuthbertson (1880–1941), born in Hobkirk, who trained as an engineer, joined the K.O.S.B. and died in Lasswade; and Janet (b.1881), born in Hobkirk. He came down with Bright's disease and moved to Musselburgh for a change, but died after a few months there. Rev. Winning (19th/20th C.) appointed as assistant to Rev. David Hislop at Hawick Evangelical Union Kirk in 1894. Soon afterwards the church united with the Congregational Union. It is unclear exactly how long he remained in Hawick (formerly 'Russel').

The Rustic Bard (thu-rus-tik-bawrd) n. psuedonym sometimes used by John Halliday. He is best known for writing the words 'Bonnie Teviotdale'. His early poetic efforts are collected in 'The rustic bard, or, A voice from the people: being miscellaneous poems and songs' (1847), published when he was living at Longbaulk. The book contains 351 pages and no fewer than 97 poems; ; however, it does not include 'Bonnie Teviotdale'. The dedication is 'to the working classes of Scotland', with Halliday writing that he wanted to avoid the fashion of being sycophantic to a wealthy patron. In the preface he complains about those who criticised him for publishing his verses, singling out someone who was 'a schoolmaster, likewise a poet', presumably James Telfer. Included are: a long introductory poem 'The Vision'; a vicious polemic 'My Real Thoughts', in which he attacks his critics in colourful phrases; a poem in praise of Henry Scott Riddell; verses about the historical curiosities collection of Andrew Jameson; a short poem thanking William Oliver of Hallrule for support; a poem to the recently married 'W—m B—k' (perhaps William Black); a long 'Address to Fortune'; an address to his empty purse, dedicated to W.J. Oliver (probably Walter James, tenant farmer at Soutfield); 'Davie's Dead' (whose subject appears to be a piper); a poem about the severe storms of 1845; a long one about a hiring fair; one against sectarianism; one about the bonfire lit for the health of James [actually Robert] Elliot of Harwood; verses to be read at the annual celebration for the Ancient Order of Foresters; an 'Epitaph on Mr J–s G–e [perhaps James Grieve]; a poem about a dance at Raesknowe; many poems related to beauty and love; a short toast; and several songs about Teviotdale.

Ruth (rooth) n. Henry (15th C.) resident of Longnewton, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Gibson, with his surety being George Rutherford of Longnewton.

Rutheid (ru'-heed) n. Ruthead, pass at the head of Ruthead Sike, which flows into Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley. The pass here reaches a height of 352 m, and was formerly on the old road from Lairhope to Howpasley, linking the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys.

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd) n. village and former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. There was formerly a hospital here, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, for the protection of travellers. It was referred to at least as early as c.1380, but was destroyed in 1545. There are also ruins of the old British fort called Ringley Hall. The area was a small parish in ancient times, later absorbed into Maxton. The land is intimately connected with the Rutherfords of that Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the early 17th century, then the Scotts of Thirlestane and later to the Don and Antrobus families (also written 'Rothurford', 'Rutherfoord' and many variants; the origin of the name is probably Old English for 'cattle ford' and it first appears in about 1165; an alternative is the Flemish for a 'knight's river crossing'; less likely, but more romantic, are tales involving King Ruther fording a river, and related stories; there is a more recent Rutherford in Linton Parish, Peeblesshire).

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd, -ford) n. Adam of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501 in relation to lands of 'Glenisland' in Roxburghshire for which he had a sasine. His name is given in the Exchequer Rolls as 'Afe Rutherforde de eisdem', but it is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords of that Ilk. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of George of Longnewton. In 1498 he was listed (along with his brother Gilbert, a cousin George and his 'brother's son' David) among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Thomas Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. In 1510 he had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. Adam (15th/16th C.) farmer of the lands of 'Hirdmanstoune', probably the same as 'Hermiston' in Lillieasleaf Parish. In 1502 David Scott, called 'Lady', 'in Stirkschawis', had a remission for leading the 'Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen' in a raid on his lands. This included stealing 5 horses and burning corn and houses there. He may be the Adam whose son James was killed at the Kirk of Hawick around 1502. Adam (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh who was appointed one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburgh in 1545 in order to officiate over the inheritance of James, son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Perhaps the same Adam was also Provost of Jedburgh 1541–5. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Bonchesterside. In 1684 he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam of Kidheugh (16th/17th C.) grandson of William and Kidheugh and probably son of Robert. In 1621 and his son John had a charter of Nether Crailing. In 1656 he gave a charter of lands in Bedrule to Thomas Rutherford of Whitehouse in Nisbet. He married Isobel, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters. Andrew of Kidheugh was probably his son. Adam (18th C.) married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1748. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Riddell in Wilton Parish in 1750. Adam (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Shortreed in Southdean Parish in 1820. Their daughter Janet was baptised in the East Bank Kirk in 1820. Adam (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Isabella Darling and their children included Adam (b.1837). Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1732 being paid

'£12 15s 1d Scots for 7½ yds. of broadcloth for the officer's and drummers' cloes'. He may have been a local tailor. Alexander (b.1820) youngest son of Bonchester joiner James and Isabella Thomson. He followed his father into the joinery business. However, he became paralysed in the middle of his life, had to be maintained by Hobkirk Parish and died in Hawick Poorhouse. His brother William (who had emigrated to Australia) sent money back to cover the expenses for his maintenance. Alexander (19th C.) married Clementina Cameron in Ashkirk Parish in 1848. Alexander (b.1830/1) tailor in Hawick. He was living on Mather's Close in 1861, along with his brother Andrew. He married Anne Jane 'Seright' (from Ireland) in Hawick in 1852. Their children included Alexander (b.1855/6), Mary Jane (b.1857/8); and Jemima (b.1859/60). Alison (1712–94) daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee, Selkirkshire. In 1731 she married Patrick Cockburn of Ormiston, and thereafter was referred to as Mrs. Cockburn. She was a leading society figure in Edinburgh, and wrote a version of 'The Flowers of the Forest'. Andrew of Hunthill (c.1430–c.82) son of John. He had a charter for Nether Wormatston in Peeblesshire in 1452. He is probably the 'Andro of Rutherfurde' who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English. In 1479 he had a sasine for Makerstoun and Grubet. He married Janet Rutherford of that Ilk. Their children included: John, who succeeded; Thomas of the Grange; and Andrew of Swinside, who died at Flodden, and whose daughter Margaret married her cousin (once removed) Sir Nicholas of Hundalee. There may be confusion between Andrew of Hunthill and Andrew of Hundalee. Andrew (d.1513) of Swinside, son of Andrew of Hunthill. He is probably the 'Rutherford of Swynside' who was said to have died at Flodden. Andrew of Chatto and Hunthill (d.1529) son of George of Hunthill. He was the 3rd husband of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston. From her he inherited several lands, including the 'half merk land of Bethiroull' (i.e. Bedrule), which they sold to Andrew Ker of Ferniehirst. He may be the Andrew who had sasine for the lands of Swinside in 1506. In 1529 he had a charter for Capehope and other lands, along with his wife Helen. He died without issue and his brother John succeeded to Hunthill in late 1529. Andrew 'Dand' of Grange (16th C.) tenant in the Grange, in Abbotrule Parish. He may have been related to the slightly later George of the Grange. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest; his name appears there as 'Andree Ruthirfurde in Grange'. In 1581/2 his daughter Joanna received sasine of half of the lands of Todrig 'in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent' from Walter Scott of Todrig; William of Abbotrule was a witness and hence probably related. He could be the 'David' of the Grange recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. Andrew of Hundalee (c.1530–96) son of Sir Nicholas. His older brother George died a rebel. He was 'youngar of Hundoley' in 1567 when ordered to remain in ward in Edinburgh; at the same time he and Robert Fraser of Overton were sureties for entering a servant of Fraser's. He was also surety for Dand Davidson of Birnyrig. Along with his father and many other prominent Borderers, he signed a bond in 1571/2 to act against thieves. He was 'youngar of Hundoley' in 1572/3 when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Richard of Edgerston as his surety (and apparently vice versa); he himself was surety for George of the Grange, as well as 'Jock of the Knowe' He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 (perhaps erlier), annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court David Middlemas 'in Grubethauch'. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his son Nicholas was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle of Smailholm in 1561. Their children included: John; Nicholas, who succeeded; and Andrew, killed by Englishmen in 1598. However, it is stated in some family histories that he had no sons, and was succeeded by his brother Nicholas. It is also (or alternatively) claimed that he married Christian, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun and they had no issue, so Hundalee was eventually inherited by his sister Marie, who married Sir James Kerr of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. Andrew 'Dandie' (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Brown and their children included Thomas and Jean (b.1644). Perhaps the same Andrew is recorded in 1652 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Brown. Andrew of Townhead (d.1674) stabbed James Douglas (brother of Sir William of Cavers) while on their way to Jedburgh after dining together at Swanside. He subsequently tried to flee abroad, but was caught at Tynemouth when trying to escape to sea and returned to Edinburgh for trial. He tried to pin the blame on Robert Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the witnesses. He was found guilty and beheaded at Edinburgh Cross. He must have been related to other Rutherfords of Townhead and of the Hall. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick Town Clerk from 1670 until about 1673. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He was notary for the document drawn up (probably in 1672) for the Commission by the Town Council to discuss an equal division of the Common with the Earl of Queensberry. He was also listed as notary when he witnessed a baptism for John Chalmers in Hawick in 1673. A man of the same name is recorded as Schoolmaster in Ancrum in 1643 (but there is no obvious connection). Andrew (d.1664) 5th and youngest son of William of Wrightsland and Quarryholes, with his 3rd wife Isabel Stewart of Traquair. His father was eldest son of William, a ship's captain in Leith, who was grandson of Archibald Rutherford, Canon of Jedburgh and descended from the Laird of Hunthill. He had a successful military career in the French service, where he became a Lieutenant General. He had 4 brothers, one of whom was a treasurer to the King of Spain. Coming to England after the restoration of Charles II, he was recommended by the King of France. He was created the 1st Lord Rutherford in 1661 and served as Governor of Dunkirk. In 1663 he was created the 1st and only Earl of Teviot. In that year there was an inventory made of his possessions (amounting to almost £200,000 Scots, as well as a will and 2 other deeds. He was mentioned several time in the diaries of Samuel Pepys. He died in Tangiers after being sent there to be Governor by Charles II. Having no issue, he had named Sir Thomas of Hunthill as his heir. Andrew of Kidheugh (16th/17th C.) probably son of Adam and Isobel Bennet. In 1676 he was recorded as 'of Bidheugh' when his son Patrick became an apprentice stationer in Edinburgh. Andrew of Edgerston (1646/7–1718) 2nd son of John. He succeeded to Edgerston in 1686, his elder brother John having already died. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths at his house at Edgerston. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Laird of Edgerston who appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas. He contributed a legacy to 'poor lame soldiers' and another to the University of Edinburgh. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded 'in Rule' in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner in Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. Andrew (17th C.) listed at Swinnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th C.) married Margaret Herbertson in Bedrule Parish in 1738. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Mary Davidson and had children Mary (b.1776) and William (b.1778). Andrew (18th/19th C.) portioner in Lilliesleaf. His son Andrew junior was on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as son of Andrew, portioner in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James Hall (b.1816). Perhaps the same Andrew in Hobkirk married both Mary Brown in 1810 and Marion Hutcher in 1814. Andrew (b.c.1815) labourer at Orchard in 1841. He was living there with George and Isobl, who were probably his younger siblings. Andrew (19th C.) married Isabella Latimer in Hawick Parish in 1839. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Barnhills in the 1860s. Andrew (20th C.) brother of Peter and co-owner of Rutherford Bros., radio installation and repairs and later cycle shop. When television became popular, he took charge of that side of the business. Ann (18th C.) chambermaid at Midshiels in 1791, when she was working for Archibald Douglas. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for several crimes, including his slaughter. Perhaps the same Archibald is also mentioned when John Davidson in Minto was allowed to 'compone' for stealing 10 ewes from

him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Rutherfords. Archibald (d.1685) 4th son of John of Hunthill. He was 'younger' in a deed of 1663. In 1670 he succeeded his brother Thomas in the lands and barony of Scraesburgh, otherwise known as Hunthill, as well as Newlands and Linton in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as owner of Hunthill, Scraesburgh and Groundhousenook in 1678, valued at £1200. In 1680 he succeeded his brother Thomas as the 3rd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament as a peer. He died abroad, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Robert. He was the basis for the Master of Ravenswood in Sir Walter Scott's 'Bride of Lammermuir', the bride being based on his betrothed, Janet Dalrymple. His testament was registered with the Commissariiot of Peebles in 1691. Archibald (1743–79) from Jedburgh, he was appointed, along with Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester, as one of the 2 men to survey Wilton Common in 1764. At the conclusion of the proceedings he was 'late in Jedburgh, now limner in the academy at Perth'. Presumably his association with the division of Wilton Common was because of his draughtsmanship, and he was presumably the person who drew the plan of the common in 1764. He was appointed as drawing master at Perth Academy in the early 1760s and was also agent for a fabric printing business. He made a sketch of the ruins of Hassendean Kirk in 1776. He moved to Edinburgh by 1776 and tried to set up a drawing school, but died prematurely. Archibald (18th/19th C.) married Mary Webb in Cavers Parish in 1809. Bertie (17th C.) recording being 'of the Wood' in 1643 when his lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £20. It is unclear where this was. Caleb (1765–1831) son of Robert and Mary Simpson. He is surely the 'Calib Rutherford, shoemaker' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784 (even although he would have been quite young at the time). He was apprenticed as a shoemaker, being one of a group called 'the lads', who were infmaous for their mischief making, with him as ringleader. Stories were long told about their antics, including tricking a simple country man to pay for the entire group's drink when making his first pair of boots. He also resoled the shoes of a Bailie using the covers of an old, which fell off at the first rain, and there is another story about tricking his fellow shoemaker into pulling out his own tooth. He gave up the shoemaking trade to follow 'his unsettled habits, roving disposition, and fondness for whisky' as an entertainer. He was presenter of a wax-works exhibition of the French royal family, then ran a Punch and Judy show, was a magician, and exhibited a companion as a wild man of the woods. His wife was referred to as 'Jean Caleb', and with her and 'the Noted Beattie' he used to perform shows around the south of Scotland and northern England. One incident is related of him claiming to exhibit 'a horse's head where it's tail should have been' at Kelso Fair. At a fair in Langholm he was upset at the attention a neighbouring hawker was getting because of his performing monkey, so he killed the animal with one blow of his stick, telling its disconsolate owner that 'there was nae monkey law in Scotland'. He became well known as a showman from Newcastle to Edinburgh, but as he got older he returned permanently to Hawick to become Burgh Officer. He worked as the town crier and drummer as well as town's officer, taking great delight in drumming miscreants out of the town. He would also call public auctions etc. in the time before there were newspapers in Hawick. He roused the town with his drum during the False Alarm of 1804. He also acted as crier of races and games at the Common Riding, and was one of the Halberdiers, being proud of being dressed in the old mulberry uniform. He would parade on the day before the Common Riding, bedecked with ribbons and grounding his halberd on the Auld Brig and at the doors of the Minister, the Bailies, the Cornet's father, etc., where he would receive a drink at each place. In addition he was annually the toastmaster at the King's Ranting, and was paid extra for singing. He was well known as a trickster and wag, and for avoiding steady work at all costs. He tricked Bailie Goodfellow into asking him to behave more like fellow Officer Robert Turnbull on an occasion when Turnbull got drunk. When charged to repeat things like the Burgess Roll, he would sometimes add amusing comments of his own, e.g. picking on Wullit Gotterson by calling him a 'horse-killer' rather than 'horse-dealer'. Due to such idiosyncrasies, he frequently came to grief for breach of Bailie's orders. After being dismissed for being drunk one Common Riding he is supposed to have said 'There's ye're drum; ye'll carrie't hame for me. Ye'll sune get another drummer, but ye'll never get another Caleb.' Although considered handsome and athletic in his youth, when older 'his personal appearance was rather unprepossessing'. He lived to a ripe old age, and was attended on his death bed by Rev. William Munro. The minister thought he was troubled with his conscience, but it turned out that his ill humour was explained when he said "Hoo can aw dee happy, an the bailies ganna gie the drum to that squeekin body Duke Rodger when awm deid'. With his wife Jean, he had one daughter, who married and had a son who sat in the Canadian legislature. His drum is in the Museum. He appears in a cameo role in 'The Gutterbludes'. W.N. Kennedy wrote extensive stories about him, published in 1862 and 1868 – 'Rob Rodger, he ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [RM], '... Or Caleb rise to beat the drum, And I cry out 'They come, they come!' ' [AD]. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in 1766. He married Janet Richardson in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761), William (b.1763), Margaret (b.1766) and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker Thomas Burnet and John Richardson (probably related to his wife). His son Charles died in Hawick in 1782. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Crailing Parish. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Betty Little. Charles Faa Blyth (1824/5–1902) son of Esther Faa Blyth, who was the last Queen of the Gypsies. Born at Kirk yetholm, he spent 58 years of his life in England, but returned in 1898 to claim the gypsy crown. This was said to be to 'boost the tourist trade', the coronation being a pageanti attended by thousands. He was visited in his palace by the Hawick Archæological Society field trip in 1901. He died less than a year later, while sitting in his chair. Charles Dickson (1825/6–95) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. In 1841 he was an apprentice grocer living on the Sandbed. On the 1861 he was visiting his brother Walter at Mabonlaw. He went to Edinburgh as a young man and is said to have broken his leg when he kicked out at a rat, but hit something solid instead; he was attended to in his recovery by Christina Smart who he subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded 'in Gramis' in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was (although 'Grange' is possible if this was an error). David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose children included: Margaret (b.1682); John (b.1685); Adam (b.1688); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1685 were John Scott in Ormiston and 'Mr' John Purdom. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park when Andrew Oliver & Son moved to Weensland Road. They continued sales there until the early 1900s. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Euphan (17th C.) servant of Francis Scott, former minister of Hassendean. She is recorded in 1693 when Robert Scott was fined in Hawick for striking her 'with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there'. Eve (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1324 along with Marjorie, the two being sisters of Roger, son of Finlay, when he had a charter for a tenement of their land in Clifton. Francis (1770s–bef. 1841) watchmaker of the High Street. He was recorded as a clock-maker in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the list in 1801. He was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is recorded as a watch and clockmaker on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory; his widow and son were living at about 7 High Street in 1841 and so that is presumably where his premises were. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Alison Henderson in 1794 and their children were: Francis Elliot; Agnes (b.1796); and William, who carried on the jewellery business. An unnamed child of his died in 1811. His wife was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. Francis 'Frank' (b.c.1795) textile worker in Hawick. He was a woollen stocking dresser in 1841 and a wool hosiery warehouseman in 1861. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on the Round Close. He married Jessie Hall in Selkirk in 1815 and their children included Thomas, Jessie and Jean. He may be the Francis, son of Thomas and Jane Elliot, who was baptised in Hawick in 1794. Francis (b.1830/1) railway labourer from England. In 1861 he was living at Dawston Burn Huts with his wife Mary, children John and Alice J., and 6 other labourers. Francis E. 'Frank' (b.1843/4) son of clock-maker William. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a 'skeleton watch'. He served as clock-keeper in Hawick from 1869. Sir George of Chatto (c.1380–c.1428) probably son of Robert of Rutherford and nephew of James of that Ilk. He was squire of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He was probably a survivor of the Battle of Vernueil in 1424. He married Janet Rutherford, possibly of Edgerston; she was related to the Lorraines who held the lands of Hummelknowes near Hawick and in 1428/9 was described as his 'wyfe quhylem' (probably former wife). He is probably the 'Georgio de Rutherfurde' as witness to a charter for Home of Wedderburn about 1413 and witness to a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben in 1414. He had a charter of confirmation for Chatto in 1429, but appears to have died shortly afterwards. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Other children were: Adam, Prior of the Anchorites in Ancrum; George of Langnewton; Walter of Redheugh; Katherine, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Helen, who married Sir Thomas Borthwick of Colylaw and Bourhouse. George of Ettles Cleuch (15th C.) son of Robert of Chatto. He was a member of the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492, when he is listed as 'Georgium Ruthirfurde de Edilisclucht'. 1495 there was a 'retour or inquest' at Jedburgh, finding that he was heir to his father in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, 'Eddillisclucht' and Hangingshaw, as well as the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill. He also had a sasine for the same lands. George of Hunthill (d.c.1496) son of Robert and Margaret Glendinning. He could not have been Laird for very long. His wife's name may have been Mariotta. He was succeeded by his son William. George of Longnewton (d.c.1499) 3rd son of George of Chatto. He was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains in 1483 and left his seal on a document relating to Synton in 1494. In 1493 he was surety for Henry Rauch in Longnewton (who had remission for the murder of Thomas Gibbinson), as well as for Patrick and Arthur Crawford in Longnewton Mill. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1494 when Alexander, Lord Erskine succeeded to his father's lands of Synton and hereditary Sheriffship of Selkirkshire. In 1494/5 he was surety for Henry Ruth in Longnewton. Also in 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from him at 'Camys', as well as 40 sheep from him at Sandystanes. In 1497 he gave a charter 'from his place of Sandystanys' to his grandson Walter. In the same year he was mentioned in an inquest relating to the boundaries of Melrose Abbey lands. He married Catherine Lyle. His sons Adam and Gilbert were recorded in 1498. He may already have been dead when the 'Dominus de langnewtoun' (no forename given) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. A case at the 1502 Justice-aire at Jedburgh related how 120 of his sheep had been stolen from 'Sandystanis' by the Laird of Minto and 'resett' by Adam Scott 'in Hawchesteris' (probably Highchesters). Another case in 1502 involved Peter Turnbull in Bonchester, who was in a group who burned 120 bolls of barley and 60 bolls of wheat belonging to him, as well as stealing 25 oxen, 44 cows and 60 sheep from him, and burning 11 horses, and other goods of his at Barnhills. Peter Turnbull was also involved in burning 26 bolls of barley and 40 bolls of oats at 'Sandystanis', with the help of John Turnbull of Minto and others. One more case in 1502 recorded how Adam Grahamslaw had stolen 41 sheep and 8 threaves of barley from him. In 1510 his son Adam had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. George of Hunthill (15th/16th C.) son of William. In 1500 there was a dispensation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, allowing him to marry Elizabeth Turnbull, although they were related in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity. In 1507 there was a 'retour of inquest', finding that he was heir of his father William of Hunthill, in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, Ettles Cleuch and Hangingshaw. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he confirmed a charter of Scraesburgh for Ninian Glendinning. In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and John of Hundalee had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. In 1520/1 he had a charter for a 4 merkland in Scraesburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, and married Helen, daughter of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk; John 'Cock' of Hunthill, who married Christine Pringle and succeeded his brother Andrew; William, who married Christian Armstrong; and Archibald, who was Canon of Jedburgh and married a Douglas of Bonjedward. George of Hundalee (c.1470–c.1545) son of John, whom he succeeded. He was 'junior Laird of Hundalee' in 1502 when serving as surety for Lawrence in 'quhitmeir'. He was a Bailie for Sir William Colville of Ochiltree in 1504. In 1508 he was part (along with his father) of the panel of retour for Adam Hepburn. He was one of the major Border Barons who signed a bond in 1525 to help the Earl of Angus, the Warden. In 1526 he was listed among the many Borderers in a remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Nicholas and Andrew were also listed. He had a charter for Hundalee in 1528. In 1538 he was charged with assisting 'George Ruthirfurd, called Cokburne, John Ruthirfurde, called Jock of ye Green, and other rebels at the Kingis horn', In 1539 he had a charter for Ashtrees. In 1542 he resigned his lands into the hands of James V, in favour of his son Nicholas; this included Hundalee, Ashtrees, Grubet, Kirk Yetholm, Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees, Makerstoun, Ruecastle and Lanton. In 1544 he signed a bond to serve Henry VIII during the 'Rough Wooing', but in the following year the English burned Hundalee anyway. He was succeeded by Sir Nicholas, his son. He also had a daughter who married Adam Grahamslaw of Newton. George 'Cockbank' (16th C.) said to be a 'great riever, thief and manslayer'. He was on a 1540 list of Scottish rebels 'reset' within England who the Wardens wanted captured. He is there 'Geo. Rutherford called Cok Bankes' and listed along with his brother 'Hobbe' and a son with unknown first name, as well as other Rutherfords. He is probably the 'George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne' listed along with John 'called Jock of ye Green' and other rebels who Ker of Cessford, Douglas of Cavers, Rutherford of Hundalee and Ker of Dolphinstone were accused of assisting in 1538. About the same time he was captured and held in Carlisle Castle with his son Thomas and Tom Bell, probably so they could be exchanged for the Englishman Dr. Hillyard. In 1540 James V refused to exchange him for the churchman, but offered to swap him for any English lawbreaker; his fate is not recorded. He was probably related to 'Robin' and 'Gawen', who are also listed in 1540. He is probably the George recorded along with Thomas Turnbull in 1541, when they were accused of having been on a raid into England with 100 other Scotsmen in which John Routledge and Robert Noble were killed. George of Longnewton (16th C.) listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He is also recorded in 1560 on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was son of William, who was murdered earlier by Robert Ker of Newhall. He signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', suggesting that he could not write himself. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. He may be the same man as George of Fairnington. George of the Grange (16th C.) signed a bond with John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, along with Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell. He was also part of the bond in same year among Turnbulls, Elliots and others to bring in William Nixon ('Clement's Will'). In 1560 he signed the bond ('at the pen led by the notar') to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1569 he was 'George Ruthirfurd in the Grange' when a set of Homes, Rutherfords and Kers were caution for him to remain in ward in Forfar. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown, allowed with several other Borderers, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators appointed for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. George of Fairnington (16th C.) probably son of William of Longnewton. He is listed as 'George Ruthirfurde of Pharnyngtoune' when he witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers, signed in Melrose. In 1580/1 he witnessed a list of the feuars of Newton (near Melrose), made at Selkirk. In about 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1601 he was among a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace. In 1602 he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds (with his hand 'at the pen'). He was probably ancestor of the later George of Fairnington. He may have married Margaret Cranston and had 5 sons. George (16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1580 when he had a marriage contract with Isabel, daughter of George Riddell in Lilliesleaf. The contract included conditions that if he died before there were offspring, then his wife was to inherit half of his possessions and get her dowry back. George of the Grange (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as 'younger in Abbotreull' when he had a bond with Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. This was on behalf of William Shiel of Fodderlee. He could be the George 'of Rule' whose 'Airs' were recorded as owning land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643, valued at £20. He is probably related to 'Dand' of the Grange, who is recorded in 1581/2. George of Fairnington (16th/17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier George of Fairnington. He was signatory of the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. His name was written 'G. Rutherforde of ffairningtoune'. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he or an earlier George signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the George 'of Fairnitoun' who acted as bailie for a sasine for the Haliburtons at Friarshaw in 1606. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He may be the George of Langnewton whose younger sons were Thomas, Adam and Patrick, from whom sprang the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. He may be the George of Fairnington whose son John became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1634 and whose son Robert became an apprentice merchant in 1642 (and who is probably the Robert, brother to George of Fairnington, who became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1684). Note that the owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as 'Lady Farnington' is probably in fact Lady 'Symington', and unrelated to him. George (d.1651) said to be brother of John in East Nisbet. After the Union he received lands on Rede Water through marriage. He apparently had 21 sons, most of whom served the King during the Civil War. He died in the Battle of Worcester, along with 14 of his sons. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Fairnington in 1674. He could be the same as one of the other Georges, although this seems like a separate generation. He is probably the Laird who paid the land tax in Roxburgh Parish in 1678. He may be the George of Fairnington who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas (and Elizabeth Turnbull), who was son of Robert of Edgerston. He is probably the George of Fairnington whose son John became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1685 and whose brother Robert became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1684. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George and Elizabeth Rutherford of Edgerston. He succeeded his father in 1692. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1686 he married Barbara, daughter of John Haliburton of Newmains and Margaret Rutherford of Edgerston; she died in 1750. Their children were: George, who succeeded, and killed his brother-in-law; David; Margaret, who married Robert Pringle of Clifton; and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, and secondly George Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, Lord Provost of Edinburgh. George (17th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. George (17th C.) married Bessie White in Bedrule Parish in 1692. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish whose children included John (b.1693), Helen (b.1695) and John (again, b.1697). His wife was probably either Margaret Turnbull or Bessie White. George of Fairnington (b.1691) son of George and Barbara Haliburton of Newmains. He may be the younger Laird of Fairnington whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. In 1716 he slew Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw in a drunken fight over the rights to a spring bordering their properties; the spring was afterwards known as the 'bloody well'. He kept in hiding until it was clear that he would not be prosecuted. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He could be the 'Rt. Hon. George Lord Rutherford' who in 1744 was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. His estate in Roxburgh Parish was valued at almost £1000 in the 1740s. His wife could have been the 'Lady Ferninton' who paid the window tax at Timpendean in 1748. His son George, W.S., married Mary, daughter of Strother Ker of Littledean. George (18th C.) married Jane Armstrong in Ashkirk Parish in 1764. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Gilbert (b.1791). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Betty (b.1796) and George (b.1797). Lieut. George of Knowesouth (d.1806) 2nd son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He succeeded his brother John, who died without an heir, only a few years after inheriting Knowesouth. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, and while serving on the Trident had been responsible for sentencing some men to illegal punishments, which had led to their deaths. He was taken into custody in Plymouth, but escaped from ship the night before the trial, and was believed to have drowned. Doubts over the circumstances of his death (and rumours that he had effected an escape) led to delays in legal proceedings to decide on the inheritance of the estate. He was ultimately succeeded by his aunt, who had married Thomas Scott, and their son Charles Scott. George (18th/19th C.) tenant at Dykes farm in Cavers Parish in 1819. George (18th/19th C.) married Jane Bunyan in Bedrule Parish in 1819. George (b.1783/4) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Lairhope in Hawick Parish. By 1851 he was a shepherd at Lodgegills in Ewes Parish. He married Mary Jackson in Ewes in 1816 and their children included: George (b.1816); Elspeth (b.1818); James (b.1819); Jessie (b.1821); Mary (b.1823); Walter (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826/7); Jackson (b.1829/30); Mary (b.1830/1); Simon (b.1833/4); Robert (b.1835/6); Jessie (or Jackie, b.1838/9); and George (b.1840/1). George (18th/19th C.) watch and clockmaker on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may have been related to Francis, who was listed separately as a clockmaker at the same time. One of them was probably the Rutherford marked at about 39 High Street on Wood's 1824 map. George (b.c.1800) from Jedburgh, he was farm steward on the Minto estate. He married Mary (or 'Mina') Easton, probably in St. Boswells. In 1841 he was living at Minto Lillielaw Lodge with his wife and 4 children. Their children included: James (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1830); John (b.1833), partner in Turner & Rutherford's in Hawick; and Isabel (b.1839). George (b.1806) joiner at Blacklee and Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. His father was James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge, while several other brothers were also joiners. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at 'Killnknowe', and was a joiner at 'Blackley' in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis in Bedrule in 1829 and their children included: James (b.1830); William (b.1832); Helen (b.1834); Isabella (b.1836); Thomas (b.1838); Janet (b.1839); Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845); and Margaret (b.1847). George (b.1805/6) originally from England, he was a shepherd at Hyndlee in Southdean Parish in 1841 and 1851. He married Jane Rutherford and their children included Helen (b.1831), George (b.1833) and Isabella (b.1835). George (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Lees and their children included Mary Ann (b.1853). George (b.1816/7) farm servant at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish in 1851. His wife was Margaret (from Hobkirk) and their children included Agnes, Archibald and William. George (19th C.) originally from Ancrum Parish, he was a labourer in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was a quarry labourer living at Deanhead Cottage. He married Isabella Taylor and their children included: Janet (b.1846/7); George (b.1849/50); Margaret (b.1854); William Taylor (b.1857/8); and James Taylor (b.1860/1). George (b.1806/7) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was a labourer at Kilknowe in 1841 and a joiner at Blacklee in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis, who was from Castleton. Their children included William (b.1832), Helen (b.1834), Isabel (b.1836), Thomas (b.1838), Janet (b.1839), Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845) and Margaret (b.1847/8). George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Waldie in 1849 and their children included: John (b.1848); Elizabeth (b.1850); and William Waldie (b.1853). George (19th C.) married Margaret Turnbull and had a daughter Margaret baptised in Hawick Feee Kirk in 1852. Probably the same George, from Roxburgh, was living at Burnfoot in 1851, with his wife Maragret (from hobkirk) and children Margaret, Agnes, Archibald and William. George (19th C.) married Helen Hutton in Southdean Parish in 1851. George (b.1822/3) married Sarah Fox in Hawick in 1851. His wife was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Wauchope Common. George (d.c.1895) son of James. He carried on his father's tailor's business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They had a son, Thomas. After his death his wife carried on the business for a few years, before it was taken over by William Sharp. She later married Mr. Irving. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as 'Gilberti de Ruthirfurde' in 1437 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted lands in Eckford for capturing him. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. One suggestion is that he is the same man as William, 3rd son of Sir Richard and Jean Douglas. Gilbert (b.c.1780) stocking-maker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He may be the Gilbert who married Betty Clerk in Wilton in 1802. Gilbert (1832/3–99) Hawick resident. In 1852 he married Agnes Park in Hawick in 1852, and she died in 1907, aged 75. Their children included: Maggie, who died young; William (1852–98), baptised at Hawick Free Kirk, who died at West Meridan, Connecticut, U.S.A.; Mary (1854–1925), also baptised at Hawick Free Kirk; Margaret (1856–61); Frank (1865/6–1928); Betsy (1870–1931); John (d.1936); and Gilbert, tweed merchant. He died in Howlands Terrace and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He beame a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie's coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI. Gregory (13th C.) one of the earliest of the family on record. He was witness to a document relating to Fairnington in the Melrose Abbey charters in about 1214. He witnessed another document (relating to Ellistion) for Melrose Abbey in about 1220 to 1243; he is listed there as 'Gregor de Ruthrfurd'. He witnessed 5 other documents in about the same period. Helen (d.1544) daughter of Philip, who was eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. She was also known as 'Ellen'. She managed to gain the estates of Rutherford and Wells after the death of her brother Richard, the other lands being inherited by her uncle Thomas. She was served heir in 1502/3, but the male heirs objected, and it took until 1505 to go through the courts. She also later gained Edgerston. She delivered the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston into the hands of the King, so they could be infefted to her and her husband in 1505 and 1506. Also in 1506 her husband received a pardon for the murder of Thomas Rutherford within Jedburgh Abbey. About the same time the King confirmed to her the 'half merk land of Bethiroull' near the parish church, 'held in tack by Herbut Turnbull'. In 1511 James Douglas of Cavers resigned his superiority of Rutherford and Wells to her and her husband. In 1534/5 she appears to have been in debt when some of her lands in Rutherford were granted to William Jackson. In 1537 her lands of 'Hurdhouse and Theifknowis' were attacked by a large band led by the Kers of Auld Roxburgh and 'Stokstruther'. She married 4 times, her husbands being: Sir John Forman of Davine (who had been one of her tutors); Sir Thomas Ker of Mersington, who was killed by the Rutherfords, apparently as the newly weds left the church; Andrew Rutherford of Hunthill; and Patrick Home of Broomhouse. She gallantly defended the tower of Broomhouse from the English force led by Sir Ralph Evers, eventually being burned to death there, along with her children. The cruelty of this act was used as a rallying cry by the Scots at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. Since she never had a surviving son to succeed her, despite her desperation to do so, her lands passed to other family members. Henry Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded at Redfordgreen as Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He may only have been given the lands in order to be a voter, since there is no evidence he ever lived in the area. Hugh (18th/19th C.) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James of that Ilk (c.1395–1454) son of Sir Richard. Along with his brother Nichol he was appointed guarantor of a treaty with the English in 1449. He is probably the 'Jamys of Rothirfurd' who witnessed a document between Haig of Bemersyde and Melrose Abbey in 1425. In 1427 he was 'Jacobo de Rothirfurd' when he witnessed the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he was an the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he witnessed a charter between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn and also the confirmation in 1432. He witnessed a charter of 1435 transferring lands of Branxholme etc. in the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He may be the James who witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. He also witnessed a sasine for the lands of Grahamslaw in 1436/7, and was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk when he infefted the same lands in 1439. In 1437 he was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1439 he was on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1439/40 he was a witness to the charter of Primside granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1446/7 he was on a 'retour' panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he was witness to a feu charter between Simon de Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for Burnflat and part of Birkwood, near the present day Duke's Wood. He held the lands of Edgerston at least by 1448 when he had a sasine. In that year he was 'Jacobo de Rudderfurde de eodem' when he witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw. In 1449 he and his brother Nicholas acted as guarantors for a treaty with the English and in 1451 they were among the conservators for the truce. In 1451 and 1452 he had charters for the lands of 'Leithbert, 'Leithbertshiels', etc. He married Christian Lauder, who was a grand-daughter of Sir Robert Lauder and co-heiress of her mother Katherine Landles, who owned Hownam, Crailing and Swinside. He was succeeded by his son James. James of that Ilk and Wells (c.1420–93/4) son of James. He was the first Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Note there is some debate over these generations, one genealogy suggestion being that there are 2 separate Jameses covering this entry. In 1455 he had remission for certain rents because of the damage he endured on the death of his father in defence of the realm. He was the 'lorde of Rutherfurde' on the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he received the patronage of the Kirk of Rutherford (previously belonging to the Earl of Douglas), was a Conservator of a truce with the English and was appointed a

Warden of the Marches. In 1464 he had a sasine for Hownam. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald Douglas and on the panel for deciding on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. In 1468 he was part of an agreement with the Homes and Kers over lands of Crailing. In 1471 he received a charter of the lands of Hownam, Capehope and Swinset, confirmed along with his wife in 1483. He is probably the James who had a debt relating to Crown lands in 1471, with Thomas Turnbull and Robert Rutherford as pledges. In 1482 he had a charter for the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1483 he was also witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains and another for Smailholm. He was appointed a commissioner for settling the Border marches in 1487, under the designation of Lord Rutherford. In 1488 he was mentioned in a charter of James III re-granting the regality of Cavers to William Douglas; there he is stated 'for the favour which he bears to the said William Douglas' to perform his service to the King. He gained the barony of Edgerston in 1492/3 and is recorded in that year when his superior James Douglas confirmed the lands of Rutherford and Wells (or 'Walls', in the Barony of Cavers) to him and his heirs. His possessions described in 1492/3 included the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. He is last recorded in early 1494 when he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Erskine. Their children included: Philip, whose son Richard succeeded, and whose widow married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; John, recorded as son of the Laird of Rutherford in 1493; Thomas of Edgerston, who succeeded his nephew as Rutherford of that Ilk; Andrew; Robert; Christian, who married Sir Robert Ker of Caverton; and Janet, who married John Rutherford of Hundalee. He was succeeded by his grandson Richard, who was the last Rutherford of Rutherford. James (d.c.1500) son of Adam, he was murdered at the Kirk of Hawick. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for his murder, as well as a long list of other crimes. Some other Turnbulls (accomplices of Peter) were 'at the horn' for being involved in his murder. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Patrick Turnbull at Wauchope Tower 'componed' for associating with the Turnbulls who were responsible for his murder. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was part of a letter of 'respite and protection' for the friends and family of William Douglas of Cavers (Sheriff of Teviotdale), while he was away in Denmark. Other men named were William Douglas (heir of the Sheriff) and William, Robert and Thomas Rutherford. It seems likely that they were members of the family of Rutherford and Wells. He could be the same as the James listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran, recorded between the Rutherfords of Hundalee and of Grange. James 'Kay' (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Ancrum in 1502 when he had remission for a list of crimes. This included stealing cattle, sheep, geese and threaves of oats from Fairnington on several occasions, his surety being Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. James (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, when he paid for 8 hearths. Probably the same James married Margaret Hastie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk: Beatrice (b.1691); James (b.1692); John (b.1694); unnamed (b.1695); Margaret (b.1696); and George (b.1697). The witnesses in 1691 were Robert Pringle and John Cuthbertson and in 1694 were John Stewart and Andrew Fletcher. James (17th C.) tenant in Ormiston. He was resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1716 in Hawick his daughter Mary married Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. James (b.1697/8) shepherd in Hawick Parish. He worked as shepherd for 20 years at Alton Croft, 14 years at Nether Southfield and later at Langflat. In 1761 he was 3 men selected to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft to regularise it. He was a widower in 1767 when he gave evidence in the court case regarding the division of the Common. James of Bowland (d.1747) only son of Robert of Bowland and Anne Murray. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1730–34, succeeding his cousin John Pringle. He also served as Commissary for Peebles in 1733. He was a ruling elder at the 1737 General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He is supposed to have owed a large sum in arrears of teinds, but was unable to find evidence that his father had purchased the right of these teinds; however, in a dream his dead father told him about the old writer who had the documents, which he was able to retrieve the next day. He married Isabella, daughter of John Sharplaw (or perhaps Simpson). His daughters Anna and Barbara emigrated to North Carolina. James (17th/18th C.) married

Jean Robson in Bedrule Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included James (b.1715). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was living at Eilrig. In 1726 he married Helen Haliburton, also from Roberton. His children included: Janet (b.1727); Maly (b.1728); and Isobel (b.1730). The same couple seem to have had more children baptised in Hawick: William (b.1739); Margaret (b.1741); and James (b.1744). Walter (b.1737), baptised in Hawick with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Elizabeth Spinner in 1745 and their children probably included John (b.1746), Andrew (b.1748), Agnes (b.1753) and Alison (b.1755). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Helen (b.1755) and Margaret (b.1757). James (18th C.) farmer at Falahill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) listed as gardener at Midshiels in 1791 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the James in Wilton who married Agnes Hogg in Melrose in 1790. He may also be the James who married Jane (or Jean) Thomson in Wilton in 1795 and had a son William (b.1796). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandystones in Ancrum Parish. He owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. James (b.1768/9) born in Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Barnhills. In 1851 he was farmer there of 360 acres, employing 12 labourers. His children included Elizabeth, Agnes and Andrew. James (18th C.) married Jane Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1795. James (b.1777/8) joiner at Bonchester Bridge, probably son of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. He was a wright at Blackcleughmouth on the 1801 ballot for the Militia (for some reason in Southdean Parish, rather than Hobkirk). He first set up as a joiner at Hobkirkstile, then moved to Langraw and finally to Bonchester Bridge by about 1813. His joiner's shop was next to the blacksmith's there. He is recorded there on the 1841 census. He married Isabella Thomson (1779/80–1847) and their children were: Agnes (b.1804), who must have died young; John (b.1805), joiner at Old Gatehousecote; George (b.1806), joiner at Kirkstyle; James (1808–41), whose son Tom was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; Elizabeth (b.1810), who probably died young; Thomas (b.1811), who was a soldier and then policeman in Hawick; William (b.1812), who emigrated to Australia; Robert Scott (b.1814), also a joiner, married Isabella Hall; Agnes (again, b.1816), who married a Hawick shoemaker called Elder; Douglas (b.1818), who worked in a sawmill in Leith; and Alexander (b.1820), who followed his father as a joiner. He could be the James who was listed as a Steward at the Common-Riding Races of 1836. It is possible he was the James, son of John and Janet Noteman, born in Wilton Parish in 1778. Probably the same James was recorded as wright at Blackleemouth in Southdean Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1801. James (d.bef. 1840) slater in Hawick. His daughter Jemima died in 1840. James (1808–41) 3rd son of Bonchester joiner James. He married Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson and grand-daughter of John Stevenson, Laird of Kirkstyle. Their son Thomas (b.1832) eventually took over as blacksmith from his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson. James (1818/9–1900) tailor of 60 High Street. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 21 High Street. In 1873 he donated to the Museum 'part of a New Testament in black letter, with old version of Psalms, printed in the 17th century'. He married Mary Wilson in 1844, who died in 1892, aged 73. Their children included Betsy Waldie, William, Isabella and Elizabeth, who all died in infancy, Robert, James, George (tailor and tobacconist), Alison and Mary (who married Andrew Wight). It is said that as a boy he 'took part in the rare old sport of guizarding, and on one occasion appeared at Abbotsford along with some other boys'; Sir Walter Scott rewarded him with a half-crown for the performance and his rendition of 'Scots Wha Hae'. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Semple in Southdean Parish in 1847. James (b.1825/6) born in New York state, he was a hosiery warehouseman in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Teviot Place (which may be the same as 4 Teviot Road). He married Isabella Elliot and their children included: George (b.1856); and Thomas Elliot (b.1861). James (b.1842/3) born in Roberton Parish. In 1901 he was shepherd at Dodburn. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter who was also Janet. James (b.1843) son of William, farmer at Ferniehirst Mill. He was farm steward at Kershaugh and in 1877 or 1878 moved to Gatehousecote, where he was also farm steward. By 1891 he had moved to Chesters Grange in Ancrum Parish. He married Isabella Hood and their children were William Rae (b.1877),

John Hood (b.1878), Cecilia Richardson (b.1880), Henry James (b.1883), Charles (b.1885/6) and Robert (b.1887/8). James (b.1876) son of Tom, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was edudated in Hobkirk and served his apprenticeship with his father. He worked in Kelso and Hawick, returned to Bonchester, worked with a shipbuilders in Belfast and then in Edinburgh, before taking over as blacksmith at Bonhester in 1899. In about 1904 he became tenant of the inn at Bonchester and gave up the blacksmith's business. He married Margaret Sparks, who was sister of his brother Thomas' wife. James (b.1861) born in Hawick, he attended St. Andrews Kirk . He studied at Edinburgh University and was ordained as a minister of the Free Kirk in Coldstream in 1887. He became minister at Craigmillar Park, Edinburgh in 1896. James (20th C.) Managing Director of Turner & Rutherford's at Mansfield Mills. He was in this position at the time of the 1955 fire, which was not long before the firm foelded. Jane nee Michie (c.1806–75) daughter of agricultural worker George Michie, she married Thomas and they lived at Haysike. Her children were: Thomas, gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa; John, shoemaker; and Maggie, who married James Wintrup. In 1857 she is probably the 'Mrs Rutherford, late of Haysike' who donated to the Museum a 'silver coin of James I. of Scotland, found on east end of Branxholm Park hill'. Jane see Mrs. James Rutherford Oliver. Janet (17th C.) landowner in Abbotrule Parish in 1663. She paid £70 on the Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps she was widow of a man who formerly owned lands in Abbotrule, for example 'Bertie Rutherford of the Wood' or George of the Grange. Mrs. Janet (18th/19th C.) closest relative of William Turnbull, last Laird of Langraw. She inherited the property sometime in the 1790s. She married a Mr. Easton, who settled in America, and sold Langraw in 1801. Jean (b.1753) daughter of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr. She inherited the Knowesouth estate from her brother Thomas. She married Thomas Scott, a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. Her son Charles Scott later inherited Knowesouth. Jean (18th/19th C.) wife of Caleb, she was known as 'Jean Caleb' or 'Caleb's Jean', and her maiden surname is uncertain. Together with 'the Noted Beattie' they locally performed 'Wild Man of Bengal' shows. She was in charge of taking money at these shows, and would also encourage the audience by applauding loudly at the end. Her snuff box is in the Museum, with the date February 22 1803; it was donated by Walter Davidson in 1858. John of Hundalee (15th C.) probably son of Nicholas of Hundalee. In 1434 he was ordered to leave Jedburgh Abbey and to allow the Abbot, Thomas Cranston, to take possession (probably a dispute over burial rights in the choir between the 2 families). He was witness to the sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. John, son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet was also a witness, showing that they are different men; he is there recorded as 'Johannis de Rutherfurd de Hundwelle'. He may be the John who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1464/5 he was 'Johne of Ruthirforde of Hundwellee' when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1467 he is recorded as 'Johannis Ruthirfurde, dominus de Hundwalyey' when he was appointed by Parliament (along with John Ainslie of Doplphinston) to make an evaluation of Roxburghshire. He appears to have married Margaret Charteris (daughter of Thomas of Cagnore) and then a daughter of Sir Thomas Cranston. The contemporary John appears easy to confuse with him, while the later John of Hundalee was possibly his son, but more likely to have been son of Andrew of Hundalee. John (d.c.1470) son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet. Along with his father he witnessed the sasine of Woollee and Wolfhopelee to David Home in 1436. This was also witnessed by John of Hundalee, showing they are 2 separate people, even although he may be the later John of Hundalee; this is clearly confusing, and family histories may be muddled. In 1450 he was on the panel for the 'retour' of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1453 he had a lease of the Crown lands of 'Kyncavil'. In 1457 he had a sasine for lands at Falnash, Hassendean, Grubet and Kirk Yetholm. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1458 he is probably the John, heir of the deceased Nicholas who had previously dealt with the accounts for Jedburgh. He firstly married Elizabeth, sister of John Rutherford of Yetholm. His second wife was Margaret Turnbull. He was succeeded by his son Andrew of Hundalee and had another son George. John of Edgerston (d.bef. 1501). In 1494 he was fined 10 pounds at the Judiciary Court for failing to produce Walter (probably a relative). He was one of the sureties (with Sir Robert Ker) for the appearance of Robert Langlands to answer to his murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw in 1494/5; they had to pay £20 when Langlands failed to show up. In the same year he was also surety for Thomas, son of Nicholas Rutherford, who had killed Duthac Rutherford, for James Davidson in Raperlaw, George Davidson in Raperlaw and for the Grahamslaws of Newton. He also served as surety for others in 1494/5 and was fined for the non-appearance of some of them. He was possibly second son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and elder brother of Thomas of Edgerston. He is probably the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2, and also the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who was surety for a resident of Edgerston in 1493. It is possible he is the 'Johnne of ruthirfurd in edzartoun' who was fined 'a ruk of corne' in 1503 for failing to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. It is possible he is the servant of the Duke of Albany who accompanied him to France and communicated with the English King in 1482. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Ninian in Ancrum. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, he was surety for himself, as well as his brother acting for him. He failed to appear and was to be fined at the next court. At the 1502 Justice-aire he was surety for his brother Ninian in Ancrum, as well as for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston; failing to appear, he was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. John of Hundalee (c.1450–c.1524) son of Andrew of Hundalee. He is easy to confuse with the slightly earlier John of Hundalee (who may have been his uncle). He is probably the 'Johanni Roderfurd de Hundole' who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484. In 1491/2 he was recorded as 'Johanni Ruthirfurd de Hundolee' when he had a charter for the lands of Ruecastle (resigned by Thomas Dickson), as well as Samieston (resigned by Thomas Ker of Cessford). In 1492 he obtained a decree from the Privy Council against William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, as well as John Gledstains of that Ilk for 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas. He was a member of the panel of 'retour' for the lands of Synton in 1494, where he is 'Johannem Ruthirfurde de Hundole'. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 his 'suitor' was Adam Sluthman, who was present at the court for his lands of Ruecastle. In 1499 he witnessed a document for Walter Ker of Cessford and also the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1502 he presented Nicholas Oliver at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, to 'give suit' for his lands of Grubet. In 1502 he and his brother Thomas were sureties for Nicholas, and also had remission 'for intercommuning with ye Ruthirfurdes, ye Kingis rebels'. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Richard in Littledean, for James in Nisbet and for John 'Fiffe', and he was fined for the non-appearance in court of William Turnbull in Bonchester. Additionally William of Hunthill was surety that he would not harm John Tait in Yetholm. In 1504 he acted as a specially appointed 'bailie in that part' for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1509 to give the inheritance of Cavers Barony to James, son and heir of Sir William Douglas; he is recorded as 'John Ruthirfurd of Hundole' and George is also listed (so possibly related). Thomas Story represented him in his lands of Grubet at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh in 1510. In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and George of Hunthill had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. The house at Hundalee was destroyed by the English while he was Laird. He married Christian Boyd. Their children included: George, who succeeded; Lucia, who married Adam, son of Philip Nisbet of that Ilk; Janet, who married Adam Grimslaw; Margaret, who married Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; and Alison, who had a marriage contract with George, eldest son of William Ker in Lintalee, but appears to have died before the wedding, since her parents were ordered to pay 90 merks to Ker in 1500. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as 'Johanne ruthirfurd' called 'fiffe' in 'le grange'. In a separate court entry he was found to be infirm, with his surety being John of Hundalee. It is unclear how he might be related to other Rutherfords of Grange. John 'the Cock o Hunthill' (c.1510–77) son of George, he succeeded his older brother Andrew. There was a 'retour of inquest' in 1529, finding that he was heir of his brother Andrew in the lands of Nether Chatto and others. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535, with David (possibly related) as his attorney and in that year the Sheriff of Selkirkshire confirmed that he was to be restored to the Lordship by royal letters, dismissing the dispute with Alison Douglas, widow of David Home of Wedderburn. A further 'retour of inquest' in 1558 established that he was heir to his brother in the lands of Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraesburgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and baronies in the 1530s. In 1535 he was represented in Selkirk by 'the venerable sir William', who may have been a relative. He was convicted in 1538 of assisting several men who were 'at the horn'; also convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other Rutherfords and also Kers. In 1541 he was tenant of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resetting English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of Tynedale. He was on retours in 1542 and 1564. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the 'lard of Hunthill' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was listed among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for his sons was John of the Knowe. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he granted the lands of Scraesburgh (occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others) to his son and heir John. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he and his son John was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse and as part of the restitution his 2nd son William was to marry a daughter of James Ker of Corbethouse, while his son and heir John was to offer his sword to ask forgiveness from James Ker. He signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', meaning that he could not write himself. In 1561 he was listed among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, and then he himself was warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. Also in 1565 he signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' (but helped by the notary). Additionally, he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council in 1565 to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered to enter 'Sym Oliver, Cuddy Hendirsoun, and Mathow Dowglas' to the Warden. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He signed the bond of peace for the Borders in 1569. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. Additionally in 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour, as well as for Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and was directed to relieve Sir Walter Ker of Cessford of a debt. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and was surety for David Oliver in Whiteside. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571 and 1577. In 1572/3 he gave his assurances that he would not help Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, with Richard of Edgerston as surety. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573, 'with my hand at the pen'. In 1574 he, his son John, and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. In 1576 he was surety for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1529 he firstly married Christine 'Hoppringle', daughter of David Pringle of Smailholm, this requiring special permission because of consanguinity. He secondly married Isobel, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His children included: John, who succeeded; Mariotta, who maried William Rutherford of Leith; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; Betty, who married Richard Rutherford of Edgerston; Steven, recorded in 1582 and 1593; and Thomas of 'Grundisnuke'. He may have secondly married a daughter of Ker of Greenhead. He could be the 'vmquhile Maister Johne Rutherfurde' named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574 in connection with the lands of Lanton. John (d.bef. 1560) probably son of Thomas and brother of Richard and Philip. He was said to have 'dwelt in the tofts', 'had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot' and to have been 'of memorable strength and courage'. He is listed being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in 1560 on the document attempting to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean and his friends. Also 'Johne Ruthirfurd thair' (hence probably related) was mutilated in the same attack. As part of the attempt to resolve the feud, the daughter of Philip in Edgerston was to marry Andrew, son of Robert Ker of Newhall. John of the Knowe (16th C.) recorded in 1553/4 as a pledge for the sons of the Laird of Hunthill, that they would keep order. His lands were probably the Knowe of Nisbet. He described as being 'in Know' in the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was one of the signatories of the bond, and hence must have been a fairly important family representative at that time. In 1572/3 he was 'Jok of the Know' when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Andrew of Hundalee and Richard of Edgerston as sureties. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was there recorded as 'Jok of the Know in Nisbett'. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was 'of the Know' in about 1578 when he and other Rutherfords and Turnbulls agreed to annul all former bonds and swear allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He was recorded in about 1590 as 'Johnne Rutherfurd of the Know in Nysbit' among landed men of the Borders. He was also 'in the Knowe of Nisbet' in 1607 when his son John became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Perhaps he is the same as one of the contemorary Johns. He was probably succeeded by George. John of Hunthill (16th C.) son of John. He was known as 'the Cock', like his father. In 1558 his father granted to him (and his wife) the 8 husbandlands of Scraesburgh that was occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others. In 1565 he was 'of Hunthill, youngar' when he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. Along with his father and friends, he was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse; as part of the bond of 1560 to end the family feud he agreed to ask forgiveness from James Ker of Corbethouse by offering him his sword. In 1571 he was younger of Hunthill when he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for tenants in Oxnam. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He is probably the John of Hunthill who signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was juror on a retour in 1579. His brother Stephen is recorded in 1582. He is listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, at about the same time. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead and vice versa and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing (along with his son Thomas and others) to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. He is recorded in 1587 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk. He is further recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell, but this was lifted a few months later. In 1593 he was again denounced as a rebel (along with his brothers Steven and Thomas of 'Grundisnuke', among others) for failure to appear to answer accusations about raids into England. In 1595 he, along with William Scott of Howpasley and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were 'put to the horn' for failing to pay to the Sheriff their 'blench ferms and castlewards'. He married his cousin Grizel Home and also married Agnes Kirkton (perhaps in 1558, when the couple were granted lands in Scraesburgh). His children included: William, who may have been the eldest son (and if so, predeceased his father), recorded in 1592 when he was denounced as a rebel; Thomas, who succeeded and who married a Cranston of that Ilk; John, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Bankend, who married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk; Grizel, who married Walter Ormiston of that Ilk; Jean, who married Adam Rutherford of Chatto; George; Andrew; Percie; Steven; Robert; and 5 other daughters. Richard of Littleheugh may also have been his son. John 'Jock' of Tofts (16th C.) probably son of Richard of Edgerston. He was said to be a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot. He was named in several accusations of raids on English farms in 1590. His son Andrew is also listed in some of them. He was also recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. In 1602 there was a complaint about him, his sons Robert, Thomas and William, his son-in-law John Stevenson and others that they attacked 'Jackie Laidley' and his family and servants at his lands near Jedburgh. Thomas, younger of Hunthill was cautioner for him and his sons Thomas, Archibald and William, not to harm 'Jacques Laidley in Ancrauch'. John (d.1636) 2nd surviving son of John 'the Cock' of Hunthill. He was Bailie of Jedburgh several times between 1598 and 1610. In 1619 he was referred to as 'Master John Ruthirfurd, sheriff-depute of County Roxburgh'. In 1623 he had the lands of Hyndhousefield, Howdenbraes and Maison-Dieu confirmed to him, his wife and eldest son. He married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. His eldest son was John of Bankend, who served as Provost of Jedburgh. The gravestone of him and his wife, in Jedburgh Abbey, bears the initials 'M.I.R.' and 'B.G.' and a Latin inscription. John 'Provost's Jock' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstone. George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf complained that the 3 men attacked the houses at Friarshaw and Lilliesleaf. His name is given as 'Provestis Jok', suggesting that his father was Provost, perhaps of Jedburgh. John of Ancrum (d.bef. 1624) recorded in a dispute with the minister of Ancrum in 1590. He was already deceased in 1624 when his son Andrew became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. John of Hunthill (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hunthill and Jean Cranston. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1610. In 1615 the lands of Nether Chatto, 'Eidlescleuch', 'Hanganshaw' and Gateshawfield were conveyed to him and his wife by James Ker of Chatto. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1630. His lands of Hunthill, Scraesburgh, etc. were valued at £1200 in 1643. He was still alive in 1666 when he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. He married Alison, daughter of Andrew Kerr, 1st Lord Jedburgh; she was recorded as Lady Hunthill in a deed in 1663. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, but had no male heirs; John, who succeeded his elder brother, but died unmarried; Sir Thomas, who succeeded his 2 older brothers and became the 2nd Lord Rutherford; Archibald, 3rd Lord Rutherford; Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford; Lilias, who married Henry Ker of Graden; Isobel, who married Alexander Burnet of Carlops; Helena, who married Thomas Lewin of Amble; Anna, who married Rev. Thomas Abernethy of Hownam; and Margaret, who married William Elliot of Dinlabyre. John (d.1679) 2nd son of Richard of Littleheugh. His older brother Walter died without issue and he succeeded his father in 1626. His lands included 'Capehope vocatis Phillop-hope, Hardroddis, Maksydbank, Priestschawis, &c.', to which he was served heir in 1643, with confirmation in 1666. He married Eupham, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Dod. He was succeeded by his sons Walter and John. Walter 'Kaiphope'. recorded in 1695, was probably his son; Walter's deceased brother John's son John became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1695. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1641. John (17th C.) recorded in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He owned lands valued at £140, but the name of the property is not listed. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1665) transcribed 'de Cowsnothe' in the 1666 services of heirs. In that year his son Thomas (referred to as 'junior', presumably meaning he was a minor) was served heir to his lands of Ruecastle, including Harden Mains and Newtonhaugh. He was described as already deceased in 1672 when his son Andrew became a merchant's apprentice in 1672. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, and another son Robert became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1673. John of Edgerston (c.1622–86) eldest son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He raised a troop in the 1640s and fought for King Charles; it is said that at the Battle of Dunbar he was severely wounded and all but 5 of his men were killed, and he lost a leg while defending the bridge at Worcester. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1654/5 he and Robert (Town Clerk of Jedburgh) were acquitted of liability for a sum of £300, which was taken from the tax-collector by 'a strong party of mosstroopers'. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 'gentlemen and heritors' of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. It is possible he was the Captain John who was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1666. After the Restoration he commanded a troop of dragoons who kept order in the Borders. He paid the land tax in 1678 for £2700 in Jedburgh Parish. Also in 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire fir raising money for the King. He married Barbara Abernethy, daughter of the Bishop of Caithness (and related to the family that had earlier possessed lands at Teindside and Harwood south of Hawick, with his mother being a Murray of Philiphaugh). He had 4 sons and 12 daughters, including: John, who died before him; Andrew (b.1647), who succeeded, but died without issue; Thomas, who succeeded Andrew; Robert of Bowland, who married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; Isabel (b.1648), who married Andrew Ker of Littledean; and Violet (b.1653). His testament was recorded in 1682. Rev. John (1641–1710) born in Yarrow, son of John and Isabella Ker. He was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the author. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk and was master of Selkirk Grammar School; he was recorded there in at least the period 1676–85, and probably served until 1691, when he was ordained in 1691 as minister of Yarrow. In 1685 he was described being 'in Philiphaugh' and in 1692 was 'late schoolmaster of the burgh of Selkirk and now present minister'. He was minister at Yarrow until his death. He still had dealings with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. He married Christian, grand-daughter of John Shaw, minister of Selkirk. His children included: Robert, who died young; John (1695–1779), Professor of the Practice of Medicine at Edinburgh University; Jean (b.1693), who died unmarried; and Anne, who married William Scott of Whitehaugh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1704 he was 'in Dernicktoun' (presumably Darnick in Melrose Parish) and Margaret 'ivson' (perhaps Gibson) was 'his wife in Goldilands' when their daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. John of Knowesouth (b.c.1685) son of Thomas and Cecilia Douglas. He may have been a doctor, and succeeded his father before 1715. His sister Ann married William Chisholme, son of Robert and grandson of Walter of Stirches. He was probably the man of this name who qualified as a doctor in Utrecht in 1709 and was called 'doctor of physic' and 'younger' in 1713. He was presumably the eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth who was among the Jacobite supporters who surrendered at Preston in 1715. It is believed that afterwards was transportedn to Virginia, where he probably died. A set of letters from him when he was in prison in Liverpool were printed in the Border Magazine in 1909. He married Isabella (or 'Tibbie'), daughter of William Scott of Raeburn in 1711. Their children included: Thomas (b.1713), who died young; William (b.1715), also died young; John (b.c.1716), who succeeded; and Ann, who married William Thomson, surgeon in Jedburgh, and whose son John married his cousin Euphemia Rutherford. He may have died in 1728, when his son John was served as his heir. John of Ladfield (17th/18th C.) descendant of John of Ladfield (d.c.1686), who was Provost of Jedburgh. His father may have been Adam. He was 'younger' in 1712 when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased William Rutherford of Falla, this taking place at Hummelknowes. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1702. He may be the John whose children, baptised in Bedrule, included Bessie (b.1700), Thomas (b.1703) and Janet (b.1708). John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Storie in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in both Bedrule and Jedburgh Parishes. John (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in Bedrule Parish in 1711. Sir John of Edgerston and that Ilk (1687–1747/8) son of Thomas. He was knighted in 1706 and succeeded to Edgerston in 1720. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash (his sister Violet) sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He is probably the Sir John who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. His lands in Jedburgh Parish were value at about £1300 in the 1740s. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Cairncross of Langlee in 1710. They had a large family, including: John (b.1712), who succeeded; William (b.1714) of Nether Ancrum; Thomas (b.1715), who married Martha Town from York and whose sons Richard and John were in the Navy; Sussanah (d.1791), who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank; Robert of Fairnington (b.1723), who became a Russian Baron; James (d.1742), who became a merchant's apprentice (with William, perhaps a relative) in Edinburgh in 1739 and was unmarried; Walter (1723–1804), who married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander, and whose son John was an American politician; Mary, who married Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean; Elizabeth, who married John Horsburgh of that Ilk; Jean, who married Charles Inglis of Manorhead; Hugh, who had 4 daughters; Archibald; Jean; and Agnes. He secondly married Sarah, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dean (sister of his son-in-law). Their children were: Henry of Hunthill, who married Agnes Lauder; and Christian, who married Rev. Dr. Davidson of Muirhouse. John (1695–1779) born in Yarrow, son of John, minister there, he was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. His sister Anne married William Scott of Whitehaugh. He was educated in Selkirk and at Edinburgh University. He became a partner in a medical practice in Edinburgh in 1721 and they petitioned the University to start teaching Medicine, the 4 partners becoming the first Professors of Medicine there. He delivered clinical lectures in the Royal Infirmary, beginning the relationship between the university and the hospital. He is listed among those to whom the deceased William Scott of Whitehaugh (his brother-in-law) owed money in 1750. He firstly married Jean Swinton and they had a daughter Anne, who was mother of Sir Walter Scott. He secondly married Anne Mackay (daughter of the Jedburgh minister) and their children included: Daniel, who was a physician and botanist; Jean, who married Col. William Russell of Ashiestiel; and several children who died young. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Tudhope in Bedrule Parish in 1721. He is probably the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Bedrule in 1722. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Mary (b.1737) and Helen (b.1739). John of Edgerston (1712–58) son of Sir John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Cairncross. He trained as an advocate and was elected M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1734, being re-elected in 1741. However, later that year his younger brother Walter convinced him to go to America, where he joined the Independent Regiment of Foot in New York. In the 1740s he was 'younger of that ilk' when his lands in Oxnam Parish were valued at more than £5000. In 1756 he became a Major in the Royal American Regiment. In 1737 he married Eleanor, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto; she died in 1797 at her house in George Square, Edinburgh. They had 11 children, most of whom were born in America, and 7 of whom survived to adulthood: John, who succeeded; Jean (or Jane) married William Oliver of Dinlabyre; Robert (d.1780), who served with the East India Company; Archibald (d.1790) who was an army Captain; Eleanor (d.1822), unmarried; Elizabeth, married Andrew Sinclair of Hermandston and was mother of Lord Sinclair; and Agnes (1758–1840), who died unmarried. He died at Ticonderago and his family then relocated back to Scotland. There are several documents among Peebles Commissary Court Deeds following his death. John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1740), William (b.1741), Mary (b.1742), John (b.1744), Cicely (b.1745), Isabel (b.1745), Charles (b.1747) and Euphan (b.1758). There are probably 2 separate families here. John (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Betty (b.1742). John of Knowesouth (c.1716–88) son of John and Isabella Scott. He was served heir to Knowesouth in 1728, this perhaps being when his father died, after being transported for being a Jacobite supporter, probably to Virginia in 1716. In 1739 married Mary, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, this marriage ending in divorce. It appears that he was mentally ill, and the records describe years of abuse before his wife finally left him in 1749. He paid the window tax in Bedrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded in Peebles Court records several times in the period 1757–61. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. By 1763 he was an inmate of the 'Bedlam' in Edinburgh. He is recorded as Laird in 1764 when his eldest son Thomas married Margaret Elliot of Kirklands in Ancrum. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1747 he was in a dispute with William Henry, Marquess of Lothian over his alleged wrongful possession of the lands of Ruecastle; it appears that an infeftment of Ruecastle was made obtained by his (young) eldest son Thomas in 1748 (or perhaps 1758). In 1770 this son Thomas was in dispute with his wife (i.e. Thomas' mother), younger children and creditors. These other children were: Jean (b.1753), who married Thomas Scott and whose son Charles later succeeded to the estate; Anne, twin to Jean; William, who died without issue; Capt. John of the Royal Navy; and Euphemia, who married her cousin Jedburgh Town Clerk John Thomson. In 1788 he is recorded owning lands valued at £466 19s 10d, with his son Thomas also holding lands valued at £48 10s. He died in Edinburgh. Maj. John 'the Little Major' of Mossburnford (1746–1830) son of Thomas and grandson of the Laird of Edgerston. His father died in the Barbados when he was an infant, and he was sent back to the care of his grandfather at Edgerston. After going to America to seek his fortune he was apparently captured by Indians, but escaped after several years. He joined the 42nd Highland Regiment and was promoted to Captain in 1778. After retiring and returning to Scotland he purchased the estate of Mossburnford. He was a Major in the Dumfries Militia in the short period 1798–99. His nickname derived from his short stature. He paid tax on 2 male servants in Jedburgh Parish in 1778 and 1779. He was probably also Collector of Supply for about 35 years. He paid the Land Tax for Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1785. He was one of the Borders men who entertained Burns on his tour of 1787. He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798–9, in his capacity as a Justice of the Peace for the county. He was on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, along with his son John. In 1810 he was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1819 he was appointed as Collector of Assessed Taxes. He married Eleanor Chalk of Artane, Dublin and secondly Agnes, daughter of Rev. Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle. His children included: John, W.S. (1777–1801), who was the Edinburgh agent for Jedburgh; Charles (1780–1846), who inherited the lands of Fairnington, served as a Lieutenant in the local Militia 1799–1800, but died unmarried; Thomas (b.1784), who succeeded his brother; Martha, married Charles Robson of Samieston; Helen (or Eleanor) married William Elliot, Laird of Harwood; Walter (1801–56) who served with the East India Company in Bengal; and at least 5 who died young. Capt. John (1744–1833) younger son of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr of Abbotrule. His elder brother Thomas inherited the estate and then it passed to his sister Jean (who married Thomas Scott), since he was unmarried. He was, however, served heir to his nephew John Rutherford in 1815. He was a member of the Jedforest Club, joining in 1819. He could be the John who was recorded at Knowesouth in 1797, where he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as 2 non-working dogs. He is probably the 'Mr Rutherford' whose 2 servants were recorded at Knowesouth on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the Capt. John who died in 1833 and was considered as the last of the Knowesouth line. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Douglas and their children included John (b.1776). John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shiplaw Cross in 1780. This was the highest cottage in Cavers Parish. He had a son James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge and his great-grandson was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. Note that Tancred lists him as James rather than John. John of Edgerston (1748–1834) son of John of Edgerston and that Ilk. He was born in America, while his father was in the army there. He succeeded to Edgerston following his father's death in 1758 (his father having been overseas since succeeding Sir John in about 1749). In 1759 he inherited lands in Hillslap from Elizabeth Cairncross. He owned land at 'Rink' in Hawick, which was used for the October market from 1779. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and was already on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1780 he was appointed Major and Captain in the Southern Regiment of Fencible-men and by 1797 was in command of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Militia). In 1788 he was described as a 'popular man' in a private list of voters in Roxburghshire, and was also said to be connected with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was additionally listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. His estate in Jedburgh Parish was valued at more than £2000 in 1788, and he also owned other lands in Oxnam Parish. He paid tax on 2 male servants in 1778, and was taxed for having male and female servants through the 1780s into the 1790s as well as for owning a carriage in the period 1788–98 and for having horses and dogs in the period 1785–97, including 8 carriage or saddle horses and 4 non-working dogs. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least the period 1797–1801. Also in 1797 he was knocked off his horse in Jedburgh and struck in the head, but fully recovered. In 1803 he became Colonel-Commandant of both battalions of Roxburghshire volunteers. He was listed as 'Major' on the 1808 susbcription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary. He paid the land tax on his estate in 1811, and also owned Overton. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1802–06 and Roxburghshire 1806–12. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1787 he married Mary Ann, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Leslie-Melville and died without issue. He left the lands of Edgerston to William Oliver of Dinlabyre, son of his sister Jane, and Fairnington to Charles, son of John Rutherford of Mossburnford. There is a watercolour sketch of him by Lord Sinclair. John (18th C.) resident of Alton in Wilton Parish. In 1777 he married Janet Notman. Their children included: James (b.1778); John (b.1779); Thomas (b.1783); and Robert (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were George Scott and James Lorraine. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included William (b.1784) and Janet (b.1786). He may be the John who married Janet Scott in Southdean in 1770. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Howpasley. His children included Henry (b.1783) and John (b.1786). John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Knowesouth in 1794, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. John (d.c.1805) eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He apprenticed as a lawyer to William Riddell and became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He died after succeeding his father. However, he died without issue and the Knowesouth estate was inherited by his brother George, who also died without issue. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, he lived at Dovemount. He was known to be engaged in smuggling, acting as henchman to George Haliburton and was a great swordsman and rider. He married a daughter of Robin Turner, Elder of Wilton Kirk. On on occasion his wife held back a group of excisemen at Dovemount, while he and his associates got their kegs of liquor hidden away at Broomie Brae. Haliburton's gang arranged to meet at the head of the Jed Water after a trip to Boulmer in Northumberland, and they waited for him to appear, eventually seeing his riderless horse. They searched and eventually came across his body, along with the bodies of two excisemen, obviously the result of a violent fight. His body was carried back and buried at Southdean. John, W.S. (1777–1801) eldest son of Maj. John of Mossburnford. He was an agent for Jedburgh in Edinburgh and died in 1801. He is easy to confuse with John of Knowesouth. John (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1789 he paid a fine for his 'irregular marriage' with Betty Hogg. Their children included: Charles (b.1790), baptised in Wilton; Walter (b.1792), baptised in Minto; Isabel (b.1795), baptised in Minto; William (b.1802), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and Thomas (b.1805), baptised in Minto. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Synton Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also recorded at Synton Mill in 1797 when his son Francis died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Betty Hogg and their children included Janet (b.1797), Rebecca (b.1800) and William (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Greenholm in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) weaver at Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was surely related to Robert, who was a weaver there at the same time. Perhaps the same John was servant to Peter Brown at Newton in Bedrule Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the John whose son Robert was baptised in Bedrule in 1801. Elizabeth (b.1817) may also have been his child. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1793), Agnes (b.1795), John (b.1797), Adam (b.1801) and Andrew (b.1803). John (b.c.1780) labourer at Whitriggs according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Corbet in Wilton Parish in 1803. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Christian Veitch and their children included: Christian (b.1813); Andrew (b.1817); John (b.1818); and Christian (again, b.1821). Betty (b.1810), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. John (18th C.) married Helen Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Agnes Noble and their children included John (b.1820). Capt. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1830). He died unmarried and so the family estate passed to Charles, eldest son of his oldest sister, who sold it. He is probably the Capt. John who is listed as owner on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He appears to be different from the Capt. John recorded earlier. John (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Christian Veitch and theor son John was baptised in 1818. John (b.1805) son of James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He was a joiner at Old Gatehousecote in Hobkirk Parish in 1841 and by 1851 he was a joiner at Old Belses. He married Helen Curran Murray in 1831. Their children included Robert (b.1833/4), James (b.1836/7), Walter (b.1838/9), Isabella, John (b.1841), Helen and George. In 1855 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tazmania, where several sons worked as carpenters. Rev. John Hunter (19th C.) evangelical minister from Kelso from the early 1840s. The Congregational Church in Kelso started in 1841 and met in the Friends' Meeting house there. He led the first communion service of what would become the Hawick Congregational Kirk in May of 1848. This was in the Suscription Rooms, with an audience of about 45 people. He had been invited to Hawick in 1847 by William Munro, minister of the faltering Congregational group in Hawick, and took up the invitation in the Spring of the following year. The 'mission' of intense prayer meetings lasted for 7 weeks and had to be moved twice to larger premises. Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh joined after the first week, and they preached together for the next 6 weeks, the direct result of which was the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk (which became today's Congregational Kirk). He preached himself every other week until Alexander Duff arrived in late 1848. He was still in Kelso in 1875 when he donated to the Museum a 'view of Hassendean church'. John (18th C.) married Helen Murray in Hobkirk Parish in 1831. John (b.1811/2) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was at Old Larriston. His wife was Agnes Scott (transcribed 'Weight', from Tinwald) in 1846 and their children included Helen (b.1847/8), David (b.1848/9), Thomas (b.1850/1), Janet (b.1852/3), John (b.1853/4), William (b.1855/6), James (b.1857/8) and Andrew (b.1859/60). John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Deans and their son Robert was baptised in 1845. John (18th C.) married Janet Jerdon in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1846. John (19th C.) married Isabella Purdom in Castleton Parish in 1855. John (c.1835–1906) son of Joseph, he was born in Hawick, although this is likely to be the former farmstead in Northumberland. By 1851 the family were living at Swinburn in Northumberland. He worked for the Newcastle City Police for 8 years and was then prison officer and warder at the Newcastle Borough Gaol and Correction House. From 1871 he was Chief Warder and in 1875 was Master of the Berwick Union Workhouse. There were disputes with the authorities and by 1888 he had moved to North Shields where he was innkeeper. In 1855 he married Hannah Gray (1825–c.90). It appears the couple adopted his niece Sarah. In 1894 he secondly married his housekeeper Elizabeth 'Isabella' Rutter and the couple became tenants of the Britannic Inn and then the tiny Beehive Inn in South Shields. In 1898 he was found guilty of manslaughter after his wife was found dead (and beaten) in their upstairs room. He served 3 years in Newcastle Gaol. John (1838–1914) composer of the music for 'The Border Queen', written specifically for Thomson's words. Born in the West End, he was (probably) son of Thomas. However, his early years are unclear. He is probably the John who was 3 years old when listed with his sister Mary living with Ann Andison on the High Street, in 1851 was a 'pauper scholar' lodging on the Kirk Wynd and in 1861 was a boarder at 4 Melgund Place working as a shoemaker. He worked for 30 years as a shoemaker, with Robert & William Burnet of the Howegate. He apparently had a fine baritone voice and was prominent in the choir of the Catholic Church in Hawick. In 1884 he emigrated to Australia as a hotel keeper, to help out his widowed sister. There is a report of a 'Hawick Night' at the Middlesburgh Hotel there in 1885. He is recorded as a subscriber to the 1888 and 1889 Common Ridings, where his address is Royal Hotel, Rockdale, Sydney, N.S.W. He was a member of the Sydney Scottish Borderers Association, recorded as a judge at their races in 1899. He returned to Hawick in 1892 and 1901, and was apparently preparing to return for the quater-centenary when he took ill. It is not known whether he wrote any other music. In 1860 he married Margaret Gallagher. Their children included: Mary (b.1861); Ann (b.1863); Edward (b.1866); William (b.1866); John (b.1870); His daughter Margaret married Bailie John Gilroy.

He is buried at Rockwood Necropolis, Sydney. John (19th C.) iron merchant who was one of the early elders of St. Andrew's Free Church. Joseph (b.c.1801) born at Twizell or Bellingham in Northumberland, he was living in the Hawick area around the 1830s and 40s. Note that this was probably Hawick in Northumberland rather than Roxburghshire. His children included: Elizabeth (b.c.1834); John (b.c.1835); Isabella (b.c.1840); and James (b.c.1845). By 1851 he was a shepherd and widower, living at Swinburne in Northumberland and in 1861 he was in the same place with his daughter Jane. He may be the Joseph who married Isabella Telfer in Kirkharle in 1831 and whose children included William (b.1832), Elspeth (b.1833), John (b.1834) and Joseph (b.1835). Katherine (15th/16th C.) younger daughter of Philip, who was the only son of James of that Ilk and Wells. After the death of her brother Richard of that Ilk, there was dispute over succession to the lands and titles, Rutherford and Wells going to her sister Helen, with the rest going to their uncle Thomas. She lost out on her portion due to her fornication with a relative, James Stewart of Traquair, who she married when quite young. He died at Flodden and she claimed 'that in tender age she had been reft away by the said James Stewart, held in subjection and compelled to marry him'. She was probably the Katherine who supported Patrick Murray of Falahill in 1530, against an objection to his being Sheriff, with John Scott, Vicar of Hawick as procurator. In 1536 she was 'Lady of Trakquare' when she had a court order not to communicate with the rebel Douglases who were in England. Her son and heir to Traquair was William Stewart. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded as tenant in Oakwood in 1494/5. He had remission for a number of crimes: stealing cattle from several different people, including an ox from the Vicar of Ancrum; resetting Robert Young and William Scoon; stealing sheep from Yair and Kershope; stealing and resetting horses; burning the farm of Hartwood; and stealing from the widow of William Dickson. His surety was John Rutherford of Edgerston. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He had remission for stealing sheep from Ninian Murray out of Kershope, with George, junior Laird of Hundalee as his surety. He was 'in quhitmeir', which was probably Whitmuir. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cows from a servant of Margaret Murray out of Traquair. He was recorded being 'now in 'hartwod' (probably the lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk). His surety was Ralp Ker of Primside Loch. Mrs. Margaret nee Turnbull (1850/1–1925) keeper of the post office and shop in Cogsmill. She married William and had a son William (b.1891). Marjorie (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1324 along with Eve, the two being sisters of Roger, son of Finlay, when he had a charter for a tenement of their land in Clifton. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £20 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being 'of Rydvell' and Marie Turnbull was also there, but it is unclear where it was. Michael (18th/19th C.) clockmaker recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still on the list in 1801. It is possible he was a child of Hawick watchmaker William. Michael (19th C.) recorded as father of 'Frances Elliot' in a baptismal record in Hawick Free Kirk in 1843. This seems to be an error for William Rutherford, husband of May Rutherford. Mungo (16th C.) tenant of Nisbet. He was on the 1553/4 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Kentigernum Ruthirfurd in Nesbet' and may also have been known as Quentin. One of his descendants was John (brother of Gavin), who married Grizel Ramsay, and died at East Nisbet in 1630. Sir Nicholas (12th/13th C.) witness in the early 1300 to a charter where lands in Hownam were granted to Melrose Abbey. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) early member of the family. He witnessed a document in the Melrose charters in the period 1269–89. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He held the Manor of Doddington in Northumberland, which was forfeited by Edward I; in 1306 his grand-daughters and heiresses, Eva and Marjorie, petitioned the English King to restore their lands of 'Doddingstone'. 'Blind Harry', in his history of 1460, states that he met Sir William Wallace in Ettrick Forest with 60 warriors. He may have been related by marriage to Marion Braidfute, heiress of Lamington. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) witnessed a charter of lands in Mow in the period 1269–89. He swore fealty ot Edward I in 1296. In 1316 King Robert granted the land he had formerly held in Lauderdale to another man. His daughter Margaret also swore fealty in 1296. Nicholas (14th C.) recorded in 1357 on a panel of inquest held in Roxburgh under English authorities, relating to the lands of Caverton and Plenderleith. In 1361 he was on another panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Makerstoun. Nicholas of Yetholm (d.c.1457) probably son of Sir Richard of that Ilk. He may be the Nicholas who received charters for Kirk Yetholm, Grubet, Makerstoun, Corbet and other lands in the years 1421, 1426 and 1430. However, these generations are quite confused. Probably the same Nicholas was listed on a 'retour of inquest' in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam. He served as Bailie in Liddesdale for William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, recorded in 1428/9. He witnessed a charter for Alexander, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. He was also Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1436 for the granting of the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn; he is there 'Nicolaud de Rutherfurd de Zhetam'. He is probably the Nicholas who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. He is probably the Rutherford who was Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1439 for a charter for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1449, along with his brother James of that Ilk, he was appointed as a guarantor of a treaty with the English; in 1451 they were both among the conservators of the truce. He may be the 'Nechole of Rutherfurde' who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1456 of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1458 his heir John was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to his having previous handled the accounts of Jedburgh. He may be the 'Nocol' who was a younger son of Sir Richard of that Ilk, and ancestor of the Henderlee (or Hundalee) branch. His son John also witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee in 1436, and separately also John of Hundalee (showing that they are separate people). His son John married Elizabeth Rutherford of Yetholm. He had a grandson, John, who became Provost of Aberdeen, with that office also being filled by 3 later generations of the same family. Nicholas (15th/16th C.) resident of Hundalee. He is recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he had remission for several crimes, specifically stealing horses from Haddington Priory, a 'caldrone' from the wife of Richard Rutherford, a cow from Lawrence Pile, 5 cows from the Earl of Huntly and a horse from Thomas Hall; John of Hundalee and his brother Thomas were his sureties. Also in 1502, along with Thomas in the Grange, he had remission for supplying and intercommuning with other Rutherfords, who stole 5 horses from the King's army at Norham. And he was explicitly referred to as 'in hundole' when he had remission for his own part in the theft of the 5 horses at Norham; John of Hundalee was his surety and was surely related. Sir Nicholas of Hundalee (d.1572/3) probably son of George, whom he succeeded in about 1545. He was listed (along with his father George and brother Andrew) among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He may be the Nicholas said to have been one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland in 1531. In 1544 he was among local Lairds who gave their pledges to England. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford, accused of raiding the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in collusion with the English. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He is probably the Laird of Hundalee who was appointed as a deputy march warden in 1553. In 1553/4 he was first listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers and the pledge for him was Batholomew of the Grange. He and other Rutherfords also appeared to promise that Adam and Charles, their pledges, would remain in ward in Edinburgh. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He appears to have been Provost of Jedburgh 1559–65. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. Also in 1561 was (along with Walter Scott of Synton and Thomas Scott of Haining) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. In 1564 he and James Langlands of that Ilk were listed as sureties for Ormiston of that Ilk in the bond between the Scotts and Kers and their supporters. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Also in 1565 he was engaged in a serious dispute with the people of Jedburgh, and tried to insist that they should chose him as their Provost, because of family tradition; a number of Burgesses and local landowners were summoned before the Privy Council to resolve the 'allegeit bluid and inymitie'. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he and his sons Andrew and Nichol were sureties for George in the Grange. In 1596 and again in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He is said to have been at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575, although it seems more likely that was his son. He signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578 (although perhaps this was 1569). He married his distant cousin Margaret Rutherford and secondly married Margaret McDowell. His children included: George, who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and brother Andrew in 1569; Marion, who married Andrew Ker of Graden; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; and probably Martin, vicar of Makertoun. Nicholas (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. He may be the 'Nycholl Ruderfurd' who signed the bond between the Rutherfords and Kers in 1560. Nicholas of Hundalee (c.1565–c.1628) son of Andrew of Hundalee and Margaret Hoppringle of Smailholm. However, in some genalogies he is stated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherfords, Kers and Turnbulls in a bond of allegiance to King. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his father Andrew was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He is the 'Lard of Hundeley' whose brother Andrew was killed following an English raid in 1598; it was stated that he 'will die, haveing present assurance be the want of his senssis, not speakinge nor seeinge'. He was juror on a retour in 1601. He is probably the 'Hundielie' who signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliament, along with Douglas of Bonjedward, to meet with the Bailies of Jedburgh to fix the price of leather. In 1606 he renewed his charter of Grubet and in 1620 gave a charter of Belses to his son-in-law, Sir James Kerr of Crailing. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. He was listed as a land-owner in the Barony of Belses in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. He married Martha, daughter of Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded in 1633; John; James; Marie, who eventually became heiress and married Sir James Ker, 2nd Lord Jedburgh; Margaret; and Anna. Ninian 'Ringan' (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'Rinzeane of Rutherfurde'. Along with 'Hew of Douglace' he appears to have captured George Young, who Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring before the next Justice Aire in Jedburgh. He could be the Ninian in Ancrum who was surety for his brother John at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5; John did not appear. This same Ninian in Ancrum was allowed to 'compone' for many crimes in 1494/5, in particular stealing livestock and grain from several tenants in Fairnington, as well as thefts along with his brother John, with the Laird of Rutherford as surety. In 1502 his surety was his brother John (who was also surety for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston), who failed to appear and hence was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. Presumably he was the same as Ninian in 'uvir ancrum' who was surety for himself in 1502 and was fined and deprived of his lands until he found surety. Nicholas (b.1820/1) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was at Lawston in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Ann (b.1845/6), Jane (b.1847/8), Isabella (b.1849/50), Andrew (b.1851/2) and Hannah (b.1858/9). Oliver (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Elizabeth (b.1805), William (b.1807), Jane (b.1808), Alexander (b.1810), Violet (b.1812), Agnes (b.1814), Eleanor (b.1816), William Alexander (b.1818), Archibald John (b.1820) and John Chatto (b.1827). Peter (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1343. Peter 'Pete' (20th C.) co-owner of Rutherford Bros., along with his brother Andrew. He was an R.A.F. radar technician during WWII and was posted at Hawthornside. The radio business started in 6 Sandbed, expanding to be a cycle shop in 6 Sandbed and was sold in the late 1970s. Philip (d.bef. 1492) eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His widow later married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had an only son, Richard (who succeeded his grandfather), and 2 daughters: Helen, who married Sir John Foreman of Davine, secondly Andrew of Hunthill and may also have married 2 other times; and Katherine (or perhaps Christian), who married James Stewart of Traquair and later became heir of the Rutherfords of that

Ilk. He pre-deceased his father. In 1495 his widow (now wife of Scott of Branxholme) brought a case to the Lords of Council demanding payment of promised rentals. Philip (15th/16th C.) witness of a sasine for the Erskines in the lands of Synton in 1508. He could not have been the son of James of that Ilk (and Margaret Erskine), since that Philip died before his father, several years earlier. Perhaps the same Philip, son of Alan, was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn; his brother John was also listed. Philip (16th C.) probably younger son of Richard and son of Thomas of Edgerston. He is recorded as being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. As part of the agreement, Andrew, son and heir of Robert Ker of Newhall was to marry his daughter; he signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', meaning that he was unable to write. He may have been son of John in Edgerston, whose earlier murder was part of the feud. John Rutherford, also in Edgerston, who signed the 1560 bond, was probably his brother. In 1573 he and John 'breder in Edgarstoun' were among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he was 'in Edzarstoun' when along with several other Rutherfords, he had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was a tutor to his brother Richard's son Thomas, 'the Black Laird'. He may have been father of 'Philip's Andro'. recorded in 1601. Richard (14th C.) recorded as Provost of Stirling in the Exchequer Rolls in 1330. Perhaps the same Richard was already deceased in 1358 when his son William forfeited his lands in the Barony of Crawford Lindsay in Lanarkshire. Sir Richard (c.1345–1424/5) probably son of William (or possibly a younger brother). He was said to be a favourite of King Robert III. He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the 1380s. In 1390 he was 'of that Ilk' when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. He was one of the ambassadors to the Court of England in 1398 and was also Warden of the Marches from about this time. Additionally in 1398 he was one of the 'borowis' for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document. About 1399 he was captured by the English, according to the story, along with his 5 sons (although he may in fact have had no more than 3 sons) and John Turnbull ('out with the sword'). An English record of 1400 forbid his captors to release him and other Scottish leaders. In 1424 (apparently not long before his death) he was listed on a 'retour of inquest' for lands of Hownam, witnessed at Hawick. He married Jean Douglas and their sons were: Sir James; John of Chatto, ancestor of the Hunthill branch; and Nichol, ancestor of the Hundalee branch. He was succeeded by James, although there is some suggestion that he was predeceased by his son and succeeded by his grandson James. He may also have had sons William (or Gilbert) of Eckford and Sir John, who was killed at Cravant in France along with Sir John Turnbull. Richard of that Ilk (d.c.1502) grandson and heir of James of Rutherford, only son of Philip. He was the last Rutherford of that Ilk. He was served heir to his 'goodfather' (presumably grandfather) according to an inquesy in 1499. A document of 1500 shows lands of his going to several Kerrs because of 'non-entry'. He is probably the Richard whose name led a 1501 list of Rutherfords and others whose fines were compounded by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He died without children, leading to a dispute over who should succeed to the estates and titles, these mainly going to his uncle Thomas, although his sister Helen inherited the estates of Rutherford and Wells. However, in 1502 the gift of ward of the lands of Rutherford was granted by James IV to Andrew, Bishop of Moray and his brother John Forman. Also in 1502, Nicholas had remission for stealing a 'cavobi le caldrone' from his wife (whose name is unfortunately not given). Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. In 1502 he had remission for wounding George Young in Minto Craig, as well as stealing several items from Young. His surety was John Rutherford of Hundalee. Richard of Edgerston (16th C.) son of Thomas (or perhaps Robert). He is probably the 'Richart Rutherfurd of Edyarstoun' listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledges were Charles and John 'sone of the Grene'. He may have succeeded about 1558 and in 1559 he finally settled the dispute over succession to Rutherford lands and titles with his cousin, Sir John Stuart of Traquair (who received the estates of Rutherford and Wells). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands with John Haitlie of Mellerstain in order to settle the feud between those particular families and he signed 'at the pen led by the notar' (meaning that he could not write himself). In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1564 he was 'Lard of Edyarstoun' when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle. Also in 1567 he was surety for entering several men with the Warden. In 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour. He also signed a bond to suppress the Border thieves in 1569 and another recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with John, younger of Hunthill, and 2 Turnbulls. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He was probably the Laird in 1572 when there was a complaint that he and other lairds had reset 2 men named Hall (from either Oxnam, Jed or Rule Water), who had stolen 140 cattle from over the Border. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule) for several men from Southdean, as well as for John of Hunthill. He himself swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. He signed a 'bond of manrent' to Archibald, Earl of Angus in 1574. He was at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. Also in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1583/4 he (or his son) was among the Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Either he or his son was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. He married Elizabeth ('Bittie'), sister of John Rutherford, the 'Cock o Hunthill'. He was probably succeeded by his son Richard. Other sons may have been: John of the Tofts, a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot; Philip, tutor of Edgerston; and Gilbert of 'the Aicks'. Richard (16th C.) Provost of Jedburgh. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1569 he was also among the signatories of a bond to suppress thieves on the Border. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for Hob Young in Waterside. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. Also in 1574 he was a witness for the Turnbulls in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He may have been the 'Gray Will' elected as Provost of Jedburgh in 1590, against the wishes of the King, who had ordered the position to be filled by Ker of Cessford. He appears to have been Provost of Jedburgh 1569–81. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1605) probably son of Richard (although not all sources agree there was another generation here). He may be the Richard of Edgerston in 1587 when Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as his cautioner. He is probably the Richard mentioned in a 1590 case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain 'bills' of English complainant. In 1592 his surety was William Stewart of Traquair. He was witness to the 1595 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He married Jean, daughter of William Elliot in Hartsgarth. They had a son Thomas (the 'Black Laird'), and a daughter Margaret, who married Thomas Haliburton of Newmains. He may also have had 8 other sons who helped him in his exploits on the Border; however, this could be confusion among generations, since it is separately claimed that he was helped by his 6 brothers. His daughter Jean was served as his heir in 1611. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1615) eldest son of Thomas 'the Black Laird'. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Robert. Richard of Littleheugh 'Dickon Draw-the-Sword' (d.c.1634) son of John 'the Cock o Hunthill' or possibly William of Littleheugh. He led the Jedburgh men at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575. He is probably the Richard, son of William of Littleheugh who was accused in 1590 of raiding into England. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He was on the inquest for the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622 and 1623. He also served as Provost of Jedburgh, an ofice later held by his nephew, John of Bankend. He appears to have been unable to write, since his signature had to be led when he supported a bond with the Earl of Bothwell. He married Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Lilias' sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died without an heir) and John of Capehope. John of Capehope's grandson, Capt. John, became 5th Lord Rutherford in 1737. Richard (18th C.) married Mary Middlemas in Minto Parish in 1742. Richard (18th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Southdean Parish in 1786. Their children included James (b.1787) and Janet (b.1789). Richard (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1791) and Christian (b.1794). Richard (b.1822/3) tailor in Hawick. In 1851 he was a Master Tailor at Market Place (i.e. the Tower Knowe), employing 1 man and 1 apprentice). His wife was Agnes. He is probably the Richard who married Agnes Latimer in 1845, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Richard (19th C.) married Isobel Amos in Castleton Parish in 1842. Robert (12th C.) perhaps the earliest known member of the family. Sometime in the reign of David I he witnessed a charter to Gervase de Rydal. He is there recorded as 'Robertus dominus de Rodyrforde'. There is no clear genealogy connecting him with later generations. However, it seems likely he was an ancestor of Hugh, who is recorded in about 1200 and Gregor, who is recorded in about the 1210s to 1230s. Robert (13th/14th C.) valet of Sir 'Ebulo de Montibus', Constable at Stirling Castle. In 1310/1 he was recorded in an English document regarding provisions for the Castle. His surname is written 'Rotherforde'. Sir Robert (d.1330) son of Sir Nicholas. He was said to be a friend of Robert the Bruce, accompanying him on the trip to Palestine with the heart of James Douglas. He died in Spain. Robert of Chatto (c.1410–bef. 95) son of Sir George of Chatto and Janet. However, these generations are confused, and it may be that there are two men here, one being a son of John of Chatto. In 1429 there was a confirmation by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the gift made formerly to his father George, of the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, 'Eddylliscluch' and Hangingshaw; this was confirmed in 1439/40. He may be the Robert who in 1437 was one of those who was on the 'retour' at Jedburgh for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the East Mains of Hawick. He was also on the 1450 retour for William Douglas to inherit his father's Barony of Hawick. In 1464 there is a grant of lairs in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey to him and his wife Margaret (a highly unusual example of the granting of the right of sepulture). In 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also on the panel to rule on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1465 he had a charter from Simon of Glendinning for the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill (which he is said to have acquired by marriage). He is recorded in 1468 in a document relating to lands of Crailing for the Homes of that Ilk. In 1471 he witnessed a document for Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Simon Glendonwyn. He had a charter of the lands of Hunthill and half of Scraesburgh from his father-in-law in 1465/6. He witnessed a charter for James Rutherford of that Ilk in 1468, another for William, Lord Abernethy in 1471. He is probably the Robert who was pledge for James of that Ilk in 1471 and whose fine for absence from the Beltane Court was remitted in 1478. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. In 1486 he is mentioned along with George and Richard, probably his sons. He was succeeded by his son George of Hunthill, while Robert of Chatto was probably another son. Robert (15th C.) assigned the lease of Aikwood in 1484, along with his grandson and heir, Ninian. He leased it with his son Lawrence in 1485. Robert (15th C.) son of Lawrence. In 1490 he was assigned the Crown lands of the Middlestead of Hartwood. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Todlaw, probably the one near Jedburgh. In 1502 he had remission for stealing cushions, silks and other clothing from Jedburgh Kirk, with Robert Turnbull of Blindhaugh as his surety. Robert (16th C.) listed as 'Roben' among 'Scottesmen rebels resete within England' in 1540. He was said by the English Wardens to be hiding in Redesdale. He may be related to George 'Cockbank'.

Robert (16th C.) recorded being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He and his friends were said to be responsible for killing William Haitlie 'in Fawnis', while his own son John was killed by the Haitlies. It is unclear if he was Laird of Edgerston, or just tenant there, but it seems likely he was father of Richard, who was Laird in the 1560s. He may have been the 'lard of Egerston' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, 'the Black Laird'. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. His brother Andrew became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1619. In 1619 he complained that William, brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was still at the horn. He acted as a cautioner for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638 (even although it appears to say 'W.'). Around 1640 he purchasedthe Mill of Edgerston and other lands, which had been inherited by Francis Elliot of Hartshaugh through marriage. He firstly married Marion (or Margaret) Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Turnbull of Minto. He was succeeded by his son John. He may have been father of 'Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt', who is recorded in a document of 1666 describing the division of the choir of Jedburgh Abbey into burial lairs for various Rutherfords. Robert (17th C.) notary public recorded in 1640 at the admission of Henry Elliot as minister of Bedrule. Robert (d.1724) younger son of John of Hunthill. In 1685 he succeeded his brother Archibald as 4th Lord Rutherford, also inheriting the family lands comprising the Barony of Hunthill, including the 10 merk lands called Gledstane's Lands. In 1691 he sold Nether Chatto and the Barony of Scraesburg to Sir John Scott of Ancrum. He sat as a peer in Parliament until the Union. He married Dame Sara Ollens and they had 2 children: Margaret, who married Charles Scott of Palace Hill; and John, who died young. Like his elder brothers, he died without male issue and the honours were later claimed by Capt. John, decendant of Richard of Littleheugh. Robert of Bowland (d.bef. 1728) son of John of Edgerston. He purchased Bowland (on Gala Water) in 1697. In 1712 he purchased Hollinglee and Thornilee in Ettrick. He married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; she was widow of Alexander Pringle of Whytbank. In 1728 his widow resigned her annuity to her only son James, who succeeded and was M.P. for Selkirkshire. They also had a daughter, Barbara. Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) solicitor in Edinburgh, he was referred to in the family as 'the Nottar'. He was said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He served as Deputy Receiver General for Scotland. He inherited some lands from his father, acquired parts of Capehope from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1701 and bought lands in Scraesburgh in 1702. In 1719, 1727 and probably 1734 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk, and a bond in 1731. In 1727 his son James, who was a merchant in Edinburgh, became a Burgess and Guild Brother there by his right. His lands of Fairnilee in Melrose Parish were valued at £2015 in the 1740s. He firstly married Bethia Lidderdale and they had 2 sons, David and Capt. William, neither of whom produced a male heir. In 1699 he secondly married Alison, only surviving daughter of John Ker of Shaw. Their numerous family included: Robert, who married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton; and Alison, who wrote a version of 'Flowers of the Forest'. He was the last of his family to be buried in the Bell-house at Jedburgh Abbey. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Susana (b.1701) and James (b.1703). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as a 'walker' (presumably a 'waulker'). He married Helen Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1706) and Margaret (b.1720). Other children, baptised in Hawick, who are probably his include: John and William (b.1713); and John (again, b.1716). The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, and in 1720 were John Wilkie, tailor in Swanshiels and cooper Robert Hardie. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Bell in Castleton in 1709. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Elizabeth Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1721. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of James, surgeon in Jedburgh. He married Esther, daughter of Robert Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1738 he was one of the 3 'heirs-portioners' (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitlaw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains of that Ilk. The lands of Dod were divided among them. Rev. Robert (1719/20–90) son of Gideon of Kidheugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1746 and became preacher at Teviothead

(or Caerlenrig) from 1750 until probably 1756. He moved to Longframlington in Northumberland in that year and became minister at Castleton in 1763, where he was presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–89. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Widdrington of Huxley in Northumberland, and she died in 1768, aged 26. He wrote 'A Scripture Catechism' (1794). Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, who was a solicitor in Edinburgh, said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He inherited his father's lands in Ancrum and Scraesburgh. He is probably the Robert of Fairnilee recorded in a discharge in Selkirk in 1743. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton. Robert of Fairnington (1723–c.94) 4th son of Sir John of Edgerston and Elizabeth Cairncross. He was created a Baron of the Russian Empire following the assistance he gave during Russia's war with Turkey in 1770. He repurchased the lands of Fairnington in 1779, planting trees and naming fields after some of his Russian friends. He also built a summer house on top of Down's Law in the 1780s; this was known ever after as the 'Baron's Folly'. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and was described at that time as being 'very independent'. Also in 1788 (and still in 1811) he was listed as owner of Fairnington and neighbouring lands in Roxburgh Parish; he was listed in the county valuation as 'Baron of the Russian Empire'. He was taxed for having 3 female servants in the period 1785–91, as well as 3 male servants 1785–91 and 4 in 1792, 1793 and 1794 (when he was deceased). He is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls in the 1780s and 1790s, but was deceased in the year 1794/5, when the duty was paid on his behalf by John of Edgerston. He left Fairnington to his nephew, John of Edgerston. There is a portrait of him by Benjamin West. A stoy is told of how he met shoemaker Tam Weens after a drunken night in the Cross Keys in Hawick, and when commenting about the quality of the leather for a new pair of boots, Weens mistook him for a gentleman's servant, giving him a tongue-lashing for being overly fussy. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751). Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Gowanlock and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1758. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751) and Andrew (b.1757). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Robert (b.1743) and Agnes (b.1753). Robert (18th/19th C.) ploughman in Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was listed as a herd at Newton on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the Robert who married Agnes Reid in Bedrule in 1801 and whose daughter Jane was baptised there in 1802. Robert (d.1787) mason in Hawick. He married Mary Simpson in 1761; she was daughter of Andrew Simpson and Agnes Turnbull. Their children included: Thomas (b.1762); Caleb (b.1765), Burgh Officer in Hawick; Helen (b.1767); unnamed (b.1773); Susan (b.1775); and Robert (b.1777), known as a fiddler. The witnesses in 1767 were wright Francis Paisley and cooper John Miller. He died in Hawick. He was probably born in 1738 in Cavers, son of Thomas, although it has been suggested he is the son of Walter and Isabella Turnbull born in Wilton in 1724. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth 'Withrenton' in Castleton Parish in 1767. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Hannah (b.1777). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Betty (b.1790). Robert (b.1768/9) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Branxholme Town. He was recorded there as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and was also stated to have been a farm grieve. He married Jane (1784–1859), daughter of James Crawford and Janet Elliot; she was from Wilton, also known as Jenny and Janet and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Their children, mostly baptised at East Bank Kirk, included: William (b.1812); Walter (b.1814), who succeeded as shepherd and emigrated to Canada; Nelly (b.1817); an unnamed child (b.1822); and Charles Dickson (b.1824), a grocer living in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1793. Robert (b.c.1775) labourer in Southdean Parish. He was a farm servant at Ruletownhead according to the Militia ballot in 1801. He was living at Ruletownhead (or Bowset) in 1841 and his widow was there in 1851. His wife was Agnes (from Minto Parish) and their children included Jane (b.1818/9) and Robert (b.1821/2). Robert (1776/7–1843) probably son of mason Robert. He is probably the weaver Robert who was listed in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire; the annotation

'Serving' suggests he had been selected in th ballot and later enlisted, with his name appearing again in 1798 and this being confirmed on the 1799 list of balloted men. He was known to have been in the Militia in his youth, and noted for refusing to flog a fellow soldier. Afterwards he was not himself given corporal punishement (perhaps because he was a balloted soldier), but had his wages reduced by twopence a day as a result; it was said he submitted to this cheerfully for the man 'had dune him nae ill'. He was well known locally as a fiddler, being described by James Wilson as 'long remembered by the present generation as a charming performer on the violin' and 'without any of the dashing execution of the race of youngsters who strive to dazzle rather than delight, his object was to please'. He paid a yearly visit to Tyneside and performed often at Minto House. A portrait of him exists in the Museum, painted by Adam Brown, and donated in 1897 by his grand-daughter, Mrs. Joseph Wilson. He is probably the Robert, recorded as 'musician' on Walter's Wynd in 1841, living with wife Mary and other family members. He married Mary Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1809); William (b.1811); and Thomas (b.1813). Mary (b.1821/2), Martha (b.1827/8) and Robert (b.1834/5), living with him in 1841, may have been grandchildren. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1801) and Anne (b.1804). He may be the Robert who married Janet Robson and had children Samuel (b.1803), Adam (b.1808), Isabel (b.1810), Robert (b.1812) and Andrew (b.1813). Robert (18th/19th C.) weaver at Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He was surely related to John, who was a weaver there at the same time. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Riddell and their children included Robert (b.1809), William (b.1811) and Thomas (b.1813). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Walker in Southdean in 1815. He is probably the roughly 45-year-old labourer from Hobkirk living at Bairnkine in 1841, living with his wife Agnes and children Isabel, Janet, Walker and John. He was a shepherd and widower with 3 children at Barkine in 1851. Robert (1789–1838) son of Thomas and Maydeline Dryden. He was probably nephew of Caleb. He was a builder at Millbank, i.e. the Mill Path. He probably owned the building on the south side of the top of the Mill Path, labelled 'Mr. Rutherford' on Wood's 1824 map. He is recorded as a builder at 'Townhead' on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and at 'Mill bank' in 1837. He married Jane, daughter of William Waldie; she married William Laidlaw after she was widowed and died in 1871. His children included: Mary (1815–80), or 'May', who married William Rutherford, watchmaker; Thomas (1816–69), who married Mary Hutton, and died in Newcastle, New South Wales; William (b.1818), who married Beatrix Brydon and emigrated to Ontario, where he may have named the village of Millbank; Robert (1821–43); Elizabeth (1822–93), who married George Hogg; John (1826–75), who married Elizabeth Hackins; Jane (1828–55), first wife of auctioneer James Oliver; Agnes (b.1830), who married James Johnston and William Laidlaw; George (1831–58), who died in Hong Kong; and James (1833–8). Most of his family were still living at Millbank on the 1841 census. Robert (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Oliver and their children included George (b.1834), James (b.1837), Oliver (b.1844) and Helen (b.1846). Robert (1814–bef. 61) son of James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge. In 1851 he is listed as a joiner at 4 Bonchester Bridge, employing 1 man. He married Isabella, daughter of shepherd Andrew Hall, in Hobkirk Parish in 1850. Their children were: Helen (1850–60); James (b.1852), who was a joiner with Douglas Taylor; and Isabella (b.1855, although it is unclear if he was the father). He went to America, leaving his family behind, and died there. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living at Hallrule Cottages. Robert (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen Stewart in 1852 and their children included: Robert (b.1852); and Donald (b.1854). The baptisms were recorded in Southdean Parish, as well as in Jedburgh Associate Kirk. Robert (19th C.) married Charlotte Renwick in 1850. The marriage was recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean and Parishes. Robert (b.1828/9) from Maxton Parish, he was farm steward at Courthill in Wilton Parish in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Agnes R., Elizabeth and Susan. Robert (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Mary Shiel and their children included Janet (b.1852) and Mary (b.1854). Robert (c.1846–98) son of shepherd Walter. He became a shepherd himself. In 1870 he married Ellen Nichols. His children included Helen or Nellie (b.1870); Walter (b.1871), Ann (b.1875), Roberton (b.1877), Janet (b.1879), Mary (b.1880), Aggie, born in Canada; and John, also born in Canada. In 1882 the family emigrated to Huron County, Ontario and he was farmer at East Wawamash. He was killed by a bull on his won farm in the Camille district of Manitoba. Samuel (17th C.) described as servitor to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1642 when he accused a large group of his drinking companions of stealing his wallet and its £11 contents. He was also accused by John 'Lethane' of trying to retrieve his wallet through violence. Rev. Samuel (c.1600–61) born in Nisbet, he was educated in Jedburgh and Edinburgh. He became minister at Anwoth, Kirkcudbrightshire in 1627. He was appointed Professor of Divinity at St. Andrews in 1639 and served as Rector there. He published extensively and his writing was influential long after his death. In particular his book 'Lex, Rex' (1644) was a defence of Presbyterianism and was burned in Edinburgh and St. Andrews. In 1866 Rev. James McEwen donated to the Museum 'a MS. sketch' of him, as well as part of the pulpit when he was at Amwath. Steven (16th/17th C.) younger son of John 'the Cock o Hunthill' and brother of the next John of Hunthill. In 1582 he was recorded in a document with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus; he signed 'witht my hand led at the pen be the notar'. He is also recorded in 1593. Susannah (b.c.1795) from England, she was publican in Newcastleton, recorded at the King's Arms in Pigot's 1837 directory. This was probably the same place that became the Liddesdale Hotel at about 17 Douglas Square. In 1841 she was living with Thomasina (probably her mother). Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for premeditated felonies carried out against him at Bonjedward. The nature of the crimes is not given, but were presumably plundering of his farm. He could be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.bef. 1504) killed in Jedburgh Abbey. At the Justice-aire of 1504 Lord Home, the Earl of Bothwell, Hugh Douglas in Biggar and several men in Jedburgh became sureties for a list of men who were accused of his murder. Later in 1504 there was a long list of tenants, factors and servants of the Archbishop of Glasgow, Robert Blackadder, who had remission for involvement in his murder. In 1506 there was also remission to John Forman and several Rutherfords for involvement in his murder. It is unclear which branch of the Rutherfords he belonged to, and what the circumstances were that led to his death. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Nicholas, who was denounced as a rebel in 1494/5 for the murder of 'Duthac Rutherfurde' and who was also 'at the horn' in 1498 for his part in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. The Thomas who was connected with the death of Patrick Hepburn was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Adam Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Thomas of Edgerston (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of James of that Ilk and Wells. His brothers Philip and John died before him, and he succeeded his nephew Richard. However, his niece Helen gained Rutherford and Wells, and he kept Edgerston. He was thus the progenitor of the Lairds of Edgerston. He was probably the son of James of that Ilk who was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1502 Richard Hunter had remission for stealing sheep from his lands at Edgerston. He may be the Thomas who in 1503 witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He may be the Thomas of that Ilk who (along with John of Hundalee and George of Hunthill) had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home in 1516. He was succeeded by his son Richard (or possibly Robert). Other sons may have been: Philip, who lived at Edgerston and was tutor to his nephew Thomas, the 'Black Laird'; John, who is said to have had 6 digits on each hand and foot, and to have had 'memorable strength and courage', and whose descendants occupied 'the Tofts'; and Archibald of the Townhead, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Townhead and of 'the Hall'. It is possible he was the Thomas who was on the panel in 1482 for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He may have been the Thomas who as on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525, and who was listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Thomas of the Grange (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Hundalee. He seems likely to be the brother of the Laird of Hundalee who in 1493 acted as surety for Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He was described being in the Grange of Abbotrule at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he acted as surety for Patrick Rodman. Also in 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Hundalee when he was surety for Jedburgh men. In 1502 he was recorded as brother of John of Hundalee when the pair of them served as sureties for Nicholas (who may have been related). Also in 1502 he had remission for resetting Gilbert Oliver, a man called 'Wobstar' and James Rutherford, who had stolen animals; John of Hundalee was his surety. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for stealing livestock and for resetting other thieves, including Nixons, who raided Raperlaw and elsewhere, and Englishmen from Redesdale; again John of Hundalee was his surety. He is listed as being 'in the Grange' among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His sons Andrew, George and 'Dougal Stible' are also listed (the last presumably being a son-in-law). He was probably succeeded by George. Thomas (16th C.) first man listed as a witness to the instrument of resignation for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30, witnessed at Cavers Kirk. It is unclear whether he was a church official or local landowner, or how he was related to other Rutherfords. Sir Thomas 'the Black Laird of Edgerston' (c.1550–1615) son of Richard and grandson (or perhaps great-grandson) of the first Robert of Edgerston. His nickname came from his complexion and dark hair ('being of a swarthy complexion and black haired'), but he was also known as a local leader to be reckoned with, along with his 9 sons (or perhaps this is his 8 brothers). He supposedly turned the tide of battle at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 when he arrived with the Jedburgh contingent; however, he only succeeded as Laird in 1605 and hence it was likely to have been his father or grandfather Richard who was at the Raid. He is also said to have led the Rutherfords at the Battle of the Hencleugh. He is recorded as son and heir of Richard in 1587, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. He married Jean, daughter of Gavin Eliott of Stobs, who may have been his cousin (although there is much confusion over this). He is said to have had 9 sons (but this is not documented, and may also have referred to his brothers). He was succeeded by his sons Richard and Robert in turn. Another son was Andrew, who became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1619. A daughter, Jean, inherited Stobs, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. He is also said to have had a daughter Joan, who married William, called 'Neck of Steel', son of Robert Elliot of Larriston (but this may be confusion). Thomas 'Lippie' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear what his nickname referred to. Thomas of Tofts (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Rutherfurde of Toftis' in 1610 when he was on an inquest relating to lands in Rulewater. His brother William was listed among fugitives in 1618. His son Robert was accused of stealing horses in 1623. Thomas of Hunthill (16th/17th C.) son of John of Hunthill. In 1583 he and his father were summoned to appear at Jedburgh to answer charges. He was also denounced as a rebel (along with his father and others) in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was 'son and apparent heir' of John of Hunthill when his cautioner was recorded as William of Littleheugh. He is probably the 'younger of Hunthill' listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March, particularly in pursuing the Earl of Bothwell. In 1592 he was summoned for charges of treason for being an accomplice of the Earl of Bothwell, but his 'horning' was lifted soon afterwards. He was juror on a retour in 1601. Also in 1601 he was head of a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace; his brothers William and Robert were also listed and after confessing he was warded in Edinburgh Castle for 24 hours. Alexander Lord Home was his cautioner that he would pay 500 merks to the Crown for 'shooting ith pistolets'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace and was cautioner for John in the Tofts and his sons. In 1603 he was cautioner for George of 'Ewingstoun'. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance of a man he was cautioner for. In 1612 he had a charter for the lands of Hunthill and others. He married Jean, daughter of John Cranston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son John of Hunthill. His daughter Grizel married Adam Kirkton of Stewartfield, the contract being signed at Wolfelee in 1612. Thomas of Ruecastle (16th/17th C.) probably a younger son of George of Longnewton, he was served heir to his brother Andrew 'called of Quhytehouse in Nesbit'. He had a charter of 'Rouchcastell' in 1642, along with the attached forest and the mains of Harden. In 1643 he was 'in Whitehouse' when his lands in Ruecastle were valued at £240. In 1656 he was referred to as 'Thomas of Rowcastell, called of Quhytehouse, in Nesbit'. He is probably the Thomas 'of whythouse' who paid tax on £340 in Bedrule Parish in 1663, as well as £144 worth of land he had purchased from the Earl of Traquair. He married Elizabeth Mader. It is unclear how he was related to the Thomas of Ruecastle who was served heir to his father John of Knowesouth in 1666. Sir Thomas of Hunthill (d.c.1680) 3rd son of John. He succeeded his brother John in 1656. He is probably the 'Thomas Rutherfoord called of the towrs in Sjraisburgh' recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. In 1664 he succeeded to the estate of Rutherford after the death of his relative Andrew, Lord Rutherford and Earl of Teviot. In 1665 he complained to the Archbishop of Glasgow over rights to the loft in Jedburgh Church. He was also made the 2nd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Regality of Hawick in 1672. In that year he wrote to the inhabitants of Hawick exonerating them from attending the Head Court at Thornhill (near Drumlanrig) that year; he wrote from Jedburgh, suggesting that he could be same man as Thomas of Hunthill or Thomas of Knowesouth. Also in 1672 he was recorded, when setting the fair in October, being asked to use the Hawick drummer and piper to 'set the fair', rather than the ones from Jedburgh; he called the roll in the kirkyard for all the inhabitants to ride the fair. Thomas (17th C.) residend of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included William (b.1659). Thomas (17th C.) residend of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary (or Manie) Fletcher in 1660 and their children included: Walter (b.1661). Thomas of Ruecastle or Knowesouth (17th C.) eldest son of John of Knowesouth. In 1666 he was served heir to his father's 7-pound-10-shilling land of Ruecastle, with 'lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle' (annexed to the Barony of Grubet), as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle with a piece of land called Newtonhaugh (in Bedrule Parish), some land in the Earldom of Traquair and a further 1½ merklands in Ruecastle (in the Barony of Ulston). It is unclear how he was related to the John of Ruecastle recorded a little earlier, but was described in 1666 as 'junior' (suggesting this was used to distinguish him, or just that he was a minor when he succeeded). In 1673 his brother Robert became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He paid the land tax in Bedrule Parish in 1678, the lands then valued at £511 and included lands previously in Ruecastle. In 1687 he sub-leased the lands of Minto 'Kaims and Hills' from William Mather. He is probably the Thomas of Knowesouth who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He may be have been Laird in 1694 when the Hearth Tax was paid on the Knowesouth estate. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1673 he married Isobel, daughter of Robert Ker of Linton (hereditary Bailie of Jedburgh) and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Scott in Roberton Parish in 1680. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Isobel Ker. He married Cecilia Douglas, grand-daughter of George Douglas of Ardit, and daughter of William Douglas and Agnes Scott (daughter of Patrick of Ancrum). His children included: Ann, who married William Chisholme of Broadlee in 1702; John (b.c.1685), who was probably a doctor, in 1710 married Isobell, daughter of the deceased William Scott of Raeburn and as a captured Jacobite supporter was transported to Virginia; William, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and Christina (1702–82), who married Gilbert Ainslie in 1724. Although his son John was a Jacobite, he himself stayed loyal to the Crown; however, he probably had to pay in order for his son to be settled in Virginia without being a slave. Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1683, he became minister of Southdean Parish in 1689. However, he was deprived later that year for 'not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, and not praying for their majesties William and Mary' (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy), and was said to have instead prayed for the late King James. The case was brought to the Privy Council by a group of Southdean Parishioners. He was declared a fugitive, but what happened to him afterwards is not known. Thomas of Edgerston, Hunthill and Wells (c.1650–1720) 3nd son of John. He succeeded after his brother Andrew's death in 1718, but only held the lands for a couple of years before his own death. They had become 'of that Ilk' in 1703 when Robert Earl of Rutherford resigned his lands. He was also Laird of Wells, purchasing it (with his wife's money) from Charles Stewart, 4th Earl of Traquair in 1687. He was listed as Laird of Wells in 1694 when he paid for 19 hearths in several parishes. He was also 'of Wells' when he contributed £800 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1690 and 1704 he was listed as Laird of Wells on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. However, in 1707 he sold Wells it to William Elliot, and was thus the last Rutherford Laird of Wells. He also acquired Bonjedward, Mounthooly and Scraesburgh, before 1707, when he was recorded as owner of more than £2200 worth of land in Bonjedward. He is probably the Thomas of that Ilk who in 1716 suggested that he donate his personal library for use of the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of Walter Riddell of Minto and Catherine Nisbet of Dirleton. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir John. His other children were: Barbara; Catherine; Jean, who secondly married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1718; Agnes; Isabella; Susanna; and Violet, who married Robert Scott of Falnash. A stone preserved in the new Wells House built in the early 20th century, bore 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of both him and his wife. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Walter (b.1691) and Robert (b.1694). Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Janet Elliot in Castleton in 1707. Some of these children, baptised in Castleton, are probably theirs (the others perhaps being children of Robert and Agnes Bell): Agnes (b.1708); Mary (b.1708); Thomas (b.1708); Janet (b.1710); and Michael (b.1710). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Elizabeth (b.1735) and Robert (b.1738). Thomas (18th C.) married Bessy Taylor in Minto Parish in 1743. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Helen 'Fameltoun' in 1747 and their children included George (b.1748). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included James (b.1752) and William (b.1755). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1746), John (b.1748) and an unnamed child (b.1757). Thomas (18th C.) married Agnes Richardson in Southdean Parish in 1761. Thomas of Knowesouth (1742–96) son of John and Mary Ker, he held a charter of Knowesouth in 1758 (his father being declared insane). He was descended from the Rutherfords of Ruecastle. He gained a part of Lanton Common when it was divided in 1769. In 1788 he was 'younger of Knowsouth' when his lands of Westfield (and others) in Lanton were listed in the valuation roll. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having a small estate, being 'once Sheriff-Substitute of the County under Oliver of Dinlabyre' and probably being a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–94. He paid tax for having a male servant in 1778, 1779 and 1794. In the 1788 county valuation he is recorded as owner of 'Lands in Rewcastle acquired from his father', valued at £48 10s (including teinds). He is still recorded as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls of lands in Lanton, including 'Lady Lands, formerly in Cavers Parish'. He married Margaret Elliot (perhaps also known as Christine) in Bedrule Parish in 1765, the marriage also recorded in Edinburgh; she was daughter of William Elliot of Kirklands in Ancrum Parish. Their children included: Thomas (b.1772), who probably died young; John (b.1774), who briefly succeeded; George (b.1775), in the Royal Navy, who succeeded for a short period; Nelly (b.1777), who probably died young; Anne (1778–1801), who married Dr. William Somerville; and Cicely (1778–1804), also known as Cecilia, who died at Knowesouth. None of these children produced heirs. He later married Ann, daughter of William Falla. Their children were: Thomas; Charles; Hugh, who emigrated to Ontario; and William, who lived in Ancrum and married Janet Angus. He is also recorded in Hawick in 1789 when his son Walter with Helen Scott (who appears to have 'N.' after her name) was baptised, with witnesses Andrew Elliot (servant to Rev. William Sharp) and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. After his death the order of inheritance was complicated and disputed, but the estate eventually went to his sister Jean, who married Thomas Scott, uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Rieve in 1768 and their children included: James (b.1769); John (b.1771); Margaret (b.1773); and Walter (b.1776). The witnesses in 1773 and 1776 were William Mitchellhill and Robert Riddell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1766), John (b.1767), Thomas (b.1768), Mary (b.1768) and William (b.1771). There may be 2 separate families here. Thomas (18th/19th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825, where he is listed as 'watchmaker'. He could be the son of clockmaker William who was born in Hawick in 1784. Thomas (b.1762) son of mason Robert and Mary Simpson. He was elder brother of Caleb. He married Magdalen Dryden in 1787 and their children included: Margaret (b.1786); and Robert (1789–1838). He may have secondly married Jane Elliot in 1791 and their children included Francis (b.1794). It seems likely he was a mason, like his father. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Spittal-on-Rule according to the ballot lists for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Jane Elliot, also from Hawick. Their son Francis was baptised in 1794. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw in 1773. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Walter (b.1789), Margaret (b.1791) and Mary (b.1804). Thomas (b.c.1780) recorded at Branxholme Park on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. Thomas (b.c.1780) recorded at Teindside on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. He is separate from the Thomas at Branxholme Park. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Catherine (b.1806). Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Betty Bunyan in Cavers Parish in 1812. Thomas (1784/5–1855) son of shepherd Thomas and Helen Reeve. He was a farm worker at Haysike, and is recorded there in 1841. He married Jane, daughter of agricultural worker George Michie, and she died in 1859, aged 75. Their children were: Thomas, gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa; John, shoemaker; and Maggie, who married James Wintrup. Thomas (b.1807/8) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Sandystanes in the 1860s. In 1861 he is recorded there along with his brothers John (retired accountant), George (retired farmer), William (also a farmer) and sister Isabella. He is listed as farmer at Sandystones in 1868. Thomas (b.1811) son of Bonchester joiner James. He served for 21 years in the army. After his discharge he became a policeman in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a 'Police Office, Chelsea Pensioner', living at 10 O'Connell Street. He married Elizabeth Young in Hawick in 1859 and their Children included: James (b.1859), who worked with Turnbull the Dyers; and Richard (b.1861), who probably died young. Thomas Elliot (1816–1900) son of Thomas, he was born at Branxholme Park. He was gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa (also known as Byreleehaugh) near the head of the Ale and also lived at Bellendean Cottage. He married Christina Scott (grand-daughter of 'The Pether') at Haysike and she died at Wellogate Place in 1877, aged 54. This is probably the marriage of Thomas to 'Catherine' Scott in Hawick in 1843. Their children were: Jane Scott (d.1844), only daughter, who died in infancy at Todshawhill; Thomas (b.1845/6), who became a coal merchant); David (b.1838/9); George (b.1851/2); and Walter R. (b.1853/4). He and some of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (1816–69) mason in Hawick, son of Robert and Jane Waldie. In 1841 he was listed as head of the family at Mill Bank, living with his widowed mother and his siblings William, Robert, John, Jane, Agnes and George. He married Mary Hutton in Hawick in 1844 and died in Newcastle, New South Wales. Thomas (19th C.) married Jane Robson in 1838, the marriage recorded in both Cavers and Hobkirk Parishes. Thomas (b.1815/6) warehouseman in Hawick, son of Francis, he was born in Selkirk. He was living at 11 Cross Wynd in 1851 (when he was a 'Dresser of Woollen Hosiery') and also in 1861. In 1870 he donated to the Museum 'the drum formerly used by 'Caleb Rutherford', who was hence presumably a relative (it seems likely that his grandfather was Thomas, brother of Caleb). He married Margaret Scott in in 1841, the marriage recorded in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. Their children, mostly baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Margaret (b.1842); Frank (b.1843); Thomas (b.1845); Jessie (b.1846), with the mother's surname transcribed as 'Tait'; Frank (again, b.1849); and Christian (b.1851). He married Margaret Tait and their children included: Jessie (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Agnes Burns in 1853, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Hobkirk Parishes. Their children included Andrew Stevenson (b.1855). Thomas (19th C.) married Janet Brown in Southdean Parish in 1854. Thomas (b.1831/3) originally from Maxton, he was a policeman. In 1861 he was a constable living at Stobs Police Station. His wife was Margaret (from Eskdalemuir) and their children included Robert (b.1860/1). Thomas 'Tom' (1832–1906) son of James and Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson. His father died when he was young, and in 1841 he is listed with his mother in the home of his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated by George Tancred's mother and then at Hobkirk School. He was assistant blacksmith at Bonchester Bridgend in the mid-1800s, and effectively took over as blacksmith by the 1860s and formally after his great-uncle Andrew Stevenson's death in 1871. He helped carry letters to Chesters for a while. His great-grandfather John was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. James Elliot took over from him as blacksmith in about 1902. In 1853 he married Agnes Burns (d.1901), who came from Ancrum. Their children were: Janet (b.c.1853); Andrew Stevenson (b.1854), blacksmith in Newcastle; Elisabeth (b.1856), who lived in New York; Christina (b.1858), a professional cook in New York, who married James Rennie; Margaret (b.1860), who married blacksmith Gideon Scott and lived in Hawick; Agnes (b.1862); John Burns (b.1863), blacksmith in Belfast, who married Jean Waugh, daughter of the tenant at Hartshaugh Mill; Agnes (again, b.1865), who married Ecclefechan blacksmith Andrew Calvert; Thomas (b.1867), a tailor and clothier with businesses in Belfast and Bangor, he married Isabella Sparks, sister of his sister-in-law; Alexander Burns (b.1870); Alexander Burns (again, b.1871), wine and spirit merchant in Crook, County Durham; and James (b.1876), blacksmith for a while and later proprietor of the Fox & Hounds. Said to posses a wonderful memory, he helped George Tancred with information for his book on Rulewater. He died in Hawick. Thomas (b.1831/2) from Teviothead, son of shepherd George. He was a shepherd at Lodgegill in Ewes Parish in 1861, living there with his sister Jessie and brother Robert. Thomas (1846–1909) son of gamekeeper Thomas and Christina Scott. He became a coal and hay merchant of Wellogate Place. He was active in the Total Abstinence Society, the Congregational Church and the P.S.A. He married Catherine, daughter of William Whillans (from Chesters), and she died in 1935, aged 88. Their children were Thomas, Isabella Christina (who married James H. Haining) and Catherine Jane. He is buried in the Wellogate. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494 when John of Edgerston failed to produce him to stand trial before the High Court of the Judiciary in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Walter 'in falishop' (i.e. Phaup) componed in 1494/5 for stealing sheep from Hartwood and Haining, a cow from Minto, oats from Fairnington and other crimes. Walter, son of Walter in Phaup, failed to appear at the court in 1494/5 and his surety, John of Edgerston, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'lustus' (probably a nickname meaning 'lusty') in Edgerston. He was surety for John 'Cowar', also in Edgerston. Walter of Fairnington (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 when he claimed right to lands in Lessuden. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Walter (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1724. Their children may have included Robert (b.1724), a mason. Walter (17th/18th C.) described in 1694 as 'portioner of Caiphope' (i.e. Capehope) when he was involved in the discharge of a bond with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He may have been son of John of Capehope, being the Walter of Capehope who paid the land tax in Hownam Parish. He is recorded as Walter Rutherford 'Kaiphope' in 1695, when John, son of his deceased brother John, became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included John (b.1726). Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Langlands Boathouse in 1730. He married Janet Dunn in Wilton in 1729; her surname is variously written as 'Din', 'Dine', 'Dinn', 'Dune' and 'Dyne'. Their children included: Anne (b.1726); Helen (b.1730); Margaret (b.1732); Margaret (again, b.1734); Walter (b.1735); Walter (again, b.1736); Mary (b.1738). The witnesses in 1730 were John and James Dryden. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Roberton Parish in 1728. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Janet (b.1733). Walter (1723–1804) younger son of Sir John of Edgerston. He served with the army in America, being a Captain in the 60th Regiment. He persuaded his brother John to join him in America, and there John died at Ticonderoga (where he was probably also present) in 1758. He was later a hostage of the Americans and eventually settled there. He married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander. Their son John (1760–1840) was a land surveyor and politician, who spelled his name 'Rutherfurd', served on the U.S. Senate, laid out part of Manhattan and settled New Jersey's boundaries; he named his house Edgerston', at what is now called Rutherford, New Jersey. Walter (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1771). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty' Armstrong in 1765 and their children included: Helen (b.1767); and Armstrong (b.1772). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He married Janet Armstrong and their son Walter was baptised in 1794. Perhaps the same William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Walter (b.1810/1) watchmaker from Hawick. He was living in Jedburgh in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Lamb in Hawick in 1836 and their children included Francis, Walter Lamb, Christian Philips and Alice Mary. Walter (1814–97) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. He worked as a shepherd in the Borthwick area. He won a silver medal for speed in shearing sheep. In 1851 he was shepherd at Branxholmtown and was at Mabonlaw in 1861. In 1844 he married Ann Clark (1825–55), who may have been from Dyke, Morayshire. Their children included: Mary (b.1845), who married Andrew Huggan; Robert (b.c.1846), who emigrated to Canada; Janet (b.1847), returned to Scotland; John (b.1849), became an undertaker in Glasgow; Charles (b.1851), partner in Rutherford & Kay, wine merchants; Isabella (b.1851), who went to Frankford, New York; and Alexander (b.1854). In 1861 he secondly married Helen Scott Beattie, daughter of John Beattie, shepherd at Combe; her mother was Isobel Scott, said to be related to Sir Walter Scott. Their children were: Isabella (b.1862); Walter (b.1865); Adam (b.1866); Helen (b.1869); James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); and Ann (b.1875). In 1881 they emigrated to a farm at Turnberry in Western Ontario, and he died in Bluevale, Huron County. Walter (19th C.) farmer of Crailing Tofts. He was well known as a local golfer, being first President of the Border Golfers' Association. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Bunyan from Spittal-on-Rule and his uncle was William Rutherford, Professor of Physiology at Edinburgh University. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. William (13th C.) cleric who was presumably related to the family who toook their name from the eponymous lands. In 1291 he was 'Master' when he witnessed a case between Melrose Abbey and the Rector of Dunbar. He is recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296, among those swearing fealty to Edward I, as 'William de Rotherford' parson of 'Lillesclyue' (i.e. Lilliesleaf). 'Johan de Lillesclif' was also recorded there, as well as 'Aymer de Rotherford' (of Roxburghshire) although whether they were related is unknown. His seal bore a bull's head with a human head between the horns, and with the name 'S'WIL'MI DE ROTHIRFORD'. He could also be the clerk of the same name who witnessed a gift of land in Dryfe (Dumfriesshire) in the mid-13th century. William (d.c.1363) son of Richard. He was listed as 'Willelmo de Rotherford', Lord of that Ilk when he witnessed a charter for Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354 and another for Roger of Alton relating to the Church of Roxburgh. He also witnessed the same lands of Altonburn passing to the Kers in 1357/8. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey. In 1358 he was recorded as son of the late Richard when he forfeited lands in the Barony of Crawford Lindsay in Lanarkshire; this was because he was 'against the king's peace and faith'. In 1361 he was on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Nether Crailing. In 1363 he was already deceased when his lands in Teviotdale were granted to the custody of John Ker until his heir William reached the age of majority. However, William probably died before this, since he appears to have been succeeded by Sir Richard, probably his son. William (15th C.) recorded as William 'of Ruderfurde' in 1429/30 when he was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. James (probably of that Ilk) was also listed, but it is unclear how this William was related to other family members. William of Hunthill (d.bef. 1507) son of George. He had a sasine for Nether Chatto and other lands in 1496. In 1502 he was surety for John of Hundalee. In 1503 Simon (perhaps a relative) was his procurator for his lands of Nether Chatto at the Justice-aire. In 1504 he became surety to enter a long list of Rutherfords and others at the next Justice-aire for the murder of David 'bachler'; his own surety was Mark Ker (presumably of Dolphinston). His son George succeeded him in 1507. William (16th C.) younger son of George of Hunthill and brother to Andrew and John. In 1544 he was tutor to William of Langnewton. He held lands at Over Ancrum. He married Christian, daughter of Christopher Armstrong of Mangerton; her brother was John Armstrong of Gilnockie. William of Longnewton (16th C.) probably grandson of George of Longnewton and son of Walter. However, it is suggested in some genealogies that he succeeded his cousin Walter. He was a juror on a retour in 1541 and was also a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1544 William, younger brother of the Laird of Hunthill, was his tutor. He was served heir in 1547, presumably when he came of age. He had sasine for various other lands in 1550. However, he appears to have been murdered by Robert Ker of Newhall, part of a family feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers that led to a bond being signed in 1560. His son George was also mentioned in 1560, and was to be satisfied by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean. It is unclear if he or his son was the William who signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh' in 1551. William of Kidheugh (16th C.) son of Adam, or perhaps son of Walter, younger brother of George of Longnewton. He is recorded as possessor of Kidheugh in 1545, and also owned Langrink in Selkirkshire. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was on the panel (but transcribed as 'Reidhauch') for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather's lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he was possessor of part of Caverhill and Glack in Peeblesshire, which were inherited by his grandson Adam. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William of Longnewton (16th C.) possibly son of the earlier William. In 1578 he signed a bond of allegiance with other Rutherfords, Turnbulls and Douglas of Cavers. He may have died before 1583 when the other barons of the bond were declared rebels. William of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter Scott of Todrig and Joanna, daughter of 'Dand' of Grange. He seems likely to have been related to the Rutherfords of Grange. William of Littleheugh (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott 'the Tinckler' led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. His son Andrew was accused of being on another raid at the same time, with his sons Andrew and Richard being recorded in 2 additional accusations. His designation was transcribed 'Lyttlehewghe'. He was also recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. At about the same time he was listed among landed men of Roxburgh and Selkirk. Also in 1590 he acted as cautioner for Thomas, son of John of Hunthill. In 1593 he was denounced as a rebel (along with Rutherfords of Hunthill) for failure to appear to answer accusations about raids into England. In 1601 he was among a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace; his sons Adam and William were also listed. He was said to have had 4 sons (Andrew, Richard, Adam and William) and a daughter who married Thomas Selby of Biddlestone in Northumberland. William (d.c.1619) local man described as 'in Rafflat' probably Rawflat, Ancrum Parish) in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging too much interest on loans. He appeared to answer the charges. His son William was served as his heir in 1619. William (16th/17th C.) Schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was recorded as master there in a deed of 1616. He was also witness to a 'wadset' for lands in the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk in 1618; Robert, 'servitor to William Rutherford, notary public' was another witness, and so possibly his servant. James Arbuthnott was recorded as master in 1619. He may be the William who was reader at Hownam in 1609. William (16th/17th C.) served as heir to his father William in Rawflat in 1619. William of Bankend (d.bef. 1714) eldest son of John of Bankend, who was Provost of Jedburgh. He was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. In 1676 he sold Bankend (with the consent of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, his wife's trustee). He was later referred to as being 'of Lochend'. He married Esther Langlands, who was grand-daughter of George Langlands of that Ilk. His widow is recorded in a bond of 1714. They had 4 daughters, who were served as co-heirs to their father: Margaret; Isobel; Lilias; and Esther. William (17th C.) weaver who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William (17th C.) married Jean Heatley in Bedrule Parish in 1693. William (17th C.) served as interim Town Clerk in 1696. He was a Bailie of Jedburgh and recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1690 when his 2nd son Thomas became a baxter's apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as William of Bankend. Dr. William of Barnhills (d.bef. 1731). He bought the lands of Barnhills from Sir William Bennet of Grubet in 1703, with sasine in 1705. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester. He had 3 daughters: Margaret, who married Rev. Alexander Mackenzie of Edinburgh; Helen; and Jean, who married John Mowbray from Edinburgh. Each of his daughters inherited a third of Barnhills. It is possible that he is the man mentioned among Jacobite prisoners in a letter from John of Knowesouth in 1716, when he says 'neither Dr Rutherfoord nor his nephew will be transported'. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included David (b.1703), James (b.1703), John (b.1704) and John (again, b.1705). He is probably the William who married Bessie Robertson in Cavers in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Henrietta (b.1705). He is probably the William who married Helen Oliver in Bedrule in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Glendinning in 1710, the marriage recorded in Wilton and Roberton Parishes. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included William (b.1712), Gilbert (b.1716), Helen (b.1719) and Barbara (b.1723). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Helen (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Northcroft in 1748 and 1751. He married Margaret Hall and their children included: William (b.1744), baptised in ashkirk; Agnes (b.1746), baptised in Ashkirk; Robert (b.1748), baptised in Wilton; and Thomas (b.1751), also baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1748 and 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1760). William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1763), Joseph (b.1768), Walter (b.1772) and Richard (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included William (b.1766), Robert (b.1768), Francis (b.1770), Susan (b.1773), Gilbert (b.1778) and Agnes (b.1780). William (d.1797) clockmaker of Hawick. He married Helen Scott in 1766 and their children included Thomas (b.1784). The record of his death states that he was 'killed by a fall over a stair', this said (by W.N. Kennedy) to have been at Thomas Kedie's house. The death of his wife Nelly Scott is recorded in 1805. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Harwood Mill in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Perhaps the same William was srvant to John Clerk in Templehall according to the 1801 Militia ballot. William (b.c.1770s) watchmaker in Newcastleton according to the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. William (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Hall in Hobkirk Parish in 1809. William Oliver (1781–1879) of Edgerston, son of Jane Rutherford and William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was born at Weens, with a celebratory larch planted on the side of the walk to the garden. He was born as an Oliver and succeeded to Dinlabyre on the death of his father in 1830. He was 'Junior of Dinlabyre' on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. He was 'younger of Dinlabyre' when he served as a Lieutenant in the Roxburgh Volunteer cavalry that responded to the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, when still 'junior of Dinlabyre'. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He succeeded his father as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father), when still younger of Dinlabyre. He was probably the William listed as Sheriff Clerk in Jedburgh in 1814 and also 'sheriff clerk, Jedburgh' in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He was Sheriff during some of the local election troubles of the 1830s, requesting that a troop of dragoons be sent to Hawick in 1835, and reading the Riot Act twice on that occasion. He purchased the estate of Knowesouth from Charles Scott, and had the mansion there built, but sold it not long afterwards to George Pott in 1838 (although may have held on to part of these lands). He also acquired part of the lands of Ruecastle from the heirs of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. After his uncle John of Edgerston died in 1834, he was passed the lands of Edgerston and changed his surname. He was recorded at Edgerston in Pigot's 1837 directory and at Dinlabyre in 1852. In 1839 he was present at the banquet at Branxholme for the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Chairman of the Lunacy Board for Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, and Chairman of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He retired from his duties as Sheriff in 1868. In 1804 he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse, and she died in 1859. His children included: William, who died young in 1818; a second son who died the same year; Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Denniston in Malta; William Alexander Oliver (b.1818), who succeeded and whose son William Edward Oliver sold Edgerston; Jane, who married McDuff Rhind, Sheriff-Substitute for Wigtonshire; and Archibald John, who succeeded to Dinlabyre. His name was sometimes written 'Oliver-Rutherford'. William (1797/8–1871) probably born in Northumberland, he was teacher at Woodburn 1822–25. He then came to Hawick, where he was teacher of Mathematics and other subjects at the Grammar School. About 1832 he moved to be master at Corporation Academy, Berwick, in 1838 moved to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and retired about 1864. He was a member of the council of the Royal Astronomical Society 1844–47 and Honorary Secretary in 1845 and 1846. He contributed mathematical problems to publications such as the 'Ladies' Diary' and co-edited the first volume of 'The Mathematician' in 1845. He also edited many other mathematical books, including 'Simson's Euclid' and Hutton's 'Course of Mathematics'. He published about 15 papers, including a solution of spherical triangles, and the calculation of π to 440 decimal places. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a daughter, Mary Fenwick. He died at his home in London. William (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Christian Forsyth and their children included:

Helen (b.1816); Nancy (b.1818); John (b.1820); James (b.1822); William (b.1824); and Andrew (b.1827). William (b.1804/5) watchmaker of Hawick, son of Francis and Alison Henderson. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses he was living at 7 High Street. His mother was living in the adjacent house in 1851. In 1836 he married May Rutherford, daughter of builder Robert. Their children, many of whom were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Jane (b.1839); Alice Henderson (b.1841); Francis ('Frank') Elliot (b.1843); Robert (b.1845); Matilda (b.1847), who married Thomas Davidson; Andrew Scott (b.1849); Agnes (b.1851); and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1852). In the baptismal record for Francis in 1843, in Hawick Free Kirk, his name is given as 'Michael'. A portrait of him exists. William (19th C.) married Margaret Rae in Southdean Parish in 1834. William (b.1812) son of Bonchester joiner James. He emigrated to Australia and is said to have done well. When he heard of the death of his brother Alexander (who had suffered paralysis), he sent money back to Hobkirk Parish to cover the expenses for maintaining him. William (b.1813/4) born in Hawick, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was living at Mabonlaw and in 1851 his family were there (but he was presumably absent during the census). By 1861 he was at Glenkerry. His wife was Janet (from Kirkton Parish) and their children included Helen, Robert, James, Janet, William and Thomas. His wife later married James Anderson in Ettrick in 1860. William (19th C.) married Jane Plumber in Hawick in 1834. William (19th C.) married Helen Scott in Hobkirk Parish in 1838. William (19th C.) married Margaret Somerville in 1841, the marriage recorded in Hawick and Wilton Parishes. William (1818–80) son of Hawick builder Robert and Jane Waldie. He married Beatrice, daughter of William Brydon and Margaret Hogg. Their children were Margaret, Jean, Matilda, Robert William, Catherine Anne, Elizabeth H., Georgina, Alice May, William Thomas and Agnes, at least the first of which was born in Hawick. They emigrated to Ontario in about 1850. It may be that he was responsible for naming the area 'Millbank', near Waterloo and Stratford in Ontario. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Oliver and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1836); Helen (b.1838); Helen (again, b.1841); and Catherine (b.1843), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. William (19th C.) married Alison Milne in Hawick in 1853. William (b.1834/5) from Jedburgh, he was a mill wright living on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Andrew. William 'Willie' (1849/50–1937) resident of the small house in Cogsmill that used to be the school. His wife ran the post office and shop there. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1925, aged 74. Their son William John was born in Hawick in 1891. They are buried in Denholm (formerly written 'Rothersford', 'Rothirford', 'Routherfourd', 'Ruderfurd', 'Ruderfurde', 'Rudirfurd', 'Rutherfoord', 'Rutherfourd', 'Rutherfurd', 'Rutherfurde', 'Ruthirford', 'Ruthirforde', 'Ruthirfurd', 'Ruthirfurde', 'Rwthyrfurde', etc.).

the Rutherfords (thu-ru-thur-furdz) n. prominent family around the Kelso and Jedburgh areas. The family name is believed to have originated in their lands near Maxton, various versions of the traditional story involving a fording of the Tweed that led to Scots victory. They had land in Roxburghshire since at least the 12th century. Aymer and Sir Nicholas 'de Rotherford' swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as well as William, who was Parson of Lilliesleaf. Sir Richard Rutherford, Warden of the Marches, and his 5 sons helped repel English incursions in the years around 1400. He is the direct ancestor of the Rutherfords of Chatto, Edgerston, Hunthill, Hundalee, Fairnington and Fairnilee. Robert Rutherford of Chatto gained renown in helping with the victory at Otterburn. In 1544 some of the Rutherfords were among the families that 'did set on red crosses on their cotes' and support the English army in the burning of Jedburgh etc. Thomas Rutherford, the Black Laird of Edgerston, was famous for his daring attacks on the English in the 16th century, particularly at the Raid of the Redeswire. The Edgerston branch tended to spell their name 'Rutherfurd'. A feud with the Turnbulls in Teviotdale was recorded in Parliament in 1479. General Andrew Rutherford became Lord Rutherford in 1661 and was made Earl of Teviot (a title that became extinct) in 1663. The Rutherfords also held the lands of Wells in Rulewater. The various branches of the family are intimately connected with the other local landed families through marriage. A family of that name in Hawick were known for their abilities on the fiddle for several generations around the 18th century. The family motto is 'Nec Sorte Nec Fato' ('Neither by strategy nor by chance') and the shield is silver with a red border and three blackbirds at

Rutherford Bros (ru-thur-furd-bros) n. Rutherford Brothers cycles and accessories shop at No. 3 Sandbed in the mid-to-late 20th century, the 'island' property off Orrock Place. The building has previously been a pet shop and earlier a corn merchants. The business was opened as a radio shop at 6 Sandbed, by brothers Peter and Andrew Rutherford, who had been R.A.F. radar technicians. Later Andrew took charge of the television side of the business, with Peter in charge of radio and home electricals. The business expanded into 3 Sandbed as a cycle shop, with Henry Mitchell behind the counter and Don Brain as mechanic. After the deaths of the 2 brothers the business was sold in the late 1970s. The building had 2 red phone boxes in front and for a while had vending machines on the outside wall. The building was demolished in 1987, despite attempts to save it due to its unique features; however, the Venetian-style windows were rescued from the demolition.

Rutherfurd's Directory (ru-thur-furdz-dI-rek-tu-ree) n. directory of businesses and prominent individuals in the south of Scotland, as well as listing statistical information for each of the 3 Borders counties. It was officially known as 'Rutherfurd's Southern Counties Register' and was published in 1867 by J. and J.H. Rutherfurd of Kelso. It is an invaluable source of local information in this decade, and contains considerably more detail than the more general directories of Scotland. It was reprinted in facsimile form in 1990.

Ruthven (ruth-vin) n. William 4th Lord Ruthven (c.1541–84). Along with his father Patrick, he was involved with the murder of Mary Queen of Scots' secretary Rizzio. In 1572 he captured a force under Ferniehirst and Buccleuch, which had unsuccessfully tried to surprise Jedburgh (which was loyal to the infant James VI) and then retreated to Hawick. In 1578/9 he was the King's Lieutenant in the West Marches when he brought an action against 22 Border Lairds for the deeds of the men for whome they served as cautioners. He was later involved in a plot to seize James VI and was executed.

In September 1939 about 900 evacuees (mothers, children and teachers) arrived in Hawick, along with 600 others for the Denholm, Minto, Roberton and other country areas. Like other communities Hawick had its own Home Guard, and women helped on farms through the Land Army. The ration book office was at 21 High Street. Stobs Camp became an extremely active place during the War years. St. Mary's Kirk was requisitioned and Allars Kirk Hall was set up as the reserve headquarters for Civil Defence. Many iron railings around the town were requisitioned for the War effort in 1942. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1940–45, but the marches were ridden by Chap Landles (on his own in 1940), accompanied by some supporters (14 in 1941). Hawick soldiers stationed 'somewhere in England' appointed W. Slorance as Cornet in 1940, and 'somewhere in Scotland' they appointed E. Moffat as Cornet in 1941. The 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. appointed Jim Reid as their Cornet in 1945, using a flag made by the women at Pringle's, which was dipped in the Elbe; this was returned with the names embroidered on it of places where they had lost comrades. There were celebrations in Hawick on both V.E. and V.J. Days. Many of the fallen are commemorated at the War Memorial in Hawick, with names listed on the Roll of Honour in the Museum, as well as on memorials elsewhere. [WE], '... and was beginning sairly to grudge and rue the bargain he'd made' [DH] (cf. sair).

sair miss (sār-mis) n. a great loss, something very much missed – 'Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed' [ECS] (see also miss).

sair time (sār-tīm) n., arch. sorrowful experience, trying time (noted by E.C. Smith).

sair woark (sār-wōrk) n., arch. arduous work, a taxing of strength (noted by E.C. Smith).

sairy (sā-ree) adj., arch. held in affection (particularly said of people or dogs) – 'Sairie main, an expression of affection; often used to a dog, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'sairie').

saison (sā-zin) n., arch. season (see also season).

saitin (sā'-in) n., adj., arch. satin.

sakeless (sāk-lis) adj., poet. innocent, blameless, feeble – 'And bonny Jeanye Roole i' the shepherd's armis, Lay sackless in a swoone' [JTe], '... than sall I be upricht, an' saikless o' the grit transgressione' [HSR] (also 'sackless' and 'saikless').

sakes (sāks) interj. expression used in phrases of surprise or adjuration, 'dear me!', an abbreviated form of 'for God's sake', or 'for Heaven's sake' – 'sakes, mei', 'Sae, ye're welcome, sakes ye're welcome ...' [WL] (often used with losh; see also Lod-sakes-mei).

salbe (sal-bee) v., arch. shall be – '... and hes fundin cautioun that the gudis and geir foirsaidis salbe furthcumand ...' [SB1574], '... and salbe reddy at all tymes to do our said maisteris seruice quhen we salbe requirit thairto ...' [SB1595] (formerly common as one word in written documents; see sall).

sald (sawld) pp., arch. sold – '... and signit thaim to be sald for the payment of the rest of the said sowme ...' [SB1500] (cf. selt).

Salenside (sā-lin-sīd) n. farm just south of Ashkirk. There was once an ancient tower there, although there is now no evidence of its precise location; however, there is a suggestion that Salenside Cottage was built on the same site. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. Walter Scott of Ashkirk paid £14 for the lands and tacks there to John Scott in Kirkhouses. Andrew Scott 'of Salynside' was said to be part of the raid at Carlisle Castle in 1596. Robert Scott of Salenside was charged with murder in 1614. It was valued at £116 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. John Easton and William Scott were tenants in 1694. John Riddell was living there in 1710. Patrick Hume was there in 1731 and Francis Scott 1732–49. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the 'twenty shillingland, or thereby, of Salinside, called Breaths Langshot and Broomhaugh' (and other lands in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779 for the '20 shilling land of Salenside called Wreaths'. In 1753 they are described as 'twenty-shilling lands'. The house had a fire in the 1760s. On the 1764 map of Wilton Common, part of the boundary is labelled 'Sallonside Ground'. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson, with a value of £116, and still listed with the same owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, being valued (along with Castleside and Broadlee) at £519. William Little was farmer there in the mid-19th century and William Inglis in the 1860s – 'Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me' [WSB] (the origin is possibly the Celtic 'sailin', meaning 'little heel'; also spelled 'Salinsyde' etc.; it is 'Sallenside' in 1580, 'Salingsyde' in 1609, 'Sallensyde' and 'Salinsyde' in 1621 'Sullinsyd' in 1632, 'Sallinside' in 1710 and 'Salanside' in the O.S. Name Book in 1858; it is marked as 'Solansyide' on Blaeu's 1654 map, although quite far south of the Ale Water, and is 'Sallenside' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Salenside Cottage (sā-lin-sīd-ko'-eej) n. cottage that stands on a knoll, south-west of Salenside farm. It was once suggested that its lower walls were converted from the base of the old tower of Salenside, but it is clear that the walls are not substantial enough for that, and so if this was true, then the cottage must have been rebuilt. More recently it had a 3-storey tower built onto it.

Salenside Croft (sā-lin-sīd-kroft) n. name for a piece of land in Ashkirk. In 1581 it is recorded along with 'Skakriggis' when assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses, having previously been occupied by Richard Brown and George Easton. It is unclear if it was the same place as Salenside, or separate (it is 'Sallandside Croft' in 1581).

Salisbury Avenue (salz-bu-ree-aw-vi-new) n. street of relatively large houses off Weensland Road, built around 1898. It is named after Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne Cecil (1830–1903), 3rd Marquis of Salisbury, who was Prime Minister 3 times. The designs for the half-timbered villas were by J.P. Alison.

Salkeld (sal-keld) n. Thomas (c.1553–1627) probably son of Thomas and brother of Lancelot. He was a deputy of the English Warden, Lord Scrope. His family lived at Corby Castle. He captured Kinmont Willie in 1596, after spotting him on the Scottish side of the Liddel Water, following a truce meeting to discuss Border disputes – 'O have ye na heard o the fause Sakelde? O have ye na heard o the keen Lord Scroop? How they hae taen bauld Kinmont Willie, On Hairibee to hang him up?' [T].

sall (sal) v., arch. shall – '... sal content and pay to Jhone of Murray of Fallohill and Niniane Murray the sovm of thua hundreth merkis ...' [SB1500], 'Impr. whatsomever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick, sal pay 5 pundis ...' [BR1640], 'Item, the clark sal tak for every bill making twa shillings ...' [BR1640], '... Determined, in whate'er array, Ye sall review their rank perfay' [JoHa], 'A' the yirth sall wurship thee, an' sall sing untill thee; thaye sall sing til thy næme' [HSR], 'It ser's me nocht to grieve my loss, But it sall be passin' strange' [WiSp], 'Sall hae a bit jauntie, oor first ane for 'ears, An' oo'll see what oo think o' thae braw Volunteers' [BM1900], 'Sall I come skirtin the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh, Or the road by Chapelhill?' [WL], 'Amid destruction Hawick sall flourish, And sall improve when ye sall perish' [WNK] (auxiliary verb used to indicate intention; also spelled 'sal' and sometimes shortened to 's' '; see also salbe).

sallni (sawl-ni) contr., arch. shall not – 'The Lord is my shepherd; I sallna inlak' [HSR], 'But he answiret an' said, It is writ, Man sallna live bie breæd alane' [HSR] (cf. sanni).

sallt (sawlt) pp., poet. shalt – '... thou sallt basch thame inti flendirs like ane patter's vesshel' [HSR], 'Ye hae heard that it was said bue them o' auld time, Thou salltna kill ...' [HSR].

sally-door (saw-lee-dōr) n. a sally-port, opening in a fortified building, used for making a sally – 'There is three Towers in it was mounted high, And each of them had their own entry, A Sally-door did enter on' [CWS].

Sally Maclusky (saw-lee-mu-klus-kee) n. nickname for a Hawick character, probably from the 19th century – 'Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little the Salmon Inn (thu-saw-min-in) n. pub at 14 Ladylaw Place in the latter part of the 19th century.

Salt Hall see Saut Haa saltire (sal-tIr, -tīr) n. a St. Andrew's cross, particularly used as a sybmol of Scotland – 'Jets tear through the blue, Bring me back to you, I see my spirit fly, Saltires, I see satires, in the sky' [Sco].

the Salvation Airmy (thu-sawl-, sel-vā-shin-ār-mee) n. evangelical and charitable movement with a quasi-military style, founded in London in the 1860s and re-named in 1878. Jokingly referred to as the 'Sally Airmy', the Hawick branch started in 1887, with the founder Gen. Booth visiting the town in 1905. A band was started in 1919 and there is a chair called 'the Songsters'. The first meetings were in the Temperance Hall on Croft Road, with location shifting to Silver Street, Drumlanrig Square, Tannage Close and then the foot of the Mill Path in the early 1920s. A drama group was started in 1954. This Home Mission Buildong was converted from use as the drill hall of the Teviotdale Rifle Corps, serving as the organisation's Citadel until 1961 (and being demolished in 1968). In 1961 the property on Croft Road was purchased and rebuilt into the new Citadel, occupied in 1962 (also spelled and pronounced 'Selvation').

Salvation Airmy Citadel (sawl-vā-shin-ār-mee-si'-u-del) n. Salvation Army meeting house, on Croft Road, opened in 1962, with previous citadels being located in other parts of the town since 1878.

Sametoun (saw-mee-tin) n. lands said to be in the Barony of Wilton and listed along with Outersidemill and Todshaw when granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. It is unclear what lands the name could refer to, and hence it is possibly an error for the lands of similar name in Oxnam or Jedburgh Parishes.

Sam Marsden's (sawm-mawrz-dinz) n. High Street fishmonger's shop on the north side of the High Street in the mid-20th century.

samen (sā-min) adj., arch. same, aforementioned – '... and beis nocht tennandis til hym of the samyn' [SB1470], '... and seruice of frie tennenttis of the samin, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ...' [SB1569], '... desyreing the samen to be ratified, confirmed and approvin by them ...' [BR], '... and obleist him not to wrong the meiths and marches of the samen' [BR1675], '... said yt she had bought the same individuall wool at St Boswells Fair the day before, and offered to make the samen forthcomand' [BR1686], 'By reason of y manse being remote from other houses and none at present inhabiteing ye samen ...' [PR1711], ... shall be likely to prove insolvent or unwilling to keep the samen any longer in their hands' [RAO] (also spelled 'samin', 'samyn', etc.).

Sam'l Lawrence see Samuel Larence

sampil (sawm-pul) n., arch. an example, specimen, especially of stolen goods – 'The said John Hardie ... to be broucht to the mercatt croce of Hawick ... and to stand thereupon with the sampell of the stouth upoun his shouldours or ells ane paper upoun his breist or foirhead to declare the fact' [BR].

samwich (sawm-weech) n. a sandwich.

the Samye Ling Centre (thu-saw-mee-ling-sen'-ur) n. Tibetan-style Buddhist monastery and community near Eskdalemuir, about 20 miles from Hawick, formerly the estate of Johnstone House. It is named after a Tibetan monastery, and was started by 2 American buddhists who had started a small temple and gifted the house and grounds to 2 visiting abbots in 1967. It became Scotland's first Buddhist monastery, and the first phase was largely completed by 1988, with the full courtyard still being worked on, and plans to make it the most extensive temple outside Tibet. It was inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1993.

the Sandbed (thu-sawnd-bed) n. name for the relatively low-lying area near the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot, now an official name for the street from the roundabout to Albert Road. The name derives from the alluvial, sandy deposits that were there before the area was built up; interestingly, there are places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland, e.g., Kilmarnock also had a Sandbed from early times, and there is was an area so-called in Dumfries. The name goes back at least to the late 17th century and the location was formerly part of the Common. In 1712 it is recorded that someone was fined 'for breaking the ground in that part of the common called the Haugh and Sandbed, at the foot of the Church-wynd, by digging, delving, and bigging of ane dyke there'. It eventually became an enclosed space, which was well used on market and fair days (e.g. in 1701). There were houses across what is now Buccleuch Street and an archway gave access to the gardens there. The area stopped being used for public gatherings with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1741. There were once 3 pubs there, the Plough, the Black Bull and the Ewe & Lamb. The land around the area was feued for building in 1782, split into lots for houses (with a 99 year lease) and 2 building areas in the centre were sold in 1791. The midden at the Sandbed was one of the last to be removed, this being in 1810. When the New Road was opened in 1815, the market was moved to the Tower Knowe. At the same time the houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished to provide access to Buccleuch Street. The name was officially changed to Teviot Square by the Town Council from the late 1840s, but it was never popular and was abandoned after about 10 years. There was a public weighing machine for use by carriers near the Ewe & Lamb from before the days of the railway until the latter part of the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed renovations to Nos. 11 and 12 in 1895. The area also saw traffic lights introduced in 1939. The traffic pattern was altered with a more substantial roundabout and demolition of the island site of 3 and 4 Sandbed in 1987. The street contains a post office, a launderette and the Angling Club offices. Note that the building on the corner is unusually 5 stories high. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are grade C listed buildings – 'Then through the Sandbed the pair did go . . . ' [WE].

Sandbed (sawnd-bed) n. also called 'Sandbed English', a humorous term for an attempt to speak English by someone who normally speaks only broad Hawick, an affected, comical mixture of proper English and broad Hawick, e.g. 'pussy get down off that ruif' – 'hei was speakin in his best Sandbed' (why the Sandbed region was selected is unclear, but perhaps because it was where the West End meets the East End).

Sandbed English (sawnd-bed-ing-gleesh) n. affected English spoken by someone who normally only speaks in dialect – 'San'bed English, 'fine' English as attempted to be spoken by a Borderer, in which Scotch words are untittingly introduced' [GW] (see Sandbed).

Sanderson (sawn-dur-sin) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Margaret Porteous and their children included: Janet (b.1681); and Margaret (b.1684). Walter Scott was witness in 1681, James Scott and Walter Gledstains in 1684 and Walter Sanderson (presumably a relative) and Robert Wright in 1686. He may be the tenant in 'Hoap' (perhaps Heap) whose will was recorded in 1686. Probably the same Adam was recorded as witness to baptisms in Roberton Parish for James Scott in 1680 and for John Hope and John Martin in 1681. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford in Roberton in 1685. Their children included: Andrew (b.1686); Helen (b.1687); and Robert (b.1689). The 1687 witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He could be the same Adam who was previously married to Margaret Porteous. Adam (17th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1711), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (b.1704), baptised in Minto, may also have been their child. The witnesses in 1711 were merchant Thomas Hardie and carrier James Aitkin. Adam (19th C.) gamekeeper at Newlands in Liddesdale. In 1867 he donated to the Museum a 'rare species of hawk, in a case'. He is probably the man of this name who found a stone implement by the Teviot at Teindside, which his neighbour Robert Govenlock donated to the Museum in 1873. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (d.1750) resident of 'Greenside' in Wilton Parish whose funeral is recorded. George (19th C.) married Margaret Ballantyne in Hawick in 1834. Helen (17th/18th) recorded in about the 1720s when the Hawick Kirk Session paid her 'for waiting on Agnes Brown 11 weeks'. She was presumably either effectively a nurse, or else just a friend or neighbour of Agnes. There were Helens born in Roberton Parish in 1683 and 1687, who could be her. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1656. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Goodfellow and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1671. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1681). The witnesses were James Deans and Walter Sanderson (who was surely related to him). He witnessed a baptism for George Riddell in 1681. James (17th/18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who left £60 to the poor of Hawick Parish in 1748 (and so was presumably a native). Probably the same merchant James witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1737 and others in 1740 for gardener Walter (who was probably related) and for smith Robert Young. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for William Riddell in 1712. He is recorded in Newbigging in 1713 and 1714. He took over part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1726, after the death of Robert Scott. He married Beatrix, daughter of James Davidson, in Hawick Parish in 1711. Their children included: James (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); and Janet (b.1717). The witnesses in 1713 and in 1714 were James Davidson and Walter Scott in Newbigging. In 1717 his wife's surname is given as 'Scott'. James (17th/18th C.) married Helen Cook in Hawick Parish in 1717. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Armstrong and their daughter Beatrice was baptised in 1724. Jean (b.1728), with the mother's name given as 'Margaret' Armstrong, could also be his child. He was there recorded as 'Tennant in Branxholme Town', with witnesses William Grieve and Walter Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Jean (b.1735); Francis (b.1738); and James (b.1739). James (b.c.1780) recorded in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was an apprentice to James Richardson at Whisky Houses. James (d.bef. 1815) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion (or Mary) Henderson, whose death is recorded in 1815. Their children included James (b.1783). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son James was baptised in 1811, with witnesses Robert Tinlin and Agnes Scott (perhaps a relative of his wife). The baptism is recorded right after that for a child of George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804, suggesting that his wife may have been the mother in both cases, and have married twice. Jean (c.1730–1803) wife of Henry Scott 'the Hero of Quebec'. Their marriage is listed in the Hawick Parish records for 1753. It was said that her habits and drinking drove her husband into the army. After his death, she received a widow's pension of £40 and lived in a cottage called 'the Saaverin' a little below Stobs Castle, on the opposite side of the Slitrig. She became known for her dirty habits and wild appearance and was evicted by Sir William Elliot, who had her house demolished, apparently because her appearace and behaviour frightened his horses. Thereafter she lived in Hawick. She was said to have turned down a suitor later in life, when she discovered she would lose her pension if she remarried. She survived her husband by about almost 50 years and her death in Hawick is recorded in 1803. She could be the daughter of James and Margaret Armstrong batpsied in Hawick in 1728 or the daughter of James and Margaret Elliot baptised in Hawick in 1735. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Blyth and their son William was baptised in 1652. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret 'Bleakie' in 1680 and their children included: James (b.1680); Margaret (b.1683); Jean (b.1686); and Adam (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were James Scott and James Blakie and in 1686 were James Blakie (perhaps related to his wife) and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a 'half-pecke ane mutchkin short'. She may be the 'Marie' recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. She could be the Marie, wife of John Nasmith, whose son William Nasmith was born in Hawick in 1652. Robert (18th C.) living in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed daughter was baptised in 1734, with no residence given. Simon 'Sym' (16th C.) tenant of one of the local farms of Alexander Lord Home in 1562/3. Home (as superior of Midshiels, Appletreethall, Broadlee, 'Cotlaw', Burnside and mill) tried to have his 'pretended tenants' removed. Perhaps the same Simon was recorded in 1579 as owner of a tenement on the north side of the High Street in Hawick, 'quhilk sumtyme pertenit to Thomas Logane', adjacent to the tenement of David, brother to Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. Thomas (17th C.) resident at 'milnmaue' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He was probably a farmer at Moormaw. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism along with Walter in 1688 for James Shiel in east Burnfoot. He married Helen Shiel in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Bessie (b.1685); and Helen (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott (probably of Lees) and James Shiel (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1680); Helen (b.1683); and Simon (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Deans and James Sheil. He could also be the Walter, married to Isobel Shiel, who had a daughter Jean (b.1694) baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish in 1681 for James, in 1682 for William Nichol, herd in Boonraw, in 1686 for Adam (who was probably a relative) and in 1688 (along with Thomas) for James Shiel in East Burnfoot. Walter (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. He is probably the Walter 'in Apelttreehall' whose wife Janet Brown's will is recorded in 1682. Walter (19th C.) married Elizabeth Whillans in Hawick in 1863. William (d.1719) tenant farmer in Hawick. He is recorded as 'Tenent' in 1714, 'tenent in Hawick' in 1716 and also in 1719 when his son William was born posthumously. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Anna (b.1716); and William (b.1719). The witnesses in 1712 were smith John Scott and wright Francis Gledstains, in 1714 were wrights Richard Turnbull and James Gledstains, in 1716 were smith John Scott and merchant James Simpson and in 1719 were merchant William Chisholme and cooper John Aitkin. William (18th C.) resident at Heap in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Aitken in 1725 and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1726. The witnesses were William and James Aitken (probably related to his wife). He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms in 1735 for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot, and in 1736 for James Liddell resident of Burnfoot. William (18th C.) recorded at West Cote in 1730 when he married Bessie Wilson in Cavers Parish. William (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is probably the William who married Betty Little in 1779 and had children: James (b.1780); William (b.1781); Isabel (b.1784); James (again, b.1787); and Margaret, who died in 1809. William 'Wullie' (1853–1945) journalist, editor of the 'Border Magazine', poet and museum curator from Peebles. He gave us the words and music for 'The Soft Lowland Tongue', which is also sung in many other Border towns. He sometimes wrote under the name 'Tweedside Laddie'. William (b.1781) son of William. On the 1801 list for the Militia ballot he was recorded as 'Junr. Taylor' (formerly 'Sandersone').

Sandholm (sawnd-hōm) n. hamlet at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters and where the B6399 (Hawick to Newcastleton road) meets the B5357 (from the Note o the Gate), about 1½ miles north-east of Newcastleton. Cuthbert Little and William Armstrong were there there in 1694. Robert and James Thomson were labourers there in 1801. John Elliot was tenant there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There were 15 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. Walter Turnbull and Walter Thomson were there in 1868 and John Elliot in the 1870s and 80s. It was the location of Bankend Kirk, recently converted to a house. There was also a schoolhouse and smithy there. In the mid-19th century the school was run by Christian Telfer, daughter of the 'poetic schoolmaster' of Saughtree. To the north and northwest there were 3 curling ponds (also sometimes 'Sandyholm'; it is 'Sandiholme' in 1694).

Sandhope see Sundhope

Sandie (san-dee) n. George (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Stevenson and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Agnes (b.1759); and Jane (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan and midwife Mary Simpson.

Sandilands (san-dee-lindz) n. Sir James of Calder (d.bef. 1426) son of Sir James and Jean Stewart, daughter of King Robert II. His grandfather, also Sir James, was married to Eleanor, daughter of Sir Archibald 'Tineman' Douglas, through whom he may have inherited rights to Douglas lands and titles. He was thus brother-in-law of King Robert III. He held the right to inherit several lands and titles following the death of Isabella, Countess of Mar (sister of the King's son-in-law, George Douglas, Earl of Angus). This included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffship of Roxburghshire, Lordship of Jedburgh, Lordship of Liddesdale, lands of Bonjedward and town of Selkirk, as well as lands further afield. In 1397 he passed them on to George Douglas, Earl of Angus, but they reverted to him after the Earl's death, as confirmed in a charter of Robert III in 1404/5. Confusion over the Barony of Cavers grew out of the earlier grant to Archibald Douglas (1st of Cavers) not being confirmed by Robert III. Sometime around 1390 he and John Haliburton of that Ilk granted the lands of Falnash and others in Tranent to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1425 he is mentioned in a charter for Patrick Lindsay and in 1426 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. He married Jonet and was succeeded by his son Sir John. James of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for attacking the Earl of Arran. His sons John and William are also listed. He was Captain of Hermitage Castle for a short period in 1532/3. He was probably succeeded by his son John of that Ilk. James (d.1579) 1st Lord Torphichen, brother of John of Calder. He was son of a first cousin of John the Parson of Hawick with the same surname; John was commissioner in 1548 for a charter relating to him. In 1541 he became a member of the Hospitaller Order of St John of Jerusalem, of Rhodes, and of Malta. He held lands in Rule valley, with the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (part of Harwood) being feued to Andrew Turnbull in 1567. He married Janet Murray and died without an heir. He was succeeded by his brother's grandson. John (d.1583) second son of James of Cruvie (and descendant of the daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Liddesdale and Cavers, as well as being descended from a daughter of Robert II). He was Parson of Hawick, although he may simply have held the living and not actually preached in the Parish, since William Auchmowtie served as Reader of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton at the same time. He held the 'prebend' of Hawick before the Reformation. He is recorded as witness to a charter relating to John Sandilands of Calder in 1554, where he is described as 'Rector of Hawik'. He is also recorded with this title in 1557. Thus he was probably associated with Hawick Parish both before and after the Reformation. In 1558 he was Parson of Hawick when (along with John Spottiswood) he was a commissioner in a charter for James, Lord Torpichen, relating to land in Peeblesshire; he was there 'Magister Joannes Sandelandis rector de hawyk'. He was recorded in relation to the 'thirds of benefices' holding the Parsonage of Hawik in 1563 and 1568–72. In 1569/70 the Bailies of Edinburgh ordered that town to pay him the 'maillis' he was owed for the grammar school there; he was said to be 'persoun de Hawik', but clearly was based in Edinburgh. He was still 'parson and vicar' in 1581 according to a document relating to teinds with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear whether he held the position until his death. He married Janet Craig and had 1 child, Margaret. He died in Edinburgh, where his last will and testament is recorded in 1583/4 (also spelled 'Sandelandis').

Sandy Burnett's (sawn-dee-bur-nits) n. popular name for the hill below Greensidehall, presumably named after a former owner of the nearby farm.

Sandy Fussy (sawn-dee-fu-see) n. name given to at least one rag and bone man of the early 20th century, who would give balloons to children in exchange for scrap items. The original 'Sandy Fussy' probably predated this, although whether he was fictional is unclear.

Sandy Fussy's Cairt (sawn-dee-fu-seez-kār') n. name sometimes used for the local children's rhyme, sung to the tune of 'the Keel Row' (and similar to 'Charlie is my darling'), see Oo're aa gaun ti Denum.

Sandyhaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish near Woll. It was owned by Scott of Woll in 1609. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the lands (and others in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. John Scott was recorded there in 1788 and Andrew Scott was farmer there in 1797. William Paterson was a wright there in 1799 and Robert Harvey was there in 1801. Andrew Cleghorn was farmer in the 1840s to 60s (it is 'Sandy Hall' on Ainslie's 1773 map, marked to the east of New Woll, near where the Woll Burn meets the Ale Water; it is 'Sandiehauch' in 1609, 'Sandiehaugh' in 1753, 'Sunniehaugh' in 1779 and 'Sandy hall' in 1799 and 1801.

Sandyhaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former cottage in the Ewes valley, on the other side of the main road from the farm of Bush. There were Welshes there in 1841 and Welshes, Jacksons and others there in 1861. Poet Matthew Welsh lived here.

Sandystanes (sawn-deestānz) n. Sandystones, farm by the Ale Water, east of Belses. This may be the 'Standestanerig' (in West Lilliesleaf) which was sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey in the early 1200s. In 1502 it is recorded that 120 of George Rutherford's sheep had been stolen from there by William Turnbull of Minto and reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters. Robert Taylor was also recorded there in 1502. It was owned by George Rutherford of Langnewton in 1506 when the Turnbulls of Minto attacked the farm, burning barley and oats there. It is mentioned in 1508, with lands of 120 or 140 acres here between the Sandstones and 'Vuiralancrum' (or 'Vuirancrum'), commonly called the Sandystanes, being attached to the Lordship of Liddesdale. John 'Ritchisone' was there in 1694, James Rutherford in 1797 and George Jaffrae in 1801. Thomas Rutherford was there in 1868 (the name derives from its situation between two fords, which are paved with stones; it is 'sandy stanis' and 'sandestanis' in 1502 and 'Sandestanis' in 1508).

sang (sawng, sang) n. a song – '... E'en crune your sang as lang's ye dow' [JR], '... And never mair, at a Gloamyne Buchte, Wald she singe another sange' [JTe], '... [HSR], 'Man, Jamie, I want ye to write a new sang for the Common Riding this year' [BM1898], 'But troth, by the way I sing this sang, You'll hear wi' my brogue there's something wrang ...' [JEDM], '... And the auld soul-stirrin' sangs' [WL], 'I'll sing a sang o' Hawick my hame: I'll sing it a' my days' [GD], 'And the never restin' waves Sing their never endin' sang' [TK], '... But aye the sweetest sang they hear Is 'Hawick 'mong the Hills'' [MrsW], '... and lang may they flourish Wi their ain tribal ploys and ceremony and sang ...' [DH].

the Sang Singer (thu-sawng-sing-ur) n. official singer of 'Teribus' at the Song Singing ceremony. He also has many other duties to perform at other Common Riding functions, including (since 1921) distributing the snuff at the Snuffing. He leads the singing of 'Teribus' outside St. Leonards farmhouse after the Thursday Night Chase and after the Thursday and Friday morning 'Huts'. He also leads the singing of the 'Auld Sang' outside the Tower before the riders set out on the Friday morning, and he sings the complete version of Hogg's song at the 'Sang Singin'. The first singer of Hogg's 'Teribus' was James Scott in 1819, and he was followed by James Robson, Mark Nichol and Frank Scott ('Uncle Braid'). Then there was John Scott (in 1875). Later came Charles Hessel, William Clark (1883–1907), James Yule?? (from 1907), Hamilton B. Little (after 1918), James Yule (in 1946), ?? Black, Harry Storie (c.1950–1972), Bert Armstrong (1973–84), Henry Douglas (1985–99), Michael Aitken (2000–22), Bernie Armstrong (2023), Michael Aitken (2024–).

the Sang Singin (thu-sawng-sing-in) n. ceremony that takes place at the Mill Path on a specially constructed platform as part of the Common Riding. This is near to the site of 'Tibbie the Fiddler's Cottage', on the thatched roof of which the ceremony took place until 1859, and at the old boundary of the Burgh with the lands of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1860 the ceremony took place amid the ruins of the old cottage, and thereafter has been held near the site, except in 1919 when it was temporarily moved to the Horse monument. Before the current permanent platform was built at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent, a temporary one used to be erected on the other side of the road. The ceremony is held on the Friday afternoon, immediately after the Principals have been to the Dipping of the Flag. It involves the singing of 'Teribus', following the official announcement that the marches have been duly ridden. There ceremony of 1889 may be the earliest recorded in a photograph. Since 1905 the Drums and Fifes have played the party back to the Town Hall to return the Flag – 'A must say, A enjoyed the Sang Singin, A suppose it was an honour ti be asked ti dae eet' [HD].

Sangster (sawng-stur) n. Evelyn along with husband Gilbert, organiser of the Hawick Summer Festival for its first 20 years. Also organiser of the Christmas Parade and involved with the Reivers Festival for 18 years.i The couple moved to Hawick from Montrose in 1974, after which they became involved in Stirches Youth Club and Hawick Community Council. Gilbert mainstay of the Hawick Summer Festival, along with wife Evelyn. They married in 1971 and he worked in the abattoir after moving to Hawick.

sanni (saw-ni) contr., poet. shall not – 'Sic dowie stuff I downa bide to hear, I hope ye sanna die this mony a year' [CPM] 'Ye winna believe 't, ye sanna believe 't, I'll ne'er be dishonest to thee' [JoHa] (also written 'sanna'; cf. salli).

Sanson (san-sin) n. James (d.1790s) assistant minister at Earlston, he was preacher at Teviothead 'chapel-of-ease' from 1785 until about 1788. In that year he became minister at Leadhills. He also served as tutor to the family of Thomas Scott (uncle to the writer Sir Walter Scott), farmer at Wolfelee and elsewhere. He is described as 'a tall, awkward, bashful gentleman', and was referred to as 'Dominie Sanson'. He was keen on curling and had the habit of calling out 'Prodeegious!' when he threw a good stone. This story was picked up and related to Sir Walter Scott, who probably used it as inspiration for the character of 'Dominie Sampson' in 'Guy Mannering'. Thomas (18th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1780 he went into a partnership with John Nixon, William Irvine and George Noble. However, he withdrew from the arrangement later the same year.

Santy (sawn'-ee, sawn-tee) n. Santa Claus – 'Ah thought ee got an electric razor frae Santy?' [JCo].

The Sap (thu-sawp) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – 'Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb' [HI].

sarkin (sawr-kin) n., arch. cloth, usually linen, used for making shirts – '. . . 28s. Scots for 3½ ells of sarking lyneing' [BR1638], 'My trulys! but we've got a yerkin' – Wi' dead anes, hills are white as sarkin' ' [JoHa] (see also serkin).

sasine (sā-zeen, -zin) n., arch. Scottish legal term for the act of changing ownership of inheritable property, or the documents proving that act. Centuries ago all sales of land involved a charter, followed by an 'instrument of sasine', usually witnessed on the land itself. There is a Hawick Register of Sasines for the period 1779–1840 in the National Archives – '. . . and sail deliuer the chartar and seising to the said Walter . . . ' [SB1527], '. . . ane instrument of saising of Thomas Scot in Hawik' [SPB1579] (also written 'saising', 'sasying', 'seisin', and other variants).

saster (saws-tur) n., arch. a kind of sausage filled with haggis stuffing, the stomoch-bag or tripe of an animal – 'Saster, A pudding composed of meal and minced meat, or of minced hearts and kidneys salted, put into a bag or tripe, Loth., Teviotd. Hence the Prov., 'Ye are as stiff as a stappit saster', i.e. a crammed pudding' [JoJ].

Satchells (saw-chulz) n. former estate east of Synton, about 5 miles north of Hawick, in Lilliesleaf Parish. The main house there was known as 'the White Peel', since it was whitewashed. It was home of the Scotts of Satchells, since before 1607, according to a charter to Robert Scott, whose father James had also possessed the lands. Robert was said to be one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch, holding the lands of 'Southinrig' (i.e. Southdeanrig) for his service. Robert's son was Capt. Walter, who wrote 'A True History' of the Scott family in rhyming couplets, published in 1688 (and reissued in Hawick in 1894) In 1615 Jean and William Scott of Satchells (possibly the widow and her son) helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a group in Hawick to slaughter 60 of Sir James Douglas's sheep. Walter Scott (the same man as the poet Capt. Walter) was owner in 1663, when it was valued at £200 and in 1678, when it was valued at £256. John Scott was owner in 1788, when the value was £200. John Corse Scott of Synton owned it in 1811, when it was valued at £256. There is still a farm there. It is probably the 'Schotteschales' in Lilliesleaf Parish that was granted to Alexander of Huntingdon' sometime in the period 1202–7 – 'Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse' [WSB] (the origin of the name is probably from Old and Middle English 'sceat schele', meaning 'the huts in a corner'; it is 'Setschellis' in 1618, 'Satscheillis' in 1609, 'Satchellis', 'Satscheillis' and 'Satschellis' in 1616, 'Satchellis' in 1619 and 'Satscheilles' in 1633; it is 'Satchells' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Satchells' and 'Satchels' on Gordons c.1650 maps, 'Satchells' on Blaeu's 1654 map and is 'Saltscheillis' in the 1620s).

Satchells Burn (saw-chulz-burn) n. stream that runs past Satchells in a roughly northerly direction, to meet the Ale Water near Dimpleknowe.

[WNK], 'They're teuch sauchs growin' i' the Reuch Heuch Hauch' [JAHM], '... Glides among the saughs and slaes' [GWe], 'Ae nicht as I stood by the muckle saugh tree ...' [UB], 'And memory loves to linger long By bonny Bossemill Haugh, Where merrily the river glides Past clumps of stately

saugh trie (sawch-trī) n., arch. a willow tree – 'If the piles used in making the cromage or Lake Dwelling at Buckstruther had been of the old saughtree . . . ' [RJT].

Saughtree (sawch-tree) n. village and farm in Liddesdale, as well as a former station on the Border Counties Railway east of Riccarton. A track here branches east towards the Border, only 3½ miles away. The area contains a tiny church (built in 1872) and burial ground, and there was formerly a school here. The poet James Telfer was Schoolmaster in the years 1834–60; note that there was also a small school at Burnmouth, with which it can be confused (although this is the Burnmouth in southern Liddesdale, and not the one near Saughtree). There was an annual 'blanket preaching' held nearby in the 19th century, in a natural amphitheatre. The lands there were valued at 14 shillings on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when they were tenanted by Robert and John Henrison. John Cranston was there in 1685 and John Elliot was tenant there in 1694. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 481 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Hudshouse, Burnmouth, Pinglehole and 'Leys'; it also shared a small strip of common land with Pinglehole and the farmhouse was on the opposite side of the Dawston Burn from the modern houses, near the location of the church. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. Robert Stavert was farmer there in 1785. In 1797 the farmer was Thomas Stavert. George Oliver was servant there in 1799, with a younger Thomas Stavert as farmer in at least 1799–1801. Other residents in 1801 were wright James Hislop and shepherd George Oliver. Archibald Stavert was farmer in the 1850s and 60s. Andrew Douglas was farmer there in the 1930s. Near the shepherd's cottage of Saughtree Grain is the site of a standing stone known as 'the Knocking Stone' and others called 'the White Stones'. Saughtree Fell, to the west, reaches a height of 434 m and contains a triangulation pillar. Some flints found near there are in Hawick Museum – '' O Willie, 'tis light, and the moon shines bright, Will ye go and watch the deer wi' me?' 'Ay, be my sooth, this very night:' – And away they went to Saughentree' [ES] (it is 'Saughentree' in the Ettrick Shepherd's 'The Laird of Lairistan' and is occasionally 'Sauchtree'; the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'sealh treow', meaning 'willow tree'; it first occurs as 'Sauchtree' in 1541, 'Sauchetrie' in 1652, 'Saughtrie' in 1685, 'Saghtrees' in 1694 and 'Saughtrees' in 1755; it appears on Blaeu's c.1654 map, but without a label, is 'Saughtrees' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie's 1770 map).

the Saughtree Cross (thu-sawch-tree-kros) n. name sometimes given to one of 2 stone crosses found near the Abbey Sike in the vicinity of Saughtree in about 1850 and 1880. The first consists of a round piece of stone, carved with a cross, which may have formed the capital of a wayside marker. The second is a somewhat larger rough-hewn stone cross, with part of a sword pommel carved on it; this may have been a grave marker, for example. They were deposited in the Museum.

Saughtree Fell (sawch-tree-fel) n. hill to the north of Saughtree farm. It reaches a height of over 450 m and contains a triangulation pillar on the secondary summit. It appears to be labelled 'Daston Fell' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, suggesting that Dawston Fell may have been an alternative name.

Saughtree Grain (sawch-tree-grān) n. former shepherd's cottage near where Alison Sike and Cliffhope Burn unite in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale. Alternative names were Cliffhope (on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), Dawstoneburn Grain (on the 1841 census) and just 'Grain' (on the 1851 and 1861 censuses). The original cottage was a little further up than the more modern one. It was said that the steep sides of the valley here meant that the residents would not see the Sun for about 6 months. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851, and Arthur Armstrong in 1861.

Saughtree Kirk (sawch-tree-kirk) n. small church in Saughtree village, built in 1872, when there was discussion of making this a separate parish from Castleton. It began as a Home Mission station in 1865. The Manse was built right next door and was substantially renovated in 1952. It was made a 'quoad sacra' parish in 1910. The men who ministered there to start with were officially 'Licentiates', with a permanent minister only appointed in the years 1910–60. A framed parchment records the names of 9 local men who died in WWI. A roll of the ministry is: James Patterson 1866–70; William Smith 1870–77; Thomas Gordon 1877–86; Alexander Wilson 1886–89; David Ness 1889–92; Robert Galbraith 1892; James Ronald MacDonald 1892–1902; Joseph William McLean 1902–03; Adam McCaul Paterson 1903–10; William Napier Bell 1910–20; David Smith 1921–22; John Scott 1922–25; John Whyte McGill 1925–27; Robert Douglas Pettie 1927–28; Robert Forsyth McGarrity 1929–33; Francis G.M.A. Vipont 1935–51; George H. Makin 1952–??.

Saughtree Schuil (sawch-tree-skil) n. former school at Saughtree, situated on the main road south of the hamlet. It opened in 1809. There were 20 pupils there in the 1830s. James Telfer, referred to as 'the poetic schoolmaster' ran the school 1834–62. Alexander MacGregor succeeded him. Edward J. Wilson was master there in the late 1880s. The school and house were rebuilt on the old site, perhaps around 1880. The Borders Archive have registers for the period 1938–63 and log books for 1904–63.

Saughtree Station (sawch-tree-stā-shin) n. small station on the Waverley line just north of Saughtree. The station buildings have been renovated and about 400 yards of track have been laid there, with a diesel locomotive kept in a shed, constructed from 2 railway cottages.

saxhorn (saks-hōrn) n. a brass musical instrument invented by Adolphe Sax, resembling a bugle, but with valves instead of keys. There were many 'Saxhorn Bands' set up in the mid-1800s, but Hawick's band is the only remaining one in Scotland that uses the old word.

the Saxhorn Band (thu-saks-hōrn-bawnd) n. Hawick's brass band, which acts as a marching band, a concert band and a competitive band. Founded by Samuel Stainton in 1855, following a petition to the Magistrates to support the setting up of a brass band for the town. There have been many ups and downs since then, but it is still going strong after more than a century and a half. The Band briefly dissolved in 1878. In 1945 the Council decided to help financially with the Band, but this discontinued with the end of the District Council. There were originally 14 members, which has grown to around 25 at full strength. Stainton acted as leader for the first few months, with Stephen Teal then becoming the first appointed Bandmaster. Walter Atkinson was a prominent Bandmaster 40 years later, with James Amos leading in the successful post-WWII period. In 1961 they became Scottish Championship Band and later competed in the national finals, also playing in the televised evening concert in the Albert Hall. The band have practised in a huge number of locations over the years, in Orrock Halls, then Wilton School, sometimes in the Buccleuch Memorial Halls and part of the former Dickson & Laings mill in the later years of the 20th century, before moving to O'Connell Street. They have been prominent at ceremonial parades in Hawick over the last 150 years, for example during the Wars, and in the unveiling of the Horse monument. The band have played at the Common Riding since at least 1872 when they were recorded providing music at the Games. At the Common Riding they have many specific duties, including meeting the Cornet after the Picking, meeting the cavalcade at the Volunteer after the Mosspaul Ride-out, playing the Cornet from the Town Hall to the Horse on Colour Bussing night, and leading the Provost's procession from the Horse on the Friday morning. They also play 'Invocation' at the Handing-Back. They were heard on the 1937 BBC radio broadcast of the Common Riding, and are on the 'Hawick Sings' records. In addition they usually lead the children's procession to the Vertish Hill Sports. They have also played a New Year's concert at the Tower Knowe for a great many years. A history 'Seven Score Years' was written by Owen Connelly in 1995 and Gillian French wrote a Ph.D. thesis entitled 'Follow the Band: Community Brass Bands in the Scottish Borders' in 2014 – '. . . And then the Saxhorn Band, with fervid glee, Sends forth brave notes that please the listening ear' [JCG], 'The Saxhorn Band is hard tae bate Thenks tae Bob Hume and Gladys Tait' [IWL].

scaup (skawp) n., arch. the scalp – 'Be't Yankee scaup or Russian knob, Or Tartar wild, or foppish Frenchman' [JoHa], '... an' the hairie scaup o' sic an ane as gaes wullfullie on in his trespassis' [HSR].

scaur (skawr) n. a bare place on a hillside, cliff, rocky bank, particularly one being undercut by a river or stream – 'They thistly banks, and cavern'd scaur, And old time-mouldered towers ... ' [JoHa], 'Till it seems lyin' nestled 'mang hillocks an' scaurs A whole fairy city, up-biggit wi' stars' [JJ], 'Is it the roar of Teviot's tide, That chafes against the scaur's red side?' [SWS], '... he passed on his road thither a scaur, by the side of a rivulet ... ' [EM1820], '... As roving on by rock and scaur And when its journeying to fulfill, With its bright halo o'er the hill. Arose the bonnie gloaming star' [HSR], '... showing itself most conspicuously in our 'scaurs', where these beds have been cut across by burns or larger streams' [PJE], 'To wage in headlong heat a mimic war, And drive the fox o'er moss, and moor, and scaur' [DA], 'Tell the Borders of your wildness, Show your powers by cliff and scaur, Show the banks left drear and childless, Forest giants tossed afar' [JBB], 'But think not, Slitrig, that thy power I slight, Full well I know thy giant strength and might, Larger and longer streams than thee, there are, But none so fertile in wild bank and scaur' [WNK], '... took the opportunity of pointing out to us in the scaur above Lynwood House a layer of shingle about twenty feet high' [WNK], 'Many remember since it struck the scaur above Weensland, near its middle, and have observed it year by year turning farther and farther down, till now the scaur is avoided altogether' [JAHM], 'And here's a wee rogue wi' a scaur on his chin ... ' [TCh], 'It may be found on all the scaurs along the Teviot and Slitrig, and is especially abundant above Crowbyres Bridge' [JAHM], 'The Teviot takes its quiet way Past level haugh and loamy scaur, Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o'er some pebbly bar' [JCG], 'A wee bit scaur offends her e'e. She plants a braw Scots thristle ... ' [WP], '... For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen' [WHO] (this is the anglicised or literary version of cf. scer, with G. Watson writing that it occurs 'only in literature or educated speech').

Scaur (skawr) n. Scar, former farmstead in the Dod valley, corresponding roughly to the present position of Dodburn Filter Cottage, with the woods to the south of there still being known as Scar Plantation (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

the Scaur see the Scer

the Scaurend (th-skawr-end) n. former name for part of Roberton village, at the western side, so named because of the 'scaur' by the bend in the river there. The house of the same name was once the manse for the Snoot Kirk.

Scaurnook (skawr-nook) n. former farmstead in Roberton Parish, probably near to Scaurend. William Murray was living there in at least 1786–94. Carrier John Elliot was there in 1841 and

the Scaur Pool (thu-skawr-, -sker-, -pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot at Mansfield, near where the mill lade came out. This also formed the eastern end of the property once used as nurseries by Dickson's. Also called the 'Sker Pool' – '. . . thence eastward along the foot of the beautiful scarped waterbank which bounds the nurseries from the Jedburgh Road, re-joining its present bed at the Scaur Pool' [JAHM], 'The Doctor was one day taking his accustomed walk along the north bank of the Teviot and Mr. Williamson wading more than knee deep and fishing in the Scaur Pool' [WNK], 'On a balmy summer evening, at the gloaming, Caleb and an old acquaintance named James Rae had been taking a walk down by the banks of the Teviot as far as the Scaur Pool . . . ' [WNK], 'As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o' bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school' [JCG].

Scawd Bank (skawd-bawngk) n. hill between the headwaters of the Hermitage and Tarras Waters, on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 547 m ('Scad bank' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Scatbanck hill' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Scaw'd Law (skawd-law) n. hill in Cavers Parish, just south of the Maidens, reaching a height of 503 m. James Turnbull was recorded as resident there in 1770. There are the remains of a linear earthwork on the eastern side of the hill, perhaps connected with features noted near Leap Hill and near King's Sike, and presumably once boundary markers (the origin is probably 'hill with a shieling', from Old Norse, or old Scots 'scald', i.e. a hill with bare patches; there are several other hills called 'Scaw'd' or 'Scawd' elsewhere in Scotland; it is 'Scamiln' in 1770).

Scawmill (skaw-mil) n. cottage on the Cala (or Dean) Burn, reached from the Dean via the old track along the burnside, having a very picturesque setting among the woods. It may also once have been known as 'Timbersidemill', but it is unlcear if they were the same place or neighbouring farmsteads (both names appear in contemporary 18th century baptismal records). There was once a corn-mill there, perhaps even the same one later known as Dean Mill. James Scott was there in 1724, William Brown in 1733, John Scott in 1791 and William Scott in 1797. In 1799 John Brown was a servant there and James Brydon a tailor. It was still active when Walter Smith was recorded as miller in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories – 'Just leave the Dean by Scawmill farm, And o'er the well-worn stile, Up by the low and thick set hedge The very briars smile' [WFC] (also 'Scaw Mill'; it was 'Scadmiln' in 1724, 'Scalmiln' in 1733, 'Skawmill' in 1765 and 1791 and 'Scawmill burn' in 1801).

Scaw Mill see Scawmill

S.C.E. (ess-see-ee) n. Scottish Certificate of Education, the main body issuing secondary school qualifications in Scotland, once at the Ordinary and Higher Grades, now replaced with Standard and Higher Grades.

Scenes of Infancy (seenz-ov-in-fin-see) n. longest poem written by John Leyden. It is mainly constructed in praise of the countryside of Teviotdale, where he spent his youth, weaving in a large number of local myths and legends, but also covering wider historical ideas, international issues of his day, and religious and social topics (including a denunciation of the slave trade). Although nominally looking back to his childhood, and lamenting the changes caused by the agricultural revolution during his lifetime, it at the same time looks forward towards his future in the wider world. It was published in 1803, shortly after he sailed for India (never to return). In fact it is a collection of pieces written over several years, with connecting sections added in the months before his departure – 'Beside the Ettrick Minstrel stood a name, The Bard who sung the Scenes of Infancy! As also stood the darling Cunninghame, Who sung old faery Cluden, Nith, and Dee' [JTe].

scer (sker) n., arch. a ridge of rock, precipitous bare bank, cliff, especially one made of red rock – 'Fornent iz, . . . Mintih Craigs . . . brent raise ther skerrs' [ECS] (also spelled 'sker'; cf. the more anglicised scaur; from Mediæval English and Old Norse).

the Scer (utthu-sker) n. Lynnwood Scar, i.e. the cliff behind Lynnwood – '. . . she sat on the Scer watchin Lynnwud Mills chimney bein demolished' [IWL]. The same name was also formerly used for the slope along the Avenue of Wilton Lodge (also 'the Scaur').

the Scer Pool see the Scaur Pool

schammared (sha-mard) pp., adj., arch. ornamented – 'Item, ane pair of black velvot breikis, with ane clok lyned with schag all schamarred our with black silk lace . . . ' [SB1633].

Schanyie (shan-yee) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) wright from Branxholme who is described in a 1612 list as being convicted along with many other local men of charging too much interest on loans. His name is also written as 'Schange' and he seems not to have appeared to answer the charge and hence was declared a rebel (it is unclear to which modern name this might correspond).

scheir see shear

scheme (skeem) n. a housing scheme, typically known as a 'housing estate' in England, and particularly applying to those built by the council. Housing schemes in Hawick include Burnfoot, Stirches and Mayfield.

schent (shent) pp., poet. put to death, destroyed, damned, perished – 'For the Lord kens the waye o' the richteous: but the waye o' the ungodlie sall be uutterlie schent' [HSR], '. . . thaye schent at the rebuik o' thy countenence' [HSR].

Scherwinlaw see Sherwinlaw

Schetky (shet-kee) n. John Christian (1778–1874) born in Edinburgh, from an old Transylvanian family, he settled in Oxford, and became professor of drawing at the naval college, Portsmouth, where he was well-known as a marine painter. He was commissioned by Sir Walter Scott to paint 12 views along Border rivers to illustrate 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' in 1810. The painting of Hawick, from 1808, is one of the first images of the town, the view being from roughly near Wilton Grove. There is also a view of Harden Glen from when he visited the area in September 1807, and a view of Goldielands showing its already ruined state around that time.

Scheves (sheevz) n. John (d.c.1452) from Aberdeenshire, he was a priest of Glasgow Diocese. He was a kinsman of Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany and probably related to other priests of the same surname. He had permission to study in Oxford in 1393 and was Bechelor of Decrees from at least 1412 and was one of the first to teach that subject at the University of St. Andrews. He was Vicar of Linlithgow from about 1404 and held the Church of Arbuthnott in 1412, as well as benefices in Moray. In 1418 he was 'licentiate of canon law, official, and rector of the University of St. Andrews, councillor of Robert, duke of Albany, governor of the realm' when he gained a canonry and prebend of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale; he also held the church of 'Abbirbuthnot' in St. Andrews Diocese. He was succeeded in St. Andrews by John Elwald. He resigned the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in 1419 in favour of William Crozier. He was Clerk of the Rolls and Register of Brechin in 1426 and associated with St. Andrews Diocese in the 1430s. Before 1433 he resigned a right to the Prebendary of Ancrum to George 'de Newton'. As well as being a cleric, he was also a diplomat, being a councillor for the Duke of Albany, serving as an ambassador to the Papal Court, and being appointed Clerk of the Rolls and Register in Scotland. In 1429 he was an envoy to negotiations with the English in Hadden, Sprouston. He is said to have written a synopsis of Gratian's 'Decretum'. There are many alternative spellings and his name is sometimes transcribed as 'de Schenes'.

Schiehallion (shee-haw-lee-in) n. local folk group, consisting of the Lammies from Hawick and another couple from St. Boswells, performing since about 1980 and having released about 4 tapes (note there are other groups from elsewhere with the same name).

schuil (skil) n. school – 'what schuil did ee gaun ti?', 'An' at his thie hang the schule horne, Tyde wi' the rybande grein' [WiSp], 'The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave . . . ' [ECS], 'He's never out o' some mischief, He'll no' gang to the schule, He tore his carritch leaf frae leaf To mak' a dragon's tail' [JT], '. . . Wad tempt o'o for tae jouk the schule and seek the flooery braes' [VW], 'The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule' [DH], 'There werena mony bairns aboot In oor wee village schule, But, ah, it was a bonnie spot, Doon by the shelt'ring hill' [WFC], 'And noo, in the schule o' the warld, A hantle o' heidstrong loons . . . ' [WL], 'Nowadays schule lassies can dae better than that!' [BW1974], v. to school – '. . . where hei schuiled yin o' his maist famous pupils, Christopher Murray Grieve' [IHS], 'She'd ne'er been schuled i' the artfu' wiles That jauds

the Schuil Board (thu-skil-bōrd) n. the School Board, which was formed in Hawick in 1873, following the Education Scotland Act of 1872. It took over the responsibility of running the schools from the Parish heritors, and put the control in the hands of a locally elected Board. Minute books for 1873–1947 are in the Borders Archive.

schuilhoose (skil-hoos) n. schoolhouse, a building in which pupils are taught, sometimes also serving as the residence of the schoolmaster. The need for a separate school building (rather than using St. Mary's Kirk) was agreed upon at least as early as 1683. Rent paid for the schoolhouse by the Kirk Session of Hawick is recorded in 1712, although this was some temporary accommodation. Some time after 1722 the first purpose-built Hawick Parish schoolhouse was erected (at Slitrig Bank), but it was carried away by the 1767 flood.

schuilmaister (skil-mās-tur) n. a schoolmaster. In the Hawick – '...since thair is ane large toune whiche has no common gudes at this time not casualties wherebie they may sustene a scolemaister' [RRC] (also hyphenated; see schuil-maister and Rectors for list of Hawick Schoolmasters and High School Rectors; see also the English Schuil, heidmaister, the Pesh).

schuilmaisters (skil-mās-turz) n., pl. schoolmasters. In the Hawick area the word was used to refer to the main (or only) teacher of a parish school. William Hay is recorded as Schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1606, although it is not certain this was at the Parish School. James Carmure is recorded as Schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1631. John Liddersdale, who signed the Solemn League and Covenant in Hawick in 1638 is recorded as being a schoolmaster, presumably in Hawick, but this is uncertain; he also witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1639. Hawick's Schoolmaster is first explicitly mentioned in 1657, when Walter Martin held the position; he was recorded again as Schoolmaster in 1665. A Mr. Chisholme was next, but his first name is not known. John Purdom took over in 1669 and is the first of whom we have any substantial information. During his time the Grammar School was established, taking away some of his teaching duties, as well as salary; in 1710 a bond was granted by the Council for payment to the new master of the Grammar School (usually called the Rector, the first being James Innes). The Parish School was then often referred to as the 'English Schuil' to distinguish it from the 'Latin Schuil'. Some of the payment for the Parish Schoolmaster came directly from the pupils, and the income was also supplemented with the master serving as Session Clerk, as well as Kirk Reader. Subjects taught by the single master included Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Latin and Singing. John Purdom retired in 1723 and died in about 1725. James Turnbull is recorded as Schoolmaster in 1726. Walter Turnbull, 'the Little Maister', was Schoolmaster from the 1730s until at least 1746, and Alexander Brown was recorded as Schoolmaster in 1751. James Inglis was Parish Schoolmaster at the time of the flood of 1767, having started in 1756 and serving until his death in 1806. He may have been succeeded by 'Gutty' Jardine (whose actual first name is not recorded). Christopher Armstrong was master until 1820. The main source of the Schoolmaster's salary was the fees, with an additional amount from the heritors, as well as the mortification of the Orrock Bequest. In the 1830s there were around 150 pupils. The Schoolmaster's house appears to have been inadequate for most of the history of the school. In the early 19th century the house at 20 Buccleuch Street was used. The first purpose-built house for the Schoolmaster was constructed along with the new Buccleuch Street school 1860. The Grammar School was founded in 1710, with the first master being James Innes, who was called Rector to distinguish him from the Parish school master. There was a common master for the two schools for some of the 18th century. The two schools merged in 1824, with James Murray as the common Master. Once the schools were big enough to require many teachers, rather than just a master and a few assistants, the term 'heidmasiter' would be used. The word 'Rector' was initially used at the Grammar School and transposed to the High School when they merged. A roll of Hawick Parish Schoolmasters includes: William Hay (probably), 1606; James Carmure (probably), 1631; John Liddersdale (probably), at least 1638–39; Walter Martin, at least 1657–1665; Mr. Chisholme, until 1669; John Purdom, 1669–1723; James Turnbull, from 1726; Walter Turnbull, at least 1737–46; Alexander Brown, 1751; James Inglis, 1756–1806; and Christopher Armstrong, 1806–20.

the Schuilmaister's Field (thu-skil-māsturz-feeld) n. local name for a field at Honeyburn just outside Denholm. It was presumably once connected with the local schoolmaster.

schuils (skilz) n., pl. schools. Hawick currently has 6 primary schools (Burnfoot, Drumlanrig, St. Margaret's, Stirches, Trinity and Wilton), several outlying primary schools (Denholm, Hobkirk, Newcastleton, Roberton, Teviothead) and one High School. St. Mary's, St. Cuthbert's and Wilton Dean schools also once existed in town, along with several small private schools. There used to be several other small schools in country areas around the Town, including at the Allan Water, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Burnmouth, Clariliaw, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Howpasley, Kirkton, Minto, Newmill, Redfordgreen, Riccarton, Saughtree, Southdean, Stouslie and Wolfelee. During the 18th century there are records of people being paid by Hawick and Wilton Parishes to teach children (probably in their own houses) in the areas of Branxholmetown, Borthwickhaugh, Northhouse, Raesknowe, Thornyhall (i.e. Teviothead) and Whitlaw. The earliest school in Hawick started before 1600 and was located in St. Mary's Church, with the churchyard as a playground. The school may not have had a continuous existence until about the time of the Reformation. Andrew Sword was recorded as Schoolmaster in c.1592 and again in 1616, William Hay in 1606 and Adam Scott in 1622. In the Parish valuation of 1627 it is stated that there 'is no provision for ane schole, bot thair is verie great necessitie for a schole'. James Carmure was recorded as Schoolmaster in 1631. However, it is unclear how well supported education was in the town through the rest of the 17th century and before there had long been calls to establish such a school. The first purpose-built parish school was on Slitrig Bank, but was washed away in the 1767 flood. In the 18th century fees may have been 1s per quarter for reading, 1s 6d for reading and writing, and 2s 6d for Latin; poor scholars would pay reduced fees. The Grammar School, which taught Latin, was founded in 1710, with the building on Orrock Place constructed around 1732. It existed alongside the Parish School (also then referred to as 'the English Schuil') for more than a century. They came together in 1825 as 'the United Schuils' and later 'Buccleuch Schuil'. However, even the combination of the 2 schools was still insufficient provision for education, leading to many small private schools cropping up from about the 1710s, although originally they were forbidden to teach 'further than the Psalm Book'. The number of private teachers increased in the 18th century, along with the secession movement from the established church. More small private schools appeared through the 19th century, with one being set up in 1836 by several local individuals with a young teacher hired from Edinburgh (as described by Robert Wilson). The New Statistical Account (1840) states that Hawick had as many as 10 'adventure schools' and that it was not 'known that there are any of the native population above fifteen years of age who cannot read'. There were apparently as many as 19 separate institutions existing in Hawick and Wilton in 1865. Most of these private schools lasted only a short time, and they included: Brand's Schuil (a.k.a. Teviot Grove Academy); the Chartist Schuil; Hawick Academy; Heronhill Schuil; the Subscription Schuil; Tibbie Thomline's Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy. It is traditional that on the Thursday of the Common Riding the Principals visit the primary schools and the Cornet asks the Head if the pupils can have the rest of that day and the next day off to support him; the Cornet's own school is visited first. A full list of Hawick and neighbouring schools is: Abbotrule Schuil; Allan Water Schuil/Priesthaugh Schuil; Ashkirk Schuil; Bedrule Schuil; Beverley Schuil; Borthwickhaugh Schuil; Brand's Schuil/Teviot Grove Academy; Branxholme Schuil; Burnfit Schuil; Burnmooth Schuil; the Chartist Schuil; Cogsmill Schuil; Clarilaw Schuil; Craigmount Schuil; Denholm Schuil/Cavers Schuil; Drumlanrig Schuil; the Industrial Schuil/the Raggit Schuil/Drumlanrig & St. Cuthbert's Schuil; Hallrule Schuil; Hassendean Schuil; Hawick High Schuil/Hawick Grammar Schuil/the Latin Schuil/Dodd's Schuil/Buccleuch Grammar Schuil/Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil/Buccleuch Schuil/Hawick United Schuils; Hawick Parish Schuil/the English Schuil; Hermitage Schuil; Heronhill Schuil; Hobkirk Schuil; Howpasley Schuil; the Image Gairden; Kirkton Schuil; Minti Schuil; Newcastleton Schuil; Newmill Schuil; Newton Schuil; Redfordgreen Schuil; Riccarton Schuil; Roberton Schuil; Ruecastle Schuil; Saughtree Schuil; the Sclenty Schuil; Soothdean Schuil; St. Cuthbert's Schuil/the Episcopal Schuil; Stirches Schuil; St. Margaret's Schuil/the Catholic Schuil; St. Mary's Schuil; Stobs Schuil/ Newmill (on Slitrig) Schuil; Stouslie Schuil; the Subscription Academy/Hawick Academy; the Subscription Schuil/Hawick High Schuil; Teviotheid Schuil/Caerlenrig Schuil; Tibbie Thomline's Schuil; Trinity Schuil; Wolfelee Schuil; Wulton Dean Schuil; Wulton Lodge Academy; and Wulton Schuil.

Sclater (sklā'-ur) n. Elizabeth (18th C.) born at Fodderlee Birks (according to George Tancred). In 1745 she was living with her family in one of the cottages at Weensmoor. Since her family had previously lived near Fodderlee it seems reasonable to suppose that they gave their name to the 'Sclater Ford' there; however, this would require that the same family had been there for more than 200 years. When they were at Weensmoor in 1745 it is said that the Highland host stopped at the farm on their march to England, but found only the children at home – 'They did no harm and tried to pacify the bairns, who were afraid of them'. She was grandmother to Mr. Aitken, who was a plasterer in Jedburgh. It is possible she was the Elizabeth who married Robert Williamson and had children baptised at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh: Elizabeth (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Moses (b.1783). There were Sclaters recorded in St. Boswell's, Bowden and Melrose at about this time (the name is probably a variant of the modern 'Slater').

Sclaterford (sklā'-ur-furd) n. site of a skirmish in the months following Flodden, as reported in a (one-sided) letter from Lord Dacre in November 1513: 'so to the Sclater Ford on the water of Bowset; was pursued by the Scots, assisted by Dand Kerr of Fernehirst, the Laird of Bondgedworth, and the sheriff of Teviotdale; the Laird of Walghope and Mark Trumbill are hurt'. The site was a ford over the 'water of Bowset' which is probably associated with Bowshot Hill in Abbotrule, and has been identified with the Fodderlee Burn. It is recorded that the Laird of Wauchope (or 'Walghope') was injured with an arrow and had his horse slain, while Mark Turnbull ('Trumbill') had a spear-head left in him, and many others were injured. It is said that there was a large cairn there until the early 1800s, which may have been connected with the skirmish. The ford was probably named after the family called Sclater who once lived near there (until about the early 1700s according to Tancred, which suggests the same family lived there for about 200 years). In 1903 a memorial plaque was erected by the Archæological Society on the bridge over the Fodderlee Burn, which is believed to be at the site of the former ford. The plaque was replaced in 2007. The same area was also known as 'Crawdenford' – 'When the beacons blaze for Redeswire On the Carter Bar, N' 'Out wi the sword' ti Sclaterford Wi Scotts n' Kerrs ana' ' [IHS] (often referred to as 'the Sclaterford').

Sclenty Haa (sklen'-ee-haw) n. former cottage near Weens. George Scott was there in 1784. There were Redpaths and Sibbalds there in 1841, as well as teacher Helen Laidlaw (it is 'Sclentiehall' in 1784).

the Sclenty Schuil (thu-sklen'-ee-skil) n. former school in Hobkirk Parish in the early-to-mid 19th century, intended for small children who were too young for the Parish school. It was established about 1831 by Mrs. Cleghorn of Weens, who supplied the money for the books and the teacher's salary. The building was a thatched cottage with one room, divided by 2 box-beds. The Schoolmistress was Nelly Laidlaw, referred to as 'Mrs. Laidlaw'. On the 16th of October each year, George Tancred's (nee Cleghorn) birthday, Mrs. Cleghorn would give out toys and books to the children. The building was later the residence of a shoemaker. The name survives in the 'Upper Sclenty Plantation', on the left-hand side of the road between Bonchester Bridge and Weens House. This is probably the same place meant by the farm of 'Stentyhaugh', where Robert Barrie was tenant in 1797.

sclidder (skli-dur) n., arch. a slide, sliding movement, slope covered with loose stones, v., arch. to slide, slip – 'To sclidder, sclither, to slide to the right or left, when one intends going straight forward; particularly applicable to walking on ice, Teviotd.' [JoJ] (also written 'sklidder'; the word was applied to springs around the top of the Loan; see also sclither and slidder).

the Sclidder Springs (thu-skli-dur-springz) n. name sometimes given to the springs that feed the Smaile Burn. They formerly came out at the Nipknowes and were conducted by lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan and to 6 separate wells, forming Hawick's main public water supply from 1797–1865 (the original cost being £600). These wells or 'sprigget pants' were at the West Port ('Bowie's Well'), bottom of the Mid Row, foot of the Howegate (the 'Printer's well'), at the Town House, and at 2 other locations (presumably along the High Street). The source was also called the 'Town Moor' or 'Haggishaa' supply

sclim (sklim) n., arch. a climb – ' 'Teedisome brae' ', quo A, eenow, bit for aa A stecht keinda, it was rale niece, that sklimm' [ECS] v., poet to climb – 'So sklim' high heaven, trinnle throw hell . . . ' [DH] (also written 'sklimm' and 'sklim' ').

Scobie (skō-bee) n. W. associated with the Youth With A Mission, which met in the former Hawick Home Mission premises on Bourtree Place. He started his own church, called 'The New Life Christian Fellowship', which met at the Evergreen Hall. The name was later changed to Abundant Life Church, and in 1988 the group purchased the former Catholic Church at Burnfoot.

Scocha (skō-shu) n. Scottish folk music band from Hawick, originally formed as a duo by Iain Scott and David Chapman. The name comes from a contraction of Scott and Chapman, and they get upset when it is pronounced incorrectly! Phil Clayton ('Phil the Base') became the third member of the duo, followed by Alan Brydon as the fourth and Dougie Anderson as the drummer. Their first CD, 'Bordering on . . . ', was released in 2001, along with a video 'Songs of the Border'. A CD single 'The Borders' was released in 2002 and a second album 'The Land We Love' in 2004, accompanied by their 'World Tour' of the Borders. The 3rd album 'Gie'd Sum Wellie' was released in 2006. A live CD was released in 2008, followed by a live DVD in 2009. Their 4th studio album, 'Scattyboo', was released in 2012. In 2012 Alan Brydon left, with Ross Walsh joining on drums and Dougie Anderson moving to lead guitar. Phil Clayton left at the end of 2013, to be replaced as bassist by Neil Jackson. The new line-up released 'Moonlight Again' in 2016 and the live double album 'Live on the Borders' in 2017.

scodgie (sko-jee) adj., arch. slavish (of tasks), dirty, rough – 'All, from the scogie lass to the chambermaid, were on terms of great cordiality with the members of the family than obtain now' [V&M], n., arch. a drudge, hard-worked servant, a rough apron worn for dirty work (also spelled 'scogie').

scone (skōn) n. one of a number of sorts of cake baked on a griddle, particularly a drop-scone, but sometimes one flavoured with treacle or occasionally a more substantial cake containing potato (note that the pronunciation has a long ō sound, not the o of general Scots or the diphthong e-oo affected as an attemtpt to sound 'posh').

scone-fittit (skōn-fi'-it, -ee') adj., arch. flat-footed (this term, platcher-fittit and platchie-fittit are all noted by E.C. Smith).

scoof (skoof) n., arch. a scoop, used by grocers etc (cf. scuif, this variant being particularly heard in Teviotdale).

scool (skool) n., arch. a scowl, v. to scowl – 'There's my opinion – then, dame, how d'ye like it? No' vera weel – I ken sae by yer scoolin' ' [JoHa], '. . . Noughts seen by girnin' gabs an' scoolin' ' [JoHa] (also written 'scoul').

scoolie (skoo-lee) adj., arch. scowly, characterised by a scowl, shading the face with a brow turned down at the front – 'The scowly hat, and beard so gray, – The bridegroom stood before her' [JTe], 'A scoolie hat = a hat overshading the eyes' [ECS] (also written 'scooly').

Scoon (skoon) n. Andrew (19th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included Janet (b.1834). An unnamed child of his died in 1837. His mother, who lived at Roadhead, died in 1824. David (18th C.) smith in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1672, along with Patrick. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1771); Janet (b.1771); Patrick (b.1773). The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related). James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk 1580. His son and heir apparent John was also a witness. He witnessed further transactions in 1581 and 1581/2 when he was described as a Burgess. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Helen (b.1635); and Janet (b.1642). Witnesses to the baptisms included Patrick and Simon, who must have been closely related. The 1635 baptism is one of the earliest existing Hawick Parish records. James (1790–1827) probably son of Walter and Mary Elliot, residents of Todshawhill. He may have worked for a while as a farrier with his brother Walter in Langholm. He emigrated to South Africa in 1817, in a party of Scotsmen including his brother Robert (later a hunter and explorer). He settled in Cape Town as a blacksmith. In 1824 he married Francina, and they had 3 children, including Walter. However, he died in 1827, it is said at the age of 34. James (b.1812/3) from Canonbie, he was a labourer at Limiekilnedge Lime Works in 1851. In 1861 he was a labourer at New Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret Beattie in Castleton Parish in 1837 and their children included Dinah (b.1839/40) and Isabella (b.1843/4). James (1836–89) son of John and Agnes Robson. He was born in Langholm, and descended from the family of the Branxholme area. He became a tweed designer at Glebe Mills and then went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Scoon & Barrie in Weensland. Later J.L. Hood became a partner and when Barrie left the company became Scoon & Hood, with main premises at Teviotdale Mills. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch Park. He had a double cottage built for him at Loch Park in about 1879, with W.S. Barrie next door. He married Anne O'Hair in 1859. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1861), who married John Milton Cass; Robert (b.1863), who married Isabella Lillico; Agnes (b.1869); James (b.1872); Margaret (b.1877); and Frank (b.1882). James (1872–1936) son of James, he was also a manufacturer. In 1900 he married Isabella, daughter of dyker Robert Scott. His wife was served heir to her father in 1917. They had a son, James (1901–70). John (16th C.) recorded at Aikwood Mill in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. His surname is recorded as 'Skune'. Perhaps he was the same John also recorded in Philiphaugh in 1579/80 and who witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580, 1581, 1581/2 and 1582. Probably the same John was recorded as son and heir apparent of James in 1580. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, one of the earliest known of this family. He married Christian Allan, and their children included: Christian (b.1634). John (d.bef. 1705) tenant at Branxholmtown. He is listed as tenant along with Patrick in 1677, and seems likely to have been Patrick's brother. Probably the same John was tenant along with Patrick in at least the period 1690–8, when each of them were leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1698 he and Patrick leased Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. However, it is possible that some of these entries are for a different John (b.1670), who was son of Patrick. He married Margaret Riddell, from an unknown branch of that family, although Walter and William Riddell witnessed a baptism for them. Their children included: Robert (b.1684); and an unnamed son (b.1687). Walter, who later farmed at Branxholmtown, was probably also a son. Margaret Riddell was tenant at Branxholmtown from 1705, so he was presumably deceased by then. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Helen and her husband Francis Murray. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He paid tax on his dwelling and also for 'an smiddy'. John (b.1713) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, he was baptised at Branxholmtown. He was tenant farmer for part of Todshawhill, starting in at least 1748. He was recorded there in 1753 when one of this children was baptised in Roberton Parish. In 1751 he was renting Todshawhill with Robert (probably his father). However, he is difficult to separate from the other local contemporaries of the same name. He is probably the John 'in Branxhome' whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1747, with witnesses Robert 'Tenent' (surely a close relative) and carrier John Wilson. His wife's name is unknown. Their children included: Robert (1749–1832) who married Beatrix Turnbull; John (1750–1836), baptised in Roberton, who also farmed at Todshwhill; and Jean (b.1753). Walter (b.1753), baptised in Roberton, who married Mary Elliot, was probably his son; Walter's grandson James became a tweed manufacturer in Hawick. Mary, born to John 'in Branxhome' in 1747 may also have been a child of his. John (1718–91) tenant farmer at Todshawhill, probably son of Walter and Isobel Millar. He is probably one of the 2 Johns recorded as tenant of Todshawhill in 1764. He is listed as resident of Todshawhill in the baptism records of several of his children. He married Beatrix Tait, who died in 1795, aged 74. Their children were: Walter (b.1748), baptised in Roberton, who died age 29; Robert (b.1749), baptised in Roberton; Jenny, who died young; Agnes (b.1751), married Robert Ballantyne; William (b.1752), died young; Isabella (b.1755), baptised in Roberton, who married James Laidlaw; William (again, b.1756), baptised in Roberton, who married Helen Elliot; John (b.1756), baptised the same day as William; Robert (b.1759), baptised in Roberton; and Jean (b.1763), baptised in Roberton, who married Adam Nichol He is buried at St. Mary's. His sister Mary died the same year as him. He may be the John of 'Todgahill' who was cautioner in 1764 for Isobell Scoon's marriage to Robert Young. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son John was baptised in 1762. John (18th C.) married Isobel Nichol in Roberton Parish in 1766. He may be the same as one of the Johns who farmed at Todshawhill. John (d.1829) farmer at Branxholme Park. A child of his died in 1816 and a son in 1829. He died in Hawick. He was surely related to the later John at Branxholme Park. John (1750–1836) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and probably Beatrix Tait (or possibly son of the John born in 1713, this generation is confused by multiple men of the same name). He may be the John recorded in 1800, 1803 and 1805 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Tait. He married Rachel Riddell in Roberton in 1770. Their children were: James (1769–1851), who died in Seneca, New York; Robert (b.1770); John (1771–1861), who died in Seneca; Janet (or Janette, 1773–1839) who married James Scott and died in Seneca, New York; Walter (b.1776); William (1779–1863) who married Margaret Hutton and Elizabeth Amos and died in Hawick; Beatrix (b.1782); and possibly Walter (b.1787), if he was at Shirenscleuch then. The first 3 were probably baptised in Roberton Parish and at least the next 4 in Hawick. The witnesses in 1773 were Robert Thomson and William Helm. He may be the same as the John who was farmer at Easter Parkhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1771–1861) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Rachel Riddell. In 1800 he emigrated to the New York, where he settled in Seneca and was one of the founders of the Associated Reformed Church there. He died in Seneca and was buried there along with his wife Margaret. John (18th C.) servant at 'Whitehaugh' in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun'. He was a servant at Mangerton on the 1801 ballot. John (b.c.1780) recorded as servant at Branxholme Park in the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was still on the list in 1801. He was a farm worker living at Branxholme Park in 1841. His house was probably at Cowladyhall. His wife was Betty, who was from Roberton. Their children included Jess (b.c.1825), Agnes (b.c.1830) and Mina (b.c.1830). His wife was a widow by 1851. He could be the John, married to Betsy Turnbull, whose daughter Helen was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1817. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw. He married Jane Watson and their son Andrew was baptised in Roberton in 1804. He may be the same John who also Margaret Scott and had further children. John (18th/19th C.) married Jane Watson. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Andrew (b.1804). John (1789–1835) farmer at Todshawhill. He was eldest son of Robert and Janet White. His heirs were recorded as tenants of Todshawhill in the period 1834–43. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1829, aged 41. Their children included: Robert (1812–85) who married Mary Nichol and died at Sparland, Illinois; William (1813–77), born at Martinshouse, who married Henrietta Pool Gass; Wilhelmina (1815–43) married Walter Turnbull and emigrated to Canada; James (1818–57) farmed at Newstead Mill; John (b.1822), born at Mabonlaw; and Charles Riddell (1826–93) died at Seneca, New York. He died at Hawick. He may be the same John who earlier married Jane Watson. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Nichol and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1841. Mary 'the Cannie Wumman' nee Turnbull (d.1857) known as 'Mrs. Scoon', she was listed as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851. She was listed as a vintner at the Plough in Slater's 1852 directory. She is also said to have been landlady of the Harrow Inn (but this may be confusion with the names). She married innkeeper William, and took over after his death. It is unclear what character trait gave her the nickname 'Cannie' (or 'Canny'). Patrick (15th C.) resident of Belses Mill. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including brining in Englishmen to steal 18 oxen and cows from him, for burning his house and pillaging goods from him. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Richardson, and their children included: Helen (b.1641). He is probably the Patrick recorded as a witness to baptisms in 1635 and 1639. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susanna Scott and their children included Anna (b.1650), with witnesses to the baptism Walter Scott and George Scott. Patrick (17th C.) lived in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Laidlaw, and their children included: James (b.1657).

Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1672, along with smith David. Patrick (d.c.1699) son of Robert. He was tenant farmer in Branxholmtown in at least the period 1671–96. In 1675 he was listed as son of Robert, who also leased part of Branxholmetown. In 1690–97 he and John (probably his son) were each leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he and John leased part of Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. He married Helen Hope and had children: John (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1672); another unnamed son (b.1674); William (b.1678) and Janet (b.1680). The witnesses in 1674 were Robert Dickson and James Burn. He secondly married Bessie Elliot and had children: Walter (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Patrick (b.1688), who married Agnes Elliot. Witnesses to the 1685 baptism were James Hume and Adam Ogilvie. He is probably the Patrick who witnessed (along with John Richardson) a baptism for James Martin in 1673. James (b.1693), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. His will is recorded in 1699, although his surname is transcribed 'Shoon'. Patrick (1685/6–1719) son of John. He was smith at Pathhead (presumably not the one in Wilton) and is buried at Castleton. Patrick (17th/18th) married Agnes Elliot in 1711, the marriage recorded in Hawick Parish. He could be the son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot who was born on 1688. Alternatively, the marriage entry could be an error for Robert, who had children with Agnes Elliot in the period 1712–24. Patrick (18th C.) recorded being paid as Park Keeper at Hassendean for the Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1764–66. He had a voucher for salary in 1765 for weeding and keeping the hedges on Hassendean Common. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scoons. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot, and their children included Walter (b.1641). He (or one of the other Roberts) witnessed a baptism for James Purdom in Hawick Parish in 1640. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott, and their children included: Margaret (b.1643); 'Dones' (b.1644); Helen (b.1646); and Janet (b.1648). Anna (b.1650), with the mother's name given as Susanna Scott, may also have been his child. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included: Walter (b.1649); and Thomas (b.1650). Another Robert was witness to one of the baptisms. Robert (17th C.) farmer at Branxholmtown. In 1675 he and his son Patrick were tenants of part of the lands at Branxholmtown, and the pair were still leasing part of the farm in 1677. He is probably the same as one of the Roberts whose children were recorded in the 1640s or 1650s. Robert (1684–1762) tenant farmer at Branxholmtown and Todshawhill. He was son of John and Margaret Riddell. He witnessed a baptism for James Craw, tenant at Branxholmtown, in 1711. He is probably the son of 'Mary' Riddell who is recorded leasing part of Branxholme Town as early as 1711, and is explicitly listed from 1714. The pair were in arrears for the rental there in the period 1711–17. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Little (in Branxholme Park) and Margaret Scoon (who was probably related to him). In 1722 he witnessed baptisms for merchant Adam Elliot and merchant James Hardie (both of whom had children baptised on the same day). He was tenant of $^2/_5$ of Branxholmtown along with Walter (as well as John Wilson) in 1725 and along with Walter in 1735. In 1742 he and Walter were 'Tenants at Branxome Town' when they witnesed a baptism for Walter Hume, carrier there. In 1747 he was 'Tenent' when he witnessed a baptism for John Scoon in Branxholme. He was tenant of Todshawhill in the period 1749–56 along with John, probably his son, or cousin. He married Agnes Elliot (1688–1736). Their children were: John (b.1712); another John (b.1713); Walter (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1720) who married Helen Murray; William (b.1722); and James (b.1724). He may also be the Robert whose daughter Marie was baptised in Hawick in 1726. The witnesses in 1712 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Robert Thomson in Newmill, in 1720 were James and Walter Crow, both in Branxholmtown, and in 1722 were merchant Adam Elliot (for whom he also witnessed a baptism) and Beadle John Scott. He died at Todshawhill farm. Robert (b.1720) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot. He married Helen Murray (from Hawick Parish) in 1766, and she died in 1808. He might be the Robert, son of Robert, who died in 1790. He may also be the Robert, 'Branxholmtonn', married to Janet Burton, whose son Walter was born in 1759. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1753 he married Janet Haliburton. He might be the Robert whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Turnbull and their daughter Sarah was baptised in 1781. Robert (1759–1828) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Beatrix Tait. He is recorded as farmer at Todshawhill in the estate records from 1792–1812, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and in baptismal records. He could also be the Robert who was listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792 and 1812. In 1788 in Roberton he married Janet White, who died in 1795, aged 33. In 1797, in Roberton Parish, he secondly married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Bunyan, who died in 1841, aged 73. His children included: John (b.1788) who farmed at Todshawhill; Janet (1791–1873) who married Thomas Hall and died in Hawick; Beatrix (b.1793); Jane (1795–1847), who married Thomas Hogg; James (b.1799), who died aged 22; Margaretn (b.1801), who died aged 29; Isabella (1802–59) married Robert Brydon, steward at Highchesters; Elizabeth (b.1804), died aged 26; Robert (b.1806), died in infancy; and twins Robert and Elspeth (b.1807), who died in childhood. Margaret and Mary, 'both interred in one grave, pox' in 1830 were probably also his daughters. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert, carter in the Fore Row, who died in 1832, and whose wife Beatrix Murray, died in 1807. Robert (1789–1837) said to be from the Hawick area, he was a trader in southern Africa. Given the name and date, it is possible he was a son of Walter and Mary Elliot, who lived at Todshawhill; this Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1788. He went to South Africa in 1819 as part of Benjamin Moodie's Scottish settler party (his brother James also being in the party). In 1827 he and William McLuckie travelled inland to the headwaters of the Marico River, the Ndebele territory of Mzilikazi. In 1829 he reached further into the interior, to the area of modern Pretoria, hunting and trading ivory, and establishing a relationship with Mzilikazi, which may have involved selling arms. The information he and fellow traders gained was passed on to Dr. Andrew Smith, who led a significant expedition into the central South Africa in 1834. He and fellow trader David Hume explored the valley of Olifants River and the Soutpansberg about this time. He is also mentioned as an ivory trader in 1836. In 1837 he was reported as being the only man who could recognise the gemsbok when a specimen was captured. He died of a heart attack while returning from a hunting trip. Parts of his journal may have survived. Robert (1812–83) farmer at Todshawhill, son of John and Margaret Scott. On the estate records he is tenant in 1836, as his father John's heir. He emigrated to the U.S.A. about 1842, apparently still owing money on the lease. He was the last family member to farm at Todshawhill. In 1836 in Roberton Parish he married Mary Nichol. Their children were: Margaret; Jane (b.1838); John (b.1840), who married Ella Currie; Jessie (b.1842); James; Charles, who married Mary Jennie; William; Minnie; Elizabeth; and Robert. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Mary Nichol and their children included Elizabeth (b.1853). Simon (17th C.) witness, along with Patrick, to a baptism for James and Janet Glendinning in 1635. This is one of the earliest Hawick Parish records. It is unclear how he might have been related to Patrick and James. Thomas (17th C.) married Margaret Brown in Ashkirk Parish in 1654. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull and their children included: Agnes (b.1766); Isabel (b.1768); William (b.1770); and Elizabeth (b.1772). Thomas (18th C.) recorded as grieve at Haining in 1787. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably brother of Robert and son of John and Margaret Riddell. He took over the tenancy of Branxholmtown from Margaret Riddell in 1719 (hence it is unlikely that he was son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot). He was recorded as tenant in Branxholmtown in 1720. He farmed Branxholmtown along with Robert until at least 1735 (when the pair were recorded still leasing the farm). In 1742 he and Robert were 'Tenants at Branxome Town' when they witnesed a baptism for Walter Hume, carrier there. In 1717 he married Isobel Miller, who was servant to Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill; the marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children were: John (b.1718), who married Beatrix Tait and farmed at Todshawhill; Margaret (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); and twins Robert and Walter (b.1729). The witnesses in 1720 were William Scott and James Crow, also tenants in Branxholmtown, and in 1722 were Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill and 'Mr' James Dalgleish. Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer at Commonside. His parents names are not known, but he was surely related to the other local Scoons. In 1714 he had a son Walter with Helen Scott. The baptismal entry was labelled 'Fornicat' and the witnesses were carrier Robert Scott and smith James Scott (who seem likely to be relatives of the child's mother). In 1719 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Falsyde; they were described as both being servants to James Grieve in Commonside. Their children included: Walter (b.1714), who was illegitimate; James (b.1720); Thomas (b.1724), born at Newmill; Walter (b.1727); Mary (b.1729) in Hawick Parish; and Agnes (b.1736) in Wilton Parish. The 1720 baptism was witnessed by the preacher at Caerlenrig. The 1729 baptism was witnessed by the Laird of 'Howlands' and Robert Cook. John (b.1713), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. Walter (b.1753) probably son of John. He married Mary (or Marion) Elliot in Roberton in 1779. He was also farmer at Todshawhill. He and his wife had a discharge with Thomas Elliot in Selkirk in 1790. His children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: Margaret and John (b.1780); Robert (b.1782); Walter (b.1785), blacksmith in Langholm; Robert (again, b.1788), possibly the hunter in South Africa, said to have been born in 1789; James (b.1790), who may have gone to South Africa with his brother; and William (b.1794). Walter (d.1832) shoemaker at Kirkstylefoot. In 1831 he was served heir to his father Robert, who was a farm servant in Hawick. Walter (1785–1840) son of Walter and Mary Elliot. He was born in Roberton Parish (at Todshawhill) and became a blacksmith at Langholm. He could be the Walter who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Elizabeth Young (1784–22) and secondly Janet Stothart (1799–1842). He had at least 13 children, but only a few survived into adulthood. Children with his first wife were: Walter (1811–59); John (b.1813), who died young; Euphemia (1815–97), who married and emigrated to the U.S.A.; Margaret (1818–1907); James (again, b.1821), also died young; and 3 unnamed. With his second wife there were: James (b.1823), who died young; Robert (1824–78); William (1826–46); Isabella (1828–87), who died in Wigan; Mary (1830–69); Elizabeth (1831–71), who died in Bury; Janet (b.1835); and James (b.1837). Most of the family are buried in Langholm. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Robert Young. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Sarah Winthrope in 1756 and their children included: Robert (b.1756); Andrew (b.1759); and Agnes (b.1761). He must have been a fairly prominent man in the town, since the witnesses to baptisms include 'writer' Thomas Winthrope (perhaps his father-in-law) and Bailie James Scott, mason Andrew Turnbull, senior, as well as George Scoon (presumably a relative). He may be the 'Servant to Mr Somervel' who witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tudhope and James Paterson, as well as for mason Andrew Wilson in 1744, and for Walter Turnbull, David Baldie, Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. William (18th C.) farmer at Todshawhillshiel. He had children: Margaret (b.1780); Walter (b.1783); and Beatrix (b.1783). He was clearly related to the other Scoons of Todshawhill, but it is not clear how. He is probably the William who married Helen Elliot in 1779. William (b.1779/80) listed as 'Formerly a Farmer' in the 1861 census, when he was visiting the Young family on O'Connell Street. William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hutton in Wilton Parish in 1803. William (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Todshawhill recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. It is unclear how he was related to other Scoons, but he may have been related to John, who was also at Todshawhill on the 1812 ballot list. William (1817–c.50) innkeeper in Hawick. He was son of William and Elizabeth Amos. In 1841 he was innkeeper of the Tushielaw Inn and based on the birthplaces of his children was later at Crosslee Toll (near Stow) and then in Hawick. He married Mary Turnbull in 1836; she is recorded as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851, and she died in 1857. Their children included: Walter (1837–55); Helen (1839–1918); Mary (1842–89); William (1849–66); and Isabella, twin of William, who married John Kyle. William (19th C.) shepherd at East Buccleuch. In 1836 he was married to Mary Turnbull, by the dissenting minister in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1837); and Helen (b.1839) (also formerly 'Schoon', 'Scoane', 'Scon', 'Scone', 'Scoone', 'Scoones', 'Scoons' and 'Skune').

Scoon an Barrie's (skoon-in-baw-reez) n. tweed manufacturing company based at Weensland Mills in the late 19th century. They also purchased Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and the partnership evolved into Scoon & Hood's.

Scoon an Hood's (skoon-in-hoodz) n. tweed manufacturing company, which grew out of Barrie & Scoon. Their main premises were at Teviotdale Mills at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road (48 Commercial Road). There was a serious fire in 1959, and later the mill became part of Innes & Henderson. In the latter part of the 20th century it was converted into a garage, Thornwood Motors.

scoondrel (skoond-, skoon-rul) n. a scoundrel – 'Puir auld scoondrel. I'd thraw his neck . . . ' [JEDM], 'Git oot o' this, ye mean scoondrel it ye 'ir' [RM] (cf. scoonrel).

scoor (skoor) v. to clean by vigorous scrubbing, scour – 'scoor oot that pan, wull ee?', '... And it'll swell the cat'logue mair If scourin' be preventit' [TCh].

scoore (skoor) n., arch. a score, number of points – 'An' hei's teacher says 'If ye cannae coont, Ee'll never can tell the scoore' [DH], '... Ma scoore's whiles owre a hunder' [IWL], twenty of something – 'Ther ar thriescoore queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an' mays wuthowtten nummer' [HSR], '... Naething but scoores and scoores o' craws On every kirkyaird trei' [DH], v. to score.

scoorin-hoose (skoo-rin-hoos) n. scouring house in a mill, where garments are washed of their oils etc. The workers there were traditionally men, who formerly had to wear rubber boots and aprons – '... hei went inti Pesco's scoorin hoose feenishin up as a van man ...' [IWL].

scoorn (skoorn) n., v., poet. scorn – 'A' thaye thaye that see me lauch me til scoorn ...' [HSR], 'We ar grown ane reproch til our neebers, ane scoorn an' derishion til thame that ar roun aboot us' [HSR].

scoosh (skoosh) v. to squirt, gush, spurt – 'the witter came scooshin oot o the tap', 'she scooshed is wi the hose', 'Aw the sweaty traivelers. Off the street and bus and train. Showered and skooshed' [JuH], n. a squirt or spurt, something easy to do or win – 'A thought it wud be hard, but it turned oot ti be a scoosh' (also written 'skoosh').

scootin barrel (skoo'-in-baw-rul) n., arch. a water-spraying device, consisting essentially of a large barrel on wheels, used in the early part of the 20th century by the Council to keep down the dust on town streets.

scorn (skōrn) n., arch. insult, especially when coupled with 'skaith', meaning to get both injury and insult – 'There will be sma' skaith though meikle scorn' [JMW], 'This night ye've got the skathe, I wait, 'Twere pity too ye got the scorn' [HSR].

scorn the kirk (skōrn-thu-kirk) v., arch. to default on a marriage agreement, seen as an affront to the congregation – 'The 'resiling of parties after proclamation' was commonly called 'scorning the kirk', and failure of marriage involved the forfeiture of the consignation mony for the good of the poor' [JJV].

Scot (sko', skot) n. historically used to describe a people who came over from Ireland in the 5th and 6th centuries and had merged with the Pictish tribes by about the 9th century, but now used to mean any person from Scotland.

Scot (sko') n. early spelling for Scott, sometimes still used for specific individuals, such as Michael Scot and Capt. Walter Scot of Satchells.

scot an lot (sko'-in-lo') n. a tax administered to a baurgess when he takes his oath – 'That the burgesses were entitled to elect bailies ... without any other restriction than that these bear scot and lot, and reside within the burgh' [BR1778].

scotch (skoch) adj. relating to or characteristic of Scotland, but uniformly loathed as a phrase throughout the nation, the terms 'Scots' or 'Scottish' being preferred, except in particular phrases such as 'Scotch broth'. Also note that the word is never used for 'whusky'.

scotchbald (skoch-bawld) n., arch. an earwig (also written 'scotchbolt', a variant of 'Coachbell', 'Touch-spale' or the English 'Twitchbell'; shortened to scotchie; scodgie may also be related).

Scotch Kershope (skoch-ker-shup) n. cottage on the Kershope Burn, on the Scottish side of the Border, used as an outdoors educational facility. William Elliot was shepherd there in 1861. Enclosures marked near there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map are no longer visible.

Scotch nettle (skoch-ne'-ul) n., arch. a white-flowered, stingless nettle, perhaps Lamium album.

Scotia (skō-shu) n., poet. literary name for Scotland – 'Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin . . . ' [JH], 'Proud of his laws, tenacious of his right, And vain of Scotia's old unconquer'd might' [JL], 'Arm, Scotia, arm! the daring foe, With haughty menace from afar, Presumes to strike the invasive blow, And make our land a scene of war' [JR], 'Lament him, ilka piper chiel, Wha makes auld Scotia's bagpipe squeel' [JoHa], 'Come, arouse, ye sons of Scotia, 'tis freedom calls you forth, Up, ye true-born sons of heroes, ye warriors of the north' [JoHa], 'All now is changed, and halcyon years Succeed the feudal baron's sway; And trade, with arts and peace, appears To bless fair Scotia's happier day' [RW], 'When fair Scotia's host at Flodden lost The flower o' its chivalry' [TK], '. . . We showed them Scotia's door' [GLG], '. . . For Scotia owns no braver men Than dwell in Teviotdale' [MrsW], 'From many a house gay flags and pennons fly, And Scotia's ancient emblem in the breeze . . . ' [JCG], 'When Scotia lost on Flodden Field The Hawick Callants won Renown, that through the centuries Has never been outdone' [WFC], 'They sealed, in blood, for Hawick that day The worth of Scotia's men of yore; Revere them evermore' [IWS].

Scotland (sko'-lind, sko'-lund) n. one of the four nations of the United Kingdom, an independent country until 1603, with its parliment merging with that of England in 1707 (and being re-established in 1999). The capital is Edinburgh, population 5,100,000 (1991) – 'Auld Scotland's howes and Scotland's knowes, And Scotland's hills for me' [HSR], 'Oh! Scotland! Bonny Scotland! In your purple robe arrayed, You're my laughing barefoot lover and my tattered gipsy maid' [WHO], 'Scotlands calling (Scotland), Scotlands calling (Scotland), Calling, Calling, You home' [AlB].

Scotland Yet (sko'-lind-ye', sko'-lund-yet) n. the most famous song written by Henry Scott Riddell, and once regarded almost as the Scottish national anthem. It was set down in ?? at Ramsaycleuch, in Hawick Parish at that time, supposedly while sitting on a rock on a summer's morning following a heavy rain fall. The tune was composed by Peter McLeod of Edinburgh, and the money raised from selling the sheet music was used to pay for iron railings around the Burns Monument at Calton Hill. The 'honours three' in the refrain refers to the crown, sceptre and sword of Scotland. The song was often sung at the Colour Bussing (in at least 1887, 1888, 1891, 1893, 1894 and 1901) and similar events in the 19th century. The song was revived by Scocha on their 2004 album – 'Where Veitch's honest heart was set, On his beloved Tweed; W' Riddell singin' 'Scotland Yet' Up at Teviothead' [JBS], 'The song he wrote was one day sung Wherever Scotsmen met. Its patriotic strains can still Be heard in Scotland yet' [IWL].

Scots (skots) n. the language spoken in Scotland, derived from a Germanic dialect spoken by Anglo-Saxon settlers, being a distinct, if far from homogeneous, form of English, adj. pertaining to Scotland or the Scots, Scottish. It is fiercely debated whether Scots it is a separate language or merely a set of dialects. The speech of Hawick people has much in common with Scots in general, but also much that is peculiar to Teries.

Scots an English (skots-an-ing-gleesh) n., arch. game formerly played by boys, in which 2 teams defend their hats and coats from each other. It was said (in Chambers 1841 'Popular Rhymes of Scotland') that the game particularly flourished in Hawick, where the boys would defiantly shout 'King Covenanter, come out if ye daur venture! Set your feet on Scots grund, English, if ye daur!'.

Scots Dyke an Hare Moss Turnpike (skots-dīk-an-hār-mos-turn-pīk) n. turnpike road legislated by the general Act of 1764, with this specific road act published in 1770 (with an additional act for repairing and widening the road in 1785, and the acts repealed in 1807). This led to a great improvement in the road, allowing it to be passable by wheeled traffic, thereby allowing Hawick to develop as a centre for the carrying trade. The cost of constructing the road was borne by subscribers, who recouped their money via tolls collected approximately every 6–8 miles along its length. The road ran from the English Border at Scots Dyke (in Dumfriesshire) to Hare Moss (in Roxburghshire) just outside Selkirk, following the route of the modern A7. It passed through Hawick via Martinshouse, Langbaulk and the Loan. The Haremoss and Scots Dyke (East District) Turnpike Trust was established by an Act of 1829. It covered the administration of more than 20 miles of road in Roxburghshire. The revenue for upkeep of the road and repayment to the creditors came from 5 tolls. George & James Oliver acted as Clerks to the Trust in the mid-19th century (also called 'Scotch Dyke').

Scots Greys (skots-grāz) n. regiment that amalgamated to form the Royal Scots Dragoons Guards in 1971. William Robertson, quartermaster of the regiment, was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. At the election of 1835 a troop of these dragoons was sent to Hawick to try to keep the peace.

Scots law (skots-law) n. legal system of Scotland, based on Roman legal ideas, where legality is decided by interpreting fundamental principles rather than appealing to precedent. There are also many differences with the English system in the naming of court officials etc.

Scots pound (skots-pownd) n., arch. a former unit of currency used in Scotland. It was fixed at $^1/_{12}$th of a pound sterling at the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and ceased to be a legal unit following the Union of the Parliaments in 1707. However, it continued to be used in practice for some time after that, particularly in rural areas. Hawick Parish records made the switch to sterling only in 1753.

Scotstoun (skots-toon) n. farm in Peeblesshire, on the Tarth Water, just to the north-east of Kirkurd. A substantial tower is marked there on Pont's map from the late 16th century. The later manor house was built in the 18th century. The site was said to have been an early home of the Scotts, with the suggestion being that the name was connected with the family from early times, probably the 13th century and perhaps even earlier. The Scotts certainly held lands in Kirkurd, which is just a few miles away, and they continued to hold the superiority of Kirkurd long after they moved to Buccleuch and then Branxholme – 'It was call'd Scotstoun-hall when Buckcleugh in it did dwell, Unto this time it is call'd Scotstoun still' [CWS] (there are places of similar name elsewhere, e.g. an area of Glasgow).

Scott (sko') n. Adam (13th C.) recorded around 1240. This was in a charter for Christian, daughter of Adam Fitz-Gilbert, donating the lands of Inglistoun to the Chapel of St. Mary, with some rights reserved to the men of Blyth, as they had in the days of 'Adam the Scot and William the Bald, of good memory'. His lands are referred to being 'beside the water', which must be the Tarth. Since Inglistoun was adjacent to the lands of Kirkurd and Scotstoun (held from early times by the family that became the Scotts of Buccleuch), it is possible that he was an early ancestor. His name is given in Latin as 'Ade Scoti'. He may have been related to Walter from Peeblesshire, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Adam (d.c.1255) referred to as the deceased previous owner of lands in Gullane (East Lothian) which were granted to the church there sometime between 1213 and 1255. Adam (13th C.) listed on the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. No other information is given about him, so it is not known if he is associated with later Scotts. Adam (13th C.) witness to a charter that the Comyns had for lands in Kirkintilloch (Dunbartonshire) in about 1277. Adam (13th/14th C.) messenger who was paid, along with Henry Pykard 'cokin', for delivering letters from King Edward I to members of the Scottish court in 1296/7. Probably the same Adam 'cokino' (probably messenger) to the English Crown is recorded in 1303/4 when he delivered letters proclaiming peace to the Sheriffs, Abbots and others south of the Forth. His connection to other Scotts is unknown. He could be the same man as 'Adam Skot' recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, perhaps at the time a prisoner in Newcastle Castle. He could also be the Adam recorded in 'Hilderton' church in 1279, admitting that he was a mercenary soldier who had renounced the King. Adam (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in the Parish of Linton in Peeblesshire, around 1300. Adam (15th C.) recorded on a 'retour of inquest' in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. Probably the same man was also witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. It is unclear how he might be connected to other contemporary Scotts, but Sir Walter was also on the 1438 panel, and William and his son John were witnesses to the 1441 sasine. Perhaps the same Adam was witness to the 1448 sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat, between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Simon of Routledge; the other names appearing beside his are Stephen of Castlelaw, Walter and Richard, who were probably near relations. Adam 'Ade' (15th C.) Ranger of Ettrick Ward according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1456, where his name is listed as 'Atkino Scot'. He is recorded as Ranger several times from 1457 to 1467, with Sir Walter as Master Ranger; Sir Alexander (of Howpasley) took over by 1469, and David also served as a Ranger for Ettrick in the 1460s. It seems unlikely (because of the age) that he could be the later son of Sir Alexander, but he was surely a close relative, possibly an otherwise unrecorded brother of Sir Alexander and son of Sir Walter. Perhaps the same Adam witnessed a charter in 1441 for the lands of Cessford and was on the panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Adam (15th C.) Bailie of Rutherglen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1477 and 1481. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Annelshope (d.bef. 1502) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, and brother of Walter of Howpasley. He was recorded as 'Ade Scot', one of the heirs of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in a charter for the Barony of Branxholme in 1484. He is probably the 'Ada Scot' who witnessed a document in 1482 in which Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton to David Scott of Branxholme; Robert was also a witness, probably his cousin of Whitchesters. Possibly the same Adam was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. And probably the same Adam was witness to the charter granting Robert of Allanhaugh the Lordship of Whitchesters in 1484/5 and his resignation of the lands almost immediately after. He may be the Adam who was witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487, along with James and several local landowners. He may be the 'Ade Scot' who was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne for the document leasing his lands in 1488. He was Warden of Ettrick Ward in the period 1489–92, responsible for administering the Crown lands there, and so his name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for Scotland. He took over the office from Walter, who had taken over from William (surely all closely related). In 1488 he had the farm of Cacrabank for his fee and in 1490 and 1492 he leased 'Garliscleuch'. He also let the farm of Gamescleuch in 1492. After 1492 he is recorded being in arrears as former Ranger for Ettrick. In 1494/5 he was 'de auldinnis hop' when standing as surety for Bernard Shortreed in Essenside, 'in auldernischop' when he was surety for John Burnet, resident of Tushielaw, and 'in auldinischop' when he was surety for Oliver Lauder with Thomas Turnbull and for William Peacock in Buccleuch. He was additionally surety, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, in 1494/5 for John in Erncleuch. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as 'in Auldinnischop' when he was allowed to pay a fine for stealing 2 horses from the servants of the Earl of Angus at Hermitage; Walter of Howpasley was caution for him. Later he was allowed to compound for the crimes of: stealing the 2 horses at Hermitage; resetting the 'traitors of Leven'; resetting Edmond and Fergus Storie; resetting Robert Brydon, John Frissel and John Pattinson, particularly when they pludered Wolfhope; stealing 5 cows from 'rafftrehop'; stealing 16 cows from Deuchar; and common theft before the date of his compounding. Walter of Howpasley was again his surety. John was allowed to 'compone' along with him in 1494/5 and was presumably a close relative. In the Treasurer's accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was recorded as brother of Walter of Howpasley in 1499 when he was assigned Tushielaw for 3 years. He was also assigned Gamescleuch and Corsecleuch in 1499, and still had to pay arrears as the former Ranger of Ettrick Ward. He is probably the Adam, brother to Walter of Howpasley, who was recorded as tenant in Borthwickbrae in 1500. He was referred to as deceased in the 1502 Exchequer Rolls. He may be the Adam recorded as 'Ade Scot' along with his son Walter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for Ettrick Forest. Adam (15th C.) recorded in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme, where he was bequeathed 30 sheep. He was listed as 'Ade Scote' and may be the same as one of other conteporary Adams. Another man, listed as 'Ade Scote, claudo' (probably 'lame') was given 6 sheep. Adam 'Crooked Adam' (15th C.) son of Thomas of Bush. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk; his nickname was 'c^{r}vus', which could be 'corvus' or perhaps 'curvus'. Probably the same man was recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh; he was surety for Thomas Clommell in Minto and recorded being 'in wolfhop', which may well be the Wolfhope in Ewesdale (but it could be the one near Tushielaw or Wolfehopelee in Rulewater). At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502 he was 'in Wolfhop vocatis curvius adam', i.e. called 'Crooked Adam' when he had remission for the rape of Christine, daughter of David Hope, as well as for the theft of a horse from Stobo. Adam in Annelshope also had remission for the rape of Christine Hope, and hence was presumably a different man Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 as 'Adam scot in aldinershope' when he had remission for a series of crimes. He was probably associated with Annelshope (although it is also possible that Eldinhope is meant); this could be a transcription error for 'aldinnshope'. He may be the same man as Adam of Annelshope, although he died at about the time of this court. His remission included the following: resetting, supplying and intercommuning with Archibald Armstrong and David Scott 'de Francia' as well as other 'traitors of Leven' and Liddesdale in their rieving; resetting John Kay 'his brother', particularly the plundering of 80 cattle and goods from Dryhope; for burning and pillaging places on the Borthwick and Ale Waters belonging to Walter Ker of Cessford; resetting Gilbert Scott, particularly in the theft of 2 horses; the 'hamesukin' of Walter Scott of Tushielaw; and the rape of Christine, daughter of David Hope. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley, who would be his brother if he was indeed Adam of Annelshope; Adam in Wolfhope also had remission for the rape of Christine Hope, and hence was presumably a different man. He was also 'in aldinnishop' in 1502 when Walter of Howpasley was surety to present him at the next Justice-aire in Selkirk. Perhaps the same 'Ade' was listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott 'de Franscurni' and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being in 'Hawchesteris', probably Highchesters near Hawick. He had remission for resetting 120 sheep, which had been stolen by the Laird of Minto from George Rutherford at Longnewton and 'Sandystanis'. His crimes also included associating with rebels Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William Scott. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission from the King for these crimes, with George of Whames as his surety. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when it is said that he had a horse and 23 sheep stolen from him at Kershope. John in Whitehaugh has remission for these crimes. Probably the same Adam 'native of Kershoup' (presumably in Ettrick) is recorded as deceased in 1533 when his son William assigned John Murray of Kershope to seek restitution for the goods 'violently stolen' by Robert Scott of Howpasley and Philip Scott in Dryhope. Adam of Hermiston (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of Synton in 1494, where he was 'Adam Scot de Hirdmanstoun'. In 1500 he was one of the witnesses to an instrument of resignation by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was also on the panel for deciding on the inherticance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; he is recorded as 'Adam Scot of Hirdmenstone'. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Roberton (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. He presented William (with no distinguishing lcation given) to the court as suitor for his lands (presumably of Roberton) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurs later in 1503. It is unclear how he might fit with the other Scotts of Roberton. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1522 when he had a dispensation from Thomas Ker, Archdeacon of Teviotdale, to marry Elizabeth Scott. This was necessary because they were within the 4th grade of consanguinity. Adam of Clarilaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He is mentioned in a charter of 1521 as being cousin of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The later David in Clarilaw may have been his son or other close relative. In 1526 he was tenant in Clarilaw when he was listed on the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their attack on the Earl of Arran; 'William Scot, and George Gledstanis, his brether' are listed right after him (they may have been step-brothers or brothers-in-law), as well as (separately) William in Hassendean. His eldest son was Robert of Clarilaw. He may be the same as the Adam of 'Nethirmanis of Hassinden' whose son Robert had a 'precept of clare constat' (meaning he was probably deceased) in 1550/1 for the lands of Little Drinkstone. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant of Harwoodhill in 1502 when his son Patrick had remission for being involved in several thefts of sheep. Adam (d.1530) of Tushielaw, probably son of David of Tushielaw and grandson of Alexander of Howpasley (although some accounts place him as son on Alexander). The Sir Walter 'of Tushielaw', who was nearly contemporary with him was probably his uncle Sir Walter of Howpasley. Called 'King of the Thieves' or 'King of the Border', he was a powerful chief in the early 16th century. He may be the Adam 'in Turschelaw' recorded paying a fine in the Exchequer Rolls of 1499. In 1502 he is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkik with remission for resetting several men (namely John Young, 'Park', John Carrick called 'Ginkin', Lawrence Porteous, 'Valance') who had stolen many sheep from Manor and Hundleshope. In a second record of the signature of remission he is 'in aldinnishope' for the same resetting of John Young, Lawrence Porteous, 'Ginkin', 'Park' and 'Vallance'. In a separate case at the same Justice-aire he was 'in tuschelaw' when he had remission for a list of crimes; this was at the same court sitting as for Adam 'in aldinershope', so they must have been different men. The crimes he was forgiven for were: stealing 10 horses from Peebles, in company with the Laird of Minto; stealing a cow and money from Selkirk; resetting Lawrence Porteous, especially in the theft of 4 cows; resetting William Smith and Hugh Armstrong, especially the theft of 50 sheep from Singlie; plundering of 'aldinhope' with the Littles of Eskdale; resetting Lawrence Porteous, especially in the theft of 100 sheep from Tweedsmuir and 100 sheep and 4 horses from Stobo; resetting John Young, especially the theft of 40 sheep from Manor; and resetting John Carrock, 'Jinkin', especially in the theft of 140 sheep from Manorhope. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley, who was also 'of Tushielaw' and perhaps his uncle. He is recorded (as 'Ade') in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1503 receiving remission for his rieving crimes, and in 1505 he received remission for breaking out of prison in Edinburgh Castle. He received a charter for the lands of Tushielaw in 1507. The lands of Gilmanscleuch, 'Cowinlaw' and Gamescleuch were feued to him in 1510. In 1512 he is recorded as one of those involved in the feud between supporters of Lord Maxwell and Lord Crichton of Sanqhar. The 'fermes' of Corsecleuch, Cacrabank, Tushielaw and 'Covinelaw' were remitted to him in 1513. He is one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace on the Border in 1524/5. In 1525 he and the Laird of Henderland were warned to find pledges. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. In 1528 he was witness to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is also recorded in late 1528 as witness to the document recording the decision over the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He was arrested along with William Cockburn of Henderland, as an example to other thieves of the time. He was suposedly hanged by James V's men on an old ash tree in front of his stronghold (for example, according to Sir Walter Scott in his 'Minstrelsy'), although he was probably actually executed in Edinburgh. The charges against him included taking 'black-mail' from 'John Brovne in Hoprow', 'Andrew Thorbrand and William his brother', 'the poor Tenants of Hopcailzow' (possibly Howpasley) and 'the Tenants of Eschescheill'. He was beheaded and his head placed on top of the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. Among his descendants were probably the Scotts of Horsleyhill, who were important in Hawick in the 17th century. His sons Robert, John and William are also listed in the 1526 remission. He was succeeded by William, presumably his son; this could be the William who was tenant in Cacrabank in 1541, along with 'his moder', who would therefore be his widow. Adam (16th C.) listed in the 1526 pardon to a large number of Borderers for taking in part in an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being 'in Falside' (probably the lands in the Ettrick valley), and so could have been related to the Scotts of Kirkurd and Hassendean, who held those lands. His brothers Alexander and William are also listed. In 1531 he witnessed a precept of sasine between Mark Ker in Selkirk and Patrick Murray of Falahill. He was 'in Fawsyd' in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme. Probably the same Adam witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1532/3, a court case in 1534 and a pledge in 1534/5. He is probably the Adam 'of Fausid' who was deceased in 1539 when his son Thomas was warned to remove himself and his tenants (along with those of Robert of Howpasley) from the lands of Falside, belonging to Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. He may be related to the Adam who was recorded claiming the tenancy of Falside in Ettrick in 1541. Adam (16th C.) witness in 1526/7 to a document relating to the tenancy of the lands of Harden. He was brother of Simon of Fenwick. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Scotts, with one possibility being Adam of Tushielaw. Adam of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably son of either William or Robert of Hassendean. He was Laird of Burnfoot (and probably also Burnhead) in Teviotdale (as opposed to Ale). He may be the Adam of Newhall who witnessed a charter relating to Harden in 1526/7. He is recorded in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott; the others who agreed to the bond were David, son of Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with William of Harden and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was among 10 Scotts and an Elliot who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was listed among the Scotts who were involved in breaking down the doors of the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking for Sir

Peter Cranston. They were all later bound over not to harm Cranston. His son William is also listed, and appears to have died before him. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton. This presumably means he married a daughter of Robert of Synton and Stirches. In 1531 he, his brother-in-law and Walter Veitch had a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. Also in 1531, John, sergeant in Selkirk, read a royal proclamation that while he was declared a fugitive at the insistence of William Veitch in Yair for 'not delivering to him as tutor to Walter Vaych his bruder sone', since he had now delivered to William Veitch the house of North Synton, he was no longer 'at the horn'. Adam 'Ade' (16th C.) listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1539 'in Quhithoup' as witness to a transaction between Scott of Buccleuch and Douglas of Cavers. He was also recorded in 1549 as being 'in Quhithoip' when he was one of the first in a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complaining that their lands had been raided by the Kers in the previous year. In 1550 he was a witness to a lease granted by the curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme) to his mother, signed at Branxholme; he was there 'Adame Scott in Quhihoup'. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. His lands were probably Whitehope Adam (16th C.) younger son of Michael of Aikwood. In 1552, along with his son Adam, he sought suspension of an act of ecclesiastical cursing by the Vicar of the Forest. Adam of Allanhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was also 'Adam Scot of Alanehauche' in about 1557, when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for 'Ringwodhat'. Although it is unclear, he does not appear to have been the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time, and so was possibly brother of the Laird (perhaps William), or perhaps from an earlier branch of Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is also recorded in 1562 as one of the relatives of the minor Sir Walter of Branxholme to whom letters were sent to arrange the selection of guardians. In 1564 he was listed (first) among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Allanhaugh. He could be the Adam (with brother William) listed right after Robert of Allanhaugh in the 1526 pardon for a large number of Borderers assisting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran; in this case it may even be that he and William were both brothers of Robert of Allanhaugh. He is probablt the Adam who was deceased in 1582 when his sons William and David acknowledged the return of 'sevin peces of evidentis all writtin in parochment', which were delivered by David to Walter of Goldielands 'in keping of before' in the presence of William of Tushielaw; presumably these were documents relating to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, which unfortunately do not survive. In 1585 there was a bond signed (in Selkirk and Hawick) between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh, to settle a feud that existed between them, arising from the death of David (son of the deceased Adam of Allanhaugh) and Hob Dalgleish (Sir Walter's servant at Braidhaugh); the bond mentions other sons of his, making it clear that he was not closely related with Robert of Allanhaugh, who was Laird at that time. Adam of Bonnington (d.bef. 1607) son of Robert, together with whom he first acquired the lands of Bonnington near Peebles in 1552, from the Wylie heiresses. His older brother Robert had acquired Rysholm (through their mother), but died in 1549. He gained Wamphray from his mother, but (along with his father) sold it in 1549. It was said that in 1547 he acted as a guide for English raiders to burn Lochwood Tower, which belonged to the Johnstones. He was mentioned along with his father in a charter involving lands in Peeblesshire in 1557/8. In 1561/2 he resigned to his superior his lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig; he signed 'wt my hand at the pen led by me'. He is probably the Adam 'of Vamfra' who in 1562 witnessed transactions in Selkirk for Robert of Howpasley and for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1563 the lands of Wakefield in Peeblesshire were conveyed to him from his brother John. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several Scotts and others of sheep stealing. He had a 'letter of reversion' for the lands in 1572. In 1579/80 he witnessed an instrument in Selkirk and another relating to lands in Ashkirk (along with his son Walter). He had a court case with Robert of Haining in 1580 relating to the lands of 'Elestoun' that had formerly been in his possession. George of Synton also had a case in 1580 against his claims on 'Ilistoun' (near Melrose), with him being unable to show any titles to these lands, and also said to have been put to the horn. However, he witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. In 1580/1 he complained that the Bailies of Selkirk had wrongly apprehended a man called Taylor. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Also in 1581 he was in dispute with Robert of Haining over 6 chalders of grain, where he was supported by Scotts from from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley, with his 'byndaris' being William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he received sasine for 'Maldisheucht miln', with his natural son Robert as one of the witnesses and acknowledged receipt of the redemption money from Patrick Murray of Falahill, with his sons Robert and James among the witnesses. He was listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590 (although perhaps drawn up earlier). From a document in 1564/5 it appears that his wife's name was Helen Tweedie; the marriage was in 1551 and she was daughter of James Tweedie of Drumelzier. There is mention in 1565 of the deceased Katherine Scott, Lady Bonnington, suggesting that he married a 2nd wife. His children included: Simon, who succeeded to 'Bonytoun' in 1607, but was already called 'of Bonnington' in 1602; John, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596 and was on a raid in 1602; Thomas , who assisted his brother Simon in a raid on 'Caidmure' in 1610; and Adam, recorded in 1616. His sons Simon, John and Adam were all pursued by the Scotts of Harden for the murder of Walter Scott in Essenside. Adam of Deephope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when he was to enter several men into ward in Edinburgh. This was along with Sir Walter of Branxholme and Sir Walter of Birkenside. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Deephope. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'Adame Scot of Lochahaucht' when he witnessed the 'letter of slains' in Hawick in which Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. All the other witnesses were quite local, but it is unclear where 'Lochahaucht' might have been. Adam of Gledstains (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. The others were mainly Turnbulls of Rulewater, suggesting that his lands were possibly 'Little Gledstains' there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). He was tenant at Mosspeeble, and his son John is also listed. He is probably related to Nichol who was in Mosspeeble in 1590. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 in 'the Wraa' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been from Wrae and was probably related to Gavin who was from the same place. Adam of Todshawhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Walter of Todshawhaugh who witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. He is listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Aslo in 1581 he witnessed a dispute between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundleshope. He also signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in 1594 when his son Walter was on a long list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. William of Todshawhaugh, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 'pensioners' of Buccleuch, was surely closely related to him. Adam (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Ormestoun' when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas of Crook in 1592. William Scott and Robert Scott, both 'in Hawick' were also involved. He was surely related to John in Ormiston, who is recorded in 1589. Adam (d.c.1588) stabler at the West Bow of Edinburgh. His will is recorded in 1588/9. Adam 'Adie the Peck' (d.1601) recorded in 1598/9 among 'brothers, tenants and servants' of William Elliot of Falnash when there were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of 'Corsetburne' (in Lothian). His name appears as 'Adie Scott, called the Pek' and his son (with no forename given) is also listed. There were further complaints from Sir James Sandilands, that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and 'slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray'. In a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsiblity for him and his crimes. He was hanged in Edinburgh in 1601 for a list of crimes. This included cattle and sheep stealing from several farms around the Lothians, as well as Nether Whitlaw (owned by Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre), the murder of at least a couple of men and taking the Minister of Lyne prisoner. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of 'Sandy's Ninian'), these being 2 of the last 'rievers'. He is also recorded (presumably in error) as 'Adam Steill, alias callit the Peckit ... ane of the maist notabil thieffes that evir raid'. He may be the Adam 'little Peck' listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; John 'the Tinkler' and Andrew 'the Breadie' were also listed. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1598 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him, meaning he was not among the Scotts for whom Buccleuch was considered chief (and hence he may have been from Ewesdale, for example). Adam of Alton (d.1604) son of Robert of Alton. In 1580 he gave his consent for his father to give up the annual rent of lands in Hassendeanburn for a loan from Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He is recorded as 'Adame Scott sone to Robert Scot of Auldtoun' in a long list of those given 'respite' by the King for the 1593 murder of Lord Maxwell, Warden of the Marches at Dryfe Sands. He succeeded his father Robert in 1594. Scott of Satchells says he was in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he was also 'of Alton' on the list of 'pretended tenants' ordered to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by the then Baron, James Cunningham. He died shortly afterwards and had 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Robert, 'vocat de Altoun'. In 1606 his son Walter was served as his heir to the lands of 'Littill Dombstoun' (probably meant for 'Drinkstone') in Chamberlain Newton, as well as heir to his grandfather Robert in the lands of East Hassendean (thus establishing the conenction between these 3 generations of Scotts of Alton). He must have been related to the ex-Bailie of the same name recorded in 1612. Adam (d.bef. 1596) smith in Glasgow. His eldest son Alexander was served as his heir and made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1596. His connection to other Scotts in unclear. It is possible he was the hammerman whose daughter married tailor Alexander Connell, who was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1616, and whose other daughter Beatrix married maltman Patrick Fleming, who became a Burgess in 1618. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Philip of Dryhope, and probably son of John of Dryhope. In 1699 William Sinclair of Roslin was surety for him, that he would 'keep the King's peace'. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Bonnington and son of Adam. He was accused in 1616–17 of accompanying his brothers Simon and John, together with 'Will's Sym' of Thirlestane when Walter 'in Essenside' (son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden) was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick. Adam (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert, he was brother of William in Burnhead. He married Bessie, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. However, he appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his other brother, Robert. It is possible he was the 'Adame Scot, called of Burnehead' recorded in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Bailie Adam (16th/17th C.) ex-Magistrate of Hawick, who was involved in the incident of 1612 in which the town challenged the authority of the Baron regarding the town's ability to impose taxes. He was also mentioned as Bailie in a murder case in the same year. He may be the Adam whose son James became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1615. Rev. Adam (d.bef. 1625) minister of Hawick Parish from 1612 until at least the end of 1623. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1607 and became minister at Minto in 1608. He may well have been related to a local branch of the Scotts; his father was probably Walter, a merchant of Edinburgh. He was translated from Minto and presented to Hawick Parish by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in August 1612. He was recorded as Schoolmaster in Hawick in 1622 (it may be that at this time the minister was also Schoolmaster, or it may be that he was serving temporarily in this role). The circumstances of his death are not recorded, but he must have been relatively young. After his decease he was succeeded as minister by Robert Cunningham. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter 'in Slak' recorded in 1620 along with William 'of Slak' and Andrew, surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. They may have been associated with Catslack. Probably the same Adam, brother of Walter in Catslack was recorded in 1599 among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Adam of Burnfoot (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 along with other Scotts when they were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. The other Scotts were from Midshiels and Hawick, and he paid the 1000 merks caution to ensure that Adam, son of Walter of Midshiels did not molest Thomas Turnbull of Knowe or others there. He is recorded as being 'of Burnfitt' in 1643, when his lands in Hassendean Parish (presumably Burnfoot) were valed at £312. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot, but he may have been a tenant of Burnfoot, rather than Laird. Adam of Shaws (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He is probably the son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch who was served heir to his brother William in 1647. He had at least 3 sons: James, who succeeded; Adam in Deloraine, who purchased North Bowhill; and Francis of Grassyards, a 'shepherd swain' mentioned by Scott of Satchells. His lands were presumably Shaws, between the Ale and Ettrick valleys. He was described as 'in Schawis' in 1670 when his eldest son James married Marion Scott of Shielswood. Adam 'Wester Adam' (17th C.) smith of Hawick who was ordered to pay a fine of 100 merks for failing to appear at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the Adam, smith in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Adam, smith, was mentioned in the Burgh Records of 1640, when there was a dispute between him and Thomas Deans; Thomas claimed that he had been promised payment of various sorts from him (presumably for being a servant), including money, a pair of shoes, oats, barley and clothing. Adam 'in Yairliside' (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a horse in the Town Book in 1641. His location was a variant of Earlside, and he may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Francis (b.1635), Jean (b.1642), Janet (b.1649), George (b.1652) and Walter (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Gledstains and George (perhaps a relative). Adam (17th C.) married Margaret Douglas and had a son Robert baptised in Hawick in 1646. Perhaps the Isobel (b.1644), baptised to Adam and Isobel Claperton was also his child. Adam (17th C.) married Bessie Anderson and had a son Adam baptised in Hawick in 1645. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Claperton and their children included Margaret (b.1652) and William (b.1654). Adam (17th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He was witness to a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds in Hobkirk Parish. His 'servitor' Walter Scott was also a witness, while this same or a different Walter was his son, who witnessed a sasine in 1659. Adam (17th C.) said by Walter Scott of Satchells to have been father of the Walter of Whitehaugh who was alive in 1688. There is no independent evidence to support this, and much of the rest of the Whitehaugh genealogy given by Satchelles appears to be fictional, but on the other hand, these were near neighbours of his living at the same time, and hence perhaps he did really exist. If so, then he would have been a brother of Walter of St. Leonards and son of Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn, perhaps dying relatively young and not succeeding to Whitehaugh. To add confusion, Satchells says that he was brother of Col. Walter and they were both sons of William of Whitehaugh. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included Margaret (b.1650). Perhaps the Jane (b.1671), baptised to Adam and Janet Harkness was also his child. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill, along with William (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. He could be a descendant of Andrew, tenant of Todshawhill, listed as a 'pensioner' of Buccleuch. Adam (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Dunlie in the parish of Cassiltoun' (probably Dinlees on Hermitage Water) when he witessed a document relating to the lands of Appotside in Rulewater in 1656. Adam of Ashtrees (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when his lands in Southdean Parish were valued at £33. He may be the same as one of the other Adams. Adam of Galalaw (17th/18th C.) son of William of Galalaw and Margaret Gledstains. In 1671 he was granted Galalaw by his father, as part of his marriage contract with Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Alexander Cunningham, minister of Ettrick. He was recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He was probably the Laird of Galalaw who witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme of Stirches in 1708. In 1709 his servant Robert Elliot had a child baptised. Also in 1709 his son Alexander witnessed ('younger of Galalaw') a baptism for Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He was a resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He secondly married Esther, daughter of Rev. John

Langlands and their children, baptised in Roberton, included: Alexander; John (b.1683); William (b.1685), probably of Brieryhill; and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were 'Mr Geo: Langlands' (his brother-in-law) and Robert (perhaps a near relative). In 1694 he granted Galalaw to his son Alexander. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms for other Scotts in Roberton Parish in 1686 and 1688 and a baptism along with Francis (perhaps the minister) in 1688. He must have been related to the later Adam of Galalaw. Adam (d.c.1695) described as 'portioner in Hassendean' in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same as 'Adam Scott of Hassindene' who is mentioned in 1637 as 'younger' of Hassendean and who in 1669 was served as heir to his father, Robert of Hassendean. He was probably the Adam 'in Over Hassendean' recorded in a deed of 1663. He was in turn succeeded by his son Robert in 1695. In 1692 he had a renewed lease with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Over Hassendean, 'east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same'. Adam (d.c.1693) listed as 'in Wood, in Abotroule parish' when his will was recorded in 1693. It is unclear where this farm might have been. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford and their children included: Walter (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Robert and William, who were probably related to him. Adam of Burnfoot (17th C.) son of Walter, as recorded in a deed of 1673. He sold Burnhead to William Scott, tenant in Burnhead. He was one of the heritors accused of instigating the riot at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It seems likely he was the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for William (later referred to as 'of Burnhead') in 1686 and another for Robert in Burnhead in 1687. He was probably one of the men arrested following the riots of 1690; there is a warrant for the arrest of Adam and Robert Scott of Hassendean and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690, which may relate to him. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot who paid tax for 4 hearths in his house in 1694. In 1695 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington (probably a hangover from earlier wadsets between the 2 families). In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot. His eldest son was probably also called Adam. He is probably the Adam in Burnhead who married Grizel, sister of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1678; her will is recorded in 1687, when he was listed being 'in Burnhead'. He is also recorded 'in burnhead' in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in 1682. His children with Grizel Turnbull included: John (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and possibly James (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were John and William Scott (who were probably related to him). In 1686 he 'had a bastard child baptised' called James, with witnesses Walter Paisley and John Muir. His wife could be the 'Lady Burnfoot' whose servant Janet Liddell got married in Hawick in 1719. Adam of Bowhill (17th C.) purchased the lands of Langhope from John in 1691. Probably the same Adam 'of Bouhill' had a bond recorded with the Depute Sheriff Clerk of Selkirkshire in 1701. It is unclear how he was related to the others Scotts of Bowhill. He could be the Adam in Deloraine, mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who was a son of Adam of Shaws and purchased North Bowhill. Adam (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam (17th C.) cottar at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was surely related to other Scotts of Girnwood. Adam (17th C.) rented half the farm of Overhall in 1690 and 1692, with James renting the other half. The pair were also listed as residents at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. They were surely related. In 1694–98 he was renting half of Overhall, with the other half rented by Walter Scott, 'Chief', who was surely also related. He and Walter also served as cautioners for Margaret Scott, widow of James Scott, who was renting part of Borthaugh in 1696; this suggests that they were closely related. In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill. He paid to rent the Wilton mortcloth in 1704, but it is unclear who had died. Adam (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Wiltonburn among the 'deficient' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Riddell and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Margaret (b.1700); and John (b.1702). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Robson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1693); Bessie (b.1699); Bessie (again, b.1700); Helen (b.1702); Agnes (b.1704); and an unnamed child (b.1708). Adam (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Wauchope and brother of William, who was Chamberlain to Buccleuch. His mother was Janet, sister of James Scott, writer in Jedburgh. He witnessed documents for the Elliots of Harwood in 1688, 1692 and 1700. He was a tenant at Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased the farms of Stonedge and Howa from Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge; these were jointly valued at £856 12s. In 1724 he transferred these lands to his brother William, who was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was subject of a 'decreet arbitral' in 1756. He was probably unrelated to the later Scotts of Wauchope. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Lauder in Hawick in 1706. They were both from Hawick Parish. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish, where he married Isobel Scott in 1708. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses William Henderson in Flex and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1710 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. He may be the Adam who married Janet Gordon in Roberton in 1703. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his, include: Margaret (b.1707); Agnes (b.1713); Adam (b.1714). Adam (17th/18th C.) probably son of Adam of Burnfoot. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as 'younger of Burnfoot upon Teviot'. He is probably the 'Archibald' (assuming this is an error) of Burnfoot listed among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He may also be the Scott of Burnfoot listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1700. He is probably the Adam who (along with Gavin Plummer) sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'in Cavers par.' in 1701 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick Parish. This suggests he was a farmer in a part of Cavers bordering on Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Paterson, probably daughter or sister of miller James Paterson. Their children included: Janet (b.1701); and Barbara (b.1715). Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant of Woll, recorded in baptismal records in 1717 and 1719. He was also tenant of Woll in 1718 when reported for disparaging remarks against the elders of Ashkirk Parish, calling them 'skybalds', and complaining that one of the elders had called him a 'ragabast' and Jacobite villain. In 1721 he was tenant in Woll in a protest at Selkirk Sheriff Court and also recorded in a tack for 1721 (recorded in 1723). He married Margaret Brown in 1716 and their children included: Walter (b.1717); John (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). Adam (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Bridges in 1705 and another for merchant William Black in 1721. He married Helen Lauder in 1706 and their children included: John (b.1707); Francis (b.1710); Adam (b.1713); James (b.1718); Helen (b.1722); and John (again, b.1724). The witnesses in 1707 were weaver Thomas Greenshields and Walter Scott 'Laird', and those in 1713 were William Gardner and mason John Napier (who also witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine on the same day). He is probably also the weaver whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1721, with the witnesses being merchant James Aitken and cooper John Aitken. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel. He was recorded there in 1716 when he had an 'instrument of irritation' at Selkirk Sheriff Court. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Fauldshope, recorded in a protest at Selkirk Sheriff Court in 1722. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1729) and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Purdom and Walter Scott. Adam (18th C.) recorded as 'Lowland Burser' in the late 1720s, presumably meaning that his studies at university were being supported by local parishes. The record occurs in a receipt to the Bedrule minister for the Hobkirk minister's 'portion of the Bursary Money for one year viz from Martinmas 1727 to Martinmass 1728 dated att Jedr February the 5th 1729. He may be the same as one of the other Adams. Adam (18th C.) recorded as tenant in Kershope in Ettrick in 1731 when he sued Alexander Laidlaw, herd in Eldinhopeknow, for a debt. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in at least 1721–1735. He is probably the Adam who witnessed a baptism for David Renwick at Lees in 1725. Along with Robert of Burnhead he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1725 for John Norville and Christian Scott (who may have been a relative). He married Mary Scott in Wilton in 1720. Their children included: William (b.1721); Isobel (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Agnes (b.1728); Adam (b.1731); Mary (b.1733); and John (b.1735). The witnesses in 1721 were William and Adam Scott, in 1731 were John Scott and John Dryden and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Gledstains Scott in Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Helen (b.1730);

and Francie (b.1733). Adam (18th C.) married Isobel Leyden in Cavers in 1728. Adam (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1723, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Marion (b.1724), James (b.1726) and John (b.1733). The witnesses in 1726 were James Gledstains and Robert Ker and in 1733 were Henry Orrock and Robert Ruecastle. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Gilmanscleuch in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Gledstains in 1727 and their children included Helen (b.1730) and Francie (b.1733). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Cavers (who was from Hawick Parish) in 1734 and their children included: Isabel (b.1739); James (b.1744); and Adam (b.1748). Probably the same Adam, married to Agnes Cavers, also had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1736. The witnesses in 1739 were Andrew and William Irvine. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Tullie in Wilton in 1749. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Heap. The funeral for his wife is recorded in Wilton in 1749. Adam (d.bef. 1772) of 'Tanlawers' in Wilton Parish (Tandlaw probably). he is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1772, when his daughter Barbara married John Greig. He is probably related to the earlier Scotts of Tandlaw. Adam (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded as 'younger' in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Wilson. He was probably related to (perhaps the son of) the earlier weaver of the same name. Probably the same weaver married Euphan Telfer and had a daughter Rebecca (b.1761), with the whole congregation as witnesses. If his wife's name is also given as 'Elizabeth' and 'Elspeth', then other children are Jean (b.1757), John (b.1763), Francis (b.1765) and Sarah (b.1768). Adam 'Goud Yeddie' (18th C.) building contractor in Hawick. He was probably the grandfather of Mrs. Armstrong of the Post Office, and hence Helen Scott was his daughter (perhaps the Helen baptised in Wilton in 1750). He was one of 2 contractors for the Hornshole Bridge, but gave up after an early accident brought down the framework on which the arch was to be constructed. He may be the mason in Hawick recorded in deeds at Peebles Commissary Court in 1760. He is probably the Hawick builder of this name who, along with John Pott, attended to the damage to the walls of the Manse after the Great Flood of 1767 and also who was contracted to build the bridge at Hornshole in 1772–74. After the framework collapsed he lost heart, apparently sitting among the ruined structure and cried for 'the hills and rocks to fall on him and cover him up, as he was a ruined man'; he left the rest of the work to Pott. He could be the Adam, mason in Hawick, who purchased 'Marilaws croft' (i.e. Morlaw's Croft) from James Gardner in 1756; in 1764 he pleaded to be allowed to continue to be allowed to cut peat on Wilton Common. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Halliday and their children included: Margaret (b.1751); John (b.1756); Margaret (b.1759); and Adam (b.1762). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Nichol and their children included: Thomas (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1761). Adam 'Lint Aidie' (1723/4–98) flax merchant in Hawick. He married Helen Scott in 1750, the marriage being announced in both Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes; she died in 1795, aged 68. Their children, baptised in Ashrkirk Parish included: Adam (b.1751), the eldest son, dyer, gold lace maker and travelling merchant; Elizabeth (b.1753); Ann (b.1754); Thomas (b.1756), who may have been a minister; John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759). Additional children, baptised in Hawick Parish, were: Margaret (b.1764); Helen (b.1765); James (b.1767); Walter (b.1770); and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1765 were 'Mr John Laurie, student' and John Kedie, in 1767 were barber Francis (probably a relative) and Alexander Bunyan and in 1772 were the whole congregation. Adam (18th C.) shepherd in Upper Dalgleish. He is famous for his home-spun prayers, as described by the Ettrick Shepherd (who had an uncle who herded with him). Adam (b.1731) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester, where he was born. He became a planter at Montego Bay in Jamaica and married Mrs. Thorpe. His estate may be the one called St. James, referred to in 1800, with Adam Scott as the former owner. Adam (d.bef. 1797) tailor in Hawick. He married Janet Hardie in 1758 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: Robert (b.1758); Isobel (b.1761); Barbara (b.1764); Marion (b.1767); and Adam (b.1771). The witnesses in 1767 and 1771 were the whole congregation. Adam of Galalaw (18th C.) probably descended from the earlier Scotts of Galalaw. His lands were valued at £756 in the 1740s. He was listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 being entered into the lands 'in the old parish of Hassendean', probably the farm in Wilton Parish just north of Hawick. He may be the Adam of Borthwickshiels who paid the window tax in Roberton Parish in 1748. He was listed as 'of Galalaw' among the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He was given the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiels by Walter Scott of Harden in 1768, and passed this on to Francis (brother of Walter of Harden) in 1780. He is marked as owner of Borthwickshiels on Ainslie's 1773 map. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax in Roberton in 1785. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1785–86. He was taxed (in Roberton Parish, presumably at Borthwickshiels) for having a male servant in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was probably father or brother of Elizabeth, who married George Pott. Adam (1751–bef. 1819) eldest son of Adam, flax merchant of Hawick, known as 'Lint Aidie'. He was a dyer, gold lace maker, and later travelling merchant of Hawick, later moving to Sunderland. He married Jane (1751–1837), daughter of baker and farmer Thomas Kedie. Adam (18th C.) miller in Hawick. On the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) he is listed as 'Mr Adam Scott, miller, Hawick Mills'; 'John Scott, miller, there' (possibly the miller at Hummelknowes at that time) is listed after him, and so may have been related. 'John and Adam Scott in Hawick', who paid the cart tax in 1791, may be these same 2 men. He married Esther Scott in 1754 and their children included: Ann (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); and Francis (b.1762). The witnesses in 1757 were Bailie Robert and merchant George (who may have been related), in 1759 were the whole congregation and in 1762 were Bailie Robert (again) and miller James (who may also have been related). Perhaps the same miller Adam also married Agnes Hamilton in 1767 and had children: James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Esther (b.1773); Adam (b.1775); Janet (b.1778); Jane (b.1779); and Betty (b.1783, probably). The witnesses in 1773 and 1783 were the Associate Congregation. He is probably the miller whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Adam (d.bef. 1810) weaver in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Cairns and their children included: John (b.1773); Janet (b.1776); Adam (b.1777); Robert (b.1780); George (b.1782); Francis (b.1785); Isabel (b.1787); and Francis (again, b.1794). The witnesses in 1776 were the whole congregation. He may have been father of Adam, junior weaver, who is recorded in 1797. He was an already deceased weaver of Hawick in 1810 when his wife Betty Cairns died. It is possible he is the 'Kill Dryds Adam' whose death is recorded in 1805; if so, then he was surely related to weaver Robert, who had essentially the same nickname. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Thomas (b.1788) and Margaret (b.1790). Adam (18th C.) recorded at Scabcleuch in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Graham in 1793, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Adam (b.c.1770s) resident of Denholm recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, in 1795 he married Elizabeth ('Betty') Nichol, who was from Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth, daughter to John, baptised in Hawick in 1764. The couple's children, baptised in Ettrick, included: Elizabeth (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); Margaret (b.1800); John (b.1803); Janet (1805–65), married Adam Pringle in Roberton; Adam (b.1808); and Gideon (b.1812). Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whithope (in Roberton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He married Alison Brown and their children included: George (b.1783); and Thomas (b.1786). These baptisms were not entered into the Roberton Parish records until 1808. It is possible that his marriage was in 1777 in Melrose. Adam (b.c.1770) blacksmith at 'Spinniesbank-End' in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was living with his wife Margaret and his son Robert, who was also a blacksmith. He could be the Adam from Langhaugh who married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert, tenant in Blackburnfoot. Adam (b.c.1770s) servant at Deanbrae according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James was also listed and hence perhaps his brother. Adam (b.c.1780) labourer at Ashtrees in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He may have been related to Edward, who was at Ashtrees in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Southdean in 1807. Adam (1782–1857) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John and Isabella Blaikie. Like his father, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He was at Houdshall in 1818 and Priesthaughshiel in 1820 and 1823. He was recorded as a labourer at Houdshall in

Cavers Parish in 1841, while in 1851 he is listed as a 'Travelling Grocer' at Reasknowe, and on his death certificate was a carrier. He married Janet (or 'Jenny') Leithead, who was born in Kirkton and died at Sunnybank in 1865, aged 78; she was daughter of Gledstone Leithead and Helen Hall. Their children probably included: John (1811/2–35); Gladstone (1813/4–90); Helen (1815/6–30); Thomas (b.1818), who married Janet Davidson; William (1820–29), who died at Priesthaughshiel; Jenny (b.c.1821), who lived at Middlebie in Dumfriesshire; Charles (b.1823), who was a shepherd at Braidliehope in Castleton Parish; Walter (b.c.1827); William (again, b.c.1829), probably the gamekeeper living at Sunnybank in 1861; James (b.c.1832); and David (1834–35). Adam (b.c.1825), who moved to northern Scotland, then the Falklands and finally New Zealand was probably also his son. He died at Raesknowe and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery, along with his wife and 4 of their children who died young. Adam (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded as 'Senior weaver' in 1799 when he was listed on the ballot for the Militia; he was again on the list in 1801. He was distinct from the junior weaver, but presumably if they were both of the right age to be on the ballot, then they could not have been father and son. Adam (b.1777) weaver in Hawick, son of Adam. In 1797 he was recorded as 'Junr. weaver' among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; presumably his father was also Adam. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, in place of Gideon Scott from Teindside; but he was able to produce a document to prove that Gideon had in fact joined the regiment. In 1799 he was 'Junr Weaver' among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish', and he was still on the list in 1801. Adam (18th/19th C.) servant at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Gray and their children included John (b.1809). Adam (18th/19th C.) clogger on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Adam of Ashtrees (18th/19th C.) son of John of Ashtrees and brother of Thomas of Peel. He had a sasine as heir to his father in 1780. He held Ashtrees according to the county valuation of 1788. He was succeeded by his son John, whose trustees sold the lands in 1855 to John of Riccalton (a cousin). Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron (1790–1865) son of John of Ashtrees and Isabel Rae. His father's executors sold Ashtrees and it passed to a cousin. He farmed a large farm in West Rosshire. He married Janet, daughter of James Hall of Sciberscross, Sutherlandshire. Their children were: John of Drynoch, Skye; James, who went to Australia; Sir Henry Hall; Thomas; Margaret; Anne; Jessie; Esther; and several other daughters. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margery 'Reddoch' and their children included Mary (b.1816) and John (b.1819). Adam (1796–1838) son of James, who was herd in Wauchope, Hobkirk Parish. He sailed to America in 1812, along with a sister and Thomas Lockhart. He may have stayed with relatives in Bovina, New York state before settling in Ontario, on the Otonabee River. There he built a saw and grist mill in 1818, the area becoming known as Scott's Plains. It was remaned Peterborough in 1825. He was described as being a huge man, 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighing 260 pounds. He married Patricia Ann Mann and their children were Margaret, Adam, Jeanette, James, Walter and Elizabeth. A plaque on the grounds of the Adam Scott Collegiate and Vocational Institute records how he was the first settler in Peterborough. Adam (b.1798/9) cattle dealer who was living at Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was still at Wester Parkhill and described as an agricultural labourer. His wife was Catherine (or Christina) and their children included Walter, James, Adam, William, Robert, John and Christopher. He could be a descendant of Robert, who was at Wester Parkhill in the latter part of the 18th century. Adam (b.1816/7) born at Legerwood, Berwick, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 7 Sandbed. He was probably the 'A. Scott, grocer' whose property in the Sandbed was damaged in the flood of 1846. He was recorded as a grocer at Teviot Square in Slater's 1852 directory, and was also listed as an insurance agent for Northern. He married Agnes Laing, and their children included: George Laing (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); David Laing (b.1846); Jane Margaret Mary (b.1848); and Agnes Helen (b.1850). Adam (b.1816/7) born in Melrose, he was a policeman in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at Forkins Police Station and listed as '1st Class Police Constable'. His wife was Agnes (from Eckford) and their children included Samuel, Janet, Adam, Isabella C., Andrew and William. Adam (19th C.) son of John and Margaret Turnbull. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth and her husband Alexander Burnet at Penchrise. He was shepherd at Shankendshiels, being recorded there in 1861. In 1859 he married Jane, daughter of John Dalgleish and Jane Smith. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Mervinslaw in 1841. Adam (c.1825–87) born at Priesthaughshiel, he was son of Adam and Jessie Nicholson (according to his death certificate). It seems possible that he was instead son of shepherd Adam and Janet Leithead. He worked as a shepherd and for some reason moved to northern Scotland, where in 1850 he married Mary Gillanders. He was listed at that time being from Kilmallie Parish in Argyllshre, and then he settled in Contin Parish, Ross & Cromarty, where several children were baptised. Their children included: Adam (1850–1915), who died in Kincardine; John (1853–76), died in the Falklands; Annie Gillanders (1854–1944); Alexander Gillanders (1855–1931); William (1857–1927); James Gillanders (1859–1943); Kenneth Gillanders (1862–1949); Thomas (1864–1917); Charles Gillanders (1866–1923); Jessie Isabella (1868–76), also died in the Falklands; and Walter (1871–1914). In 1861 and 1871 he was a shepherd, coming from Hawick, working as a shepherd near Inverness. In 1873 he was employed by the Falkland Island Company and sailed south with his wife and 7 children. By the late 1870s the family had moved to New Zealand. He worked as a shepherd around Canterbury and died following a fall from his horse. Adam (1826–81) joiner in Hawick, son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He is probably the apprentice joiner listed at the East End along with Adam Smail in the 1841 census. He was listed as a joiner along with his brother Charles in Slater's 1852 directory. He was the 29th listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856. In 1861 he donated a coin of Edward II found at Bourtree Place. In 1861 he was a master joiner, employing 4 people. His premises were on Bourtree Place, specifically on Munro's Close. He was the first person in Hawick to ride a 'velocipede'. In 1861 he presented to the Archæological Society a silver coin of Edward II that he had found at Bourtree Place. He married Agnes Fleming (from Ancrum) and they had a son, Charles William. Adam (b.1828) son of Robert and Agnes, he was born in Wilton Parish, his father being farmer at East Boonraw. He himself was farmer at Burnfoot on Ale. In 1861 he was farming 800 acres there, and employing 6 people. He married Elizabeth Anderson (from the Burnfoot on Ale family) in 1852 and their children included: Thomas Anderson (b.1853), who emigrated, but returned; Robert (b.1855); Agnes (b.1857); Alexander Miller (b.1858); Adam (b.1860); David F. (b.1863), settled in Colorado; Sybella Fotheringham (b.1865), also in Kansas; William (b.1867); Ebenezer Anderson (1869–93); Elizabeth (b.1871); Charles Anderson (b.1875); and John Marcus (b.1877). Most of the family emigrated to America, settling in Pottawatomie County, Kansas, where the last 3 children were born. Adam (d.1900) blacksmith at Yarrow Feus for 46 years. He took part in all activities in that district and was known as the 'Provost of Yarrowford'. Adam (19th/20th C.) Hawick builder responsible for most of the stone-work at Stirches House, completed in 1902. There is a photograph of his work force outside the house. He may have been the same A. Scott who was Burgh Assessor around 1890. He may also be the Adam whose daughter Agnes was Cornet's Lass in 1899. Adam (1874–1954) son of builder John and Margaret Inglis. He was a mason in Newcastleton, living at 1 Union Street. He married Agnes Dixon, who died in 1952, aged 80. Their children included: John Dixon (1908/9–19); and Margaret Inglis ('Peggy', 1911–19). They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Agnes (16th C.) recorded in a memorandum in Prthshire in 1550, regarding the marriage between 2 people related in the 4th and 3rd degrees of consanguinity. She was daughter of Janet Alison, who was daughter of John Alison, who was son of Alexander Alison. She herself had a son, William Laing (who was to marry Agnes Alison). A witness to the document was James, who may have been a relative. Agnes 'Muckle Mou'd Meg' nee Murray (b.1590s) daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. She married William, younger of Harden in 1611. The romanticised version of the story involves the young Scott being captured in a skirmish, and choosing to marry the ugliest of Murray's daughters in order to escape the gallows. In fact the true story is preserved in 2 detailed wedding contracts, making it clear that the marriage was a well-planned arrangement. She was still a minor at the time, and the contract involves many details about lands for female heirs, etc. The dowry had the value of £7,000. Her name is signed 'Agnes Morraye'. Her eldest son, also Sir William, succeeded to Harden, while her 2nd son became Sir Gideon of Highchester. She is celebrated in a sculpture unveiled at Elibank in 1999. Presumably there was some basis for the characterisation of her physiognomy. Agnes (d.c.1593) wife of James Munche 'in the Passill of Strakynness' in Fife. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1593/4. Agnes (17th

C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when she was owed for her annual fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. Agnes (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Bessie were served heirs to their 'foir grandsher' (probably great-gandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (17th C.) convicted in Hawick in 1695 of bleeding Robert Scott 'by thrusting her hand in his mouth, and ryveing out of his cheiks'. Agnes 'Nans', nee Noble (18th/19th C.) mother of James, Schoolmaster at Yarrow and later occupant of Sillerbuthall. She was described (by Rev. James Russell) as 'quite a character; kind, active, economical'. Her husband's name is unknown. She lived with her son at Yarrow (presumably meaning she was widowed), and had a very high opinion of him. She was in charge of the boarders, of whom there were as many as 30 in the small house. Agnes (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1811 when she witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of James Sanderson and Isabel Scott (who may have been a relative, such as her sister). It was unusual for a woman to act as a baptismal witness. Perhaps the same Agnes witnessed baptisms for weaver Charles Scott in 1826 and 1828. Agnes nee Cook (b.1805/6) from Roberton, she was an innkeeper and grocer, listed at about 17 High Street on the 1851 census. She was also listed as a High Street grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow, with children Janet and Margaret, born in Midlothian, and also living with her mother, Janet Cook, from Cavers, and sister Mary Cook. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Agneta (d.c.1521) recorded in the Cowgate when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1521. Ailmer of Molle (12th/13th C.) recorded in about 1220 when along with his wife Christian he gave an oxgate of land in Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey. His wife was a daughter of Isolda, who was daughter and co-heiress of Anselm of Molle. Several families seemed to have concurrently held lands of Molle (around the modern Morebattle), making it hard to establish clear familial relationships. Nevertheless it seems very likely that he was closely related to Richard Scott 'de Molle' (and ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch), who married Alice, daughter of Anselm de Molle. Alan (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Alan Skot' when he was on an inquest at Peebles in 1303/4. He could have been related to the William, who held lands in Peeblesshire in 1296. Alan (14th C.) Burgess of Aberdeen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1362. Alan (14th C.) prisoner in the Tower of London who was released on 'mainprise' in 1385/6 along with another man. Alan (14th/15th C.) Canon of Cambuskenneth who acted as a witness to charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. Alan (1943/4–) Hawick-based butcher. He was trained as a runner by Jimmy Bell of Ashkirk, and went on to win sprints in race meetings in the Borders and further afield. He had even greater success as a coach in the 1970s and 1980s. Albert (13th C.) merchant of Placentia (i.e. Piacenza in Italy), who is recorded in 1279. Edward I gave a letter of protection to 'Albert Scot, and his partners of the Scotti' for 3 years. In 1293/4 he is Albert 'le Escot', who along with John (presumably his brother or son) was given further protection 'to trade in the realm during the King's pleasure'. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as 'Alexandrum Scot' in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Walter, son of Thomas, in the house of 'Roberti de Prudewyk'. Alexander (13th C.) listed as 'Alisaundre Scot of Perthayk' in Lanarkshire when he paid home to Edward I in 1296. He could have been related to Sir Richard of Murdieston. Alexander (13th/14th C.) ropemaker at Newcastle. Along with 'Matildis Scot' and 3 other men, he is recorded in 1304 when payment was made for their wages in going to make ropes for Edward I's castle at Stirling. Alexander (15th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch relating to the lands of Whitchesters. This probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Alexander. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as customs office in Perth in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1460s. He also rendered the accounts of the Baillies of Perth. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as tenant of several Crown lands in Kirkcudbrightshire and Wigtonshire in 1481. Probably a different Alexander leased part of 'Ricardyongstoun' in Bothwell in 1480. Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington (d.1488) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of the first Walter of Buccleuch and brother of Sir David. He is sometimes said to be the same as Alexander, Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery, but this is a different man (although probably related). His father had gained the lands of Abington (in South Lanarkshire) in 1458/8, after being forfeited by the Douglases. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh for Robert Scott of Haining in 1463. In 1467/8 he was granted Howpasley by James III, the lands having previously been in the possession of the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies. In 1469 he and David together leased the farm of Mount Common. In 1470 he paid the redemption money for Midshiels and Appletreehall to their superior William Livingstone of Drumry; the appended shield shows the 'bend charged with two crescents and a mullet' of the Scotts of Buccleuch, with another mullet on shield probably indicating cadet status. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King's enemies. He was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Ettrick in the period 1469–75, taking over from Sir Walter of Buccleuch and having the lease of 'Aldanishop' (probably Eldinhope) for his fee; he was also stated in 1475 to be 'de Kirkurde'. In 1471 he had a debt along with his mother and John Colquhoun, relating to Crown lands. In 1483 he was witness to a charter from Henry Wardlaw, giving the half barony of Wilton to John Scott of Thirlestane (who was probably a relative). He is recorded as dead in 1478 (an error for 1488 perhaps), when his son and heir Sir Walter of Howpasley had to pay William Inglis regarding the lands of Meiklehope. His sons Alexander and Adam are also mentioned in 1488. In 1493/4 (after he was deceased) his 'letter of reversion' for the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall were assigned by William Livingstone of Drumry to Alexander, Lord Home. His sons were: Walter of Howpasley; Adam, probably the Ranger of Ettrick Ward; Robert, who was 'Tutor' of Howpasley; William, Abbot of Melrose; Alexander, who had remission for thefts in 1502; and probably David of Tushielaw. 'Sym Scot' is probably another son (recorded in 1526 as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley). From the fact that his son Walter held the lease on Eldinhope along with his mother 'Johannis Douglas' from later in 1488 (probably after his death), with her name given as 'Jonete Dowglas' in 1492, it seems that his wife's name was Joan or Janet Douglas. He probably died at the Battle of Sauchieburn in June 1488. Alexander (15th C.) Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery and Clerk Register of Scotland. He is sometimes said to be the same as Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, but the 1488 charter for the Barony of Branxholme proves this not to be the case (there he was the last witness, while the charter itself refers to Alexander, brother of Sir David of Buccleuch as being deceased). Nevertheless, it seems likely that he was also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is possible he is the Alexander, from the Diocese of St. Andrews, who notarised the 1464/5 sasine of Kirkton Mains and Flex for William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is probably the royal clerk who witnessed charters in the Glasgow cartulary in about 1473 and 1476, as well as a confirming charter for John of Swinton in 1477. In the 1470s he received an annuity from the custom of woollen cloth in Edinburgh. He was listed as Rector of Wigton, Clerk Register and auditor many times in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1480s. He is 'clerk of the Register' in 1482/3 when he witnessed a document for Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus. In 1483 he was Canon of Aberdeen and Clerk Register when he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Errol. And in 1483/4 he witnessed a charter for Alexander Home of that Ilk. In May 1488 he was Rector of Wigton and Clerk of the Rolls and Register for the charter regranting the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas. And in the same month he had the same titles when he witnessed the charter for the resignation (and regranting) of the Barony of Branxholme. In 1491 he was witness to a 'procuratory of resignation' involving Ruecastle. He also witnessed a large number of charters not relating to the Borders for James III in the period to 1483–8 and for James IV in 1488–9. He was a Commissioner on the Border in 1494, as recorded an an indenture at Coldstream. He was still recorded as Rector of Wigton in 1496. His signature is recorded (and reproduced in the 1877 study of the accounts of the lord high treasurer of Scotland). Alexander (15th C.) given 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander (15th C.) tenant in Broadlee, probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. He was mentioned in 1493 and 1494/5 when his son John was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh. John 'in braidlee' was also mentioned, and was surely related (if not the same man as his son). Alexander (15th C.) brother of Robert of Whames. In the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he was allowed to 'compone' for several crimes, specifically stealing cattle from the tenants of Robert Ramsay in 'dene hous' and stealing sheep from William Murray in Sundhope; his surety was Robert of Whitchester. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in 'hoptoun' recorded in 1498 at the Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was allowed to 'compone' for riding Andrew Taylor's mare to death, killing Thomas Elphinstone's cow and hurting him, and striking a child of the Laird of Adamland. William Bell in Peebles was his surety. His home was probably associated with Hopeton Tower near Eddleston in Peeblesshire. Additionally in 1498 he had remission for the murder of Tom Robson, for wounding Walter Notman, for the premeditated wounding of Andrew Taylor and of William Allan in 'mannisland' and for 'common oppression' of the King's subjects, with William Bell in Peebles again being his surety. 1502 he At the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 he had remission for the murder of Thomas Robson, with surety Robert of Allanhaugh. It is possible that he was the same man as Alexander, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, who was appointed Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534 and was progenitor of the Scotts of Scotstarvit. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. He is recorded being 'in Mouslaw', which seems likely to be Muselee. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he could be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (15th/16th C.) son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Sir Walter of Howpasley. and/or Stirches. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam 'in Hardwodhill' had a remission for dealing with the sheep stolen by him and Richard Armstrong (called 'Skaw') from David Hoppringle at 'Fechane'; Walter Scott of Howpasley and Robert Scott of Stirches served as sureties. He was also recorded in 1502 receiving remission for several crimes: resetting Edmond Taylor; stealing a horse from Oakwood; stealing a horse from John in 'Valis'; stealing 240 sheep, 10 cows, 3 horses and goods from David Pringle out of 'Fechaine'; and stealing 200 sheep, 20 cows and goods from David Pringle's tenants. His brother Walter of Howpasley served as his surety. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh who witnessed the letter of acquittal in 1510 between George Scott of Whames and Robert Muir of Rowallan. He is probably also the Edinburgh man who witnessed a document relating to lands in Leith held by Melrose Abbey in 1511. He could be the Alexander who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1498/9, in right of his father-in-law John Hopper. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Howford (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1508 when he was on an assize that convicted Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig. He was granted the feu of the middle steading of Langhope (also known as Howford) in 1510. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 as holder of the lands of Howford. It is possible he was the Alexander who in 1514 witnessed a dispensation to marry granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale for Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with the other witness being Thomas). It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Sir Alexander (d.1513) of Hassendean, said by Scott of Satchells to have been killed at Flodden, and to have been the ancestor of the Scotts of Woll, Deloraine, Haining, Stotstarvit, etc. He is also listed by Abercromby in his list of those slain at Flodden. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main Scott branches, although he could have been son of David of Hassendean (if he existed at all). However, since David was not a knight, it would seem surprising that he was knighted himself and yet does not appear in any records. We do know that David's lands were warded in 1515 and later his brothers John and then William succeeded. So if David did have any sons, then they may indeed have perished at Flodden. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Prior of Kilwinning in 1512. Probably the same monk of Kilwinning was recorded in 1532 and perhaps the same man was a monk at Newbattle Abbey in 1523. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Borders men who had respite in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. After him are listed Adam, Steven and William 'brether to the said Alexander Scot', with 'brether' being plural, suggesting all 3 men were his brothers. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts they belonged. Alexander 'Sandie' (d.1530) one of the men captuted by the men of King James V in 1530 along with Johnnie Armstrong. He was said to have burned a widow in her home and thus was singled out for special treatment, being burned alive. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was in Newark. In 1526 there was a sasine for his wife, Janet Ker, for lands within Selkirk. The witnesses included Michael and David, who may have been related. Probably the same Alexander witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528 and purchased a tenement in 1529. In 1530/1 he is recorded holding lands in Selkirk formerly belonging to Patrick Murray and in 1532 (along with Walter, tutor of Haining) sold a piece of land to Thomas Currer. In 1532 he confirmed the sale of his tenement and rigs to Thomas Currer. In 1534/5 he resigned a tenement in favour of his son and heir Thomas, who immediately sold it to James 'Bradfutt'. He may be the Alexander who occupied a husbandland belonging to Patrick Murray, which was sold to Mark Ker in 1536. Perhaps the same Alexander sold a tenement to William Fletcher in 1541/2. It is possible he was the same man as Alexander of Palace. Sir Alexander (d.1544) probably 2nd son of Robert of Allanhaugh, and grandson of David of Buccleuch. Note that there are other contemporary Alexanders with whom he is easily confused, but it seems that the Alexander who was Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine, the one who became Vice-Register of Scotland, and the son of Scott of Allanhaugh, were all the same man. The earlier Alexander of Howpasley and Abingdon was probably his great uncle. He is likely the Alexander who was presented to the vicarage of Glenholm in Peeblesshire in 1505 and who was Vicar of Kirkurd (long associated with the Scotts) in at least 1513–24. He was paid by the Crown for copying rentals etc. in 1509. He was appointed as depute of the Clerk Register in 1516 and was keeper of the Rolls of Exchequer for many years. In 1528 he raised an action relating to crops at Ratho, and in 1529/30 he gave evidence concerning the Lordship of Dirleton, which he had possessed for 12 or 13 years. He was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer's Accounts from at least 1526–42. He was appointed by James V as Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534. In 1540 he founded a chaplainry in the church of Irvine. About the same time he had a letter of commendation from James V for his faithful service 'in all sessionis, chekkeris, and register'. His name occurs frequently in the Exchequer Rolls in at least the period 1537–1540, including as witness to the accounts, for making payments in the name of the convent of St. Andrews and payments to the Dictator of the Rolls. He also served as deputy of Gavin Dunbar, Bishop of Aberdeen. He was succeeded as Provost of Corstorphine (and Auditor) by his brother James. His son Robert succeeded at an early age, and later acquired Knightspottie and other lands. Robert's grandson John became the first Laird of Scotstarvit. It is possible he is the same man as Alexander in Hopeton, recorded in 1498 and 1502. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in Aberdeen in 1533. This was in a dispute involving the marriage of his daughter with William Froister. Probably the same Alexander was a Burgess of Aberdeen recorded in another dispute in 1550; this involved payment of a debt to him and also Robert (who was surely a relative). Alexander of Palace (d.bef. 1545) son and heir of David, Vicar of Ashkirk. In 1532 he received sasine for his father's lands in Selkirk; he was there referred to as being 'of Paless'. In 1532/3 he was 'of Paliss' he resigned the annual rents of a tenement in Selkirk to John 'Mithag'. In 1535 he was 'then called of Paliss near Ashkirk' when an action was brought against him in Selkirk by Robert Paterson, Bartholomew Anderson and Archibald Brown. In 1535 he resigned 3 rigs of land to William 'Boirne', but still held a tenement in Selkirk in that year. In 1540 and 1541 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when recorded in a dispute over money with William Fletcher. In 1541/2 he delared that he would never lease his rigs to William Burn. In 1545 his son John succeeded to the annual rent of a tenement of his in Selkirk; Andrew, Vicar of Cavers and William were among the witnesses. Alexander (16th C.) recorded being 'in Kyrkhope' (i.e. Kirkhope) in 1536. He witnessed the proclamation of a royal letter in Selkirk. Alexander (16th C.) recorded 'in Hairheid' in 1539 when he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He was also in Harehead in 1540 when he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. Alexander (d.bef. 1551) son of Walter, who was a baker in Edinburgh. He was deceased by 1556 when Patrick was acting as tutor for this son and heir Gavin. This related to their interest in houses in Edinburgh and sums of money. He owned property in Gray's Close in Edinburgh, which his grandson Alexander of 'the Dene' (i.e. Dean village) litigated over around 1600. He married Katherine 'Touris' and had at least one child, Gavin. It seems likely that he was related to Alexander the poet. Alexander (d.1569) Parson of Sanday and Westray in the Northern Isles. He also had a room in the Edinburgh tenement of John Sym, and so muct have spent at least some of his time there. In 1550 and 1554 he witnessed documents for William Scott of Balwearie and hence may have been a relative. He was recorded as 'parson of Westra and vicar of Sanda' in 1555. He was later Chancellor of Orkney. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of Steven. He is recorded selling a tenement of land in Hawick in 1558, this being one of the earliest known Hawick sasines. The land lay in the West-end, being bounded by James Brown's land on the north, 'the hill path on the south', 'Doniere Portussis' on the east and the 'Common Vennel' on the west. This may have been similar to the land known as 'Wylie's Dub' and 'Bridgehaugh' a century later. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as 'callit Huttitill' among the tenants of 'Andishop' who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkenside and Adam of Deephope. David, also 'callit Huttitill' was also listed (and surely his brother or similar), as well as 'Blak Sande in Deiphop'. 'Andishop' may have been Annelshope or Eldinhope. He was surely related to 'Rowie of Huttikill', who was recorded in 1616. Alexander (c.1520–82/3) poet of the Scottish Court, known for at least 5 poems (and perhaps 30 others) that appear in the 'Bannatyne Manuscript'. The poet was probably the same man as the musician who was Prebendary of the Chapel Royal in Stirling. He was made Prebnd of Ayr in 1539 and may be the fifer of that name who was contracted to play for a guild in Paris in 1540. He had 2 illegitimate sons naturalised in 1549, John (also recorded in 1577) and Alexander (who was officer to the pantry in the English Court, married Elizabeth Lindsay and died in 1581). He was recorded as an organist when given a portion of Inchmahome Priory and he appears to have been offered a pension in 1555. In 1556–58 he is recorded playing the organ and singing in the choir of Edinburgh Town Council. He purchased lands in Fife and Perthshire in the 1560s. He translated the Psalms into Scots, and a copy of these may have been given to Queen Mary. He also had a sister, whose son John Robson was a cutler burgess of Edinburgh. He is mentioned as 'old Scot' in another poet's work in about 1582. Alexander 'Black Sandy' (16th C.) tenant in Deephope. He was recorded in 1573 when he and others from 'Andishop' and elsewhere, were to be entered before the court in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkenside and Adam of Deephope. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1581 he was a cautioner (along with Mungo) for George of Synton being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. There was a further caution by him and Mungo in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining 'now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each', and the caution for Robert of Haining was confirmed later in 1581. This was concerned with the dispute between the Scotts and Elliots, specifically the complaint that Dand Elliot had been attacked near Headshaw by a group of Scotts. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). He could be the merchant Alexander, eldest son of John, who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1578/9. Alexander of Orchardfield (16th C.) eldest son of John, maltman in the West Port of Edinburgh. His mother was Elizabeth Scott, who came from the Scotts of Balwearie. He was also resident of the West Port in Edinburgh. Gavin of 'the Dene' (i.e. Dean village) named him as testamentary executive of his estate when he died in 1585, and he was also a major creditor of Gavin. He married Margaret Logan of Restalrig and their children included Betty, whose will is recorded in 1645. Alexander (16th C.) tenant 'in the Myltoun of Balgony in Fife'. The will of his wife Margaret 'Dempstertoun' is recorded in Edinburgh in 1583. Alexander (d.c.1585) tenant in 'Philipstoun' in Abercorn Parish. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1585/6. Alexander (16th C.) brother of Matthew of Belstanerig. He was recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Alexander of Clerklands (16th C.) recorded in 1593/4 when he and Walter of Ashkirk were cautioners for John Veitch, heir apparent of Dawyck, not to harm the Tweedies. He may be related to the later John of Clerklands. Alexander (d.c.1594) resident 'at the Kirkstyle of Kinfaunis' in Perthshire. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1594. Alexander (16th/17th C.) smith in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1596 when served heir to his father Adam, who was also a smith there. Alexander (16th/17th C.) piper in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Alexander (d.1616) from Kinninmonth in Aberdeenshire, son of George of Barwirie and Margaret Fraser. He was a grammarian who spent much of his life in France. His publications include the 'Letters of Cicero' (1580) and 'Universa Grammatica Græca' (1593), for which Greek grammar he became well known. He married a sister of Jean Pillehotte, was Director of the Schools of Carpentras from 1594 and purchased the Chateau de Rocani, where he died. Alexander of Kirkstyle (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Patrick Ogilvie of Inchmartin. Alexander 'Lang Sandy' (d.bef. 1635). In 1605 he had a 'discharge' (i.e. cancellation of an obligation) from William of Howpasley for rental of his lands of Wark (it is unclear to which area this refers, but presumably fairly local). In 1635 his grandson John in Howpasley was served as his heir; he was at that time described as being 'commonly called Lang Sandie' in Hawick. Alexander (16th/17th C.) brother of Thomas 'called of Ormestoun'. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (16th/17th C.) described in 1617 along with James Douglas as 'commoun and notorious thevis and lymmairis' when apprehended by the Commissioners of the Middle Shires and delivered to the Bailies of Selkirk. However, the pair escaped. It is possible that the same Alexander was a servant to the Laird of Blackbarony, who was in 1619 in Peebles Tolbooth for theft. Rev. Alexander (c.1600–40) probably from the Scotts of Balwearie, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1620. In 1640 he became minister at Melroe, but died later the same year. He had a daughter Elizabeth, who married a Bailie of Cupar. Alexander of Tushielaw (17th C.) eldest son of William and Grizel Scott. He obtained a charter for Tushielaw in 1663. He is recorded as 'Andrew (Alexander) of Tushilagoe' when his son Patrick was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, Edinburgh, in 1664. He may have been the Scott of Tushielaw who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He may have been Laird in 1671 when the land tax was paid in Dumfriesshire for 'Lands pertaining to Tussilaw'. His son William succeeded when he was still a minor (and was soon after succeeded by Walter, the last Laird, who may have been his brother rather than his son). Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. He may have married Margaret Elliot (said to be the mother of Walter, the last Laird). Alexander (17th C.) 'cottar' at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander of Galalaw (17th C.) once owner of the lands called 'Robertoun Cleughfoot'. If this was really in the 1600s, then he may have been father of Adam of Galalaw who was recorded around 1700. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Laing in 1695 and their children included Janet (b.1699) and Bessie (b.1703). Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of William 'the Bellman', who had been Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was himself appointed Burgh Officer from 1696, replacing John Stewart. He may thus have overlapped with Alexander Young. He was stated to be a Burgess of Hawick at the time of his appointment, and eldest son and heir of the deceased William. This may have been a reappointment, since in 1693/4 he was listed as 'town-officer' among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the 'officer' listed as a witness (along with flesher Robert) for wright Andrew in 1700 (suggesting they were all related perhaps). He married Anna Amos (or perhaps 'Aire') and their children included: Alexander (b.1702); and Anna (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Alexander Young and John 'Atkin'. He was listed as 'officer' in 1705 when his daughter Anna was baptised, and also when he witnessed a couple of baptisms himself. Perhaps the same Alexander was recorded being paid for ale given to the 'cassars' (i.e. road-layers) in 1721. Dr. Alexander (1691–1743) eldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane and Christian Don. He had his fathers goods deponed to him in 1727 and is also recorded in 1737 in records relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch. These lands of 'Thirlestain' are probably those near Yetholm, and not the lands in the Ettrick, then belonging to Francis, 6th Lord Napier. In 1729 he married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and grand-daughter of John Kerr of Frogden; his wife died in 1781. They had 11 children: Barbara (1730–76); William (b.1731) Edinburgh merchant; Christian (b.1732), who married Leith of Freefield; John (b.1733); Anne; James (b.1735); Rebecca; Agnes; Madeline or Magdalene (b.1739), who resided at George Square and lived to an old age; Charles (b.1740); and Walter (b.1742). His son and heir William inherited Chatto and Sunlaws and took the surname Scott-Kerr. Alexander of Synton (1690–1764) son of John, he succeeded when still a minor. His 'curators' (presumably during his minority) were John Erskine of Shielfield, Walter Scott of Woll, William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Scott of Todrig and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. There appears to have been a dispute over the boundary between his lands of Synton and Ashkirk with Groundistone owned by Scott of Buccleuch. He matriculated arms in 1711, a star between 2 crescents and a red rose, with motto 'Crescendo prosim'. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme, younger of Stirches and his daughter Margaret. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for Hawick druggist Gideon and Susanna Scott. In 1744 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (along with his grandson), and also for Selkirkshire. In 1711 in Edinburgh he married Magdalene, daughter of Sir William Eliott of Stobs. Their children included: Margaret (b.1713), baptised at Synton, probably the same daughter Margaret who married John Chisholme of Stirches in 1736; John (b.1713), who died before his father, but whose son Alexander succeeded to Synton; Elizabeth (b.1715), baptised at Synton; an unnamed child (b.1716); Gilbert (b.1717), baptised at Synton, recorded becoming an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1733; and Alexander (b.1719), baptised at Synton. The witnesses in 1715 were Elliot of Borthwickbrae (probably William, who married his sister) and John Riddell of Muselee, in 1716 were Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs (his wife's brother) and Elliot of Borthwickbrae (again), and in 1717 were William Murray of Hadden and William Scott (his servant). Alexander of Thirlestane (b.1691) oldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane. He became the 3rd Laird of Thirlestane near Yetholm and was a physician. He married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and they had 11 children, including William Scott-Kerr (1731–82), who sold Thirlestane. Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Clerk in 1725, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their son Alexander was baptised in Hawick in 1729. Alexander of Galalaw (18th C.) son of Adam of Galalaw. In 1694 he was granted the land of Galalaw by his father Adam. He may be the Alexander, 'younger of Galalaw' recorded as a baptismal witness (for Robert of Coldhouse) in 1709; he was thus son of Adam of Galalaw. He was 'of Galala' in 1718 when he presented for baptism in Hawick a child of his deceased brother William of Brieryhill. He was 'of Galalaw' in 1724 when he witnessed another baptism for Robert of Coldhouse. Although still being designated 'of Galalaw', it seems that he was no longer directly connected with those lands. The baptisms he witnessed suggest that he might have been related to Robert of Coldhouse. He may be the Laird of Galalaw who paid owed for his lands of Easter Burnfoot in Roberton Parish in 1727. He may be the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for James Armstrong at Clarilaw in 1731. He was recorded in 1732 when Robert of Falnash purchased lands from him. He and Robert of Coldhouse witnessed a baptism for William in Whitfield in 1744. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. He was miller in Rulewater, being recorded at Bedrule Mill in 1722 and 1738 and 'Newtoun miln' in 1726. He was later tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. His children included: John (b.1722); George (1724–1815), farmer in Falla; Margaret (b.1726); William (b.1729); James (b.1731); Thomas (b.1733); Alexander (b.1735); and Robert (b.1738), who was also tenant at Roughheugh Mill. It has been suggested that John in Hummelknowes was his son, but that is not clear. He is probably the Alexander who married Euphan Smith in Bedrule in 1721. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1756. He may be the Alexander who married Bessy Pott (who was from Cavers) in Roberton in 1749 and had children William (b.1750), Isobel (b.1752), Betty (b.1756) and Janet (b.1759). Alexander (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton in 1763. Alexander of Synton (d.1782) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Alexander in a sasine of 1765. He was recorded being 'of Sinton junior' in the 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He is marked as proprietor of Synton on Ainslie's 1773 map. He had the house rebuilt around 1776. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1778 and 2 in 1779. In 1773 he married Eleanor ('Nelly' or 'Helen'), daughter of Walter Grieve in Branxholme Park. Their children were: John, the only son, who succeeded; Catherine, who later inherited the estates; Mary; and Helen. Alexander (1729–1804) 7th son of Gideon, farmer in Ladhope. His grandfather was John of Woll. He succeeded to his father's tenancy of Ladhope in Yarrow. He paid the Horse Tax there in the period 1785–97 and the Dog Tax in 1797. In 1782 he married Christian, daughter of Mr. Scott, farmer in Eldinhope (perhaps Francis, who lived to be 94). Their children were: Gideon (1783–1844), who died without issue; Walter (1787–1863), who also died childless; William, who succeeded to the Ladhope tenancy; John (b.1795), who became a baker in Edinburgh, married a Miss Buchan of Peebles, and died without issue; Margaret; Jane; and Christian, who married John Scott of Over Deloraine. Alexander (c.1759–1835) younger son of George of Falla and grandson of Alexander, tenant of Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a draper in Jedburgh and a Bailie there for many years. He was known as an inventor, keen on astronomy, who encouraged James Veitch of Inchbonny and also knew David

Brewster; he gave a mirror to Veitch that Veitch used to make his first reflecting telescope. He is also said to have spent a considerable amount of money on experiments with balloons and new kinds of explosives. In about 1794 he worked for the Marquess of Lothian at Newbattle, where he built a quarrying machine and sent up a balloon on the Marquis birthday. From about 1795 he was Factor for the Earl of Minto's estate in Fifeshire and then became Factor to the Earl of Hopetoun, living at Ormiston. He made a model of a reaping machine and designed a new kind of steam engine. He is probably the Jedburgh merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He married Isabella (c.1763–1843), daughter and heiress of William Rutherfurd, thereby obtaining possession of the farm of Falla (which had been tenanted by his father) on Oxnam Water. His children were: George, who worked for the Admiralty Office; William; John, whose son inherited Falla; Thomas; Adam; Isabella; Elizabeth; Alice; and Ann. His daughters became joint proprietors of Falla. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Grieve, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included Katharine (b.1774) and Mary (b.1775). He may also be father of an unnamed child (b.1780) also baptised in Ashkirk. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Charles (b.1771); James (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Charlotte (b.1776); and George (b.1787). Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as 'Hind' in 1789 when his daughter Betty was baptised. John (b.1786) and John (again, b.1787), were probably also his children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Ashkirk on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. He was still tenant at Ashkirk in 1801 when his servant John Smail was recorded on the Militia ballot. He is probably the Alexander who was married to either Helen Grieve or Margaret Scott. Alexander (18th/19th C.) servant at Cleuchhead in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Barbara Scott and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1803, with witnesses 'Rev Mr Hardy' (probably of Ashkirk) and Walter Turnbull. Alexander (18th/19th C.) grocer and meal dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778) elder son of Robert, tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He was born in Wilton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 400 acres, employing 13 people. He married Margaret, daughter of William Bell and Markie Minto, and she died in 1829, aged 43. Their children were: Marky (b.1815), who married William Hobkirk; Robert of Kinninghall (1817–98); Ann (b.1819); William (b.1821); and Mary (b.1821), who married John Scott, farmer in Barnhills. He is buried at Bedrule. Alexander John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, where his first 2 children were baptised. Other children were baptised in Hoddom Parish. He married Helen Curle and their children included: Margaret Curle (b.1813); and Alexander (b.1815); Isobella Susan (b.1817); and Gideon Andrew (b.1821). Alexander (b.c.1770s) tenant at Stirches Mains. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was still at Stirches Mains among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'. He was still listed as tenant on the 1801 Miltia ballot. He must have been related to the 'Mrs. Scott' who was listed as tenant there on the 1797 Hearth Tax rolls, perhaps her son. Thomas, who was also listed there in 1799 and 1801 may have been his brother. One possibility is that this is the same Alexander who later farmed at Kinninghall. Alexander (1793–1860) youngest son of Rev. Robert of Coldhouse and Margaret Chisholme, he was baptised in Innerleithen. He was known as a friend of Lord Byron, meeting him in Venice in 1818; they kept in touch until about 1822 and there are several exisiting letters between them. He inherited a share in (slave) plantations in Jamaica from his uncle William Chisholme. He was buried in Rijeka (formerly Fiume), Croatia. Alexander Pringle (1799–1853) twin of Francis Napier, he was son of George and born at Yair House, where his mother had worked. He was named after Alexander Pringle of Whytbank, who owned Yair. He worked for Pringles as a woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. In 1844 he married Elizabeth (1810–93), daughter of George Rule and Elizabeth Nichol; the marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. They had children: Alexander (b.1852/3), who was manager at R. Pringle & Sons; and Bella, who lived at 8 Carnarvon Street. In 1851 he was living at Backdamgate and in 1861 his widow was living at 2 Allars Crescent with her mother (Elizabeth Rule) and siblings. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Main Street,

Anderston, Glagow. In 1859 he donated to the Museum 'a lock of the hair of the late Sir Walter Scott'. Probably the same Alexander donated a coin of William III in 1865. He presumably had a local connection. Alexander (1830–1917) 2nd son of John Sibbald, tenant in Over Deloraine. He was tenant farmer at Ramseycleuch (in Ettrick). He emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A. in 1881 and helped found the Presbyterian Church at Paullina. He married Helen Scott, from Howford. Their children were: John Sibbald (b.1862), who lived at Deloraine farm in Iowa; William F. (b.1864), who married Janet, daughter of Walter Cowan; Henry Alexander (b.1876), who married Mary, daughter of John Cowan; Isabella Michil (d.1907); Jean Elliot, who married John Cowan; Wilhelmina Young, who married her cousin John Sibbald Scott; Christina A., who married Thomas H. Aitken; and Nelly Janet who married Fred L. Huston. Alexander (b.1830/1) son of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as an engineer and moved to Galashiels, where he was manager of the gasworks. In 1854 he married Mary (1830/1–88), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Francis, Andrew, Elizabeth and Janet Agnes Oliver. He may be the 'dyer, Galashiels' who in 1872 donated a Roman coin to the Museum. Alexander (b.1834/5) son of Walter, who was a tailor in Melrose. He apprenticed with his father and moved to be was a tailor and clothier in Wilton. He married Jeanie Manuel, daughter of toll-keeper George Grieve and Margaret Lambert. In 1861 he was living with his wife's mother and step-father (James Wishart) at Wilton Toll House. He donated fossils, as well as a bark basket from North America, to the Museum in 1861 and items from Antigua in 1863. Alexander (1840–1920) son of William and Mary Scott, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1870 he married Janet, daughter of Robert Grieve and Janet Shackleton of Lilliesleaf. In 1880 they emigrated to the Canadian prairies, and he became the first postmaster in Minto, Manitoba. They had 8 children, the first 5 being born in Ashkirk, and the others in Manitoba. This included Dr. Alexander Gladstone (1882–1970), known as 'Canada's first flying doctor', who founded the hospital in Bossano, Alberta. Alexander (1851–1933) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He farmed at Falnash, then Kinninghall and later at Venchen, Yetholm. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Hobkirk (builder in Hawick), and later married her sister Georgina Isabella Grierson Hobkirk. He died in Yetholm. His children included: Jane Borthwick (b.1875); Mina (b.1877); John Young Hobkirk (b.1878); Alexander Borthwick (b.1880); and William (b.1882). Alison (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Andrew (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1327, 1328, 1329 (3 times), 1330 and 1331. He was 'Andree Scot' and 'Andree Scotto' in Rutherglen. He may have been related to John, who was also in Rutherglen at the same time. Sir Andrew of Balwearie (d.1355) son of Sir Henry. He died when the Scots took Berwick and was succeeded by his infant son Sir William. Sir Andrew (d.bef. 1392) served in the English wars abroad. In 1392 his executor, John, Bishop of Man, was given a warrant to use the ransom from a Spanish prisoner to discharge his debts. Andrew (b.c.1355) clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He had a B.A. from Paris University and in 1374/5 was Licenciate of Arts there. In 1389 he was secretary of Robert, Guardian of Scotland, when granted a benefice in St. Andrews Diocese; he was then described as Licentiate of Arts. In 1390 he had a grant of safe conduct through England to go on a pilgrimage to Amiens and was in the service of the Earl of Moray at that time. In 1393/4 he was notary for the instrument confirming Sir John Swinton in his lands; he may then have been in the service of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Philip in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of 'resetting, supplying and intercommuning' with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Andrew (15th C.) joint tenant of an acre near Linlithgow in 1484 and again in 1495. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) recorded in 'north schelis' (probably North Shiels) in the 1498 Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was fined for the non-appearance of his brother Thomas. Later Thomas was allowed to 'compone' for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in 'brachio' (probably somewhere in Peeblesshire). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) Bailie of Inverkeithing, recorded in 1541. He was probably related to earlier Scotts in Inverkeithing. He is probably the Burgess of Inverkeithing whose 'sometime spouse' Elizabeth

Brown had her will registered in Edinburgh in 1577. He is probably also the deceased Burgess of Inverkeithing whose daughter Isobel's will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1587. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as Vicar of Cavers in 1545 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk relating to the Scotts of Palace. Perhaps the same 'sir Andrew' is recorded in 1544 when his son John witnessed a transaction for the Scotts of Blindhaugh. Andrew (16th C.) cordiner who was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1574. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. George, eldest living son of cordiner Andrew, who was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1714, may have been a descendant. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) recorded as indweller in Selkirk in 1579. In 1580 he was 'alias Dande' in Selkirk when warned to appear in Melrose Kirk and also in a case involving William in Whitehaugh. Additionally in 1580 he received redemption money in Selkirk from Robert Gotterson, was 'Dandie' when he was a witness, was 'Dandre' when he received redemption money and was 'Dandrie' when he received an annual rent of lands in Lessuden. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1580/1. In 1581 he received money owed him by the heir of John Brydon of Well in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood and received redemption money for lands that once pertained to John Scott. Andrew of North Bowhill (16th C.) witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk in 1580, between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. He also acted as a judge to decide about a dispute in Selkirk in 1580. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. In 1581 he and his tenants were represented by Robert of Aikwood in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Bowhill. Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle (16th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Balwearie and Isabel Lindsay. He received some lands in Perthshire from his father, but these returned to the Balwearie estate on his death. Meanwhile he acquired the lands of Kirkstyle in Kinfauns Parish, Perthshire. He may be the Andrew 'in Uver Kynfawnis' who acted as attorney for a land transaction in Dundee in 1549. He married Euphame, daughter of Thomas Blair of Balthycock and was succeeded by his son Alexander of Kirkstyle. Adam in the Kirkstyle of Kinfauns may have been his descendant. Andrew (16th C.) merchant of Edinburgh. In 1587 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his wife 'Bessie, alias Elizabeth', daughter to the deceased Thomas Scott, tailor and Burgess. Probably the same merchant Andrew became a Guild Brother in 1598. Either he or a different Andrew is recorded as an Edinburgh merchant in 1599 when the will of his wife Christiane Maxwell is registered. He may be the deceased merchant Andrew whose only son James became a Burgess and Guild Brother in Edinburgh in 1625. Andrew (16th C.) brother of Philip of Dryhope and perhaps son of John. In 1592 he was a signatory to a caution by John Hay of Smithfield for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of his brother Philip of Dryhope. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (d.c.1597) tenant in 'Balmayne' (i.e. Balmain), Largo Parish, Fife. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1597. He is probably the Andrew 'in Bamerne' whose wife Janet Alison's will is registered in 1600. He was surely related to Thomas in Balmain, whose will was recorded in 1594/5. Andrew (d.c.1597) tenant in Newhall of 'Garnesalloche', Dumfriesshire. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1597. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tailor in Edinburgh. He was apprentice to tailor John 'Cowpar', who was deceased in 1593 when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh. He is probably the tailor who was deceased in 1626 when his eldest son became a merchant Burgess in Edinburgh. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'chirurgeon, burgess of Hawick' in 1598 when he witnessed a contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He may be the earliest known doctor in Hawick. Probably the same surgeon Andrew was listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owned for his 'pensioun the said year, foure bolles heipit oatt meill, at ellevine punds the boll, inde fourtie foure pundes' [SB1633]. Andrew (16th/17th C.) surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh, he was brother of Walter in Catslack. In 1620 he complained about Walter Stewart of Kirkland, who remained at large despite not paying him and another Edinburgh Burgess. Also in 1620 he represented William 'of Slak' (i.e. Catslack) in complaints to the Privy Council, both by him and against him. In another of the cases in 1620 he was referred to as brother of Walter in Catslacknow. His daughters Janet and Bessie were served as his heirs in 1643. He was probably the Andrew, apprentice to Henry Lumsden, who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1592/3 and Guild Brother in 1608. He may also be the surgeon Andrew who was deceased in 1636 when his apprentice John Scott became a Burgess. Andrew of Todshawhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being 'of Totchahill'. He was said to be among the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Roberton (although from which one is unknown). Assuming he existed, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts from this area. Andrew of Salenside (16th/17th C.) said to have been one of the Scotts of Ale Water who was part of the 1596 raid to rescue Kinmont Willie. He may have been a younger brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade (as suggested by Scott of Rodono) or a brother of Walter 'the Hawk' of Whitslade and uncle to Sir Walter (as suggested by Keith Scott). He may be the Laird of Salenside who was recorded as present at the Parliament of 1592. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Salenside in 1609. He is recorded in 1613 when his son Walter became a brewer's apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to Robert of Salenside, who was summoned before the Presbytery for murder in 1614. Thomas, who inherited Whitehaughbrae in 1621, was probably his son. He was recorded as father-in-law to William of Catslack in 1621 when the pair complained about Alexander Stewart of Phaup resuming attacks on William after being released from imprisonment and then injuring him (Andrew) in the head. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Scabcleuch. In 1604 he was witness to an instrument of sasine for a charter of Simon Scott of Bonnington for lands in the upper Ettrick. He may have been related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Midgehope, etc. Andrew 'Braid's Andrew' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'callit Braidis Andro', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His brother Willie is also on the same list. He was 'called the Braid's Andro' in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was 'called the Braid's Andro' listed among men of Ewesdale who both Lord Maxwell and Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others 'to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]'. He is also recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He is there recorded asi 'Andro Scot in Raburn, called the Braid's Andro.' In 1615 his son 'Wattie' (also referred to confusingly as 'Braidis Wattie') was involved in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley and executed for sheep stealing at Eilrig in 1616. It is unclear whether 'Braid' refers to a name or a location (possibly 'Broadlee' or 'Braidhaugh'). He was probably also the Andrew 'the Breadie', son of John 'the Tinckler' (who was tenant at Harwood) among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. Andrew of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1616. He was also served as heir to his father's lands of Belses, the south side of Bowhill and half the lands of Kershope Forest. In 1618 he was recorded as son and heir of Robert of Aikwood, when along with his curators there was a complaint against George Turnbull in Belses and Andrew Turnbull that they had still not paid the profits of 'Hathornerig' in Belses for 1616 and 1617. These curators were Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw, Andrew (surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh), Philip of Dryhope and Robert of 'Drywodmylnes'; it seems likely that most of them were closely related to him. He is mentioned in 1627 in an action that was brought against him and Robert of Hartwoodmyres. In 1634 he was 'olim [formerly] de Aikwode' when he deponed Kershope to Sir William Scott of Harden. He is probably the 'Andrew Scot of Carschope' who carried the arms of Kerr of Ferniehirst in the funeral procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. In 1619 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Kerr of Chatto. He was succeeded by Philip, last of Aikwood, who was probably his brother. R.C. Reid suggests that he died in 1680 and was succeeded by his brother James. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of William 'callit of Bowehill'. In about 1618 the pair were listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'chirurgeon, burgess of Edinburgh' in 1624 when he had a charter of the lands of Bonnington from James VI. He must have been a close relative of John and John's brother Simon, who had previously held the lands. It is also possible that he was the same man (or closely related to) the Andrew who was a surgeon in Hawick at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who was an apprentice to Henry Lumsden in 1592/3 in Edinburgh and Guild-brother in 1608. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Heap, recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James 'in Holcaldrumhill' is listed after him, and may have been related. Andrew of Foulshiels (d.bef. 1647) son of James. He is recorded as owner of the lands of 'Fadinside' in Lindean Parish in 1643. In 1643 he married Janet, who was an illegitimate daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his brother Walter. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Hermiston. He is 'Andro Scott, portioner of Hermiston' when he signed the 1638 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. He was recorded as a portioner in the 1643 county valuation, with lands in Hermiston valued at £130. Probably the same 'Andrew Scott of Hermistowne' was listed among landowners of Lilliesleaf in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Broadmeadows and Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw with his first wife. In 1624 he was son of William in 'Faldishop' (probably Fauldshope near Aikwood) when he had a sasine for Broadmeadows from the Murrays of Philiphaugh and in 1627 he was son of William in 'Falishope' when he made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He held Broadmeadows in 1628 according to a roll of properties and had a further instrument of resignation for Broadmeadows from the Murrays in 1633. In 1634 he was in the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch at Hawick; he carried the Earl's sword. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1644. In 1648 he wadset Broadmeadows to his father William of Tushielaw and his half-brother William, reserving the liferent for himself. He probably succeeded to Tushielaw on the death of his father in about 1665. In 1667 he sold Broadmeadows to his half-brother William. In 1651 his eldest son William is listed as 'our servitor' in the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch; he probably succeeded to Tushielaw. In 1643 his son Walter became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. Andrew of Weens (17th C.) recorded as 'of Wayns' when he was witness to a marriage contract of Robert Eliott and Margaret Riddell in 1652, signed at Appotside. His son Walter was also a witness. He witnessed futher sasines in Rulewater in 1653 and 1654. He was recorded in about 1663 on the Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £200 for Weens. He is probably the Andrew 'in the Wemyss' whose son Walter became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1653. John of Weens, who paid the land tax in 1678, was probably his descendant. Andrew of Bowhill (d.c.1668) eldest son of Robert. He appears as witness to several documents in the 1660s and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. Also in 1663 he is recorded in several deeds. His younger brother James eventually succeeded to Bowhill, and may in fact have bought the estate during his and his father's lifetime. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their unnamed child was baptised in 1679. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as 'broyr-germon to William Scott of Clarrielaw' in 1689. He was listed in a group including James Scott of Brieryyyards, Francis Scott in Branxholme, ex-Bailie James Gledstains and Sheriff-Officer Andrew Angus, when weaver Thomas Turnbull insulted the 2 sitting Bailies and was fined and put in the stocks. He was probably a younger son of Robert of Burnhead and Clarilaw. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates. He was found guilty of 'coming to Baylyea Purdholme's houss, under cloud of night, and abussing not only the houss, but the compamny' as well as assaulting John Aitken 'by rugging of his hair and ryveing of his gravatt'. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to John, who is also listed. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John and James were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. He may be the Adam who married Bessie Robson and whose son Adam was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1690, with witnesses John Scott and Henry Mitchellhill. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Ashkirk in 1691. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Davintoune' (i.e. Davington). The will of his wife Jean Scott is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1687. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Davington. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as son of deceased Andrew 'in Tushillaw' when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Harwood in 1699. Andrew (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was recorded at the 'milneport of Hawick' in 1708. He was an elder in Hawick Session in 1718. His children included: William (b.1700); Robert (b.1704); and Andrew (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Alexander, 'officer' and Robert, flesher (who may have been related), in 1704 were Alexander Young 'officer' and John Tudhope 'flesher' and in 1708 were 'undermillers' James Paterson and Walter Riddell. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'customer' in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for wright Robert Scott. He was also 'customer' in 1714 when (along with 'officer' Alexander Young) he witnessed a baptism for John Rae. It is unclear if this meant he was a customs official or an itinerant worker perhaps. It is possible he is the same man as the wright. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Ann Lamb in Ashkirk in 1702. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker Adam Kersel. In 1717 he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Turnbull. Their children included: Janet (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Andrew (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). The 1721, 1726 and 1728 baptisms were witnessed by mason John Turnbull and also Andrew Turnbull; they may have been from his wife's family. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Wright and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1721. Andrew (18th C.) son of Walter, he was a shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He may be difficult to distinguish from other contemporary shoemakers of the same name. In 1722 he married Marion Maben, the wedding being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. They had a daughter Jean baptised in Hawick in 1722, with witnesses Rev. William Crawford (of Wilton) and Robert Wilson (perhaps the Wilton Schoolmaster). Andrew 'Black Andrew' (d.1778) Cornet in 1724. He had a son, 'D. Scott of Ettrickbank'. He also had a daughter who married William 'Phillips' (probaby Mary who married William Philip). His death in Hawick is recorded in 1778. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Helen Hardie, their marriage probably being the one with 'Agnes' Hardie in Hawick in 1730. Their children included: Isabel (b.1737); and James (b.1738). Shoemaker John was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Isobel, and so was probably related. Additionally, the witnesses in 1738 were 'John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers'. It is unclear how he might have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick Parish. He may be the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1741. He married Agnes Hardie and their children included: Agnes (b.1739); Janet (b.1743); and Helen (b.1744). The witnesses in 1743 were shoemaker William Scott and merchant John Cavers. He seems to be distinct from the shoemaker of the same name who married Helen Hardie (unless that was an earlier marriage of the same man). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Agnes Noble, who was from Wilton. Their children included John (b.1763). Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Allan in 1756. They had a son William baptised in 1764. Andrew (18th C.) described as 'Pigman' in Hawick Parish. His wife was Ann 'Doeg' and their children included Frederick (b.1758). The witnesses were wright Francis Paisley and barber Francis Miles. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1770s. He is probably the Andrew who was a merchant at 7 High Street (although it is possible there were 2 merchants of the same name around the same time). He may be the merchant Andrew from whom ribbon was purchased for the Burgh Officers in 1756. He was probably the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1757, 1759 and 1765 for merchant William Veitch and his wife Christian Scott (who may have been his sister or other relative). He is probably the merchant of Hawick who is recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1760 and 1765 (and perhaps others in 1768). In 1763 he was likely the Andrew, merchant, who was one of the men appointed to collect money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary's. He was probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull junior in 1764 (along with Thomas Turnbull Senior), the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter (probably his son or brother) in 1766, 1768 and 1771, and the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms for William Philip and Mary Scott (perhaps a relative) in 1772 and 1777. He may be the Andrew who in 1771 and 1772 witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter Henderson and Agnes Scott (perhaps a relative). He was 'present Baillie' in 1775 when he witnessed a baptism for stocking-weaver James Haldane. He was probably the 'Bailie A.' who was on the list of subscribers for the Slitrig Brig in 1777. In 1778 he received interest on the bond for £250 he had with the magistrates and council of Selkirk. He may be the Bailie of this name who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Tom Weens in 1793 and baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. However, he could be the Andrew who 'died in the Kirk' in 1798. He married Alice (or Alison) Wilson; she died in Hawick in 1815 (with her forename written 'Ails'). Their children included: John (b.1756); Andrew (b.1758); Christian (b.1759); Andrew (again, b.1762); and Archibald (b.1767). Walter (b.1744) may also have been his son. The witnesses in 1758 and 1762 were merchant William Veitch and shoemaker John Oliver. It may have been a descendant of his who was the 'A. Scott' at about 7 High Street on Wood's 1824 map. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1777. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He could be the Andrew (b.1726), son of shoemaker Andrew; but is it unclear how he might have been related to the shoemaker of the same name recorded in the 1730s. He is probably the shoemaker Andrew who witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter (along with Bailie Robert) in 1761, for shoemaker Thomas Weens (along with fellow shoemaker William) in 1765, and for tailor William Lamb in 1766. He was recorded as 'present Bailie' in 1772 and 'late Baillie' in 1778. He may be the ex-Bailie Andrew who (along with shoemaker Henry) witnessed baptisms in 1776, 1778 and 1791 for merchant William and for the same William (along with shoemaker Robert) in 1786. He married Beatrix Turnbull and their children included: Robert (b.1762); Ann (b.1765); Thomas (b.1767); Ann (again, b.1770); Esther (b.1772); Martha (b.1775); Sarah (b.1778). The witnesses in 1765 were 'Bailie Turnbull Senr' and Bailie Robert Scott (who may have been related), in 1772 were Bailie William Elliot and Bailie Turnbull of Fenwick and in 1778 were writer James Winthrope and Robert Telfer. His daughters Esther and Sarah were independently wealthy sisters living at about 7 High Street in 1841 and 1851; this suggests he was related to the earlier marchant Andrew who lived at that address. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Allan and their children included William (b.1764). Perhaps the same Andrew, married to Margaret 'Atkin' had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1768. Andrew (d.bef. 1816) weaver in Hawick. In 1787 he married Eliza (or Elizabeth or 'Lizzy') Irvine, also from Hawick; she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1787); and Andrew (b.1789). The witnesses were 'The Associate Congregation'. Andrew (18th C.) married Christian Scott in Roberton in 1786. Andrew (18th C.) married Nelly Scott in Roberton in 1787. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1794 he and Robert (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck as a stockingmaker. It is possible he is the same man as the merchant Bailie Andrew and may have been related to the earlier shoemaker Andrew. Andrew (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1700s. He took over from Walter Scott in about 1787, and may have taught a young John Leyden in the late 1780s. He remained at Kirkton until at least 1795, but became Schoolmaster at Cavers by 1798. He is further recorded as Schoolmaster at Cavers in 1799 when one of his children was baptised. He was probably the Schoolmaster in Denholm who in 1805 was among the 5 men who met to start a scubscription library there, and who was selected as the first Librarian. In 1805 he was the only Elder of Cavers Kirk who was actually living in the Parish, when he complained about the baptism of a certain child in the Parish. Children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include: James (b.1799); Charles (b.1801); Andrew (b.1803); and John (b.1805). Andrew (1757–1839) poet from Bowden, son of John and Rachel Briggs. He was largely uneducated, working as a cowherd and in other farming jobs. He then enlisted in the 80th Regiment and was sent to serve in the American War of Independence. After Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown, he became a prisoner of war on Long Island. Apparently the book of verse he wrote while there was lost. After the peace treaty was signed he was released and returned to Britain in 1784, settling back in Bowden. He focussed on supporting his wife and children, but eventually published his first slim volume of verse in 1805, expanded in 1808. His 'Poems Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect' (1811) and other publications were very influential in their day; many local people subscribed to his 1811 book. His popular poems included 'Swingling o' the Lint', 'Rural Content, or the Muirland Farmer' and 'Symon and Janet' (about the False Alarm). George Watson of Edinburgh painted his portrait. Said to be a man of simple tastes and habits, he died in Bowden and is buried there. Andrew (18th/19th C.) assessor and taxgatherer who lived in Denholm. He possessed the sword that had been used by Sir Gilbert Eliott to kill Col. Stewart in 1726, geting it from a relative of Sir Gilbert's servant. he passed it on to his friend George Forrest, gunmaker in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of

Denholm. He was an apprentice with Thomas Colledge, who was probably the first manufacturer in the village. He supplied the Glasgow market, and is said to have done well. It is claimed that the demand was so high that his customers would meet him 20 miles from Glasgow to bid against each other. He is probably the 'Str L W Manf.' recorded at about Eastgate on the 1841 census, along with James (probably his brother) and several other Scotts. It is possible he was the Andrew (corrected from 'Alexander' in the list), stockingmaker of Denholm, who was on the 1797 list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia, in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish' and in 1801 was still listed as a stockingmaker in Denholm; Robert was listed just before him as a stockingmaker in Denholm in 1801 and may have been related. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1796 he married Isobel Turnbull, who was from Roberton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandyhaugh in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Isabel Laidlaw and had children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish): William (b.1761); Alexander John (b.1765); and Charles (b.1767). Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Doorpool in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Perhaps the same Andrew was a servant at Westshiels on the 1801 Militia ballot in Southdean Parish. Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at Nether Tofts according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Perhaps the same Andrew, married to Isobel Turnbull, and had a son George (b.1801) baptised in Kirkton, when he was living at Henlawshiel. Andrew (b.c.1780) servant to William Bell at Menslaws according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was probably related to George, who was also there in 1801. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Shiel and their children included James (b.1814) and Agnes (b.1816). It is possible he is the same man as the Schoolmaster. Andrew (1786/7–1868) boot and shoemaker in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at about 45 South Hermitage Street in 1851 and 1861. He could be the Andrew from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Helen Mitchell, who died in 1852, aged 69. Their children included: Charles, who was also a shoemaker; Matthew (1810/1–42); and 2 who died in infancy. Andrew (1789–1846) spinner of Hawick, who was Precentor in the Relief Kirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded at about 30 Loan in 1841, living with wife Isabel and children Isabel, Andrew, Helen, Archibald, Jane, Agnes and John. Andrew 'Andrew the King' (1791–1873) son of William, landlord of the King's Head (hence the nickname). He was trained as a weaver, but known as a harmless simple-minded fellow, who was out of work for most of his life. He lived with his sister 'Nelly the King', and a drawing of him is in the Museum. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Mary Shiel in Cavers Parish in 1813. Andrew (18th/19th C.) son of D. of Ettrickbank and grandson of 'Black Andrew'. His property around where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were built is marked on Wood's 1824 map. It is said that he had no offspring. He may be the Andrew of Ettrickbank who married Jane Jarvis MacLaine (1829–82) in Edinburgh in 1836; this was the farm, also known as Ovens Close, which Sir Walter Scott was said to once be interested in purchasing. His family also owned Sunnyside farm near Hawick. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Andrew (b.1801/2) road labourer who lived at Berryfell Plain. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included: Agnes; Andrew; Thomas; Adam; Robert C.; and Walter, who may have hung himself in a stable at Dryhope in 1859. He was still at Berryfell Plain in 1868. Andrew (1800–70) 3rd son of William, Schoolmaster at Burnmouth in Castleton, he was born there in upper Liddesdale. His mother was Isabella Veitch, from Bedrule, who was a cousin of William Veitch, author of 'Greek Verbs'. He was a great runner, swimmer and wrestler in his youth. He was educated at Newcastleton School, then in Edinburgh, also working as an assistant teacher. About the age of 19 he taught at a school in Castleton; one story is told of how he paid the blacksmith a penny to allow him to try to break off the tip of his anvil with a hammer, which he succeeded on doing at the third attempt. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh in 1829. He became a teacher at Tain, then a tutor in Lanarkshire, and then was an instructor on ships around the Mediterranean. He was classics master at Dollar from about 1835. In 1841 he moved to Brockville, near Montreal in Canada, but returned to Scotland in 1844, becoming master at Pultneytown, Wick. He was appointed Professor of Hebrew at King's College,

Aberdeen in 1846, becoming Professor of Oriental Languages at the (united) University of Aberdeen from 1860. He died unmarried. He is reputed to have fallen in love with a pupil at Dollar, Miss Todd, and was engaged to be married to her, but she died before the wedding could take place. He was said to be a proud and independent Borderer, with conservative views, and quick to argue, although with a strong sense of himour. He travelled widely, and was also a great collector and reader of books (many of which were bought by Cambridge University Library). He wrote a Latin inscription for the memorial stone of his friend and colleague Prof. William Tennant. Andrew (19th C.) married Margaret Park in Hawick in 1838. Andrew (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a farm labourer who lived at Hawick Shiel. He was recorded there 1841–61. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and their children included Mary, Sarah and David. In 1857 he gave to the Museum a 'flint spearhead, one of several found some years ago near the Giant's Grave, Hawick Moor'. Andrew (b.1807/8) shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. He was living at Wolfcleuchhead in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was an agricultural labourer at Branxholme Town. He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Ballantyne (from Ashkirk) and their children included: Andrew (b.1831); George (b.1832); William (b.1836/7); Elizabeth (b.1838/9); Isobel (b.1841); Robert (b.1843/4); and James (b.1844/5). The first 2 children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (b.1810/1) born in Minto Parish, he was a gardener at Teviot Lodge. He is recorded there in 1851, with his wife Margaret and son William. Andrew (b.c.1810) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, James and Gilbert. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. Andrew (b.1814/5) from England, he was a road surveyor in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Mill Bank, and described as a 'Civil Engineer; Road & Land Surveyor'. He married Marianne Luckhurst and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1841/2); Andrew William (b.1843); Georgina (b.1845); Caroline Luckhurst (b.1847); and Arthur (b.1849). Dr. Andrew James (1817–84) eldest son by the 2nd marriage of William of Teviot Bank. In 1854 he married Emma, daughter of Gen. Frederick Blundell. His eldest son was Col. William Augustus. Andrew (b.1821) born in Roberton Parish, son of Walter and Mary Young. He was a joiner at Stobs Woodfoot. In 1851 he was living at 'Birkwoodfoot' and at Stobs Woodfoot in 1861. He married Isabella Grieve and their children included: Walter (b.1844); John (b.1846); Elizabeth (b.1848); Andrew (b.1851); Robert (b.1853); and Thomas (b.1857/8). John and Thomas, who were joiners at Stobs Woodfoot in about 1900, were probably his sons. Andrew (1825/6–99) son of Charles and nephew of Adam. He was a tailor who lived at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish and was an elder of the Kirk there. He was listed at Forkins in the 1861 census, living with his mother Jane. Andrew (b.1825/6) son of Walter, who was a labourer living at Ormiston. He was farm steward at Barnes in 1861. He married Jane Paterson and their children included Isabella, Christina and Walter. Andrew (1830–c.85) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Singdean, with his mother being Elspeth Telfer. From his father he learned the secret of a herbal plaster, which was supposed to cure cancer. He became shepherd at Twislehope near Newcastleton. In 1867 his plasters are said to have removed a huge tumour on the wife of a Galashiels tradesman. His children included: Elspeth, who married William Mather and was post-mistress at Langhaughwalls in Rulewater; Adam, who was a shepherd at Toftholm in Liddesdale and succeeded to the secret prescription; Walter, who was shepherd at Swinelaws in Oxnam and later gamekeeper at Westerkirk and also said to possess the family recipe; and Ann (1874/5–1951), who married a Mr. Paterson and died in Roberton in the home of her nephew. He died suddenly at Carlisle Station, being on his way to Silloth for his health. His widow lived at Newcastleton Townhead. Andrew (19th C.) manufacturer in Saugus, Massachusetts. He was probably owner of the iron works there. In 1867 he donated to the Museum 'specimen of beautiful crystalline quartz and mica from the White Mountains, U.S.' and a 'piece from the rock on which the Pilgrim Fathers landed', while his wife donated several American coins and a 'North American Indian stone adze, dug up at Saugus'. He presumably had a local connection. Andrew (b.1839/40) son of grocer Walter. He was an actuary with Hawick Savings Bank and later acted as Burgh Assessor. In 1875, when accountant and actuary for the National Savings Bank, he was charged with breach of trust, embezzlement, theft and forgery. Anna (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1670, she and her sister Bessie were served heirs portioner to their father in the

Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinstead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Anna Helena (d.c.1696) daughter of Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn and brother of Walter of St. Leonards. Her father was also known as Walter 'of Harlaw' and 'de Quhythaugh'. She married Sir William Adair of Kinhilt (d.1661) and then Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall (d.1689), cousin of her 1st husband. In 1694 she was served heir to her father's lands of Hartwoodburn, which appear to have been held by her brother Walter (although the wording seems ambiguous). Her children included: Sir Robert Adair (b.1659), who was served as her heir in 1696; and Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath. Anne (1651–1731) also known as 'Anna', youngest daughter of Francis the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch. She was born at Dundee, where her mother sought refuge after the departure of Cromwell from Scotland. Her 'tutors' were the same as those of her sister Mary, with the 3 Border tutors (Sir Gideon of Highchester, Sir William of Harden and Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs) continuing their disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors. Like her sister, there were struggles over her control, and in particular over who she should marry (e.g. attempts to arrange her marriage to the son of the Earl of Tweeddale). Eventually wardenship and marriage were assigned to her uncle, the Earl of Rothes. She became Countess on the death of her sister Mary in 1661, formally being served heir to her father. She became Duchess on marrying James Crofts, Duke of Monmouth, in 1663 at the extremely young age of 12; her husband was an illegitimate son of Charles II, who changed his name to Scott. This was arranged with the encouragement of her mother Lady Wemyss and her tutor Sir Gideon of Highchester. The lengthy marriage contract of 1663 describes in great detail the possessions of the family at that time. In 1663 her possessions in Hawick Parish were valued at over £5800 and those in Hassendean at £1561. She was referred to as 'Annam Buckcleuchiae Comitissam' in the patent where her husband was created Duke. In 1666 the couple resigned their honours and estates and obtained a new grant of the titles for the Duke, together with the titles of Duchess of Buccleuch, Countess of Dalkeith and Countess of Buccleuch for her; this gave her the rights and titles independent of her husband. However, there were still disputes over the legality of her marriage contract and whether it conflicted with her father's entail. She resided for several years at the court in London, where she was described as 'one of the wisest and craftiest of her sex, and has much wit'. She was mentioned there in the diary of Samuel Pepys and was said to have become lame through a dancing accident in 1668. She was also said to have been plain of features, although with a charming manner. She spent some time in France. In 1675 she and her husband were given a charter for the lands and Barony of Hawick. She appears to have remained uninvolved in her husband's schemings to capture the Crown; her actions around this time are portrayed through the character of Marmoutiére in the play the 'Duke of Guise'. It is said that she helped save her husband after being implicated in the Rye House Plot of 1683. He then went to Holland, returning in an ill-fated expedition following the death of Charles II. After the execution of her husband in 1685, she obtained a new grant of her Buccleuch titles in 1687 (although the English titles were forfeited), in order to ensure that they passed to her children. And in 1693 an Act of Parliament ratified that the estates would pass to her eldest son James, Earl of Dalkeith. The lands and Barony of Hawick had fallen to the Crown after the death of Monmouth, but in 1686 a new charter erected Hawick into a free barony and regality, given to her (and with Walter Scott of Alton as the Bailie of Regality). She signed her letters 'A.B.C.' (for 'Anna of Buccleuch, Countess'). In about 1698 it was suggested that she might resign her lands and titles in favour of her eldest son (as the Duchess of Hamilton had done), but she decided 'to keep all the rights I injoy from God and my foirfathers. I was my sisters aire, and I bliss God I have children which I trust in his mercy will be mine when I am dead. The Duchess of Hamilton is but a woman, and wee are not such wis creatures as men, so I will follow no exampull of that sort till I see all the nobill men in Scotland resin to their sons; then I will consider of this busines'. She returned to Scotland in 1701, residing at Dalkeith House. She visited Hawick (perhaps for the first time) in April of 1702, when she signed the Sederunt Book for her local lands. She extended and improved the family's Scottish lands, including major renovations to Drumlanrig Tower. She is also recorded as paying for 'causay layers' to pave the Hawick streets. She also held the patronage of St. Mary's kirk. In a land valuation of 1710 she was by far the largest landowner in Hawick Parish, her lands being valued at more than £7000. She can be considered the last of the true Scotts of Buccleuch rather than of Great Britain. She acted throughout her life as a widow of a royal prince, and was said to be the last person in Scotland to keep young pages as attendants. Her last will of 1722/3 names her grandson Francis as her successor. In 1688 she remarried, to Charles, 3rd Baron Cornwallis of Eye (as his 2nd wife), and he died in 1698. She was predeceased by all of her children. Those with her first husband were: Charles (1672–74), Earl of Doncaster, who died young; Sir James (1674–1705), Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded; Lady Anne (1675–85), who died in the Tower of London; Henry, Earl of Deloraine (1676–1730); Lord Francis (1678–79), who also died young; and Lady Charlotte (b.1683), who died in infancy. They were buried in Monmouth's vault in Westminster Abbey. By her 2nd husband she additionally had (also with the surname Scott): Anne (b.1690), who died in infancy; George (b.1692), also died in infancy; and Isobella (1694–1748), died unmarried. She was eventually succeeded by her grandson Francis, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith – 'In England now the Dutches dwells, Which to her friends is a cursed fate, For if they famish, starve, or die, They cannot have a groat from that estate' [CWS], 'For she had known adversity, Though born in such a high degree; In pride of power, in beauty's bloom, Had wept o'er Monmouth's bloody tomb' [SWS]. Anne (19th C.) listed as a midwife in 1838 when the death of a child of hers is recorded in Hawick. She was spouse of the deceased James Scott (but there is no other identification). Anse of the Bush (16th C.) recorded as 'Anse of the Busse' under the heading 'Scotts of Ewesdale' in Monipennie's c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. The other listed is 'Thome of the Flower'. His name may be 'Ante' rather than 'Anse' (and it is also possible this was just a transcription error for 'Arche'). 'Watt of the Bus', recorded in 1642, could be his son. Archibald (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Possibly the same Archibald was among the witnesses for a document relating to Whitchesters in 1484/5. He may be the Archibald, son of Sir David of Branxholme, who leased the lands of Eldinhope in 1485, with the consent of his father. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His son William is also listed. Archibald (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as 'Arche Scott of the Buss'. He was listed along with John 'the Braid' and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom 'callit the Stowir' was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Creelman' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His name appears as 'Archie Scott, callit Creillmanis', which seems likely to be 'Creelman' (like George Turnbull about the same time). Archibald of Deephope (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness in 1581 to a sasine for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. He may be the man transcribed being 'of Dryhoip' in 1599 when charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He is recorded being 'of Deiphoip' in 1608 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for 2 of his sons and Walter of Whitslade not to harm him or his family. His sons Walter, Adam, Thomas, James, John, William and Archibald are all mentioned. Also in the same year other kin and associates of Scott of Thirlestane were bound over not to harm him. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'in Glenrachane' (i.e. Glenrauchan) in 1606, among men declared as fugitives. He was surely related to Hob there, who was also listed as a fugitive in 1605. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'in Northous' (i.e. Northhouse) in a summons against him in 1619. This was included in a letter from Gilbert Watt to the Earl of Buccleuch. He was probably related to the 'Will' of Northhouse recorded in 1608. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being 'of ffalnesh' in 1638 when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to other Scotts of Falnash. It is possible that this is an error for Archibald Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) described as 'vestiarius' (tailor or cloth merchant) in Hawick in 1648. He was served as tutor to his grandson John Scott, as the closest relative of John's deceased father Robert, who was a clothier in Edinburgh. He was presumably quite old in 1648, but could possibly be the Archibald, married to Janet Paisley, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1652 (or married to Margaret Thin, with son John baptised in 1652, or married to Helen Falside, with son Archibald baptised in 1654). Archibald of Synton (17th C.) recorded as 'rootmaster' for Selkirkshire in 1649. He is probably the same as Capt. Archibald of the Roxburgh and Selkirk Fencibles; he was not in fact Laird of Synton, but was son of Walter (13th Laird) and younger brother of George (last of Synton). He died unmarried. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as liferenter in Stouslie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when he paid tax on £91. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but it is possible he was connected with the Scotts of Boonraw, Stirches and Synton. Archibald (d.1720) 2nd Laird of Boonraw, son of George and grandson of George of Synton. He is said to have been 14th in descent from Buccleuch. He may have been Laird in 1694 when tax was paid for 3 hearths at Boonraw. In 1700 he renounced his right to the arms of the Scotts of Boonraw, in favour of Sir William Scott of Harden, thereby giving up any claim to represent the ancient family of the Scotts of Sinton. In 1701 he is recorded being rebuked at Roberton Kirk for a 'mock' marriage with Esther Turnbull on the Sabbath, held at Todshawhaugh. It was suggested in 1714 that he was ready to sell his lands, which would make an ideal way of investing the 'Orrock Bequest', which had been left to Hawick Parish; however, the appeal to the Duchess of Buccleuch was unsuccessful and the estate, instead of becoming owned by Hawick, eventually became part of Buccleuch's properties. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick for glover John (who may have been related) in 1718 and for weaver Thomas Tinlin and for James (perhaps also related) in Hawick in 1720. Although sid to have died in 1720, he is recorded as witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1722 for Town Clerk Walter Gledstains. He is said to have died at an advanced age, unmarried (putting aside the mock marriage in 1701), and it is also said that this ended the direct line of Scotts of Synton and Boonraw. However, there is also a suggestion that he had a brother, Richard, who was ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent. Archibald (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Hardie in Hawick Parish in 1701. Archibald (17th/18th C.) married Margaret McVittie in Bedrule Parish in 1713. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Archibald (b.1704) and George (b.1706). Archibald (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1712, along with fellow tailor George, he witnessed a baptism for Robert 'Wyndhead'. He married Margaret McVittie and their children included John (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were feloow tailors George Scott (who was probably a relative) and James Turnbull. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hislop, as recorded in 1709, 1711 and 1719. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for a child of John Scott, deceased tenant in Falnash. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Murray in Hislop. He married Margaret Borthwick and their children included Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were John in Falnash and William Aitchison and in 1711 were William Aitchison, his servant and John Ballantyne, tenant in Rashiegrain. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as 'Wyndhead' when his son John was born in 1714. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of the Wyndhead. He is probably the same Archibald whose other children baptised in Hawick were Margaret (b.1709) and Bessie (b.1711). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnhead in 1726, 1729 and 1736. He married Jean Scott in 1719 and their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Isabel (b.1720); Walter (b.1723); Archibald (b.1729); William (b.1733); and Agnes (b.1736). The witnesses in 1726 were Thomas Dodds and John Miller, in 1729 were John and James ... (perhaps Dryden) and in 1736 were Thomas Dodds and Adam Armstrong. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1718 he was living at Howpasley. His children included: Helen (b.1715); and Marion (b.1718). He may be the Archibald who married Esther Turnbull in Roberton in 1701. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Doveshaugh in Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1721), Helen (b.1729) and James (b.1731), baptised in Bedrule. Other children, baptised in Bedrule, who are probably his include Janet (b.1724), William (b.1726) and George (b.1737). He is probably the Archibald who married Janet Oliver in Bedrule in 1718. Archibald (18th C.) married Margaret Smith in 1730, the marriage recorded in both Bedrule and Hobkirk Parishes. Archibald (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for gardener James Aitkin in 1757 and 1762. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish.

He was living at Woodburn in 1761. He married Isobel Thomson in 1750. His children included Jean (b.1751), Mary (b.1754) and Walter (b.1756) and John (b.1761). He could be the deceased Archibald whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1815. Archibald (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1780 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Janet (b.1778), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably also his child. He was probably related to the other Scotts who lived at Skelfhill. It is possible he is the Archibald who married Helen Grieve in Hawick in 1774; she was probably 'Nelly', sister of Isobel Grieve, whose sons exchanged a letter in 1824 saying that 'Arch Scott your Aunt Nelly and Thomas their son are all dead'; he is probably also the Archibald 'morehouse' (prsumably the farm where he lived) whose death was recorded in an earlier letter of 1819. Archibald (18th C.) married Betty Lunn in Cavers Parish in 1788. Archibald (b.c.1770) farmer at Easter Langbaulk. He is listed there in 1841 and 1851, and was unmarried. He may have been brother of John, who also farmed there. Archibald (1772/3–1858) joiner in Newcastleton, son of George. He was a wright in Newcastleton on the ballot lists for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. His brother Thomas was also listed as a wright in Newcastleton in 1801. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is listed as a wright in Newcastleton in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 31 North Hermitage Street, with his wife Helen and in 1851 was a master carpenter at he same place, living with his 'house servant' Jane Turnbull, who he married in 1852; she died in 1894, aged 78. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (b.c.1770s) servant at Skelfhill, recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Gideon was also a servant on the same list and so perhaps related. He may also have been related to the Archibald recorded at Skelfhill in 1780. Archibald (b.c.1780) apprentice at Hassendeanburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. He was probably an apprentice gardener. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Telfer and their children included: Agnes (b.1802); Janet (b.1804); Anne (b.1806); Archibald (b.1810); and Adam (b.1816). Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded as Session Clerk in Castleton in 1832. He could be the same as the joiner in Newcastleton. Archibald 'Auld Commonside' of Howcleuch (1779–1874) 2nd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was recorded as a farmer at Commonside in the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and he later served in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry. He succeeded to Howcleuch (his elder brother Walter succeeding to Wauchope), but lived and farmed at Commonside. His father also conveyted to him the superiority of the lands of Wigg and part of Wauchopehead. He was related to the nursery Dicksons, his mother being Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837). He was listed as 'Archibald Scott, Esq. of Howcleuch' among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He presented some items from Antigua to the Museum in 1863. In 1804 he married Charlotte, daughter of John Sibbald of Pinnacle and sister of Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle; they had no children and Howcleuch was inherited by his nephew Charles. In 1841 and 1861 he was living at Commonside, along with 5 servants. He was listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiels in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He lived to within about 4 years of a century, hence the nickname 'Auld' applied to him. He died in Hawick at the age of 96 and was buried in Roberton Cemetery. Archibald (b.1791/2) from Canonbie, he was a meal dealer in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 2 Whitchester Street. His wife was Helen and they had sons Archibald (a carrier) and Abel. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Jane Ballantyne and their children included: James (b.1819); and Robert (b.1821). Archibald (1804/5–74) born in Castleton Parish, he was toll-keeper at the Note o' the Gate. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Hudshouse. He is recorded as toll-keeper and labourer at the Note o' the Gate in 1851. He was an agricultural labourer back in Newcastleton in 1861. He married Jane (or Jean) Nixon, who died in 1874, aged 66. Archibald (19th C.) married Ann Smail in 1826, the marriage recorded in Wilton and Cavers Parishes. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their son Archibald was baptised in 1825. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Reid and their children included: Adam (b.1826); David (b.1828); Mary (b.1830); Margaret (b.1832); Robert (b.1836); and Blacklock

(b.1836). Archibald (b.c.1820) born in Ewesdale, he was an agricultural labourer at Clarilaw. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his mother, Christian (or Catherine), who was born either in Ashkirk or Minto Parish. In 1861 he was listed as a gardener at Clarilaw. In 1866 he donated a coin to the Museum. Archibald 'Airchie' (1822/3–1903) second son of farmer John and nephew of Mr. Murray whom he assisted with the farm at Cleuchhead. After marrying he farmed at Townhead, Lustruther, Wauchope Common, Templehall and Hawthornside. In 1847 in Hobkirk Parish he married Isobell, daughter of Robert Armstrong, from Meikledale, and she died at Heathfield in 1897, aged 77. They had 3 daughters (Catherine, Margaret and Ellen) and a son (John), who probably did not survive infancy. After retiring he lived at Drythropple and Orchard Cottage. He and his wife are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (19th C.) listed as a shopkeeper on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (19th C.) married Helen Blyth in Hawick in 1844. Archibald (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Elliot and their son Matthew was baptised in 1849. Archibald (b.1823/4) son of John and Margaret Murray. He was shepherd at Wolfehopelee. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, along with his wife Isabella Armstrong. In 1851 he was recorded at 'Mackside (Townhead)', which was probably Wolfelee Townhead. He married Isabella Armstrong in Hobkirk Parish in 1847. Their children included: Catherine (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Ellen (b.1853); and John (b.1860). Archibald (19th C.) married Mary Redpath in 1851, the marriage recorded in Hawick and Ancrum Parishes. Archibald (19th C.) married Elizabeth Dodd in Castleton Parish in 1854. Archibald (b.1826/7) son of meal-dealer Archibald. He was a carrier in Newcastleton. In 1852 he is listed leaving the Coach and Horses in Hawick bound for Newcastleton every Wednesday. He may be the Archibald who was a farm labourer at Myredyke in 1851 and was working as a railway labourer at Whitknowe in 1861; his wife was Isabella and they had children Mary Ann, Archibald, Elizabeth, John and Fenwick. Archibald (b.1826/7) joiner in Newcastleton, son of Thomas and grandson of Archibald. In 1851 he was at about 30 South Hermitage Street, living with his mother Janet and siblings Thomas, Henry, John and Helen. He was still there in 1861. His wife was Margaret, who died in 1915, aged 64. Their children included: Margaret (1880/1–1939), who married Alexander Stormont; and Archibald (1882/3–1948). They are buried at Ettleton. Archibald (19th C.) carrier who lived in Chesters and operated between Hawick and Rulewater. Sir Arthur (15th C.) said by Scott of Satchells to have been the early ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It seems likely that, rather than being confused, Satchells was romantically alluding to King Arthur in referring to an early Scott – At Sir Arthur Scot we begin, In's time he was the Kings Warden, A valiant sp'rit for Chivalrie, Married Lord Somervels Daughter of Cowdalie' [CWS]. Arthur of Gamescleuch and Newburgh (d.c.1610) probably son of Simon of Winterburgh. He is probably the 'Mr. Arthure Scott of Wynterburgh' who is listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590. His forename probably comes from his mother's family, since it was previously unknown among Scotts. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Simon Armstrong of Mangerton. In 1593 he was 'of Gamescleuch' when in dispute with William Cranston (fiar of that Ilk) over possession of 'Fawodscheill'; James of Gilmanscleuch and James' son Robert were also involved and declared as rebels. In 1594 Robert Ker of Kippielaw was surety for him in a complaint made William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with William in Glack and William's brother James. In 1602 he was part of a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch 'in Fechane', burning his timber, etc. and were declared rebels for not appearing. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £70 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He is referred to as 'of Newburcht and Gemilscleuch' (i.e. Newburgh and Gamescleuch) in 1603 when he acted as surety for John and Christie Armstrong, sons of John Armstrong of Langholm. In 1603 he was one of the men who selected Sir Walter of Branxholme to arbitrate the dispute over the lands of Gamescleuch. Also in 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Scott of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He gave the lands of Gamescleuch to his cousin Walter (ancestor of Lord Napier) when he succeeded his father to Newburgh. His illegitimate son Robert is among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane bound over in 1608 not to harm Archibald 'of Dephoip'. His sons John and Arthur are also mentioned among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. His sons included: Sir John of Newburgh, who succeeded; Arthur; and Robert, who was illegitimate. He was described as a learned man and the fact that he is often referred to as 'Mr' suggests that he may have been trained as a minister. His son John was served as his heir in 1610. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636 was surely related – 'And Sir John was son of that learned Man, Mr Arthur Scot who was stil'd of New-burgh than, And Mr Arthur was brave Simons son, He who was Tutor to the Pupiles of Thirlston' [CWS]. Arthur (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur and younger brother of John of Newburgh. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. Additionally in 1617 James Mitchellhill, Burgess of Selkirk, complained that he had attacked him near Hangingshaw, wounding him and giving 'him a grite stryk upoun the head, hes dung ane ee out of his head'; he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Baldred (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Master Baldred le Scot' in 1306 when Edward I granted him safe conduct in 'coming from beyond seas to Stirling castle'. His connection with other Scotts is unknown. Bartholomew (16th C.) merchant in Glasgow. In 1585 he was made a Burgess of Glasgow. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Benedict (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Benedict Scot' in 1229, when the Bailiffs of Yarmouth were commanded by an English court to deliver his ship and let him return to Scotland. Begis (d.c.1570) resident of Linlithgow. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1570/1. His forename may be a variant of something more familiar. Bernard (13th C.) recorded as 'le Scot' in an English document of 1270. Along with others, merchants of Placentini, he was given safe conduct to trade in England for 3 years. Campbell (1747–66) younger son of Francis and brother of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. In 1764 he toured Europe along with his brother, accompanied by Adam Smith. In 1764 he was granted 'liferent' of the lands of Over and Nether Harwood and others. But he did not live long enough to enjoy these gifts. He died in Paris, and his brother the Duke then returned to Britain. Catherine (16th C.) married John Ramsay. She was recorded as widow of Ramsay in a sasine in Perthshire in 1550, holding one third of the lands of 'Mwry' in 'conjunct fee'. David and John were witnesses (and possibly related), as well as Sir James (possibly of the Hillhead of Covington). Catherine (b.1774) daughter of Alexander of Synton and sister of John and Helen. After her brother John's death she had the right of inheritance granted to her in favour of distant male relatives (namely John, only son of Hugh Scott of Gala, and Hugh Scott of Harden). In 1800 she married John Corse of Bughtrig and they changed their surname to 'Corse Scott'. Her son John succeeded to the Synton estate. Charles (16th/17th C.) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (who was killed by the Kers in 1552), making him half-brother to Walter of Goldielands; alternatively he could have been a son of Sir Walter of Goldielands, which would make more chronological sense (and in which case he could be the Charles of Goldielands who died in '98' and whose grave tablet was found in St. Mary's in 1863). His son Walter inherited Goldielands from his cousin, also Walter, and afterwards started the Scotts of Crumhaugh. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. His son may have been the last Walter of Goldielands (although it is possible there was an intervening generation). If so, then his daughters included: Jean, whose daughter Lilias married William Knox; and another, whose son was Robert Scott of Glack. However, these generations are very unclear. Charles (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1636); Agnes (b.1644); David (b.1646); John (b.1650); and Bessie (b.1655). Charles of Bonnington (17th C.) 2nd son of James of Bonnington. He succeeded after his older brother Gilbert's death in 1675. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Edinburgh in 1678. In 1680, along with his siblings James and Catherine, he was served heir to his father James of Bonnington. Charles (17th/18th C.) recorded as a 'student' in 1680 when he and another student witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish. It seems possible that they were connected with the Parish Kirk in some way. Also in 1680 he and Walter were recorded as students when they witnessed a baptism for George Deans and Agnes Scott (who could be related). Charles of Langhope (d.bef. 1693) probably the successor of John, he was already deceased in 1693 when his son Robert became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to the John, who sold Langhope in 1691. Charles of Crumhaugh (1663/4–98) probably eldest son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He may have been named after Charles II. He may be the Charles 'of Goldielands' who arranged for the boundary to be marked between his lands and those of Walter 'brother to Briereyards', at the east end of Hawick in 1688. He is probably the 'Charles Scott of Goudilands' who paid tax for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been the 'Goldilands, younger' on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the 'Goldilands, elder' being his father Walter). He is probably also the 'younger Goldiland' who was cautioner for James Scott when he rented ¼ of Borthaugh in at least 1691–94 (with his name given clearly as Charles in 1691). He had a Crown charter for the estates of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1696, this included 'Howpaisley and Crumhaugh, Trinity lands, Corsback and others'. He may be the Charles who witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (perhaps his brother) in 1696, with the child called Charles (perhaps after him). He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He married Rachel, daughter of Langlands of that Ilk (who may have re-married Francis Elliot of Fenwick). Their children included: Janet (b.1688), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1689), also baptised in Hawick, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1746), who married Rev. Hugh Kennedy, minister of Cavers; and Rachel, who married her cousin, Walter in Commonside, 1st Laird of Wauchope. The witnesses in 1688 were Walter of Alton Croft and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1717 he was succeeded in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others by his son Walter, this being in 1717 after 18½ years of 'non-entry', suggesting the time of his death. It was probably his tombstone that was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary's in 1863, and reads 'Here lyis Charles Scott of Govdilans who died in October 22 98 and of age 34'; this implies that he died before his father (although these generations are still confused, and it is possible this was a different man, in 1598, rather than 1698). Charles (d.1716) 2nd son of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. He was sometimes referred to as 'of Palace Hill' or 'Palacehill'. He was said to be a loyal supporter of the Stuart cause in 1715. He was among those who surrendered at Preston and was imprisoned in England; he was probably the man described in a lettr by John Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1716, stating 'Our friend Charles Scott dyed on Sunday night last and was honestlie buried by fiernitoun [George Rutherford of Fairnington]'. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. Their children included: John of Belford, who married Marion Baillie from Ashiestiel, had an only child, Agnes, supported the Jacobites in 1745 and lost his estate; Patrick, who died at sea; Margaret, married Capt. Ronalds; Cecilia married Mr. Sinclair, W.S.; Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Rose of Udny and was grandmother of Mary Yule, who married Thomas Cleghorn of Weens; and William, who became a clockmaker's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720. He died in the Tower of London. Charles (17th/18th C.) owner of a garden to the west of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed in the 1720s. He was referred to as 'of Goldielands', although that designation was no longer formally recognised by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He must have been related to the Lairds of Crumhaugh, but precisely who he was is unclear; it is possible that the reference was to the already deceased Charles of Crumhaugh. Charles (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1724. Charles (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie in the period 1726–29. He took over from Thomas Scott and William Scott of Stonedge before him, so he may also have been a son of William. He may be the same as the Charles 'in Roan' who was former Chamberlain to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in an assignation of 1730 for rental arrears. Charles of Crumhaugh (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1733 being 'of Crummuch' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Falnash. It is unclear how he fits in with the earlier and later Charleses of Crumhaugh. Charles of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) son of Francis of Gorrenberry. He is said to have witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras in 1731 (but this date must be wrong, or else it was a son of the Earl). His wife Jane died in 1767, aged 65, and is buried at Bromley Church in Kent. His son John (of Gorrenberry, a doctor in London) died in 1785, and is also buried at Bromley. He may be the Charles ('brother to Gorrenberry') who married Margaret, daughter of Henry Elliot of

Lodgegill. Charles (18th C.) recorded in Lees in 1765 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (1719–57) eldest son of Walter and Beatrice Scott of Falnash. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1746. He is probably the Charles of Crumhaugh who (along with Robert of Fenwick) witnessed a baptism in 1747 for Gideon (likely his brother) and Rachel Scott. He was probably the Charles recorded being in arrears for renting the farms of Branxholme Town and Chapelhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1748. His lands were valued at £1223 16s 8d in the 1740s. In 1750 he was registered as heir to his father Walter and grandfather Charles in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others; these lands had been in 'non-entry' for nearly 23 years (possibly suggesting some legal challenges, and/or that his father had died when he was very young). He also held lands of Blackcleuch (near Teviothead). He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for 'Teviotdalehead', meaning the Parishes of Cavers, Hawick, Wilton and Roberton, in at least the period 1742–8 and possibly until 1757. His accounts for 1744 include repairs to Hassendean Mill, Hawick Kirk, Hawick Mill, Slitrig Bridge, Hawick Tower and the barns and stables of Branxholme. He is probably the 'Cromhaugh' recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer's book in 1746. He paid the window tax in Hawick (for 'Brankshol house') in 1748. It was probably his servant William Scott who is recorded getting married in Edinburgh in 1750. He may have been the Laird mentioned in 1757 in 'A state of the affair twixt the Laird of Cromoch and Mistris Glenhouse anent a parcel wooll sold to the deceast Thomas Glenhouse' (in the National Archives). He married Christian Anderson; his widow is recorded in a case of 1758, along with his trustees, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. His children included: Walter (b.1742), baptised in Wilton; Michael (b.1744); Robert (b.1745); and Charles (b.1747). He was living at Midshiels at the time of the 1742 baptism, the witnesses being Anthony Turnbull of Knowe and William Ogilvie of Brieryyards. Witnesses to the baptisms in 1745 were Patrick Christie 'maltster', and in 1747 were Walter at Commonside (probably a relative of some sort) and Robert Elliot of Fenwick. His eldest son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Another son was probably Gideon, tenant in Priesthaugh, while his daughter Henrietta (1740–1818) married Rev. James Erskine of Shielfield in 1768. 'Miss B. Scott, daughter of the decaased Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, Esq.', who died at 'Goldlands' in 1809 was probably also his daughter. To further confuse this family, he may also have sometimes been referred to as 'of Goldielands'. The Crumhaugh estates were sold to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, after his death. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was a tailor at Wester Swanshiel in 1758. His children included Bettie (b.1755) and James (b.1758). Charles (b.1767) may also have been his child. Charles (1723/4–76) weaver in Hawick, son of Richard, said to have been a younger son of George of Boonraw. He gave evidence in 1767, regarding the former uses of the Common; he was described at that time as married and a Burgess. He had been among the party of Hawick inhabitants who went out to Blackgrain Moss to break up the 'bakes' made illegally on the Common by residents of Hawick Shiel and other farms. In 1756 he married Janet, daughter of shoemaker Robert Porteous and had several children baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Richard (1757–58), presumbly named after his father; Charles (b.1759), probably 'Charlie o the Crescent'; Agnes (b.1761), who may have married George Blaikie; Mary (b.1762); James (b.1763); Robert (b.1764), perhaps the hosier recorded in 1786; and Elizabeth (b.1766). The whole congregation witnessed the 1757 and 1759 baptisms and Robert Collier the 1766 baptism. He may be the Charles who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. Charles of Woll (b.1744) eldest surviving son of William of Woll, along with whom he is recorded as a witness in Roberton parish in 1766. He was 'younger of Wool' in 1780 when added to the voters' roll of Roxburghshire, based on his superiority of 'the five pound land of Bewlie' in the Barony of Lilliesleaf, as well as Mabonlaw and 'Whinny park' in the Barony of Harden. He is probably the Charles recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1784. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having 'a pretty good estate', being brother of 'John Scott, W.S.' and probably voting with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He paid the land tax for £560 for Midgehope in Ettrick Parish, as well as about £470 for Broadmeadows and £200 for Shaws in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 his lands of Woll were valued at £595 (including the teinds). He paid tax for having a female servant in 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1791. He was also taxed for having a male servant (for most of this period Andrew Leggat, who was a coachman as well as gardener) in the period 1785–94 and for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98. He is recorded as owner of 7 farm horses at Woll in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 2 carriage or saddle horses in the period 1785–97. He may also be the Charles listed at North Synton in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded paying the land tax for Broadmeadows in 1802. In 1803 he sold the lands of Broadmeadows, which the family had gained through his mother, Jean Balfour. He paid the land tax on Woll in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son William. In 1777 he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of William Waugh of Shaw and Barbara Plummer; she died in 1831. Their surviving sons were: William (b.1778), who succeeded; Andrew (1779–99), who had no children; Charles Balfour (b.1782), who succeeded his nephew, Charles Andrew; and Col. John (b.1790), who succeeded his nephew Charles. Other children included: Barbara; Jean (b.1781), who married Col. Dunsmore; Elizabeth; Gilbert (b.1790); and Janet (b.1794), who married James Grieve. He may also have been father of Catherine, who married Robert Dickson of Hassendeanburn in 1792. Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch (1728–1808) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope and Rachel Elliot. He farmed at his father's lands of Howcleuch, and was given these lands at least as early as 1784, when his father retired. He also succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his brother Walter in 1796. His lands of 'Mains of Borthwicksheils, formerly in Wilton' were valued at £146 4s 9d in the valuation of Roberton Parish. He is probably the Charles Scott at Commonside who (along with Thomas Grieve) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot. He is probably the Charles at Commonside who paid the Horse Tax in 1785–94. He had 5 horses working on his farm at Wauchope according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was probably the Charles who was farmer at 'Commonside etc.' with 10 horses; he additionally paid tax for 2 carriage or saddle horses at Wauchope. He may be the Scott who paid tax on 3 non-working dogs at Commonside in 1797 and 2 at Wauchope. Additionally he was joint tenant in Mervinslaw with William Turnbull in 1797. Also in 1797 he paid tax for having a house servant. He is probably the Mr. Scott at Commonside who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid the land tax on Howcleuch in 1802. He gave a large contribution to support the local volunteers in 1803. He was listed along with his son Walter among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He conveyed parts of the superiority of Wauchope to each of his sons Walter and Archibald, another part to Charles Douglas, and retained a last part for himself. He was still listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiels in 1811. His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1812. It is said that he was of a much less 'morose temper' than his brother. In 1776 he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw; he was described as being from Hawick Parish and his wife from Minto Parish. Their children were: Christian (b.1777), who married Archibald Dickson, her cousin; Walter (b.1778), who succeeded to Wauchope; Archibald (b.1779), who succeeded to Howcleuch; Charles (1782–1856), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1782), who married Hugh Mitchell from Dumfries; Robert, (1786–1833), who also died unmarried; James (b.1789), who was with the East India Company; William (b.1792), who was a Captain in India; Agnes, who died young; and Jessie, who married John Cockburn. The 'Miss Scott of Wauchope' who died in 1816, aged 24, was probably one of his daughters. The 'Miss Scott of Wauchope' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 was probably also a daughter. He died at Wauchope and was buried in the family aisle at St. Mary's. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Wilson and their son John was baptised in 1783. Charles (18th C.) tenant in Synton Mains in 1786. It was recorded in Selkirk that he accused 2 servants of other farmers with destroying a crop of turnips. He could be the same as one of the other Charleses. Charles 'Chairlie o the Crescent' (1759–1840) son of Charles and Janet Porteous. He was a Hawick linen manufacturer, who was descended from the Boonraw Scotts. He was based on the Cross Wynd and then moved to the Crescent, the location later being the showroom of John Laing's; he gained this property from his wife, whose father James Ekron (d.1787), merchant in Hawick, had formerly owned it. He is probably the weaver Charles who (along with hosier Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1786 for George Blaikie and Agnes (perhaps his sister).

His house is marked on Wood's 1824 map, opposite the end of the Kirk Wynd. He is probably the Charles recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of the 'particate lands' of Hawick at Allars; this land was feued by later in the 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He witnessed a baptism for his son Charles in 1828. It was said (by his grandson, James Murray) that he employed 6–8 weavers, mostly working from home, producing 'custom work, in which department he produced the finest diapers and napery, being the only weaver of these sorts in the district'. He also sold linen goods at St. Boswells Fair, 'Boswell's Fair sarkin being a well-known material at that time', for which purpose 'he employed several old women constantly spinning, – some in the country, others in the town'. It is said that when he was trying to seek a position in the excise for his son John he went to Scott of Harden for support, claiming to be a relation through the Scotts of Synton. In 1791 he married Betty (b.1771), daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron; she was said to be known to her family (for unknown reasons) as Mary or Margaret, although she was born Elizabeth and recorded as 'Betty Oliver' in the 1791 marriage record. She was Margaret and 'Independent' in 1841, when living with her daughter Mary and son-in-law Thomas Murray, tailor in Denholm. Their children included: Agnes (1792–1839); Charles (b.1794) of Bourtree Place; Janet (1796–98); Janet (again, 1798–1845), the 3rd child, who married James Henderson, carrier and Hilliesland 'Laird'; Isobel (1799–1831), who married Thomas Anderson; Mary (1803–88), the 6th child, who married Thomas Murray and was mother of Sir James A.H. Murray; John (b.1806), who worked for the excise and married Catherine Watson; and Elizabeth, who died young. His tombstone was close to the south wall of St. Mary's Kirk, but when it became illegible his son Charles was going to have it re-carved, but instead used the stone to record his own family. Charles (b.c.1765) carpenter in Lilliesleaf. He was living on the south side of Main Street in 1841. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Stewart and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1799; the witnesses were the Associate Congregation. He could be the tailor at Burnflat recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. Charles (b.c.1780) resident of Martin's House according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William junior was also listed there and hence possibly his brother. Perhaps the same Charles married Christian Broad in Roberton Parish in 1802. Charles (18th/19th C.) glover of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is so recorded in the club minutes of 1812. Charles (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Mains. Accoring to 'Freelance' he once said 'A' folk should read the Bible and the newspapers, the Bible to see how folk should leeve, and the newspapers to see how they do leeve'. Charles (b.c.1778) tenant in Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was probably related to George, who was there at the same time. In 1841 he was agricultural labourer in at the Burns in Southdean. He married Mary Buckham and their children included: William (b.1799); Mary (b.1801); and Adam (b.1808). Charles (18th/19th C.) servant at Tower in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Charles (1782–1856) born in Hawick Parish, he was 3rd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was farmer at Bush in Ewesdale, being recorded there in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837), with Archibald of Howcleuch also listed (his brother). He remained unmarried. He may be the Charles baptised in Hawick in 1783, with no parents names listed. Charles Balfour, W.S. (1782–1838) 3rd son of Charles of Woll and Elizabeth Waugh. He trained as a lawyer, was apprenticed to Archibald Gibson and became Writer to the Signet in 1806. He became an Honorary Burgess of Peebles in 1823. Pigot's 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Yair. He is probably the Charles, W.S., recorded in letters relating to the division of Ettrick Kirk in 1726 and 1827, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1818 he married Elizabeth (or 'Eliza'), youngest daughter of Alexander Ker, minister of Stobo (and she died in 1870). Their son Charles inherited Sunderland Hall in Selkirkshire and changed his name to Scott-Plummer. They also had 4 daughters: Catherine; Elizabeth, who married Capt. Alexander Monro; Isabella; and Barbara. He inherited Woll from his nephew Charles Andrew, but held the estate for only a brief period before his death. Woll passed to his brother Col. John. Charles (1783–1845) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, where his children were baptised. He married Margaret Douglas (1791–1879) in Wilton Parish in 1813; she was daughter of Archibald from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Dr. John (b.1814); Jessy (b.1815); Isobel (b.1816); Archibald (b.1818); George (b.1819), who started a cabinet factory; Charles (b.1821); Andrew (b.1823); and Jessy (again, b.1824). In 1834 he emigrated with his family to Canada, settling at the farm of Blenheimhill in Dumfries Township, Waterloo County. His family arrived in the Galt area about 10 days before a cholera outbreak, in which he and his son John helped. His cousin William Knox lived on a neighbouring farm called Langside. He is buried in Chesterfield United Cemetery, Oxford County, Ontario. Charles of Knowesouth (1784–1854) son of Thomas and Jean Rutherford, and grandson of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was born in Crailing Parish. He was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott, and had the first Canto of 'The Lady of the Lake' read to him at Ashiestiel in 1809. He inherited the estate of Knowesouth from his mother, but later sold it to William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He also resided at Nisbet Mill for a while. In 1831 he obtained a lease for the farm at Milsington (it is said, through the influence of Sir Walter of Abbotsford on the Duke of Bucclech). He was at Milsington in 1841, with his 3 younger children, as well as Mary and James (who were probably his siblings) and 2 female servants. In 1851 there were 5 farm and house servants living with his family at Milsington. In 1814 he married Esther, daughter of Kelso architect William Elliot, Their children were: Thomas (b.1815), who succeeded as tenant at Milsington; William (b.1816), doctor in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; John (b.1818), who moved to Australia; Charles (b.1819), who died abroad; Robert (b.1821), who moved to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1822), who died young; Walter (b.1824), also died abroad; Jane, who married Hawick lawyer James Carmichael; and Mary. Charles (b.c.1790) born in Jedburgh, he was a tailor in Hobkirk Parish. He was at Swanshiel in 1841 and Forkins in 1851. His wife was Jane, from Yarrow and their children included: Andrew (b.1826/7), who was also a tailor; and Janet (b.1828). He was probably a descendant of the earlier tailor Charles. Some of Thomas (b.1818), James (b.1831), and James (again, b.1835) may also have been his children. He was surely related to the younger Charles, who was also a tailor. Charles (1794–1861) eldest son of Charlie of the Crescent and uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a weaver and heddle maker at 5 Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was at Bourtree Place, listed as a handloom weaver, but by 1851 was a heddle maker there. He may be the handloom weaver of that name who in about 1829 he helped rebuild the steam-powered looms that had been brought from Manchester for use in Wilton Mills. He married Margaret, daughter of Yeddie Smail (or 'Smeal', d.1882). Their children included: Eliza (1821–42); Margaret (1822–1902), who married baker Robert Oliver from Morpeth; Charles (1824–96), who married Annie Knox and emigrated to Winnipeg; Adam (1826–81), joiner; Alison Munro (1828–97), married John Douglas, farmer at Essenside; Agnes (1830–99), married hosiery manufacturer William Lyle; Jessie (b.1833), who married Andrew Scott, accountant in Glasgow; John (b.1836), who died young; Mary (b.c.1839); John (b.1841–47); and William Munro (b.1844), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. The witnesses in 1826 were roper William Munro and Agnes Scott (perhaps his aunt) and in 1828 were weaver Charles (presumably his father) and Agnes again. Charles (b.1798/9) farm worker in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside. He married Anne Waldie in 1822 and their children included: Janet (or 'Jessie', b.1823); Peter Brown (b.1824); Charles (b.1827); Margaret (b.1832); Mary (b.1839); and Charlotte (b.1849). Charles (b.c.1803) tailor at the Forkins in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. His children included Margaret (b.1832), Janet (b.1833), Elizabeth (b.1836) and William (b.1837/8). He must have been related to the slightly older Charles, who was also a tailor. Charles (1805–69) son of Walter, he was a boot and shoemaker of Teviot Square, i.e. the Sandbed, where he was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was also a grocer and spirit merchant, being based at 6 Sandbed. His address is given as Slitrig Bridge in 1841, Teviot Square in 1851 and 6 Sandbed in 1861. In 1841 in Hawick Parish he married Jessie (1817–88), daughter of William Laidlaw from Hobkirk. Their children were: Walter (b.1842), who died unmarried; Helen Douglas (1843–1928), unmarried, who had a family tree for the Laidlaws; William Laidlaw ('Wowie', 1847–1922), who was also a shoemaker; Isabella Mary (1852–1928); and Charles Douglas (1854–76), who died unmarried. He is buried in the Wellogate. He is probably the Charles whose wife's heirs are recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Charles (19th C.) married Margaret Milligan in Hobkirk in 1832. Their son William was baptised in 1838. Charles (19th

C.) married Elizabeth Preston in Hawick in 1836. Charles (19th C.) married Janet Murray in Hawick in 1840. Charles Andrew of Woll (1817–1838) elder son of William of Woll. His father died in 1820, while he was still a child. He died unmarried, and was succeeded in the Woll estate by his uncle Charles Balfour Scott. Charles of Howcleuch (1819–95) 2nd surviving son of Walter Scott of Wauchope. He studied sheep management with the factor of Lord Breadalbane. He farmed at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish and Dykeraw in Southdean. But he was more interested in hunting than farming, being a member of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was a keen riding partner of Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood and the Hendersons of Abbotrule. Afterward he lived at Lintalee, where his mother joined him later in her life. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847, and when he retired he was the oldest member. He became attached to his sister-in-law's sister, Margaret Amelia, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts (of Ravensbourne Park, Kent), but was financially unable to marry her; she married Capt. Robert Main, had 2 sons, but became a widow, after which he was able to marry her, although she had to give up the inheritance she had from her deceased first husband's family. They married in 1862 and were said to have been happy together till the end of their days. That same year he came into inheritance from the death of his brother Archibald. And in 1874 he succeeded to Howcleuch from his uncle Archibald. Thereafter he purchased Langlee and had the house largely rebuilt. He is probably the 'Trustee of Mr. Scott of Wauchope' recorded as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in about 1860. He was recorded at Langlee and Lintalee in a directory of 1868. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard along with his wife. He was succeeded by his nephew Arthur Francis. He matriculated arms, the same as those of Scott of Wauchope with a crescent counterchanged. His portrait was painted by Sir George Reid. Charles (19th C.) married Helen Oliver in Hobkirk in 1848. Charles (b.1821) see Charles Scott-Plummer. Charles (b.1822/3) shepherd at Braidliehope in Liddesdale according to the 1861 census. He was born in Teviothead Parish, son of agricultural labourer Adam, who was later a travelling grocer at Raesknowe. He married Isabella Hope, who was from Westerkirk (where some of their children were baptised) and their children included: Isabella (b.1850); Adam (b.1851); Thomas Campbell (b.1853); Janet (b.1854/5); John (b.1856/7); and Robert (b.1859/60). His mother, Janet Scott (nee Leithead) from Kirkton, was living with his family in 1861. Charles (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jessie Laidlaw and their children included: Walter (b.1842); Helen (b.1843); William (b.1847); and Isabella Mary (b.1852). Charles (1824–96) son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a cabinet-maker at 4 Bourtree Place, according to the 1851 census. In Slater's 1852 directory the firm is listed as 'Charles, jun. & Adam, East end'. In 1849 he married Annie Knox in Hawick and in 1854 they emigrated to Winnipeg, where they had a family of 9 children. Charles William Douglas (b.1827) son of David, who farmed at Priesthaugh. He was recorded as farm steward in 1861, living with his father at Priesthaugh. In 1857 he donated some rocks to the Archæological Society and was probably the 'Mr Scott, Priesthaugh' a stone hatchet and a piece of meteorite to the Museum in 1863. He was listed as farmer at Priesthaugh in 1868. Charles S. (d.1881) son of Thomas ('Sly Tammie') and brother of Walter (of Lyle & Scott). He was a wool merchant at 18 Oliver Crescent. He married Isabella Melrose. Their children included Mary E., Charlotte H., Agnes H., James M. (who died at Loos in 1915), Isabella and Margaret. Charles (1834–1912) 3rd son of John, tenant in West Deloraine. He farmed at Over Whitlaw and emigrated to Iowa in 1901, like his brother Alexander. In 1865 he married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter Elliot, farmer at Over Kirkhope. Their children were: John Sibbald, who married his cousin Wilhelmina Young Scott and secondly Gertrude Duckett; Walter (1869–1911); Henry (b.1871), a doctor in Chicago; Gideon (b.1873), who married Effie Smith from Selkirk and lived at Keith, Banff; Charles Alexander (b.1883), a chemist at Sheldon, Iowa; Margaret, who lived at Sheldon; Christina Agnes, who married Elmer S. Gardner; Wilhelmina Elliot, who married Dr. George Skene; Mary Arbuthnott, who married Dr. B.C. Stewart; and Grace Elliot, a nurse in Sheldon, Iowa. Charles (b.1853) 2nd son of John, estate carpenter under 4 Lairds of Edgerston. He was a forester and carpenter and also worked at Edgerston, but moved to Weens in about 1900. He married Mary Story in 1879 and had a son. Charles (1857–1940) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at Milsington. He took over the lease from his father and was able to purchase the farm from the Duke of Buccleuch after WWI. He was thus the first Scott who was Laird of Milsington. He was known as an expert judge of Cheviot sheep. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club. He married Mary, daughter of John Tullie, farmer at Bowanhill. Their children included: Thomas (b.1899); and John Charles (b.1903). Charles (19th/20th C.) Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, who lived at Tandlaw. Charles William (b.1866) son of joiner Adam. He was a general dealer in Trinidad. He married Margaret, daughter of George Blaikie of Bridge House. They had 2 daughters, Sybil and Margaret. Charles 'Charlie' (1934–2023) born in Hawick, where he was in the Boys' Brigade band, as well as local jazz bands Dixie 7 and the Wooltown Jazz. He moved to South Africa in 1969 to set up a branch of Pringle's of Scotland there. After Dawson reorganised, he purchased the business, turning it into the Scottish Knitwear Group. Originally living in Johannesburg, he later moved to Knysa. He married Anne and had children Rory, Penny, Callum, Mandy and Hamish. Charlotte (b.1766) christened in Ashkirk, she was 'begotten in fornication with Captain Scott of Gaudilands', her mother being Isobel Scott in Longtown. Her father was probably Capt. Walter of Crumhaugh (since that family often also had the appellation 'of Goldielands'). Christian (13th C.) holder of a toft in Coldingham in about 1298. The name is recorded as 'Christiana Scot'. Christian (d.c.1585) described as 'alias Brandrow, sometime spouse to John Elder', Burgess of Perth. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1585/6. Christian (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1703. This could be the same Christian listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and the Christian on the subscribers list for the new Kirk bell in 1793/4. Christian 'Christy' nee Anderson (18th C.) wife of Charles of Crumhaugh. She received a widow's pension from the Duke of Buccleuch, her husband having been factor to the Duke, as well as a distant cousin. She is recorded along with her husband's trustees in 1758, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. Her son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Christian (b.c.1788) gate-keeper at the Wilton Lodge lodge-house. She is recorded there in 1841, along with Margaret and William, who were presumably her children, and Christian Davidson, who may have been a younger child or a grandchild. Christian (b.c.1790) milliner at 41 High Street. She was already a widow in 1841. Her children included William, Ann, and Jean (or Jane). Christian (b.1804) daughter of Robert, who was farmer at Todshawhaugh. Her mother was Janet Jardine from Thorlieshope. She was a boarder at the school at Linhope in Yarrow Water, as described by Rev. James Russell. In 1827 she married James Dickson of Housebyres. Christopher (16th C.) recorded in connection with Nether Heworth in an inventory of Durham Priory in 1530. Christopher (b.c.1770s) mason in Newcastleton on the ballot list for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same Christopher was at Dewyhaugh in Cavers Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot; this was along with David and Robert (also a mason), who could have been relatives. He is probably the Christopher, son of David, baptised in Cavers in 1774. Christopher (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and they had a daughter Christian (b.1798). Christopher Bartle Hugh (1924–97) of Gala, son of Philip Beaumont Frere and Jean Winifred Mary Makdougall Scott-Makdougall. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. In 1941 he succeeded his uncle John to Gala and changed his surname to Scott. He married Anne Margaret D'Arcy, daughter of Henry Francis Hobart Kerr in 1948. Their children were: John Philip Henry Schomberg (b.1952), who succeeded; Dominic Christopher Hugh (b.1955); Julian Sebastian Frere (1956–84); Rupert Benjamin Bartle Frere (b.1958); and Sebastian Simon Frere (b.1961). Cochrane (b.1817/8) from Neilston in Renfrewshire, he was a nailer in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Affleck in Hawick in 1838. He lived on Punch Bowl Close in 1841, with his wife Betsy and son Robert. By 1851 the family had moved to Coldstream. Constance Emily Monteath (b.1860s) only child of William Monteath and Amelia Douglas. She became the 9th Baroness of Ancrum and was succeeded by her cousin Irene Dulier. Cuthbert (15th/16th C.) furrier recorded in 1502/3 as 'Cuthberto Skote'. He was paid from the English treasury for white lambskin furs and for a robe of tawny cloth. David (13th C.) tailor recorded in 1298 when protection was asked for him to accompany Ralph 'de Monthermer', Earl of Gloucester and Hertford in the service of Edward I in Scotland. David (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1314/5 when he was pardoned by Edward II. This was for trespassing 'in acquiring from the late Edmond Comyn a messuage and 48 acres' in Suffilk without a licence. David (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Montrose, recorded three times in the Exchequer Rolls in 1329. He was probably related to John, who was also in Montrose at the same time. David (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453. He was granted the lease of 'Drumcors' (in Linlithgowshire) by the King. It is possible that he is the same as David of Buccleuch or the later David of Inverkeithing. Sir David of Buccleuch (c.1430–1491/2) 7th Laird of Buccleuch, and also of Branxholme and Hassendean. He was eldest son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, and brother of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. During his father's life he was sometimes designated 'of Eckford'. He witnessed a lease, along with his father and others, for lands in Borthwickshiels in 1445. In 1451/2 he had a sasine for lands in Linlithgow and is described there as heir of Sir Walter. In 1453 he was granted the Barony of Eckford, and thereafter was referred to as being 'of Eckford'. In 1454 he had a charter for the lands of Irelands-lands in the Barony of Wilton and in 1455 he had a charter of the lands of Whitchesters, forfeited by John St. Michael. Also in 1455 he is recorded being obliged to pay William Douglas of Drumlanrig 200 merks at St. Mary's. He accompanied his father in the force that met the Douglases at Arkinholm in 1455; it was probably for these deeds that he gained the forfeited lands of Whitchesters. He was 'of Ekfurd' in 1456/7 when he was witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert Graham to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1457, along with his father, he witnessed the appointment of Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1459 he was let the farms of Mount Common and Redford for 'half ferms'. In 1461, when described as heir apparent to his father, he was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme. He was also 'filio et herede apparente Walteri de Kirkurd' when witness to a transumpt for the Swintons in 1462. He is recorded as his father's heir in the 1463 resignation of the family estates, with Branxholme being then erected into a Barony. Immediately afterwards he he a precept and then sasine infefting him in the Barony of Branxholme. He was heir apparent of Sir Walter in 1464 when he witnessed a transumpt for an inquest concerning the lands of Cranshaws for Swinton of that Ilk. He is probably the David who was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh in 1464/5, and he was appointed as a special sheriff for the associated precept of sasine. Also in 1464/5 he was 'of Whitchester' when he witnessed the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1465 he had a marriage contract for his eldest son Walter and Katherine, sister of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. If Walter died, then one of his other sons was to marry another Lindsay. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1469. In 1469/70 he and his son Walter were made Keepers of Hermitage Castle for 19 years by Archibald Douglas, 'Bell the Cat' (5th Earl of Angus), who was also Lord of Liddesdale (and whose sister married his son David). After Walter died, a new arrangement was made in 1471/2, keeping him as Bailie of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, and Keeper of Hermitage Castle, along with his new heir David, and contracting David to marry the Earl's sister Jean. In 1470 he made a marriage contract for his daughter 'Jonet' to marry James, son and heir of William Douglas of Drumlanrig, the dowry being 500 'merks', and the lands of Whitcheser to be held in ward. In 1470 he and his heir Walter are listed in a Douglas charter as being in line to inherit certain lands on Hermitage Water if the line of Douglas of Cavers failed; he is there mentioned as being kinsman of Archibald Earl of Angus (although any family relationship at that point is unknown). In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King's enemies. In 1471 he witnessed a sasine for lands at Borthwickshiels. He was Ranger of Ettrick Ward in at last the period 1467–78, having for his fee the lease of Cacrabank and later Eldinhope. In 1472 he and his son David were confirmed as Keepers of Hermitage Castle and Bailies of the Lordship of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, for a period of 17 years. In 1472 he was appointed as one of Earl's bailies to give sasine of the lands on Hermitage Water to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King's couriers was paid to send him and the Earl of Angus a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1475 he witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Caverton. In 1478 there is a record of Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick complaining that he owed the church 44 merks. He probably remained as Keeper of Hermitage about up until his death. Sometime shortly before he died his house and lands at Buccleuch were plundered by Simon and Matthew Routledge (tenants at the Trows). He had already extended the house at Branxholme, and the primary residence of the family moved there. In 1475/6 he had the lands of Kirkurd resigned to him as superior, the lands being the dowry for the marriage of his daughter with John, son of John Lindsay of 'Cowbantoune'. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation relating to the Kers of Cessford. In 1482 Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton in order that a new infeftment be made in his favour. He was probably the second Scott to sit in the Scottish Parliament, in 1481 as 'of Kirkurd' and in 1487 as 'Lord of Buccleuch'. In 1484 he and his son Robert were made joint Bailies of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, specifically Melroselands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie for some of the same lands. Also in 1484 he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick and witnessed the associated sasine. In 1487 he appointed his son Robert as procurator for resigning into the King's hands his lands and baronies. In 1488 he resigned his lands of Branxholme, Eckford, Lanton, Buccleuch and Kirkurd to the King, in order for them to be regranted into the barony of Branxholme. This was because of service he and his son Robert gave to the King at the Battle of Blackness; this charter lists his heirs at that time. Also in 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford and he was pledge for leases granted to Walter Scott in Tushielaw and William Roger and Robert Scott in Winterburgh. In 1491 his leases of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope were all vacant because of his death. In 1492 there is a record in the Kign's Treasurer's accounts of money for his 'ward and marriage'. He is said to have married a daughter of Thomas, Lord Somerville (she was left 240 sheep, 11 cows and 11 oxen in his will, but was not named). His children included: Walter, who married Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, but died before him and without an heir; David, who married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, and whose son Walter succeeded; Robert of Allanhaugh, to whom in 1484/5 he granted the lands and Lordship of Whitchester; William (possibly of Foulshiels), mentioned in 1471/2 as the 3rd son; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig; Margaret, who married James Haig of Bemersyde; an unnamed daughter, who married John, eldest son of John Lindsay of Covington; and Isabella, who married Sir Simon Carruthers of Mouswald and secondly John Murray of Falahill. He also appears to have had a son John, who is mentioned in his will as 'his son', and another son Archibald, mentioned as his son when he took over the lease of Eldinhope in 1487. He may also have had a daughter Marion who married Adam Johnstone of that Ilk and was said to be aunt of the next Walter of Buccleuch. His will and testament lists his goods, a large number of people with whom he had financial obligations, and others who were bequeathed money or items; his goods were valued at £740, he was owed £380 and he gave money, livestock or grain to more than 40 people (most of them probably local). He is buried in the Church of the Holy Cross, Peebles, and bequeathed 40 shillings to the Church of Hawick, as well as Peebles and Rankleburn. David (15th C.) recorded as customs officer of Inverkeithing in the period 1486–88. He was also Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1487. He was probably related to John, who held a similar office in Inverkeithing. Either he or a later David was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1512. David (c.1450–bef. 1484) second son of Sir David of Branxholme. By 1471 he was heir apparent, since his older brother Walter had died before him. In 1476 he witnessed a charter of Robert Scott of Haining to his cousin, Thomas Middlemas, for lands in Peeblesshire. A 'tack' of 1478 by Archibald, Earl of Angus confirms to him lands, farms, rents, mill, capons, etc. within the Lordship of Selkirk. In 1479 Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick, brought an action against him for wrongfully collecting £44 of tax, which he said belonged to the church; it is unclear how this was resolved. He married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, this being arranged in 1471/2 by his father (who was Keeper of Hermitage) and Archibald Douglas (who was Lord of Liddesdale, later 5th Earl of Angus and known as 'Bell-the-Cat'), her brother; the couple were jointly given Dryfesdale. In 1471/2, along with his father, he became Keeper of Hermitage and Bailie of the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, the appointments being made by the Earl of Angus. He pre-deceased his father and the titles were inherited by his (probably only) son, who became Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. David (15th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1486 he leased the lands of 'Midsteid de Gildhouse' in Ettrick Ward, with Sir David of Buccleuch as his pledge. David of Whitehaugh (15th C.) gained the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 for yearly payment of a penny. The estate would remain in his family for about 400 years (although in fact it may have passed between different branches of the Scotts). He must have been related to Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. His son may have been Philip of Heap. He may also have been related to the

Robert of Whitehaugh recorded in 1499. David (15th C.) bequeathed 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He is listed as 'Dauid Scote' and was probably local. David of Hassendean and Galalaw (d.bef. 1515) eldest son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was granted the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall by his father James of Kirkurd in 1494. At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 he obtained remission for the following crimes: stealing 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell, in the company of Ninian Armstrong; stealing 19 cows and 3 horses from the Earl of Bothwell at Castlelaw; stealing 12 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell at 'Laudonia'; and stealing 3 horses from Blackbarony. His surety was Walter of Howpasley. He is listed being 'in Gallolau' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded in 1510/1 in a charter giving him the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (probably later Burnhead and Burnfoot) and lands in Easter Hassendean called 'Dedrig'. Also in 1510/1 he gave his 'brother german' Robert the 2 'merklands' of 'Dowiswod' in the Barony of Hassendean. He is probably the David of Galalaw who in 1502 was surety for John, son of James of Broadmeadows. In 1512 he was witness to the sasine where Walter of Synton transferred Harden to his brother William. In 1515 wardship of his lands were given to Walter of Buccleuch and to the King's tutor, John Stewart, Duke of Albany. This suggests that he may have died at Flodden in 1513. Sir Alexander (if he existed) may have been his son, who Satchells says died at Flodden. He appears to have been succeeded (in Hassendean) by his brothers John and then William. It seems very likely that he is the same man as David of Galalaw. David 'Lady' or 'the Lady' (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was 'prope stirkschawis' (i.e. near to Stirches). He had remission for stealing 60 sheep from Patrick Paterson at Colmslie, with his surety being William Turnbull in Minto. He is also described as 'in Stikschawis' (i.e. Stirches) in another case in 1502 when he was pardoned for several crimes: stealing a horse, 40 sheep and other items from Blackhaugh; bringing in the Robsons, Dodds and Charles' from England to burn Hermiston, belonging to Adam Rutherford; stealing 5 horses from Hermiston, and burning houses and grain there; bringing in Archibald Armstrong, Ninina Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other 'traitors of Leven and Liddlesdale' to burn 6 houses and 7 horses at Minto Craigend; bringing in the same men to steal cows and horses from the tenants of Minto; and common theft. His surety was William Turnbull of Minto. He also had remission for bringing the 'Armstrangis' (presumably a generic term for Liddesdale thieves) and 'Traitors of Levin' (i.e. thieves from across the Border) to steal 180 oxen and cows, 20 horses and goods from the tenants of Synton; since the Scotts of Stirches were closely related to the Scotts of Synton, there may have been a family dispute involved in this raid. He was also implicated in the murder of George Newton and George Cavers in the same raid. Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was indicted for involvement in this or a similar incident. Also in 1502 he had a remission for stealing a horse, sheep and household goods from 'John Spedane and Andrew Michelsone furth of Blackhalche' (whether the one in Rulewater or Ewesdale is unclear), as well as for bringing 'the Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen, to the Burning of Hirdmanstoun, belonging to Adam Ruthirfurde' (probably 'Hermiston' in Lilliesleaf Parish), including stealing 5 horses and burning corn and buildings there. In addition he led Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and 'other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale' on a raid to Minto Craigend, where they burned the farms and seven horses, and stole cows, horses and goods. On top of that he stole 60 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this incident possibly also involving Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole), as well as 6 cows and other goods from William and John Aitken at the Haining. William Turnbull of Minto was surety for him for answering to these offences. Note that Robert of Stirches was the Laird at this time, and it is unclear how (or if) they were related; it is possible he was the David, son of Robert of Stirches and Synton, who was recorded in 1526. He may also be the David, brother to William in Harden, who was listed among those Borders men pardoned in 1526 for their role in attacking the Earl of Arran; if so then this would support the idea that he was a younger son of Robert of Stirches and Synton. He may also have been related to the slightly earlier David of Whitehaugh. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as being 'de Franscurni' on the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501. He was listed as a debtor along with 'Ade Scot' and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. It is unclear where his lands might have been. Presumably the same David 'de francia' is recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502, when Adam 'in aldinershope' (possible Adam of Annelshope) had remission for resetting and intercommuning with him, as well as with Archibald Armstrong and 'traitors of Leven' and Liddesdale. Additionally in 1502 Walter of Midgehope had remission for resetting him, particularly in the theft of 6 oxen and cows from Glensax. David of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is probably the David of Howpasley who Scott of Satchells said was a son of Sir Walter of Howpasley, but that was more likely his brother. He is recorded in 1502 as 'of Tuschelaw' when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with his son William Scott, as well as the Armstrongs. Satchells refers to him as 'Davie wi the Tod's Tail' and says that he married a daughter of Scott of Roberton. His brother Walter was also sometimes known as 'of Tushielaw'. His children were: Adam, who succeeded; (probably) John of Thirlestane; William; and Robert of Bowhill – 'That David Scot he did excell, 'Mongst all Hunters he bore the Bell; He did abound for wit and skill; All his Associats did wear a Tod-tail; Which they esteem most by their engadges, More than French-gallants do of their Plumages' [CWS]. David of Galalaw (15th/16th C.) listed being 'in Gallolau' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He was a witness in 1507/8 to the document relating to the tower 'between the bridges' in Hawick for Scott of Whitchesters. He is recorded in a remission of 1510 as 'of Gallolaw' for assisting rebels; he is named along with John and Walter Scott and John Lindsay. He is also recorded in 1511 as being 'of Gallowlaw' when he claimed the lands of 'Lang Hassindene' of which he had been tenant, and that had been owned previously by Elizabeth Cunningham. However, 3 years later she was confirmed in these lands by the superior, Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. It seems likely he is the same man as David of Hassendean. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'in Quhithauche' in 1510 when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting he was related to some (or all) of these branches. He may also have been related to Robert of Whitehaugh who is mentioned in 1499. David (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to an instrument made in Rutherglen. George was also a witness and surely related. They are probably connected with the other early Scotts in Rutherglen. David (d.bef. 1532) recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk in 1516 when he witnessed a document in Glasgow, which is preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1526/7 he witnessed another document in which Archibald, Earl of Angus and others were directed not to molest Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton. In 1527 he purchased a tenement with house in Selkirk and witnessed a document relating to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528. In 1532 he was deceased when his son and heir Alexander received sasine for his lands in Selkirk. David (15th/16th C.) chaplain to Sir Walter of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1527 when 'in the name of his master Walter Scot knight' he requested details about a royal breve from James Bessat, Sheriff in Selkirk. He is distinct from David, Vicar of Ashkirk, who witnessed this same document; however, it is possible he is the same as the later Vicar of Cavers. Probably the same chaplain witnessed a transaction in 1532/3 involving East Haining for Margaret, wife of Selkirk Burgess John. David of Howpasley, see David of Tushielaw. David (d.c.1544) first son of Sir Walter ('Wicked Wat') of Buccleuch. He was given the baronies of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd and the Lordships of Buccleuch, Rankilburn and Lempitlaw by his father in 1528 (with liferent to himself), but predeceased him. He is recorded as son and heir of Walter in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He may also have had a son Walter, who was heir to Sir Walter (mentioned in 1551), but must also have died, since Sir Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd (his brother) succeeded. In 1574 Dame Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter of Branxholme, was granted the ward and non-entries of certain fees previously gifted to him; he is there described as 'Dauid Scott, sone and apperand air for the tyme to vmquhile Schir Walter Scott of B[r]anxhelme, knycht, quhilk vmquhile Dauid wes gudschir brothir to Walter Scott, now apperand of Branxhelme'. Also in 1574 his grand-nephew, Walter, was served heir to his baronies of Branxholme and Eckford, as well as other lands; this was presumably a legal formality, since he (David) had never in fact succeeded to these baronies.

David (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'vicar perpetual of Colsalmont' when he witnessed an instrument in Aberdeenshire in 1533. David (16th C.) Vicar of Cavers, recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1535, 1539, 1541 and 1544. He may also be the 'sir David' recorded in some other transactions in Selkirk (with Cavers not mentioned). In 1539 and 1544 he was 'vicar pensionary in Cavers'. He witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. He may be the 'sir David' who purchased a piece of land near Selkirk in 1541. In 1543 he 'consituted commisary by apostolic authority', but the rest of the transaction is blank or illegible. Perhaps the same David was recorded as Vicar of Cavers in 1561 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Note that he was distinct from David, Vicar of Ashkirk, who was dead by 1532. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. David (16th C.) described as 'in Clarelaw' (i.e. Clarilaw) in when he gave back the Mains of 'Capitrig' (near Hassendean) to William of Hassendean in a 'letter of reversion' (i.e. following a loan). He was also witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden to William Scott in 1535. In 1541/2 he was one of the nobles serving as caution for John Johnstone of that Ilk. He may have been son or other relative of Adam of Clarilaw. David (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there, and may have been related to Thomas, who was also listed. David (16th C.) recorded as 'traveller' when he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1562/3. David (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as 'callit Huttitill' among the tenants of 'Andishop' who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkenside and Adam of Deephope. Alexander, also 'callit Huttitill' was also listed, as well as 'Blak Sande in Deiphop'. 'Andishop' seems likely to have been Annelshope in Ettrick or Eldinhope in Yarrow. He was surely related to 'Rowie of Huttikill', who was recorded in 1616. It is unclear where 'Huttitill' was located. David (16th C.) recorded in Dingleton in a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. David (16th C.) of Stobicote, brother of Walter of Goldielands and a younger son of 'Wicked Wat', the 9th Laird of Buccleuch. He is one of the 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch listed by Scott of Satchells (and there stated to be brother of Sir Walter of Goldielands). He may have been the first Scott of Stobicote. He could be the 'yonger sone of the Lorde of Bukclowghes' (name not given) listed in 1541 along with several Kers, accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. David of Raesknowe (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of 'Pensioners of Buccleuch'. He was said to be a descendant of the Scotts of Allanhaugh, but the precise relationship with them is unknown. He was probably related to Robert of Raesknowe, who was possibly a little earlier. David of Hassendean (d.c.1564) eldest son of William of Hassendean. He was witness in 1551 to a confirmation of the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham. He was killed by a band of Elliots and others, his murder case being tried in 1564, with William Elliot of Horsleyhill and others found guilty. It may be that those conspiring in this murder included his nephew James (son of his brother Walter), who was also executed. This event played a role in the deadly feud between the Elliots and the Scotts, which lasted for the next several years. He may have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. David (16th C.) servant to Walter Turnbull of Hobsburn. He is listed in 1567, along with his employer, among men were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer accusations of raiding into England. David (d.bef. 1585) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother William acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them; the delivery was witnessed by William of Tushielaw and the acknowledgement by the Scotts of Bowden and Northhouse. He was said to have 'fallin in my hand accidentlie' by Sir Walter of Branxholme, while he was a minor, his death being related to the slaying of Sir Walter's servant at Braidhaugh, Hob Dalgleish. The resulting feud was settled through a bond of 1585, between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh; however, it is unclear whether his own close family (brothers are mentioned) were simply being forced to capitulate through this bond, since they appear not to have been directly related to the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Kincaple in Fife. The will of his wife Bessie Lees was recorded in Edinburgh in 1591. David (16th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Burgess of Hawick. In 1579 he purchased a tenement in Hawick for £60 from Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm. This piece of land was on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Simon Sanderson and George Halliday. However, Bailie John refused to give sasine, since 'twa or thre inhabitantis of the burcht of Hawik' alleged that they had rights to the same tenement. He and his brother John were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. David (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh (saddler John 'Hairlaw' and tailor Donald 'Mckdull') were cautioners for him that he would not harm the vassals or servants of William, Earl of Angus; the nature of the dispute is unclear. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and William among 200 Scotts and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Dreva. In 1594 he was denounced for not 'finding lawburrows' for James Tweedie of Drumelzier; he was described as 'son natural of Walter Scott of Gouldielandis'. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David (16th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts he may have been from. David of Spencerfield (d.c.1582) from Fife, his will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1582. The will of his wife Janet Heriot is also registered in 1582. David (d.c.1584) baxter in St. Andrews. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1584 and that of his wife, Helen Davidson, in 1575. David (d.c.1592) son of Thomas, indweller in Glasgow. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1592. His father could be the baxter in Glasgow whose son James was made a Burgess there in 1577. David (d.c.1593) described as 'skipper in Leith' in 1593/4 when his will was recorded in Edinburgh. David (d.c.1594) tenant in 'Coulie' (probably Coull) in Tannadice Parish in Forfarshire. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1594. He may be the David in 'Litill-Coull' whose wife Marjorie Lyon had her will recorded in Edinburgh in 1583. David (d.c.1594) tenant in 'Hamilton's Ferme', Rutherglen Parish, Lanarkshire. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1599. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Drumchapel, Kirkpatrick Parish, Dumbartonshire. The will of his wife Katherine Johnstone was recorded in Edinburgh in 1589. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in 'Eister-Casche', Strathmiglo Parish. The will of his wife Janet Harper was recorded in Edinburgh in 1591. He was surely rlated to James from the same place, recorded in 1583/4. David of Stobo Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. David (16th/17th C.) brother of the deceased Laird of Synton (either George or possible Walter) who was in a gang of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the custody of the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Walter Scott, called 'Old Walter' in Synton was also involved, so possibly his brother or other near relative. David (16th/17th C.) son of the late John 'called of the Tour in Hawick'. In 1609 he had an action against Hector Turnbull of Barnhills and his son and heir John for not paying what they had borrowed from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. He also had a brother John, who inherited his father's lands in 1609. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw and their son James was baptised in 1639. Perhaps the same David (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1639 for John Scott and Janet Scott. David (17th C.) recorded being 'in Newlands' in 1643, when listed as owner of lands in Belses in Ancrum Parish in 1643, valued at £156. David of Canonbie (1627–48) son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and younger brother of Francis, 2nd Earl. He was born at Newark Castle. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1643, along with his brother Francis. He was listed among those on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648, but is said to have died in that year, apparently in battle (and unmarried). However, his testament and inventory is confirmed in 1666 (by Jean, his only surviving sibling), making it unclear when he died; it could be that Jean, Countess of Tweeddale, was making clear that she was still owed part of his share of the amount given in their father's will, after the death of all other legitimate siblings. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1652. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1673. David (d.c.1685) Commissary Depute of Peebles, Collector of the Forest and Commissioner of Excise and the Militia for Selkirkshire in the 1680s. He is probbly the 'Collector of Excise and Supply for Selkirkshire' recorded in 1683, 1684 and 1685. He was probably brother of the Laird of Tushielaw, although it is unclear which one. David (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberry. In 1663/4 he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie. David (d.c.1683) tenant in Blackhope (although it is unclear which one). His will was recorded in 1683. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Prendergast and their children included Walter (b.1680) and Thomas (b.1683). David (17th/18th C.) son of James of

Hundleshope. He was served as heir to the Barony of Hundleshope in 1700 and seems to have succeeded after his elder brother John died without issue. He was a Captain in H.M. Regiment of Foot Guards. As superior of Hundleshope he granted charters in 1720 and 1722. He disponed the lands of Hundleshope to his only son David in 1735 and probably died not long afterwards. David (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married 'Lizie Loran', i.e. Elizabeth Lorraine, in 1699 (she was surely related to other Lorraines in Ashkirk at about the same time). Their children included Janet (b.1695). It is possible that the same David married Elizabeth Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1699 and had children: Robert (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1706). David (17th/18th C.) recorded in Catslackburn in 1718. David of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) said to be descended from Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He is recorded being 'in Merriela in Cavers parish' when his son was baptised in Hawick in 1708. He married Margaret, a younger daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. They had a son, also David, who was a Captain in the Royal Regiment of Artillery and served in the American Wars in the 1770s. He may also have had a sister, Janet, who married William Borthwick, farmer at Glendinning. His children included James (b.1708), baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses James Chisholme and Thomas Wright. He could be the David, resident at Merrlyaw, whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. He could also be the David who was at Giddenscleuch in 1727 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Cavers Parish. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1737 he was at Outersideshiel when his son James was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his, include Isabel (b.1746) and Margaret (b.1753). David of Hundleshope (18th C.) only son of David, who disponed his lands to him in 1735. He had a Crown charter for Hundleshope in 1741, when he married Elizabeth Gordon. He was a Jacobite supporter and friend of John Murray of Broughton; when Murray was preparing for the uprising in 1744, he wrote to him, enclosing a key to a private closet and requesting that he remove a strong-box and bury it, which he did under a cabbage patch in the garden of Hundleshope. He was the last Scott of Hundleshope, selling it in 1748 to Walter Laidlaw. David (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at 'Heap Inn' in 1747. He married Mary Cowan in 1744, the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included Isabel (b.1747) and Janet (b.1749). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. David (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Christian Graham and their son William was baptised in 1755. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1763 and 1764 and Roberton Burnfoot in 1767 and 1774. He married Margaret Learmonth in Roberton in 1759. His children included Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1764), Janet (b.1767), Jean (b.1769) and David (b.1774). David (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their children included William (b.1776) and Elizabeth (b.1779). David (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1781. David (d.c.1792) son of David of Merrylaw and Margaret Scott, from the Todrig branch. He served with the Royal Artillery in America. He was at St. Augustine in 1773, acted as Commissary of Horse in 1780 and received an address from the inhabitants of Kings and Queens Counties on Long Island in 1782. In the following year he was promoted to Major. His name disappears in 1793, but he may be the Maj. David who died in camp at Seringapatam, India. Rev. David (1765/6–1822) licensed by Langholm presbytery in 1797, he was presented to Castleton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and ordained there in 1801. He remained minister of Castleton until his death. He is described as 'devout and liberal in his sentiments, he was faithful and zealous in the discharge of duty, particularly in promoting the religious education of youth, while he was a friend to the poor'. In 1807 he married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1848, aged 73. They had daughters: Margaret (1809–23), and Mary (1813–41), who married Robert Stavert, merchant in Manchester. He is buried in Castleton kirkyard. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Blackhall on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787 when he had a saddle horse. 'Heirs of D Scott' was the record on the 1790 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 farm horses at Blackhall in 1797 and also paid the dog and clock taxes there in 1797. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–1797, appearing along with Hugo from 1788. It seems likely he is different than (but surely related to) the David who was at Blackhall at about the same time. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. David (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. He is recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse

Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Marion Thomline in Wilton in 1758 and she died in Hawick in 1800. Their children included: Jean (b.1760); James (b.1762); Ann (1765–1800), who died in Hawick; Andrew (b.1768); John (b.1772); and Margaret (b.1776), David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dewyhaugh (in Teviothead Parish), when he paid the cart tax in 1791. He was also listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His son is probably the David junior, labourer at 'Deweyhaugh' on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish; he may also have been father to mason Robert, who was also on the ballot in 1799 and 1801 and mason Christopher who was there in 1801. It seems likely he was the David whose children, baptised in Cavers, included: Christopher (b.1774); and Robert (b.1777), when he was recorded at Castleweary. He may also have had a daughter (perhaps Betty) who married Patrick Hume and who was said to have 3 uncles ('Scotts the masons') living near Bathurst, Canada in the early 1800s. David (b.1770s) shepherd at Merrylaw in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation 'Subst.' suggested that someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with James Boswell Scott acting as his substitute and his status was confirmed in the amended list of 1799. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Merrylaw. David (18th/19th C.) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. David (1777/8–1851) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Flatt in Liddesdale and later at Hoscoteshiel, as well as being tenant in Redfordgreen. He married Jean, daughter of William Scott, 'the Pether', and she died at Bellendean in 1866, aged 86. Their children were: William (b.1804), farmer at Garwald Shiel and later Sailfoot, Moffat Water; Thomas (b.1806), who emigrated to America; Isabel (1808–35), who died at Redfordgreen; Helen (1811–87), who married Eskdalemuir shepherd Walter Beattie; George (b.1813), shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee; Elizabeth (b.1818/9), who married blacksmith William Pow; Jean; Christina (b.1823/4), who married gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford; and another daughter, who married a farmer in Ettrick. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. David (b.c.1770s) recorded as 'Junior Labourer Deweyhaugh' on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was also recorded at Dewyhaugh in 1801, but labelled 'Infirm'. He was presumably son of David. Robert was mason there in 1799 in 1801 both David and Christopher were there; it seems likely all 3 were sons of the older David. David (b.c.1770s) servant at Drinkstone according to the ballot list for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. David (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Jean (b.1808); Betty (b.1818); and Mary (b.1820). David (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jeany Weir and their children included: Jean (b.1806); Andrew (b.1808); Janet (b.1811); Janet (again, b.1813); Thomas (b.1815); and Charlotte (b.1818). Probably the same David, married to 'Jean' Weir, had children William (b.1797) and Alison (b.1799) baptised in Wilton. David (b.1791/2) born in Langholm, he was farmer at Priesthaugh. He held a Scottish long-jump record and was said to have jumped 24 feet is a single bound on the haugh at Mosspaul. He was also known for copying the style of various famous boxers. He was in the Chair for the Wisp Club dinner of 1844. He was also a subscriber to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded at Priesthaugh near the end of the 18th century or Robert who was recorded there in 1821. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 45 arable acres and 2505 hill acres, employing 5 labourers. He was still there in the 1861 census, farming 3300 acres and employing 5 men. He married Christian Aitchison and their children included: Margaret (b.1824); Walter H. (b.1823/4); Charles William Douglas (b.1827); and David C. (b.1830/1). He could be the David, son of Hugh and Margaret Amos, born in Langholm in 1791. David Dundas (1800/1–75) of Briery Yards, born in Edinburgh. He was a historian and friend of David Laing. He translated theological works, including Ranke's 'History of the Popes of Rome'. There was a publication of 1856 describing a local disagreement 'Clerical Despotism and Synod of Justice, or True State of the Case between the Rev. J.A. Wallace, Free Church, Hawick, and David D. Scott, Esq., Briery-yards, &c.' He gave a talk to the Archæological Society in 1858, on Anglo-Saxon settlements, including a discussion of the possible (although probably fanciful) origin of 'Hawick' and other local placenames; and in 1872 he gave a talk on the significance of Bannockburn. In 1859 he donated to the Society an 'Autograph letter of Hugh Miller'. He chaired the centenary Burns night at the Commercial Inn in 1859. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards, along with the official owner, Thomas Turnbull, for whom he was the main trustee; he was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Mary C., and their children included Katherine J. and Elizabeth. David (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Linton and their son Gideon was baptised in 1830. David (b.c.1810) stockingmaker in Wilton and Hawick. He was probably the David listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, but living in Hawick in 1835 and 1840. He was David 'Senr.' at Dovemount on the 1841 census, living with David 'Junr.' who was apparently just 5 years younger; he could be the warehouseman recorded at Dovemount in 1835 and in Hawick in 1840. He is probably the stockingmaker David whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1840. Perhaps the same David married Janet Waldie in Wilton in 1830. David (19th C.) married Jessie Michie in Hawick in 1843. David (b.c.1812) born in Traquair Parish, he was a stockingmaker in Wilton. In 1841 he was 'David Scott Junr.' living on Dovemount with another David who was recorded being just 5 years older. The men may have been cousins (unless the age estimates are way off). Probably the same David was a frameworker in 1851, living with his cousin Robert Ormiston on Under Damside. By 1861 he was married and living at Dovemount again. His wife was Janet, from Yetholm, and their children included Isabella (b.1858/9). David (19th C.) member of the Archæological Society from 1857. He was described as living on the Cross Wynd. David (1834–1902) son of Thomas and Janet Notman, and grandson of wright James Scott. He was apprenticed to blacksmith John Manuel in Lilliesleaf. He was living near Liverpool when he got married in 1859 and later lived at Ladylaw Place, then at Pathfoot and Damside. In 1861 he was recorded as a blacksmith living at Whitrope Tunnel along with other labourers; his wife and first child were in Ladylaw Place with his in-laws, wool-spinner Walter and Mary Riddell. In 1859 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Riddell. Their children were: Mary (1859–87), who married her cousin John Robson; Thomas (1861–1946); Janet Notman (b.1864), who died young; Janet (again, b.1866); and Jean (b.1869); Walter (b.1871), who also died young; Elizabeth (b.1876); and Ann Robson (1879–1947). The first 6 children were born in Hawick. In 1874 he emigrated to Ottawa, Canada with his family. He became head blacksmith at Gibson Quarry, Beamsville, Ontario. David (19th C.) mason at Bonchester Bridge. He was Parish Registrar in Hobkirk. He married Helen, daughter of Peter Bruce, who was born at Swinnie. David (19th C.) mason in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1865. In September of that year he had the added distinction of leading the procession up to the Town's new water supply on the Allan. David (1942/3–) born and raised in Hawick, he worked for the Hawick News and then the Cumberland Evening News, before starting at the Scotsman in 1968. He eventually became the Scottish Government editor for the newspaper, and in 1999 was awarded an O.B.E. for contributions to Scottish journalism. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1999. David 'Davy' (1958/9–) attended Trinity and the High School, he became a housing director for Barratt's. Regarded as one of the greatest Burns authorities in the Borders, he has been a highly sought-after speaker at dinners. He is an honorary member of Hawick Burns Club and the 1514 Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2016. there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Thomas Dickon (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Dicono Scoto' in 1303/4 when he was the English King's messanger to gthe Sheriff of Lanark. His name could be a variant of Richard. Dickson (b.1804/5) from Melrose, he was a tailor in Newmill, recorded Borthwick, farmer at Newmill. Their children included Thomas (who worked as a miller), Alexander (a shepherd) and Jane (who may have married Mr. Bell, farmer at Wattaman, Dumfriesshire). Douglas Gordon (1896–1717) son of Thomas B., he was born in Hawick. He was educated at George Watson's School and served as a 2nd Lieut. with the Royal Flying Corps. He died in a flying accident while training in Shropshire, misjudging the distance in a lopp-the-loop. He is commemorated on a memorial at the Riverdale Collegiate Institute in Toronto (where his parents lived) and also on the gravestone of his grandfather Walter Scott in Wilton Cemetery. Duncan (13th C.) son and heir of Sir Michael, who may have been the 'wizard'. He consented to his father's gift to Dunfermline monastery, also confirmed by Alexander II in 1231. He also granted and consented to a further gift of lands in Fife and Perthshire, sometime before 1250 He had 2 sons: Sir Michael, 1st Laird of Balwearie; and Gilbert, who witnessed a charter in 1236. Duncan (13th/14th C.) son of Michael of Balwearie. He paid homage to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as 'Duncanus Scotus". Also in 1296 his wife Mary petitioned King Edward I for support after he was captured at Dunbar; he is there 'Duncan le Escot'. He is probably the Scottish prisoner 'Duncanus le Scot' recorded being held at 'Roff'' (probably Rochester Castle) in 1296. In 1297/8 there is a record of expenses for his imprisonment in England. In 1310 he was part of an agreement for lands in Perthshire. Perhaps the same 'Duncanus Skot' was recorded in English documents appraising horses in Linlithgow and Dundee in 1311/2. Duncan (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1335 as keeper of carts at the garrison in Edinburgh. Duncan (16th C.) witness to 2 instrument involving the lands of 'Brokholis' in Aberdeenshire in 1536. Duthac (d.c.1491) recorded paying rent in 'Uvir Argati' in Doune in the period 1480–90, along with his wife Janet. His widow was still paying rent in 1492 and 1495. He was presumably naed after the Scottish saint. It is unclear how he was connected with other Scotts. Ebenezer (b.c.1775) tenant at Burnflat in Hawick. He is recorded as 'Eben Scott weaver Burnflat' in 1797 and 1798 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. He was annotated with 'deserted' in 1797; however, in 1798 it is recorded that Robert Turnbull acted as substitute for him. It was written that Turnbull, who had been on the first list, volunteered in his place, with him being 'irregularly returned in the first list ... and proved himself to be more than Twenty three years of age at the time of the return'; this was accepted by the Committee. However, he was selected for service again in 1799, but failed to appear and was later declared unfit for service, with Hawick shoemaker James Wilson selected in his place. His name appeared again on the list for the ballot in 1801. In 1841 he was listed as a woollen hand-loom weaver at Burnflat. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert (b.c.1810), Gilbert (b.c.1815) and Agnes (b.1825). Edmond (16th/17th C.) son to Gavin in the Dean (in Edinburgh). He is recorded as 'Edward' in 1596/7 when he became an apprentice in Edinburgh with baxter James 'Cairnie'. In 1608 he was 'Edmound' when he became a Burgess of Edinburgh. Edmond (17th C.) recorded as servant and 'officiar' to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same Edmund is listed separately as 'officiar in Tiviotdaill'. Edward (16th C.) recorded in a document in the Glasgow Cathedral chartulary in 1525. He appears to have been a Burgess of Glasgow. He could be the Edward in Glasgow whose heiresses Alison (already deceased), Janet, Marion and Margaret were recorded in court documents of 1564/5, 1566 and 1567. Edward (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may have been related to Adam, who was at Ashtrees in 1801. Elizabeth (d.1478) 2nd wife of John Chapman, Burgess of Ayr. She is mentioned in an 'obit' for her husband, who died in 1503; the text describes the land they owned and the masses to be said for them. She was probably related to other early Ayrshire Scotts. Elizabeth (15th C.) received 6 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is listed among servants of the Laird. of Sir William. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527/8 as heir of the deceased Robert, who held lands in Selkirk. Elizabeth nee Ker (15th/16th C.) daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford. She firstly married Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk and secondly married Sir Walter of Branxholme. She long outlived her husband, who died in 1504. In 1510 she received the liferent of Deloraine and Warleshope. In 1539 she and her son Sir Walter sought to remove the tenants from their lands of Annelshope in Ettrick (which she held in liferent) and then she moved her own livestock there. She was described at that time as the 'old lady of Buccleucht'. She was burnt to death within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. Elizabeth (16th C.) wife of John Bait, Burgess of Newburgh in Fife. Her husband resigned a tenement of land to be re-infefted to the 2 of them together. Elizabeth (16th C.) daughter of William and grand-daughter of the Sir Walter who was murdered in 1552. After her father's death, her mother remarried to Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and so she is sometimes referred to as Elizabeth Murray. According to a 1568/9 contract between Scotts and Kerrs (atoning for the murder) she had to marry the grandson of Sir Andrew of Hirsel, when he became 14 years of age. He was John, 2nd son of Sir Walter Kerr of Cessford. In fact she married John Carmichael of Meadowflat. Elizabeth (d.c.1564) wife of Cuthbert Murray. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1564. Elizabeth (d.c.1581) widow of Patrick Kinnaird of that Ilk. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. Elizabeth (d.c.1586) widow of James Kincaid, 'indweller in Hieriggs, outwith the West-poer of Edinburgh'. The wills of her and her husband are recorded in Edinburgh in 1586. Elizabeth (d.c.1589) 'sometime spouse' to Archibald Anderson, merchant, Burgess of Glasgow.

Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1589. Elizabeth (d.c.1589) 'sometime spouse' to David Balfour of 'Billedmonth' in Fife. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1589. Elizabeth (16th C.) from the Scotts of Balwearie, although it is unclear who exactly her parents were. She firstly married John Scott (d.bef. 1561), maltman in Edinburgh West Port, who was also known as 'of Orchardfield'. Their children included Alexander, John (d.bef. 1581) and William of Elie, Ardross and Grangemuir (1545/6–1628). She secondly married Robert Scott of Knightspottie, who was a grandson of Robert of Allanhaugh, and their grandson was John of Scotstarvet. Elizabeth (d.c.1593/4) widow of Robert Scott, writer. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1593/4. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (d.c.1594) wife of Thomas Cluney in the Parish of Abernethy, Perthshire. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1594/5. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (d.c.1596) wife of Thomas Brown, maltman, Burgess of Perth. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1596. Elizabeth (d.c.1600) 'sometime spouse' to John Vauss, elder, Burgess of Paisley. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1596 and 1601. Elizabeth nee Hay (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, tenant in Essenside, son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden, who was killed on the Ettrick Water in about 1616. She was daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield) and was also known as Elspeth. She was involved in several years of legal battles to take action against the Scotts of Bonnington and Newhouse for her husband's death. In 1619 she was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of her husband. She secondly married William Scott of Salenside. In 1632 she renounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned some lands to her son James. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Janet and Margaret, she was served 'heir portioner' to her father. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Agnes were served heirs to their 'foir grandsher' (probably great-gandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1660 she married Charles Lauder from Wind. In 1670, she and her sister Anna were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinstead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) convicted in Hawick in 1674 of stealing 5 or 6 quarters of plaiding 'from off ane web of Janet Leyden's which was drying in the backyards'. Elizabeth (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Elizabeth (17th C.) listed among the poor people living at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish, who were unassessed for the hearth tax in 1694. She is distinct from Bessie, who lived at Headshaw. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) recorded as 'cottar' at Town o' Rule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) resident at Mabonlaw, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) married James Riddell, who farmed at Wiltonburn. Her husband was renting $^1/_4$ of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, but she was listed as his widow renting $^1/_3$ in 1694. She may have been cloely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. Elizabeth of Mangerton (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of Mangerton and hence probably daughter of Sir Francis. Her brother was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Eskdale. She prepared the accounts for her brother in the year 1696–97, by which time he was presumably deceased (or too ill). She was served heir to her brother in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. However, nothing else is known about her. Elizabeth 'Betty' (18th C.) tenant in Crawhill in Wilton Parish when she paid the window tax in 1748. She is recorded as 'Mrs. Betty Scott'. It is unclear who her husband was or even whether her maiden or married name was Scott. However, she is surely related to John Scott, who was living at Crawhill in 1751. Elizabeth (18th C.) recorded as witness to a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1761. The couple were Walter Cavers and Margaret Scott (who was probably related to her). It was very rare for a woman to act as a witness, so there is probably a story here. Elizabeth 'Betty' nee Rutherford (1729–89) daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope and Margaret, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee. She was a niece of Alison Cockburn, who wrote a version of 'Flowers of the Forest'. When younger she was attached to a man who drowned on a passage to Ireland, so she remained single for much of her life. However, in 1768 she married Walter of Wauchope. She was noted as an artist and poet, her collected poems 'Alonza and Cora' being published posthumously in 1801. In 1787 Burns visited the house on his Border Tour. She had sent him a verse epistle offering him a 'marled plaid' in appreciation of his work, and he replied by composing the 'Epistle To Mrs. Scott, Gudewife of Wauchope-House'. His notebook describes how 'she possessed all the sense, taste, intrepidity of face, and bold critical decision which usually distinguish female authors'. She was apparently a friend of Dr. Blacklock, Allan Ramsay and Allan Cunningham. She died a couple of years after Burns visit, it being said that 'the activity of her mind has destroyed a strong constitution'. Elizabeth 'Betty' nee Dickson (1757–1838) daughter of Archibald of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. She was born in Minto Parish. She married Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and had 6 boys plus 3 girls. She is probably the Mrs. Scott of Wauchope recorded living on Buccleuch Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. Her portrait was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon when he was young. Elmer see Ailmer. Esther (17th C.) daughter of 'Auld Wat' of Harden, she married Elliot of Falnash and then George Langlands of that Ilk. Esther (1772/3–1855) listed as 'independent' and 'annuitant' in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, at about 5 High Street. She lived along with her younger sister Sarah, who also died unmarried in 1855. It seems likely they were daughters of Andrew and Beatrix Turnbull, with siblings Robert (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Thomas (b.1767), Ann (b.1770) and Martha (b.1775). Their father is probably Bailie Andrew, merchant of Hawick, and the property is probably the 'A. Scott' on Wood's 1824 map. Ewen (15th C.) son of John, he acted as a Ranger for James II, like his father. However, it is unclear to which branch of the family they belonged. From 1440 his name is recorded as 'Eugenio Scot' and associated with lands in Arran and Bute. His name last occurs in 1451. Finlaus (15th C.) recorded among the graduates of Glasgow University in 1464. His name is recorded as 'Finlaus Scot de Insulis'. He was 'of the Islands'; it is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, or whether his forename was a variant of something more familiar. Francis (16th/17th C.) described as 'natural son' of John Scott, 'called of Tuschelaw' (i.e. Tushielaw) in a charter of 1618. His father was son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, infamous for killing Walter of Gamescleuch in 1609. Francis of Woll (d.bef. 1643) eldest son of Robert of Woll. He was recorded as Laird in 1627. However, he was succeeded by his brother James by 1643, and so presumably died without heirs of his own. Francis (17th C.) shepherd who was son of Adam in 'Schaws' (or Shaws) and grandson of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells in his 'postral'. Francis of Synton (d.c.1648) 4th son of Walter 'Auld Wat' of Harden. He was brother of Sir William of Harden, Hugh (who started the Scotts of Gala), Walter (in Essenside), Margaret (who married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs), Esther (who married Elliot of Falnash and secondly George Langlands of that Ilk), Janet (who married Thomas Scott, later Laird of Whitslade) and Margaret (who married David Pringle of Gala); so he was locally very well connected. He is described as 'in Howfuird' and later as 'of Sinton'. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. He assisted in managing the Buccleuch estates. In 1617 he was recorded among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brothers William and Hugh were also listed. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. In 1619 he was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of his brother Walter. In 1624 he married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. In 1627 he purchased the Synton estate from his distant cousin George (their great-grandfathers had been brothers), thus starting a new line of the Scotts of Synton, which would become the Corse Scotts. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1641 he purchased most of the lands of North Synton from the Veitch family, thus enlarging the estate. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of the lands of Easter Essenside (valued at £200), the west side of North Synton (£208), the east side of North Synton (£338) and Birkwood (£200). He was 'of South Synton' in 1648 when listed as one of the Lairds recorded collecting money for 'the plague stricken poor in the brazen laidel' in Ashkirk Parish. His children were: William, who succeeded; Margaret, who married William Scott of Tushielaw; Francis (b.1633); Walter; Elspeth; Isobel (or Isabel); Agnes; Helen; Christian; and Grizel. Note that these generations are somewhat uncertain, although it seems he was succeeded by his son William, and then his grandson John. Some of his daughters were named in 1665 when their mother made a disposition for the monies owed to her through her marriage contract. In 1662 his son Francis was appointed as guardian for John (later of Synton), son of his son William of Synton. Francis of Castleside (d.bef. 1669) probably grandson of George 'of Castlesyde' (and hence great-grandson of 'Auld Wat o Harden'). Castleside was inherited by the 3 daughters of George of Castleside, namely Janet, Margaret and Bessie in 1632, and he must have inherited it (or bought it from) them sometime before 1636. He bore the Earl of Buccleuch's gauntlets at his funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. In 1638 he was 'in Casthillsyde' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. In 1639 he complained to Ashkirk Session that his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott of Castleside, had called him a 'thief and traitour', after apparently he 'maliciously and unrevererently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat' in the church; presumably an argument over the family seat in the kirk, and a son who did not get along with his mother-in-law! It is possible she was the daughter of George of Castleside from whom he inherited the lands, or else she was the widow of George of Castleside and he married one of the daughters. In 1641 he had a 'letter or inhibition' against Gavin Cessford of Westhouses for fraud against him, the case heard in Melrose. He is also mentioned in another Melrose case of 1642. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1652. He may be the man recorded as 'Castleside for Newtowne' (presumably Newton farm) who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish for £156 in 1663; he also paid tax on £160 in Ashkirk Parish for Castleside. He was recorded as granter in a deed of 1663. He is on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish in 1666. His widow Isobel (presumably Scott) was 'liferentrix' of Westhouses and Gattonside in a document of 1669. Francis (1626–51) 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, son of Walter, the 1st Earl. He succeeded when still a minor and so had some of his male relatives as 'tutors'. Specifically, in 1634 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Baronies of Branxholme, Buccleuch, Eckford, Lanton, Whitchester, Lempitlaw, Rankilburn, Eilrig and Kirkurd (united into the Barony of Branxholme), the Barony of Hailes (which included Alemoor), as well as lands in Ettrick and Yarrow, Greenwood and the Lyne, Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool, Porterslands in Grahamslaw, the Monk's Tour in Hassendean, the lands of the Lordship of Melrose, the Baronies of Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Town Yetholm, the Lordship of Liddesdale, including the Castle of Hermitage, the advowson of the Kirk of Hawick and other lands in Haddington, Edinburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Dumfries and Lanark, combined into the Barony of Hailes. In 1636 he was a student at St. Andrews, then at St. Leonard's College until 1642. His wardship and marriage rights were granted to the Earl of Stirling, although his widow gave these up in 1642 for a large payment. He was present at the Parliament of 1641 when only 14 years old. He purchased the Lordship of Dalkeith from the Earl of Morton in 1642. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift'. In 1643 he loaned 9000 merks to the Collector General of Scotland. In a county valuation of 1643 he was the landowner with the highest yearly value in Hawick Parish (about $^2/_5$ of the total, amounting to £6311 3s 4d) and also almost half the total in Wilton Parish, as well as more than half of Castleton Parish, a third of Cavers Parish and about a quarter of Hassendean Parish. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1643, along with his brother David. He was one of the men appointed as Colonels of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1643 (when only 17) and was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. New colours were made for his regiment in 1644, and this could be the 'Bellenden Banner'. In 1644 he complained about the number of men he was being asked to supply to the army. As part of the Covenanter army his regiment took part in the storming of Newcastle in 1644 and he was also at Marston Moor. In 1645 he was appointed Judiciar over a large fraction of Roxburghshire, including the Lordships of Liddesdale, the Debateable Land etc., Ewesdale, Ashkirk, Hassendean, Cavers and Hawick, with the power to appoint courts. He received a charter of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1647. In 1646, 1648 and 1649

he was on the Committee of War for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was a heritor of Wilton Church as well as presumably of Hawick. In 1647 was made Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was also at the 1649 Parliament that repealed the acts of the 'Engagement'. In 1650 he resigned his baronies of Branxholme, Hassendean and others in favour of himself and his heirs, including provision for inheritance through any female heir, whose husband would have to take the surname Scott. Also in 1650 he was one of the commissioners appointed to welcome Charles II to Scotland, although his castles at Newark and Dalkeith were possessed by Cromwell. He went further north for safety, but died at Dalkeith 'after a short illness' (which is not specified), before reaching his 25th birthday. He was one of the last Scottish noblemen to adhere to the Royalist cause, even when it was clearly hopeless. He was buried in Dalkeith Church (and not in Hawick, like his forebears). In 1646 he married Lady Margaret Leslie, 2nd daughter of the 6th Earl of Rothes, who was widow of Alexander, Lord Balgonie. She was nominated as one of the 'tutors' for his children, should he die before her, and she later married the Earl of Wemyss (becoming the Countess of Wemyss). Scott of Satchells is not very complimentary when he writes 'These infants sweet were left to their guardians to keep, Their tutors oft suffered controul, Their mother was so impudent That she must always have her intent' [CWS]. His children were: Mary (b.1647), who succeeded him; Walter (b.1648), who died in infancy; Margaret (b.1650), who also died young; and Anna (b.1651), who succeeded after her sister's death. For years after his death there were efforts by his tutors to reduce the huge fine imposed on the family for his support of Charles, claiming that he had served in a Parliamentary Regiment in 1643 and acted against the 'Engagement' in 1648 – 'And he began to talk anon, Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone . . . ' [SWS], 'Earl Francis his father Earl Walter did succeed, Into his earldom but not his head; Yet he wanted neither hand, head, nor heart, But could not act like to his father's part' [CWS], 'He had no Heirsmale, but Daughters left behind, For to enjoy his great Earldom and Land' [CWS]. Francis (17th C.) Schoolmaster of Hassendean, probably father of the last minister of the Parish, Rev. Francis. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1640) illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, with an unknown mother. In 1635 he had a charter of the lands of Mangerton from his nephew Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, and he had another daughter, Marie. He was succeeded by his brother William. He died, was buried in Holland, and in 1648 there was still a dispute over the funeral costs between the Earl of Buccleuch and William of Mangerton (his brother). He may be the Lieut.-Col. 'Mangerton' whose account book of 1644, as a company of the Earl of Buccleuch's regiment, is in the Buccleuch papers. Francis of Newton (17th C.) listed as being 'of Newingetoune' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was probably son or brother of John and Walter of Chamberlain Newton, who are recorded shortly before, and may have been father of Walter of Newton, who is recorded a little later (and perhaps grandfather of the later Francis of Chamberlain Newton). Francis of Carterton (17th C.) recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. He is also recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. He was probably father of Robert of Carterton. Francis of Shielswood (b.1638) eldest son of Walter of Shielswood. He is recorded in an inventory of writs of 1648 and in a discharge with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1663. He is said to have died not long after obtaining possession of his estates. He was succeeded by his younger brother, Robert. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cessford and their children included Janet (b.1653) and Isobel (b.1655). Francis (17th C.) younger son of Hugh of Gala. He is referred to as 'brother-german' of James of Gala in 1664 and 1665. He was given 300 merks Scots annually according to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1650, where he is described as 'our servand'. Francis of Arkleton (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was brother of Robert of Harwood. In 1661 he was recorded still responsible for money that his father (as Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir) owed to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He granted a bond to Isobel Ker, wife of George Douglas of Bonjedward in 1663 and was also recorded in 2 deeds that year. He sold Arkleton to Walter Elliot in 1669, with the consent of his mother Anna. In 1664 he married Isobel, daughter of William Eliott of Stobs. Francis of Phaup (17th C.) described as 'of Phaope' in 1657 in a factor's extract to Sir William Scott of Harden and another to his brother Capt. John Scott in 1671. He was a Colonel serving in Brussells in 1666. He was probably brother to Adam, who became a gunsmith's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671, and in which case his father was Robert. He paid tax on land valued at £526 13s 4d in Selkirkshire in 1678. James of Phaup, recorded in 1682, may be his son. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Clerk and their son James was baptised in 1648. Sir Francis of Mangerton (d.1672) eldest son of William. He inherited the lands of Mangerton and others from his father in 1648. This probably included Hartrigge in Jedburgh Parish. He may have been a minor when he succeeded; there is a record of discharge to his curators in 1667. However, he appears to have already been acting as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Eskdale in at least the period 1661–72. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his son Francis, who was served as his heir in 1675. The name of his wife is unknown; it was probably his mother (not his wife) who was the Lady Mangerton listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (but possibly from earlier). He may be the Sir Francis, married to Jean 'Lyll' whose son Walter was baptised in Edinburgh in 1672. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Bridges (or Briggs) and their children included: Janet (b.1673); Archibald (b.1676); Bessie (b.1678); Thomas (b.1680); Adam (b.1681); Isobel (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1687). The witnesses in 1678 and 1680 were William Bridges and William Swan. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism in 1683 for Steven Greenshields and Bessie Bridges. Francis of Grassyards (17th C.) recorded in 2 discharges to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1678 and another in 1681. An undated account in Selkirk discusses 'the mony was borrowed from Grassyeards'. Also in 1688 there was an assignation of debt owed to him by the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1691 he was assignee to Sir Patrick Murray of Deuchar in another discharge in Selkirk. He may be the brother of James Scott of Shielswood referred to by Walter Scott of Satchells in the lines 'Honest James Scot of Shiels-wood, Whose like there is not many, ... Of his Genealogie I will speak no more, Because his Brother Grass-yards is set down before'. He was also listed among Scotts as 'Todrick, and Gilmans-cleugh, they were in my Dream, And good Grass-yeards, and Adam in Delorain' and was separately said to be brother of Adam in Deloraine. Francis of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) son of John. He is recorded in deeds of 1663, 1673 and 1682. He was served heir to his father in 1686. He became Commissioner of Supply (for Selkirkshire) in 1685. He had a marriage contract in 1685 with Margaret Bertram, widow of Alexander Russell. The Ettrick Shepherd wrote that he was often in his (Hogg's) grandfather's house. He was succeeded by John, probably his son. His son Robert became a barber's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1711, by which time he was already deceased. Francis (d.c.1688) tenant in 'Vaills' when his will was recorded in one of the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh or Selkirk. It is unclear where this was (perhaps Valesburn or Wells, or possibly Walls in Dumfriesshire). Francis of Langshaw (d.c.1690) younger son of Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw, and younger brother of Sir John of Ancrum. He witnessed a document for Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1662. He is recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1669 and 1673 he is listed as son of Patrick of Langshaw when he witnessed 3 charters for the commissioners of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. Documents relating to the 'multures' of Langshaw mention from around 1670 to 1675. He purchased the lands of Broadwoodshiels in 1672. He obtained crown charters of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1674 and 1690. He paid land tax on Langshaw in 1678. In 1679 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. He is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, and is recorded in cases held in Melrose in 1684. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; Thomas, who succeeded Walter; and John, who became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1697. In 1690 Walter was served heir to his lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, Calfshaw and Langhaugh in the Parish of Hawick. Thomas was served as his heir to Langshaw and other lands in 1695. Francis (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married 'Giles' Murray in 1683 and their children included Francis (b.1687), with witnesses Richard Thomson and Andrew Deans. He is probably the same as one of the other Francises, e.g. the one later recorded at Wester Groundistone. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1696) son of Sir Francis. There is a marriage contract of 1672 between him and Christian Kerr, involving the annual rent of Nether Mangerton. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He was served heir to his father in 1675. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Calroust in Morebattle Parish and 'eastrige thicksyde and his lands in ulstoun' in Jedburgh Parish. He was also the 'Laird of Mangerstain' who paid the land tax on £1280 in Castleton Parish in 1678. In 1681 he was a witness to the marriage contract between John Pringle of Torsonce and Grissell, eldest daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala. In 1684 there is a document relating to a bond with Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, nephew of his sister. His wife, 'Lady Mangerton' was among the heritors fined in 1684 for refusing to accept Episcopalianism. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose (where he is 'Sir Francis Scott of Manjertoune'). He was probably the Laird of Mangerton appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale from 1692–95. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. His sister Elizabeth prepared the accounts for 1696–97, by which time he was deceased. She was served as his heir in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. Capt. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, and brother of Walter, Earl of Tarras. In 1690 he was involved in a bizarre court case in which Jean Weymss accused him of injuring her finger so that it had to be amputated. He could be the brother of the Earl of Tarras who is recorded serving in Buchanan's regiment in Holland in 1688. He was 'brother to the deceas'd earl of Tarras' in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. In 1697 he leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Francis (17th C.) rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, 1692 and 1694. Gideon of Falnash served as his cautioner in 1692 and 1694, suggesting a family connection; it is possible he was even Gideon's brother, Francis of Greenhill. Francis (17th C.) listed as tenant at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to William, who was a cottar there. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1697 when his daughter Helen was baptised; his wife was also a Scott. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam in Overhall and John in Wiltnburn. Francis (17th C.) listed 'eist the water' in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed separately from the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He seems likely to be the weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Francis (17th C.) resident of Wester Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the same Francis recorded at Groundistone in 1696; his wife was also a Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in that year. The witnesses were James Scott and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. He may be the Francis who married Isobel Scott in Ashkirk in 1689. Helen (b.1697), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his daughter. He may have ben related to the contemporary George in Easter Groundistone. He is probably son of Robert of Burnfoot on Ale and brother of Walter; Walter of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him, where he is referred to as his 'worthy, and well respected good friend, Francis Scot, Brother-german to the Laird of Burnfoot on Ail'. Rev. Francis (d.bef. 1716) probably son of Schoolmaster Francis. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1659, was presented by John Turnbull, Laird of Minto to Minto Parish in 1664 and was minister there for 14 years. In 1674 he carried out the baptism of a son of Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick, with witnesses being Rev. James Gledstains of Yetholm, Rev. John Chisholme of Lilliesleaf and Hawick Schoolmaster John Purdom (presumably all strong Episcopalians). In 1678 he was then translated to Hassendean, where he was the last incumbent. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in at least 1666. He may be the Francis who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for Robert Wait in Roberton Parish in 1688. He was deprived in 1689 for refusing to read the 'Proclamation of the Estates', i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy, and continuing to pray for James VII after his abdication. An 'instrument' was brought against him by Robert Scott, younger of Hassendean and John Turnbull of Knowe, following his removal by the Privy Council. After being deprived he moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach to Episcopalians, along with Thomas Somerville, ousted minister of Cavers. This was probably on a secretive and informal basis until 1712, when the Act of Toleration was passed, and an Episcopalian meeting house was opened at the Playlaw (or Kirkwynd). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands and Rev. John Somerville of Hawick. He may be the 'Mr Francis' who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Horsleyhill in 1680. He is probably the 'Mr Francis Scott' listed 'eist the water' in Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 he witnessed another baptism for the Gledstains and he may be the 'Mr Francis —' who witnessed one more Gledstains of Hilliesland baptism in 1697. He married Elspeth Buckham (or Buckholm) and their children were mostly baptised in Roberton Parish: Margaret (b.1680); James (b.1682); Francis (b.1684), who became a merchant in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in both 1684 and 1688 were James Scott and Thomas Gray. He died in Hawick and in 1716 his widow finally returned the church paraphernalia to Roberton, including bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. It is recorded that part of his tombstone still existed in 1879. Francis (17th C.) recorded in Borthwickbrae in 1687 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses were George ... (probably Scott) and Walter Scott. Given the dates, he is probably different from the Francis who married Giles Murray and also seems unlikely to be the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1685 as uncle to the Laird of Tushielaw (probably Walter, and hence brother of William). He was cautioner, along with his wife, Margaret Elliot, the Laird of Tushielaw's mother, for the amounts collected by David Scott, the Laird's brother. He may be the same Francis, who along with David, were referred to as brother's of the deceased Laird of Tushielaw in 1676, when they were in a court case in Melrose. Francis (b.1633) younger son of Francis of Synton and brother of William of Synton. In 1662 he was appointed as guardian for his nephew John (later of Synton), son of his brother William. Francis of Gorrenberry (d.1689) son of John of Gorrenberry and grandson of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Morton and Canonbie in 1660–61 and for Liddesdale and Canonbie in 1665–70. He was recorded as Chamberlain to the Countess of Buccleuch in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 he was appointed a Justice of the Peace and in 1685 was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £1600 in Castleton Parish (presumably for Gorrenberry) and £900 in Kirkton Parish (this was probably for Adderstoneshiel and Adderstonelee). He was mentioned when his son Andrew became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1692. The 'Lady Garinberry' fined in 1684 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism was probably his wife. In 1668 he married Anna (or Penelope), youngest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie; the dowry was 10,000 merks. His children included: John, the eldest son, who succeeded; Anna, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Charles, who witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras; and Andrew, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1692. He may also be the Scott of Gorrenberry whose daughter Marion married Sir James Don, 2nd Baronet – 'The present Francis Scot, the good Laird of Gorinberry, He hath gain'd the constant and true Penelopy, He's married to Sir John Wachops Daughter that Old Barron of Niddrie, Whose Names and Fames, Birth and Antiquity, Surpasses many Ladies of some Nobility'. Francis (17th C.) son of Walter of Tushielaw. In 1681 he became a surgeon's apprentice to George Scott in Edinburgh. Francis (17th C.) tenant in Branxholme. In 1689 he was in a group including James of Brieryyards, Andrew (brother of William of Clarilaw), ex-Bailie James Gledstains and Sheriff-Officer Andrew Angus, when weaver Thomas Turnbull insulted the 2 sitting Bailies. Francis of Chamberlain Newton (17th/18th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier Francis of Newton. In 1690 he was one of the main instigators in the crowd trying to prevent the removal of Hassendean Kirk's roof. He is probably the Laird whose estate is described as 'Neutons Lands' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; he paid tax on 7 hearths for 'His hous at Meitchels' (presumably Midshiels). He is probably the Francis 'of Newtoun' who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and 1704. He was recorded as 'Laird of Newton' in baptismal records of 1705, 1707 and 1709. His children included: Mary (b.1705); Robert (b.1707); and Gideon (b.1709). when his daughter Mary was baptised, The witnesses in 1705 were Robert of Hassendean and Francis of Alton, in 1707 they appear to have been 2 other Francis Scotts and in 1709 were Robert of Hassendean and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. Other children of his (also baptised in Wilton) may have been Isobel (b.1703) and Janet (b.1707). Probably the same Francis of 'Chamberland Neutoun' married Alison Langlands (perhaps daughter of Rev. John) in Wilton in 1713; she was from Jedburgh Parish. Francis (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars' living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Francis (1645–1712) 1st Baronet of Thirlestane, son of Patrick of Tanlawhill. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1666 and was served heir to his father in 1667, including lands in Rutherford, Nether Crailing, Smailholm, Bowerhope, Gamescleuch, Kirkhope, the town of Selkirk and Nenthorn. He was further served heir to his father in 1676, in the lands of Fingland, 'Tamluthar', Dumfelding, Davington and Nether Cassock. He was also served heir to his brother Walter in 1667. He was surely the Francis, son of Patrick of Thirlestane, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest 1660–62 (although he would have been very young, or his year of birth is incorrect). It is said that he came to the assistance of his distant cousin Francis of Davington, to protect him from his tutor's son, John of Rennaldburn (who was trying to encroach upon him during his minority). It is also said that he narrowly escaped being implicated in the Rye House Plot. He was in court records in Edinburgh in 1667. He paid £1000 for tax on his lands in Dumfriesshire in 1671. He paid tax on lands (although it is unclear which ones, this surely included Langhaugh) in Hawick Parish valued at £850 in 1678, as well as paying for Rutherford in Maxton Parish. He is probably the Scott of Thirlestane fined £2776 in 1680 for being a supporter of the Covenanters. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. In 1678 he was he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 and 1690 for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and in 1704 for Selkirkshire. He was Selkirkshire Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1669–74, 1685–6 and 1693–1702. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. Also in 1684 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. In 1689 he was appointed Captain of the western regiment of Militia. In 1688 Walter of Satchells dedicated the his 'Post'ral' (i.e. the second part of his history of the Scotts) to him – 'Sir Francis Scot of Mengertoun he hath a good Estate, Although he be but young in years, he is Knight-Baronet' [CWS]. In the 1690s he was part of a commission appointed to manage the estates of James, 2nd Marquess of Douglas. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Company in 1695. Also in 1695 he was served heir to his brother Walter's lands in Upper Teviotdale, explicitly Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. In 1704 he was appointed Master of Works. In 1673 he married Henrietta, 6th daughter of William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian; she died in 1741, aged 90. They had 5 sons and 4 daughters, but only 2 survived childhood: Sir William, who succeeded; and Henrietta, who was 4th wife of William, 12th Lord Ross. An unnamed child of his was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1686. Another son may have been John, listed as 'son to Thirlestone' when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. It was said that his daughter Jane married Robert Johnstone in 1660, but this may have been an earlier generation of Scotts of Thirlestane. Francis (d.c.1684) keeper of the Minute Book of the court in Edinburgh. He is recorded retiring in favour of Patrick Falconer and receiving a small share of the profits afterwards. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. Francis of Colmslie (17th C.) recorded in 1679 in an Edinburgh court case. He was among a party of Melrose men who were returning from Bothwell Bridge when they set upon John Drurie of Grange. He is also mentioned in Regality of Melrose records in 1670 and 1682. He was cautioner for Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh (and probably the same as Patrick of Langhshaw), for a bond in 1678, suggesting that they were closely related. He is listed separately from Francis of Langshaw on a list of Regality of Melrose heritors in 1682 (showing they are not the same man). Francis of Greenhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood. His brothers included Walter of Harwood, Gideon of Falnash and William, apothecary in Hawick. He paid the land tax in Hownam Parish in 1678 (for land valued at over £400, but which lands are not listed). He was fined £800 Scots in 1680, essentially for being a Covenanter supporter. Francis of Davington (d.1706) only son of Sir John of Thirlestane (who had not succeeded to the Thirlestane estates). He was still a minor when his father died in 1666, his main 'tutor and curator' being John of Newburgh. It is said that his tutor's son John of Rennaldburn tried to exert undue influence on his affairs, and so his distant cousin Francis of Thirlestane came to his rescue. His other curators were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Patrick of Thirlestane, Walter of Goldielands, Thomas of Whitslade and Sir James Johnstone of Wester Raw. It was also said that he was 'a man of weak understanding'. He spent some time in Dalkeith tolbooth in 1695 for failing to provide for his step-mother, Margaret Scott and Walter of Burnfoot. He is probably the 'Laird of Devngtoun' mentioned by Scott of Satchells in 1688. In 1679 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Douglas of Auchintully. Their children were: John of Davington, who succeeded, but died without children; Robert of Davington, who succeeded his brother; William, who had a farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch and whose son William lived at Moffat; Francis, who also had a farm from Scott of Buccleuch; James, whose son was Robert at Binks, who provided a family genealogy in 1792; David; Anne; and Mary, who married Rev. John Liston, minister of Aberdour. Francis (b.1684) son of Francis, last minister of Hassendean and Elspeth Buckham. He was a merchant in Hawick. He could be the merchant who (along with Robert, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721 and also in 1722 for Sheriff Officer William Henderson. He could be the merchant in Hawick who in 1717 married Isobel Paterson, perhaps the daughter of Francis Paterson baptised in Hawick in 1685. Their children included: William (b.1718); George (b.1720); James (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); George (again, 1726); and Isobel (b.1729). The witnesses in 1720 were Bailies James Burn and James Scott, in 1722 were Bailie James (again) and wright Richard Turnbull, and in 1729 were Francis Turnbull and John Telfer. Francis (17th/18th C.) brother of William of Horsleyhill. He is recorded becoming a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696. He is probably the same as the 'Dr. Scott', brother of Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the guests cited for being at the 'supernumerary marriage' of John Hardie and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1706. He may have succeeded his brother and could be the Francis of Horsleyhill who had a charter in 1712 for 'the lands of Belfoord commonly called Mowtown' and 'the four merkland of Weymsland' (probably Weensland). In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands of Weensland were valued at £264. He was father of Capt. Robert of Horsleyhill. He is probably the Francis of Horsleyhill who was involved with transfer of lands of Belford (formerly called Mowtown) with his father Robert. Francis (17th/18th C.) 6th son of Thomas of Whitslade. His father was already deceased in 1708 when he became an apprentice merchant to Thomas Dundas in Edinburgh. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Ainslie (from the Ainslies of Blackhill) and their children included Robert (b.1712). Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Clerk in Roberton in 1702. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included Francis (b.1711) and William (b.1714). Francis (17th/18th C.) ploughman at Harwood in Hawick Parish, as recorded in 1723. In 1720 he was also recorded in Harwood. He married Jean Miller in 1715 and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); May (b.1720); Helen (b.1723); and William (b.1727). The witness in 1720 were John Chisholme, preacher and Caerlenrig and Gideon Elliot of Harwood and in 1723 were Gideon Elliot of Harwood and Beadle John Scott. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Elliot in Hawick in 1711. Children, baptised in Hawick, who may be his include Francis (b.1711) and William (b.1714). Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1704 he was at Mervinslaw, when his name is recorded as 'Francie'. His children included Gideon (b.1704); Robert (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). He could be one of the Francises who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1707. Francis (17th/18th C.) miller at West Burnfoot, probably in Wilton Parish. A baptism of his servant William Goodfellow is recorded in 1711. Francis of Baililee (17th/18th C.) Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1704. He was recorded in 1707 when he was involved in a bond with John Scott of Gilmanscleuch and Robert Scott 'in Overdelorain'. In 1711 his son Robert became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Ainslie and their son Robert was baptised in 1712. Francis (17th/18th C.) recorded as late Dean of Guild in Selkirk in 1723. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded as Treasurer in Selkirk in 1717–18. Francis (1687–1769) 4th son of Francis of Davington. He led the legal battle against the Napiers of Thirlestane to recover his family estates, eventually taking the case to the House of Lords, but without success. It was said that he had a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He had one known child, Agnes (1723–90), who was unmarried. He died at Holm, practically bankrupt by the legal battle he had championed. Francis (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Selkirk, recorded in 1723. He may have been related to the later wigmaker of Hawick of the same name. Francis (d.bef. 1737) messenger in Selkirk. He married Marion Darling and their children included Bessie (b.1706) and Francis (b.1716). In 1719 his wife brought a case against him in Selkirk for assault and abuse. In 1737 his widow and daughter Agnes were involved in a debt case in Selkirk. Francis (b.1693/4) son of the tenant in Salenside. He lived there with his father until he was 25. He worked at other farms for 11 years and returned to Salenside in 1732, remaining until 1749. He gave evidence in 1764 regarding his recollections of the use of Wilton Common, and was then 'in Shielshaugh'. Francis (1695–1751) 2nd Duke of Buccleuch, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith and grandson of the 1st Duke and Anne Scott, whom he succeeded. He was only the second in his family in 260 years to be of full age at succession. Before succeeding he was known as Lord Scott of Whitchester and then Earl of Dalkeith after the death of his father. In about 1720 he became engaged to Lady Jane Douglas only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas), but the match was broken off, and it is said he fought a dule with her father as a result. In 1725 he was made a Knight of the Thistle. He was confirmed in the Baronies of Hassendean, Sheriffdom of Selkirk, etc. in 1731. In 1738 he purchased Over Hassendean from Archibald Douglas of Cavers. The titles of Baron Tindale and Earl of Doncaster (which had belonged to his grandfather) were restored by Pariliament in 1743. He was a Scottish Representative Peer in Parliament 1733–41, Grand Master of the Freemasons in 1723/4 and made a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1745 he called out his tenantry to support the citizens of Edinburgh against Charles Edward Stuart. When hereditary jurisdictions were abolished in 1747, he was compensated for losing the Regality of Hawick. He paid tax on 42 windows in Hawick Parish in 1748, perhaps for Drumlanrig's Tower. His lands in Hawick were valued at £20,269 10s in the 1740s, and he also owned more than £10,000 in Castleton and £5000 in Sprouston. Although his intended marriage with Lady Jane Douglas (only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas) did not take place, in 1720 he married another Lady Jane Douglas, eldest daughter of James, Duke of Queensberry; this is where the Queensberry title and lands came to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Their children were: Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (1721–50), who predeceased his father; Jane (1723–79), who died aged 56; Anne (1724–37), who died aged 12 and who has a monument to her memory at Hillingden, Middlesex; Mary (1725–43), who died aged 17; and Charles of Bowhill (1727–47), who died aged 20; He was succeeded by his grandson Henry. His 1st wife died of smallpox in 1729. In 1744 he secondly married Alice (who had been his mistress), daughter of Joseph Powell, but they had no children; she died in 1765, aged 63. However, he also had 6 children by Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, who he allowed for in his will, and possibly 4 children with Elizabeth Jenkins. Another son was Maj. Walter of Datchet, Buckinghamshire. Lady Louisa Stuart called him 'a man of mean understanding and meaner habits'. He was buried in Eton Chapel next to his brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Deans and their children included James (b.1724), Isobel (b.1727), Margaret (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1730). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as tenant in Woll in 1724. He married Margaret Kedie and their children included Jean (b.1723), William (b.1724), Mary (b.1726), John (b.1728), John (again, b.1730), Anna (b.1732) and James (b.1733). Perhaps the same Francis was tenant in New Woll in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against James Scott, ex-Deacon of the Fleshers in Selkirk. Francis (1705–73) see Francis Napier. Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th C.) son of Col. Robert and Agnes Douglas. He was incorrectly named 'John' in Keith Scott's genealogy. He was great-grandson of Robert of Horsleyhill who gained Weensland, Shaws and Burnflat in 1653. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 as 'late of Horsleyhill, now of Belford'. He was still on the roll in 1788 and described as 'An intimate of the Duke of Buccleuch'. Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Belford in Morebattle Parish, valued at £1290 6s 8d (and the teinds of £233 6s 8d). He had a daughter who married Thomas Davidson, surgeon in Kelso. He was succeeded by his son Henry. He may be the Lt.-Col. Francis James who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. His wife may be the 'Mrs Scott of Horsliehill' recorded in a dispute at the Edinburgh Dean of Guild Court in 1784/5; perhaps the same 'Mrs. Scott of Horsleyhill' died in Edinburgh in 1806. Francis of Gorrenberry (18th C.) son of John. His sister Anne married Walter Scott of Harden. In 1729 he gave a bond for his sister to John, 2nd son of Walter of Harden. His lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £2500 in the 1740s. In 1750 he sold Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel to Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers (who may have been a cousin of some sort); his factor for the transaction was George Grant. He appears to have been living at Nether Tofts when his children Charles (b.1716) and Archibald (b.1719) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. Little else is known about him, and he appears to have been the last Scott of Gorrenberry. He may be the Laird of Gorrenberry who was said to have been with the Jacobite army in 1745, meeting the Hobkirk Schoolmaster Sam Oliver (who had acted as guide) and leading him safely through the camp and past the Prince. It was also said that Charles Miller (later Beadle at the Green Kirk) had been a servant with him, accompanying him to the battles at Falkirk, Prestonpans and Culloden. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Briggs and their children included Walter (b.1735) and Henry (b.1737). Francis (1710–39) 2nd Earl of Deloraine, eldest son of Maj.-Gen. Henry, 1st Earl and Ann Duncombe. He was thus grandson of the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. When he was born he took the title Viscount Hermitage, which had been created for his father. On the death of his father in 1730 he became 2nd Earl of Deloraine, as well as 2nd Lord Goldielands. He held the rank of Cornet of Horse. He married Mary, daughter of Matthew Lister and secondly married Mary, daughter of Gervase Scrope. He died without issue at Bath and his titles passed to his younger brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Henderson in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children included Jean (b.1734). It is possible he is the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Kedie. Francis (1721–50) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest son of Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch. He also had the title of Lord Scott of Whitchester. He was great-grandson of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and in 1731 she infefted him in several lands, including Nether Newhall (i.e. Burnfoot), Easter and Wester Hassendean, Gilmanscleugh, etc., as well as the lordship of Musselburgh. He was a lawyer, educated at Oxford University, and became M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1748. In 1742 he married Caroline Campbell (1718–94), eldest daughter and co-heiress of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich. His wife was god-daughter of Queen Caroline, wife of George II. She survived him and remarried to Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, later becoming Baroness Greenwich. Through this marriage the Scotts of Buccleuch inherited the lands of Granton. His eldest son John, Lord of Whitchester (1745–49) died of smallpox, aged 4. His 2nd son Henry (1746–1812) became the 3rd Duke. His only surviving daughter, Lady Frances (1750–1817), married Archibald Douglas, 1st Lord of Douglas in 1783. Other children were: Campbell (1747–66), who died unmarried, aged 19; James (1748–58), died aged 9; and Caroline (1743–53), who died aged 10. He himself died of smallpox aged 29, predeceasing his father by about a year, and was buried at Dalkeith. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Lockie and their children included Janet (b.1742), Helen (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748), Mary (b.1751) and John (b.1753). Francis (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1739); Jean (b.1741); Francis (b.1749); Janet (b.1753); Thomas (b.1757); and Christian Smeal (b.1759). Francis of Alton (18th C.) recorded at Alton in 1722 when one of his children was baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Francis 'of Altone' who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He is probably also the Francis who is 'younger of Altoun' in a memorandum of 1708 (among the papers of the Douglases of Cavers). He was also 'of Aldtoun' in a 'search of incumbrances' undertaken by John Hodge in 1742. It appears that he sold the lands of Alton (just north of Hawick) to John Horsburgh of that Ilk about 1742, with the agreement of his eldest lawful son Patrick. He was thus the last of the Scotts of Alton. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. He married Anna Scott and their children included John (b.1722), with witnesses Thomas Kedie and George Scott (probably the George also recorded in Alton that year). He could be the Francis who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. Francis (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1743 and 1757. The following children, baptised in in Roberton Parish, were probably his: James (b.1743); Margaret (b.1745); Walter (b.1748); Christian (b.1749); Margaret (b.1752); and Francis (b.1757). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Young in 1754 and their children included Jane (b.1760). Francis (18th C.) recorded in Howdenhaugh near Selkirk in 1782. Francis (18th C.) wigmaker and barber of 9 High Street. There is an existing sasine of 1764 in which he borrowed money from John and William Thomline, with his property as collateral. He later sold 9 High Street to Walter Wilson. His son Walter was made an Honorary Burgess. He could be the 'Mr Francis Scott, Hawick' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). In 1766 he (along with Robert of the Cross Keys) witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (who was probably related to him). In 1767 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam (who may have been related). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1756 he married Janet Thomson and their son Francis was born in 1760. He may be the tobacconist Francis who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757. Francis of Beechwood (1732–1803) 2nd surviving son of Walter of Harden, brother to the next Laird, who was also Walter. He was recorded in 1735 when his father had to define his heirs. He lived for a while in Bombay, where he was a merchant. For a few years, perhaps 1770–80, he held the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiels. It is recorded in 1780 that he was struck off the voter's roll in Roxburghshire, since he had lost his lands in the county. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was written that it was 'believed will not take the oath'. In 1776 he married Mary (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their children were: Walter; Alexander, a minister, who succeeded; Francis, who died young; Charles, who died in Jamaica in 1805; Hugh, a Major in the East India Company; John, Lieut. in the East India Company; William, in the Royal Navy; and Mary, who married Rear Admiral Thomas Folliott Baugh. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Grieve in 1763. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Blair in 1771. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Miller in 1784 and their children included James (b.1785), Helen (b.1787), John (b.1789), Adam (b.1794) and Janet (b.1802). Francis (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the son of Francis baptised there in 1749. He was recorded as 'Seceder' in 1789 when his son George was baptised in Lilliesleaf. Francis (18th/19th C.) resident of 'West Quarter' in Ancrum Parish, recorded in the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Francis (18th/19th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. In 1811 he witnessed a baptism for tobacconist James (who may have been related). He may be the Francis, son of tobacconist William who was baptised in Hawick in 1769 (and hence brother of tobacconist James), Francis (b.c.1770s) recorded as labourer at Henderon's Knowe on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Henry was a labourer there on the same list and so perhaps related. Francis (b.c.1775) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer and parish pauper. He was living with Mary (probably his wife) and Francis (probably a grandson). Maj. Francis (1773–1813) 2nd son of John of Whitehaugh. He served with the 59th Regiment of Foot at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope and also in India. He also served in Spain and received a gold medal after the Battle of Vittoria in 1813, commanding the regiment there. He was killed leading the volunteers at San Sebastian. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Eldinhope in the Yarrow valley. He lived to the age of 94. It is said that he still used a pony to ride the 10 miles to church when he was aged 90, the combined total of the ages of horse and rider being 120. He was also said to have been the first person to see an umbrella in the hills of Yarrow in 1779. He paid the horse tax (along with Walter) at Eldinhope in 1786 and the dog tax in 1797. It may have been his daughter Christian who married Alexander Scott, farmer in Ladhope. He was probably cousin of Charles and Walter Scott, farmers at Catslackburn, who also lived into their 90s. He is buried in the churchyard at St. Mary's Loch. Francis Napier (1799–1884) twin brother of Alexander Pringle, he was born at Yair, and was the first of the twins born. His father was contractor George and his mother was Eleanor Inglis, who worked as a lady's maid at Yair House; she attended Lady Napier 'during confinement' (perhaps also at Yair) and then was asked to stay on for her own childbirth. He was named after Lord Napier, who owned Wilton Lodge at the time of his birth, and hence must have had a connection with the family (probably as former employer of his mother). He was a framework knitter in Hawick, living at Wilton Kirkstyle and then on Wilton Place and Havelock Street. He was listed as head of household at Wilton Kirkstyle in 1840 and 1841 and is probably the warehouseman recorded at Gibsnose in 1835. In 1824 he married Janet (1802–52), daughter of John Oliver and Anne Neil; she was born in Ashkirk Parish and was sister of Isabella Oliver, wife of John White, who lived at Midshiels. Their children were: George (b.1826) and John (b.1827), who both died in infancy; John (again, b.1829), painter in Selkirk, who married Mary Wilson; Alexander (b.1830), who married Mary Ekron, and was a gasworks manager in Galashiels; Anne (1833–44); Lilias (1835–79), who married Adam Murray and went to Canada; George (again, b.1837), who married Elizabeth Miller Pringle; Isobella (1839–42); Francis (1841–1933), who married Hannah Bodimeade and Esther Hunter; Jessie (b.1844), who married joiner William Aimers; and Margaret (b.1846), who married grocer Andrew Blance. The last 2 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. He died at 5 Slitrig Bank. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Francis (b.1803/4) originally from Canonbie, he was a clog and last-maker in Hawick. He was recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory on the High Street, on the Howegate in the 1837 directory, and on Allars Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. On the 1841 census he was listed on Silver Street and in 1851 and 1861 on Allars Crescent. He married Margaret Rutherford and their children were Alison (b.1827), Thomas (b.1829), Agnes (b.1833), Francis (b.1835), Margaret (b.1837/8), Helen (b.1839/40), William (b.1844/5) and Walter (b.1847/8). Francis (19th C.) married Elizabeth Baptie in Lilliesleaf in 1838. Francis, M.P., see Francis Hepburne-Scott. Francis 'Frank' (1811–1873) known as 'Uncle Braid', he was fourth singer of 'Teribus' at the Common Riding. He was known as a fisherman and also wrote a small amount of verse. Francis Napier (1841–1933) born in Wilton Parish, son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a painter-decorator in Hawick, with his business premises and house at 26 High Street. In 1888 he discovered a sundial (a square block with 2 faces, dated 1683) built into one of the grates of 26 High Street. He later lived at Wilton Hill. He is probably the 'Mr Frank Scott, painter' who gave a talk on 'Scottish Antiquity' to the Archæological Society in 1896. He travelled to the U.S.A. and described his travels to the Masons on his return; he is also said to have brought back a gramophone, which may have been Hawick's first record player, with which he 'entertained the brethren of the Lodge'. In Selkirk in 1867 he married Hannah Matilda (1844–68), born in Hendon, daughter of William Bodimeade, a blacksmith in Harrow in England and Hannah Odell; she was a teacher, and it is unclear how the couple met. They had a son, Francis William (b.1868), who was a Bailie; the mother died within a few months of this birth. In 1873 in Wilton he secondly married Esther, daughter of cabinetmaker John Hunter. Their children were: John (b.1874), who died young; Lilias, who also died young; Esther Laidlaw ('Ella', b.1875); Janet Oliver (b.1881); Jessie; Mary Oliver (b.1885), who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Edinburgh; and John Hunter (b.1890), a dentist in Edinburgh. Francis (19th C.) married Mary Flockhart in Wilton in 1872. Their son William was born in 1872. Francis (19th C.) married Isabella Amos in Wilton in 1874. Their daughter Margaret was born in 1874. Bailie Francis William 'Frank' (1868–1947) painter-decorator at 26 High Street and Hawick Magistrate. He was son of Francis Napier, who was also a painter and decorator, and Hannah Bodimeade. He was one of the early members of the Callants' Club, acting as President during the War years 1915–19. In 1906 he was the first to suggest that Hawick should have its own art gallery, so it was called the 'Scott Gallery' when finally built in 1975. He also instigated the erection of the Caa Knowe cairn, which was unveiled in 1911. In 1916 he proposed that the Callants' Club lay a wreath at the Horse on 12th July to commemorate the fallen in Gallipoli. He was an active member of the Hawick Free Kirk (St. George's), serving as Session Clerk 1899–1915. He was also a Mason with Lodge 111, being given a wedding present by his brothers; he painted the insignia on the aprons of many other members of the lodge. In 1898 he married Isabella Montgomery (1874–1915), daughter of Richard Edmondson. Their children were: Francis Napier ('Naper', b.1900); Elizabeth Kennedy ('Lizzie', b.1903); and Richard Edmondson ('Dick', b.1910). After his first wife died, he secondly married Mary Ann Rowe in 1918. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Francis George 'F.G.' (1880–1958) 2nd son of George, a mill parts supplier in Bourtree Place and Janet, daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. He was born in Hawick at 6 Oliver Crescent, and shared a birthday with Burns. It is said that his father insisted on a traditional religious upbringing, but his mother introduced him to Border ballads. He was educated at the High School and Teviot Grove Academy. He had piano lessons until he was 15, when his father thought it would interfere with his schoolwork. He was Dux Medallist in 1897, apparently arguing that a mistake had been made when he came second in the final exams. He went to Edinburgh University in 1897 to study English and train as a teacher, but abandoned his degree in the second year. He did teaching practice at Trinity in Hawick and taught briefly at Drumlanrig and then in Falkirk, before moving to Langholm (1903–12, where one of his pupils was Hugh MacDiarmid). He later taught at schools in Dunoon and Glasgow. He also studied for a music degree from Durham University. He studied composition under Jean Roger-Ducasse at the Paris Conservatoire. In 1925 he became lecturer in music at Jordanhill, and remained there until he retired in 1946. He also published some poetry (e.g. 'On Border Hills' in 1904). He became a close friend of the poet Hugh MacDiarmid and the painter William Johnstone (his cousin), with whom he tried to initiate a 'Scottish Renaissance'; he set many of MacDiarmid's poems to music, while Johnstone painted several portraits of him. He was musically influenced by Schönberg and Bartok, but tried to develop a Scottish style. He wrote more than 300 songs, many published in his 6 volume 'Scottish Lyrics Set to Music'. He most often used traditional Scots words, with the musical style being contemporary folk art-music (about which opinions differ). He also wrote 'Renaissance' (a concert overture), 'The Seven Deadly Sins' (for full orchestra), 'Cumha nan Laoch' ('Lament for Heroes' for string orchestra) and 'The Ballad of Kynd Kittock' (for baritone and orchestra). His main local contribution is 'Oor Bonnie Border Toon', which he wrote while still in his teens. As a teacher he is said to have had a formidable presence, with a booming voice and piercing blue eyes. He is also said to have had a mischievous sense of humour. Although he was friendly with several other poets and artists, he seldom mixed with other musicians. He was awarded a doctorate by Glasgow University in 1957. He married Burgess Gray (a trained mezzo-soprano) of Fraserburgh and had 4 children: Francine; Lillias; George; and Malcolm. He died at his home in Glasgow and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (with the inscription being a quote from Walter Savage Landor, 'Nature I loved, and, next to Nature, Art'. In 1980 a centenary plaque was unveiled at his birthplace, 6 Oliver Crescent, by the Saltire Society and the Archæological Society, and replaced in 2018. A biography 'Francis George Scott and the Scottish Renaissance' was wrtten by Maurice Lindsay in 1980. A collection of performances of his works, 'Moonstruck' was released in 2006. Francis Napier 'Naper' (b.1900) eldest son of Bailie Francis William In 1933 he married Janet Johnston Rutherford. Francis Townsend 'Frank' (1940–2001) son of Dick and grandson of Bailie Francis. He was elected a Town Councillor at age 26, was later a Regional Councillor, and became Hawick's first Honorary Provost 1977–82. He was appointed a Bailie and served as Justice of the Peace for 26 years, being Chairman of the Justices Committee. Mainstay of the Common-Riding Committee for more than 30 years, he served as Secretary 1988–2001. He was also President of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for 19 years and on the Committee for 40 years. In addition he was President of the Callants' Club and of the Archæological Society, as well as Transactions editor for many years. He updated the 'Companion to Hawick' (1998) and wrote a history of the Conservative Club. In his work as architectural technician he had a hand in several Hawick renovation projects. He is buried in the Wellogate and Frank Scott Court is named after him. A memorial seat on the Miller's Knowes has an entrance pillar from East Bank Church as its base. Francis William (1962–) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. A keen football player for Hawick United, Hawick Legion and Hawick Royal Albert, he scored over 100 goals for both the Legion and the Albert. He was Common Riding Secretary 2008–16 and took over as Chairman in 2024. He has also served as President of the 1514 Club and the Mosstroopers' Club. Galiott (15th C.) merchant of Genoa recorded in 1453. In that year there was a recognisance to him for an amount payable to William Say of Barmondsay in Surrey. He was perhaps orginally from Scotland. Gamel (13th C.) recorded in 1229, in an assize held at Newcastle. He was 'Gamel Scot' in relation to a tenement in 'Chipches' (presumably Chipchase). Gavin of the Dean (d.1585) son and heir of Alexander and grandson of Walter, baker in Edinburgh. His father was deceased by 1556 when Patrick was acting as his tutor. This was relating to their interest in houses in Edinburgh and sums of money. He was also recorded in 1572, when he was witness for 2 instreuments relating to 'John Towris of Innerleith' (who was surely related to his mother, Katherine 'Touris'). Probably the same Gavin was recorded as servitor to John Towris when witnessing documents in Edinburgh in 1571. His son Alexander was involved in legal disputes in around 1600 over property in Gray's Close in Edinburgh; the other claimant was a descendant of the brother-in-law of poet Alexander, suggesting a connection between these two Scott families. John Robson. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 in 'the Wraa' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been from Wrae and was probably related to Adam who was from the same place. Gavin (d.c.1596) 'in the Dene' (i.e. Dean) in Edinburgh. His son James became a baxter's apprentice in 1595. He was already deceased in 1596/7 when his son Edward became a baxter's apprentice. His son Walter became a cordiner's apprentice in 1597 and his son John became a tailor's apprentice in 1600. Geoffrey (13th C.) recorded as 'Galfridium Scot' when he was involved in a court case listed in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He may be the same man separately listed as 'Galfridium de Scotia' in a case at Newcastle. 'Galfrido et Willelmo' mercenaries of Scotland were also listed in 1279. George of Synton (14th/15th C.) eldest son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton (although some sources suggest he was 4th son of the first Walter of Buccleuch). He was either the 1st or 2nd of the Scotts of Synton (accounts differ here), and probably married a daughter of Sir John Turnbull of 'Falshope' (probably Phaup near the head of the Ettrick in Selkirkshire). He had a son Walter, as well as possibly William. This branch eventually produced the lines of Harden, etc. (but again accounts are contradictory). He may also sometimes be confused with his grandson (or great-grandson) George, one of the last of the first set of Scotts of Synton – 'George was the first did Sintons sweet Knows flock, He married Turnbulls daughter, The Knight of Falshope, Walter his Son was cal'd a pretty man' [CWS]. George (15th/16th C.) owner of the lands of Lairs (adjacent to Lairhope, near the head of the Teviot). In 1501 there was an agreement between him and William, son of James Douglas of Drumlanrig, where he would be allowed to continue to hold these lands in 'alba firma' if he could produce proof that he had this arrangement with James Douglas. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges (perhaps George of Borthaugh). He was probably related to Robert, who was listed as tenant in Lairs in 1501. George (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to an instrument made in Rutherglen. David was also a witness and surely related. They are probably connected with the other early Scotts in Rutherglen. George of Borthaugh and Whames (d.bef. 1528) son of Robert. In 1502 he served as surety for Adam in Highchesters (when he was 'de quhomys'). In 1505/6 he had a notorial instrument involving his claim on his father Robert's lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near the modern Pathhead); this document mentions that his grandfather was Stephen of Muirhouse. In 1508/9 he was 'of the Quhomys' when he was given 'warrandice' of his grandfather Stephen's lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 he wrote (with his own hand) a letter of acquittance, stating that John Muir of Rowallan had paid him the £40 and 14 merks owed on the warrandice for Commonside, Harwood and Dryden. In 1517 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme from his father. He married his cousin, whose name is not recorded. With her he had his eldest son, John, and then remarried and had another son, Walter. He declared on his deathbed (in the presence of the Laird of Buccleuch, 2 notaries and other witnesses) that he never had dispensation to marry his cousin and so his 2nd son should succeed to his lands, which included Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and 'the Wallis in Drynisdaile' (probably Dryfesdale). He may be the George who was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn imnheriting the lands of Alemoor. In 1528 a set of arbitrators (all Scotts) met to decide on inheritance and found in favour of his elder son. In 1526 the list of Border men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran included John in Borthaugh, with the brothers Walter, Philip and George listed afterwards, so perhaps all sons of his. George of Synton (15th/16th C.) son of Walter and a Johnstone, he was probably 6th Laird of Synton. He married a daughter of Scott of Roberton, said to have been Thomas (although it is unclear there was such a man, so perhaps another Scott of Roberton is meant). This was meant to be around the 1460s. He was succeeded by his son Walter, and was said to have had another son, who was William of Harden (but this seems to be confusion over generations with similar names). Note that the connections between Synton and Harden genealogy around this time are quite uncertain – 'Then George he was Walter's Son, He married Scot daughter to the Laird of Roberton, This George was the very Man, That was Father to Sinton, White-slade and Hardin' [CWS]. George (15th/16th C.) described as 'in Goldielands' in 1510 when he was surety (along with William in Hawick and David in Whitehaugh, with William in Fenwick and John of Haining also mentioned) for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of 'Aidschaw' (i.e. Headshaw). It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, since the first Laird of Goldielands whose genealogy we know was Scott of Buccleuch's son Walter, who was given that title about 30 years later; however, he sems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Headshaw, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1522 when he had a dispensation from Thomas Ker, Archdeacon of Teviotdale, to marry Margaret Turnbull. This was necessary because they were within the 4th grade of consanguinity. The witnesses were William Pringle and William Tait. George (d.bef. 1527) owner of a piece of half a husbandland within 'the town and bounds of Lellescleiff'. In 1527 his widow, Janet Smail, renounced agreements made with her brother William Smail over these lands in Lilliesleaf; the document was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. George of Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses and may have been related. George (15th/16th

C.) recorded as being 'in Fawlishope' (probably 'Phaup' in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. William was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. George 'of the Bog' (d.1530) said to have been a resident of Liddesdale, he gaine a reputation as a reiver. He was said to be particularly cruel, burning the houses of those he raided, sometimes with their wives and children inside. He was captured by Johnstone of that Ilk and presented for trial, along with Hector and their accomplices, by Robert, Lord Maxwell. It was decided to give him the same punishment he had inflicted on his victims, and so he was burned at the stake 'quhilk deid was neuer sense in this realme of befoir, nor will be heirefter'. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.bef. 1534) Burgess of Selkirk. His daughter Janet was served as heir to his heritable goods in 1534. Burgess William was one of the witnesses and perhaps related. George (16th C.) described as 'in Sanct Mynnynnis Well' (and separately as 'Mynnis') when part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. This is probably St. Mungo's Well in Peebles, although all the other men on the panel appear to be local (e.g. Scotts of Ashkirk and Headshaw), and so either another location is suggested or he was a relative of local Scotts. In 1539 he was 'in Saint Myningis Voll' when he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. George (16th C.) suggested by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been son of Walter and a grandson of the Walter who was immediate ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was said to be called 'How-coat', suggesting perhaps that he owned or farmed Hoscote, or else it was a nickname like 'hollow-coat'. He was then said to have succeeded his father as Laird of Synton, to have married a daughter of John Edmonston (or 'Adimston') of Ednam and to have been succeeded by his son Walter. Part of his life corresponds to that of the later George of Synton; however, these generations seem to be hopelessly confused – 'Now to George Howcoat I must return, He was young Walter of Sintons Son, A brave House-keeper, a worthy Man, He married Adimston, daughter to the Laird of Ednem, Then Walter Scot was George Howcoats son, He married Dowglas of Whittinghame' [CWS]. George (16th C.) son of John of Roberton and Walls. In 1526 he is listed (along with Stephen) as son of John in the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527 receiving remission for his crimes. He may be the George 'of Well' who was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk in 1531/2, along with several other Scotts. He could be the George 'of Vaillis' who in 1539 witnessed a document at Kirkhope for Elizabeth Ker, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. George (16th C.) abbreviator of the King's household expenses. He attested to payments in the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–1542. His name is given as 'domino [Sir] Georgeo Scott', and he may have been a cleric rather than a knight. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. George (16th C.) listed as 'Sir George' in 1538 when the benefice of Hassendean Kirk was given to him, after John Duncan was 'escheated for barratry'. In 1545 John Anderson asked for 18 months prorogation in order to oust him. George (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to Philip, who was the tenant at Wiltonburn. George of Blindhaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1527 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk for the widow of another George. He was 'in Blyndhauch' (in Ashkirk Parish) when he witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531 and another involving Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1532 he and Robert, tutor of Howpasley were executors for Janet of Howpasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primside a fee for her marriage to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and 'Chames'. In 1539 he was recorded as 'gudschir' to Walter, son of Robert in Howford in a marriage contract with Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish. It seems likely that he was a brother of Robert in Howford (rather than his father). In 1540 he witnessed a sasine for William Turnbull in Selkirk. In 1543/4 his wife Margaret Turnbull purchased a tenement in Selkirk from John Fairley on behalf of their second son, Walter, reserving the liferent for herself. In 1544 his wife and 2nd son Walter were given his steadings of Blindhaugh, Broadlee and Castleside, with the 3rd son William given the lands of Langhope and 'the leip hill' and the youngest son John given Castleside. Probably the same George of Blindhaugh is listed in 1550 among 10 Scotts and the chief of the Elliots, who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep order and hand over criminals. He was surely related to Robert, who was recorded in Blindhaugh in the 1530s and he may be related to later Scotts of Blindhaugh. George (16th C.) witness to a sasine of 1558 (one of Hawick's earliest surviving) relating to land in the West-end sold by Adam Cessford to James Scott, alias 'Bailzie'. He could be the George 'in Hawik' who in 1545 bought a tenement in Selkirk from Patrick Kelso; Patrick's wife was Christian Scott, and possibly related. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (16th C.) Vicar of Longforgan in Perthshire. He witnessed 2 documents in 1552, where he was recorded as 'Sir'. Either he or a different 'Sir' George became Vicar at Alvah in 1556. George (16th C.) tenant in Grange in Lanarkshire. In 1562 he was charged along with 2 others in Edinburgh of stealing 'ane beir stak' from a farm in Lanarkshire owned by Johnstone of Westerhall. George (16th C.) son of William. He married Janet Veitch. In 1561 he was son and heir of the deceased William when he paid 'entry' to Patrick Murray for his lands, with the assistance of his friend Walter. In 1562 he paid firther 'entries' for land in Selkirk to Walter and his son Walter. George (d.1578) brother of Robert (who was a Burgess of Hawick) and James (a cordiner). He was killed by a group of Scotts, the circumstances being unknown, but the full group including Robert of Allanhaugh, William in Allanhaugh ('now in Hawik'), Simon in Over Southfield, Wat there, 'Syme' there and 'Watt's Jock'. In 1581 his brothers (on behalf of their mother and all their kin) wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick, describing how they had received satisfaction for the crime and forgave the assailants. Without the preservation of the record in the Buccleuch archives we would know nothing about this family; as it is, it is difficult to connect them with any other Scotts. George (16th C.) merchant in Edinburgh. He became a Burgess there in 1569, through marrying Margaret, daughter of saddler William 'Harlay'. He may be the merchant who was deceased in 1614 when his eldest son James became a Burgess in Edinburgh. George (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Northhouse. In 1582 his son William (and probable son Simon) witnessed a transaction at Branxholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. George of Synton (16th C.) probably second son of John, grandson of Walter (10th Laird) of Synton and brother of Walter (11th); Scott of Satchells suggests he was son of Walter, but that seems less likely, given the timing. Satchells also says that he was 'called How-coat', but this might be confusion with a different George. His name was inscribed on 2 panels on the former house at Synton, which together read 'GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOVN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOVN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT)...' It therefore seems that he was tenant in Synton in 1570, but recognised as the heir to Walter (perhaps the use of 'hear' and omission of the word 'son' is significant); this may have been the year of his marriage. Things are more confused by a feu charter for lands in Haddington in 1567 when he is described (in Latin) as 'son and heir apparent of Walter, junior in Sintoun', but in the receipt for his feu duties he was described as 'son and appeirand air to Walter Scot of Syntoun', and when he sold the Haddington land in 1572, he was again 'son and heir apparent of Walter of Syntoun'. He was listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580 he was 'in Syntoun' when he and his brother William in Huntly gave their consent for Robert, son of their deceased brother James in Whitslade, to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Robert in Aikwood (this confirms that these 3 men were brothers, and hence all sons of John, younger of Synton). In 1580 he brought a court case where he claimed that he had title to the lands of 'Ilistoun' instead of Adam of Bonnington, apparently gaining these lands from Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with Walter of Stirches over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundistone, with his chosen judges being Walter of Headshaw and Robert of Haining. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. He also witnessed in 1581 a marriage contract between this same William in Burnfoot and Janet (his niece), daughter of William in Huntly. He was mentioned in 1581 as one of the Scotts called before the Privy Council in Edinburgh to try to stop the feud with the Elliots. He was also ordered to confer with the council in 1583/4 regarding the quieting of the Borders. He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with Robert of Haining, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh; this caution was renewed later in 1581, with John Edmondson of Ryeslaw as surety. His servant John Scott of the Palace was charged with resetting stolen horses, and as a result of not appearing to answer for his servant, he was denounced rebel. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1586 he is recorded as a 'curator' of the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1586/7 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear in court to answer the charges against his servant, John of the Palace. He signed the clan bond in 1589, when he was 'George of Sinton'. He must also have been Laird on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. In 1590 he may have been the Scott of Synton for whom William Dalmahoy was surety that he would not harm the vassals of the Earl of Angus and David Edmondson of Wowmet was also separately surety for him that he would help the Warden. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He married Margaret, daughter of John Edmonston of Ednam; he and his wife's names were inscribed on the old stone door lintel from Synton House. Their children included: Walter, who succeeded; David; John of Yorkston, who purchased Headshaw and Langhope; George, who became a saddler's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610; James of Kirkhouses, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie; and Agnes. George of Todrig (d.bef. 1580) probably the 3rd and youngest son of William of Harden, who was also Laird of Todrig (consistent with the description of Scott of Satchells). He succeeded to Harden in 1561 on the death of his father (probably at Todrig). He thus became the first Scott who was just 'of Toderick'. He was succeeded by Walter, probably his son. Walter's brothers Robert and William are recorded in 1620, and so were presumably also his sons. Note that Scott of Rodono regards him as a fiction of Scott of Satchells, and suggests instead that Walter of Todrig was descended from William 'in the Mott'. Assuming he existed, he may have married Elizabeth Ker, who in 1581/2 was recorded as mother of Walter of Todrig. He may be the Scott of Todrig whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Pringle of Trinlyknowe. George (16th C.) recorded 'in Clarelaw' in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving lands in Midlem. This is probably the Clarilaw in Bowden Parish. George (16th C.) recorded as 'eister' when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He was probably related to John, who had the same nickname. George (16th C.) recorded as 'alias Goldielandis in Carterhaucht' when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Goldielands. George (16th/17th C.) younger son of George of Synton and brother of Walter. In 1610 he was 'brother to late Walter Scott, of Synton' when he became an apprentice saddler with David Brown in Edinburgh. George (16th/17th C.) listed as being 'in Woll' in 1608 when he was part of a large group of men accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Woll. George (16th/17th C.) son of the deceased William 'in Braidlie' when he was involved in a dispute over a tenement in Selkirk. George of Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, who died in 1608, and Isobel Douglas. It appears that he was Laird of Synton while his father was still alive. He was the 14th and last of the family to be designated 'of Synton'. In 1610 he was served heir to the lands of Boonraw, these passing to his descendants for the next 110 years. He was also served heir to his father's lands of Outersiderig. He married Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) and their children were: Walter, who died unmarried; George of Boonraw; and Richard, minister of Kirkbean and Ashkirk. Note that these generations seem confused in some accounts. In 1627 he sold the Synton estate to Francis, son of Walter Scott of Harden (a distant cousin, their great-grandfathers having been brothers). This was probably forced on him to clear debts. His widow was probably the 'Mar. Gladstains' who was liferenter of an unnamed farm (most likely Boonraw) and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1643 and also the 'Lyfrenter of Boonraw' recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 – 'And George his Son a hopeful Lad, He married Gladstains daughter to the Laird of Dode. There was procreat betwixt these two, Good Mr George Scot, the Laird of Bon-raw' [CWS]. George of Kirkstyle (16th/17th C.) son of Alexander of Kirkstyle and descended from the Scotts of Balwearie. He married Catherine, daughter of Hugh Moncrieff of Rind. He was succeeded by his son Patrick of Kirkstyle and Ancrum. George of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as 'callit of Deringstoun'. This was in the trial of Jock Scott, 'the Suckler', who, having gotten off the charge of slaughtering Douglas of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley, but was charged with stealing sheep from his lands of 'Castell-hill' in 1613 (among other thefts). It is unclear whether this is the place of that name near Ashkirk or the one near Branxholme (probably the latter).

He was surely related to the half century earlier John 'in Drinkstone' and the slightly earlier John 'of Drinkstone'. It is possible he was 'Geordie in Castelhill' (no surname given) who was listed among fugitives in 1618. George 'the Souter' and 'Marion's Geordie' (d.1616) cordiner in Hawick. He assisted in the 1615 plan of Lady Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells to slaughter the sheep of Sir James Douglas, newly possessed of Howpasley. In the trial he was painted as the main instigator and was accused of threatening Jock 'the Suckler' at sword-point to carry through with the crime. He said he would accept his guilt if Jock repeated the accusations to his face, which Jock duly did. He then referred to his dog 'Hyde-the-bastard', saying 'Sa lang as I and my Bastard brother levis (meaning be his dog), Howpaslet sall nocht plenische' (i.e. be stocked). He had also been questioned by Douglas in Hawick about his whereabouts that night, and pointed a cocked pistol at Douglas, which was taken from him before he could shoot. Additionally he had failed to show up at the previous Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was later hung for these crimes (although the records suggest that several of the jury were favourable to Douglas of Drumlanrig). His mother was presumably Marion and it is possible he was brother of 'Marion's Hob'. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todshawhaugh. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. He is also mentioned in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm his father, him and their associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son. George of Castleside (d.c.1630) probably a younger son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden. He is recorded in 1607 when he complained that James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank and Thomas Ker of Cavers have not paid what they owe him; he is there 'in Castlesyd'. In 1618 he served as a cautioner for Walter, son of John in Newark. He is mentioned several other times in the period 1592–1629. In 1632 his daughters Janet, Margaret and Bessie were served as his heirs portioners. However, Francis was shortly afterwards Laird of Castleside, and so may also have been related. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Woll and Catherine Ormiston, his 2nd wife. In 1617 his elder half-brother Robert of Woll was appointed as tutor for him and his sister Katherine (making it clear he was still a minor at that point). In 1636 he was served heir to his mother, Catherine Ormiston. He is recorded in 1643 when he was made a Burgess of Selkirk. He is then referred to as 'callit of the Woll', suggesting he was the representative of the family that had formerly lived there. George (d.bef. 1660) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. He is recorded in 1622–25 in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells, over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He is also mentioned in 1660 as George 'callit of Whitslaid' when his daughter Anna married Charles, eldest son of William Lauder of Windpark. He somehow inherited the Barony of Maxton (perhaps through marriage), which had previously been held by the Kers. In 1670 his daughters Bessie and Anna were served heirs portioners to this Barony and all the associated lands, which included a large part of Abbotrule; it has also been claimed that they succeeded to his lands in Linton, rather than Maxton. George (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Dinlees on Hermitage Water in 1632. George (17th C.) tenant in Bowknowe. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. George (17th C.) resident of Palace in Ashkirk Parish. In about 1640 he was accused of travelling on the Sabbath. Since it was his first offence, he was forgiven, but 'umql. he be tryit to do the like again, to pay 18s, and to be on the place of rep[entan]ce.' George (17th C.) recorded in the Council Records of 1651 when he was fined £10 for keeping false weights, specifically 'Flemes wecht for French wecht'. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Waugh and their children included: John (b.1634); Marion (b.1640); Thomas (b.1643); Robert (b.1648); and George (b.1651). The witnesses in 1651 were Andrew Liddersdale and John Scott. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included Robert (b.1650), Thomas (b.1652) and Elizabeth (b.1660). The witnesses were William ... and Thomas Scott. He may be the George who in 1661 in Ashkirk witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot (possibly related to his wife). George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Grisel 'Moore' and their children included Jean (b.1650) and Agnes (b.1652). The 2 witnesses in 1652 were both Robert Scott. George (17th C.) tenant in Netherraw in Liddesdale. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. George (d.c.1690) of Boonraw. Son of George of Synton and Boonraw. He was probably the 'G. Scott of boneraw' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was Bailie-depute of Hawick (i.e. appointed by the Baron) and resided in the Tower, as recorded in 1668. In that year it is written that, at the request of the Bailies of Hawick, he set free 3 people called 'Bridgs' who had been imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as 'of Bondra' in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1672 he witnessed the baptism of a son of Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland. He was recorded in 2 bonds in 1673. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire for raising money to support the King. He paid the land tax for Boonraw and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1678, valued at £291; he was probably also the man recorded as 'Boonrau for Overtoune', paying the land tax in Oxnam Parish in 1678. In 1680 he witnessed (along with Robert of Horsleyhill) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. He is probably the Laird of 'Meikle Boonraw' who (along with the Laird of Horsleyhill and others) witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1681. In 1692 the lands of Stouslie 'being formerly possest by the deceast George Scott of Boonraw be ane 19 yeares tack' were possessed by his heirs and representatives. He married a daughter of Douglas of Gervald (who was hence grand-daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers). How many children he had is unclear, with Haining citing local tradition that he had 3 sons, George, Archibald and Richard, while Keith Scott records just 1 son, Archibald, and a daughter, Ann. His children may therefore have included: George (said to have been born in 1672, but that seems rather late), who probably died young; Archibald (d.1720, supposedly at an advanced age), who succeeded, but died unmarried, thus ending this branch of the Scotts; Ann, who is also stated to have died unmarried; and Richard, said to have married a daughter of Charles Ogilvie and claimed to be the ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent, who was grandfather of Sir James A.H. Murray. With the murky end of this family, the line of the original Scotts of Synton was also lost. His will is recorded in 1690 (or perhaps 1698). George (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Woll. He was a surgeon in Edinburgh and was probably the George 'son to Robert Scott, of Wallis', who became a surgeon's apprentice with James Rig in Edinburgh in 1640. He was served heir to his father in 1670, although his elder brother James had already sold the lands of Woll. He may have been the Edinburgh surgeon who took on George, son of Thomas of Whitslade, as an apprentice in 1663, and also the George of that name recorded in a bond of appearance in Edinburgh in 1673. George (17th C.) eldest son of Thomas of Whitslade. He was recorded in 1663 as 'son natural to Thomas' when he became a surgeon's apprentice with George Scott in Edinburgh; it is possible this was the same George Scott, son of Robert of Woll, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1640. He seems to have predeceased his father, since his brother Thomas succeeded to Whitslade. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Roberton Parishes. He married Margaret Fairgrieve. His wife's surname was recorded as 'Furgrie' in 1671 and 'ffeirgrive' in 1681. Their children included: Margaret (b.1671), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1681), baptised in Roberton; and Walter (b.1684), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses to the 1671 baptism were Francis Simpson and John Scott. The 1681 witnesses were George Brown and Francis Scott (who was probably related). George (17th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. There was a bond from his father to him for 550 merks Scots. He had a son, Alexander, who was tenant at Roughheugh Mill, and was progenitor of the Scotts of Falla. He is probably the George, son of Thomas in Bonchester, who was on a list of those found guilty of 'nonconformity' in 1684. George (d.c.1686) probably tenant in Borthaugh. He is recorded being 'in Bortoch' when his will was listed in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1686. He was probably related to Walter 'in Burtoch', whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. George (17th C.) described as 'in Dockcleuch' (i.e. Doecleuch), he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s according to James Wilson. He paid £140 for the land tax in Cavers Parish in 1643; the same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. George (17th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish, probably somewhere to the south of the Town. He is recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. He married Janet Black, and their children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1701) and William (b.1704), as well as probably Bessie (b.1702), Isobel (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1701 were smith James Scott (surely related) and Francis Elliot, in 1702 were William Henderson in the Flex and James Davidson in Newbigging, in 1704 were William and Francis Henderson (both smiths at the Flex) and in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. George (17th C.) Hawick resident who was fined £20 Scots in 1688 'for deserting the town when the Militia was listing'. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. George (17th C.) tenant at Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th C.) resident at Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) listed as wright among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also a wright on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. George (17th C.) merchant listed as 'called greina' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed with the word 'Grinna' after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. It is unclear if 'Grinna' is meant to indicate a place or a nickname; however, John is also listed in 1694 with the same name. George (17th C.) resident of Easter Groundistone. He was there according to baptismal records of 1682 and 1688 and also according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Adam Glendinning in Groundistone in 1698. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. Francis in Wester Groundistone. In 1709 George Lorraine was recorded as his servant. He married Agnes Scott in Roberton Parish (actually the old Hassendean) in 1681 and their children included: Robert (b.1682); George (b.1685); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1682 were James C. . . and Robert Scott and in 1688 were William Scott (who may have been related to him or his wife) and William Palmer. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or more likely Hassendean. He married Margaret Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Agnes (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were William Telfer and Andrew 'heughane' (perhaps Huggan) and in 1687 were James Halliwell and Andrew 'heughane'. George (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Burnfoot (probably on Ale). In 1668 he became an apprentice surgeon with George Scott (possibly a relative) in Edinburgh. George (17th C.) described as 'pedder' in 1694 when his wife Marion 'Robisone' was fined for making 'bakes' on the Common. George (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Harwood. In 1698 he became apprentice to barber Robert Cheyne in Edinburgh. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1692); James (b.1694); and Euphame (b.1703). It seems possible that he could be the father of Alexander, miller at Bedrule Mill. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1702 he was recorded as a servant at North Synton. He married Janet Cowan in Ashkirk in 1701 and their children included: John (b.1702); Isobel (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); and George (b.1717). He may be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1690 for William Easton (along with James Veitch) and for James Veitch (along with William Easton); all 3 men probably lived at North Synton. George (17th/18th C.) 'litster' (i.e. dyer) in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a son of 'Walter Scott herd', who may be the same man as 'Crooked Wat'. George (17th/18th C.) removed as a Hawick councillor in 1706 for several charges, including calling the Town Clerk 'ane knave, cheat, and rascal'. It is unclear if this is related to the disputes over the Common Riding that year, or a separate matter. He is probably the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Burnhead. His son George was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. George (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. George 'Wyndheid' (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may be the George who, along with merchant Michael, witnessed a baptism for smith James in 1708. He witnessed another baptism in 1711 for John Scott 'Wyndhead' (servant to Robert Robson). In 1712, along with fellow tailor Archibald, he witnessed a baptism for Robert 'Wyndhead'. He was listed as a tailor in 1714 when he witnessed a further baptism for tailor Archibald (who was probably related). He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Young in 1728. In 1712 he married Elspeth Scott, who was widow of William Scott. To distinguish him from other men of the same name, he is recorded as 'called George Wyndhead'. He is probably related to other Scotts with that designation. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Redford in 1714 and their children included James (b.1729) and Walter (b.1733). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Alton in 1722 and Wester Burnfoot in 1729. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Alton in 1722 (suggesting that they were related). He married Helen, daugher of Walter Hume in Hawick in 1716. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1717); Isobel (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Bessie (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were John and James Scott (who were probably related to him) and in 1729 were John Scott and Richard Turnbull. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1724 and Silverbuthall in 1728 and 1732. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for Robert Scott, resident of Groundistone. He may be the George who got married in Wilton in 1713, with no wife's name recorded. He married Margaret Martin and their children included: George (b.1717); Agnes (b.1719); Margaret (b.1722); Bessie (b.1724); Helen (b.1728); and Ann (b.1732). The witnesses in 1724 were Richard and another George Scott (perhaps the one from Boonraw), in 1728 were Robert Scott and James Dickson and in 1732 were Robert and Walter Scott. His daughter is recorded being buried in Wilton in 1734. It is possible he is the George whose lands in Wilton Parish were valued at £80 in the 1740s. It is also possible that James (b.1715), with no mother's name given, was also his child, and could be the same as James of Silverbuthall and Boonraw. George (d.bef. 1742) merchant in Selkirk. An account of his with Francis, 'messenger' is recorded in 1723. An inventory of his goods is recorded in 1733 and a receipt between the Burgh and his daughter Isobel is recorded in 1742. Perhaps the same merchant Burgess of Selkirk was recorded in 1707. George, younger merchant in Selkirk, was recorded in 1752. George (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick. He was recorded as 'Tacksman of ye custom...' in Hawick in 1722, when he witnessed a baptism for John Hardie. He was 'Miller in Hawick' in 1728. He married Janet Orrock and their children included: Jean (b.1728); Helen (b.1730); and Janet (b.1737). The witnesses in 1728 were Henry Orrock (surely related to his wife) and Robert Scott (perhaps related to him). George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1735. In 1725 he married Mary Swan. Their children (baptised in Selkirk and Ettrick Parishes) included David (b.1731), George (b.1735), Samuel and James (b.1742). George (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1732. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Georges. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1733 when his son Robert was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Christian was baptised in 1738. George (18th C.) merchant who was appointed as one of the Commissioners for building the Teviot Bridge at Hawick in 1738. He was also one of the men (all Councillors presumably) appointed to oversee the building of a new Parish School in 1739. He witnessed baptisms in 1743 for weaver Robert Douglas and his wife Nicholas Scott (who may have been related to him), and in 1745 and 1747 for merchant Robert, who may have been related. He may be the George who is recorded in 1752 giving in money 'for stones of Millport', perhaps connected with repairs to Teviot Brig. In 1755 he was appointed as one of the 'burleymen' to go with the 'spademen' to mark the boundaries of the Common. Probably the same merchant George witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related). He may be the merchant, from the Millport Scotts, who was father of Henry, 'the Hero of Quebec', born in about 1730. George (18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was recorded working on the mill there in 1743. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1747. He married Helen Fletcher (who was from Roberton Parish) in 1734 and their children included: George (b.1736); Robert (b.1738); Margaret (b.1742); Janet (b.1747); and John (b.1749). The witnesses in 1742 were James Ormiston and Walter Hume and in 1747 were James Dryden and George Hart. George (18th C.) joiner at Deanburnhaugh, grandfather of the George who wrote about Deanburnhaugh, as well as Adam who was joiner in Hawick. He married a daughter of William Scott 'the Pether'. George (1724–1815) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and then at Roughheugh Mill. He was tenant farmer at Falla. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, who died in 1790, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander (b.1756), who died young; John, who married his cousin; Euphemia; Alexander (b.1759) of Falla; Thomas (1761–1849); and Elizabeth. He is buried at Bedrule. George (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their son John George was baptised in 1765. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Agnes Robieson, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children included: John and Walter (b.1764); Mary (b.1770); and William (b.1777). George (1734/5–1818) wright in Newcastleton. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Armstrong, who died in 1806, aged 67. Their children included: Jean (1777/8–83), who died at Burnmouth; and 2 who died in infancy. Other children probably included: Archibald (1771/2–1858), also a joiner in Newcastleton, and marked on the same gravestone; and Thomas (1774/5–1846) buried in the adjacent plot. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. George (18th C.) married Janet Martin in Wilton in 1765. George (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 4 farm horses. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed there in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. He was listed as tenant in 1799, along with Charles, to whom he was surely related. In 1801 he was 'Husbandman' at Roughleeneuk on the Militia ballot. George (1773–1861) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Isabel Kedzie. He was a joiner at Deanburnhaugh and also described as a merchant there in 1808 (when his children's previous baptisms were recorded). He was listed as a merchant at Deanburnhaugh on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. In 1800, in Roberton Parish, he married Mary Davidson, who died in 1836, aged 64. Their children included: Mary (b.1801); William (b.1803); Isobel (b.1805); and Robert (b.1808). He was living alone on the 1841 and 1851 censuses and in 1861 was a retired joiner, living with the family of his son William. He may have been related to the earlier joiner of the same name. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. George (b.1778) son of Bailie William. He is recorded in Hawick in 1797 and 1798 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. It is possible that the same George was recorded as a tailor in Hawick on the ballot lists in 1799 and 1801. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (1779–1805) from Singlie in the Ettrick valley, son of William, who was tenant farmer there, and brother of Robert, who was at Todshawhaugh. He was a school-mate of Mungo Park. He trained as a draughtsman and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. He was artist on the expedition of Mungo Park back to Africa in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) married a daughter of George Turnbull, from whom he acquired the farm of Calaburn. He had a son Thomas when he was living at Hawick Shiel. He later lived at Kirkton. He had another son, Robert (b.1800), who was a vet at Kirkton and then Cauldmill. George (d.1826) contractor in Wilton. He married 'Lillias' Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1789, probably when they were both quite young. Their son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1790 (his wife's name being recorded there as 'Lillie'), probably named after his father. Their daughter Sophie was baptised in Wilton in 1793 (his wife then being 'Lillies Englis'), perhaps named after a daughter of Lord Napier (for whose wife his own wife was probably lady's maid) born in 1791. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1791 for William Dalgleish, resident of Roadhead in Wilton. In 1799 his wife (recorded on the Selkirk Parish baptismal record as 'Elanor') had twins at Yair House, where she was working as a lady's maid. The twins were named Francis Napier (after Lord Napier, who at the time owned Wilton Lodge, and for whom his wife had previously worked) and Alexander Pringle (after the owner of Yair); the baptism was attended by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank and Rev. William Shaw of Selkirk. The family were buried in the old Wilton Cemetery and he was listed as 'Contractor Wilton' on the headstone (although precisely what kind of contractor is unclear). It seems likely that he was the George, son of Robert in 'Broadlieburnfoot', baptised in Roberton in 1771. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) he is listed as 'George Scott, Sclentiehall'. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.1834) master of Minto School. He was master at Yarrow school for 2 years, in the early 1780s, taking over from Alexander Wilson, but then moving to Minto. He was certainly Schoolmaster at Minto by 1787 and remained until at least 1826. He signed the list of eligible men from Minto in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1799, his name appearing as 'Geo Scott Skoolm'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Jane Dalgleish (b.1761) in Minto in 1786. Their children included: James (b.1788), clerk of works for architect William Burns in Edinburgh; Jean (1789–1859), who married and moved to Edinburgh; Simon (1792–1871), a clerk; George (1794–1857); Margaret (1797–1867), died unmarried; Walter Dalgleish (1800–1852), advertising agent; and Betty (b.1807). He wrote a will in 1826. Based on the names, it is possible he was the son of James and Margaret Law baptised in Ashkirk in 1755. George (d.bef. 1816) wright and cabinetmaker in Hawick. He married Janet Dryden, who died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776), probably the wright listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1797; Walter (again, b.1777); Helen (b.1784);

and Jane (b.1787). The witnesses in 1776 were John Dryden (presumably related to his wife) and Thomas Huntly. His daughter Mary died in 1781. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholmhill. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation 'Subst.' suggests he may not have served. His name appears again in 1798, but with Francis Neilson, weaver in Peebles, acting as his substitute; his status was confirmed on the amended list of 1799. He was surely related to James, who was farmer at Denholmhill at the same time. George (1777–1853) Border minor poet, who wrote 'Heath Flowers'. He was born at Dingleton, where his father owned 30 acres of land, probably gained by his grandfather from the division of the common ground there in 1756. It was said that the family could trace their origins back 400 years to Ettrick Forest. He was educated at Melrose and Galashiels, then Edinburgh University. Although destined for the ministry, he 'got entangled with a wife and family' and instead became a schoolmaster. At age 22 he had an appointment as teacher in Livingstone and 6 years later became Schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf, starting in 1805. He is recorded as master of Lilliesleaf School on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living in Lilliesleaf with his wife Isabella and children Thomas (mason) and Isabella. He was apparently at odds with the Parish minister David Baxter, but got along well with his successor Adam Gourlay. He also lost many pupils (and hence income) to an 'adventure' school in the village. He retired from teaching in 1850 and in 1851 is recorded as retired schoolmaster living at the schoolhouse in Lilliesleaf. It is said that many of his former pupils rose to great heights in their respective fields, including 6 doctors of medicine who were all more than 6-feet tall, as well as Rev. John Cochrane of Hawick and the poet William Knox. He was patronised by Sir John Riddell of Riddell and also corresponded with Sir Walter Scott. He published a small volume of his poetry, 'Heath Flowers; or, Mountain Melodies' in 1820 (which unfortunately contains very little of local interest). He also had some poems published in 'The Pocket Magazine' and articles in the 'Scots Magazine', including 'A Translation from the Medea of Euripides – A Choral Ode' in 1825. He also wrote a statistical account of Roxburghshire, which was never published. He married Isobel Grant and their children included: Margaret (b.1801); John (b.1803); Thomas (b.1805); George (b.1808); Jean (b.1810); Ann (b.1814); Isobel (b.1817); and Emily (b.1820). George (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1803 he contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French). George (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas in Longnewton. He was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798 among men balloted to serve in the Militia. John Campbell, painter in Edinburgh, served as his substitute in 1798. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as Student of Phisick' at Bewlie Mains in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He may have been son of John, who was farmer at Bewlie Mains at about the same time. George (b.c.1770s) son of Thomas in Northhouse. He was on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. George (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Philhope according to the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. George (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Porteous and their children included Janet (b.1805) and James (b.1807). George (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Davidson and their children included Isabel (b.1805) and Robert (b.1808). George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1808 and his daughter Isabel and son George died in the same year (although it is possible more than one weaver called George are compounded here). Perhaps the same weaver, son of wright 'W Scott', was listed among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; in 1798 he was listed again, as son of Walter (corrected from William), wright in Hawick. He was listed among men who had failed to appear before the committee, but was later sworn in. In 1799 he was 'Son to B. Wm Scott' among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'; however, weaver George was also listed as 'Serving' on the amended list of 1799. Probably the same weaver was listed in Hawick on the ballot in 1801. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Young's Street in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. George (d.bef. 1808) tenant at Whithope Mill. He was recorded there in 1786. His son George died in 1808 and his wife Margaret in 1809. He is surely related to Adam and John, who were tenants in the early years of the 19th century. He may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1774.

His children included George (b.1786). George (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick, he was grandfather of manufacturer Peter. He may have been son of Thomas and Janet (possibly the George born in Wilton Parish in 1779, son of Thomas and Nelly Irwin) or perhaps was a younger brother of Thomas. He married Margaret Affleck and she died in 1867. Their children included: Christina Affleck (1815–75), who married William Laidlaw; George (b.1820/1), who was a grocer; Jane (1824–60); and probably James. He may be the handloom weaver who was living on Melgund Place in 1841, along with his children Jane and James (but with no sign of his wife). George (b.1780) gunmaker on the Sandbed. He is probably the smith in Hawick listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He was a Hawick gunsmith in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. In 1837 it was said in court documents that during the election riot of 1837 David Tully was forced into the Slitrig near his shop. He is recorded at about No. 11 Sandbed on the 1841 census, along with a younger George, probably his son. In 1846 his shop was flooded and many items carried away, with a gun in its case being later found at Burnfoot Mill. George (b.c.1780) resident of Groundistone according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (b.c.1780) servant to William Bell at Menslaws according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was probably related to Andrew, who was also there in 1801. George (1794–1857) son of George, Schoolmaster at Minto. He was educated at Minto and in Edinburgh. He was Parochial Schoolmaster of Cavers from 1814. He was teacher in Denholm in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. In the 1830s he is listed as master of Cavers School and land surveyor in Denholm at the same time. He is responsible for a plan of Denholm village in 1835. He also served as Session Clerk. He was 'Parish Schoolmr.' at Denholm in 1841 and 1851. He is listed in Slater's 1852 directory as Parochial Schoolmaster in Denholm. He probably lived at the old schoolhouse, which was on Denholm Green. He was the earliest teacher of James 'Dictionary' Murray. He married Helen, daughter of John Beattie and Cicily Hall. Their children were: Cecil (b.1822), who died in infancy; Cecil (1823–49); George (b.1825), who worked as an advertising and newspaper agent in Edinburgh; Jeanie (b.1828), who died in infancy; Jeanie (1830–46); Helen (b.1834); and Margaret (b.1836), who died in infancy. By 1861 his wife was recorded as 'Fundholder' and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (1792–1850s) son of John and Helen Scott, from Selkirk Parish. He was born at Newark, where his father worked on the farm, tenanted by Robert Scott (probably not directly related). He was at Synton Parkhead and then at Synton Mill. His wife was Jean, from Yarrow. Their son John (b.1832) was born in Ashkirk and worked as a ploughman, then on the railway. They also had a daughter, Margaret. George (18th/19th C.) married Helen Beattie in Cavers in 1821. George (18th/19th C.) farm steward to Henry Elliot at Gatehousecote. His son James became steward at Hallrule. He died at Spittal-on-Rule. George (b.1804/5) gunmaker and ironmonger on the Sandbed, probably son of gunmaker George. The shop was at No. 11 Sandbed. He was recorded living on Teviot Square in 1851 and 11 Sandbed in 1861 (when he was employing 6 people). In 1860 he presented a sword to the Museum and in 1861 'Garter insignia, formerly belonging to the Marquis of Wellesley'. His wife was Eliza and they had sons Frank C. and James L. George (19th C.) married Mary Thomson in Wilton in 1830. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he was runner-up in the 624 yards race in the 1830 St. Ronan's Games, and winner in 1831. It is said that in 1831 'Scott for ever!' was the general cry. He also won the long race in 1833 and 1834. George (b.1808) from Roberton Parish, son of William and Isobel Glendinning. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flesher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwynd in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isabel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) born in Belses, he was farmer in Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in 1851 as farmer of 12 acres, living on Main Street. His wife was Agnes from Paislay. Their children included Margaret, George, Isabella, Adamina G., Mary and John. George (19th C.) son of shepherd David Scott. He was a shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. He married Isabella Hall ('Tibbie o Wigg', d.1904). They had 9 children, including James (farmer at Overhall), Nellie, Euphemia, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. George (b.1829/30) agricultural labourer from Ettrick. He married Barbara Halliday in Hawick in 1851. His wife was probably sister of the poet John Halliday. Their children included: Robert (b.1852) and James (b.1854), baptised in Hobkirk; Agnes (b.1855), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and George (b.1857) and Helen (b.1859), baptised in Bowden. In 1861 the family were living at Stichelhill in Castleton Parish. Based on the names, it is possible he was the George, son of Robert and Agnes Mitchell, baptised in Yarrow in 1820. George (19th C.) tenant at Bedrule Mill in 1857. George (19th C.) storekeeper in Hawick who was the 5th listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856. George (19th C.) shepherd at Wigg in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. George (b.1817/8) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter (born in Peeblesshire) and William (born in Cavers Parish). George (1820/1–92) from Yarrow, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Robina. George (1820/1–92) grocer on the Howegate, son of George and Margaret Affleck. He was father of Peter, who founded Pesco's. In 1841 he was a clerk, living with Thomas and Janet (possibly his grandparents) on Walter's Wynd. In 1851 he was a frame-worker on the Loan. In 1861 he was recorded as 'Post Messenger' at 19 Howegate. He married Marion Elizabeth (1829–88), daughter of Peter Adamson. Their their children included: George (b.1850), a baker; Peter (1852–1925), manufacturer; Marion (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1860), who signed his death certificate; Thomas (b.1862), who was Cornet in 1887; Elizabeth (b.1864); Catherine (b.1867); Susan (b.1869); and Jemima (b.1872). He died at Drumlanrig Square. George (1836–1904) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Synton Lodge. In 1851 he was still living with his mother and brothers at Dimpleknowe. In 1861 he was a thatcher living in Denholm. He married Margaret Riddell and had children: William (b.1860); Mary (b.1862); Robert Riddell (b.1865); Helen (or 'Nellie', b.1872); Jessie (b.1875); and George (b.1881). All children were baptised in Cavers Parish, except the last, which was in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Canada and he died at Minto, Manitoba. George (b.1836/7) son of weaver Thomas, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at No. 48 High Street. He married Catherine Richardson and their children included Agnes and Mary. George (1837–1907) son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a mill finisher in Hawick. He was a 'Millwright' living at 74 High Street in 1861. He latterly lived at 16 Bourtree Place. In 1860 he firstly married Elizabeth Miller Pringle, daughter of James Pringle, cousin of the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, hosiery manufacturers. Their children were: James Pringle (b.1862), also a mill furnisher; Beatrice (b.1866); and Janet Oliver (b.1868). In 1871 he secondly married Janet (d.1897), daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. Their children were: Mary Greenwood (b.1873); Robert; Francis George (b.1880), composer; and Margaret Lilias, who married Robert Furness. George (1840/1–1940) master baker in Hawick. He was Acting Father twice. He lived at Lyndhurst on Langlands Road. He was probably son of skinner James. George (1850–1926) born in Teviothead. He was agent for the Prudential Insurance Company in Hawick. In 1879 he married Isabella Grieve Laidlaw (1838–1927), youngest daughter of James Laidlaw, farmer at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill. Their children were: George Henry (b.1880), a baker in Carlisle; Isabella Helen (b.1881); Elizabeth ('Bessie', b.1883); and Jemima Margaret (b.1885). George (19th C.) builder who lived at Slitrig Bank. George (1850–1940) eldest son of George and Marion Adamson. He was brother of Peter, who established 'Pesco's'. He was a baker in Hawick. Apparently he and his brother were note draughts players. In 1872 he married Susan Wright Thorburn. Their children were: Margaret Rae (b.1875); Marion A. (b.1877); Agnes Thorburn (b.1878); John T. (b.1880); Georgina (b.1882); Christina ('Kate', b.1884); Peter (b.1886); Isabella Henderson (b.1889); and Elizabeth (b.1891). George (1879–1950) eldest son of Peter, founder of Pesco's. He was Cornet in 1904. He joined the family firm in 1892 and became a Manging Director in about 1903. He was usually referred to as 'Mr. George'. He gifted communion cups to St. George's Kirk in 1921 and lived at Langlee. He married Janet Riddle. George Alexander (1888–1963) born in Hawick, he became a biologist and schoolmaster. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He was Biology Master in Newton Stewart and later at George Heriot's, where he became Head of Biology. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland and a member of the Science Masters Association, Scottish Secondary Teachers Association and Scottish Educational Film Association. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. George Douglas (19th/20th C.) served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI, where he was wounded and invalided out. He was Cornet in 1925 and Acting Father in 1958. J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father (for the 4th time). George (19th/20th C.) great-grandson of millwright Gideon. He was Master of Works in Hawick and lived on Twirlees Terrace. Gerard (13th C.) recorded in a document in Norwich in 1242, relating to some captured sacks of Scottish wool. Lucas 'Scot', mayor of Dunwich, appended his seals instead, and so is probably a relative. He is recorded as 'le Escot' in 1263 when he (unsuccessfully) appealed the death of his son Robert at the hands of Nicholas Percival of 'Dunwych' in Suffolk. Richard, his nephew, accused someone else (also unsuccessfully) of the same murder in 1272. Probably the same Gerald 'le Scot' is recorded in relation to a write of trespass in Northumberland in 1264. Gideon (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In 1621, along with his brother William and mother Bessie Naysmith, they complained about the murderers of his father (2 Elphinstones) still being at large. His name is given as 'Gedane Scottis' and he may be one of the first of the fmily with this forename. Sir Gideon of Highchester (d.1673) 2nd son of Sir William Scott of Harden. His forename came from his maternal grandfather, Sir Gideon Murray. He is usually described as being 'of Highchester', even although the farm is more often called 'Highchesters'. In 1643 he was given the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshiels, as well as others; this was part of his marriage contract with Margaret Hamilton. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646 (as 'Jedeon'), 1648 and probably 1649. He is recorded in 1648 when commissioners had to be appointed for valuation of teinds at Harden, Highchesters, Mabonlaw and Todshaw, following a dispute between him and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1648 he was one of the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. In 1650 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He is listed (along with his wife and 19 other people, presumably servants and farm workers) on the Harden estate in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He is probably the Gideon who witnessed the baptism of Gideon (later of Falnash), son of Robert of Harwood in Hawick in 1651 and another child of Robert in Hawick in 1652. He was the main proponent for having Hassendean Church removed to Roberton in the 1660s (fighting against the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch). He was knighted in 1650. He was appointed Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire by Charles I, and continued through the 1650s. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was also one of the 'tutors' of the young Mary Scott of Buccleuch in the 1650s and was the executor for her will. In 1654 he acted along with John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale on behalf of the Countess Mary, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell; however, he was deeply distrustful of the Earl of Tweeddale, and it appears that both were attempting to exert influence on the other tutors for their own ends, in particular to arrange the marriage of the Countess. In fact his son Walter married Mary in secret (when they were both very young), and there was a continuing power struggle with her mother, the Countess of Wemyss, as well as with the 'Lothian tutors'. In 1660 he borrowed £2400 pounds from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was knighted in 1660, when he accompanied the young Countess of Buccleuch to London, and his son Walter was made Earl of Tarras at the same time. He also served as tutor for Anne of Buccleuch, and continued to have disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors after the death of Mary. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £4800, presumably for backing the wrong side. He had a licence from the Privy Council, allowing him to eat meat during Lent in the 1660s. He is probably the Gideon who is recorded paying the 1663 land tax for £814 in Wilton and £600 in Hassendeaan. About 1666 he was appointed one of the 'curators' of Francis of Davington. Like his younger brother Walter of Raeburn, he sympathised with the religious views of the Society of Friends (i.e. Quakers), and entered into a dispute with Rev. James Kirkton in 1671. In 1673 he matriculate his arms. He was also recorded as grantee in a deed of 1673. He acquired the lands of Harden from his brother Sir William, who nevertheless continued to be 'of Harden', while he was still designated 'of Highchester'. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Hamilton of Preston, and his son Walter (later Earl of Tarras) succeeded to Harden. His other children were: William, who married Jean, daughter of James Kirkaldy of Grange; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell (younger) of that Ilk; Margaret, who married James Corbet of Tollcross, but appears to have later lived in Hawick; another Agnes, who married Sir James Grant of Dalvey and later William Rutherford of Barnhills; Thomas, who became a merchant's apprentice in Rouen in 1671 and a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father in 1677; Gideon, who became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1676; Francis, who became a Captain; and Mary (b.1658), who was baptised in Edinburgh. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was 'son to John Scott of Wool' in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Walter). He may have been known as 'of Newhouse' (although it is unclear where this was). In 1704 he married Jean (b.1688), daughter of William Elliot of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott of Synton; she was sister of William, who was 2nd (but sometimes stated to be 1st) Elliot Laird of Borthwickbrae. It is said that they eloped together, and found themselves unsupported by their families. The Duke of Buccleuch took pity on them and settled them on the farm of Ladhope in Yarrow. Their children were: John (b.1706), who died on the coast of Guinea; William (b.1709), tenant in Kirkhope; Walter (b.1712), who died young; Walter (b.1722), who married 3 times, to a Mowbray, a Napier and a Williamson; Gideon (b.1724); Thomas (1727–96), who settled in Morpeth and married Ann Douglas, who died at the age of 106; Alexander (b.1729), who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope; Isobel, who married James Curle of Moodlaw; Agnes; Betsy; Mary, who married John Mair; Anne Jean, who married James Pott of Dod, farmer at Penchrise; and Christian. One of his descendants (from the Morpeth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon (17th C.) merchant of Glasgow. In 1674 he was made Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow 'gratis, for causes known to the magistrates and council and to the Dean of Guild and his brethren'. Given his unusual forename, he may have been related to local Scotts. Gideon (17th/18th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. In 1676 he became an apprentice to surgeon-apothecary George Stirling in Edinburgh. He died before 1710, without an heir. Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see Gideon of Falnash. Gideon of Highchester (1678–1707) eldest son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Roberton, Howcleuch, Borthwickshiels Mains, Alemoor, etc. In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchesters and other farms to his mother Helen, Countess of Tarras, for supporting his brothers and sisters Helen, Walter, Elizabeth, Agnes, Thomas, Anne and Margaret. In 1695 he had a charter for the Barony of Minto, including the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, as well as Minto, which was erected into a Barony. However, he sold the lands and Barony of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1703. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis, in 1701. In 1704 he was listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 it is recorded that he owed money to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the rent of Todshawhaugh and Whames. In 1697 he married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Kinloch of Gilmerton and secondly married Mary Drummond, daughter of John, Earl of Melfort in 1700 (and after his death she remarried Sir James Sharp of Scotscraig). With his second wife he had 2 sons, Walter and John, who both succeeded to Harden, but had no male heirs. They also had a daughter, Mary. A horn powder flask belonging to him still exists at Mertoun House. Gideon of Falnash (1651–c.1727) 5th son of Robert of Harwood and brother of Walter of Harwood. Note that one of the witnesses at his baptism was Gideon, presumably of Highchester, indicating that this is where his forename came from. He farmed at Fenwick, Goldielands and Alton Croft and lived at Broadhaugh (and although he was 'of Falnash', he appears not to have lived there). He was probably the 'Falnash' who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick in 1677 when he 'confessed the striking of Walter Hardie, and came in the bailies' will'. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1678–1727, and in later years was referred to as 'Auld Falnash'. In the period 1678–94 he was Chamberlain for Hawick, Wilton, Cavers and Hassendean parishes, later referred to as Teviotdalehead. He was still 'of Outerside' in 1692 when he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch, but was 'of Falnesh' when he served the same role in 1694 and 1698. He was Gideon of 'Uttersyderig' (i.e. Outerside) in a deed of 1682 and when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. It is possible he was the Gideon who was imprisoned in 1683 along with other local lairds for being supporters of Covenanters. He was 'of Uttersyde' in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for John Elliot in Harwood. He was the same Gideon 'of Outtersyde' who obtained the lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters half of 'Ladyurd' in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (both in Peeblesshire) from Robert Scott of Glack (who appeared to have no heir, and was possibly his brother) in 1689. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He is probably the Gideon who was listed at Broadhaugh in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was still referred to as 'of Outtersyde' in the early 1690s, but by at least 1694 was 'of Falnash'. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Francis, who rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch; this suggests a family relationship perhaps. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Gideon who was served heir to his brother, William, apothecary in Hawick in 1696. In 1699 he gave up the lands of Ladyurd to James Geddes of Kirkurd, although there is a related court case against him by James Geddes' son James in 1707. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as 'Regal Bailie' of Hawick, i.e. the Duchess's representative in the affairs of the town. In 1700 £100 was given by him (in name of the Duchess) for the poor of Hawick Parish. Also in 1700 he witnessed the baptism for Gideon, son of Hawick merchant Walter Elliot (suggesting that the child was named after him). In about 1705 he was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. He gave a bond of 5,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1703 (presumably on behalf of the Duchess of Buccleuch), which formed the majority of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1704 he was again on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704, the Council resolve to talk with him regarding help with fixing the 'dam brigs', the port at Horsleyhill's Wynd, thatching the Tolbooth, oil for the clock, rope for the bell and shoes for the piper. He had another child named after him in 1704, this time when he witnessed a baptism for his gardener at Fenwick, Walter Paterson. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot, in 1706 others for workman John Shiel and for apothecary Walter (who named his son Gideon, probably after him), in 1707 for Adam Elliot of Arkleton, again for gardener Walter Paterson, for wright John Pringle and for wright John Dalgleish, in 1708 for Bailie George Martin and for glover John Scott, in 1709 for John Scott 'Whitegate' and for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood) and in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1710, he was the second largest landowner, behind the Duchess of Buccleuch. His daughter (and so presumably he) was in Broadhaugh in 1716 when she married Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1717 for John Watson, Clerk to the Regality (along with Walter of Crumhaugh), in 1719 for Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, in 1720 in Hawick for Francis Scott from Harwood (who may have been related to him), and in 1721 in Wilton for Robert of Burnhead and Agnes Scott (his daughter). It was described in 1767 (in depositions given regarding the former use of the Common) that he had warned the tenants of the Duchess of Buccleuch from encroaching on Hawick's Common. He appears to have first married Jeanette (or Janet), eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, with the marriage contract being in 1677 (when she was probably quite young); at that time he was recorded as brother-german to Walter of Harwood. Her will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1679; he is there described as 'Jeidian Scott, writer in Edinburgh, now in Bridhaughe'. He secondly married Mary (b.1660), daughter of James Scott of Thirlestane; she probably died in 1729, when payment was received for ringing the funeral bells 'to the Lede Fenish's'. His children included: Robert, who succeeded to Falnash; Agnes, who married Robert Scott of Burnhead; Beatrice (or Beatrix, probably the 'Beatricks' baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696), who married Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; James (b.1698), baptised in Hawick; Christian, who married a Mr. Johnstone (but this could be confusion with Mary); Gideon, who became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720; and Mary, the youngest child, who married James Johnson of Park Tower in Canonbie Parish in 1727. Isabella Scott (who married William Elliot in Braidlie and Whithaugh in about 1700), said to be a daughter of Scott of Falnash, may have also been his daughter (although perhaps she was too old for this generation). He may also have been father of 'John Scott younger in Falnash', whose widow Janet Aitchison remarried in 1711. The witnesses to the 1698 baptism were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and 'Mr' Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. A 'Graham' of Falnash was recorded as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick in 1721, although this may have been an error. His son Robert is mentioned in connection with the Hawick Parish Session from 1722; so he either started performing the duties of his elderly father before his death, or his death was earlier than 1727. He was already deceased at the end of 1727 when his daughter Mary's marriage was proclaimed in Hawick. He may be the 'Bailie Gideon Scott' who bequeathed £20 to the poor of Hawick Parish when he died. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard along with his first wife Jeanette Elliot – This Gideon Scot he is a pretty Man, Amongst the rest of worthy Shepherds Swain, Of Outersiderig now he is Laird, He was Son to Robert of Har-wood' [CWS]. Gideon of Falnash (d.1759) eldest son of Robert of Falnash, who he succeeded in 1734. He also served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for local estates, referred to as 'Teviotdalehead' in the period 1747–57, being replaced by Robert of Orchard. He leased the farm of Wester Groundistone from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. His lands were valued at £1517 13s 4d in the 1740s. He was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Scott of Whitehaugh in 1753. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who sold off the Falnash estate. The 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire contains a blank for the forename of Scott of Falnash (presumably because it was unclear who his successor was at that time). Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1719, the marriage being at Wilton (but also proclaimed in Roberton). He was at Alemoor in 1721, 1726, 1728 and 1736, Wester Alemoor in 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1733 and 1736. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1721); Margaret (b.1726); Mungo (b.1728); Gideon (b.1729), perhaps father of Gideon the millwright; Ann (b.1729); Alexander (b.1733); twins Jean and Ann (again, b.1733); and Gilbert (b.1736). In the 1733 Roberton baptism he was recorded being in Cavers Parish, suggesting that Christine (b.1735) and Alison (b.1737), baptised in Cavers, were also his children; in 1735 he is recorded being 'in Cavers' itself and in 1737 at Whitriggs. Gideon (18th C.) son of Gideon of Falnash. In 1720 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary to George Cunningham in Edinburgh. Gideon (18th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He is recorded as a thatcher in Hawick in 1740. He married Margaret (or Marion) Hislop, their marriage being recorded in Ashkirk and Cavers Parishes in 1727 (he was from Ashkirk Parish and his wife from Cavers). He was recorded at Shielswoodhaugh in 1727 when his first child was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1727); Gideon (b.1740); Marion (b.1742); and Thomas (b.1745). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Walter Graham and merchant John Cavers. In 1742 the witnesses were the same as those for shoemaker William's child baptised the same day, namely baker Robert (who may have been related to one of them) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. Gideon (d.bef. 1763) druggist in Hawick, perhaps the son of Walter, apothecary in Hawick, born in 1706. He was recorded as 'Druggist' in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Douglas. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1746 in a baptism for one of his children and also when he witnessed baptisms for merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746 and 1747. He married Susanna Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Gilbert (b.1741); Catherine (b.1743); and Elizabeth (b.1746). The baptismal witnesses in 1741 were merchants Francis Gledstains and Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were Alexander of Synton and ex-Bailie William Tudhope and in 1746 were John at Winnington Rig and ex-Bailie Robert Howison. He is also mentioned as a Hawick druggist in a marriage record of 1763, when his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Burnet in Edinburgh. It was probably also his daughter Margaret who married Andrew Porteous there in 1768. He is probably the Gideon who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded living at Midshiels in 1747. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Charles of Crumhaugh and Robert of Fenwick; given these witnesses it seems likely that he is the same man as Gideon in Priesthaugh, brother of Charles of Crumhaugh, with his first wife Rachel Scott perhaps being daughter of Robert of Fenwick. Gideon (d.1806) tenant farmer at Priesthaugh, probably son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and brother of Charles of Crumhaugh. Some accounts say he was 'in Priesthope', but that is probably a transcription error. He was at Priesthaugh in 1753, he and his wife were 'Mr. Gideon Scot and Mrs. Elliot' in 1755 and he was 'Mr.' again at Priesthaugh in 1757. He is recorded in Priesthaugh several times in the Peebles Commissary Court documents in the period 1758–60. In 1783 he took out a bond for £700 with Sir Alexander Don of Newton, John Ker of Cavers and William Riddell of Camieston, which they owed after his death.

He is probably the Gideon recorded at Penchrise on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. His daughter Beatrix was the second wife of Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Wauchope, marrying him in 1789. His descendants were the Scotts in Priesthaugh, which eventually failed in the male line. Walter, farmer at Priesthaugh in 1797 was probably his son. He married Rachel Elliot, and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1753), Robert (b.1755) and Charles (b.1757). His testament after he died lists his living children and executors as Charles and Jean in Priesthaugh and Margaret, widow of Charles Aitchison at Unthank. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, possibly at Stobicote. It is possible that he is the Gideon, son of Gideon, baptised in Roberton in 1729. In 1762 he married Mary Scott, from Canonbie Parish, and she died in 1776. Their children included: Gideon (b.1765), who was probably the Hawick millwright; and Elizabeth, who married millwright James. The witnesses in 1765 were wright Gideon Easton and tailor James Dickson. It seems likely that he is the same Gideon who was resident at Borthwickbrae Parkhead when his children William (b.1772) and James (b.1774) were baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the Gideon whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787. Gideon (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1777 he married Agnes Tudhope; she was also from Hawick Parish and died in 1781. Their son James was baptised in 1779, perhaps the Hawick man of that name who worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway. The witnesses in 1779 were workman James Hogg and Church Officer Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same man as the Gideon who married Mary Scott, if this was his second wife. Gideon (1762–1841) son of William, who was descended from the Scotts of Woll, his mother being Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. He was farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells. He was farmer at Kirkhope (in Yarrow Parish) according to the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. He had a daughter Christian, who died young. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Teindside. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia to replace John Pringle, who was judged unfit; however, he failed to appear and was declared a deserter, with a reward of 1 guinea offered for his apprehension. Weaver Adam Scott was balloted in his place, but then produced a document from the Earl of Dalkeith showing that he had in fact joined the Regiment; in the amended list of 1799 he is recorded among those who were serving in the Militia. Probably the same Gideon was recorded at Southdeanrig when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. It is possible he is the same man who married Agnes Tudhope (and perhaps earlier married Mary Scott). It is unclear if he returned after his years of military service. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Mary Stewart in Cavers in 1788 and their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); Jane (b.1792); and John (b.1794). His wife is recorded as 'Isabel Stuart' in 1791. The witnesses in 1792 were the 'whole Congregation'. Gideon (1765–1833) born at Stobicote, possibly son of Gideon and Mary Scott. His family were supposed to be descended from the Scotts of Davington. He received only 4 months of schooling and became a herdsman as a boy, later serving as an apprentice in Hawick with Walter Turnbull, carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural implement maker. Thereafter he started his own business as a millwright, this later becoming Gideon Scott & Sons, based on the Cross Wynd. As well as building machinery, he was hired as a surveyor and was well known locally as an inventor and amateur astronomer. He is probably the person who 'afterwards earned considerable local distinction as a mathematician and practical astronomer', described standing on top of the Teviot Bridge during a huge thunderstorm at the Common Riding of 1782, watching the spectacle. He suggested the suitability of the Teviot by the Little Haugh for water power, and subsequently William Laidlaw built Teviot Crescent Mills there. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed as a millwright on the Cross Wynd in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He helped convert many of the Hawick mills to water power, for example his firm supplying the new water wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829. He also fitted out mills in Wigan and at Chillingham. He erected windmills at Adderstoneshiel and Penielheugh. In about 1802 he invented an early reaping machine, which was unpopular among the local workers, since it reduced manual labour so much; so after testing it successfuly in the dead of night he smashed it up himself. He was also known for launching balloons at local celebratory events, e.g. to mark the end of the Friday Sports of 1826. Entirely self-taught, he was regarded as a prodigy by the townsfolk, and was a great believer in and advocate for education, starting the Trades' Library in a room of his own house. He was also a leader in the running of the Hawick School of Arts, and gave a lecture there himself, being the first 'layman' to do so (in an age when public lectures were formal and intense affairs), illustrating an astronomy talk with an orrery of his own design. He was also an early influence on the career of John Pringle Nichol (later Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University), who came to Hawick as a school teacher. The pair would walk up to Hilliesland to watch the heavens, or spend the night talking in his astronomical study. For the solar eclipse of 1820 he blocked off a window in his observing room, and set up a screen, so that the many people he invited there could watch without staring directly at the Sun. He also described the aurora borealis seen over Hawick in 1826. Nichol returned to Hawick to watch the 1832 transit of Mercury with him, from a garden in Allars Bank (part of his property there being sold as the site for Allars Kirk in 1811, but in one account the garden was said to be later the site of the Jail, which was further up the street). He was also a close friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny, a fellow self-taught inventor and scientist. He promoted the idea of connecting Hawick to the south by railroad (although his idea involved a route up the Allan Water). He is probably the Gideon who in 1795, 1797, 1798 and 1801 witnessed baptisms for millwright James and Elizabeth Scott (who was probably his sister). A few years before his death there was a great reunion of the families of his 7 sons and 2 daughters, all of them attending the Common Riding festivities that year. There is no known portrait of him, although there are images of his sons Gideon and James (his 5th son), who were also millwrights. Another of his children was Susan, who married James Cranston (and whose daughter Mary married William, son of blacksmith Gavin Pow). He married Margaret Leithead (1772–1847), daughter of Walter and Marjory Thomson, with the marriage taking place in Hawick in 1790. They had children baptised in Hawick, including: Gideon (1792–1867), who moved to London as an engineer; Walter (1794–1831); and Marjory (b.1796). Other children were: John (1797/8–1831), who died at Gosport; James (1804/5), who was living with his mother and 2 brothers in 1841; Andrew (b.c.1810); Gilbert (b.c.1815); Mary (b.c.1815), who married blacksmith Thomas Kerr; and Isabella (b.c.1818). The witnesses in 1792 were the Burgher Congregation and in 1794 and 1796 were the 'Associate Congregation'; the family were thus presumably members of the East Bank Kirk. There must have been an additional son born around 1800. He died at his house on the Cross Wynd. 'Gideon Scott & Sons', machine-makers, engineers and mill-wrights, is listed on Back Damgate in Pigot's 1837 directory (even although this was after his death); the company wrapped up in 1841. In 1841 Margaret was living on the Cross Wynd with sons James, Gilbert and Andrew, and daughter May (probably the same as Marjory). The Museum has a square piece of lead with name 'Gn. Scott, Hawick', which was probably from his firm. W.N. Kennedy wrote an article about him in 1862 and J.N. McKie wrote another in 1966. Gideon (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. He married Mary Bell and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1794. In the baptismal record he was 'at Northhouse in the Parish of Cavers – at present in Whithope'. The same couple are recorded having a daughter Joan baptised in Canonbie in 1798. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nellie Leyden in Wilton in 1793 and their children included Thomas (b.1799) and Walter (b.1801). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Janet Brydon and their children included Christian (b.1813). Gideon (b.c.1770) recorded as an ostler at Wilton Damhead in 1841. He was living there with Helen, probably his wife. He was listed at Damhead (with no occupation given) among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He could be the millwright of that name recorded at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Gideon (b.c.1770s) servant at Skelfhill, recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Archibald was also a servant on the same list and so perhaps related. He could be the Gideon, son of James in Skelfhill, baptised in 1778. Gideon (b.c.1778) grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 28 Langholm Street and living with Agnes, probably his wife. It is possible he is the Gideon recorded as a shepherd at Millburnholm on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Gideon (18th/19th C.) tailor in the Selkirk area. He was the one member of the Selkirk volunteers who failed to muster at the False Alarm of 1804. It is said that on hearing that there was no real invasion (or alternatively, on determining that his new wife was not so ill with alarm that he could not leave), he got the coach 'the Fly' to take him and another man named Rhind to join their comrades at Dalkeith. However, back in Selkirk, he was disgraced, had his buttons ripped off and was expelled from the company, with the Duke of Buccleuch remarking that he was sorry a men of this surname from Ettrick Forest should have behaved so ungallantly. He was on the Militia list for Selkirk in 1810. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Gideon (1785/6–1839) 6th son of William, tenant farmer at Singlie. He took over the lease from his father. He married Elizabeth Ballantyne, and she died in 1878, aged 70. Their children included: Gideon, who farmed Singlie and Hyndhope; and Katherine, who married Alexander Gibson. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He probably had a direct connection to Hawick and was distinct from the Gideon living in London who also subscribed. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Barbara Armstrong in 1828. Gideon (b.c.1797) born outside Roxburghshire, he was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Howegate with his wife Agnes and children Ann, Beatrix and Mary. Gideon (1792–1867), C.E., eldest son of millwright Gideon. It was said that his father entrusted to him the details of the threshing mills they fitted out in Wigan and Chillingham. He could be the 'Gideon Scott, London' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably also the London engineer Gideon, recorded donating several items to the Museum. In 1860 he donated 'end of beam of Royal George', 'pair of pistols which belonged to Napoleon I when a lieutenant', pieces of stone from the foundation stone of Old London Bridge, part of an old hatchet and tobacco pipe found when excavating for Victoria Park bridge in London, 'pyramid of burnt material from the Pyramids of Egypt', part of the Atlantic telegraph cable from H.M.S. Agamemnon, 'clinker formed by the ashes of bank-notes burnt at the Bank of England', a newspaper from the wreck of the Royal Mail Steamer Ava, samples of ore, shells and wood, and silver and copper coins. In 1863 he donated an 'old gun-lock from Tower of London', copper coins and a copy of the Times from 1798. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Eliza Smith and their children included Walter (b.1860). Gideon (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Ellen Burnet in 1861. Gideon (b.1839) probably the only son of Gideon, farmer at Singlie (who seems to have died the year he was born). He gave up Singlie and farmed instead at Hyndhope. In about 1879 he emigrated to New Zealand. He had 4 sons (including James and William) and 2 daughters. Gideon (b.1829/30) son of James. He was a frame-worker living at 6 Round Close in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Isabella. Gideon (19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret, daughter of Tom Rutherford, blacksmith at Bonchester. They had 1 son and 4 daughters, including Agnes (b.1881), who was born in Melrose Parish. His wife later lived in Hawick. Gilbert (12th C.) recorded as 'Gilbertus Scoth' between about 1165 and 1177, when he was asked to perambulate the lands for a charter between Eschina de Molle (wife of Walter, the Steward) and the monks of Paisley Abbey. It is unclear if he was related to other Scotts. Gilbert (13th C.) listed as 'le Escot' when he was on an assize for the Lovels in Sussex in 1264. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Richard 'de Suarland', and was described as at that time servant in 'Swarland'. Gilbert (14th C.) recorded in a taxation list of scholars living in Paris sometime in the period 1329–36. It is possible he is the same man as Gilbert 'de Benauchtin' or Gilbert Fleming. Gilbert (14th/15th C.) Scotsman who was given a grant of safe conduct through England in 1413. The group included William Douglas of Drumlanrig and several others, but it is unclear where he was from. Gilbert (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. Probably the same Gilbert was deceased in 1502 when his son and heir James (and James' wife Janet) inherited his lands in the Cowgate in Edinburgh. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Adam 'in aldinershope' had remission for several crimes at the Justice-aire in Selkirk, including resetting him. His crimes including stealing a horse from James Turnbull and another horse from David Dalgleish. It is not clear what branch of the Scotts he may have come from. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded as 'bailie in that part' in Galashiels in 1535 when the lands there were given to Henry, Lord Methven. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1545 as 'indweller of Deip...' when he and his associates were said to have taken a French ship. Gilbert of Bonnington (d.1675) probably the eldest son of James of Bonnington and his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of William Eliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh. He was succeeded his younger brother Charles. Note, this is Bonnington in Lothian (distinct from the earlier Scotts of Bonnington family). He is buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Gilbert (18th C.) son of Alexander of Synton. In 1733 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary to Gilbert Laurie in Edinburgh. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) youngest son of Charles of Woll. He was Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia 1811–12. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. In 1841 he was living at 'Pirnie-hall' in Hobkirk and in 1851 at Gatehousecote Cottages. He married Helen Aitchison in Maxton Parish in 1838. Their children included: David (b.1838); Andrew (b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Christian (b.1845); Janet B. (or Jessie, b.1847); Helen (b.1851); Gilbert (b.1854); and John (b.1856/7). Some of his earlier children were baptised in Ancrum, Maxton and Roxburgh Parishes. Gilbert (b.c.1815) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, Andrew and James. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. In 1831 there was a paternity case against him by Helen, daughter of Hawick spinner George Cunningham. Gilbert McKenzie (b.1826/7) listed as baker and shopkeeper on Wilton Place in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on Wilton Kirkstyle as a grocer and baker, employing 3 men. He lived with his siblings Helen, Andrew and Adam, and nephew Walter. Gladstanes (b.1813/4) born in Teviothead Parish, he was a labourer living at Unthank Cottage in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Sykefoot in Ewes. It is unclear where his first name came from. He married Isabell Wilson from Langholm and their children included Adam (b.1836), Janet (b.1838), Helen (b.1841), Ann (b.1843), John (b.1845), William (b.1847), Margaret (b.1849), Wilhelmina (or 'Mina', b.1850) and James (b.1854). He may have been a son of shepherd (and later travelling grocer) Adam and Janet Leithead. Gosenius (14th C.) recorded along with Roland, living in Paris at the village of St. Victor sometime in the period 1329–35/6. Graham of Falnash (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick. This seems likly to be a transcription error for Gideon of Falnash. The record of 1721 concerns the trial of Walter Dean for stealing a grey mare from John Currie from Northumberland. Grizel see Grizel Borthwick Grizel (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as widow of John Marshal in Daynzeltoun (i.e. Dingleton) near Melrose. She married a second time to Thomas 'Freir', and had relatives Adam Marshal in Dingleton and his son James Marshal, to whom she sold her lands. She may be related to other branches of the Scotts where the same forename occurs. Harry (17th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw. In 1621 he was 'son natural to Walter Scott, brother-german to Robert Scott of Hirdschaw' when he became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh, with Alexander Harrower. He is probably the merchant 'Harie' who was deceased in 1667 when his son Walter became a writer Burgess of Edinburgh. Helen (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. She is listed between 2 unnamed 'nutrici' (nurses), suggesting this was also her occupation. It is possible she was the same Helen listed among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he complained against the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others in 1549. Helen (d.1552) daughter and heiress of Mark of Haughhead in Eckford Parish. She was retoured as heir to 'Hauchheid' in 1620 and at about the same time she married Robert Hall. The new superior, Sir John Ker of Jedburgh, refused to give sasine, which instead was given by an appointed Sheriff acting for the Crown. There was continued dispute, with the superior refusing to give sasine, and sending his sons and others to violently attack the farm in 1621, including striking her so that she 'fell in a swowne and lay as a dead persone a long space', despite 'being grite with chyld'. There was a confirming sasine from Thomas, Earl of Haddington in 1632. There was a further confirmation in 1648 to the couple and their only son Henry, this time from William Kerr, Earl of Lothian. Henry became famous as a Covenanter. Helen (d.c.1576) 'sometime spouse' to William Lawson in Roslin. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1576/7. Helen (d.c.1584) 'sometime spouse' to Thomas Younger in Linton, Tweeddale. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1584. Helen 'Nelly' (18th C.) resident of Hawick. She was on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Musum' in 1784 (one of only 9 women listed). Helen 'Nelly' (1789/90–1861) daughter of carrier William and Margaret Gray. She also had a brother William. She was a shopkeeper at Stobs Woodfoot. She died unmarried. Henry (12th/13th C.) witness to 2 grants to Lindores Abbey by Earl David, brother of the Scottish King, in the late 1190s. He also witnessed a 'quitclaim' in the Lidores Chartulary in about 1210. Henry (13th C.) recorded visiting Durnahm in about 1230 along with 3 other Scotsmen, Matthew Scott, Abel de Golin and Robert de Edinburgh. He is listed as 'Master', meaning he was a qualified priest. Henry (13th C.) recorded on the 1256 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was 'Henricus Scot' from 'Edelingham'. 'Henricus Scoticus' is listed in a separate case, and probably a different man. Henry (13th C.) listed on the 1279 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was a burgess of Newcastle on Tyne at that time. His name is written 'le Scot' and 'le Schot'. There are also pledge made by 'Henrici Scot' and 'Henrico le Scot' in the same year. He could be the 'Henry le Escot' who was a pledge for Nicholas in Newcastle in 1266, and the Henry'le Escot' who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with John and Nicholas also listed). Henry (13th C.) recorded in a document from King Edward I to the Sheriff of Cumberland in 1280. He bought a mare at Carlisle Fair, and stated that 'John de Wyncheles' claimed it was his and furtively stole it from him. This case appears to have been used as a precedent to clarify the March laws to deal with such cross-Border incidents. It seems clear that he was from the Scottish side, although how he was related to other Scotts is unknown. Henry (13th C.) recorded as 'Dominus' (i.e. qualified priest) in Bologna in 1268/9 when he witnessed the purchase of a codex by Simon of Kinross. It is possible he was the 'Master H...' who witnessed a document as an official of Dunkeld in 1282. Henry (13th C.) man from Edinburgh who paid homage to Edward I in 1296, where he is recorded as 'Henry le Scot'. He may also be the 'Henricus Scotus' who is listed in 1296 among Scotsmen renouncing their treaty with France, in order to reconcile with England. His lands in Edinburgh were also restored to him in that year. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Henry of Balwearie. Sir Henry of Balwearie (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Michael. He was described as 'Henricus Scott de Fife, miles' when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1304. He was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Janet, who married John Melville of Carnbee, may have been his daughter. Henry (13th/14th C.) among the men on the inquest at Roxburgh for the inheritance of William de Charteris for the half barony of Wilton in 1303/4. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he is the first known Henry with a local connection. However, it is possible that he is the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and had his lands restored. Henry (14th C.) recorded in the English garrison at Edinburgh in 1335/6. Henry (14th C.) recorded in 1364 in an indenture by Henry Strother, Sheriff of Northumberland, where he is charged to pay money to vintners in Newcastle. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Henry (14th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. In 1389 there was a request to the Pope for him to be granted a benefice from Lindores Abbey, and if granted he would resign the perpetual vicarage of Dron in Dunblane Diocese. Henry (15th C.) mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1457 in relation to a loan in Flanders. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Henry (15th C.) recorded as 'Henricus Scot filius Roberti Scot' in 1461 when he graduated from Glasgow University. His father was Robert, but it is unclear what branch of the Scotts they came from. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His son John was separately fined for not appearing. He was listed as 'in conwale riggis', but it is unclear where this was. Henry (15th C.) recorded in Haddington in 1495 when the customs from his sheep skins. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Perhaps the same Henry, owner of a ship, was recorded in Ross in 1509 and 1513. Henry (16th C.) witness in 1549 to a charter in which Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Perhaps the same Henry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. Henry (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1531. Henry (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hawick Parish in 1574/5, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick and several neighbouring parishes (i.e. he was the actual minister, obtaining most of the stipend). John Sandilands was Parson about the same time. He was also recorded as Reader in Hawick in 1576, 1578 and 1579, with the position being vacant in 1580. His stiped was £10 8s. 10d. There is no evidence regarding which branch of the family he came from. Henry (17th C.) witness, along with Robert, to the baptism of a son of Thomas Scott in Hawick in 1687. These other Scotts may have been closely related to him.

Note that the forename 'Henry' was not common among Scotts of the time. Henry of Palacehill (17th C.) mentioned by Walter of Satchells in his 'postral' history. Satchells writes that in a dream he sees many current Scotts, 'And Henry Scot of Pallace-hill he call'd up the rear'. Satchells adds that 'He's natural Son unto that bold Barron. Sir John Scot the Knight of Ancrum. He may have been brother of half-brother of Charles of Palacehill (or else he was the same man as Charles, if Scott of Satchells was confused over his forename). Henry (1676–1730) 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He was made Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage and Baron Scott of Goldielands in 1706, just in time to vote for the Treaty of Union. He was chosen as one of the Scottish representative peers in Parliament 1713–30, and also served in the army. His mother complained about how much money she had lavished on him and stated in one letter of 1719/20 than 'he is now acting the old Scots proverb – 'ens wod an' ey the war' [i.e. 'daft once, daft always']. He married Anne, daughter of William Duncombe of Battlesden, and she died in 1720. Their children were: Francis, 2nd Earl of Deloraine, who married Mary Lister and Mary Scrope; Henry, 3rd Earl of Deloraine, who married Elizabeth Fenwick; and Anne, who died in infancy. He secondly married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and their children were: Georgina Caroline (1727–1809), who married James Peachey; and Henrietta (b.1728), who married Nicholas Boyce. He himself died before his mother. Henry (1712–39/40) 3rd Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl. He held the rank of Captain in the Royal Navy. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenwick. Their children were: Henry (1737–1807), 4th Earl; and John (1738–88). After the death of his brother Francis in 1739 he gained the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. However, he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry 'the Hero o Quebec' (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the 'Milnport Scotts', he was son of George, a merchant. He became a Burgess in 1752 and in 1753 married Jean Sanderson, who by all accounts drove him into the army. The local tradition of his story is as follows (related in the 1863 Transactions by William Norman Kennedy, and mentioned briefly by James Wilson in 1850 and again in 1858). He distinguished himself in military service in Canada, being promoted through the ranks and achieving a commission without purchase as a Major. He led a decisive attack on an island rock at Cape Breton in 1758, permitting Louisbourg to be taken. His main moment of fame came in 1759 on the Heights of Abram near Quebec City, where he was reportedly first to enter the gate of the city. There he planted the Union Jack on the walls, apparently uncontrollably exclaiming 'Hawick for ever'. In this seminal moment in Canadian history Gen. Wolfe's forces were victorious over the French, although both leaders were slain. Wolfe was nicknamed 'the Hero of Quebec' throughout Britain, but in Hawick that epithet was reserved for Henry Scott. Afterwards he was once more promoted, but apparently died aboard ship on the way home before he received the promotion, with relatives and townspeople suspecting he was murdered by jealous fellow officers. This Hawick version bears some similarity to the documented life of a Maj. George Scott, although with several important differences, hence it is difficult to separate fact from fancy here (perhaps the Hawick man was at Quebec, but the connection with Louisburg may have come from the story of 'Major' Scott in Percy's 'Anecdotes of Enterprise' (Vol. 3, Part 2), popular in the 19th century; Maj. George Scott was already in the army in 1750 and eventually became Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica, dying in a duel in 1767, his will mentioning his wife Abigail and 3 brothers, at least one of whom was in Halifax, and hence he seems unlikely to be the Hawick man). Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly the case that a man from the Mill Port Scotts played some part in the events in Quebec, even if they were not quite as dramatic as recalled later (presumably Wilson and Kennedy obtained their information from people who were only about a generation removed from the historical events). A verse of James Hogg's 'Teribus' commemorated Scott in the early 19th century – 'Long this boast on truth's been founded On Quebec's high rampart sounded – Hawick for ever, and independent!' [JH]. His marriage to 'Jane' Sanderson in 1753 is listed in the parish records. She survived him by about 50 years and lived for a while at the cottage called 'the Saaverin' near Stobs, living on a government pension. It is said that he had no children, but that her habits and drinking drove him to abandon her and join the army. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. In 1763 he married Frances, daughter of Thomas Heath, but they separated before 1780. He died in London without issue and his titles became extinct. Henry (1741–1817) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Singlie, and grandson of William in Milsington. He farmed at Over Deloraine in the Ettrick valley from 1770. He paid the horse taxes there in the period 1785–97 and the dog taxes in 1797. He married a daughter of Anderson of Rashiegrain, with whom he had a daughter Alison. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Sibbald. Their children were: Robert (b.1783), who probably died young; Margaret (b.1784), who married Dr. Thomas Anderson of Selkirk in 1808. Eliza (b.1786), who married Rev. W.B. Shaw, minister of Roberton and later Ewes; John (1788–1864), also tenant at Over Deloraine; Henry (1790–1873), farmer at Over Kirkhope; James (1792–1864); and William (b.1794), who became a doctor with the East India Company. Eliza and Margaret were said to have been the prototypes for the characters of 'Minna' and 'Brenda' in Sir Walter Scott's 'The Pirate', and Eliza was also celebrated as 'The Bonnie Lass o' Deloraine' in the Ettrick Shepherd's poem (note that Keith Scott mixes the 2 daughter's husbands). Henry (1746–1812) 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, son of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the 2nd Duke. He succeeded as a child, was educated at Eton, and when young spent nearly 3 years travelling in Europe with Dr. Adam Smith. His 'curator' during his minority was Charles Townshend, his step-father. He had a charter for many lands in Roxburghshire in 1751. He gained the Crumhaugh estates in about 1760, as well as many other local lands (including Harwood and Teindside) about the same time. He settled in Dalkeith, and spent much of his time in Scotland. It is said that he would sometimes visit his tenants in disguise. He made his first visit to Hawick in 1764, when he was welcomed by the Bailies. He (or his tutors) was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. In 1767 (while he was still a minor) his agents started proceedings against the Town of Hawick, claiming rights of pasturage on the Common; when the final decision was made in 1777 he gained 330 Scots acres of what had been Hawick Common. Additionally in about 1769 he (or his Commissioners) brought a case against some inhabitants of Hawick for not paying multures on 'his Grace's mill of Hawick'. In Selkirk in 1778 a bill is recorded 'for drink to the men who carried the colours before his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch'. He was taxed for having a either 1 or 2 gamekeepers at Bowhill in the period 1778–90 and was taxed for having 4 dogs at Bowhill and 15 in Langholm in 1797. He was responsible for making Sir Walter Scott Sheriff in Selkirkshire and was the first President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783. He published a paper called 'Abstract of a Register of the Weather kept at Branxholme, for ten years, ending December 31, 1783'. On the outbreak of war with France in 1778 he raised a regiment of fencibles, mainly from his own estates. In 1785 he paid for half the costs to have the main streets of Hawick properly paved and gave £100 for the new Town Hall in 1786. He is also credited with support for the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike. In 1785 he paid the land tax for lands in Selkirk Parish. In 1788 his lands in Roxburghshire included large parts of Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Melrose, Roberton and Wilton Parishes, as well as Hassendean, the Baronies of Eckford and Lempitlaw, the teinds of Maxton, the customs of St. Boswell's Fair and part of Lanton. In 1794 he succeeded to Caroline Park and other estates that were held by his mother. In 1798 he became Colonel of the militia in Edinburgh, the 'Midlothian Fencibles', assuming control again in 1803 after the truce broke down. He gained the Queensberry and other titles of the Douglases of Drumlanrig in 1810. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1804–12. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. Known as 'Duke Henry' or 'the Good Duke', he had a reputation for being generous and was said to be highly popular among the locals. However, in 1767 it was he (or presumably his advisors on his behalf) who raised an action in the Court of Session against Hawick, concerning ownership of the Common, which ultimately led to the Division of 1777. He also established Newcastleton in 1793 and was known as an agricultural improver. In 1767 he married Lady Elizabeth Montagu, only surviving daughter of George, Duke of Montagu; she became a patron of many charities in Edinburgh and died in 1827, aged 84. The Buccleuch family gained vast estates in England through this marriage. He was succeeded by his son Charles William Henry (1772–1819), who adopted the surname Montagu-Scott. His other children were: George (b.1768), Earl of Dalkeith, who died in infancy; Mary (1769–1823), who married James George, Viscount Stopford and later Earl of Courtown; Elizabeth (1770–1837), who married Alexander, 10th Lord Home; Caroline (1774–1854), who married Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead, who was later 6th Marquess of Queensberry; Henry James (1776–1845), Baron Montagu of Broughton; and Harriet (1780–1833), who married William, Earl of Ancram, who was later 6th Marquess of Lothian. He died at Dalkeith and is buried there – 'Contented, therefore, we maun be, E'en wi' the hut we sit in – They say o' landlords east and west, Oor ain Duk Henry is the best O' a' the Lairds o' Britain' [HSR]. Henry (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth 'Cummin' and their son Thomas was baptised in 1772. Henry (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Grieve and their children included Walter (b.1772) and Michael (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were Walter and John Grieve (who were surely related to his wife). He may be the shoemaker Henry who (along with ex-Bailie Andrew) witnessed baptisms in 1776, 1778 and 1791 for merahcnt William. Henry (18th/19th C.) wright at Milsington. His wife died in Hawick Parish in 1809. A daughter married John Murray, from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. Henry of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th/19th C.) son of Francis James, he was the last Laird of Horsleyhill. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish. In 1792 he married Catherine, daughter of John Hay of Newhall. His only child was Hannah Charlotte, who married Sir John James Douglas (whose son became Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas on inheriting the lands) and secondly married William Scott-Kerr of Chatto and Sunlaws. Henry James Montagu (1776–1845) Baron Montagu of Boughton, younger brother of the 4th Duke of Buccleuch. He acted as guardian to his nephew Walter, the 5th Duke, during his minority. The pair were made Honorary Burgesses when they passed through Hawick in 1821. He succeeded to the Montagu Baronetcy on the death of his grandfather, George Duke of Montagu, and adopted Montagu as his surname. He was Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia from 1798 and Lieutenant-Colonel 1802–09. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1804 he married his cousin Jane Margaret Douglas (d.1859), who was eldest daughter of Archibald, Lord Douglas of Douglas and his aunt Frances. They had 4 daughters: Lucy Elizabeth (d.1877), who married Cospatrick Alexander, Earl of Home; Mary Margaret, who married Lieut.-Col. Frederick Clinton; Jane Caroline (d.1846), who died unmarried; and Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry (b.c.1770s) recorded as labourer at Henderon's Knowe on the ballot lists for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. Francis was a labourer there on the same list and so perhaps related. Henry 'Harry' (18th/19th C.) resident of the Millport in Hawick. The death of his wife Jane is recorded in 1824. It is possible he was one of the Millport Scotts, and hence related to Henry, the 'Hero of Quebec'. Henry (1780–1852) son of William, tenant in Singlie. He went into business as a hat manufacturer in Edinburgh. Along with his hat-making partner John Grieve, he was a great supporter of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He was also in partnership with his cousin Henry (son of Robert, tenant at Over Deloraine), who took over the hat business after his death. Henry (1790–1873) 2nd son of Henry, tenant at Over Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He became Laird of Over Kirkhope and tenant in Crosslie, as well as being a hatter in Edinburgh. He was also (confusingly) in partnership with his cousin, Henry Scott, 5th son of William, tenant in Singlie, and took over the business when his cousin died. Their company 'Messrs. H. Scott & Co. hat manufacturers Edinburgh' subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1820 he married Isabella Martin. Their children were: Henry (b.1830), probably died young; John, tenant in Crosslie; William Henry (b.1836), who emigrated to Canada; Elizabeth, who married James Alexander; Agnes, who married Matthew Whiting; Isabella, who married Mr. Mein, dentist in Edinburgh; Janet; and Margaret. Henry Erskine (d.1847) son of William and decendent of the Scotts of Clarilaw, he was born at Brighton. He succeeded to the lands of Ashieburn when his father died in 1807, but he sold them before his own death. Henry (1796/7–1866) farm-worker and farmer. He began as a ploughman and was also a shepherd, later becoming a farm steward, managing Stelshaw (near Bewcastle) for William Aitchison of Linhope. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Penchrise Cottage. In 1820 in Cavers Parish he married Mina, daughter of James Lunn; she died at Milsington in 1888, aged 89. Their children included: Beatrice, who married Walter Thomson, and may also have had a son John with William Aitchison of Linhope in 1843, who was raised by his grandparents; Thomas (b.1825), born at Crailing; Marion (1828–1909), who married Thomas Scott, farmer at Milsington; William (b.1831); James (1836–1921); and Henry (b.1844), who married Janet Ewart. He was grandfather of Henry Anderson, long time resident of Rulewater. He died at Stelshaw and is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Henry (b.1801/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Milsington Shankfoot, in 1851 he was at Deephope in Ettrick Parish and in 1861 he was a boarder at Tweed Bridge End. He married Mary Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1826 and their children included: Thomas (b.1829); James (b.1831); Mary (b.1833); William (b.1836/7); Henry (b.1839/40); and John (b.1845/6). Henry (b.1808/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eilrig. He was unmarried and living with servants and lodgers in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 people. In 1854 he married Mary Moffat (from Canonbie) and their children included: Janet (b.1854/5); Mary (b.1856); James (b.1857); William (b.1859); Thomas (b.1860); Robert (b.1862); George (b.1863); and Henry (b.1866). Henry Francis of Harden, 7th Lord Polwarth, see Henry Francis Hepburne-Scott. Henry Ale (1828–81) eldest son of John Sibbald in Over Deloraine and descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He married Jane Mills of Horsburgh Castle. Their children were: John (b.1863), who emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A.; Jane Purves, who married Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope; Christina, who married Robert M. Mills from Melbourne; Lizzie Mills, who married Archibald C. Morrison from Edinburgh; Georgina Henrietta; and Arbuthnot. Henry John Alexander Makdougall of Gala (1901–40) son of Hugh James Elibank Scott-Makdougall of Makertoun and grandson of Maj. Hugh, 9th of Gala. He succeeded his uncle John as 11th Laird. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He became Captain in the 60th Rifles, King's Royal Rifle Corps. In 1935 he matriculated arms and had his surname legally changed from Scott-Makdougall to Scott, but retaing Makdougall as a middle name. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He was killed in action in Calais, France. He was succeeded by Christopher Bartle Hugh, son of his sister Jean Winifred Mary Scott Makdougall. Henry Lucas (1932/3–76) self-employed steeplejack. He died on Christmas Eve after falling 80 feet from a mill chimney he was demolishing on Commercial Road. Herbert (12th C.) Clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He served several Bishops between about 1150 and the 1170s. For example, in the early 1160s he was 'master' and 'clerk' when he witnessed a gift to St. Andrews Cathedral Priory. He was at Berwick in 1166/7 (when also called 'Osbert') and also sometimes called 'Robert' in the 1270s. Herbert (12th C.) Clerk asociated with Richard de Morville, Constable of Scotland in about 1280. He is probably distinct from the clerk of St. Andrews. Hercules of Brotherton (1659–1725), W.S., son of Hercules of Brotherton in Kincardinshire. He was a writer in Edinburgh who became a Writer to the Signet in 1719. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow in 1718. He married Helen, eldest daughter of Sir Charles Ramsay of Balmain and was succeeded by his son Lieut.-Gen. James. Hugh (13th C.) witness in about the 1140s to a charter for the lands of Conveth in Kincardineshire and also a gift of Balcormo in Fife at about the same time. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Hugo Scot de Nessebyk' and 'Hugone Scot de Nesebick' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His wife Marjorie is also mentioned. He may be the same man as 'Hugo le Scot de Kantuar' who is recorded in 2 separate cases involving lands in Corebridge. Perhaps the same 'Hugone Scotto' was recorded in connection with Warkworth in an inventory of the Priory of Durham. Hugh of Scotsloch (d.c.1618) from a branch of the Scotts that settled near Irvine in Ayrshire in the 1500s. His name is usually written 'Hew'. He was Customar in Irvone in 1589, Bailie in 1609 and Provost in 1615. An earlier Hugh, who was Provost of Irvine in 1571, may have been an ancestor. He married Margaret Wallace and their children included: Lawrence, an advocate in Edinburgh; James of Scotsloch, J.P., who married Agnes Blair and secondly married Lillias Scott; Margaret, who died unmarried; Janet, who married John Blair, Provost of Irvine; and Susanne, who married James Blair, her brother-in-law. Hugh (17th C.) recorded in 1626 as servitor to William Douglas of Drumlanrig when he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. Hugh of Greenhead and Gala (d.c.1645) 2nd surviving son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden. He was also earlier referred to as 'of Deuchar', but became the first Scott of Gala. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1617 he was recorded among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). In 1619 he was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of his brother Walter. In 1622 he was mentioned in a rental document in Melrose. He is also mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records as caution for John Watson of Boldside and John White of Greenhead. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will. He was 'Hew Scott, sone to Walter Scott of Harden' in 1644 in a registration of rental for Regality of Melrose lands, and further mentioned in bonds in Melrose in the 1640s, when he was Bailie of the Regality. In 1621 he married Jean Pringle of Galashiels, daughter and heiress of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. Their children were: Anne; James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh; Walter, a Major in the Army; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Auchty-Donald in Aberdeenshire; John, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648 and settled in Italy; David, who was an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1652; Gideon, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1654; Francis, who was referred to as 'brother-german' of James in 1664 and 1665; and William, still alive in 1652, who was probably the Capt. William 'brother to Galloscheills' in 1658. Hugh of Gala (d.c.1697) son of James. He was recorded as 'fiar' in 1673, in a deed along with his father. He was probably the Laird of Gala whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £3600 in 1678. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1681–82 and on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. However, he was apprehended in 1684 (along with Walter, Earl of Tarras and other Border Lairds) for refusing to support Episcopalianism; his name was given as a conspirator by a tortured minister. In 1688 Walter of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him and Walter in Wauchope. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Thomas, who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1708 and married Elizabeth Borthwick; Hugh; Patrick, who died young; John, who became a surgeon-apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1699, was later a Colonel in the Guards and served as Deupte Baron Bailie in Galashiels; Grizel, who married John Pringle of Torsonce; Margaret, who died young; and Anna, who married Walter of Raeburn, then Henry McDougall of Makerstoun and finally a Home of Eccles. His son James was served as his heir in 1697 and his will was recorded in 1698. Rev. Hugh (1630/1–91) recorded as 'Hew', he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1649. He was called to Bedrule in late 1657 and ordained there in 1658. However, he was deprived in 1662 for being a Covenanter and forced to leave the Presbytery, being later replaced by James Adamson. He was 'indulged' (i.e. allowed to resume his duties again) in 1672 and became minister at Oxnam, moving to Galashiels later the same year. He continued there until 1678 and by 1688 (the dates may be confused here) was minister at Stow. He was a member of the Assembly of 1690. He was described as 'faithfull and painfull in his calling' and 'singularly pious'. In 1659 he married Jean, only daughter of Lancelot Pringle of Leyis and she died in 1709. Their their children were David, Helen (who married Thomas Waldie in Edinburgh, and was allowed a guinea by the Presbytery in 1725) and David (again, or another error). Hugh of Gala (d.1771) 5th Laird of Gala, son of Sir James. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1742. He was recorded in the 1740s as owner of lands in Melrose Parish valued at more than £210. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Stewart of Stewartfield. Their children were: James (b.1730), who died young; John (b.1732), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Euphemia, who died young; Magdalene, who also died young; Anne; Catherine, who married Capt. John Douglas of Ederton, a brother of the Laird of Cavers, who later became Laird himself; Christian (b.1737); Isobel, who died young; and Stewart (b.1741). Hugh of Harden (1758–1841) son of Walter and Diana Home Campbell (daughter of the last Earl of Marchmont). There are documents of 1767, 1774 and 1779 confirming him as the heir to Harden. He was 'younger of Harden' when admitted to the Roxburghshire voters' roll in 1780. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He also inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1796. He was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire in 1788. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1780–84 and in 1812 was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. There was an attempt to get him to stand as a candidate (for the Linlithgow Burghs), but he was not interested. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he is recorded paying tax for 'The two

Oakwoods & Mill', as well as 'Whithillbrae, Hitlarburn' and Inner Huntly in Yarrow Parish. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary's Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1820 he assumed the additional surname of Hepburne, the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descending to him through his great-great-grandmother, Helen Hepburne, Countess of Tarras. He subscribed to Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1795 he married Harriet Brühl, daughter of Hans Maurice, Count de Brühl of Martinskirk, Saxon Ambassador at the Court of St. James's. This Lady Polwarth was a patron of Sir Walter Scott (and also something of an artist, with sketches of her young sons Henry Francis and Francis surviving); she died in 1853. His children were: Charles Walter (b.1796), who died young; Henry Francis, who succeeded; Rev. William Hugh (1801–68), Rector of Maiden Newton, Dorset; Rev. George William (1804–30), Rector of Kentisbeare, Devon, who was given the lands of Bewlie in 1825, and died without issue; Francis (1806–84), who gained the lands of Bewlie in 1831; Harriet Diana; Maria Amabel, who married Maj.-Gen. George C.D. Lewis; Elizabeth Anne, who married Col. Charles Wyndham of Rogate, Sussex, M.P.; and Anne, who married Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswood. He had his portrait painted in 1787. In 1815 he, his wife and their 8 children all subscribed to James Barrie's book of poetry. Hugh (d.1818) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–97. He had 2 farm horses, as well as a saddle horse, along with David, who was presumably his brother or son. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Col. Hugh of Gala (1764–95) son of John, he was 7th Laird. He became Colonel in the 26th (Cameronian) Regimant and died during an insurrection in Grenada. He paid the land tax for Galashiels and Blindlee in 1785. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but said to be 'an officer in the Army, now in Canada' who would vote with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787 he married Isabella, daughter of Prof. Alexander Monro of Craiglockart and Auchenbowie. They had an only child, John, who succeeded. Maj. Hugh of Gala (1822–77) son of John, he was 9th Laird. He held the rank of Major in the Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia 1855–59. He was also Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Justice of the Peace in that county. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Isabella, daughter and heiress of Capt. Charles Kinnaird Johnstone-Gordon. Their children were: John Henry Francis Kinnaird, who succeeded; Hugh James Elibank (b.1861), who adopted the surname Scott-Makdougall when he succeeded to Makerstoun from his first cousin twice-removed, and his son Henry John became 11th Laird of Gala; Magdalen Augusta Lavinia, who married Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis John Davies, Commander-in-Chief Scottish Command; and Maj. Charles Archibald Ramsay (1863–1920) of the South Wales Borderers. He died in France. Hugh (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wells. His wife Agnes Veitch died in 1821, aged 45, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard, along with a daughter, Agnes. Humphrey (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Lauder in 1493 as 'umfridus scot'. Thomas Brown was fined for not presenting him to answer for the death of John Atkinson. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Iain Hunter (1968–) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. He worked for joinery firm Brydon's and attended Borders College, eventually joining the technical staff and later the teaching staff. He was a founder member of the band Scocha with David Chapman. Even although he spent most of his working life in Gala, he has been heavily involved in promoting Hawick's culture and history. In 2004 he played the part of James Knox at the bicentenary re-enactment of the 'False Alairm'. He sings 'The Bonnie Banner Blue' on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry' for which he produced all the recordings. He has been involved in many local projects, including being the driving force behind the James Thomson memorial statue and the Archæological Society Transactions archive. Ingram (d.1616) one of the men who, in 1615, slew the sheep belonging to Sir James Douglas at Howpasley, at the instigation of Lady Scott, widow of Howpasley. He fled to the 'Northe', where he was later apprehended along with 'Wattie' Scott (possibly a near relative) and was hanged in Edinburgh. He may have been related to some of the others, who were Jock 'the Suckler', 'Marion's Geordie' and William 'in Satchells'. He met them at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley before they 'ran throw the haill flok of scheip, slew, lamet, and menzet to the number of threscoir'. Isaac (12th/13th C.) probably from Brechin, he was a Clerk of St. Andrews

Diocese. His surname was later sometimes 'Forteviot', referring to the benefice of Forteviot he held in Perthshire. This suggests he may not have been related to other Scotts. He witnessed several charters in the 1190s and early 1200s was 'Master' by 1198. He witnessed a charter for the Bishop of Brechin in 1202 and witnessed a charter by Walter, son of Alan the Steward to St. Andrews Priory in 1204. He also witnessed 2 charters related to the Diocese of Glasgow in about 1210. He was gifted Forteviot by Cambuskenneth Abbey in about 1210. He is not recorded after 1213. He had a son, Nazar. Isabel (15th/16th C.) daughter of Robert of Aikwood and sister of Michael. She married James Murray, who owned the lands of Bowhill. In 1529 she was already a widow when her daughter Isabella Murray resigned the southern half of Bowhill to Michael and Michael's son William (her nephew). She is recorded in 1533 as wife of Alexander 'Elwand' whe she assigned her lands in Kershope (in Ettrick Forest) to her 'brother german' Michael. In 1539 she was 'Esebell Scott' when she discharged a loan from Michael. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when Margaret Oliver was fined by the Magistrates for calling her 'witchesgait, and saying that she devoored her awine child'. Isabel (18th/19th C.) recorded as a witness in 1802 and 1804 to baptisms in Hawick. The other witness was Mrs. Arkle, probably mother of the Hawick minister. The next baptisms recorded were for George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804 and for James Sanderson and Isabel Scott in 1811, both of which could also be her. One of the witnesses in 1811 was Agnes, who may have been related to her. Isabella (1694–1748) daughter of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her 2nd husband, Charles Cornwallis. She was known as Lady Isabella Scott and was the only one of the Duchess' children to outlive her. In 1731 she was infefted by her mother in the lordship of Melrose. She was named the Duchesses 'sole executrix in England' in her will of 1722/3. According to her mother's last will, she was also given the personal estate of the Duchess in England in 1732. Her lands in Melrose Parish were valued at over £6000 in the 1740s. She died unmarried and Melrose was inherited by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. Isabella nee Hogg (b.1793/4) married Walter Scott, grocer and spirit dealer. She was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow at about 8 Buccleuch Street, living with her children Agnes, Walter, Robert, Mary Ann and Andrew. Isobel (13th C.) recorded in 1296 when she paid homage to Edward I. She was from Fife and was one of only a small number of women on the list. Her name is recorded as 'Isabele Scot'. She was presumably a widow or heiress. Isobel (16th C.) elder daughter of George. A memorandum in Perthshire in 1551 has her agreeing to give up her claims to inherit from Sir John Lam in favour of her sister Isobella (who had essentially the same name). Another document states that her husband was John Hutchison and describes more details of the land agreement in Abernethy; one of the procurators was 'Mr. William', who may have been a relative. Isobel (d.c.1581) 'sometime spouse' to John Ferne in Strone in the Parish of Tannadice, Angus. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. Isobel (d.c.1583) 'sometime spouse' to John Allan in Kenmure, Renfrewshire. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1583. Isobel (d.c.1587) 'sometime spouse' to Andrew Malcolm, baxter, Burgess of Perth. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1587. Isobel (d.c.1591) lawful daughter of the deceased Andrew Scott, Burgess of Inverkeithing. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1591. Her father may be the Andrew, Bailie of Inverkeithing recorded in 1541, and her mother may have been Andrew's wife Elizabeth Brown, who had her will registered in Edinburgh in 1577. Isobel (d.c.1600) 'sometime spouse' to John Govan of 'Foullertoun' in the Parish of Monkland, Lanarkshire. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1600. Isobel 'Lady Synton' nee Douglas (16th/17th C.) wife of the last Walter of Synton, who died in 1608. She was daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and probably the aunt of Ann Douglas, who married Sir William Douglas of Cavers. She appears to have thereafter lived at South Synton. In 1615 she is described as 'the guidwyffe of South Sinton' when she was summoned to the Presbytery for publicly abusing the minister of Ashkirk, Alexander Hogg, between the Sunday sermons. In the next year she was charged with not attending her own church, saying 'She wald not repare to her kirk all the dayes of her lyf, nouther wald she gif ane reason therefor'. This presumably stemmed from a disagreement with the minister's new ways. It is stated that she preferred to take communion at Lilliesleaf and Hassendean, and was rebuked by the ministers there for doing so. She apparently eventually reconciled with the minister and was readmitted to the Ashkirk communion. Her children were George of Synton (who sold the estate), Anne, Archibald, Elspeth and Christian. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in the Ashkirk Session records of 1635 as 'Isabel Scott in Synton Mill'. She complained that Margaret Tullie had called her a witch and a thief. Tullie denied calling her a witch, but claimed she could prove that she was a thief, and called several witnesses to support the claim that she had robbed the purse of Andrew Nichol in Synton Mill. However, the outcome was 'that they ken her to be ane honest woman, and free of any thyft so far as they ken or know'. Her accuser was made to sit at 'ye place of repentence'. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel of Whitehaugh (c.1675–1759) daughter of Walter and sister of Rev. Robert of Roberton. She succeeded to the (liferent of) Whitehaugh estates on the death of her brother William in 1750. In 1753 she married Rev. William Somerville, minister of Hawick (and was said to be in her 70s at that point). She died without any children and her second cousin John succeeded her to Whitehaugh. In 1761 her step-children Thomas and Agnes Somerville brought an action against John, but lost the case. J. of Grahamswood (17th C.) signatory of the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His name is given as 'J. Scott of Grameswood', but it is unclear where this might have been. James (13th C.) recorded as James 'le Scot' in 1256 when he was arrested in the town of 'Roubiry' (probably Rothbury) along with Robert of Crailing, on suspicion of larceny. James (14th C.) listed in the English garrison at Roxburgh in 1311/2. Perhaps the same James had his horse appraised in Berwick in the same year. James (15th C.) servant of the King recorded in 1454 when he received his fee. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. James (15th C.) recorded as witness to the 1464/5 sasine granting the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He appears as 'Jacobo Scot'. He may be the same as James of Kirkurd. James (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487. Other witnesses included Adam Scott and local landowners. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but it is possible he was the same as James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. James of Kirkurd (d.c.1501) later referred to as 'of Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean'. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Henderland; hence he was brother of David of Branxholme and Buccleuch and Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. However, the fact that his name does not appear in an entail of Branxholme made by David in 1488 (while those of Alexander and other more distant Scotts appear) suggests that he may not have been a full brother of David. He was witness to a 'letter of revision' in 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. In 1484 he was granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) from their superior, David Lindsay of the Byres. He appears to have resigned Kirkurd at the same time. He also acquired the lands of Hassendean from the Cunninghams of Glencairn. He was probably the 'Jacobi Scot' who leased the lands of Falside in Ettrick Forest from 1473 and in 1490 granted the lands of Middlestead of Falside by James II for helping to expel rebels. Also in 1477 his fine for retaining a cottage in Falside was remitted. He was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492; he is there 'Jacobum Scot de Hasinden'. He may have been the 'James Scot of Kirkvod' transcribed as witness to a document in 1494 relating to lands in Hassendean, and he was 'of Hassendean' when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine. Also in 1494 he gave a charter of the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his son David, reserving the liferent to himself. Among the witnesses were his son John, as well as Robert of 'Achinstancleich', and 3 other Scotts, William, Walter and Robert, who may have been related. His wife Margaret was also mentioned in this charter, but her surname is not recorded. He is probably the James who had 16 sheep stolen from him at 'fawsyd' according to a case brought against John in Tushielaw in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was 'in hassinden' when his son David had remission for stealing livestock from farms of the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the 'Jacobo Scot' who was granted income from the land of Falside in 1499; in 1501 the rental was assigned to his wife Margaret and son John. Also in 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as 'Jacobi Scot in Hassindane' in relation to remittance of a fine on John Hay of Yester. In 1503 he is still recorded having the lease of Falside (although he may have been deceased by this time). His sons were: John Scott of Over Newhall (later Burnhead) and of Hassendean, his heir; David of Hassendean; William of Hassendean; Robert of Nether Newhall (later Burnfoot); and Adam of Clarilaw. One of his daughters may have married George Gledstains (who is listed as 'brother' of Adam in Clarilaw and William in 1526). He was probably also the James whose wife Margaret received the lands of Falside (in Ettrick) 'in liferent' in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (possibly his son) being granted heredity of Falside (which was later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean). He is probably also the James of Hassendean whose son Walter was witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1494–1513. He was somehow associated with the King's stable. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Perhaps the same James 'once in the King's avery' (i.e. where oats and other food for horses was kept) was given a payment in 1538. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'in Askirk' (i.e. Ashkirk) when he served as surety for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, who had stolen sheep from several farms. Robert of Stirches was also surety. This suggests that he was related to the Scotts of Headshaw and of Stirches. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing cattle from the farm of Cauldshiels (along with Edmond Taylor), belonging to Ralph Ker, with his surety being John in Hassendean. Additionally in 1502 he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, for stealing horses from Lauder. In 1526 he was listed as being 'of Askirk' among the many Borderers who were pardoned for supporting the Homes against the Earl of Arran (perhaps a couple of years earlier); his son Walter was also listed. John of Ashkirk, killed in 1526 and Walter in Ashkirk, recorded in 1533, were possibly descendants. James of Broadmeadows (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being 'de braidmadois' when his son William had remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. He was also 'de braidmedois' in 1502 when his son John had remission for stealing 2 horses from Yair, with David of Galalaw as surety. This suggests that there were Scotts who owned land at Broadmeadows much earlier than the branch that would be there in the 17th century. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other branches of the Scotts, but he may have been related to the Scotts of Hassendean or Galalaw. Walter in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean, was also recorded at the same Justice-aire in 1502 and may have been related. Given the similarity of names, it is possible he is the same man as James of Kirkurd. James (15th/16th C.) son and heir of the deceased Gilbert, recorded in 1502 when he and his wife Janet inherited his lands in the Cowgate in Edinburgh. His father may have been the Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. James (d.1563) 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the church. He was probably brother of Sir Alexander, who was appointed Vice-Register of Scotland in 1534. He was described in a legal document as nephew of Sir Alexander, rather than brother, which confuses things. During the reign of James V he was Clerk to the Treasury, and was recorded being paid as such in 1533. He is probably the James, writer in the Exchequer, who is recorded in 1538 and 1540. In 1543 he succeeded Alexander Scott (probably his brother) as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine; Kirkurd Church (long associated with the Scotts) was connected with the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. Like his predecessor he was also one of the Auditors of the Treasurer's Accounts (1544–62) and is recorded several times in this period as Provost of Corstorphine. In 1554 he was appointed as an Ordinary Lord of Session. He had a manse built at Corstorphine, which contained his coat of arms. In 1560 he was granted the parsonage of Kirkurd (in Peeblesshire) by Trinity Collegiate Church (in Edinburgh) along with William, Burgess of Edinburgh (and presumably a near relative). The man of the same name who was 'servitor to the Treasurer' in 1597/8 may have been related. His son William was mentioned in 1560. He was succeeded as Provost of Corstorphine by his nephew William, Burgess of Irvine. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as being 'in Holfurd' (probably Howford) on the 1526 list of Borders men pardoned for their support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. James 'Beld Jamie' (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as being 'callit Beld Jame', with James 'in Holfurd' and James 'of Ingland' listed right before and after him, respectively. He was presumably bald. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers given remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being 'of Ingland', but it is unclear what this means. James (16th C.) tenant in the lands of 'Kemna' in Aberdeenshire. He is thus recorded in a dispute with their superiorm Archibald Douglas of Glenbervie in 1535. James (16th C.) recorded as Bailie of Selkirk in 1528, 1530, 1531, 1534 and 1541. In 1534 he was procurator for his cousin Peter Porteous. In 1541 one of the witnesses was John, who may have been related. Probably the same James was Bailie there according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1541. James of Flex (16th C.) witness to a 1556 document relating to the transfer of Nether Harden between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden. James (16th C.) resident of 'Quhithoip' who was listed in 1549 among those whose lands had been attacked by Walter Ker of Cessford and others, in a complaint by Sir Walter of Buccleuch. His lands were probably Whitehope in Yarrow (rather than Whithope in the Borthwick valley). Adam in Whitehope was also listed and Helen was listed right after him and so was probably a relative. He is probably related to the James, recorded in Whitehope around 1580. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as 'Jacobo Scott eius seruo', presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James 'Bailzie' (16th C.) mentioned in Hawick's first existing sasine (of any detail), dating from 1558, when he was sold a piece of land (perhaps corresponding to what was later called 'Wylie's Dub') by Alexander Scott. He is referred to as 'alias Bailzie', suggesting that this was a nickname, and that he was not in fact a Bailie of the Town (or had previously been a Bailie). James (d.c.1564) son of Walter 'in Hassindene'. He was listed among the men tried in 1564 for the murder of David of Hassendean (who may have been a relative of some sort). Other men involved included Elliots of Horsleyhill. It appears that he was one of the men who were executed for the crime. His relationship to the other Scotts is unclear, however, it may be that he was a nephew of the David who was murdered. These events may have been the catalyst for the deadly feud between the Scotts and the Elliots that lasted for several years. James (16th C.) illegitimate son of John Scott, who was Vicar of Hawick in the 1530s. He appears to have been legitimised in 1538, the document given by John of Burnhead. In 1556 he had a precept of sasine, also from John of Burnhead. This was probably for the lands his father had held at Wester and Easter Muremaw (later called 'Lees'). James 'of Prynleis' (16th C.) recorded in 1563 when he had a contract in Edinburgh with John, son of the deceased William, Burgess of Arbroath. His lands were probably Prinlaws in Fife, since the contract was for lands in that county. He was purchasing lands from John, who was heir to his mother, Christine Cockburn, who was eldest sister of John Cockburn of Wester Newton. In a second contract of 1563, he was 'of Prinleis', when he had an agreement with 'Johnne Scot brother and heir of the late James Dawsoun, indweller in Leith', with one of the witnesses being the same John, son of William, Burgess of Arbroath. James of Alton Croft (16th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as 'of Altoun-Crofts' among the 24 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been descended from the Scotts of Allanhaugh. If he existed, he must have been related to the later Walter of Alton Croft. James (16th C.) described as 'in Bradisholme, par. of Monkland' when his will was registered in Hamilton Commissariot in 1564. James (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as the man who collected the teinds for Hassendean and Cavers. He was presumably an agent of some sort for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Roberton (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1559 involving Harden and as witness in 1579 to the payment of Ker of Cessford's fine for the failure of young Ker of Faldonside to marry Janet, sister of Buccleuch. In 1590 he was listed on the roll of 'Landit Men' of Scotland. He may be the James 'of Robertoun' who was listed among Scotts and others charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace' in 1599. It is unclear how he was related to the Johns of Roberton recorded earlier and later. It is possible he was a brother of the former John (and hence younger son of Stephen) and uncle of the John who was supposedly present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. James (d.bef. 1580) probably son of John, who was younger of Synton. He was described as 'in Quhitslaid' (i.e. Whitslade) in 1574 when he and William Scott 'in Harden' paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside (later Howpasley) for a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot. They also had a 'letter of reversion' for a loan on the lands of 'Auldtrouss' in Ettrick Forest as well as Easter Craik in the same year. In 1580 he was the deceased James 'in Quhittisland' when there was a marriage contract between his son Robert and Elizabeth, sister of Robert of Aikwood; his brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly are also mentioned. His son Robert witnessed a transaction in 1580 for Robert of Aikwood. It is possible he was the same man as James in Dodbank, who was grandfather of Capt. Walter of Satchells. James (16th C.) recorded as 'elder' in Selkirk in 1579. This was in regard to lands pertaining to John Keane (son of William Keane) and Janet Scott, with James younger also mentioned. He also witnessed another transaction in the same year and may be the Burgess of Selkirk who represented the Laird of Buccleuch's tenants in Huntly in another case in Selkirk in 1579. Additionally he sold lands in Selkirk to John Govenlock. In 1579/80 he was 'elder burgess in Selkirk' when his son Robert witnessed a transaction. He is probably the James recorded as a deceased Burgess of Selkirk in 1580 in instruments relating to his son and heir Robert. In 1581 he was recorded as occupier of lands in Selkirk that had previously belonged to the Earl of Angus; James, younger was also mentioned. James (16th C.) Reader of Ashkirk Parish in 1575 (not to be confused with John, who was minister here at the same time). In 1579 he was listed as 'reder' among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. A record in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1579/80 states that he was to take Thomas Cranston to 'the parish kirk of Askirk' and 'thair to place him in the pulpat and deliver the buk of god in his hands', giving Cranston possession of the parsonage and vicarage, as well as the 'manss gleib and kirkland'. He was also described as Vicar in 1586. However, in 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Southdean), who were deprived for 'abusing the sacraments', and then excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence. In 1590 he was 'in Syntounmylne' on a long list of offenders who ordered to appear to answer for their religious offences. In 1590 he was one of 3 men (the others being Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh and Thomas Newbie, vicar at Hassendean) who agreed never to abuse the sacraments nor function in the kirks after being threatened with death, and it was decided that 'they sould be tane to the mercat-croce of Edinburghe, and stand twa houris, with paiparis on thair heidis, contening the cryme'. It may be that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation, and had not abandoned his ways. He was also the described as 'at South Synton Mill' and 'in Sintonmill' and was a close associate of Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh. James (16th C.) webster in Edinburgh, eldest son of webster John. His father was already deceased when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh in 1579. James (16th C.) merchant in Edinburgh, eldest son of smith William. His father was already deceased when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh in 1583. James (16th C.) painter in Glasgow. He was recorded in 1574 as heir to 'payntoure' Patrick Scott and was thereby made a Burgess of Glasgow. His eldest lawful son George, also a painter, was made a Burgess in 1623 (by which time he was deceased). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. James (16th C.) baxter in Glasgow, 2nd son of baxter Thomas. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1577. The baxter Thomas, son and heir of John, who was made a Burgess in 1611 (as well as tailor James, 2nd son of baxter John, made a Burgess in 1613). He may be the deceased baxter whose daughter Katherine married maltman Gilbert Hall, who became a Burgess there in 1620. Sir James of the Hillhead of Covington (d.c.1577) registered his will in Edinburgh in 1577. His lands were in South Lanarkshire, bit it is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. James (d.c.1581) tenant in 'Lynrig' in Lanarkshire. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. James (d.c.1582) mariner who lived in Leith. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1582. James of 'Wester-Sawling' (d.c.1583) Burgess of Inverkeithing. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1583. James (d.c.1583) tenant in 'Eister-Casche', Strathmiglo Parish, Fife. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1583/4. He was surely related to David from the same place, whose wife's will was recorded in 1591. James (16th C.) cordiner in Hawick recorded in 1581, brother of George and Robert (who was a Burgess). In 1581 he and his brother Robert wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document 'witht my hand twicheand the pen led by the notar vunderwrittin' (suggesting that, unlike his brother Robert, he was not able to write). It is unclear how this family might be related to other Scotts. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'younger' in Selkirk, along with John 'elder'. Also in 1581 he refused to purchase 2 horses from Borthwickbrae as part of an assessment of taxes there and was selected as an arbitrator in another case. It is possible he is the 'James Scott, called Litle James' who was a Burgess in Selkirk in 1590 when there was a band for not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill; 'Litle William' is also listed and so may have been a relative. He could be the Burgess of Selkirk whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1596. If not, then he could be the James who represented Selkirk in a dispute with John Murray of Philiphaugh in about 1606. James (16th C.) resident of 'Quhithoip', which was probably Whitehope in Yarrow. He was surely related to (or perhaps the same man) as the James in the same place in 1549. In 1580 Alexander Gledstains, Burgess of Selkirk, tranferred an annual rent for a tenenement in Selkirk to him. In 1581 he was recorded in 'Quhithop' and 'collector of the maills of Ettrick Forest' when Patrick Murray of Falahill offered to pay him for taxes due on Lewnshope, Hangingshaw and Harehead and Adam Hislop in Tinnis claimed he had already paid him for the same lands. Perhaps the sams James 'in Quhithoip' was recorded in 1592 when Thomas Ker of Cavers gave caution for him. It is possible he is the same James 'in Quhyhope clerk in this detail' who acted as clerk for an indenture between the March Wardens in 1594/5. He may also be the James 'in Quhythop', Chamberlain-Depute of Ettrick Forest, recorded in 1603 when he requested money from Stewart of Traquair. He was deceased in 1629 when recorded being 'in Quheithope' (i.e. Whitehope in Yarrow) when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned. James of Whithope (16th C.) perhaps related to earlier Scotts of Whithope. He was 'in Quhithop' in 1580 when he received 200 merks from Robert Scott of Haining for the lands of 'Maining Mot'. He could be the same man as James in Whitehope in Yarrow; despite William, son of John in Whames, being one of the witnesses, it is still likely that his lands were those in Yarrow rather than the Borthwick. In 1592 his cautioner was Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre, for his good behaviour and loyalty to the King. In 1602 he was 'of Quhithoip' and described as a 'man' of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when Sir William Stewart of Traquair complained that he had stolen from his farms and then obtained a suspension of the letters against him, later stealing 50 sheep from his tenants at Blackhouse; not appearing he was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £424 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. Robert of Haining was his surety in 1602 that he would pay what he owed. In 1603 he was referred to as 'chamberlain depute of Ettrik Forrest' in a dispute with Sie William Stewart of Traquair over taxation. James of Gilmanscleuch (16th C.) eldest son of John of Thirlestane with his 2nd wife Marian Douglas (this was the claim of Scott of Satchells, refuted by John Scott of Rodono, but confirmed by Keith Scott). In 1580 he witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts in 1589. In 1593 he was 'of Gilminiscleuch' in dispute with William Cranston (fiar of that Ilk) over possession of 'Fawodscheill'; his son Robert, as well as Arthur of Gamescleuch were also involved and all 3 were declared as rebels. He is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of the Warden, Lord Maxwell, and his men in 1593 at Dryfe Sands; his brother Robert was also listed. He is probably the man transcribed being 'of Gemmylliscleuch' (although that seems like Gamescleuch) in 1599 when charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. His 'oy' (i.e. grandson) 'Alie Batie' is mentioned in a bond of 1609, involving Scotts of Thirlestane, Headshaw and Tushielaw. He is 'James of Gilmerscleugh' when he witnessed the 1612 bond for keeping peace on the Border. He could have been one of the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch who was said to be responsible for the death of a son of Walter Scott of Harden. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had 3 other sons: William; Andrew; and Adam. William and Adam, brothers of Robert of Gilmanscleuch, were recorded in 1631. James (16th C.) tenant in Crailing of Katherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst. In 1586 his mistress complained to the Privy Council that he had been attacked by Mungo Kirkton of Fainrington and his brothers John, George and William, as well as John Kirkton in Denesyde. James (16th C.) tenant in 'Clairmestoune' in Cramond Parish. The will of his wife Barbara Crawford was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. James (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as 'Jame Scott in Beschawhill', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear where he lived. James (d.c.1598) 'indweller in Leith' whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1598. James (d.c.1599) referred to as 'elder, in Easter-Lumbaney' in Abernethy Parish, Fife, when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1599. James (16th C.) 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He had a 'tack' of the lands of Dodbank. He was probably the grandfather of Captain Walter of Satchells. Scott of Satchells says that he was a younger son of Walter of Synton, with his brothers being Robert of Whitslade, William of Huntly and Thomas of Whitehaughbrae, but that seems to be confused, with Walter of Synton instead being his grandfather. The name of his wife is unrecorded. His eldest son was Robert, who had charters connected with Dodbank and Satchells in 1607–09. James of Kirkhouses (16th C.) possibly 4th son of George of Synton. Capt. Scott of Satchells says that he went on the mission to rescue Kinmont Willie in place of Scott of Synton in 1596. He was father of John of Kirkhouses, who inherited in 1609. However, it seems likely there were multiple generations confused here. James, son of John in Kirkhouses was recorded, along with his father, as witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579. In 1581/2 he was recorded as first-born son to John in Kirkhouses when he took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. James (16th C.) recorded in 1579 among men who witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining, with the Walters of Stirches, Harden and Headshaw also acting as witnesses. He is listed being once of South Bowhill. In 1580 he owned money to John Dawson in Selkirk and in 1580/1 he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk. His lands in Selkirk were mentioned in 1582 and he was also then warned to appear in Selkirk to accept redemption money. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Bowhill. James (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh in 1579 when it is recorded that James Burne, indweller in Selkirk, owed him £3 10s. He may have been related to the earlier Scotts in Borthaugh. James (16th C.) son of John of Drinkstone. In 1581 he and his father witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; Scotts of Raesknowe and Allanhaugh were also witnesses. James of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He held the lands of 'Hundilshope' in Peeblesshire. In 1578/9 he was one of the men accused of accompanying his brother Walter to attack the farm of Gattonside, and denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge. In 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenants to be harmless in 'his three husband lands lying in Hundishoip'. He is probably the James, brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1594/5 William Cranston, younger of that Ilk was surety for him. He is recorded in a charter of 1596 and was cautioner in a bond involving Peebles in 1599. In 1602 he and others were removed from the lands of Sir William Stewart of Traquair by Gideon Murray of Elibank. His sons were probably: John; James; Robert in Holly Arch; and Thomas in Hundleshope. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Mekle Jame Eister' in 1590, along with Robert Scott of Haining, when a group of Murrays were put under caution not to harm them. In turn, James Donaldson of Broadmeadows was caution for him not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill. It is unclear how he might have been connected with other Scotts. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1595 his son William became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh. It is not known how he was related to other Scotts. James of Scotsloch (d.1636), J.P., son of Hugh of Scotsloch and brother of Lawrence of Harperrig. Like his father, he was Customar, Bailie and Provost of Irvine in the 1630s. In 1617 he purchased his brother's interest in Scotsloch. In 1633 he purchased Clonbeith and Darnrule near Kilwinning. He firstly married Agnes Blair and secondly married Lillias, daughter of Rev. Robert Scott, who was Rector of the University of Glasgow. He had 4 daughters: one who married Thomas Cunningham; Agnes, who married Capt. Brice Blair of 'Boigsyd'; Margaret, who married advocate John 'Eleis'; and Lillias, who married merchant Hugh Boyd. In 1645 his daughters Margaret, Agnes and Lillias were served as his heirs. James of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood and brother of Robert, William and Walter. He was recorded in 1599 when he was cautioner for William in Glack, that he would not harm the community of Peebles. He is recorded in 1601 when he and his brothers Robert, William and Walter, together with John 'in Quholplaw' were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of 'Wowmet' (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). In 1608 he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk; his brother William was also there. He could be the James in Bowhill recorded as witness to a document in Selkirk in 1610. Sir James of Balwearie (d.1606) son of Sir William of Balwearie in Fife and distant descendent of the Scotts of Branxholme. He was knighted in 1590, at the coronation of Queen Anne of Denmark. His younger brother Robert was a servant of the rebel Earl of Bothwell. He took part in the Falkland Raid in 1592 and was involved with Catholic-leaning leaders of Scotland to depose James VI. After being imprisoned, Sir Walter 'the Bold' of Buccleuch pleaded with Queen Anne to spare his life. He was fined and eventually released. Afterwards he served as cautioner for Sir Walter of Buccleuch several times. In particular, in 1596 he was cautioner for £10,000 that those for whom Sir Walter were responsible would obey the law. In 1599 he was absolved from liability for Walter ('Auld Wat') of Harden. In 1600 his procurator in court was Robert of Haining, and they denied that several Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts were Sir Walter's 'men'. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Andrew Wardlaw of Torrie. He was succeeded by his son William, but little remained of the family estates by then. He had a daughter Janet, who married Sir John Boswell of Balmuto and may also have had a son James (ancestor of the Scotts of Logie). James (16th/17th C.) maltman in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1596. This was 'the second of the burgesses granted to the provost this year'. His eldest lawful son James, a merchant, was made a Burgess in 1626. Their connection to other Scotts in unclear. James of Foulshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 and in 1617 was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council. He succeeded John, who must have been either his father or brother. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then Walter. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) from an unknown branch of the Scotts. However, later cautioners for the family were Scotts of Castleside and Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were closely related. He is probably the James, listed as tenant in Newark in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was 'in Newerkmiln' in 1581 when he resigned his tenement in Selkirk in liferent to his wife Marion Stoddart. Also in 1581 he and his wife owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. In 1582 his first-born son John resigned to him his lands in Selkirk. In 1585 he was 'in Newerkmyln' when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him 'that the vassals, tenants and servants of Williame, Earl of Angus shall be harmless' of him. In 1592 he was recorded as Chamberlain for Margaret Douglas, wife of the Earl of Bothwell, for the lands in Ettrick Forest that she was given in liferent by her first husband, Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Sometime around 1603–7 he left Newark to his son John, and became a Magistrate in Selkirk. James (16th/17th C.) perhaps tenant at Nether Bonchester. Walter Deans (writing in 1887) claims his name is recorded on a deed of 1600, and that he was succeeded by Thomas (although Thomas actually succeeded Walter). James 'Aff-haund' (16th/17th C.) among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands in 'Fechane' in 1602. His nickname was transcribed as 'Afhand' and 'Of Hand'. Others were Scotts of Hundleshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. James of Glenrath (d.1619) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, he was also referred to as 'of Boyken' (in Westerkirk). The lands of Glenrath are those south of Peebles. Scott of Satchells lists him among the clansmen who were at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was also a portioner in Hundleshope, and was so described in 1596 when he appeared before the Session for the murder of William Tait; he produced a 'letter of slains' from the family of the dead man and made to appear in the kirk to repent. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and, to 'observe the King's peace'. In 1618 he had sasine for a quarter of Nether Glenrath and Cosserlands, which had previously been owned by John Philip. His children were all minors when he died: Walter, who succeeded to Glenrath in 1628; William in Linton, whose son John succeeded his uncle; James; Marion; Elizabeth or Bessie, who married George, brother of James Geddes of Kirkurd; and Margaret, who married Thomas, another brother of James Geddes of Kirkurd. His brother John of Mackersway was served as tutor to his children William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret in 1620. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'of the mylne' in 1605. He was among the inhabitants of Selkirk who had a dispute with Sir James Murray of Falahill. James (16th/17th C.) listed as 'of Newholme' in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He was brother of William of Montbenger and had a son John, who was a surgeon in Edinburgh. In 1645, his nephew Robert, son of William of Montbenger, was served as tutor to John's sons (and therefore his grandsons) James and John. Probably the same John of Newholm is recorded in 1630 when his son John became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh (with Andrew Scott, who may have been related). James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, so probably son of the previous Sir Walter. In 1620 he had a marriage contract with Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg, involving lands at Eildon. In 1631 these lands were granted to Walter Chisholme in Darnick, and it was restated that he was brother of the deceased Sir Walter of Whitslade. He could be the James of Whitslade who in 1663 was jointly responsible (along with widow Margaret Turnbull) for land taxes in Hassendean Parish. James of Huntly (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Walter and son of Robert, who was on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was on an inquest in 1616, and probably had recently succeeded his brother (since Walter was recorded as Laird in 1612). In 1619 he complained to the Privy Council that his mother-in-law, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton, had failed to pay him 'a certane sowme of money for his tochergood', but instead assigned to him a contact she had with Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; however, she apparently visited his house and stole the relevant paperwork and when he caught up with her at the Laird of Synton's house she tore it up and threw it at him. His mother-in-law was daughter of the last Grahamslaw of Newton, who married Robert Ker, hence his wife was a Ker. He is probably the James 'called of Huntlie' whose son John was served heir to his lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest in 1639. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as brother of Philip of Dryhope. He was listed (along with Philip's son William and Walter, son of Robert, heir apparent of Tushielaw) among men who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John of Newark, who he succeeded in 1626. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother William for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. He apparently sold Newark to the Scotts of Buccleuch and subsequently became a merchant and burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded recorded being 'in Neworkemylne' (i.e. Newark Mill) in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction; he may have been deceased by then. He was listed in the last testament of Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he owed more than £14,000. In 1605 he married Grisel, daughter of James Murray of Philiphaugh. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in 'Aitschaw' (possibly Headshaw) in 1619 when he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Probably the same James was a servant of Ker of Langnewton in 1621 when he was accused of being among the associates of Ker of Langnewton who attacked John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, along with his son and the miller of Belses Mill. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. James (16th/17th C.) listed as tenant in Newbigging in 1627 when he was one of 9 men responsible for making a valuation of the lands of Hawick Parish. He could be the James in Newbigging whose son witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk in 1628. Rev. James (1578/9–1634) appointed to the vicarage of St. Mary of the Lowes by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1608. It seems likely that he was some kind of relative. In the same year he was accused by the Presbytery 'of being our guid companion in drinking and beiring company both in Edinburgh and at home'. He was also accused of being a card-player and being negligent in his duties. By 1618 he was non-resident and urged to find a house nearer to his congregation. However, he appears to have remained as the minister until his death. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. In 1628 he was 'minister at Sant Marrie Kirk' when his son William witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk. He was listed in 1633 as 'minister at Yaro kirk' when he was owed his annual stipend from the deceased Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. James (16th/17th C.) son of Adam in Hawick (although it is not clear which Adam, perhaps the Bailie). In 1615 he became a skinner's apprentice with Matthew Aytoun in Edinburgh. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 as tenant in 'Holcaldrumhill', among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. He is listed along with Andrew in the Heap, who may therefore have been a relative. It is unclear where his farm might have been. James (17th C.) son of George, resident of Leith, who was already deceased when he purchased Hassendean from William Cunningham in 1622. He was at that time a resident of Bruntisland. James of Roberton (16th/17th C.) son
