Bothwell College (both-wel-ko-leej) n. the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in North Lanarkshire, founded by Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1398. Like the other Collegiate Churches of Scotland it was founded by a wealthy landowner, partly for the salvation of their families. They operated almost like miniature cathedrals, run by a Provost and with a number of 'prebendaries', each having his own benefice, with their appointments often being in the hands of the founder's family. Thus Hawick became a 'prebend' of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in 1447/8 (or perhaps 1443, confirmed in 1447/8), at the instigation of William Earl of Douglas (who was presumably the superior of the Hawick Baron of the day, Sir William Douglas, 2nd Baron of Drumlanrig). The Prebendaries of Hawick were to pay 6 merks of the ecclesiastical income to 2 'boy-clerks, to serve perpetually in the choir of the said church of Bothwele'. This connection lasted until the Reformation, although 'the kirk of Hawick and prebendaries of the colledge kirk thairof' are still mentioned among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. One of the early Provosts was Thomas Barry, who celebrated the Battle of Otterburn in Latin verse. Of the original building only the choir remains from pre-Reformation, and is now incorporated into Bothwell Parish Church.

Bothwell Court (both-wel-kōr') n. part of Mayfield, built in 1971, and named after the Earl of Bothwell who Mary Queen of Scots visited in Hermitage Castle.

the Bothwells (thu-both-welz) n. the Hepburn family, as Earls of Bothwell, were important locally, as well as throughout Scotland, particularly in the 16th century. They took their name from the barony of Bothwell (in Lanarkshire, south-east of Glasgow); Hawick Church was a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell from 1447 until the Reformation. The Earls of Bothwell had the right of patronage at Hawick as recorded in charters of 1488, 1498, 1511, 1581 and 1585. They also had the alternate right of patronage of Wilton after they purchased part of that barony in 1494. They held lands in Liddesdale, including Hermitage Castle for 100 years from 1492. Mary Queen of Scots visited James, the 4th Earl in Hermitage in 1566 and married him in 1567. The 5th and last Earl of Bothwell was Francis Stewart.

bothy (bo-thee) n. a cabin, cottage, formerly applied to a building provided on a farm to house unmarried workers, now applied to a hut providing shelter for hill-walkers – '... In his bothy, Auld Time keeps open hoose, like a' guid men' [DH], 'Thinks the hauflin up in the bothy 'But it's snug here!' ' [WL], 'The Yowes seemed settled – naethin' bleatin'. The bothy stove would still my greetin' ' [TD].

boucht (bowcht) n., arch. an animal enclosure, sheep-fold, especially a pen used for ewes at milking time, v. to enclose ewes – '... and John Hyslop was hired 'to bought the Gorranberry ewes in milking time' ' [JaT] (also written 'bought'; cf bucht).

boude (bowd) v., poet. must, had to – 'Ilka ane boude hae her jo' [HSR] (cf. bud).

bouer (boo-ur) n., poet. a bower – 'Bluid blabs in the mossy bouer ... But true love's aye in the fleur' [WL].

bougar (boo-gur) n., arch. the tie-beam of a roof – '... and often tirled the thack to the bare bougars' [EM1820].

the Bough-a-bale see the bow o bale

Bouglas (boog-lis) n. Arthur V. (d.2011) recorded in 2007 reciting some of his own verses about the Drums and Fifes. Henry (18th/19th C.) butcher of Denholm, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the Henry who married Isabel Purdie in Cavers Parish in 1825. William (b.c.1790) butcher in Denholm, recorded on the 1841 census and Pigot's 1837 directory. He may be the William who was the 32nd listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856. He appears to have married Margaret Waddell in 1833 and their children included: Margaret (b.1834); Helen ('Nelly', b.1836); Wilhelmina ('Mina', b.1838); and Agnes ('Nanny', b.1840). He died before 1851, when his wife was a widow on Kirkside. William B. (19th C.) from Hawick, he became Governor of the County Prison in Linlithgow. In 1867 he arranged for a report on Linlithgow Common Riding to be sent to Hawick (and published in the Archæological Society Transactions (also written 'Buglass').

bouk (book, bowk) n., arch. bulk, the body, a carcass – 'For i' to free the bouk o' a' diseasive humours' [JoHa], 'For i' my bouk I bear the bluid O' whilk my country may be proud' [JoHa], '. . . 'The deæd bouks o' thy servents hae thaye gien til be fude until the fowles o' heæven . . . ' [HSR], '. . . he sall fill the pleces wi' the deæd boukes' [HSR], 'Yer bouk is unco sair faun in, The banes stick through yer tautit skin' [JJ], '. . . Boulmer (boo-mur) n. seaside village in Northumberland. It was once well known for smuggling activity. It was said that it was used as the main port for Hawick smugglers, dealing in 'gin, silks, tobacco, cards, &c.' Some of the locals engaged in this business were referred to as 'Boomer men'. A Frenchman by the name of Daniell Fleury was effectively a pirate who would bring goods into the port and take away whisky – 'There's Jamie Tackets o' Hawick, And other two also; They saddled their horses on Sunday, And off to Boomer did go, And we'll a' to Boomer, to Boomer, And we'll a' to Boomer for gin' [T].

Boulton (bool-tin) n. John (14th C.) presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale by Edward III in 1354. Little else is known about him. However, it is possible he was simply the same man as John 'de Boulton' who was Chancellor and Chamberlain of Berwick in 1354. He was also presented to the Church of Cavers (in Glasgow Diocese) by Edward III in 1368.

boun (bown) v., poet. to prepare, make ready – 'Bonjeddart bauldly made him boun, With a' the Turnbulls strang and stout . . . ' [CPM], '. . . And on her clog she toed the spurr, And boun' to join the ride' [JTe], 'In cappers, right canty, our steeds we bestride, And bowne to the Foray on our Border-side' [HSR].

bounder (boon-dur) v., arch. to bound, limit, to hamper, inconvenience – 'Fair bounder't wi' ticht claes' [GW].

Bountiff (bown-tif) n. George (b.1839/40) from Montrose, he was 'Schoolmaster & Organist' at St. Cuthbert's Schoolhouse in 1861.

bountith (bown-tith) n., arch. a bounty, bonus, reward, particularly an additional part of the remuneration for a servant or farm labourer, such as shoes and clothing – 'Item, mair to him of bounteith the said year, eight bolles oattes, pryce therof threttie sex pundes' [SB1633], 'A' bringing their bountith in hand To please the young bride's gudemother' [ES], '. . . to pay the nolt herd and gadman al his wages and bounthe, and the shepherd's bounthe, except shoon' [DMW] (several spelling variants exist; see also boontith).

Bour see Bower

Bourhill (bōr-hil) n. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as gardener in Synton in 1717. He married Jean Spotiswood and their children included John (b.1717).

Bourhooms (bow-ur-hooms) n. fortified house marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map, near the present Hermitage Cottage, on the opposite side of the Roughley Burn from Shaws (it also occurs on Visscher's 1689 map of Scotland and is marked 'Byholm' on later maps).

Bourtree Bank (bōr-tree-bawngk) n. houses up a pend off Bourtree Place, built in 1861.

the Bourtree Bush (thu-bōr-tree-bush) n. popular name for the last tree on Bourtree Place, surviving until the latter part of the 19th century.

Bourtree Hoose Seminary (bōr-tree-hoos-se-min-u-ree) n. ??.

Bourtree Place (bōr-tree-plis) n. street at the east-end of the old town boundaries, the right fork of the High Street at the horse. So-called because of the bourtrees, or elders, which grew there, the street was named around 1842. Historically this area marked the eastern edge of the Burgh. It contains several shops and businesses, as well as the Congregational Church and Conservative Club. A railway bridge, with adjacent public toilets, crossed the street until demolished in the mid 1970s, to make way for Mart Street. The street marks the beginning of the route to Denholm, Jedburgh and Kelso (it is 'Bower Tree Place' in the 1851 census).

Bourtrees (bōr-treez) n. area that formed the eastern boundary of the town, according to the 1537 charter – 'Between the lands commonly called Bourtrees in the east ...' Named after the bountree or bourtree, which is an Old Scots word for the elder, a species often planted to mark boundaries. An item in the Town Book for 1688 describes the boundary being marked out bwtween lands at 'the east end of the Bourtries at the east end of the said town'. A photograph exists showing the last such tree, standing on the north side of Bourtree Place in the late 19th century. There are said to have been similar trees at the western and southern town limits, but if they existed they were already gone by the mid-19th century. In 1866 Rev. William Munro donated to the Museum 'part of the bourtree which formed one of the ancient boundaries of Hawick'.

Bourtrees (bōr-treez) n. surname that once existed in the Borders. In 1502 it is recorded that 'Jacobo bourtreis' (i.e. James Bourtrees) was a rebel, whom James Rutherford in Nisbet had remission for associating with. It is possible this is the same name recorded later as 'Bawtry'.

Bourtree Terrace (bōr-tree-te-ris) n. small street off Bourtree Place, named in 1896 and previously being part of Bourtree Place.

Bourtree Well (bōr-tree-wel) n. former public water source behind the Congregational Church, also known as 'the Steading Pump'.

bour trei (boor-trī) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra, often used as a boundary marker, and traditionally said to ward off evil – 'I once heard a woman say, that having struck a bough of bower tree above her door head, she heard the witches and fairies 'greeting' at her door ...' [EM1820], 'Then with the boortree wand, she gave his beardy chaftis a stroke, – And oure the bed aneath her sprung, A lang lean toothless brocke!' [JTe] (also written 'bourtree' and 'boortree'; cf. Bourtrees; the origin is suggested to be a corruption of 'boun tree', from its use to mark boundaries, or from 'bower tree' from the ability of its branches to be bent into an arbour, but James Murray suggests that the meaning comes from the ease of extracting the pith from its branches to makes 'bores', i.e. pipes or play-guns).

boust (bowst) v., poet. to boast, triumph – 'O my God, I trust in thee: letna me be shæmet: letna mine enimies boust thamsels ower me' [HSR], '... an' a' the wurkers o' inequitie boust thamesel's' [HSR].

boustrous (bowst-ris) adj., poet. boisterous – 'An' whan the houir o' nune arryved, There cam' ane boustrous crewe ...' [WiSp].

bout (boo') n., arch. mood, whim, fancy – '... thae thochts help iz ti cast ma dowth, tholemuiddy boot' [ECS] (also written 'boot').

bout (boo') n., arch. a hank of thread, also called a 'gang', being the distance once up and down during warping.

bouzy (boo-zee) adj., arce. bushy, branchy, covered with bushes – 'A bouzy burn; a boozy bush' [GW], 'Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drucken bride ...' [DH] (there are spelling variants).

Bovina (bo-vī-nu) n. town in Delaware County, New York State. It was a common arrival point for Hawick people who emigrated to the United States in the 19th century. It is said that the nearby hills (part of the Northern Catskills) may have reminded early settlers of Scotland. Once much more populous, the town today has a population of about 700 people. It was founded in 1820 from the amalgamation of parts of 3 other towns. The name comes from the Latin word for cattle, with the area known for its dairy products. Local families with a connection to this area include Coulter, Jardine, Kedzie, Ormiston, Scott and Thorburn.

bow (bō) v., arch. to walk crookedly, assume a bent shape – 'But yin blythe Easter morning I bo'ed to see his stane ...' [DH].

bow-a-bale (bow-a-bāl) n. a huge bonfire lit annually after the November fair on Denholm Green until about 1840, and continued later as a community event with fireworks on 4th November (and hence with no effigy of Guy Fawkes) – 'An immense bonfire of faggots and boughs, formerly (until c.1840) kindled annually in November on the village green of Denholm in Roxburghshire, was called the Bale or Bowa-bale' [JAHM] (see the bow o bale).

Bowanhill (bō-in-hil) n. farmhouse on the right-hand side of the main A7 at Teviothead, previously also known as 'the Knowe' or 'Henderson's Knowe', the hill itself being on the other side of the road. The farmhouse and out-buildings were formerly situated near the crest of the hill (a few trees later marking the site). More recent buildings were constructed by the side of the road. This area is where the side road to Falnash and Hislop crosses the Teviot; before the mid-18th century this road was an alternative route to Hawick, crossing to the Borthwick valley via Lairhope and Old Howpasley. It was formerly part of the lands of Ringwoodfield, owned by Melrose Abbey. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that point it covered 686 acres and was bounded by Colterscleuch, Southdeanrig, Binks, Rig, the River Teviot and Commonside. Simon Scott of 'Fernili' and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented it along with 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' in about 1557; it was valued at £5 at that time. James Grieve was tenant there until about 1619. It was recorded as still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Archibald Elliot and James Pott are recorded there in 1694, along with herd James Telford. Robert Nichol was tenant in at least 1714–20. Archibald Elliot is recorded there in 1701, was tenant there in 1722, renting from the Duke of Buccleuch, which was halved with James Elliot the following year. William Anderson and Robert Nichol were there in 1726 and Robert Welsh in 1731. In 1744 Archibald re-leased his half, with Isobel Scott (William Goodfellow's widow) leasing the other half. Gideon Forsyth was there in the 1780s and James Scott in 1792. Robert Gledstains was a labourer there in 1797, James Douglas was living there in at least 1799–1801 and William Gledstains was there in 1801. There was once a blacksmith's here, now converted into a museum and craft centre. It seems that the original Bowanhill farm was actually up on the hill, with 'Bowanhill Roadside' by the road. Archibald Elliot was there in 1791. In 1797 the farmer at Bowanhill itself was Archibald Elliot, with 'Roadside' being farmed by William Gladstones, Thomas Hogg and William Miller, and John Scott also recorded living there. J. Ingles was there in 1821. William Smith was a mason living at 'Bowanhillbridge' in 1851. Walter Scott was there in the 1860s (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'bogan hyll' meaning 'rounded or bow-shaped hill', cf. Bowhill; it is probably the 'Bowenhyl' listed in 1500, is 'Bowandhillen' in 1557, 'Bowandhill in 1564, is recorded with the modern name at least as early as 1609, 'Buenhill' in 1634, 'Buanhill' in 1653, is transcribed 'Bowmanhill' from a 1723 document, is 'Bouandhill' in 1726, 'Bowandhill' in 1781 and 1786 and 'Boanhill' in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Bowannhill', but not obviously in the right place; on the 1863 Ordance Survey map it is high on the hill to the east of the main road, with the modern Bowanhill being labelled Henderson's Knowe).

bowat (bow-i') n., arch. a small lantern – 'Cautious burghers required to light themselves in the darkness by carrying 'bowats' or lanthorns in their hands' [JJV], 'Wi their nets and their leisters, their bowats and gegs, They seldom if ever get rest for their legs' [UB].

the Bowat (thu-bow-i') n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

bowater (bow-wi'-ur) n., arch. person who fishes useing a bowat – 'Yer netters and bowaters, they are the boys For drinkin', fechtin' and makin' a noise' [UB].

Bowatsyde (bow-i'-sīd) n. former small holding on the Abbotrule estate. Jock Turnbull was recorded there in 1503. It is probably related to the area known as 'Bowset', which is referred to in the English report of the Sclaterford skirmish in 1513. It was part of the lands purchased from Jedburgh Abbey by Adam French in 1569 and part of the Lordship of Jedburgh inherited in 1587 by Alexander, Lord Home. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. The lands were later incorporated into the farm of Ruletownhead (it is 'bowosyd' in 1503, 'Bowatsyde' in 1567, 'Bowatside' in 1587, 'Bowatsyde' in 1588 and transcribed 'Bonnattsyde' in 1680).

Bowden (bow-din) n. village lying between Selkirk and St. Boswells. The market cross, restored as a War Memorial, sits in the main street. Bowden people served as models for Tom Scott's painting 'Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514'. Poets Andrew Scott and Thomas Aird were from here, as well as Hawick's James Thomson. It is also the name of the surrounding parish, through which the Bowden Burn runs on its way to meet the Tweed. The church, originally dating from 1128, but rebuilt in the 17th–18th centuries and restored in 1909, includes the 'laird's loft' bearing the arms of the Kers of Roxburgh and a Norman arch (possibly a remnant of the earlier building) over a pew with memorials to the Kers of Cavers Carre. The Barony of 'Bolden' was granted by King David I to Kelso Abbey; it comprised the lands of Bowden, Holydean, Midlem, Lilliesleaf, Clarilaw, 'Fawdon', Whitmuir, Whitelee and Newton. 'Bowden Kirk 1128–1978' (1978 and 1994) was written by J.S.M. Macdonald – 'And memory, roaring o'er the deep, In lonely hours will turn Back to the cloven Eildon's steep And banks o' Bowden Burn' [JT], 'Tillieloot, Tillieloot, Tillieloot o' Bowden! Our cat's kittled in Archie's wig; Tillieloot, Tillieloot, Tillieloot o' Bowden, Three o' them naked, and three o' them clad!' [T], 'Smoke and flame to Eildon sped On the moor by Bowden! Her cloak was grey and her shoes were red When they burned the witch of Bowden' [WHO] (the origin is possibly 'village dedicated to St. Bathan' or more likely the Old English 'bothl denu', meaning 'valley with a building'; it first appears in about 1120 as 'Bothendenam', then occurs as many variants, such as 'Boulden', 'Bothelden', 'Bouildene', 'Bowlden', 'Boweden' and 'Bowdein' until the end of the 17th century).

Bowden (bow-din) n. Patrick (15th/16th C.) Chaplain in Cavers. In 1502 William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. This could be connected with the death of Robert Oliver, for which Thomas senior, Thomas junior and Walter were declared as rebels at the same court sitting; William in Jedburgh was also fined in the next case, with no details being given. Walter (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. His name is given as 'Wattie Bouden', and 'Walter Bouden yhoungar' is also named. They probably served as factors or similar. 'litill Wattie of Bouden' was provided for in the will of Sir Walter Scott, although precisely what he received is unclear from the description 'he levis that to be done to him at the sicht of freindis'. William Davis (d.1944) served as Governor of Sierra Leone. He purchased Hobsburn in the 1920s and lived there with his sister, Mary Lee Milne. They are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard.

Bowden Moor (bow-din-moor) n. hilly moorland area north-west of Bowden, on the slopes of the Eildons, through which the B6359 runs, reaching a height of 814 ft.

Bowden Road (bow-din-rōd) n. part of Stirches, at the top of Atkinson Road, built in 1974, named after the village of Bowden.

bowdie-leggit (bow-dee-leg-ee', -i') adj. having bandy legs, bow-legged.

bowe (bow) n., arch. a boll, pod of flax, unit of dry measure (cf. boll; this was once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong).

bowel-hive gress (bow-ul-hīv-gres) n., arch. the field lady's mantle, parsley breakstone, Alchemilla arvensis, once believed to cure inflamation of the bowel (known as 'bowel-hive').

Bower (bow-ur) n. James (b.1794/5) from Melrose, he was a worker on the farm of Burnhead. He is recorded among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41, being a 'hind' in 1835 and 'servant' later. By 1861 he had moved from Burnhead Cottages to Lees. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and Agnes. John (14th/15th C.) forfeited the lands of Wauchopehead that were granted by Robert III in 1404 to John Turnbull. His name was written 'Bour'. John (b.c.1780) resident of Hartsgarth according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. His name is written 'John B Bower'. John (b.c.1780) spinner at Damside according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for gardener James Scott in Hawick Parish in 1768. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Katherine Scott in Roberton Parish in 1789.

Bowerhope (bow-ur-hōp, boor-up) n. farm on the south side of St. Mary's Loch. It was among lands in Ettrick Forest owned by the Crown from about 1456 until the early 16th century. Sheep and goods were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. The Laird of Cessford was tenant there in 1541, paying £20 yearly. It was inerited by Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane from his son Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621 and still held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1667 (it is spelled 'Bourhop' in 1456 and 1502, 'Bourhope' in 1541, 'Bourhoip' in 1621 and 'Bourhope' in c.1680; it is 'Bourhope' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Bowering (bow-u-ring) n. Mary (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when her will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. She could have been a servant of Lord Minto, perhaps associated with Robert Raper, whose will was also recorded later in 1815.

Bower Rig (bow-ur-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, just on the left (south) of the B6357 road before reaching Dinlabyre. It is possible that nearby was the farm of 'bour', which was tenanted by James Elliot on the 1694 Hearth Tax records, 'wt an kilne'.

Bowes (bōz) n. Sir George (1517–56) posthumous son of Sir Ralph of Dalden, Streatlam. He was involved in Border wars from an early age and was an important leader during the 'Rough Wooing'. He served as Governor of Berwick. He accompanied Lord Hertford on his raid on Edinburgh and other towns in 1544. He married Muriel, daughter of Lord Evers, but had no male heirs. Sir Richard (c.1497–1558) born at Streatlam Castle, County Durham. He became Warden of the English Middle and Eastern Marches in 1540, probably serving until his death. He wrote an account of the state of the East and Middle Marches in 1542. In the same year he was laying waste the Borders and involved in the battle at Haddon Rig, resulting in his capture. He also took part in Hertford's ravaging of the Borders in 1545. He led the force that raided the valleys of Ale, Yarrow, Ettrick, Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick in 1547/8, particularly targeting lands held by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, with the support of Walter Ker of Cessford and other Kers; this included the burning of Newark Castle and the murder of Scott's mother (Elizabeth Kerr) in Catslack Tower. A relative of his (niece perhaps) Margery Bowes married Sir Ralph Eure, who was the next Warden of the English Middle Marches (there is some confusion over whether he was Richard or Robert).

Bowhill (bō-hil) n. the main seat of the Duke of Buccleuch, set in a 46,000 acre estate, about 3 miles west of Selkirk. The lands were forfeited by Douglases in the 15th century, and were Crown property around 1500, being assigned to the Murrays. It is recorded in 1502 that William Dryden from Slitrig Water stole a dozen sheep from there. After James Murray died at Flodden, half of it passed from his daughter to the Scotts of Aikwood. Michael Scott of Aikwood and Thomas Murray were each tenants in half the lands there in 1541, together paying £26 yearly. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and valued at about £400 in 1678. In 1690 it passed to the Murrays, then to James Veitch, before the Scotts reacquired it in 1747. The present house was built in 1812 to designs of William Atkinson, William Burn and David Bryce, and enlarged later that century. Much of the stone came from Denholmhill Quarry. The estate was extensively landscaped by Thomas Gilpin, including the artificial loch and a considerable amount of tree planting. Queen Victoria was a frequent visitor in the 19th century. It was used as a military hospital in WWI and was also occupied by the army in WWII. It is open to the public in the summer and has an adventure playground. As well as a large collection of paintings, artefacts relating to Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd are also on display. The grounds contain an adventure playground, as well as what is probably the oldest ash tree in Scotland – 'Ca' up young Hob, of Gilminscleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Hartwood, and Middlesteed, and Hainen's valiant Will' [WSB] (the name derives from Old English for 'curved hill'; it was 'Bolhill' in 1592 and 'Bouhill' in 1634 and 1694; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's c.1654 map).

bowf (bowf) n., poet. a bark, cough, loud exclamation – 'But she juist heezed her coats And cried Bowff, Ye toornie auld man!' [DH].

Bowholm (baw-, bō-hōm) n. former house belonging to a branch of the Elliots. Its probable location was pointed out by locals as 'Baholm', recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858. The location is in a wooded area just to the east of Shaws farm on the north side of the Roughley Burn in Liddesdale (as marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map). Note that it is distinct from the relatively nearby Byreholm. 'Hob of Bowholmes' is recorded in about the 1580s. Will Elliot, brother of Dandie of 'Bowholmes' was recorded in 1611. Archie Elliot 'of Bowholme' is mentioned in Circuit Court records in 1623. It may be the 'Bolsholme' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where 2 men named William Armstrong were listed. It was included along with Over Closs, Byreholme, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 (it is 'Bowholme' in 1718).

bowie (bow-ee) n., arch. a hard, shallow dish, a round wooden vessel for potatoes etc. – 'But a great bowie on the table, An' ilk ane supp'd what he was able' [JR], 'A lady who had bought a wooden bowie was grieved to find it split in two through the stupidity of her servant' [WNK] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong).

Bowie (bow-ee) n. Adam (15th C.) received 6 shillings and 8 pence in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Ade Bowy'. Rev. Adam McCall (b.1928) son of John and Helen Hay. He was educated at Leith Academy, worked as an electrician 1942–57 and was in the R.A.F. 1946–48. He attended Glasgow University 1973–76, was licensed by Annandale Presbytery in 1976 and was ordained at King Edward Church the same year. This was linked with Gamrie in 1978 and then he moved to Dull and Weem (with Fortingall and Glenlyon) in 1981. In 1988 he became minister of Southdean and Hobkirk 1988 and remained until his retirement in 1996. He was the first minister of the united parishes, and also had links with Cavers and Kirkton. In 1959 he married Ivy Lillian (b.1931), daughter of Elizabeth MacDonald and their children were Jean Elizabeth (b.1959), Alison Mary (b.1962) and Angus John (b.1972). Agnes 'Nanny' (18th C.) laundry maid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. Mrs. Agnes (19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Howlands, along with Mrs. Elizabeth Graham, in the mid-1800s. She may have been the wife of blacksmith James. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Parkhill. The will of his wife Margaret Scott is recorded in 1682. Andrew (1802/3–76) son of William, he was blacksmith and vetinerary surgeon on the Fore Row. He became a Burgess in 1842. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as a blacksmith on 'Front Row'. In 1861 he was described as 'Horse shoer, West Port'. The public water supply near there was named 'Bowie's Well' after him. He had several children with Helen Tait (from Eilrig in Roberton Parish), although they never appear to have married. His sons include: James, also a farrier in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1827). Andrew (1827–88) son of Andrew and Helen Tait, he was born at Eilrig. In 1852 in Roberton he married Margaret Byers (1829–98). Their children included: James Tait (b.1852); Janet (b.1853); Helen (b.1855); John (b.1856); Henry (b.1858), who married Elizabeth Cochrane; Gilbert (b.1860); George (b.1862); Helen (b.1864); Maggie (b.1866); Andrew (b.1868); and John (b.1871), who married Annie Burns. He died at 8 Gladstone Street. Andrew (d.1947) son of James and Mary Best, he was a blacksmith and farrier on Havelock Street. He married Lily Fraser Douglas, who was from Appletreehall. They had 3 children, including James Tait (1928–2005) and Henry. When he died this ended what is said to have been centuries of local blacksmiths of the name 'Boa'. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Andrew L. 'Andra' (20th C.) frame-worker at Pesco's and rugby player for Hawick R.F.C. He served with the Royal Marines in WWI and joined the Greens in 1919, playing for 13 seasons, including being Captain in 1924/5. He was also a great Sevens player, having 54 medals. He was long a member of Committees at Hawick R.F.C. and served on the South of Scotland Selection Committee. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the first residents of the cottages at Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. His son Thomas was also mason at Bonchester Bridge. His daughter Margaret married James Deans and was mother of Rulewater historian Walter Deans. He possessed an old sword that was said to have been used by his grandfather at the Battle of Killiecrankie, and later passed to his descendant James Smail. Henry (1858–93) son of Andrew and Margaret Byers. In 1879 he married Elizabeth Cochrane in Hawick, and she died in 1924, aged 70. Their children were: Andrew Tait (b.1879), who emigrated to Geelong, Victoria, Australia; David (1882–96); Maggie (b.1884); Henry (b.c.1886); and James Tait (b.1889), who married Barbara Hogg and lived in Hawick. James (b.c.1780) blacksmith recorded on the list for the Militia in Hawick in 1801. He is probably the James (b.1774) son of William and brother of John, who was blacksmith at the West Port. James (c.1822–70) blacksmith on the Fore Row in the mid-1800s, located by the gate to the Poorhouse. He was a younger son of blacksmith William, and brother of blacksmith Andrew. In 1860 he married Agnes, daughter of baker James Oliver; they appear not to have had any children. He died by committing suicide in a police cell. He was succeeded as blacksmith by James Kedie. His widow was still alive in 1881, living at 1 Drumlanrig Square. James (19th C.) farrier in Hawick, son of Andrew. He lived at Gladstone Street. He married Mary Best. Their son Andrew was a blacksmith in Hawick. Janet (b.1829/30) eldest daughter of Thomas, who lived at Bonchester Bridge. In the 1840s she became postmistress for the Rule valley, with her sister Margaret assisting. She was listed in 1849 as a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1851 she is recorded as 'Side Post Mistress'. In 1857 she married Alfred Bibby Davis, who was in the Royal Engineers, and gave up the post office. Janet (19th/20th C.) domestic servant for Robert Fraser Watson. She received money from the will of her employer in 1904. John (17th C.) joint tenant along with Thomas Miller in Timbersidemill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having 'an kiln betwixt thm' and his surname is listed as 'Bue'. He could be the John 'Bo' married to Helen 'Kaidyie' (i.e. Kedzie) whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1681. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1699. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Knowes in 1705. He was 'John Buie' when his son Archibald was baptised in Cavers. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, whose surname was written 'Bowey'. In 1709 he married Janet Scott in Ashkirk Parish. John (18th C.) married Bessie Gray in 1723, the marriage recorded in both Roberton and Kelso Parishes. John (18th C.) married Agnes Vair in Minto Parish in 1744. John (18th C.) blacksmith in Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1776 (with his surname as 'Boe'). He married Christina Watson, who died in Hawick in 1811. Their children included: Margaret (b.1770); William (b.1772), who was blacksmith on the Fore Raw in Hawick; James (b.1774); John (b.1776); Christian (b.1778); James (b.1782); and Isabel (b.1785). John (18th C.) tenant in Glebe in Southdean Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised there in 1776. John (b.c.1770s) dyer in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (c.1800–41) eldest son of William, who was blacksmith on the Fore Raw. He may also have been a blacksmith, like his father. In 1841 his wife is listed as 'Bell Scott' on the Mid Raw and the family surname given as 'Boa'. By 1851 his wife was a widow at about 13 Loan. He married Isabella, daughter of John Scott and Isabella Turnbull; she died in 1876, aged 76. Their children included: Isabella (c.1826–97), who married William Turnbull and secondly John Ogilvie; William (c.1828–88), who died unmarried; Walter (c.1834–75), also a blacksmith, who married Jane Anderson; Margaret (b.c.1836), who married Robert Balmer; Elizabeth (c.1838–86), who appears to have lived with Richard Whellans; and Joan, who married George Edmonson. Margaret (b.1832/3–1905) daughter of mason Thomas. She helped her sister Janet run the post office at Bonchester Bridge. In 1855 she married James Smail in Hobkirk; he was a banker from Jedburgh who wrote under the pseudonym 'Matthew Gotterson'. Their children were: Jessie Scott Boa Smail (b.1857); George Rutherford Smail (b.1859); Thomas Scott Smail (b.1863); Merlin Mill Smail (b.1863); Elliot Redford Smail (b.1865); James Reid Smail (b.1869); Johanna Crosby Smail (b.1870); and Maggie May Sterling Smail (b.1873). She died just 9 months after her husband. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Thomas (c.1783–1849) mason in Hobkirk Parish, residing at Bonchester Bridgend. He was recorded there on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was son of Gilbert and his sister Margaret was mother of local historian Walter, who was his apprentice. In 1841 he was living at Bonchester Bridge with his wife and 2 daughters. He was said to be one of only 2 residents of Brigend who stayed in their houses during the flood of 1846. He probably married Jessie Scott of Cavers Parish in 1828. His widow Janet (possibly the same as 'Jessie') was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk; she was living at '3 Bonchester Bridge' in 1851. His children were: Janet (b.1828/9), who became postmistress in Bonchester in the 1840s; and Margaret (b.1832/3) who assisted her sister, and later married James Smail from Jedburgh. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1719 as 'servitor' in Langside in Cavers Parish, when he married Margaret Grieve, 'servitrix' to William Ogilvie in Branxholme. His wife may have been daughter of Walter Grieve and Blenche Borthwick. His children (with no mother's name given) probably included: Robert (b.1721), baptised in Hawick; and Mary (b.1723), William (b.1731) and Walter (b.1732), baptised in Kirkton. Walter (18th C.) blacksmith at Cavers in the 1750s. He had a child who 'drowned in a bouie' in 1752. Walter (b.1834/5) blacksmith, who lived at 50 Loan in 1861. He married Janet, daughter of frameworker John Anderson. Their children included Jane and John. He also had a step-son George Bell. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, where his name is recorded as 'Buie'. He married Janet Shiel and their children included Thomas (b.1650) and Agnes (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were Thomas Vogan and William Donald. William (17th C.) listed at Alton Croft among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who married Bessie Bell and who sechildren baptised in Hawick included Marion (b.1685) and Janet (b.1686). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1709 he married Margaret Anderson, who was from Ashkirk Parish. William (18th C.) married Margaret Glendinning in Ashkirk in 1746. William (1772–1859) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Christina Watson. He was blacksmith at the West Port. It is said that the family were hereditary smiths to the Douglases of Cavers, and it was a 'Boa' who shod the horses that went to Otterburn. He was a smith in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at the top of the Fore Row (around the modern 17 Drumlanrig Square). In 1799 he married Margaret Hogg, who came from Sanquar, Dumfriesshire; she died in 1854, aged 80. Their children were: John (b.c.1800), who married Isabella Scott; Andrew (b.c.1802), also a smith; Margaret (c.1805–64), who married William Kennedy; William (b.c.1811), who married Mary Renelson; Euphemia (b.c.1820), who married Robert Murray; and James (c.1822–70), another smith, who married Agnes Oliver. He was said to be 89 years old when he died, which is either an error, or he was christened a few years after he was born. He is buried at St. Mary's. William (b.c.1810) younger son of blacksmith William. He was also a blacksmith in Hawick, located on the Mid Raw in 1841 (when his surname is given as 'Boe'). He married Mary Renelson (or Ronaldson) in 1835. Their children included: Richard; William, who died young; Euphemia; and Andrew, who also died young (formerly often written 'Bo', 'Boa', 'Boe', 'Bowey' and variants).

Bowie's Well (bow-eez-wel) n. former public water supply at the foot of the Loan, near West Port. It was once one of the main public wells in the town centre, and named after Andrew Bowie, the Smith at West Port the early 19th century.

bowit (bow-ee', -i') pp., poet. bowed – '... an' they bowet the knee afore him, an' mocket him, sayin', Hail, King o' the Jews!' [HSR].

bowk (bowk) v. to retch, gag, vomit, spew up – 'Ei says ei's leike ti bowk. A dinna wunder at eet; ei ett till ei was leike ti burst' [ECS], '... afore the self-proclaimed sei-fishin expert was bowkin owre the side' [IWL], to belch, to emit smoke – '... whan A keek oot ov a slaistert woark-place wundih on ti bowkin lums' [ECS], n. a retch, incidence of vomiting – 'An' syne he gaed a fearfu' bowk, An' bang'd them a' for spuein' Clear drink that day' [JoHa].

Bowknowe (bow-now) n. former farmstead south-east of Synton. George Scott was tenant there in 1635. James Scott was there in 1792, Robert Hogg in 1841 and John Scott in 1851. Its location is marked today by the plantation called Bowknowe Strip (it appears incorrectly as 'Howknow' on Ainslie's 1773 map and is probably the 'Bowhouse' on the 1841 census).

Bowland (bow-lind) n. former station on the Waverley Line north of Gala, near the Bowshank Tunnel. There were Pringles there from at least the late 15th century. The castellated house there was built in the early 19th century.

Bowmaker (bō-mā-kur) n. John (15th C.) cleric who claimed some of the rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale around 1424, against William Crozier. He lost the battle in 1428 (including having to pay legal costs to Crozier), and was probably never actually Archdeacon. He may have been related to the near contemporary Walter, of the same surname, who was Abbot of Inchcolm and historian.

Bowmont Burn (bō-mon'-burn) n. also known as the Bowmont Water, a stream that runs from near Windy Gyle on the Border, past Yetholm and on into Northumberland. The first substantial bridge was built in the 1830s between Kirk Yetholm and Town Yetholm. The area had a reputation for being a favourite haunt of fairies (noted for example by Sir Walter Scott), with stones of certain shapes found there being called 'fairy cups and dishes' – 'That day I left the Bowmontside My heart beat sad within me; Each ferny glen and rugged peak I grieved to leave behind me' [TCh], 'The floods are down in Bowmont Burn, the moss is fetlock-deep ...' [WHO], 'And my heart a shrine has sought her That will last life's little day – At the foot of Bowmont Water, Bowmont Water – far away' [WHO] (also sometimes spelled 'Beaumont').

the bow o bale (thu-bow-ō-bāl) n. annual bonfire that used to take place on Denholm Green, until the mid-19th century, when the Green was finally enclosed. This was possibly a ceremony left over from the days of Beltane bonfires, but took place on 5th November, the time of the winter fair in Denholm, and the eve of the fair in Jedburgh. A verse recited by 'Muckle Michael' had the following couplet: 'The Bowe-a-bale 'll never fail, While burns grow trouts and gardens kail' [JAHM] (also written 'Bough-a-bale' and variants; it means literally a pile of boughs; see also bow-a-bale).

Bowset (bow-, bō-se') n. former name of an area in Abbotrule (probably associated with Bowshot Hill and the stream at its foot) where Lord Dacre and his men were pursued by the Sheriff of Teviotdale and a force of about 1200 men in late 1513. It has also been suggested that 'Bowset' referred to the Bowmont Water, but that seems less likely. A solitary ash tree there marked the site of 'Old Bowset', a farm that is recorded as 'Bossithill' in 1643 when James and Helen Turnbull were proprietors. It was 'Bowitsyid' among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. It was 'Bosathill' in 1694 when shepherd James Riddell was 'deficient' in paying the Hearth Tax there. It was still 'Bossithill' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls when owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule; it was listed along with parts of Ruletownhead and Burnkinford, which were partly in Southdean Parish and partly in Hobkirk, which had previously been owned by George Elliot, with a total value of about £224. Shepherd Robert Rutherford's family were at 'Ruletownhead (Bowshot)' in 1851. The site of the skirmish is also known as 'Sclaterford', on the road over the Fodderlee Burn, and a memorial was erected there around 1900. The farm of 'Bowatsyde' is probably the same place, being a small holding that was later incorporated into Ruletownhead.

Bowshank Tunnel (bow-shangk-tu-nul) n. tunnel on the Waverley Line north of Galashiels, the only major tunnel between Hawick and Edinburgh, 249 yards long.

Bowshot (bow-, bō-se') n. former farmstead on the side road between Ruletownhead and Easter Fodderlee. There is still a cottage with that name on the Ordnance Survey map, beside Bowshot Wood. Slightly further up the hill there is another building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. This is the area also known as 'Bowsett'.

Bowshot Hill (bow-, bō-se') n. small hill in the former Abbotrule Parish, east of Fodderlee and just west of Faw Hill. It reaches a height of 297 m. The summit contains the possible remains of a fort, now levelled by cultivation, but still visible as a shallow semi-circular depression. A solitary ash tree on the hill marked the site of the old farmstead of 'Old Bowset'. The nearby farm was still known as 'Bossithill' in the 19th century.

bowsterous (bow-ste-ris) adj., arch. rowdy, boisterous.

bowster (bow-stur) v., arch. to bolster.

bowt (bowt) pp. bought – 'Aw felt like the felleh that bowt the pub an kept it tae izsel' [MB] (cf. the older boucht and bocht).

bowt (bowt) n., arch. a bolt, the phrase 'bowt o' knitteen' is a length of woven tape, sold in a folded skein.

the box (thu-boks) n., arch. the poor box in a church – 'The Session ordered that John Scott called Herd should have out of ye Box for helping to buy ane horse for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer season' [PR1714], '. . . that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be rouped . . . ' [PR1722] (often capitalised).

boxin (bok-sin) n. boxing, once a popular spectator sport at local fairs, with a booth set up at the Haugh during the Common Riding in the 19th century. Hawick Boxing Club met in the former Fever Hospital at Burnfoot and later at St. Cuthbert's School.

box-master (boks-maws-tur) n., arch. a treasurer, especially of a trade guild – 'They contain few entries of any interest, being principally registers of the election of deacons and box-masters . . . ' [DMW].

Boyd (boid) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) from Jedburgh, in 1794 he married Betty Ballantyne, who was from Hawick. Their son Alexander was baptised in Jedburgh in 1804. Elizabeth 'Betty' (c.1930–) newspaper columnist who used the pseudonym Minerva, author of 'The way we were, sketches of a Hawick childhood' (1982). James (15th/16th C.) witness in 1510/1 to a letter of acquittance by George Scott of Whames and Borthaugh, written in Edinburgh. James of Trochrig (d.1581) elected as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1573, he served until his death. However, it is unclear whether he played any ecclesiastical role in the Borders. His eldest son Robert was Principal of both Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. His seal showed an elaborately presented St. Kentigern, with the words 'SIGILLUM JACOBI BOYD ARCHIEPISCOPI GLAS'. James (17th C.) 'baxter' whose widow Beatrix Turnbull is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. His children with Beatrix Turnbull included: Walter (b.1673); William (b.1675); Thomas (b.1677); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); William (again, b.1683); James (b.1686) James (17th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with fellow wrights John Tudhope and Robert Cowan, to examine the sled that John Barrie claimed had been stolen from him by George Renwick. appointed in 1686, along with John Tudhope, as 'marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour annent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joyned to John Hardie, William Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers'. He may also be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 (although probably drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier), when he paid tax on 2 hearths. James (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Scott. Their children included: Janet (b.1653); Margaret and Christian (b.1670); and James (b.1688). There is a big enough spread in ages that there is probably an error here. James (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Helen 'Bo' (or Bowie). Their children included Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were

Walter (perhaps his father) and shoemaker Walter Scott. James (17th/18th C.) baker in Hawick. In 1714 he married Christian Marshall, who was from Ormiston Parish. James Fleming (19th/20th C.) Governor of the Hawick Poorhouse in the early 20th century. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick 'flesher'. In 1711 he was fined, along with Robert Cowan, of being found in an alehouse on the Sabbath. John of Flex (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was probably nephew of Bailie Robert, who sold Flex in 1768. Bailie Robert (18th C.) baxter (i.e. baker) of Hawick who was a Magistrate in the 1730s and 40s. He owned 11 High Street, which he sold to Walter Wilson ('Haunless Wat'). He is probably the Robert who (along with William Tudhope) witnessed baptisms for William Davidson and for Robert Ker in Hawick in 1731. He is probably also the Robert who, along with Richard Turnbull, witnessed baptisms for Robert Thorburn and William Grieve (in Fenwick) in 1733. He witnessed baptisms in 1737 for wright James Winthrope, in 1739 for weaver William Roger (when he was 'Bailie'), in 1742 (when he was 'present Bailie', along with Francis Gledstains) for Rev. William Somerville, for merchant John Ruecastle and for Excise Officer Patrick Panton, and in 1743 (when he was 'late Baillie') for writer James Weir. He was also involved with the bond for the Teviot Bridge in 1740. He may be the same Robert, recorded as an innkeeper in Hawick in 1745 (for the celebration of the birth of Lord Whitchester). He was listed as present Bailie in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson. He paid tax for 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He purchased the Flex in 1751, and in the 1750s was involved in a petition to the Commissioners of Supply for a reassessment of the 'cess' between his lands and those of Whitlaw owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Session as trustess for Francis Ruecastle's estate. In 1753 there is a record of march stones being set out at the burnside to mark the boundary between the Flex and the Common. He is probably the Bailie who witnessed a baptism for blacksmith John Ker in 1758 and who also hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. In 1768 his nephew, John, tenant in Mertoun Parish, sold his lands there. Robert (18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young and in 1743 another for skinner John Currer. He could be the Robert who married Betty Boyd in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) married Mary Thomson in Minto in 1748. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1772); and William (b.1775). The witnesses in 1771, 1772 and 1775 were the whole congregation. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Myredykes according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Robert (19th C.) married Jane Hume in Wilton Parish in 1848. Thomas (17th/18th C.) gardener at the Flex and also a drummer. He may be the son of James and Beatrix Turnbull baptised in Hawick Parish in 1677. He was described as 'drummer to ye Toun of Hawick' in a baptismal record of 1713, suggesting that he held this official position at that time. He married Elspeth Gardner and their children included: Magdalene (b.1699); Elizabeth (b.1702); John (b.1705); Robert (b.1708); James (b.1710); and Beatrice (b.1713). The witnesses in 1699 were baker Walter Boyd (surely a relative) and gardener John Gardner, in 1705 were James Scott 'Colifort' and weaver William Miller, in 1708 were Francis Henderson and Francis Paterson, both in Flex, and in 1713 were carrier Walter Ruecastle and cook James Wright. Thomas (18th C.) married Isabel Easton in Wilton Parish in 1762. Walter (17th/18th C.) 'baxter' in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for gardener Thomas (who was surely a relative, perhaps his brother) and in 1705 for shoemaker Walter Scott. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism for carrier James in 1705, who was probably a close relative. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1701); William (b.1704); Robert (b.1704); Mary (b.1706); James (b.1708); and Gideon (b.1710). The witnesses in 1704 and 1706 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1708 were merchant William Craig and baxter William Hodge. He may be the Walter, son of James, baptised in Hawick in 1673. Walter (d.bef. 1781) recorded in 1781 when his son Robert died. Walter (19th C.) one of the people who helped resuscitate the Common Riding around the 1880s, being a founding member of the Ceremonial Committee. It was his suggestion that the Colour Bussing be moved from one of the local inns to the Town Hall. He also acted as a Steward at the Races and was an occasional singer. He could be the Walter who in 1876 donated a 'Russian copper coin' to the Museum. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Horsleyhill. In 1798 he was listed as substitute in the Militia for William Clerk from Southfield. He presumably therefore served in the Militia. William (b.1770s) wright in Hawick. He was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. However, he must have returned since 2 unnamed children of his died in Hawick in 1808. He is probably the William, married to Ann 'Punton', whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1808. William (b.c.1770s) tanner in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Cavers House according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Rev. William (19th C.) minister at Milnathort and Forrest Hill, London. In 1875 he obtained the degree of LL.D. from Greenville College, U.S.A. He was the first preacher in 1889 at the 'Ern Kirk', which was the start of the United Presbyterian congregation in Wilton, which would become Wilton South.

Boyes (boiz) n. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as 'Boyis' when he was still owed some fee in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. It is unclear whether or not he came from close to the Hawick area, like a large fraction of others listed. John 'Jock' (19th/20th C.) drystane dyker in the Liddesdale area.

Boyken Burn (boi-kin-burn) n. stream joining the Esk near Bentpath. This was the site of the chapel at 'Boykin' which in 1391 was endowed with some lands by Adam 'de Glendonyng' of Hawick. The settlement there is recorded on Blaeu's c.1654 map and Roy's mid-18th century map, but was abandoned before 1810.

Boyle (boi-ul) n. Edward (??–) Head Janitor at Hawick High School, awarded an M.B.E. for services to education in 1997. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Woll in 1579/80. He was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. He was also in Woll in 1580 when witness to a transaction for Isabella Turnbull, widow of John Scott of Blindhaugh.

the Boys Brigade (thu-bōeez-bree-gād) n. full name for the B.Bs., established in Hawick in 1893.

Brack (brak) n. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Hood in 1704 and their children included Agnes (b.1704). William (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. His son Thomas was baptised in 1706, with witnesses Bailie John Binnie and merchant Walter Wilson (also written 'Braike').

Brackenridge (bra-ken-rij) n. William (b.1829/30) from Yorkshire, he was farmer at Liddelbank in southern Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1150 acres, employing 12 people. He was still there in 1868.

brackit (brak-ee', -i') adj., poet. salt, bitter – 'When first it met the ladye's eyne, Suspensive joy was beaming, But when she saw what was within, The brackit tear was streaming' [JTe].

Bradley (brawd-lee) n. Rev. Patrick (1783/4–1841) from Ireland, he was a convert from Catholicism to Protestantism. He was called to Yetholm and Lilliesleaf Secession churches, accepting the latter, where he was ordained as minister in 1817 (after the congregation had already called 2 other ministers). He remained at Lilliesleaf until his death. He is incorrectly listed as 'David' in Pigot's 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he was visiting Rev. John Black in Newcastleton. He was said to have been a strong critic of James Douglas of Cavers' proposal to fund a travelling preacher to address local people in the summers. In 1820 he published a letter describing the experiences of his conversion, published in 'The Protestant' (1833).

brae (brā) n. a hill, hill-side, slope, steep bank, sloping road – '. . . through the Cala-burn, to the head or brink of the brae or bank on the west side of the burn' [DCW1765], 'Hawick's bonny wood and braes, You have left them a' dearie . . . brae-hag (brā-hag) n., arch. a steep bank with an over-hanging edge of turf – 'It builds a very large nest of clay, beneath a 'brae-hag', or stuck on the side of a bare scaur' [PJE].

brae-heid (brā-heed) n., arch. head of a 'brae', top of a slope – '. . . croonin the braeheeds hich abuin Tweed an forenent bieldy Dryburgh' [ECS].

Braeheid (brā-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. Thomas Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

Brae Heid (brā-heed) n. hill in upper Teviotdale, just to the north-west of Lairhope and north of Lairhope Braes. It reaches a height of 370 m.

Braemar (brā-mawr) n. originally Innes, Henderson and Company, Knitwear Manufacturers at Victoria Mills on Victora Road, and now at Burnfoot. They famously supplied the 1953 Mount Everest expedition with jumpers and underwear. The company effectively amalgamated with Pringle's as part of the Dawson group in the late 1960s. Papers relating to the period 1891–1966 are stored in the Museum. The Museum also has the clocking-in clock from the factory.

Braemar Cottage (brā-mawr-ko'-eej) n. cottage on Westgate in Denholm, so-called because Braemar Knitwear had a small factory there in the years after WWII. From 1986 it housed the Post Office.

braes (brāz) n. a hilly upland area – '. . . Is where the braes are buskit braw' [TK] (also the plural of brae.

the Braes (thu-brāz) n. former name for an area in Hawick. Alexander Biggar was there on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. It may be another name for the Allars area, where Biggar was later.

Braes Cottage (brāz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on the right-hand side of the A7 just after Branxholme Braes farm. This is probably the 'Braes' where Alexander Biggar was living in 1801.

braeside (brā-sīd) n. a hillside – '. . . in the warm sun-light, stands the old herd's house on the bleak brae-side' [JAHM], 'During one of those perilous times, they were hotly pursued along a braeside . . . ' [RM], '. . . and served to while away many an hour on some sunny braeside or around the cottage hearth on a winter's night' [BM1907].

' [WP], '. . . Where the braid backed hills forgether' [WL], 'Sall I come skirtin' the braid muirs . . . ' [WL] (the word occurs in place names such as Braidhaugh, Braidlie and Braid Road).

braidclaith (brād-klāth) n., arch. broadcloth, fabric of fine worsted – 'To hap ye'er a–e gude breeks in store May'e hae, wi' braid-claith coats galore' [JoHa], 'A something, that looks something like a man, Made up o' braid-claith, shinin' boot, an' brooch' [JoHa].

Braidgairhill (brād-gār-hil) n. Broadgairhill, farm in the upper part of the Ettrick valley, south of Kirkhope (it is 'Braidgairhill' on a c.1680 list of houses in Selkirkshire).

Braid Haaick (brād-hIk) n. subtitled 'A treatise on the verncular speech of Hawick', an extensive glossary of Hawick words, together with a description of pronunciation and grammar, written by Elliot Cowan Smith. It was published in the Archæological Society Transactions in 1927, several years after Smith's death. It represents the first thorough study of the specific dialect of Hawick, building on Sir James Murray's earlier and more general work 'Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland', and being used heavily (while in manuscript form) in George Watson's 'Roxburghshire Word Book'. It begins with the apology: 'It is with hesitation that one who has been long resident furth of the land of his birth would venture to profess himself a judge of the continuing purity or the growing adulteration of the vernacular speech of his native district'. But the article demonstrates how serious a student of the local vernacular Smith was, despite his relative youth. He says that 'Braid Haaick constitutes a potent and prolific part of the upper Teviotdale vernacular, which itself is one of the purest and richest branches of the vernacular of Scotland'. His habit of collecting words and meanings peculiar to Hawick was encouraged by the articles and lists that appeared in the local press in preparation for George Watson's dictionary. He includes an attempt to use spelling to indicate pronunciation, since 'the representation of the Scottish vernacular is marred by the tendency to Anglicize its spelling'.

Braidhaugh (brād-hawf) n. Broadhaugh, farm on the left of the A7 just past Newmill. There were Dalgleishes there in the early 16th century. William Dalgleish was recorded there in 1502 and 1508. 'Ade Dalglesch in Braidhauch' and 2 other family members received remission for associating with rebel Turnbulls in 1507. And Thomas Dalgleish 'in Braidhaugh' was recorded for stealing horses in 1510, as well as resetting other Dalgleishes. The Laird of Branxholme's servant 'Hob Dalgleis' was killed there around the 1570s by a group of Scotts from Allanhaugh. Tenants in 1620 were Thomas Lauder and Thomas Aitchison. This was the home of Walter Scott, a Chamberlain of the Earl of Bucleuch in the 1630s and 40s. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. About that time the land tax value was £684 for 'Braidhaugh or the present tennent of falsnasch'. The Hearth Tax records of 1694 list Gideon Scott, James Nichol, herd James Murray and Robert Scott. Francis Gledstains was there in 1707. Gideon Scott of Falnash, Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch, lived there in the early part of the 18th century. It was surveyed in 1718, when it consisted of 674 acres and was bounded by the Allan Water, Stobicote, Northhouse and the River Teviot; woods of mainly ash trees were also marked. James Grieve was there in 1724. William Turnbull was there in 1729. Robert Elliot was there in at least 1747–48 and James Reid in 1747. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. The Ogilvie's were tenants in the 18th and early 19th centuries, with Robert Ogilvie recorded there on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls, and Wiliam Ogilvie the farmer on the 1851 census. Andrew Chisholme was a servant there and James Miller a drainer in 1799. James Hobkirk is recorded as farmer there in 1868. Some flints found there are in the Museum collection. There is a cairn and possible settlement revealed by aerial photography on the hill to the north-east, as well as signs of several settlements around Broadhaugh Hill to the south-east. It seems reasonable to suppose that this is the same place as 'Ryngwoodchat' (probably 'Ringwoodhaugh'), which was a property of the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch. Certainly the lands were still listed as part of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose among Buccleuch possessions in 1634. There may have been a tower near the present farmhouse (the name appears as 'braidhalch' in 1502, 'Braidhauch' in 1507, 'Braidhaucht' in 1585, 'Braidhauch' in about 1599, 'Braidhaughe' in 1620, 'Broadhauche' in 1637 and 1652, 'Braidheugh' and 'Braidhauch' in 1634, 'Braidhaucht' in 1640, 'Braid Hauche' in 1646, 'Braidhauch' in 1651, 1661 and 1663 and 'Broadhaug' in 1707; it is 'Braidhauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map and is already anglicised on Stobie's map of 1770; the origin is clearly from the Old English 'broad flat land by the river').

Braidhaugh (brād-hawch, -hawf) n. Broadhaugh, farm near where the 'Note o the Gate' road branches off the A6088 just past Bonchester. It was formerly part of the Barony of Abbotrule and was enlarged with part of the commonty of Mackside. It was apparently once known as 'Spain', the name being given as a joke by the Elliots of Wolfelee. There were Turnbulls here in the 16th and 17th centuries, e.g. William over at least 1603–27. In 1622 James, son of William Turnbull in Braidhaugh, was accused of stealing cattle from Earlside; in 1627 William and his son James promised to atone for causing a disturbance at Abbotrule Kirk. It was valued at £80 on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. John Douglases was tenant in the 18th century. In the 1707 valuation it was included in the estate of William Kerr of Abbotrule. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and still in 1811), valued at £128 6s 8d. Tenants in the 19th century included John Telfer, Thomas Grierson, Thomas Storrie, Charles Renwick, and then John Waldie into the 20th century. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. The old farmhouse was demolished in the early years of the 19th century (with the stone used for dykes) and could still be seen a century ago on the left side of the road; the newer farmhouse was built at the upper end of the haugh, about a quarter of a mile further up. It contains a piece of land called 'Thornton' and also the 'Ffoull Well' – 'What errand hath brought thee to Braidhaugh Brow, And where is that theif Wat Harden now?' [WHO] (it is 'Braidhauch' in 1603 and 1611; it is 'Braidhauch' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript and marked 'Braidhauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Braidhaugh Cottages (brād-hawf-ko'-ee-jeez) n. cottages at Broadhaugh in the Rule valley.

Braidhaugh Hill (brād-hawf-hil) n. Broadhaugh Hill, hill south of Broadhaugh farm, making a ridge betwen the Teviot and Allan valleys. It reaches a height of 279 m and has signs of an ancient settlement on its western side (as well as another on Birny Knowe just to the north-east). This measures about 150 ft by 115 ft, being composed of a low bank and ditch and with perhaps a couple of hut platforms inside.

Braidhaugh Park (brād-hawf-pawrk) n. name used for a field near the farm of Braidhaugh in the Rule valley, near where the old farmhouse stood.

Braidie (brā-dee) n. Marjorie (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when she was owed half a year's fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere.

braidit (brā-dee', -di') pp. braided – '... Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair' [DH].

Braidlee see Broadlee

Braidlie (brād-lee) n. William (13th C.) recorded as 'de Bradelaye when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His lands were in Roxburghshire and could correspond to Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. His seal showed a tree supported by two hares and the name 'S'WILL'I DE BRADELEY'. Henry 'de Bradeley' was part of a panel at Wark in Tynedale in 1287 and another in 1289/90, while John 'de Bradely' swore fealty to Edward I at Berwick in 1291; these men could have been relatives.

Braidlie (brād-lee) n. farm near where the burn of the same name meets the Hermitage Water. William 'de Bradeleye', who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, may have been an early owner. It is listed as a 5-pound land on a c.1376 rental list among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1428/9 the lands were given by William, Earl of Angus, to Archibald Douglas of Cavers and granted by a later Earl of Angus to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later. 'Andree Elwald et aliis' were the tenants in 1541, when the lands were valued at 8 merks. In the mid-16th century Martin Elliot of Braidlie was the leader of that clan. Around that time there was a feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch, which lasted several years. This led to an area around Branxholme being burned and pillaged in 1565, probably including Hawick, i.e. 'the Brodies' who are recorded in a letter of the time burning Hawick were probably none other than the Elliots of Braidlie. The original peel tower was near Old Braidlie, while the newer farmhouse (sometimes called 'New Braidlie') lies closer to the Hermitage Water. John Robison was tenant there in 1694. Andrew Kyle and William Kyle were farmers there in 1797, John Graham was a servant and David Kyle was a shepherd. In 1799 John Kyle was also there and John Linton and John Purdom were servants. In 1801 David Kyle was shepherd, John Kyle drover and John Linton also shepherd. In 1812 the tenant was Walter Amos and George Hume and Thomas Douglas were also there. Arthur Kyle was farmer in the 1830s and 40s, David Kyle in 1851 and James Graham in 1868 (also spelled 'Braidley', 'Braidlee', 'Braidsley', 'Braidily' etc.; the name probably derives simply from the Old English 'brad leah', meaning 'broad clearing'; it is 'Bradle' around 1376, 'Bradele' in 1428/9 and 1470, 'Bradelye' in 1472, then is recorded in 1511 and many times in the 16th century as 'Braidley' etc.; it is 'Breadlie' in 1694 and 'Broadlee' in 1797; it appears on Blaeu's c.1654 map as 'Braidlres' and is 'Broadlee' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Braidlie (brād-lee) n. older name for Broadlee by Deanburnhaugh or near Ashkirk.

Braidlie Burn (brād-lee-burn) n. stream on the north side of the Hermitage valley, formed from the Crib Burn and Barley Burn and joining the Hermitage Water between Braidlie and Gorrenberry. It is marked 'Braidley Burn' on the Ordnance Survey map.

Braidlie Burnfit (brād-lee-burn-fi') n. Braidlie Burnfoot, former farmstead by the foot of the Braidlie Burn. John Minto was shepherd there in 1851.

Braidliehope (brād-lee-hōp) n. farmstead located up the Braidlie (or Braidley) Burn from Braidlie farm in the Hermitage valley. The cottage is now derelict. Alexander Easton was shepherd there in 1835. William Armstrong was there in the mid-1800s. William Little was shepherd there in 1851 and Charles Scott in 1861 (also written 'Broadleehope').

Braidlies (brād-leez) n. former name for lands adjacent to Brieryyards in the Barony of Hassendean. In 1637 they were inherited along with Brieryyards by William Scott of Chamberlain Newton, from his father John Scott of Brieryyards. The lands were in Wilton Parish in the 18th century. In the early 18th century the lands were owned by the Laird of Hartwoodmyres and later in the century by David Ogilvie of Brieryyards. James Douglas was tenant in about 1716–36, with William Turnbull tenant after him. James Graham was living there in 1739, a different James Douglas 1747–48, and John Oliver in 1787. It is unclear exactly where these lands were (note this is easily confused with the farms of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish and Roberton Parish; it is 'Braidleyis' in 1637, 'brodlees' in 1721, 'Broadlees' in 1739 and 1747, 'Broadlees' in 1765 and 'Breedlees' in 1787).

braid-lippit (brād-li-pee') dj., arch. broad-brimmed – '... and used to declare that 'she never felt sae bricht at onything as when she saw Willie Wilson's braid-lippit hat coming by the window' ' [DMW].

Braithwaite (brāth-wā') n. Michael Elliott (1941–2023) born in Northumberland, he studied Mathematics at Cambridge University and worked for a large accountancy firm in London. Ill-health made him consider a move to a more rural area and in 1969 he came to Hawick having an aunt who lived at Old Orchard. He worked as a chartered accountant with Welch's, retiring in 2006, and lived at Clarilaw. His interest in botany led to informal studies of the local countryside, which later became formal surveys. He was secretary and then chairman of the Tweed Valley branch of the Scottish Wildlife Trust for 25 years and Berwickshire recorder for the Botanical Society for Britain and Ireland for over 35 years. He handed over part of Denholm Dean to community ownership in 2019. He was a member of the Hawick Round Table and Probus Club, Secretary of the Jedforest Hunt and Elder of Denholm Church. He married Patricia ('Paddy') in 1985. He wrote extensively on topics related to wildlife, and also occasionally turned his thoughts into verse. He co-wrote 'Botanist in Berwickshire: An Annotated Check-list of the Flowering Plants and Ferns of Berwickshire' (1990) and 'Change in the British Flora 1987–2004' (2006), and published 'A Railway Flora of Teviotdale' (1974), 'Eildon hills' (1976), 'The Wildflowers of a Berwickshire Bard: George Henderson of Chirnside (1800–1864)' (2012), 'A Short Flora of Berwickshire' (2014), 'The Flora of Hawick Burgh' (2015), 'The Railway Flora of Teviotdale Revisited' (2015), 'Howes and Knowes, an Introduction to Berwickshire Place-names' (2016) and 'Hopes and Haughs: an Introduction to Roxburghshire Place-names (2017). His botany books are illustrated by his own photographs. He also published 3 books of poetry, 'Michael's Meditations' (2018), and 'Solitude Twin-pack' (2021) and 'The Border Lane' (2021).

brak (brawk) pp., arch. broke – '... promeist be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick, quhilk he brak, drownet, and lossit be the way' [BR1652], 'They ran their horse on the Langholm howm, And brak their spears wi' meikle main ...' [CPM], ''No, – they're the king's', baul'd out the clerk, An' brak his inkhorn, wi' a jerk' [JR], 'Meg Rough, the buffster, silence brak, – Come on, says Meg, let's hae a crack' [JoHo], 'Jesus tuik breæd an' blisset it, an' brak it, an' gae it til his discipels' [HSR] (cf. brik).

Bramber (brawm-bur) n. Charles 'Charlie' (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of those who helped introduce cricket to the Town.

bramble (brawm-bul) n. blackberry, particularly the fruit rather than the bush (also brammel).

Bramblehaa see Brammelhaa

bramlin (brawm-lin) n. a kind of striped worm used as bait in fishing – 'A was fishin wi a bramlin worm' (spelled various ways; related to the English 'brandling'.

brammel (braw-mul) n. another name for the bramble (also spelled 'brammle').

brammel (braw-mul) n., arch. a striped worm found in dunghills and used as fishing bait, a brandling worm – '... The sair-dwined corpse o' a brammle worm!' [DH].

Brammelhaa (braw-mul-haw) n. Bramblehall, a house that stood on the site of 26–28 Weensland Road until 1902, previously being known as Bogliebarns. It was named after stockingmaker John Bramwell, who was also known as 'Johnnie Brammel'. The name continued in use for the area long after the house was gone. It was also the site of rabbit baiting in the late 19th century (also spelled 'Bramblehaa', etc.).

Brammlehall see Brammelhaa

Brampton (brawmp-tin) n. town in northern Cumbria that hosts what is Hawick's closest train station, 37.5 miles as the crow flies.

Bramwell (braw-mul) n. David (b.1819/20) thong-maker, living on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Isobella Robson and their children included Isobella and Euphemia. James (b.1803/4) carter on Under Damside. His wife was Jessie Lamb and their children included John (b.1827), James (b.1840) and Elizabeth Torrance (b.1842). John 'Johnnie Brammel' (18th C.) English stockingmaker who first made lambswool stockings in Hawick in 1785, his house at Bogliebarns being referred to as 'Brammelhall'. The death of his wife Sally is recorded in Hawick in 1799 (also written 'Bramell').

Branch Cleuch (brawnch-klooch) n. stream in Liddesdale that rises on the slopes of Roan Fell and flows roughly south-east to join the Black Burn near Kiln Knowe (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, with 'Branchcleuch Bogg' between here and Kiln Syke).

Brand (brawnd) n. James (1843–1908) born in Culross, he trained at the Church of Scotland Normal College in Glasgow and came to Hawick in 1866 as assistant to James C. Mudie. This was for the private school that ran at the former Subscription Rooms (now the Halls for the Catholic chapel). He left to form his own school after a clash of personalities, being based first in the Baptist Chapel in Allars Crescent, then at 10 Union Street and later expanding into property at the other end of Union Street. This was called Teviot Grove Academy, but familiarly known as 'Brand's School'. It is said that he provided such strong competition that Mudie was forced to leave Hawick. The school took boarders, some of them from other parts of the country. The school ran as a private institution until 1895 when taken over by the School Board, with Brand becoming Rector of the senior part of the Buccleuch School, which ran technical and art classes in the Buccleuch Memorial. He was also a private music teacher, as well as serving as Session Clerk for Hawick Parish. He retired in 1906. He married J.E.D. Murray's older sister Isabella A. (1849–97). Their children were James (a nurseryman in Vancouver), Murray (paymaster at Woolwich Arsenal), Ira (who married a Sheldon), Alice (who married another Sheldon), May (who became a teacher) and Jessie.

brand (brawnd) n., poet. a sword – '... Her line o' males shall pass away Wi' the halbert, brand and spear, Ane doitit race the distaff ply, an' petticoats shall wear' ' [T], 'I'll keep my ain head wi' my hand And my neck frae the hanging tree As lang as I waiggle a brand – And wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T], Then was there nought but bow and speir, And ilka man pull'd out a brand ... ' [CPM], ' 'Now take thy brand', thou proud pricker, 'And hand to hand we'll fight; For one of us shall surely die, And God assist the right' [JTe].

brander (bran-dur) n. a grid-iron used for cooking, a drain cover, especially an iron grill type – 'ma bool went doon the brander', 'Item, ane brander for ane goospan. Item, ane rosten brander ... ' [SB1651], '... or clairty wui lifty glaar an creeshy glet threh fooel seidaer an brander' [ECS], an iron frame for protecting the piers of a bridge from heavy flotsam – 'Paid a pint of brandye, when the brander of the middle pillar [of the new Teviot Bridge] was in the water' [BR1741], v., arch. to cook on a grid iron, grill food – 'I'll heck them brandered, boiled, or basted' [DH] (from Old English).

brandin (bran-din) n. former method of punishment, last administered in Hawick in 1697. Offenders would be branded with a letter prominently visible, typically on the face. The 'H' branding iron was unfortunately not preserved – '... and at the east end of toun to be burned on the chick with the letter H ... ' [BR], '... never again to be seen ... within the Burgh of Hawick ... and if they do on the contrair, they consent to be branded with ane hott iron on the face' [BR1700].

Brandside (brawnd-sīd) n. former name for lands near Winnington Rig. They were listed as 'Brandsyde' as part of the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. 'Bransidebrae' was listed among the lands in the Barony in the late 17th century and it is transcribed as 'Branksydbrae' in 1670.

Brand's Schuil (brawndz-skil) n. private school at 10 Union Street in the latter part of the 19th century, run by James Brand, and also known as the Teviot Grove Academy. It was the continuation of the Academy previously located at the Subscription Rooms. In 1895 the premises were taken over by the School Board for use as part of the secondary school.

brang (brawng) pp., poet. brought – 'He brang me til the wassail-ha', an' his bannir ower me was loefe' [HSR], '... ther she brang thee furth that buure thee' [HSR] (this used more as the past tense; cf. broucht, browt and brung, which are past participles).

brangle (brawng-gul) v., arch. to squabble, quarrel – '... hold them a cause to dissolve or brangle as yow meane the indent ...' [SB1597].

brank (brawngk) n., arch. a kind of bridle, halter '... and with the branke of the naige struck the said Agnes Ritchisonne upon the head, to her great hurt' [BR1659], 'Many of the weapons ... were of a much more primitive and unwarlike character than the sword, such as 'brank of ane naig'' [DMW], '... and whenever the horses got within the common-dykes, they used to pull the branks off their heads' [DCW1765], '... As country lands be all array'd, Wi' branks and brecham on ilk mare. With my fa ding, &c.' [CPM], 'Ma collar lay roond ma craigie as wanrestfih as branks an brecham roond a yaud' [ECS].

branks (brawngks) n., pl., arch. bridles, halters, the mumps – '... the skeleton ... 'was perfect, but gey frush, that his chaft blades were like the branks o' a cow'' [WNK], instruments of punishment shaped like bridles – '... being a kindred invention to the jougs, branks, and other obsolete implements of punishment then in use' [WNK], 'I refer to the branks used for the punishment of scolds, shrews, witches, and other feminine offenders' [DMW] (see also brank; the plural form was often used as a singular noun).

Branksome (brawngk-sum) n. area within Poole in Dorset. It is named after a house, Branksome Tower, which was inspired by Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel'. Branksome Park is an adjoining (and affluent) suburb of Poole.

Branksome Hall (brawngk-sum-hal) n. independent girls school in Toronto. It was founded in 1903 by Margaret Scott (whose local connection is unclear), who named the school after Branxholm, presumably inspired by Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel'. The school was originally situated at 102 Bloor Street, later relocating to a 13-acre campus in the Rosedale district. The school opened an Asian branch in Korea in 2012.

Brannan (braw-nin) n. John (1861/2–1915) lived at the Round Close. He served in the 7th Battalion K.O.S.B. and died at Gallipoli. At age 53, he must have been one of the oldest men killed at the front line. His son Andrew died 2 months later at Gallipoli.

branny (braw-nee) n., poet. brandy – 'The mistress of Bortugh cam' ben, Aye blinking sae couthy and canny; But some said she had in her han' A kipple o' bottles o' branny' [ES].

Branxholm see Branxholme

Branxholme (brank-sum) n. estate centred on Branxholme Castle, which was owned by the Lovels, the Baliols, the Murrays and the Inglises before passing to the Scotts. The first record of the lands is at the end of the 12th century, when Henry Loval granted 2 'oxengangs' of land there to the canons of St. Andrews. Sometime shortly after Bannockburn the lands were granted to Sir Henry Baliol, except for a part that went to Walter Comyn. However, the lands were restored to the Lovels in about 1346 and some time after that were acquired by the Inglis family. In 1420 (and confirmed at Cavers Kirk in 1431), in the reign of James I, half of the lands were exchanged between the Scotts and the Inglises for Mudiestone in Lanarkshire. It is said that this followed Sir Thomas Inglis complaining of incursions by the English, and that after the trade Sir William Scott remarked that 'the cattle of Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale' (but in fact the trade was between the fathers of these two gentlemen). The half lands are described as being 'from the river of Branchselme to the water of Borythwyk, and as the water of Teveot runs' (although this description seems obscure), including the lands of 'Steyll', 'Lonnehyll', 'Holstruther' and 'Meyrle' (all of which are lost names). In 1446, in the reign of James II, the other half was granted to Sir Walter Scott and his son Sir David to be held in 'blanch' of the Crown, for the payment of a red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The land has been owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch since then. It originally lay within the Barony of Hawick, but was erected into a separate Barony in 1463. The Barony was created to include all the major lands of Sir Walter Scott at that time, i.e. Lanton, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Eckford and Whitchesters, as well as Branxholme itself. Payment was to be one red rose 'as blench farm' at the feast of John the Baptist. The feudal superior of the new Barony was Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, while the neighbouring Barons of Hawick were the Douglases of Drumlanrig; for some period around then it may also have been considered to be part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1484/5 there is reference to the 'three head courts' of the barony (but it is unclear how these legal functions were divided). When the lands were inherited by Walter Scott from his grandfather David in 1492 they were described as being then waste, and valued at 24 merks yearly in times of peace. In court cases of 1493 and 1494/5 the 'Elliots of Branxholme' are mentoned. The Scotts of Buccleuch moved their main seat there in the last years of the 15th century. The farm was burned (but probably not the tower) and raided around 1510 by John Dalgleish and English thieves, including 'Black John' Routledge. An English raiding party burned the tower, farm and neighbouring farms in 1533/4 (as reported by Clifford). The 'barmeykin' and farm was again burned in 1544, when the English took 600 cows, 600 sheep, 200 goats and 30 prisoners, as well as killing 8 men. It was described as a '24 merk land' in 1553/4, when inherited by Walter Scott, from his grandfather, Sir Walter; the mansion and mill are also mentioned. In 1570 the castle was partly destroyed by Scott's men, to stop it falling into the hands of an English force, who then blew up some of the foundations. Along with Whitchesters the estate was valued at £44 in 1574. 'Branxhelme, Eister and Wester, with fortalice, maner place, and wodis therof' are mentioned in 1586. Pont's map of the 1590s shows an enclosure around the estate, including much of the present Branxholme Park, and some of Branxholme Braes, with much of it being wooded. It was re-erected as a Barony in 1599, when the 'reddendo' to the superior was one red rose. The name is also used for the hamlet near there, previously having many more houses, and sometimes being referred to as 'Branxholme Town'. By 1634 the Barony included the lands of Branxholme itself, as well as Eckford, Buccleuch, Lanton, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Rankleburn, Eilrig and Kirkurd. Adam Ogilvie and William Hope were there in 1684. The Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 lists the householders there as John Elliot, Andrew Ogilvie, James Ogilvie and Jean Scott, as well as James Anderson and Walter Scott listed among 'the poor'. Tenants in 1702 included James Ogilvie, John Scott and William Scott. John Scott was tenant there in 1709 and Walter Cook also lived there. In 1711 Andrew Ogilvie was tenant and John Cavers was herd. The tenant farmer through much of the 18th and 19th centuries was the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, whose official residence this was from about 1767. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the tenants were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Graham. In 1678 the Barony (along with the free teinds of Hawick Parish) were valued at about £4700, and still had the same value in 1811. Robert Cook was given money to teach some poor children to read in 1701, suggesting there was a small school, at least temporarily. It was stated in 1838 that the largest tree in Hawick Parish was an ash situated near the Castle. A stone disc with a hole through it, from here, is in the Museum. The area was used as a setting for one of Allan Ramsay's songs 'The Bonnie Lass of Branksome', based on an earlier ballad – 'As I cam' in by Teviotside And by the braes of Branksome, There first I saw my booming bride. Young, smiling, sweet, and handsome', 'Do the phantom horsemen gather at the foot o' Branxholm Brae? Does the minstrel from the Castle sing again his stirring lays?' [GHB], 'Yet, there it stands in black and white, That Henry Lovel, Branxholme's lord, Two oxen gang of land did gift, According to his promised word' [JCG], 'Neath yon hill's shade in a flowery glade, Stands Branxholme's massive tower, Where of old the Knight in armour bright, Arrayed him for the field of flight And left his lady's bower' [JI] (almost interchangeably spelled 'Branxholm'; the name first appears in 1183 as the Latinised 'Branchuella' and about 30 years later as 'Brancheshelm', then around 1315 as 'Brankishelme', with the substitution of 'holm' soon after; it is 'Branchselme' in 1420, 'Branxhelme' about 1430, 'Brankishelme' in 1435, 'Brangisholme' and 'Brankishame' in 1446, 'Brankisholme' in 1447, 'Branxhelm' in 1456, 'Brankyshelm' in 1461, 'Branxelme' on 1463, 'Branxhame' in 1475/6, 1478, 1500, 1501 and 1502, 'Branxhaim' in 1479, 'Brankishame' in 1481, 'Branxhelme' in 1482, 'Branxelme' in 1484, 'Branxeme' in 1492, 'Branxhame' in 1492 and 1493, 'Branxame' in 1494/5, 'Brankschayme' in 1500, 'branxhame' in 1502, 'Branxham' in 1510, 'Branxhelme' in 1500, 1523 and 1526, 'Branxhelm' in 1517 and 1524, 'Branxhame' in 1525, 'Branxelme' in 1527, 'Branxhelme' in 1528, 'Branxhame' and 'Branxhelme' in 1529, 'Branxelm' in 1530/1, 'Brankhelm' in 1539, 'Brankisholme' in 1540 and 1564, 'Branxhelme' in 1543 and 1550, 'Branxhame' in 1550, 'Branxhelme' in 1569 and 1580, 'Brankisholme' in 1574, 'Branxelme' in 1585, 'Branksholme' in 1633, 'Branxom' in 1734 and 'Branxome' in 1740; it is already 'Branxholme' in 1549; it appears on Mercator's 1595 map as 'Brank lam', Gordon's c.1650 map shows 'Branxholm' with a castle symbol, while Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'Branxholme Cast.' in a wooded area and 'Branxholme L.' above; the origin is probably 'Branoc's shelter' or perhaps 'Branoc's land by the stream', with 'Branoc' being an Old Welsh personal name).

Branxholme Braes (brank-sum-brāz) n. farm on the right hand side of the road a little beyond Branxholme, formerly part of the Branxholme estate. In 1621 it was granted by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his uncle, Gavin Elliot of Brugh. In 1631 Gavin's widow sold the lands to William Eliott, younger of Stobs. It was farmed by Grieves in the 19th century. 'Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill' wrote the poem 'the Braes of Branxholm' – 'Came ye, lads, by Branxholme Braes, Whaur Teviot, gentle river, Glides among the saughs and slaes' [GWe] (also spelled 'Branxholmbraes' and 'Branxholm Braes').

Branxholme Brig (brank-sum-brig) n. bridge over the Teviot near Branxholme, by the junction with the road to Haysike, and also known as Michie's Bridge and sometimes Goldielands Bridge. It was probably built as part of the new turn-pike road around 1762 and was repaired in 1820 by Smith of Darnick. A footbridge near Branxholme was swept away in a flood.

Branxholme Brigend (brank-sum-brig-end) n. Branxholme Bridgend, farm and scattered houses near Branxholme Bridge, at the road junction between the A7 and the Haysike road. The Michie family were here for many generations. A side road also leaves the A7 near here to reach the Borthwick valley near Milsington. This is probably the same place as 'Goldielands Bridge End', where Hugh Michie was recorded in 1797.

Branxholme Castle (brank-sum-kaw-sul) n. castle 3 miles south-west of Hawick, hereditary seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch since the middle of the 15th century. It may have been originally built by the Lovels, who certainly owned the land from the 12th century. It passed to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, then to the Earl of Strathearn around 1333 and soon after to the Inglis family. It passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420, and soon became the principal residence of the Scotts. Hawick Kirk then became the burial place of the family for several generations. The residence was strengthened and extended by Sir David Scott in the late 15th century. The Scotts must have expanded the Castle in the 15th century, since by 1463 the documents of the Scotts were made at the 'capitale messuagium' (i.e. principle dwelling house) of Branxholme, and no longer at Rankleburn. The tower was for centuries the centre of power in Upper Teviotdale, and is presently one of the homes of the 9th Duke of Buccleuch. However, the family stopped using it much after they purchased Dalkeith, and for a while it became the residence of the Duke's Chamberlain. The house used to be bigger, with the original tower burned in 1532 by the Earl of Northumberland, probably burned again in 1544 by Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun's men, and blown up in 1570 by the Earl of Sussex' force. A corner tower remains of the original, and most of the rest dates from rebuilding carried out by Sir Walter Scott and his wife Margaret Douglas 1571–1576. A plaque over the doorway (moved from its original location on the north of the courtyard) reads 'IN VARLD IS NOCHT NATURE HES VROUCHT YAT SAL LEST AY THAIRFORE SERVE GOD KEIP VELL YE ROD THEY FAME SAL NOCHT DECAY SCHIR WALTER SCOT OF BRANXHOLME KNYCHT, MARGARET DOUGLAS 1571', as well as another with the arms of Scott and Douglas marking the work they undertook, the inscriptions reading 'S(I)R W. SCOT UMQ(UHI)L(E) OF BRANXHEIM KNYT SO(N)E OF S(I)R WILLIAM SCOT OF KIRKURD KNYT BEGANE YE VORK OF YIS HAL VPON YE 24 OF MARCHE 1571 ZIER QUHA DEPAIRTED AT GOD'S PLESOUR YE 17 OF APRIL 1574' and 'DAME MARGRET DOUGLAS HIS SPOUS COMPLEITTIT THE FORSAID VORK (IN) OCTOBER 1576'. The main building is 3-storeyed and Z-shaped, with 2 towers, the stronger and probably older one called 'Nebsie'. A tower of the walled castle courtyard is known as 'Tentyfoot', and tradition says that there were once 4 towers in all. In 1694 tax was paid on 5 hearths at the main house here. Charles Scott paid tax for 40 windows there in 1748 (when it was called 'Branksholm house'). Additions were made to the north side and to both ends from 1790. Alterations by William Burn from around 1836 included blocking up the arched doorway. It can be seen in 2 sketches from around 1800 and 1808, before the Victorian improvements. A 'curious iron instrument' found in a vault there was donated to the Museum in 1861. It is a grade A listed building. The tower is well known as the main location for Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' – 'Nine-and-twenty knights of fame Hung their shields in Branksome-Hall, Nine-and-twenty squires of name Brought them their steeds to bower from stall' [SWS], 'O'er Branxholm tower, ere the morning hour, When the lift is like lead so blue, The smoke shall roll white on the weary night, And the flame shine dimly through' [JL], 'The morning star with flickering light Looks down on Branxholme's ancient tower' [RHL].

Branxholme Common (brank-sum-ko-min) n. former name for farmland near Branxholme. In 1802 it was leased to James Hume along with Chapelhill.

Branxholme Easter Loch (brank-sum-eestur-loch) n. the eastern of the two Branxholme Lochs, on the slopes of Chapel Hill, west of Branxholme. It is sometimes called just 'Branxholme Loch' or 'Easter Loch', to distinguish it from Chisholme or Wester Loch. It was formerly used as a site for collecting marl for improving soil in the fields of the farms attached to Branxholme. The whole loch was drained, and only restored once the marl was exhausted, around 1850. A small cottage to the south-east is called Loch Cottage. John Laidlaw was a labourer living there in 1812. Thomas Laidlaw and family were there in 1841. The plantation to the south is Loch Rig and the one to the north is Loch Strip (it is marked just 'Branxholme L.' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Branxholme Gate (brank-sum-gā') n. former name for a cottage near Branxholme, probably at Branxholme Lodge. James Robson was shepherd there in 1851.

Branxholme Hall (brank-sum-hal, -haw) n. romantic name for Branxholme Castle – ''Gar seek your succour at Branksome Ha', For succour ye'se get nane frae me! Gae seek your succour where ye paid black mail, For, man! ye ne'er paid money to me'' [T], 'If any one should say to me That Branxholme Hall held many a ghost I would reply with levity That those who thought so sure were lost' [JCG].

Branxholme Knowe (brank-sum-now) n. country house between Baranxholme Park and Branxholme Castle. It was once home of J.G. Winning and has recently been available as a holiday unit.

Branxholme Loch (brank-sum-loch) n. actually Branxholme Easter and Wester Lochs, located about 4 miles south-west of Hawick and a mile apart. They are reached along a road, with several gates, which leads from the Teviot to the Borthwick via Chapelhill. The lochs flow into the Newmill Burn. There is also a cottage by the Easter Loch, tenanted by the Douglas family in the 19th century. The name is often just applied to the Easter Loch, with the Wester one sometimes called 'Chisholme Loch'. A record of 1796 states that a lease was arranged (with neighbouring tenant farmers) for 'Branxholmlock on account of clearing the Marle therein of Water'. In 1841 the cottage at 'Wester Branxholm Loch' was occupied by Douglases.

Branxholme Mains (brank-sum-mānz) n. former name for the 'home farm' at Branxholme. It is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as 'Manis of Branxholme', and the amount of grain grown there is noted. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, the farm consisting of 467 acres, bounded by Branxholme Park, the River Teviot, Branxholmetown, Todshawhill and Todshawhaugh; the map shows some lines of planted trees, which are described as 'some timber trees as Ash and Sycomer and abundance of young thriveing wood'. In 1627 it was described as ppaying about 32 bolls of grain. In 1671 it was leased, along with Branxholme Park, to James Scott, as well as John Scot, James Allan and perhaps others. In at least the period 1672–77 it was leased to Walter Scott of Harwood. In 1691 it was leased ('without the Park of Branxholme') to William Scott of Burnhead and others and in 1696 to Andrew and James Ogilvie and John Scott. In 1735 'that part lately inclosed by a stone dyke' was leased to Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and the rest to William Ogilvie (it is 'Branxholme Maynis' in 1627, 'Branxholme Maynes' in 1671 and 'Branxholmemaines' in 1735).

Branxholme Muir (brank-sum-mewr) n. land near Branxholme, consisting of the higher ground to the north. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, at that point consisting of 671 acres of high moorland, bounded by Whithope, Todshawhill, Branxholmetown, Chapelhill, Reggs, Harwood, Vales, Hott, Outer Slaidhill and Easter and Wester Parkhill. In 1671 it was leased to William Scott, having previously been leased by James Chisholme. In 1672 the east end was leased to James and Andrew Chisholme and the west end to William Scott of Hartwoodmyres. In 1677 the east end was leased by Andrew and James Chisholme and the west end by James Scott. In 1691 and 1696 the east end was leased by Andrew and Walter Chisholme and in 1691 the west end was leased to James Scott. In 1735 the east end was leased to William and Walter Chisholme and the west end to William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was the subject of a dispute between Sir James Stewart and John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in the period 1743–60 and in 1763–64 between Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and the heirs of Chisholme of Parkhill (it is 'Branxholme Moore' in 1718).

Branxholme Park (brank-sum-pawrk, -pārk) n. farm on the right-hand side of the road just before Branxholme Castle, long a tenanted farm of the Branxholme estate. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 215 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, a small part of Goldielands, the River Teviot, Branxholme Mains and Todshawhaugh. At that time it was stated that the farmland was 'much incombered with young thriveing wood as Ash Burch and Willow'; the plan shows trees along the south, east and north sides of the farm. It was home to the Grieve family for several generations, the first lease being signed in 1691 by Walter Grieve. The land is first referred to in 1649 as a 'park', the suggestion being that it was used as a deer park for the Branxholme estate. In 1694 the householders there were Walter Grieve, John Telfer and Robert Scott. William Allan was there in 1712. Walter Grieve paid tax for 12 windows there in 1748. James Grieve was tenant there in 1797, and was recorded having 11 work horses on the farm. Walter Govenlock was also there in 1797, Thomas Helm in at least 1799–1801 and William Scott, Thomas Rutherford and John Scoon in 1801 (it is 'Branxom park' in 1737 and 'Branksholm park' in 1748).

Branxholmepark Hill (brank-sum-pawrk-hil) n. hill to the north of Branxholme, reaching a height of 250 m and having a triangulation pillar. In 1857 a silver coin of James I was donated to the Museum, 'found on east side of Branxholm Park hill'.

Branxholme Pot (brank-sum-po') n. old brass vessel belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch, presumably once from Branxholme. It is recorded at Dalkeith in the 1661 inventory of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch as 'Item, ane great pot of brase called Branxholme Pot, much worne, haveing a hole in the bottome'.

Branxholme River (brank-sum-ri-vur) n. stream near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter of half of the lands of Branxholme. Since the Teviot and Borthwick are also referred to, then this must be the name for either the stream which runs through Branxholme Glen (also known as Bloody Burn) or perhaps Newmill Burn.

the Branxholme Stakes (thu-brank-sum-stāks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, replaced by the Medway Cup in 1927.

Branxholme Toon (brank-sum-toon) n. former name for the village around Branxholme, or more specifically for the farm of Branxholmtown. This was located about half a mile west of the castle itself, or coming from Hawick, the farm was on the right-hand side of the road, just before Newmill. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 252 acres, bounded by Branxholme Mains, the River Teviot, Castlehill, Chapelhill, Branxholme Muir and Todshawhill. The modern farm of Branxholme Braes encompasses the lower land that was once part of this farm. The tenant farmer there in 1574 was John Martin, when the inventory of livestock was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Steven Scott was tenant there in 1611. Another John Martin was there in 1623. In 1627 it was described as paying '32 bolls in stok and teynd; estimat to pay 16 in stok, 4 in parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. in teynd' in an average year. There were Scoons recorded there from at least 1671–1735. In 1671 it as leased by Margaret Murray, John Richardson (younger and elder), William Hope, Partick Scoon, James Allan and James Martin. In 1677 the tenants were Patrick and Robert Scoon, William Hope, James Richardson and Margaret Murray. In 1690 the farm was leased to Janet Wilson, John and Patrick Scoon, James Craw and Robert Richardson (with Richardson being replaced by William Nixon in 1691 and then Andrew Wilson in 1692). There were also Craws, Nichols and Scotts there in the early 18th century. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the householders listed there were Walter Wilson, James 'Crinklaw', Patrick Scoon, John Scoon, Andrew Laidlaw, James Craw and Walter Scott, as well as Robert Richardson being listed among 'the poor'. In 1698 Andrew Wilson's widow took over his part. James Laidlaw was there in 1702. James and Walter Craw, Margaret Riddell and Scotts were there in 1708. John Riddell, Thomas Anderson and James Crow were all there in 1713. Robert Scott, Walter Crow and John Nichol were recorded there in 1717. John Craw and John Wilson were tenants there in 1723. The cluster of houses is clearly shown on the 1718 survey, in the same location as 'Branxholmtown' marked on today's Ordance Survey map. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1720 and other residents included Robert Scoon and James and Walter Crow. In 1725 the tenants were James Craw, Robert and Walter Scoon, John Wilson and Walter Craw. In 1735 the tenants were James Craw, Robert and Walter Scoon and John Wilson. Robert and Walter Scoon were still tenants in 1742. In the 1740s the tenants included James Craw, John Craw's widow and John Wilson. Charles Scott was tenant in 1748. Robert Crawford who died in 1767 was tenant there. Andrew and Walter Robson were living there in 1801. The settlement at 'Branxholmtoun' was significantly bigger in the 17th and 18th centuries than it became later. It even had its own teacher around the 18th century. By the mid-19th century it was already reduced to 8 or 9 houses. It was once the home for the retainers of Scott of Branxholme. The road from the head of the Borthwick valley into Hawick used to pass by here – 'Branxholme Town, which at one time was occupied by the Buccleuch retainers, had been reduced to about eight or nine dwelling-houses when I knew it first' [NE] (also written 'Branxholmtown', 'Branxholmtoun', 'Branxholmetoune' and variants).

Branxholme Waltz (brank-sum-walts) n. only piece of pure piano music composed by Adam Grant. He wrote this in about 1880, dedicating it to the Duchess of Buccleuch and it was published in 1882.

Branxholme Wester Loch (brank-sum-wes-tur-loch) n. the western of the two lochs in the hills above Branxholme, and the source of the Newmill Burn. It was also formerly known as Chisholme Loch. The 'Wester Loch House' listed in 1774 must have been a cottage near here. Widow Isabella Douglas and several children were here in 1841 and 1851 (it appears to be labelled 'Chishamra L.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, while the Easter Loch is marked simply 'Branxholme L.').

Branxholme Wud (brank-sum-wud) n. former name for the wooded area near Branxholme, which may have once been more extensive. This is listed in a description of Roxburghshire written in 1649 – 'The Woods are Branksholm Wood . . . ' [MMGC1649].

brench (brench) n., arch. a branch (of a tree, family, etc.) – '... ws Robene Ellot of Reidheuch, Martine Ellot of Braidley, Jok Ellot of Copschaw, and Williame Ellot of Gorrumberrie, principallis of oure brenche ...' [SB1599], 'She sendet owt hir bouchs untill the se, an' hir brenches untill the river' [HSR] (also brainch).

Brenlands (bren-lindz) n. house in Howdenburn, built at the location of the former Fever Hospital.

brent (bren', brent) adj., arch. sheer, precipitious, bold, forward, shameless, brazen – 'A brent huzzie!' [GW], 'Old Hawick was nothing if not characteristically Scotch – brent, plain spoken almost to rudeness, caustic and ever independent' [JHH], adv. straight, directly, steeply – '... on the tother the road gaed brent doun inti thick planteens abuin Bedrule an Denum' [ECS], 'The Germans cam brent on' [GW].

brether (bre-thur) n., pl., arch. brothers, brethren – '... and als, I, the said Roberte Scot of Alanehaucht, for my self, and takand the burdin on me for my saidis brether and remanent personis ...' [SB1585].

brethren (breth-rin) n., pl., arch. the members of the Presbytery, i.e. the body of ministers appointed to administer the district of the Presbyterian Kirk – '... in 1683, the brethren of ye presbyterie mett and did allocat to the heritors their seats in ye body of ye church' [PR1714] (see also brether and brithren).

the Brethren Fellowship (thu-breth-rin-feli-ship) n. evangelical group meeting in Slitrig Hall, Old Manse Lane, with their local origin dating back to the 1870s. They are also referred to as 'Plymouth Brethren' or 'Christian Brethren'. Their practices include full body baptism (some previously carried out in the nearby mill lade!) and Communion. They held popular 'lantern shows' in the mid-20th century. Another group known as 'the Brethren' met in Oliver Place in the late 19th century. There was also a 'House of Brethren' on the north side of Eastgate in Denholm at the end of the 19th century, with mill workers travelling from Hawick to worship there. The 'Needed Truth' (so-called from their monthly magazine) separated from the 'Open' Brethren in 1888.

Brewbuss (broo-bus) n. former farmstead, probably in the upper Jed valley near Roughlee. It is recorded in 1669 as 'Brewbuse' when the tenant was William Laidlaw. Probably the same place was 'Breirbus' in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, valued at 20 shillings. It was part of the five steadings of 'Fawsyde, Rouchleis et Brerebus' with past rentals claimed by William Douglas in 1538 and 1539 (it is 'Breirbus' in 1538 and 'Breirbusk' in 1539; it is unclear where exactly this was or what the name means, although 'Briar bush' seems possible, given the earlier spellings).

Brewer (broo-ur) n. Alexander (18th C.) servant to Mr. Craigie of Kilgraston, who was cashier for the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for mason William Ekron.

the Brewer's Plate (thu-broo-urz-plā') n. race at the Common Riding in at least 1856, 1857 and 1860, held on the Friday. It may be the same as the race called the 'Innkeeper's Purse' in other years.

the Brewery (thu-broo-ur-ee) n. Hawick had a brewery in Slitrig Crescent, between the present Nos. 16 and 19, which closed in 1879. It is shown in a painting of Hawick by J.B. Pringle in about 1850. John George King was brewer there in the mid-19th century, with Robert Winter taking over from him. Part (No. 18) was converted into a church hall for St. Cuthbert's, while Nos. 17 and 19 are private houses. The lower ground floor ceilings and higher upper floor ceilings are remnants of its use as a brewery, and part of a hoist can still be seen above one of the upper windows. There was also a brewery down Walter's Wynd marked on Wood's 1824 map.

Brewery Haugh (broo-ur-ee-hawch) n. area between the main road and the Slitrig, where St. Mary's Church Hall and parts of St. Cuthbert's were built. It was named after the nearby brewery, and was possibly once used as a pasture for their horses. The area was also sometimes known as 'Chalmers' Haugh (after the mid-19th century brewery owner) and 'St. Cuthbert's Haugh'. There were once fairs held there, and the area was used for drilling by the Dumfries Militia during the Crimean War (see also Whusky Hooses).

Breweryhooses (broo-ur-ee-hoo-seez) n. Breweryhouses, a name sometimes used for Whusky Hooses. The existence of a 'stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge' (recorded in 1738) may explain the confounding of the names. 'Brewery' is marked on Wood's 1824 map.

Brewhoose (broo-hoos) n. (Brewhouse) James (16th C.) tenant at 'Glenpyot', recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. This could be the lands of Glenpyet in Yarrow.

Brewlands (broo-lindz) n. former name for lands that were part of the Harwood estate, and probably adjacent to Templehall. In a feu charter of 1567 they (along with Templehall) are recorded passing by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull, having been resigned by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. These lands were confirmed to his nieces in 1604, when Templehall and Brewlands are described as being west of Wauchope and north of the Rule Water (it is 'Brewlandis' in 1604).

Brewlands (broo-lindz) n. former name for part of Raperlaw. They are 'Brewlandis in Rapperlaw' in 1569 (when among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French) and the 'Brewlands of Raperlaw' in a listing of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670.

Brewster (broo-stur) n. Sir David (1781–1868) born in Jedburgh, son of the rector of the Grammar School there. It is said that he had an early infatuation for Mary Somerville, who also lived in Jedburgh, and learned to make a telescope with James Veitch of Inchbonny. He went to Edinburgh University at the age of 12 to study theology, but eventually became a physicist (amongst other things). He invented the kaleidoscope and a precursor of the Fresnel lens, improved the stereoscope and discovered the law of angle of polarization of light (known as the 'Brewster Angle'). He wrote biographies of several eminent scientists, as well as many other books, including one discussing life on other planets. He also experimented with early photography, published over 2,000 papers and became one of the foremost scientists of his day. Additionally he edited the 18 volume 'Edinburgh Encylopædia'

(writing many of the science articles himself), which was very influential at the time. It was said that he considered purchasing the villa of Allars near Jedburgh, but was fearful of the mill-stream that runs in front of the house, and instead had a house built near Melrose, which he called 'Allerly' (presumably after the Jedburgh site); however, his 15-year old son drowned in the Tweed near his new house. Locally known as 'of Allerly', he was a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in the 1860s. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and was at their first annual dinner. He was made a Burgess of Jedburgh in 1864. An early photographic portrait of him exists and a portrait was gifted to Jedburgh by his daughter. James (c.1735–1815) Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School 1771–1803. He married Margaret Key and they had 6 children, inlcuding Sir David and 3 other sons who were ministers.

the bride's pie (thu-brīdz-pI) n., arch. former name for the principal dish at a wedding. A large slice, the 'first cut', was distributed amongst the company.

Bridge see Briggs

the Bridge Bar (thu-brij-bawr) n. public house formerly at 5 Sandbed, where the Angling Club is now located.

Bridgehaugh (brij-hawch) n. former name for an area between the Vennel and the Howegate, through which a footpath led in the 17th century. The same or similar area was also known as 'Wylie's Dub' or 'the Dub'. It may also be essentially the same area that was refered to in Hawick's first existing sasine of 1558, when Alexander Scott sold to James Scott a 'tenement' of land having the Common Vennel to the west and 'the hill path on the south' (also spelled 'Bridghaugh').

Bridgehoose see Brighoose

Bridge Hoose (brij-hoos) n. large house situated at the western end of the Sandbed, used for most of its existence as a hotel and restaurant, currently Sergio's and a dry cleaners. It was built in the first half of the 19th century, appearing on the Ordnance Survey map in 1857 and being extended to form an L-plan building by the 1890s. It was used for a while as the offices for auctioneers Andrew Oliver & Sons, then as the home of James Oliver and family. Later it was a surgery, a girls' hostel, launderette and restaurant. It is a grade C listed building.

Bridgehoose Burn (brij-hoos-burn) n. stream that runs roughly south, to the east of Steele Road, to join the Liddel Water near Dinlabyre (see Brighoose).

Bridgehoose Plantin (brij-hoos-plawn-tin) n. plantation along the road and railway line just to the north-west of Dinlabyre (see Brighoose).

Bridge Hotel (brij-hō-tel) n. hotel in Bridge House at the Sandbed since at least the late 19th century.

Bridge Hotel Lane (brij-hō-tel-lān) n. name sometimes used for the lane leading from the Sandbed to the river, along the side of the Bridge Hotel.

Bridges see Briggs

Bridge Street (brij-stree') n. name sometimes used for North Bridge Street.

Bridget (bri-ji') n. Thomas (b.1827/8) from Stirling, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Scott (1824–70) in Hawick in 1848 and they were living on Ladylaw Place in 1851. She was probably the 'Mrs Bridget, Ballarat, Australia' who in 1869 donated to the Museum 'coral off rocks near Sydney, bottle of preserved seaweed found floating on the coast of Florida, and specimen of auriferious quartz'. He secondly married Christina Pollock in Ballarat in 1872.

Bridget Danny Hoo (bri-ji'-daw-nee-hoo) n. nickname of a lady who kept a lodging house in Denholm in the late 19th century. This was on the Canongate, 2 doors north-east of Leyden's Cottage.

Bridgewater (brij-waw-tur) n. John (13th/14th C.) English cleric, with his surname written 'de Bruggewater'. In 1319 he was presented by Edward II as Prebend of Lilliesleaf Church. In 1324 or 1325 he was Parson of Toller Porcorum in Dorset when he granted land in Bridgewater in Somerset.

bridie (brī-dee) n. a semi-circular pie made of flaky pastry filled with cooked minced beef and onions – 'A like Miller's bridies better than their cheese an ingan pies', '... famously sent a boy for toonty Senior Service tipped saying 'if you can't get that anything else will do' and the boy came back wi twae pies and a bridie!' [IWL].

Bridieyairds (brī-dee-yārdz) n. former variant of Briery Yairds – 'And there were three wives in Midshiells, And three in Bridieyairds; And they're awa to the Kirk o' Hassendean, And left baith wheel and cairds' [T], 'There are three wives in Hassendean, And ane in Braddie-Yards, And they're away to Gittenscleugh, And left their wheel and cards' [DJG] (also spelled 'Briddieyards').

brie (bree) n., poet. a brim – 'O whar gat thou these targats Johnie, That blink sae brawly aboon they brie ...' [CPM].

Brierieyards see Briery Yairds

Brierlee (brI-ur-lee) n. former farmstead in the upper Jed valley. It was situated near Edgerston Rig, off the modern A68, by the Brierlee Cleuch. 'John Ladlay of Breerbushe', recorded in 1544, may have been from there. The farms of 'brier bus and wod' are listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls (it is probably the 'Breerly' marked much further west on Blaeu's c.1654 map and is on Stobie's 1770 map).

Brieryhill (brI-ur-ee-hil) n. farm along the Wilton Burn beyond Overhall, long the home of the Aitchisons. The track over to Whitehaugh Road is well known for varieties of wild flowers. Part of a drove road used to pass near here. Walter Langlands from here signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. There were 8 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely George Scott, James Scott, Robert Henderson, John Thomson, John Scott, Bessie Nichol, Helen Nichol and James Clerk. It was home to a branch of the Langlands family in the 17th century and probably the 'Bridiholl' listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls when Thomas Scott was the tenant and Helen Henderson was a cottar there. John Scott was recorded there in 1724 and John Turnbull in 1741. The estate was valued at £81 3s 10d in the 1740s. William Scott had sasine for the lands in 1739 and William Scott 'of Brirhole' is recorded on the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls, with the same Dr. William Scott being owner in 1788 when it was valued at £81 3s 10d. John 'Merk' was farmer there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The farm was owned by George Pott of Todrig in 1811 (when it was still valued at £81). John Turnbull was tenant farmer in the early 19th century. It was later sold to the Aitchisons, who farmed there through much of the 19th century. A plan of the estate exists from an 1857 survey, including the names and areas of various fields, called Back of House Park, Garden Park, East Garden Park, Fore Hill Park, Back Hill Park, Fore Park, Murrayshall Park and Scaw Mill Park – 'We sought the dell and hawthorn shade, On bonnie Briery Hill' [JI], 'Roond the back o' Briery Hill Doon past the Wulton Burn Yin o' the bonniest sights o' aw Wi' peace roon every turn' [AY] (also referred to as 'Brieryhole' and formerly spelled 'Bridiholl', 'Breiriehole', 'Brierehole', 'Brierie-hole', 'Brierihole', 'Brirrieholl', 'Bryireholl', etc.; it is 'brierieholl' on a 1650 parish map, 'Brirriholl' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Brierihole' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Brierihole' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Wilton Dean. Before the Park was purchased by the Council, the public would have to walk this way to get round the estate.

Brieryards see Briery Yairds

Brieryshaw (brI-ur-ee-shaw) n. former settlement on the main road through the Ewes valley, to the north of the church and school. It was valued at £90 in 1671. On the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties, it is explained that the farm had corn land intermixed with that of Kirkton and they shared 583 acres of pasture, with no marches, but this farm holding 1/3 of the lands, and hence 1/3 of the animals in the combined herd. It was owned by the Laird of Byrecleuch, whose name is not given. James Scott was there in at least the period 1787–97. Jane Scott was living there in the cottage in at least the period 1841–61. In 1841 and 1851 John Dryden was blacksmith there, James Sword was joiner and Andrew Thomson was a road surveyor. There was a blacksmith and post office here on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map. Thomas Gaskell was farmer there in 1868 (it is 'Bryeryshaw' in 1718).

Brieryshaw Hill (brI-ur-ee-shaw-hil) n. hill opposite Arkleton in Ewesdale, being essentially the south-eastern shoulder of Stake Hill. It contains the remains of a hill-fort, which commanded a view up and down the length of the entire valley. It measures about 64 m by 57 and has a double rampart. There are remains of a separate enclosure about 100 m to the south and the south-west side of the hill shows signs of rig-and-furrow.

Briery Yairds (brI-ur-ee-yārdz) n. estate, with its mansion house built near Hornshole, overlooking the Teviot, formerly in the Barony of Hassendean. It is reached from a driveway just to the north of Hornshole Bridge, and situated to the north-east, overlooking the caravan park. 'Johanne de Cauerhyll de Breryzardis' witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. Cuthbert Glencairn had a sasine for the lands in 1492. In 1510/1 the lands were granted by James IV to Master John Murray of Blackbarony, after they were forfeited by Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. There were Douglases there around the time of the Hornshole incident and through the 16th century. It was burned along with much of the rest of Teviotdale by Hertford's men in 1545 (probably the closest place the raiding party came to Hawick). Robert Douglas inherited lands from his father John Douglas of Brieryyards in 1606. John Scott was recorded as tenant there in 1611, and Scotts held the lands through the 17th century. It is among loands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas, Earl of Haddington in 1634. In 1637 William Scott of Chamberlain Newton inherited these lands (along with Braidlees) from his uncle John Scott of Briery Yards; at that time they were valued at 100 shillings, and included a mill. In 1643 and 1663 the lands were valued at £260 and owned by John Scott. In 1678 it was combined with Hornshole (in Hassendean Parish) and valued at £360. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. Lands here were still listed as being part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1680 (a vestige of a connection with Melrose Abbey). The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until assigned to Wilton in 1690. The estate formerly owned land in the town, near where Croft Road and Lothian Street were built. Tax was paid on 4 hearths there in 1694, when William Scott was probably Laird; other residents recorded there at that time were Adam Morton, John Goodfellow and Thomas Henderson. It was purchased by William Ogilvie in 1705. Thomas Liddell was there in 1722, Thomas Scott in 1724, Robert Graham in 1737 and Adam Laidlaw in 1741. The lands were valued at £360 in the 1740s. William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres was living there in 1742 and David Ogilvie paid the tax on 12 windows there in 1748. William Turnbull was tenant in 1727–45. John Hume was there in 1765 and Robert Oliver was recorded as a resident there in 1770. In 1783 the lands passed to the Turnbulls of Fenwick through marriage, and this family sold them at the end of the 19th century. It was later home of historian David Dundas Scott, Provost Robert Fraser Watson and then his brother Thomas Lindsay Watson. Lindsay Watson had the old house demolished and a new house built using some of the same stones (also spelled 'Brierieyards', 'Brieryyards', 'Briery-yards' and 'Brierie-yards'; it is 'Breryzardis' in 1456, 'Breryyardis' in 1492, 'Breriyardis' in 1510/1, 'Brerezardis' in 1517, 'Bryeryards' and 'Breare Yardes' in 1545, 'Brery-yardis' in 1551, 'Brieryards' in 1588, 'Breeryyard' in 1603, 'Brariezairdis' in 1606, 'Brerieyairdis' in 1611, 'Breiryairds' in about 1621, 'Bririezardes' in 1633, 'Breiryairdis' in 1634, 'Bririzairdis' in 1637, transcribed as 'Breriyairds' in 1638, 'Brierzairds' in 1640, 'Briddieyards' in 1643, 'Breidieyairdis' in 1646, 'Breiryairdis' in 1648 and 'Breiryeards' in 1649, 'Breirie yards' in 1663, 'Brierrieyeards' and 'Breiryardis' in 1670, 'Bridieyerds' in 1678, 'Bririyeards' in 1681, 'bririeyairds' in 1683, 'Bridyeyeards' in 1689, 'briryards' in 1724, 'Bririyards' in 1742 and 'Brierieyards' in 1765; it appears twice, as 'Breyyards' and 'Bryryyards' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript, is marked 'Bririyards' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Brieriyards' on Stobie's 1770 map).

brig (brig) n. a bridge – 'To spent in Michael Stevenson's, with the magistrates, at petitioning the mending of the auld brig, damaged by the flood . . . ' [BR1773], 'Auld Brig shake hands, I maist can greet To see ye harried sae complete' [WNK], '. . . Hae stood, and still as lang might stand As ony brig in a' the land' [AD], Jookin' here a sturdy brig or there a cauld' [JEDM], 'The road splet, an, ti the richt, spanged the Yill owre a brig' [ECS], '. . . Hawick Wattie's brocht another Spring. Oo saw'm himsel ayont the brig' [WP], a gap between two things, particularly stacks of peet – '. . . to take no more ground to spreed peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns, and to leave sufficient briggs . . . ' [BR1743] (from Old English).

Brig (brig) n. George (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in a marriage contract of 1581/2 between his daughter Katherine and James, son of John Melrose. The couple were to be given John Melrose lands in Langnewton, lying between those of 'Jock the Laird' Robson and William Robson 'the officer'. The witnesses included John Scott in Aikwood, and Thomas and Robert 'therei' (probably meaning in Langnewton, who were surely relatives). James (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Martin (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1581 when he witnessed a marriage contract for the son of William Robson. Robert (d.c.1500) killed along with Adam 'Barnisfader' at 'Kelshope' (probably Kershope) by a group of Olivers and others from Strynds and nearby, who had remission for their crimes in 1502. In a second entry in 1502 the named assailants were Robert Oliver in Lustruther, Robert, son's brother of David Oliver, James Oliver and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he witnessed a tack for land in Langnewton between Patrick King and Stephen Bulman. In 1581/2 he witnessed a marriage contract involving George Brig in Langnewton, with Robert as another witness. Thomas (16th C.) probably tenant in Langnewton. He is mentiobed in 1581/2 when he witnessed a marriage contract involving George Brig, with Robert being another witness (see also Briggs).

the Brig-end (thu-brig-end) n. popular name for a former hostelry at the west side of the Auld Brig, or more generally for that area. Shoemaker John Oliver is described being from 'Bridge end' when he died in 1787. By the middle of the 19th century it had become a private dwelling – 'For upwards of a century the Brigend was a hostelry of no mean repute' [WNK].

Brigend (brig-end) n. another name for Ashkirk Brigend.

Brigend (brig-end) n. Bridgend, former name for the public house at Bonchester Bridge. It is stated that there was an inn there from 1701. The tenant of the farm there was George Stevenson in 1797. In at least 1799–1801 Andrew Ker was a wright there, James Martin was a smith in 1799, Thomas Bowie was a mason in 1801 and Adam Armstrong was a smith in 1801. A new house and joiner's shop were built by James Chisholme of Hobsburn in the early years of the 19th century. However, it was soon changed into a public house, with the joiner, Robert Turnbull, talking over as proprietor. This was around 1820, when the new toll road was opened. The Turnbull family also ran a grocer's shop there, which, from 1835, was used as the first post office in the Rule valley. The rest of the row of cottages was built a little while after the pub (now the Horse and Hounds) by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Other early residents were mason Gilbert Boa, road contractor William Laidlaw and blacksmith George Stevenson (also written 'Briggend', it is 'B. Bridgend' in 1797 and 'Bonchester bridge end' in 1799).

Brigend see Hermitage Brigend

Brigend Hoose (brig-end-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Bridge Hoose.

Briggend (brig-end) n. Bridge-end, former settlement near Darnick which had a rudimentary bridge consisting of planks across 3 piers, for a long time it must have been the only bridges across the Tweed between Peebles and berwick. It probably did not survive Hertford's army in 1545, and although the settlement is marked on Pont's 1609 map, there is no bridge there. It is explicitly mentioned in 1629 as being already ruined and was romanticised by Sir Walter Scott in 'the Monastery'. For some time afterwards there was a ferry across the Tweed at this location until the bridge was built at Darnick in 1750, and then replaced shortly afterwards.

Briggs (brigz) n. (Bridges, Briggs) Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Riddell and their children included: John (b.1641); and Adam (b.1648). Adam (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the Adam, son of Adam and Agnes Riddell, born in Hawick in 1648. He is probably the Adam who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges in Hawick in 1678. He also witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas in 1685. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, who who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for gardener George Lamb in 1760 and the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1768. John (16th/17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was a witness, along with another weaver, Walter (presumably a relative), for a sasine of 1610. John (17th C.) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably related to the earlier weaver called John. In 1713 he is described as 'weaver att the easter kirkstyle'. He married Janet Beattie (or 'Badie') and their children included: Margaret (b.1700); James (b.1703); Isabella (b.1705); John (b.1707); Jean (b.1710); and Margaret (again, b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were weavers James and John Beattie (surely related to his wife), in 1705 were weavers John Beattie and Adam Scott, in 1707 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Archibald Graham in Raesknowe, and in 1713 were John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and carrier Walter Ruecastle. John (17th C.) flesher recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. In 1683 he was fined for insulting William Paisley and Michael Turnbull, 'calling of them two drunken elders'; he and William Paisley were also fined for assaulting each other. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the John whose children born in Hawick included: Marion (b.1703); Andrew (b.1706); and John (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Liddersdale in 1700. He may be the John whose daughter Helen married John Scott in 1722. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Lamb in 1781. Probably the same John married Isobel Scott (who was from Roberton Parish) in 1767 and their children included Isobel (b.1769), John (b.1773), John (again, b.1775), Robert (b.1776) and Betty (b.1779). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1771 for James Laidlaw. He is probably the John whose child was buried in Hawick in 1772. Bailie John (1810/1–87) probably son of weaver Robert. He was a Magistrate of the mid-1800s, of whom a portrait exists. He was a tailor by trade and was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk. There were people of the same name at Mabonlaw in the mid-17th century. He was recorded at about 1 High Street in 1841 and on the Howegate in 1851 (when he employed 3 men). He was also listed in Slater's 1852 dirctory. He married Wilhelmina, sister of Provost John Nichol, and she died in 1865, aged 52. He later moved to Glasgow. He is probably the Bailie John who liked to tell the story of his father Robert, who once attended the church in Teviothead, when the minister, Rev. Thomas Dyce, shouted 'Briggs, are you here the day! What news have ee from Hawick?' Col. John (1825–93) 2nd son of Col. J.F. of Strathairly, he distinguished himself in India, retiring on full pay as Lieutenant Colonel. He was tenant at Linthill for a few years and then at Bonjedward. He was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt, but became permanently lame after his horse fell on him. He married a daughter of A. Lamont of Knockdow and secondly Louisa, daughter of Capt. Briggs. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire and a member of the Jedforest Club. He wrote 'Heathen and Holy Lands' (1859). In later life he lived in Hampshire, where he died. Michael (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick, with surname sometimes written 'Bridge' or 'Bridges'. He was recorded as a 'merchant' in 1712. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being at a late night drunken brawl, although he stated he 'was the Ridder who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan'. He is probably the Michael who witnessed baptisms for James Jolly, Andrew Jardine and William Gardner (along with Adam Jardine) in 1705, for weaver Andrew Richardson in 1706, for James Jolly in 1707, for weaver Mungo Swan, for weaver Thomas Turnbull and for weaver Thomas (surely related) in 1708 and for weaver Jasper Richardson in 1709. He married Helen Allan (from Cavers Parish) in 1709 and their children included: Janet (b.1710); Rachel (b.1712); Thomas (b.1714); Jean (b.1717); and Helen and John (b.1719). The witnesses in 1710 were James Scott 'Doctor' and merchant John Oliver and in 1712 were James Jardine and John Scott 'Doctor'. It is probably that he was the Michael, son to flesher Thomas, who was listed among the young men who were fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Douglas and their children included James (b.1671) and Janet (b.1674). Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the same Patrick had a 'lawborrows' against him in 1683, with weaver Adam Brown, younger, afraid that he would harm him or his family; he found a cautioner and hence was not imprisoned in the tolbooth. In 1693 he gave evidence before the Magistrates when John Hardie was accused of assaulting Steven Greenshields in St. Mary's Kirk. He is probably the Patrick listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Patrick, married to Bessie Anderson, whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1678); William (b.1681); Patrick (b.1684); and Mungo (b.1687). The witnesses in 1678 were Thomas Lunn and William Swan. He could be the Patrick who witnessed baptisms in 1678 (along with Adam) for Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges, in 1684 for Andrew Jardine and Janet Goodfellow and in 1689 for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and Margaret Elliot, as well as for William Bryson. Robert (b.1770s) weaver recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was recorded as a carpet weaver in Hawick on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the Robert, son of John and Isabel Scott, who was baptised in Hawick in 1776. He is probably the Robert, weaver in Hawick (and father of Bailie John) who was said to have attended the church in Teviothead, when the minister, Rev. Thomas Dyce, shouted 'Briggs, are you here the day! What news have ee from Hawick?' Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Martin and their son John was baptised in 1634. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Grizell Bridges and their children included Jeanie (b.1635), John (b.1637) and Janet (b.1639). Thomas (17th C.) butcher in Hawick. He was fined in 1685 for a 'blood committ by him upon the said Michael Trumble', with Turnbull also fined for assaulting him. In 1692 he was one of the butchers in Hawick who gave evidence that James Halliday was selling bad meat. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1694 when he was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick; he is listed separately from Thomas the weaver. He could be the 'flesher' listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the man listed on the rental records for the farm of Branxholme Town in 1690, where he was 'in Hawick' and a cautioner, perhaps for Robert Richardson. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for the Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1694 and the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Tait in 1696. He was presumably the flesher Thomas whose son Michael was among those fined for their part in the disturbances at the 1706 Common Riding. He could be the Thomas, married to Janet Douglas, whose sone Michael was baptised in Hawick in 1687. Thomas (17th C.) weaver listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1708 and 1711 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine, younger (whose mother Janet Briggs was surely related to him, perhaps his sister). In 1717 he was charged with collecting money 'westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la', suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He must have been older than the Thomas born in 1680, but could have been the father. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Wigholm, whose children born in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); an unnamed child (b.1672); William (b.1673); Margaret (b.1676); Isobel (b.1678); Thomas (b.1680); and another unnamed child (b.1683). The witnesses in 1678 were Robert Lauder and James Bridges and in 1680 were Andrew Angus and shoemaker John Scott. He could be the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for Andrew Porteous in 1684 and 1688 and for Walter Gledstains in 1684. Thomas (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was contemporary with the Thomas who married Margaret Wigholm (both having children in the same year), hence making it hard to separate them. He himself married Jean or Janet Foster, with their children including Margaret (b.1683), John (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were William Foster (surely related to his wife) and Robert Wright, and in 1685 were Adam (surely a relative) and John Stewart. Thomas (17th C.) referred to as 'younger, weiver' in 1686 when he was fined for 'abstracting and resetting of lyme from the church style building' (i.e. stealing cement from a building at the Kirk Style) having been seen by Bailie Laing. He is also listed as 'younger, weaver' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas (b.1680) probably son of Thomas and Margaret Wigholm. He married Jean Cook in Hawick in 1707. He was a weaver in Hawick when his son Thomas was baptised in 1708, with witnesses Michael (surely a relative) and James Wilson, 'servitor Horslihill'. It may be that there are 2 generations of Thomases confused with each other here. Thomas (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for mason John Napier. Thomas (18th C.) weaver who married Isobel Waugh in Hawick in 1724. His wife was also from Hawick. Walter (16th/17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1610 he was witness to a sasine in Hawick, along with John and others. Walter (b.1815/6) listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as a shoemaker on the High Street. In the 1851 census he was a shoemaker at around 7 Tower Knowe. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory as a shoemaker on the High Street. His wife was Betsy. William (d.c.1684) weaver in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1684. He is probably the William who was on the Council in 1668 and also the weaver called William who was elected to the Council in late 1648. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1648 for Andrew Turnbull and for James Lunn. Probably his relatives (perhaps including himself) were the 3 people named 'Bridgs' who were imprisoned in the Tower by the Bailie of Regality in 1668, for 'ryving of others hares', with the Bailies of Hawick requesting their release; they appealed to the Supreme Court for the fine imposed on them. He is probably the William who married Bessie Brown, their children including: Helen (b.1636), who probably married Mungo Swan; Patrick (b.1639); William (b.1646); and Janet (b.1652), who probably married Andrew Jardine. In 1673 and 1680 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine and his wife Janet Bridges, who may have been his daughter. In 1678 he witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott and Isobell Bridges (who may have been another daughter). In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for Francis Scott and James Lunn. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Elliot. Their children included William (b.1646). Itis possible there is an error and his wife was Marion 'Scott', making him the same as the William whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1647. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Scott. Their children included Isobel (b.1647), who may be the Isobel who married Francis Scott and had children baptised in the 1670s and 1680s. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Goodfellow. Their children included: Bessie (b.1671); William (b.1673); Helen (b.1680); and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1673 were William Swan and Andrew Jardine and in 1678 and 1680 were William Swan and Mugo Swan. He is probably the William, son of William and Bessie Brown, baptised in Hawick in 1646, with Andrew Jardine being his sister Janet's husband (note that this was sometimes formerly written 'Bridge', 'Bridgs' and 'Bridges').

Brighoose (brig-hoos) n. Brighouse or Bridgehouse, former place name for an area on the opposite side of the Liddel valley from Dinlabyre. Brighouse Burn runs south under the old railway line, past Cleuch Head and Steele Road to join the Liddel Water near Dinlabyre. There were formerly 2 fortified houses here, marked on Pont's 1608 map as 'Brighouse' and 'Brighousecleughhead'. There were Nixons at the first in the early 1500s and the second was occupied by Croziers. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 16 shillings and the tenants were Alexander Nixon and 2 William Nixons. William Nixon, his son William, together with George, Ringan and Dandy Nixon, are also recorded there in 1544. Rowie Nixon was in Brighouscleuchheid' in 1622, and William Elliot was also a tenant there. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. William Nichol and William Johnstone were at 'Bridghouse' in 1694 and Hugh Beattie was tenant in 'Bridghouscleughhead'. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads; it was there written as 'Robsland alias Brighouse'. Patrick Oliver died there in 1779, Robert Oliver was farmer there in 1797 and Alexander Oliver was labourer in 1801. Labourer William Hardie lived there in 1835 and labourer and grocer Ninian Ballantyne in 1861. The site of the first house is indicated beside the Bridgehouse Burn on an 1816 estate map of Liddesdale and on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map, while the second has been suggested to have been at Cleuch Head, but there is no obvious sign of anything of great antiquity there (it is 'the Brighous' in 1516, 'Brighows' and 'Brigehows' in 1544, 'Brighous' in 1667, 'Brigihouse' in 1691 and 'Bridgehouse' in 1797; 'Brighouse' and 'Brighousecleughhead' are marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Bridghouse' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Brighoose Burn (brig-hoos-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near the Steele and running southwards to join the Liddel near Dinlabyre.

Brighoose Plantin (brig-hoos-plawn'-in) n. plantation along the Brighouse Burn in Liddesdale, to the north-west of Dinlabyre.

the Bright Eyed Daughters (thu-brī'-Id-dow'-urz) n. organisation set up in 2008 by Judith Murray and Lesley Fraser with the aim of helping to educate the schoolchildren and townspeople of Hawick about the Common Riding. They have an annual dinner at the end of May, starting in 2010. They also support the Mosstroopers' gymkhana, provide blankets for the Lasses, have organised events for schools and arranged for upgraded landscaping for the Hornshole Monument in 2014. Their song is 'Where Teviot Tummels Doon'.

the Bright Eyed Lasses (thu-brī'-Id-law-seez) n. pseudonym used by Lesley Fraser and Judith Murray.

Bright Street (brī'-stree') n. street in the West End, very steep at its upper end. It was built around 1880 and named after reformer John Bright (1811–89), who helped to repeal the Corn Laws; Bright was brought up a Quaker and attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire, where some of Hawick's Wilson family also were sent at about the same time. The entrance to the Convent (later St. Margaret's Home) is about half-way up the street.

brigs (brigz) n., pl. Hawick's first bridge was the 'Auld Brig' across the Slitrig, built possibly as early as the 13th century (but more likely around 1500), and demolished in 1851. A document of 1507/8 refers to a tower in Hawick, owned by the Scotts of Whitchesters that was mysteriously described as 'between the bridges', suggesting that there was another bridge in the town at that time. A sasine of 1622 refers to 'the king's highway which leads between the bridges'. In 1701 there is a record of Burgh debts 'for repairing of the two bridges', but what the other bridge was is unknown (although it is possible it is simply the main bridge over the Slitrig Dam at the bottom of the Backdamgate). There were certainly various bridges across the mill lades, these 'damm brigs' being mentioned as early as 1704. In the early 18th century there is a record of payment towards construction of a bridge at the 'Hackman's Dubb', the location of which is also unknown. In 1715 it is recorded that a man and horse were hired to carry sand to repair the 'bridges' (making it clear that there was more than one). A Session record of 1721 refers to both 'ye Bridge' and 'ye Meekle bridge', but it is unclear if they refer to 2 separate bridges. The first bridge over the Teviot was built in 1741 at the Sandbed, and rebuilt in 1865. The bridge at Hornshole, the next down the Teviot, was completed in 1774, and the North Brig in 1832. In 1802 the Council decided not to build 2 new bridges across the Slitrig on account of lack of funds. Other nearby road bridges across the Teviot include Martin's Brig (1826), Branxholme Brig, the bridge at Broadhaugh, Teindside Brig, the bridge towards Falnash, and the bridge to the Merrylaw road. There is also a suspension footbridge near Branxholme Castle and other footbridges near Commonside, across both the Teviot and the Allan Water near Newmill, across the Borthwick near Roberton and at the Snoot, and several small ones in the upper Teviot beyond Teviothead. The Waverley Bridge was added near the North Brig in 2000. Footbridges within Hawick include Victoria Brig (1851), the Lawson Brig (1886), Mansfield Brig (1888), Langlands Brig (1894), the Laurie Brig (1924), the James Thomson Brig (2005) and McLaren Brig (2018), all across the Teviot, the Slitrig footbridge to the Back Braes path, and later the 'Joogly Brig' across the Borthwick. A more practical bridge (than the Auld Brig) across the Slitrig, called the Slitrig Bridge (later renamed Drumlanrig Bridge) was completed in 1777. Tower Mill was built over the Slitrig in 1852, with the adjacent Kirkstile bridge replacing the Auld Brig. The Exchange Buildings were also built over the Slitrig in 1865. Slitrig Crescent Brig was built in 1864 (once the site of a former footbridge called the 'Wyre Brig'), the bridge to Lynnwood House around 1860, Crawbyres Brig came later and Hummelknowes Brig was built in 1869. The footbridge behind Lyle & Scott's was built for workers in the West-end in about 1957. Other Slitrig bridges include those at Whitlawhaugh, Colislinn, Wudfit Brig, and at Stobs Castle. There are also many small footbridges across the streams in the vicinity of Hawick, as well as across the mill lades within the town. Local railway bridges were the Slitrig Viaduct ('Six-Airch Brig'), the Mill Peth Brig, the Loch Park Road Brig, the Bourtree Place Brig and the Station Viaduct, while road bridges across the railway included the Wellogate Brig and the Melgund Brig. In the late 18th century there were only 2 bridges in the entire Parish of Bedrule. Denholm had a chain suspension bridge from 1827, replaced by the Teviot Bridge completed in 1865. Many of these bridges have of course been repaired, extended or replaced entirely.

Brig Sike (brig-sīk) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising around Ewe Knowes and running south to become part of Ryedale Burn.

brik (brik) v. to break – 'hei minds o brikkin the odd wundi, yaisually wi bricks', 'sticks an stanes'll brik yer banes, but names'll never hurt ee', 'Thou briks the bolts to miserie, An' bars th door on decencie' [JoHa], 'O smile, my dear lassie, and greet nae for me, Or you'll brik the fond heart that for ever is thine' [JoHa], 'Let us brik thair ban's asinder . . . ' [HSR], 'Brik thair teeth, O God, in thair mooth . . . ' [HSR], '. . . o' her gaun tae the well for witter, yince ower often whereby she may fa' and brick a leg or airm . . . ' [JEDM], n. a break, breach – 'there was a brik in up it the bank, when somebody threw a brick in', 'the brik o frost' is a thaw' (also spelled 'brick'; the past tense is brak).

brikker (bri-kur) n. a breaker, large wave – '. . . a' thy waves an' thy brikers hae gane ower me' [HSR], – 'The brikers o' deæth cam' roun aboot me . . . ' [HSR].

Brik Neck (brik-nek) n. Break Neck, sloping area to the south-west of Whitfield and Calaburn farms. It is cloe to the former farmstead of Old Whitfield (the origin of the name is obscure).

brint (brin') n., poet. cash, money – 'As for mysel', I'd be content, Wi' but a cannie share o' brint' [JoHa].

brintle (brin'-ul) n., poet. cash, money – 'Their oh's, an' ah's, and pridfu' selfish canting – Joost gie them brintle, they'll the lave do wanting' [JoHa], 'Another day's work ye shall ne'er hae frae me – Then oot wi' yer brintles quo' Donald M'Gee' [JoHa].

Brisbane (briz-bin) n. James (1792–1862) from Dumfries, he was a hairdresser in Hawick. In 1810 he enlisted in the 91st Regiment of Foot and served in the Peninsular War and at Waterloo. He served for over 6 years, and was discharged for poor eyesight and being undersized (he stood just 5 feet 1 inch tall). He was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as a hairdresser on the High Street and on Silver Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He is recorded at 2 Silver Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861, also being listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1811 he married Christian Hislop, just before being deployed in the army, and she lived with her family in Hawick; she died in 1823 at the age of 28. Their children were: William (1811–90), who emigrated to Andes, New York; Margaret (1818–1901); James (b.1820), who presumably died young; and Robert (1823–97), who emigrated with his brother. In about 1834 he secondly married Mary Elder and their children included: Isabella (1834–52); and James (again, 1835–1907), who studied medicine at Glasgow University. He is buried at St. Mary's. James (1835–1907) son of hairdresser James, he was born in Hawick. He was a druggist's apprentice in Hawick in 1851 and later studied medicine at Glasgow University. In 1861 he was a doctor living in Galashiels. He died in Ormskirk. Sir Thomas Makdougall (1773–1860) born near Largs, he had a strong connection with the Kelso area, marrying Anna Maria McDougall (or 'Makdougall'), heiress of Makerstoun, and apending that family name to his own. He was educated in Mathematics and Astronomy at the University of Edinburgh, and joined the army in 1789. He had a distinguished military career, becoming Major-General and was also Governor of New South Wales 1821–25, establishing a constitution for the colony, and building the first astronomical observatory in Australia, at Parramatta. The Brisbane River in Queensland and the city on its banks were named after him. He returned to Scotland in 1825, taking up the life of a country gentleman. He was President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1832 (succeeding Sir Walter Scott) and collected honorary degrees and other recognition for his scientific work, e.g. the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society. He built an astronomical and magnetic observatory at Makerstoun, and was the first President of the Tweedside Physical and Antiquarian Society, which set up a museum in Kelso in 1898. There is a sundial to his memory in the village of Makerstoun. William (1811–90) born in Glasgow, son of James, who was a soldier in the British Army, with his mother being from Hawick. He and his mother were sent to live in Hawick shortly before the battle of Waterloo. He grew up in Hawick, emigrating to America in 1839. He initially lived in Delaware County, New York, but after about a decade moved to Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin, and in 1859 moved again to Minnesota, settling in the town of Wilton (whose name seems to be a coincidence). There he had a farm and became active in politics, representing Waseca County in the state legislature in 1867 and 1871. He was also school district director, town supervisor, assessor, town clerk, justice of the peace, and president of the anti-horse thief society. In 1873 he donated to the Museum 'granite from Dubith, Minnesota, and two specimens of stone found in his own farm'. In 1832 in Ancrum he married Janet Scott (b.1809/10), who was from Minto Parish and their children included Isabel Catherine, Helen, James, Hannah, Janet, Alexander, William Robert, Margaret, John Young and Thomas.

Brisk (brisk) n. horse owned by Rev. John Laurie, minister of Hawick 1757–83. As described by W.N. Kennedy in 1861, it was said that this animal 'by a sort of prescriptive right carried the cornet and the colour' for at least 20 years. Apparently on the first year when the horse was too old to perform these duties, it leapt over hedges on Common-Riding morning, galloped to the Mercat Cross and neighed loudly for attention. Afterwards 'he continued as great a favourite as ever with all the young and old boys who loved The Common-riding'.

the Britannia Airms (thu-bri-taw-nee-u-ārmz) n. hostelry at 72 High Street running for a few years in the mid-to-late 19th century.

brither (bri-thur) n., arch. brother – '... And thus the night they a' hae spent, – Just as they had been brither and brither. With my fa ding diddle, la la dow diddle' [CPM], 'Ise tell ye o' a special brither, An' where ye'll fin' 'im, An' nane sae vera far of neither – At dainty Denha'm' [JoHa], 'Our arms grew sair wi' shakin' hands – We a' were brithers sworn' [??], '... Peter, an' Andrew his brither, castin' ane nett intill the se, for they wer fishers' [HSR], 'I bure mysel as thouch he had been my frien' or brither ...' [HSR], 'Accept the enclosed, my freend, my brither – Perhaps ye'll never get anither' [WiD], 'Let ithers tell o' secret signs Wherebye they ken a brither' [RH], 'Is't no the joiner's son, Young Simon's aulder brither?' [WL], 'Let only now the best in Rab be treasured in each home, And be the bond of brither Scot no matter where he roam' [WFC] (not common Hawick pronunciation).

brithren (brith-rin) n., pl., poet. brothers – 'A' ye my brithren o' oor frosty Nor'lan, Cake-crunchers a', the plagues o' brose and kail aye' [JoHa], 'I wull declare thy næme untill my brithren ...' [HSR], 'I am becum ane fremet untill my brithren, an' ane forener until my mither's childer' [HSR] (see also brethren).

the British Chronicle (thu-bri'-eesh-kro-nee-kul) n. first newspaper established in the Scottish Borders. It was founded by James Palmer in Kelso in 1783. It was also known as the Kelso Chronicle and the Union Gazette.

British Linen Bank see British Linen Co.

British Linen Co. (bri'-eesh-li-nin-kō) n. British Linen Company, the former name of the British Linen Bank. It was the first bank to establish a branch in Hawick, in 1783. This was under the management of Bailie Thomas Turnbull at 29 High Street. It later moved to 18 High Street where it remained until the middle of the 19th century, with Gilbert Davidson the agent for a long time. In Wood's 1824 map the bankers listed are 'Messrs. Dickson & Davidson', and it appears to be the main bank in town. A new building was constructed for the bank at 7 High Street (previously the 'Ruecastle Tenement') in 1862, designed by David Cousins, the company's official architect. The building is unusual for its first floor balcony and is Category B. The bank was founded in Scotland in 1746, was taken over by Barclays in 1919 and acquired by the Bank of Scotland in 1969. The Hawick branch has been a Bank of Scotland since 1971.

the British Lions (thu-bri'-eesh-lI-inz) n. touring rugby team, formed in 1888 (but not named until 1924), and with players selected from among the 4 home nations.

the British Public Hoose (thu-bri'-eesh-pub-leek-hoos) n. hostelry with luncheon rooms on Wilton Path in the latter part of the 19th century.

Britton (bri'-in) n. Lilias (d.2019) wife of Rev. Stanley, she became the first female President of the Archæological Society in 2001. Rev. Stanley (d.2019) minister at the Congregational Church in Hawick.

briz (briz) v., poet. to bruise, press, squeeze, rub together – 'I mind o' hard frosts and clear munelicht, O' brizzin numb neives on my breeks' [WL], n., arch. a bruise, contusion – 'Nocht ailed ma cluits ... A'd naether bumple, brizz, bate, nor blusht-bit ti play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter' [ECS] (also written 'brizz').

broad (brōd) adj. strikingly regional – 'hei speaks broad Hawick' (cf. the older braid).

Broad (brōd) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Mary Ferguson in Cavers in 1815. Andrew (18th C.) married Ann Miller in Hawick in 1787. James (b.c.1770s) farmer at Horselee according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. He was surely related to John, who was farmer there in 1797. He could be the James, married to Betty Broad, whose daughter Isabel (b.1813) was baptised in East Bank Kirk, or the James, married to Nelly Govenlock, whose daughter Betty (b.1814) was baptised in East Bank Kirk. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Horselee in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. Michael is listed before him and so surely related. Probably the same John was living at Hoscoteshiel in 1800 and had the following children baptised in Roberton Parish: Mitchel (b.1797); James (b.1800); and John (b.1803). He is probably the John 'Brodie of Hascoteshiel' who had a whisky still in a sod house he built in a secluded area. He is said to have met Mr. Easton of Alemoor when returning home one night and when asked if he was not afraid to go home alone at night said 'Deed, Maister Easton, there's twae things that awm no feared for the night, and that's the deevil and the gauger. Wi' esqueba we fear nae evil'. Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Horselee in the Slitrig valley, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the Michael who married Nelly Leithead in Wilton in 1799. Perhaps the same Michael (born 1788/9 in Hawick Parish) was later a carpenter and glazier in Galashiels. Michael (19th C.) married Agnes Telford. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included Mary (b.1820), Walter (b.1821) and Annie (b.1823). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1778. He was at Outersideshiel when his daughter Christian was baptised in 1780. Walter (19th C.) married Agnes Miller. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Nelly (b.1789); Michael (b.1790); and Betty (b.1792). Walter (18th/19th C.) married Euphan Easton in Wilton Parish in 1807. His surname is recorded as 'Braid'. William (b.c.1790) agricultural labourer in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Walter's Wynd. He may be the William who gave some donations to the Museum in 1863. He married Isabel (or 'Bell') Henderson. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: Jessie Scott (b.1827); Andrew (b.1829); and Michael (b.c.1835).

Broadfoot (brōd-foo', brād-fi') n. George (18th C.) married Nelly Dryden in Hobkirk Parish in 1759.

Broad Law (brōd-law) n. highest hill in the Borders, reaching 2,756 feet (840 m) at its broad summit east of Tweedsmuir.

Broadlee (brōd-, brād-lee) n. farm across the Borthwick from Deanburnhaugh, with nearby earthworks. It was contained in Hawick Parish until the Parish of Roberton was formed in 1689/90. In 1479 the lands were held by Robert Turnbull of Broadlee, and it then extended to a 'five merk land of old extent'. Either the same or a later Robert Turnbull is recorded there in 1498. Sandy, Sim and Rob Turnbull are all recorded there in 1503. This is probably the 'Braidle' recorded as part of the property of the Baron in the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home purchased the lands in 1512/3 from Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1535 the King revoked several charters relating to lands of Alexander, Lord Home (who was beheaded in 1516), including the lands here, being granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to the deceased Gavin Jardine. However, in 1523/4 sasine was given to George Lord Home and in 1551 it was confirmed as one of the lands inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as superior, held 'blench for a red rose on 24th June'. In 1535 this is probably the 'Braidlee in the Forest' where a group of Armstrongs stole sheep from John Hope and John Hall, the King's shepherds; these same 2 men were recorded being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. In 1572 and 1594 it was included in the list of lands belonging to the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. It was sold to Martin Elliot of Prickinghaugh and Braidlie in about 1606, the 4000 merks being paid to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1607. In 1615 it was listed among the Baron's lands, and also had the 'pendicles' of Philhope and Eilrig attached to it; this connection further confuses the Braidlie that was seat of the Elliots in Hermitage (who also once owned Philhope), with this farm on the Borthwick. The mill there is also mentioned in 1615 among the Baron's properties. In a 1627 valuation is was 'estimat to 50 lb. in stok, 10 lb. in teynd'. In 1643 the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Woll and Castleside) at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. In the mid-17th century it was separately formed out of 'Wester Broadley', 'Mid Broadley' and 'Easter Broadley'. There were 14 'communicants' recorded there in 1650 (with surnames Armstrong, Chisholme, Clerk, Hope, Hutton, Martin, Scott, Shiel, Spence and Wylie), when it was also labelled 'The thrie braidlies'. In 1650 the reversion with the Elliots was exercised by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry, and it passed out of the hands of the Elliots. However, it was still recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when John Elliot (brother to Elliot of Falnash) paid tax on £216. William Elliot of Philhope paid the land tax on £216 there in 1678. It was part of the estates of Chisholme of Stirches and there were Chisholmes of Broadlee around 1700. The Hearth tax rolls for Hawick Parish record 'Breadlie not Listed yet paid yr', but the tenant's name is not given. Walter Elliot was recorded there in 1726, William Bell in 1727, Andrew Lauder in 1731, John Welch in 1732 and James Scott in 1742. Thomas Stavert was living there in 1753–63, James Brydon in 1765, John Hislop in 1767, Thomas Davidson in 1772, Alexaner Baptie in 1782, John Graham in 1785, Andrew Goodfellow and John Graham in 1793 and Thomas Graham in 1794. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Philhope at £216. Tailor Thomas Miller was there in 1801. Walter Amos was tenant in 1812. Thomas Jackson and his family were there in 1841. There is an extensive set of ancient earthworks to the north-east of the farmhouse, roughly oval in shape, about 50 m by 53 m in size, and consisting of an inner and outer bank. 'Extracts fm Broadlee farm book' was a paper read by Alexander Michie to the Archæological Society in 1858, but it is unclear if this book survives (it is 'Bradelee' in 1479 and was formerly 'Braidle', 'Braidlea', 'Braidlee', 'Braidley', 'Braid Ley', 'Braidleyis', 'Braidlie', 'Braidlies', 'Broadlies', 'Broadly', etc., and later 'Broadlea'; it is 'Braidlies' on a 1650 parish map, while Blaeu's 1654 map records 'W. Braidly' and 'P. Braidly', although this may be an error for 'E.'; the name may derived from 'Braidlie' on the Hermitage Water, through the Elliots of Braidlie, who acquired the nearby Philhope in the mid-16th century).

Broadlee (brōd-lee) n. former farm in Askirk Parish, near Broadlee Hill. It was once part of the Whitslade estate, with Scotts there in early times. Alexander and John Scott 'in braidlee' are recorded in 1493 and in 1494/5, separately John and John son of Alexander Scott; this was probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. George Scott of Blindhaugh assigned the liferent (along with Castleside) to his wife Margaret Turnbull and then to be assigned to his son Walter; it was specifically described as 'bradle a pendikil of blyndhaucht fra the blyndhauch burn vost to the march . . . eschynesyd with the pertinenches'. The superiority was then held by the Bishop of Glasgow. 'Mar. Scott, for Braidlies' was listed in the 1643 county valuation, with the lands valued at £160. Probably the same 'Goodwife of braidlie' paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. The men listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls are William Grieve, Andrew Scott and John Scott. John Scott was tenant in 1724. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the lands (and others in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson and valued at £160; the teinds of the lands (along with Castleside) were £62. It was owned by Cochrane of Ashkirk in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was valued (along with Salenside and Castleside) at £519 (it is 'bradle' in 1544, 'Braidley' in 1609, 'Breadlie' in 1694, 'Broadlie' in 1724 and 'Braidlies' in 1788; it is marked 'Braidlie' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Braidly' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Bradlee' on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Broadlee Burn (brōd-lee-burn) n. small stream that runs roughly north past the farm of Broadlee to join the Muselee Burn.

Broadlee Burnfit (brōd-lee-burn-fi') n. former farmstead near Broadlee in the Borthwick valley. It could have been located where the Broadlee Burn meets the Muselee Burn, between the farms of Broadlee and Muselee. It is also possible that it is the same place as Broadleeshiel. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1771 and John Scott, as well as cooper James Scott, in 1781. Walter Currie and Andrew Geddes were there in 1787 and John Graham in 1793 (it is 'Broadlie burnfoot' in 1771 and 1781 and 'Braidly burnfoot' and 'Broadly burnfoot' in 1787).

Broadlee Dean (brōd-lee-deen) n. name for the wooded area of the Muselee Burn between the farms of Muselee and Broadlee.

Broadlee Hill (brōd-lee-hil) n. hill to the west of Ashkirk, reaching a height of 265 m and containing a hill-fort. The structure lies to the south-west of the summit, and is oval in shape, about 90 m by 60 m in size. The ditch on the north-west side is particularly impressive. There are also some small enclosures at the north-eastern and south-eastern ends. Just south of the farm are the remains of a possible farmstead. On the south-eastern slopes and also to the north-east and east are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Broadlee Loch (brōd-lee-loch) n. small lake in the hills between Deanburnhaugh and Northhouse, above Broadlee farm, and with the Catrail passing nearby. It was drained in the 19th century to provide 'marl', and was then known as 'the Marl Loch'. However, it was later restored to a lake, and used (along with the nearby Philhope Loch) to boost the water level in the Teviot for Hawick's water-powered mills. Apparently a shepherd was retained to open the sluice gates when required. The old road from the head of the Borthwick to Hawick used to pass near here.

Broadlee Moss (brōd-lee-mos) n. high area between Broadlee Loch and Philhope farm. The hills there reach a height of 297 m.

Broadleeshiel (brōd-lee-sheel) n. former farmstead near the farm of Broadlee in the Borthwick valley. William Laidlaw was there in 1728 and James Glendinning in 1729. Robert Scott was living there in at least 1762–71 (it was 'Broadlie shiel' in 1762).

Broadley Bank Park (brōd-lee-bawngk-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Broadlie see Braidlie

Broadmeadows (brōd-, brād- me-dōz) n. house and estate in the Yarrow valley, between Yarrowford and Newark Castle. It was once owned by the Crown and leased to Raph Ker in the late 15th century. It remained Crown property until at least 1502, with the 'fermes' owed by Patrick Murray in 1512. However, William, son of James Scott 'of' Broadmeadows was recorded in 1502, suggesting that there was an earlier generation of Scotts who owned land there. Andrew Ker of Greenhead was occupier in 1541, paying £30 yearly. It was once a seat of the Murrays of Philiphaugh and Falahill, with Patrick Murray having a sasine in 1589 and Sir John Murray in 1620. Marion Scott and her husband James Donaldson 'of Braidmeadows' are recorded in 1619. In 1624 it was granted by Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh to Andrew, son of William Scott in Fauldshope, who became Andrew Scott of Broadmeadows. Andrew sold it to his father William Scott of Tushielaw in 1648 and in 1676 Andrew's half-brother William Scott of Broadmeadows had permission to build a loft in Selkirk Kirk. In 1695 the estate passed to the Balfours through the heiresses Isobel and Jean Scott. In 1678 the lands were valued at about £1600. It passed again through an heiress to the Scotts of Woll, who sold it in 1803 to John Boyd, who built a new mansion house. James Laidlaw was tenant there in the late 18th century and John Nichol was shepherd there. Sir Walter Scott attempted to purchase the farm in about 1805. Keith Pringle (4th son of Alexander of Whytbank) enlarged the house in the late 19th century. The remains of an 18th century dovecote are now roofless. The nearby youth hostel there was opened in 1931 as the first S.Y.H.A. hostel (it is 'Brademedow' in 1456, 'Brademedo' in 1468, 'Braidmedo' in 1488, 'Brademedow' in 1490, 'Braidmedou' and 'braidmedois' in 1502 and 'Braidmedois' in 1541; it is curiously marked 'Fraidmedowis' on one of Gordon's c.1650 manuscript maps, but 'Braidmeedowis' and 'Braidmedow' on others, and is also 'Fraidmedowes' on Blaeu's 1654 map; there is a place of the same name in Berwickshire).

Broadwood (brōd-wood, brād-wud) n. Andrew (c.1816–89) son of William and Mary Shiel, he was probably born in Selkirk. He was an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot on Ale in 1841. In 1851 he was at Burnfoot Shiel in Ashkirk Parish, with his elderly parents, his sister Isabella and son William. He had a son with Jane Baptie, William, who was born in Hawick in 1839 and baptised by Rev. Adam Thomson of Hawick in 1840; it is possible that they never married. In 1854 he emigrated to Canada, with his parents, sister, son and boarder Jessie Nichol and there he was a farmer in Maryborough Township. He died in Toronto Junction, Ontario. His descendants lived in Ontario and Manitoba, Canada. Andrew (b.1833) son of William and Beatrice Cunningham, he was baptised in Heriot Parish. He was an agricultural labourer in Cumbernauld in 1851 and in 1861 he was an 'Oil Extractor', living on Bourtree Place in Hawick. He was also described as a ploughman at Drinkstone in some baptismal records. He married Jane Dalgleish in Melrose in 1854. Their children included: Margaret (b.1855), baptised in Selkirk, but died in infancy; Beatrice Cunningham (b.1857), baptised in Hawick; James Henry Shudie (1858–60), baptised in Hawick, with his name changed from Robert Dalgelish; William (b.1860), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1862), baptised in Wilton and joined the army; Andrew (1863–65), baptised in Wilton; John (b.1865), baptised in Wilton; and Mary (b.1869), baptised in Hawick, also died in infancy. Walter (b.1806) son of William, he was baptised in Traquair Parish. He married Janet Little (1814–86) in Kirkton Parish in 1839, when both were living at Adderstoneshiel. They also lived at Sunnyside, but shortly afterwards emigrated to Ontario. He worked as a butcher at North Dumfries Township near Galt, Ontario. William (1768–1854) son of Andrew and Marion Crombie, he was born in Pencaitland. He was an agricultural labourer, living at Newhall, Ashiestiel, Glonmade, Dryhope, Slade and elsewhere. In 1841 he was living at Sunnyside in Cavers Parish and in 1851 he was living at Burnfoot Shiel in Ashkirk Parish, with his wife and adult children Andrew and Isabella. The whole family emigrated to the Waterloo area of Canada in 1854 and he died shortly afterwards. He seems to have had an illegitimate son William with Mary Johnston in 1795. He later married Mary Shiel (1780–1871), who was from Ettrick. Their children included: Mary (b.1805), baptised in Traquair Parish, who married John Scott in Stow; Marion (b.1806), baptised in Yarrow, who married David Farquharson; Walter (b.1808), baptised in Traquair Parish, who married Janet Little in Kirkton; Agnes (b.1810), also baptised in Yarrow Parish; Isabella (1815–1900), baptised in Hawick, who married James Braidwood in Maryborough Township, Ontario; Andrew (b.c.1816), baptised in Selkirk, who married Jane Baptie and lived at Ashkirk; Elizabeth (b.c.1820), born in Stow, who was a servant at Kirkton in 1841 and at 5 Slitrig Crescent in 1851; and Joan (b.1822), baptised in Selkirk, who was a servant of Rev. Rodgie of the Green in 1841 and married Alex Murray in Hawick in 1854. Several members of the family emigrated to Canada and he died in Galt, Ontario. William (b.c.1795–1865) illegitimate son of William and Mary Johnston, he was probably born in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Hermiston House Cottage in Currie and in 1861 he was a widowed shepherd living at Horsleyhill. He married Beatrice Cunningham (c.1795–1859), who died at Bourtree Place. Their children included: Margaret (b.1824), who married William Mowbray; and Andrew (b.1833), baptised in Heriot, some of whose children were baptised in Hawick. He died at Drinkstone. William (1839–92) son of Andrew and Jane Baptie, he was born in Hawick and baptised by Rev. Adam Thomson of East Bank Kirk, as recorded in Ashkirk Parish. He emigrated to Ontario to join other family members in Maryborough Township and became a farmer. There he married Mary Ann Haight and their children were Silas Andrew (b.1867), Florence Agnes (b.1869) and Gertrude Bogart (b.1874). He died at Toronto Junction, Ontario (also written 'Braidwood').

Brocholey (brok-lee) n. former settlement in Liddesdale, located on the south-western part of the Hermitage valley to the west of Longhaugh. The name occurs from the 14th to 16th centuries in several variants and it appears to have been abandoned by the early 17th century. It was valued at 8 shillings in a rental roll c.1376, and also in 1541, when the tenant was Robert Elliot. It is probably the settlement of around 10 buildings whose remains are on the east bank of Thief's Sike (it is 'Brocholey' around 1376, 'Brokellie' in 1541 and marked 'Brocol' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

brocht (brocht) pp., arch. brought – 'she was brocht up in Denum', 'See, ha'e! there's a letter the post laddie brocht . . . ' [JJ], 'Aw was born at the 'Green' and she was brocht up at the Kirkstyle' [JEDM], '. . . Yet strengthening ties o' kinship Had brocht me back at last . . . ' [DH], '. . . Has that calm-breathin' hour in its peacefulness brocht' [JJ], 'Hawick Wattie's brocht another Spring . . . ' [WP], 'It brocht to mind anither day langsyne . . . ' [WL], 'But Wull's departure brocht, alas! Nae glad millennium . . . ' [DH] (cf. broucht, and the more common browt and occasional brung).

Brockhoperig (bro-kup-rig) n. farm in the upper Ettrick valley, between Cossarshill and Shorthope (it is 'Brokupridge' in c.1680).

Brockie (bro-kee) n. David (b.1796/7) son of Thomas and brother of George. In 1825 he joined Thomas on the island of St. Helena, as clerk for the East India Comany's farms there. When he returned to the Rule valley in 1833 he brought with him a walking stick made from a tree that grew near the former Emeror Napoleon's bedroom and a wash-stand made from the bedroom door. In 1852 he was a factor at Minto Kames as reported in a court case related to the late David Nisbet. In 1861 he was at Minto Kames, farming 1,000 acres and employing 11 people. His wife was Jessie and their children included: Catherine; and Thomas, who was farmer at Hawthornside. George (19th C.) son of Thomas. About 1823 he was chosen by the Governor of St. Helena (Gen. Alexander Walker, of Bowland near Galashiels) as superintendent of the East India Company' farms on the island, not many years after Napoleon's death. He hired his brother David as his clerk. They converted Longwood, the former Emperor's house for agricultural use, with cattle in his bedroom and gots in the saloon. They remained until 1833 when the company's charter expired. On his return he married Catherine, only daughter of Robert Symington, farmer at Edstoun, near Peebles. This was against the wishes of her parents, and was apparently an elopement. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant at Barnhills in the late 1700s, moving to Prieston (in Bowden) in his last years before retirement. He is recorded there in the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls for having a saddle horse. He also owned 6 farm horses in 1797. He married Mary Nisbet and they lost a daughter in her youth. Their son George married Catherine Symington, and they also had other sons, including David. Thomas B. (19th/20th C.) son of David, he was tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. In 1872 he married Anna Henderson Renwick, daughter of William and Isabella Usher (sister of Thomas from Melrose Parish). They had 2 sons and 4 daughters, most of whom emigrated. He was actively involved with the Hobkirk School Board.

Brockie Law (bro-kee-law) n. hill on the farm of Hyndlee, just to the east of the B6357 and south-east of Hyndlee. It reaches a height of 366 m. A fairy story was once told about this area (the name could relate to the badger).

brod (brōd) n., arch. a board, table, piece of wood, collection plate – 'Payd to Andrew Turnbull for putting on the letters in the brod in the Quire of Hawick' [PR], 'Paid to John Pringle, Wright, for a brod to hands of clock . . . 0 6 0' [BR1732], 'Paid James Wintrope for falding brods in Bailies' loft, 1 14 0' [BR1735], 'Paid Andrew Turnbull, elder, for building in the brod at the steeple head, &c., . . . 0 2 0' [BR1755], '. . . it's as fit to be yokit i' the cart as ever ye was to be inside the brods o' a poopit' [WNK], 'Syne, crup thegither, hullerie, Under the shelter-brod, watchin the cauld blashes O wet snaw . . . ' [DH], 'Wi' halesome fare my brod You've set . . . ' [WL] (also bred).

Brodie (brō-dee) n. Alexander Bryden (1821/2–67) born in Selkirk, he was son of Walter, publican at the Black Bull in the Sandbed. He was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 and in Slater's 1852 directory he is listed at Ladylaw Place. In 1861 he was on Albion Place (probably the north side). His wife carried on the grocer's shop until 1897. He probably firstly married Margaret Laidlaw, who died around 1845; their children included Walter and George (b.1845). In 1848 in Wilton he secondly married Mary (b.1819), daughter of Andrew Govenlock from Jedburgh. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1850), Helen (b.1853), Catherine (b.1854), Andrew (b.1856), Jane (b.1858), Peter (b.1860), Robert (b.1862) and Mary (b.1864). Andrew (1856–1928) son of Alexander and Mary Govenlock, he was a knitwear manufacturer in Hawick. His company was known as A. Brodie & Co., with its 'Kumfy' brand, which was taken over by Innes, Hennderson in the 1920s. He married Barbara (1853–1928) daughter of farmer James Cairns. They had a son Alexander (b.1881). Rev. B. principal teacher of the Wilton Lodge Academy 1892–98, and the West End Academy before that, running the schools along with his wife. George (18th C.) married Bella Thomson in Minto in 1787. James (b.1781/2) from Westruther, he was farmer at Deanfoot in Minto Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1851 he was farming 225 acres and employing 10 labourers. His children included James (b.1807), Mary (b.1809), Giles (b.1809), Stuart (b.1820) and Agnes (b.1823). James A. (19th/20th C.) foreman printer with the Hawick News, he was well known as a promoter of the Temperance movement and the Friendly Societies in the town. He acted as Session Clerk for St. George's Kirk 1924–35 as well as helping run the Sunday School there. Michael (19th C.) local architect who designed the Buccleuch Hotel in 1882 and the frontage of the main Hawick Co-op Store in 1885. He practised in at least the 1860s to 80s. He also designed the Old Parish Church Halls about 1883, as well as the South U.P. Church in Langholm. He was still alive in 1901. Peter (b.1792/3) born in Legerwood, he was farmer at Clarilaw near Bowden. He was known as a fighter in his youth. In later life, he was said to have weighed 23 stone and at the Wisp Club once called Elliot of Lymiecleuch a 'toom hemlock', leading to a bet over who weighed more, with Elliot winning by a pound. Peter (b.1811/12) born in Selkirkshire, he was a mason in the Dean. He was living at 13 Burn Row in 1841 and 1851, which was just called Wilton Dean in 1861. His wife was Annie and their children included Janet, Helen, Agnes, Jean, Margaret, Walter, Elizabeth, Annie, Betsy and William. Robert (19th C.) from Nottylees, near Kelso. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule, taking over from Mr. Haliburton in 1827 (shortly after William Pringle) and remaining until about 1846. He did not carry on the limeworks started by Mr. Pringle. Robert (19th C.) listed as 20th member of the Hawick Archæological Society in 1856. Walter (1786–1849) born at Sunderland near Selkirk, son of Peter and Mary Murray. He was innkeeper at the Black Bull on the Sandbed. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Helen and chidren Jane, Alexander (innkeeper in Innerleithen) and Helen. He married Helen Brydon (1787–1873). Their son Alexnder (b.c.1821) became a grocer in Wilton. Their daughter Margaret (d.1842) appears to have had an illegitimate son (Robert Brodie Wilson) with cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. The family are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Upper Keith in East Lothian.

In 1793 he purchased Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. He combined them into a farm he called Chesterhill, although the purchase was never completed (either because he could not come up with all the money or because of haggling over the sale), and he eventually had to give up his Rulewater ambitions. Nevertheless he is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 9 horses. He is probably the William of Gatehousecote recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He had a son, John.

the Brodies (thu-brō-deez) n. name recorded for a group who burned Hawick in 1565, stated in a letter from the Earl of Bedford to Sir W. Cecil. It is uncertain who they were (there are no obviously relevant local occurrences of the name 'Brody' in those times). The most likely is that what was meant was 'the Braidlees', i.e. the followers of Elliot of Braidlie, who was feuding with the Scotts of Branxholme around then. This raid may have been what led to the ambush of the Scotts at Ewes Doors.

broken men (brō-kin-men) n.,pl., arch. term applied to men who have no feudal superior and live in a lawless and impoverished condition, outlaws – 'Forasmikill as it is understand to my Lord Regent and Lordis of Secrete Counsall how the thevis and brokin men inhabitantis of the contreis of Liddisdaill, Ewisdaill, Eskdaill and utheris . . . ' [RPC1567], 'Sundry brokin men and utheris, inhabitantis of Liddisdale, having of late made incursions into England . . . ' [RPC1593].

the Bromyleaks (thu-brō-mee-leeks) n. former name for an area between the main B6399 and Hermitage Castle.

the Bronze Age (thu-bronz-āj) n. period between the Stone and Iron Ages, characterised by the use of bronze tools and weapons, lasting in Britain from around 2300 B.C.E. until about 750 B.C.E. There is plenty of evidence of occupation in this period in the Tweed and Teviot valleys and their tributaries, including cairns, stone circles, burial cists, standing stones, axe heads, bronze pins and ornaments, pottery and beads. 3 bronze shields found near Yetholm were one of the most impressive Borders discoveries, and a mirror was found near there in 2004. The Hawick Museum has a flanged axe from the Middle Bronze Age, as well as other artefacts from a similar period. There are 9 Bronze Age burial cairns situated around Smasha and Whitfield Hills, a few miles west of Hawick, each being about 30 feet in diameter and only 2 or 3 feet high.

broo (broo) n., arch. brow – '. . . And mither's got nae broos to kiss, For nane o' them were greetin' On Young Year's Day' [TCh] 'The croon o' contentment is light on her broo' [WAP], 'His lang drawn face an' furrowed broo Support his waefu' manner . . . ' [WP] (not partcularly Hawick pronunciation).

broo (broo) n., poet. soup, broth – 'I'd plunge the boiling liquid through, Wi' haly mettle; Till little should be left but broo, In a' the kettle' [JR], '. . . young people being urged to partake largely of the broth by the old saying, 'The strength is all in the broo' ' [RJT].

the broo (thu-broo) n. the dole, unemployment benefit, or the office where people sign on for the dole.

broo-band (broo-bawnd) n., arch. a brow-band – 'It was interesting to see the more elderly of the women . . . in many cases wearing the 'broo-band' . . . ' [V&M].

brook (brook) v., arch. to possess, have the use of – '. . . and considering what large room and share they brook and possess of ye said kirk, they earnestly desired that the school might be built in anie other convenient place' [PR1714].

brookable (brook-u-bul) adj., poet. bearable, able to be borne – 'Verilie I say untill yow, It sall be mair brookable for the lan' o' Sodom an' Gomorrha in the day o' judgement nor for that citie' [HSR].

Brooklands (brook-lindz) n. one of the newer houses on Sunnyhill Road.

Brooklands (brook-lindz) n. house on the corner of West Stewart Place, facing Wilton Hill. It was for some time an Abbeyfield Home for the elderly.

the Broom (thu-broom) n. farm on the Teviot near Ancrum. It was purchased in the 1790s by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters and William Brown was tenant there in 1797. Mason Thomas Scott and servant Robert Henry were also recorded there in 1797 – '. . . And that day he'd been a' the way doon at the Broom' [UB].

Broombauks (broom-bawks) n. former farmstead to the west of Hass, near the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes. The stream there is Broombauks Burn. There are signs of stock enclosures, rig lines and an ancient farmstead there.

Broom Cavers (broom-kā-vurz) n. former farm near Caverton in Eckford Parish. It is unconnected with Cavers Parish, even although there were Douglases there in the 17th century.

Broomhaa (broom-haw) n. Broomhall, former farmstead just north of Greensidehall, identified with the more modern Broomiebrae and Broomieknowe. Archibald Turnbull was there in 1759 (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Broomhill (broom-hil) n. farmstead to the south-west of the modern Flex and directly south of the old Flex house. There is now no sign of the former farmhouse, although its location is still easily seen on maps. Walter Martin was tenant there in 1797 and John Martin was there in 1799 (marked on Stobie's 1770 map and J.P. Alison's map of the Common in 1777).

Broomhills (broom-hilz) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, just east of Chesters. Rev. William Bennet owned the lands in 1643, valued at £800. There were 2 hearths recorded there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas Mein farmed there around the 1860s. Some ancient urns were unearthed here around the mid-19th century (also called 'Broomhill', it is written 'broonhils' in 1694; marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Broomholm (broo-mum) n. farm about 2 miles south of Langholm, which was held by the Maxwells and farmed by the Armstrongs in the 16th century. John Byres and Mrs. V. Pattersin were there in 1821. There is a nearby Roman fort, covering about 4¼ acres and occupied roughly from the years 85–100 (it is 'Brumholme' in 1585 and 'Bromholme' on Sandison's c.1590 map).

Broomiebrae (broo-mee-brā) n. former farmstead near Greensidehall, once part of the estates of the Scotts of Whitehaugh. The farmers there in 1792 were Robert Scoon, Andrew and James Waugh, James Black and Robert Renwick. John Young was a servant there in 1799. Robert Scoon was there in 1812. It was later the name of a villa-style residence reached off Stirches Road (also called 'Broomie Brae' and 'the Broomiebraes'; probably the same as 'Broomhall' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Broomiebraes Spring (broo-mee-brāz-spring) n. former water supply in Wilton, near Broomiebrae, but its precise location uncertain – 'O, few folk mind now o' the Broomiebrae Well, O, few folk mind now o' the Broomiebrae Well; Yet in my young days mony a story we'd tell As we a' sat aroond the Broomiebrae Well' [JCG].

Broomieknowe (broo-mee-now) n. lands owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from the 16th century, possibly the same as the farm of this name between Langholm and Canonbie. It is recorded as 'Brwneknow' in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. Thomas Armstrong was there in 1682.

Broomieknowe (broo-mee-now) n. house off Greensidehall Road, just west of the former U.P. Manse. It was for a while the residence of Provost Mitchell, then purchased by Sir Thomas Henderson and rented for the use of the minister of St. George's before being gifted to the church as its new Manse in 1925. This is also the name of a house in Denholm, once a blacksmith's.

Broomielaw (broo-mee-law) n. ?? – 'Westward Ho! We're bound for Canada Where the mighty mountains rise; Ships await us at the Broomielaw To take us to our prize' [JEDM].

Broomlands (broom-lindz) n. house on the left off Stirches Road, shortly after Raeson Park. It was built for manufacturer Francis E. Wilson in about 1880 and is now divided into flats.

Broomlands (broom-lindz) n. former place name, recorded in the 1760s along with Clarilaw, in a dispute over teinds between William Scott of Burnhead and Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. Probably the same Broomlands was given in a charter, along with Pinnacle, from Robert Scott of Howpasley to Hector Turnbull in 1550.

Broomscleuch (broomz-klooch) n. former name for lands in the upper Slitrig valley. It is listed in 1607 as 'Brumesclewis' along with 'Brounishall' (probably Broon's Hill), 'Roberthill' and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs.

Broomshaugh (broomz-hawf) n. former name for part of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. The 1753 sasine of Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall refers to the 'twenty shillingland, or thereby, of Salinside, called Breaths Langshot and Broomhaugh'. In 1815 they are described as 'the twenty shilling land of Salenside called Wreathlongshot and Broomshaugh'.

Broomy Hill (broo-mee-hil) n. another name for Broomhill??.

broon (broon) adj. brown – '. . . hei was aye broon as a berry' [IWL], 'The black and the broon Ran nearest the toon' [JP], 'And in amang the buds o' a broon hazel tre, It's up there gat a wee bird, and sang a sang to me' [TDa], 'In a howm, by a burn, where the broon birks grow, And the green ferns nod when then wild winds blow' [JoHa], 'Where the burnie rushes broon ower the rocky water-fa', An' weets the birken-boughs wi' its foamin' ' [JJ], 'Here's to our married lads and here's to our horses! Here's to the black yins, the broon, and the grey!' [JEDM], 'A hankie at his chowks, and a thick broon chowe . . . ' [DH], 'Doon comes Robin wi' his auld broon fiddle, Turns he a lichtsome air

. . . ' [WL], 'Attired in a cloak o' a licht reddish-broon . . . ' [DJ] (also spelled 'broun').

Broon (broon) n. (Brown) Adam (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Other men named include Scotts and Turnbulls. He may be related to John, who is also listed there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction between John Johntone of Hermiston and Patrick Johnstone. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Renwick and their children included: Robert (b.1644); Isobell (b.1647); Isobell (again, b.1649); and Adam (b.1652). If he was father of weaver Adam, then he was probably also a weaver. He probably witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Bennet in 1656. He was probably the Adam who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for John Oliver in 1680. He was probably the 'Adam broun headhous elder' who witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Tinlin in 1705. Adam (17th C.) weaver who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He is probably the 'younger, weiver' who in 1683 was held in the tolbooth after James 'Budie' had 'craved lawborrowes' against him, 'dreading personal an bodyly harme'. He was also recorded as 'Adam Brown, younger, weiver, called of Headhous' when he was sentenced to the stocks in 1683; this was for insulting the Bailies in court after breaking out of the tolbooth and running 'up and down the town . . . more like ane made and distracked man than a reasonable person, who formerly had solemnly made and given his burgess oath'. He may be the Adam who was a quartermaster of the weavers in 1707. In the baptismal record of 1703 he is 'headhouse in hawick', in 1706 is 'called headhouse', in 1707 is 'headhouse younger' and in 1709 he is 'distinctionis causa called headhouse younger weaver in Hawick'. He witnessed baptisms for merchant William Black in 1708 and for tenant Gideon Amos in 1714. He is probably the Adam 'headhouse' who witnessed baptisms for Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex, in 1722 and 1729, and a baptism for weaver William Turnbull in 1724. He married Bessie Murray and their children included: Nicholas (a daughter, b.1700); Benjamin (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1703). In 1706 he appears to have secondly married Janet Buchan, who was also from Hawick, and had further children including: Blench (b.1706); Adam (b.1707); and James (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were merchants Walter Elliot and Robert Brown (probably a close relative), in 1702 and 1703 were carrier Andrew Clerk and weaver William (probably also related), in 1706 were Bailie Robert Brown and flesher Robert Renwick, in 1707 were Robert Tinlin and Thomas Tinlin and in 1709 were wigmaker Richard Miles and weaver James Scott. Other children may have included: an unnamed daughter (b.1690); Bessie (b.1697); and John (b.1711). He could be the Adam, son of Adam and Malie Renwick, born in Hawick in 1652. Adam 'Heidhoose' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is surely related to the earlier Adam 'called of Headhous' (but cannot have been the son born in 1707). He is recorded as 'Young Headhouse' in 1719 when he married Isobell, daughter of Francis Paterson in Flex Their children included Bessie (b.1720) and Adam (b.1722). The witnesses in 1720 were smith William Young and 'fowler' Archibald Little. It is possible he is the Adam who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1739 for James Graham in Braidlees and for James Blyth in Burnfoot. Adam (18th C.) married Marion Buckham in Bedrule in 1747. Adam 'Yedie', 'Auld Simmie' (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He already had his nickname in the early 1800s when a story is told (by W.N. Kennedy) of Rev. John Young falling off his horse when it was startled in his stable, with someone heard laughing outside, to which the minister said 'I'm not like you, I fell and have risen again, but when you fell it was for all eternityi', meaning that he knew 'that it was the person Yedie Brown, called Auld Simmie, who was laughing'. It seems unlikely that this was Yedie the artist, but it is possible. Adam 'Yedie' (c.1790–1853) born in Hawick, son of Tom and Beatrix (or 'Beattie') Kyle. His father was a Burgess, and was said to dissaprove of his interest in drawing, so that he would hide away by the Teviot at the Sandbed, drawing on slates, and painting using crushed up stones. He apprenticed as a shoemaker, but was more interested in painting and fishing. He never received any instruction in art, but was completely self-taught. He gave up shoe-making, after encouragement by the assistant minister, Charles Thomson. He was said to have a great ability to tell funny stories, but detested getting up early in the morning, and a tale is recounted of how he scared his father one early morning by setting up a sheep's head with a theatrical costume. In another story, an example of his aversion to whisky as a young man, he was asked to return to Town from the Loanhead, to procure a bottle of whisky for his friends on a hot day, but instead came back with a load of treacle toffee, which they proceeded to put down his shirt in revenge. In the late 1810s he painted the scenery for some amateur dramatic productions that took place in the Town Hall. He painted several portraits of local worthies in the early 1800s, perhaps particularly in the period 1820–22; the 'Brown Gallery' in the Museum is composed of portraits collected in the early years of the Archæological Socity, including those of Wullie Gotterson, Robbie Davidson, Wull Slush, Wull the Cutler (twice), Robert Rutherford, and an unnamed girl. There are also paintings (somewhere) of Wullie Bulloch, Nannie Cumming and John Brown. Although relatively crude, these are amongst the earliest likenesses of inhabitants of Hawick. There are also miniatures of Mr. & Mrs. Turnbull of Allars, Isabell and Margaret Elliot of the Cross Wynd, and Miss Grieve of Howden, Selkirk. Additionally he painted 'Leistering on the Teviot' and 'Scene in the house of James Ruickbie the poet', which are also in the Museum (while 'At Hornshole' and 'Scene in the Sandgate of Newcastle' are additionally referred to as being donated to the Museum in 1863, but their present whereabouts are unknown). At the age of 30 he became paralysed in his right side, and retaught himself to use his left hand. He subsequently left Hawick, living in Alnwick for a while, where he married Eleanor Longstaff and had a second family. He later moved to Newcastle to become a portrait painter; he is described as a portrait painter from Scotland living in All Saints, Newcastle according to the 1841 census. However, he also seems to be referred to as 'Ralph' in the 1851 census, suggesting he may have changed his name (or used that as his artist's name, or else it was simply a mistake). He married Agnes Scott in Hawick, and she was born in Ashkirk Parish around 1782. Their children included: Thomas (b.c.1810), who married Jane Guthrie and was a shoemaker; William (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Ferguson and was also a shoemaker; and James S. (b.c.1822). Their children William and Beatrix died as infants in 1815 and 1816. His wife Agnes appears to be living alone in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and although she was listed as a widow, it may be that they divorced (and he abandoned his young family). In Alnwick in 1832 he married Eleanor, daughter of William Longstaff and Eleanor Forster; his 2nd wife died in about 1843. They had 4 children together (2 before they were married): Adam; Charles; James; and Agnes (b.1837). Little is known about his later life, although W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) says that he remained cheerful through ill-healh and poor circumstances, and that the phrase 'as lichtsome as Yedie Broon' became popular in Hawick. He died in Newcastle in the 1853 cholera outbreak and was buried in a mass grave in St. Anne's Churchyard there. Alexander (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Buckham in Bedrule in 1697. Alexander (18th C.) employed as manufacturer in Hawick, relating to the spinning school and early industry supported by Douglas, Eliott, Chisholme and other local gentry. In 1738 he was 'Master of the Woollen Manufactory at Hawick' in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was overseer for the company from about 1738, but was forced to resign in 1742 due to concern over performance of his duties. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as Session Clerk and Schoolmaster of Hawick Parish in 1751. Nothing else is known about him. Alexander (b.c.1770s) servant at Earlside according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He may be the Alexander, married to Janet Jackson, whose son Stewart was baptised in Cavers in 1810. Alexander (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Esq. Orchard' in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. His portrait, by William Irving of Longtown, was exhibited in Carlisle in 1824. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Browns. Alexander (19th C.) local beggar. He is identified (by Rev. Robert Young) as the person mentioned in a story by Frank Hogg in 1876. On arriving at a manse near Hawick and taking ill, the minister took him in and treated him well for a few days. But when he was put into a cart and conveyed towards Hawick, he leapt out and disappeared through a plantation. Alexander (b.1819/20) from Cavers Parish, he was a labourer at Old Fodderlee in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Alexander. He is probably the agricultural labourer who was living at Abbotrule Stables in 1841 and may be the Alexander who later lived on Damside. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. In 1872 he donated to the Museum a number of copper coins and a sliver coin 'found under a heap of stones which Mr Brown removed for the purpose of making a march dyke ... on the farm of Bedrule'. He also excavated 2 'sepulchral cairns' on the farm of Bedrule, which included urns that fell to pieces, as well as a stone cist, each apparently containing

'what looked like bone-dust, or burnt bones'. It is possible he is the Alexander of Trinity Street who in 1900 donated 4 copper coins to the Museum. Alexander Laing 'Sandy' (b.1851) manufacturer of Galashiels who was brother of Andrew Haddon's mother. He was born in Selkirk, son of William and Marjory Donaldson Laing. He was Liberal M.P. for the Border Burghs 1886–92. He beat G.O. Trevelyan in the 1886 election with the narrow margin of 30 votes, the election being fought largely on the Home Rule Bill, with Trevelyan then a Unionist and Brown a Liberal. He was defeated by Thomas Shaw in 1892. He married Esther Brown, daughter of the minister of Crossmichael, Kirkcudbrightshire. Andrew (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the weaver Andrew who witnessed a baptism for the Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1694 (suggesting that he was an Episcopalian). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Gledstains. Also in 1705 he was quartermaster of the weavers when they passed an act to prohibit any of their members from taking more than one apprentice at a time. Andrew (1672/3–1750) resident of Castleton Parish. He and his wife Betsie Turnbull are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Andrew (17th C.) shepherd at Whitlaw in 1740. He married Agnes Scott and their children son Andrew (b.1740) was baptised in Hawick. He is probably the Andrew who married Agnes Scott in Minto Parish in 1733. Other children who may have been his, with the mother's name not given, are: Bessie (b.1734), baptised in Hobkirk; William (b.1737) in Hobkirk; Isabel (b.1738) in Jedburgh; Marion (b.1739) in Cavers; Helen (b.1744) in Crailing; Christian (b.1745) in Minto; George (b.1747) in Jedburgh; Adam (b.1748) in Minto; and Andrew (b.1750) in Jedburgh. The witnesses in 1740 were shoemaker William Wright and Robert Scott, servant to Rev. William Somerville. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Wilson and their son John was baptised in 1785. Andrew (18th/19th C.) from Harbottle, in 1791 he married Margaret Dryden (or perhaps Leyden) from Cavers. Andrew (18th/19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, in 1798 he married Margaret Scott in Hawick. Andrew (d.1799) mason in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of John Leithead and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1799. In the record of his death he is 'mason son in law to John Leithead'. Andrew (b.c.1780) servant at Whitriggs, according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. Ann (b.1801/2) from Edinburgh, she was a teacher in Denholm. In 1861 she was 'Teacher of Day School' at 'Deanburn Cottage Day School', with her sister Elizabeth as her assistant. Archibald (19th C.) from Hawick, he emigrated to Philadelphia, where he was a merchant. In 1858 he donated a native American stone hatchet to the Museum and in 1866 some American money. Archibald (b.c.1810) from Ancrum, he was farmer at Craggs in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer on 70 acres, employing 1 labourer. He was still recorded there in 1868. Carl (19th/10th C.) writer of the poem 'A Hawick Common-Riding Toast'. He is probably the same as 'Karl'. Charles (18th C.) described in 1733 as 'late servant to Cavers'. In 1733 in Cavers Parish he married Ann Lamb and their daughter Ann was baptised. Charles (b.c.1800) foreman at Nixon's Mill. He was living by the factory in 1841. He married Margaret Ferguson and their children included: John (b.c.1820); Thomas (c.1823–1911), who married a granddaughter of Robert Burns; and Charles (b.c.1830). Clement (19th C.) born at Bankhousestone in Midlothian. He was a boarder at Yarrow School, along with his brother Tom. He was from the Tower Inn in Hawick, and so presumably son of innkeeper Billy. He became long guard on the mail coach from Edinburgh to Langholm and was later an innkeeper in Langholm. In 1851 he was keeper of the Crown Inn in Langholm. His wife Agnes was from Wilton Parish. David (18th/19th C.) recorded as a servant at Timpendean on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He was uncle of Walter 'Goold' Ballantyne, so either he married a Ballantyne, or he had a sister Elizabeth who married a Ballantyne. His children included William (b.1823/4), George (b.1831/2) and Jane (b.1835/6). He is supposed to have given the nickname to his nephew after the young Walter took apart a stocking frame, saying 'wei'll hae tae ca' ye Goold', that being the name of the only framesmith in Hawick at the time. David 'Gallopin Davie' of Rawflat (1800–69) eldest son of Peter of Rawflatt and Margaret Elliot. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1823 and farmed at Hundalee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. About 1846 he moved to Wales to work as an estate agent and died there. He married Miss Bedford from Ireland, then later Margaret Shortreed, and also married a third time. David

'Dave' first Cornet from Stirches, being selected in 1979. He worked with Lyle & Scotts, then helped train racehorses with Alistair Whillans, before becoming a builder's labourer in Edinburgh. He married his Lass, Margaret McLeod. George (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule, mentioned in the 1562 Feu-Rule Baronial land dispute. He is probably an ancestor of the later Browns at Hallrule. George (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. George (17th/18th C.) resident in Harden. He married Helen Douglas in Roberton in 1712 and their children included Elspeth (b.1713). George (18th C.) contracted by Sir Gilbert Eliott (on behalf of local gentlemen interested in manufacturing in the Hawick district) in 1736 to use some looms for manufacturing coarse, tarred wool. He appears to have been replaced by Alexander Brown by 1739. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1776 and 1780. His children included Betty (b.1772), George (b.1774), Christian (b.1776), Christian (again, b.1778) and an unnamed child (b.1780). George (18th/19th C.) son of William, landlord of the Tower Hotel. He was Cornet in 1811. George (19th C.) apparently a native of Jedburgh who became Cornet in 1854. He took over the grocery business at 9 High Street from Robert Thomson, and was thereafter referred to as 'Cornet Broon'. George (1815–86) son of James and Lizzie Hope, he was born at the Carterhaugh Toll Bar. At age 15 he ran away to Canada, returning 11 years later with a French-Canadian wife (Margaret Egan, 1825–1901) and starting a long series of jobs. He first became toll-keeper of the Tweed Toll (between Gala and Selkirk), moving to Whillan Toll (between Gala and Stow) after a year, then to Belses, Deanbrae, Hawick Wester Toll, Deanbrae and Wester Toll again. While the railway was being built he drove a cart to Whitrope for James Turnbull (grocer) and later for John Young (baker). After that he ran a greengrocer's shop at 43 High Street, where he also kept cows. He later moved to the Crown Close, where he still kept cows, and sold fresh herring in season. His children were Mary Ann (who died young), James (controller of Greenock Post Office), John (who became an engineer), George (a wool-sorter of Slitrig Bank) and Mary (who married William Davidson, Provost of Haddington). Grace (1938–), B.E.M. Born and raised in Newcastleton, her family moved to Langholm. She worked with solicitors Stevenson and Johnstone and then joined the staff at Langholm Town Hall, eventually becoming Depute Town Clerk. After Reorganisation she became Registrar in Langholm. She has been the longest serving member of Langholm, Ewes and Westerkirk Community Council, as well as volunteer with several local clubs and instutions. At Burns suppers she is known as a reciter of 'Tam O' Shanter'. She supported local elections for about 60 years and organised the ceremonies when Neil Armstrong was awarded the Freedom of Langholm. In 2017 she received the British Empire Medal for voluntary service in the communities of Langholm, Ewes and Westerkirk. Hector (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed in the same place. Hector (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and may be related to the man of the same name in Minto Parish. Isobella (b.1811/2) originally from Selkirk, she is listed as grocer in Denholm from 1837 until at least the 1860s. She probably lived on Sunnyside, and was living alone in 1851. James (15th/16th C.) appointed as attorney to Sir William Douglas to represent him at the giving of sasine for the Barony of Hawick in 1511/2. His name is recorded as 'Jacobo Browne' and the ceremony took place at the Mote. He is probably the same 'Jacobo' who was witness to the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1514. James (16th C.) mentioned in one of Hawick's first existing sasine of 1558. It is stated there that he owned the lands to the north of those being transferred, suggesting perhaps around the modern Buccleuch Street. He may have been related to Thomas, who held lands according to the 1537 Charter. James (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in the Wems, undir Watt of Hoppisburne', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He probably lived at Weens and was a servant or dependent of Walter Turnbull of Hobsburn. James (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire. His lands in Hawick were valued at £6. He may have been related to Robert, who was also a landowner in Hawick at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at 'mylnholme' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was was 'Millholm' (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. James

(17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for James Inglis. He married Isobel Brown and their son John was baptised in 1694. Perhaps the same John also married Margaret Stavert and had further children Sarah (b.1696) and Thomas (b.1706). The witnesses in 1694 were John (probably a relative) and Patrick 'Dunce'. James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1703 he was fined for being found drunk in the house (i.e. pub) of Robert Brown after 10 o'clock, as well as 'for swearing and cursing their'. He is probably the James who married Margaret Bridges in 1703. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1705, with witnesses mason John Napier and weaver Adam Jardine. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Helen (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); Agnes (b.1722); and James (b.1724). James (18th C.) tenant in East Burnfoot on Ale sometime in the period it was owned by Walter Scott, namely 1715–37. He could be the James baptised in Wilton in 1716 to George and Helen Douglas. James (18th C.) recorded as mealmaker in Fanns (in Ashkirk Parish) in 1747 when he had a bond with the officials in Selkirk. There were discharges in 1742, 1749 and 1757, then another bond in 1757, with the discharge in 1760. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1761 he married Janet Fletcher, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included: William (b.1762); Andrew (b.1766); William (again, b.1768); James (b.1769); Walter (b.1772); and Betty (b.1776). The last 4 children were baptised in Yetholm. The witnesses in 1766 were baker John Kedie and shoemaker John Oliver. Perhaps the same James had a daughter Betty baptised in 1780, with witnesses William Riddell and Thomas Brown (perhaps both shoemakers, but hard to read). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Thomson in 1785 and their children included: Robert (b.1788); Margaret (b.1785); Agnes (b.1790); and Andrew (b.1793). The witnesses in 1793 were 'Special Congregation'. James (18th C.) 'hind' in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1789. He could be the James, married to Mary Turnbull, whose children James (b.1784) and Agnes (b.1785), were baptised in Lilliesleaf. William (b.1784), Mary (b.1787) and Margaret (b.1789) could also be his children. James (b.1775) son of shoemaker Thomas. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. His brother John was also listed. However in 1799 he was listed among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and was still on the ballot list in 1801. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Eastcote according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd who married Lizzie Hope (from Cavers) and became proprietor of the East End Toll Bar in Hawick. They later moved to the Selkirk Toll Bar. Their son was George, toll-keeper and shopkeeper of Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the 'Woollen S.W.J.' listed at around 60 High Street on the 1841 census, with wife Margaret and children Margaret, Agnes, Mary, George, James, William and Robert. James (b.1796/7) from Selkirk, he was blacksmith at Old Belses. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was a Master Blacksmith employing 1 man. His wife was Helen and they had at least 11 children, including: Isabella (b.1824/5), who married Robert Ainslie; Andrew (b.1827/8); Jane (b.1828/9); Helen (b.1830/1); Ann (b.1831/2); Janet (b.1833/4); John (b.1838/9); James (b.1839/40); and Walter (b.1843/4), minister at Braid Church in Edinburgh. His wife was a widow at Old Belses in 1861. James (19th C.) married Jane Ballantyne in 1838, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Melrose Parishes. James (19th C.) married Margaret Ballantyne in Hobkirk in 1849. James 'Jamie Cant' (1846/7–91) poor, struggling individual, who was a familiar sight on the streets in the late 19th century. He was a simpleton who rarely worked, and was a pal of 'Hawick Wattie'. He stayed in various lodging-houses, spending most of his life in Hawick, where he died in the Poorhouse. He was photographed with a sandwich-board by J.Y. Hunter in about 1890, advertising the photographer's own business – 'See their eyes are sairly swollen And they've lost baith hair and skin, They're Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in' [WE]. James B. (1832–1904) known by the pen-name 'J.B. Selkirk' or the initials 'J.B.S., he was a poet and essayist from Selkirk. He was also an artist and lover of music, and had an interest in ecclesiastical matters. Born in Galashiels, his family moved to Selkirk when he was a boy. He wrote 'The Last Epistle to Tammus' (better known as 'A Border Burn'), and many other poems with a Border flavour. His books included 'Yarrow and Other Poems' (1869), 'Poems' (1896), 'Bible Truths and Shakespearian Parallels' and 'Ethics and Æsthetics of Modern Poetry'. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally in Hawick held at Loch Park. He was a Deacon and last surviving member of the corporation of weavers in Selkirk; it was while the old English flag from Flodden was in his possession that it was framed and preserved behind glass. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Buckham. He is buried in Selkirk Auld Parish Kirkyard. 'J.B. Selkirk, 1832–1904: centenary reflections' was compiled by Wilma Derry and edited by Avril Jack in 2005. James (d.1915) only son of James, who was an insuranceman living at 15 Gladstone Street. He was Quartermaster Sergeant with the 1st Battalion K.O.S.B., being a professional soldier for 12 years and secretary of the Army Temperance Association while serving in Lucknow. He was killed early in the Gallipoli campaign. James (b.1894/5) son of labourer William and Agnes Richardson. He was a blacksmith's hammerman. In 1920 he married Janet Halliday Waldie. Janet (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (18th C.) listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Janet (b.1808/9) daughter of Rev. William of Eskdalemuir. After the death of her father she lived with her mother at 17 Buccleuch Street. In 1873 she gave permission for Dr. Brydon to write an article for the Transactions based on her father's 'Memorabilia of the Parish of Eskdalemuir, begun by William Brown 1793'. Perhaps the same Janet is recorded in about 1874, along with Mrs. Rodgie, as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick, perhaps around Buccleuch Street; it is unclear how she was related to other Browns, or if she was connected to Rev. Rodgie. Jean (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. She was probably widow of a former tenant farmer there. Jean (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Jean (18th C.) chambermaid at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for Willian Elliot Lockhart. John (15th C.) Canon of Glasgow, he was appointed to Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1480, succeeding Robert Turnbull. He is said to have entered 'the great gate with the key of the same, and touching the baptismal font, the chalice, the book, and the other ornaments, according to use and wont'. He probably still held the benefice in 1489 when there was a dispute about teinds with Walter Ker of Cessford and James Riddell of that Ilk. It is possible he was the same John who was nominated as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1479, but not confirmed. John (15th C.) witness to a document of 1484/5 giving lands in Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme and also witness to a document relating to Whitchesters. He could be the same man as 'Johannes Broune' who was among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for the capture of John Douglas of Balvery. He may be related to Adam who was also listed there. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as a farm worker of George, portioner of Belses. In 1618 there was a compaint that he and David Turnbull were tending the animals at Belses during Sunday worship when a group of Middlemases from Lilliesleaf 'unhonnestlie strak and dang thame and brak their headis, to the effusioun of thair bloodis'. John (17th C.) recorded as Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in the 1660s. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1660 he was fined by the quartermasters of the incorporation 'for weaving linen for ten penneyis the elne against their will'. After complaining to the Bailies, 'the haill weavers except John Browne to pay the somme of £6 Scots'. He could be the John who married Janet Johnston and had children William (b.1648) and Marion (b.1652) baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1652 were James (probably related) and Andrew Rutherford. John (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean area that was still part of Roberton Parish in the 1680s. There he witnessed baptisms for William Turnbull in 1683 and for George Knox in 1684. John (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms for John Taylor in 1690, for John Renwick in 1691 and for James (probably a relative) in 1694. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1740 for flax-dresser William and wright (at Branxholme Park) James Riddell and another in 1745 for miller James Scott. He may also be the John who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Hugh Anthony (whose mother was Margaret Brown). He married Margaret Graham and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1742. The witnesses were dyker William Elliot and 'junior w...' William Turnbull. John (18th C.) recorded receiving poor money in Bedrule PArish in 1729. John (18th C.) married Margaret Gibson in Wilton Parish in 1748. John (18th C.) recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer's book of 1767 when he was paid 'for going post to Edinburgh with a letter'. It is unclear what his occupation was, but presumably it included travelling. John (18th/19th C.) carrier of Denholm, listed along with Alex Hogg, in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. They went from Denholm to Edinburgh every Monday fortnight. John (b.1777) son of shoemaker Thomas. He was recorded in 1797 and 1798 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. His brother James was also listed in 1797. The annotation 'Serving' in 1797 suggests that he was already serving and in 1799 he appears to be listed as someone who had been balloted in 1797 and was serving. He is easily confused with other contemporary Johns, e.g. the beggar painted by Adam Brown. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Scawmill. He was recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. He could be the John who married Janet Robson in Wilton in 1795 or the John who married Catherine Martin in Wilton in 1800. John (b.c.1790) carter on the Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen, and their children included Beattie, Ann, Helen, Thomas, Janet, Mary and Agnes. He could be the same man as the Denholm carrier. John (c.1782–c.1840) Hawick man who became a well-known beggar. It was said that he started begging from an early age and by the mid-1820s was the only professional beggar in Hawick. He supposedly enlisted in the army and deserted many times, after spending the cash inducements; although he usually got away, he was also flogged several times after being caught. He spoke a combination of Yorkshire and Scottish dialects, and spent time in towns on both sides of the Border. He also had a dog called 'Hawick'. He was sometimes a seller of 'spunks', and pretended to be many things during his life in order to extort money. He faked being deaf and often had his jaw tied up with flannel and wore an old hat and handkerchief on his head. There is a story (recounted by W.N. Kennedy) of how, after a long absence, he reappeared in Hawick about 1820, disguised as a preacher, trying to collect money from the assembled crowd, but was soon recognised by the residents. He was said to have been a stout, large boned man in his prime. In 1816 Christian Scott died in Hawick, and was recorded as 'mother to John Brown the Deserter'. He may therefore be the John born to John Brown and Christian Scott in Ashkirk in 1770. It is possible he was the labourer recorded in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. A painting of him by Adam Brown is in the Museum. He may be the 'Packman' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1840. John (18th/19th C.) publican in Denholm, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. John (1806/7–40) father of William of Alloa. He married Janet Sprot, who died in 1849, aged 47. They also had a daughter, Janet, who died in 1848, aged 19. He is buried in St. Mary's kirkyard along with his wife and daughter. He may be the 'Packman' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1840. John (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Elizabeth Ekron in 1835. John (19th C.) resident of Outerside farm. In 1872 he donated to the Museum an 'upper stone of bowl-shaped quern' that he found when casting peat on the farm. John (b.1832) from Haddington, where he was helped in his education by Dr. John Cook, minister there. He was assistant teacher at Haddington for a while and then attended the Normal School, being admitted to Educational Institute of Scotland in 1847. In 1854 he was appointed as Schoolmaster in Newcastleton, and a few years later a new, larger school was built. He was recorded living at 'Schoolhouse, Douglas Square' in 1861. He also served as Librarian, Registrar, Collector of Rates, Inspector of Poor and Heritors' and Session Clerk for Castleton Parish. He was also Superintendent of the Parish Church Sunday School from 1855 until 1903. He retired in 1900, after 51 years as a teacher and 46 in Castleton Parish; there was a celebratory dinner for him in Newcastleton. In 1903 he retired from his additional posts as Inspector, Clerk and Collector; the first entry in the death Register after he retired was his own. His wife was Jane Amos, and their children included Anna Jane and Janet Young. John Brotchie (19th C.) from Edinburgh, he moved to Hawick to be a tailor. He was given the nickname 'Topper Broon' on account of the top-hats he would wear. In 1886 he married Elizabeth Gracie. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1887), who married a Swinton; Elizabeth Alice (b.1888); Isabella (b.1890), who died young; John (b.1893), who was injured during WWI; Ada (b.1897); Freddy (1903–92); and Isa (1905–88), who married Robert Spowart. John (19th/20th C.) son of George and Mary Egan. He was an apprentice with John Melrose & Sons, and became second engineer on the Cunard ship 'Umbria'. In Liverpool he was nicknamed 'Little Brown', to distinguish him from another John Brown of Hawick. John (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who worked in Liverpool and was known as 'Big Brown' to distinguish him from the other Hawick John. He was also sometimes nicknamed 'Caliper' on account of his bandy-legs. John 'Foosty Broon' or 'Jocky Foost' (20th C.) shopkeeper of a general store at the foot of Wellington Street in the mid-20th century. The shop was well known for stocking everything, including very old sweets, etc. The shop window also contained hand-written epithets, such as 'the end of the world is at hand'. In later life he suffered from mental illness, being often seen on the streets talking to inanimate objects. Karl (19th/20th C.) psudonym of Charles Stewart. Keith wrote the article 'Double modals in Hawick Scots' in 'Dialects of English' (1991) edited by P. Trudgill & J.K. Chambers. Keith 'Chugger' (1958/9–) Hawick man known for his renditions of 'The Mosstrooper's Song'. He was made Mosstrooper of the Year in 2022. His nickname came from 'Chugga-Boom' the name of the car of the 'Ant Hill Mob' in the cartoon series 'The Wacky Races', this being altered to 'Chugger Broon'. Lowenger (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His forename is unusual. In 1796 he was described as 'Drainer in Ormiston'. His children included John (b.1796) and Helen (b.1798). Lyle (d.1598) servant of Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood. He was killed during attacks on the Lorraine estates by members of the Turnbull Clan, brought about through quarrels with Lady Margaret, herself a Turnbull. His farm was burned and had 30 cows, 60 sheep and 5 horses stolen from it, according to the trial of 1606. His name is recorded as 'Lyell Broun'. Margaret nee Moffat (1762/3–1855) daughter of James, who farmed at Craik and Garwald, she was born at Eskdalemuir. She was a resident of about 17 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and 1851. She was widow of Rev. Dr. William, and must have come to Hawick after his death in 1838. She is listed as 'Ind.' and 'Annuitant', and in and 1852 directory was listed among the local gentry. She lived on Buccleuch Street with her daughter, Janet. Rev. Marina D. minister at St. Mary's in Hawick from 2010. Mary (18th C.) cook and housemaid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was listed as 'Margrat' in 1791 and still cook at Minto. Matthew (b.1799/1800) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a farmer who lived at Weensland Cottage. He is recorded there in 1841, along with Thomas and Christy (his parents) and Isabel (his sister). In 1851 he was at Newton in Wilton Parish, with his mother and sister. By 1861 he was a carter at 8 Bridge Street (possibly being equivalent to 4 Dovecote Street). Capt. Percy George, C.B.E. of Weens (1874–1954), born in Edinburgh, son of a Naval Commander. He served in the Royal Navy, becoming Lieutenant in 1896 and Commander in 1908. He served on several ships during WWI, and was in command of H.M.S. Champagne when the ship was lost to a submarine attack in 1917 with the loss of over 50 lives. The Court Martial concluded that he had remained with his vessel until it sank from under him and he was awarded the C.B.E. for his action. He retired with the rank of Captain in 1919. He married Mary Hutchins (c.1874–1935). He was living at Weens from at least 1936 and served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Peter (d.1822) farmer at Rawflatt and later at Newton in Bedrule Parish. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club. He is recorded at 'Newton etc.' on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned no fewer than 15 horses. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779; he was referred to at that time as 'in Minto'. He is described in the Old Statistical Account as a tenant farmer who had 'in the course of a few years, shewn how much may be done by improvement in this parish'. He was at Newton in 1801 when his servant John Rutherford was listed on the Militia ballot. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1799 he married Margaret (b.1774), daughter of Robert Elliot of Harwood and Elizabeth Pringle. Their children were: David, who worked as an estate agent and died in South Wales; Robert, who died young; Peter, who also died young; Elizabeth Pringle, who married Jedburgh surgeon Gavin Hilson; Jane, who married James Pott of Potburn; Eleanor, unmarried, buried at Ancrum; and Margaret (b.1817), who married Robert Pringle from Bairnkine. He died suddenly when visiting Edgerston. Rev. Peter (d.1871) from Hutchesontown in Glasgow. He became minister of Allars Church in 1825, and was called to Wishawtown in 1831 (although he may not have left until 1833). In 1863 he moved to Victoria, Australia, becoming minister of Hawthorne and was appointed Professor of Exegetical Theology at Melbourne for his last 5 years. He wrote a history of the parish of Cambusnethan and was for several years the editor of 'The Christian Journal'. A sketch of him exists. Richard (14th C.) owner of lands in 'Ermildon' (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to a c.1376 rental roll. The list includes 'Locus Ricardi Broun', valued at 12 shillings. Richard (16th C.) recorded in Headshaw in 1580 when he and John Thomson acted as cautioners for Walter Scott of Headshaw to make payment to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw. Probably the same Richard was recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Ashkirk in 1580/1, which Walter Scott in Ashkirk held, and offered to Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1581 he was 'in Askirk' when he 'licensed his heirs and assignees' to build on his tenement in Selkirk. Also in 1581 he was recorded as former occupier (along with George Easton) of Salenside Croft and 'Skakriggis', lands that were then assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses by Walter Scott of Ashkirk. Richard (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Rowlespittell' (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule) in 1610 when he received part of the lands of Barnhills and 'in Reullspittell' in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging more than the allowed rate of interest on loans. He failed to appear in Edinburgh to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel by the Privy Council. Richard (d.1930) from Broxburn, he came to Hawick Free Kirk (St. George's) as Precentor in 1892, serving in that capacity until he retired in 1920. His daughter Susan (later Mrs. Whitelaw) later filled the position of church organist. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569 when listed among those for whom Sir Walter acted as cautioner in Hawick, before the Warden. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as a servitor of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. He was a subscriber at Barnhills to a bond by John of Minto to enter the Lorraines of Harwood. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he and 2 others, 'Wm. Frater, and Steven Omond', had to make public repentance for playing at 'nineholes' (i.e. nine men's morris) on Sunday. Perhaps the same Robert married Helen Thomson and had children baptised in Ashkirk, including Bessie (b.1647), James (b.1652) and Isobel (b.1657). The witnesses in 1652 were John 'Fraiter' and James Kedie. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £4. He may have been related to James, who was also a landowner in Hawick at the same time. He could be the Robert, married to Helen Swan, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1649. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Veitch and their children included: Jean (b.1653); and Marion (b.1671). Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) Junior Bailie in 1706 who carried the Flag back through the town at the Common Riding, after the Senior Bailie, Robert Hardie, had carried it out. This is because the Cornet-elect refused to carry it, perhaps from its dishevelled state. Also in 1706 he was Magistrate when ex-Bailie John Binnie was fined for bad behaviour. In 1707 he and the other Bailie, Robert Ruecastle, were fined by the Council for assaulting others during the Common Riding. Such censure by the Council of their own Magistrates is surely unprecedented, and although the incident is not described in detail, it presumably had something to do with the disturbances at the Common Riding the year before. In 1707 he and Robert Ruecastle witnessed a baptism for tailor William Donald and he also witnessed a baptism for Thomas Tinlin. In 1710 he was given custody of the Charter Chest, which contained the new Flag, with the 2 Bailies holding the keys. He was an ex-Bailie on the Council when the bond was granted (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the merchant on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam (perhaps a relative) in 1700 and another baptism in 1702. He may be the merchant who is recorded in 1703 when weaver James Brown was fined for being drunk in his house after 10 o'clock; he presumably kept a public house and they may have been related. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Tinlin in 1704, when he was described as a merchant (and not Bailie, suggesting he had not yet served as Magistrate). He witnessed further baptisms in 1706 for weaver Adam Brown 'Headhouse' (who may have been related), in 1711 for cooper Alexander Weens and in 1712 for smith Thomas Oliver. His name was also spelled 'Browne'.

Robert (18th C.) wright in Bedrule. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1731. Robert (b.1729), Janet (b.1733), Elizabeth (b.1736) and Margaret (b.1739), baptised in Bedrule, were probably also his children. Robert (d.bef. 1799) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1772. He married Agnes Scott in Hawick in 1755, and the family were members of the Associate Kirk in Midlem (with several baptisms later written into the Hawick Parish records). Their children were: unnamed (b.1756); Walter (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1766); Robert (b.1768); and Nelly (b.1772). The early baptisms were performed by Rev. Arnot, the 1756 and 1758 ones performed at Midlem, the 1760 one at Whitehaugh, and the 1762, 1766 and 1768 ones in Hawick. The 1766 one was performed in Hawick by Rev. Morrison of Norham and the 1768 one by Rev. Young. The 1772 baptism was recorded in Wilton Parish and performed by Rev. John Young of the Green Kirk. His wife Agnes Scott died in 1799, by which time he was already deceased. Robert (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Robrt (b.1757), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (again, b.1762). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Todrig in 1787 and 1789 and Hoscote in 1792. He married Magdalen (or 'Mady') Inglis and their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Adam (b.1787); Hannah (b.1789); William (b.1790), spirit-dealer in Deanburnhaugh; and David (b.1792). He is probably the Robert who was at Middlestead in Selkirk Parish when his daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton in 1781. He is probably the 80-year old Robert living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Robert (18th/19th C.) hind at Pinnacle recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Coliforthill according to the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in about 1800 when he was discharged as a private in the Hawick Volunteers 'for having refused to pay the fines incurred by him'. Robert (b.1804/5) from Langholm, he was a farm worker in Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841 and 1851. In 1861 his widow was living at Harden. He married Mary Lockie and their children included: Elizabeth (b.c.1834); Janet (b.1836); Henrietta (b.1838); William (b.c.1840); Robert (b.1842); Margaret (b.c.1844); James (b.1846); George (b.1849); Mary (b.1852); and Jane (b.1855). His first few children were baptised in Ettrick Parish. Robert (b.1824/5) from Cavers Parish, he was a grocer and tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He was on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and they had children Jessie, Robert and Margaret. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Muselee in the 1860s. He could be the Robert (d.1901) commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Robert Laidlaw 'Magenta Robbie' or 'Magenta Robert' (d.1906) native of Hawick, who worked as a stockingmaker, but spent his last 25 years as a pedlar, selling odds and ends from his 'tin carpet bag'. One story tells of his nickname coming from the colour he decorated his stockingmaker's lamp during the 1863 royal wedding celebrations, but a perhaps more likely alternative is that it derives from his mother's referring to him as 'Ma gentle Robbie'. He had a woe-begotten expression and an aversion to soap and water, and was known as a harmless, simple-minded soul. There are several amusing stories told about him, e.g. that when he had a child born, and his friend first asked if it was a boy, and when that guess was wrong, said that it must be a gilr then, Robbie said 'Here, wha has tel't ye?' He is said to have written on the census that 'widower, as his wife was living in America' and on another occasion written his age as '50 and 8', the number thus being recorded as '508'. Appearing in his night-clothes at the entrance to his close and was told by a passing policeman that it was 5.30 a.m., to which he said 'I'll need to awa back an' rise'. He was a regular attender of the West Port Kirk, where he would dress in a white tie and kid gloves. He applied for the post of Inspector of the Poor, claiming that he knew more about them than anyone else. He was immortalised in poems by Robert Murray and William Peffers. He was buried in the pauper's section of the Wellogate, where a cairn was erected in the 1980s. Samuel 'Sam' (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of those who helped introduce cricket to the Town. He is probably the spirit dealer at about 17 Howegate, listed on the 1841 census; he was living with Sarah, probably his wife. Thomas (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. In 1493 he was described being 'in Minto' when, along with George Davidson in Raperlaw, he had remission for stealing livestock, as well as for associating with the former Duke of Albany and for stealing sheep along with James Elliot before his earlier remission; his surety was Walter Scott of Whitchester. Possibly the same 'Thomas Brun' was listed on the 'retour of inquest' for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather's lands of Tillilee and Cauldcleuch in 1497/8. He may be the Thomas in Cavers who, along with Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead, was surety for George Turnbull in Weens in 1502. Thomas (16th C.) owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1541 among associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Thomas (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Hob, who was also listed. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1650 when Walter Scott was fined for striking 'his dure, in the night, and desiring him to cum out for his hanging'. It is not known which Walter Scott this might have been, and what the nature of the argument was. He could be the Thomas married to Helen Deans (whose daughter Margaret was born in 1648) or the Thomas married to Helen Swan (whose daughter Helen was born in 1652). Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a court case of 1673. William Scott was accused of striking his brother Robert Scott, apparently because he (Thomas) had called William a 'yallanger', 'the provocation being 'given' be Robert Dicksone, shoemaker, and the said Thomas Broun being contumacious'. Thomas (17th C.) servitor to John Wilkie in Hassendean. In 1684 he was named as a fugitive for being a Covenanter. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Presumably the Thomas listed as owner of a hearth at Craigend (in the same Parish) was a different man; the will of Thomas 'in Minto Craigend' is recorded in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) blacksmith at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in 1686. Thomas (17th/18th C.) miller at Ashkirk Mill, recorded there in 1698. He married Isobel Hislop and their children included: William (b.1691); Isobel (b.1698); Jean (b.1701); John (b.1703); and Thomas (b.1705). Thomas (17th/18th C.) tenant in Synton. He married Isobel Brown and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Jean (b.1701); and John (b.1703). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Janet (b.1731), Thomas (b.1733), Robert (b.1736), Anna (b.1739) and Helen (b.1742). Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included Isabel (b.1779), Mary (b.1781) and Margaret (b.1788). The witnesses in 1788 were weaver John Elder, senior, and John Elder, junior. In 1794 his mother 'Old Mrs. Brown' died. Thomas 'Tom' (d.1823) shoemaker, probably on the High Street. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James (perhaps a brother) in 1780. He was appointed as a Burgess of Hawick in 1782. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker James Cheap. He may be the Thomas who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for gardener James Kyle (perhaps his brother-in-law). He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owning a work horse. He married Beatrix Kyle in 1773 and their children included: William (b.1774); James (b.1775); John (b.1777); Janet (b.1780); Helen (b.1782), who could be the shoebinder living on the Howegate in 1841; Agnes (1785–87); Margaret (b.1787); Adam (b.c.1790), who was a shoemaker and portrait painter; and Walter (b.1793). The witnesses in 1774 and 1775 were the whole congregation and in 1793 were gardeners James Kyle (perhaps related to his wife) and John Hardie. His sons James and John were both listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; John appears to have actually served. The death of a grandchild of his is recorded in 1805. Thomas (1794/5–1870) flesher on the Cross Wynd. He is listed there in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the Cross Wynd with his wife Agnes (or Nancy) and children Beatrix, Thomas and William. In 1851 and 1861 he was a butcher at 10 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Laidlaw and their children included: Beatrix Kyle (b.1831); Thomas (b.1834); Margaret (1837–40); and William Laidlaw (b.1840). His wedding celebrations took place in the Fleece Inn, and it is said that (along with his best man) he broke with protocol in inviting the minister's wife to join them for dancing in the ballroom. Based on the naming of his children, it seems likely he was a late child of shoemaker Thomas and Beatrix Kyle (and therefore that he was a brother of the painter Yedie). Thomas (b.1810/1) boot and shoemaker in Hawick, son of the painter Yedie, with his mother being Agnes Scott. He may be the Thomas who was listed (along with Archibald, presumably a close relative) in Pigots 1837 directory. He married Jane Guthrie in 1835. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street, living with his wife Jane and daughter Margaret. In 1851 they were listed at 3 High Street (although this may be a different numbering scheme). By 1861 he was listed as a shoe salesman (and widower) at 76 High Street. Thomas 'Tom' (b.1813/4) born in Stow, he was farmer at Ruletownhead. He was a keen horseman, huntsman and shooter. Once, returning from Hawick in a hurry, he went over the parapet at Hallrule Brig, and although unhurt, his friend John Usher marked the letters 'T.B.' into the stone to mark the event. He is recorded as Judge at the Common-Riding Races in at least 1859, 1860 and 1861, and was also a Steward in 1858. In the 1861 census he was farmer of 430 acres, employing 9 people. He was recorded at Ruletownhead in a directory of 1868. Never a successful farmer, he spent his last years selling farm merchandise. He married Ellen Kerr and their children included Thomas, Mary J.P., Robert Kerr and William. Thomas (b.1823/4) stockingmaker, son of John, who was a carter. In 1841 he was living with his parents and siblings on the Kirk Wynd, on 1851 on the Howegate and in 1861 at 13 Back Row. He was probably the stockingmaker on the Loan who donated a Confederate States banknote to the Museum in 1863. He could be the 'Tom' of the Howegate who was remembered in a poem by Thomas Chapman – 'The winds round the mountains of Teviotdale sigh, And down in the woodlands the cushats complain, And warm tears are streamin' frae mony an eye, For Tammas o' Howgate that's now frae us gane' [TCh]. Thomas (d.1890) teacher in Ancrum and then in Hawick. He worked at the Science and Technology School, being assistant to Mr. Pitcairn in the teaching of senior classes. He was replaced by Mr. A.S. Williams in the 1880s. He also wrote some poetry, as well as a biography of Leyden. He published 'St. Mary's Loch, A Poem' and 'The Battle of Ancrum Moor' in Hawick in 1889. He could be the Thomas of whom John Guthrie painted a portrait. He died at Bonjedward. Thomas (c.1823–1911) born in Hawick, son of Charles and Margaret Ferguson. He moved to Dumfries with his father and brother to help set up a hosiery firm and became a foreman carder. This was the first factory in Dumfries to manufacture tweed yarn. In 1857 he married Jane Emma Burns, who was a daughter of Robert, eldest son of the poet Robert Burns. In about 1870 he moved with his family to Canada, where his elder daughter Isaballa Ferguson became ill and died. He worked at McCrae's Woollen Mill in Guelph. About 8 years later they returned to Scotland and in 1903 moved into Burns old house in Dumfries, acting as caretaker for the museum there (with Andrew Carnegie supplying them with £60 per year). His surviving daughter, Jean Armour Burns (1864–1937), was said to bear a strong resemblance to her famous ancestor, and was the last legitimate descendant of the Bard. Walter (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to George, who was also listed there. Rev. Walter (b.1843/4) born at Old Belses, 11th child of James, the blacksmith there. He spent part of his childhood in Selkirk and attended school at Lilliesleaf. He was a blacksmith up until he was about 25, then in 1867 started training for the ministry. He was minister at the South U.P. Church in Galashiels from 1877 and then minister of the Braid Church in Edinburgh from 1886. He also served as Moderator of the Edinburgh Presbytery. Walter (d.1930) from Lilliesleaf, he was ordained as 1st minister of Galashiels South U.P. Church in 1877. The new church there was opened in 1880. He turned down the chance to move to Glasgow and then Edinburgh, but in 1886 he went to the new congregation at Braid, Edinburgh. He retired in 1919 and there was a celebration of his jubilee in 1929. William (14th/15th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. In about 1420 there was a Papal decree to give him the perpetual vicarage of Lilliesleaf when it became void after John of Kirkmichael received another benefice. He already possessed the Archdeaconry of Orkney. He visited the Pope personally in Florence in order to be given these benefices. Perhaps the same William was subject of a request for a benefice on Kelso Abbey in 1403. He may also be the same as the William, student for many years in Paris and elsewhere, who requested a benefice from Dunkeld in 1394, although already holding Hilton church in St. Andrews Diocese. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Bennet and their children included: Bessie (b.1640): William (b.1643); and Margaret (b.1649). He may be the William who in 1654 witnessed a baptism for William Hall. William (d.c.1683) tenant in Barnhills. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1683. William (d.c.1684) tenant in Minto Mill, whose testament is recorded in 1684. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot and their children included: James (b.1687); and an unnamed child (b.1689). Andrew was a witness in 1687 and hence presumably related. The witnesses in 1689 were James Beattie and William Swan. He was listed as a weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the William who, along with Adam, witnessed a baptism for John Oliver in 1680. He was witness in 1702 and 1703 to baptisms for weaver Adam (who was surely related). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He could be the William in Menslaws whose wife was Margaret 'Roughheath', her will being recorded in 1687; her surname may be a variant of Routledge. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. In 1694, along with James Pringle, he witnessed a baptism for William Tait. He is probably the William who married Janet Somerville and had children Thomas (b.1688) and William (b.1691). His wife's name appears as 'Elizabeth' in 1688, with witnesses possibly Andrew ... and James .... William (17th C.) resident at Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records William (17th/18th C.) probable resident of Hawick (the entry is hard to read). He is recorded in the Wilton Session records for 1706 as 'Post' when he was paid for the purchase and carriage of a session book. Perhaps the same William was 'servant' in 1716 when he (along with innkeeper William shiel) witnessed a baptism for wigmaker John Norville. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Highchesters in 1731 when his son James was baptised. He could be the William who married Margaret Scott in Roberton in 1730. William (18th C.) resident at Scawmill in 1733 and 'under Miller' in Hawick in 1741. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1733); John (b.1735); Sarah (b.1741); William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1733 were James Scott and John Dryden and in 1741 were writer Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tudhope. William (18th C.) flax-dresser in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Riddell from Wilton Parish in 1736. Their children included: Margaret (b.1738); and William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were shoemaker John (probably a relative) and wright James Riddell (perhaps related to his wife). William (18th C.) married Margaret Thomson in Minto in 1740. William (18th C.) Town Piper in Hawick. He was recorded as piper in 1745 and also 1756–57. However, it may be that he overlapped with Walter Ballantyne, and that the pair shared responsibilities for piping, drumming and other duties of the Burgh Officers. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism, along with Walter Ballantyne, for Thomas Ballantyne in 1763. He married Mary Allan and they had daughters Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker John Scott and carrier John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1774 he married Jane Hardie and their children included: Christian (b.1775); and William (b.1777). William (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was in possession of the lands of Kameside Park. William (18th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1781 and 1792. His brother Peter died in 1809. William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. His son Robert died in 1798. William (18th/19th C.) heckler in Hawick. He married Isobel Beattie in 1775 and her death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. Their children included Helen (b.1780). William (d.bef. 1809) heckler in Hawick. He married Helen White in Hawick Parish in 1785 and she died in 1809. He may be the merchant who witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Renwick in 1781. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Elliot and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1811. William (b.c.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. He was still on the list for the Militia ballot in 1801. He was listed as a shoemaker at the Sandbed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (b.c.1780) stockingmaker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Allie and their son Henry was baptised in Hawick in 1801. The witnesses were baker John Wilson and printer Robert Armstrong. Rev. William (d.1836) minister of Bedrule, from Greenlees. He was usher at an academy in France and another near London, became teacher at George Watson's Hospital in Edinburgh and was licensed to preach in 1782. He then became tutor for the family of Sir John Stewart of Allanbank. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in 1787 and became minister there the following year. He remained Bedrule's Minister until his death, serving for 48 years. He wrote a long and detailed description of the Parish for Old Statistical Account. In it he gives lengthy footnotes in which (among other things) he berates local landowners from being absent from the church where they hold land, and as a result neglecting their responsibilities to support the fabric of the church, the school and the poor. He paid the Horse Tax at Bedrule Manse in the period 1789–97. His servant Alexander Lockie was recorded in 1799. It was said that his obstinacy led to him being involved in several law-suits, which led to him losing money. Archibald Craig was appointed as his assistant and successor in 1832. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He paid the land tax at Lanton Moor in 1813. In 1813 (at Kirkton Manse) he married Janet, eldest daughter of Archibald Henderson of Mackside, and she died in 1839. Their children were: Janet (b.1814); Alison Cockburn (b.1816); Robert Rutherford (b.1818); and Archibald Henderson (b.1820). He is described as having great literary talents. He was also apparently an obstinate man who became involved in many lawsuits. He published 'The Pronouncing Testament' (1796), which was 'an edition of the New Testament on an original plan'. William 'Billy' (d.1839) landlord of the Tower Inn in the first half of the 19th century. He was recorded there in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was known as somewhat of an irascible character. He is said to have owned the first 'gig' (i.e. two wheeled carriage) in Hawick. He was also one of the founding members of the Wisp Club. His children must have included Clement and Tom, who boarded at the school in Yarrow, and George, who was Cornet in 1811. His son William junior died in 1817. He is probably also the 'Mr Brown Tower inn' whose illegitimate child with Isabel Miller died in 1810. He is probably the 'Mr Brown, Tower Inn, Hawick' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is buried in St. Mary's churchyard. There seems to be some uncertainty about whether he died in 1839 or 1842. He is probably the 'W Brown, Hawick' whose portrait was painted by William Irving and is in the Museum. His wife is recorded dying in 1821; she is said to have taken the young Tom Jenkins under her wing, when his sponsor James Swanson died. Rev. Dr. William (1764–1835) son of Peeblesshire stonemason William, whose 2nd wife was an aunt of Thomas Carlyle. He was licensed to preach by Stirling Presbytery in 1791, he became minister of Eskdalemuir in 1792. He received a doctorate from Aberdeen in 1816. In 1797 he married Margaret, daughter of James, farmer at Craik and Garwald; after his death she lived in Hawick, and died in 1855. Their children were: James (1798–1820), Lieutenant in the 10th Native Infantry in Madras; Robert (b.1803); Margaret (b.1804), who married John Scott in Westerkirk in 1830, but was widowed and later lived in Hawick; John (1805–23), who died while a student at Edinburgh University; Janet (b.1808), who lived in Hawick and Alison (b.1811), who married Dr. Walter Graham and lived on Buccleuch Street and later at Borthaugh. His widow, daughters Janet and Margaret, Margaret's 2 children (James, b.1832 and Margaret, b.1833) and a servant were living at 17 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and his widow, daughter Janet and house servant were there in 1851. In 1861 his daughters Janet and Margaret were with his other daughter Alison at Borthaugh. His publications include 'Antiquities of the Jews' (2 volumes, 1820), and accounts of the Parish of Eskdalemuir for the statistical accounts. He left a manuscript register of events in his parish, covering the years 1793–1809. This includes much of interest to the folklorist, including an account of the appearance of the mysterious creature Gilpin Horner at Towdshawhill (not the one near Hawick), which inspired Sir Walter Scott, and a description of the 'Gonial Blast'. Extracts of it appear in the Transactions for 1873. William (b.1790) born in Roberton Parish, son of Robert and Magdalene Inglis, he lived at Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded there as an innkeeper and spirit dealer and in 1851 as a meal dealer. He married Barbara Neil and their children included: Isobel (b.1815); Magdalene (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); Alexander (b.1822); Margaret (b.1824); Adam (b.1825); Mary (b.1830); and Barbara (b.1833). William 'Will' (18th/19th C.) butler at Wolfelee House. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was ordained as one of the first two elders there in 1850. He is probably the William, formerly in the service of Elliot of Wolfelee, who died at Causewayfoot, Wolfelee in 1861, 'at and advanced age'. William (b.1807/8) from England, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a 'Grocer (Master)' at 4 Mid Row. He married Elizabeth Best, widow of James Taylor. William Wells (c.1814–84) fugitive slave from Kentucky who became a leading speaker for the abolition of slavery, as well as a writer, being usually credited with writing the first novel by an African American. As part of his European tour he visited Hawick in 1850, collecting many anti-slavery signatures, as described briefly in his 1855 book 'Sketches of Places and People Abroad'. William (19th C.) married Isobel Beattie in Kirkton Parish in 1837. William (19th C.) manufacturer in Galashiels. In Wilton in 1848 he married Margery Donaldson Laing (1827–1911, only daughter of Alexander Laing and Janet Roger. Their 8th child was Margery Laing Brown (1864–1964), who married Andrew Haddon in 1903. William (b.1820/1) son of Yedie and Agnes Scott. He worked as a shoemaker, which had been his father's initial trade. In 1861 he was listed as a 'Boot Closer' living at 52 Loan with his family, as well as his brother James. He married Isabella Ferguson and their children included Christina and Agnes. William, J.P. (1837–1908), Hawick native, son of John and Janet Sprot. At the age of 13 he apprenticed to draper Richard Rutherford, went to England briefly and moved to Alloa in 1856. Apparently he intended to go Stirling, but the steamer only took him as far as Alloa, where he immediately secured work as a draper. He soon opened his own shop, which prospered and in 1887 he switched to being an auctioneer and valuator (or house factor). He lived at Argyll House in Alloa. He was an active member of Alloa Parish Church and a staunch Conservative in politics. He maintained a close connection with Hawick and was a regular contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was also and a frequent donor of artefacts to the Museum, e.g. Swedish coins and Norwegian bank notes in 1866, several foreign coins in 1867, '24 specimens of New Zealand ferns, mounted on cards' in 1873 and 'a pair of Esquimaux fur trousers, for leggings and boots' in 1877. He and his wife narrowly escaped suffocation in a gas leak in 1895. They had one child, a son, who died in his youth. He lived at Salisbury House, Forth Street in Alloa, where he died. He bequeathed money (£1,500) to his native town, which was used to build the Brown Fountain, near to where he was born. He also left money to support the Common Riding, Cottage Hospital and St. Mary's Kirk. In 1899 he erected a gravestone for his father, mother and sister in St. Mary's kirkyard. Rev. William (1865–1940) son of builder Andrew, he was born in Montrose. He attended St. Andrews University 1883–90, was licensed by Brechin Presbytery and was ordained as minister of St. John's Kirk in Hawick in 1894. Hoewver, he was but transferred to Campsie in 1902 and then went to Dunbar in 1918 (formerly spelled 'Broun', 'Broune' and 'Browne').

brooncaitis (broon-kI-tis) n., arch. bronchitis.

Broondeanlaws (broon-deen-lawz) n. hill in Jedburgh Parish, reaching a height of 1358 ft (the origin is probably Old English 'bruna dun', meaning 'the brown hill'; it is first recorded as 'Broundoun' in 1451).

the Broon Fountain (thu-broon-fown'-in) n. the Brown Fountain, in the middle of Drumlanrig Square, part of an ornamental garden on the site of the Auld Mid Raw. Money for the fountain was bequeathed by William Brown, who had moved to Alloa (and hence the stonework incorporates the arms of both Hawick and Alloa). The design was by J.P. Alison, and consists of an ornamental fountain incorporating a clock, with the dome topped by a weather vane. It was built in 1910–12 by John Marshall & Sons, with the granite carving by Mackay & Morren from Aberdeen. Iron ornamentation on top of the corner columns has since been removed. It is a grade B listed building.

the Broon Gallery (thu-broon-gaw-lu-ree) n. name sometimes used (coined perhaps by W.N. Kennedy) for the Museum's collection of paintings of local personalities painted by Adam Brown. The nucleus was the portraits of of Wullie Bulloch and Robbie Davidson, donated by William Nixon of Lynnwood in about 1860. Other paintings by Brown followed in the next few years, including portraits of John Brown, Nannie Cumming, Wull the Cutler, Wullie Gotterson and Wull Slush, as well as scene at Hornshole, in the house of James Ruickbie and 'leistering' in the Teviot', plus a portrait of an unknown girl and a view of the Sandgate of Newcastle.

Broonhills (broon-hilz) n. Brownhills, former farmstead in Southdean Parish. James Sinton was a weaver there in at least 1799–180 (it is 'Brounhills' in 1801).

Broonlie (broon-lee) n. (Brownlie) Rev. Charles (b.1865–1904) born in Glasgow, son of engineer John and Agnes Dyer. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1893. He was ordained at Laurieston Chapel, Falkirk in 1896 and became minister of St. Margaret's in Hawick in 1898. He married Mary Jackson (who died in 1904) Rev. Robert (c.1589–1645) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1610, he was presented to Kirkton in 1619 and became minister there in 1620. However, the settlement appears not to have gone smoothly, since Walter McGill (minister of Cavers) was inhibited 'to mak ony molestation or hindrance in the premises directlie or indirectlie'. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1638 and was one of the Commissioners appointed for the Presbytery of Jedburgh. Also in 1638 he signed the 'Confessions of Faith', probably in Hawick. He was murdered by members of Montrose's army a day or two after the Battle of Philiphaugh, 'being living at home in his awin hous in a most sober manner'. The perpetrators were led by William Murray, brother of Patrick, Earl of Tullibardine. He married Margaret Lumsden, and she and his fatherless children petitioned Parliament several times for support in the following years. One of his daughters married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts.

the Broon Man o the Muirs (thu-broon-mawn-ō-thu-mewrz) n., arch. fantastical creature that inhabits the moors, said to be malicious and clad in brown – 'Brown dwarf, that o'er the muirland strays, They name to Keeldar tell! – The Brown Man of the Muirs, who stays Beneath the heather-bell' [JL].

Broonmoor (broon-moor) n. Brownmoor, farm in southern Selkirkshire, situated between Hartwoodburn and Middlestead, on the road off west of the A7 towards Ettrick just before Selkirk. The high ground to the south, between here and Headshaw Loch is known as Brown Moor Heights, and reaches 308 m. This could be the 'Brown Moor' whose church dues (presumably from the owner at that time) are recorded in Hawick Parish in 1762. The region was covered in rig and furrow marks, as well as small quarries and boundary features, as determined in an assessment in 2014, before planting with forestry.

Broonrig (broon-rig) n. Brownrig, former house in Liddesdale, on the east bank of the Hermitage Water, just south of Shaws (marked as 'Broungrigg' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

broon sauce (broon-saws) n. a sauce popular in fish and chip shops in Scotland, something like a mixture of 'H.P.' sauce and vinegar.

Broon's Hill (broonz-hil) n. Brown's Hill, hill in the upper Slitrig valley, on the east of the B6399 between Shankend and Langburnshiels, with Brown's Sike to the north. On the north side of the hill is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary marker connecting Brown's Sike to Black Cleuch. This is probably the 'Brounishall' listed among lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1607.

Broon Sike (broon-sīk) n. former name for a stream and lands in Hobkirk Parish, lying somewhere between Birkhill and Hallrule. It is mentioned in the Baronial dispute of 1562 as 'Brounsike'. It is possible that this refers to 'Brown's Sike' in the upper Slitrig valley, just over the hill from other places mentioned in that document.

Broonsteed (broon-steed) n. Brownstead, former house in Liddesdale, just to the north of Park. In 1541 it was valued at 14 shillings and tenanted by Robert Elliot (it is 'Broneiston' in 1541 and marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Brounstead').

Brophy-Parkin (brō-fee-par-kin) n. Caroline, M.B.E. (1960/1–), Captain in the local Salvation Army. In 2020 she received an M.B.E. for the services to the community in Hawick during the Covid-19 response. She is married to Ian Parkin and together they have 6 children.

brose (brōz) n., arch. porridge-like dish of oatmeal or peasmeal mixed with boiling water, milk or fat – 'Let's gie the Bridegroom a sheep's head But gie the bride brose and butter' [ES], 'Ye sourmou'd fo'k pang'd fu' o' prose, As e'er a wabster was o' brose' [JR], 'But stuff my wame wi' guid kail brose, To fleg the caul' ' [JR], '. . . it was reckoned lucky . . . to give her a breakfast of brose in the morning . . . ' [EM1820], 'The Thistle was sharpest, when they come to blows, But now they both miss, with Roast Beef or Brose' [BY], 'We've rowthie baith o' brose an' kail . . . ' [JoHa], 'I liked to see the big man twirl the poke, And stap it fu' o' sugar and brose meal' [WL], sometimes treated as plural – 'A've owre few brose!' [JAHM] (from French via Mediæval English).

brosy (brō-zee) adj., arch. porridge-fed, stout, fat and limp, puffy – 'Imagin iz: A reed, lowpin, broazy face leike a bermy bannih . . . ' [ECS] (also written 'broazy' and variants).

brotch (brōch) n., arch. a spindle, a slender person, especially in nicknames – 'But Kate, the brotch, she was a thin ane, Sat still an' heard ilk ane's opinion' [JoHo], ' 'Hang ye,' cried Tibbie the Brotch to a company of women who seemed marshalled under her generalship' [RM].

brother-german (bru-thur-jer-min) n. a full brother, sharing both the same mother and father (common in legal documents from the 17th century and earlier).

brother son (bru-thur-sun) n., arch. son of a brother, nephew.

Brotherstane (bru-thur-stān) n. (Brotherstone) Patrick (16th/17th C.) servant of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf. In 1617 George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf complained that he, John Rutherford and James Middlemas threatened him at his house, but failed to break down his door. This was part of an ongoing feud.

brotten (bro'-in) pp. brought – 'it was brotten ower fri Amairica'.

brouch (browch) n., arch. a ring around the Moon (also bruch).

broucht (browcht) pp., arch. brought – '...and because nane claimit the said meir, the said Adam Gowanlock broucht the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick ...' [BR1641], '...for thaye ar confuundet an' broucht untill shæme that soucht my skaith' [HSR], 'He broucht thame owt o' mirkniss an' the skaddaw o' deæth ...' [HSR], '...A gowden hairst to my humble sawin', Broucht hame in eternitie' [WL] (also spelled 'browcht'; cf. brocht, along with browt and brung).

brough (browch) n., arch. a burgh – '...within ye said toune and brough of Hawicke ...' [BR] (cf. brugh).

Brougham (broom, brow-chum) n. Lord Henry Peter (1778–1868) born in Edinburgh, he helped found the Edinburgh Review, then moved to London where he entered Parliament, becoming a Liberal leader. He fought against the slave trade, and for religious equality, as well as introducing educational and legal reforms, particularly as Lord Chancellor (1830–34). Specifically, he was the champion of the Reform Bill, which vastly increased the number of people eligible to vote. He visited Hawick in 1834, being made an Honorary Burgess, and later Brougham Place was named after him.

Brougham Place (bro-, brow-chum-plis) n. street running uphill at the north end of the High Street, with buildings constructed around 1837, and named after Lord Brougham. Earlier it was known as the Minister's Entry and sometimes Milligan's Path, but more popularly in recent times as the Cafe Brae. The row of houses was built entirely on the south side, with Trinity Church and the former St. Mary's Infant School on the north side. At the corner with Melgund Place there was a grocer's shop in the mid-1900s, run by Mrs. Carlin. The Drums and Fifes march here on the Thursday night, near the position of the former Easter Toll, and stop for the traditionally refreshment of rum and milk. The bridge over the railway at the top of the street gives access to 'the Terraces', but was closed to traffic in 2013 (note the local pronunciation differs from Lord Brougham's own).

brouster (brow-ster) n., arch. an embroiderer – 'Item, to Williame Archibaldis, brouster, sex £ xiij s. iiij d.' [SB1574].

browst (browst) n., arch. a brewing of malt liquor, tea, etc. – 'At other times it was the fermenting vat which held a browst of home-brewed treacle ale ...' [WNK], 'Ee canna be boss efter sic a browst' [GW], '...An' let every sinner suffer By drinking the browst that they brew' [FL], the brewing of a storm – 'For a' had borne a fearsome browst O' raging wind and weather' [HSR], a hotch-potch, the consequences of one's actions.

browt (brow') v. brought – 'hei browt up his whole denner', 'whae browt her onyway?', 'Thae browt 'im a mount for heiz got the smittal Juist half the size o' a donkey at Spittal' [MB], '...his fither dei'd young and James and his brothers were browt up be their struggling mother' [IHS], (cf. the older brocht and broucht and the occasional brung).

Brox (broks) n. farm to the north of Newcastleton, just after Sandholm, on the right between the main road and the old railway. In 1699 Jean Henderson was a resident there, who was rebuked for 'Sabbath profanation'. Weaver James Brydon lived there around 1840. Labourer John Grieve and family lived there in 1841, as well as John Ballantyne and family. The Liddesdale Stone (an early Christian gravestone) was found there in 1933. Just to the north-west are the foundations of a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is 'Brocks' in 1699 and 'Brocks' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Bruce (broos) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hassendeanbank, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 12 horses. He married Janet McLean and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Byrness in 1813. Rev. George (d.1795) from Rothiemay, Banffshire, he became Schoolmaster of Forglen and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1734, becoming minister to the congregation in Newcastle that same year. In 1742 he was suggested as minister at St. James's Island, South Carolina, but declined. In 1744 he was presented by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto as assistant and successor to John Ritchie at Minto, and he was ordained as minister early in 1745. He paid the window tax at 'the mance' in Minto Parish in 1748. He was translated to Dunbar in 1766 (although there was some opposition, largely because of the weakness of his voice), where he remained until his death. He married Elizabeth Hall (who died in 1770) and their children were George, Sarah, Gilbert and Thomas. He wrote 'Personal Religion, a Necessary Qualification in a Minister of the Gospel' (1943), as well as an account of Dunbar Parish. He gave £50 for the poor of the Parish in 1751, and a further sum of £100 for the Schoolmaster in 1795. James (d.1447) son of Robert, a landowner from Clackmannanshire, he was Rector of Kilmany and Archdeacon of Dunkeld. He became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1441 and then was translated as Bishop of Glasgow (and hence Hawick's bishop) in 1447. However, he must have held the office for only a few months before he died, his successor being William Turnbull. He is buried in Dunfermline. James Semple (1870/1–1950) born in Bhangalpore, India, he was educated in London and worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Aunstralia and China, working abroad and eventually becoming the London manager. He bought the Chisholme estate in 1927 and retired there 3 years later. He served as President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, and the Hawick branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He was also responsible for handing over the land at the Snoot to the Youth Hostel Association. James, M.B.E. (1908–92) born in Hawick, son of a railway signalman. He was educated at Hawick High School, was an apprentice gardener at Alnwick Castle, and then went to Howick Hall, Northumberland. He became an expert horticulturalist, whose fame spread. During WWII he gave advice on food production at military camps and elsewhere. He became President of the Royal Caledonian Horticultural Society, and was awarded the M.B.E. He later became Head of the College of Agriculture teaching section, based in Edinburgh and later Penicuik. He and his wife Amy retired to Craster in Northumberland. He had a reputation as a great teacher and speaker at W.R.I. meetings. He also presented the BBC radio series 'The Scottish Garden', chaired 'Gardener's Forum', and contributed to other programmes. John 'John o Skye' (18th/19th C.) originally from Skye, he was a labourer in southern Scotland. He was subject of an Archæological Society article by Alexander Michie in 1872, where he was said to be 'a tall, powerful, rolicking fellow, full of frolic'. In about 1806 he was working at the lime-works at Limekilnedge and would go to Stobs Woodfoot smiddy to have his tools repaired. At about that time he and 'Barney' Harkness had an illicit still in a deserted house between Kirkton and Adderstonelee; it was to be raided by the excisemen, assisted by 'Auld Dunnerum', whose 14-year-old daughter overheard the plan and ran off to warn them, so that they managed to hide everything in Birneyknowe Moss. He also narrowly escaped being discovered with a small key near Langburnshiels, when he saw the excisemen coming in the distance, hid his load in the ditch and nonchalantly walked past them. Becoming too well known as a smuggler, he left the Kirkton area and probably returned to Selkirk, where he worked as a labourer among other jobs. However, in about the mid-1810s he became a hedger and ditcher on the Abbotsford estate and would occasionally act as piper for Sir Walter Scott. One such occasion in 1818 is described by J.G. Lockhart in his biography of Scott. He also accompanied Scott on trips to Edinburgh and Galashiels, where he would enable the writer to make a dramatic entrance. On one such occasion in Galashiels, he recognised the same girl who had saved hime from the excisemen and danced with her in the street (probably this was Christian Gill, nee Cavers); she described meeting him once again as an old itinerant musician begging for money. He was said to be unreliable as an employee and he and Scott eventually fell out, after which he took to the road as a wandering piper. It is unclear whether he is the same or distinct from John (b.1776), resident of Selkirk, who married Agnes Philip and had children, baptised in Selkirk, including: John (b.1803), who moved to Hawick; Katherine (1809–91), who died at 8 Gladstone Stree; Thomas (b.1810); Margaret (b.1812); James (b.1815); and William Robert (1821–90), who emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A. This 'mason named Bruce' was said to have helped a servant of Sir Walter Scott escape from a mob at the election in Selkirk, leading him through the ballroom of the inn, out a back window and then through several gardens to the safety of the fields; if this was the same man as the former Abbotsford employee it is peculiar not to have stated that. John 'Nixon's John' (1803–59) from Selkirk. His father was said to have been a mason who helped Sir Walter Scott's servant escape from an angry mob at the election in Selkirk (possibly in 1830). However, there may be confusion here with John

'o Skye', or if they are the same then the accounts do not fully match. He worked for Nixon's mill and later for Wilson of Ladylaw. His mother is recorded dying in Hawick in 1840. He was living on Walter's Wynd in 1841 and on the High Street in 1851, with his wife Agnes and son William. He died at Ladylaw Place. Peter (19th C.) shepherd at Swinnie for about 30 years. He married Mary Whillans. His children included: Thomas, who emigrated to near Canterbury, New Zealand and called his house 'Inchbonny'; Joan, who married William Haig and died in Galashiels; Robert, who farmed at Fodderlee; Helen, who was housekeeper for Daniel Mather at Hallrule and married David Scott, mason and parish registrar; Peter, who was ploughman at Hallrule and then joint tenant at West Fodderlee with his brother Robert; and Mary, who married James Sinton. Robert see Robert, King of Scotland. Sir Robert (d.1332) illegitimate son of King Robert I, 'the Bruce'. In 1322 he was given the Lordship of Liddesdale (following the fall of William de Soulis) and probably held it until his death. He died at the Battle of Dupplin Moor. Robert (b.1843) son of Peter, he was born at Swinnie. At age 3 he was rescued from a well by his sister. He started working on the farm of Mr. Davidson at age 9. He worked as shepherd at other farms in the area, then in Northumberland and on the Cheviot. He became a tenant farmer in 1880 and went into business with John Wight of Jedburgh in 1883. He added several other sheep farms, including West Fodderlee in 1887, Dodburn in 1889 and Priesthaugh in 1901. In 1891 he married Joan, daughter of Robert Wood, and had 3 sons and 2 daughters. His wife was recorded as owner of West Fodderlee in the Land Tax Rolls of around the end of the 19th century. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who served for 8 years as a regular soldier during the Boer War. During his WWI service he kept a diary (against regulations), providing a valuable first-hand account of conditions at Flanders and elsewhere. He returned to Hawick as a postman. Wallace (1844–1914) born in New York State, he attended Yale University, practiced law, but decided to become a writer and poet. He married in 1870, the couple spending time in Europe, including Scotland, on their honeymoon. Afterwards he lectured on Scottish (and other) literature in America. He was the poet at the unveiling of the Burns statue (by Sir John Steele) in Central Park, New York in 1880. He was appointed U.S. Consul in Edinburgh in 1889, remaining in that position for 4 years. In 1893 he was a guest, along with Sir William Renny Watson, at the Common Riding, essentially inviting himself! During his visit a U.S. flag (although with only 20 stripes) flew on the High Street. He talked at the Colour Bussing (with Watson being unable to attend), as well as the Dinner. Also in 1893 he helped get the statue of Abraham Lincoln erected in Edinburgh, the only monument to the American Civil War outside the U.S. His poetry includes such pieces as 'The Ettrick Shepherd', 'To Mary Queen of Scots' and 'Scott's Greeting to Burns'; he also wrote 'The Auld Brig's Welcome' for the unveiling of the Burns statue in Ayr in 1891. William (b.c.1800) carrier on the Kirkstyle in 1841 (formerly 'Brois' and variants).

Brugh (bruf, bruch, browch) n. another name for Burgh Hill and surrounding area near Dodburn. The lands here were formerly a seat of a branch of the Elliots, who were once very well represented in and around Hawick. It was probably a 2-storey bastle house of the 16th century, the ruins of which were used to built dykes in the 1760s when the farm was joined with Priesthaugh; in 1809 Robert Scott of Skelfhill remembered it as 'a muckle ha' house'. It was said to have been on the south shoulder of Burgh Hill (as confirmed in the survey map of 1718), although there is nothing now to suggest that a house was located there. The land was leased by Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 for 19 years, along with other lands, except for the 'chaplainry of St. Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm' (possibly the old chapel at Northhouse). The King's shepherd there, George Henderson was recorded being paid in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540. 'Young Robert Scot of Alanehauch' paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey in 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. It is recorded as tenanted by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1560 and was owned by Gavin Elliot in 1595. In 1597 it was described as part of Ringwoodfield. It became part of the Buccleuch estates in 1632 and was described as part of the extensive lands of Ringwoodfield in 1634, 1653, 1660 and 1661 and still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1663 and 1693. James Glendinning was tenant there in 1684 when he was declared a fugitive for attending field conventicles. 'Margrat Scott in Brugh' was listed as resident of Doecleuch on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. The Elliots of Brugh could not have lived here for very long, but the title 'of Brugh' continued to be used long after. The farm was surveyed in 1718 and a plan exists. At that time it consisted of 375 acres and was bounded by Dodburn, Peelbrae, Skelfhill, Doecleuch and Stobicote. John Nichol was living there in 1733. Masons Walter and James Elliot were recorded at 'Brough Shankfoot' in 1799 (also referred to as 'the Brugh'; it is 'the Burghe' in 1500, 'lie Burgh' in 1540, 'The Burgh' in 1557, 'Brughe'in 1621, 'Burghe' in 1623, 'Burgh' in 1693, 'Browgh' about 1705, 'Brough' in 1710, 'Bruough' in 1718 and 'Burgh' in 1733; it is still 'Brughhill' in 1875; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map on the east side of the Allan, north of Skelfhill and on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Burgh' on the opposite side of the Dod Burn from the farm of Dodburn; the origin of the name is obscure, but may be connected with Old English 'burh' meaning a fortification).

Brumingam Jack (bru-ming-gum-jawk) n. nickname for a tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century, said to be 'the most notorious of the fraternity'. He would go around cleaning clocks for people, sometimes taking it apart and not porceeding until a bottle was produced. He would also help with agricultural jobs and he was a great story-teller. One popular story was of how he was asleep in a cemetery and scared off some body-snatchers, who left behind their horse and cart, which he was then able to sell.

Brumrig (brum-rig) n. Thomas (16th C.) listed as a cook in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not be was local. His surname may be a variant of Brownrig.

brumstane (brum-stān) n., arch. brimstone – '...wi a guff a wat strae and neeps and a glisk o brumstane ...' [DH] (cf. brunstane).

brumstany (brum-stā-nee) adj., poet. relating to brimstone – '...He kenned he wad burn like a brumstany match, And lang the red pit had been gapin'' [JTe].

Brunemore (broon-mōr) n. recorded as 'super Dod', i.e. on the Dod Burn, when it was used as part of the description of the boundaries of Ringwood in the 1160s. The precise location, or identification with any other place is unknown. However, a connection with the lands of Brugh seems not unreasonable (the origin could be the personal name 'Brun' or 'brown', plus 'moor').

brung (brung) pp. brought – 'did 'ei bring eet? aye, 'ei brung eet', '...the King hes brung me intil his chammers' [HSR], '...let thame be turnet bak an' brung til confuusion that devæise my skaith' [HSR], '...to which you have all 'brung hame like laden bees' the honey of your research' [HAST1861], 'Expected mei tae herken tae tidin's hei hed brung ...' [MB] (less common than browt and the olderi brocht and broucht; brang is also used as the past tense).

brunstane (brun-stān) n., arch. brimstone – 'And the brunstane leme came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail' [JTe], 'Oh, had I Hitler by the neck, My vengeance on his life I'd wreck. I'd burn him in a brunstane seck, For he has murdered Johnnie' [WP] (also brumstane).

brunt (brun', brunt) adj., pp., arch. burned, burnt – '...and said measures ordained to be sequestrate till 29th of May and then taken to the cross and brunt altogidder' [BR1676], '...whipped and scourged thorough the haill toune, and brunt in the cheik wt. the letter 'H'' [BR1697], 'Given to a Stranger that had all brunt ...0 12 0' [PR], '...but the reason was, the lads couldna get away, an' Katie had a brunt fit, an' Alice was bedfast wi' the cauld' [JTe], '...brunt-offerin' an' sin-offerin' thou hestna requæiret' [HSR], 'As therfor the tares ar' getheret an' brunt in the fire, sae sall it be in the en' o' the warld' [HSR], 'The lights brunt blue – up banged the door, The chairs did dance athort the floor' [RDW], '...And brunt broon in the lang droot Are the neep shaws' [WL].

brunt (brun') n., poet. an attack, a shock – 'Poor Johny's heart began to dunt, He though the ghaist incivil, But love can stand a desp'rate brunt, And whiles outbraves the devil' [JR].

Brunt Burn (brun'-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Ralton Burn in Liddesdale. It rises near North Birny Fell and flows roughly south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Bruntfield (brun'-feeld) n. William (d.bef. 1693) surgeon in Hawick. His widow Elizabeth Burn is listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. She is recorded as 'widow of Wm. Burnfield, chirurgeon'. William (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for James 'Badie' in 1701, another for merchant Walter Weens in 1704 and one more for glover James Scott in 1705. He married Jean Hart in Hawick in 1711. Their children included: Elspeth (b.1712); John (b.1714); Andrew (b.1716); William (b.1718); an unnamed child (b.1719); and Elizabeth (b.1721). The witnesses in 1714 were Bailies James Scott and James Burn (also written 'Burntfield').

Brunton (brun'-in) n. Mr. ?? Hawick man who became Mayor of Beaconsfield, South Africa. He returned to Hawick for the 1891 Common Riding. Rev. David (1842–1936) born at Kinfauns, Perth, son of David and Janet Dewar. He was educated at Ruthwell Free Church School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by the Free Church Presbytery of Dumfries in 1871, became assistant at Cambusnethan and Dundee St. Paul's. He was ordained at Lochend and New Abbey in 1872, moved to Wishaw in 1874, resigned in 1894, moved to Hurlford Mauchline Road in 1907 and then Lethendy in 1910. In 1912 he became minister at Roberton Free Kirk ('the Snoot Kirk') and remained until 1925. He was known as a preacher of the old school and was the last regular minister there. Gideon (b.c.1780) labourer at Berryfell in Cavers Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was described as 'somewhat lame'. James (b.c.1815) born at Whitlee, he was farmer at North Berryfell. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 340 acres. His wife was Mary, and their children included: John; Margaret; Mary; and Betsey. John (1751/2–1833) mason who died in Jedburgh. He married Elizabeth Robison, who died in 1836, aged 82. Their children included: Thomas, who died young; William, who died aged 17; and Charles, who died aged 25. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John (1770/1–1856) farmer at North Berryfell. He married Margaret Wilson, who died in 1855, aged 81. They married in Gordon Parish. Their son Thomas, joiner in Hawick, was born in 1804. John (19th C.) mason at Doveshaugh Cottage in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. John (19th C.) mason in Hawick in the mid-1800s. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (1752/3–1810) mason in Lanton. He married Isabel Rutherford, who died in Edinburgh in 1825, aged 72. He is buried in Bedrule along with mason William, who was probably his son. Thomas Maclay (b.1804–77) son of John and Margaret Wilson, he was born in Stichill Parish. He was a joiner in Hawick, listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and on the Round Close in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 8 High Street, was on the Round Close in 1851, employing 15 men and 5 apprentices, and was at the foot of the Round Close in 1861, employing 16 men and 6 boys. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included: John (1833–1909), who married Helen Gray; Margaret (1837–77), who married David Pirnie; Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1842); Helen (b.1846); and James (b.1852). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Lanton Mill. Two of his children are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, one aged 19 in 1736 and another 2 years later. William (18th C.) from Peebles, in 1787 he married Katherine Russell in Hawick. His name is given as 'Mr.' and his wife as 'Mrs.' (suggesting she was previously married). William (1777/8–1853) probably son of Thomas, he was a mason, who died at 'Bonneyrigg'. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William 'Billy' (1945/6–) known for his long association with Hawick Legion and also as a darts player. When the Legion moved their base from the Park to Burnfoot in 2019 they named their new ground 'Brunton Park' in his honour. He ran the No. 10 Bar for a while and later Thorterdykes Roadhouse.

brussen (bru-sin) pp., arch. burst – '... Tho' they shou'd a brusten and broken their hearts Frae that tryst Noble he would not be Fala, &c.' [CPM] (also written 'brusten').

Bryce (brīs) n. Robert (b.1814/5) originally from Lanark, he was Hawick's single post official in the mid-19th century and also worked on stocking frames. In 1841 he was a stocking weaver living on the High Street, in 1851 was a 'Woolen Frame Work Knitter' on Tannage Close and in 1861 he was 'Letter Carrier No 1' living as a lodger at 1 Melgund Place. He donated 2 coinds to the Museum in 1858. He appears to have remained unmarried.

Brydon (brī-din) n. Adam (d.c.1687) tenant in Dodburn. His will is recorded in 1687. Adam 'Aedie o Aberlosk' (1766–1841) son of William, tenant farmer at Aberlosk in Eskdalemuir. He made significant improvements to the farm and later became joint tenant of Locherben farm (in Closeburn Parish) with James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He is described in 'The Shepherd's Calendar' in Hogg's 'Winter Evening Tales'. He had a reputation as a hard drinker. He is also infamous for writing to King George IV to complain that he had walked 30 miles to pay his taxes, but had been unable to get the official to take the money, and hence he was enclosing the sum of £27; he requested that the receipt be sent care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick, suggesting some location connection, and he ended with 'P.S. This way of taxing farmers will never do'. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1799. Their children were William, Janet, Adam, Elizabeth, Margaret, David, James and Robert. Adam (b.1814/5) shepherd at Haughhead just outside Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Muirfield and moved to Haughhead before 1851. His wife was Janet or Jessie and their children included Margaret, Euphemia, Jessie, Mary and James. His children were also born in Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf parishes. Agnes (17th/18th C.) recorded in about the 1720s when the Hawick Kirk Session paid Helen Sanderson for waiting on her for 11 weeks. Presumably she was either seriously ill or had a difficult pregnancy. Agnes (18th C.) lady's maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Alan Gilbert (1961–) born in Hawick, he has worked in the textile industry, and written several technical articles and a book on card clothing. He trained at the Scottish College of Textiles and was later visiting professor at Leeds University. Known locally as a musician and singer, he wrote the words and music for the popular song 'The Bonnie Banner Blue' in 2005, and has written many others, including 'Old Jock', 'A Man O' Mony Pairts', 'Return From Hornshole', 'One Call of a King' and 'Where Teviot Tummles Doon'. He published a novel 'The Keeper of Teviotdale' in 2006, and co-wrote 'Walking in the Land of the Reivers' (2011) with Ian Landles. He was a member of the band 'Scocha' for several years, writing many songs, and playing a wide variety of instruments on their recordings. He also co-wrote the musical play 'A Reiver's Moon' with Ian Landles in 2007. Alexander (b.c.1775) listed as a weaver in Newcastleton on the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He is distinguished from the 'Junior Weaver' who was also on the ballot list. He was living at about 21 South Hermitage Street in 1841. He married Betty Jackson and their children included: William (b.1799); James (b.1802); John (b.1805); Alexander (b.1810); and Adam (b.1814). Alexander (1775/6–1856) weaver in Newcastleton. He was probably the Alexander recorded as 'Junior Weaver' in Newcastleton on the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801; he was thus distinct from the slightly older Alexander. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at about 39 South Hermitage Street and was recorded receiving parish relief in 1851 and 1855. He married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1866, aged 82. Their children included: Mary (1810/1–61); Margaret (1818/9–1900); William (1822/3–41); and Helen (1828/9–99). They are buried in Ettleton. Andrew (16th C.) recorded being 'of Woll' in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He may have been associated with 'Well' in Selkirk rather than Woll. David 'of the Well' is also recorded in 1580. Gavin (17th/18th C.) married a Halliday in Roberton Parish in 1712. George (18th C.) tenant in Hermiston, recorded in a court case in Selkirk in 1762. George (18th C.) married Janet Hume in Roberton Parish in 1784. George (b.c.1780) gardener at Hassendeanburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. George (b.c.1810) joiner at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Eliza and James. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. James (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk, married to Janet Turnbull. In 1533 he assigned a tenement in Selkirk to his wife and also to his som James. He could be the late James 'of the well' whose son Richard is recorded in 1542. James (17th C.) merchant Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in a sasine of 1671, along with his unnamed spouse, resigning a tenement in Hawick. This may be the same tenement that passed to Robert Oliver in 1713. Perhaps the same James is recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be the James recorded in 1683 when clothing belonging to him, beaing bleached at the side of the Teviot, was ruined by a group of men throwing stones; they were fined £100 Scots for the damages. He is probably the merchant James whose widow Agnes Riddell is recorded in 1693/4 on the subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Hardie and Robert Cowan and in 1683 were Bailie James Deans and John Riddell (perhaps related to his wife). He is probably the deceased James, 'sometimes merchant in Hawick' recorded in 1708 when his daughter Margaret had an illegitimate son John baptized. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhaugh in 1725 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1755. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1765. He married Mary Park in Roberton in 1764. His children included William (b.1765), Walter (b.1768) and Janet (b.1770). He could be the James recorded at Redfordgreen in 1791 in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason collection. James (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1755. James (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1765 when he witnessed baptisms for Adam Leyden and for John Kedie. James (b.c.1770s) tailor at Scawmill. He was recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. In 1801 he was still listed as a tailor at 'Scawmill burn', but labelled 'Hawick Vol', suggesting that he was excepted from service because of already being in the volunteers. Perhaps the same James married Bell Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1796. James (1816–83) son of Alexander (1777–1856) and Elizabeth Scott (1784–1866), he was born in Castleton Parish. He was listed as a weaver in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–37. In 1838–41 he was at Brox. He was also Church Officer in Castleton. He moved to Wilton Dean before the time of the 1841 census. In the 1851 census he is recorded at Dean Fore Row No. 6 and was on Dean Road in 1861. He married Esther Laidlaw (b.1821) in Hawick and their children included: Alexander (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); Elizabeth (b.1843); William (b.1847); John (b.1850); Mary (b.1853), who married Peter Scott, founder of Pesco's; and James (b.1855). James (b.1816/7) tailor in Ashkirk Parish. He was living at Dryden in 1843. In 1851 he was living at Haughhead Cottage, and employing 3 people. His wife was Agnes Riddell and their children included: William; Walter (b.1841); Isabella (b.1843), baptised at Wester Essenside by Rev. George Lawson of Selkirk; Helen (b.1846); Agnes (b.1848); James (b.1850); and Francis (b.1853). The witnesses in 1843 were John Douglas, tenant in Easter Essenside and Thomas Anderson, tenant in Burnfoot. James (19th C.) married Esther Beattie in Wilton Parish in 1839. James (1824/5–90) Hawick grocer. Originally from Ashkirk, he trained as a grocer with John Stenhouse on the High Street, and then worked for John Goodfellow on Buccleuch Street, as well as in Dalkeith. He set up his own business at the Station Buildings, which was a successful grocer's for about 40 years. He was a keen abstainer and churchman. He also farmed at Dimpleknowe and Satchells. He married twice, secondly to a daughter of John Murray from Hobkirk Parish. He is buried at Ashkirk. His shop can be seen in a photograph taken around the 1880s. Dr. James (1834–1905) born in Hownam Parish, son of William and Anne Dalgleish. He grew up at Whitslade and went to Roberton School, then St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities. He spent 2 years as demonstrator at Surgeon's Hall and resident at the Royal Infirmary. He came to Hawick as a doctor in 1858. His practice was based at 4 Sandbed. He was a member of the first School Board (where he was almost a lone voice supporting science education), President of the Archæological Society and published poetry anonymously in the local press. He was also police surgeon. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a 'Chinese skull . . . found among the ruins of a village sacked by the Taepings' (presumably the Taiping Rebellion). In 1869 he published an account of his excavation of the group of cists discovered at Teindside, as well as the 'Examination of a Sepulchral Cairn at Shaws, Selkirkshire' and in 1873 he published a description of archæological remains around Hawick for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. In 1871 he gave a paper on querns, motivated by recent finds at Commonside and Boonraw, and in 1872 described 'A Newspaper Seventy Years Ago'. In 1874 he donated to the Museum a 'photograph – Napoleon I., after death' and in 1875 a silver coin . In 1877 he gave a paper on 'The Shearers and the Rings' of Hownam. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell and edited 'The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell' (1871), also writing a memoir as the preface and speaking at the centenary celebration in Hawick. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. His house was at 2 Slitrig Crescent. He was known for always giving a shilling to tramps who would sing 'Scotland Yet'. He married Mary Middleton (b.1840), who was English. Their children were: William (b.1860), who also became a doctor; Annie (1863–1932), who died in Hawick; an unnamed child (b.1865); James (1866), who died in infancy; Mary Middleton (1868–1910), married Dr. David Murray, who became his partner about 1901; Janet Robina (1871–1936), who died in Hawick; James (1875–80); and Walter (c.1882–1962), who was a tweed merchant and married Daisy Blenkhorn. He is seen in his 'gig' on the High Street in a photo taken shortly before his death. His wife could be the 'Mrs Brydon' who in 1860 donated to the Museum 'two flint arrowheads, and two stone knives used by the Indians for skinning deer'. James (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer's shop at No. 8 High Street around the 1950s. John (16th C.) notary in Selkirk. He was also referred to as 'chaplain of Glasgow'. His 'protocol' book along with Ninian (his brother) covers the period 1526–36 and a separate book of his covers 1530–37. He probably had a tenement of land within Selkirk. A document of 1527/8 refers to both John 'younger' and John 'elder', these probably including the burgess and bailie recorded at different times, and distinct from the notary and priest. In 1530 he was 'chaplain in Fairnele' (i.e. Fairnilee). He is probably the John, son of the deceased Thomas and brother of Ninian, recorded in 1531/2. William was Vicar of Selkirk at the same time and may have been related. In 1535 he and his wife were appointed executurors for the will of John Turnbull, Vicar at Benedochy; this suggests that his wife may have been Turnbull's sister. John (16th C.) local notary. He was notary for documents of the Scotts of Harden in 1553 and 1576 (although this date may be an error). He was 'Schir Johne Bryden, notar publict' in 1568/9 when he witnessed the bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. He may be the same man (or close relative of) the John 'Brydin' who was a notary in the 'Selkirk Protocol Books' in the period 1530–37. John (18th C.) recorded as tenant in Langhope in 1784 when he accused someone in Selkirk of non-payment of a bill. John (19th C.) married Mary Scoon in Hawick Parish in 1845. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of James, merchant in Hawick. In 1708 her illegitimate son John was baptised, who she had conceived with William, son of John Scott 'Cloaks', on common-Riding night in 1707. Robert Scott, 'Wyndhead' gave evidence that the couple 'were togither a considerable time alone in her Mothers Stable'. William Scott fled the country and since she was 'furious and not compos mentis', then the Kirk Elders 'made faith for ye child's education'. The witnesses in 1708 included David Miller and James Gray in Whitchesters. Ninian (15th/16th C.) notary in Selkirk. Along with John (who was probably his brother) he kept a 'protocol' book for the years 1526–36, which included many documents of relavance to the families of the Hawick area. For example, he was notary in an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill (with procurator John Scott, Vicar of Hawick) in 1530, a witness to the document where Robert Scott of Howpasley sold his lands of Birkenside to Andrew Ker if Primside in 1532 and served as notary in 1536 for a transaction between Walter Scott of Roberton and Michael Scott of Aikwood. In 1534 he was procurator for his kinsman John Brydon. In 1536/7 he was recorded owning some rigs of land in Selkirk; his nephew John is also mentioned. Probably the same Ninian was also notary in his protocol book for 1536–64. He may be the Ninian who was brother of John and uncle of John's son John, according to a Selkirk record of 1562. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their child Christian was baptised in 1646. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Todshawhill. His son William was born in 1748 and daughter Helen in 1751. Robert (c.1810–76) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was described as a labourer in Hawick Parish in 1835. He was an agricultural labourer at Harwood (probably Harwooddsykefoot) in 1841. He became steward at Highchesters farm, being recorded there in 1851, 1861 and 1868. In Wilton in 1835, he firstly married Isabella, daughter of Robert Scoon, farmer at Todshawhill. He secondly married Jane McMorran who died at Union Street in 1871, aged 40. His children included: Margaret (b.1835), baptised in Hawick; and Walter (b.1838), baptised in Wilton, who died aged 20. He died at New Woll, Ashkirk. There is a gravestone for his family in Borthwick Waas. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Beattie in Roberton in 1851. Robert (1827–1904) son of William, farmer at Whitslade. He was shepherd at Whitehillshiel in Kirkhope Parish. He married Margaret Beattie in Roberton in 1851 and their children included William (b.1852). In 1869 he assisted with the excavation of the burial cist found on Shaws farm. Robert (1938/9–2018) 'Rob' son of Bill, he was Cornet in 1964 and Captain for Hawick R.F.C. As a rugby player he was a member of the 'Magnificant Seven' who wont 10 consecutive Sevens tournaments in 1966/7. He served for 2 years with the K.O.S.B. and worked for the family joinery business on Drumlanrig Square. He was Jubliee Cornet in the Quincentenary year, 2014. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Braiden merchant in Hawick' on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitive for religious non-conformity. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Mary Park as owner of 2 horses at Hoscoteshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Rawflat recorded in the 1799 Lieutenancy Book. Thomas (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Meadshaw, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. Thomas (b.1788/9) born in Ashkirk, he was a mason at Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Agnes, James, Mary, Janet, Elizabeth, Jane and Thomas. By 1861 his widow and several children were living on Havelock Street. Thomas L. (19th/20th C.) baker of 16 High Street. He had taken over the business that was originally his uncle's, George Paterson, at 53 (or 55) High Street. His daughter Maisie married Charles Oliver of Bucklands. Walter (15th/16th C.) Town Clerk of Selkirk, who some suggest was the only survivor of Selkirk's 80 volunteers who went to Flodden. This story is somewhat contradictory to the 'Fletcher' version. However, it is certainly the case that there were prominent Brydons in Selkirk at that time. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as herd at Merrylaw in 1764. His children included Betty (b.1764), Isabel (b.1764). Walter (b.c.1770) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he was at Stirches. He was then shepherd at Midshiels in 1840 and on the 1841 census was at Littledean. His wife was Helen Grieve, and their children included Walter and Margaret. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter and Helen Grieve, he was shepherd at Burnfoot. He is recorded there among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was living at Burnfoot Mill and in a similar location in 1851. He married Elizabeth Pringle, who was from Southdean. Their children included: Isabella (b.1840); Helen (b.1842); and Walter (b.c.1846). Walter (1882–1962) son of Dr. James, he became a tweed merchant with Innes, Chambers & Co., becoming for a while director of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. He married Daisy Eva Farrar Blenkhorn in 1910, divorced her in 1922 and remarried Mary Hamilton. He became a farmer and photographer, becoming a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He lived at Ladylands, Selkirk and is buried in the Wellogate. He may be the Walter who wrote a piece of Hawick-set fiction for the Border Magazine in 1904. William (15th/16th C.) notary to a charter of 1510/11 by David Scott of Hassendean. He is recorded there as 'William Bryding'. Perhaps the same 'Sir William', presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow was a notary in 1508 for an instrument of sasine for lands granted to Sir William Cranston, with the superior being Sir John Stewart of Minto; this has been discussed as possible evidence of the existence of the Selkirk man (said to be Town Clerk of Selkirk) who was the only man from Selkirk who returned from Flodden. It seems unlikely he was the same man as the notary of 45 years later, but may well have been related to him. He may be the Vicar of Selkirk who is recorded in 1528 as a witness to an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and James Murray of Falahill and witnessed other documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–36. This included, for example, the marriage contract between John Scott in Hawick (for his daughter Janet) and Thomas Johnstone, son of a Selkirk Burgess. The Vicar of Selkirk was recorded in 1534 as brother of Robert and uncle to another William. William (15th/16th C.) Vicar of Auld Roxburgh. George Ker, Rector there, renounced the perpetual vicarage of Auld Roxburgh to him in 1520. In 1530 he was sold the lands of Philhope by Christian Inglis, with the consent of her husband Thomas Inglis. He was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in the period 1527–34; it is unclear whether or not he was the same man as the Vicar of Selkirk. In 1540 he resigned the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas Ker, with witnesses including Gilbert Ker of Primside, George Ker of Linton, Thomas Ker in Sunderlandhall and Andrew Ker in Auld Roxburgh. At the same time the Kers agreed to pay a yearly sum to William, Vicar of Selkirk, perhaps confirming that the Vicars of Selkirk and of Auld Roxburgh were the same man. William (16th C.) notary in 1556 for a document relating to the land of Nether Harden passing from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He was probably a local man, given the names of the witnesses. He may be the William whose son and heir Robert is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book in 1561, and who was deceased in 1576 when Robert was served as his heir. William (16th C.) probably related to the earlier William. He was notary for a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. Part of his protocol book from the late 1580s is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. William (18th C.) resident at Craik. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1762), Marion (b.1764), Thomas (b.1767), Walter (b.1769) and Adam (b.1771). He may be the William who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. William (1740/1–1818) weaver in Newcastleton. His children included Janet (1774/5–1804). They are buried at Ettleton. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included William (b.1761), Jean (b.1763), Janet (b.1768) and Mally (b.1773). William (1798–1873) born in Yarrow Parish, son of Robert and Helen Hall. He was farmer at Whitslade in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was a labourer at Ramseycleuch in Ettrick Parish. In 1851 he was farmer at Whitslade of 24 arable acres and 1200 acres of pasture, employing one farm servant. In 1861 he was farmer of 1200 acres, employing 3 labourers. He was there at the Ordnance Survey of 1858 and still there in 1872. He married Anne Dalgeligh (from Ewes) and their children were: Robert (1827–1904), shepherd at Whitehillshiel; Janet (1829–71); Walter Dalgleish (1831–1904), who died at Winningtonrig; Dr. James (1834–1905), who died in Hawick; Helen Hall (1836–1923), who married William Middlemas and moved to England; John (1839–1919), who died in Roberton; an unnamed child (b.1841); Anne Dalglesih (1844–1931), who died in Ashkirk; William (1846–1918); and Marion (1851–1930). His wife donated geological specimens to the Museum in 1861. William (19th/20th C.) Hawick Doctor. He gave an address at the 1891 Colour Bussing. William 'Bill' (20th C.) Cornet in 1935 who was Left-Hand Man twice, repeating his duties in the first post-war Common Riding of 1946. He worked for the family business of joiners and undertakers and was also nicknamed 'Bunny'. He married his Lass, Jean Butler and their son Rob was Cornet in 1964 (formerly spelled 'Bridon', 'Bridone', 'Bryden', 'Brydene', 'Bryding', 'Brydone', etc.).

Brydon's (brī-dinz) n. James Brydon & Sons, grocer's shop at 8 High Street, established in 1852 and in existence into the mid-20th century. James Brydon also had a grocer's shop at Station Buildings for over 40 years. The name was later used for the joiners, furniture removers and undertakers business at 12 Drumlanrig Square.

Bryson (brI-sin, brī-sin) n. Alexander 'Sandy' (18th/19th C.) one of the Halberdiers in the early 19th century, overlapping with Caleb Rutherford and 'Tufty' Wilson. There are 2 letters to him in 1815 as 'Officer, Hawick', preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He accompanied Rutherford and Wilson in 1824, for the last 'drumming out of town' to take place in Hawick. He may be the 'A. Bryson, constable' recorded being paid by the Town Treasurer in 1794 for 'pressing baggage-carts for soldiers'. He is probably the Alexander whose mother-in-law Margaret Govenlock died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the Alexander who married Agnes Rutherford in 1779. Helen 'Nelly' (17th C.) sister of William. In 1684 she was fined for assaulting Thomas Bennet. John (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick. In 1755 he was paid for '11 thrave for thatching the schoolhouse'. He may be the John, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1712. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Murray and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Agnes (b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and John (b.1760). The witnesses in 1741 were merchants Andrew Scott and William Oliver, junior. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. Walter (17th/18th C.) carrier and merchant in Hawick. He is probably the Walter born to William and Agnes Smith in Hawick in 1680. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1709 and 'tenent in Hawick' in 1717. He was listed as a merchant in 1720 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Scott and Janet Bryson (probably related to him, perhaps his sister or half-sister) in Hawick. He was recorded as a carrier in 1725, asking the Session for relief to help 'to pay the quarter wage for one of his twins latelie brought forth'. He married Janet Wilson in 1708, and their children included: William (b.1709); Agnes (b.1711); John (b.1712); William (b.1715); Abraham (b.1717); Walter (b.1719); James (b.1721); Thomas (b.1723); and twins Walter (again) and Helen (b.1725). The witnesses in 1709 were weavers John Richardson and Andrew Jardine, in 1712 were gardener James Falsyde and flesher Robert Deans, in 1717 were innkeeper Abraham Watson (who the child may have been named after) and wheelwright Adam Thorbrand, in 1721 were merchants Francis and Robert Scott and in 1725 were candlemaker John Scott and wright Adam Thorbrand. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Smith and their children included Walter (b.1680). The baptismal witnesses were John Tinlin and Robert Scott. Perhaps the same William later married Janet Scott and had at least 2 further children. William (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when his sister Nelly was fined for assaulting weaver Thomas Bennet. William (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. He is probably the William, married to Janet Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included Janet (b.1686) and William (b.1689). Helen (b.1692) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1689 were Patrick Bridges and Michael Turnbull. His daughter Janet may be the wife of James Scott, who was son of John Scott 'Laird', with children baptised in 1712–24.

Brythonic (bri-tho-neek) n. a group of Celtic languages, including Welsh, Breton and Cornish, and also referred to as 'p-Celtic', to distinguish it from the 'q-Celtic' or Goidelic group, which includes Irish Gaelic, Scots Gaelic and Manx. The ancient Northumbrian language once spoken throughout the Borders was part of this subdivision, and bore great similarity with modern Welsh. Some remnants in local place names probably include Caerlenrig, Minto, Penchrise and several other hills and rivers.

the B6357 (thu-bee-siks-thrī-fIv-see-vin) n. road from Jedburgh to Annan, passing through Bonchester, the Note o the Gate, Newcastleton and Canonbie. It is one of Britain's longest B roads.

the B6399 (thu-bee-siks-thrī-nīn-nīn) n. road beginning as Liddesdale Road, continuing along the Slitrig valley towards Newcastleton, ending at the junction with the B6357 at Sandholm. Since the re-routing of the A7, the start of the road is officially the roundabout at Mart Street, continuing along Bourtree Place and including the High Street. The road was designated in the 1920s.

the B6405 (thu-bee-siks-fow-ur-zee-rō-fIv) n. road running from Denholm to Hassendean.

the B711 (thu-bee-see-vin-yin-yin) n. beginning at 'Mertin's Brig', it is the road leading to Roberton and the Borthwick valley, which continues via Greenbank Toll to reach the upper Ettrick valley at Tushielaw Inn. It was constructed in 1826 with the toll-house at Greenbank also dating from that time.

bubbly (bub-lee) adj., arch. having a snotty nose – 'A bubbly nose an' dirty face, This youth o' Liddesdale did grace' [RDW], snivelling, blubbering – 'Some bubblie bumle, wi' a brainless head, In shape o' man, but void o' manly merit' [JoHa].

bubbly-jock (bu-bu-lee-jok) n. a turkey, particularly when served for dinner on special occasions such as Christmas or New Year – 'He asked me if I had ever seen a turkey mesmerised . . . upon which he made a dive at a promising young 'bubbly jock' . . . ' [RB], 'Birsselt an scowdert, leike a bubbly-jock duine weel in ov an oven' [ECS].

Buccleuch (bu-kloo, ba-kloo) n. hamlet on the B711, about 15 miles west of Hawick, being the original seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and now split into the farms of West and East Buccleuch, on opposite sides of Rankle Burn. The 'Buck Cleuch' lies on the Clear Burn, just to the east. The traditional origin of the name (first written down by Capt. Walter Scott) involves an early ancestor seizing a buck with his bare hands while hunting with the King; although there may be a germ of truth in this account, it is unfortunately too similar to other fanciful stories from separate families to be taken at face value. The original 'castle' (more likely a fortified house) was close to East Buccleuch, the foundations being uncovered when the modern farmhouse was built in the early 19th century. Sometime around 1490 (shortly before the death of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch) the manor house there was ruined by Simon Routledge and his son Matthew (who appear to have been tenants at the Trows), when they stole a large amount of livestock and food. It seems the house was never rebuilt, and the family seat of the Scotts moved to Branxholme. However, the name survived in the main title of the Scott family, and they continued to own the lands there. Andrew Dickson was recorded there in 1494/5. In 1502 the Laird of Buccleuch presented John 'holyne' as suitor for his lands here. In 1517 the lands were described as being in 'waste', but valued at £20 in times of peace. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540, there is a record of payment for 20 bolls of grain from 4 pastures in Buccleuch. The tenant farmers in 1574 were Simon and William Nichol. In 1653, along with Rankilburne, the farm was recorded with a value of £20. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In about the 1680s 3 or 4 brothers by the name of Nichol were turned out of their farms here, accused of being Covenanters; additionally James Grieve, tenant farmer was fined 12,000 merks and forced off the farm, although he returned after the Revolution. 'Wester and Easter Buccleuchs' are listed among houses in Selkirkshire in c.1680. In 1694 the farms of 'Easter and Wester Buckcleuchs' are listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with 10 hearths between them. The 2 farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, bounded by Bellendean, Henwoodie, Whitslade, Craik, Wolfcleuchhead, Langshawburn, Dalgleish, Broadmeadows, lands held by Scott of Harden, Annelshope and Deloraine. (the origin is probably English for 'an opening in a height', but could be 'buck's ravine' too, if one insists on romance; it was once spelled interchangeably as 'Buccleugh'; it is 'Buccluche' and 'Bukcluch' in 1431, 1446 and 1449, 'the Buccluche' in 1436, 'Bukcluche' in 1443, 'Bukclouch' in 1448, 'Bukcluch' and 'Bukcluth' in 1470, 'Bukclucht' in 1475/6, 'Bukcleuch' in 1488, 'Bukclewcht' in 1491/2, 'Buckcluche' and 'Bukcleuiche' in 1494/5, 'Bukcleuch' in 1504, 'Bukclewch' in 1515/6, 'Bucclucht' in 1517, 'Bukcluche' in 1519, 'Bukcleuche' in 1525, 'Balcleuch' in 1530, 'Bukclewch' in 1540, 'Bukclewth' in 1543, 'Bucclucht' in 1553/4, 'Bukclewch' in 1564 and 1569, 'Bukcleucht' in 1564/5, 'Bukcleuch' and 'Buckleuch' in 1574, 'Bukclewch' in 1576, 'Bukcleuche' in 1577, 'Bukcleucht' in 1579, 'Bukcleuch' in 1587, 'Bakeleuch' in 1597, 'Baclughc' in 1597 in a letter by the Laird himself, 'Balcleuch' in 1599, 'Bugcleugh' in 1611, 'Balcleuch' in 1618, 'Bacleugh' in 1627, 'Bugcleuche' in 1628, 'Buckleuch' and 'Buccleughe' in 1634, 'Buckcleughe' and 'Balcleugh' in 1648, 'Buckleugh' in 1649, 'Bacleugh' in 1659, 'Buccleuche' in 1661 and 'Buclugh' in 1705; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Buckcleuch', is 'Buckcleugh' on Adair's c.1688 map, while 'Waster Buccleugh' and 'Easter Buccleugh' are marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Buccleuch (bu-kloo, ba-kloo) n. name used to refer to the Chief of the Scotts, i.e. Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. The exact title of the head was Laird, Lord, Earl and finally Duke – '. . . And how full many a tale he knew Of the old warriors of Buccleuch' [SWS] (see the Duke o Buccleuch).

the Buccleuch Airms (thu-bu-kloo-ārmz) n. former Newcastleton inn, located at 47/48 North Hermitage Street. It existed from at least the 1830s to the 1860s. Thomas Pott was inn-keeper there in 1837 and James Telfer (or Telford) in 1852.

Buccleuch Boolin Club (bu-kloo-boo-lin-klub, bō-lin-klub) n. lawn bowling organisation, formed in 1872 to encourage the game among the working men. Its greens and clubrooms lie immediately west of those of the Hawick Bowling Club. The Clubhouse was built around 1891 to designs of J.P. Alison.

Buccleuch Burn (bu-kloo-boo-burn) n. another name for the Clear Burn, joining the Rankle Burn at Buccleuch just after the 'Buck Cleugh' itself. Until recently it was possible to trace an old mill lade from the burn.

Buccleuch Estates (bu-kloo-e-stāts) n. corporate organisation which manages the estates of the Buccleuch family. Buccleuch Estates Limited is part of the Buccleuch Group, Chaired by the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, with the Earl of Dalkeith as Managing Director. The modern estates are split into the Boughton, Bowhill (including Branxholme), Dalkeith, Langholm (including parts of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale) and Queensberry parts.

Buccleuch Grammar Schuil (bu-kloo-graw-mur-skil) n. name used for Hawick High School after it moved to Buccleuch Street (about 1860), having previously been called the Grammar School. The name was changed to Buccleuch Higher Grade School in 1908 and Hawick High School in 1915.

the Buccleuch Handicap (thu-bu-kloo-hawn-dee-kap) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least the 1880s. Its length was 1½ miles.

Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil (bu-kloo-hI-ur-grād-skil) n. name adopted by the secondary part of the Buccleuch School following major rebuilding 1906–08. It would be renamed 'Hawick High School' in 1915.

Buccleuch Hoose (bu-kloo-hoos) n. building in Newcastleton, constructed in 1856 as part of the Duke of Buccleuch's planned town, for use as a library and community space. It was bought by the Unionist Club in the 1920s. It was later run as a social club and learnig centre, then fell into disrepair. It was acquired by the Newcastleton Distict and Community Trust in 2016, with plans for conversion into a digital hub and tourist bunkhouse.

the Buccleuch Hotel (thu-bu-kloo-hō-tel) n. hotel at 1 Trinity Street, formerly having its address as Weensland Road. It was designed by local architect Michael Brodie and built in 1882, funded by auctioneer, James Oliver. It was run as a temperance hotel by Mr. & Mrs. Reid in the latter part of the 19th century, and used for several Common-Riding dinners etc.

the Buccleuch Hunt (thu-bu-kloo-hun') n. largest local fox-hunting group, formed in 1826, and based at St. Boswells. The National Archives have records for 1827–60.

Buccleuch Kirk (bu-kloo-kirk) n. name sometimes given to the Auld Pairish Kirk in Buccleuch Street. It was built 1844 as a gift of the Duke of Buccleuch, with the foundation stone laid by Henry Scott Riddell. The name 'Buccleuch Church' was used until 1936, when it became 'Old Parish'. The building was demolished around 1990 (see the Auld Pairish Kirk).

the Buccleuch Loft (thu-bu-kloo-loft) n. another name for the Duke's Loft.

the Buccleuch Memorial (thu-bu-kloo-mu-mō-ree-ul) n. officially 'The Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute', it was built after subscriptions were raised to build a suitable memorial following the death of Walter Francis, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was opened by the 6th Duke and Duchess in 1887, and gifted to the Town as an adult educational institution. It was built at the corner of Duke Street and Bridge Street in an italianate style, designed by John Guthrie and with sculpted stone-work by Thomas Beattie. The main entrance was surmounted by the figure of a stag (from the Buccleuch crest). The interior had a large lobby, with a small room on the right side and several smaller rooms to the left, with 2 larger rooms farther in. The top floor had a gallery extending round 3 sides with 3 dome windows in the roof, the largest having an 11 foot diameter. The level underneath was enterted from Duke Street. The upper floor housed the Museum until 1910, while the rest was used by the South Kensington Science and Art Classes. The interior and interior Museum room can be seen in photographs of about 1890. When the Archæological Society moved out the Town Council took over full contral and the building was known as the Buccleuch Memorial Technical Institute. It was then used extensively for textiles training courses. The building was also used by the Boys Brigade and various bands etc. The Vertish Hill Sports procession used to leave from there. It was gifted to Roxburgh Education committee by the town in 1951 and continued to be used for evening classes and the like, but by 1963 had become too hard to upkeep. It was demolished in 1969 and replaced in 1971 with the splendid new Tax and Social Security building. The old Buccleuch coat of arms has been built into a wall of the Scott Gallery, and another piece of stonework, including the Hawick coat of arms, was preserved in a gable of Drumlanrig Hospital, and then moved to the bottom of the 'Hunder Steps' – 'His thoughts went back ower fifty years And in eis mind ei saw them still Where was the Buccleuch Memorial Wher eid spent happy days at the schuil?' [AY].

Buccleuch Mill (bu-kloo-mil) n. former corn mill at Buccleuch, presumably serving the former Barony and Parish there. There are still traces of the walls in the shape of a small mound about 8 m by 4 m. It is said that no corn ever grew near there – 'Had heather-bells been corn of the best, The Buccleuch mill would have had a noble grist' [CWS].

Buccleuch Mills (bu-kloo-milz) n. knitwear factory on Green Lane, formerly Elliots, Bonsor's and Sybil Gentleman's, and more recently Glenhowe. It was built in 1862 as the stocking shop for William Elliot & Son. part having small windows for handframe knitting. It is 3 storeys high, each floor having 14 windows on a side, with each window formerly being for an individual hand-frame worker. The western part was added later in the 19th century and its wider windows match the machine-based methods of later production. The mill ceased operating in 1999.

the Buccleuch Muniments (thu-bu-kloo-mew-nee-mints) n. formal name for the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, particularly used by William Fraser in his 2 volume summary of the documents. This archive is an invaluable source of local information, since it preserves many documents relating to the area around Hawick from centuries when few other papers survive. The muniments were contained in charter chests kept at Branxholme and then moved to Dalkeith, but moved for protection to the Bass Rock in 1651 and Edinburgh Castle in 1666. They were held at Wemyss Castle during the minority of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. They were then stored for safe-keeping in a new stone building on Parliament Close, but caught in the great fire in Edinburgh in 1700; they were rescued by the Earl of Melville, who badly burned his hand and arm in the process. The index is available through the National Archives of Scotland.

Buccleuch Nurseries (bu-kloo-nur-ser-eez) n. former commercial plant nursery on Lynnwood Road/Slitrig Crescent, now the site for the Stonefield housing estate. It was run by John Forbes on land rented from the Duke of Buccleuch, running from 1879 (after Forbes moved from his present location at Havelock Nurseries). The nurseries went through various changes and finally closed in 1968. They grew a wide range of plants for sale, including hot houses etc. (in greenhouses), and supplied customers from all over Britain. It was for a while the largest grower of Penstemons in the world, offering 550 varieties in 1900. It was also known for its antirrhinums, delphiniums, gaillardias, pansies and phloxes. It was renamed the Royal Nurseries for several years in the early 20th century, and often known locally as Forbes' Nurseries. Prominent from the railway, the nurseries were also open to visitors, and there were sales on the premises, although most of the business was in supplying distant customers. Some species from the nursery colonised nearby pieces of ground, explaining the presence of some odd plants in that area, even today.

Buccleuch Park (bu-kloo-pawrk) n. cricket field behind a high unsightly wall between the High School and the Volunteer. It has been the headquarters of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club since 1860. Hawick Rugby Football Club originally played their games there 1873–85. A rugby match there in 1879 may have been the first sporting event to be played under floodlights in Scotland.

the Buccleuch Pipers (thu-bu-kloo-pī-purz) n. name used around 1900 for the pipe band in Hawick, probably the ex-Servicemen's Band.

the Buccleuch Playin Fields see the Playin Fields

the Buccleuch Quoitin Club see the Quoitin Club

Buccleuch Road (bu-kloo-rōd) n. name given in 1905 to the part of the New Road that lies within the town boundaries and is the continuation of Buccleuch Street.

Buccleuch Schuil (bu-kloo-skil) n. new school buildings on Buccleuch Street, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch to replace those of the Grammar School on Orrock Place. The Duke of Buccleuch gave the land and offered to pay for the erection of the new school and schoolmaster's house in 1859, and it was built by 1860. The school was enlarged in 1875 and a new infant department added. It was further enlarged in 1884 and remodelled in 1906–08, being renamed Buccleuch Higher Grade School. For several years, starting in 1895 the Secondary School was run from Teviot Grove on Union Street. The school finally became 'Hawick High School' in 1915. Originally there was also a primary school there. A new infant building was added in 1875, enlarged in 1876 and in 1886, and ran until the 1940s. A large fraction of the early building was destroyed in the fire of 1925. The school started a tradition of singing the Common-Riding song on the Thursday in 1872, which led to the Cornet's visits to the schools that day. William Pitcairn was Headmaster in the late 1800s and early 1900s and William Forsyth was acting Headmaster 1906–08 – 'Oh! where are a' the laddies noo? We were a merry crew That day we marched in rank and file Tae oor new schule – Buccleuch' [WLu] (also known as 'Buccleuch Public School').

Buccleuch Shiels (bu-kloo-sheelz) n. former name for a cottage near Buccleuch. Thomas Nichol was there in 1720 and Robert Bellenden was herd there in at least 1726–28 (it is 'Buccleugh Sheals' in 1728).

the Buccleuch Star (thu-bu-kloo-stawr) n. former semi-junior rugby team. It was run by Pesco's, and existed for only a couple of years before WWII.

Buccleuch Street (bu-kloo-stree') n. street that begins the New Road towards the south and was named in 1815 after the local Ducal family of Buccleuch. The first building there may have been what now forms the central portion and offices of Pesco's, built shortly after 1816 for a firm of local solicitors. No. 2 is also an early building, once housing the Burns Inn. The terraced block of Nos. 8–20 were built around 1820, constructed of whinstone with sandstone dressings and painted tabbed margins. They also involve some elegant details (e.g. the fanlight at No. 10 and the former Grapes Close at No. 16). Across the street stands the Chapel of Saints Mary and David and the adjoining hall, formerly the Subscription Rooms and the Commercial Inn. Further down the street was the Old Parish Church, as well as the High School. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 22 are grade C listed.

Buccleuch Terrace (bu-kloo-te-ris) n. street in the West End, off Beaconsfield Terrace, with houses built around 1903. It includes St. Margaret's Primary School.

Buccleuch Terrace (bu-kloo-te-ris) n. street in Newcastleton off South Hermitage Street.

the Buccleuch Vaults (thu-bu-kloo-vawlts) n. burial chamber of the Scotts of Buccleuch at St. Mary's Church for about two centuries. The last burial there was that of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, and the vault was sealed up after the church was rebuilt in 1763. The site is said to have been attached to the choir, perhaps beneath the eastern stair leading to the Duke's Loft. Rev. Somerville in 1738 writes 'I only find their bodies in lead coffins, having sheets of lead with names and arms fixed to the heads of their coffins'. Its position was described in 1863 by a family (unnamed) with an adjacent burial place, who stated they had had an arch built at the east end of the south wall when the south wall was moved 6 feet in 1763. James Wilson stated that this was because the 'south front-wall' of the new church in 1763 was found to interfere with the burial vault of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and that this 'Duke's Arch' formed in the wall was still visible in the 1850s.

Buccleuch Works (bu-kloo-wurks) n. name sometimes used for the hosiery manufacturing premises of James Bonsor & Co., on Buccleuch Street, also known as Buccleuch Mills.

Buccleugh (bu-kloo) n. alternative spelling of Buccleuch, common until the early 19th century.

Buchan (bu-kin) n. Alexander (17th/18th C.) surveyor of ale in Hawick. In 1713 the Bailies heard a case of assault that he brought against John Kerr, servant to Walter Pringle of the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. Alexander (18th/19th C.) stocking-frame maker in Hawick, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Alistair son of Morris, Acting Father in 1974. He was Jubilee Acting Father in 2024. John (17th C.)

farmer at Belses Mill, recorded in 1632. John (1875–1940) Scottish journalist, biographer, novelist and statesman, born in Perth. Probably most famous world-wide for his novel 'The Thirty-Nine Steps' (1914), he is locally better known for poems such as 'The South Countrie'. He was later M.P. for the Scottish Universities and Governor-General of Canada. He became Baron Tweedsmuir in 1935. The John Buchan Centre is located at Broughton near Biggar, which was where his grandfather preached, his parents first met, and was the family childhood holiday home. Morris Acting Father in 1950. William (1729–1805) born in Ancrum, son of James, who owned a small estate and was tenant of another farm. His mother was probably Jean Turner. His grandfather had spent time in exile in Holland before the Revolution. He attended a local grammar school (prsumably either Jedburgh or Hawick) and apparently acted as a physician in Ancrum village while still in school. He went to Edinburgh University, initially intended for the Church, but graduated in medicine. He then worked in Yorkshire and Edinburgh. In 1769 he published 'Domestic Medicine', which was unusually written in lay language. It became one of the most popular books of its sort for several decades, with 19 editions and over 80,000 copies published in his lifetime and translations appearing in most European languages. He is mentioned in a line of Burns poem 'Death and Dr. Hornbrook'. He later moved to Edinburgh and was buried in Westminster Abbey. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1794 he married Betty Aitkin, who was from Hawick.

bucht (bucht) n., arch., poet. an animal enclosure, sheep fold, particularly used for gathering ewes for milking – 'Yestreen I saw them whan we milk'd the ewes, He drave them to the bught out o'er the knows' [CPM], 'At bughts, in the morning, nae blythe lads are scorning, The lasses are lonely, and dowie, and wae . . . ' [JEM], 'The yowes they lap out owre the buchte, And skippit up and downe' [JTe], '. . . except the remains of its tower, which are still standing, and sometimes used by the tenant as a bught for his sheep' [RWB], '. . . For the sun is shining on bucht and bower And I'll find thee a mother in Kirkhope Tower' [WHO], v. to enclose animals, particularly to gather ewes for milking – 'Weel, it was the custom to milk yowes i' thae days, and my faither was buchtin' the Brockalaw yowes . . . ' [LHTB] (also written 'bught'; the word occurs in some place names, e.g. Bught Knowe, Bught Shank and Bught Sike; also boucht; from Dutch).

Buck (buk) n. John O. (19th/20th C.) Treasurer of Hawick Baptist Church 1899–1916.

Buckbean Sike (buk-been-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale. It rises on the southern slopes of Hazelyside Hill, flowing roughly south to become part of Stanygill Burn (the 'bean' part of the name is obscure).

Buck Cleuch (buk-clooch) n. deep ravine of the Clear Burn, just off the B711 east of the farms of Buccleuch. This is where traditionally a young Scott seized a buck with his bare hands and presented it to the King. There was once a mill on the burn, with traces of the mill lade still visible. The cleuch is about 100 feet down at its deepest part. A small crook at the steepest part, 'about halfway between the East house and the Mill dam ford' (according to the Ordnance Survey Name Book) is said to have been the specific location where the buck was slain (in fact the name probably has a different etymology, and was used synonymously with 'Rankelburn' when referring to the lands of the Scotts).

bucket (bu-ki') n. bin, pail, especially wastepaper bin or garbage bin – 'it's your turn ti pit the buckets oot', 'if ee deh behave, A'll pit aa yur toys in the bucket', '. . . she said her faimily wad juist pit it in the bucket and she wanted it ti come back ti Hawick' [IWL].

bucketfi (bu-ki'-fi) n. bucketful – 'go'an git another bucketfi coal', '. . . they brocht hyim muckle bucketfis o mussels' [IWL].

Buckham (bu-kum) n. Adam (d.c.1683) tenant in West Lees, probably the one in Hobkirk Parish. His will is recorded in 1683 and that of his wife (although his surname is transcribed there as 'Benholme' for 'Buckholme') in 1681. Adam (17th C.) tenant somewhere close to Bonchester, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Abbotrule Parish. He could be the Adam who married Isabell Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691 and whose children Isabel (b.1693) and Jean (b.1701) were baptised in Bedrule. Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Janet (b.1769) and Janet (again, b.1772). Adam (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Mervinslaw according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was also recorded as shepherd at Mervinslaw on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Adam (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. George (16th C.) tenant at Belses

Mill in 1581. He witnessed a transaction between the Haliburtons in Ancrum and the Haliburtons of Muirhouselaw. George (d.c.1686) tenant in Hallrule. His testament is recorded in both 1684 and 1686. George (18th C.) coachman listed at Wells in 1791, when he was working for Gilbert Eliott. Probably the same George was gardener at Weens in 1792 (for William Oliver of Dinlabyre). George (d.1819) son of James, he was a yarn merchant of the early 19th century, running the company George Buckham & Co. Ltd. The firm continued until his death. The Museum has ledgers from 1818–20. He may have originally come from Manchester. Either he or perhaps his son subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Margaret Goodfellow (1792–1826) in East Bank Kirk in 1813. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1702. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Whitriggs in 1722 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (18th C.) married Christian Buckham in Bedrule in 1742. James (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: Mary (b.1745); and Jean (b.1747). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1743); and Isobel (again, b.1753). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1755. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Howison (or 'Jean Huison') in 1754 and their children included: William (b.1761); Janet (b.1761); Isabel (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1767); and Ann (b.1771). The witnesses in 1764 were mason William Howison and shoemaker William Elliot and in 1771 were the whole congregation. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Armstrong and their children included George (b.1784). James (d.1831) labourer who owned 12 Back Row. His sisters were probably Isobel (who died in 1829) and Ann (who died in 1820, wife of Robert Pringle). He either gave or sold his property to the Pringle family. His property is marked on Wood's 1824 map, to the east of Robert Pringle's. James (18th/19th C.) cooper of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. Thomas Haswell was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (17th C.) owner of Belses Mill, as recorded in 1643. His lands there were valued at £200 and listed in Ancrum Parish. John (1691/2–1764) tenant in Bedrule. He married Mary Oliver in 1719 and she who died in 1757, aged 63. Their children included: Isobel (b.1720), John (b.1721) and Robert (b.1725), who died young; William (b.1722); Margaret (b.1724); Gilbert (b.1728); Isobel (again, 1730–57); and John (again, b.1727), tenant in Bedrule. He was an Elder of Bedrule Kirk in at least the period 1729–35. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He could have been the tenant of Bedrule at the time a story of the fairy folk was told; the farmer's wife gave her only bit of barley to a fairy, and later had it replaced by a quantity that kept her and the reapers in bread throughout the harvest. John of Overtonbush (1726/7–79) tenant in Bedrule. He was probably son of the earlier John. He married Agnes Dunlop in 1765 and she died in 1814, aged 75. She could be the 'Mrs Buchham', farmer's wife at Bedrule, who (according to Robert Murray in 1872) described seeing a 'little woman dressed in green' who asked to borrow a capful of meal, and when she obliged, she found that the repayment of the loan gave enough grain for the whole season. Their children included: Isabella (b.1766), who died aged 17; John (b.1768); Jean (b.1771); Mary (b.1769), James (b.1772) and Agnes (b.1777), who all died young; Mary (again, b.1774); Joan (b.1779); and William (1775–1799) who died off the coast of Africa. His family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John 'Jock' (19th C.) local 'toper' of the mid-1900s, mentioned in William Easton's 'The Anvil Crew' and 'Run Them In'. It is unlcear how he was related to other Buckham's. His memory was revived in J.C. Goodfellow's burlesque poem 'The Voyage of the Great Eastern' – '. . . And Captain Menty walked the deck, While Buckham mann'd the wheel' [WE], 'Jock Buckham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags . . . ' [WE], '. . . For Captain Fraser walked the deck And Bucham turned the wheel' [JCG]. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded at Belses Mill in 1621. He accompanied Andrew Halburton of Muirhouselaw when he was attacked by a group of servants of Ker of Langnewton. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Town o' Rule in 1694. He may be the same man as Robert of West Lees. Robert of West Lees (18th C.) heritor of Hobkirk Parish in the early 1700s. He was recorded as Laird there in 1738 (when his servant William Turnbull's child was baptised) and in 1745. He may be the Robert who married Margaret Hutton in Hobkirk Parish in 1732. His daughter Janet married Robert Scott in 1756. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Bedrule in 1753. Thomas (b.c.1780) shepherd at Honeytown according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1801. William (17th C.) recorded at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was listed for 4 hearths, suggesting he was the main tenant on the farm at that time. William (b.c.1795) agricultural labourer in Cavers Parish. He was at East Middle in 1841. His wife was Janet and their children included Walter and Helen (also written 'Buckam', 'Buckholm', 'Buckholme', 'Buckhome', 'Buckolm' and 'Bukhelme').

Buckholm (bu-kum) n. village just north of Galashiels, with the nearby ruined Buckholm Tower dating from the 16th centry, a former home of the Pringles. A carved stone bears the date 1582. The tower overlooks the valley towards Torwoodlee and was the location for the last 'laying' of an evil spirit by an ordained Church of Scotland minister (the origin is probably Old English 'bucca helm', meaning 'the buck's shelter'; it is first recorded as 'Buchelm' about 1200).

Buckie (bu-kee) n. James (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as 'Jacobo Buky'. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick man who took part in amateur theatrical performances in about 1820. It is possible that his surname was Buckham. Robert (15th C.) listed as 'Robert Buky' among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. James was also listed right after him. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers.

the Buck Inn (thu-buk-in) n. public house at 31 High Street before the National Bank was built there. It was also known as the White Hart.

the Buck Inn (thu-buk-in) n. public house in Newcastleton. John Watson was proprietor in 1837.

the Bulfinch (thu-bul-finch) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

the Bull an Butcher (thu-bul-in-boo-chur) n., arch. former name for an inn in Hawick, probably the same as the White Hart at about 31 High Street. The name appears in Slater's 1852 directory, but could not have been in use for very long. It was used as a departure point by carriers.

bullie (bu-lee) n., arch. bullfinch.

Bulloch (bu-lok) n. John (18th C.) married Agnes Allan. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: John (b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); and William (b.1746). He may be the son of William born in 1713. His wife could be the Agnes who died in 1780. John (18th C.) married Isabel Dryden in Hawick in 1768. He is probably the John whose daughter was buried in Hawick in 1772. He may be the son of John born in 1739. He is probably the carrier to Liddesdale whose son John died in Hawick in 1787. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. The deaths of his children John (d.1821), William (d.1829), Janet (b.1832) and Thomas (d.1832) are recorded. Thomas (b.c.1780) apprentice shoemaker according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described as an 'Armorrour' in 1713 and 'brasier' in 1719. His wife was Jean Robson and their son John was baptised in 1713, with his name appearing to be written 'Dulloch' in one entry. The witnesses in 1713 were smith Thomas Huntly and tailor John Little. Probably the same William secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas Turnbull, in 1716. Their children included: Jean (b.1717); Bessie (b.1719); Helen (b.1721), who perhaps married John Thorburn in 1756; and Thomas (b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were carrier John Simpson and wright James Gledstains. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes and their son William was baptised in 1770. William (18th/19th C.) tailor recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was a stockingmaker 'late Taylor' who was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. On the 1801 list he was 'Apprentice Stocking Maker'. He could be the same man as 'Wullie'. William 'Wullie' (18th/19th C.) last member of an old Hawick family, he worked as groom for William Nixon. A portrait of him giving a bowl of oats to Nixon's horse 'Molly' (or 'Moll'), painted by Adam Brown, is in the Museum. It is said that he had a strong passion for only 2 things: sitting on the back of Moll; and drinking whisky, which he would deny doing more persistently the drunker he got (also written 'Bullock' and 'Bulough').

Bullysteed (bu-lee-steed) n. possible name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Bulaystede' in a rental roll of c.1376, when it had a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water.

Bulman (bool-min, -mun) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Bessie Laidlaw, who was also from Ashkirk. Peter (b.c.1800) grocer and spirit merchant in Denholm. His shop was on Main Street. His wife was Agnes, from Bo'ness, West Lothian. Their children included Robert (who farmed at Nether Tofts), Peter, William, James and John. He died before 1851, when his widow was still a grocer in Denholm. Robert (15th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded there as 'Robertus Buleman'. The document probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. Robert (b.c.1768/9) from Bowden, he was farmer at Denholm Hall. He is probably the Robert (senior) listed as a shopkeeper in Denholm in the directory of 1837. His wife was Alison, who came from England. His children included: Robert, farmer at Westgatehall; and Mary, who married joiner James Elliot. He was still alive in 1851. Robert (b.1803/4) son of Robert, he was farmer in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at the west side of the village, farming at Westgatehall. By 1861 he had taken over from his father at Denholm Hall (i.e. Eastgate). He is probably the Robert junior recorded as a shopkeeper in Denholm in 1837. He may also have been the Robert who served as a carrier between Denholm and Edinburgh once a fortnight at that time. In 1868 he is recorded at 'Denholm Farm'. He married Ann Hardie in 1834 and they had a son Robert. Robert (b.1830/1) son of Robert and Agnes. He was recorded as vintner and grocer at the Crown in Denoholm in a directory of 1852, presumably helping his mother. He was later farmer at Nether Tofts. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 650 acres there, employing 4 people. He was recorded at Tofts in a directory of 1868. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he leased an acre of land in Langnewton from Patrick King. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Stobs Castle according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was listed as a 'Valet' at Stobs on the 1801 Militia ballot.

Bulman's Scar (bool-munz-skawr) n. former name for a right of way from Denholm Brig to the ford (which was slightly down river). It had a stile at both ends (probably named after the Bulman family who farmed at Denholm Hall).

Bulmer (bul-mur) n. Sir Ralph of Wilton (c.1491–1558) from Yorkshire, he succeeded his uncle Sir John. The family estate in Cleveland is unrelated with the Wilton in Hawick. Along with Sir Oswald Westropp, he led English forces that burned Hawick in 1547/8. The Earl of Surrey made him marshal for the vanguard before entering Scotland. Everything was burned, including the houses and corn, as well as a tower containing its owner James Young and 10 others. Over 30 prisoners were taken, along with much booty. The Kers (including the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst) colluded with him in the burning of Teviotdale in 1547/8. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Tempest. He is also mentioned in the English ballad 'Lord Ewie' – 'A noble Knight him trained up, Sir Rafe Bulmer is the man I mean; At Flodden field, as men do say, No better capten there was seen' [T] Sir William of Wilton (1465–1531) son of Sir Ralph. He was present at Flodden and was High Sheriff of Durham and of Yorkshire. He was in joint charge, along with Sir Thomas Tempest, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523; Tempest was his grandson's father-in-law. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was hanged for treason.

bul-reel (bul-reel, bool-reel) n. a reel danced only by men – '... a band of young men, under the inspiration of a midnight carousal, adjourned to the angle fronting the minister's door, shouting riotously and dancing bull reels' [WNK], '... A was stannin on bluiddy Ancrum Muir. Nae cannie daffin bull-reel splore that fearfih fecht' [ECS] (also called a 'ram reel').

the Bul Reel (thu-bul-reel, bool-reel) n. specific reel danced by the Common-Riding Principals at the Ball and after returning from the Mote, as well as formerly at the Games. The tunes used are traditionally 'Stumpie' and 'Kate Dalrymple'.

bul-wand (bul-wawnd) n., arch. a weed that grows among meadow-grass, hay or corn, the ragwort.

bum (bum) v. to hum, make a humming sound, throw something with a booming sound, knock – 'If there's a greater bore, it is The monologuish woman; She'll deave yer vera soul wi' din Till baith yer lugs are bummin' ' [FL], n., arch. a hum, drone, booming sound – 'His drone its last deep bum hath bray'd For Davie's dead' [JoHa], '... ti the droang o the Toon's clock an the bumm of the jumboes; whan the mills was skailin ... ' [ECS].

the Bungle (thu-bung-ul) n. nickname recorded for an Armstrong of Liddesdale in 1590, probably Andrew Airmstrong.

bunker (bung-kur) n. a wooden box for storing coal in early-to-mid 20th century houses, also known as a 'coal bunker', a counter-top or work-surface beside the sink in a kitchen – 'dinni wash they cups the now, jist pit them on the bunker', 'Every window bunker in the neighbourhood was laid under contribution, and it mattered little whether the subject was penny history literature, . . . ' [WNK], arch. a bench, pew – 'The council condescend to make up a new table, with bunkers round about, in the tolbooth . . . ' [JW1719].

bunnet (bun-i') n. a bonnet, particularly a flat-topped cap worn by older men. In the 18th century, those worn by working men would have been of blue worsted, with the employers sometimes wearing black; however, since the 19th century a checked pattern has been the norm – 'hei probably even wore his bunnet ti bed', '. . . Whan Habby gave him time o' day, Took aff his bannet, looked grave; My Lord said, 'Hab, what would you have?' ' [JR], 'Get away wi' ye or I'll fling yer bunnet in the glaur, and there it's' [JEDM] (also written 'bannet'; see also bonnet).

Bunster (bun-stur) n. local name for Bonchester, as recorded by Walter Deans in the 1880s. The variant Binster is more common today.

bunter (bun-tur) n., arch. a disreputable woman – 'There are still many old bunters going about the country pretending to be skilled in fortune-telling and divination . . . ' [EM1820].

buntie (bun-tee) adj., poet. probably referring to a style of jacket with a tail – 'He cam' to Hawick without a groat, In Denholm-blue short, buntie coat' [RDW].

buntifully (bun-ti-fu-lee) adv., poet. bountifully – '. . . the richteous sall be roun' aboot me; for thou sallt deel buntifullie wi' me' [HSR].

Bunyan (bun-yin, -yee) n. Alexander 'Sandy' (d.bef. 1777) gardener in Hawick, and also Beadle in the Kirk. He was said (in a talk by W.N. Kennedy in 1862), to have been the bedler to Rev. Thomas Sharp, but since Sharp was incumbent in only the years 1784–89, it must have been an earlier minister that he served, probably Rev. James Lawrie. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young. In 1759 and 1760 he was listed as 'Church officer' or 'Kirk Officer' when he witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish. He also witnessed further baptisms in 1761 and 1762. In 1764 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Charles Scott, for Robert Scott, for merchant John Hardie and for William Nichol (when he was again 'officer'). He witnessed baptisms in 1765 for John Kedie and for Robert Easton and in 1766 for William Scott. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for William Burnet, another in 1767 for Andrew Scott and in 1768 another for fellow gardener Charles Turnbull. He is probably the 'Alex. Bunzie' recorded in the description of the flood of 1767, when 2 houses to the west of his were swept away, this being somewhere near Towerdykeside. He witnessed further baptisms in 1771, 1772 and 1774. He married Elizabeth (or 'Lizzy') Scott, who died in 1777. Their children included: Janet (b.1741); Janet (again, b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); and John (b.1747). His surname is given as 'Bonzie' and 'Bunyan'. The witnesses in 1743 were dyer Robert Pringle and Pringle's servant George Campbell and in 1745 were merchant John Ruecastle and William Scoon. His household 'bicker' was used for many purposes and became locally famous; it was said that 'men, animals, and things were likened to Sandy Bunyan's bicker, fit for onything, ready for onything; or naething comes wrang t'ye, ye're like Sandy Bunyan's bicker'. George (1839–75) son of James. He was a Hawick barber like his father. In 1856 he donated to the Archæological Society an old gun found at Hermitage, as well as stuffed animals. He donated a Chinese teapot in 1857, a fossil in 1858, a duck and drake in 1859 and further items in the 1860s. He continued to care for the Museum's natural history collection and was presented with a silver snuff box for his service to the Society. James (18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1728 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. He was a mason in Spittal in Cavers in 1721 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Bedrule (with his surname given as 'Bunnie'). An unnamed child (b.1719) and Robert (b.1721), baptised in Cavers was probably also his child. He was surely related to John, who was at Spittal-on-Rule at the same time. James (18th C.) joiner at Spittal, recorded in 1787. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Agnes (b.1787). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Cote. He was listed along with John on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was recorded as owner of 7 farm horses. His surname is listed as 'Bunzie'. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Effledge in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was probably either father or brother of Thomas, who was also recorded as farmer at Effledge in 1797. He is probably the farmer James who was at Effledge according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799. He could be the James, son of James, who was baptised in Cavers in 1772. James (1795/6–1832) eldest surviving son of Thomas, farmer at Cavers Mains. He took over as farmer of Cavers Mains from his father and then later was tenant at Stirches Mains. He paid the Horse Tax at Westcote in 1797. In 1820 he married Catherine Angus, probably daughter of agricultural labourer John at Broomhill. Their children were: Thomas, who died aged 21; John (b.1828) who was a clerk; Jemima Catherine (1828–1920), twin of John, who died at Wellogate Manse, home of her 2nd cousin Rev. Ainslie; Isabella, who married her cousin Thomas Bunyan, who was a warder at the Tower of London; and Margaret Elizabeth (1833–1902). His widow and 3 children were living at Broomhill in 1842, with John Angus, and at about 50 High Street in 1851; most of the family lived in Hawick later. His wife died in 1890, aged 81. They are buried in St. Mary's Kirkyard. James (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh, he was a barber in Hawick. In 1841 he was recorded at 29 High Street and was listed on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Mary, who died before 1851. Their children included James, Mary, Ann, Isaac, George, Jane and Andrew. He could be the James who was an early member of the Archæological Society, and of whom a portrait exists, dying at Stirches Mains in 1889; he donated specimens of coral to the Museum in 1859. Janet 'Jenny' (b.1743) daughter of Sandy Bunyan, the Kirk Beadle. W.N. Kennedy described that she was 'slightly crazed, and, in her father's illness, or absence from home, she did not deem it derogatory to her dignity to perform the duties effeiring to his public offices', including grave-digging and ceremoniously carrying the bible to the puplit and closing the kirk door. John (17th C.) married Agnes Melrose 'At Minto' in 1693, as recorded in the records of Melrose Kirk. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Bedrule in 1719. He is probably the John recorded in Spittal in 1727 and 1730. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, probably included John (b.1724), Margaret (b.1727), Bessie (b.1730), Elspeth (b.1733). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Spittal. He is recorded as 'Bunzie' when he was listed as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John listed along with James at West Cote on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1828–1915) born in Cavers Parish, son of James and Catherine Angus. He trained as a Solicitor's Writing Clerk, and then worked for the Commercial Bank. He donated items to the Museum in 1857 and became a member of the Archæological Society in 1862. He could be the Mr. Bunyan who visited Kelso Museum in 1857 and immediately suggested that the Hawick Archæological Society obtain a room, shelves and display cases (which suggestion was unanimously accepted). He later moved to a bank in Liverpool. He shared lodging with another bank employee who was found guilty of embezzlement. During the trial the judge remarked how surprising it was that he could have lived and worked with this man but known nothing about it; this unjust criticism apparently preyed on his mind, causing him to have to give up working altogether. Robert (18th C.) probably name for farmer at Ashybank in Cavers Parish. He is recorded on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls as 'Bonie' and in 1788 as 'Burn', his name being hard to transcribe. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mason who was one of the tradesmen selected in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of Hawick Manse. He is probably the mason in Cavers Parish recorded in an Edinburgh marriage record when his son Robert married Margaret Ker, servant to George Douglas of Friarshaw, advocate in Edinburgh. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside. In 1762 he was witness for the baptism of twins of Adam Hutton. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk James Inglis and Helen Bunyan (perhaps his daughter). He was recorded as farmer at Teindside in the period 1785–97, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was taxed for having 2 work horses. Thomas (1753–1823) tenant farmer of Spittal-on-Rule and later Cavers Mains and Templehall. He was recorded at Spittal on the 1794 Horse Tax rolls. He was an early member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh, becoming one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was a Trustee and Bondholder, presiding over the Session, and generally being regarded as the founding father of the church. In 1787 he married Betty (b.1767), only surviving daughter of James Veitch and Betty Murray (thus connecting all 3 of the families that farmed Spittal-on-Rule). He was stated to be from Minto Parish at the time of the marriage, which was recorded in bother Minto and Cavers Parishes. Their children were: John (b.1788), who died young; Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1791), who married Thomas Rutherford, farmer at Ancrum Craig; Jane (b.1793), who died young; James (b.1795), who succeeded his father at Cavers Mains; Thomas (b.1801); and Jane, again (b.1805), who was a teacher. Thomas (b.1770s) tenant in Effledge in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He was surely related to James, who was also recorded as farmer in 1797. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at West Cote according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was listed as tenant at West Cote. He could be the Thomas whose children baptised in Cavers included Jane (b.1793), James (b.1795), Thomas (b.1801) and Jane (again, b.1805). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Jamieson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1820. Thomas (b.1801) younger son of Thomas and Betty Veitch. He was tenant farmer at High Tofts. He married Margaret Telfer in 1823. Their eldest son was Thomas, who became Chief Warder at the Tower of London and married his cousin Isabella Bunyan. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Nelly Henry and their children included James (b.1834) and Archibald (b.1835). Thomas (19th C.) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at High Tofts. He was Sergeant-Major with the 79th Highlanders, serving in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He was later Yeoman Warder at the Tower of London, for 14 years and Chief Warder for 16 years. He had a son, James, who was a banker in London (formerly spelled 'Bonze', 'Bonzie', 'Buinya', 'Bunion', 'Bunnion', 'Bunyeon', 'Bunzie', etc.).

Bunyan's Close (bun-yinz-klōs) n. passageway off the High Street, recorded in the 1860s, but of uncertain location. It was possibly near 50 High Street where the Bunyan family kept a library.

Bunzie see Bunyan

burd (burd) n. bird – 'I mean the hubbub 'boot yon braw-built kavie, Where sits a clocker trim, and twa-three burds' [JoHa] (occasional spelling to emphasize the pronunciation).

burdie (bur-dee) n. a little bird, affectionate term for a bird – 'The lammies are springing, the burdies are singing Their amorous notes i' the hazelly shaw' [JoHa].

burding (bur-ding) n., arch. a burden – '... for our selffis, and takand the burding vpoun ws for our haill surname of Batyis cumit of the hous of Cowchquhairglen ...' [SB1595].

Burge (burj) n. Richard 'Dick' (19th/20th C.) British Lightweight Boxing Champion and owner of Blackfriars Ring. He was one of the more famous boxers to appear in exhibition matches at Hawick Common Riding in the latter part of the 19th century.

burgess (bur-jis) n. a freeman of a town – 'Item, that ilk freeman's heir that is to be admitted burgess and freeman within this Bruch, sal only pay the wyne to the Bailies, with pertinents' [BR1640], 'The quhilke day, John Gledstaines of Hillisland, and John Scott, smith, wer admittit and creat Burgesses and gave thair Burgess Oaths' [BR1692], adj. relating to burgesses – '... and the money payd out of the burgess money by Baylyea Ruecastell at the pryces aftermentionat ...' [BR1707] (see also Burgesses).

Burgess (bur-jis) n. Robert (19th C.) man who gave evidence at the investigation into the election riots in Hawick in 1837.

Burgesses (bur-ji-seez) n., pl. freemen of Hawick. They had the right to trade within the Burgh, to graze cows and take turfs from the Common, and to vote to select the two magistrates. Admission as a Burgess involved a sum of money (for a long time 40 shillings Scots), with first sons automatically allowed to become Burgesses, while second and later sons, and sons-in-law had to pay a higher fee (£4 Scots; by the end of the 17th century the fees were £4 and £8 Scots). In 1836 it was reported that the fees were £1 (sterling) for the son of a Burgess, £2 for a son-in-law and £4 for anyone else. Being made a Burgess was also sometimes an inducement, e.g. in 1694 when 2 men who had been selected from Hawick to serve in the militia were admitted for free. Only Burgesses could trade within the town, and for a long time only the sons of Burgesses could be Cornet. They essentially constituted the town's middle class. A dispute between many Burgesses followed the 1777 Division of the Common, with a decision by the Court of Session clarifying the rights of the Burgesses to elect the Bailies and other Officers. In 1781 it was decreed that no one from the countryside would be admitted as a Burgess unless they came to reside in the Town. Before 1855 the Magistrates and Council elected a number of Burgesses to assist the Junior Bailie in riding the marches, and they also had to carry out posts at the Watchknowe. The first Burgess on record is Simon Routledge in 1433, suggesting that Hawick was already a Burgh then; there are similar records of 1447 and 1454. In the sasine of 1452 for the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, Thomas Blair is described as a Bailie of Hawick, and then occurs this list of 4 names: 'Johanne Walch, Roberto Falconar, Thoma de Lutherdale, Roberto Wchiltre, burgensibus'. 4 Burgesses listed on a document relating to Whitchesters (made at St. Mary's) are Simon Routledge, John Waugh, Thomas Blair and Thomas Lidderdale. Robert Cessford is recorded as a Burgess in 1490. A list of those who contributed to the new kirk bell in 1693/4 is likely to be essentialy a list of burgesses at that time; it contains 180 names (with the ordering of the names being according to who gave the most money, hence many of the east-end merchants are near the beginning and west-end weavers come later). 60 Burgesses voted in the election of the Bailies in 1702. In 1715 there were 82 Burgesses, Bailies and Councillors who took an oath to the new King. In 1769 144 Burgesses and owners of particates signed the statement made regarding the Town's legal position on the Common, and there were said to be about 200 Burgesses in 1770. However, another estimate puts the number at as many as 407 Burgesses in 1770 and 437 recorded a little later. There were 211 in 1803, when a large number of elligible men were admitted (including sons above the age of 16) just before electing the Town Clerk. However, there were only 144 in 1860 just before they were made obsolete – 'They met in the Kirkyard and loaning, Old burgesses loyal and true' [RSC], 'So much to sing, dear town, in the long years, Do you remember, in your old grey heart, The burgess-men who smiled at craven fears And on the field of Flodden played their part' [JYH].

Burgess Oath (bur-jis-ōth) n. oath of fidelity taken on admittance as a Burgess, recorded in the Town Book of 1681, and unchanged since then. The words are 'I promise and swear I shall be a true and faithful Burgess of the Burgh of Hawick. That I shall defend the liberties thereof in all time coming with my body, goods, and gear; be obedient to the Magistrates and their successors in office; that I shall give the Bailies and Council of the Burgh the best advice I can when they ask it of me. I shall conceal that which they impart to me. I shall colour no man's goods under colour of my own, as I shall answer to God. So help me God'.

the Burgess Roll (thu-bur-jis-rōl) n. list of Burgesses read by the Town Clerk for generations at the Ca' Knowe during the Common Riding. The penalty for non-attendance at the reading was £10 Scots. The roll was traditionally read at 12 noon. After the Division the Roll was read at Bailie's Hill for a while. In the early part of the 19th century the list was read out by the Town Clerk from in front of the Town Herd's tent on the Moor, the names being repeated loudly by one of the Burgh Officers. The practice was discontinued before the middle of the 19th century – 'And voice calls to voice by the spirit mound Where the Burgess-Dead keep trysting-ground, And the Roll to the winds is given' [JYH].

burgess silver (bur-jis-sil-vur) n., arch. the money taken in by a burgh as fees from burgesses – 'On balancing the Treasurer's accounts for his 'intromissions with the Burges Silver', he is found to have on hand £83 Scots' [JW1656].

burgess ticket (bur-jis-ti-ki') n. the document affirming the status of a burgess, also given to honorary burgesses – Our magistrates appropriate speech, Announced with deliberation; A Burgess Ticket did present, A mark of adoration' [BY].

burgh (bu-ru) n. a town with a charter, granted by the monarch or by a noble, allowing the townspeople certain privileges, such as the right to hold a market (cf. 'borough' in England). They were abolished during local government reorganisation in 1975.

the Burgh (*th*u-bu-ru) n. term used to refer to Hawick, particularly in the period when it had its own Town Council. Hawick achieved its 'burgh of barony' status when granted its first burghal charter, probably by Douglas of Drumlanrig sometime in the 15th century, with a restatement of its status in 1511 and a regranting of its charter in 1537. The date of the first charter is unknown, but must be before the first record of a burgess in 1433. The confirming charter of the Barony of Hawick granted to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1407 includes 'also the burgh of Hawick, as freely as the granter or any of his predecessors had enjoyed', suggesting that it was not a burgh of barony at that time. Because of wording in the 1537 Charter, the legal status of the Town was assumed to be the same as that of a Royal Burgh (specifically the right of the Bailies to accepted resignations of land and grant infeftments, independent of the Baron), except for not having its own member of Parliament. However, this status was questioned at various times, e.g. 2 advoctates were consulted in 1667 regarding the tenure of the Burgh. In 1770 the number of houses belonging to Burgesses was 206, valued at more than £31,000. The assessment for the poor rates in 1814 was £3717. In a case of 1807 it was established that the Burgh was independent of the Baron.

Burgh Assessor (bu-ru-aw-se-sur) n. former official of the Town Council who annually prepared the property valuation rolls, based upon which the Town's rates were levied. This position would have existed from the 1860s until 1975. Andrew Scott held this post for a while in the late 19th century.

Burgh Brae (bu-ru-brā) n. former name for a road off Princes Street, also called Farthing Row.

Burgh Chamberlain (bu-ru-chām-bur-lin) n. formerly the Town official in charge of receiving rents etc., another title for town treasurer.

Burgher (bur-gur) n., arch. a Burgess – '. . . intimation being made to all the Burghers, and none objecting, Mungo Armstrong, town herd, was continued in that office for the ensuing year' [BR1724].

Burgher (bur-gur) n., arch. a member of the Secession Church that believed one should take the Burgess Oath, and separated from the 'Anti-Burghers' in 1747, adj., arch. relating to the Burghers.

the Burghers (*th*u-bur-gurz) n., pl. group who seceded from the church after 1747 in opposition to the patronage system, but were a little more liberal-minded than the Anti-Burghers, considering it proper to take the Burgess oath, which asserted 'the true religion professed within the realm'. They are sometimes referred to as the 'dissenting seceders', or the Second Secession Church. In Hawick the church probably grew out of a splinter group of the Anti-Burghers at the Green Kirk in about 1770, with adherents originally attending meetings in Selkirk. The East Bank (or East End) Burgher congregation was founded in 1773 and the East End Meeting House was built at what is now Trinity Gardens in 1780. There was great animosity beteen the two secessionist churches in the latter part of the 18th century, but they reunited in 1820. However in Hawick they continued to preach in separate churches (although the congregations would attend the other when a minister was away). The names 'Burgher' and 'Anti-Burgher' continued to be used for the 2 congregations for many decades afterwards, being synonymous with 'East-End' and 'West-End'. There was also a Burgher congregation in Lilliesleaf.

Burgh Hill (bu-ru-hil) n. hill rising to 314 m (1,003 ft) near Dod farm, site of a stone circle, as well as a hill-fort with a large standing stone in its interior, other earthworks on the eastern side by the road and an extensive settlement on its southern slopes by the Allan Water. The fort is situated on the south-west summit; it measures about 100 m by 30 m, and has 2 massive stony ramparts, with quarries and ditches. The standing stone does not appear to be related to the hill-fort, although it is inside it. A smaller settlement occupies the north-east half of the hill-fort's interior, containing a hut-circle and 2 other possible hut platforms. The stone circle is located on a shelf near the summit, and is egg-shaped. It has about 25 stones, with 13 still standing, in a ring measuring 16.5 × 13.4 m. One stone stood at least 1.5 m tall. The settlement to the east lies on the opposite side of the road from Dodburn Filter Cottage, straddling an unnamed sike. It extends about 140 m by 110 m and is a complex collection of enclosures, banks, ditches and mounds. Excavations in the early 1980s turned up numerous objects showing occupation from Iron Age to the post-mediæval period, and foundations were found for several round-houses, with multiple rebuilding phases. The settlement complex to the south lies on the east bank of the Allan Water, and covers about 120 m by 105 m, defined by 2 banks and a ditch, best preserved on the north-west side. An oval enclosure inside suggests multiple phases of occupation, but it is hard to make out details because of agricultural development, erosion from the river and the now marshy ground. A drainage ditch cut in 1985 resulted in an archaeological excavation (note the area is also known as 'Brugh' and pronounced bruf; it was written 'Brough Hill' in 1861).

the Burgh Improvement Act (thu-bu-ru-im-proov-min'-awkt) n. another name for the Police Act of 1861.

the Burgh Members' Plate (thu-bu-ru-mem-burz-plā') n. race ran on the Friday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

burgh o barony (bu-ru-o-baw-ri-nee) n. a burgh that was granted its charter by a nobleman rather than the crown (cf. Royal Burgh) – Hawick achieved this status at least by 15th June 1511, probably early in the 15th century.

Burgh Officer (bu-ru-o-fee-sur) n. in former times an employee of the Town, responsible for delivering official messages, as well as assisting the Sheriff Officer in maintaining law and order. It appears to have long been traditional that there are 2 such men. They would sometimes act as Sheriff Oficers themselves, assisting in Jedburgh and being the equivalent of the local police force. Duties sometimes also included being drummer, bellman or lamplighter, and the title is often synonymous with 'Halberdier'; however, in the early 18th century it seems that usually there were 2 officers, along with a drummer and a piper. The officers would announce deaths, as well as other events, such as the killing of a bullock. The last time an offender was 'drummed out of town' by the Burgh Officers was in 1824, with a sign pinned to him saying 'for pretending to be deaf and dumb'. In 1836 it is recorded that the three Burgh Officers were paid a total of £6 8s annually, with more than £7 for new clothes and almost £3 for 'Officers' extra jobs'. Formerly they had blue-grey coats with mulberry trim and brass buttons, replaced later with the familiar brown and yellow (for reasons that are unknown, with James Wilson in 1858 berating whoever was responsible for losing the traditional colours). Now this is an honorary position during the Common Riding. One of them delivers the official letter to the Cornet-Elect each year, receives a new shilling (the actual allowance given in the early 19th century) in return and transmits the acknowledgement back to the Provost's Council. In earlier times they also had official duties to perform for the Kirk Session, e.g. assisting during Communion days. It also seems that in early times each of the 2 Officers was assigned to a specific Bailie. There are records of Burgh Officers going back to the early 17th century. In 1702 the 'town's officer, piper, and drummer' were each allowed £6 Scots for new coats, showing that at this time they were separate positions. In order to save money (because of the debt from Teviot Brig) in 1747 the Council agree that the officers should only have 'coarse home-made cloth coats, and coarse hats', costing no more than 3 half-crowns and 14 pence, respectively. In 1753 the 2 officers were allowed an annual salary of 10 shillings 'on account of their age and infirmity'. In 1806 the Officers were prohibited from being present at the Council meetings. The post of Burgh Officer (for one of the 2 Halberdiers) remained officially within the Council until 1996, with the last 3 men being Robert Naylor, Bill Allan and George Milligan (see also Halberdiers).

the Burgh of Hawick (thu-bu-ru-ov-hIk) n. name given to one of the aircraft in the British Caledonian fleet in 1971. It was a BAC 1–11 type 201 AC, registration G–ASJH. It was later operated in the U.S.A., broken up at Southend, used to film an aircraft crash, and the hulk possibly now resides at St. Leonard's, Bournemouth.

Burgh Records (bu-ru-re-kōrdz) n. official records of the Town. The earliest existing Town Book begins on 1st October 1638 and is called 'The Court Book of the Towne & Burghe of Hawick'. It was carried on by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681, with many other books coming later. Additionally there were books of Town expenditures kept by the Burgh Treasurer. Although the early records are scanty, the entries are full of historical colour, and become more comprehensive as time progresses. The records from before 1638 were probably lost through the incursions of 'Englishmen and thieves'. These books are still stored in the Town Hall. Excerpts from the books make up a large part of James Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (1850) and some are also included in his 'Memories of Hawick' (1858), as well as in a series of early articles by William Norman Kennedy (1861) and David McBurnie Watson (1867–68) in the Archæological Society Transactions and in Craig & Laing's 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' (1898).

There has never been a full transcription made of the books.

the Burgh Seal (thu-bu-ru-seel) n. the official seal of Hawick, being the precursor of the town Coat of Arms. The design was carried out by John Sanderson, lapidary of Edinburgh, in 1817, in consultation with John Oliver, Town Clerk. It is composed of an open bible, with 1514 flag on the left and crowned heart on the right, with a lighted lamp over all on a black background. This was originally surrounded by a garland bearing the words 'Sigillum Burgi de Hawick' (Burgh Seal of Hawick), and surmounted by a castellated crest. Larger and smaller versions were made, both engraved onto pieces of jasper from Roberts' Linn. Several later variations were used, until the design was formally entered in the Public Register of Arms and Bearings in 1929. Note that a printing error in Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (copied in the Marquis of Bute's 1850 catalogue of seals) attributed part of Queen Mary's seal to Hawick's; this was corrected by Craig & Laing. In 1957 a scroll with the slogan 'Tyr-ibus Ye Tyr Ye Odin' was added. After Reorganisation Hawick lost its Burgh status and in 1977 the crest was changed to a coronet depicting leaves and pine cones, appropriate for use by a Community Council. An old carved plaque with the arms and the inscription 'Burgi de Hawick' is located on a wall near the bottom of the Hunder Steps.

Burgh Surveyor (bu-ru-sur-vā-ur) n. position under the old Town Council, being a person with engineering qualifications in charge of roads, sewage, etc. The last such official was George Bee. In earlier times there was someone appointed to be surveyor of weights and measures at the markets, the first such appointment being in 1774.

the Burgh Yaird (thu-bu-ru-yārd) n. workshops and storage yards of various council departments, situated between the western end of Commercial Road and the river. The first of the buildings was erected in 1885.

Burgon (bur-gin) n. Alex (1930–2020) born near Berwick, son of blacksmith James. He moved to Newmill with his parents in 1947 and helped his father at the smiddy. He joined the K.O.S.B. in 1953 as part of National Service, leaving as Lance-Corporal. He shod many horses in the Borders and also made trailers and horse boxes. In 1973 he moved the business to Loch Park and the firm did lots of work for Swinton the builders, as well as fixing snowploughs and grass-cutters. His skill with metal was recognised when he was asked by the Agricultural Training Board to run a welding course. He had the house 'Anvilla' built on Wellogate Brae in the mid-1970s. He retired in 1990 and sold his business, but devoted much of his time to restoring vintage cars. He was also known as a keen Mason, being Right Worshipful Master of Lodge 111 1967/8 (including the 200th anniversary celebrations), a member for 60 years and writing a history of the lodge in 1994. He followed the Cornet, was a member of the Probus Club and was an Elder at Teviothead Church. He was also a popular speaker at Burns Nights and lecturer on the subject of Gallipoli (where his father had served). He married Margaret Millar in 1953 and had 3 children, Mary, Sandy and Evelyn.

buriet (bi-ree') pp. buried – 'I dinnae want buriet in Wulton, boys, For although it's faisable near, I'd never ken o' a meenit's peace When I heard them roar and cheer' [DH].

burk (burk) v., arch. to murder so as to leave no marks on the body – '...Still toddlin on, an' zealous workin, Whether't be saving souls or burkin'' [JoHa] (named after the murderer William Burke).

burler (bur-lur) n. occupation in the tweed industry, similar to a specker in knitwear, a person who removes small imperfections in a garment. 'Burling irons' are essentially large tweezers.

burleyman (bur-lee-mun) n., arch. official of a town charged with enforcing the laws, another name for a Burgh officer or specially appointed Burgess. The word was formerly used in Hawick to refer to a number of Burgesses who were selected by the Magistrates to ride the marches, armed with spears or swords. The word is still used in Selkirk's Common Riding – '...ordeine John Hardie, maltman, and John Tudhope, wright, two ordinary sworne burleymen of the said town and brughe ...' [BR1688], 'May 4. Spent in Mr Weir's, in establishing 6 burlemen for the town, ...0 1 6' [BR1747], 'The Marches shall be rode as usual, and the Burleymen to be appointed and to dine as usual' [BR1809], 'Burley-men and halberdiers, and 'Drums i' the Walligate Pipes i the air ...' [DH] (from 'burgh law-man').

the Burleymen (thu-bur-lee-min) n., pl., arch. 12 men formerly appointed by the Council to accompany the Bailies in riding the marches. After the Division of the Common in 1777 the appointment became a courtesy one. From the end of the 18th century they rode the marches with only the Junior Bailie, accompanied by the Burgh Officers and 4 men carrying the 'flaughter spades'. They were last appointed in 1854, and after 1856 attendance of the Burleymen and Magistrates at the riding of the marches was discontinued.

Burlington Hoose (bur-lin-tin-hoos) n. name sometimes used for 25 North Bridge Street, formerly G. Allen Robinson's photographic studio. It was later the location of photographer William Scott Andison Ingles and then Redmayne the tailor.

burly-heidit (bur-lee-hee-dee', -di') adj., arch. rough in appearance – 'a burly-headit fallow' [JoJ].

burn (burn) n. a stream, brook – 'Ah, Tam! Gi'e me a Border burn . . . ' [JBS], 'Gie me the bonny broomy knowe, The burn that roond it rins, Wi' plash and spurt and peaceful purl, And mony outs and ins' [JEDM], '. . . bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an haa' [ECS], '. . . The Rhine, the Thames, the Amazon; of these all children learn But, how many know the magic of a lively Border burn?' [TD], 'Oh, ee're juist ma little troot i the burn' [DH], '. . . when the licht never fades beyond the under-water twilicht o a clear-rinnin burn' [DH] (from Old English; most local streams are known as 'Burn', with larger ones being 'Water' and smaller ones being 'syke').

Burn (burn) n. Elizabeth 'Betty' (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Synton in 1786, when she was working for Charles Riddell. Elspeth (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. She is probably the 'Elizabeth Burne, widow of Wm. Burnfield, chirurgeon' listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4; it is unclear who her husband might have been, but his surname was probably 'Bruntfield'. Bailie James (16th/17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in 1592, 1619 and 1622 (although it is possible the later ones were his son). He is probably also the Bailie of Hawick (along with Robert Scott of 'Auldtown') who was involved with the years long dispute with Douglas of Drulmanrig over a bond of 1601. Bailie James 'younger' (17th C.) probably the son of the above. He was on the 'leet' for the election of the Bailies in 1638 and was also mentioned the following year when he was one of 2 Hawick men who gathered money for the soldiers in the town. He was also probably the Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. He was Bailie in 1640/1, along with James Scott. In 1641 (while he was Bailie) he was put in the stocks for attacking Margaret Ross, 'Nurse' and cutting her forehead, apparently because he believed her to be a witch! He accused her of being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was probably the same James who was Bailie in 1648/9. He is probably the James who was a Bailie in the 1650s and 60s and who was a 'late bailie' when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1671 for Robert Wright, and in 1673 for Robert Dickson and Patrick Scoon. He is probably the Hawick Bailie of that name recorded in deeds in 1663 and 1673. He may be the 'Burn' (no forename given) who was Magistrate in 1675 when he was among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon (however, this could be the next generation). He may be the James who married Marion Scott, and whose children born in Hawick included Margaret (b.1643), Bessie (b.1644), Isobel (b.1647), Walter (b.1649), Marion (b.1650) and Marion (again, b.1652). It is possible he is also the James, married to Christian Scott, whose children included Margaret (b.1637) and Elspeth (b.1639); the witnesses in 1739 were William Scott (perhaps related to his wife) and John Liddersdale. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in 1639 for John Scott and Janet Scott. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) glover and Bailie in Hawick. He was recorded being Bailie several times in the 1710s and 1720s, specifically in 1713 and 1720. He was probably father of the next James. In 1706 he and glover John Scott were paid £20 Scots for providing coats 'for the use of the two officers, pyper, and drummer, att the Common-ryding in 1705'. He was probably the 'Burne' who was Bailie at the 1709 Common Riding and was Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed baptisms for fellow glover James Scott in 1702, 1707 and 1709, for Janet Bruntfield in 1703, for gardener James Falsyde in 1704, and with fellow glover William Bruntfield for another glover, Alexander Hislop, in 1705. He was recorded as Bailie in 1709 when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Gledstains, called 'Walter Alison' for wigmaker John Scott and for Bailie Robert Ruecastle, in 1712 for merchant Michael Scott and for John Wilson in Branxholme Town, in 1713 for Town Herd Adam Hobkirk, in 1714 for Bailie James Scott and for William Bruntfield, in 1715 for carrier Walter Deans (when perhaps incorrectly listed as a flesher), in 1718 for Robert Deans, in 1720 for smith William Whillans and for merchant Francis Scott, and in 1723 for shepherd Walter Dalgleish, for merchant Andrew Turnbull and for apothecary Walter Scott. He may be the same Bailie Burn who, in 1716, was rebuked for being at a late night drunken brawl at the house of Thomas Huggan, the rebuke being particularly sharp because he was both a Magistrate and an Elder! He was probably the 'Bilife Burne' recorded in 1723 when he was asked by the Council to 'take instruments against Stobes' (probably for encroachments on the Common). He may have been the only surviving son of Robert and Marion Burn, who inherited the lands of Croft Angry in 1728 and sold them to Walter Scott (of the Crumhaugh branch). In 1728 he gave a tenement and other lands in Hawick to Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch, in 'liferent'. He was also recorded as a skinner in Hawick, mentioned in 1743 as being recently Bailie; in that year he granted a disposition to Robert Scott, youngest son and heir of Walter Scott, uncle of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, for the lands of 'Croftangry'. He is also recorded in Edinburgh marriage records, when his daughters Beatrix married James Wilson in 1748 and Christian married Gilbert Gardner in 1751. He may also be the Bailie Burn recorded in 1734 as asking the Chamberlain (Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill) about why he removed the Bailies' seat in the Kirk. He married Christian Gledstains in Hawick in 1700. Their children included: Robert (b.1701); Francis (b.1703); Marie (b.1705); James (b.1706); Beatrix (b.1708); Alexander (b.1710); Francis (again, b.1712); Andrew (b.1713); Christian (b.1715); John (b.1717); Walter (b.1721); and James (again, b.1723). The witnesses in 1708 were weaver David Miller and gardener James Falsyde and in 1712 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and wright Francis Gledstains and in 1717 were Bailie James Scott and wright James Gledstains (who may have been related to his wife). James (b.c.1780) resident of Longnewton on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically her 'quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop and a half'. Her name was recorded as 'Burnes'. John (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged their behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as 'mekle Johne Burn in Branxholm', so he was presumably a tenant at Branxholme who was large in some way. John (b.1781) son of Rev. William of Minto. He was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, along with his brother Robert. Marion (b.1652) daughter of James and Marion Scott. She married Robert in 1678. Their son Alexander was born in Hawick in 1680 and Robert in 1685. In 1728 the lands of Croft Angry were regranted to her only surviving son, James. She could be the Marion who payed for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and the 'Maryon Burne, widow' listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Martin (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. He was recorded as 'Martyne Burne in Swenesteidis', which is probably Swinstead. Mungo (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may have served as factor or similar. Nichol (17th C.) said to have been one of the last of the wandering minstrels of the Borders. In 'The Roxburghe Ballads', reprinting broadsheets of the 1600s, published in 1847, the ballad called 'Leader Haughs and Yarrow' is attributed to 'Burne the Violer'. His name is usually written 'Nicol Burne', although there is no documentary evidence of who he was and when exactly he lived. It is possible that his name is confounded with the Scottish theologian of the 16th century. It is said that in his old age he found shelter with the Scotts of Thirlestane (or perhaps the Maitlands of the other Thirlestane). Robert (17th C.) witness for a baptism for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in 1680. Robert (b.1783) younger son of Rev. William of Minto. He was listed on the 1801 Militia ballot (meaning he must have been at least 19 by then), where it states that he was an apprentice to 'Dr Lindsay' (perhaps a doctor in Minto). Thomas (16th C.) owner of $1\frac{1}{2}$ particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Walter (d.bef. 1793) gardener in Hawick. His daughter Elizabeth married John Nourse in Edinburgh in 1793, and his daughter Janet married David Jackson there in 1794. He may be the Walter recorded in 1770 when 'Mr Glaidstains' was paid 'for toul at Walter Burns' port'. He may have been the Walter, son of James, who was born in Hawick in 1721. He may be the Walter who was manservant to William Scott of Whitehaugh, and who was owed wages after his employer's death in 1750. Possibly he was the Walter who married Janet Kerr in Wilton in 1752 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Mary (b.1757), James (b.1759), Janet (b.1761) and Elizabeth (b.1763). He was probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism (along with Archibald Henderson) for John Scott in 1765. He may be the deceased Walter 'Brown' whose wife Janet Kerr died in Hawick in 1800. William (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when a group of men, led by John Sinclair, came in the King's will for attempting to steal a trove of coins found at Minto Kirk. Although his name is listed, it is crossed out. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Rev. William (1744/5–1826) also referred to as 'Burns', he was born in Northumberland, although the details are unknown. It is said that his parents carried him out to the fields for safety and rocked him there in his cradle while the Highlanders came past in 1745. He graduated in Arts and qualified as a minister of the Episcopalian Church. In his early days he had the support of Henry Percy, Duke of Northumberland. He was for a while minister of a Church of England congregation and was later made minister of Pottergate Presbyterian Church, Alnwick in 1769. He was presented to Minto Parish (as successor to Thomas Somerville) by Sir Gilbert Elliot in late 1773, was admitted there the following year, and remained for the rest of his life. A new manse was built for him in 1773. He became a Burgess of Jedburgh in 1778 and obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1786. There is a letter from him in the Walter Mason collection from 1791. He paid the horse tax in Minto Parish in 1785–88. His sons Robert and Andrew were on the Militia ballot in 1801. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Margaret Ogle in 1771, and she died in 1836. Their children were: Anne Lockhart (1772–1847); George Percy (1773–1800), who died in Dominica; Margaret (b.1775); Isabella (1776–1842), who married John Leyden from Denholm; Anna Maria (1778–1854), who married Archibald Elliot and lived in Jedburgh; John, who died young; John (again, b.1781); and Robert (b.1783). He wrote a description of Minto Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account, but nothing else survives that he wrote while at Minto. He was said to be 6 feet 5 inches tall and broad-shouldered, and never missed a sermon through ill-health until 2 weeks before his death. He was buried in Minto Churchyard (formerly written 'Burne'; see also Burns).

burnbrae (burn-brā) n., arch. slope down which a stream flows – 'The hames that sent the reek asclent The burn-brae heughs aboon' [HSR] J. Jamieson describes it as 'The acclivity at the bottom of which a rivulet runs').

Burnbrae (burn-brā) n. former farm between the Rule and Jed valleys, lying to the west of Ashtrees (marked 'Burntbrae' on Stobie's 1770 map, with 'Burnkinfoord' marked just to the south-east).

Burne see Burn

Burnet (bur-ne') n. Alexander (1615–84) son of a minister in Lauder, he became chaplain to John Stewart, 1st Earl of Traquair. He fled to England after the National Covenant, then to Europe, returning to Scotland after the Restoration. He became Bishop of Aberdeen in 1663 and Archbishop of Glasgow in the following year. As supreme ecclesiastical, he held superiority over local lands. In 1664 he gave a charter of confirmation to William Bennet for the lands of Barnhills. He had a hard-line policy against non-conformity and was forced to resign as Archbishop in 1669. He moved again to England, but was reappointed to the Glasgow archbishopric in 1674. He is probably the 'Bishop of glaskow' who paid tax on land valued at £18 in Ashkirk Parish in 1678. He left again in 1678 to become Archbishop of St. Andrews, where he was buried. Rev. Alexander (b.1653) son of Edinburgh advodate Robert and Katherine Pearson, he was ordained minister of Crossmichael in about 1672. He was presented to Kirkton in late 1683, installed as minister in early 1684, but was translated to the Second Charge of the Canongate in 1685. He became minister of the first charge at Canongate 2 years later, but was deprived in 1689 for refusing to relinquish Episcopacy. He married Elizabeth Kirk, who died in 1696 and is buried in Greyfriars Kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) workman in Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He was at Wiltonburn in 1747. He married Janet Martin in Roberton in 1737. Their children included: Walter (b.1738) and John (b.1744), baptised in Hawick; and Margaret (b.1747) and Janet (b.1755), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1738 were weaver John Scott and Andrew Turnbull and in 1747 were Andrew Irvine and James Scott. Alexander (b.c.1780) 'Barnman' to William Pringle at Bedrule according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Alexander (1791–1876) born at Crosslee in Selkirkshire, son of Andrew and Isabel Nichol, he was a shepherd at Penchrise. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he was living with his daughters Helen and Jane. In 1861 there were 8 railway labourers also staying at the farm. He firstly married Elizabeth Cranston, who died in 1841. Their children included: Andrew (b.c.1815); Helen (b.c.1817); Jane (b.c.1827); Samuel S. (b.c.1839); and Elspeth (b.c.1841). He secondly married Elizabeth ('Betsy') Scott and their children included Margaret (b.c.1850), William (b.c.1852), James (b.c.1855) and Betsy (b.c.1858). He died at Galt in Ontario, Canada. Alexander (19th/20th C.) resident of Adderstonelee. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Margaret Hume in 1777. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1777. He could be the same Andrew 'Birinet' who in 1774 witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Turnbull and for Thomas Turnbull. Andrew (b.1829/30) born in Traquair, he was a local shepherd. In 1851 he was a shepherd living in the home of Walter Scott, farmer at Wiltonburn, with his future wife Helen Johnstone being a kitchen-maid there. He was shepherd at Teinsidebrae in 1861, and probably at Adderstonelee afterwards. In 1901 he was a retired shepherd living at Adderstone Cottage. In 1851 in Wilton Parish he married Helen Johnstone, who was from Cavers Parish. Their children included: Andrew; John (b.1857), who was a shepherd at Newton near Stobs; Robert Mitchell (b.1859); James (b.1862); Helen (b.1864); Mary (b.1867); Thomas (b.1870); and Thomas (again, b.1872). His wife was probably one of the '5 Johnstone sisters' whose 1910 photograph is in the Museum. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Wheathop' in 1701, when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Shiel (probably the minister of Roberton). His name appears to be 'Burnit' and he was probably tenant in Whithope in the Borthwick valley. James (d.1833) recorded as owner of a horse at Bellendean in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the horse tax there in the same year. He was joint tenant of Bellendean along with his son Robert from the 1820s until his death. James (19th C.) listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate in Pigot's 1837 directory. He must have been related to Robert, who was also listed. James 'Jim' (b.1856) son of shoemaker William. Like his younger brothers William and Robert, he played rugby for Hawick. He died in Wyoming. James (1825/6–98) from Gattonside, he was an architect. In about 1854 he became architect for the Buccleuch estates in Eskdale and Liddesdale. He worked on many buildings in those areas, both for the Duke and for others. He lived at Ewesbank in Langholm and died there. James (1891–1916) youngest son of shepherd John with his first wife Euphemia McLean. He worked as a railway surfaceman at Shankend. He served with the Black Watch in WWI. He was wounded at Loos in 1915 and was killed in action in the next year. He is commemorated on the Loos Memorial and the Slitrig War Memorial. James (19th/20th C.) lived at Langsyde in Hawick. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Jess see Jessie Crawford. John (15th C.) resident of Tushielaw, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was allowed to compone for pillaging Montbenger with the Scotts of Ewesdale, and resetting the 'traitor of Leven' and stealing sheep from William Hall in Tushielaw. His surety was Adam Scott of Annelshope. John (1857–1917) born in Wilton Parish, son of Andrew and Helen Johnstone. In 1901 he was shepherd at Newton near Stobs. In 1906 he was at Barnes when he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. His first and last ride in a car was when he got a lift from Stobs to Hawick by Dr. Hamilton, who scared him out of his wits by driving fast. He appears to have married Euphemia McLean and their children included: Andrew (b.1881); Samuel (b.c.1884); Helen (b.c.1885); John (b.c.1888); and James (1891–1916), killed in action in France. He secondly married Jessie, daughter of blacksmith Robbie Davidson and had at least one other child, Jessie (b.1900, married name Crawford), whose early stories about her family were transcribed. Mr. ?? (19th C.) tenant farmer at Pilmuir in the mid-to-late 1800s, when it was the location for the 'Curds and Whey' at the Common Riding. Robert (18th C.) resident of Edinburgh. In 1763 he married Elizabeth Scott, who was from Hawick. Robert (1790–1862) shoe and boot-maker of the Howegate, son of William and Wilhelmina Ogilvie. Thomas, also a shoemaker, was thus his brother. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is at about 1 Howegate in 1841 and 1851, along with William, his nephew. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate, along with William. In 1861 he is recorded as a farmer, unmarried, living with his nephew William. Robert (b.c.1805) son of James, he was farmer at Bellendean like his father before him. He was there in 1841, in 1851 was listed as farmer of 1716 acres, employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was farming 1000 acres and emplying 3 labourers. He married Janet (or 'Jessy' Paterson) in 1830. Their children included James (b.1831), Margaret

(b.1832), Francis (b.1834), Isabella (b.1836), Helen (b.1836), Robert (b.1840), Ann (b.1842) and George (b.1846). Robert (b.1860) son of William and Joan Smith. He was a prominent rugby forward. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from about 1882 and was Captain in 1887. He represented Britain in the side that toured Australia and New Zealand (for about 6 months!) for the first time in 1888. The team apparently also played some 'Australian Rules' games to help cover their costs. He later settled in Australia. Thomas (18th C.) see Thomas Birnie. Thomas (b.1784) son of William and Wilhelmina Ogilvie. He was a shoemaker on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. he married Alison Storie. In 1841 he was on the Kirk Wynd, along with wife Alison and children William (who also became a shoemaker), Alexander, Mina and Mary. Robert, who was also a shoemaker on the Howegate, was probably his brother. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1822. Thomas (1785–1864) from Yarrow, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was living at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish, on the 1851 census he was at Midlem Mill and in 1861 was a retirned shepherd at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Hastie (1788–1872) who was from Eskdalemuir, but died at Teviothead. Their children included Margaret, Thomas, Andrew, William and Janet (who married William Cochrane). William (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Willhelmina Ogilvie in 1784 and their children included: Thomas (b.1784); Alexander (b.1786); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1788); Robert (b.1790); Mary (b.1793); and James (b.1795). His wife 'Menie' died in 1798. William (d.1795) saddler in Hawick, whose death is registered. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Helen Ward, who was from Selkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the William, married to Janet Hardie, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Isabel (b.1766); and John (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were mason Andrew Turnbull and Alexander Bunyan. William (b.1823/4) shoemaker on the Howegate, cousin of William who was shoemaker at the Kirk Wynd. He is recorded with his shoemaker uncle Robert on the Howegate in 1841 and 1851. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate, along with Robert. He also farmed at Pilmuir. James Haining states that his shop was at 5 Howegate. However, in 1861 he was at 18 Howegate with wife Joan and children Margaret R., Jane, James and Robert. He donated a coin to the Museum in 1863, 'two adders, preserved in spirits' in 1868, a mammoth tooth in 1872 and a 'Welsh fishing reel' in 1877. He married Helen Joan, daughter of blacksmith James Smith. Their children included: Margaret Kennedy (b.1852); Jane Gardiner (b.1854); Jessie Oliver (b.1856), who probably died young; James 'Jim' (b.1858), who died in Wyoming; Robert (b.1860), rugby forward, who settled in Australia; William Hewitson (b.1862), rugby back, who moved to Lauder; Alexander Smith (b.1864); and John Smith (b.1868). His sons Jim, Robert and William were known as rugby players in Hawick. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. William (1828–1916) son of Thomas and Alison Storie. He was a a shoemaker, last surviving member of the 'eternal' council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgesses. He was cousin of another William, who was shoemaker on the Howegate. His premises at the top of the Kirk Wynd (No. 2) were formerly where the Episcopalian meeting house had been in the 18th century. He was later at 30 Drumlanrig Square. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Ann, Alison and Mina. Note that he is easy to confuse with the other shoemaker William (probably his cousin). One of them donated at least one coin to the Museum, as well as the 'leather holster used in carrying the town's standard since 1780' in 1862. William Hewitson 'Billy' (b.1862) son of William and Joan Smith. He played as a halfback for Hawick R.F.C. in the late 19th century. He also represented Britain on their 1888 Australia tour, along with his brother Robert and 'Lal' Laing. He later kept the Temperance Hotel in Lauder (also written 'Burnett'; note that this may have been locally pronounced Birnie).

the Burnets (thu-bur-netz) n. well-known shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries. Their shop was on the Howegate. They regularly attended Border fairs and markets. William was about the last of the line.

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. Burnfoot, area in the north-east part of Hawick, which was a former farm, developed as a housing estate after the War. The land there has a long history, being traceable back to the 15th century. The farm of Burnfoot, and part of Burnhead, was purchased in 1947, increasing the area of the Town by about 50%. It now houses around 1300 families, or about a quarter of the town's population, being the largest municipal housing undertaking in the Scottish Borders, but also one of the most deprived areas.

The estate contains a primary school and community centre, a cluster of shops, two churches and also an industrial estate at its eastern extremity. Burnfoot is its own ward for local council elections, and also has a separate Community Council. The former farm of Burnfoot, was named for being situated close to the foot of the Boonraw burn. In the late 1400s the Scott Lairds were referred to as 'of Nether Newhall', this being the earlier name for the area ('Over Newhall' being Burnhead). The first record of the lands being granted to the Scotts is in 1484, when they were part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear when the farm there was established, and who owned it in earlier times. The 'Guidman of Burnefute' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. Adam Scott owned the lands in 1643 when they were valued at £312. They also had the same value in 1663 and 1678. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690, when they transferred to Wilton, and they were still contained within the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. Robert Thomson and Robert Deans were living there in 1697. Robert Dickson was gardner there in 1709. Adam Scott of Burnfoot and Gavin Plummer sold the land to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. James Blaikie was there in 1721, Walter Scott in 1736, James Liddell in at least 1736–39, James Blyth in 1739, William Turner in 1741 and James Murray in 1747–51. The lands were valued at £156 in the 1740s. The 2 halves of Burnfoot were each valued at £156 in 1788 and 1811. There were Turnbulls there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Thomas Rule was servant there in 1797 and Robert Inglis and George Turnbull in 1799. Note that there is an entirely unrelated Burnfoot farm not far away in the Ale valley (sometimes called Burnfoot-on-Ale to distinguish it), another out along the Borthwick (also known as Borthwickbrae Burnfoot), a former one nearer to Roberton (also known as Roberton Burnfoot), and one more north of Langholm, as well as many Burnfoots elsewhere. Our local one was sometimes formerly referred to as 'Burnfoot on Teviot' to distinguish it – '... As dowie I gang for the Burnfit bus' [DH], 'By Burnfoot, yes, Burnfoot, for that's where I belong It's where I live ... and where I'll die, it's why I sing this song It has no history of its own, no tales of yesteryear ... But half the folk in Hawick live there, so kindly lend an ear ...' [NM] (the origin of the name is simply the foot of the stream; it is 'Burnefute' in 1550, 1561, 1585 and 1609, 'Burnfute' in 1551, 'Birnfutt' in 1553/4, 'Burnfitt' in 1643, 'Burnfoott' in 1663, 'the Burnfoot' in 1693 and 'Brunfoot' in 1697; it is marked 'Burnfoot' on Blaeu's 1654 map, with another 'Burnfoote' marked near to Hassendean, which is probably an error deriving from Pont's c.1590 manuscript).

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. Burnfoot, farm on the south side of the Ale valley, just where the Woo Burn joins. It was a seat of the Scotts of Burnfoot in the late 16th century and through the 17th. Residents recorded there in 1581 were David Shortreed, Walter Shortreed, John Dunlop and William Winthrope. Walter Scott of Burnfoot was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £400. Robert Scott of Burnfoot paid tax on the same value in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. In 1694 the Laird paid tax for 3 hearths there and there were also 3 other tenants listed (Andrew Mark, Robert Mark and Jean Brown). James Hill was tenant in 1697 and James Henderson was her in 1698. In the early 18th century it was inherited by Walter Scott, from his uncle, also Walter Scott. Walter Scott lived there himself in the period 1715–37 and sold it in 1736 to the Laings, Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch. John Laing was owner in the 1740s, when the lands were valued at £400. Andrew Irvine was tenant of 1/4 of the land in about 1748–52. A track to the south from here, meeting 4 other tracks on Wilton Common, was marked 'Burnfoot Road' on the 1764 map of Wilton Common. Hector Cockburn was there in 1765. Adam Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1797–1801. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (and still recorded this way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when valued at £400. In the 1830s it was the property of Allan Eliott Lockhart of Borthwickbrae. Adam Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. In 2011 a 13th century copper and clay sword pommel was discovered on the farm. It is occasionally referred to as 'Burnfoot on Ale' to distinguish it from other Burnfoots, especially the area in Wilton Parish only about 4 miles away – 'Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse' [WSB] (probably the 'Burnefute' of 1557, 'Burnfyt' in 1579, 'Burnefuyt' in 1579/80 and 'Burnfitt' in 1638; it is marked 'Burnfoote' on Blaeu's 1654 map and a mill is also marked there).

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. name in use locally for Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. Burnfoot, farm in the Ewes valley, just east of Fiddleton Toll, on the back road to Hermitage. This was probably site of the tower of 'Archie of Whitehaughe' (probably an Armstrong), recorded in 1590. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 1105 acres, bounded by Blackhall, Eweslees, Linhope and Carewoodrig. Mrs. Little was there in 1797. Alexander Pott was there in 1841.

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. farm in Eskdale. The estate was given to Rev. Robert Malcolm to supplement the meagre stipend when he became minister at Ewes Kirk. The cottage was extended by his son George to accommodate his family of 17! Most of the present house dates from the 1850s to 1880s. It was the home of the '4 Knights of Eskdale', sons of George. The house later fell on rough times, with Mary Palmer Douglas (nee Malcolm) being owner until her death in 1949 and the Palmer Douglas's selling it in 1962. It has since been renovated and changed hands several times.

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, near the foot of the Tinnis Burn. In 1541 it is listed as 'Burnfute' in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was valued at 2 merks and tenanted by Simon Forester. It is probably the 'burnfoott' in Castleton Parish listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694, with Archibald 'Arckstrong' as tenant, and Francis Elliot as another householder there (it is 'Tinnisburnfoot' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Burnfit (burn-fi') n. former name for a farmstead near the foot of the Larriston Burn in Castleton Parish. This is probably the 'Burnfit, in dominio de Liddisdaill' that in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth (it is 'Burnefoot' in 1691 and it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Burnfit Carnival (burn-fi'-kar-ni-vul) n. annual festivities organised in the Burnfoot housing estate since 1969. It was started by the Burnfoot Residents Association, and later run by the Community Council. The festival includes a procession, headed by a Carnival Cornet and Carnival Queen. The main area used now is the site of the former primary school buildings.

Burnfit Cottage (burn-fi'-ko'-eej) n. former cottage near the farm of Burnfoot the Ewes valley. James Scott and family were there in 1841.

Burnfit Cottages (burn-fi'-ko'-ee-jeez) n. small group of houses built in 1967 on the site of former railway cottages at the eastern extremity of Burnfoot, near where the road to Hornshole crosses the Boonraw Burn.

Burnfit Cutting (burn-fi'-ku'-in) n. cutting through the rock near Burnfoot, to allow the A7 to pass to the west of the Hillend Plantation. This is one of the best places in the vicinity of Hawick to see the folding of the underlying Silurian strata.

Burnfit Haugh (burn-fi'-hawch) n. flat area down Mansfield, further down than the area formerly referred to as 'Mansfield Park', it was largely developed for sewage and gas works in the latter part of the 19th century. Part of the land was purchased by the Burgh from Wilton Church in the late 1870s and the rest owned by the Duke of Buccleuch until the early 20th century.

Burnfit Industrial Estate (burn-fi'-in-dus-tree-ul-ee-stā') n. area developed in 1968 between the old railway line and the road, containing an abattoir and several factories, including over the years Barrie's, Slumberdown and Bantel.

the Burnfit Jungle (thu-burn-fi'-jung-gul) n. popular late 20th century name for the footpath along the north side of the Teviot between Mansfield and Hornshole – 'The wand'rin' Burnfoot path is graun', Lang by the river's side, To the weel kent Brig o' Hornshole, Where herts beat fu' wi' pride' [WFC].

Burnfit Kirk (burn-fi'-kirk) n. Burnfoot Church, built in 1955 by the Church of Scotland National Extension Committee to serve the new council estate. The site chosen is the highest point in the housing scheme. The church was designed by Alison & Hobkirk and has an entrance arch that has been described as having an arts-and-crafts influence. A new Parish of the Church of Scotland was formed out of part of Wilton, and the original building was a temporary wooden hut constructed on Fairhurst Drive in 1951. The church was granted full status in 1966, but linked with Wilton in 1973. A 50th anniversary booklet was published in 2001. The congregation was linked with Wilton in 2004. The church runs Girls' and Boys' Brigade units. A roll of the ministers is: Andrew C. Barr 1952–58; James W. Duncan 1958–66; Donald MacKay 1966–72; George Watson 1973–78; Colin Forrester-Paton (assistant and successor) 1970–83; James M. Cowie 1984–96; Charles Finnie 1997–2019.

Burnfit Manse (burn-fi'-mawns) n. former manse at 29 Wilton Hill.

Burnfit Mill (burn-fi'-mil) n. former corn-mill in Burnfoot, existing in the 17th and 18th centuries and also sometimes called 'Wester Burnfoot Mill'. It was situated near the foot of the Boonraw Burn, and on the opposite side of the Teviot from Haughhead. Robert Roger was there in 1612. Thomas Deans was tenant of the mill and mill lands in the early 18th century. The Duke of Buccleuch's tenant there from at least 1722 until about 1750 was James Scott, also miller at Crawhill and later miller at Hawick Mill. Archibald Goodfellow was also recorded there in 1744. In 1748 the Duke of Buccleuch arranged for the exchange of a part of his 'Trinity lands' with a piece of Mansefield that he wanted for carrying water to his mill, presumably referring to a mill lade. Thomas Deans was tenant of the mill and mill lands in the mid-18th century. Robert Liddell was living there in 1770 and James Linton in 1801. Farm workers Alexander Tait and Walter Brydon lived there in 1841. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with the mill lade and sluices indicated (it is 'Bruntfoot Mylne' in 1705 and 'w: burnfoott miln' in 1722).

Burnfit Mill (burn-fi'-mil) n. probable corn-mill at Burnfoot on Ale. It is recorded in 1581 that Margaret Scott, widow of William of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent 'of Scheilliswod with half the miln called Burnefuytmilne with pertinents' in the Barony of Ashkirk, to her son William. Also in 1581 William Scott in Burnfoot gave half of the mill to his future wife Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly (it is 'Burnefuyt Mylne' in 1581).

Burnfit Mill Haugh (burn-fi'-mil-hawch) n. former name for a meadow near Burnfoot Mill, essentially the same area as Burnfit Haugh.

Burnfit Road (burn-fi'-rōd) n. Burnfoot Road, once a country lane leading towards Minto, it was realigned and houses built in 1949–58, forming one of the main roads of the Burnfoot housing scheme.

Burnfit Roadhoose (burn-fi'-rōd-hoos) n. public house on Burnfoot Road, often known simply as 'the Roadhoose'. It opened in 1958 and became a central hub for social activity in the community. It was closed for several years, but reopened in 2015 as Burnfoot Community Hub.

Burnfit Schuil (burn-fi'-skil) n. Burnfoot Primary School on Kenilworth Avenue, built 1952, and serving the neighbouring area. It was refurbished extensively in 1995. Recently it was renamed the Burnfoot New Community, and incorporates a community centre. Records for the period 1951–75 are in the National Archives.

Burnfitshiel (burn-fi'-sheel) n. Burnfootshiel, former farmstead just to the north-east of Shielswood Loch and south of Burnfoot-on-Ale.

Burnflat (burn-flaw') n. area around the meadow adjacent to the Smaile Burn, overlapping with Haggishaa, although perhaps a little further south. The name is specifically used to refer to the former group of houses along a lane reached from the northern end of the Golf Course, which was famous as the birthplace of 'Old Mortality'; the houses consisted of a single row of low cottages. The piece of land so named was originally bounded by the Common, the Slitrig and the Smaile Burn. It was feued by Simon of Routledge (Hawick's first known Burgess) in 1433 and sold to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448/9; it was said to extend as far as the Smaile Burn. The area marked the eastern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, and there is a historical sketch of it by Tom Scott in 1898. In 1627 it was 'estimat to pay 4 bolls in stok, 1 in teynd'. It was described as a 'one merk land' in 1653 when granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill. At least some of it appears to have been part of Rev. Patrick Cunningham's lands in the 1678 county valuation; by 1788 George Oliver is recorded as owner of that part at Burnflat valued at £40. James Hobkirk is recorded as a 'casier coater to Walter Paterson' (i.e. road-layer living in a cottage) there in 1708. Walter Paterson asked the Bailies and Council to mark the boundary between his lands there and the Common in 1713, and 17 stones were then set out. The lands were still valued at £40 in the 1740s. It was said to have been sold by William Paterson in 1753. Part of the land there was gained by Robert Oliver after the Division of the Common. Ebenezer Scott was living there in 1797. George Oliver held the lands according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when they were valued at £40; John Oliver of Borthaugh held the lands in about 1874. Until the early 20th century the houses there were separated from those at the top of the Loan by about quarter of a mile of fields. These houses were incorporated into the Burgh boundaries in 1861, and the cottages can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (and others later). They fell into a dilapidated condition, some were demolished about 1939, the Paterson cottage being preserved, but also demolished following a fire in 1991. More recently there has been housing development to the west of Burnflat Brae, and a new development called Paterson Gardens in 2006. The area was also site of the worst Common-Riding accident in 1919, when the brakes failed on a bus returning passengers from the Mair, killing 3 men on board and 2 boys who were walking past (also spelled 'Burnflatt' in older documents; the name occurs at least as early as 1433 and is 'Burneflatt' in 1713).

Burnflat Brae (burn-flaw'-brā) n. road running through the Burnflat area, being the continuation of Rosebank Road. The first house was built in 1856, with others following in 1865. The street was previously known as 'Haggishaa Brae', with the newer name adopted in 1868, although the former name is still used interchangeably. Further houses were built in the 1990s, when the Drive and Lane were also added.

Burnflat Drive (burn-flaw'-drīv) n. small development of houses to the west of Burnflat Brae, built in the 1990s.

Burnflat Lane (burn-flaw'-lān) n. short street of housing off Burnflat Brae, lying to the north of Burnflat Drive, developed in the 1990s.

Burnfoot see Burnfit

Burnfoot (burn-foo') n. house and farm about 4 miles up the Esk from Langholm, home of the Malcolms, including the famous Maj. Gen. Sir John Malcolm (1769–1833) for whom there is a memorial obelisk on Whita Hill. There are several other farms or settlements with the same name around Scotland.

the Burnford (thu-burn-fōrd) n. specific part of Burnflat where Hawick Common began, being next to the roadway at the bottom of the Vertish. This must have once been where the road to the Common crossed the Smaile Burn. The 1514 Club erected a cairn to mark the site in 1987, this being the boundary of the Common lying closest to the Town. The cairn was built from granite setts formerly used in the High Street – '... the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South' [BR1734] (formerly written 'Burnfoord').

burngate (burn-gā') n., arch. a small watercourse – 'To our right and left on either side of the hill, are two lovely burngates, down which rushes the mossy water ...' [BM1904], 'Great indeed have been the changes in this burngate' [JBB].

Burngrains (burn-grānz) n. steading on the Meikledale Burn, just above the farm of Meikledale, to the west of the A7 in Dumfriesshire. It was described as a 5-merk land in 1550, when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It was a home of a branch of the Elliots around 1600, with Andrew being recorded there in 1595. It is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 1375 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Bush, lands owned by Sir William Johnstone, Stennieswater and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. It was occupied in 1841. Just to the north-east are the remains of a settlement on a terrace (it is 'Burngranes' in 1550, 'Burnegranes' and 'Burgranes' in 1608 and 'Burnegraynes' in 1663; it is marked on Crawford's 1804 map).

Burngrove (burn-grōv) n. area in Wilton that had previously been called 'Crawhill' and later became Bucklands. It was also referred to as Burngrove Park. John Turnbull was shepherd there in 1851. It is part of what was formerly known as Burnfoot or Nether Newhall. It is also the name of a house in Wilton Dean.

Burnham (burn-ham) n. Thomas (13th/14th C.) Sheriff of Lincolnshire. In 1292 he was appointed by Edward I as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. However, Alexander de Sinton is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirk (and probably also Keeper of the Forest) in 1293. He was also Constable of Jedburgh Castle according to a document in the period 1295–8 and was mentioned in a court case of the English armny at Berwick in 1296. His name is usually written 'de Burnham'.

burnheid (burn-heed) n. the area near the source of a stream.

Burnheid (burn-heed) n. Burnhead farm and surrounding area, comprising the land just north of Burnfoot, and deriving its name from the Boonraw Burn. A 16th century 3-storey peel tower is incorporated into the north-eastern end of the house. The first-floor barrel-vaulted rooms and second storey walls remain, with evidence of a parapet-walk on the northern gable; the original tower had one more level, and the roof is entirely modern. It measures about 9.5 m by 7 m. A large cupboard in the room on the upper floor was known as 'the laird's bedroom'. The construction was similar to that of Goldielands. The farm was for centuries in the hands of a branch of the Scotts, descended from James of Kirkurd, who was second son of Sir Walter, the 6th Laird of Buccleuch. The lands were formerly called 'Over

Newhall' and were granted to James by the superior of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton in 1484. Walter Scott 'in le newhalburnhed' was recorded in 1502. It is sometimes stated that an early owner was 'Hobbie Elliot', but this is confusion with the place of the same name in Liddesdale. The lands were valued at £156 in 1643 and in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (and listed under Hassendean Parish). William Scott of Clarilaw was owner in 1678, when the value was the same. The lands appear to have been possessed by the Scotts of Burnfoot until 1692 when it became a separate Lairdship. The lands were in Hassendean Parish until they became part of Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid for 3 hearths for 'Burnhead his hous' in 1694, with the other householders (probably tenants) there at the time being Robert Scott and William Scott. Part of the area was also farmed by the Minister of Wilton. James Murray was a weaver there in 1709 and George Scott a shepherd. John Miller was recorded there in 1726, Archibald Scott in 1726–36, Adam Armstrong in 1728, William Fulton in 1747 and Patrick Black in 1751. The estate of Robert Scott of Burnhead was valued at £380 in the 1740s. The farm itself was still valued at £156 in 1788, when owned by William Scott (who is also recorded there in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). William Turnbull was a servant there in 1801. The lands passed from the Scotts of Burnhead through the female line to the Watsons in 1815. The mottos of the Scotts of Burnhead are 'In recto decus' and 'Nemo sibi nascitur'. Thomas Usher and William Young are recorded as farmers there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Adam Young was farmer there in 1841 and 1851 and William Scott in 1868. A painting exists showing what the tower looked like around the early 19th century. The farmhouse was added to the tower in 1858 – 'When oo' passed Burnheid and ower the Knowe by Galalaw me heart began tae loup, loup, loup and I could fain hae grutten' [JEDM] (it was 'Burneheid' in 1579/80; a place of this name is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and also Pont's 1590s manuscript, but close to Standhill, which may have been an error; there are many places of the same name in Dumfriesshire and elsewhere).

Burnheid (burn-heed) n. former lands of the Elliots, probably in Liddesdale and not the place of the same name near Hawick. It is unclear which Burn is referred to in the name, but it seems that the family of that designation were intimately related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. The earliest reference seems to be in 1581, when Jock's Willie Elliot was released from ward for the 'gang of Bernheidis', with Hob Elliot (brother of Gavin's Jock of Ramsiegill) remaining as pledge for the 'haill gang of the Burnehedis'. In a letter of 1583, written by the English wardens, the branch called 'the Borneheedes' is listed as Jock of Ramsiegill, 'Curst Hobbe', Adam 'Condus', Archie of the Hill, Jock of the Hill and Jock 'Halfe loges'. The earliest known Laird was 'Hobbie Ellott', who was accused of engaging in a foray in 1584, with 'Bramche' of the Burnhead, complaining of a raid on his lands by the English perhaps a few years later. This 'Hobbie' was probably the same as 'Robin Ellott the laird of Borneheades' recorded in 1589 and may be the same man as 'Ill Hob', who was a son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. 'Gawins Jok' was listed (along with 'Ade Cowdais') under that heading in Monipennie's c.1594 list of Border chiefs. However, there is no sign of the placename after the late 16th century, making it impossible to guess where it might have been (it is 'Bernheidis' in 1581, 'Burneheades' in 1584, 'Borneheades' in 1589 and 'Burnheedes' and 'Burne heades' in 1590).

Burnheid Road (burn-heed-rōd) n. Burnhead Road, the furthest part of Burnfoot, with houses built 1953–60, and named after the adjacent farm.

Burnheid Sike (burn-heed-sīk) n. Burnhead Sike, small stream to the south-east of Wolfelee Hill, which runs roughly south to join the Wolfelee Burn. Near the head of the stream there was a ditch that ran north-east towards the head of the Spar Sike, being crossed by part of the Wheel Causeway. It was probably a land boundary, but has been destroyed by forestry planting. There are also sheepfolds and enclosures in the area.

Burnheid Toor (burn-heed-toor) n. Burnhead Tower, small 16th century fortified house, incorporated within the modern farmhouse at Burnhead. In lay-out and construction it is similar to Goldielands Tower. It is a grade B listed building.

Burnhoose (burn-hoos) n. Burnhouse, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in c.1376 as 'Burnehouse', with a value of 3 shillings and 4 pence. In 1541 it was 'Burnehous' (and separately 'Burnhous' along with 'Gilschaw'), and vacant at that time.

burnie (bur-nee) n., poet. a small stream or an affectionate term for a stream – 'Deep in the glen, a burnie winds its way, Where saughs and osiers mirk the face o' day' [CPM], 'I wander'd down the burnie side, Until my feet were wet wi' dew' [JTe], 'The daisies are re-appearing, the burnies gush in tune; Like crystal clear they'll sparkle, An' 'twere

the month of June' [JTe], '... Whilst 'mongst the bushes, by her burnies sheen, As gloaming covers 'the wild glen sae green' ' [JoHa], '... An' by the burnie meet wi' her, the fairest, best o' a' ' [JoHa], ... Let's wander by the burnie's side, Or on the uplands green' [JJ], 'Where the burnie rushes broon ower the rocky water-fa', An' weets the birken-boughs wi' its foamin' ' [JJ], '... And its burnies rinnin' free Is the fairest spot o' a' ' [TK], '... The soond o' the wee burnie's wimple' [WS], 'How oft I walk where Burnies rin, where darting trouts jouk out and in' [JCa], 'There's the little burnie sighin' By the cosie bracken bed ... ' [JT].

Burnkinford (burn-kin-fōrd) n. former farmstead in Abbotrule Parish, also known as Bairnkine. It is marked on Stobie's 1770 map, close to the modern Ruletownhead. Thomas Sinton was a labourer there in 1799. It was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls along with parts of Ruletownhead and 'Bossithill', when owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and split between Southdean and Hobkirk Parish; the lands had previously been owned by George Elliot, with a total value of about £224.

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. farm just south of Saughtree (not to be confused with the other farm of the same name, which lies much further south in Castleton Parish). This may be the farm where 'Will Ellot of the Burnmouthis' resided in 1563/4, when he was accused of crimes against an Englishman. 5 sheep of John Nixon's were stolen from there about 1624. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632. It is probably the Burnmouth where Robert Young lived in 1694 and where James Hall lived in 1699. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it appears to be combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Harden and Howden. The farmhouse seems to be in the same place as the modern one and the combined farm covered 881 acres, bounded by Thorlieshope, Larriston, Riccarton, Pinglehole and Saughtree, with a small part on the north side of the Liddell. George Elliot was there in 1748. It is probably the Burnmouth where John Elliot paid tax for 13 windows in 1748 and where William Pott was a farm servant in 1801. John Elliot was farmer there in 1851 and 1861 and there were 8 huts nearby housing railway workers at that time. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ford instead of the current bridge over the Liddel, as well as stepping stones. There was once a tower there according to Pont and Blaeu. There is a block there, which is a triangulation marker (marked 'Bournemouln' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Upper Burnmouth on Stobie's 1770 map; it was 'Burnemouth' in 1624 and 1662).

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. lands in the south part of Castleton Parish, to the west of Kershopefoot, formerly split into Upper and Nether Burnmouth. It is now marked on maps as the farm of Under Burnmouth. Note the confusion with the other Burnmouth further north in the same Parish, near Saughtree. In 1541 it was valued at 20 shillings, with tenants James and Henry Henrison. In 1634 the 20-shilling lands of 'Burnemouthe' were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. William Elliot was indweller there in 1687. John Armstrong was there in the mid-1700s. This is probably the Burnmouth where John Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797 and the 'Nether Burnmouth' where Adam Armstrong was farmer at the same time. William Scott, mason and author of 'Border Exploits' lived at the schoolhouse there, and it was the birthplace of his son Andrew, Professor of Oriental Languages at Aberdeen University in 1800. John Byers was recorded as Schoolmaster there and Thomas Armstrong was a labourer, on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas Waugh was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. John Murray was farmer in 1861. There was a small school there, by the main road, which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 lists the 'Lands of Burnmouth, standing in name of William Oliver of Dinlabyre & forming part of Greena', being owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £101 14s (it is marked as 'Bacrmouth' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Baermouth' on Blaeu's c.1654 map, while 'Nether Burnmouth' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. Burnmouth, a village south of Eyemouth, partly at the foot of the cliffs. Two treaties were signed here between Scotland and England in 1384 and 1497.

Burnmooth Schuil (burn-mooth-skil) n. small school at Under Burnmouth, south of Newcastleton in the 19th century. It served pupils in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It opened in 1805. In the 1830s there were about 20 pupils. William Scott was teacher there from 1810, and still recorded in 1837 and 1841. James Lewis was there in 1851 and John Hardie in the 1860s.

Burn-Murdoch (burn-mur-doch) n. Rev. Aidan Michael (1935–2023) son of Dr. Hector and Katharine Mary Bruce. He attended Trinity College, Cambridge and became an Episcopalian Priest in Durham, then Tutor at Ridley Hall and lecturer at Bishop's College, Culcutta. He served congregations in Cambuslang, Uddingston, Eyemouth and Gower in Wales. He was Rector of St. Cuthbert's Kirk in Hawick 1970–77, moving afterwards to Swansea. There was said to have been a split among members of the congregation during his time as Rector. He retired in 1997, but had post-retirement posts in Jedburgh and Eyemouth. He married Susan Henderson and their children were Rachel Margaret, Alastair Michael and Colin John. He later married Aleksandra Grazyna Górna and Sarah Cheriyan. He died in Bothwell.

Burn Park (burn-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the left of the road after the entrance to the racecourse.

Burn Raw (burn-raw) n. former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. These were the houses on the low road alongside the burn, close to the green. The name is recorded in 1841 and 1851, but disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Burnrig (burn-rig) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as 'Burnerig' in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Corbet.

burns (burnz) n., pl. streams. Those joining the Teviot from the north include (not omitting the larger Waters): Deep Grain; Mid Grain; Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Falnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Weens Sike; Kid Sike; Teindside Burn; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; Newmill Burn; Branxholme Burn (or Bloody Burn); Borthwick Water; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Stirches Burn; Boonraw Burn; Hassendean Burn; Cockerscaur Burn; Grinding Burn; Minto Burn; Craigend Burn; Barnhills Burn; Chesters Burn; Ale Water; Nisbet Burn; and Tinkler Burn. Those joining the Teviot from the south include: Wester Cleuch Burn; Mid Cleuch Burn; Easter Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike; Giddenscleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Nest Burn (and Dovecote Burn); Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch Burn; Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Haysike Burn; Slitrig Water; Kirkton Burn (or Trow Burn); Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Rule Water; Newton Burn; Knowesouth Burn; Timpendean Burn; Jed Water; Oxnam Water; and Kale Water. Tributaries of the Slitrig include: Flosh Burn; Leap Burn; Lang Burn; Langside Burn; Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby's Sike; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Smaile Burn.

the Burns (thu-burnz) n. remote shepherd's cottage in Southdean Parish, on the Black Burn, to the east of the hill-fort system at Tamshiel Rig. The older name for the cottage was Tamshielhaugh. Labourer Charles Scott was there in 1841. William Telfer and family were there in the 1860s. Some large square stones found there (described by J. Edgar in 1934) were suggestive of the existence of a bridge, but if so it is unclear to what road or century it might belong.

Burns (burnz) n. Alexander (b.1778/9–1862) originally from Hownam Parish he was an agricultural labourer and shepherd in Lilliesleaf, Wilton and Cavers Parishes. In 1841 he was at Shankendshiels and in 1851 and 1861 was living on Sunnyside. In 1803 in Bedrule he married Agnes (or Nancy) Jeffrey, who was from Stichill; she died in 1867, aged 83. Their children included: John (b.1806), who lived near Ancrum and then in Wilton; James (b.1811); William (b.1813), tailor in Hawick; Thomas (b.1815); Alexander (b.1820); Robert (b.1824); and George (b.1826). Alexander (b.1820) born in Wilton Parish, son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey. He married Janet Nichol in Castleton in 1858. He was a shepherd living at Sunnyside in 1861. Their children included Alexander (b.1860/1). Alexander 'Sandy', 'the Skipper' (19th/20th C.) worker in Pesco's and rugby player for Hawick R.F.C. He became an apprentice frame-worker in 1899 and was later a Shop Foreman, serving at Pesco's for more than 50 years. He was a half-back for the Greens and was Captain in the 1907/8 and 1908/9 seasons, leading the team that year's Scottish Championship to a grand total of 305 points for to only 44 against. He had to give up rugby due to a shoulder injury, but was on the committee for many years. Alexander (20th C.) owner of the Royal Bar at the top of the Howegate. Andrew (b.1850) son of George and Jane Mein, he was born in Selkirk, but grew up in Hawick, where his father ran the Railway Hotel. He worked as a woolsorter and was Cornet in 1869, following his half-brother John Ferguson in 1861. Daniel (b.1812/3) from Ireland, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living in Upper Row in Wilton Dean and in 1861 at 23 Loan. In 1865 he gave evidence at the trial for the robbery at the Museum. He is probably the 'Mr D. Burns' who in 1874 donated to the Museum 'Johnny Hope's chair'. His wife was Mary (from Annan) and their children included Helen, James, Margaret, Mary and John. George (b.1811/2) born in Jedburgh, he was a hotel keeper in Selkirk, being at the Crown Inn there in 1851. He subsequently moved to Hawick, becoming proprietor of the Railway Hotel in Wilton. In 1861 he is recorded there with his wife Jane, and children Betsy, Andrew (who was Cornet in 1869), Agnes and Helen. Later in the 1860s he was proprietor of the Victoria Hotel and was listed at the Crown Hotel in Hawick in 1868. His widow Jane was hotel-keeper at the Crown in 1871. He was step-father of John Mein Ferguson, who was Cornet in 1861. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living on Main Street with his wife Janet and sons James and George. John (b.1806–89) son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Broom Moor near Ancrum. In 1851 he was a woollen factory nightwatchman on Upper Damside and in 1861 was a Master Gardener at the same address. He married Janet Rae and their children included: Christian; Agnes (b.1836), who married Thomas Rutherford; Margaret (b.1839); and Alexander (b.1841). In 1866 he secondly married his cousin Betsy, daughter of George Swanston. Robert 'Rabbie' (1759–1796) poet from Ayrshire, son of a tenant farmer, he became the most famous poet in Scotland, writing often in a Scots dialect. He never visited Hawick, but on his Borders tour of 1787 he came as close as Wauchope and Wells, walking up to the summit of Bonchester Hill and to Wolfelee Hill. Other local connections are: Burns' brother Gilbert declined an invitation to a celebratory dinner in 1820 (the letter is in the Museum, written to Bailie Robert Armstrong); Adam Armstrong from Hobkirk (and dux at Hawick Grammar School) married Isabella Lindsay from Jedburgh, who is written about in Burns' journal; Thomas Brown, born in Hawick around 1823 married Burns granddaughter Jane Emma, and for a while was caretaker at Burns House in Dumfries; Gavin Turnbull, also a poet and friend of Burns, was born in Hawick in 1764; the lines 'Your pin wad help ti mend a mill In time o' need' is said to have been inspired by the mythical story of the giant haggis served at Haggishaa; Burns mentions Teviotdale in one poem ('Epistle To J. Lapraik'); a cup and saucer belonging to the poet were exhibited in the Museum in 1859; Burns Road in Burnfoot was named after the poet in 1953; Francis George Scott set many of his poems to music; and James Thomson wrote 'The Star o' Robbie Burns' in 1879. There were celebrations around Scotland to mark his 100th anniversary, with Hawick being no exception. Businesses closed at 2 p.m., with the main dinner being in the Tower Hotel (intended for 80, but more tickets having to be sold), with the 'immortal memory' being given by Henry Scott Riddell. There was also a dinner at the Commercial Inn for 400 people, and smaller gatherings at the Crown, the Plough, the Ewe and Lamb, the Half-Moon Hotel and the Railway Hotel. In Denholm about 140 people gathered in the Old Swan Inn, in Lilliesleaf 220 people gathered in the school, and in Newcastleton there were soirees in the Grapes Hotel and the Commercial Inn – 'Let kings and courtiers rise and fa', This world has mony turns, But brightly beams aboon them a', The star o' Robbie Burns' [JT], '. . . The frailty of mankind he kent, baith cottar and the laird, So render thanks for Rabbie Burns, and for the works he dared' [WFC], 'They'll hae oor puddens oot by turns, We'll get oor paiks! A' owre-the-heid o' Rabbie Burns, Yon king o' raiks!' [DH]. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who was known as a singer and acted as a judge at the Common-Riding Races. Rev. Stewart (1855–1935) born in Dundee, son of bank manager William and Marjory Gray. He was educated in Dundee and at St. Andrews University and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1878. He was assistant at Portmoak and at Lady Yester's in Edinburgh and was ordained as minister at St. Mary's in March 1880. Only a few months later he had to deal with the church being closed for more than a year following the fire of November 1880. He organised a bazaar to raise funds for a manse in 1884. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He demitted his charge in 1925. He married Elizabeth Carruthers Murray, daughter of teacher William, and she died in 1934, aged 71. Their children were Janet Murray Dow (or 'Jenny', a nurse in Edinburgh) and Marjory Gray (who died young). William (1813–73) born in Wilton Parish, son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey. He was a tailor on the High Street. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Tait's Close, near 29 High Street and in Slater's 1852 directory he was on the Punchbowl Close (either next door, or perhaps the same address is meant). In 1851 he was employing 5 men and by 1861 he was at 30 High Street. In 1873 he donated to the Museum 'a number of the Reading Mercury, 1723'. He married Agnes Crawford (from Ashkirk) in 1836 and she died in 1891, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes the Burns Club (thu-burnz-klub) n. a social organisation devoted to preservation of the memory of Robert Burns, the Hawick club being founded in 1878. This followed a more informal club that lasted a few years from 1862, and even earlier dinners in the Tower Inn on Burns night, which had started in 1815 (and had addresses usually delivered by Robert Wilson). The club moved location regularly through the rest of the 19th century, and was teetotal for a while! It first had its own premises in the Howegate in 1895, then purchased property at 12 Teviot Crescent in 1899, becoming a member of the Scottish Burns Federation in 1914, moving into the present purpose-built premises in 1928 (with this date carved above the main door), and women admitted from 1958. The building on Albert Road was designed by George Scott and built by J. Marshall & Co. It was constructed on part of a lane leading to the river and also on the site of a public toilet; the site had earlier been the location for Hawick's first gas works. Pringle Hall was added in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, treasurer for 37 years, and the Hunter Lounge was named after Tom Hunter who was Secretary for 19 years. A bust of Burns (by Alex Pirnie) was recently placed above the front door. The club has effectively replaced a Labour Party club in town through much of its history. A centenary booklet, 'A Hundred Years are Gane and Mair' was written by R.E. Scott (1978).

burnside (burn-sīd) n. the banks of a stream – '...and it appeared to be offendit, for it left the house and gaed away down the burn side' [LHTB], 'By moor and moss and river, To the swish of swathed grass, And burnside reeds aquiver, The dead mosstroopers pass' [RSC].

Burnside (burn-sīd) n. former name for lands around Hassendean or Chamberlain Newton, for which Alexander Lord Home was superior in 1562/3 when he tried to remove his 'pretended tenants'. A mill there is also mentioned. It may be associated with Burnfoot or Burnhead.

Burnside Moss (burn-sīd-mos) n. area in Liddesdale, to the south of the foot of Hartsgarth Burn.

the Burns Inn (thu-burnz-in) n. former hostelry at 2 Buccleuch Street, run by Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson in the first half of the 19th century. The building dates from the early 1800s, was later the house and shop belonging to James Elliot, and was restored in 1992. It forms the end block of Buccleuch Street. The pub sign showed a half-length portrait of the Bard with the motto 'The muse found me, as the prophetic bard Elijah found Elisha, at the plough, and cast her inspiring mantle over me'.

Burns Night (burnz-nī') n. the evening of the anniversary of Burns birth, 25th January, when Burns Suppers are often held. The first such event in Hawick was in 1815 in the Tower Inn, and this group held an annual event for several years. There were entertainments in the main hall of the Commercial Inn for Burns centenary in 1859, as well as many celebrations elsewhere (e.g. in the barn at Weens, apparently without alcohol!). The celebrations have been a regular annual event in Hawick since at least the formation of the Burns Club in 1878. Nowadays many of the Town's social organisations hold their own event, so that the calendar at the end of January can be very full.

Burns Plantin (burnz-plawn'-in) n. former plantation (now deep within the forest) in Southdean Parish, located on the north side of the Black Burn, south-east of Charlie's Knowe. There is an oval earthwork there, surrounded by a ruined wall of earth and stone. It may be an Iron Age settlement.

Burns Road (burnz-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, connecting Burnfoot Road with Queen's Drive, built in 1953 and named after Robert Burns.

Burns Supper (burnz-su-pur) n. feast held on or near Burns Night, traditionally consisting of haggis, recitations of Burns poems, oat-cakes and whisky, often following a formal schedule.

Burnt Craigs (burn'-krāgz) n. hilly area on the north-east slopes of the Pike, lying south-east of Penchrise and about 6 miles south of Hawick. A plantation lying between Penchrise Pen and the Pike is known as Burnt Craig Wood (also sometimes 'Brunt Craig').

Burntroads (burn'-rōdz, bur-in'-rōdz) n. former name for an area around Liddesdale Road and extending beyond the old railway line to the south-east (origin suggestive of a track through a burnt moor).

Burton (bur'-in) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Howpasley, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. John (18th C.) married Janet Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1781. John (b.c.1780) gardener at Wilton Lodge according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He could be the John, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Isabel ws baptised in Wilton in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. The Elizabeth listed as 'Ind.' in 1841 may be his widow. Robert H. (1885–1950) local athlete who competed in the 800 m at the 1912 Stockholm Olympics. He was probably born in Hawick (although some sources suggest Aberdeen). He lived for a while at Tweedmouth, working as a timber merchant's clerk, before moving back to Hawick, where he joined the Teviotdale Harriers. He represented Scotland in half-mile races 6 times in the period 1908–12, won the Scottish half-mile championship 3 times and was Border quarter-mile champion for 4 successive years. He was said to have been one of the first British athletes to have experimented with the use of oxygen during training. He qualified for the 1912 Olympics in a trial held at Celtic Park. However, he disappointedly came last in his heat in Stockholm, and did not compete again at the national level. He was a Lieutenant in the Postal Service during WWI. He died in Berwick. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Lustruther on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) butcher at West Port, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Loan, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (b.c.1784) shepherd, recorded at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth (this name may have been synonymous with Brunton).

Burnwinyett (bur-win-yet) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is uncertain, but it appears on a rental roll of 1541 between Waterside and Wadeshill. Part of the farm, valued at 22s was tenanted by William and George Waugh and another part, 'valued at 6s 6d was tenanted by Edward Waugh (it is 'Burwynyet' and 'Burwinyet in 1541).

Bush (bush) n. former farm east of Bonchester hill. 'Patte Ollyver of the Bushe' is recorded in 1544. Probably the same place is referred to as Bushhouse in the Feu-Rule lands dispute of 1562 (probably 'Bushous' in 1562; it is marked as 'Buss' on Blaeu's 1654 map and located just north of Ashtrees on Stobie's 1770 map).

Bush (bush) n. farm in Ewesdale, near where the Meikledale Burn meets the Ewes Water, between Meikledale and Arkleton. It was formerly known as 'Park' and then after about 1600 as 'Park o Buss' or 'Buss', with the anglicised form appearing later. The tower of 'Runion of ye buss' is marked on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Debateable Land. 'Arche Scott' was recorded there in 1569, as well as Ninian Armstrong. 'Anse Scott of the Busse' (perhaps the same man) is listed by Monipennie in about 1594 and Walter Scott, 'called Watt of the Bus' was declared a fugitive in 1642. It was 'Park alias Buss' in 1670 when the superiority was inherited John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. Christopher Armstrong was there in 1679. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 338 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Arkleton, Kirkton and Burngrains. 3 separate houses are shown in 1718. George Henderson was there in 1794–97. Charles Scott from Hawick was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. John Jackson was farmer in the 1860s (also 'the Bush', it is 'Buss' in 1569 and 'Buse' in 1663; it is marked as 'Buss' on Blaeu's 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Byehass Fell (bI-haws-fel) n. hill between the upper Borthwick and Teviot valleys, reaching a height of 422 m. It is located south-east of Howpasley Hope and north of Ramsaycleuchburn.

Bye Hill (bI-hil) n. hill to the east of Mosspaul, with Penangus Hope lying to its south. It reaches a height of 498 m.

Byers (bI-urz) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His son William was baptised in 1701. Andrew (b.1807/8) from Ancrum Parish, he was a shoemaker recorded on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was at about 23 Loan in 1841, on the Back Row in 1851 and at 5 Tannage Close in 1861. He married Janet Cunningham and they had daughters Janet and Elizabeth (or 'Betsy'). Helen (1824/5–1912) wife of Thomas Murray, who was a brother of Andrew, John and William, who were teachers in Hawick. She must have been related to her mother-in-law, who was also Helen Byers. After her husband Thomas died in 1862 (aged only 37) she supported the family by making boys' suits. It is said that many townsmen received their first suits from her. She was known as a staunch Evangelical Union member and a woman of forceful character. She lived in Lothian Street. Her children included William, George, Mary, John (who became an accountant) and 2 who died in infancy. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Lawrence and their son James was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were William Redford and George Turnbull. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Robson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His children included Dorothy (b.1705); and Jean (b.1708). John (b.c.1780) Schoolmaster at Burnmouth according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. John (1879–1968) writer of the song 'The Cornet and his Men'. Born in Newcastleton, his family moved to the upper Teviot and he attended Teviothead school. He was sometimes known as The Bard of Liddesdale. He started writing poetry at 17, publishing regularly in the Hawick News, Southern Reoprter, Border Magazine, etc., often under the alias 'Bluebell'. He married Esther Scott from Liddesdale, and moved to Canada in 1913, where he wrote for the Montreal Family Herald and Weekly Star, but returned in 1920. He published a book of poetry 'Hamely Border Musings' in 1931, another 'The Liddesdale Drow' in Hawick in the 1940s and a book 'Liddesdale: historical and descriptive' in 1952. Richard (18th C.) married Isabel Wily in Ewes Parish in 1722. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1723. Richard (18th C.) recorded getting married in Ewes Parish in 1750, with his wife's name not given. Robert (b.1781/2) born in Canonbie, he was shepherd at Blackhall in Ewesdale in 1851. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Clark in Ewes Parish in 1807 and their children included: Andrew (b.1808); William (b.1810); Robert (b.1813); and Helen (b.1814). Walter (19th C.) married A. Irvine in Ewes Parish in 1836. William (d.1720) recorded dying in Ewes Parish. William (d.1727) recorded dying in Ewes Parish. William (d.1783) recorded dying in Ewes Parish. He may be the William who maried Bessie Cowan in Ewes in 1742 and had a child Christian (b.1743), or the William who got married in Ewes in 1782 with no wife's name given. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hope and their son William was baptised in 1776. William (d.1806) recorded dying in Ewes Parish (also sometimes 'Byres' and 'Byars').

bygane (bI-gān) adj., arch. bygone, past – '... within the baronie of Branxhelme and scherefdome of Roxburgh, of all zeiris and termes bigane that the samin hes bene in my hands ...' [SB1569], '... 19 merkis Scots for byegane quarter wages due to him for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters bygane' [1657], '... some tymes under cloud of night, and some tymes in open day, for ane considerable tyme and space bygane ...' [BR1697], '... Bygate (bI-gā', ba-gi') n. former name for a farm and area on the east side of the Hermitage valley, north of Leahaugh. It is now sometimes marked as 'Backgate' on maps. The family of 'Elwald in Bagget' is mentioned among a list of Liddesdale Elliots in 1516. In 1541 it was valued at 18 shillings and the tenant was James Elliot. Hab Elliot possessed the lands in 1632. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1677. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1694, with John Young also listed as resident there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 154 acres, bounded by Cleuchhead, a common (on the south) and the Hermitage Water; the farmhouse is shown near the south boundary of the farm. John Elliot 'in Baggot' was the eldest son of William in Park, born around 1731. The farm was given to John Elliot by the Duke of Buccleuch when he took the lands of Copshaw Park to build Newcastleton. Probably the same John Elliot was farmer there and elsewhere according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Bygatewood was an old farmstead between Bygate and the Steele. There is an earthen-banked field system between Bygate Sike and the Steele Road (it is probably the 'Bagget' recorded in 1516, 'Baggart' in 1541, 'Baggat' in 1632, 'Baggett' in 1694 and 'Baggot' in the mid-18th century; Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'Bygate' and 'Býgate wood', while 'Baggitt' is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Backgate' is on Stobie's 1770 map).

Bygate Sike (bI-gā'-sīk) n. stream in Castleton Parish. It rises on the Steele and flows roughly south-west to join the Hermitage Water.

bygaun (bI-gawn) adj., arch. passing, going by, n., arch. the act of passing – 'Aw'll maybe pick up a bit wifie o' ma ain in the by gaun . . . ' [JEDM], '. . . A chiel cam whusslin' free And sallied in the bygaun . . . ' [WL] (also written 'by gaun' and 'by-gaun'; cf. bygane).

bygaungin (bI-gawng-in, -een) n., arch. bygoing, passing, going past – 'An ilka herd hed a bleithe word i the byegangeen' [ECS] (spelling varies; cf. bygaun).

[ECS], 'Sic a byordnar grand bit for a sledge-skly or a yoke-a-tuillie!' [ECS], 'A byordnar braw hoose' [ECS], '. . . for onybody, comin' by, micht think eer antics were a bit by-ordinar!' [DH], 'The tother by-ordinar station I have in mind is Riccarton' [DH] (also written 'by-ordnar').

bypast (bI-pawst) pp., arch. past, gone by – '. . . quhairof he hes ressauit fra the said Laird at Mertymes last bipast, tua ky . . . ' [SB1574], '. . . for all quarrells, bloods and goods, contraversies or what trowbles that ever hathe bene bypast' [CBP1584], '. . . and for a happie issue to these bypast bloody warrs' [PR1712], '. . . alledgeing that the spaidmen, thorough their inadvertence att the rydeing of the Common upon Friday last byepast, had transgressed and encroached upon his property' [BR1713], 'According to intimation read publickly upon ye tenth day of March last by past . . . ' [PR1717], 'Signed an account to John Robinson for killing moles in Stobs grass parks and policy ground, for the byepast year of £2' [RGr] (also written 'by past').

byre (bī-ur) n. a cattle-shed, barn – 'Up the Loan they went like fire Till they came ti Hardie's byre' [T], '. . . Nor ever made the smallest stop, Till ance he reach'd the byre' [JR], 'A dandert aboot amang the auld byres an smiddie-ends an yetts' [ECS], 'The door o' the byre was open, And strang was the stench o' kye' [WL], 'From Cheviot's crest the wind blew cold And whirled the drift round byre and fold' [WHO] (from Old English).

Byrecleuch (bīr-klooch) n. former name for lands in the heawaters of the Tarras Water, north of Lodgegill and east of Arkleton. Byre Cleuchs and the Byrecleuch Burn are shown on modern maps. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it is explained that the Laird of these lands owned the farm of Brieryshaw. Also the farm of 'Byercleughwater' was combined with Mosspeeble at that time and a farmhouse was shown, perhaps near the modern Lodgegill farm (it is 'Byercleuch' in 1718; it appears on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Byr-cleuch' and 'Byrecleugh' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Byreholm (bīr-hōm) n. farm on the B6357 just west of old Castleton. In 1541 it was valued at 26 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by Hector Armstrong. James Glendinning was there in 1623. In 1632 it was possessed by Walter Scott. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1673 and a Pringle in 1677. In 1694 John Robison was tenant and James Elliot also resident there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 102 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Whitehaugh, Castleton Glebe and the Liddel Water; the farmhouse was in about the same place as the modern one. The map is at a bigger scale than others because there were small pieces of land intermixed with it beloging to Cocklaik farm and to the Laird of Whitehaugh. Note that it is also listed along with Bowholm in the separate survey of Over Closs (although this may be an error, it does demonstrate that it was distinct from Bowholm). Thomas Riddell was there in 1799. 'Little Hobbie o the Castleton' lived there in the years around 1800. Thomas Oliver was there in 1821 and Thomas Niven was carter there in 1835 (it is 'Byrholme' in 1541 and 1632, marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Byrchoom' and 'Byerholme' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Bowholm).

Byrelee Burn (bīr-lee-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Ale Water, rising near Kingside Loch.

Byreleehaugh (bīr-lee-hawch) n. former farmstead on the Byrelee Burn, near Crooked Loch, at the head of the Ale Water. The farm was also called Blackcockhaa. Gamekeeper John Lockie was living there in 1841.

Byrelee Hill (bīr-lee-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the upper Ale valley, on the left of the B711 just after Alemoor Loch. It reaches a height of 369 m.

Byresteed (bīr-steed) n. former name for an area near Saughtree, marked as a tower on Blaeu's c.1654 map. Its position could be on the south side of Saughtree Fell, where some streams enter the Dawston Burn below Black Linn. In 1541 it was valued at 32 shillings and tenanted by Croziers. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632. It is associated with the farms of Saughtree and Pinglehole on the 1718 map of Scott of Buccleuch properties. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755 (it is marked 'Byrsted' and 'Byrestedds' on 17th century maps and is 'Byersteeds' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is is 'Byresteid' in 1541 and 'Byresteids' in 1632).

byre-wumman (bī-ur-wu-min) n., arch. a dairy-maid – 'Women's wages in the country ran from £3 to £4 a year; byrewomen got £4 . . . ' [V&M].

Byrness (bIr-nes) n. first village over the Border on the A68, south of Catcleuch Reservoir and on the Pennine Way – 'Reeling, weary and travel stained, The Byrness lands they had scarcely gained . . . ' [WHO].

byus (bI-is) adj., arch. extraordinary, wonderful – 'It's no' because its boughs are bus't in ony byus green; For simmer sairs it little now – it's no what it has been' [JoHa], 'A byous clever callant' [GW], 'It's no' because its boughs are bus't in ony byus green, For simmer sairs it little now – it's no' what it has been . . . ' [JoHa] (also spelled 'byous', etc.).

caa in (kaw-in) v. to drive in, propel, ram – 'Hei's ootbye caain-in a wheen stuckeens' [ECS].

the Caa Knowe (thu-kaw-now) n. place where the Burgess Roll was traditionally read after the perambulation of the marches, being the extremity of the Common, at a site also known as the Hero's Grave. This was formerly the location of an ancient cairn, which was broken up for stones in 1811, and apparently a burial cist was found. Some flints and a bronze spearhead were also found nearby in the late 19th century. The implication of this connection between this important location on the Common and an ancient burial mound is that the site was locally significant for many centuries. And although there is no explicit evidence of continuous use, there is also no indication of when the site was adopted for the mustering of the Burgesses. The reading of this roll became officially unnecessary after the division of 1777, and was specifically impossible at that site, since ownership had been transferred to the Duke of Buccleuch. The ceremony was nevertheless still carried out, although moved to near the top of Bailie's Hill, and for many decades the original site was known as the 'Auld Caa Knowe'. The Callants' Club erected a cairn to mark the spot in 1911, and the site and access path were given to the town by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1937. The plaque reads '1537 – Ca' Knowe – 1937. On this spot, from the granting of the Charter by Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1537 until the division of the Common in 1777, the Burgess Roll was called at the Annual March Riding. The cairn was erected by the Hawick Callant Club 1911. The ground was gifted to the Town of Hawick by His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch – October 1937'. It remains an important symbolic location on the Friday of the Common Riding, although the riders only come as close as the extremity of the modern Common, a little to the north, for the Sod-Cutting ceremony – '... and that all Burgesses attend the Baillies to-morrow at the Call Know, and at ye Cross on foot or horseback, under the penalty of ten pounds Scots' [BR1743], '... at the Common-Riding all the Burgesses of Hawick were called over by name from a Roll at the Callknow, and if any of them were absent the Magistrates might have fined them ... ' [C&L1767], 'At the Ca-knowe we halt a little; Slack our girths, and ease the cripple' [AB] (often written 'Ca' Knowe', or 'Ca'-knowe', and meaning simply the 'call hill'; it could be 'the great Know' along the south side of which the old boundary of the Common was described to run in 1767).

caal (kawl) n., arch. a pall of smoke – '... an, ferrer up the waeter yet plain ti ma aiger lookeen, hang another caal, leike a bruch roond a muin' [ECS].

caa on (kaw-ōn) v., arch. to drive a nail into a body (this was entered into the Oxford English Dictionary by Murray).

caa ower (kaw-ow-ur) v. to tip over, topple, spill – 'whae caaed ower the flooer pot?', '... gettin hersel ca'd owre yince when a ruck came owre the touch line' [IWL] (also in the Oxford English Dictionary).

caa'st (kawst) contr. calls it – '... threepin tae dae some evil deed (as hei ca'st) ere the night's oot ...' [JEDM] (cf. dis't, is't, was't, etc.).

caa-throwe (kaw-throw) v., arch. a quick wash – 'A gaed the colour't things a ca'-throw' [GW].

cabbitch (kaw-bich, kaw-beech) n., arch. cabbage – 'The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, ... cabitch plants, purtates, leeks, cabitch seed ...' [DMW] (note the ch rather than j sound).

caber (kā-bur) n., arch. long, slender tree-trunk, beam, rafter – '... and though it gard the divots stour off the house riggins and every caber dunner ...' [EM1820] (from Gaelic).

Cabourne (ka-boorn) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war based in Hawick. His forename does not appear to be recorded. He had a daughter, Isabella, with Jane Paterson, who was a sister of Robert 'Pawkie' Paterson. She married David S. Park, toy merchant and grocer in Hawick (and her name was sometimes recorded as 'Cabrown'). On his daughter's death certificate his occupation is listed as 'butler', suggesting perhaps that he remained in the Town after the other French prisoners left (also written 'Cabourn').

cacky-aggie (kaw-kee-aw-gee) n., imp., ins. an effeminate man, homosexual.

Cacra (kaw-kra) n. area around the confluence of the Rankle Burn with the Ettrick Water, below Cacra Hill, which reaches 471 m. The farms of Cacrabank and Cacraside are there. The area was once part of the parish of Rankilburn – 'A Buck did come that was so run, Hard by the Cacracross, He mean'd to be at Rankelburn, Finding himself at loss' [CWS] ('Kacralaw Hill' and 'Cacrabanck' are marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Cacrabank (kaw-kra-bawngk) n. farm near where the Rankle Burn meets the Ettrick Water, just west of Cacra Hill. The lands there were held by the Crown from at least 1456. Sir David Scott held the lease here as his fee for being Ranger of Ettrick Ward, from at least 1471. In 1484 William Scott held a 'stead' at 'Cacrabank' as ranger of the Ettrick district of Ettrick Forest and the fee from this farm was still being assigned to the Ranger (then Walter Scott of Howpasley) in 1497. John Scott of Thirlestane paid fermes to the King's Chamberlain for the lands in 1539. William Scott and his mother were tenants in 1541, paying £18 yearly In the early 17th century it was held by the Scotts of Tushielaw. By the 19th century it was part of the Buccleuch estates – 'Past Cacra Bank, that casis sweet With its foliage flowers an' a'; And past where the Rankle and Ettrick meet, And the pools that lazily lap the feet Of the banks at Tushielaw' [TK] (it is recorded as 'Causcrusbank' in 1456, 'Calfcrubank' in 1468 and 1469, 'Calcrufbank' in 1471, 'Caulfcrufbank' in 1473, 'Culcrufbank' in 1476, 'Calfcrufbank' in 1480, 'Calcrufbank' in 1488, 'Kalcrufbank' in 1492, 'Calfcrufebank' in 1497, 'Caufcrufbank' in 1502, 'Calfcrubank' in 1513, 'Calkerrybank' in 1539, 'Caucrobank' in 1541 and 'Cancrobank' in 1633; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map).

The Caddie's Ghost (thu-kaw-deez-gōst) n. comedic play written by J.E.D. Murray for a Golf Club fund-raising bazaar in 1894. Its success led to him becoming an honorary life member of the club.

caddle (kaw-dul) v., arch. to strain?? – 'oo'll caddle they tei leaves off'.

caddle (kaw-dul) n., arch. a set, particularly in the game 'papes' – 'Note: a caddle o paips, a cass of paips = a set of four 'paips'' [ECS].

Caddonfit (kaw-din'-fi') n. Caddonfoot, a village 3 miles west of Galashiels, where the Caddon Water meets the Tweed. There is a fine example of an ancient oak tree nearby. It is also the name of the associated parish. The parish church was built in 1861 (designed by David Rhind) and extended in 1875.

Caddroun Burn (kaw-drin-burn) n. stream that rises near the Note o the Gate and follows the B6357 for a while, through the Caddroun Potts, to join the Liddel Water. To the south-west of the railway culvert are the remains of an old settlement, consisting of 2 separate enclosures containing several hut circles; this could be the former farm of 'Hellcaudrounburn'. This old name suggests that the gorge was once the 'Hell Cauldron', i.e. having an association with the Devil. An old hollow way runs north-west for about 250 m from this settlement, crossing the railway; it was once suggested it was part of the Catrail. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (also written 'Caldron'; it is 'Helcaudron burne' in c.1590 and marked 'Hellcadrenn b.' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

the Caddroun Pots (thu-kaw-drin-pots) n. a series of cavities in the rocks of the Caddroun

Burn, which joins the Liddel Water about 2 miles north of Saughtree. This could be the site of 'Cadafits' where labourer Thomas Storie was recorded living in 1801 – '... the softness of the rock has enabled the stream to hollow it out into deep circular pots or caldrons in which it boils and bubbles on its onward course. The country people call these the Cauldron Pots' [JAHM].

cadge (kaj) v. to try to get something for nothing, beg, mooch – '... onybody fund cadgin was teh bei gein fower-pence ... an then putten oot o the toon' [BW1961], '... unless hei could cadge a hurl on the scaffie cairt' [IWL] (from Middle English).

cadger (ka-jur) n. someone who is always cadging, a sponger, beggar, disagreeable person – 'hei's jist a cadger that yin', an itinerant pedlar, arch. a packman, carrier – '... Like gentlemen ye must not seem, But look like corn caugers gawn ae road. With my fa ding, &c.' [CPM], '... in respect of John Scott, Borthaugh, and James Scott, cadger, their declaration ...' [BR1642], 'Lang syne ye saw the cadger's horse, Come trottin' doon the road' [JRE], 'The old donkey of the cadger went in a field near the church' [RJT], 'And gone is the bustle of cadgers and postboys, No human tide now that so high once did flow' [WMc], 'An fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarrie, caager's caairt or hurlie cood A airt oot' [ECS], 'The cadger whoa'd his powny cairt Fornenst the 'Pig and Sty'' [WL] (also written 'cauger').

Cadger Ford (ka-jur-fōrd) n. former ford over the Harden Burn in Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Cadger's Hole (ka-jurz-hōl) n. area on the south side of the Ale valley, along Esdale Sike, just to the west of the Hill Road to Roberton.

Cadger's Moss (ka-jurz-mos) n. former name for a boggy area just to the west of Shielswood Loch. It is marked on a 1767 map of Shielswood farm and distinct from Cadger's Hole, which is about a mile to the southwest.

the Cadger's Well (thu-ka-jurz-wel) n. former water source in Wilton, located near the 'Stell Hoose' which was at the bottom of Wilton Hill. The area had been drained in 1826. The well was started in the dry summer of 1842 and used until the early 20th century. The name derived from James Hislop, a 'cadger' (or carrier) who lived there.

Cadger's Well (ka-jurz-wel) n. area in the upper Ale valley, cut through by the Esdale Sike and joining the Ale Water close to Whitslade.

the Cadora (thu-ka-dō-ru) n. extensive cafe on the south side of the High Street in the mid-20th century, run by Guido Taddei. Popular with young people in the weekend afternoons and early evenings, it has latterly been a bingo parlour.

Caerby Hill (kār-bee-hil) n. hill to the south of Newcastleton, just to the east of Sorbietrees and adjacent to Blinkbonny Height. It reaches a height of 268 m and is marked 'Carby Hill' on modern maps. It is quite detached from other hills, and on a clear day its summit commands views of Cumberland and the Solway. It is crowned with remains of an ancient settlement inside an oval stone wall about 250 feet across, with signs of at least 6 circular hut foundations. It may have been a pre-Roman fort with a later settlement; some of its stone were said to have been removed to build a nearby dyke. There is also a meandering linear earthwork around the hill, possibly marking a boundary (like the Catrail), which may be the 'fossa Galwalensium' mantioned in a 14th century charter relating to nearby lands. There is also a field system, with clearance cairns around Couper Cleuch to the south (also written 'Carby Hill'; 'Carboch' is marked as a hill on Blaeu's c.1654 map and it is 'Kerbie Hill' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Carbe Hill' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Caerlaverock Castle (kar-la-ve-rok-kaw-sul) n. castle at the mouth of the River Nith, south of Dumfries, seat of the Maxwells, who were often Wardens of the Western March.

Caerlenrig (kar-, kār-len-rig) n. former settlement that lay about half a mile to the west (i.e. up river) of the present Teviothead. This was the common general name for the area until about the time the Parish of Teviothead was established in 1850, and was centred on the old chapel of St. Mary's of Caerlenrig (which lay inside the present Teviothead churchyard). Here is where Johnnie Armstrong and 40 of his men were hanged and buried in 1530 by the boy King James V. A memorial opposite the church was erected in 1897, and an older memorial stone marks the nearby grave-site. The lands were owned by Walter Scott of Howpasley in 1504. The village was raided by Dacre's men in late 1513 and again in 1514, when it is described as 'the two Townys of Carlangriggs, with the demaynes of the same, wherupon was 40 pleughes'. Archibald Grieve and William Davidson were there in 1618. The £5 lands of 'Carlingrigrig' was among purchases by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. In 1641 the 5-pound 'Chaplands de Carlangrig' was inherited by James, 1st Earl of Annandale from his father John, 2nd Earl of Annandale. From at least the mid-17th century the area was owned by the Elliots. Gavin Elliot paid the land tax on £500 there in 1678 (at that time it included Merrylaw, which was disjoined sometime before 1788). It was listed as 'Carlanerickrigg' among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott of Stobs in 1692 (when it was still a 5-pound land). There was a chapel there from at least 1719, with regular services happening from 1721, but this was by a supply preacher for many years. John Shortreed and William Scott were there in 1729 and Andrew Rae in 1730. The name continued to be used for the 'Chapel of Ease' where Sunday services were held in the early 19th century, while the area was still part of Hawick Parish. The name is now used mainly for the farm that lies on the ridge. It was also sometimes referred to as 'Rig' or 'Rigg'; this was the name in 1748 when tax was paid on 11 windows by Andrew Oliver and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when George Pott was the owner. It was valued at about £366 13s 4d in 1788. James Glendinning was there in 1772. It later became part of the Buccleuch estates. It is said that when the foundations were dug for the farm (in about 1790), some urns were unearthed and coins were found, claimed to be Roman, but probably of later date. Also near here in 1856 a Roman coin was found, an aureus of Vespasian, as well as a perforated stone disk, now in the Museum – 'With hempen cordis grit and lang They hangit braw Johnie Armstrang, And thretty-six o' his companie At Carlenrig were hung fu' hie' [T], 'There is ane at the Carlenrigg, Might sof'en the heart o' auld Simey' [JoHa] (there are many spellings including 'Callendrick', 'Carlanrickrig', 'Carlangridge', 'Carlenridge', 'Carlendrige', 'Carlenrigg', 'Carlenrig', 'Carlenrick', etc.; the name is recorded as 'Rig' in 1504, 'Carlanrig' in 1508, is 'Carlangryg' in 1509, 'Carlanerik' in 1511, 'Carlangrig' in 1554, 'Carlanerig' in 1558, 'Carlanrikrig' in 1618, 'Carlenrick rige' in 1678, 'Carlenrickrige' in 1699, 'Carlenridge' in 1694, 'Callendrick' in 1719, 'Callendridgerigg' in 1726, and 'Carlanrickrig' in 1788; it is marked 'Carlanryik' and 'Carlangrig' on Blaeu's 1654 maps; it may derive from the Celtic 'caer', meaning fort, plus the Old English 'long' and the Scots 'rig' or Old Norse 'hrygg' for a ridge, this being suggested since the long ridge here is quite a striking geographical feature; an alternative origin is Old Welsh 'cair', meaning an enclosure, plus the Old Welsh 'lanerc', meaning a piece of cleared land).

Caerlen Rig (kar-len-rig) n. long ridge to the south-west of Teviothead village, giving its name to the former settlement of Caerlenrig. A rod runs along the eastern side of the ridge, connecting Teviothead with Merrylaw and Teviot Stone. It is flanked by the Teviot River and the Limiecleuch Burn. At the north-eastern point of the ridge are signs of an old hill-fort, while near its south-western end is an enclosure, about 200 ft square, cut through by the road.

Caerlenrig Kirk (kar-len-rig-kirk) n. chapel at Caerlenrig, near what is now called Teviothead at the confluence of the Teviot with the Frostlie Burn. The oldest chapel was dedicated to St. Mary and lay within the present churchyard. A lintel from this building stands in the minister's glebe. This building was certainly pre-Reformation, and possibly 15th century. The 'chaplainry of Carlangryg' was listed in the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509 (and confirmed as 'Carlanerik' in 1511). A 'Chapel of Ease' was erected near there (on the Thorneyhaugh by Falnash) for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes in 1715. Sermons were led once a month by the Cavers Minister until a preacher was appinted there. There were petitions to the Presbytery in 1719, 1722 and 1738 for the appointment of a temporary preacher to until they could get a permanent one. It was described as a 'barbarously rude rectangular building a greater resemblance to a cowshed or a granary than a house of God'. It was rebuilt in 1799 (or perhaps 1789) on the other side of the stream. This building subsequently became the schoolhouse. Communions there were carried out alternately by the ministers of Hawick and Cavers, who would also celebrate marriages and baptisms there (with help from other local ministers). The present church was built in 1855/6 and is situated just a little west of the original chapel. There has long been a burial ground there, but how long back it goes is uncertain.

Caerlenrig Manse (kar-len-rig-mans) n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used on the 1841 census. It was a manse for Caerlenrig Kirk, built largely at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch around the 1830s.

Caerlenrig Righeid (kar-len-rig-rig-heed) n. former shepherd's cottage at the head of the Caerlen Rig. This may be the 'Callendridgerigg' where Patrick Hume was in 1726. John Glendinning was there in at least 1783–86 (it was 'Carlenrige-rigehead' in 1783).

Caerlenrig Schuil (kar-len-rig-skil) n. former school in Caerlenrig, which eventually became Teviothead Primary School. It was built and initially supported by the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge in 1755, with their support withdrawn in about 1767. A report from 1767 records 49 pupils (with twice as many boys as girls), aged from 5 to 28, although some had only infrequent attendance. It seems to have struggled through (perhaps without a permanent teacher) until 1803 when it became formally a second parish school of Cavers, with a prescribed salary. It became the school of its own parish in 1850, and thereafter was known as Teviothead School. A roll of Schoolmasters includes: Arthur Elliot, 1755–57; Thomas Wilson, 1758–61; John Pott, 1762–63; and John Riccarton, 1764/5.

Cæsar (see-zur) n. one of a series of Roman Emperors who once ruled over a large part of Europe, including Hawick. A worn sestertius coin of Marcus Cæsar, dating from 155–6 was found by S. Scott in his garden in MacLagan Drive about 1965.

the Cafe (thu-kaw-fee) n. name often for the small building serving refreshments in Wilton Lodge Park. It was erected in the 1930s, originally as a bowling pavillion. Later it was the sales kiosk for the putting green and trampolines, as well as serving as a small cafe. Closed in 2014 it was rebuilt in 2015.

the Cafe Brae (thu-kaw-fee-brā) n. popular name for Brougham Place, after the Green Cafe at the bottom of the brae.

Cairl (kā-rul) n., arch. Carlisle.

cairn (kārn) n. a man-made heap of stones, once in memory of the dead, and now marking the tops of any hill frequented by hill-walkers – 'The grave is green, and round is spread The curling lady fern; That fatal day the mould was red, No moss was on the cairn' [JL].

Cairncross (kārn-kros) n. Alexander (1637–1701) from the family of Cowmull, he was a dyer in the Canongate in Edinburgh, later becoming parson of Dumfries. He was appointed Bishop of Brechin in 1684 and within a few months was promoted to Archbishop of Glasgow. However, disputes with the Lord Chancellor over penal laws against Catholics led to his removal in 1687. However, following the Revolution he was back in favour and became Bishop of Raphoe in Ireland in 1693, remaining until his death. George (1884–1939) son of James. He took over the family aerated waters manufacturers in 1927. In 1907 he married Janet Edmondson. Their daughter Joan married Richard Wilkinson. The family business was sold after his death. George (b.1886) son of Robert and Ann Waldie. In 1907 he married Hannah Murray. Their children were: Robert (b.1908); George Gunn (b.1909), hosiery director; John (b.1909) twin of George; Hannah (b.1911), married Thomas Gray, Calcutta; Thomas (b.1917); James (b.1913); William Lumsden (b.1921), worked for the Foreign Office; and Murray Waldie (b.1930). Hugh (18th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of 'Hilslope and Lilliesleaf' in Melrose Prish in the 1740s, valued at more than £900. James (c.1847–1927) son of John and Jane Martin and grandson of Thomas from Jedburgh. He was probably born in Selkirkshire. He lived in Langholm, and worked as a wool spinner, but moved to Hawick and started Cairncross Lemonade Works, taking over the factory that had previously belonged to Aitken & Learmonth at 16 Kirk Wynd. He lived at 14 Loan. In 1872 he married Grace Irving in Dumfriesshire and their first few children were born in Langholm. Their children were: Jane (b.1874), who married Adam Murray in Hawick in 1903; John (1875–1917), who emigrated to

New Zealand, and died in WWI; Thomas (1878–1930), who had several children who lived in Hawick; and David (b.1880), born in Hawick, a gardener, who moved to Carlisle; James (1882–1943), who married Jane Holywell Milligan in Hawick in 1913; George Henry (1884–1939), who married Janet Edmondson in Hawick in 1907; Janet Elliot (b.1888), who married William Hunter in Hawick in 1908; and William (1890–1946), who married Wilhelmina Oliver Reid in Glasgow in 1919. He may also have married a second time. He can be seen in an old photograph, delivering his wares by cart at Myreslawgreen. James 'Jimmy' (1910–61) born in Hawick, son of Thomas. He had a tailor's business in Hawick. He played draughts as a youth and won the Hawick Chess Club Championship within 12 months of learning the game. He became known as a chess player, particularly in 'correspondence chess', sharing 1st place in the 1946/7 British Correspondence Chess Championship. During WWII he served as an Air Gunner in the R.A.F. In 1947 he moved to Lesmahagow, working for Skelton and Sons nylon factory, where he has been brought to train locals on the knitting machines. He returned to Hawick in 1958, working for the Post Office. Corp. James Dobson (1920–42) only son of Robert and Elizabeth from Hawick. He was a member of 3rd Hawick Boys' Brigade, winning the King's Medal as Staff Sergeant and he played rugby for the Linden. He worked as a joiner with Beattie's. He served with the Royal Engineers in WWII. He was one of a group of 34 men who volunteered for a commando raid (Operation Freshman) on the German heavy-water plant at Vermork, Norway (portrayed in the 1965 film 'The Heroes of Telemark'). This was planned to sabotage the production of atomic bombs, but proved to be disastrous, with all the commandos and aircrew ending up dead, and the site being subsequently reinforced. Corp. Cairncross was on one of the 2 gliders that crashed; only 9 men survived and he was one of 4 men who were seriously injured, subsequently being treated by locals, before becoming prisoners of war. At Lagårdsveien jail they were given lethal injections before being tortured by the Gestapo and then strangled or shot. The 4 bodies were sunk at depth off Kvitsøy Island and have never been recovered. He is remembered at the Brookwood Memorial and on a memorial stone at Eiganes Cemetery in Stavanger, as well as on a rose bowl that was in the West Port Kirk, and on his parents' gravestone in the Wellogate Cemetery. Some of those responsible for his death were tried for war crimes in Oslo in 1945. He had 3 sisters who lived in Hawick: Jean; Mrs. Mary Bell; and Mrs. Anne McConnell. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is probably the same as John in Colmslie, who tenanted lands held by Melrose Abbey and was brother of Robert, Bishop of Ross. In 1547 he purchased lands in Smailholm from John Home in Cowdenknowes. In 1551 he and his son William signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He married Helen Abernethy and was succeeded by his son William. John (1807–69) son of Robert and Jean Anderson. He was a machine cleaner in Hawick. He had a brother George, and another brother of unknown name. He was a stockingmaker living on Dovemount in 1841, was living with his wife and children on Ladylaw Place in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jane Hall in Wilton in 1843 and she died in 1892. Their children were: Robert (b.1843), warehouseman; Sarah Hughes (b.1844); John (1853–1917); and Jane (b.c.1856). John (1875–1917) eldest son of James, who started the aerated waters business in Hawick. He was born in Langholm. In 1901 in Wilton he married Agnes Beck Thomson; she was daughter of Adam and Agnes Thomson. He worked for a while in the furnishing department of Hawick Co-op. He emigrated to New Zealand, where he was a motorman and carpenter. He rowed in his spare time and was a member of the Tauranga Chamber of Commerce. He served in the 3rd Battalion of the 3rd New Zealand Rifle Brigade. He was killed in action and is buried in Berks Cemetery Extension in Belgium. His wife Agnes returned to Scotland and died in Portobello in 1922. Nichol (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Colmslie. In 1613 he leased the lands of 'Mylnerig' and 'Park' in Belses. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as tenant in Melroselands. He had remission for 'communicating with the traitors of Leven'. It is unclear where his farm may have been located. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in 1494/5 as tenant in 'le sowtar croft de melros', which could have been a piece of land associated with the Hospital of the Holy Trinity at Soutra. Robert (16th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He is recorded as 'Robert Carnecorce'. It is possible that he was the same man as Robert of Colmslie. Robert of Colmslie

(d.c.1574) brother of Walter, who owned lands in Wilton Parish. In 1603 his son Walter was served heir to these lands of his brother, and he was described as deceased by then. He was succeeded by his son William. Robert (b.c.1770) recorded as bookbinder when he was on the list in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. On the 1801 list he was recorded as a stationer. He was recorded in the 1820s as a bookseller in the High Street. In 1841 he was a bookbinder on O'Connell Street, living with Helen, Hislop and James, who were probably his children or grandchildren. He was recorded as 'Book Binder' in 1824 when his child died in Hawick. He may be the Robert who married Jean Anderson and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Helen (b.1806) and John (b.1807). Robert (1843–90) son of John and Jane Hall, he was a hosiery warehouseman. He married Ann Waldie in 1868, and she died in 1923. Their children, whose births were registered in Wilton, were: John Waldie (1869–1916), who lived for a while in India; Jane Hall (b.1872); Christina Dobson (b.1870); Ann Messer (b.1874); Sarah (b.1876); Alice Hay (b.1878); Isabella (b.1880); Maggie (b.1883); Mary Gray (b.1883); Robert (b.1884), father of James Dobson who died in WWII; George (b.1886); and James Dobson (1890–1908). Robert (b.1884) son of Robert and Ann Waldie. He worked as a shop assistant at Green's in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Laidlaw in 1920 and their children were: James Dobson ('Jimmy', 1920–42), who was killed folling Operation Freshman in Norway; Mary Culbertson Laidlaw (1921–1995); Ann Waldie (1923–2012); Jane Laidlaw (1924–2001); and Elizabeth (1925–1977). The family lived at 14 Teviot Cresecent. Thomas (1878–1930) son of James, the Hawick lemonade maker, he was born in Langholm. His children were: John (1909–68) who brought up his nephew Irving; Guidion Jamieson (1912–43) killed in action, and buried in Egypt; Thomas (1914–44), also died during WWII, married Sarah E.W. Scott and had a son Irving; George, who had a daughter; James, tailor and known as a chess player; William, worked as a hall porter at the Tower Hotel; and Mary Ray (b.1920). Walter (d.c.1603) owner of the farms of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall, with alternating rights of patronage in the Kirk of Wilton. In 1603 his nephew Walter (son of his brother Robert of Colmslie) was served as his heir in these lands. He may be the Walter who, along with Robert Scott of Haining, served in 1587 as cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He is probably the Walter recorded in 1590 as cautioner for the delivery of certain Armstrongs and Elliots, and in 1592 as surety for John Scott of Foulshiels (when he was 'in Lugatt'). He is probably also the Walter in 'Lugat' (in Stow Parish) who served as a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in 1590/1. He is probably the Walter, brother of the late Robert of Colmslie who was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford (because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branxholme's sister Janet) in 1576/7. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Colmslie and hence brother of William of Colmslie. In 1603 he was served heir to the lands in Wilton owned by his uncle Walter. These were explicitly Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall, with rights to the church. However, since these lands were resigned to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1604, it may be that he sold them almost immediately. In 1619 there was a complaint against him for not removing himself from Colmslie and other lands, with his heir James also mentioned. In 1620 he and his sons Robert and Nichol were involved in a dispute with the Kers of Cavers Ker and elsewhere. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Westerkirk Parish, in 1794 he married Janet Gowan from Hawick. William of Colmslie (16th C.) probably son of John. He may have been the family member who was first granted Colmslie. In 1515 he was alread 'of Colmislie' when he had a tack relating to lands in Ross. He may be the William who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1530. He was granted the temporality of the Bishopric of Ross in 1538. In 1541 he was warned to remove his tenants from certain lands in Berwickshire. In 1544 he had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme over lands at Colmslie, Langlee and Housebyre. He was granted lands in Housebyres, Melrose in 1547. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He married Marion Pringle. They had 7 sons and 2 daughters: Robert, who succeeded; James of Allanshaws; Nichol of Calfhill; John, who was a clerk; George; Charles; Walter; Elizabeth; and Margaret. He also had a natural son, 'Meikle Hob'. William of Colmslie (1558–c.1626) son of Robert, whom he succeeded in 1574. The lands of Wilton Green and Wilton Burn were confirmed to him in 1586, but appear to have passed to other family members and were resigned to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1604. In 1602 he was the first named in a list of Cairncrosses complained about by Mitchelsons in 1602; be was stated to be 'brother-son of Walter' and others listed included his heir James and brothers Alexander and John. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir Walter, 9th Laird of Buccleuch. His eldest son was James and he was succeeded by his grandson William (presumably son of James) in 1626. His 3rd son was Nichol, who was a Burgess of Edinburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1682 he married Elspeth Mackie and their children included: John (b.1683); Elizabeth (b.1685); and Walter (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Thomas Cowan and William Helm (also written 'Cairnecorse', 'Cairnicorse', 'Carncors', 'Carnecorce', 'Carnecroce', 'Kerncross', etc.).

Cairncross's (kārn-kro-seez) n. Cairncross Lemonade Works, manufacturer of Cairncross Aerated Waters at 16 Kirk Wynd in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. It was run by James Cairncross, who came from Langholm and took over the factory formerly run by Aitken & Learmonth. Water came from a well sunk on the premises from which they made aerated drinks, ginger beer and lemonade. George Henry Cairncross took over the factory in 1927, but it was sold after his death in 1939, after which production ceased.

Cairns (kārnz) n. Francis 'Frank' (18th C.) local character who was well known at the Common Riding for annually walking in front of the Town Clerk, spade in hand, cutting divots. He would do this 'as far as the top of the Upper Haugh, and cast stones into the water at the Yard-back, the Coble Pool, and Wilton Dam'. It is possible he was the same man as the Beadle of Hawick Kirk, or his father. Francis (d.bef. 1829) weaver in Hawick. He married Isabel Middlemas in 1773 and their children included: Euphan (b.1774); James (b.1777); and Francis (b.1783). The witnesses in 1783 appear to be George Swan and Walter Nichol. In 1768 he was witness to a baptism for fellow weaver John Smith. The death of his son James, also a weaver, is recorded in 1829. Francis (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1815 he was appointed 'Kirk Officer and Sexton' (i.e. 'beadle'), succeeding the deceased Rob 'the Naig' Tinlin. He could have been the Francis, son of Francis and Isabel Middlemas, born in Hawick in 1783. He is probably the Frank who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Francis 'Frank' (19th C.) herd at Hawick Muir in the mid-1800s. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1696) and Adam (b.1700). Perhaps the same George has a daughter Agnes (b.1702) baptised in Wilton. George (d.bef. 1721) wright of Minto. His son Adam married Elizabeth Hamilton in Edinburgh in 1721. It seems likely that another son was George, who succeeded him as wright. George (d.bef. 1760) wright of Minto parish, recorded in 1760 when his daughter Isobel married Thomas Dobson, shoemaker of Selkirk. He was probably son of the previous Minto wright, also George, and was probably the same George who married Bettie Boa in Minto in 1724. Their children probably included Helen (b.1726), James (b.1727), William (b.1730), Isabel (b.1732), Margaret (b.1738), Agnes (b.1740) and Bessy (b.1743). George (18th C.) married Isabel McCulloch in Minto in 1739. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Orchard in 1786. George (18th C.) married Mary Hardie in Hawick Parish in 1782. George (b.c.1786/7) farmer at Greenbraeheads, probably son of John, who was farmer there earlier. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his sister Betty and George, probably his son. In 1851 he was farmer there of 21 acres. George (19th/20th C.) timber merchant in Denholm. He was partner in the firm Cairns & Welsh, which also operated buses to Hawick. Isabel (b.c.1810) recorded as a school mistress on the Fore Raw in 1841. She was living with Francis and Janet, who were probably her children. James (17th C.) married Isobel Rutherford in Ashkirk Parish in 1637. James (b.1714/5) herded in Tandlaw and other farms around Wilton Common in about 1726–35. He was recorded in Huntlaw in 1764 when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common; he also gave evidence regarding the former uses of parts of the Common. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Orchard in 1733 and 1744. He married Helen Taylor in 1732 and their children, baptised in Cavers, included: Robert (b.1733); John (b.1736); Margaret (b.1739); Helen (b.1744); Robert (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1748); Isabel (b.1750); and Mary (b.1753). In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Margaret Cairns (who may have been his daughter). James (18th C.) married Janet Scoon in Hawick Parish in 1791. James (b.c.1765) farmer at Hawick Moor, who may also have acted as Town Herd. He is listed as joint tenant of 'Hawickmuir' in 1834 and along with his son James as joint proprietors on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was listed there as 'independent', with his sons James and William as farmers. He married Beatrix (or 'Beaty') Turnbull (b.1767). Their children, the last 5 of whom were baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (1803/4–87); Betty (b.1806), baptised in Cavers; John (b.1808); William (b.1809); Robert (b.1811); Janet (b.1813), who married Denholm stocking-maker William Robson; and Beatrix (b.1816). He may be the son of John, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1764. James (b.c.1770s) stockingmaker at Roughheugh according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. In 1801 he was a stocking-maker at Damside. He may be the James who married Isabel Walker in Wilton Parish in 1810. James (1777–1829) weaver in Hawick, son of Francis. He was recorded as a weaver in Hawick on the 1801 Militia ballot (and hence was distinct from the stockingmaker of the same name in Wilton). He could be the James, married to Jane Nichol, whose daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1800. James (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area who married Margaret Ainslie. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: John (b.1805); Margaret (b.1807); James (b.1809); and William (b.1811); Alexander (b.1814); and George (b.1817). James (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area who married Helen (or 'Nelly') Muir. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: John (b.1812); James (b.1816); Esther (b.1819); and William (b.1822). James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker living at Sauthaa in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1840, but not in 1841. He was presumably related to the other Cairnses in that area. Probably the same stocking-maker James was one of 5 men tried for rioting during the 1837 elections in Hawick; he was found guilty and imprisoned for 18 months, the longest sentence given, largely because he was found to have personally committed some of the assaults. James (1803/4–87) son of James, he took over as farmer at Hawick Moor. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 420 acres, including 40 arable acres, employing 2 labourers. By 1861 he was the town Herd, probably succeeding after the death of Andrew Ormiston in 1853. He remained unmarried. He may be the James who in 1865 donated to the Museum 'Chinese umbrella; and walking-stick, cut from Herne's oak' (an ancient tree at Windsor, blown down in 1863). James (19th C.) married Jean Weir. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: George (b.1828); John (b.1829); and Andrew (b.1832). James (19th C.) married Mary 'Mirder'. Their son William (b.1831) was baptised in East Bank Kirk. James (19th C.) married Mary Beattie in Cavers in 1841. Jessie T. (b.1789/90) toll-keeper at Deanbrae Toll in 1861. She lived there with her daughter Agnes and grand-children. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Heap. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1711. The witnesses were shepherd William Aitkin and weaver William Stewart (and his 'wife being very sick'). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Timersidemill in 1721. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: James (b.1718); Anna (b.1721); and William (b.1731). The witnesses in 1721 were John Scott and Robert Wilson. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Thorburn and their children included: Janet (b.1785), who married Andrew Dryden; John (b.1793); Margaret (b.1795); Elizabeth (b.1798); and Annie (b.1806). John (18th C.) recorded being 'in Hawick' in 1790 when he married Isabel Fairbairn in Melrose. Robert Grierson acted as cautioner. John (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. George, who was farmer there in 1841, was probably his son. John (b.c.1770s) wright in Greena according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. John (b.c.1780) servant at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) married Betty Rutherford in Southdean Parish in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) weaver at Roadhead in Wilton. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 and 1841 he was listed as a warehouseman in Hawick, but still attending Wilton Kirk. He may be the John who married Isabel Easton in Wilton Parish in 1835. John (b.c.1796/7) from Kirkton Parish, he was a farm worker in Teviothead. In 1841 he was a labourer at Teindside Bridge. By 1861 he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead. His wife was Agnes, from Ashkirk. Their children included William, Helen, Alexander, Thomas, Agnes and Joanna. John (b.c.1805) coachman at Hassendeanburn. In 1841 he was living at Lurden Cottages with his wife Margaret and children Ann, Mary, James and Andrew. John (b.c.1810) grocer and spirit dealer at the West Port. He was recorded there in 1841, probably at No. 5 Loan. In 1851 he was a gardener on Bourtree Place. His wife was Isabel and they had children Janet, Elizabeth and Francis.

Rev. John Ballantyne (b.1942) born in London, son of William. He was educated in England, attending Bristol University 1961–64 and New College 1969–73. He was assistant at Elgin St. Giles' in 1973 and ordained by the Presbytery of Elgin in 1974. He became minister of Ewes and Westerkirk with Langholm in 1975 and took on the combined charge with Canonbie in 1980. In 1985 he moved to Dumbarton Riverside. He served as Moderator of the General Assembly in 1999–2000. In 1968 he married Dr. Elizabeth Emma Bradley (b.1943) and their children were William Bradley, Benjamin Thom and Daniel James. He published 'Keeping Fit for Ministry' (1989). Peter (b.c.1770s) labourer at Barnes according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Robert (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) tailor in Whitlaw. He married Isobel Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1703. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1704); and John (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were William Henderson in the Flex and James Gray in Whitlaw and in 1706 were James and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. His eife could be the woman of the same name described as 'widow in whitchesters' when she married tailor Robert Gledstains (in Raesknowe) in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes Mill in 1709 and 1715. His children included: James (b.1709); and William (b.1715). Robert (b.1719) was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) weaver recorded as resident of Orchard in 1749, 1755 and 1757. He married Isabel Scott in Cavers in 1743. Their children included: Robert (b.1744); Helen (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1749); Margaret (b.1750); James (b.1755); John (b.1757); and George (b.1760). Thomas, who lived in Wilton, was probably also his son. He was probably related to James who was at Orchard at about the same time. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in Wilton in 1780. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Wiltonburn. He is listed on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He may be the Robert who married Mary Martin in Wilton in 1799 or the Robert who married Mary Baptie in Wilton in 1807. Robert (b.c.1780) labourer at Winnington Rig according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. The annotation 'Married' was added to his entry. He could be the Robert who married Mary Martin in Wilton in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Nelly Dickson and their son James (b.1809) was baptised in East Bank Kirk. Robert (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer living at about 9 North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1841. He could be the 'R. Cairns, Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Robert (19th C.) married Jean Hope in East Bank Kirk in 1824. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Margaret Lillico and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: Janet (b.1827); Helen (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1832). Robert (b.1822/3) shopkeeper on the Back Row according to Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a 'Jobbing Gardener & Green Grocer' at 8 Mid Row. He married Margaret Lamb in Hawick Free Kirk in 1848 and their children included Janet (b.1848), William (b.1851/2), Isabella (b.1852/3), Robert (b.1854/5), James (b.1856/7) and Margaret (b.1858/9). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded in Hoscote in 1711, 1716 and 1721. He may have married Margaret Wilson in Roberton in 1710. His children probably included William (b.1711), Thomas (b.1713), James (b.1716), John (b.1721) and Jean (b.1724). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton, probably son of Robert and Isabel Scott. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1780. He married Mary Williamson (or 'Willison') in 1778 and their children included: Betty (b.1779), who may have had a child with James Swanson in 1797; Robert (b.1780); William (b.1782); Thomas (b.1784); Isobel (b.1785); James (b.1788); Margaret (b.1793); and Mary (b.1800). Unnamed sons born to Thomas in Wilton (with no mother's name given) in 1779 and 1780 were probably also his. The witnesses in 1780 were James Ker and Robert Cairns (perhaps his father). He could be the same Thomas as the farmer at the Dean. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Wilton dean', according to the Horse Tax Rolls. It is unlear precisely where he farmed. He may also be the weaver at the Dean who had sisters Janet (who married Andrew Dryden) and Margaret (who married James Kerr). Thomas (b.c.1785) hosiery worker in Wilton Dean. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was hosier and elder of the Kirk. He was living on Fore Row in Wilton Dean in 1841, along with children Jessie, Isabella and Margaret. Thomas (b.1816/7) from Kelso, he was a millwright in Hawick. In 1856 he donated a duck to the Museum. In 1851 he was recorded at 3 Bridge Street (which was probably on the west side). His wife was Margaret and they had a son, James. By 1861 he was listed as a 'Pauper (Millwright)' at 12 Slitrig Crescent. Thomas (19th C.) recorded at Langsidebrae in 1868. He is probably the son of John, shepherd at Linhopebraehead, born in about 1835. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Redford in 1695 and their children included: Margaret (b.1696); Francis (b.1698); Thomas (b.1701); John (b.1704); and William (b.1706). William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. William (b.1789/80) from Yetholm, he was a hand-loom weaver in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he lived at Pathhead. By 1840 he was listed at Salt Hall and he was there on the 1841 census. In 1841 he was a widower and pauper hand-loom weaver on Pathhead. He married Margaret Douglas in 1811 and their children included: John (b.1812); Robert (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1820); William; Sophia (b.1827); and Isabella. Most of their children were baptised in Jedburgh. William (b.c.1785) baker at the top end of Walter's Wynd. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Margaret. Probably the same baker William is listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. William (1809/10–1853) farm labourer who assisted his brother James at Hawickmoor. In 1843 in Hawick he married Jane Little (1816–99) and their children included twins James and Walter, John, David, Beatrix, Jane, Margaret and Barbara (1853–1928, who married Andrew Brodie). He may have died in a farming accident. His widow continued to live at Hawickmoor after his death. William (b.1821/2) grocer and spirit dealer at 60 High Street in 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included Armstrong Scott, Thomas, Margaret and William (also formerly 'Carns', 'Kairns' and 'Kerns').

Cairns' (kārn-zeez) n. chemist's shop at the Sandbed in the mid-20th century.

Cairn Sike (kārn-sīk) n. small stream in the upper Slitrig valley. It runs into Langside Burn between the Pike and the Maidens. An earthwork there is about 195 ft by 140 ft and has a double bank. It has been partly destroyed by quarrying, some of the stone being used for sheepfolds there. It is fairly close to the Catrail, to the south, at Hawkhass Linn there is an earthwork, and to the east is the remains of a farmstead.

cairriage (kā-reej) n. a carriage – 'Ai heather! sic a yooky waddeen; nae streiv! Set thum up wui ther cairreege an perr!' [ECS], 'At Chirnside she was juist like a'body else i the cairrage . . . ' [BR1706] (also written 'cairridge' and 'cairreege').

Cairriage Hill (kā-reej-hil) n. former name for a hill near Peelbraehope, perhaps the same as what is now marked on maps as 'the Pike' (it is described as part of the Catrail's route in Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick', although in 1858 W.N. Kennedy states that 'no such place as Carriage hill is known in the locality where us is said to exist').

cairrier (kā-ree-ur) n., arch. a carrier, conveyor, transporter of goods, usually by pack-horse or cart. They were the lorry-drivers of a past age. Carts only started to appear locally about 1760 and Hawick became a centre of the carrying trade in the 18th and early 19th centuries, particularly after the opening of the toll-road connecting Carlise with Edinburgh. Before the opening of the railway Hawick had 30 different carriers operating, and there were about 80 in Roxburghshire as a whole. The occupation could also be dangerous, with one carrier robbed at gun-point and tied to a tree near Branxholme in 1808 – 'An' plied wi' his cairrier cairt' [??], (also cairter).

Cairrier's Enclosure (kā-ree-urz-en-klōshoor) n. former name for a field to the north of Minto village (marked 'Carrier's Inclosure' on a 1766 map of Minto estate).

cairrit (kā-ree', -ri') pp., adj. carried – '. . . And then, i' the hush as they cairriet him off, A whisper cam' frae Dye' [DH], '. . . ee putt the hammer heid throwe the haunles an then ee cairrit eet like that ti yur job' [Da], elated, carried away, enraptured – 'A was fair cairreet!' [ECS] (also spelled other ways).

cairry (kā-ree) v. to carry – 'they cairried on singin inti the wee sma oors', 'And then a hush as they cairred um off', 'The big tin trunk ablow the bed That can cairry aw creation . . . ' [AY], '. . . And the feck o' the trock they took away, Ye wadna hae cairried hame' [WL], '. . . when the train cairryin the Scottish Olympic team stopped on its way sooth ti London' [IWL], arch. to carry oneself, behave – '. . . and was told that he should not reside in ye toun or parish if he carried not inoffensivelie' [PR1717], '... and they both promised to carrie christianlie in time coming' [PR1721], sometimes used with the subject and object switched – '... a wumman wui a bairn cairryin i the shawl' [ECS], to elate, elevate the spirit, n. a carry, lift – 'go'an gie's a cairry hame wi the messages', '... for fear it was ma hinmaist chance o a cairrie ti Haaick' [ECS] (also spelled 'cairrie'; see also cairrit).

cairry on (kā-ree-ōn) v. to carry on, misbehave, fuss – 'ony mair cairryin on an A'll cancel Christmas', 'For sleekit dealin' and cairryin' on, There never yet was a man like yon' [WL], n. a carry on, fuss, to-do – 'That year efter that cairry on, ee ken, wi Denum ...' [MA].

cairry oot (kā-ree-oo') v. carry out, conduct – 'Iz for helpin ony young lad oot wi' heis expenses in cairryin oot the mony duties ...' [BW1974].

cairt (kārt) n. a cart – 'Oor aa gaun ti Denum On Sandy Fussy's cairt' [T], '... Says aw half alood – aw'll e'en harness auld Nell Tae the little spring cairt, an' the wife an' masel' ' [BM1900], 'The cadger whoa'd his powny cairt Fornenst the 'Pig and Sty' ' [WL], '... aye hopin that a scaffie cairt gaun up the Nipknowes wad stop and gie her a lift' [IWL], v. to cart – 'Armstrong raised his fit and sent um flyin oot inti the street onti the top o a heap o dung that was lyin at the close mooth ti be cairted away' [IWL]. It is stated in 1839 that some of the older pairhsioners of Hawick could remember a time when there was only one cart in the whole Parish, and that was the one owned by the Minister.

Cairtann Burn (kār-tin-burn) n. stream marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, meeting the Teviot from the south near Commonside and having the farms of 'West cotrigg', 'Sudarig' and 'Stonyhelme' along it. It may correspond with the Cromrig Burn.

cairt-door (kār'-dōr) n., arch. the tail-board of a cart.

cairter (kār'-ur, kār-tur) n. a carter – 'My Geordie was then a braw, spanky lad, And his calling was that of a cairter' [GF] (also cairrier).

Cairter (kār-tur) n. (Carter) George (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Parkhead in 1808. He married Isabella Scott in Roberton in 1808 and their children included: Isobella (b.1808); and Marion (b.1811). Walter Gordon (1889–1936) born in Ontario, Canada, he was son of Jack and Jennie Fife. He was educated at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario and left for Scotland to complete his education as a Presbyterian minister. He was ordained in 1920 as minister of St. John's Kirk in Hawick. In 1929 he was translated to Carluke. He married Agnes Mildred James and had a daughter, Esther Muriel Fife.

cairt-rack (kār'-rawk) n., arch. a cart-wheel rut (see also rack.

cairtridge (kār'-reej) n. a cartridge (see also cartrich).

Cairtshaw Moss (kār'-shaw-mos) n. Cartshaw Moss, area to the south-east of Shielswood Loch, with Blind Moss to the south.

Cairtstane Shot (kār'-stān-sho') n. Cartstone Shot, former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as 'Cart-stane Shot' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

caishin (kā-shin) n., arch. caution, security, bail – 'Right you are, mother, money down it shall be, and I'll be caishun for it' [JEDM], 'Ti be kaishin or ti stand kaishin = to stand security (as by giving one's name as security for another's debt)' [ECS] (also spelled 'caishun', 'kaishin', etc.; cf. caution).

caiver (kā-vur) v., arch. to be incoherent, like a person near death (also 'kaiver').

Cake (kāk) n. Rev. Simon (1961/2–) served with the British Army and became an Anglican minister. He was Curate at Jarrow in the Diocese of Durham. In 2019 he became Rector of St. Cuthbert's Church in Hawick, serving the 'A7 Centre of Mission'.

Cake Day (kāk-dā) n., arch. Hogmanay, so-called because of the former tradition of children being given oat-cakes, gingerbread (and later fruit), etc. on this day – 'Country children in Scotland still 'seek their cakes' on Hogmanay or 'Cakeday' ' [JAHM].

the Ca-Knowe see the Caa Knowe

Cala (kaw-la) n. poetic name for Kale Witter – 'Through richer fields, her milky wave that stain, Slow Cala flows o'er many a chalky plain' [JL].

Calaburn (kaw-la-burn) n. farm on the Cala Burn, north of Whitehaugh, where the 'Forty Fits' track leaves the main road. The farmhouse is shown on the west side of the Cala Burn on the 1764 map of Wilton Common (which seems like an error). A farmhouse was built there in about 1717, before which the land was known as 'Mervinslaw-moss'; the tenant there became the 'common herd' for taking cattle from all the tenants of Langlands to graze on Wilton Common. James Blaikie was the first common herd, serving for 11 years, until 1729, followed by Robert Tudhope. James Noble was there in 1744, Robert Easton in 1746, James Robson in at least 1748–65, and Robert Cowan in 1797. At the 1765 division of Wilton Common the lands here were alloted to the Laird of Langlands and then sold to George Turnbull. It was then passed to his daughter and her husband, George Scott. Land there was part of the Langlands estate held by Lord Napier in the early 1800s. Masons John and Andrew Thomson were there in at least 1799–1801 and also mason George Thomson in 1801. The farm was sold by the Scott family in 1832. In 1841 it was listed as the separate farms of Lower and Upper Calaburn. Thomas Robson (d.1805), son of James, was probably farmer there. William Ramsay was proprietor of 94 acres there in 1851 and widow Jane Riddle was there in 1861. J. Govenlock was farmer there in 1868. In the 19th century it was owned by William Aitchison of Linhope and his son, William Aitchison of Brieryhill (Stobie's 1770 map shows 'Nether Calaburn' at the present farm location and 'Upper Calaburn' much further to the north).

the Cala Burn (thu-kaw-la-burn) n. stream that runs through Wilton Dean, with its picturesque waterfall behind the Museum, and joins the Teviot. It is more familiarly called the Dean Burn or Wilton Dean Burn. The upper section formed part of the boundary of Wilton Common, marked by rigs and pits – 'Where the gentle breezes rustle Through the Violet Woods serene, And the Cala Burn comes dancing Down the glen at Wilton Dean' [WL] (the origin of the name is obscure).

Cala Burnheid (kaw-la-burn-heed) n. area near the boundary of the former Wilton Common, located northeast of the farm of Calaburn. It is recorded in the 1765 description of the common.

Cala Dyke (kaw-la-dīk) n. former boundary running from north of Whitfield farm to near Rotten Moss, making up part of the outline of Wilton Common. It is unclear if it was a turf wall or ditch – '. . . and from the east end of Cala-dyke all the witnesses agreed the said dyke was the march the whole way southerly or southwest' [DCW1765].

Cala Knows (kaw-la-nowz) n. former name for a hilly region, probably just north of Calaburn farm. It is mentioned in the 1765 description of Wilton Common.

calcul (kal-kewl) n., arch. calculation, estimate – '. . . till they were both perfectly satisfied of the truth and justness of every particular of the calculs of measure and value' [DCW1765].

Calderwood (kawl-dur-wood) n. Rev. Walter Macfarlane (1908–2004) born in Edinburgh, he was son of Robert Sibbald, minister at Cambuslang. He was educated at Glasgow High School, Glasgow University (where he graduated M.A. in 1929) and St. Andrews University (where he grauated B.D. in 1932). He was licensed by the Presbytery of St. Andrews in 1932 and was assistant at Edinburgh Morningside 1932–34. He was ordained as minister at St. Mary's Kirk in 1934–54. He served as pastor for the prisoners of war in Wilton Camp. From 1954 he was minister at the Foreman Church in Leven, serving there until 1973. In 1952 he married Isobel Hood Stewart (b.1921) and their children were Robert Stewart (b.1953) and Margaret Sybil (b.1954).

Caldron Hole (kawd-rin-hōl) n. hilly area near Dryden Fell, above the headwaters of the Back Burn, north of Teviothead. There is a linear earthwork there, running west for about 500 m from here to a small ravine at the head of the Philhope Burn.

Caldwell (kawld-wel) n. Corp. Andrew (1875/6–1915) son of William and Euphemia, he was a member of Hawick Saxhorn Band. He lived at 8, The Village. He married Robina Banner and they had 3 children, Euphemia, Jessie and Robina. He served with the 1/4th K.O.S.B. He was killed in Gallipoli on the 12th of July 1915. He is commemorated on the Helles Memorial and the Hawick Roll of Honour. James (1880–1956) Hawick man who emigrated to Wanganui in New Zealand, where he collected his poetry in 'A Wheen Thoughts' (1933). He was for a while a mill foreman in Galashiels. He married Agnes Burns Ferguson and they had a son William. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1722. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Robert (b.1717), John (b.1720) and James (b.1722). Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at West Lees on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to Thomas, who was also listed there. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism in the Hassendean area for Patrick Young in 1688. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert. They were each taxed for a hearth. Thomas (17th C.) resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed baptisms for William Martin, George Collin and Robert Thomson in 1687 and for James Waugh in 1688. Thomas (1854–1915) born in Galashiels of Irish descent, son of William and Sarah McQuaid. His father was a cloth broker and the family moved to Hawick when he was young, living at 6 Kirk Wynd. He was writer of the words for 'Up wi' Auld Hawick' and 'Oor ain Auld Toon' around 1900. He originally trained as a pupil teacher at Drumlanrig School, but had to work in the mills after his father's death. He worked for a while as a stationer, and became known as an orator and Liberal supporter. He was involved in the East Bank Literary Society and was heavily involved in the local Irish Home Rule debate in 1886. In 1893 he moved to Edinburgh as a political organiser in the staff of the Scottish Liberal Association. He was a founder member of the Callants' Club as well as the Hawick Liberal Club, and was an avid member of the Edinburgh Borderers' Union. He was Right Worshipful Master of Lodge St. James B.U.R.A. 424 around 1890. He was particularly known for the musical lectures he gave in collaboration with tenor John Bell. He organised the erection of the James Thomson memorial, and unveiled it in the Wellogate Cemetery in 1899. He is himself buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. He was probably father of Thomas Brydon (b.1878) and James (b.1880) William (b.c.1810) from Ireland, he was a 'broker in clothes' at 6 Kirk Wynd in 1861. He moved to Hawick from Galashiels. He married Sarah McQuaid and their children included John, Sarah, Margaret, Isabell, Mary, William, Thomas and Samuel (also written 'Calduel', 'Caldwells', 'Coldwell' and 'Coldwells').

Caldwell's (kawld-welz) n. A. & A. Caldwell, toy and sweet shop in Innerleithen, which sells ice cream using a unique family recipe – 'The Borders are blessed wi ice cream o a sorts, Pelosis, Lombardis and Taddeis and Fortes. Guid though they a ir, ti mei it would seem Theres no yin fit ti compare wi Caldwells ice cream' [IWL].

Caldwell Sike (kawld-wel-sīk) n. stream that rises on Saughtree Fell and runs roughly to the south-east to join the Dawston Burn between Dawstonburn Viaduct and Black Linn (not to be confused with Cauldwell Sike).

Caleb (kā-leb) n. nickname for Caleb Rutherford, this perhaps not being his actual Christian name.

Caledon (kaw-le-dōn) n., poet. romantic name for Scotland, popularised by Ramsay and Burns – 'Ye sons of hardy Caledon, that wear the kilt and plaid, Come on, with target and claymore, in tartan bright array'd' [JoHa].

Caledonia (kaw-le-dō-nee-u) n., poet. literary name for Scotland – 'Now lasses see to-morrow night, That all your candles do burn bright; Let every heart beat with delight, Now the King's in Caledonia' [BY], 'When far beyond the Atlantic wave, I wander 'mid Canadian snows, My breast shall warmest shelter give, To Caledonia's fairest rose' [JoHa], 'In the south confines of Caledonia's land Famed Hawick upon a pleasant spot doth stand' [RRC], 'They graced a Wallace in the fight For hardy Caledonia's right' [JoHa], 'Thy temple is the earth and sky Of Caledonia the free . . . ' [HSR] (from the Roman name for part of Scotland).

calender (kaw-len-dur) n. someone who operates rollers used to press and finish cloth (also written 'callanderer' and variants; there are several instances of this occupation in Hawick in the 1841 to 1861 censuses).

calfs (kawfs) n., pl. calves.

Calfield (kawl-feeld) n. farm just to the west of Langholm. It was home to a branch of the Armstrongs in the 16th century and Scotts in the 18th century. The name may formerly have been written 'Calfhill' and variants. It was probably the 'Calfhills' that was burned by English raiders in 1599, along with Whithaugh.

Calfshaw (kawf-shaw) n. area to the north-west of Falnash in upper Teviotdale. The Calfshaw Burn is there, with Calfshaw Headto the north-west, reaching a height of 403 m and having a triangulation pillar. This may be where the lands were of Adam Turnbull 'de Calfshaw', who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. It is 'Calfshawis' in 1464 when Simon Dalgleish had a sasine for these lands, as well as those of Falnash. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and Langhaugh. Note there is also a place with the same name above Fairnilee in the Tweed valley, south-west of Galashiels.

Calfshaw Burn (kawf-shaw-burn) n. stream that rises on Calfshaw Head and flows roughly south-east, past Falnash, to join the Falnash Burn and hence the Teviot.

Calfshaw Heid (kawf-shaw-heed) n. hill between the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys, to the north of Lairhope. It reaches a height of 403 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. The slopes to its north-west are also referred to as Philhope Fell and Crib Head is the hill to the south-west.

calker (kaw-kur) n., arch. a dram of spirits, bumper – 'There we'll get a guid cauld calker, Frae a man that is nae Quaker' [AB]. Note that the practice of public distribution of drink to the riders is recorded at least as early as 1725 when the Minister tried to suppress it! (origin uncertain; also written 'cauker' and other variants; the word occurs in R.L. Stevenson's 'Tresure Island' and its meaning is given incorrectly in some glossaries).

Callaghan's (kaw-lu-hunz) n. Callaghan's Irish Bar at 20–22 High Street, run by Brian Callaghan.

callan' (kaw-lin') n., poet. a young man – 'Sic sappy callan's ne'er are right, But whan the glass is fillin' ' [JR].

callant (kaw-len', -lun', lin') n. a young man, youth – '... May each Teri be a callant in his heart for evermore' [TC], 'And a' the callants o' Hawick Loan ... ' [JSB], 'If it be gowd that makes a man, Then, faith! I'm but a callant' [JoHa], '... its no sae often as many gude friends meets, we'll just make a nicht o'd, an bury the callant the morn' [HAST1871], 'Then it was a band of Callants (With no thought to gain renown) Marched to meet some English gallants Who had come to storm the town' [TK], 'They met the boasting English here: Though they were Callants then ... ' [JEDM], 'Long may it run, long may each Callant's heart Throb through the years until that festal time ... ' [JCG], '... the wainches jumpin the tow, an the callants daein kittles' [ECS], 'Where can any joy surpass The callants doon at Mansfield' [RMc], ' 'Hawick callants' ever true Ever noble, ever brave, 'Hawick callants' never knew What it was to be a slave' [JAHB], 'A Cornet, symbolic o mony a lang-lost callant In fremmit fields ... ' [DH], 'A guid place for wild strawberries yon, when I was a callant' [DH], 'And the stories tell of the English who fell At the hands of the callants from home' [IWS], boyhood, state of being a 'callant' – 'The far off Hawick o' callant days ... ' [JEDM], 'O callants! Toom are your braggin' speeches When eident woman your hert beseeches' [WL], 'Then A went as a young callant wi ma fither and ma uncle Andra ti the Archæological Society's meetins ... ' [IWL] (Dutch origin, related to the modern Dutch 'klant', meaning 'customer'; often capitalised when referring to Hawick's youth collectively).

The Callant (thu-kaw-lin') n. poem written by 'Matthew Gotterson' and published in the Scotsman and Hawick Advertiser in 1889, originally entitled 'The Hawick Callant'. The pseudonym is one used by Jedburgh-born James Smail, and so it is presumed that these verses are also his. It is composed of 5 verses, discussing Hawick specifically, and hence it is unclear why Smail would have written it, leaving open the possibility that someone else used his pseudonym (or if Smail did write it, there must have been a specific reason for him to do so, since he had no obvious direct connections with the Town). The third verse on its own (the one least focussed on Hawick) is traditionally sung at the Callants' Club annual dinner, with music arranged by Adam L. Ingles in the mid 1970s. It is included on the CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry' (2006), sung by Bert Armstrong. The words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2011 Hawick Songs book.

callants' baa (kaw-lintz-baw) n., arch. the handball game once played in Hawick on the Saturday preceeding the main 'men's baa'.

the Callants' Club (thu-kaw-lintz-klub) n. formed in 1904, after a circular letter was sent out at the end of 1903 by 10 local men: Martin Dechan; Tom Ker; Adam Laing; A.H. Drummond; J.E.D. Murray; T.D. Darling; Walter Scott; William N. Graham; Hugh Anderson; and James Edgar. This was partly in concern over the possible effects of the new Stobs army camp on the traditions of the town. The first meeting was held in the Buccleuch Hotel. The aims are explicitly 'the cultivation of local sentiment; the preservation of the ancient customs and institutions of the town of Hawick, and of its history and traditions; the fostering of local art and literature; the commemoration of important local incidents, and the perpetuation of the memories of worthy townsmen'. The membership is limited to 200 ordinary members (originally 100), plus honorary members. The President is elected annually, the first being Tom Ker. The annual dinner, held every year since 1906, except for the war years, features a prominent Scotsman as main guest (and artefacts from Gallipoli are displayed). They also organise a congratulatory Smoker for the Cornet, the first one being in 1904, and always have a meeting after the Colour Bussing. One of their first public acts was to raise money for the Provost's Chain in 1906, which they have followed with a series of fund-raising causes. The Club has long organised a wreath-laying at the Horse to commemorate the local men who fell at Gallipoli on 12th July 1915. They annually award prizes for a school essay competition (since 1957) and a shield to the shop-front with the best Common-Riding window display. The club celebrated its centenary in 2004 with a series of events (and a female Provost being invited to the annual dinner for the first time). A history of the Club's first 50 years was published in 1954 and the Centenary volume in 2004 – '... Scotia's boast was Hawick Callants' [JH].

Callant's Song (kaw-lintz-sawng) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written in 1994 for Ronnie Nichol, and first performed at the 1514 Club Dinner that year by Elliot Goldie. This was the first local song written by Seeley, and was based on an exercise he developed for the music examination at the High School, using his own words. Seeley himself notes the resemblance to the style of Thomas F. Dunhill. It is included on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry', sung by Elliot Goldie.

Callender (kaw-len-dur) n. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hume in Roberton Parish in 1703.

Callendrick see Caerlenrig

caller (kaw-lur) adj., arch. fresh, cool, refreshing – 'The sun is up, the morning fresh and fair, 'And halesome it's to snuff the cauler air' ' [CPM], 'The cauler breeze frae off the fells, Will lead the dogs to the quarry true' [LHTB], '... The field in need we tax for bread, Our drink's the caller well' [JaHu], '... the forenuin air was caller an clear' [ECS], 'And caller-clear rins Tei'ot, where Kind Providence sae wicely placed it' [DH], 'And there's mony a less pleasant and mair fashious way o' spendin' a caller wunter efternune ... ' [DH], 'I'll rax me doun my nibbie stick And seek the caller air' [WL], 'How oft our braw lads and lasses hae gane In the saft caller shades in the gloaming' [RF], 'The water that cam' frae'd was caller and clear ... ' [JCG], v., arch. to cool, freshen – 'Dyce's attention being called ... he drily remarked 'She needna caller her shanks the day for ought she'll get!' [BM1909] (from the Middle English 'calver').

calligo (caw-li-gō) n., arch. calico, a kind of printed cotton – '... qh was yn prohibit ... any forraigne cloaths, stuffs, hats, caps, stockings, gloves, calligoes, buttoons ... ' [BR1702].

callit (caw-lee', -li') pp., arch. called – 'But the said Margaret Tullie denies that she callet her witch, but she grantit she callet her thief ... ' [Ash1635], '... viz. William Scott at the Croce, Robert Scott, callit of Goldielands, present bailies' [BR1638] (cf. the modern caaed).

calm (kawm) n., arch. another name for heddles, the small cords through which the warp is passed in weaving, or the set of these – 'To find a calm to suit the reed, when there is not the same number of threads in each split ... ' [BCM1881].

calsay (kawl-see) n., arch. causeway, paved road – 'Item, that ilk man keippe the calsay before his awin dure and heritage, under the pane of 40 shillings, bye the payment for keeping thereof' [BR1640] (see also causa and causey).

calumniat (ka-lum-nee-a') pp., arch. calumniated, made false statements about – 'William Elliot of Belie, ye understand the man, He's married with the sister of Scot of Sinton, Who him calumniats with a mis-report, I'le say he is a Liar in his Throat' [CWS].

Calvert (kal-ver') n. Andrew (b.c.1795) toll-keeper at Whitrope Bar in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth Bell. William (19th C.) from Carlisle, he married Jane Wylie and their children included Ann (1865–1919), who was the ancestor of several Carruthers in Hawick. It is unclear if he is the same man as the bandmaster. William (19th C.) 3rd Bandmaster of Hawick Saxhorn Band, serving in that role in 1866–71. He was brought back as Bandmaster in 1878 to save the floundering band, which had briefly dissolved. By 1880 he was jointly leading the Hawick and Langholme bands. He lived in Langholm for most of his life, where he was agent of the Prudential Assurance Company and in 1889 was running a small shop. He married Jane Johnstone, who died in Langholm in 1904.

cam (kam) v., arch., poet. came – 'And cam' and swabbled mei' [JSB], '... Till they cam fra hill and shaw' [JEDM], 'The heat wasna cannie as A cam ti the main road' [ECS], 'But they cam' and condemned it and garred mei flit' [DH], 'But Aa cam' back later on, mind ye, and got the nibbie!' [DH], 'She cam' tae my door when the frost and the snaw ... ' [DJ], '... Gaed hauntin' Herod, and truith to tell, He cam by a scunnersome end himsel' ' [WL] (also written 'kam'; used as the past tense, while 'comed' was the past participle).

Cambustoun (kam-bus-tin) n. former name for lands listed as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608. It is unclear where these lands were, or whether there is simply a transcription error.

Camehill (kām-hil) n. former name for part of the lands of 'Langhassendean' in Hassendean Parish. Langhassendean was given to Neil Cunningham by his father William in 1457, except for this part.

Camerrell (ka-mu-rel) n. John (16th C.) tenant of the farms of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern transliteration of his name would be.

Cameron (ka-mu-rin) n. Rev. Alexander 'Alex' (1845–1911) born at Pluscarden, Elgin, son of John and Janet Ross. He was educated at Pluscarden, Elgin, Aberdeen University (where he graduated M.A. in 1869), Aberdeen Free Church College and Glasgow Free Church College. He was licensed by the Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow in 1874, became assistant at Greenock Middle Free Church 1874–75 and was minister at Greenlaw West 1875–1902. He became minister at the Roberton Free Kirk ('the Snoot Kirk') in 1906. He collapsed and died during evening service and is buried at Borthwick Waas. His grave can be seen in an old postcard. Alexander Durand 'Sandy' (??–) history teacher at the High School who wrote many educational books on Scottish history in the 1970s and 80s. Donald (b.1828/9) from Inverness-shire, he was a butler at Wilton Lodge in 1861. Probably the same Donald was an innkeeper in Hawick in the 1860s. He was a witness at the trial for the robbery at the Museum in 1865. Donald fictional character in 'The Gutterbludes', described as 'A sailor belonging to the Western Highlands'. Evan (1845/6–71) graduating M.B. from Glasgow University in 1869 and M.D. in 1871, he went to Denholm as a doctor. However, he died the same year, at the age of 25. John (d.1446) of unknown origin, he was Provost of Lincluden and official of St. Andrews, later becoming a Canon of Glasgow, secretary to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Wigtown (later 5th Earl of Douglas) and Rector of Cambuslang. In 1424 he became secretary to King James I, then Keeper of the Privy Seal. He was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1425, as successor to William Lauder. However, the Pope claimed the right to select his own appointee, and so he wasn't consecrated as Bishop until 1427. He was thus Hawick's Bishop, remaining until his death. He was a close advisor of the King, including involvement in some unpopular policies involving limiting ecclesiastical liberty, and was accused of improper conduct by the Pope. A strong opponent at this time was William Crozier, the Pope's candidate for Archdeacon of Teviotdale. He served as ambassador to England in 1429, 1430 and 1431. He travelled to the Continent in 1433 and was involved in negotiations to reconcile the Scottish Crown with the Papacy, remaining there for about 3 years, including a period of banishment. He returned to Scotland after the assassination of James I and was Chancellor for the yong James II. He then became embroiled in Douglas politics, and was accused of plotting against the King. Although he kept his bishopric, his power was severely reduced. He died at Glasgow Castle. Patrick (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. His surname is recorded as 'Camroun'. Richard (c.1648–80) born near Leuchars in Fife, his family moved to Falkland, where he became shoolmaster, having been educated for that vocation from an early age. There he became aquainted with some field preachers, and later moved to Edinburgh. In 1675 he was appointed as chaplain and tutor for Sir William Scott of Harden. He supposedly accompanied Lady Scott to Roberton Kirk, but refused to enter to hear an 'indulged' preacher (perhaps John Colt), and next day left to join the Covenanters. In fact he was probably dismissed from Harden, but the next year became chaplain to Lady Douglas of Cavers. In 1678, at the house of Henry Hall at Haugh-head, he was licensed to preach by 4 non-conformist ministers. He became one of the most prominent Covenanter leaders, inciting people in the Scottish south-west to openly oppose the government. He fled to Holland for a while, and on his return led a small band of followers who openly renounced their allegiance to the King. He was hunted down at Airds Moss and killed, his head and hands being put on public display in Edinburgh. Many of his followers were later given an amnesty and formed the Cameronian Regiment. His radical style of religion was called Cameronianism, and many churches professing to this branch of worship sprang up, including one in Denholm. So although he does not seem to have returned to Teviotdale after 1678, he nevertheless continued to influence the area long after his death. Robert (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. As a Covenanter he had to flee the region. He was captured and, along with Andrew Gordon, was banished to America. Dr. William 'Bill', M.B.E. (??–) from a Highland family, educated in Glasgow and Edinburgh, he came to Hawick in 1958 as a partner with Dr. Milne, serving as a G.P. for 30 years, and being awarded the M.B.E. in 1987.

Cameronian (ka-me-rō-nee-in) n. term sometimes used synonymously with 'Covenanter', more precisely a follower of the Rev. Richard Cameron, who was a prominent Covenanter who denounced Charles II, and was killed at the battle of Aird Moss (and who was chaplain and tutor at Harden). His followers were also called 'Reformed' or 'Free Presbyterians', and later the terms 'Dissenters' and 'Independents' were also used.

the Cameronian Chaipel (thu-ka-me-rō-nee-in-chā-pul, -chā-pul) n. chapel in Denholm used by a local congregation of strict Covenanters, who refused to join the Presbyterian Church. There must have been a meeting place from around 1690, but the purpose-built chapel was erected in about the early 1740s, behind the Poplar Neuk on the Small Green. It had seating for 230 and 3 pulpits, with the preacher's house adjoining the chapel. The site was given by the Laird (probably Archibald Douglas) and the Douglas family worshipped there until the late 19th century. The congregation petitioned to join the Reformed Presbytery in 1769, the letter being signed by Walter Stott, James Hobkirk, John Scott, John Johnston, William Stott and William Henry, with the appointment of Elders being sanctioned in 1770. The first permanent minister was John Arnot (d.1774), followed by James Duncan (1774–1830). After he died the building was used by the Denholm Congregational Church. It became known as the 'Independent Chapel' and by the end of the 19th century as the Meeting House or the Mission Hall. By the 1920s services were held alternately here and at the Free Kirk. But after the reunion of the United Free Church with the Established Church in 1929 the old Cameronian Kirk was closed. The building was used for a while as a blacksmith's, before being demolished after WWII. The adjoining manse still stands and was renamed Elmbank (often just referred to locally as 'the Chaipel').

Cameron's (ka-me-ronz) n. architect's firm, established in 1982 as Duncan Cameron. In Hawick they worked on the blocks of flats and sheltered housing at Elm Grove, Teviot Court and Wilton Path.

Camieston (kaw-mee-stin) n. hamlet about a mile south of Newton St. Boswells. In about the early mid-1200s land there was granted to Philip 'de Leya' (the origin is simply 'Cameis' town', since it is recorded belonging to the Chames or Cameis family in the late 12th and early 13th centuries).

Caminshaw (kaw-min-shaw) n. former name for a high area in the southwest part of Wilton Common. This was close to Mabonlaw and Todshaw, and it was said the tenants of those farms regarded it and Greenhill as their 'headroom'. Although the location is mentioned several times in the description of Wilton Common when the lands were divided, it does not appear on any associated map. It lay to the west of Woolaw Moss and hence appears to correspond to the modern Pisgah Hill (which is not mentioned in the description of Wilton Common) – '. . . and the herds hounded their horses from the moss-side, or Caminshaw' [DCW1765] (it is possible that this was once 'common shaw', i.e. the wood on Wilton Common).

cammel (caw-mel) v., arch. to argue, dispute – '. . . the skirls an the dirls, the raameen an the raackeen an the cammelleen, the daads an the dunts an the skraucheen an the skreeveen' [ECS], 'A strooshie o' foak cammellin' an' fechtin' amang yin another' [GW].

Campbell (kam-bul) n. Alister 'Sally', 'Big Sal' (1959–) born in Hawick on New Year's Day, he was raised in Burnfoot, where he first started playing rugby. He played for the P.S.A., the for the Linden and had his debut for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 18. He played in the 2nd row, for a while alongside Alan Tomes. He won 7 top-flight titles with the Greens. He also played for the South and had 15 international caps for Scotland, including being part of the 1984 Grand Slam team. His playing days were ended in 1989 when he broke his leg in a game against Melrose. He later coached for the P.S.A. Alexander (18th C.) servant to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. In 1732 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh, gratis, 'for good services'. Archibald (c.1507–58) 4th Earl of Argyll, son of Colin, the 3rd Earl. He was Justice General of Scotland, a title that was hereditary at that time. In 1535 he presided over a Justiciary Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (18th C.) Excise Officer. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick for baxter William Elliot in 1763. Perhaps the same Archibald who was one of the witnesses for the 'irregular' marriage of George Wallace and Margaret Waugh, recorded in Wilton in 1736. Capt. Archibald (18th/19th C.) of the 42nd Highland Regiment (i.e. the Black Watch). He was made an Honorary Burgess, along with 2 fellow officers, when they passed through Hawick shortly after the Treaty of Amiens in 1802. Archibald 'Archie' (1824–1904) born in Hawick, son of Duncan and Isabella McLean. He later moved to Glasgow. In 1848 he helped create a cricket club in the Kinning Park area, which became the Clydesdale Cricket Club, now the city's oldest surviving sporting organisation, with their orginal ground being sold to Glasgow Rangers Football Club. He also helped found Clydesdale Football Club in 1872 and was first President of the Scottish Football Association. Bruce T. (1956/7–) Cornet in 1980, he worked as a printer in Hawick. In about 2001 he purchased the firm of Scott & Paterson, 9 High Street. He later assumed sole ownership and retired in 2023. Capt. ?? (18th/19th C.) recruiting officer for the 91st regiment in Hawick, who became involved in the 1809 disputed Common Riding on the 'royalist' side. He refused to let his servant David Lawrie act as fifer for the 'rebel' Cornet's party. As the party of the 'royalist' Cornet rode up the Loan he was pelted with 'a reeking bucketful, neither of milk nor butter, from Jennie Mitchellhill's byre' and was the object of the 'cleistering' of the mob, causing him to retreat to the Tower Hotel. Campbell was a common name in this regiment, and so it is difficult to guess his first name. He is probably the Captain Campbell whose child's death is recorded in Hawick in 1822. Perhaps the same Captain, 'adjutant of the Regiment N.B. Militia' was mentioned in records related to the balloting of men in 1799. Donald (d.1562) son of Archibald, 2nd Earl of Argyll and Elizabeth Stewart. He was trained at St. Andrews and by 1525 was appointed Abbot of Coupar (although not without dispute). He was later Senator of the College of Justice and a member of the Privy Council. In 1548 he was nominated as Archbishop of Glasgow, with more dipsute, and he was never consecrated. He also sought the bishopric of Brechin, but appears never to have succeeded there either. He became a Protestant, and is said to have left 5 illegitimate sons. Duncan (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella McLean and their son Archibald was baptised in 1824. George (18th C.) servant to dyer Robert Pringle in Hawick. He (along with his master) witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexnder Bunyan in 1743. Rev. James Wilson 'Jim' (b.1954/5) born in Falkirk, son of Graham and Williamina Wilson. He was educated in Falkirk and studied teaching at Calendar Park College 1972–75. He worked as a teacher 1975–78, but went back to university later, graduating B.D. from St. Andrews in 1992. He was licensed by Falkirk Presbytery in 1992, was assistant at Erskine 1992–93, was at Bethesda Church, Aberdeen, U.S.A. 1993–94 and at Bearsden New Kilpatrick 1994–95. He was ordained as minister of Ashkirk with Selkirk in 1995. In 2010 he left for Ceres, Kemback and Springfield in Fife. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Jon Cambell in Newtoune' in 1623 when, along with Andrew Allan in Headshaw, he acted as cautioner for Mungo Scott in Castleside. It is unclear which Newton this was. Corp. John (17th C.) recorded in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for Robert Elliot in Harwood. John (18th C.) worked as private tutor in Edinburgh. He became assistant preacher to Rev. Simon Haliburton at Ashkirk, perhaps in the 1780s; he was described as being 'an old preacher' with very different habits than those of his very formal and sober employer. Rev. John (1778–1857) younger son of Rev. William of Lilliesleaf, where he was baptised. He is recorded in 1798 as 'Mr John Campbell Student in Divinity Lilliesleaf' on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia; however, John Bryce, shoemaker from Currie Parish, served as substitute for him in the Militia. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1800 and became minister at Selkirk in 1806, being presented by James, Duke of Roxburghe; this was dspite members of the Lilliesleaf congregation petitioning the Duke to appoint him as his father's successor at Lilliesleaf. In 1809 he married Jane (d.1873), daughter of Richard Sherriff, farmer near Stow. He wrote about the Parish of Selkirk for the New Statistical Account. He died in Bridge of Allan. John (b.c.1805) cattle-dealer at Alton. He was listed there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. On the 1841 census his wife was Elizabeth and they had a son John. John (1817–70) baker of 10 High Street, taking over from Robert Grierson. In 1851 he married Wilhelmina ('Mina') Michie, who died in 1880. Their children were Neil (died young), John (Cornet in 1877), William (died in Australia), Robert, Neil, Beatrice, Isabella and Walter. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Sarah Harrison and their children included: Elias Johnes (b.1849); Agnes (b.1852); and Robert (b.1854). John (1858–81) son of baker John and Wilhelmina Michie. He was elected Cornet in 1877 at a public meeting, after the Council had refused to make any appointment following a street accident the previous year. He died only 4 years later and is commemorated in a poem by Thomas Chapman. John (1872–c.1950) from Walkerburn, he was a baritone singer. In 1933 he recorded 4 Hawick songs in Edinburgh, with Philip Kiddie on the piano. These may be the earliest recordings of 'Bonnie Teviotdale', 'Up wi' the Banner', 'I Like Auld Hawick' and 'The Border Queen'. Neil (18th/19th C.) proprietor of the Plough on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Perhaps the same Neil was living in Lilliesleaf on the 1841 census. Rev. Reginald Franklin (b.1951) born in Edinburgh, son of Edward Crichton and Phyllis Gwendoline Franklin. He was educated at Boroughmuir, Edinburgh University and Moray House, and worked briefly in catering. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1977 and was assistant at Largs St. John's 1977–79. In 1979 he was ordained as minister of Castleton and Saughtree with Newcastleton Congrgational Church from 1979. He moved to Cumbernauld Kildrum in 1989 and demitted in 1993. In 1977 he married Rosemary Anne Walker (b.1954), daughter of George Adamson and they had a son Neil Alexander (b.1987). Robert (17th/18th C.) lawyer who leased the lands of Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1705. Rev. Robert (19th C.) ordained in 1846, he was the first incumbent of the Episcopal Church in Hawick, 1847–54. He had been master of St. John's School in Jedburgh and was transferred to Hawick a year after the Episcopalian mission was first set up. Services took place in the Grammar School, Inglis' Ball-room (i.e. the Half-Moon Hotel) and then the new Episcopalian Church School. He also taught a school on the High Street (probably the one on Half Moon Yard) 1846–53, being assisted by R. Robertson. In 1851, along with Mr. Dickerman (the Duke of Buccleuch's chaplain), he started a mission in Selkirk, which became the Church of St. John's the Evangelist there. In the 1852 directory he was listed as master at the Episcopal School on Damside. He left Hawick for Glen Almond or perhaps St. Ninian's in Perth and was later at St. Andrews, Aberdeen. A photograph of him exists. Robert (b.1822/3) born in Cavers Parish, he was a cattle dealer living at Stintyknowe in 1851. In 1861 he was at Whitehaugh farming 200 acres and employing 3 people. His brother David, a mason, was living with him. In 1868 the pair of brothers were farmers at Greensidehall. He married Alice (or Alison) Govenlock and their children included John. Thomas (1777–1844) poet, born in Glasgow, where he was educated, he spent some time in Edinburgh where his contemporaries included Sir Walter Scott and Dr. John Leyden. He lived most of his life in London and was a much recited sentimentalist of Victorian times, e.g. 'The Pleasures of Hope'. He was said to have worked for a while as secretary to Lord Minto. He spent the night in Hawick at the inn owned by local poet James Ruickbie after they had met by accident near Colterscleuch. A story is also told of how he drafted the first sketch of 'Lochiel' while visiting Minto. William (17th/18th C.) servant to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was made a Burgess of Edinburgh, gratis, in 1719. Rev. William (1727–1804) son of William, a surveyor with H.M. Customs in Kirkcaldy (there is some confusion over whether he was born in 1727 or 1737). He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by the Prebytery there in 1758 and in 1759 ordained as minister of the Low Meeting in Berwick. He came to Lilliesleaf in 1760, where he was presented by John, Duke of Roxburghe, and he stayed until his death. He was a large man with a very loud voice, known as 'Roarin Willie', but said to be one of the most popular ministers in the district. In 1788 he is recorded owning part of Midlem in Bowden Parish. By that time he had also acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish (probably from Riddell of Newhouse), valued at £285 13s 4d; he also held other lands acquired from Riddell of Newhouse (valued at about £28) and teinds valued at £60. He also purchased lands in Lilliesleaf from Alexander Chatto. He was said (by W.N. Kennedy) to be one of the ministers called to exorcise an apparent haunting in Ashkirk. He was also known for his drinking, with a story being told of how he was discovered by a parishioner asleep at the roadside one morning after a hard night, and when asked if it was him, replied 'Whisht, woman, it's a wager'. The oldest known Lilliesleaf communion token is from his incumbency, bearing the date 1796. He is recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls, in 1797 having 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He is also recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 as having acquired land in Lilliesleaf Parish from Riddell of Newhouse, with a value of £28 2s 9 $^{10}/_{12}$ (probably Friarshaw, perhaps in sterling). In 1759 he married Margaret, only daughter of Alexander Home, the minister of Stichill, and she died in 1813. Their children were: Agnes, who married William Scott, writer, in Edinburgh in 1779; William, who became a legal apprentice in Edinburgh in 1777, but died 4 years later; Alexander (b.1763); Edward (b.1765), who died in the East Indies; Jean (b.1767), who married Thomas Tod; Robert (b.1768), a Captain in the Royal Navy; Margaret (b.1770), who married William Farquharson, a doctor in Edinburgh; David (b.1772); Elizabeth (b.1773); George Home (b.1775), who died young; Marion, Marjorie or 'Mannie' (b.1776), who married Robert Gillan, the minister of Hawick in Edinburgh in 1798; John (b.1778), who became minister at Selkirk, although members of the Lilliesleaf congregation had petitioned the Duke of Roxburghe to appoint him as his father's successor; Janet or Jessie (b.1779), who died young; and William Scott. He wrote a description of Lilliesleaf Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account. His descendants presented a new pulpit to Lilliesleaf Kirk. William (b.c.1814) from outside Roxburghshire, he was listed as a 'type founder' on the Howegate in 1841, living with Ann, probably his wife. He presumably made printer's type for one of the early publishers in Hawick. Rev. William Francis 'Frank' (1957–2017) born in Paisley, son of William Cross and Marjorie Margaret Sheelagh Nelson. He was educated in Rutherglen and Cambuslang and graduated B.A. from Strathclyde University in 1976. He then worked as an accountant, was Secretary for Queen's Park F.C. 1979–81, was a legal assistant and administrator for Dumfries & Galloway Regional Council. He graduated B.D. from Glasgow University in 1988, was licensed by Glasgow Presbytery in 1988, was assistant at Ayr Auld Kirk 1988–89 and in 1989 was ordained as minister of Irvine Relief Bourtreehill. In 1991 he became minister of Ancrum, taking on the linked charge of Lilliesleaf in 1994 and the further linked charges of Crailing and Eckford in 1999. He was known for refereeing local football matches. In 1991 he married Alexis Carnegie (b.1957), daughter of Edward Graham and his wife had 3 children from a previous marriage.

the Camp Burn (thu-kawmp-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the south-east, between Deanburnhaugh and Philhope, about a mile or so after Broadlee farm. There is a picturesque waterfall by he road. About 150 m up the stream, on the right hand side are a series of earthworks, apparently once known as 'Africa'. The suggestion that this was once a Roman (or British) camp presumably gave rise to the name of the stream. In fact it appears to be a fortified homestead of early mediæval date, covering almost an acre, overlain with several later buildings, whose foundations can still be made out. 3 other sets of building foundations can be found on the opposite bank. A rough stone ball found near here is in Hawick Museum.

Camping Hole (kawm-pin-hōl) n. popular name for a field at Spittal-on-Rule. The name is probably related to the large stones that were said to have been unearthed there from time to time.

Campioncroft (kawm-pee-in-kroft) n. former name for lands that lay within the East Mains of Hawick. Adam Cessford occupied these lands in 1557, when they are 'Campiouncroft' in a charter relating to Trinity Collegiate Church. In 1565/6 the lands were still occupied by Adam Cessford, but tenanted by William Scott, and said to lie in the lands of East Mains (it is unclear where exactly the lands were, or the origin of the name, although it seems likely it derives from Old Scots 'campioun', a champion, perhaps associated with a reaping competition).

the Camp Knowes (thu-kawmp-nowz) n. former popular name for a series of hills to the west of Ashkirk that contain hill-forts. This could be the 'kempis knowis' recorded in 1536 as part of the kirklands of Ashkirk when (along with 'clewis') it was renated for 20 shillings per year by Richard Bothwell, Parson, to Simon Shortreed, Vicar.

the Camp Knowes (thu-kawmp-nowz) n. former name of an area near the head of the Ewes. This was where James V and his men encamped in 1530 before their murderous meeting with Johnnie Armstrong and his followers.

Camp Knowes (kawmp-nowz) n. hill just to the south-east of Clarilaw in Bowden Parish. It contains Blackchester fort, as well as a triangulation pillar, and reaches a height of 152 m.

Campknowe Plantin (kawmp-now-plawn'-in) n. plantation on the former Synton estate, east of Ashkirk, and south of Synton Mains farm. Just to the east of the plantation, on the northern slopes of Blackcastle Hill, are the remains of a hill-fort and later enclosure within it. It lies at the northeast end of a rocky ridge and is complex in form, but partially destroyed by cultivation and the former plantation.

Campknowes (kawmp-nows) n. farmstead in the Ewes valley, located about 200 m south-west of Fiddleton. Road-maker William Johnstone and his family were living there in 1841 and 1851. The name probably derives from earthworks that were formerly there; this had already been obliterated by the plough in 1875, although it is said that an old battle-axe and stone coffin had been found nearby. A cist was also discovered some time before 1912 (perhaps the same one), containing human remains, flints and arrow-heads.

Camp Plantin (kawmp-plawn'-in) n. plantation adjacent to Alton Pond, just north of Newhouses farm. It is named after the earthwork at its southern corner.

camshauchelt (kam-shaw-chel') pp., poet. crooked, distorted – 'As for sic as turn agley til thair camshauchelet wayes, the Lord sall leede thame furth wi' the wurkers o' inequitie' [HSR].

can (kawn) n., arch. a wooden vessel for holding liquids – 'Can is a wooden decanter. 'Kit, cap and can' is a phrase used to express all kinds of meat and drink' [JL].

Canada (ka-nu-du) n. large, thinly populated country in North America. Many Borderers emigrated there, particularly in the early-to-mid 19th century. A focal place for emigrated was the area of Galt (now part of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo) in Ontario. In the 1808 death register there is recorded 'Mr Stanley Canadian's Child' and 11 days later 'Miss Lindoe – a Canadian'; what these Canadians were doing in Hawick (and why they died) is not known. Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau's mother was an Elliot, who can trace her roots back to Robert Elliot, whose father was at 'Hargleclughhead' when he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish; this could be Harecleuchhead near the original southern boundary of Hawick Common. The regions of Vancouver, Galt and Toronto have all held their own versions of Hawick Common Riding.

the Canadian Stakes (thu-ka-nā-dee-in-stāks) n. race run on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century with prize money raised by subscriptions of exiles in Canada.

Candelles (kawn-delz) n. former name for lands, probably near Falnash. It was recorded in a 1464 sasine of Simon Dalgleish for 'Fallinesch, Candelles, Calfshawis, et tribus husbandiis in Mynto'. It thus seems likely that it was near to Falnash and the adjacent Calfshaw, but the location is now lost (the spelling an pronunciation are uncertain).

Candlemas (kan-dul-mis) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, falling on 2nd February, commemorating the purification of the Virgin Mary. In former times candles were blessed on this day. It was also sometimes called 'Bleeze-money day' in local schools, and in the 18th century was celebrated with cock fighting.

Candy Jean (kawn-dee-jeen) n. Hawick character of the mid-19th century, perhaps a seller of confectionary – 'Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi' his coat o' skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean' [HI].

Cannoby (kaw-nō=bee) n., arch. local pronunciation of Canonbie, adj. relating to Canonbie – 'Ha! cries the learned reader, this is fine, To write of horses, cows, and Cannoby brood swine' [JR], 'Likewise, James Turnbull, Canabi Mills' [HAST1866].

the Cannon Inn (thu-kaw-nin-in) n. popular name for the Ordnance Airms, a Hawick hostelry of the early 19th century, situated in part of 12 High Street. But about 1840 it had become a grocer's shop, run by William Laidlaw, and later was where the Royal Bank was built in 1857/8.

Canonbie (ka-nin-bee) n. smal town in Dumfries & Galloway, about 2 miles from the Border, on the River Esk and the A7. The Cross Keys was a 17th century coaching inn. The priory from which it gets its name was founded by David I in the 12th century and destroyed in 1542. The town, as well as 'the grund wher the cloister, housis, bigingis, and yairdis of Cannabie wer situate, and ar now demolisched' were listed in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It is also the name of the surrounding parish, which was joined with Roxburghshire in 1672, but must have been returned soon after. It is said that when the English Wardens claimed the area as English the residents objected, declaring they had always been Scottish. The established church there was part of the Presbytery of Hawick for part of the 20th century. In the 16th and 17th centuries the area was a stronghold of the Armstrongs Population (1991) 390 (it is 'Canoby' on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561 and 'Canabie' on Gordon's c.1650 map; it is 'Cannaby' in 1578 and 'Cannabie' in 1580; see also Cannoby).

Canongate (kaw-nin-gā') n. street in Denholm, being the continuation of Sunnyside and Leyden Roads. The name possibly relates to the monks of Melrose who owned lands there in the 14th century. It was well-known as the location of Mrs. Mack's shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and all the houses there were thatched until about 1900 (also sometimes 'the Canongate').

Canongate Brig (kaw-nin-gā'-brig) n. ancient stone bridge in Jedburgh, built in the 16th century, and probably quite similar to Hawick's former Auld Brig.

Cant (kawn') n. Charles (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, whose wife was Abigail (with no surname). Their son James was baptised in 1692. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for James Inglis. He married Isobel Brown and their children included William (b.1693) and Isobel (b.1698). Isobel (b.1698), baptised to John and Isobel 'Hislope' is probably also his child.

cantel (kan-tel) n., arch. a head, especially the crown – 'A planteet masel i the machine, takin tent no ti crack ma cantel as A claam in' [ECS].

cantie (kawn-tee) adj., arch., poet. cheerful, merry, lively, pleasant, comfortable – 'A thousan' blessins wi' a row, Light, canty Andrew, on your pow' [JR], 'Nellie Nisbet, a douce canty auld body, kept the Cross Keys' [AL], 'My canty, witty, rhyming ploughman, I hafflins doubt it is na true, man' [BS], '... cape-house (kāp-hows) n., arch. a small erection on top of a building – 'The Cape-house-door they burst in twain; Then down the Stairs they come amain" [CWS].

Capellanus (ka-pe-la-nus) n. Henry (13th C.) recorded as 'Henry de Chapeleyn' in Roxburghshire when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bire a 6-leafed figure and the name 'S'HENRICI CAPELLANI'. It is unclear where he came from in Roxburghshire. John (d.1147) Tironensian cleric, possibly of Norman origin, who was chaplain of King David I. He became Bishop of Glasgow and established Glasgow Cathedral. It seems likely he had some involvement in the establishment of the Tironensian monastery at Selkirk in 1113, and certainly is mentioned in the charter. He was the first Bishop of Glasgow who is known to have had local influence. He had a serious dispute over authority with the Archbishop of York, even travelling to Rome at one point. Around 1136 he gave up being Bishop, but returned a year or 2 later. He was buried in Jedburgh Abbey, whose foundation he presided over. Walter (d.1232) chaplain to William the Lion, he became Bishop of Glasgow after the resignation of Florence in 1207. He thus has authority over the Hawick area. He was one of 4 Scottish Bishops to visit Rome in 1215 and returned in 1218 to seek absolution from te excommunication placed on the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He had the church of Ashkirk confirmed to bim in 1216 by Pope Honorius III. He was later investigated for obtaining the bishopric by bribery and for nepotism and maintaining an immoral household, but the case appears to have been dropped. He may also be referred to as being 'of St. Albans'. His seal bore the figure of a bishop standing on a crescent, with one hand raised and the othe holding a crozier, and with the words 'SIGILL. WALTERI DEI GRA. GLASGUENSIS EPI.' (the name simply meant 'chaplain', and hence may never have been a surname).

Capelrig see Cappitrig

capestane (kāp-stān) n., poet. a copestone – 'The stane whilk the biggers rejecket, the same is become the capestane o' the nuik' [HSR].

capfi (cawp-fi) n., arch. a capful, quarter of a peck, a standard measure for dry goods – '... was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennyworth of tobacco' [SM1816].

the Capon Trei (thu-kā-pon-trī) n. ancient oak tree located off the A68 just south of Jedburgh. It is supposed to be one of the last oaks of the original Jed Forest. Its trunk has a circumference of about 10 m, but has split and decayed, and the tree limbs are supported on props. It was much damaged in a storm of 1882. It is visited during the Jedburgh Common Riding – 'I'll roam again by the Eildons three, And muse by the classic Jed; I'll seek the shade of the Capon Tree, To make my noontide bed' [JBB] (the name may be a corruption of the 'Capuchin Order' of monks).

Cappercleugh (kaw-pur-klooch) n. settlement at the junction of the Yarrow and Meggat valleys, at the north-west corner of St. Mary's Loch (also written 'Cappercleuch').

Cappitrig (kaw-pee'-rig) n. lands in Hassendean Parish, referred to in a charter of about 1537 when the eastern half of the Mains was returned from David Scott 'in Clarelaw' to William Scott of Hassendean. The lands were bounded on the east by the Grinding Burn and on the west by 'Our Lady Land' and lay close to Hassendean Tower. In 1538 2 letters of reversion relating to these lands were stolen from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendean in Edinburgh by Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. A (presumably related) dispute in 1540 was between William Scott and Thomas Turnbull (farmer at Rawflat) over a 'wadset' for 'Nether Copit Rig' and the lands of 'Easter Mains called Coppit Rig'. In 1556 there was a sasine for the lands of Hassendeanbank and 'Capelrig' to Sir Walter Ker of Cessford and his wife Isabel. In 1604 the lands of 'Easter and Wester Cappitrig' were given to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, probably to pay off the debst of Robert Scott of Hassendean. The lands of 'Easter and Wester Copetrig with pertinents', in the Barony of Hassendean, are still listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. By 1684 the superiority was held by the Earl of Roxburghe, continuing in 1696 (it is 'Capitrig' in 1537, 'Coppitrig' in 1538, Coppit Rig' in 1540, 'Cappitrig' in 1604 and 'Copetrig' in 1663).

Cappuck (kaw-puk) n. farm a few miles east of Jedburgh, site of a small Roman fort, occupied in the 1st and 2nd centuries, where pottery fragments and 3 inscribed stones were excavated. The fort is situated on on Dere Street. There were Riddells here in the 19th century (the origin of the name is uncertain, with the first element perhaps meaning 'chief' and the second being from the Old English 'huc', meaning a point of land; the name is first recorded in 1602).

Captain Menty (kap-tin-men-tee) n. fictional character in William Easton's song 'The Anvil Crew' – 'And Captain Menty walk'd the deck, While Buckham mann'd the wheel [WE].

caption (kap-shin) n., arch. legal apprehension, an arrest warrant – '... the Erle of Buccleughe caussit rais vpoun the lettres of horneing lettres of captioun, and apprehendit the said Robert Ellot' [SB1624].

Carborne (kar-bōrn) n. John listed in 1544 as 'Clemyt Crossers man', when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. It is unclear where they lived, or which Clement this was, although lands near the Slitrig are likely, and it is possible it was Clem Crozier of Stobs. It is also unclear if this surname has a modern equivalent.

Carby Hill see Caerby Hill

cardit (kawr-dee', -di') pp. carded, combed fibres – 'O wae to the day that I first cardit woo', O dool to the weary beginning o't' [JoHa] (see cf. caird).

Cardonnel (kawr-do-nel) n. Adam (d.1820) from Northumberland, he studied medicine, but became an antiquarian and numismatist. He published 'Picturesque Antiquities of Scotland' in 1788. This included a sketch of old Hassendean Kirk (also known as 'Adam Mansfeldt de Cardonnel-Lawson').

carefi (kār-fi) adj. careful – 'be carefi what ee wush for, ee might juist git eet', 'Ilk bodie that is carefu', thuthfu', Can no' get time to take a mouthfu' ...' [JoHa] (also spelled 'carefu' etc.).

careni (kār-ni) contr. care not, don't care – 'I carena tho' your worships kend it, A doggerell piece I just hae endit' [JR], 'But I fear ye carena for me, Willie, But I fear ye carena for me' [JTe], 'But I carena to gang back to leeve, My hert wad be but wae To miss the hert that made for me The bield below the brae' [FL], 'The Bewcastle reivers sweer They carena for Harden's lord ...' [TK], ' 'Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belang them' [JT] (also written 'carena' etc.).

Carewud Rig (kār-wud-rig) n. spur of land in the upper Hermitage valley, being a northern projection of Geordie's Hill, between the farms of Carewoodrig and Billhope on the road from Fiddleton to Hermitage. There are the remains of a rectangular enclosure there and on the north bank of the Carewoodrig Burn there is a 'burnt mound'.

Carewudrig (kār-wud-, kā-ru'-rig) n. Carewoodrig, farm on the road from Fiddleton to the Hermitage valley. It is probably the place marked

'Kerriot rigg' in the headwaters of the Ewes valley on one Blaeu's 1654 maps and may be the place labelled 'A common cald Cars-ceud' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Carsclud Hill' on another of Blaue's maps. Mungo Beattie was there in 1623. John Hall was shepherd there in the late 18th century. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1797 and John Nichol was tenant in 1841. By 1851 it was the home of shepherd John Telfer and family and John's son John was shepherd there in 1861 – 'Billhope braes for bucks and raes, And Carit-rigs for swine, And Tarras for the guid bull-trout, If it be ta'en in time' [T] (it is 'Carretrig' in 1623, 'Carritrigg' in 1718, 'Kerritrig' in 1797; 'Carrotrigg' in 1841 and 1851 and 'Carwoodridge' in 1861 and 1907; the earlier forms probably represent the local prounciation; an alternative form of the traditional rhyme has 'Carit haughs', but this place is surely meant').

Carewudrig Burn (kār-wud-rig-burn) n. stream that follows the road between the Hermitage valley and Fiddleton, running into the Ewes Water near Burnfoot farm.

Carewudrig Hope (kār-wud-rig-hōp) n. area in the upper part of the Hermitage valley, north of the farm of Carewoodrig and south of Tudhope Hill. Near where the Carewoodrighope Burn joins Craigy Cleuch there are 4 enclosures, and a little to the south-east is an area of rig and furrow. Where Ashy Sike joins the burn there is a small building platform and nearby the remains of an old quarry.

Carey (kā-ree) n. Henry Lord Hunsdon (c.1524–96) son of Mary Boleyn, cousin of Elizabeth I, and possibly the illegitimate son of Henry VIII. He was Governor of Berwick and Warden of the English East Marches, later Lord Chamberlain. He served as Warden of the English East March 1568–96, being Lord Warden General from 1589. 2 letters from him to Queen Elizabeth and her Lieutenant describe the raid into the Scottish Borders made by forces led by him and the Earl of Sussex as reprisals following the 'Northern uprising'. Their men laid waste to the countryside around Hawick in April 1570, causing the inhabitants to unthatch their houses and burn the thatch themselves to avoid helping the enemy, before fleeing. They destroyed what remained, but left Drumlanrig's Tower intact, including the Town's goods that were stored inside. They also found Branxholme abandoned and burned, but nevertheless decided to blow up part of it, describing it as 'a very strange howse, and well sett; and very pleasant gardens and orchards abowt ytt, and well kept, but all destroyed'. In contrast he was also patron of the Globe Theatre in Shakespeare's time. Sir John (d.1617) 2nd son of Henry, Lord Hunsdon. He was Marshal of Berwick and Deputy Warden, becoming Warden of the East Marches in his own right in 1601. He succeeded his brother George as 3rd Lord Hunsdon in 1603. Sir Robert (c.1561–1639) son of Henry, Lord Hunsdon. He became deputy Warden of the English West March in 1593 and of the East March in 1595, becoming Warden in 1596. From 1598–1603 he was Warden of the Middle March, being known for keeping order and strictly enforcing the law. He was involved in a major incident with the Armstrongs at Tarras Moss in 1601. Later he supposedly rode 300 miles in 2 days to tell King James that Elizabeth was dead. He wrote some memoirs, which contain fascinating details of life on the Border in those times, and many of his exploits have been fictionalised by P.F. Chisholm (also written 'Cary').

carfuffle (ka-fu-ful, kur-fu-ful) n. disorder, shambles, confused situation, state of agitation – 'hei's in a right carfuffle', v. to ruffle, discompose, to become ruffled or perturbed – '. . . his lang black goun hang straucht to his cutes ne'er i' the least curfufled' [EM1820].

cargi (kawr-gi, kawr-ge) n. cargo (also spelled 'cargih').

Carglass (kar-glis) n. former lands in Liddesdale, first recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as 'Carglas', with a value of 24 shillings. It was 'Carglais' in 1541 when described as being leased to Alexander Armstrong (son of 'Ill Will') and valued at 24 shillings. The location is uncertain, but probably close to Mangerton.

Carham (kaw-rum) n. Northumbrian village on the Tweed. It was the site of a battle between the Danes and the English in 833, and nearby there was also the battle in 1018 between the Scots and Strathclyde armies, under Malcolm II, and the Northumbrians under Uchtred. The resulting defeat of the English led to the Borderline being set at the Tweed, and the Lothian and Borders areas being included in Scotland. The nearby Redden Burn has marked some of the Borderline since 1222, and its crossing was a regular meeting point for Wardens of the East Marches. The village is now also the end of the Tweed Raft Race.

cark (kark) n., arch. worry, anxiety – 'The toun life's a stuffy life Hedged roon wi' cark and care' [WL].

Carkettle (kawr-ke'-ul) n. John of Marcle (16th C.) convicted in 1570 of failing to join a gathering of the royal army that had been ordered at Hawick in October of that year (spelled 'Carketill').

carkin (kar-kin) pp., poet. troubled, anxious – 'Wi' pow now rid o' carking cares, He for the tavern benses' [JoHa].

carl (kaw-rul) v., arch. to serve a bitch with a dog – 'If she could get hersel' but carl'd, In time o' need, She wi' her din ne'er deav'd the warld, But now she's dead' [JR].

carle (kaw-rul, kā-rul) n., poet. an old man, fellow, churl – 'The crabbit carle wadna speak, His swelling wraithe did puffe . . . ' [JTe], ' 'Now canting carle', the Pricker cried, 'I'll scourge thee like a hound' ' [JTe], 'Thou art a scandal-raising carl, As e'er set foot into the warl' ' [JoHa], ' 'Twas cauldrife death that gruesome carle, that closed her een sae blue' [WE], 'Wi' banker Cash, a daintie carl, Wha was owre guid for sic a warl' [RDW], 'Oh, death, thou art an unco carl, What ailed thee at puir Davie?' [TCh], 'Auld carl Time has laid his paw Fu' heavy on your pow' [JT], 'The carl rade tae Aberdeen, To buy white breid But lang or he cam back again The carline she was deid' [DH], '. . . Hae thocht o' yon auld cadger carle And keep your wits aboot ye' [WL] (also written 'carl').

Carles (kaw-rulz) n. Richard (17th C.) recorded at 'Rule' in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. His surname may be a transcription error.

Carleton (kaw-rultin) n. Thomas (1547–98) Land Sergeant of the Barony of Gilsland. He was appointed Governor of Carlisle Castle in 1592, and was in that post during the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was involved in a feud with the English Warden, Lord Scrope. He was accused of treason for helping the Scots free Kinmont, and although nothing could be pinned on him, he was removed as Governor of Carlisle Castle. In 1598 he haboured David 'Carlin' Elliot, who had killed a man called Ogle; the Ogles killed Elliot and when he pursued them he was shot dead.

carlin (kawr-lin) n., poet. an old woman – '. . . tumblit heels owre head and startled up auld liart carlins' [EM1820], 'An if ye meet wi' Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg, Though baith the deil an' Merlin Ye meet that day' [JR], 'The carl rade tae Aberdeen, To buy white breid But lang or he cam back again The carline she was deid' [DH] (also written 'carline'; the word occurs in place names, such as Carlin Hole, Carlinpool and Carlin Tooth).

Carlin (kawr-lin) n. Rev. John Henry (20th C.) minister of Newcastleton Congregational Kirk from 1942. He had previously been minister in Lerwick.

the Carlin (thu-kawr-lin) n. nickname for David Elliot.

Carlin Hole (kawr-lin-hōl) n. area in the upper part of Hope Sike in the Slitrig valley, lying just on the left-hand side of the B6399 after Berryfell farm. It is possible this is the 'Carlinghall' listed among lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1607. It is probably also the 'Carlinghoill' listed as part of the lands of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from his half sisters in about 1608.

Carlinpool (kawr-lin-pool) n. location mentioned in a charter of 1494, along with Teindside, Harwood and Slaidhills, when they passed from John Abernethy to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. The tenant in 1502 was David Turnbull. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. However, in 1559 and 1572 they were included among the lands held 'in property' by the Baron. In 1585 the lands were confirmed to Francis, Earl of Bothwell (along with Harwood, Teindside nad Slaidhills). In 1594 its name appears on a list of lands belonging to Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick and it was still listed in 1615. The same lands passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch before 1634 and are listed in the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs for the Scotts of Buccleuch and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The precise location is uncertain (it is 'Carlingpule' in 1494, 1502, 1585 and 1594, 'Carlynpule' in 1511, 'Carlingpule', 'Calynepule' and 'Carlyngpule' in 1572', 'Carlingpule' in 1615 and 1634, 'Carlingpoole' in the 17th century, 'Carrlingpoole' in 1653, 'Carlingpooll' in 1663 and 'Carlingpools' in 1693; a connection with the nearby 'Horse Pool' or more distant 'Caerlenrig' are possible).

Carlin Tooth (kawr-lin-tooth) n. peak in the Cheviots, to the east of the Note o the Gate, in the southern part of Southdean Parish. It reaches a height of 551 (1,801 ft), is capped with a triangulation pillar and is essentially where the Jed Water rises – '. . . there is another rmote peak among the same range of mountains which the shepherds call the Carlin-tuth ...' [RG] (the name is presumably 'hag's tooth', as it sounds).

Carlintooth Rig (kawr-lin-tooth-rig) n. hill on the south side of the upper Hermitage valley, between Ewe Hill and Wetherhorn Hill. It reaches above 400 m.

Carlisle (kar-līl) n. city in Cumbria, on the River Eden, approximately 42 miles south of Hawick along the A7. It was a Roman stronghold at the end of Hadrian's wall, and has been consistently English since annexed by William Rufus in 1092. It was the county town of Cumberland, with its cathedral built in the 11th to 15th centuries, and its castle facing Scotland. The Tythe Barn, beside St. Cuthbert's Church was built around 1500 and was recently restored. The Guildhall Museum is contained in a house dating from 1407, while the 17th century Tullie House is also now a museum. The Citadel is the twin-towered southern entrance to the city, replacing earlier gates in the 19th century and partly designed by Thomas Telford. Carlisle Great Fair was established in 1353, takes place in August, and has evolved over the centuries. Stage coaches ran south there from Hawick after the opening of the toll road about 1770, and a regular service between Carlisle and Edinburgh started in 1807 after the repeal of the toll acts. It formed one end of the Waverley Line, linking Hawick with the west of England, and now is the starting off point for journeys down the M6. It is also headquarters for Border TV – 'Then on we helde for Carlisle toun, And at Staneshaw-bank the Eden we cross'd; The water was great and meikle of spait, But the nevir a horse nor man we lost' [T], 'Bless all railway junctions In their northward functions. Bless the cheery man in blue Who shouts the sequence loud and true Ending with Carlisle' [DH] (note the pronunciation usually stresses the first syllable; traditionally Teries talk about going 'up' to Carlisle, presumably because of the railway).

Carlisle Castle (kar-līl-kaw-sul) n. mediæval fortress in the city of Carlisle, where it commanded the English side of the western Border. The original wooden construction was built around 1093, with the first stone construction in the 12th century, and construction continuing for several centuries. The castle fell to David I's forces in 1135 and to Alexander II in 1216, with Robert the Bruce being Governor there at the end of the 13th century. It was the residence of the English Warden of the Western Marches in the 14th to 16th centuries. Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned here in 1568, as were Jacobite supporters in 1746. Locally the castle became well known because of the rescue of Kinmont Willie by 'the Bold Buccleuch' and a large party of Scotts, Armstrongs and others in 1596. The Border Regiment Museum is also housed here – 'And when we left the Staneshaw-bank, The wind began full loud to blaw; But 'twas wind and weet, and fire and sleet, When we came beneath the castle wa' ' [T].

Carlyle (kar-līl) n. Rev. Alexander (c.1721–1803) eminent divine of his generation, from Prestonpans, who became minister at Inveresk. Among his classmates in Edinburgh was Sir Gilbert Elliot (later of Minto). He was involved with the Scottish literati, and had a hand in promoting John Home's play 'the Tragedy of Douglas'. He was also an acquaintance of Hawick's minister James Laurie, writing about him in less than glowing terms in his autobiography. In 1767 he penned verses for the birthday of the Duke of Buccleuch. He also visited Hawick a week after the flood of 1767. David (18th/19th C.) clogger at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. Robert (d.1996) Hawick man who worked in the textile mills as well as on the railway. He was a member of Hawick Archæological Society, contributing to the Field Section and helping to organise excursions. Along with John Cannon, he worked to save Dangerfield Mill. Some of his memories of growing up in Hawick were published in the 2016 Transactions. Thomas (1795–1881) Scottish writer and philosopher. Born in Ecclefechan in Dumfriesshire. He had a strong Calvinist upbringing, but had a crisis of faith while studying for the ministry at Edinburgh University. He taught mathematics and began writing essays and fiction, especially while living at Craigenputtock. He later moved to London. His maternal aunt Isabella ('Tibbie') married Hugh McKinnon, a stocking-maker in Hawick; she died in 1842. He visited Minto in 1838, and describes getting a coach from Hawick (also spelled 'Carlisle').

Carmichael (kar-mī-kul) n. George (d.c.1484) treasurer of Glasgow Diocese. In 1477 he requested to the Pope that he be be allowed to hold 3 incompatible benefices, since at that time he already held a non-major dignity along with the Parish Church of Wilton. He was elected to the office of Bishop in 1483 after the death of John Laing. However, he was never consecrated, since Pope Sixtus IV wanted to appoint the next bishop himself, which he did for Robert Blackadder. He may have died on the way to appeal the Pope's decision. Sir Hugh (d.bef. 1627) son and successor to Sir John. He is probably the Hugh, 'junior of that Ilk' who was deputy Keeper in 1590. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William Elliot of Falnash in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was ambassador to Denmark and became a Privy Councillor. He also became Warden of the West Marches about 1602, it is said to avenge his father's murder. He married Abigail, daughter of William Baillie of Lamington. His children included Sir John, Margaret, Anna and Jean. James R. (b.1824/5) from Berwick, he was a solictor in Hawick. He was briefly in partnership with George Potts (who died in 1851), the pair being involved with the inventory of the deceased John Nixon in 1849. The firm of Potts & Carmichael are listed as writers and notaries on Buccleuch Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He was the first agent of the Royal Bank of Scotland in town, up until the late 1860s (with Walter Haddon taking over), with premises at 14 High Street. He served as Procurator-Fiscal for the Justices of the Peace in Hawick in the 1860s. He was also Hawick District Secretary for the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was an early player of tennis in Hawick. In 1852 he married Jane, daughter of Charles Scott, farmer at Milsington. Their children included James R., Thomas and Euphemia R. John of that Ilk (d.1584/5) son of William, he succeeded his grandfather, William of that Ilk. In 1551 he (and his son John) witnessed the regranting of Wauchope to David Turnbull. He was one of the witnesses to the testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. Also in 1574 he was a witness for the Turnbulls in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. He appears to have been Keeper of Liddesdale in 1579. In 1580 there was a 'commission' given to him as Keeper 'for the punishment of dissobedient personis within the bounds of Liddisdaill and Tyndaill bewest the Streit', with the 'fencibles' of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire ordered to meet him in Hawick on 15th December. In 1580/1 the position of Keeper and Warden of the Middle Marches was given to William Ker, younger of Cessford. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh, 6th Lord Somerville. He secondly married Elizabeth Seton. His children included Sir John (who succeeded), Archibald and Mary. Sir John (d.1600) son of John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Somerville. In 1551 he (along with his father) witnessed the regranting of Wauchope to David Turnbull by the Earl of Angus. He was Warden of the Scottish West and Middle Marches and took part in the Raid of the Redeswire. He was apparently a favourite of the Regent Morton, explaining his appointment to the Wardenship over the usual Border leaders. In 1578 he and John Cockburn of Ormiston gave caution that they would apprehend Martin Elliot of Braidlie and he additionally served as cautioner for Gilbert, brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He also acted as Keeper of Liddesdale, being appointed in 1578, the proclamation made at the market crosses of Hawick and other Border towns. In 1581 he was still 'younger of that Ilk' among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. After the Redeswire skirmish he was sent to York to placate Queen Elizabeth, but released soon afterwards. In 1587 he served as a cautioner for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch after he was released from prison in Edinburgh Castle. In 1589 it was stated that the taxes from the King's lands in the Borders were to be assigned to him, as Warden of the West March. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was reappointed Warden of the Marches in 1598. He was killed by a group of Armstrongs at Raesknowes near Lochmaben, apparently on his way home from a football match. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas of Pittendreich. Their children included Sir Hugh (who succeeded, and was also Warden of the West Marches), Mary, Abigail, Elizabeth and James (who died in a duel) – 'Carmichael was our Warden then, He caus'd the country to convene . . . ' [CPM]. Thomas (19th C.) Captain Commandant of the local Border Rifles in the late 1880s.

Carmure (kar-mewr) n. James (17th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1631. He was also 'M.A.', and so may have been a minister later or earlier.

Carnarvon Street (kar-nar-vin-stree') n. street in Wilton, built in 1879. It originally had eight cottages and a larger 2-storey building. It was named after statesman and essayist Henry Howard Molyneux Herbert, Earl of Carnarvon (1831–90), who was colonial secretary when Canada was granted confederation, as well as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Originally named Maxwell Street until 1882, it has always had an industrial component, including Buccleuch Printers for example.

Carnegie (kar-nā-gee) n. Andrew (1835–1919) born in Dunfermline, he moved with his family to the U.S.A. at age 8, started working at 13, and eventually became a multi-millionaire in the steel industry. He gave away most of his wealth to public works, particularly involving education, and including Hawick Public Library. He was made an Honorary Burgess upon the Library opening in 1904, stating 'I declare this library open and free to the people, and this I do in the firm faith that to generation after generation it must prove an ever-increasing harvest and blessed fountain from which only healing waters shall flow for the good of the people of Hawick'. The Museum renovations in 1959 were also helped by the Carnegie Trust.

Carolshiels (ka-rul-sheelz) n. former name for Corrie's Shiel.

Caron (kaw-ron) n. Alexander (c.1333–98) cleric who held the benefice of Cavers Parish for a couple of years. His designation is given as 'de Caron' and variants, and he may have come from one of the places called 'Carron'. He studied in Paris along with his brother John, studying for a B.A. under Walter Wardlaw and becoming M.A. in 1358/9. He probably studied civil law in Orleans and returned to Paris, where he was Proctor of the English Nation in 1363. In 1362 he was given the Church of Creich in Fife. He was in Scotland by 1366 when he was a guarantor for Robert Chisholme relating to lands in Moray. In 1367 he and Gilbert Armstrong were elected to represent the clergy of St. Andrews. He may be the Alexander 'Scot' who was back in Paris in 1370 to make a petition. He exchanged Creich for Kilmany in Fife in 1566/7. He was presented to Cavers Church by Melrose Abbey, probably in 1372/3 and resigned at the request of William, Earl of Douglas in 1374. He then held a lesser benefice, perhaps Kinkell in Aberdeenshire and also obtained a Canonry of Aberdeen. He graduated as Doctor of Canon and Civil Law by 1380/1. He was a Papal Chaplain at the time of his death. He was a nominee for the position of Abbot of Melrose but apparently took a lesser position at St. Andrews so that Mr. Matthews, the Clerk of William Earl of Douglas could be appointed.

Carpet Close (kawr-pi'-klōs) n. passageway running from Orrock Place through to a path leading over what was formerly Morlaw's Croft (also known as the 'Back o the Yairds') to the Coble. It still exists, but with no public access. Before the New Road was built in 1815, a favourite walk used to be through Carpet Close to the Coble Pool and the Spetch (named after the adjacent carpet manufacturers).

carpets (kawr-pits) n. carpet manufacturing begun in Hawick in 1752 and was once the main industry in town. Its fame soon spread, and orders came in from far afield. Hawick carpets were noted for their quality. Several manufacturers existed in the late 18th century, also making other heavy woollen articles, such as table covers, rugs and articles used by saddlers. The main factory, however, was in Orrock Place, started by William Robertson, who was brought in from Dunfermline. It operated from 1752–1806 and gave its name to Carpet Close. By about 1776 the firm was operating 14 carpet-making looms. A partnership for the development of the local carpet industry was started in 1759 by John Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Elliot of Ormiston, Thomas Turnbull of Minto (and Burnfoot) and William Robertson of Dunfermline, with the latter acting as manager. The original stock was £400, and this had risen in value by a factor of 10 by 1777. These gentlemen can be regarded as the founding fathers of Hawick's knitwear industry. The partnership was renewed in 1779 between John Elliot, William Robertson and Thomas Turnbull (second son of the previous partner). The trade fell off after the death of 2 of the main partners and when war and banking restrictions raised the price of wool. However, the business was partially replaced with blanket manufacturing and Turnbull's was carried on from the dyeing department of the old Hawick Carpet Company. The last carpet made in Hawick was in 1844. Some artefacts of carpet manufacturing are preserved in the Museum, including 'pair of shuttles used in the old carpet loom' donated in 1868 – '. . . and the carpet in the white bedroom, which was woven at Hawick . . . the former days were better than now, in so far as pertained to the durability of the fabrics turned out by the looms' [RJR].

Carr (kawr) n. James (18th/19th C.) labourer at Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Tom (1912–77) born at Allendale, Northumberland, he became a colliery blacksmith. After the War he worked in Newcastle, but then sustained a back injury, which required a change of occupation. His wife sent some of his drawings to a publisher that she met by chance while he was in hospital, and he received a commission to illustrate a book on hunting. He later moved to Dean Cottage in Southdean Parish and became well known as an artist, particularly for hunting scenes in a range of media.

Carre (ker) n. surname spelling variant used by some of the Lairds of Cavers Carre; see Ker.

Carr-Ellison (kawr-e-lee-sin) n. John Ralph Stockley (b.1867) 2nd son of Capt. Ralph of Hedgely Hall, near Alnwick. He farmed at Wauchope for 5 years and then at Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn) for about the same period. He inspired the formation of the Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. In 1900 he married Alice Ursula, daughter of Frederick A. Lang of Toorak in 1900. He was a very keen rider with the Jedforest Hunt, serving as Whip 1897–1903. However, he left the area soon after this.

the Carres see the Kerrs

the Carriage Hill (thu-kāreej-hill) n. name used for the Pike, which is crossed by the Catrail. The name was used by Alexander Gordon in the 18th century, William Scott in describing the route of the Catrail and in the New Statistical Account of 1839.

carribald (ka-ri-bawld) n., poet. a term of abuse of uncertain meaning – 'Some tore by his spalds, and some pulled by his neck, Till the carribald skybald was riven to wreck' [JTe].

Carrick (kaw-reek) n. John 'Ginkin' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'Johannis carrok vocatis ginkin' and Johannis carrok alias Jinkin'. He was among the men who Adam Scott of Tushielaw had remission for resetting for stealing sheep from farms in Peebleshire in 2 separate cases. Specifically at the Justice-aire in Selkirk he was said to have stolen 140 sheep from Manorhope. His nickname was an old word for a trick.

Carrie (kaw-ree) n. George (b.c.1795) born in Earlston, he was a millwright in Lilliesleaf. His sons William and Thomas also worked there as millwrights, while George became a joiner in Melrose (this name may be the same as 'Currie').

carrit (kaw-ri') n. carrot (note the pronunciation).

carritch (kaw-rich) n., arch. the catechism, a book containing basic Christian principles in question and answer form, once the foundation of education – 'He's never out o' some mischief, He'll no' gang to the schule, He tore his carritch leaf frae leaf To mak' a dragon's tail' [JT].

Carritrig see Carewudrig

Carruthers (kaw-ru-thurz) n. Archibald (15th C.) bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Archibaldo Carutheris'. Christopher (b.1831/2) from Tinwald in dumfriesshire, he was a teacher. In 1861 he was 'Schoolmaster of Cavers par.' in Denholm. He was living with his sisters Mary and Jemima. Henry (18th/19th C.) ploughman at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. His surname is written there as 'Carudas'. He may be the Henry who was a servant at Easter Barnhills on the ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish in 1801. Probably the same Henry had a child William baptised in Ancrum in 1802. Henry (b.1816) 3rd son of William and Agnes Davidson. He was shepherd for most of his life, but later became tenant farmer at Netherhall, near Wilton Lodge, where he died. In 1861 he was recorded as shepherd at Wolfelee Townhead. His wife was Jane (from Yarrow) and their children included Catherine and Agnes D. He is probably the Henry, Elder of St. Andrews Kirk, who was said to be a descendant of a Covenanter from Eildon village named Williamson. James (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. James (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Earl of Annandale. In 1673 he leased part of the farm of Todshawhill. Joseph (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Bessy Hardie and their children included: Janet (b.1744); and an unnamed child (b.1746). The witnesses in 1746 were flesher Robert Hardie and merchant James Hardie (who were probably related to his wife). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Betty Wilson and their children included: Betty (b.1760); and William (b.1764). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: William (b.1776); and John (b.1778). Robert (16th C.) servant to Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton. He is listed in 1535 as 'Robert Carutheris' among a list of men denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and goods from Craik. In 1535/6 he is listed as a servant of Simon Armstrong when Simon was re-convicted of the same crime. Robert (b.1811) son of William and Agnes Davidson, born at Limekilnsyke. He was shepherd at Upper Langhouse in North Tyne, Singdean and Hindhope. He developed ill-health when relatively young and died at Langburnshiels. Thomas (18th/19th C.) coachman who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It is unclear where he lived. Thomas (1820–96) youngest son of William and Agnes Davidson, he was born at Limekilnsyke. He was a shepherd at Langburnshiels, being for many years the managing shepherd at Langburnshiels and Wauchope for Daniel Mather. He was recorded at Langburnshiels in 1868. He also spent 17 years as manager at Hyndlee. He then moved to Athole Cottage, Kirkton. From about 1848 he was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational Kirk. In 1863 he reported finding peculiar lines of stones, which were examined by members of the Hawick Archæological Society. In 1848 at Wolfelee Glen he married Margaret, daughter of dyker John Dalgleish, and she died at Athole Cottage, Kirkton in 1892, aged 66. They had 5 sons and 2 daughters, including: William, shepherd at Phaup; John, farmer at Barrow in Coquetdale, who married Christine Thomson; Jane; Thomas, farmer at Dodd, then in Northumberland; and Robert, who moved to Deadwater and married Kitty Dagg. Thomas (b.1857) son of Thomas and Margaret Dalgleish. He started his working life as shepherd at Cleuchhead in Rulewater. He then became tenant farmer at Dod (owned by Mr. Pott) and later Featherwood, Rochester, Northumberland. He married Elizabeth Colcleuch Usher at Weensmoor in about 1880; she was eldest daughter of Thomas Usher of Eildon. Their children included Thomas Usher. He gave an account of his family tree to Tancred of Weens. William (18th C.) shepherd from Eildon. In 1773 he married Margaret Cochrane. Their children included William, who was born in Bowden Parish, and whose descendants lived at Langburnshiels in Rulewater. He died at Langburnshiels. William (b.1780) son of William and Margaret Cochrane, he was born in Bowden. It is said that he went to college, but decided to pursue the calling of a shepherd and moved to Langburnshiels in Rulewater. In the 1841 census he was an agricultural labourer at Langburnshiels. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Davidson and Catherine Williamson. Their children were: William; Robert, also a shepherd; Catherine, who married shepherd John Wilson; Henry (b.1816), shepherd at Netherhall; Thomas, who died in infancy; Thomas (b.1820), who was also a shepherd; and Margaret (b.1824), who married John Halliday, the 'Rustic Bard'. He lived until at least age 70. William (b.1809) eldest son of William and Agnes Davidson. He was older brother of Thomas, who was head shepherd on the Wauchope estate. He worked as a labourer and was living with his brother on the 1861 census. He is probably the W. Carruthers who donated several items to Hawick Museum in 1861, including 2 stone rings dug up at Robert's Linn, some fossils and part of a stone quern. In 1876 he donated 'two stone rings dug up on Windburgh near Robert's Linn, Lignite and other two fossils and fragment of a quern'. William (b.c.1850) eldest son of Thomas and Margaret Dalgleish. He became a shepherd at Phaup, Teviothead. He married Jane Routledge of Plashetts. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter (formerly 'Carutheris', 'Crutheris' and variants).

Carryshiels see Corrie's Shiel

Carse (kawrs) n. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1781)(, Margaret (b.1785) and an unnamed child (b.1786). His name is also written 'Crass' and could be a variant of a locally more familiar name.

Carshop see Kershop

Carswell (karz-wel) n. William (14th C.) recorded as 'Kareswell', he could be connected with the lands of Cresswell in Hassendean Parish (which may have given rise to the name 'Kersel'). Alternatively he could be related to the Kerrs. He married Isabel, Countess of Mar, widow of Donald, 12th Earl of Mar, and also widow of Geoffrey Mowbray. In 1347 he and his wife were granted by Edward III the Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire and Keepership of Roxburgh Castle. In 1348 he received lands which had belonged to his deceased wife, until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. He was still Sheriff of Teviotdale in about 1356. He also held the Barony of Roberton (not the local village) and Lordship of Kenback.

the Carter (thu-kawr'-ur) n. popular name for the Carter Bar – '... Nature's Wardens of the Marches – The Cairter, Catcleuch Shin, Peel Fell, Penchrise Pen, Skelfhill Pen, an the lave' [ECS], 'The rough road runs by the Carter ...' [WL], 'The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side' [WHO]. 'Here on the crest of the Carter, Far though her children may roam, Scotland with arms wide open, Welcomes her wanderers home' [WL] (also 'the Cairter').

the Carter Bar (thu-kawr'-ur-bawr) n. hill of 418 m (1,371 ft) near the Border crossing point of the A68. An upright boulder, erected in 1982 and taken from Craighouse Quarry, marks the Scotland/England Border there. The viewpoint by the roadside gives a stunning panorama across the southern counties of Scotland. In 1834 the minister of Southdean wrote that 'there is perhaps no entrance to Scotland more picturesque than the one of which we now speak ... no doubt greatly enhanced by the uninteresting country which must be traversed before entering into Scotland'. It was near here that the 'Raid of Redeswire' took place in 1575, and a footpath leads from the main road to the Redeswire Stone, which marks the site. In the 18th century the area was operated as a trading post for buying and selling coal. The road to here from Hawick used to pass up the Wellogate, past Ormiston, Birneyknowe, the Forkins, Blackcleugh and Chesters until the 1820s, when the modern route of the A6088 was constructed. There was a toll here in the early 19th century, which was the only public house in Southdean Parish – 'Driving through Northumberland and o'er the Carter Bar Rest a while beside the border stone Gaze on Scotland's Eden, these hills and valleys are The ones I love, the best I've ever known' [KS] (also 'the Cairter Bar').

the Carter Burn (thu-kawr'-ur-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish. It rises to the north of Carter Fell and the Border and runs roughly north-west to join the Jed Water. There are several old sheepfolds and enclosures along its length, and a farmstead near where Martinlee Sike enters. Old red sandstone outcroppings in this area were used for building stone.

Carter Fell (kawr'-ur-fel) n. mountainous ridge lying along the Scotland/England Border, reaching a height of 556 m (1,824 ft), with the northern peak rising to 579 m (1,899 ft) – 'From Carter Fell and Cheviot to lone St. Mary's Lake They failed not at the summons, who knew the black mistake' [RSC], 'The road that runs by Kale and Jed across the Carter Fell' [WHO].

Carterhaugh (kār'-, kawr', kawrt-ur-haw, -hawf, -hawch) n. flat area about half a mile long, where the Yarrow and Ettrick meet, below Bowhill and adjacent to Philiphaugh. In 1502 William Turnbull, in Branxholme, had remission for being involved in stealing cattle, horses and goods from the Murrays there. In 1541 it was listed among the lands 'that war assignit for the keping of the hous of Newwerk and now ar occupiit be the tennentis'. The Scotts of Buccleuch long owned the lands, as recorded e.g. in 1653, 1663 and when they were surveyed in 1718. It was the scene of the famous poem 'Tamlane' and for many years the site for various rustic sports – 'O I forbid you, maidens a', That wear gowd on your hair, To come or gae by Carterhaugh, For young Tam Lin is there' [T].

the Carterhaugh Baa (thu-kawr'-, kār'-ur-hawf-baw) n. famous football game of Monday 4th December 1815, between those from Selkirk, led by Sir Walter Scott (Sheriff of the county) and men from the rural half of the shire, led by the Earl of Home, with the Ettrick Shepherd as lieutenant. Contingents from other towns, including Hawick joined the Soutars, and adopted fir twigs as their emblem, while country folk from Ettrick, Tweeddale and beyond joined the shepherds of Yarrow, and donned a sprig of heather. The organisation was by Bailie Ebenezer Clarkson and Robert Henderson of Selkirk, and the reasons for holding the contest were obscure even at the time. There is a suggestion that the idea for the game arose out of an after-dinner conversation at Bowhill, perhaps to recreate the ancient feudal spirit. The game itself was started by the Duke of Buccleuch, with upwards of 2,000 names entered on the lists of players! The Buccleuch banner was unfurled there, probably the first time 'in the field' for 2 centuries (and perhaps being a new 'A Bellendaine' pennant made for the occasion). The 'hails' were about a mile apart, with that of the Sutors being the Ettrick. The Hawick contingent of about 100, led by Rob 'General' Reid, walked over to take part, stopping at Selkirk for refreshments. They supposedly hailed the first ball for the Soutars team, although one account says it was hailed by Robert Hall, a Selkirk mason, with much help from the Hawick men. There was then an interval, with refreshments provided in a large booth at the periphery of the field. The shepherds hailed the second, aided by Gala switching sides, the ball being pushed through the crowd by brute force. Sir Walter Scott was generally believed to have influenced the Gala men to change allegiance. The second game was much longer, bad-natured and violent than the first. A third game was avoided, probably to stop further fighting breaking out (with a suggestion of staging it with just 100 men selected from each side not being accepted). However, as daylight faded there were more flare-ups of violence, with some stone-throwing and many duckings in the river. The event was celebrated in a poem by James Hogg (set to music by Scocha in 2004), as well as others by Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, all of whom were in attendance. Henry Scott Riddell was also there, and provided notes that Robert Murray used to describe the events in 1863. James Ruickbie also wrote a celebratory poem. A handball and a Yarrow flag-staff (donated to the Museum in 1877 'from a gentleman in the possession of whose family it has been for the last fifty years') were returned to Hawick as trophies, but their whereabouts are no longer known. A commemorative recreation was staged in 2015, with a special ball being made for the occasion, thrown up by the current Duke of Buccleuch, whose pennant was again on display – 'We met our opponents (their badge was the heather), Assembled in thousands on Carterhaugh Plain' [JH], 'Then hail! memorial of the brave, the Liegeman's pride, the Border's awe! May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner field than Carterhaugh!' [ES], 'Then strip lads, and to it, though sharp be the weather, And if, by mischance, you should happen to fall, There are worse things in life than a tumble on heather, And life is itself but a game of football' [SWS].

Carterhoose (kawr'-, kār'-ur-hoos) n. Carterhouse, farm in Southdean Parish, situated on the right of the A6088 shortly before coming to the A68. A quern of mediæval type was found while digging there, as described in 1994.

Carter Quarry (kawr'-ur-kwa-ree) n. former quarry near the Carter Bar, also known as Meadowcleugh.

Cartlidge (kar'-leej) n. Joseph B. (b.1834) born in Edinburgh, he became a photographer and worked in Hawick in the period 1866–67. He may have been managing the studio for William Walker. He had previously worked for the Edinburgh Photogrpahic Company, which had also employed John Aitken.

cartoosh (kawr-toosh) n., arch. a short jacket formerly worn by women (hence the nickname 'Sibbie Cartoosh'; also cottoush).

cartrich (kawr'-rich, kawr-treech) n. a cartridge (note the ch rather than j and cf. cairtridge).

carvey (kar-vee) n., arch. a caraway seed, especially used as a decoration in confectionary – '. . . gingerbread men and horses, adorned with carvey eyes and acoutrments' [WNK].

case (kās) n., arch. condition – '. . . to keipe and maintain the common toune knock in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient caise and condition for knocking and chopping hourly . . . ' [BR1706] (also written 'caice').

Case (kās) n. nickname for John Turnbull tenant of Nether Bonchester.

cashie (kaw-shee) adj., arch. flabby, flacid (said of food) – 'A cashie turnip; cashie mutton' [JAHM], of inferior quality (said of goods), unprincipled (of a person) – 'A cashie fellow' [JAHM], delicate, unable to bear fatigue (of sheep).

cashie (kaw-shee) adj., arch. forward, cheeky, talkative (noted by J. Jamieson who says 'This, I suspect, is originally the same with 'Calshie' ').

Cashie (kaw-shee) n. nickname in the 19th century (presumably different from 'Auld Cash' and realing to cashie) – 'Wullie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie's near at hand; There's Kelso Wull and Wat the Sweep, And Wullie Goudlands leadin' the Band' [HI].

cashmere (kawsh-meer) n. a garment knitted with wool from the Asiatic goat, having extremely fine fibres (mean diameter $< 18.5\,\mu$m), and representing the luxury end of the knitwear industry.

Cashmere is Scottish (kawsh-meer-iz-sko'-eesh) n. promotional film made in 1973 by Martin Kane Production, lasting 17 minutes. Directed by Abel Goodman and narrated by Bryden Murdoch, it describes the connection between cashmere and Scotland, shows various Scottish scenes, and with some garments modelled by Joanna Lumley. The knitwear was supplied by Pringle of Scotland, Ballantyne of Peebles, Braemar, Barrie, Glenmac and J. & D. McGeorge.

cass (kaws) n., arch. a set of 4 cherry stones used in the game of 'papes' – 'Note: a caddle o paips, a cass of paips = a set of four 'paips' ' [ECS].

Cass (kaws) n. Mark of Cockpen (17th C.) from Northumberland. In 1658 he purchased the lands of Templehall in Hobkirk Parish from William Ker, Earl of Lothian.

cassa (ka-su) n., arch. a pavement, causeway, cobbled street – '. . . and the great highway, on which so much of the carters' labour was expended, is still vulgularly pronounced 'cassa' ' [RG] (see also causa and causey).

cassay see causey

cassen (kaw-sen) pp., arch., poet. cast – 'Why art thou casen doun, o' my saul?' [HSR], '. . . he haed awa sair casan doun, for he had grit haudins' [HSR], 'But thou hest casen aff, an' putten us til shæme . . . ' [HSR], '. . . ilka trie . . . is hewet doun an' casan intill the fire' [HSR] (also written 'casan' and 'casen'; it is combined with several different prepositions; compare casten).

cast (kawst) v., arch. to cast, reappear, to swarm (of bees), to dig, especially to cut pieces of peat or sods and cast them up with a spade – '. . . to the thorter dikes to cast divots, and he went to the Myreslawgreen, and did cast there contrar the proclamation made against casting there' [BR1666], '... to the futer better distinguishing of marches betwixt his propertie and town's commontie, did sett down the sds. marches by casting of divots ...' [PR713], '... and when Langlands himself was casting peats in said moss, his tenant did not allow his horse to be teathered within said dyke' [DCW1765], '... did cast peats in the Common Mosses and turff and diviot on the Common Muir of Hawick ...' [C&L1767], 'Deed aye, for I mysel' hae seen Folk casting peats in Myreslawgreen' [WNK], to clear out a ditch or other watercourse – 'The water has been out of the [Slitrig] dam these five days, which offered a favourable opportunity for casting it, which has been done' [RRe], to fade (said of coloured cloth), to throw off (clothing) – 'Troth, Tam, lad! ye may cast the sark the morn ...' Castle (kaw-sul) n. Andrew, pseudonymous column in the Hawick News, generally stirring up controversy.

the Castle (thu-kaw-sul) n. popular name for several buildings around Hawick, usually being the tallest in the area. There was a 'Castle' near the top end of what is now Drumlanrig Square. It has also been a name for the high house on Morrison Place overlooking the bowling clubs, as well as the highest building on Lothian Street, the one at the top of Wellington Street and the former large tenement building up the Dean. Additionally, the old baronial house at the east side of Denholm had this popular name.

Castle Cary (kaw-sul-kā-ree) n. town in Somerset, formerly the main seat of the Lovel family. It lies a few miles north-west of Wincanton and almost directly between Bristol and Weymouth. Little is known of the town until Norman times, when it was allocated to Walter de Douai, who probably built the first 'motte and bailey'. After his death it passed to Ascelin Gouel de Percival, then (at least according to some accounts) to his sons Robert and William, who probably built the first stone keep about 1130. It passed to William's son Ralph, who changed the family name to Lovel. Note, however, that these early generations are very uncertain. The castle was about 78 feet square, and may have been similar to the original Tower built by the Lovels in Hawick. Nothing survives of the castle itself except for significant earthworks, the stone having been reused for local building. This tradition continued with the 'Castle Rise' development obliterating part of the earthworks around 2000. These remains are reached from the town centre along a footpath known as 'Paddock Drain', and includes the 'motte' on which the castle was built. The 'Horse Pond' and the 'Park Pond' are both remnants of the ancient castle moat (note, an actual 'moat', not a 'motte'!). Park Pond is the source of the River Cary, the spring there, 'Lady's Spring', being once considered holy and dedicated to the Virgin Mary (perhaps with a connection to the later dedication of St. Mary's in Hawick). Other notable buildings in the town are the Round House and the Market House. The founder of the MacMillan Cancer Foundation was born here. Like Hawick, the town's former market day was Thursday. And Castle Cary's dominant local industry was also textiles, starting with wool, then flax, and also horsehair (it now has the only horsehair product manufacturers in the U.K.). Other (mainly coincidental) similarities with Hawick include: a train station (which survived the Beeching Report); seats to enjoy the view from the hill above the town; a High Street, as well as a Victoria Road and an area called 'the Sandbanks'; a public area known simply as 'the Park'; and a merger with the neighbouring town, Ansford in this case. Population approximately 2,700 (there is another place of the same name near Cumbernauld).

the Castle-End (thu-kaw-sul-end) n. another name for 'the Castle', which was somewhere near the top end of 'the Raws' or the bottom of the Loan.

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former name for a farm on the north side of the Teviot above Newmill, perhaps associated with what is now called 'Whitcastle Hill'. The name thus seems likely to have been connected with earlier fortifications on the hills above, rather than having anything to do with the nearby Branxholme Castle. Robert Turnbull from there was charged in 1494/5 with stealing sheep. Scott of Castlehill (with no forename given) is listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch in perhaps the late 1500s. In 1627 the farm is described as paying 16 bolls in 'stock and teynd'. Alexander Paterson was tenant in 1671, Robert Thomson in 1690, William Nixon in 1692, William Gray in 1694, Walter Scott in 1696 and Walter Wilson in 1698. Archibald Riddell and William Gray were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, with James 'Bleack' as shepherd. Walter Wilson was there in 1700 and William Clerk in 1719. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 77 acres, bounded by Branxholme Town farm, the River Teviot, Newmill Burn (with Harwood farm on the other side), How Meadow farm and Chapelhill farm. There was a farmhouse marked near the middle of the land. The farm may once have been more extensive, perhaps including How Meadow and other higher parts, extending towards Whitcastle Hill (it is marked 'Castel hill' on Blaeu's 1654 map; also written 'the Castlehill', it is 'le castel hil de branxame' in 1494/5, Castelhill' in 1627 and 'Castalhill' in 1694).

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former home of a branch of the Scotts, near Ashkirk, presumably adjacent to Castleside. Scott of Satchells lists 'Scot of Castlehill' as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch (this probably relating to sometime around 1600), and possibly related to the Scotts of Northhouse. George Scott 'callit of Deringstoun' had sheep stolen from 'his landis of Castell-hill' in 1613 (however, it is possible this was the lands near Branxholme); perhaps the same man was 'Geordie in Castelhill' listed among fugitives in 1618.

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. In the 1541 rental roll of Jedforest it was tenanted by John and Robert Waugh, paying 22s yearly. The precise location is unclear, but it was listed between Wattie's Spinnels and Lethem (it is 'Castelhill' in 1541).

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. small hill in the Borthwick valley, lying on the north side of the water, just to the south of Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, and south-west of Borthwick Waas cemetery. It is a tree-covered knoll, reaching a height of 176 m, and has been suggested to have been the original location of the castle of the local feudal lords. It was also associated with the name 'Africa' (although not known as such locally, and that is also attached to the archæological remains at the Camp Burn), and had been claimed to be the remains of a motte and bailey. Now too much obliterated by cultivation, it is impossible to attach a date, or to guess as to the original extent of the earthworks.

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. hill in a bend of the Ale Water, just to the north of Ancrum village. A fort occupies the flat top of the hill, to which it presumably gave its name. It may be an enclosed settlement dating from the Dark Ages.

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, being essentially the south-west projection of Swarf Hill, about 2 miles east of Newcastleton.

Castle Knowe (kaw-sul-now) n. name for a small rise just to the north-east of Cavers House, with another called Court Knowe nearby. It was said to have contained a ruin, visible in the mid-18th century, possibly being a watch-tower.

Castle Knowe (kaw-sul-now) n. hill just to the south of Billerwell, in the Rule valley. Probably the same place was also formerly called 'the Birkhill'.

Castle Law (kaw-sul-law) n. hill just to the south-east of Hummelknowes farm, reaching a height of 700 ft. The hill-fort there probably measured 75 m by 45 m, but has been partly obliterated by quarrying, although extensive ramparts are still visible. It surely had some association with the nearby fort on Kaim Law.

Castle Lodge (kaw-sul-loj) n. name sometimes used by locals for Stobs Lodge.

Castle O'er (kaw-sul-ō-ur, -ow-ur) n. hamlet about 9 miles north-west of Langholm, which gives its name to the surrounding forrest. It is named after the nearby extensive Iron Age hillfort, the earlier name being Overbie or 'Yetbyre'. The Deil's Jingle (linear earthwork) and King Shaw's Grave (ancient cist) are also nearby.

Castle Park (kaw-sul-pawrk) n. name for a field on the south (or east) side of the main avenue leading to Cavers.

Castleside (kaw-sul-sīd) n. farm just to the south-west of Ashkirk, opposite Salenside. In the 16th century it was part of the lands of Blindhaugh, held by George Scott of Blindhaugh, with the superiority held by the Bishop of Glasgow; it was described as 'the castelsyd with the ... be south the vatter of aill the ... part of blyndhauchburne' and was assigned to George's youngest son John. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. Alexander Winthrope was there in 1580. Isabel Turnbull, widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh, received the liferent of the lands in 1581. The lands were valued at £160 in 1643 and owned by Francis Scott; also in 1643 the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Woll and Broadlee) at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. It was valued at £160 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1694 there were 3 tenants listed there. John Cuthbertson was a tailor there in 1698. The teinds were valued (along with Broadlee) at £62. Walter Noble was there in 1710. William Easton was cottar there in 1719 and George Kyle in 1762. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the lands (and others in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. James Fairbairn was farmer there in at least 1789–1801. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson and valued at £160. Thomas Johnstone was a servant there in 1801. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was valued (along with Salenside and Broadlee) at £519. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. G. Murray was farmer in 1868. There were formerly two ancient encampents there, but one was obliterated by ploughing in the early 19th century (it is 'Castlesyd' in 1607, 'Castelsyde' in 1609, 'Castellsyde' in 1623, 'Castellsyde' in 1634, 'Casthillsyde' in 1638, 'Castillside' and 'Castellsyd' in 1663 and 'Castalside' in 1694; it is marked on Baleu's 1654 map as 'Castelsyid' and is also on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Castleside Hill (kaw-sul-sīd-hil) n. hill to the west of Ashkirk and just north of Essenside Loch. The summit contains the remains of a hill-fort or prehistoric settlement, measuring about 66 m by 60 m, with an entrance on the north-east side. It contains several circular hut platforms, which have been cut into the sides of 3 natural rocky spines. Traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation are all round the summit. There are also remains of a rectangular building on the south-west side. An 'ancient mill' found near the 'square camp' on the summit was presented to the Archæological Society in 1856 by John Douglas of Easter Essenside.

Castle Sike (kaw-sul-sīk) n. stream that rises on Hermitage Hill and roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water. It effectively forms the eastern side of the defences of Hermitage Castle and has been partly diverted as a result. Further up the stream are the remains of a farmstead.

Castlesteed (kaw-sul-steed) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as vacant in the 1541 rental roll. The location is uncertain, but presumably near the site of either Liddel Castle or Hermitage Castle (it is 'Castelsteid' in 1541).

Castleton (kaw-sul'-in) n. mediæval village around Liddel Castle on the Liddel Water, about 2½ miles north-east of Newcastleton. In the 12th century it consisted of an earth and timber Norman Castle (home of the de Soulis family, and sometimes called Liddel Castle), the church of St. Martin and several houses around a village green. The land was granted to Jedburgh Abbey some time before 1165 and was part of the Barony given (or perhaps regranted) to Ranulph de Soulis by David I in the early 12th century. Edward I stayed here in 1296 on his expedition through Scotland, collecting the signatures that survived as the Ragman Rolls. The 'Villa cum toll' is listed in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 12 merks, and 'Molendium', i.e. the mill worth 58 merks. The village was once fairly substantial and gave its name to the surrounding parish. The church was demolished at the beginning of the 19th century, and another built a mile further down the valley in 1808, with alterations in 1885. Walter Scott paid tax on 2 hearths there in 1694. John and George Murray and Thomas Oliver were farmers there in 1797. It is said that the village was abandoned in the late 18th century when Newcastleton was built, but that the turf-covered ruins of houses were still visible in the early 20th century. The original burial ground is still in use and the new church has a hearse house attached. Little else of the village or castle survives except earthworks, and a stone stump that was the base of the former market cross. It is still possible to see a hallowed-out road on the north-east side of the graveyard and leading down to the river. There is also an area of rig lines to the west (occasionally written 'Castletown' it was formerly 'Castletoune' etc.; there are several other Castletons and Castletowns in Britain; the name derives simply from the Old English 'castel tun' and first appears as 'Casteltoun' in 1220 and 'Cassiltoun' in 1275, 'Cassiltoun' in 1586, 1653 and 1633 and 'Cassiltoune' in 1662 and 1663, 'Castelltoun' in 1661 and 'Cassiltone' in 1663; it is 'Castelton' on Sandison's c.1590 map and it is still 'Casteltoun' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but appears on Coronelli's 1689 map of Scotland as 'Castletóu').

Castleton clogs (kaw-sul'-in-klōgz) n. clogs from Castleton, used as an epithet by people from neighbouring rural areas. It was said that visitors to upper Liddesdale would be asked where they were from, and after replying 'Castleton', the following question would be 'then where are your clogs?'.

Castleton Croft (kaw-sul'-in-kroft) n. former name for lands near Castleton in Liddesdale. It is recorded in 1541 as 'Cassiltoun croftis', with no tenant at that time.

Castleton Cross (kaw-sul'-in-kros) n. ancient village cross of Castleton. It is about a 2½ feet high base, 28 inches square, with a more recent concrete shaft inserted, and lies in an area of rough pasture to the south of the road opposite the site of the Castle.

Castleton Kirk (kaw-sul'-in-kirk) n. church of Castleton Parish. It existed from about the middle of the 12th century, was dedicated to St. Martin and before the Reformation belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. Rights due to 'the chaplain residing at the church of Liddel and the prior residing there' are described in a document of Glasgow Diocese in 1220 (although the names of these people are not given). The 'vacariis de Casteltoun' is also recorded in 1324. At the Reformation the revenue from the parsonage of Castleton were directed towards Jedburgh Abbey's priory in Canonbie, with a perpetual Vicar serving the parish. In 1604 it was united with the Kirks of Ettleton, Wheel-kirk and Bellskirk. There were also once chapels at Hermitage and Dinlabyre. After the Reformation the patronage of the Church passed from Jedburgh Abbey to the Earl of Home, then to Sir John Ker of Jedburgh then the Earl of Bothwell and by forfeiture to Scott of Buccleuch by 1632. In 1649 part of Cromwell's army stayed a few nights there and they 'brak down and burnt the communion tables and the seats of the kirk; and at their removing, carried away the minister's books, to the value of 1000 merks, and above, and also the books of the session, with which they lighted their tobacco-pipes, the baptism, marriage, and examination rolls, from October, 1612, to September, 1648, all which were lost and destroyed'. They also took the church bell, leaving it at Stanwick in Cumberland. The original church was in Castleton itself, in the middle of the graveyard, and was demolished in the early years of the 19th century, although some stones from it may have been built into the new churchyard wall (one of which used to clearly read 1621). The former Manse lay 'on the summit of a stupendous rocky precipice impending over the Liddal'. Both the original Kirk and Manse are shown on a 1718 survey of the farm of Byreholm (for the Buccleuch estates); the church is beside the place marked 'Cemy' on the modern Ordnance Survey map and the Manse between there and the river, with the Glebe lands stretching along the riverside. The new church was built at the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters in 1808. It was rebuilt in Newcastleton village in 1885, with a stone of date 1808 built into the back wall. It is still there, on Montagu Street in Newcastleton, sometimes called 'Newcastleton Kirk'. The Manse was at 23 Langholm Street. Another small church was built at Saughtree in 1872. Newcastleton also contained a Secession Church (built 1801–04, later part of the United Presbyterian Church), a Congregational Church (built 1850) and a Free Church (built in 1853). The history of the various churches in the parish is a complicated one! The congregations were merged into a united charge in 1946, with the Castleton building being closed in 1950 (because of dry rot) and the former St. John's mission church became the parish kirk. In 1976 there was a union into Castleton and Saughtree Parish, and from 1993 it was called Liddesdale Parish Church. Recently the church merged into the charge of Canonbie United, Newcastleton and Saughtree. The Olivers of Dinlabyre donated 4 sacramental cups to the Kirk in 1748. A roll of the ministry is: William Cotes, from 1535; Archibald Elliot, recorded in 1557; James Oliver, from 1559; Martin Elliot 1574; (vacant in 1575); Richard Thomson 1604–c.1606; Thomas Bannatyne 1607–10; Walter Scott 1612–49; Andrew Pringle 1650–89; Robert Armstrong 1693–1732; William Armstrong 1733–49; Simon Haliburton 1751–63; Robert Rutherford 1763–90; Thomas Martin 1791; James Arkle 1792–1800; David Scott 1801–22; Angus Barton 1822–61; James Noble 1861–83; William Vassie 1883–1917; John Morrison McLuckie 1918–26; Harold Andrew Cockburn 1927–31; Allan McDonald Craig 1931–60; Archibald Lamont 1961–64; Bryden Maben 1965–76; Mr. Galbraith 1976–79; Reginald Campbell 1979–89; Alan Reid 1989–2008; Stephen Fulcher 2009– (it is 'Cassiltounkirk' in 1649; 'Casteltoun K.' is on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map, in the original location).

Castleton Manse (kaw-sul'-in-mawns) n. manse for Castleton Parish at 23 Langholm Street in Newcastleton. The former Manse was probably near to the older chuch, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters; in 1694 tax was paid on 3 hearths there and in 1748 it was taxed for 18 windows. In 1821 William Scott describes how the ruins of the old Manse and garden could still be seen on a precipice overlooking the Liddel. In 1839 the glebe was described as consisting of between 20 and 25 acres.

Castleton Moor (kaw-sul'-in-moor) n. Castleton Muir, area of moorland to the south of the former settlement at Castleton. Lands there were recorded as 'Cassaltoun Moore' in 1541, with a value of 5 merks. A long cist was discovered there, as described in 1982.

Castleton Pairish (kaw-sul'-in-pā-reesh) n. parish centred on the former village of the same name, containing Newcastleton, and being the southernmost parish in Roxburghshire. It was bounded by England, Dumfriesshire and parts of Teviothead, Hobkirk and Southdean. It is almost synonymous with 'Liddesdale', the Liddel Water running through it roughly from east to south. It was also the largest parish in the south of Scotland, and approximately 1/7th of the area of Roxburghshire. It was a Vicarage within the Diocese of Glasgow, taxed at £3 in 1275 and £3 8s in 1376. In 1600 the Parish was stated to have been 'waste' for many years. The Parish was reorganised in 1604, theafter containing the areas that had been served by Ettelton Kirk, Wheel Kirk and Bellskirk. It then became the largest parish in southern Scotland. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £15,500. After the Reformation it was part of the Presbytery of Jedburgh, in 1743 becaming part of the Presbytery of Langholm and Synod of Dumfries, even although it lay politically within the County of Roxburghshire. There are Parish records from 1749. A Secession Church was established in the parish in the 1750s and a branch of the Free Church in the 1840s; at one point there were 6 places of worship in the district. Hiring days were formerly 2nd Friday of April for men and Fridays before the 17th of May and 8th of November for women. There was also once a lamb fair on the Friday before the 2nd Wednesday of September and other livestock fairs on the Thursday before the 2nd Tuesday in October and the 3rd Friday in November. There are Session minutes existing from 1660. Baptismal records for the parish begin in 1749 and marriages in 1759. The population in 1755 was 1507. In 1803 there were 315 men in the parish aged between 17 and 55 (it should not be confused with parishes of the same name in Derbyshire and Dorset).

Castleton Schuil (kaw-sul'-in-skil) n. school in Castleton Parish. The old building is adjacent to the former Parish Kirk, just by the conjunction of the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. On its north gable there is a stone inscribed with the date 1621 and bearing a shield. John Oliver is recorded as Schoolmaster in 1778. There were about 100 pupils there in the 1830s. Richard Fraiter was hired in 1707. William Scott was Schoolmaster up until his death in 1761. Mr. Forsyth was master in the early 1800s. William Telford was teacher at Castleton in 1837.

Castleweary (kaw-sul-wee-ree) n. farm and former hamlet south of Teviothead and just beyond Binks, where the Phaup Burn joins the Frostlie Burn. Jean Scott, first wife of James Cavers 'Auld Dunnerum', came from here. David Scott was living there in 1777. Thomas Grieve was a labourer there in 1797, while William and Gilbert Grieve were labourers there in 1799. John Scott, roadman, lived here for 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. For a while it was the place used for changing horses on the stagecoach. There may once have been a tower-house there (mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839), but there are now no traces of it – '... But when near Castleweary the poor horse broke down, So they called on the farmer, a man of renown' [JCG] (it is written 'Castleweayr' in 1777).

the Castle Well (thu-kaw-sul-wel) n. old name for a spring near the road at Ormiston, the name being in use until the early 20th century. It was situated immediately north of the site of the castle, separated from it by the driveway to the modern farmhouse – 'The Shining Dove's-foot is a pretty frequent tenant in rocky places ... at the Castle-well, Ormiston' [JAHM] (presumably related to Cocklaw Castle; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, north-east of the house).

Catcleuch (kaw'-klooch) n. area around the Carter Bar. Catcleugh Shin (544 m, 1,742 ft) is a hill in the Cheviots, just south of where the A6088 meets the A68. Catcleugh Reservior in further down the A68, about 3 miles into England. The Byrness church has a plaque commemorating the 63 people who died during its construction 1891–1904 (also spelled 'Catcleugh'; 'Catcleuch' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Cat Cleuch (kaw'-klooch) n. small stream which rises on Catcleuch Shin and runs roughly northwards, crossing the A6088, to become part of Shaw Burn (the name may be related to the wild cat).

Cat Cleuch (kaw'-klooch) n. small stream in the upper Hermitage valley. It rises on Catcleuch Brae and flows southwards to join the Hermitage Water between Gorrenberry and Twislehope.

cate (kā') v., arch. to be in heat, desire a mate, especially of female cats – 'The cat's a-catlin' ' [GW].

the Catechism (thu-kaw-te-ki-zum) n. a book giving a summary of Christian doctrine in question and answer form. Until the late 19th century every member of a congregation was expected to know this by heart, and it formed the basis of Sunday School education. Before the mid-1800s the minister would annually visit and catechise each member of the congregation. The 'Longer Catechism' was approved by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1648; it consisted of 196 questions. The 'Shorter Catechism' was also adopted in 1648; it consisted of 107 questions and was intended for 'Catechising Such as Are of Weaker Capacity'. This was almost always the form used, and was locally referred to as the 'carritch'.

Cat Gair (kaw'-gār) n. area at the head of Cat Sike in the upper Borthwick valley, now deep within Craik Forest. It lies to the north-west of Wolfcleuchhead. Catgair Edge is marked on modern maps, being the north side of Ewelair Hill.

Cathels (kaw-thulz) n. Rev. Dr. David (1853–1925) born at Arbroath, he was son of Hohn and Katherine Boath. He was educated in Dundee and at Edinburgh University and licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1881. He assisted Dr. McRae in Hawick for a year, then became minister of Kirkton from 1882. However, he moved back Hawick as minister in 1892. In 1913–14 he visited and confirmed the Church of Ichang on the Yangtze in China. He was appointed Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1924. In late 1924 he unveiled the memorial to Rev. Johnman in St. George's Kirk, and gave a eulogy on his former colleague. He was also involved in the Vertish Hill Sports and other local activities. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1925, along with Earl Haig, but died that same year. His published sermons are 'Ourselves and Our Times, a Guild Sermon' (published in Hawick, 1887), 'Christian Manhood' (Hawick, 1889), 'Landmarks: a Common-Riding Sermon' (Hawick, 1895), 'Honour the king: a sermon preached in Hawick Parish Church' (Hawick, 1897), 'The Reformation and John Knox' (Hawick, 1905) and his Moderator's address for 1924, 'The Permanent and the Transitory'. He married Mildred Margaret (who died in 1901), daughter of Peter Gardner and ecndly Margaret Agnes (who died in 1940), daughter of John Hewat of Edinburgh. His children were: Katherine Stuart, who married Capt. Harold Mansfield; Mildred Margaret Lindsay, M.B., C.M.; John Howard Crawford (1884–1967), who served with the Royal Engineers; Jane Gardner, who married James Johnstone, M.B.; and Louis Patrick (d.1939), Rector of St. Peter's, Peterhead. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery – 'Then upon the Sabbath day Ti the Pairish Kirk oo made oor way Reverend Cathels, grim and dour, Sermons went on owre an hoor' [IWL]. Louis Patrick (d.1937) son of Rev. David. He joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B., serving as a Lieutenant in WWI and was one of the few offciers to survive the Gallipoli campaign. He wrote many letters to his father, parts of which were published, providing a valuable record of conditions during the war. He was later Rector of St. Peter's, Peterhead.

Catheugh (kawt-hewch) n. name for a place in the eastern part of Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie's 1770 map on the south side of the Tweeden Burn, just to the west of Tweedenside. James Henderson is recorded there in 1611, when Robert Scott, Bailie of Hawick, was cautioner for him at court in Jedburgh. John Armstrong was also recorded there in 1611. It is probably the place mentioned in about 1645 when two robbers were surprised by Elliot of Park and Henderson of Catheugh, and were 'challenged at Catheugh and Cringlefold, until they came to Carshope, from whence they stole threescore sheep'. 'Lancie Armstrong, called of Catheugh' was recorded as a robber of farms and livestock in about 1645. The place was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax records when James Armstrong was tenant. It was listed as part of the farm of Sorbietrees on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (it was 'Catheuch' in 1611).

Catheugh (kawt-hewch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, lying between the main road and the river near Hutlerburn. These were among the Ettrick Forest lands owned by the Crown from about 1456 (it is 'Catkermach' in 1456).

Cathide Sike (kawt-hīd-sīk) n. small stream that joins Muckle Swine Cleuch, which joins the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.

Catho Knowes (ka-thō-nowz) n. place-name mentioned in John Halliday's poem 'The Gloamin' Star's o'er Whitop Hill'. This is probably set near Whithope in the Borthwick valley, but the precise location of these hills is unknwon (or even whether they were an invention of Halliday's).

Catholicism (kath-li-si-zum) n. branch of Christianity, with ecclesiastical centre in Rome, often referred to as 'Roman Catholicism' by Protestants and Episcopalians. Hisorically the split between Catholics and Protestants was wrapped up in national and royal politics and culminated with the Reformation of 1560, when the Scottish Parliament refuted the authority of the Pope and made celebration of Mass illegal. However, the suppression of the Catholic religion was less bloody than in England, Catholic Priests were allowed to keep ⅔ of their income and monasteries were allowed to retain some property. It is worth remembering that before the middle of the 16th century, all Teries would have been Roman Catholics (and this includes the first few decades of Cornets!). However, the Catholic church did not grow again in Hawick until the early 19th century, largely because of an influx of Irish workers. A group fof about 200 were 'discovered' in 1837 by William Wallace, the private chaplain of Traquair. They had been making do with hiring a private hall (possibly the Subscription Rooms) and with visiting a priest in either Traquair or Edinburgh. After this period an Edinburgh priest, Stephen Keenan, visited every 3 months, while Wallace struggled to raise money for a chapel in Hawick. who then endeavoured to raise funds to provide a chapel. Most of them were Irish immigrants or of fairly recent Irish descent. They had been making do with hiring a private hall (possibly the Subscription Rooms) and with visiting the priest at Traquair or in Edinburgh. Stephen Keenan from Edinburgh thereafter visited every 3 months. In 1840 William Wallace said of Hawick: 'the seeds of animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth'. Unlike in the major Scottish cities, Teries can be proud of their lack of sectarianism. When S.S. Mary & David's was built on Buccleuch Street in 1844 it was the first Roman Catholic Chapel in the Borders. Hawick also saw the arrival of 2 sets of nuns, the Dominican Sisters, associated with the Convent at Myreslawgreen and St. Margaret's Home, and the Augustinian Sisters, associated with St. Andrew's Convent and Nursing Home at Stirches House. Both sets of nuns have now departed.

Cathrae (kath-rā, -ree) n. Adam (19th C.) married Isabel Carruthers in Wilton in 1837. Andrew (1835–64) son of slate merchant William. He was born in Wilton and trained as a writer's clerk. He moved to Australia by 1853, where he set up the firm of merchants Mark & Cathrae, based in Melbourne. He later moved to India, where he ran the Wilton Tea Factory in Hindustan; there is a still a 'Wilton Tea Estate' School near there. He was deceased by 1870 when Laing & Irvine sued his family members to recover a debt for goods sent to his firm in Melbourne in the 1850s. Jenny 'Jenny Trantlicks', 'Jenny Trankletts', 'Jenny Ern-yetts' or 'Jenny Airn-yetts' (19th C.) of unknown birthplace, she was once a familiar street figure. She had one leg shorter than the other and walked with a stick. She was known to be very pugnacious and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. For a while she lived at Southfield, where an iron gate was erected to stop her continually burning the wooden gate for firewood, hence the cry 'Ern Yetts! Ern Yetts!' used to torment her. She died in Mill Port and is buried in the Auld Kirkyard. It is possible she was the Janet born in 1809 to Thomas Cathrae and Agnes Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hoscote in 1712 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. His surname is written 'Cafrea'. He is probably the John who married Bessie Inglis in Roberton in 1705. John (1807–bef. 42) son of slate merchant Thomas, he was a Hawick stockingmaker. His son James was transported to Australia in 1844 after several problems with the law, and still has living descendants there today. John Hislop (1838–1916) son of slate merchant William. He lived in Newfoundland, Canada. In 1866 he donated to the Museum the 'antlers of a deer shot near Trinity Bay, Newfoundland'. He died in Chicago. Martin (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710, when his surname is written 'cafrea'. His children included: Martin (b.1704); Isabel and Margaret (b.1706); and Martin (again, b.1710). Probably the same Martin had a son William baptised in Hawick in 1714. Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Wilson in 1755 and their children included: Betty (b.1760); and William (b.1764). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Fairbairn (or 'Freebairn') and their children included: Thomas (b.1774), slater; William (b.1776), stockingmaker; and John (b.1778). Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Junk in Roberton in 1713. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1751. In 1751 he witnessed a baptism for James Dodds, resident in Clarilaw. He married Jean Mack and their son Martin was baptised in 1751, with witnesses James and William Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in 1754. Thomas (1774–1825) son of Martin and Margaret Fairbairn. He became a slate merchant who had a yard on Cathrae's Haugh, adjoining the Upper Haugh, and owned other land along the edge of the Common Haugh. He was listed as a 'Sclater' at Roughheugh on the list for the Militia ballot in Wilton Parish in 1799 and at Damside on the 1801 Militia ballot; his brother William was listed before him in 1801. On Wood's 1824 map he is owner of a field on the north side of the modern Victoria Road and another to the west of Wilton Mills off the modern Commercial Road. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In Pigot's 1825/6 directory he is listed as a slater on Damside. He married Agnes Armstrong in 1802, and their children were: John (b.1803); William (b.1805); John (again. b.1807); Janet (b.1809), who married miller John Fiddes; Margaret (b.1812); Thomas (b.1815), who worked as a miller and grocer; and Agnes (b.1817), who was a seamstress. His wife Agnes (age 60) was living on Damside at the 1841 census, along with Thomas and Agnes. Thomas (b.1815) son of Thomas and Agnes Armstrong. In 1851 he was a journeyman miller with his brother-in-law John Fiddes at Roughheugh. In 1861 he was listed as 'Licensed Hawker for Groceries' on Wilton Path. Thomas (b.1831) son of William, he worked as a commercial traveller (probably as a coal merchant) before becoming a local newspaper editor. He had the house Rillmount built on West Stewart Place. In 1861 he was listed as 'Newspaper Editor' at 61 High Street. He was editor of the 'Hawick Advertiser' 1857–74 and had several apparentices who went on to bigger things. He was probably the Thomas who was Clerk to the Course at the Common Riding in the 1850s and in 1860. He was Secretary of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce from the 1860s until at least the 1880s. In 1870 he and his sister Agnes Isabella were sued by Laing & Irvine to recover money for goods sold to his deceased brother Andrew. He was also known for having literary talents, writing 'History of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club' (around the 1870s), as well as compiling the early discussions of that Club, which were later published in 1909. Additionally he published a booklet for the centenary celebrations held for Sir Walter Scott at Branxholme in 1871. He is probably the Thomas who married Jessie Haig in 1853; their children included Martin and William (who died in infancy). He died in Newcastle. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was in Closses in 1725. He married Helen Harkness and their children included John (b.1725), Andrew (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1737). His wife's name is transcribed as 'Isobel' in 1737. The witnesses in 1725 were Rev. Charles Telfer and William Williamson and in 1728 were Archibald Paterson and William Stoddart. He could be the William who was paid by the Kirk Session in about the 1720s 'to help to pay his father's funeral'. William (b.1776) son of Martin. He was listed as a stockingmaker at Roughheugh on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish and a stockingmaker at Damside on the 1801 Militia ballot; his brother Thomas was listed after him in 1801. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Scott in 1803 and their children included Martin (b.1804) and Adam (b.1805). His widow could be the Elizabeth living on the Crescent in 1841, along with her daughter Isabella. William (1805–1862) son of Thomas and Agnes Armstrong. He succeeded his father Thomas as a slate merchant in Wilton and was also a bank teller at the British Linen Bank. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, with the address changed from 'Back Damside' to 'Wilton Grove'. He is listed as a slate merchant in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He built the house called Wilton Grove in the early 19th century. He was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk and also acted as the first Clerk of the Deacon's Court of that church. He could be the William who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the William who donated coins from the 'South American colonies' to the Museum in 1862. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1830 and their children included: Thomas (b.1831); Margaret (b.1832); Andrew (b.1834); William (b.1836); John Hislop (1838–1916); Agnes (b.1839); Jessie Turnbull (b.1845); Walter (b.1846); and Agnes Isabella (b.c.1848). They were at Wilton Grove in 1841 and 1851 and his wife was dead by the 1851 census (also formerly 'Cafrea', 'Cathrea', 'Cathree' and 'Cathrie').

Cathrae's Haugh (kath-rāz-hawch, hawf) n. land that adjoined the Upper Haugh, so-called because Cathrae's slate-yard was once there. It was later developed as Albert Mills and later as Mactaggart's skinworks.

Catlee (kaw'-lee) n. former steading, near Wauchope, on the Catlee Burn. A Turnbull from there (first name illegible) was accused of being a riever in 1530. In 1540 among Scottish rebels listed as being in England we find 'Pait Trumbill called Catle elder, Pait Trumbill called Catle younger, Jame Trumbill, young Pait's brother' and other Turnbulls. George Turnbull was there in 1567 and 'Eckie' Turnbull in 1586/7. It is probably the 'Catlie' listed among the Liddesdale possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632. It was once part of the estate of Wauchope, and was part of the set of lands sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1659. In 1677 it was described as a 'pertinent' of Wauchope. It was part of the estate of Wolfelee when purchased by William Elliot in 1730. In 1788 (and continued in 1811), it was listed (along with Catleeshaw) among lands owned by Cornelius Elliot, valued at £233 6s 8d (possibly related to the wild cat; it was 'Catlie' in 1530, 'Catle' in 1540, 'Catlie' in 1541, 'Catlie' in 1567, 'Catley' in 1677 and 'Catly' in 1788; note that it is easy to confuse with 'Gatliehill' on the Hermitage Water).

the Catlee Burn (thu-kaw'-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near the 'Note o the Gate', formed by the Hyndlee and other streams, passing Hyndlee and Wolfelee to become part of the Rule Water at Forkins. On the west bank of the stream, in the trees near Hell's Hole, are a fairly extensive group of cultivation terraces, now partly destroyed by forestry plantation (also written 'Catley Burn' or 'Catleyburn'; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Catleeshaw (kaw'-lee-shaw) n. former remote steading adjacent to the lands of Catlee in upper Rulewater. In 1677 it is described along with Catlee as a 'pertinent' of Wauchope, contiguous with the lands of Woolee. It was listed along with Catlee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (recorded in 1659 and 1730 along with 'Catlee', it is 'Cattleyschaw' in 1677 and 'Catlyshaw' in 1788).

Catley see Catlee

Catlie see Gatliehill

Catlockhill (kaw'-lok-hil) n. former name for lands that were later called Branxholme Brae. This is probably the 'Catslak' menioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, when the tenant was Roland Wilson. It is probably the 'Catslockhill' mentioned in the ballad 'Jamie Telfer'. The name was apparently still known to Mr. Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park in the early 19th century (according to a marginal note in his 1802 copy of 'The Minstrelsy of the Border') – 'And when he cam' to the Catslack hill He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out and spak' him William's Wat, O wha's this brings the fray to me?' [T] (written 'Catlochill' by Grieve; it should not be confused with Catslack).

Catraeth (ka-trāth) n. battle of the late 6th century, commemorated in the epic poem 'the Gododdin', which has been called the oldest Scottish poem (although it was written in ancient Welsh). The battle was between a band of Britons from near Edinburgh who set out to meet the invading Saxons. It was once speculated to have taken place at Hawick Moor, but is more likely to have been at Catterick in North Yorkshire (also 'Caltraeth' etc.).

the Catrail (thu-kaw'-rāl) n. an earthenwork ditch, which passes near the sources of the Borthwick, Allan, Slitrig and Teviot Waters. Its most easterly part ends near Robert's Linn bridge (actually at the Flosh Burn) beside the Hawick to Newcastleton Road, and it runs intermittently for about 12 miles to Hoscoteshiel, near Girnwood farm on the Borthwick. It was first described by Alexander Gordon in his 'Itinerarium'. The earliest Ordnance Survey maps (supported by the writings of Gordon, John Russell, Alexander Jeffrey and Francis Lynn) marked it extending across the Ettrick, Yarrow and Tweed valleys, via Stanhope Law, Linglie Hill (near Selkirk) and Rink Hill to near Torwoodlee (west of Galashiels). It was also suggested that it continued beyond Robert's Linn into Liddesdale. However, these extensions were not supported by subsequent investigations and excavations (and in several cases old roads and minor ditches were mistaken for parts of the structure). W.N. Kennedy, J.A.H. Murray and other members of the Hawick Archæological Society investigated it thoroughly in the 1850s and 1860s; they also noted the perhaps surprising fact that its existence did not seem to be known to the local shepherds. James Smail spent many days trying to trace its path, and wrote about it for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1880. The exact course of the feature between Girnwood and Robert's Linn is also uncertain, but it seems clear that the line of the earthwork is continued in places by streams. There are many other ancient ditches in the area, and some uncertainty about precisely which features may be part of the Catrail; some are probably of the same period, but with uncertain relationship. The ditch is around 9 ft wide, with a low bank on each side, but the width and height vary considerably (and today few parts can be discerned that are more than 6 ft wide and ½ m wide). Local legend suggested that it was created by the Devil, who lived at Hellmoor, with his mother as housekeeper; he killed her in a rage when he found his porridge not to be ready and dragged her around, making the ditch, and threw her into the Devil's Cauldron on Stonedge farm. It was also formerly associated with the Picts, hence sometimes called the 'Pict's Work Dyke', and was considered to be a defensive barrier. However, clearer heads have prevailed, and it now seems likely to have been merely a boundary ditch (as first pointed out by W.N. Kennedy in 1858). It (and perhaps related ditches) was surveyed by Francis Lynn in 1898 and in the 1980s part within the Stanishope forest was excavated. Other linear earthworks in the area mark the boundaries between farms, but the extent of the Catrail means it must have marked a more significant boundary. It probably dates to the time of land disputes between Northumbrians or Bernicians (to the north-east) and the native Britons of the hillier regions to the southwest. There are similar boundary features elsewhere, e.g. 'Herits Dyke' and 'Boon Black Dyke' in Berwickshire and others with names such as 'Black Dyke' or 'Deil's Dyke' – 'The next ane was ane careless scemp, Moss-muddled head and tail; Ye might trowed him the ghaist o' a' gurly Pict Wha had sheughed i' the grit Catrail' [T] (parts are marked on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Cattrail'; the origin of the name is obscture, but the first syllable could be from the old Celtic 'cad', meaning 'battle' and the ending perhaps being the Celtic 'eil, which is associated with fences).

Catrail Edge (kaw'-rāl-ej) n. area just to the west of the Pike, near where a piece of the Catrail is visible. The 'edge' is now along the side of the forest.

Cat's Cleuch (kats'-klooch) n. small stream that rises near Shiel Knowe to the west of Saughtree. It runs roughly south-west to join Fawhopeknowe Sike. It also gave it's name to Catscleuch Culvert on the railway line.

Catshawhill (ka'-shaw-hil) n. farmstead in Liliesleaf Parish, south of Firth. It is probably the lands in Raperlaw owned by David Davidson in 1643. John Douglas was owner in 1678, when the lands were valued at £195. John Douglas was still there in 1694. Another John Douglas was owner in the 1740s when it was valued at £195, and was still owner in 1761. It was bought by Thomas Turnbull (who worked in the Hawick carpet trade) in the mid-18th century, but sold after a few years for a large profit. William Smail was owner in 1788 and Thomas Smail was owner in 1797 and still recorded there in 1811. Alexander Walker was servant there in 1799 and Walter Gray in 1801 (it is 'Catchahill' in 1694, 'Catshahill' in 1761 and 'Catchahill' in 1799).

Catslack (ka'-slawk) n. tower and farm by the Catslack Burn, in the Yarrow valley, about 15 miles from Hawick. It was once owned by the Crown and stocked with the King's sheep, it was leased to the Crichtons of Cranston-Riddell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. In 1494/5 3 men called Mark from Tinnis had remission for the murder of John Tennant there. William Scott was there in 1531/2. In 1539 the lands 'with the tower and fortalice thereof' were inherited by James Crichton of Cranston Riddell from his father. At that time they were valued at £71 16s. 8d., but 40 merks in time of peace. In 1541 it was valued at £70 3s. 4d. There was a discharge in 1542 for rentals of these lands (and others) associated with Janet Beaton (who had married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme), widow of the older James Crichton. In 1550 it was among lands leased to Janet Beaton by her son James Crichton for 19 years. In this tower Lady Elizabeth, the widow of an earlier Sir Walter of Buccleuch, was burned to death in 1547/8 by a band of English, supported by the Kers of Cessford and elsewhere. John Scott was tenant there when he was in dispute with William Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1563, and in 1574/5 Elliot was forced to vacate the lands. John Scott Catslack was recorded in 1580. In 1581 Robert Crichton of Sanquhar had a charter for these lands, along with Montbenger and others. William Scott 'in Lies' was also called 'of Catslac-knowe' by Scott of Satchells (sometime around 1600) when listed among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch; he was said to be descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. The lands were still mentioned when James Scott (son of Walter 'in Catslak') was minister of Kirkton in the early 17th century, although they were still recorded as part of the Buccleuch properties in 1634, 1653, 1663 and 1693. William Scott of Catslack held lands in Hassendean Parish in 1643, valued at £52. Walter Scott of Catslack paid tax on lands with the same value in 1663 and John Scott of Catslack in 1678. 'Catslackknow' and 'Catslackburne' are on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties. David Scott was recorded there in 1718. By 1788 the lands that had been in Hassendean and held by the Scotts of Catslack were also known as 'Millmae', 'Mewmaw' or 'Lees' and owned by Scott of Burnhead. In 1785 and 1802 they were valued at about £330 and £880, respectively. James Riddell was there in 1794. Walter Forsyth was there in 1821. 2 brothers, Charles and Walter Scott were farmers there into the mid-19th century, both living into their 90s. Note that the place of a similar name mentioned in the ballad 'Jamie Telfer', may be 'Catlochill' near Branxholme (it is 'Catslak' in 1456, 'Katsclak' in 1459, 'Cattisslak' in 1488, 'catslak' in 1494/5, 'Catslak' in 1501 and 1510, 'Cattislak' in 1539, 'Catslak' in 1541, 1542 and 1550, 'Catislake' in 1649, 'Catislack' in 1663 and 'Catslucke' in 1678; 'Catslack' and 'Catslack B' are marked on Gordon's c.1650 maps).

Catslack-knowe (ka'-slawk-now) n. name of farm that appears to have been syonymous with Catslack (it is 'Catslaknow' and 'Cattislaknow' in 1620).

the Cat's Pool (thu-kawts-pool, -pil) n. deep pool below the Cauld, on the south side (the other side formerly being the 'Ladies' Pool'). The name came from its supposed use for drowning unwanted cats in weighted sacks. It was notorious as the site of accidental drownings, but has

Cattanach (kaw-te-nach) n. Rev. David Lynedoch (1882–1969) son of Peter Lorrimer and Jane Bladworth Hardie, he was born in Edinburgh. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1904, was licensed in 1911, then was assistant at Park Parish in Glasgow before becoming minister of Golspie in 1913. During WWI he served as a gunner in the Royal Field Artillery. He was translated to Hobkirk in 1922 and remained as minister there until 1953. He was Chaplain of the Scots Memorial Church in Jerusalem 1933–34. He married Dorothy Agnes Leechman (b.1887) in 1914. Their daughter Isobel Mary Lorimer died in 1929.

catter-batter (kaw'-ur-baw'-ur) n., arch. a quarrel, commotion – 'The lauchs dee'd doon and the bawdy clatter, There cam a hush owre the catter-batter' [WL], v., arch. to wrangle – 'Dinna begin o catter-battereen aboot poleeteeks here!' [ECS].

cattle stent (kaw'-ul-sten') n., arch. fee paid for cattle grazing on the Common – ' 'Cattle stent' . . . the 'grass-mail' (rent) paid by burgesses when their cattle depasture on the burgh muir [of Hawick] . . . ' [BR], 'Grass-mail of cattle belonging to the burgesses, sent to pasture on the common muir, called cattle stent, £50 13s 0d' [BR1836].

the Cattle Tryst (thu-kaw'-ul-trīst, -trist) n. name sometimes used for the cattle fair held on the 3rd Tuesday in October near Thorterdykes, when drovers would stop with their cattle on the way to southern markets. This was started in 1785 at the suggestion of the Hawick Farmers' Club. Although it was never hugely successful, it ran for a few decades (it is a little unclear whether or not this was separate from the horse fair) – 'There is a weekly marker and 4 fairs, besides a tryst, established, within these few years, for black cattle, &c. in October, between Falkirk tryst and Newcastle fair, which promises to succeed' [RRG].

cat-wuttit (kaw'-wu-tee') adj., arch. small-minded, spiteful.

Caudle Sike (kaw-dul-sīk) n. small stream lying to the north-west of Riccarton farm. It rises on Arnton Fell and runs to the east, through Caudlesike Culvert on the former railway line, to join Riccarton Burn. The narrow part is known as Caudle Cleugh (and so marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

cauf (kawf) n., arch. chaff – '. . . over the 'Cauf Roads' – i.e., the top of the hill, having been the place for winnowing corn' [RJR], 'The ungodlie arna sae: but ar like the caff, whilk the wund dræives awa' [HSR], 'Let thame be as caff afore the wund . . . ' [HSR] (also written 'caff' and other variants).

cauf-grund (kawf-grund) n., arch. one's place of birth – 'An the road swaipeet doon afore iz. Ay! doon ti ma caav-grund o Teviotdale' [ECS].

cauky (kaw-kee) adj., arch. chalky, made of chalk, covered with chalk dust – 'A cauky bool' [GW] (also 'caukie').

caul (kawl) adj., poet. cold – 'As for the meat if it was caul, The gudeman rave it spaul frae spaul' [JR], 'What mak's ye spae o' caul' an' want?' [JoHa] (short form of cauld).

cauld (kawld) adj. cold – '. . . get it agane to me, or else I will try it with my cauld sword' [BR1642], 'The Flowers of the Forest, that fought aye the foremost, The prime of our land, are cauld in the clay' [JEM], 'The dew is damp, and the wind is cauld, My child, it is not good for thee' [JTe], 'And stretch'd aneath the hawthorn tree, Alang the sward sae cauld and green' [JTe], 'Lambs lie thick as new netted herrin', A' cauld as lead' [JoHa], 'Where the ance warm heart is a cauld, cauld clod, And the beateous and brave lend a green to the sod' [JoHa], 'An' because inequitie sall be routhe, the luve o' money sall growe cauld' [HSR], 'Whan wunter nichts were lang an' cauld . . . ' [JJ], 'It was my gude auld grannie's gifte (Wha now lyes cauld in clay)' [WiSp], '. . . it's no our feet man that's cauld at a', it's the sermon that's cauld' [BP], 'A made a faiasable mael oot o pie-soop, . . . caald flesh, picklt ingans . . . His face was pale as if 'twas cauld' [TD], 'But cauld are the airms that are roond my dear, An' wi' cauld, cauld kisses his lips are worn' [FGS], adv. completely, entirely – '. . . everybody running to see the man 'that killed the monkey cauld deid' ' [WNK], n. the cold, a viral infection often leading to a runny nose and sore throat – '... It gi'ed me sic an awfu' cauld, Sae hearse I cou'dna speak' [JoHa], '... but the reason was, the lads couldna get away, an' Katie had a brunt fit, an' Alice was bedfast wi' the cauld' [JTe], 'A'm dei-in o the cauld', '... oo get the cauld, oo gain alang the street ...' [IWL], coldness, a cold environment – '... and if ye sud be dune afore aw return, raither than wait i' the cauld ye'd better begin't again' [WNK], 'They're left to sorrow, pain, and shame, Hung'r and cauld' [JoHa], 'He thraws furth his ice like morsils; afore his cauld wha can stan' ' [HSR], '... And for tae keep him frae the cauld Aw'll leave him ma auld skin' [JSB], ' 'Mong forms and faces new to me, Through winter's cauld, through summer's sheen' [GWe], 'The witch of the cauld with a silver comb Sat smoothing her locks of the tumbled foam' [WHO], 'Through summer's sun and winter's cauld Braw Ruberslaw looks doon ...' [WFC] (sometimes written 'caald' and poetically 'caul' '; see also caul and cauldit).

cauld (kawld) n. a weir or dam on a river, particularly one used to divert water into a mill lade controlled by a sluice. Hawick had at least 6 of them at one time: the Coble Cauld, Laidlaw's Cauld, Wilton Mills Cauld, Weensland Cauld, Lynnwood Cauld and Slitrig Cauld – '... The waves wi' water-rack were borne, And caulds and causeways up were torn' [AD], 'Jookin' here a sturdy brig or there a cauld' [JEDM], 'Over the caulds or across the weirs foaming, Soiling the hems of your skirts as you run ...' [WL], v., arch. to lay stones along the bank of a river to try to stop flooding – '... and the stones were handy for caulding the river' [RJR].

the Cauld (thu-kawld) n. popular name for the Coble Cauld – 'You'll hear me roar or softly sigh, And sing my Border lullaby, For such is life – I am the Cauld!' [WFC], 'It's nocht like what it used to be I doot I' getting auld, There's no a sowl to be seen now Doon at the cauld' [DH].

Cauldcleuch (kawl-klooch, kawld-klooch) n. Cauldcleuch Head is 1,996 feet (619 m) high, and is the highest peak within Roxburghshire (the only higher places are on the boundary with England). It is situated 10 miles south-west of Hawick and is an imposing backdrop to many local views in that direction. It is the source of the 'Cauld Cleuch', which runs into the Priesthaugh Burn, which in turn feeds into the Allan Water. The lands there were given to the monks of Melrose by William, 1st Earl of Douglas in about 1358; the part granted was listed as 'caldcluch inferiori' (or 'Nether Cauldcleuch'), suggesting that there was also a 'greater' or 'upper' Cauldcleuch. 'Caldclues Oure and Nethere' were listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers in an English document c.1380. The lands were inherited (along with Tillielee) by Robert, grandson of Robert Elliot in 1497/8, and at thatr point were held of the Laird of Cavers. They formed part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield, along with Priesthaugh, Stobicote, etc., as recorded in a document of 1500 and other later charters. The lands were listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. Along with Southdeanrig, the lands were rented from Melrose Abbey by Scott of Synton and Elliot of Thorlieshope in 1557; at that time it was valued at £3 6s 4d. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship and Regality of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1663 and 1690. They were still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands may have given rise to a surname, recorded around 1600 – 'Her bosom, winter's whitest snaw, That drifts o'er lofty Cauldcleugh wild' [JoHa], 'An a merk on the shooder o' Cauldcleuch To show where the cloudberries growe ...' [DH] (also sometimes 'Caldcleuch'; 'Caldeclouheued' is recorded in an English document listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots in 1255; it is 'Caldcluch' in 1497/8, 'Cauldcluch' in 1500, 'Caldcleuch' in 1557 and 1640, 'Cawcleuch' in 1653, 'Caldcleuche' in 1660, 'Caldcleuch' in 1663 and 'Caldcleugh' in 1687 and 1698; the name of the cleuch is presumably because it is a cold and wind-swept location).

Cauldcleuch (kawld-klooch) n. Henry (16th/17th C.) constable in the Parish of Gullane in 1617. James (17th C.) tenant in Braidwoodshiels in 1658 and portioner in Blainslie in the early 1660s. He is mentioned in records of the Regality of Melrose. Thomas, who is also listed in some of the same records was his brother. John (d.1612) minister at Newburgh and Edbie and Master of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews. He was part of the General Assembly in 1586 and became Professor of Theology at Glasgow. In 1593 he was in dispute with others in the University of St. Andrews over the claim of a professorship. Perhaps the same John (son of John) inherited lands in Ugstoun in Lauderdale in 1602, and was married to Katherine Hardie. He gave evidence at a trial for witchcraft in 1610, stating that the defendant was long 'suspect to be ane wicket woman, and ane Sorcerer'. In 1612

there was a complaint against him and another man, that they had not paid compensation and so should be apprehended. His name may have derived from the lands in southern Roxburghshire. John (17th C.) weaver who served as an apprentice in Edinburgh from 1643 until 1655. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Blainslie near Melrose in at least the 1650s and early 1660s. He held 3 husbandlands there, with teinds payable to the superior. He was also tenant at Braidwoodshiels, with his brother James. William (16th/17th C.) servant and shepherd of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Lufness. He was tenant at Easter Gemmilshiels and recorded in 1601 when sheep were stolen from there (also written 'Caldcleuch', 'Caldcleugh' and 'Caldcleughe').

caulder (kawld-ur) adj. colder – 'Wunters were ian awfih lot caulder back then wi mosses and ponds aroond the toon raigularly freezin owre' [IWL].

cauldest (kawld-ist) adj. coldest – '... An' warm eneuch to thaw The cauldest frost an' snaw' [FL].

Cauld Faulds (kawld-fawldz) n. alternative name for Cawfaulds.

Cauldhoose (kawld-hoos) n. Coldhouse, former house between the Stintyknowe and Drinkstone farm, near where 'Coldhouse Kipp' is marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map. The house is long gone, but the site can still be discerned. There is also the remains of a hill-fort nearby. Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Howford received the lands of 'Cowdhouse' for his service (probably in the late 16th century). Marie Scott was liferenter there according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when it was valued at £40. William Scott of Coldhouse paid land tax on £40 in 1678. The lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. William Scott, younger of Coldhouse, was recorded in 1743, when he was granted 'Little Drinkston and Tanlawrig, commonly called Cowdhouse'; it was at that time in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. Robert Scott paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748; he was Laird through much of the 18th century and lived to about the age of 90. The lands were valued at £80 in the 1740s. It was stated in 1765 that the owner of the land 'holds a head room along his march with the common' and the Laird gained a small part of Wilton Common (to the southwest of the house) in the 1765 division (perhaps corresponding roughly with the 'head room'). The lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were at that time valued at £80. James Scott was living there in 1765 and Walter Scott in 1780. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleithen is recorded as owner in 1788 (and still listed that way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was still valued at £40. Thomas Cranston is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and James Wilson was a labourer there in 1799. The Scotts of Coldhouse also had a residence in Edinburgh in the early 19th century, in Shandwick Place. John Nichol was farmer in 1835. There were Dalgleishes and Lockies there in 1841, but it was abandoned soon afterwards. The family of Scott of Coldhouse became connected with Chisholme House in the early 19th century, and also gained some fame through Alexander, who was a friend of Lord Byron's (formerly written 'Cowdhouse' etc., it is 'Coudhouse' in 1643, 'Cowdhouse' in 1678 and 1686, 'Coldhous' in 1690, 'Coldiehouse' in Hawick in 1736, 'Coudhouse' in 1748, 'Cowdhouse' in 1765, 'Coudhouses' in 1797, 'Coudhouse' in 1799 and 'Cowdhouse or Coldhouse' in 1811; it is 'Cowdhouse' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and a house is marked 'Coud house' on the 1764 map of Wilton Common and is 'Coldhouse' on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Cauldhoose Kipp (kawld-hoos-kip) n. Coldhouse Kipp, a ridge above Stirches, running north-east to south-west. There are the remains of a fort on top, with main ditches 380 ft apart, as well as evidence of other earthworks. The entrance appears to have been at the north-eastern end, although there has been damage caused by cultivation and quarrying (probably from 'kip', meaning the point of a hill).

cauldit (kawl-dee', -di') adj., arch. having a cold, sick, diseased – 'Item, that nane keippe any caldit, scabbit, or other seik bestis within this bruch ...' [BR1640] (also written 'caldit').

Cauld Kail (kawld-kāl) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century – 'The Sootie Kittlin' and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H'Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail' [HI] (the origin is obscure; cf. Cauld Pottage).

cauld-like (kawld-līk) adj., arch. cold.

Cauld Mill see Cauldmill

Cauldmill (kawld-mil) n. hamlet on the A6088 just outide Hawick, in a picturesque setting, at the junction with the road to Cavers. It formerly had a blacksmith's shop, now a private house. Andrew Blyth was blacksmith there until about 1690. William Aitken was there in 1704, James Pott in 1709, John Flemington in at least 1720–31, Adam Miller in 1723, William Whillans in 1728 and William Oliver in 1747. John Oliver was a wright there in 1777–96. Another John Oliver was mason there in 1801. James Smith was blacksmith there in the early 19th century and Robert Scott in the mid-19th century. One of the corn mills of Cavers estate was there in the 18th century. A Nissen hut was relocated there from Stobs, but was destroyed by fire in 2020 – 'Horsleyhill and Cauldmill, Syne owre the Orchard braes; Crawbyres Brig and Hummelknowes, The hedges, hips and slaes' [WL] (it is 'Caldmylne, Cavers' in 1690, 'Kaldmilne' in 1694, 'Caldmills' in 1723 and 'Caldmill' in 1747 and 1782; it appears to be marked 'Calmill' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map as well as Blaeu's 1654 map, although possibly on the wrong side of the Kirkton Burn; it is unclear whether the name relates to being cold, or a weir, or something else).

cauldrife (kawld-rif, -rīf) adj., arch., poet. cold, chilly, disaffected, indifferent – 'Ere stormy age, exert wi' rigour, His cauldrife lash . . . ' [JR], '. . . Least cauldrife want should find you oot, Come your ways hame' [JoHa], ' 'Twas cauldrife death that gruesome carle, that closed her een sae blue' [WE], '. . . Stirs na an echo in my cauldrife hert' [WL], 'Gleanin' what little comfort's gaun Frae the cauldrife compromise That though as mony as ever get shot, There's fewer get baked in pies' [DH], '. . . And mony generations syne, Cauldrife, I should hae lairnt to care' [DH], 'A feel the cauld, so A'm a cauldrife cratur' [ME].

Cauldshiels (kawld-sheelz) n. small loch south of Tweedbank, below a hill of the same name. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Kers from at least the late 15th century. In 1502 William Scott in Fenwick had remission for stealing sheep from there, belonging to Ralph and Robert Ker (Abbot of Kelso). In the same year William Scott in Broadmeadows had remission for stealing sheep from there belonging to the Abbot of Kelso and William Lowry. This is probably the 'Caldschelis' which was among the places listed in the 1535 trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, accused of leading raids and stealing livestock from a number of farms. It is 'Caldsheil Loch' in 1649 when listed among the lochs in Roxburghshire (it is 'cal schelis' in 1502).

Cauldside (kawld-sīd) n. former fortified house in Liddesdale, on the west bank of the Liddel just south of Riccarton farm and opposite the modern Larriston farm. It seems likely it is related to Caudle Sike, which is further north, near Riccarton Tower; it is possible it is an alternative name for that tower-house (marked on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Caldsyd' and Visscher's 1689 map as 'Caldsyde'; the name probably relates to being cold and wind-swept).

Cauldside (kawld-sīd) n. farm in Liddesdale, just into Dumfriesshire. Poet David Anderson spent the first 7 years of his married life living there, and wrote a poem about it in 1838. John Little and Michael Clarke were there in the early 19th century. George and William Armstrong, David Little, Robert Martin, John Scott and David Warwick were there in 1868 – 'It would have ta'en Sir Walter's skill To tell his beauties a' – Each waving field and wimpling rill 'Roun' bonnt Cauldside-raw' [DA].

Cauldstruther Moss (kawld-stru-thur-mos) n. former name for a boggy area just south of Wilton Common, mentioned in the 1765 description of the boundaries. It may correspond to the modern Leahead Loch (it is 'Caldstruther-moss' in 1765).

Cauld Well (kawld-wel) n. Cold Well, spring to the east of Salenside farm in Ashkirk Parish. Coldwell Plantation is nearby.

Cauldwell Sike (kawld-wel-sīk) n. stream that rises on Cooms Fell in western Liddesdale and runs roughly eastwards, eventually joining the Black Burn (not to be confused with Caldwell Sike).

Cauldwell Snab (kawld-wel-snawb) n. Coldwell Snab, slope on the southern side of Hermitage Hill, to the north-west of Hermitage Castle ('snab' is an Old English word meaning a steep, short slope).

Caulker Grain (kaw-kur-grān) n. stream that rises on the north side of Hartsgarth Fell and flows roughly north-west to join Chapel Grain south of Twislehope farm (it is marked 'Cawker Grain' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

caunel see caunle

caunle (kaw-nul) n. a candle – 'now blaw oot yer birdih caunles', ' 'A curse on them that invinted cannle light', 'Aye' was Caleb's ready response, 'and them that invinted day light too for working in' ' [WNK], '. . . such scriptural questions as 'Whaur was Peter when the cannle gied oot' ' [WNK], '. . . licht the cannle as he thought he fand a snarl comin' owre the briest beam' [DMW], 'For thou wult licht my canel causa (kaw-za) n., arch. a street, particularly one laid with cobblestones rather than flagstones, v., arch. to pave with cobblestones – '. . . cassaing the meikle gutter stone cas' [BR1695] (many spelling variants exist, see cassa, causey, calsay and the causa croon; from Old Norse).

the causa croon (thu-kaw-za-kroon) n., arch. to keep or take 'the causa croon' is literally to keep to the highest part of the street, i.e. the middle, hence figuratively it means to stay aloft, to maintain an air of respectability – '. . . to avoid the unsightly channels, preferred walking on the crown or 'top rigging of the cassay' ' [V&M], 'After getting drunk he used to parade the fair, keeping the crown of the causay' [WNK], 'She aye has kept the causa croon, And ever independent' [JT], 'New fashions tak' the causa croon' [JT], 'He yet might keep the causa' croon Alang wi' decent folk' [JT] (see also Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd: 'sic a man . . . will maybe keep the croun o' the causey longer than some that carried their heads higher').

cause (kaws) v., arch. to cause to be done – '. . . and having caused proclaim her several tymes at the parish kirk door of Hawick upon Sondays . . . ' [BR1641].

Causewayfit (kawz-wā-fi') n. Causewayfoot, former cottage near Wolfelee, also known as 'Causeyfit'.

causey (kaw-zee, kaw-zā, kaw-see) n., arch. a cobbled street, cobble-stone, formerly meaning a road suitable for wheeled traffic – '. . . to help mend the channels and caussays from their respective foordoors upon each syd of the street to the tope rigging of the cassay . . . ' [BR1715], 'Baptd. a Child to John Hobkirk Casway layer in Ormistown named Marrion' [Cav1761], '. . . While the muckle horse snorted, clattin' the causays' [DH], v., arch. to lay stones, pave – '. . . the middle o't being casset wi' loefe . . . ' [HSR] (spelled 'cassae', 'cassay', 'casway', 'causay', 'caussay' and other variants; also pronounced causa and calsay; it occurs in some place names, e.g. 'Causey Grain Head', 'Causeyrig' and 'Wheel Causey'; from French).

causeyer (kaw-zee-ur) n., arch. a road-maker – 'Walter Henderson, cassaer, admitte burgess, whose fee of admission was paid by cassaeing of the meikle guttur stone cas' [BR1695], '. . . before these witnesses Archibald Paterson casaer in Flexs and Henrie orrock' [PR1715], 'Paid Alexander Scott for ales to the cassers (paviors)' [BR1721] (also written 'cassaer', 'cassayer' and variants).

Causeyend see kaw-zee-end n. former name for an area in Hawick, perhaps at the east end of the High Street. James Scott, dyer and Bailie, lived at the 'Casaend' around 1700. In 1704 John Scott is recorded as 'taylor in Hawick near to ye Casyend' and presumably the same tailor John was designated 'casae end'

Causeyfit see Causewayfit

Causey Grain Heid (kaw-zee-grān-heed) n. Causeway Grain Head, hill in the headwaters of the Teviot and the Giddenscleuch Burn. Other nearby features are called The Shoulder, Haggis Side and Corbie Shank. The name probably derives from the road that used to cross the pass here. It partly follows the road that was used to connect the Esk and Teviot valleys (the Read Roads) before the 18th century, but is probably earlier. It may also be connected with the claimed Roman road in this area. It has been suggested that it was built for the monks of Melrose Abbey to connect their Teviotdale and Eskdale churches.

causey-gress (kaw-zee-gres) n., arch. meadow grass, poa annua, which pops up as a weed in unfrequented streets.

causey-layer (kaw-zee-lā-ur) n., arch. a road-maker – 'Count and reckoning is made with Paterson the casseylayer' [JW1704].

Causey Rig (kaw-zee-rig) n. Causeway Rig, ridge in the southern part of Southdean Parish, north of Wheelrig Head. It lies near the Wheel Causeway. There were several linear earthwork crossing between the Raven Burn and Piper Sike, but they are now lost in the forest.

causit (kaw-zi-, -zee') pp., arch. caused – 'The said John compearit, and said it was Marion Dickson, his mistress, that causit him put on ye mill' [Ash1640].

caussay see causey

caution (kaw-, kā-shin) n., arch. Scots law term for a security or guarantee, bail – '. . . and six shillings and aught pence for ilk act of cattione within the town' [BR1640]', '. . . till they found cautione for their better and more peaceable behaviour in the futur' [BR1706] (the spelling varied; cf. caishin).

cautioner (kaw-, kā-shi-nur) n., arch. a surety, sponsor, guarantor – 'The said day, Williame Scott of Burnefute, upon the watter of Aill, actit him as caw˜r and souertie for Geordie Jonsoune in Eschinsyd ...' [JW], '... he most contemptuously at his owne hand, wtout any cawne. of laborrowes fir violent breake the sd. prison' [BR1683], 'Borthauch ... The other halfe for as much to Robert Home (James Home his Cautioner) and to Margaret Scott relict of the deceased James Scott thr (Adam and Walter Scott in Overhall her cautioners) ...' [Buc1696] (Scotts Law term).

cave (kāv) v., arch. to butt or strike with the head or horns.

Caveling (kāv-lin) n. former place name in southern Cavers Parish. It is 'Cauillyne' among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It was included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. Archobald Douglas was recorded there in 1502. It is listed (along with Langside, Blakebill, Singley, etc.) in a charter of Douglas of Cavers in 1511. It was purchased along with Bailielee in 1551 by Gavin Elliot (later of Horsleyhill) from Gilbert Kerr of Primside. His son David was a tenant there in the 1560s. In 1564 it is recorded that the lands pertained heritably to both Gavin Elliot (son of Robert of Horsleyhill) and William Douglas of Cavers, with David Elliot (son to Gavin of Horsleyhill) living there. In 1573 William Douglas of Cavers complained to the Privy Council that the 5 merk land there was 'violentlie occupiit' by Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill, with Elliot claiming he had 'rycht and titill thairto'; Douglas was encouraged to pursue the matter with the Lords of Session. Also in 1573, William Elliot of Horsleyhill sold the lands to his uncle William (later also of Horsleyhill). William Elliot settled the lands on his son, who was also William, who sold them to Gavin Eliott of Stobs in about 1603. They remained among lands listed in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It is further listed among lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. when inherited by Sir William Eliott in 1692. It is unclear exactly where it was or how it should be pronounced (also written 'Cavelling', 'Cavilling', 'Kaveling' and 'Keveling'; it was transcribed 'Canelynge' in c.1380).

Caverhill (kā-vur-hil) n. George (16th C.) tenant in Whitehaughbrae in Selkirkshire in 1581/2. He resigned his tenement in Selkirk to David Thomson in North Synton. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johanne de Cauerhill' in 1420 when he witnessed the charter for the half barony of Branxholme passing to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1426 he was on the inquest for the lands of Eilrig, along with several other local men. He is probably the same 'Johanne de Cauerhyll de Breryzardis' who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1456; he was thus Laird of Briery Yards. John (15th C.) listed in the 1488/9 remission for Roxburghshire men for helping the former King, James III. His surname is recorded as 'Cavirhill'. Several of the other men were associated with Douglas of Cavers. Joseph (18th/19th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for William Easton in 1797. He may have been the son of Thomas baptised in Jedburgh in 1775. Thomas (18th/19th C.) nephew of Andrew from Jedburgh. He was resident of Bonjedward according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid the 1797 dog tax. He married Jane Jerdan and their only son Archibald adopted the surname Jerdan as heir to his grandfather. He secondly married Jane Douglas (or 'Jean', who died in 1797, aged 38) and heir children included Elizabeth (b.1783), Janet (b.1786), Beatrix Janet (b.1787), William (b.1789), Sussana (b.1790) and Joan (b.1792).

Cavers (kā-vurz) n. settlement about 3½ miles east of Hawick, and also the name of the surrounding parish, which is extensive, and includes Denholm. The area was formerly a barony, mentioned at least as early as 1353/4 and described in detail in about 1380 when the English Crown claimed the lands. It was referred to as a 'regality' in documents in the period 1432–88. The village was once much more heavily populated, with at least 5 public houses. The densest population was along the main avenue, the 'Townhead' being by the Old Kirk, with the market square and 'Cavers Cross' nearby. It is still possible to see the outlines of old houses in the field alongside the avenue that leads to the modern houses; the last of these, a low mortarless structure, was still visible in the 1930s. The town may have been burned by Dacre's men in 1535. It was burned by Hertford's men in 1545 and largely demolished by the English in 1596, probably never fully recovering after that. There were 12 residents listed there on the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. The area gave rise to a surname, which is still quite common locally; one of the earliest examples is 'William de Caueris', who was an Edinburgh juror in 1402. The village and parish was centred on the estate, which was owned by the Baliols from perhaps the 12th century, being conferred on the Douglases at least as early as 1328. The Barony passed to William, Lord Douglas in 1352/3. On the death of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas at Otterburn the lands went to his sister Isabella, who granted them to her nephew Archibald (illegitimate son of James). However, the lack of confirmation by King Robert III led to confusion over the Barony. There was an investigation in 1401, referring to a grant of the Barony in 1374. Final confirmation came from James I in 1412, and Archibald became 1st of Cavers. William Douglas of Cavers resigned the lands to King James III to be regranted in 1488, just a few days before the King was assassinated. In 1464/5 the lands were valued at 500 merks Scots, and were held of the Crown for annual payment of a red rose at the feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist (24th June). In 1509/10 the lands (including Denholm, Denholm Mains, Rulewood, Fowlerslands, Stobs, Feu-rule, Cavers Moor, Gilsland and Whitriggs) were again 'recognosed' to the King, but the Barony was regranted (in a charter of 'novodamus') to James Douglas in 1511. This grant included the lands, castle, manor and mill of Cavers, but no longer included Rutherford and Wells. At that time there were 2 'domain' lands, namely Cote and Ashybank. The central part of the Barony became the main estate within the Parish. The Douglases continued to hold this estate into the 20th century, although it became much diminished in size. The Barony and Teinds were valued at £4800 in 1643, with the full estate of the Douglases of Cavers being £7250. The Cavers estate was once very extensive, including, in the 18th century the corn mills at Cauld Mill, Trow Mill, Denholm Mill and Spittal Mill. The Douglases of Cavers had a crest with a hand holding a broken spear and their motto was 'Do or die'. The estate was once over 10,000 acres, and eventually left the Douglas family hands entirely when the last part was sold off by James Palmer-Douglas in 1975. A book 'Cavers: a keek in the window' was written by Jean Muir in 2000 – 'Then oot spak the dread weird wyf, Wi' stern prophetic e'e:– 'Curse, curse, on bloody Cavers hoose, An' a' her progeny. Her line o' males shall pass away Wi' the halbert, brand and spear, Ane doitit race the distaff ply, An' petticoats shall wear' ' [T] (first appearing as 'Kaveres' in the early 13th century and then often spelled 'Caveris' or 'Caueris' until the 15th century; it is 'Cavres' in 1290, 'Kauirs' in 1291, 'Cauerys' in 1353/4, 'Cavris' in 1389, 'Caueris' in 1397, 'Cauerys' in 1412 and 1431, 'Caueris' in 1428/9, 'Cauerys' in 1450, 'Caverys' in 1464/5, 'Cauers' in 1500, 'Caverris' in 1545, 'Caueris' in 1553/4, 'Cawerse' in 1565, 'Kaverse' in 1574, 'Cawers' in 1586, 'Kaveris' in 1601 and 'Caveres' in 1643; 'Cauers' is marked on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and 'Cavers' and 'Caver' are marked on Gordon's c.1650 manuscript maps, while 'Cauers Castel' and 'K. of Cauers' are marked on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin of the name is probably 'the enclosures' like Cavers Carre in Bowden Parish and Caverton in Eckford Parish, but there are too many possibilities, including forts etc., to guess reliably what these enclosures could have been; James Murray suggested that the name is older, going back to ancient Britain).

Cavers (kā-vurz) n. hymn written especially for Cavers Kirk by A. Ballantyne in the early years of the 20th century. This was probably Andrew Ballantyne, who was for a while the organist at Kirkton Kirk. A modern setting was arranged by James Letham of Melrose.

Cavers (kā-vurz) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as witness to a charter of 1448 for lands in Linlithgow, in which Thomas and his son John are mentioned. So he may well have been related. He is referred to as 'keeper of common seal of the burgh'. He is also witness to a 1451 Linlithgow charter. Adam (1780–1866) son of Robert, who was a 'fail dyker' and Margaret Henderson. He was born at Denholm and worked as a youth at Palace Hill, under a harsh master. After carrying coal across the Carter Bar and leaving his chains there for the next trip his employer docked money from him, causing him to enlist in the army at age 16. He joined the 3rd Light Dragoons, was sent to Ireland and served in the Peninsular War. The regiment was also sent to Waterloo, but did not make it in time. Wounded in the knee and lip, he was discharged in 1821 with a lump sum, but a small pension. Later in life Elliot of Wolfelee worked to have his army pension increased. He leased the farm of Langhaugh Walls from Scott of Wauchope following the death of his father. He moved as tenant of Swanshiel in 1840, but had to give it up after a year, and 4 of his children had to be hired at Hawick Hiring Fair. In 1841 he was at Swanshiel, was at Newton Cottages (in Bedrule Parish) in 1851 and by 1861 had moved to Stichill. He married Janet Clerk in 1825, she being 20 years his junior (she had a brother Tom and a sister Peggy). It is said that his wife was a foolish and untidy woman. His sons were: Robert (b.1827), who died during blasting in the Australia goldfields, and whose daughter married John Short, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Adam (b.1830), who emigrated to America in 1849; Walter (b.1834), who appears to be confused with his uncle Walter in Tancred's 'Rulewater' book; James, who probably died young; and William (b.1839), probably the son who was born deaf and dumb. He also had daughters: Isobel Minto ('Bell', b.1824); Joan (b.1829); Margaret ('Meg', b.1832), whose married name was Richmond; Janet (b.1836); and Elizabeth ('Bess', b.1841). Adam (1830–1901) son of Adam. He was educated at Hobkirk School and started working as a 'cowboy' at Bedrule Mill at the age of 11. He emigrated to Canada at age 18, then tried farming in Iowa and worked on the Panama railway. There he escaped the fever that decimated the workforce, but spent 160 days adrift on a ship in the Pacific before reaching San Francisco. He went from California to the Australian goldfields, then returned to Scotland after his brother Robert was killed in a blasting accident in Australia. He returned to America in 1855, settling in Iowa and marrying Caroline Ingmundson. They sold up in 1873 and travelled the world, including returning several times to the Rule valley. He died on a visit to Bournmouth. His wife contributed to several Rulewater charitable funds, including the Ewen Fund for a parish nurse. He left several diaries, including a summary of his family history written in 1897. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1719. Andrew (15th C.) Abbot of the Monastery and Convent of Lindores (in Fife). He is recorded in 1490 in a charter founding the chaplainry and altar of St. Blusius in the Parish Church of Perth and another charter for the parish church of Perth in 1491. He had a charter for lands in Fife in 1503. Aymer (13th/14th C.) listed as 'aymero de cauers' when he was witness to a gift of a tenement in Berwick in the period 1309–19. Christian (b.1793) daughter of James 'Auld Dunnerum'. It seems likely she is the daughter who was still alive and in her 80th year when Alexander Michie wrote about her in 1872 (in an article about John 'o Skye' Bruce). She recounted stories about both her father and John Bruce, who was a regular visitor to the Kirkton area when she was young. At the age of 14 she overheard the excisemen discussing with her father a plan to raid an illicit still run by Bruce and his friend 'Barney' Harkness in a deserted house between Kirkton and Adderstonelee. She ran there barefoot to warn the men, who hid everything in Birneyknowe Moss and hence escaped discovery. Let that day she inquired the disappointed excisemen 'if they had catched the smugglers'. Bruce later became a labourer and sometime piper for Sir Walter Scott, and on one occasion when Scott was at a dinner in Galashiels, Bruce was piping on the street and recognising her, danced wildly with her, to the amazament of the crowd, then explaining that she had once saved him from prison. She also met Bruce one last time in Galashiels when he was an old man, living as an itinerant musician. She married and settled in Galashiels and seems likely to be the Christian (also called 'Cathrine'), married to John Gill, whose children baptised in Gala included John (b.1816), George (b.1819), Robert (b.1824), Isabella (b.1826), David (b.1829) and Betsy (b.1832). David (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in 1580 in a charter for land at Newbattle. His wife was Christina Clerk. Denis (15th/16th C.) had sasine of the lands of Mugdrum in Fife in 1504. His name is recorded as 'Dionisio Caveris'. Dionysius (15th/16th C.) exchanged part of the lands of Mugdrum in Fife in 1506. He was surely related to William, who held lands in the same place in 1503. Probably the same 'Dionisius' held land in Perth in 1535. Ebenezer 'Eben' (c.1765–1828) son of Walter and Jane Crozier, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He is said to have fought for the Empire in the American War and received a grant of land on the Chippaway Creek as a reward. In Canada he married Amy Cohoe and (1779–1858) and their children included Margaret, Deborah, Ebenezer, Walter E., Elizabeth, Isabella and Amy. He was a store-keeper in Thorold, Niagara, Ontario, and is buried there. Euphan (b.1768) daughter of Robert, she was baptised in Kirkton Parish. She could be the Euphan who paid into Wilton Kirk in 1794, perhaps for a burial. Francis (1763–1810) son of James and Isabella Coulthard. His brother was James, 'Auld Dunnerum'. He was a shepherd at Peelbraehope and Ropelawshiel. He married Euphemia Hogg in Roberton Parish in 1789. Their children included: James (1789–1875), shepherd, baptised in Ettrick; Thomas (1791–c.1840), ploughman; Francis (b.1793), baptised in Kirkton; Margaret (b.1796), baptised in Kirkton; William (1798–1873), baptised in Kirkton, shepherd; and John (1801–80), baptised in Cavers, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada. He was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Francis (1813/4–1874) eldest son of Thomas and Helen Scott, he was a gardener at Wilton Dean. He was living at Pathhead in 1861. In Hobkirk in 1847 he married Agnes Scott (1819–1903) from Ewes. Their children included Thomas F.S., George S., James, Adam S., William and John (b.1859). He was assaulted by Walter Murray while walking from Hawick to Wilton Dean and died 3 weeks later, with Murray being imprisoned. Francis (b.1819/20) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd at Hardlee on Hyndlee farm in Southdean. He was appointed as elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1851. He married Euphemia Armstrong in Castleton in 1849. Their children included: Helen (b.1851), baptised in Jedburgh; James (b.1854), baptised in Southdean; and Thomas. Francis (b.1828/9) son of shepherd William. He was also a shepherd around Ashkirk, being at Headshaw in 1861. He married Janet Smith in Hawick in 1854 and their children included Margaret, John, David and William. George (d.c.1500) probably tenant at Synton. In 1502 David Scott, called 'Lady', in Stirches, had a remission for a raid on Synton that resulted in the death of him and George Newton. George (b.1832/3) younger son of John and Margaret Cleghorn. He was born in Jedburgh Parish, although his family spent most of their lives in Teviothead. He was listed as 'Horsekeeper' in 1851, being a visitor to William Scott, shoemaker, and as a youngester he was a postboy at Mosspaul. He later worked as a fire brigade driver in Glasgow, but for about 45 years was a coachman in Moffat. He drove a 'four-in-hand' excursion coach from the Annandale Hotel to St. Mary's Loch. He also drove an omnibus to the mineral wells near Moffat. He was well known in the Moffat area as 'Cavers'. He was also an abstainer and was uncle to Mrs. Gibson, who ran the Temperence Hotel on Bridge Street in Hawick. In 1854 in Hawick he married Annie Richardson. Their children included John, Walter, George, Margaret, Robert, Annie, James Richardson and Thomas. George (19th C.) game-dealer at 44 High Street. He was Cornet in 1879. Henry (1800–61) born in Hawick Parish, son of Newcastleton joiner John and Jane Douglas. He was a carter in Newcastleton from at least 1835 and was listed as a carter and lime burner at about 46 South Hermitage Street in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was just a carter. He married Violet (1805–72), daughter of James Turnbull and Betty Oliver. Their children were: John (1827–1901), draper, who moved to Luton; Elizabeth (1829–43); Jane (1831–68), who was housekeeper for her brothers in Luton; James (1833–1903), carter; Thomas (1835–1906), also a draper in Luton; Beatrix (1837–71), who had 2 children with Thomas Bulman; Robert (1840–85), joined his brothers in Luton; Esther (1842–47); and Elizabeth (b.1844) who married grocer and farmer James Riddell. James (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Jame Caveris'. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Liddell and Isobel Cavers (who was surely related to him) and in 1729 another for John Kerel, resident of Drinkstone. His daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1708. James (18th C.) farmer or shepherd in Roberton Parish. He was 'in Horsecleugh' in 1761 and 'in Harden' later in the 1760s. He married Isabella Coulthard. Their children included: John (b.1761); Francis (1763–1810), shepherd at Peelbraehope and Ropelawshiel; James 'Auld Dunnerum' (b.1765); and Walter (b.1767). James 'Auld Dunnerum' (1765–1863) oldest inhabitant of Hawick in his day, reaching 98 years of age. He was born at Harden, son of James and Isabella Coulthard. He worked as an agricultural labourer for most of his life, but also had other jobs. He was apprenticed as a weaver at Northhouse. He later wandered around England, then returned to Barnes and lived in an old house known as 'Dunnerine Haa'. He took up weaving there and was also a teacher; his wife Jean Scott assisted him as teacher. After his second marriage in 1825 he stayed at Woodfoot, Lightpipe and Broomyhill. Stories were told about his strength, which was legendary. Admiring a large leg of beef in a butcher's shop in Hawick, the owner offered him a knock-down price if he could carry it to Woodfoot unaided on his back. On another occasion his daughter was attacked by a savage dog at Northhouse, so he walked directly there, asked the owner for the loan of an axe and dispatched the animal with a single blow. He also worked as a peace constable for Sir William Eliott of Stobs, sometimes assisting the excisemen in chasing smugglers. He moved to Hawick in 1831, where he had odd jobs.

In 1841 he was living on the Backrow with his wife Jane and by 1851 they were on Kirkwynd. Later in life he was a seller of stationery and almanacs around the streets of Hawick, and was still doing this on his 97th birthday, when some of the townspeople collected a purse of money for him; he is recorded replying that he 'had gane lang aboot, and wad gang langer yet, and though now gotten somewhat stiff in the joints, he hadna a pain in a' his body'. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Jean Scott (1760–1813), who was from Castleweary (also in Cavers). Later, in 1825 in Kirkton, he married Jean (d.1855), daughter of James Bole and Margaret Scott. His children included: James (1790–1861), who emigrated to Galt, Ontario, and died there; Christian (b.1793); David (1795–1874), who worked as a waiter in Edinburgh; Isobel (b.1797); Walter (b.1799); Robert (b.1801); John (b.1803); Jane (b.1826); Margaret (b.1829–52); Isabel (b.1832); Joan (or Joannah, b.1834); Walter Martin (b.1842), who also emigrated to Galt, Ontario; and James (again, b.1849), who died young. When his first son James was born he was living at Barnes Shiel in Kirkton Parish. He is probably the man referred to by W.N. Kennedy in 1862, when discussing someone alive who claimed to remember the Hawick Flood of 1767 and 'had a son born to him when his eldest was 56 years of age'. He enjoyed his full faculties until near his death and was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. A portrait of him exists, painted by Mr. Scott and presented to the Museum in 1863. James (b.c.1780) servant at Greenholm according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. James (1780–1866) son of Robert and Margaret Henderson, he was born at Hummelknowes. He emigrated to Canada in 1808 to join his uncle Eben. He worked as a carrier of goods around Niagara, but returned to Scotland in 1812. 4 years later he went back to Canada with his brothers Robert and William. He once fell through the ice on the St. Lawrence and was saved it is said 'by an Indian pulling him out by his hair', although his daughter and her husband were drowned. He died near Montreal. James (b.1784/5) born in Wilton Parish. He served in the Dumries Militia 105–11. James (1789–1875) born in Ettrick Parish, he was eldest son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He was a shepherd at Stanishope and Hawkhass, and an Elder of Allars Kirk. He firstly, in 1813, married Jane Watson, who died in 1830. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, were Margaret (b.1815); Euphemia (b.1817); Francis (b.1819); Walter (b.1821); Jane (b.1824); and Helen (b.1827). He secondly married Janet Jackson, although they had no children. An early photograph of him exists. James (19th C.) farmer at Cogsmill, recorded in 1860 when he rented a field from Robert Grieve. James (1833–1903) son of Henry and Violet Turnbull, born in Castleton Parish. He worked as a carter and railway labourer. In 1856 he married Jane Corbett (1830–1901). Their children were: Henry (1856–1947), who was a railway guard and died in Carlisle; Margaret (1859–1930), who married railway guard Robert Milligan; Violet (b.1861), cook for the Laings at Ivy Bank in Hawick; Janet (b.1863); John (b.1865), died young; John (b.1867); and Thomas (b.1869), also died young. James MacPherson (1850–1910) born in Hawick, son of grocer Robert. He emigrated to Canada, originally working for the Hudson's Bay Company at Fort Garry and Winnipeg. He ran a general store and post office in Manitoba from 1883, calling his business 'Deloraine' after his homeland. This was moved from 'Old Deloraine' to the modern location of the town in 1886/7. He married his brother John's widow, Frances Jane Vincent and they brought up her 3 sons, Robert, John (or 'Jack) and James. They also had children Frank, Elizabeth, Reta and Douglas. John (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, son of Thomas. He is recorded in a charter of 1448 for land in Linlithgow and also as witness to a charter of 1454 in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) Canon of Scone, he became Prior of Blantyre in 1472 and Prior of Inchmahome in 1473. John (15th C.) notary to a sasine for lands in Hassendean Parish in 1483, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He is described as 'John Caveris, MA, clerk, Glasgow diocese'. In 1487 he was notary for a sasine involving the lands of Boonraw in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. He was also witness to another Hassendean sasine of 1494, where he is 'priest, clerk'. He was probably attached to Hassendean Kirk at that time. John (15th/16th C.) Chaplain of Linlithgow, witness to a mortification of 1497 (for the upkeep of a lamp at the parish church). Thomas 'de Cavers' was also a witness, suggesting that they were related. The pair also witnessed 2 other transactions in Linlithgow in 1497. Probably the same John was also witness to a discharge of 1494 in Linlithgow. John (16th C.) recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1562. John (16th C.) 'indweller' in Hawick, recorded as 'Jhonie Caveris' in a court case of 1574. The other men listed were John Scott and Allan Deans. This may have been in connection with a raid of some sort, with the bond set at £1000 each. John (17th C.) resident of Selkirk. He is recording holding lands there in 1627. Probably the same 'merchant burgess of Selkirk' sold property in Selkirk in 1630, with the consent of his wife Bessie Waugh. John (17th C.) flesher in Selkirk, recorded in a 'deecree arbitral' of 1663. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Bessie Martin and their children included: Robert (b.1671); and Margaret (b.1674). The witnesses in 1671 were both called Walter Gledstains. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Winningtonrig. His children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included Thomas (b.1707), Helen (b.1707) and Thomas (again, b.1708). He could be John, tenant on the Cavers estate, who was imprisoned for being a Covenanter in 1679. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was herd in Branxholme in 1711. He married Janet Scott in Hawick in 1709 and their children included: Walter (b.1711); and Esther (b.1713). The witnesses in 1711 were Andrew Ogilvie in Branxholme and his son William Ogilvie. He could be the John at the Flex, who (along with John Goodfellow) witnessed a baptism for John Irvine (tenant at the Flex) in 1741. He could be the John who in about the 1720s was given £3 11s by Hawick Session 'for 2 Sheetts for ym also tobaco and pipe', presumably for the funerals of 2 of his children. John (17th/18th C.) teacher at a small school at Edgerston. He probably started in 1707 when there was an appeal to the Jedburgh Session to raise money for a salary. He was likely still there in 1710 when the teacher at Edgerston received payment of 5 shillings. John (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1723, 1738, 1739, 1740, 1742, 1743 and 1745 (suggesting that he may have been an elder of the Kirk). He was recorded in a sasine in 1739, when he was owed rent for a tenement. His daughter Isobell inherited this tenement from him, and she married skinner John Currer. He married Marion Newbie (perhaps widow of David Young) in 1714, with children including Helen (b.1715), John (b.1716), Mary (b.1719), Isobel (b.1720), Anna (b.1722) and Bettie (b.1724). He could also be the John who married Elspeth Young in 1725, with children including Walter (b.1729). The witnesses in 1720 were glover John Scott and candlemaker John Scott. John (18th C.) married Agnes Easton in Wilton Parish in 1729. John (18th C.) resident at Rigend in Wilton Parish. In 1771 his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton. He is probably the John who married Janet Graham in Roberton in 1768 and whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Wilton in 1769. The witnesses were James Dryden and Gavin Turnbull, and the location appears to be 'Whithaugh moor' (although it is hard to read). Perhaps the same John was living at Philhope in 1774 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Margaret (b.1776), baptised in Roberton, was probably also his child. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Francis' Well in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps he was the John from Wilton Parish who in 1791 married Christian Hardie, from Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in Newton in 1790 when he was involved in a dispute with a shepherd in Greenhead. It is unclear which Newton this was. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1793. He married Margaret Ballantyne in 1792, the marriage being annouced in Roberton and Yarrow Parishes. Their children included: Katherine (b.1793); and Agnes (b.1797). He could be the John recorded as owner of a horse at Deanburnhaugh in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (b.1764/5) resident of the Hawick area. In 1858 he was 93 years old when he donated items to the Museum, including a horn spoon that had belonged to his grandmother. He could be the John, son of Walter, who was baptised in Kirkton in 1765. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Teviothead and Hawick Parishes. In 1793 he married Elizabeth Hislop, from Yarrow. Their children included: Elizabeth (1794–1881), who married James Nichol; Robert (1801–71), a grocer in Hawick; John (d.1865), who was an ostler; and Jane (d.1861), who married frame-worker John Howison. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Threephead in 1808. He married Jane Scott and their children (baptised in Roberton) included: Margaret (b.1805); and John (b.1808). John (c.1769–1846) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 46 South Hermitage Street. In 1798 in Hawick he married Jane (or Jean, 1771–1855), daughter of James Douglas. Their children were: Henry (1800–61), a carter; Christian (1801–55), who married Edward Paterson; Beatrice (1803–34), who died in Gross Isle (probably the quarantine station in Quebec); Robina (1806–77), who married William Kyle, carter and farmer; James (1807–41), who died in Ontario; Thomas (1810–79), who emigrated to Beckwith, Lanark, Ontario; Mary (1812–72), who married Adam Pringle; John (1814–79), who emigrated to Bathurst, Lanark, Ontario; and Jane (1815–41). John (b.1801/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd at Hayside, near Drinkstone. He was there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Agnes Gregor, from Canonbie. Their children included Francis, John, James and Catherine. John (1802/3–65) son of shepherd John. He was born in Teviothead and was ostler at the Change House there. His address in 1851 and 1861 is given as 'Coach Station'. He married Margaret Cleghorn, from Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1820), horse-breaker and coachman; Mary (b.1822), who married Andrew Harvey; Elizabeth (b.c.1823), who married John Wright in Minto and then James Robertson in Glasgow; Margaret (b.1826), who married Newcastleton joiner Robert Kerr; Jeanie or Jane (b.1827), who moved to Melrose and married James McHenry; Charlotte (b.1829), married John Rodgerson in Teviothead; George (b.1831), who worked at Mosspaul, was fire-brigade driver in Glasgow and coachman in Moffat; Agnes (b.1832), probably married John Grieve, and later lived at Yetholm; Janet (b.1834/5); and Robert (1837–59), journeyman tailor in Wilton. John (1820–73) eldest son of John and Margaret Cleghorn. Born near Lauder, he worked as a coachman and horse-breaker. He lived in Melrose and elsewhere. In 1852 he married Catherine Allan, from Haddington. Their children were John, Helen and Allan. His wife died in 1887, and was then described as 'Keeper of a Temperance Hotel' in Hawick. John (1827–1901) son of Henry and Violet Turnbull, he was born at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was a draper, moving to Luton in England, along with his brother Thomas and sister Jane. In 1873 in Pacras, Middlesex, he married Mary (b.1829), daughter of William Nichol, farm overseer at Thorlieshope. He was buried in Castleton. John (1828–58) son of Thomas and Helen Scott, he was probably born in Wilton. He trained as a tailor. He married Sarah, daughter of George Duncan and they emigrated to Massacusetts. Their children were: Thomas Francis (c.1848–1861); Janet (b.1850), who married Thomas Binns; Ellen (1852–55); Sarah (b.1854), died in infancy; George Duncan (1855–79); Allen (b.1856), probably died young; and Helen (c.1857–90). He died in Boston and his wife returned to Hawick with most of the family. She remarried to Thomas Rattray in 1871. John (1846/7–84) son of grocer Robert. Along with his brother James, he emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. In about 1878 he married Frances Jane Vincent and had sons Robert, John and James. He was killed in an accident, and his widow married his brother James. John Scott (b.1859) son of Francis and Agnes Scot, he was born in Lincolnshire. In Hawick in 1886 he married Elizabeth (b.1865), daughter of George Waldie and Mary Leithead. Mungo (16th C.) indweller in Selkirk, recorded in 1580 and in 1580/1 when he witnessed a transaction along with his brother William. In 1581 he loaned money to Gilbert Helm and in return was assigned an acre of land in Selkirk. Perhaps the same Mungo was a Burgess of Selkirk in 1618 in a financial case, with his son John also mentioned. Sir Reginald (13th C.) witness to an agreement between Sir Hugh Abernethy and Sir William Douglas, signed in Edinburgh in 1259. This involved a piece of land in Chamberlain Newton when the sister of Hugh Abernethy married Hugh, son of William Douglas. His name is given as Dominus 'Reginald Cauers'. It is unclear whether he might have been from Cavers or was perhaps a cleric associated with Cavers Kirk. He may have been related to Thomas, who was recorded in about 1264. Richard (15th C.) recorded in 1459 when he was fined for fishing in the King's waters in the Lincluden area of Dumfriesshire. Robert (14th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. Described as 'de Cavers', he was probably from Cavers, but his family connections are unknown. He was at university in Paris for his B.A., M.A. and Licentiate of Arts, graduating in 1382/3. His activities in Paris may be confused with those of Robert de Cardeny, with either of them being the Robert 'Scot' who is recorded there. He may be the Robert who was at a university meeting in Paris in 1385. In 1394 (or 1395) he was a priest who was a Master of Arts when given the promise of a benefice from the Bishop of Glasgow; the officials at Avignon who were responsible included Henry Wardlaw (from Wilton, later Bishop of St. Andrews). Robert (15th C.) Chaplain in Cavers. He was recorded in 1456/7 when he was witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert Graham to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus; his name was recorded there as 'Robert of Cauers, chapellan' with the sasine witnessed at Cavers. He was also recorded as 'roberto de caverys' in 1464/5 when he was one of the witnesses of the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He may have been Chaplain to Douglas of Cavers, rather than being associated with Cavers Kirk. He may be the earliest recorded man of the name who is associated with the Cavers area. Robert (d.bef. 1510)

Burgess of Paisley. His brother Thomas (Burgess of Linlithgow) resigned lands in Paisley in 1510. Robert (17th C.) listed first in 1650 among 'communicants' at Roughheugh. He may thus have been the miller there. The second person named was Bessie Laing, who may have been his wife. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1727. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Barnes farm. His son Robert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. He is probably the Robert who got married in Kirkton Parish in 1708, with no wife's name given. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish, who got married in 1751. The following children, baptised in Kirkton with no mother's name given, are probably his: Margaret (b.1753); Isabel (b.1755); Robert (b.1758); Jean (b.1762); Euphan (b.1768); and Adam (b.1770). Robert (1750–1823) born in Kirkton Parish, son of Walter and Jane Crozier. His brother Eben fought in the American War then settled at Chippaway Creek, Ontario. He worked as a 'fail dyker' (i.e. making turf walls) and lived in various places, mostly around Cavers Parish. In 1778 he was at Spittal Tower, in 1780 at Hummelknowes, in 1782 at Denholm, in 1791 at Whitriggs and in 1795 at Tythehouse. Around 1800 he became tenant (for the Scotts of Wauchope) at Langhaugh Waas ('the Waas'), and was responsible for bringing supplies to Wauchope House once a week from Hawick. He also kept a small shop selling tea, tobacco, sugar, etc. He married Margaret, daughter of Adam Henderson of Weens, and she died in 1830, aged 78 (having been described as a 'cross auld body'). Their sons were: Walter (b.1778), who worked in the Hawick nurseries; James (1780–1866), who emigrated in 1808 to join his uncle Eben and died near Montreal; Adam (1782–1864), who served in the army and later took over the lease of 'the Waas'; William (1791–1827), who later joined James in Canada and died in an accident; and Robert (b.1795), who kept a whisky still, emigrated and died in Canada about 1860. Robert 'Rob' (b.1795) youngest son of Robert and Margaret Henderson, he was born at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He had a whisky still on the moors. In about 1816 he went to Canada with his brothers James and William. He rented a farm near Montreal with William, who died in an accident in 1827. He smuggled goods to the U.S.A., worked on the St. Lawrence Canals, and was a watchman for the Bank of Montreal. His family lost track of him in 1860 and the location of his death is unknown. Robert (18th/19th C.) merchant who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1797. It is possible he is the same Robert who was a grocer and meal dealer on the Midrow on Pigot's 1825 directory. Robert (1801–71) son of John and Elizabeth Hislop. He was a grocer and spirit dealer at 11 Howegate. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot's 1837 directory, and may be the grocer listed on the Midrow in 1825/6. He was also a Howegate grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He was at 11 Howegate in 1851 and 1861. He appears to have become bankrupt in 1868. He married Elizabeth MacPherson, from Ruthwell in Dumfriesshire. Their children included John (1846–84), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes Wilson (b.1849), who died young; James McPherson (1850–1910), who emigrated to Deloraine, Manitoba; and Elizabeth Hislop (1853–63), probably the 'Miss Cavers, Howegate' who donated 2 American coins to the Museum in 1860. He died at Wellington Street and is buried at the Wellogate. Robert (1827–54) eldest son of old soldier Adam, he was born in Hobkirk Parish at Langhaugh Waas. In Bedrule Parish in 1847 he married Helen, daughter of Edward Hymers. In 1851 he was listed as a labourer at Fastcastle in Cavers Parish. His children were: Margaret (b.1847/8), who married John Short of Hartshaugh Mill; Jessie (b.1849/50); and Helen (b.1851/2). In 1853 the family sailed to Melbourne, but he was killed in a blasting accident on the Australian goldfields within a year of his arrival. A 4th daughter, Robina (b.1854) was born after his death. The family returned to Scotland, and in 1861 were living at Ashtrees in Southdean Parish, with his wife's parents. Simon (13th/14th C.) listed in 1298 among about 80 archers who were sent from Berwick to Roxburgh by Sir W. de Beauchamp and Sir J. de Drokenesford. He is recorded as 'Simon of Cavers'. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the Exchequer Rolls of about 1265. His name is given as 'Thome Kauer'. He may have been related to Sir Reginald, who was recorded in 1259. Thomas (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, recorded in a charter of 1448, between Isabella de Murray and his son John de Cavers for land in Linlithgow. This is one of the earliest instances of this surname; it seems reasonable to believe that he was related to William who was recorded earlier that century in Edinburgh. He is also a witness to a 1454 charter in Edinburgh, along with John, who must have been related. Thomas (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, recorded in a bond of 1472, paying annual rent to the Bailies and Burgh of Linlithgow. He was also recorded as a customs collector in Linlithgow in the period 1479–86. He may be the same as the earlier Thomas, or more likely a younger relative. Probably the same Thomas was Bailie in Linlithgow in 1487, held a tenenement there in 1495 and witnessed a Linlithgow record of 1497. He was probably related to John, Chaplain of Linlithgow. He may be the same Thomas, Burgess of Linlithgow (and brother of deceased Robert, Burgess of Paisley) who resigned some land in Paisley in 1510. Thomas (15th C.) Burgess of Linlithgow, recorded in 1531. He was probably related to the earlier Thomas. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) resident of Hawick. He was recorded as 'Thom' in Hawick when entered before the Privy Council in 1574, but this probably a mistranscription for 'Jhonie', indweller in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Hawick. He married Beatrix Scott and their children included: an unnamed child (b.1766); and Robina (b.1771), who married blacksmith Andrew Richardson in Canongate, Edinburgh in 1797. The witnesses in 1771 were Hugh Turnbull and William Ballantyne. Thomas (1791–c.1840) son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He was born in Ettrick Parish and worked as a ploughman around Hawick, settling in Wilton Dean. In 1813 he married Helen Scott (c.1792–1870), who was from Hobkirk, illegitimate daughter of joiner William Scott and Elizabeth Ingles. Their children were: Francis (b.1814); Helen (b.1815); James; John, who emigrated to Massachusetts; Margaret (who married Hugh Hall); Elizabeth; Thomas; William; Euphemia; and Jane. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1631. Walter (17th C.) resident of Todshawhaugh. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. Walter (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw in 1697 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Adam Scott and Walter Miller. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Thomson in Wilton in 1756. Walter (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Jane Crozier and their children included Robert (b.1750) and Ebenezer (b.c.1765), who emigrated to Canada. Agnes (b.1761), William (b.1763) and John (b.1765), also baptised in Kirkton (with no mother's name given) could also be his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1762 for Walter Scott in Newbigging. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Jane (b.1761) and Betty (b.1764). The witnesses in 1761 were Gideon Veitch (from Roberton Parish) and Margaret Scott (probably related to his wife, but it was still very unusual for a woman to serve in this role). Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1767 and 1771. He married Isobel Coltart in Roberton in 1760. Their children included Margaret (b.1767), William (b.1770) and Walter (b.1771). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1778. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at the Holt (in upper Teviotdale) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of 'Tytehouse Ford' in Hobkirk Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Walter (b.1778) born at Spittal-on-Rule, eldest son of Robert and Margaret Henderson. He worked in the Hawick nurseries, where he learned gardening. He was then a hind on the Oxnam Water and later was tenant at Harwood Mill. He was there when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is recorded as miller at Harwood Mill in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He finished there in 1839, then farmed at Swanshiel and at Tower farm in Cavers Parish. The Laird of Wolfeless sued him over the rent for Swanshiel, which ruined him. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded as farmer, living at the Dykes. He married Margaret Clerk, who had saved money as a servant on the Wauchope estate. He had no children. Walter (b.c.1780) servant at North Synton according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Park in Hawick in 1846. Walter (19th C.) shepherd at Ravenburn on Hyndlee farm. He was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He was still alive in 1906. Walter (b.1834) son of old soldier Adam, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He took a short lease of Harwood Mill, which was next to his father's farm of Langhaugh Walls. He was later at Swanshiel and then Tower farm in Cavers Parish. He had no children. William (14th/15th C.) recorded as a juror in Edinburgh in 1402. He is probably the first known person with this surname, written 'de Caueris' in this case. It is unclear what his connection was with Cavers, but there seems little doubt that the name derives from the area to the north-east of Hawick. William (15th C.) Burgess of Perth who was witness to a confirming charter in 1434 for the Earl of Douglas. He also witnessed an instrument of 1449, his name being recorded as 'Caweris'. This must be one of the first instances of the surname, 'de Caueris' being the explicit form. Probably the same Burgess of Perth is mentioned in a charter of 1434. William (15th/16th C.) had a grant of part of Mugdrum in Fife in 1503. He was surely related to Dionysius, who held land in the same place in 1506. William (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580/1 when he witnessed a transaction along with his brother Mungo. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their son John was baptised in 1644. William (17th C.) listed as miller at Roughheugh Mill in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the William, who, along with John, witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1696 for Thomas Napier. William (17th C.) recorded at Stirches in a baptismal record of 1682. He married Margaret Reid and their children included: Bessie (b.1682), baptised in Roberton Parish; and Thomas (b.1695), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1682 were William and Robert Scott. William (17th/18th C.) flesher in Selkirk. He and his wife Anna Horner are recorded in a lawsuit over debt in 1723. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Barnes in Kirkton Parish. His children included 'Elander' (b.1719) and Walter (b.1721). He is probably the William who married Margaret Drydon in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (1791–1827) born at Whitriggs, son of Robert and Margaret Henderson. In about 1816 he and his brother Robert emigrated to Canada with their brother James (where their uncle Eben already lived). He and Robert rented a farm near Montreal, but he fell from a wagon during harvest and was killed. William (1798–1873) born in Kirkton Parish, son of Francis and Euphemia Hogg. He worked as a shepherd in several places before settling in Ashkirk. He married Mary Hunter from Tinwald, Dumfriesshire. Their children were Francis, Mary, Elizabeth, Euphemia and David. In 1851 he was shepherd at Langtonheight (but was absent for the census). He died at St. Boswells. William (b.1817/8) born in Wilton Parish, he was a shoemaker in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he was on the north side of Main Street and employing 10 men. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children include Margaret, Jane, Janet and Martha. William Bruce 'Billy'. A farmer, he served as Cornet in 1949, with Della Hamilton as his lass. His grandfather was Cornet in 1879 (formerly also spelled 'Caveris', 'Caverse', 'Cavors', 'Cawers', etc.; the surname presumably comes from Cavers Parish, but some have suggested it may come from Cavers Carre in Bowden Parish).

Cavers Auld Kirk (kā-vurz-awld-kirk) n. older church of Cavers Parish, the name being used to distinguish it from the newer building, erected in 1822. The building was largely rebuilt in the 17th century, a lintel bearing the date 1662 (signifying either a renovation or conversion to a Protestant Kirk), although it stands on the site of much earlier buildings, dating back to at least the 12th century. It was originally cruciform in appearance, the northern transept being the Eliott Aisle and the southern one being the Glestains Aisle (or 'Porch'), this being demolished in the latter part of the 18th century. The altar at the east end was converted into the Douglas Aisle, with Laird's Loft above, also in the mid-17th century. The loft was reached by an outside staircase. A long slit in the northern end there, sometimes referred to as a 'lepers' squint' would have given a view of the sermons in pre-Reformation times. After the new kirk was built in 1822, the old building was used for many purposes, including as a school, started by the Laird's wife in the 1840s. It later became a church and community hall, used for Women's Guild meetings, dances, whist drives and carpet bowling, among other activities. In 1952 the floor collapsed due to dry rot and skeletons were found underneath. The last church service was held here in 1962. An entrance was constructed on the northern side in relatively modern times. The building was recently converted into a private residence.

Cavers Carre (kā-vurz-kawr, -ker) n. seat of the Kers (or Carres) of Cessford, in the Ale valley between Lilliesleaf and Belses. It is possible it is the 'Kaueres' in Lilliesleaf mentioned in a charter of Walter of Riddell in the early 13th century. The lands were once part of Clarilaw, which was owned by Melrose Abbey. The estate passed to the Kers in 1550, after which the addition of 'Carre' distinguished it from the Cavers near Hawick that was owned by the Douglases (although it was still just 'of Cavers' in many records). It was listed among the principal houses on the Ale in 1649. Tax was paid on 36 windows in the former house in 1748. The current house dates from about 1800 and is a forbidding square 2-storey block built on the remains of an earlier house. The grounds contain a dovecote dated 1532, but probably much more recent. Some old stones in the house come from previous buildings, including armorial bearings from 1532 with the names of Ralph Kerr and Marion Haliburton. The estate eventually passed to the Riddells through marriage. A plan of the estate from 1791 is in the National Archives (the name derives from the Old English 'cafor' and means 'enclosures belonging to the Ker family'; it first appears in 1567 as 'Cauers' and has its modern spelling from 1607; it is marked on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map as 'Keuers', on Gordon's c.1650 maps as 'Kavers' and 'Kevers' and on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Keuerrs', showing a mill on the Ale there).

Cavers Castle see Cavers Hoose

Cavers Coach Hoose (kā-vurz-kōch-hoos) n. former coach house for the Cavers estate, now a private dwelling just to the north-east of the old church.

Cavers Cottages (kā-vurz-ko'-ee-jeez) n. former name for cottages in Cavers Parish, where a small girls' school was located in the 1860s.

Cavers Cross (kā-vurz-kros) n. a large stone bonded with iron, adjacent to Cavers Old Churchyard, which is reputed to have stood at the heart of the former village. Its base can probably be seen in a photograph of about 1860, and it still exists by the old churchyard, although now little more than a crumbling stump. Assuming it occupies its original site, this was probably the market square for the village. A public well was also nearby, now covered up in an adjacent garden.

Cavers East Ludge (kā-vurz-eest-luj) n. former lodge building for the main house at Cavers, located just to the north-east. It may be the 'Estloidge' where James Leyden is recorded in 1698. Gamekeeper Robert Elliot lived there in the mid-19th century.

Cavers Hoose (kā-vurz-hoos) n. ancient home of the Douglases of Cavers, now a roofless ruin. Its history goes back to the 12th century, when the estate was owned by the Baliols, and some evidence of the lower part of a structure of perhaps this age was uncovered in the mid-19th century. It has been held by the Douglases since 1352, a significant dwelling being built by Sir Archibald Douglas in the 14th century, which was one of the early principal homes of the Black Douglases. This early structure was sometimes referred to as the Warden's Tower (and partly survives on the south-east side). A document of 1432 refers to 'the old manor place, on the south side, near the kirk', suggesting that at that point there were 2 distinct structures. For generations it was the home of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, and sometimes Warden of the Middle March. The house suffered much in turbulent times, for example being burned by Dacre's men in 1542, apparently with the help of the Scotts. For centuries it held the Douglas Banner from Otterburn, together with Percy's captured 'gauntlets' (actually a lady's gloves, presumably given to Percy as a favour before going to battle). James VI stayed there on a return visit to Scotland in 1617. In 1694 tax was paid on 14 hearths at the 'place of Cavers & offices houses' on the estate. In 1748 Archibald Douglas paid tax for 76 windows there (a huge number compared to other local mansions) and 73 windows in 1753. It was a 5-storey tower-house, altered in the 17th century and converted around 1750–56 into a classical mansion for Archibald Douglas, joining the newer Sheriff's mansion to the older Warden's Tower. Estate offices and outbuildings were also constructed in this period. In the late 18th century there were as many as 10 domestic servants working there (including carriage drivers, grooms and gardeners, but over and above all the agricultural workers on the estate), so running the house was a substantial operation. William Boyd was a servant there in 1799. The house can be seen in a photograph of about 1860, when it consisted of 'a large square mass of buildings, fronting the north-east, with a narrow wing projecting behind, the whole quadrangle being completed by a courtyard and outhouses'. It was extended 1885–7, with architects Peddie & Kinnear, to become a Scottish Baronial mansion. The removal of the first-floor vault uncovered a 'piscina' niche of about 13th century date, possibly a remnant of the tower of the Baliols. It was said to have once been surrounded by a natural moat, with a hollow still visible on the south-east and south-west sides. It also contained an unusual double staircase, a newer square staircase winding around an original steep spiral one. In the north-west corner was the spacious dining room, 2-storeys high, which contained family portraits, as well as 'St. Peter' by Rubens. Other legends include a supposedly haunted roon, the suggestion that a secret tunnel led to a nearby giant ash tree, and (unfounded) stories of the house being partly destroyed by Cromwell's men. In the 20th century the condition of the house became quite dilapidated and it was partially demolished in 1952/3. However, the demolition mainly removed the newer parts, while the solid walls of the older keep survived the blasts. The grounds contain the old church and kirkyard as well as the remains of the 'Douglas Tree'. The location of the house is about 150 m south of the old church. The house used to contain several historical artefacts, including the Douglas Banner (from Otterburn), 'Percy's Gauntlets' and an old bell inscribed 'AD 1635 AMOR VINCIT OMNIA' – 'Green Cavers, hallow'd by the Douglas name, Tower from thy woods! assert they former fame!' [JL] ('Cauers Castel' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Cavers Kirk (kā-vurz-kirk) n. parish church of Cavers, founded in the early 12th century or before. It was dedicated to St. Cuthbert, and is recorded in 1116, when it was the property of the Glasgow Diocese. However, in 1358 (with confirmations in the following several years) it is recorded being transferred to the monks of Melrose Abbey, with the 'advowson' being given by William, 1st Earl of Douglas, and confirmed by James, the 2nd Earl; at that time the church was referred to as 'ecclesie de Magna Caveris'. The earlier grant of James, Earl of Douglas and Mar was confirmed in 1388 (according to a transumpt of 1442), with glebe and chapels, and a provision for a vicar-pensioner. In 1402 it was stated that the church had been annexed to Melrose by Clement VII for 10 years in order to raise money to repair the war-ravaged Abbey. An investigation into the status of the Kirk in 1404 confirmed that it was in the Diocese of Glasgow, but belonged to Melrose Abbey. It was permanently united with Melrose Abbey by Benedict XIII (the Antipope), with the church of 'Meikle Cavers' again confirmed to Melrose in a papal bull of 1419; both the parsonage and vicarage were held by Melrose Abbey, with the charge being served by a vicar-portioner. The Abbey continued to hold superiority over the kirk lands until the Reformation. It was recorded in 1669 that the Parish 'has no reader or schoolmaster for want of a house, no Kirk bell nor communion tables nor church bible'. The presently existing building dates from 1662/3 (with a lintel marked '1662' being over the west door), although the lay-out and perhaps parts of the walls (particularly the north wall and north-west corner) date from an earlier building. The west wall and parts of the south wall are clearly contemporary with the 1662 date, but much of the rest was reconstructed after the 17th century. It can be seen well-preserved and ivy-clad in a photograph from the 1860s. This old building (see also Cavers Auld Kirk) was later used as a community hall, with lectures in the winter, and then became the church hall. It was last used for a church service in 1962. Largely abandoned since the 1960s, it became increasingly dilapidated, and was re-roofed in 2005. The Manse was listed as being 'waste' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 and listed among the 'deficient' in the Parish, with 3 hearths recorded; in 1748 tax was paid on 17 windows there and 14 windows in 1753. The graveyard has been in use since at least 1626. The main (eastern) vault beside it contains generations of the Douglases of Cavers, while another (northern) side vault holds some of the Eliotts of Stobs (and is still owned by the Eliotts). A former third (southern) vault contained the Gladstains of Cocklaw, but was pulled down by the heritors in the 18th century. There are many old gravestones of other local families in the overgrown and neglected churchyard, some dating to the 17th century. A recumbant slab from the 13th century is now too weathered to make out details. One old stone, arranged perpendicular to the others, was known as the 'Priest's Grave'. Near the churchyard gate is the remains of the 'Cavers Cross'. The new Parish Church is situated on the main road through Cavers; it was built in 1822 to replace the older building. An organ was added in 1893. In 1924 its main entrance was changed with the addition of a porch on the south side and the ornamental pinnacles on the roof were lowered. The interior was remodelled in 1928, the pulpit being moved from its original central location and the gallery being reduced in size, with the Cavers family seat placed in the middle. An illuminated memorial scroll was added after WWI, and the cemetery was extended in 1967. The manse is situated just to the west of the new church and was built in 1813. A building across the road from the church was formerly the beadle's house. Note that Teviothead Church was sometimes referred to as Cavers 'chapel-of-ease' before the new Parish was established there in 1850. A new church hall was built at Cogsmill in 1933. A link was formed with Kirkton in 1954, with St. Mary's added in 1976. This link was broken in 1988, with a new link formed with Hobkirk, then the link renewed with Hawick (St. Mary's and Old Parish) in 1996. It was instead linked with Trinity in 2004. The church possesses 4 plain communion cups, purchased in 1776, as well as 2 pewter tankards bearing the same date, and 2 communion plates were gifted in 1947 in memory of Archibald Palmer-Douglas. The oldest communion token recorded is from 1699, round, made of lead, and with the initials 'C.K.' and traces of stars. The church contains the funerary hatchment of Theresa, wife of Sir William Eliott of Stobs. The church bell bears the date 1710 and a large 'V' enclosing an indecipherable symbol. A roll of the ministry is: Dolfinus, Parson c.1170; William de Bliburgh, from 1296/7; William de Clyf 1319; William of Tofts, Parson in 1336/7, Rector in 1363; John de Govan c.1364–c.68; John de Boulton 1368; John Gandon 1372; Alexander de Caron 1372–74; Matthew Glendinning c.1374–c.87; Hugh Rae 1387–89; Henry Wardlaw, Rector at least 1389–98; Simon de Mandeville, Rector 1403–1405; Roger de Edinburgh, Rector 1405–06; James Watson, Rector 1406–08; William Crozier, from about 1418; Sir John de Redford, from about 1428; William Forester, about 1450; Fergus MacDowell, from about 1465; Wiliam Bithet, Vicar in 1464/5 and 1488; James Newbie, about 1500; Patrick Bowden, Chaplain in 1502; David Scott, Vicar in at least 1535–41; James Yule, Curate in 1542; William Lamb, Parson 1546/7; Andrew Scott, Vicar in 1545; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; William Slewman, Reader in 1575; Patrick Dunbar, Reader 1576–78; William Slowen, Reader 1579–80; John Watson, Dean 1580s–1599; William Clerk 1599–1602; Walter McGill 1603–51; James Douglas 1647–1658; James Gillan 1658–62; Archibald Douglas 1664–73; Thomas Somerville 1674–c.89; vacant c.1689–94; Robert Bell 1694–1721; Hugh Kennedy 1723–37; Charles Douglas 1738–45; Thomas Scott 1747–62; Thomas Elliot 1763–1808; James Strachan 1809–40; William Grant 1840–53; Alexander Munn McColl 1854–66; Alexander Davidson 1866–76; George B.S. Watson 1876–1923; William Kenneth Grant 1924–54; William Welsh 1954–76; Duncan Clark 1976–83; Alexander McCartney 1985–88; Adam Bowie 1988–96; David Burt 1996–98; William Taylor 1998– (it is 'St. Cuthbert of Caverys' in 1402; it is 'K: of Cauers' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Cavers Knowes (kā-vurz-nowz) n. farm near Kirkton, a few miles east of Hawick. It was once a tenanted farm on Cavers estate. The boundary between Cavers and Kirkton Parishes used to pass through the farm, the steading on one side and the house on the other. It is probably the place near Cavers, 'viz. le Knowes on the south side of the same' where an agreement was witnessed between Scott of Buccleuch and Douglas of Cavers. John Bowie was there in 1705 and John Oliver in 1745. Gavin Dryden was farmer there in 1797 and his sons Walter and Robert were recorded there in 1799 and 1801. George and Robert Hogg were farmers in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort to the south-west, overlooking the main A6088 – 'Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes' [T] (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; it is just 'Knows' in 1745, is 'Caverse knows' in 1797 and is 'Cavers know' in 1799).

Cavers Magna (kā-vurz-mawg-na) n. former parish of mediæval times, 'Big Cavers', distinguished from 'Cavers Parva' which corresponded to Kirkton. The term 'Meikle Cavers' was also used (it was 'Magnacaveris' in 1404).

Cavers Mains (kā-vurz-mānz) n. farm to the north-east of Cavers itself, once part of the estate, presumably once the 'home farm' of the Douglases of Cavers. Locally it was sometimes called just 'Mains'. It was once split East and West parts, with Cavers West Mains formerly a lint-spinning centre. James Wilson was living there in 1737. To the south-west of the farmhouse is a small wood called Belvedere and the remains of a burial cairn (where a cist with a skeleton and some artefacts were found in 1896). An amulet found near here was donated to the Museum in 1861. Immediately to the east of the farmhouse a linear cropmark has been revealed in aerial photography, connecting with the side of the nearby site of a Roman temporary camp. Aerial photography also revealed signs of a separate enclosure in a nearby field.

Cavers Manse (kā-vurz-mānz) n. former minister's house in Cavers Parish. In 1771 it was repaired, rethatched and a new byre built. In 1780 it was given a new wooden roof, covered with slate. A new manse was built in Cavers village in about 1813 and is now a private house.

Cavers Moor (kā-vurz-mūr, -moor) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers. The 'moor of Cavers' is referred to in 1296 in an ordinance from the English King to his March lieutenant. In 1307/8 this is probably the 'Caversmore' where Adam, grandson of Thomas of Liddesdale, took an English prisoner and held him for ransom. It is listed as 'Caueris Mure' in 1509/10, among the holdings of James Douglas, part of the Barony since the time of King David. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It is unclear precisely what location they correspond to now (it is 'Caversmore' in 1307/8, 'Caverismure' in 1511, 'Caversmuire' in 1687 and 'Caversmuir' in 1698).

Caver's Moss (kā-vurz-mos) n. former name for marshy land to the north of Acremoor Loch, with Caver's Hill further to the north-west (it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Cavers Pairish (kā-vurz-pā-reesh) n. Cavers Parish, containing the former village of Cavers, as well as Denholm and a large amount of rural area. The Parish was once much larger in extent, covering a region about 20 miles wide in the east-west direction, with the southern part detached from the 'main' part by the parish of Kirkton. It included land as far as Teviot Stone and Merrylaw, as well as Mosspaul on the south side of the upper Teviotdale valley, until Teviothead Parish was formed in 1850, and hence once stretched all the way to Dumfriesshire. After 1850 the bounding parishes were Minto and Bedrule on the north, Hobkirk on the east, Castleton on the south and Hawick, Wilton, Kirkton and Teviothead on the west. Presumably the land was once held by a single baron, this setting the boundaries. However, by the time of the Douglases of Cavers the Barony, while quite extensive, appears to have been significantly smaller than the Parish. An instrument of 1404/5, confirming a 'process executorial' of 1392/3, attached the Parish to Melrose Abbey. The total valuation of the Parish in 1643 and 1743 was about £19,000. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £16,500. In 1803 there were 279 men in the parish aged between 17 and 55. The Free Church congregation at Denholm broke away in 1843. Church records for baptisms and marriages exist dating from 1694 and minute books from 1758; however, early registration was fairly irregular. There is an existing beggar's token from 1799, in the Museum of Scotland. The population in 1755 was 993.

Cavers Parva (kā-vurz-pawr-va) n. mediæval parish, 'Little Cavers', probably corresponding to what was later known as Kirkton. The church was 'Ecclesia de parua Cauers' on Bagimon's Roll of 1275 and 'Petyt Cares' on the 1296 Ragman Rolls.

Cavers Schuil (kā-vurz-skil) n. former school in Cavers Parish. There was a school here since at least the 1660s and it was recorded that in 1669 there was no schoolmaster. It was in early times situated in the area of Cavers Townhead, then moved to Little Cavers as Denholm grew in population, being rebuilt there in 1781, including an inside staircase to the Schoolmaster's rooms. In 1802/3 moved to Denholm itself, initially in the middle of the Green. Thereafter it is more often referred to as 'Denum Schuil'. There were more than 90 pupils there in the 1830s and the Schoolmaster's house had 2 rooms a bed-closet and a kitchen. Three generations of the Oliver family were Schoolmasters there: the first James Oliver was teacher during the Covenanter days, his son James Oliver was Schoolmaster in the early 18th century (from at least 1702) and then Ebenezar Oliver in the 1760s. There was also a smaller school for girls, set up by James Douglas of Cavers in the mid-1800s; in 1861 the teacher there was Elizabeth Telfer, with Margaret Grierson as assistant. A roll of the Schoolmasters included: James Oliver, c.1670s; James Oliver, at last 1699–1735; Ebenezer Oliver, at least 1739 until 1796; Andrew Scott, 1798–1805; George Scott, 1820s to 50s; Christopher Carruthers, 1861; and John Greenfield, 1860s.

Cavers Toonfit (kā-vurz-toon-fi') n. Cavers Townfit, cottage on the Denholm to Cauldmill road, at the bottom of the avenue that was once the main street of Cavers town. It was built long after the town had been abandoned, but preserved the name.

Cavers Toonheid (kā-vurz-toon-heed) n. Cavers Townhead, buildings near Cavers Auld Kirk, once being at the 'head' of the town of Cavers. It was also once known as 'Muckle Cavers'.

Cavers View (kā-vurz-vew) n. part of Burnfoot, connecting Burns Road with Eildon Road, built in 1953 and named after the Cavers district that can be seen across the valley.

Caverton (kā-vurtin) n. area in Eckford Parish, between Kelso and Morebattle, containing the farms of Caverton Hillhead and Caverton Mains and the hamlet of Caverton Mill (where there are remains of a windmill). The lands were recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1328. The Barony formerly belonged to the Soulis family, later the Stewarts and Fotheringhams and was acquired by the Kers in 1473. James Pott was recorded as owner in 1502 and Robert Ker was also recorded there in the same year. Walter Ker of Cessford was superior of the Lordship where in 1540. 'Dandie Young called of Cavertoun' is recorded in 1601. It is said that the Duke of Roxburghe hid the family valuables there during the passage of the army of Prince Charles in 1745. An old British fort is in the area and it was the site of one of the beacons around 1800 (the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'cafor tun', meaning 'farm by the enclosure'; it first occurs as 'Cauerton' in about 1260 and 'Cavertone' in 1296).

Caw (kaw) n. George (d.c.1823) printer and publisher who moved to Hawick from Edinburgh in 1782 or 1783, publishing Hawick's first books. He is probably the 'George Caw, printer, Edinburgh' whose name appears on the list of subscribers for the 1780 publication of the sermons of Rev. John Young, minister of Hawick; this may be a connection that brought him to Hawick. It seems likely he was a close relative of Alexander, a bookbinder active in Edinburgh in the 1770s and 1780s, and John, who was also a bookbinder in Edinburgh. The first book he published in Hawick seems to have been 'The True State of the unhappy controversy about the Burgess Oath, being a discourse delivered before the Associate Presbytery of Earlston, at Kelso, the 8th day of October 1782, etc.' by the same Rev. John Young. His printing office was described as being at the 'East End of the town'. In 1784 he published 'A display of genuine Christianity, and Christian love, &c' by Rev. James Hervey. In the same year he published 'The Poetical Museum', which was the first genuinely significant volume published in Hawick and influenced Walter Scott's 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border'. It also contains the names of many local people who subscribed to the book (as well as William Caw, shoemaker in Kincardine, who ordered 20 copies and was surely a close relative). In 1786 he printed the 3rd edition of Scot of Satchells' 'History of the Scotts', which he probably edited himself. The last book he published in Hawick appears to have been 'View of the Covenant of Grace', by Rev. Thomas Boston in 1788. About this time he returned to Edinburgh to publish 'The Edinburgh Juvenile Library' amongst other things. However, in 1791 he published 'articles of Hawick Friendly Society'. He was at Liberton Wynd in directories in 1805/6 and for many years afterwards, then he was a partner with Henry Elder at the Stamp Office Close 1817–21. His name lastly appears in 1822 as 'Caw & Elder, Lyon Close, High Street'. He might be the George whose death is recorded in Leith in 1823.

Cawfaulds (kaw-fawldz) n. former farmstead in Wilton parish, on the Hassendean Burn, just to the north-west of Horsleyhill. The lands are 'Calffald' in about 1621 when John Scott of Brieryyards had a charter for them from the Commendator of Melrose and 'Calffalds' in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when George Hood was tenant there. It was owned by the Ogilvie's in the 18th century. Robert Liddell was there in 1727 and James Turnbull in 1728. William Easton was tenant for a few years around 1740. Labourer James Paterson lived there in 1841 and William Potts was farmer in 1851. Jessey Michie died there in 1846, when it was written 'Cauld Faulds' (it is 'Cafalds' in 1709, 'Caffields' in 1727, 'Coldfolds' in 1728 and 1736, 'Calf-faulds' in 1765, 'Calffolds' in 1840 and 'Calfolds' in 1841; it is marked 'Calffaulds' on Stobie's 1770 map, and also on the 1762 map of Hassendean Common).

Cawsya (kaws-ya) n. former name of lands near Falnash. It is mentioned along with the lands of Falnash and Tanlaw Naze, confirmed in to Simon Dalgleish in a charter of 1511. It is 'Caulschaw' in 1635 when Margaret, wife of William, younger of Falnash, was granted annual rent from the lands, along with Falnash and Tanlaw Naze. It is further mentioned in 1647 along with the same lands when it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald and in 1675 when inherited by Archibald, son of Archibald Elliot (when transcribed 'Canscha'). The location is uncertain (the pronunciation is also unclear).

Cawthorne (kaw-thōrn) n. Anthony (1966–) born in Yorkshire and studying at the Wimbledon School of Art, he has lived in the Scottish Borders from the late 1980s. His work is mainly abstract, including landscapes in an abstract style, as well as more non-pictorial works. His 1997 painting 'The Drumlanrig Bridge' is in the Hawick Museum collection.

ceemetry (see-mi'-ree, see-mu'-ree, see-mi'-u-ree) n. a cemetery.

ceepher (see-fur) n., arch. a cipher, a troublesome person, someone of no account.

ceety (see-tee) n., arch. a city – '... parrackeet in ov a ceetie, mang reekin lums an chowkin smuists' [ECS], '... wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark i the mids o a michty ceetie fer away sindert' [ECS] (also written 'ceetie').

celebrat (se-li-bri') pp., arch. celebrated – 'The Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord was celebrat with great decencie and semely order to ye great pleasure of all persons' [PR1717].

the Cement Cottages (thu-su-men'-ko'-ee-jeez, -see-men'-) n. popular name for Borthwickbrae Cottages, a row of cottages between Roberton and the Snoot. The local post office was here for many years.

the Central Hotel (thu-sen-trul-hō-tel) n. hotel built in 1894–95 on the site of the earlier (temperance) Washington Hotel and part of the area formerly known as the 'Coffin End'. It was built following the entrepreneurial plans of George Luff, who occasionally made public speeches from its balcony. It was also sometimes known as 'Luff's Hotel'. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the dormer-heads carry details of Alison, Luff, the builder and the Provost of the day (W.S. Barrie). It is notable for its Dutch-style gable and its balcony balustrade, originally with 'Central Hotel' in stonework, replaced later with 'Prudential'. The building was constructed of red sandstone with Westmorland slate, and was built by Bell & Turnbull. It served as a hotel for only about 20 years. It gave its name to Central Square and became occupied by the Prudential Assurance Co. in about 1919.

the Central Rooms (thu-sen-tral-roomz) n., pl. rooms at 3 O'Connell Street, also known as Johnstone's tea rooms, which were used for temperance weddings and other social gatherings in the early 20th century. It became the location of the Hawick British Legion clubrooms.

Central Square (sen-trul-skwār) n. former name for the open area where the Horse is now located, the name not being sign-marked and going out of use after the monument was built. It was named after the Central Hotel, which later became the Prudential building. There was once a large ornamental lamp roughly where the Horse was later built.

the Ceremonial Committee (thu-se-re-mō-nee-al-ko-mi'-ee) n. organising body of the Common Riding, formed in 1887 to formalise aspects of the town's historic festival. The first meeting was held in the studio of J.Y. Hunter, and included James Edgar. The motivation was to separate the traditional aspects from those of the already existing Race Committee. It was not popular in all quarters, and referred to by some as the 'Serio-Comic Committee'. It was constituted under the Race Committee until 1890, when it became a Town Council committee. However, it had taken over running the Cornet's Races (rather than the others) from the beginning. Much of the detail of the present day Common-Riding festival was defined in the early years of this committee. The committee was reconstituted in 1898 and was redesignated a sub-committee of the Common-Riding Committee when reorganised in 1908.

certes (ser-teez) interj., poet. certainly, assuredly – 'It gliffs the auld, it gliffs the young, And, certes, 'tis nae freak; At dark midnicht, on passers-by, 'Twill through the hedgerows keek' [TCh], 'The Tawbernacle! man, my certy, ye'se Tawbernacle nane here no ane o' ye' [WNK], ' '. . . Gin I'm no Airchie, certes sirs, I've fund a bonny cairt' ' [WL], also in the exclamation of surprise or emphasis 'my certes', literally meaning 'I'm sure' – 'My certes! the gress didna grow 'neth oor feet, Wi' the hurry oo made oo were clean in a heat' [BM1900], 'In A gaed ti fill ma empy keite, for my certies! A was howe!' [ECS] (also written 'certies', 'certy', etc.).

certification (ser-ti-fee-kā-shin) n., arch. a warning, particularly in the phrase 'with certification that' used to introduce a penalty for non-compliance – '. . . each Councillor to ride the said Marches yearly alongst with the Magistrates, with certification that if they fail or neglect to do so . . . they are to forfeit their Councillorship . . . ' [BR1759].

cess (ses) n., arch. a tax, typically on land, roughly equivalent to rates – '. . . cast of poors cess upon the Heritors and Tenants of the Parish of Hawick for one quarter commencing the 26th February 1768' [PR], 'Frugal temperance urged no cesses . . . ', v., arch. to tax, rate or assess.

cess-book (ses-book) n., arch. a tax record book – 'Mr James Simson minister of Wilton . . . craved, That as his possession was not rated in the cess-books, the commissioners might find, and give a valuation to him for himself and his successors in office' [DCW1765].

Cessford (ses-furd) n. village in Eckford Parish, on the Jedburgh to Morebattle road, lying on the Cessford Burn. Cessford Castle, ancestral home of the Kers is just to the north-east and Hobbie Ker's Cave is in a steep bank by the stream. A former ash tree there was for a long time pointed out as the 'Jethart Justice Tree'. The estate belonged to Roger Mowbray before about 1325, then was granted by Robert the Bruce to Edward Marshal, before passing to the Sinclairs. It then changed hands several times (e.g. being in possession of James newton in 1502) until coming into the possession of the Kers in the mid-15th century. The castle was among many burned by the English in 1544 – 'While Cessford owns the rule of Carr. While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott, The slaughter'd chiefs, the mortal jar, The havoc of the feudal war, Shall never, never be forgot!' [SWS] (the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'cess worth', meaning 'homestead by the peat bog'; it first occurs as 'Cessworthe' in 1296; it is 'Cesseworth' in 1325, 'Sesworth' in 1415/6, 'Cesfurde' in 1448, 'Sessfurde' in 1469/70, 'Cesfurd' in 1472, 'Cesfurde' in 1525, 'Cesfuird' in 1547/8 and 'Cesfurd' in 1552 and 'Cesfurde' in 1564/5).

Cessford (ses-furd) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1558. He is the first documented Bailie, in the earliest known detailed sasine relating to Hawick. This is also one of the first known instances of the surname Cessford. Presumably the same Adam is recorded as occupier of the lands of Campioncroft lying in the East Mains of Hawick in 1557 (and still recorded as occupier in 1565/6). He may be the same as the Adam Cessford listed in Hawick's 1537 charter as holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street (with rentals due to James Blair). Agnes (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Probably the same Agnes was living at Newton in 1726 when she received poor mony from the Bedrule Session. James (16th C.) holder of a quarter particate of land on the south side of Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. It is possible that the same 'Jacobo Cesfurd' was shepherd on the King's lands of Commonside and Dryden who was paid £5 for 7 bolls and 2 firlots of grain according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. James (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–90. Janet (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Janet (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (16th C.) owner of a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Probably the same John was also holder of 2 particates on the north side, and separately listed as holder of another particate on that side (so there may be 2 men of the same name). It seems likely that he was related to Adam, James, Janet and William, who are also listed. John (17th C.) owner of a tenement somewhere in Hawick, recorded in 1635. It was to the west of the piece of land once owned by John Deans. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1748. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1490 resigning a 'tenement' in Hawick in favour of Robert Scott of Branxholme. This may be the first known Hawick sasine, and the first recorded use of the surname. The fact that he is recorded as 'burgess of Hawick' suggests that the Town was already a Burgh in 1490. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was a cooper in Stonedge in 1739. His children included Janet (b.1737), Magdalen (b.1739) and James (b.1742). Robert (18th C.) married Beatrice Scott in Hobkirk in 1761. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Probably the same Thomas had a daughter Margaret baptised in Cavers in 1695. William (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as 'Willelmo Cesfurde'. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time. He may be the same as the William who is recorded owning a quarter of a particate of land on the south side of Hawick in 1537. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. William (18th C.) resident of Boosmill in Lilliesleaf. His children included: Agnes (b.1787); Margaret (b.1788); and an unnamed child (b.1789) (spelled 'Cesfoord', 'Cesfurd', 'Cesfurde', 'Cessfurd', 'Cessfurde', 'Sesfoorde', 'Sessford', etc., in early records).

Cessford Castle (ses-furd-kaw-sul) n. ruined 'L'-shaped tower, about 10 miles east of Jedburgh. It was the ancestral seat of the Kers from the mid-15th century until their chief (now the Duke of Roxburghe) moved to Floors Castle around 1650. It was attacked by the Earl of Surrey in 1523. A key found there was donated to the Museum in 1900.

the Cessfords (thu-ses-furdz) n. popular name for an important local family, referring to the Kers, rather than the Kerrs of Ferniehirst.

chack (chawk) n., arch. a snack, hurried meal – '. . . Caleb came to a dead halt, and, . . . said – 'Awm gey yap enow, an' wad be nae the waur o' a chack' ' [WNK], '. . . sei Ancrum, an geet a chack o something ti serr as an off-pit' [ECS].

chack (chawk) n., arch. a bruise made by nipping, a slit in the edge of a cotton-reel for inserting the thread – '. . . A spaik o' Pharaohs chariot-wheel, The chack o' auld Deborah's reel, He'll let you see' [JoHa], a clicking sound – '. . . and the 'chack-reel', . . . with a spring or catch so arranged as to indicate the completion of the cut by a 'click or 'chack' ' [DMW], v., arch. to make a notch, to nip or bruise the skin, snatch with the teeth –

'They guddled and chackit about his flanks, Till tired of the play' [JTe], to clack the teeth, make a clicking sound.

chack (chawk) v., poet. to check – 'Then him I'd chase to get it back, Lest he it a' in holes wad chack' [TCh].

chackit up (chaw-kee'-, -ki'-up) pp., poet. geared up a horse – 'She chakyt him up with the red snaffle bitte; And O, she satte him fair' [JTe] (this use is obscure).

chaff (chawf) v. to chatter – '... On the shundered bank where the Robbies stand, And chaff, and champ their shuin' [DH], '... Chaffin and argyin; clashin oot praise and blame; Ca-in the ref., and goal-kicks that gaed gleyed!' [DH].

chaff-bed (chawf-bed) n., arch. a bed having a mattress filled with chaff. These were common among the labouring classes until the early 20th century. The chaff was replaced about twice a year, and in Hawick the banks of the Slitrig were once used as the dumping ground.

chaft (chawft) n., arch. cheek, chin, jaw – 'The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gepit wi' girning joye' [JTe], 'My thin, wan chafts, an' hollow rayless e'e, Is 'neugh to make ye hae distaste for me' [JoHa], '... Hail, as on chafts it peppers dirlin', Nae joke indeed' [JoHa], 'Though houghs grow thin and chafts fa' in, And hair grows white and scanty' [MG], '... aw've seen the day when aw wad hae daddit yer chafts for that trick' [WNK], '... the skeleton ... 'was perfect, but gey frush, that his chaft blades were like the branks o' a cow'' [WNK], '... His chafts were fa'en in, an' his teeth were a' gane' [JT], '... where the caller air ud seek roses back ti the chafts o the palliest peenge' [ECS], 'Hello callant! What heh ee eer chafts tied up for? A forker gaed inti ma lug, i herrst, an it's aye been sair sinseine' [ECS], '... I've seen oo ventur oot as fer as that, And come, chafts champin', cheery doon' [WL].

chaier (chī-ur) n., arch. a chair – 'Pow eer chaier forrit tĕ the feier' [JAHM] (note the extra vowel sound).

chaimical (kā-mee-kul) adj., arch. chemical – '... isteed o caimeecal-laden cluds, a body can finnd the praicious scents o field an foggeege, flureesh an flooer!' [ECS] (spelling varies).

Chain see Sheen

chaipel (chā-pul) n. a chapel (also spelled 'chapel').

Chaipel (chā-pul) n. Chapel, former name for lands in Lilliesleaf parish, presumably once attached to the Kirk there. A small tower there was dismantled in about 1830; there is a tradition, which says that in the mid-18th century it was lived in by a witch, and when she died there was a terrible storm. There is still a farm of that name there today, between Lilliesleaf village and Bewlie. It was the main home of the Middlemas family in the 16th and early 17th centuries. William Middlemas was there in 1622. It was rated at £390 in 1643. Walter Scott of Chapel had lands valued at £668 in 1643, 1663 and 1678; these lands consisted of Chapel itself at £390, £200 of 'acres in Lilliesleaf' and 'Portions-croft' valued at £78. It was listed among the principal houses on the Ale in 1649. 'Thomas Scott in Chapell wt his tenants' paid tax for 7 hearths in 1694. James Black was living there in 1728. George Thomson was farmer in at least the period 1787–97. It was owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill in 1788, by William Riddell of Camieston in 1811 and passed to William Currie of Linthill before 1874. Andrew Thomson was living there in at least 1799–1801. Andrew and Thomas Oliver were farmers there in the 1860s. It was formerly referred to as Lilliesleaf Chapel and Chapel Middlemas (Pont's c.1590 manuscript map shows 'Chapell, Gordon's c.1650 maps show and 'Chapel' and 'Chapell', while Blaeu's 1654 map also shows 'Chapell' near here; it is 'Lillislie Chapell' in 1619, 'Lillisleif Chappell' and 'Lilislie-Chapell' in 1622, 'Chappell' in 1643, 'cheppell' in 1678, 'Chappell' in 1798 and 'Chapple' in 1797).

the Chaipel (thu-chā-pul) n. popular name for S.S. Mary & David's Catholic Chapel in Hawick or for the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm.

Chaipel Burn (chā-pul-burn) n. side stream of the Northhouse Burn, which runs past Old Northhouse, also known as Chapelcleuch. It rises in a moss between Staney Hill and Bush Hill, flows roughly northwards to Old Northhouse, then turns to the west to join the Northhouse Burn (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Chaipel Cross (chā-pul-kros) n. another name for Shiplaw Corse.

the Chaipelflat (thu-chā-pul-flaw') n. former name for lands near Hallrule Mill, recorded as 'chaipp elflat' in the 1562 Baronial dispute over lands in Feu-Rule.

Chaipel Grain (chā-pul-grān) n. Chapel Grain, stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises at Grain Head, on the border with Dumfriesshire, and runs northwards to join the Twislehope Burn near the farm of Twislehope (it is 'Chappel Grain' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; there is no obvious connection with a chapel).

Chaipelhill (chā-pul-hil, chaw-pul-hil) n. farm above Branxholme, reached via the narrow road near Branxholme Bridge. The farm and the adjacent hill presumably got their name from the former chapel at 'the Birns o Chaipelhill'. The farm was home of a branch of the Scotts from at least the 16th century. Scott of Satchells lists Walter Scott 'of Chappel-hill' as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch. Robert Martin was there in 1623. In 1627 it is described as paying 'in stok and teynd 15; estimat in stock to 8, in teynd 2, and vicarage 3 lbs'. Robert Armstrong was tenant in 1641. There were 9 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Edmond Scott, Robert Goodfellow, Adam Martin, Marion Liddell, Christine Scott, Jean Scott, Helen Moscrop, Bessie Armstrong and Helen Martin. Walter Scott ('Reid Wat') leased the farm in at least the period 1671–77. James Hume was tenant there in at least the period 1690–98. James Hume, Robert Turnbull and John Hislop were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William Gotterson was there in 1710, James Hume in 1718–20 and Simon Nichol in 1721. James Hume's widow and son James became tenants in 1723. William Hume was also there in 1723 and James Telfer in 1726. James Hume was tenant in 1735 and Charles Scott in 1748. John Nivison was living there in 1743–52. John Craw was recorded there in 1761, William Gledstains in 1762 and 1763, James Nichol in 1764–65, Robert Lawson in 1774, Charles Miller in 1775 and John Davidson in 1790. James Hume was farmer there in 1792, replaced by his son James by 1795. There is a record of a 'march fence with wester Parkhill' being erected in 1794/5. Robert Douglas was ploughman there in 1812. In 1850 it was described as being in disrepair and unleasable, but James Paterson was farmer in the 1860s. There is an extensive series of hill-forts and settlements nearby, on the ridge between the Teviot and the Borthwick. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it consisted of 75 acres, bounded by the farms of Branxholem Muir, Banxholme Town, How Meadow and Reggs. The former farmhouse (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but of which there are no visible remains) was to the south of the road, overlooking the 'Birns of Chapelhill', which was once a fort and later a mediæval chapel. It was part of Hawick Parish until being included in the new Roberton parish in 1690. The main road went past here formerly, to avoid the boggy land around the Teviot. A set of 'wafer irons' (or 'gauffres', used for making communion wafers) engraved 'I H C', said to be found here, are in the Museum. A 'Roman finger ring' made of 2 metals was found in the hill-fort in the 19th century, but susequently lost – 'I've watched the warning beacon glow On Chapelhill and Borthwickbrae, And Borthwick's sons arise and go All eager for the deadly fray' [AEM], 'Sall I come skirtin' the braid muirs When the gloamin' tide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh Or the road by Chapelhill?' [WL] (it is 'Chappelhill' in 1618, 'Shappelhill' in 1684, 'Chaplehill' in 1690, 'Chappelhill' in 1692, 'Chappellhill' in 1702, 'Chapilhill' in 1710, 'Chappel hill' in 1720 and 'Chapplehill' in 1797; it is 'Chapellhill' on a parish map of 1650 and is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map; note that there are other Chapelhills in Dumfries & Galloway, in South Lanarkshire, in East Lothian, near Cockburnspath and near Peebles.

Chaipel Hill (chā-pul-hil, chaw-pul-hil) n. hill between the Branxholme Lochs, with a triangulation pillar, reaching 313 m. The farmhouse of Chapelhill is about a mile to the east. The area was used as a meeting place for hunting by the Duke of Buccleuch's hounds in the 19th century.

Chaipelhill Kirk (chā-pul-hil-kirk) n. former chapel at the Birns o Chaipelhill.

Chaipel Knowe (chā-pul-now) n. Chapel Knowe, small hill just west of Lethem in Southdean Parish. It is said that there was once a chapel there, although no traces of it survive. Just to the west of the hill are the remains of an enclosed settlement, consisting of 3 rock-cut platforms that originally contained wooden roundhouses, within a stony bank. It may be attributed to the first millennium B.C.E.

Chaipel Knowe (chā-pul-now) n. Chapel Knowe, small hill in the southernmost portion of Castleton Parish, just to the east of the Muir Burn, on the farm of Ryleahead. There are remains of a chapel nearby, probably the 'Chapelknowe, on the borders of Canonby' noted in the 1795 Statistical Account of Scotland.

Chaipel Moor (chā-pul-moor) n. Chapel Moor, the high ground between Satchels and Huntlaw, lying to the south of Bewlie Moor, about 5 miles north of Hawick. It is now marked only by the name of a plantation to the southwest. 'Chapelmoor House' is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map. A drove road used to pass by here (it is unclear what the connection with a chapel might have been).

chaipel o ease (chā-pul-ō-eez) n. a church built in a particular for location the convenience of those who live far from the parish church. The term was particularly used in the early 19th century to refer to Caerlenrig (Teviothead) church, which was used for Sunday services while it was part of Hawick Parish, although communions etc. were still only held at St. Mary's.

the Chaipel Park (thu-chā-pul-pawrk) n. Chapel Park, the local name for a field behind Cogsmill School that has been identified with the Chapel of St. Cuthbert mentioned by Reginald of Durham in the 12th century. The area was also called 'Cogs Knowes'. A stand of trees was planted there about 1830 to mark the position of the ancient chapel.

the Chaiplane Dykes (thu-chā-plin-dīks) n. former name for small streams or ditches to the north of Templehall in Rulewater, described in a 1567 bounding charter ('caiplane dykis' in 1567 and 'the chaplannie dyke biggit towart Titois Renis' in 1604).

chairge (chārj) v. to charge – 'hei was chairged wi peein up a close', '... as we sall be chairged, coniunctlie and seueralie, sall releiue the said laird of Balcleuch ...' [SB1599], 'Syne chairge ye your glasses, and join the refrain – Lang life tae the lasses whae bussed it again!' [CB], 'Chairge ye wae oor flag Safe Oot, tae Safe back tide ye in' [MB], n. a charge – 'whae deied an left yow in chairge?', an ecclesiastical appointment – '... his second chairge was Hawick Congregational Kirk' [IWL], arch. a burden – 'Of these the first half-dozen are bracketted 'all these can work some', although one is credited with being 'a charge' ...' [JJV] (see also chairgit).

chairge an dischairge (chārj-an-dis-chārj) n., arch. account of payments made, literally the income received and the record of monies paid out – '... charge and discharge thereof being calculated together, rests in the said John Scott's hands ...' [BR1639].

chairgit (chār-jee', -ji') pp., poet. charged – '... so presently she was chargit before the presbytery at Selkirk again Wednesday next, and there to be hard mair calmly' [Ash1639], 'An' charget them that they shudna mak' him kennet' [HSR], 'Than charget he his discipels that they shud tell nae man ...' [HSR] (also written 'chargit').

the Chairity Ball (thu-chā-ri'-ee-bawl) n. annual charity fund-raising event held in the early 19th century in the Town Hall, usually in April.

chairk (chārk) n., arch. a harsh grating noise, v., arch. to creak, grate, make a harsh grating noise – 'But the childer o' the kingdom sall be casan out intill outer mirk: ther sall be greetin' an' cherkin' o' teeth' [HSR], '... an than a chairkin road-injin ...' [ECS] (also written 'cherk'; from Mediæval English; cf. chirk).

Chairlie (chār-lee) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Charles – 'Chairlie was richt, the Bible law Is licht to guide oor pilgrom feet ...' [FL], 'Hei said they ca'd um Chairlie Broon – Mind, it could hev been a lei ...' [DH].

Chairlie o the Crescent (chār-lee-ō-thu-kre-sin') n. nickname for Charles Scott, linen manufacturer.

Chairlie's Hill (chār-leez-hill) n. Charlie's Hill, a small hill in Southdean Parish, just to the north of the main A6088 after Southdean Lodge. It is a small knoll among the higher Southdean Law to the west, Steel Knowe to the east and Southdean Rig and Charlie's Knowe to the south. Note the confusion with the separate Charlie's Knowe (which name it might also sometimes have). It reaches a height of 251 m. Here, on the west side of Jordan Sike are remains of rig lines, shooting butts, stock enclosures and boundary banks. To the south-west of the summit is an old farmstead, with 2 buildings and a couple of enclosures. It is said that the name came from a shepherd there, and the area was once the site for a market, frequented by people from both sides of the Border. It is possible this was the 'chairleis' where Ingram Oliver is recorded in 1493.

Chairlie's Knowe (chār-leez-now) n. Charlie's Knowe, hill to the north-west of Newcastleton, being on the lower slopes of Roan Fell. To the south-west is a broad terrace where there are at least 26 small cairns (also known as 'Charlie's Know').

Chairlie's Knowe (chār-leez-now) n. Charlie's Knowe, hill in Southdean Parish, lying between the A6088 and the Black Burn, reaching a height of 258 m. Tamshiel Rig (and ancient remains) lie just over the Black Burn to the south.

Chairlie's Sike (chār-leez-sīk) n. stream that runs eastward through Newcastleton golf course and is then diverted around the village to join the Liddel Water. There are ruins of a saw-mill there, by the Langholm road, with a mill-lade system rising high in the hills to the west. On a terrace to the south, in an area of rough ground on the golf course, are the remains of a settlement, about 60 m by 50 m and containing foundations for perhaps 4 round houses.

chairm (chārm, chā-rum) n., v. charm – 'chairmed, A'm shair', 'Yon Chairman's chairmin, in't ei?', 'This stream has to huz a chairm o' its ain . . . ' [JEDM] (also cherm).

chairter (chār-tur) n. a charter – '. . . ploittit aganis the said Erle of Buccleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the said dispositioun and chairtour . . . ' [SB1624], v. to charter.

the Chairter (thu-chār'-ur, chawr-tur) n. usually referring to the Town Charter of 1537, the oldest surviving document in Hawick, in which Sir James Douglas granted parcels of land to named individuals as well as confirming the Common. This was sometimes previously referred to as 'the Magna Charta' of the Burgh. The first English translation was made by Town Clerk Walter Gledstains in 1704 (and published in Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825). The following family names (with modernised spelling) occur as 'particate' holders: Alison, Angus, Binks, Blair, Brown, Cessford, Chalmers, Chapman, Connell, Deans, Douglas, Fair, Fairneylaw, Fawlaw, Gladstone, Henderson, Hepburn, Howburn, Liddersdale, Martin, Morlaw, Morton, Paisley, Paterson, Prendergast, Ruecastle, Routledge, Scott, Short, Stewart, Storie, Turnbull, Waugh, White, Wilson, Wylie and Young. They are listed on the north and south sides 'of the public street' (which probably meant the High Street, extending along the Tower Knowe, Silver Street and the Howegate) and it may be that the ordering gives further information about the locations of the plots; certainly we know that John Morlaw held land just to the west of Alexander Paisley's land, and those entries are adjacent in the list. There is also a confirming charter, as required by law, issued by Queen Mary in 1545, when she was only 2 ½ years old, which is also preserved in the Town Hall, and is essentially identical, apart from the preamble and signatories. An earlier charter of 1511 grants the Barony of Hawick to James' father, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. This royal charter also records the fact that Hawick had the liberties and privileges of a 'burgh barony'; if there was a related charter from the Baron to the town then it was lost. However, this could have not been the original, since there are Burgesses of Hawick recorded in documents of 1433, 1447, 1453, 1454 and 1490. Because Douglas of Drumlanrig took possession of the Barony around 1412, this suggests that the earliest Burgh charter was granted sometime in the period 1412–33. The fact that the existence of an earlier charter was ignored for centuries (as well as the mention of burghal status in the 1511 baronial charter) is entirely due to there being no copy in the Burgh Records, nor any mention in most of the earliest town histories. The 1511 document describes the lands forming the barony of Hawick, makes clear the powers vested in the Magistrates, and states that William Douglas and his heirs are to be paid an arrow 'in blench-ferme' annually at the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The 1537 and 1545 charters were long held in a spacial box, called the 'Charter Chist'. It was stated in 1652 that 'the burgh's two charters, and extract thereof, under the hands of the Clerk Register, with informations for advocates in Edinburgh, of the privilege of the said charters, and freedom of Hawick, are delivered over by the widow of the deceased custodier to the newly appointed custodier thereof'; it is unclear who these custodians were, and unfortunately the additional 'informations' have been lost – 'A soulless cynic is he, that would try to wrest from us, Our birthright charter sealed with blood, and survived in – Teribus' [??], 'Guard the grey auld toon you cherish, See its charter rights allowed' [IWS].

Chairter Box (thu-chār'-ur-boks) n. another name for the Charter Chist.

the Chairter Chist (thu-chār'-ur-chist, -kist) n. official chest in the Town Hall, used to hold the Charter and other valuable items. This included the Flag at one time, as recorded in the Town Book in 1710, when it was entrusted to Robert Brown, with the keys held by 2 of the ex-Bailies. In 1715 it is recorded that ex-Bailie Robert Ruecastle should have custody of the 'charter little chest', with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the 2 keys. It is unclear how often the chest itself was renewed. The existing one was moved from the Town Hall into storage in the Library. It was inadvertently cleared out after local government Reorganisation in 1975, and in 1978 was spotted for sale in an antique shop by R.E. Scott. It was then reacquired for the Town and is now in the Museum (also 'Charter Box', etc.).

Chairters (chār'-, chawr'-urz) n. (Charters) Andrew 'de Charteris' (13th/14th C.) probably son of Sir Robert and nephew of Thomas (the Chancellor). He was forced to give homage to Edward I in 1296. He was father of William, who inherited the half Barony of Wilton from Thomas (who was probably his brother or other close relative). He was listed in 1297 along with Robert the Bruce and other Scottish nobles invited to accompany the English King on an expedition to Flanders. An inquest of 1303/4 lists William's mother as Agnes de Vesci, who was thus presumably his (Andrew's) wife. He is probably the Andrew who was deceased in 1314 when his lands in Wiltshire were granted to his son Robert. Andrew (1914–2011) born in Newcastleton, son of a railwayman, he was educated at Hawick High School, boarding with a local family through the week. In 1933 he enlisted in the Scots Guards and later joined the Dumfries County Police, but was recalled to the Army during WWII, serving in the Cameron Highlanders. As a constable he starred in the government film 'Country Policeman', with a distinctive red handlebar moustache. As a result he was referred to as the 'Best-known Bobby'. He served as bodyguard for visiting dignataries to Dumfriesshire. He was director of studies at the Scottish Police Colleges, Deputy Chief Constable of Ayr Burgh Police and Chief Superintendent with Ayrshire Constabulary. He retired in 1971 with the Queen's Police Medal. He later worked in security. His interests included racing pigeons, Ayr United F.C., for which he was Honorary President, and Burns, being President of Ayr Burns Club. Sir John of Amisfield (d.c.1639) son of Sir John and Agnes Maxwell. He held huge estates near Dumfries and was Warden of the West Marches in the reign of James V. In 1602 he and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig served as sureties for each other not to harm various people. In 1605 and appointed as one of the 5 Scottish Commissioners given responsibility to ruthlessly carry out the pacification of the Borders. He was one of the local Commissioners in 1623. His son Sir John was with the royalist forces at Philiphaugh in 1645, and was captured and beheaded in 1650. Sir Robert of Amisfield (d.1536) son of John and Elizabeth Somerville. In 1530 he accused Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick (and his own son-in-law) of treason. There being no witnesses, the crime was decided by single combat in a jousting tournament, before James V (in a loose sense this was a 'Hawick vs. Wilton' jousting contest!). In 1530 he also served as surety, along with Walter Scott of Branxholme, for John Johnstone of that Ilk. About 1540 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when he arranged to be released from ward. He married Marion Johnstone and was succeeded by his son John, 9th of Amisfield (who secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig). Robert George Beattie 'George' (1953–) born in Hawick and educated at the High School, he studied chemical engineering at Heriot-Watt University. He worked for Shell, Mars and Boots, then joined Safeway in 1995 and was C.E.O. of the Welcome Break business 2002–05. Robin (1930–2013) Hawick born and bred, and worker in the knitwear industry, he played centre for Hawick at age 17, and was capped 3 times for Scotland. He was educated at Drumlanrig and the High School and worked for the family firm, Scott & Charters, where he became managing director. He went on to be, variously, committee member, selector and coach for the P.S.A., the Y.M., Hawick, the South, Scotland and the British Lions, being President of the Scottish Rugby Union 1992–93. He was also a keen lawn bowler. He had 3 children with his wife Nan, Robert, Douglas and Jill. Rev. Dr. Samuel (1742–1825) son of Thomas, minister from Inverkeithing and Christian, daughter of James Wardlaw of Luscar. He was thus directly descended from the early Barons of Wilton. He was orphaned of both parents at age 4 and raised by his maternal grandmother, Jean (nee Morris), to whom he succeeded to the estate of Luscar about 1756. He was also supported by his uncle (and namesake) Samuel Charters, Solicitor of the Customs of Scotland. He was educated at Glasgow University (where he went quite young) and licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1764. He lived in Rotterdam for a while, then was ordained to Kincardine-in-Menteith in 1769. It is said that his appointment was violently opposed, but when he left the entire congregation were in tears. He was presented to Wilton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1771 and moved there early the following year. His move to Wilton Parish Church was apparently through the influence of Lord Krames. He remained as Wilton's minister for 52 years; it was said that he decided 'that he might be more happy, and virtuous, and useful by remaining in the shade'. In 1784 he turned down a move to the Church of St. Andrew's in Glasgow, declining the Chair of Moral Philosophy, where he would have been successor to Adam Smith. He received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1789. In 1791 he gave a speech in the General Assembly proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). In 1793 he headed the pro-peace side of a public meeting held in Hawick to discuss the possibility of war with France. In 1796 he spoke up on behalf of Wat Inglis, who was being detained in Kelso after his prank about revolution breaking out in Hawick had turned serious. His published sermons tend to focus on issues relating to everyday life, causing his colleague Dr. Young of Hawick to say (although not naming him explicitly) that his sermons bear 'no more relation to the gospel of Christ than the discourses of a heathen philosopher'. He worked hard to dispell superstitions among his parishioners, with one influential sermon preached against belief in witchcraft, fairies and ghosts. He advocated freedom of worship for Catholics and the dissenting churches. He also spoke against slavery and was so opposed to it that he refused to eat sugar himself and gave his servants twice the price of in order to encourage them to buy other commodities instead. He was also outspoken on the side of peace with France in the late 18th century (although he contributed a large sum (£80) to the subscription to support the war effort, and so shared in his contemporaries' aversion of the French Revolution). He became known for the good relationship he had with most of the dissenting ministers in Hawick and neighbouring towns. At about the same time as Thomas Sharp of Hawick Parish (although perhaps slightly earlier, and certainly before James Henderson and David Russell) he set up one of the first Sunday Schools in Scotland; this is mentioned in the British Chronicle or Union Gazette for 1786, and although no names are given, the 2 Sunday Schools were surely started by the ministers of Hawick and of Wilton. He was certainly on record discussing a Sunday school in Wilton in 1788. In the early years this would last almost all day (led be he himself), but was hugely influential in teaching local children to read. He also set up a circulating library for his parishioners, operating out of the Manse to start with, and later with space in the parish school, managed by the Schoolmaster. The books were loaned out freely and he left the library to his congregation; it was said that he instructed it to be sold after his death and the proceeds used to buy bibles for the poor of the Parish. He was described as being a 'wag from birth' who 'seldom carried his waggery into the pulpit'. In delivering sermons his voice was described as 'low, solemn, and monotonous'. He was known as an eccentric, with an even temper and very deliberate habits, being described as 'slow, grave, and solemn in his manner, though delightful and instructive as a companion'. He was of the 'Moderate party' in the church and his sermon style was said to be 'laconic, consisting of very short sentences'. His sermons were short and involved his personal interpretations of scripture, which some considered to be too far from orthodoxy. In appearance he was 'staid and upright' with 'slow and firm step' and wearing 'knee breeches and hose of black'. When pressed to perform on social occasions, he would sing 'Willie Wastle dwalt on Tweed'. There are several stories told about his exploits around Hawick, some involving people who would steal from the Glebe lands, this motivating him to erect a sign saying 'Thou shalt not steal'. One story is told of the 'Tata Sermon', when he preached on paying debts, after several parishioners had not paid him for potatoes dug on his land; this 'Craving Sermon' was preached several times and was even published. He once saw Jock Rae up a tree and asked him what he was doing there, to which Rae replied 'Naething, Sir', and he retorted 'Strange man, John, all that trouble for nothing'. When a stackingmaker asked him to sign a death certificate for his brother, there being a legacy at stake, he wrote 'He says his brother is dead – S. Charters'. It is said that his lack of 'the evangelical' may have led many Wilton Parishioners to seek the Secession and Relief Kirks in Hawick. His coach driver and servant for about 40 years was Andrew Leggatt, and Anti-Burgher, who never heard him preach. In 1788 he paid tax for having a female servant and for having a chaise-driver in 1797. He was listed on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls, having 2 horses by the end of this period. He was among the first to be listed on the 'Donations' page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He published several of his sermons over a long period of time, many collected in the 2 volume 'Sermons' (1786, 1794, 1809, 1816), as well as 'Sermon preached before the Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge' (1779), 'A Sermon on Intercession, and an Instruction concerning Oaths' (Hawick 1785, running to 3 editions), 'A Sermon on Alms' (1788, 1795), 'Two discourses on the revolution' (Hawick 1793), 'Sermon preached before the Society for the Sons of the Clergy' (1798), 'Sermons and Meditations suited to the Lord's Supper' (Hawick, 1807), 'An Historical Sermon on the Revolution, 1688' (Hawick, 1812), 'Sermon on Backsliding' (Hawick, 1812), 'Sermon on the Duty of Making a Testament; to which is added the Form of a Testament, with Directions for making it valid, according to the Law of Scotland' (Hawick, 1812) and 'A Sermon on Devout Retirement' (Hawick, 1825). His sermon on almsgiving was published in many compilations, e.g. Hunter's Miscellany, which was edited by his niece. 'An Instruction concerning Oaths' was drawn up following a complaint from the Sheriff to the Presbytery that many of the lower classes failed to understand the significance of an oath. In 1810 he edited Richard Baxter's 'Compassionate Counsel to Young Men', which was published in Hawick. He is said to have written the part on religious education in 'Loose Thoughts on Education' (1781) by Lord Kames, who had been his parishioner (and who is said to have helped get him presented to Wilton Kirk). He also wrote an 'Essay on Bashfulness' (Hawick, 1815), which was published anonymously, as well as contributing a sermon to Gillan's 'Scottish Pulpit', and a description of the Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account. Despite these published works, he gave instructions that his unpublished manuscripts should be destroyed immediately following his death, and this was complied with. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. He was a close friend of the historian Thomas Somerville (born in Hawick), who married his cousin Martha Charters. He was also a mentor of Dr. Thomas Chalmers, whose writings were very influential in his day. The poet William Knox dedicated his book 'The Harp of Zion' to him. He met with romantic disappointment in early life (finding that when he finally plucked up courage to declare himself, the object of his affections was already betrothed to another). Late in life, in 1786, he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Burnhead, who was heiress of Crawhill (and probably Burnhead). When she died in 1815, she left her husband an annuity of £300. It is said that this money was often used for local charitable causes. It is also said that he refused to enroll as a freeholder, although he could have claimed the right to vote through his wife's lands. His elder sister Jean died at Wilton Manse in 1806; she was married to James Hardie of the Customs and was mother of Rev. Thomas Samuel Hardie (whose published sermons he edited). His niece, Miss Hardie, acted as his housekeeper in his final years. Another niece, Mrs. Semple, wrote some biographical notes about his life. His portrait (painted by Agnes Douglas, donated in 1866), as well as his hat and flask (donated by Walter Wilson in 1862), are in the Museum – 'There is Lord Napier o' the Lodge, And Gawin in the Hall, And Mr. Charters o' Wilton Manse, Preaches lectures to us all' [DJG]. He was buried in an aisle below the gallery in Wilton Kirk that he had partly paid for. Sir Thomas 'de Charteris' (d.bef. 1295) probably either son or brother of Sir Robert. The family name at that time was also sometimes Latinised 'de Carnoto' and presumably derived from Chartres in France. He was an ecclesiastic clerk who was appointed Lord High Chancellor of Scotland by Alexander III in 1280. He appears to have been confused in some local histories with the Thomas, who was Baron of Wilton, and is fancifully connected with 'Thomas de Longueville' who was an ally of William Wallace. Although this Thomas was not directly associated with Wilton, details of these generations are vague; however, it seems that the although the connection between Longueville and Langlands may be spurious, a family connection between the Langlands and the Roxburghshire 'de Charteris' families is possible. His connection with Wallace is probably the source of the legend of the Wallace Thorn. He was ward for Andrew of Amisfield, who may have been a nephew. In 1291 there was an order (by Alexander Baliol) for the payment of his salary as former Chancellor of Scotland. Sir Thomas 'de Chartres' (d.1302) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, where he is described as being from Roxburghshire. His seal bears a 'fess' (i.e. horizontal band) and the words 'S'TOMAE DE CARNOTO MILITIS'. He was probably the first of the family who was Baron of Wilton. He conjointly held the half Barony with Lady Jane de Vesey, his wife, the grant being in the reign of Alexander III. It is possible that his wife had inherited the lands from the 'de Wilton' family. His succession as Baron was determined by a jury in 1303/4, about a year after his death. It is there stated that he died 'beyond the Mountains' in Scotland on Tuesday before the feast of St. Andrew a year earlier, and at that time he was an enemy of the King. The Wilton lands passed to William 'de Chartres', who must have been a nephew or similar relative. Thomas 'de Charteris' (d.1346) appointed Lord High Chancellor of Scotland by David II in 1342. He witnessed an Edinburgh charter in 1344 (along with Sir Maurice Murray, Baron of Hawick at the time), where he is described as 'de Carnoto'. He was killed at the Battle of Durham. Thomas (1830/1–84) originally from Berwick, he was a baker and confectioner at 66 (or 68) High Street. He married a daughter of merchant George T. Pringle. She had carried on her father's business until she got married in about 1878 and after her husband's death she moved to Liverpool. William 'de Chartres' (13th/14th C.) probably son of Andrew, with Agnes de Vesci being his mother. He was probably the William

'delle counte de Rokesburgh' who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with 5 men of the same surname, including Thomas, who was also from Roxburghshire. His seal shows a 6-rayed figure and the name 'S'WILL' D'CHARTRIS'. He appears to have been captured at York in 1300 and was imprisoned at Nottingham Castle. In 1303 King Edward ordered an inquisition to be made into the succession to his lands (there is a suggestion that he may have been deceased at this point, but this appears to be incorrect). The inquest was held at Roxburgh, and found that he had inherited the half barony of Wilton, which had been held by his ancestor Thomas and Lady Joan de Vesci (who must have been closely related to his mother, perhaps her sister). He also inherited 'Appeltrerig' in the regality of Sprouston from his mother, who died 2 years before the inquest. He was at that time stated to be 'a rebel who had come to the King's peace'. He had to pay homage to Edward I in 1304, where he is described as being from Roxburghshire. He appears to have joined Robert the Bruce in 1306, but nevertheless Bruce rewarded Henry Wardlaw with the half Barony after Bannockburn. In the grant to Wardlaw, it is described that the halfbarony formerly belonged to him and 'Walter of Percehay' in feu and heritage (the Latin form is 'de Carnoto'; early spellings are 'Charteris', 'de Charteris', 'de Chartres', etc.).

chalder (chawl-dur) n., arch. a unit of dry measure consisting of about 16 bolls, but varying depending on the type of goods – 'The present stipend, decreed in 1820, consists of 16 chalders, and L. 8, 6s. 8d. for communion elements' [RDB], 'The system of awarding in Scotch chalders, converting these into imperial weights and measuresm and then converting them into money, as drawn by the minister, is unworthy of an eightened age' [NE] (from Old French).

chalmerlain (chal-mur-lān) n., arch. a chamberlain, steward of a nobleman – 'Payand thairfoir zeirlie, the said Gilbert and his airis to me, my factouris or chalmerlains in my name . . . ' [SB1591].

Chalmers (chawm-urz) n. Rev. Daniel (d.1586) recorded being presented to the paronage and vicarage of Ashkirk in 1585 on the death of Thomas Cranston. However, he was only there for about a year before his own death (although there is some confusion, since he may have started in 1583). Hector (b.1802/3) from Cockpen in Midlothian, he was manager at Hawick Brewery on Slitrig Crescent. He is listed there in the 1851 census. In Slater's 1852 directory he is incorrectly listed as 'Walter, brewer and maltster, Crescent'. His wife was Louisa Brown and their children were: James (b.1836/7); Louisa (b.1839/40); Walter (b.1843/4); Catherine Helen (b.1846); and Hector (b.1848). Hector (1848–1943) painter who attended school in Hawick, being the son of the owner of the brewery that was once at the 'Brewery Haugh'. The family left Hawick at some point. James B. (19th C.) resident of Edinburgh who probably had a Hawick connection. Sometime before 1865 he donated to the Museum 48 foreign and British coins and a medal. He also donated a Moorish coin, a foreign bird and an 'Indian water-jar, from Goolah' in 1867 and 'bolt from the 'Royal George', several fossil shells, &c., two Moorish coins, copy of the 'Statistical Account of Roxburghshire', as well as 'An Enquiry into the Causes of the Miscarriage of the Scots Colony at Darien, 1700', 'some numbers of a work on Conchology' and Roman and other coins in 1868. John (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Ovens. Their son John was baptised in 1673, with the witnesses being notary Andrew Rutherford and James Thorbrand (who was a Bailie). Rev. John (1826–94) born in Coltraine, Perthshire, son of farmer James and Jane Gray. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1852 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1857. He spent six years as assistant classical master at Madras College, St Andrews. In 1863 he became minister at Newtyle and in 1871 was translated to Ashkirk. He married firstly Emily Rose Mason (daughter of a vicar from Ipswich), who died in 1864, and secondly Margaret Steels from Forfar, who died in 1918. His children were Walter James Mason, Rose Margaret (who married the minister of Forteviot), Henry William (who became a marine engineer), Louisa Jane (who married a banker in Buenos Aires), Edward Ernest (who ranched in Argentina and drowned in Loch Shiel), Richard Mason (architectural draughtsman, who died in New Jersey), John Steele (who moved to South Africa), Mary Elizabeth, Susan Agnes and Edith. Robert (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He could also have been 'Chalmer' or 'Chamber'. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1780–1847) perhaps the most distinguished theological writer of his time, born in Fife, he became a minister in Glasgow and eventually helped found the Free Church. At university he was a close friend of William Berry Shaw, who became minister at Roberton. His first appointment was as assistant to Thomas Elliot at Cavers 1801–02. During part of that time he stayed in the Roberton Manse with his old friend Rev. Shaw, and then he lodged in Hawick, in an old house near the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot belonging to the Kedie family (of bakers). Locally, Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton was one of his mentors. This period is described in his memoirs. Once, when preaching in Hawick, he quoted from the 'Vicar of Wakefeild' shocking the congregation; on another occasion he gave a private lecture on chemistry to 'which all the elite of the town and neighbourhood that the room could accommodate were invited'. After he left Hawick he continued to correspond with 2 of the daughters of Thomas Kedie, who had been very young when he stayed with them for 3 months. He left to become minister at Kilmany and later became Professor of Divinity in Edinburgh. He was the senior minister who introduced Rev. John Aikman Wallace to the Parish of Hawick in 1833. He visited Cavers and Hawick again shortly before he died. He was known for his work supporting the destitute, but Robert Wilson argued vehemently against his system of supporting the poor only through voluntary contributions.

Chalmers' Haugh (chawm-urz-hawf) n. another name for the Brewery haugh after the owner of the brewery there in the mid-19th century – 'Whiles blythe in Chalmers' Haugh we'd play, Whiles speel up the Back Braes' [WLu].

chamberlain (chām-bur-lin) n. a factor or steward for a landowner. In the Borders the Scotts of Buccleuch specifically used the title Chamberlain to refer to their main factors, there being several different appointees to cover the different regions, Teviotdalehead, Eskdale, Ettrick Forest, etc. Rental records and accounts for the various Chamberlains of the Scotts of Buccleuch exist in the National Archives from 1609.

Chamberlain (chām-bur-lin) n. Sir Joseph Austen (1863–1937) son of Joseph and half-brother of Prime Minister Neville. He followed the Cornet on the Friday of the 1888 Common Riding and attended the Dinner, when he was a Liberal Unionist candidate for the Border Burghs. He also passed the Cornet on the canter round the racecourse! This was hardly popular and perhaps scuppered his chances of election victory. Despite initially being selected as a local candidate, he switched to East Worcestershire and was M.P. there from 1892 until his death and held many important positions in government, including Chancellor of the Exchequer, leader of the Conservative Party and Foreign Secretary. For his part in the Treaty of Locarno he was given a knighthood and shared the Nobel Peace Prize.

Chamberlain Newton (chām-bur-lin-new'-in) n. former name for an area north of Hawick that became 'Newton' or the Nitton. It was granted to Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain to William the Lion sometime before 1182. The addition of the word 'Chamberlain' came later, but probably derives from this period. Walter Berkeley left no male heirs, and it is unclear if either of his daughters inherited the lands after his death in about 1192, or they went to someone else. In 1259 lands within the feu of 'Chabirlaynneutone' are mentioned in a Douglas charter (when gifted by Hugh Abernethy when his sister married a Douglas). The Ragman Rolls of 1296 lists 'Robert Grundi de Neuton', which probably refers to the same lands (and who gave his name to Groundistone). The lands were later erected into a Barony and were of considerable extent, containing much of the northern part of Wilton Parish, as well as Hassendean Parish, and even Borthwickshiels was part of it in the late 14th century. In 1335/6 there is an English record of tenements of lands there held by David of Lindsay. In 1340 the lands were forfeited by Margaret Abernethy, Countess of Angus and granted by Edward III to Sir John of Stirling. In about 1380 there was confirmation of a grant of the lands by James of Lindsay to William of Lindsay. At about the same time the lands of 'le Estpart' of Groundistone were described as part of this barony. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. It was a 40-pound land in 1501 when relief was granted to Alexander, Lord Home. Adam Turnbull was tenant there in 1502. In at least the period of the 1460s to 1480s the Baron was Lord Lindsay of the Byres. By 1506 the Baron was Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. In 1510/1 the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (which correspond to Burnhead and Burnfoot) were described as being in this barony. In 1511 the Barony was confirmed to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The lands of Nether Harden are described as belonging to it in 1540, while Harden appears to be part of Wilton in 1525 (with Stouslie and Groundistone in this Barony). In 1528/9 the lands are described as pertaining to Simon Turnbull, servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. It is probably the place transcribed as 'Chauerbenton' in an English letter of 1543, describing how it and Appletreehall were raided by men from Tynedale. In the latter half of the 16th century, there was a dispute over rights to the tenancy of the 2 halves of the farm. A 6 merk land there was owned in 1567 by George Turnbull of 'Wowlie', who had a case to force off David Elliot (probably possessor of the other half). In 1573 one half was possessed by Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, and the other half was sold by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh, to Gavin Elliot of Bailielee. Margaret Turnbull sent her sons Walter and John Scott to attack James Storie, the servant of Gavin Elliot, injuring him severely; John Scott was decelared a fugitive for non-appearance. William Scott of Chamberlain Newton is recorded in 1581 and Walter Scott of 'Chalmerlane Newtoun' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. The Barony was confirmed to Francis, Earl of Bothwell in 1585 and was transferred to the Earl of Buccleuch after Bothwell forfeited his lands, being listed among the possessions of Buccleuch in 1632 and 1634. The Barony is still listed among the Scott possessions in 1653 service of heirs of Mary Scott of Buccleuch and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. Walter Scott's lands there were valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643. Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton paid tax on his lands valued at £1182 in Hassendean Parish in 1678; as well as Newton, this included Pinnicle, Midshiels, Appletreehall and Crawhill. The farm was listed as 'Newton, or Chamberlain Newton' in 1788 and 1811, when owned by William Irvine and valued at £238 (also spelled 'Chamberlane Neutoune' etc.; the name first occurs as 'Chambirlayn neutone' in 1259, then is 'Chambrelein-Neuton' in 1335/6, 'Chambirlayne-newton' in c.1375, 'Chamberlein-Neuton' and 'Chambeyrlayn-newtoun' in c.1380, 'Chambirlayn-newtona' in 1383, 'Chawmerlayn-newtoun' in c.1425, 'Chawmerlayne-newtoun' in 1433/4, 'Chaumerlan-newtovne' in 1444, 'Chawmerlayne-newtone' in 1445, 'Chaumerlan-neutoune' in 1455, 'Chaumerlanneutone' in 1456, 'Chaumerlane Newtoune' in 1471, 'Chawmerlanewtoun' in 1479, 'Chawmerlane Newtoune' and 'Chamerlane Newtone' in 1484 and 1494, 'Chawmerlane Newtoun' in 1501, 'Chalmerlane-Newtoune' in 1502, 'Chalmerlane-Newtoun' in 1511, 'Chalmerlen-newtoun' in 1528/9, 'Chalmerlane Newtoune' in 1532, 'Chalmerlane-Newtoun' in 1535, 'Chalmerlen Neutone' in 1540, 'Chalmerlennewton' in 1550/1, 'Chalmerlane-newton' in 1566, 'Chalmerlane Newtoun' in 1573, 'Chalmirlane-newtoun' in 1575, 'Chalmerlane Newtoun' in 1581, 'Chalmerlan-Neutoun' in 1585, 'Chalmerlanenewtoun' in 1585 and 1664, 'Chalmerlane-Neuton' in 1592, 'Chalmerlane Newtoun' in 1594, 'Schamlennewtoun' in 1606', 'Chalmerlane-Newtoun' in 1607, 'Chamberland-Neutoun' in 1610, 'Chalmerlane-Newtoun' in 1634 and 1637, 'Chamerlayne Newton' in 1643, 'Chalmerlane Newtoune' and 'Chalmerlaine Newtoune' in 1663, 'Chalmerlan-Newtoun' in 1661, 'Chamerlayne of Newtoun' in 1678 and 'Chamberlandneutoun' and 'Chamberland-Newtoun' in 1693, while the modern form 'Newton' is only established by the 17th century; it is 'Chalmerlangnoutoun' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript and 'Chalmerlangneuton' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the name means simply 'new farm belonging to the Chamberlain', probably referring to Walter of Berkeley, who was Chamberlain about 1170–93, but other connections cannot be ruled out, e.g. Alexander Baliol, Lord of Cavers, who was Chamberlain of Scotland 1287–96).

the Chamberlain's Hoose (thu-chām-burlinz-hoos) n. former house near the top of the Fore Raw, occupied by Walter Laing, Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, in the early 18th century. It was used as a mission in the early 19th century and removed in 1871 to improve the premises of the West Port Church. The house exists in an old sketch by Mr. Fowler of Longview.

Chambers (chām-burz) n. A. Gordon (20th C.) High School Rector 1968–84. Mr. ?? (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was presumably a minister of some sort, but his name seems otherwise unrecorded. Frederick Edward Hathway (d.1905) woollen merchant in Hawick at the end of the 19th century, in partership with Alexander Innes. He was buried at Pucklechurch in Gloucestershire. Robert Maxwell (1831–1878) local engineer whose premises were built at the end of Carnarvon Street, which was named Maxwell Street after him from 1877 for a few years. William (18th C.) groom at Minto in 1793, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as a footman.

champies (chawm-peez) n., arch. mashed potatoes with milk and butter – 'The boy was asked what he got to his breakfast? 'Potatoes'. What do you get to your dinner? 'Potatoes'. What do you get to your supper? 'Champies-billy' [RJT].

champit (chawm-pee', -pi') adj. trampled, mashed, particularly said of potatoes – 'In this farm house for seven nights a week, the supper consisted of 'champit 'tatoes' and milk, the farmer partiarchally surrounding the pot with his knees' [HAST1861].

chance (chans) n., arch. fate, fortune, lot – 'And my chance was with my Command to pass, To the English-side call'd Burgh under Bowness' [CWS].

chandler (chānd-lur) n., arch. a candlestick – [Margaret Drummond was convicted of stealing] and brass chandler' [BR1697].

change (chānj) n., arch. a short form of change hoose, i.e. a public house (even if not actually a place where horses were changed) – '... in prophaning the Sabbath-day yesterday by tarreing the tyme of Divine service in the house of Geo. Renwicke, who keips ane change' [BR1702], '... ane gross immoralitie and misdemwanour, in prophaneing the Sabbath-day ... by tarreing the tyme of Divine service in the houss of Geo. Renwicke, who keips ane change' [PR1712].

the Change Field (thu-chānj-feeld) n. a field at the Nipknowes, opposite the 2nd hole at the Vertish, sloping up to Crumhaughhill Road. The origin of the name is uncertain. The field is one of two on the right-hand side of the Nipknowes that belong to the Common and are marked with a plaque.

change hoose (chānj-hoos) n., arch. a small tavern, ale house – 'The sd. day Bailie Scott, Walter Wilson, and the two John Swans, were appointed to perlustrate ye toun the ensueing month of Septr. to see if any were useing change houses after 8 o'clock at night' [PR1713], 'In Innerleithen, hei bade in a thatched inn or changehoose as inns were cad then as they were centres o coachin activity and where horses wad be changed ti maintain the speed o the coach' [IWL] (the name deriving from being an 'exchange house', i.e. a place of trade, as well as being where horses would be changed).

Changehoose (chānj-hoos) n. Changehouse, a ruined cottage to the right after crossing Teindside Bridge on the A7 south of Hawick. It was once used for changing the post-horses on the stage coach, and was presumably also a public house. In the 1851 and 1861 censuses it is listed as 'Coach Station', with John Cavers being the ostler there. Archibald Anderson was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The area is also known as 'Mossy Knowe' and has the remains of an enclosure to the west and a 10 m diameter burial mound to the south. This mound was excavated (described by J. Brydon in 1872) and found to be largely natural, but with some worked flints and calcined bone discovered. There were places of the same name beside Hassendean Kirk and near Wolfelee House.

the Change-hoose (thu-chānj-hoos) n. the Changehouse, a former inn in the Rule valley, near 'Cleuch Heid' or Blacklee, probably opposite the entrance gate to Wolfelee House. This was on the main route from Hawick towards the Carter Bar and Newcastle. The inn saw much activity in the years before the new road was built. In the early 18th century there was an annual horse race run nearby, and the inn is where people would gather for betting.

Changesflat (chān-jeez-flaw') n. place in Liliesleaf Parish, recorded as 'Ch'ngisflat' in the early 13th century when it was part of lands granted by Walter of Riddell to the monks of Melrose Abbey.

Channelkirk (chaw-nul-kirk) n. hamlet and parish north of Lauder (containing Oxton), being the former north-west corner of Berwickshire. The A68 goes through here, and the main route from Hawick north to Edinburgh passed this way for centuries, including the 'Girthgate' or road that the monks of Melrose used to travel north.

Channelstane Knowe (chaw-nul-stān-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, essentially being a rise in the slopes of Larriston Fells, roughly between Larriston and Dinlabyre farms.

chanter (chawn-tur) n. the part of a bagpipe on which the melody is played by fingering – 'Now Teri Odin blaws the chanter As rank and file the town we enter' [AB], '... An' wale yer sweetest, best-gaun reed, Yer loodest chanter – let it screed' [JoHa], 'The wail o' the chanter's a bairn's penny blether, The girn o' the drones is a lood bellin' coo ...' [WL].

chap (chawp) v. to knock, strike, rap – 'whae's that chappin at the door?', to strike (said of a clock) – '... and now for mending of the knocke and putting her to chap again' [BR1701], 'A dinna ken what ails this auld wag-at-the-waa; it'll no chaap the day ava' [ECS], '... then when St. Mary's chaps again the next mornin at 6 o'clock ...' [CT], '... A chappin' clock that went ower fast' [IJ], to shake or knock a pile of papers to make them tidy, arch. to chop, cut small – 'The guid auld days: The twalmonth Chapped in twae Atween the CommonRiding And the New 'Eer' [DH], to bruise by nipping – 'A chappit ma finger' [GW], to strike a bargain with someone, n. a knock, blow, rap, strike of a clock – '... Chap Landles (chawp-lan-dulz) n. familiar name of J.C.G. Landles.

Chapman (chawp-mun) n. David 'Chappie' founder member of the band Scocha. Born and educated in Hawick, he has long been a sales manager in the knitwear industry. Janice (1858–) educated at Wilton and Hawick High Schools, she trained as a teacher in Falkirk and had her first job in Galashiels. She later became head of Burnfoot Primary School. She was Chair of the Vision 2014 project, being heavily involved in organising all of the 'Big' events. In 2011 she received the Provost Council's Achievement Award. She is married to David. John (d.bef. 1453) mentioned in a sasine of 1453. His property on the south side of Hawick was east of the 'tenement' which passed from John Turnbull to Robert 'Wayte'. John (15th/16th C.) notary in Selkirk, son of Richard. His notebook covering the period 1511–47 is the earliest of the 'Selkirk Protocol Books', recording many transactions with relevance to local people, including those in the Hawick area; this was part of the load of paper saved from burning in 1940 by the actions of Bruce and Walter Mason. In 1526 he inherited his father's lands in Selkirk and gave one part to Robert (presumably a relative) and another part to his brother William. Probably the same John was chaplain in Fairnilee in 1530, when sasine for lands in Selkirk were given to his brother James. In 1531/2 the yards in Selkirk belonging to both 'master John' and 'sir John' were recorded, making it clear that there were 2 contemporary priests of the same name. In 1541 his brother James was recorded. Simon (d.bef. 1502) recorded as 'Symonis Chepman' in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1502 when William Scott 'in Hawick' received a pardon for his murder. However, in the records of the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh Scott was put to the horn and his goods confiscated, following an announcement at the market cross in Jedburgh; his name there is 'symonis chepnam'. It is unclear who he was, or whether he was local to Hawick. However, he was probably closely related to the Simon recorded as a landowner in Hawick's 1537 Charter, holding 1 particate on the south side. Thomas (b.1806/7) from England, he was recorded as 'Carter (Railway)' at Gillbraehead in Castleton Parish in 1861. His wife was Mary. Thomas (b.1846) born in Lanarkshire, he was raised in the Yetholm area and became a constable in the Hawick police force. He published many poems under the name 'Joseph', was a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition and was presented with a purse of gold by the farmers of Upper Teviotdale. His book 'Contentment and Other Verses' was published in 1883. It contains a large number of poems, many of which are partially in dialect, including verses about Hawick personalities and Borders scenery. He married Margaret Watson and their children included: Margaret (b.1870); William (b.1872); and Thomas Alexander (b.1881), who was born in Hawick. He may have secondly married Annie Jeffrey and had son John baptised in Hawick in 1891 (formerly also 'Chepman').

chappin (chaw-pin) adj. unable to play at one's turn in a game such as dominoes or cards, indicated by knocking on the table, hence out of luck in general – 'if ee hink ee're gettin ony mair ee're chappin', '... For if thae raid tae claim oor booze, wad find that thae waur chappin' ...' [MB].

chappin (chaw-pin) n., arch. a liquid measure equal to half a Scots pint – 'The puder plate qch contained ye water for baptizeing of Children was bartered for a Chappin stoup' [PR1711] (also choppin).

chappit (chaw-pee', -pi') pp., arch. chapped, struck – '...that he was verra fer throuw – he never leuch but when the clock chappit' [DMW1867], '...and before St Mary's clock had 'chappit' seven the shops were opened ...' [JJV].

the Charabanc Disaster (thu-sha-ru-bawng-dee-zas-tur) n. motor accident at the Nipknowes in 2019. A motorised charabanc (i.e. primitive bus) originating in Dumfries, was being used to ferry passengers to and from the Moor on Common-Riding Friday of 1919. On its way down after the Races, filled with passengers, and with crowds of other people on their way home, its brakes failed, and in attempting to avoid a horse-drawn vehicle near the foot of Haggishaa Brae it struck a wall and overturned. This resulted in the deaths of 3 passengers and 2 young boys who were bystanders, as well as injuries to 21 others. This was a big blow to the Town in the first Common Riding after the horrors of WWI. The disaster was commemorated 100 years later in 2019, with a memorial plaque being unveiled near the site.

Charles (chaw-rulz) n. name of 3 Kings of the United Kingdom. Charles I (1600–49) King from 1625. Son of James VI (I of England). He battled with Parliament for several years, and his marriage to a Catholic French Princess also made him unpopular. In 1637 he tried to force a new prayer book (and Episcopacy) on Scotland, leading to the signing of the National Covenant and rebellion. This boiled over to the Civil War in England, and Charles' forces were defeated by Cromwell's New Model Army at Naseby in 1645. He surrendered to the Scottish army at Newark a year later. His refusal to sign the Covenant sealed his fate, however, and he was handed over to the English and executed. Charles II (1630–85) King from 1660. Son of Charles I, he escaped to France on the execution of his father in 1649, but returned to Scotland in 1650, where he was proclaimed King, after agreeing to sign the Solemn League and Covenant. On his way south he knighted Gilbert Eliott of Stobs on Largo sands. However, his Scottish army was defeated by Cromwell's forces at Worcester in 1651 and he fled again to France. After the dissolution of the Commonwealth he returned to claim the throne in 1660, usually referred to as 'the Restoration'. However, he effectively became the first monarch to be less powerful than Parliament. His reign also effectively saw the political parties of Tory and Whig form themselves from the Cavalier and Roundhead supporters. He married Catherine of Braganza, but only had illegitimate children by several mistresses. These included James, Duke of Monmouth, later the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. Charles died of a stroke, converted to Catholicism on his death-bed and was succeeded by his brother James VII. Charles III full name Charles Philip Arthur George Windsor, he spent most of his life as Prince-in-waiting, but became King in 2022. His accession was proclaimed from the balcony of the Town Hall, with the Provost, Lord Lieutenant, Deputy Lord Lieutenant and Halberdiers present. He visted Hawick in 2013 and in 2019, when he opened Scott & Charters factory at Burnfoot.

Charles Street (chaw-rulz-stree') n. part of Burnfoot, connecting McLagan Drive with Hillend Drive, built in 1950, named after Prince Charles, who was born in 1948. Until 1985 it was the only 'Street' in the Council housing schemes.

Charlton (chawrl-tin) n. Matthew (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Murray and their children included: John (b.1709); Helen (b.1713); and Thomas (b.1718). The witnesses in 1718 were Walter Scott and Walter Nixon, both in Hawick Shiel. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of lands in Hobkirk valued at £16 13s 4d. He is listed as 'Thomasyne Charletoune in Rouletoun', but since 'Charlton' is not known as a local surname, it is possible that this is a transcription error.

the Chartist Association (thu-chawr'-ist-aw-sō-see-ā-shin, -chār-) n. radical political movement founded in Hawick in Novemeber 1838, following a public meeting by James Dodds (Free Church minister of Dunbar) in the Under Haugh a month earlier. The national working-men's movement was inspired by William Lovett's 'People's Charter'. In Hawick the first President was Charles Hunter and the first Secretary John Amos the Chartist Schuil (thu-chawr'-ist-skil, -chār-) n. private school in Hawick that lasted a short time around 1842, taught by M. Davies.

the Chartist Store (thu-chawr'-ist-stōr, -chār-) n. the Hawick Chartist Provision Store, the original name for what became the Hawick Co-operative Store, with its first shop at 1 Silver Street from 1839 (of which there is a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw). It grew out of the Chartist Association, with all subscribers members of that organisation. At first it was only open on Tuesday and Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons. It moved to the Sandbed in 1842 and the shop at No. 7 there remained a Store for more than a century. In the flood of 1846 a large quantity of meal, flour, sugar, soda, etc. was lost.

the Chase (thu-chās) n. a ride at full gallop through the Nip Knowes, possibly representing the victorious callants of 1514 or the men of Hawick chasing off intruders (or both). The first of the Cornet's Chases takes place on the Thursday evening of the week before the Common Riding (also called the Ordering of the Curds and Cream), followed by one each morning of Common-Riding week. At the Thursday Night Chase the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the unmarried men, led by the Cornet. The first 3 morning chases are fairly quiet affairs, usually attended by only a few supporters, with no galloping and with the Hut being a relatively quiet affair. On the Wednesday the Cornet gets the practice flag at St. Leonards and takes it to the Mair and round the race course. The Thursday morning Chase is the second important one, when the Cornet first rides with the (unbussed) flag. However, the Friday Chase is the main one, with the Acting Father leading the married men first, followed by the Cornet with the unmarried men. When the married riders pass the Cornet to prepare for the Chase, this is the only time that anyone is allowed to pass the Flag. After the Friday Chase the Acting Father gets to carry the Flag to St. Leonard's. Before the Town was so developed the Chase was held from the foot of the Loan to Haggishaa Brae, with crowds lining the roadside. A supporter was unhorsed by a cow on the Loan in the Thursday night Chase of 1859. A spectator was killed at the Wednesday morning Chase of 1868 and another at the Thursday Night Chase of 1876. The Chase was moved to its present location after that. It was said that the turn-out was so poor in 1874 that many people predicted that the event would die a natural death. There also used to be another Chase from the Cross Wynd to the Wellogate, after the return from the Moor on the Friday, on the way to the Song Singing, which was discontinued from 1877. The Chase was first filmed around 1902 and there are good film clips from 1929 and the 1930s. The riders divide at Rosebank Road, with the married men going first, led by the Acting Father, then the unmarried men, led by the Cornet, followed by the Right- and Left-Hand Men. The crowd can tell when the Chase has started by the marshal lowering a white flag at the first rise near the golf clubhouse – 'I almost feel my mother's hand Wha led me oft tae see That glorious chase on mettled steeds By lads wha aye were free' [WLu], '... Then at the Nipkowes ta'en oor place Ti sei the stirrin Cornet's Chase' [IWL], 'morning is breaking, folk already waking Climbing the Nipknowes at the fence to take their place Horses are nearing, loud grows the cheering Friday morning chase' [IWL].

chaser (chā-sur) n., arch. a male sheep that chases ewes, particularly said of a sheep with only one testicle (with the amorous behaviour said to be caused by this condition).

Chaston (chas-tin) n. A.G. Director appointed to Pringle's in 1934.

Chatto (chaw-tō) n. hamlet south of Hownam in eastern Roxburghshire. John of Chatto was witness to a charter in 1357/8. It was long a Lairdship of the Rutherford family and was acquired by James Ker in 1595 (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name 'Ceatta' plus 'hoh' for 'height'; it first occurs as 'Chattehou' around 1200 and is 'Chattow' in 1428/8).

Chatto (chaw-tō) n. Alexander of Mainhouse (18th/19th C.) lived near Kelso. In 1783 he is recorded as owner of 'four farms' in Lilliesleaf Parish, including some land that had been formerly held by the feuars, as well as Newhouse. These lands were sold by him and his son John to Mark Sprot of Riddell. In 1788 he was explicitly listed as owner of Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £167), 'Twenty soums on Liliesleaf' (valued at £60), 'Lands in Liliesleaf disjoined from the feuars before 1678' (valued at £180 15s), teinds of these lands (valued at £71 13s 4d) and some other lands in Lilliesleaf (valued at about £70). His eldest daughter, Elizabeth, married Thomas Potts. His 2nd daughter, Agnes, married William Oliver of Dinlabyre. His youngest daughter, Isabella Mary, married Charles, lord Sinclair. David (16th C.) listed among the occupiers of the

chaulks (chawks) n., arch. a sluice, particularly one controlling a mill lade – '...the mid chaulks which were built across the dam ...' [JTu] (a peculiarly Roxburghshire word, perhaps from 'caulk' or 'chack'; also written 'chacks', cf. checks).

chaumer (chaw-mur) n., poet. a chamber – '...the King hes brung me intil his chammers' [HSR], 'Wha layes the kipples o' his chammers in the waters ...' [HSR], 'Ee'r daylight peeps within my chaumer is heard thy vile unearthly clamour' [HAST1913] (also written 'chammer').

Chay Blyth Place (chā-blīth-plis) n. council development being part of the Meadows, off Burnfoot Road, built in 1973 and named after yaughtsman Sir Chay Blyth.

Cheam (cheem) n. John (d.1268) from Surrey in England, he was Archdeacon of Bath and Papal Chaplain. He was appointed as Bishop of Glasgow in 1259, in opposition to the originally elected Nicholas de Moffat. His appointment was objected to by King Alexander III, but the next Pope (curiously, Alexander IV) refused to budge and he remained. He was thus the ecclesiastical head of the church in the Hawick area for almost a decade, but it is unclear if he ever visited the region. He witnessed the Treaty of Perth in 1266. After continued objections by the Canons of Glasgow he resigned in 1267 and died in France (often written 'de Cheam').

Cheap (cheep) n. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Christian Laidlaw and their children included: Margaret (b.1774); David (b.1777); and Ann (b.1784). The witnesses in 1784 were shoemaker Thomas Brown and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller.

Cheap John (cheep-jōn) n. nickname for a character who frequented the Common-Riding fair in the mid-19th century. A description of the stalls at the Moor in 1855 states 'Cheap John of gingerbread notoreity was there, giving some of his gingerbread and all his obscenity for nothing'.

Chesser (che-sur) n. James (b.1823/4) from Cramond, he was listed in 1861 as a public bath and washhouse keeper in Hawick. He was living at 17 High Street, with his wife Elizabeth and daughters Mary and Margaret, as well as brothers-in-law David and James Paterson. He was probably also the partner in the slaters, plumbers and glaziers Chesser & Henderson, listed in Slater's 1852 directory.

chesset (che-se') n. a cheese press, a mould for cheese.

Chester Cleuch (ches-tur-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, between the old railway and the Liddel, just north-west of Dinlabyre.

Chesterhall (ches-tur-hawl) n. former farm near Ancrum, once a seat of a branch of the Turnbulls. There is another farm of the same name just north of Bowden.

Chesterhill (ches-tur-hil) n. name adopted for the combined farms of Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester when they were purchased from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by William Brodie in 1793. However, since the purchase was never formally completed, the lands went back to Ker, and the name was only briefly used. It is recorded as 'Chesterhall' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 'Mr. Broady' owning 9 horses there, as well as 'over Chesterhall', with Thomas Fleck owning 1 horse. Thomas Miller was recorded as servant there in 1797. It was also 'Chesterhall' in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799, with Robert Riddell and James Minto servants there.

Chesterhoose (ches-tur-hoos) n. former name for a farmstead near Chesters in Southdean Parish. In 1684 Adam Storie was tenant there when he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles.

Chester Knowe (ches-tur-now) n. small hill just to the north-east of Southfield, which was once near the edge of the old Common boundary and reaches a height of 826 feet. It contains the remains of three enclosures, a fort and another earthwork, partly obliterated by small quarries. The fort measured about 300 ft by 170 ft and had 2 sets of ramparts. The (presumably) later earthwork at the north-east of the ridge is about 220 ft by 125 ft. An enclosure lies within the boundaries of the fort, another to the south, a fifth structure overlies the south-west end of the fort, and there are fragments of other banks on the site also. This suggests occupation over an extended period. There is another probable fort less than a kilometre to the north-west, near Newbigging (the name, like other occurences of 'Chester' suggests a fort).

Chester Knowes (ches-tur-nowz) n. farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, north of Friarshaw. R. Elliot was recorded there in 1868. There are earthworks to the north and west of the farm, partly obliterated by ploughing, but once consisting of an oval region with double ramparts. There is also clear signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation there (also written 'Chesterknowes').

Chesters (ches-turz) n. village at a crossroads of the A6088 on the way to the Carter Bar, about 10 miles from Hawick, and on the Jed Water. The village developed around this corner in the road, where the A6088 meets the Jedburgh road. Before the early 19th century, when the new road to the Carter Bar was built, the main settlement in the Parish was at Southdean. The Southdean parish church, built in 1876 is here (off the road towards Jedburgh), containing the super-altar stone from the original 'Souden Kirk' removed in the 1910 excavation of the first church (which is in the old hamlet of Southdean). The second parish church was also built in this hamlet in 1690, and its roofless walls stand in the churchyard, which is further along Chesters Brae. There is also a stone war memorial at the crossroads. The farm of that name goes back at least to the 16th century; George Oliver was tenant in the 1570s and William Oliver in 1669. James Stewart, John Oliver, Thomas Oliver (smith), Agnes Oliver, Thomas Oliver, Agnes Law and (another) John Oliver were listed there in 1694, plus Andrew Ainslie and John Rule listed among the poor of the Parish. The horse-owners listed there in 1797 were Robert Reid, James Rae, John Douglas, Thomas Oliver, Gilbert Oliver, John White and John Whillans. George Oliver was tenant in 1799 and John Oliver was a wright there. Residents in 1801 included 'husbandmen' William Whillans and George Oliver and wright James Dunn. It is said that there was once a tower in the village. Note that there are several other places of the same name, e.g. one in Ancrum Parish and another in Northumberland, on the River Tyne, site of the best preserved Roman cavalary fort in Britain (most instances of the name Chester are related to the Old English 'ceaster', meaning 'fort'; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Chesterr' and on Visscher's 1689 map of Scotland as 'Chester').

Chesters (ches-turz) n. village on the north bank of the Teviot south-west of Ancrum. The estate was long owned by the Bennet family. It was valued at almost £1500 in 1678. There was a nursery-garden for trees there around 1738–48, one of the earliest in Scotland. 'Lady Chesters' paid tax for 27 windows there in 1748 and 19 in 1753. The current Chesters House was built 1787–90 for Thomas Elliot Ogilvie, with designs by William Elliot. The estate was landscaped and replanted at about the same time. In 1788 the estate was valued at £965. The Bennets of Chesters developed a nursery here in the 18th century, rivalling that of the Dicksons of Hassendean. There are some nearby remains of ancient forts nearby – 'Dear to us too as you linger by Chesters, Hugging the haggs where the still grayling lie; Dear where you dance through the gray Denholm arches, Lapping the piers in your hurrying by' [WL] (also formerly written 'Chesteris'; the name probably derives from the Old English 'ceaster', meaning 'the forts' and appears at least as early as 1595/6; it is 'Chesters' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript, as well as on Gordon's c.1650 map and is 'Chestars' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Chesters (ches-turz) n. former name for lands possibly associated with the forts on Whitcastle Hill and Todshaw Hill. It is mentioned as the Chesters (thu-ches-turz) n. former name for lands, to the west or north of Templehall, west of Wauchope, as described in a bounding charter of 1567. Presumably he name is unrelated to the more familiar Chesters to the east of there.

'chestris' as forming part of the boundary of the lands in the Barony of Hawick that Richard Lovel granted in about the 1190s to the canons of St. Andrews, lying between Whithope and Whames.

Chesters Brae (ches-turz-brā) n. name for the road running east-west along the A6088 and continuing through the village after the main road bends to the south. It contains most of the houses in Chesters village.

Chesters Kirk (ches-turz-kirk) n. alternative name for Southdean Parish Church, located in the village of Chesters. It is to the north-west of the cemetery. It was built in 1690, with just part of the west end surviving (this probably once having a belfry). It is said that the entrance, at the west end of the south wall, was moved from the older church of Souden.

Chesters Toor (ches-turz-toor) n. former tower in Chesters village, Southdean Parish. In 1859 (in the Ordnance Survey Name Book) it was said that a delapidated wall near the cemetery was the remains of a tower. This could be the fortified house marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map, but nothing else is known about it, and there is now no sign of the wall.

cheviot (chee-vee-i') n. a white-faced breed of sheep with short, thick wool, common on Border hill farms, going back perhaps 300 years and once providing the main raw material for the tweed industry. The breed gained in popularity and supplanted the black-faced sheep locally by about the end of the 18th century. Its thick fleece led to a higher quality wool, which helped propel the Borders woollen manufacturing business to the forefront. Local tradition (passed on by William Oliver of Langraw) suggested that the origin of the breed was in the 'Thirteen Drifty Days', when a large fraction of the Borders sheep perished, and the desperation to restock farms led to the new mixed breed – 'A' ye wha live by bonnie Teviot, And work 'mong foreign woo' and cheviot' [RF].

the Cheviot (chee-vee-i') n. highest hill in the Cheviots, 2,674 feet (815 m) high, often referred to as 'High Cheviot'. It is situated about 25 miles from Hawick, and gives a handy rhyme for Teviot! – 'O'er the vales of Tweed and Teviot, 'Tween Moffat hills and lofty Cheviot' [JH], 'Now four-and-twenty times I've seen the rose Her annual beauties shed on summer's breast; As oft I've numbered winter's drifting snows, Rear cloud-like wreaths on Cheviot's shaggy crest' [JoHa], 'Where fate invites them to the dread repast, Dark Cheviot's eagles swarm on every blast' [JL], 'The sun would peer o'er Cheviot's fell, And deeper dye the heather bell' [JTe], 'This is the portal of wonder, Beckoning early and late, Over the threshold of Cheviot, Beauty and brotherhood wait' [WL] (the name is recorded as 'Chiuiet' in 1181, with 'High Chyviot' in 1255; it probably has a pre-English origin, perhaps the Brythonic for 'ridge' with the extra suffix 'ed' that 'Teviot' also gained).

Cheviot Road (chee-vee-i'-rōd) n. street in the West End, built around 1930 and named after the Cheviot Hills.

the Cheviots (thu-chee-vee-its) n. the Cheviot Hills, to the south-east of Hawick and largely within the region of Northumberland, just over the Border, with some of the highest peaks marking the Border itself. They stretch for about 35 miles and are a favourite stomping ground for hill walkers. The major Scottish streams that rise there are the Hermitage and Liddel, which drain to the Solway and the Teviot and Beaumont, which run into the Tweed. A description of Roxburghshire in 1649 suggests that they may have been called the Cocklaw Hills at that time – 'The Mountains therein are the Cocklaw, from qlk there runs a full track of hills going along westward dividing Scotland fra England' [MMGC1649] – 'Our native land – our native vale – A long and last adiue! Farewell to bonny Teviotdale, And Cheviot mountains blue' [TPr].

Chevy Chase (che-vee-chās) n. traditional ballad about the Percys of Northumberland hunting in Douglas territory on the Scottish side of the Cheviots, being essentially an English version of the 'Battle of Otterburn'. Douglas' men meet and oppose Percy's men, and a battle ensues, which leaves both leaders dead (although the 'Otterburn' ballad has Percy surviving and being captured).

Chevy Chase (che-vee-chās) n. name of an old coach that ran between Edinburgh and the Borders, specifically from Newcastle, via the Carter Bar and Jedburgh. It was running daily in 1834. Its last run was in 1848.

Chew Green (choo-green) n. site of several Roman camps and a small permanent fort, dating from AD 80. They lie to the east of the Carter Bar, not far over the Border into Northumberland, on Dere Street.

Cheyne see Sheen

chickenweed (chi-kin-weed) n., arch. the chickweed, Stellaria media.

Chief (cheef) n. nickname for Walter Scott, farmer at Overhall at the end of the 17th century.

the Chief (thu-cheef) n. another name for the Chief's Pool.

Chief Guest (cheef-gest) n. official guest at the Common-Riding ceremonies, with the specific duty of making a speech at the Colour Bussing, right after the Cornet has been given the Flag. Another ceremonial duty is to present the Cornet and Acting Father with riding crops at the Mair on the Friday. There were always guests at Common-Riding events, and from the 1880s there were several short speeches after the Bussing of the Colour. The practice of having a single main speaker at the Colour Bussing only happened several years after it became a public event, with the first such speech being given by Robert Purdom in 1894 and the first person named to the position being in 1900. The extension of the invitation to be 'Chief Guest' for the entire Common Riding happened much later. A list since 1900 is included in an appendix.

Chief Magistrate (cheef-ma-ji-strā') n. formerly the Senior of the two town Magistrates, another name for Senior Bailie. After the Council was reconstituted in 1861, the term was also sometimes used to refer to the Provost.

the Chief's Pool (thu-cheefs-pool) n. a shallow pool in the Teviot in the Crumhaugh area, said to have been used for bathing by a former Laird of Crumhaugh. However, the name seems likely to be associated with Walter Scott, farmer at Overhall at the end of the 17th century, whose nickname was 'Chief'.

chiel (cheel) n., arch., poet. a child, often a little boy, lad, young man, fellow – 'My father (rest his saul!) has left me gear, And a' the chiels about me had a steer' [CPM], '... To thank ye, Andrew, for your rhyme, Sic chiels as you wi' wit sublime ...' [JR], 'Now see that ye do treat him weel, And shew yourself both kind and leal, That he may love each Scottish chiel, When far from Caledonia' [BY], 'Hale be your heart, my cantie cheel', May gudeness gie ye maut and meal' [JoHa], 'Lament him, ilka piper chiel, Wha makes auld Scotia's bagpipe squeel' [JoHa], 'How mony buirdly chiels were born, And lasses trig and braw, Aneath the pendit arches O' the auld Mid Raw' [JT], 'And often we speak o' the wee barefit chiel, Wi' the cowl and the auld sooty plaidie' [JT], 'Soem sodger-like chiels were there superintendin', An' ane wi' his coat off was constantly mendin'' [BM1900], 'A met twae awfih sairious-on chiels ...' [ECS], 'He was a funny sort o' chiel, A queer ane, Heather Jock; And antiquarians fain wad ha'e The auld fish pock' [TCh], 'When a chiel sings Annie Laurie with its tender, sweet refrain Till the tears are on their eyelids and – the drinks come round again' [WHO], 'And the chiels come frae far airts' [??], 'But aye in hert o' ilka chiel Is hained the neuk maist dear' [WL] (also written 'cheel'; note that the plural is 'chiels'; cf. chield).

chield (cheeld) n., arch. a child, young man – 'The fears of being detected had caused the 'twa chields' to give many a suspicious look over their shoulders ...' [EM1820], 'You now will see an altered chield, Wi' sense, and mense, and wisdom filled' [JoHa], '... the young chield with the beggar on his back having made the round of the kirkyard 'hailscart', was on the point of returning ...' [WaD] (less common than chiel).

childer (chil-dur) n., pl., arch. children – '... and the parents to be liable for their childers' onlaw' [BR1707], '... therefor the childer o' men pit thair trust anunder the skaddaw o' thy wings' [HSR], 'Let his childer be faetherliss, an' his wyffe ane widaw' [HSR], '... what gars ye keep sae mony dogs aboot the house? ... Bless you, Mr. Bailie, these are my childer!' [RM].

Childknow (child-now) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is recorded in 1788 as belonging to Edgar Hunter of Linthill and valued at £101 19s 4d (including the teinds). An adjacent piece of land, 'Part of the muir of Childknow' was valued at £33 9s 2d and owned by Robert Dickson of Huntlaw. These had previously been the parts of the lands of Raperlaw owned by Walter Turnbull in 1643 and James Middlemas in 1678. It was also recorded in the 1811 as part of the lands inherited by the heirs of Edgar Hunter of Linthill, with the smaller area purchased by Robert Dickson of Huntlaw from Dr. Hunter of Linthill (it is 'Chieldknow' on a 1766 map).

the Chinese Dragon (thu-chī-neez-dra-gin) n. popular name for a sequence of sheds used by Aimers the joiners, which stretched along the south side of Northcote Street in the latter half of the 20th century. They were originally constructed as Glendinning's dance academy, later a dry cleaning business, then Aimers the joiners and lastly Wood's. They were demolished in the 1980s and replaced with a small public garden.

the Chinese Shelter (thu-chī-neez-shel'-ur) n. wooden shelter in Wilton Lodge Park, on the Avenue near the Laurie Bridge, officially called the Henderson Shelter. It was built in 1930 and presented by the sister of James Henderson of Wilton Burn, who was Mrs. Mark Currie. It originally had glass panels, which were removed in 1965. It was renovated in 2015 – 'No more sliding down the helter skelter. No more kissing in the Chinese shelter' [DF].

Chingills (ching-ilz) n. former seat of the Armstrongs in Liddesdale, located to the east of Mangerton, perhaps on the north side of the Tweeden Burn. However there may be confusion with 'Glengills' or 'Gingillis', which was in Ewesdale between Arkleton and Langholm and also with 'Ginglenwells' on the Hermitage Water. It is also possible that more than one place was meant by the name. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties the farm of 'Jengles' is shown to the east of Whithaugh and south of Dykecrofts. It covered 49 acres and had a share (with Greens and Yethouse) of a common of 116 acres. It was surely related to the stream there called Near Jingle Sike (it had a wide range of spellings, or perhaps was hard to transcribe from documents; it is 'Chyngillis' in 1556, 'Cheingyllis' and 'Cheynegillis' in 1557, 'the Gyngillis' in 1579, 'Chyngillis' in 1580, 'Gingillis' in 1580/1, transcribed 'Gryngillis' in 1585, 'the Gingillis', 'the Chengillis' in 1607 and 'Chinglis' in 1622; it is 'Chingils' on Blaeu's c.1654 map and 'Jengles' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin could be the Scots 'chingle', meaning shingle or gravel; see also Gingills).

chink (chingk) n., ins. a derogatory term for a Chinese or other Asian person, adj. Chinese, particularly referring to food.

chinky (ching-kee) n., ins. derogatory term for a Chinese take-out or restaurant. The first chinese restaurant in Hawick was the Red Rose in the 1960s and the first take-away was the Lam Wah, which opened in 1977 at 5 High Street.

chinnie (chee-nee) adj., ins. having a prominent chin – 'Jim was aye in trouble frae Chinnie Weir' [IWL].

Chinnie (chee-nee) n. nickname for several local people, including mill-owner Thomas Laidlaw in the mid-19th century – 'Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lilts a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot' [HI] (also written 'Chinny').

Chinnie's (chee-neez) n. former name for the path built alongside the Teviot, joining the foot of Laidlaw Terrace to the Victoria Bridge. It was named after the nickname of Thomas Laidlaw, owner of the mill that was built there. It was also known as 'the Back o the Mill'.

chippie (chi-pee) n. a fish and chip shop, usually being a take-away, but sometimes having tables. Hawick has had a huge number of these over the years, with the height of popularity probably being the 1950s and 60s. There were at one point 11 shops between Silver Street and the top of the Loan. There have been fish and chip shops on: Bourtree Place; Dickson Street; Dovemount Place; Drumlanrig Square; Green Terrace; the High Street; Howegate; Kenilworth Avenue; the Loan; Oliver Place; Silver Street; Waverley Terrace; Weensland Road; and Wilton Path. Denholm also once had a chip shop – 'Hei could buy chips in Langholm, and when hei got hame tae Hawick they were still hot' [JCo].

chippit (chi-pee', -pi') pp. chipped – '... And the muckle Nipknowes trei chippit doon ...' [DH].

chirk (chirk) v., arch. to make a grating noise (cf. chairk).

chirl (chirl) n., arch. cheap of certain birds, particularly the robin – 'The robin's chirl in wunter' [GW], 'The bird ga'e a chirl' [GW], 'I'm nae Franciscan: He does the preachin Wi sma frail chirls ...' [DH], v. to chirp like a robin – 'The chirlin' o' the birds' [GW], 'The robin chirl't an' flew off' [GW], '... While doon in thon hedge The spugs are chirlin Aboot spring-cleaned sins' [DH] (also sometimes churl).

Chirnburn Sike (chirn-burn) n. name for a stream to the south of Colifort in the Slitrig vally. It is given as 'chyrnburn syik' in a sasine of 1550 and could be another name for Horsley Burn or a smaller water feature near there.

Chirndean see Churnton

Chirnside (chirn-sīd) n. town in the middle of Berwickshire, near the confluence of the Blackadder and Whiteadder, and having woollen mills for local industry. The nearby Ninewell's estate of the Homes is where David Hume came from, and has a surviving 16th century Dovecote. Its common lands were divided in 1807. Population (1991) 1,253. 'Chirnside: A Borders Village' was published in 2019.

chirr (chir) n., arch. a prolonged trill, characteristic of a grasshopper, etc., v., arch. to make a trill – 'There were butterflies to chase, gresshoppers chirred ...' [DH].

chirt (chir') v., arch. to squirt – 'The tea chirtit oot' [GW], n., arch. a squirt, squirting movement (cf. jirt).

Chisholm see Chisholme

Chisholme (chi-zum) n. estate on the south side of the Borthwick valley, about a mile beyond Roberton. It was the seat of the Chisholme family from the mid-13th century until 1624, with Chisholmes living in the immediate area long afterwards. It is recorded in an English record of 1335/6, when the 10 merk land had been forfeited into the hands of the English King by Alexander 'de Cheshelme'. In 1502 the superiority of the lands was held by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were listed in 1511 among the lands held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig), this continuing in the list for the promise of infeftment in 1559 and retour of Sir James Douglas in 1572. The Laird of 'Chesholme' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. The lands are stil listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands passed from the Chisholmes to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early-to-mid-17th century and was among lands confirmed to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. It was valued in 1627, paying '120 lb., vicarage 20 lb.', listed along with Parkhill and Lairhope. There were 4 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Little, James Little, Margaret Little and Bessie Murray. In 1678 Chisholme and Woodburn were together valued at £433 6s 8d. Thomas Riddell, Martin Cathrae and Walter Crozier were there in 1710, William Paterson in 1731, William Heatley in 1736, James Anderson in 1742, James Deans in 1743, William Elliot in 1773 and John Dunlop in at least 1771–75. Chisholme and Woodburn were valued together £433 6s 8d in the 1740s. About 1784 it was purchased back by William Chisholme (a descendant of Walter, 1st Laird of Stirches), who had made his fortune in the West Indies. It remained with this family for almost another century, being sold to the Dicksons around 1860. In 1788 (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed along with Woodburn among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued at £433 6s 8d. James Scott was overseer there in 1812. In 1827 it was bought by James Bruce. Most of the present-day plantations around the estate date to the early 1800s. In about 1874 the owner is recorded as William Richardson Dickson of Alton. There is a plan of the estate by Andrew Hogg in 1826. The lands were originally in Hawick Parish, but passed to Roberton in 1689/90. Chisholme House, in the centre of the estate, was built in the mid-18th century on the site of a much earlier house. A 'military musket, with date on it (1743)' found there was donated to the Museum in 1866 (the name first occurs as 'Chesehelme' in 1254, later becoming 'Cheshelme', 'Chesholm', 'Chesholme', 'Cheisholme' and variants and is 'Chisholme' by about 1650; it was 'Chashelme' in 1451 and 'chishame' in 1502; it has its modern spelling on a 1650 parish map and is marked 'Cheesehoom' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin is probably 'sheltered place where cheese was made' from Middle English 'cese helm' and with the later substitution of 'holm').

Chisholme (chi-zum) n. Adam of Newton (17th/18th C.) owner of the lands of Newton in Bedrule Parish. He stood in as cautioner in the testament of 1690 for Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr, when William Turnbull, shoemaker in Jedburgh, failed to appear. The heiress of Mark Turnbull was Helen, who married Walter of Parkhill, who was surely related to him. Agnes (1751–1817) youngest daughter of Thomas, surgeon in Selkirk. She was thus a great-great-granddaughter of Walter, 1st Laird of Stirches. She is also sometimes named as Margaret, but that seems to be an error. She married Rev. William Scott, minister of Innerleithen, who was a son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse. Their son William inherited the Chisholme estate. Alan (16th C.) recorded as 'Allen Chisholme in Parkhill' in 1581. He served as one of the witnesses to a 'letter of slains' in Hawick, whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. It is possible he was the same man as the Alexander in Parkhill recorded in the following decade. Alexander (13th C.) recorded in about 1250 as witness to a grant by Henry of Ashkirk of Bellendean and Todrig to Coldstream Priory. His name is recorded as 'Allexandro de Cheshelme'. It is unclear how he was related to the John (usually given in family trees) who was nearly contemporary. Alexander (14th C.) son of John, he was the 4th Chisholme of that Ilk. He is described as 'Laird of Chisholme in Roxburgh and Paxtoun in Berwickshire' on a record relating to a Tweed fishing dispute in 1335. He had to pay an annual rent of 15 shillings to the English King for Chisholme in the period when the Scottish Borders was largely conceded to Edward III; his 10 merk land of 'Cheshelme' was then said to be forfeited into the hands of the English King. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1359. His son and successor was Sir Robert (note there is great uncertainty in these early generations). Alexander (14th/15th C.) younger son of Sir Robert and brother of John. He is recorded in 1368 when he paid homage to the Bishop of Moray. In 1391 he resigned as Constable of Urquhart Castle in favour of his son Thomas. In 1436 (by which time he must have been quite old, or this date is incorrect) he inherited most of the Highland estates of his brother John; at the same time the Roxburghshire lands went to their younger brother Robert. He married Margaret de la Ard (or Aird), Lady of Erchless, daughter and heiress of Weyland of the Aird. Their children were: Thomas, who succeeded and was Constable of Urquhart Castle; and Margaret, who married Angus, son of Godfrey of Uist and Garmoran. Alexander of that Ilk (15th C.) probably son of Robert. He was listed on a 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick in 1424. In 1427 he was on the 'inquest of retour' for William Douglas in the Barony of Hawick; he is there recorded as 'Alexandrum de Scheisholme'. Probably the same Alexander (no designation given) was the first witness of the 'instruement of sasine' making William of Drumlanrig the new Baron of Hawick in 1428/9 after the death of his father. In 1429/30 he was of 'Scheysholme' on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. He was witness in 1431 of a document transferring the lands of Heap between Langlands and Scott. He wrote a letter of 'attestation' to this, where he is recorded as 'Alysander off Chesholme off that ylk'. He witnessed a charter of Grahamslaw for Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1443, witnessed a lease for lands in Borthwickshiels in 1445, witnessed the charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch in 1446 and in 1447 he was witness to a charter of Margaret Cusing to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1451 he was witness to a document dealing with property in Edinburgh passing to Walter Scott of Kirkurd, and also on the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap. His daughter was probably 'Katherine of Chisholme' who is recorded in 1459 as wife of the deceased Walter Hailburton of Kinrossy (and 1st of Pitcur); she was said to be co-heiress of Alexander, suggesting that he was succeeded by 2 or more daughters (or had a later son perhaps). In 1432 it seems likely that his daughter Katherine (or Catherine) married her cousin, Walter Haliburton, who was son of Sir John Haliburton and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Archibald, 3rd Earl of Douglas. Alexander of Parkhill (16th/17th C.) youngest son of George of that Ilk. He is probably the man recorded as 'Alexandro Chishelme in Chishelme' in 1567 when he was one of the witnessed for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. He is probably the Alexander 'of Park' who in 1580 witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement involving George, son to Walter of that Ilk. He is recorded in a sasine of 1595 granting half of Ferniehirst to John Scott. He is described as 'bailie in that part'. He may be the 'Alexander of Piehill' (mis-spelled or transcribed) in a 'respite' by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands in 1593. He married the 7th daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. He was said by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been the 3rd husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade, who bore him 12 or 13 children. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1720, when he was involved with a case of debt. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included William (b.1739), Marion (b.1741) and Margaret (b.1744). Andrew of Parkhill (17th C.) mentioned in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners in 1666. He was probably the 'Chisholme, portioner of Parkhill' who was recorded in a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Easter Parkhill. He is also recorded in 1680 when his son John became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1681 when his son William became a tailor's apprentice there. He is probably the same Andrew of Easter Parkhill who was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He is also recorded as Andrew of Parkhill in a bond of 1682. He is probably the Andrew who rented the east end of Branxholme Muir in 1691, 1696 and 1697, along with Walter (possibly his son). He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine in Hawick in 1655. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1674. He may be the Andrew who, along with Robert, witnessed a baptism in 1654 for Walter Riddell and Margaret Chisholme. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Selkirk. In 1680 he was tutor to Margaret, daughter of the deceased Robert Smail, Deacon of the cordiners in Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) wrote to Walter Earl of Tarras from Coldhouse in 1693. Precisely who he is unclear, since the connection between Coldhouse and the Chisholmes was not until much later. He may be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Wilton Parish in 1686 (as recorded in Roberton) and whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton in 1688. It is therefore possible that he married a Scott of Coldhouse. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Scott and Barbara Scott (perhaps the couple who lived at Tandlaw). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1713 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may also be father of William (b.1711), Janet (b.1715). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Harden in 1721 and Mabonlaw in 1728. His children included: John (b.1721); Walter (b.1724); and Andrew (b.1728). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1749 he married Margaret Scott, who was also from Roberton. Probably the same Andrew had a son Walter baptised in Roberton in 1750. Andrew (18th C.) resident at Craik who married Bett Scott in Roberton Parish in 1772. Their children included: an unnamed daughter (b.1773); and Andrew (b.1774). In the 1774 baptismal record he is listed as 'junior', suggesting that his father was also Andrew. He could be the Andrew who rented the Hawick mortcloth in 1772. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1798. He married 'Ketty' (or perhaps 'Betty') Elliot in 1797 and their children included Andrew (b.1797), Isabella (b.1801) and Thomas (b.1804). Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at Broadhaugh according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He could be the Andrew whose children Andrew (b.1802), Robert (b.1803) and Nelly (b.1806) were baptised in Cavers Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Esther White. Their children included Walter (b.1817) and Peter (b.1820). Andrew (19th C.) married Isabel Gibson in Wilton Parish in 1848. Barbara nee Bennet (18th C.) wife of Mark, who she married in 1714. Her father was Archibald Bennet of Chesters. She is recorded as owner of West Fodderlee in 1788 (when she must have been quite old), valued at £78 9s. Charles (1783–1823) of Chisholme, illegitimate son of William, the Laird of Chisholme, who had purchased the estate after making his fortune in the West Indies. He was thus also a direct decendant of Walter, 1st Laird of Stirches. He was a writer with the East India Company and was left £20,000 by his father after his death in 1802. He was referred to in his father's will as his 'son or reputed son'. He was living at Queen Anne Street, Middlesex in 1801. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1814 and was one of the subscribers to the Subscription Rooms. He was among the first to be listed on the 'Donations' page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. In 1819 he became a candidate for the Linlithgow Burghs (consisting of Linlithgow, Lanark, Selkirk and Peebles). He was said to be very popular in Selkirk, 'being withal a remarkably handsome man, he was one of the best canvassers that ever sought support. He spent liberally to gather votes, e.g. paying for free drink at all the pubs in Selkirk from 6 p.m. until 10 a.m. the next morning. Although nominally a Tory, he had some views that were more Liberal, which may have influenced his sponsors, who ended up favouring a different candidate. After failing even to garner enlough support in Selkirk, he abandoned attempts to sit in Parliament. He received the news of his imminent defeat in Selkirk while visiting James Anderson at Wilton Lodge. He married Helena Anne Ellice, sister of the Liberal M.P. for Coventry (Edward Ellice), but they had no children. After his death the estate went to his sister's son, William Scott, who changed his name to Chisholme. In 1825 his widow married Walter Burrell of West Grinstead Park. She was probably the 'Mrs Chisholme of Chisholme' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Christina nee Anderson (d.1800) daughter of Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She was also known as 'Christian'. A story is told of her youth, when she played a trick on Lord Monboddo in Edinburgh, taking his wig with the use of a kitten lowered out a window on a ribbon! In 1768 she married Gilbert of Stirches. She was known for her beauty and referred to as 'one of the three belles of Scotland'. In 1785 she and her husband came across the balloonist Vincent Lunardi near Alemoor, when they were riding from Tushielaw to Stirches. She rode for 3 miles or so in the balloon, descending at Redfordgreen, and afterwards Lunardi was entertained at Stirches. In 1799 she gave the formal presentation of a standard to the Hawick Military Association at a ceremony held on the Common Haugh. Christina Madeline (19th C.) one of the last of the Stirches family, elder daughter of John and sister of Col. John James. In 1869 she married Robert Pringle (1832–99), M.D., son of William and grandson of John, 7th of Whytbank (with David of Wilton Lodge being his uncle). Edmund (15th C.) youngest son of

Robert of that Ilk and Marion Douglas of Drumlanrig. He founded the Chisholmes of Cromlix in Perthshire. This branch were hereditary bailies of the Lordship of Dunblane, producing 4 bishops and several knights, eventually terminating in an heiress who married General Drummond, Lord Madderty. David (17th C.) Schoolmaster in Selkirk. He was 'late schoolmaster' in 1663 when he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. Frederick Diener (1838–89) born in Wilton, son of William. From his name he must have been related to the Diener family. He married Wilhelmina Stevenson. In 1861 he was a journeyman joiner living at 5 High Street. His wife was Wilhelmina and their children included John and William. George of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. This is confusing, since Robert was probably Laird at that time. He could have been Robert's son George, but he was youngest of 3 brothers and so would not have been described as 'of that Ilk'. However, 'Georgis Chesam of that ilk' is also recorded as an evaluator of Whithope in 1500 and witness to a sasine for Scott of Branxholme the same year, so he seems to have been Laird of Chisholme, even if his relationship to his near contemporaries is unclear. George (d.1536) 12th of that Ilk, son of Robert, he succeeded on the death of his brother John. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran; other Chisholmes listed there were Gilbert, James and George. He was a close ally of Scott of Buccleuch, taking part in the Battle of Skirmish Field in 1526, when they failed to wrest the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus. He was cited to appear before the High Court accused of treason and murder (of Ker of Cessford), but escaped punishment and had remission on the accession of James V. He could be the George recorded as one of 'our sheriffs in that part' in 1529/30 in a transaction in Selkirk involving Gilbert. In 1530 he was listed among parishioners of Stow. In 1531 he receved a charter of 'Chisholme, Chisholme Middon, Mouslie, Woodburn, Merrynier' (possibly Merry Naze) and other lands. 'The brether of vmquhile the Laird of Chisholme' is recorded in the 1564 contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs, which suggests that he was a half-brother of William Cranston of that Ilk. In 1517 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Langlands of that Ilk. He had 4 sons and 2 daughters: Walter, who succeeded; John, who became Comptroller of the Artillery; William, who was associated with Melrose Abbey; Alexander of Parkhill; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Hassendean; and Mary, who died unmarried. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in the long list of Borders men who had remission in 1526 for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from George of that Ilk. But it is unclear where he came from. George (16th C.) son of John and grandson of Robert. In 1541 his father gave him the tenement in Selkirk that had belonged to his grandfather Robert. He still held a tenement in Selkirk in 1544. George (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as natural son to the deceased Walter of that Ilk (although Walter appears to have lived until 1588). This was a transaction in Selkirk in which he acknowledged the receipt of 800 merks from James Pringle in Hoppringle for sheep, cattle and crops at Bowland and Crumside. In 1580 he was natural brother of Walter of that Ilk when his servant '[blank] Dewer' witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. George (d.c.1596) recorded as 'hird' to Sir Robert Ker. He was slain 'in plain daylight' by Tom Storie 'in Killaime', Tom Armstrong 'Boltfoot and Jamie Armstrong 'how neif'. Ker stated he 'was his chief guide to Killam and Woller' and was killed in England when returning home. George of Woodburn (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as being 'of Wodburne', which may have been the lands in the Borthwick valley. 'Ralff Hair in Wodburne' was accused of stealing 17 sheep from him, but was acquitted. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He could have been related to James and George, who are listed shortly after him. He may be the Gilbert recorded in Selkirk in 1529/30 when he gave sasine to James Pringle in Tinnis (with George acting as one of the 'sheriffs in that part'). Gilbert 'Gibbie' (1748/9–1826) 20th of that Ilk and of Stirches, son of John and Margaret Scott of Synton. When his brother died in 1761 he returned from college, and on reaching majority moved to London, where he lived a fashionable (and extravagant) life. After his marriage he moved to Stirches. With his father's permission he sold some of the estate to William, son of Dr. Chisholme of Selkirk. However, he retained Tushielaw (although this was perhaps only as tenant), and would often stay there. In 1785 he and his wife came across the hot-air balloon of Lunardi, when they were riding from Tushielaw to Stirches; Mrs. Chisholme rode in the balloon for a few miles and Mr. Chisholme entertained the balloonist at Stirches. In 1788 he was listed as 'Younger of Stuckshaws' under 'Votes of Rutherfurd of Edgerston' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was taxed for having a male servant (a house servant and groom) in the period 1785–97, as well as for having a female servant in 1785 and 1786, 2 in 1787 and 1788 and 1 in 1789–94. In the years 1792–95 he was listed in the Carriage Tax Rolls and he is recorded in the 1786 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 carriage horses. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was owner of 2 farm horses and 3 carriage or saddle horses; he also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier's children at Wilton Lodge. In 1798 he was the main force behind raising the Hawick Military Association (Volunteer Corps) and was its Captain Commandant; there is a portrait in miniature of him wearing the uniform of the corps. In 1799 his wife formally presented the corps with its Standard. About 1800 he was one of the local men contributing (£10 10s) to the subscription for the war against France. When a peace treaty was signed with France in 1802, the volunteers presented him with a silver cup. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a keen sportsman, keeping a pack of hounds with which he hunted locally for many years. He was said (by the minister of Ettrick) to be 'a somewhat pompous gentleman'. He also had a reputation for living a little beyond his means. He was forced to sell Philip, Rouchhope and Broadlee, and in 1810 even parted with Stirches to the young Capt. Michael Anderson, a close friend (and probably relation) of the family. Anderson died in 1814, leaving the estate back to Gilbert, along with lands at Galalaw, Sillerbithall, Nether Croft and Greenhall. In 1768 at Posso he married Christina, 2nd daughter of Michael Anderson of Tushilaw (and probably brother of the later Michael). She was described as 'one of the three belles of Scotland', and died in 1800, leaving no children. In 1802 he secondly married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh, and she was still living at Stirches House in 1841. They had 2 sons, John (1810–68, who succeeded) and Gilbert (who died unmarried in 1820) and 2 daughters, Margaret Scott (who died unmarried in 1854) and Christian Anderson. There were portraits of both him and his wife in Stirches House. The Museum has the ceremonial hat he wore as commander of the local volunteers. Helen nee Turnbull (18th C.) daughter and only heiress of Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. Her inheritance is described in the testament of her parents (who died in 1689), recorded in Peebles, with the information given up by her husband, Walter of Parkhill. She inherited West Fodderlee and part of Ruletownhead from her father. She was recorded as Helen Turnbull, married to 'W.' (for Walter) whose son Mark had a nuptial contract in 1714, in which he inherited some of her lands in Abbotrule Parish. She was recorded as 'Mrs. Hellen Chisholm' in 1748 when she paid the window tax at Newton in Bedrule Parish. Henrietta (d.1783) daughter of William of Broadlee. In 1732 she first married Robert Mercer, commission clerk of Selkirkshire (also referred to as 'commissary clerk depute at Selkirk'). In 1737 she was widow of Robert Mercer when named in a lawsuit brought by the miller of Selkirk. She is probably the Henrietta, who, along with Thomas and William, was involved in court cases brought by John Todd and Isabel Scott in Selkirk in 1739. In 1741 she secondly married Andrew Lang, who was a lawyer in Selkirk. They had a son John and 4 daughters. Her 2nd husband drowned in the Ettrick in 1753, leaving her to raise a young family. John became Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. She had several discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in the period 1754–82; some of these were in the name of her son John. In 1770 there was a particular receipt for supplying wine and claret to the Bailies of Selkirk. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He could be the James in Kershope (in Ettrick) who witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. James (16th/17th C.) second son of Walter, he was the progenitor of the Chisholmes of Heyershope in Peeblesshire. He was Master of the Horse to Buccleuch and one of the gentelemen in attendance to the King. He could be the James, brother of the Walter of that Ilk, who witnessed an agreement in Selkirk involving his brother in 1580 and another in 1580 involving the Scotts of Blindhaugh. He is probably the 'James Chessam servant to Bucklwghe' recorded in 1587 when Lord Hunsdon stated that he and the Laird of Mangerton save Captain 'Bellowsis' from being killed in a fray, and instead had him taken prisoner. It is possible he is the James who witnessed a document for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Edinburgh in 1591. He is easily confused with his distant cousin Sir James of Cromlix, Master of the King's Household; in an English letter of 1593 it is stated that he was excommunicated by the Scots, but the Ambassadors of Denmark were arranging his travel to Spain, because the English refused, with Lord Cary thinking he should have been helped out because 'he could have done better service for us then he wyll doe against us'. James of Girnwood (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 as surety for Sir James Murray of Falahill in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk. Presumably he held lands in Girnwood in the Borthwick, although Scotts held most of those lands at that time. James 'Jamie' (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1611 when 'Hob Scot', Bailie of Hawick, served as cautioner for him in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same James was owner of 2½ acres of 'Jedburghside and Hawickgate' (in Jedburgh), which later belonged to Thomas Waugh. James of Parkhill (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Parkhill. He is listed along with his father in 1633 when they owed more than £300 to the Earl of Buccleuch. He is recorded in a list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley in 1650, where it appears his wife was Margaret Scott, their son was Walter and there were other Chisholmes among the total of 16 living on the lands of Parkhill. In 1663 he is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish, paying £200 for lands there (presumably Parkhill). He is also recorded in a list of major residents of Hassendean Parish in 1666 along with Andrew of Parkhill, who may have been his son or brother. His wife was Margaret Scott, and they had a son Walter, who was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1646. He could be the James who leased part of the farm of Branxholme Muir before 1671, and was renting the east end along with Andrew in 1672 and 1677. He could be the James 'laird' who in 1677 was fined by the Hawick Bailies for moving the march-stones between his lands and those of Patrick Cunningham; however, later that year he complained to the Privy Council about the 'oppression' committed on him by the Bailies. James (17th C.) recorded in 1661 he and Walter witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for John Johnstone in Alemoor. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel Liddell and their children, baptised in Hawick, included Helen (b.1670), William (b.1673), Jane (b.1674), William (again, b.1677), Robert (b.1678) and James (b.1680). James (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1666 when he was involved in a fight in St. Mary's Kirk with William Turnbull. He was sleeping in the church, when Turnbull pulled on his bonnet, causing him to fall out of his seat and grip at Turnbull's leg, to which Turnbull reacted by striking his fingers with his staff, whereupon he drew a knife and cut Turnbull's leg (church attendance was more exciting in those days!). He was found guilty and Walter of Stirches was his cautioner. He may have been the same as the later merchant, who was possibly a son of Walter of Stirches. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Aitkin and their children included: John (b.1684); William (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688), who may have married Robert Mein in 1716. He may be the James who was deceased in 1716 when his daughter married Robert Mein. The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie James Scott and Walter Purdom. James (17th/18th C.) herd in Ashkirk. He married Margaret Helm and their children included Janet (b.1695) and Isobel (b.1697). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1703. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for David Scott in Merrylaw in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, as stated in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1704, when his daughter Jean married George McFarlane. He was probably a son of Chisholme of Stirches, possibly Walter the 16th Laird and may have been the James who married Isobel Liddell in 1674. It is possible he was the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He may also be the 'James Chisholm, laird' listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same James 'Laird' who in 1673 was found not guilty of 'the alleat ryott' on Janet Gledstains, wife of Henry Haliburton, wright on Hawick; this was based on evidence given by traveller George Mack... and Robert Clapperton, servant to Bailie James Scott. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Thomson and their children included Maly (b.1709), James (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1717). Perhaps the same James earlier married Isabel Paterson and had a son George (b.1707). James (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, 'Whyndhead'. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1745. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. He witnessed baptisms in 1761 for gardener John

Ainslie and for William Scott. He married Margaret Young and their children included William (b.1762). The baptismal witnesses were merchants Thomas Wilkie and Richard Purdom. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. James of Stonedge (1744–1812) son of Thomas, surgeon in Selkirk and great-great-grandson of Walter, 1st Laird of Stirches. He trained for the medical profession, like his father and his elder brother William. He followed William (with whom he appears to have been confused in some accounts) out to Jamaica and became owner of the Greenriver plantation there, as well as others in the Clarendon area. He returned to Scotland around 1793, purchasing the estate of Stonedge from Robert Lisle, where the main house was at that time called Hobsburn. He renamed the house 'Greenriver', after his plantation. He built many of the farmhouses on the estate, as well as a walled garden by the main house. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and when he paid tax in 1797 for having 2 male servants. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 (and still listed in 1819). However, he also lived at 5 Portland Place in London. In 1802 he inherited his brother's interests in further plantations in Jamaica. He probably had the coaching inn (modern Horse and Hounds) at Bonchester Bridge rebuilt in the early years of the 19th century. His wife died in 1802 at their home in Portland Place, London. Their only child Mary Agnes (b.1784) married Charles Lord Sinclair (also written 'St. Clair) in 1802 and on his death the estate of Stonedge (and Greenriver) passed to her husband. To confuse matters, he was upset at his brother William (who had purchased the old family estate), leaving Chisholme to his illegitimate son Charles, and hence referred to himself as 'of Chisholme' after his brother's death. He made a will in 1803 and the documents relating to his sugar plantations are in the National Library of Scotland. He died in London, being then described as 'of Chisholme and Stonedge'. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Selkirk and Hawick, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He ran between the towns twice a week. In 1837 he was leaving from the Black Bull in Hawick, bound for Selkirk, every Tuesday and Friday. He may have lived in Selkirk. James (19th C.) married Mary Ballantyne in Castleton in 1850. Janet (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir Archibald Napier of Cromlix. She was mentioned in a charter to her husband of his extensive lands in 1511. He died at Flodden. She was daughter of Sir Edmund of Cromlix in Perthshire. John (13th C.) called 'de Chesehelme', he was mentioned in a 1254 papal bull connected with the diocese of Glasgow, and was one of the earliest of the family to have lands in Roxburghshire. He is thus often the first Chisholme given in family genealogies. He was married to Emma, daughter of William de Vetereponte (or Vipont), Lord of Boulton in East Lothian. He obtained lands at Paxton through his dowry, along with the fishing rights of Brada-la-Tweed, thereby establishing the family in Berwickshire. He may be the 'Johannes de Chesholme' listed in an inventory of Coldingham Priory in perhaps about 1280. His son and successor was Richard. Sir John 3rd of that Ilk (13th/14th C.), called 'de Chesolm' in Berwickshire. Son of Richard, he signed the Ragman Rolls along with his father in 1296. In about 1298 he is listed as owner of lands in Paxton in an inventory of Coldingham Priory. He is probably the 'John de Cheseholm', whose black horse was valued at 12 marks in a list of English war horses prepared in 1300/1, following the march of Edward I into Scotland. He fought under the banner of Robert Bruce at Bannockburn, where Sir William de Vetereponte (related to his grandmother) was killed. He thereby forfeited his estates to the English Crown (which passed them to Ralph Home and Sir Robert Manners), being referred to in an English record of 1317 as 'our Scottish enemy and rebel'. In 1313 Thomas of Coldingham was ward of his heir in the lands of Paxton. In 1317 Mariota Fraunceys had a charter for her rights to lands in Paxton forfeited by him; these lands and fishing rights were described in an English inquisition in 1315, but were at that time 'waste and ruined'. He regained his lands from King Robert in 1320 along with lands in Nairn; this may have been the start of the family's association with the North. He married Anne, daughter and heiress of Sir Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood, who was Constable of Urquhart Castle. He was succeeded by his son, Alexander of Roxburgh and Paxton. John (d.1436) eldest son of Sir Robert, he may have been the first Chisholm to drop the 'de'. He was referred to as 'de le Ard' or of the Aird, and is mentioned several times during his father's lifetime. After his father's death (probably in the 1390s) he succeeded to the family lands in the Borders as well as the Highlands. He married Catherine, daughter of Bisset of that Ilk, through whom he obtained several additional Highland estates (particularly in the Aird). In 1413 it appears he resigned the Chisholme estate to his brother Robert. His only child was Morella (or Muriel), who married Alexander Sutherland, Baron of Duffus; she succeeded to the lands of Quarrelwood, Clunie and Clova in Moray, which had been acquired by her great-grandfather. Further 'pleadings' of 1512 describe the descendants who still had a right to claim the lands of Chisholme in Teviotdale, as well as Paxton and others. The rest of his lands were inherited by his brother Alexander, who established the Strathglass family line, which continued as Highland chiefs. John (15th C.) 9th of that Ilk, eldest son of Robert and Marion Douglas. His brothers were Robert, William and Edmund. He could be the 'Johanne de Cheshelme' who witnessed a document for Archibald Douglas, Earl of Moray, in 1450; this also involved Walter Haliburton of Gask and his wife Katherine 'of Cheshelme', daughter of Alexander, who was probably related to him. He supported the Royal cause during the rebellion and in return received lands at 'Muryneis' (probably Merry Naze) in 1458. He was one of the witnesses for a charter of William, Lord Borthwick in 1461. In 1463 he was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. In 1442 he married Janet, daughter of Erskine of Reidholm. He was succeeded by Robert and also had several other children. John (15th/16th C.) notary public on the 1505 charter where Robert Scott of Stirches was granted the lands of Boonraw by the superior of the lands, Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. It was witnessed in Edinburgh, but it is unclear which church he might have belonged to. He may be the same 'Master John', 'writer of household books' who is recorded in association with the Exchequer Rolls in at least 1508–13. John (d.c.1520) second son of Robert, he went to Flodden along with his brother Robert under their overlord Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His brother was killed there, but he managed to return with the family pennon, the lance-head of which remained in the family until at least the early 20th century. The family arms were later supported by two knights in armour, representing these brothers. He succeeded to the estate in 1517, but died a few years later in a Border fray. He would have been 11th of that Ilk (although he is skipped in some histories). Unmarried, he was succeeded by his younger brother George. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1530 when he, Thomas and several others swore in Selkirk that William Scott of Todrig owed no more than a mark to the deceased Stephen Lauder. He may be the same as John 'in Pelgait' recorded in 1529 as witness to Robert giving sasine to his son John. John (16th C.) eldest son of Robert. In 1529 his father gave him sasine to his tenement in Selkirk. After his father's death he was to pay a yearly amount to Adam Ker of Shaws; John 'in Pelgait' was among the witnesses. In 1541 he was heir to the deceased Robert when he gave the same tenement to his own son and heir, George. He could be the John recorded as 'Jok' when his property neighboured that of a transaction in 1561. John (d.bef. 1579) recorded in Mountbenger in Yarrow in 1579. His widow Helen Brydon appointed John in Eldinhopeknow and Thomas Hislop, Burgess of Peebles, as his executors. John (16th C.) recorded in Eldinhopeknow in Yarrow in 1579 when he was appointed as an executor for the deceased John in Mountbenger (who may well have been a relative). He promised to make full account and payment to the other John's widow. He was also recorded in 1580 as supplier of wool in the testament of John Dawson. John (d.c.1615) son of George of that Ilk. He resided at Woodend of Wemyss. He served as a political agent for Queen Mary at the French Court. His name occurs frequently in the diary of John Leslie, Bishop of Ross. He was Director General of Artillery and Collector of Salt Duties. He was also referred to as Controller of the King's Ordnance. He was 'comptrollar of the said artailyearie' in 1565. On the accession of James VI he was reappointed as Comptroller of the Artillery. Also in 1567 he was granted the lands of Kingswerk and others. On returning from France in 1571 he was captured by the reformers in Leith and underwent torture, but escaped to Edinburgh Castle. In 1573 he was Controller of the Ordnance in Leith. He had his estate restored to him by Act of Parliament in 1592. His eldest son and heir was James. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ferniehirst. In 1622 he witnessed a document relating to Trinlyknowe for the Pringles and Riddells. John (17th C.) recorded in 1638 as 'Controller and Collector of Temporal Taxes' in a letter to the Burgh of Selkirk. He was probably related to the earlier John who held a similar position. John (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. Rev. John (c.1643–1701) apparently deplored minister of Lilliesleaf who was brought in to replace the ousted Covenanting preacher. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1663, was licensed in 1667 and became minister at Lilliesleaf in 1674, replacing William Wilkie who refused to conform to Episcopacy. In 1674 he witnessed the baptism of a son of Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland by Rev. Francis Scott of Minto (and later Hassendean), with other witnesses being Rev. James Gledstains of Yetholm and Hawick Schoolmaster John Purdom; presumably all were strong Episcopalians. He was cited by the Privy Council in 1681 for dissuading the magistrates of Selkirk (or perhaps Peebles) from taking the Test. He was deprived in 1689 for not 'praying for William and Mary' (i.e. remaining an episcoplian) and for not observing the thanksgiving. His children included Robert: Schoolmaster in Selkirk; Eupham, who married James Pringle, writing master in Edinburgh in 1716; Esther, who married Francis Toward, music master of Edinburgh in 1725 and also 'Mr.' Thomas Wilkie in Edinburgh 1731, who may have been related to the previous Lilliesleaf minister; and William (b.1682). He is recorded as witness to a Gledstains birth in Hawick in 1674. Whether he was related to the local Chisholmes is unknown. He died in Edinburgh. It is possible that he was the 'Mr. Chisholme' who served as Hawick Parish Schoolmaster for a short period the late 1660s, before John Purdom took over in 1669. A set of documents relating to disputes over teinds between him and the Earl of Roxburghe are held in the Roxburghe archives. John (d.c.1679) recorded at Kirkstyle of Ewes when his will is listed at the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1679. John (17th C.) son of Andrew of Parkhill. In 1680 he became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) first regular preacher at Teviothead 'Chapel-of-ease', starting in about 1720. In May of that year he was 'preacher at ye meeting house in Ridge' when he witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott from Harwood. He also witnessed a baptism for John Nichol in Commonbrae later in 1720 and was 'preacher at Carlangridge Chappel' when he is recorded filling in for the absent minister in Hawick. Whether he lasted as long as the arrival of John Laurie in 1738 is unknown, as is his subsequent history. John (1682–1755) 18th of Stirches and that Ilk, son of William. He witnessed the will of Bessie Scott, widow to Walter Scott of Whitehaugh, when he was 'younger'. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 as 'of Stirkshaws, younger' along with his father William. In 1713 he purchased his cousin's share of the lands of Broadlee, Philhope and Rouchhope; he resided at Broadlee, while his mother continued to live at Stirches. In 1719 he rented the farm of Eilrig for 7 years. In 1728 he paid for the bells of St. Mary's to be rung on the death of his wife (Mary, Broadlee being in Hawick Parish). In 1734 he had a sasine for the lands of Chisholme in liferent, with his son John being granted the lands 'in fee'; the succession was to go to his eldest son John, then his 2nd son William and finally to any heirs of John. Also in 1734 he witnessed the marriage of John Oliver of Dinlabyre (his nephew) and Violet Douglas. In 1735 he appears to have been factor for the spinning school set up in Hawick to promote textile manufacturing. Not long after his mother died in 1736 he moved to Stirches. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. It is said that a group of Highlanders from the Jacobite army visited Stirches in 1745, and although he was a sympathiser and treated them well they returned the favour by driving off his cattle and taking other victuals, so it was said that 'not one cloot was left on the estate'. His Stirches estate was valued at £430 in the 1740s. In 1747 and 1748 he witnessed baptisms for the Wilton Minister, James Simpson. He paid the window tax at Stirches in 1748. He married Mary (or Marion), daughter of John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1707; his sister Mary married William Oliver of Dinlabyre, and hence his wife Mary was sister-in-law twice to his sister Mary! His children included: Agnes (b.1708), baptised in Wilton; John, who succeeded; William (b.1715), baptised in Wilton, his 2nd son, mentioned in 1734; James (b.1717), baptised in Roberton; and Adam (b.1720), also baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in Wilton in 1708 were the Lairds of Whitehaugh (William Scott), Galalaw (Adam Scott) and Hartwoodmyres (William Ogilvie). John 'Laird' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is 'Young Laird' in 1710 and 'called Laird' in 1712 and 1720. He is definitely not the same as the Laird of Stirches, but a Hawick resident with the nickname 'Laird'. In 1723 he witnessed (along with smith John Scott) a baptism for gardener John Tait. In 1709 he married Margaret Armstrong, who was also from Hawick; he was there recorded as 'commonly called young Laird Chisholm'. Their children included: James (b.1710); John (b.1712); Robert (b.1715); John (again, b.1720); and Elizabeth (b.1721). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Hardie and in 1720 were merchant William (who was probably related) and smith John Scott. John (1712–94) of Stirches, 19th of that Ilk and 4th of Stirches, son of John. In 1734 he was granted Chisholme 'in fee', while his father John held the liferent. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750 while still 'junior of Stirches'. He succeeded his father in 1755. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for John Miller in Wilton. He was also a local Justice of the Peace around the 1760s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, as well as for Selkirkshire (incorrectly as 'of Kirkshaws'). He was one of those involved in the action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. He was also one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time his estate was valued at £214. He was taxed for having 2 male servants in 1778 and 1 in 1779. He was also recorded at Stirches on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785 and 1787 (but Gilbert was recorded there in 1788). He was recorded as owner of Stirches in the 1788 county valuation, valued at £214 10s. He is probably the Mr. Chisholme from 'Sterchos' who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. In 1736 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Scott of Synton and Margaret Elliot; she died in 1792. His sons were: John (b.1737), who served in India and predeceased him; Alexander (b.1741), who died young; Gilbert (b.1743), who succeeded; and William (b.1749), who also served in the army. The witnesses to the 1737 baptism were William Scott of Whitehaugh and Alexander Scott of Synton. He was interred beside his wife in the family vault at Wilton. John (1737–1761) eldest son of John, 19th of that Ilk. He was a young officer, being Captain in the 79th Regiment and A.D.C. to Gen. Draper in India. He distinguished himself in the defence of Madras in 1759, but died of fever at Arcot 2 years later at age 24. John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: William (b.1762); Thomas (b.1763); Gilbert (b.1765); and Christian (b.1768). John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1789 he was recorded at Hermiston. His children included Janet (b.1787) and Robert (b.1789). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Newton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Capt. John Scott (1810–1868) of Stirches, son of Gilbert and Elizabeth Scott of Whitehaugh. He was born at Sciennes House, Edinburgh. He was Captain of the 4th Roxburgh, Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers), having the men regularly train at Stirches. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1852 he succeeded to the estate of his maternal uncle James Scott of Whitehaugh, with the condition of adding the name 'Scott' to his own. These lands included Whitehaugh, Whitehaugh Moor and Mains, Mervinslaw, Leeheads, Heip, Greensidehall, Broomiebrae and Scawmill. He gave a piece of ground at Parkhillhaugh as the site for the Snoot Kirk in the 1840s. He was also a Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia from 1856. He discussed the history of his family with the Archæological Society in 1859, as well as giving his views on the origin of the name 'Hawick' in 1860. He was made a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 186o. A Conservative in politics, he was generally popular with even the Liberals in Hawick. He tried to establish a pottery works at Stirches, during a time of depression in the tweed industry, turning it into a brick and tile works when the quality of clay was found to be inferior. He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He was also Chairman of the Carlisle, Langholm and Hawick Railway Company, arguing against the Newcastleton line of the North British. In 1840 he married Margaret, eldest daughter and co-heir of Robert Walker of Mumrills in Stirlingshire. They had 4 children, who were baptised in Wilton Parish: Christina Madeline (b.1841), who married Robert Pringle; Elizabeth Scott (b.1843); Gilbert Walter (b.1845), who must have died young; and John James (b.1851), who succeeded. His daughters are probably the 'Misses Chisholme of Stirches' who each showed a painting in the 1866 Museum temporary exhibition. His wife lived until the late 1890s, and one of her last acts was to return the standard of the Hawick Military Association to Hawick. His internment at Wilton Cemetery was one of the first military funerals seen in Hawick. He wrote some notes on his family genealogy, particularly squashing the idea that all Chisholmes were derived from the Highland line; some of this is contained in a letter he wrote following a talk by J.A.H. Murray, where the origin of his surname was mentioned. In 1866 he loaned to the Museum for its temporary exhibition several items (which may now be lost): 'a number of old document from the family muniment chest, including chsrters by James VI., dated 1575, by Walter Scott of Buccleuch, dated 1612, by the Earl of Bothwell, dated 1558; a tack of the vicarage tiends of Stirches, signed by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth; a marriage contract of a lady of the family and an ancestor of the present Sheriff; a burges ticket of the city of Edinburgh, presented to William Chisholme of Stirches in 1685; a spear head of the pennon carried by Robert Chisholme of that Ilk at the battle of Flodden, where he was slain; and the watch and spectacles which belonged to the Mrs Chisholme of a hundred years ago'. There is a portrait of him in his Volunteer Captain's uniform. John (b.1833/4) wool spinner in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Teviot Crescent with his wife Janet and daughter Agnes R. John (19th C.) shepherd near Saughtree. He discovered part of a boundary cross in the Abbey Sike in 1880, which was later given to Hawick Museum. Afterwards he moved to become a farmer in North Tyne. Col. John James Scott 'Jabber' (1851–1899) only son of John Scott and last of the local line of Chisholmes, 21st (or perhaps 22nd) of that Ilk and 7th of Stirches. He inherited the lands of Stirches and Whitehaugh, as well as others. His name is written into the Land Tax Rolls in the mid-19th century, as owner of these lands, as well as 'Nethercroft' (perhaps Netherhall) and parts of Silverbuthall. He was born in Hawick, but educated elsewhere, and entered the army in 1872. He was recorded as owner of part of Easter Heap and Nethercroft in about 1874. He served in the 9th Queen's Royal Lancers, seeing much foreign service including in Afghanistan, where he was decorated. He was transferred to the 5th Royal Irish Lancers in 1884 and for 2 years was Military Secretary to the Governor of Madras. He was wounded in battle on at least 2 occasions. He retired from the army in 1899, but raised a regiment of Imperial Light Horse and travelled to South Africa as their Colonel to take part in the Boer War. He was killed in a charge at Elandslaagte during the first few weeks of the War, leading the race for the summit, waving a red silk scarf tied to a walking-stick. Wounded in the leg and lung, his last words were 'My fellows are doing well' (before a bullet pierced his brain), this apparently reversing the tide of battle. A brass memorial plaque is in Wilton Church, and a pencil portrait by Melton Prior hangs in the Town Hall. The Museum also has the scarf that was found beside his body and was gifted to the Town by his brother officers (he is also referred to as 'Scott-Chisholm'). Margaret (16th/17th C.) nurse to Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington. In 1617 among the complaints made against the supporters of Walter Scott of Harden, was that she was attacked at Newhouse, where the assailants 'schamefullie and unhonnestlie strak and dang hir and left hir lyand for deid'. Mark (17th/18th C.) eldest son of W. (either Walter or William) and Helen Turnbull. In 1714 he married Barbara ('Barbry') daughter of Archibald Bennet of Chesters. That year he inherited the lands of West Fodderlee and part of Ruletownhead, which had been his mother's. He had 3 daughters: Barbara, who married George Minto, farmer at Langside and later at Ruletownhead, and she was mother of Lt.-Col. William Minto; Helen, who married Thomas White, a Jedburgh merchant; and Dorothea, who married Walter Turnbull of Firth. He is probably the 'Mr. Chisholme, Parkhill' who paid tax for 12 windows in Abbotrule Parish in 1753 (presumably for either Ruletownhead or West Fodderlee). He may also be the Mark of Parkhill who was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (and must have been quite old by then). Mary (17th C.) along with Margaret Turnbull she was accused of witchcraft in Lilliesleaf in 1650. It was reported that they went to Selkirk for trial by the ministers and elders 'quhairupon markis of Satan was found upon them both'. Their fate is not recorded. Mary of Stirches (b.1684) daughter of William the 17th of that Ilk. In 1708 she married William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1698. Note that her brother John married Mary, sister of her husband (who was thus her sister-in-law twice!). Her son was John and her daughter Mary married John Scott of Synton. Michael (16th C.) became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1565. In 1567 he had one third of the fruits of Paisley Abbey. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1572/3 he was 'Maister Michaell Cheisholme burges of Edinburgh' when he was surety for Walter of that Ilk. He thus seems likely to have been closely related to Walter. He is recorded in 1573 as a Bailie of Edinburgh. Perhaps the same Michael, Burgess of Edinburgh, was recorded as a cautioner in 1592 and 1595. He was also Dean of Guild, as recorded in 1603 when his daughter Margaret's husband Alexander Walker became a Burgess in Edinburgh. Mr. (17th C.) Hawick Schoolmaster from some period after 1665 until 1669. He probably only served temporarily between the formal appointments of Walter Martin and John Purdom. His first name is not recorded, but the timing is right for this to have been John, who was licensed to preach in 1667 and became minister of Lilliesleaf in 1674. Rev. (d.c.1646) recorded as minister of Ewes Parish in the early 1640s. This was according to Walter MacFarlane, as printed in 'Geographical Collections' in 1748, with no other record known and no first name given. He was said to have died in office and John Lithgow took over in 1646. Richard (13th C.) called 'de Chesholme' (or variant spellings), son of John, he is the second known Chisholme of that Ilk. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, swearing fealty to Edward I of England. His seal on the Rolls gives his name as 'S'RICARDI DE CHEISELM' and shows a boar's head. His sons were: Sir John, who succeeded; and Alexander, recorded forfeiting lands at the same time as his brother Sir John, and also Adam of Paxton. Richard (c.1338–c.68) priest associated with the Diocese of Moray, he was stated to be of noble birth and hence presumably from the family of Chisholme of that Ilk. He may have been a younger brother of William, who was also a priest. He succeeded William in the Church of Nevay in Angus (st. Andrews Diocese) in 1362 and was confirmed in the same Church of 'Neuet' or 'Neveth' in 1363. He studied in Paris in the 1360s. He resigned Nevay in favour of Dunbarney in Perthshire in 1367. He was a clerk in the service of the King of Scotland in the early 1360s and again in 1368, when his name last appears. His name is recorded as 'de Cheshelm'. Sir Robert (d.c.1366) son of Alexander, he was 5th of that Ilk. He fought at the battle of Neville's Cross in 1346 and was taken prisoner there. He witnessed a charter for Thomas, Count of Angus in about 1361. He married Anna, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood in Morayshire who was Governor of Castle Urquhart, and through whom he gained Highland estates. A dispute with the church regarding the payment of multures for his lands in Quarrelwood was not resolved until 1390. His known children are: Sir Robert, who succeeded; and William, who became Treasurer of Moray. His seal bore a horizontal stripe between 3 boars heads. Sir Robert (d.c.1390) son of Sir Robert, he was 6th of that Ilk, and was also referred to as 'Lord of Chesholme'. He was named after his maternal grandfather, Sir Robert Lauder of Quarrelwood (now Quarrywood), whose lands in Inverness, Nairn and Moray he inherited in 1366. He was knighted by David II in 1357 and made Constable of Urquhart Castle and Sheriff of Inverness-shire in about 1359. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Angus in about 1358. In 1362 he granted lands to the Church of Inverness for the benefit of the poor. He was still Keeper of Urquhart Castle in 1364 and 1365. In 1368/9 he witnessed a charter for Thomas Stewart, Earl of Angus. He is described as Justiciar of the Regality of Moray in a document of 1376 and he is recorded on a document relating to the lands of Badenoch in 1380. He resigned some lands in the Barony of Urquhart in 1382 and further lands in Inverness-shire in 1386. He was Sir Robert of 'Cheshelme' when he witnessed a charter in Forfarshire about 1390, and appended his seal to a document of 1393 relating to the lands of Aldrochty. He married Margaret, daughter of Haliburton of that Ilk (possibly Sir Walter) in Berwickshire. Their known children are: John, who succeeded, but died without male issue; Alexander, who succeeded to the northern titles and is the progenitor of the Chisholmes of Strathglass; Robert, who succeeded to the Roxburghshire lands and continued the Border line; and Janet (or Joneta), who married Hugh Rose of Kilravock in 1364, the marriage contract proving that Sir Robert was at that time head of both the northern and southern branches of the family. Robert (d.1438) son of Sir Robert and younger brother of John. He was given the Chisholme estate by his brother in 1413, including lands of 'Chisholm, Chisholm Mill, Chisholm Meadow, Muselie and Parkhill'. A breve from the Chancery of James I in 1436 directs the Sheriff of Teviotdale 'To serve Robert de Chesholme, brother of John of Chesholme, in all lands, etc., in which the latter died vest'. It is somewhat unclear whether he was older or younger than his brother Alexander (who inherited much of the lands in Inverness-shire). There is also some uncertainty about how the family estates were split between the brothers (and Morella, the only child of the oldest brother, John) and which branch of the family has claim to seniority. In 1442 either he or a later Robert was one of the men who gave a decree on a document relating to the Stirling family. He married Marion, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, Baron of Hawick. He had 4 sons: John, who succeeded; Robert, the 2nd son, whose descendants have not been traced; William, the 3rd, Vicar of Pettinain; and the youngest, Edmund, who founded the Cromlix (Perthshire) branch of the family. Robert (14th/15th C.) priest of Moray Diocese. In 1429 he was given the benefice of 'Kyrkynenloch' and the Deanery of Caithness. He is described in one papal decree as 'of noble race on both sides'. It is unclear how he was related to other Chisholmes. Robert of that Ilk (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to Whithchesters made at Branxholme for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was clearly recorded as 'Roberto de Chesholm de eodem'. However, this disagrees with published genealogies, which suggest that John (son of Robert) was Laird at that time. It is possible he is the same as the earlier Robert if the year of his death is in error. Perhaps the same Robert 'of Chesholme' witnessed the transumpt of a charter at Roslin in 1447. Robert (d.1517) 10th of that Ilk, son of John. He married Jane (or Janet), said to be a daughter of Elliot of Larriston. They had 3 sons and 1 daughter: Robert, who died at Flodden; John, who succeeded, but died unmarried; George, who succeeded his brother; and Mary, who possibly married William Scott of Harden and was mother of 'Auld Wat'. Robert (d.1513) eldest son of Robert. He went to Flodden under Douglas of Drumlanrig and was killed there, while his brother John returned with the family pennon. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk, recorded as witness in 1528. In 1529 he gave sasine to his eldest son John of a tenement in Selkirk. John in 'Pelgait' was one of the witnesses. Probably the same Robert had property in 'Pelhyll' in a document of 1530/1. He may be the Robert who was deceased in 1541 when his heir John and grandson George inherited a tenement in Selkirk. Robert (d.bef. 1580) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1580 he was deceased when Robert Scott of Haining gave sasine to his wife (Dame Scott of Haining) of an annual rent of 18 shillings coming from his lands at 'lie Peilhill'. Robert (16th C.) recorded as indweller in Selkirk in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction there. He witnessed further transactions in 1581 and 1581/2. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Esther Scott and their children included: Francis (b.1634); Helen (b.1637); Andrew (b.1640); Robert (b.1643); and John (b.1646). He may be the same Robert whose lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £4 in 1643. He could be the Robert who, along with Andrew, witnessed a baptism in 1656 for Walter Riddell and Margaret Chisholme (perhaps his daughter). Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their children included Janet (b.1643), Margaret (b.1645) and James (b.1647). His wife's surname is transcribed as 'Scot' in 1645. Robert (17th C.) notary in Selkirk, recorded in 1659. Probably the same Robert is recorded in about 1660 in Selkirk for an account relating to his wife. Robert (1653–c.87) second son of Walter of Stirches and brother of William. He was a lawyer who became Sheriff Clerk of Selkirkshire and the first of this branch of Chisholmes of Selkirk. It was his great-great-grandson who re-purchased the Chisholme estate in 1784. He was recorded as Sheriff Clerk of Selkirk in 1680 when he had a discharge for payment of his wife's account to the Burgh. In 1683 he was 'collector of the supply and excise to treasurer of Selkirk'. In 1684, conjointly with his brother William, he purchased Philhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee. He was Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1686, and in Selkirkshire may have been referred to as 'Chisholme of Philhope'. He had 2 sons, Walter and William, both of whom suceeded. Robert (17th C.) son of William, portioner of Parkhill. In 1649 he was served heir to his father's lands of East Parkhill. He was proprietor of Chisholme Mill in the list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He may have been married to Esther Scott and had children William and Jean; William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1643. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those 'not Listed yet payd yr'. He may have been a descendant of the Lairds of Stirches who purchased Philhope in the 1680s. He could be the Robert whose daughter Miriam was baptised in Roberton in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1718–21. He had previously been Schoolmaster at Selkirk; he is recorded there in 1697, 1698, 1702, 1706, 1708, 1709, 1711, 1712, 1714 and 1717 when receiving his salary, and in 1711 as witness to a baptism. He had another discharge with Selkirk in 1719, with the bond dated in 1716. He also served as a Bailie in Hawick in the 1720s. He demitted his position in 1721, when he is described as 'master and director of the school of Hawick'. James Anderson took over as Rector. He is probably the 'Mr Chisholme' who in Hawick in 1729 witnessed baptisms for weaver Walter Tinlin and for tailor Thomas Wilkie. He was then Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School, serving there 1721–29. He appears to have been fairly well off, because he loaned money to Jedburgh Council; this bond was later owned by Patrick Scott of Ancrum. He was essentially forced out as Rector of Jedburgh because of something to do with his conduct, although evidence was given that he had had 'a distemper in his body which had effected his head some time previously'. A later Robert who was 'Doctor' (i.e. assistant) at Jedburgh Grammar School 1737–39, and then Master of the English School 1739–58, may have been his son. It is not clear which branch of the Chisholmes he came from. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1716 he married Elizabeth, only daughter of the deceased Bailie Patrick Richardson. Their children included: Bessie (b.1717); James (b.1718); Bessie

(again, b.1721); Anne (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Elisabeth (b.1726); Ann (again, b.1728); and an unnamed child (b.1730). The witnesses in 1718 were John Turnbull and Andrew Cowan; his wife's surname is incorrectly given as 'Chisholm' in a different record of 1718, when the witnesses were merchants Robert Robson and William Oliver. The 1725 baptism was witnessed by cooper John Aitkin and weaver William Miller, the 1726 one by Robert Aitkin and William Chisholme and the 1728 one by Robert Elliot, the Laird of Harwood. He may be the 'Robin' who witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in Broadhaugh in 1729. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Selkirk. In 1737 he was involved in a case over debts. Probably the same Robert proceeded against debtors in Selkirk in 1739. In 1751 he was cited in Selkirk for non-payment for wool and also for keeping of 'an useless and unnescessary dog which destroyed lambs belonging to complainers'. He is probably the Robert recorded accused of debt in Selkirk in 1736. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Black in Roberton in 1741. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1768, along with weaver Francis Cairns, he witnessed a baptism for another weaver, John Smith. He could be the Robert who married Agnes Carr in Hawick in 1752. He could also be the weaver whose wife (perhaps a second wife) Isabel Little died in Hawick in 1804, by which time he was deceased. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mains in 1765 and Howcleuch in 1767. He married Isobel Coltart in Roberton in 1764. His children included Isobel (b.1765) and Andrew (b.1767). Robert (d.bef. 1791) described as 'Eggman' in Hawick in 1791 when his son Robert died. Presumably he was a supplier of eggs (or else this was a nickname). He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Tudhope in 1765. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Richardson. Robert Scott (19th C.) listed as owner of Chisholme house, among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was also recorded at Chisholme among the Roxburghshire signatories to an acto of parliament in 1844. He was probably the 'R.Chisholme, Esq. of Chisholme' listed as a landowner in Roberton Parish in 1841. He must have been from the branch of the family who were related to Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He may have been son of William Scott Chisholme and perhaps father of the later man of the same name. The Robert Scott Chisholme (with the usual local spelling), Lieutenant of the Royal Navy, recorded from the 1850s to 70s was also surely related. Robert (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Isabella Chalmers and their children included: Isabella (b.1821); Margaret (b.1823); Charles (b.1824); Jane (b.1827); Robert (b.1829); Helena (b.1831); and Thomas (b.1833). Thomas (14th C.) son of Alexander and grandson of Sir Robert of that Ilk. He is recorded as 'de Chesholm' in several documents in the late 1300s. In the period 1391–95 he received payments for the custody and maintenance of Urquhart Castle. In 1389 he is recorded on a document relating to the 'Wolf of Baddenoch' and his wife Euphemia, Countess of Ross. He also appears as witness along with William Treasurer of Moray, who must have been a near male relative. He was Thomas 'de Chesehelme', son and heir of Margaret 'de le Ard of Ercles', who had an indenture with William of Fenton for lands in several northern counties, including Inverness-shire. He could be the same Thomas who was a customs officer in Inverness in at least the period 1410–18. He married Margaret, daughter of Lauchlan Mackintosh. His children were: Alexander, Lord of Kinrossy, Strathglass and the Aird; and Wiland of Comar, who succeeded and whose son Wiland was the first to be known as 'The Chisholm'. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as a Bailie of Edinburgh in 1498/9. His name is recorded as 'Thomam Schesolme'. It is unclear how he might have been related to the local Chisholmes. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as tenant of the lands of 'Quhitehill Bra, alias Cathmurlee' in Ettrick. These lands were associated with Newark Castle. He was probably related to other Chisholmes of Selkirk. He could be the Thomas recorded in 1530 when he, John and several others swore in Selkirk that William Scott of Todrig owed no more than a mark to the deceased Stephen Lauder. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Girnwood in 1710 and 1716. He married Isabel Murray in 1708 and their children included: Walter (b.1710); John (b.1712); Janet (b.1714); James (b.1716); and Thomas (b.1719). Dr. Thomas (d.1773) only son of William, who was 2nd son of Robert, Sheriff-Clerk for Selkirkshire. He was hence great-grandson of Walter of Stirches. He became a surgeon in Sekirk and was also Dean of Guild there. In 1736 his father passed lands in King's Croft to him and then a year later he assigned them to his brother William. In 1737 there was claims against him for debts in Selkirk; he was described as 'chirurgeon apothecary in Selkirk'. He was also described as Dean of Guild in Selkirk in 1737. He is probably the Thomas, who, along with William and Henrietta was involved in court cases brought by John Todd and Isobel Scott in Selkirk in 1739 and another protest against him brought by Mary Murray. In 1743 Robert Riddell requested more time to pay off debts to him. Also in 1743 he and John Veitch were subjects of a complaint that they had taken the Selkirk Town Drummer and Piper to gather a mob when Andrew Pringle (of Yair) was speaking. In 1762 he had a court case against a Selkirk resident for debt. In 1731 he married Agnes Ballantyne. Their children were: Charles, who died at St. Helena; William, who made his fortune in the West Indies; James of Stonedge, who also spent time in Jamica; Margaret, who died in infancy; Ann, who died aged 22; and Agnes (or Margaret), who married Rev. William Scott, minister of Innerleithen, who was a son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse. His broad-brimmed hat was donated to the Museum in 1858. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Betty Telfer and their children included: Janet (b.1767); and George (b.1772). Walter (b.1757) and Thomas (b.1759), with no mother's name given, were likely also his children. Probably the same Thomas was recorded at Lilliesleaf in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Betty (b.1765); Robert (b.1767); William (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Joseph (b.1774). Thomas Stevenson (b.1832/3) son of William, he was a joiner living at 6 Tannage Close in 1861. In 1859 he married Margaret, daughter of Hugh Hamilton. Their children included Isabella. Walter (d.1588) 13th of that Ilk, referred to as 'Baron of Chisholme'. He succeeded his father George in 1536 and was infefted in 1538. He may also have been half-brother of William Cranstoun. However, he was part of the band of Scotts and others who were bound over not to harm Sir Peter Cranston in 1557 after trying to kill him near St. Mary's; the nature of the feud with the Cranstons is unclear (but it is romanticised in Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel'). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1558 he was 'alleget baille deput' of Melrose Abbey in a case involving a dispute in the parish church of Melrose over a precept delivered to occupiers of the Abbey's mills and yards; he said that 'gyf ony man or officer execute ony siclyk precept at the said prior and brether command he suld stuw his luggis'. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, commanding some Border cavalry who assisted at Langside after her escape from Lochleven Castle in 1568. In 1568/9 he was one of the supporters of Walter Scott of Branxholme listed on the contract to try to end the feud between Scotts and Kerrs, with the Kerrs of Hirsel and Corbet having to appear at Melrose Kirk to apologise. He was warded in 1571 according to the records of the Privy Council. He shared in several exploits with Scott of Buccleuch and in 1571 accompanied the young Buccleuch on the raid on Stirling in which his horse was shot but he escaped. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. There are also frequent complaints against him by the English wardens. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, and gave assurance that he would not support Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst; his surety was Michael, Burgess of Edinburgh, who must have been related to him. Also in 1573 he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh'. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining, witnessed at Todrig Shank, along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, John Scott of Roberton and William Dalgleish in Crookston. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Also in 1581 he witnessed a 'letter of slains' in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. In 1581 he and his wife Agnes Borthwick gave sasine of her liferent of Bowland in Stow to William Tait; one of the witnesses was James Borthwick in Bowland (who was surely related to his wife). He is probably the 'lard of Chesholme' listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 he appears as a guarantor for bills submitted by Englishmen regarding raids by Archibald, son of Gavin Elliot of Falnash, and others. Also in 1587 Robert Scott of Haining and Walter Cairncross served as sureties for him. He is probably 'L. of Chesholme of that ilk' listed in Monipennie's c.1594 (but put together earlier) compilation of Border lairds. He married Ann, daughter of William Scott of Chapelhill and their children were: Walter, who succeeded; James of Hayerhope in Peeblesshire; and an unnamed daughter. The date of his death is uncertain, since he is stated in genealogies to have died in 1588, and yet in 1579 he was recorded as 'umquhile Walter Chisholme of that ilk' when his natural son George acknowledged the receipt of money from James Pringle in Hoppringle; additionally he was deceased in 1580 when his son George was warned to receive redemption money for an annual rent from Bernard Barker in Melrose, with witnesses including Alexander in Parkhill, James his (Walter's) brother and Wattie Scott of Hassendean. Later in 1580 George is recorded as brother of Walter of that Ilk. it is possible that there are 2 generations of Walters compounded here. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Haining in 1580 when he was part of an agreement made in Selkirk involving the bark of the wood called 'Hislieside' bought from Robert Scott of Aikwood. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He was surely related to William, who was also at Essenside. Walter (d.1618) 14th of that Ilk, son of Walter. He is probably the Laird of Chisholme accused of being on a raid on Bewcastle and Gilsland in 1588, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the young Laird of Whithaugh, when they are said to have run into English watchmen and killed 4 of them. He was infefted in his father's estate in 1589. Also in 1589 he complained about being 'put to the horn' for not paying the tax on his lands of 'Bowshank and Borland in the shire of Edinburgh' (possibly Bowshank and Bowland north of Galashiels), but had subsequently made payment. He would have been the Laird listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives; his cautioners were Robert Scott of Haining and Walter Cairncross of Lugate (near Stow); he and Will Elliot of Falnash were also ordered to present Will's bbother Archie Elliot to the court. He is included in a list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593. His tenants Thomas Tait ('in Bowland') and others instigated letters of 'horning' against some Hoppringles in 1597 for stealing sheep. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He was Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose in the early years of the 17th century, holding the Bailie Courts. In 1607 he was referred to as the appointee of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who was 'Bailie Principal'. He was also said to be 'alwayis secund and thrid of consanguinite discendand from the said hous of Bukcleugh'. He was accused of attacking a crippled vendor at Melrose market in 1616, along with his son James and others; however, they were all exonerated because of lack of proof of the claims made against them. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council, but appeared later to be responsible for his tenants and servants. He married Margaret, daughter of John Graham of Newark. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; and James. Walter (d.1652) 15th of that Ilk, son of Walter. He was the last direct owner of the Chisholme estate. Being a minor at the death of his father, the estate was under the control of his feudal superior, Douglas of Drumlanrig, who had the right to arrange his marriage. On Walter refusing to marry a daughter of Robert Dalyell of Elliock (later the Earl of Carnwath) the wardship passed to her brother William Dalyell. Walter married Margaret Stirling, was unable or unwilling to settle the required fine and the estate passed to Dalyell in 1624. He became a soldier of fortune, accepting a commission in a regiment commanded by the Marquess of Hamilton about 1631. He went to Germany, fighting under Gustavus Adolphus, then fought for Sweden at Lutzen, before serving about 10 years in the army in Holland, returning only in 1642. He was a Royalist supporter in the civil war, joining Montrose with a body of Border cavalry, being wounded at Naseby and returning to Scotland when Charles surrendered. He again served in the King's army in 1648 and was taken prisoner at the battle of Preston. After a long imprisonment at Lancaster Castle he was banished overseas and died several years later at Breda in the Netherlands. His children included: Walter, who suceeded; and William, who settled in the North of England. Walter of Parkhill (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He is recorded in Selkirk in 1629. In 1630 he was the 'Walter Schisholme in Parkhill' who was assignee of Mary Borthwick, widow of Alexander Pringle of Smailholm. In 1633 he was listed as owing more than £300 to the Earl of Buccleuch; his eldest son James was also listed. He was also listed in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with his lands valued at £200. He is probably the same Walter of Wester Parkhill who was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s.

He was presumably descended from Alexander of Parkhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. A headstone for his children Elizabeth (d.1652) and Walter (d.1620) is one of the earliest legible in Bedrule kirkyard. It is unclear how he was related to other Chisholmes. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Lidderdale, and their children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1647). Perhaps the same Walter witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in 1654. Bailie Walter (d.1681) 16th of that Ilk, eldest son of Walter (the last family owner of the Chisholme estate), he was the first of Stirches. He was a successful merchant in Hawick, becoming a member of the council when little over 20 years old. He signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. In 1646 he was ordained to pay £5 for his fine, in contempning the Bailies' ordnance to go and convey James Elliot, sodger, to Jedburt to his cullors'. He was thus presumably not a supporter of the Covenanter army. Probably the same Walter was elected to the Council in 1648. He also apears to have acted as Procurator Fiscal for Hawick in the 1640s. He was a Bailie in the 1650s and in 1660 he was Bailie when he promised that he would not disobey the Burgh's rules regarding 'the question of neighbourhood for theiking' between him and James Thorbrand (presumably owner of neighbouring land). He built Stirches House from the much cruder tower that existed previously. In 1650 he married Margaret, only daughter of Maj. James Balderstone, through whom he gained a considerable fortune (however, this may be confusion with his son William, who married Mary Brotherstone). This enabled him to purchase Stirches (or 'Stirkshaws') from Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1660. In 1660 he had a charter for the 'six-merk land of Stirkshaws', granted by Thomas Scott of Whitslade; he had the lands in liferent, with his son William holding the lands in fee and he was described at that time as 'late bailie burgess of Hawick' (although incorrectly called 'William' in the description of the division of Wilton Common a century later). Also in 1660 he is referred to as 'Laird of Stirkshaws' in the Town Book when the Council unanimously ordered him to resign as a Bailie; the precise reason for this unusual occurence is not explained, but perhaps it was simply because he was going to be living in Wilton. In 1662 he was appointed by the Council to 'stent the town in £100 for discussing the suspension against the town of Jedburgh'. He was described as a 'late bailie' when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. His children included: William (b.1652), the eldest son, who succeeded; Robert (b.1653), who founded the Selkirk branch of the family; and possibly James, merchant in Hawick. His wife may be the 'widow Chisholme' who paid tax for 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. Walter recorded in 1661 he and James witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for John Johnstone in Alemoor. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Parkhill (17th C.) perhaps son of Andrew of Parkhill. He married Helen Turnbull, the heiress of Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. In 1690 he gave information for the testament describing the assets of his wife's parents when they died the previous year. He was probably the Walter, married to Helen Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Helen (b.1684) and Helen (again, b.1686). The witnesses in 1684 were Francis Scott in Branxholme and James Ogilvie. He and his wife's son Mark inherited some of the same Abbotrule lands through a marriage contract in 1714. He could be the Walter who leased the east end of Branxholme Muir along with Andrew (perhaps his father) in 1691, 1696 and 1697. Walter (17th C.) resident at Abbotrule Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He married Isabel Tait and their children included: William (b.1700); James (b.1702); Marion (b.1704); Walter (b.1706); Christian (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); John (b.1712); and Margaret (b.1714). He may be the Walter who was recorded in 1702 in Selkirk receiving payment for supplying rope for the town boat. He may also be the Walter whose wife Isobel 'Creacher' is recorded in a discharge of 1734. Walter (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert (Sheriff Clerk for Selkirkshire). He was served heir to his father in 1688, including the lands of Philhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee. However, he died unmarried and they passed to his brother William. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hoscote in at least the period 1703–1710 and at Chisholme Mill in 1713. Parish in 1702. His children, baptised in Roberton, probably included some of: Mary (b.1703); Margaret (b.1703); Robert (b.1704); an unnamed daughter (b.1705); Andrew (b.1710); Thomas (b.1710); and Margaret (again, b.1713). Walter (18th C.) leased the east end of Branxholme Muir along with William in 1735. He may have been brother of William of Parkhill. It is also possible he is the same as the Walter who leased Branxholme Muir 4 decades earlier. Walter (18th C.) listed as gardener at Burnhead in 1785, and 'Rideingman' in 1786, when he was working for William Scott. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller, along with David Fiddes, at Roughheugh Mill, in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the Walter whose mother died in 1795. Walter (19th C.) recorded as the 42nd member of the Archæological Society in 1856. His designation appears to be 'Union St'. William (c.1334–c.1401) church official recorded several times in the 1360s to 1390s and said to be of noble birth, so certainly related to the Chisholmes of that Ilk. He was possibly a younger son of Alexander of that Ilk and brother of Sir Robert, although it has also been suggested that he was a son of Robert. He was B.A. and Licentiate of Arts at Paris 1353/4, under Walter Wardlaw (from the Wilton family, and hence effectively a neighbour) and in 1354 Wardlaw allowed him to delay paying his fees. He was at some other university before 1360 and then Paris again until about 1363. In 1360 there was a request by King David 'on behalf of his clerk, William de Cheshelm, licentiate in arts, and S.C.L. of noble birth' for a benefice in St. Andrews Diocese, although he already held the Church of 'Nevet' (i.e. Nevay in Angus). In 1361 he was made perpetual vicar of Falkirk in St. Andrews Diocese. In 1364 he had permission to travel to England to study (probably in Oxford) and again in 1365 to go on a pilgrimage to Amiens. By 1367/8 he was B. Dec. and a fully qualified priest. He was granted the Treasurership of Moray in 1368, confirmed in 1370/1 and still held the position in 1399. After spending time on the Continent, he was back in Scotland by 1371, and seems thereafter to have spent his time in Moray. He was Proctor to the Bishop of Moray in 1375 and a witness in Moray in 1378. He further served as witness at Elgin in 1389/90 and served as Chancellor to the Earl of Moray in 1390. In 1394 he was 'priest, M.A. bachelor of canon law, of noble birth' when there was a request for him to be granted a canonry of Ross, although aleady holding the Treasurership of Moray and a canonry and prebend of Aberdeen. His name sometimes occurs along with Thomas 'de Chesholm', who was surely a close relative. He is recorded as witness to a deed involving the Burgh of Elgin in 1399. In 1400/1 he was referred to as 'papal subcollector' when he was granted a Canonry and Prebend of Spynie in Moray. He was William 'de Cheseholm' in 1402 when it was reported that his death had left vacant the Prebend of Spynie in Moray. He was succeeded in the Church of Nevay by Richard, who may have been a younger brother. William (14th/15th C.) monk recorded in 1386 receiving payment for the Abbot of Paisley. He was later Abbot of Paisley, holding this position until about 1414. He was distinct from the contemporary priest of the same name, and it is unclear how he was related to other Chisholmes. William (15th C.) 3rd son of Robert and Marion Douglas of Drumlanrig. He trained for the church and became Vicar of 'Pettin' (probably Pettinain in Lanarkshire). William (15th/16th C.) leased a quarter of the eastern lands of 'Warmwod' in Ettrick Ward in 1479. Probably the same William was recorded in 1499 when he was granted the dues from lands in Ettrick Forest. He continued to receive payments from Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in 1502–07. Perhaps the same William had remission (along with Robert and John Davidson) for the murder of James Wilkinson at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Willelmo Chesem' as witness to a sasine in Edinburgh in 1502. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1526/7 and 1532. Perhaps the same William was recorded in 1532 in connection with the theft of sheep at Selkirk. He may be the William who in 1539 acted as warden in Falside for a dispute between different Scotts over the lands there; it seems he represented Thomas (son of Adam) and Robert of Howpasley. William (16th C.) recorded as 'Volle Chesholme Quhithauch bray' in 1540/1. He was presumably a resident of Whithaughbrae in Ettrick. He was one of the men agreeing that John Scott was responsible for the death of Walter Down. Dick, George and William, from Peebles, were also listed, and may have been related. William (16th C.) recorded in Whitslade in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He could be the William recorded owning land in Selkirk in 1580/1. William (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of George of that Ilk. He was trained as a cleric and associated with Melrose Abbey. It is said that a tower in the ruins was called 'Chisholme's Tower' after him. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He was surely related to Walter, who was also at Essenside. William (17th C.) portioner of Parkhill near Chisholme. In 1649 his son Robert in Chisholme Mill was served heir to his lands of East Parkhill. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Robert was born in 1647. William (17th C.) notary recorded in Selkirk in 1664 and 1668. William (17th C.) son of Andrew of Parkhill. In 1681 he became an apprentice tailor in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) son of Robert, tenant in Chisholme Mill, and probably grandson of William, portioner of Parkhill. In 1643 he became an apprentice merchant with David 'Admistoun' in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (1652–1707) 17th of that Ilk and of Stirches, son of Walter (note that Tancred gets these early generations confused). He was named as holder of Stirches 'in fee' in 1660, when his father Walter purchased the estate from Thomas Scott of Whitslade (with Walter retaining the liferent). He paid the land tax on £214 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He is probably the William, son of Walter 'of Strittshawes' in a bond of 1682. In 1684, along with his brother Robert, he purchased Philhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee. He trained as a lawyer, working for many years in Edinburgh and becoming a Burgess of that city in 1685. In 1690 he was one of the heritors (along with his son John) accused of instigating the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk. He was the Laird in 1694 when the tax was paid on 4 hearths for 'Stirkshaus his house'. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, and was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Selkirkshire, being referred to as 'of Broadlies' and also 'of Stirkshaws' in his capacity as Laird of Philhope. He married Mary, heiress of James Brotherstone of Glencairn, at age 18, and she died in 1736, aged 83 (her father may have been the minister of Glencairn, in Dumfriesshire, who was deprived in 1662 and died before 1679); the bells were rung for 'Lady Stirkshaw's burial' in 1734, which may have been her. His children were: John, who succeeded him; and Mary (b.1684), who married William Oliver of Dinlabyre. William (17th/18th C.) married Ann Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1702 he married Lillias Littlejohn. William of Broadlee (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert, who was Sheriff-Clerk for Selkirkshire, and grandson of Walter of Stirches. He inherited part of the lands of Philhope, Rouchhope and Broadlee from his brother Walter. He could be the William who had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707 and a representation to the Magistrates and Council there in 1720, as well as a claim for a debt in 1720 and accounts in 1721 and 1732. In 1713 he sold his interest in the Borthwick lands to John of Stirches, his cousin. In 1723 he is still 'of Broadlie' when he had a case against Selkirk merchant James Riddell for debt. He is probably the William, who, along with Thomas and Henrietta was involved in court cases brought by John Todd and Isabel Scott in Selkirk in 1739. In 1702 in Selkirk he married Ann, sister of John Rutherford of Knowesouth, who was sister-in-law of Isabella Scott of Raeburn and daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. Their surviving children were: Thomas, who was a surgeon in Selkirk; and Henrietta (or 'Heny'), who in 1732 married Robert Mercer, commission clerk of Selkirkshire and secondly, in 1741, married Andrew Lang, lawyer of Selkirk. Other children included: Grissel (b.1703), baptised in Roberton Parish; Robert (b.1715), baptised in Selkirk; and Christian (b.1716) also baptised in Selkirk. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his include: Isobel (b.1704); Helen (b.1705); Gideon (b.1707); Andrew (again, b.1707); Andrew (b.1711); and Isobel (b.1712). It appears that he secondly married Mary Murray; in 1736 the couple assigned to their son Thomas (surgeon and Dean of Guild in Selkirk) their lands in King's Croft, which a year later passed to their other son William. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as a 'student' in 1680 when he and another student witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish. It seems possible that he was connected with the Parish Kirk in some way. William of Parkhill (17th/18th C.) owner of half of Fodderlee in 1707. This probably included the lands of West Fodderlee and Ruletownhead, valued together at £175. He is probably the same as William of 'Easterparkhill' recorded in the early 1700s in a summons by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Coldhouse in 1709. He is described as an 'indweller' in Canongate Parish in Edinburgh when he married Janet McLellan in 1721. He is also probably the 'W. Chisholm' recorded in a post-nuptial contract with Helen Turnbull in 1714 when his wife's lands of West Fodderlee and part of Ruletownhead were inherited by their son Mark (who married Barbara, daughter of Archibald Bennet of Chesters). There is also a Walter of Wester Parkhill recorded becoming heir in 1682; this may have been his father. He is probably the William who leased the east end of Branxholme Muir along with Walter in 1735. There may be more than one William compounded here, but earlier Williams in Parkhill were probably his ancestors. It is possible that his wife was the Helen recorded paying the window tax at Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1748. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1716 for carrier Walter Gledstains, in 1719 for William Sanderson, tenant in Hawick, in 1720 for John 'called Laird', who was surely related to him, and in 1723 for tailor Thomas Wilkie and Margaret Purdom (perhaps his sister-in-law). He may be the William who in 1726 witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert. In 1712 he married Elizabeth Purdom, who may have been daughter of Schoolmaster John Purdom. Their children included: John (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); John (again, b.1717); James (b.1719); William (b.1721); Robert (b.1723); and Elizabeth (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 were Henry Orrock and Bailie Purdom. He may be the William who rented the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1760. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as Magistrate in Selkirk in 1723 and 'late Bailie' there in 1737. His wife was a Murray, mentioned in 1737. He probably also the William who had a complaint with a Selkirk resident in 1736 and a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1732. He is probably the William, married to Mary Murray, whose children baptised in Selkirk included: Elizabeth (b.1727); Jean (b.1729); and John (b.1731). William (18th C.) 2nd son of John of that Ilk and Stirches. In the 1734 instrument of sasine for Stirches, he is named as his father's 2nd son and younger brother of John. William (18th C.) son of William and brother of Dr. Thomas. In 1737 his brother assigned to him the lands in King's Croft in Selkirk that had belonged to their father. William of Chisholme (1737–1802) 2nd son of Thomas, surgeon in Selkirk, and descendant of Walter of Stirches. He was educated in medicine and made his fortune in the West Indies, where he was owner of Thomas's River, North Hall, Health Crawl and Breadland Pen in Clarendon, Jamaica. He also had a part share in Trout Hall, Green River, Troys and Chisholm's Mammee Gully pen in Jamaica, with his brother James being the main owner. At this time these plantations would have been worked using slaves from Africa. He returned to Scotland in around 1780, perhaps in 1783. He then purchased the old family lands of Chisholme from Sir James Stewart of Coltness. By 1788 he also owned the adjacent lands of Easter Parkhill and Chisholme Mill. He paid the land tax for Philhope in Roberton Parish in 1785. In the 1788 draft valuation for the county of Roxburghshire, he is recorded as owner of Philhope, Broadlee, Chisholme, Woodburn, Easter Parkhill and Chisholme Mill, with a combined value of £782 13s 4d. He is described as rich and living in London in a document of 1788, stating that he was a voter in Selkirkshire and about to be added as a voter in Roxburghshire, being 'obliged to the Duke of Buccleugh for his vote in Roxburghshire'; the description adds that he 'says he is head of his clan'. He was recorded as 'William Chisholm of Chisholm Esqr.' in 1797, when taxed for having a footman. He is recorded as owner of Chisholme on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Chisholme in the same year. In 1802 he paid the land tax at Philhope. He was still listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 as owner of Chisholme, Woodburn, Chisholme Mill, Easter Parkhill and Broadlee. He died at Carlisle on a trip to London, where he had a house at Queen Anne Street. He is said to have claimed himself as the head of the Chisholme Clan, although that honour formally lay with 'The Chisholme of the North'. He never married, but had an illegitimate son, Charles, who succeeded to the estate, and to whom he left £20,000. He also left £20 each to the poor of the Parishes of Selkirk and Roberton, with his plantations going to his brother James. William (1749–1823) 4th son of John, 19th of that Ilk and Stirches. He was an ensign in the 51st Regiment, serving under his relative Lord Heathfield. He was present at the capture of Minorca and served in the American War. He retired as Captain. He married Maria, only daughter of Capt. Charles Eddington. He died at Sheffield. William (1785–1834) of Chisholme House, descended from the Selkirk Chisholmes and Walter, 1st laird of Stirches, through his mother Agnes (not Margaret as suggested in some sources), youngest daughter of Thomas. There are some contradictory accounts, perhaps confusing him with his uncles William and James. His father was Rev. William Scott, minister of Innerleithen, who was a son of Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He changed his surname when he inherited (or perhaps purchased) Chisholme House after the death of his cousin Charles in 1823. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert Scott Chisholme, who is recorded as owner of Chisholme in 1837 and in the 1840s. William (b.1803/4) yarn scourer in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Walter's Wynd. He married Mary Oliver in 1825, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Walter (b.1826); William Oliver (b.1828); Thomas Stevenson (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Frederick (b.1838). William Scott (19th C.) probably the son of Robert Scott Chisholme, and perhaps grandson of the previous William Scott Chisholme. He was descended from Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He was recorded as owner of Chisholme in a parliamentary record of 1853, but also as 'younger' of Chisholme in 1838. He was said to have been the last of the family to own Chisholme House, with the house remaining in the family until 1871. It seems likely that he was son of Robert Scott Chisholme who was owner in the late 1830s and into to the 1840s. William (19th C.) married Isabella Henderson in 1850, the marriage recorded in both Bedrule and Kelso Parishes. William Oliver (19th C.) smith and machine-fitter in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Melgund Place. He married Christian Thomson in Wilton in 1853. Their children included George (b.1851), Margaret G. (b.1854) and Mary O. (also spelled 'Chisholm', along with other earlier spellings such as 'Cheisholm', 'Cheisholme', 'Chesam', 'Chesame', 'Cheseholm', 'Cheseholme', 'Cheshelm', 'Chesholm', 'Chesholme', 'Chesolme', 'Chesseholme', 'Chishom', 'Chishome', 'Chisim', 'Chisime', 'Chism', 'Chisolm', Chizhom', etc.; 'Chisholme' is the usual spelling for the Border branch of the family).

Chisholmebraes (chi-zum-brāz) n. former farmstead near Chisholme, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when the farmers were 'Messrs. Turnbull & Elliot'.

Chisholme Hoose (chi-zum-hoos) n. Georgian mansion about 6 miles west of Hawick in the Borthwick Water area, now used by a religious group. It is reached off the side road connecting the Borthwick and Teviot valleys via Branxholme Loch. The estate was the original seat of the Chisholme family from about the middle of the 13th century until 1624. It was part of Hawick Parish until annexed to Roberton in 1689. There was once also a blacksmiths near here (at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot). The current house was built in the mid-18th century by the Chisholmes, later passing to the Douglases and the Homes. Around 1784 it was bought by William Chisholme, a descendant of the Chisholmes of Chisholme, who had made his fortune in the West Indies. Around 1860 it was bought by the tustees of William Richardson Dickson (related to the Hassendean nurserymen family), and inherited by his daughter Blanche Margaret when he died in 1881. The Henderson family modernised it at the end of the 19th century, and it lay empty from the 1950s until bought by the Beshara School in 1973. The house is 3 1/2 stories with Palladian windows flanking a collonaded porch. 1909 additions were by J. Jerdan & Son.

Chisholme Loch (chi-zum-loch) n. early name for Branxholme Wester Loch. The name was still in use in the early 20th century (it appears to be marked 'Chishamra L.' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Chisholme Mill (chi-zum-mil) n. former farm on the Chisholme estate, perhaps near where the Snoot Kirk was built, presumably once having a corn mill. Robert Chisholme is recorded as tenant in 1649. There were 7 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Chisholme, Esther Scott, John Wishart, Janet Little, William Chisholme, Katherine Scott and Jean Chisholme. Along with much of the area south of the Borthwick it was transferred from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. Since 1707 the lands were part of Easter Parkhill rather that Wester Parkhill. Walter Chisholme was there in 1713 and John Murray in 1720. 'Chisholme Milne or Parkhill' was valued at £133 6s 8d in the 1740s. In 1788 it was listed as one third of the former lands of Wester Parkhill, and at that time back in the hands of Chisholme of Chisholme, valued at £33 6s 8d; in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was still listed in the same way. In about 1874 the owner is recorded as William Richardson Dickson of Alton. (also written 'Chisholmemilne', 'Chisholmmill', 'Chisholm milne', 'chisom-milne' and variants; it is 'Chisholme mylne' on a parish map of 1650).

the Chisholmes (thu-chiz-umz) n. Clan that originated in Roxburghshire and Berwickshire, but gained prominence in the Highlands. The earliest record is of Alexander de Chesholme in 1248, and they were possibly a Norman family that acquired Border lands in the 12th century. The original seat was at Chisholme, in the Borthwick valley, about 6 miles from Hawick, which they held until the 17th century. The family continued as Chisholme of that Ilk and Stirches, with the local family dying out when their last chief was killed in the Boer War in 1899. Meanwhile the Highland line, began in the 14th century, has thrived. The local family motto is 'Vi et Virtue' (by strength and by worth). The arms contained a boar's head, the crest being an armoured arm, with 2 knights as supporters. The carved family coat of arms from old Stirches House is in the Museum. Many Chisholme graves are at Roberton cemetery, while the 18th and 19th century members of the main family are in old Wilton cemetery (also spelled Chisholme and other variants).

Chisholme's Toor (chi-zumz-toor) n. former name for a tower in the ruins of Melrose Abbey. It has been suggested that it was named after William, 3rd son of George Chisholme of that Ilk, who was associated with the Abbey in the mid-to-late 16th century. It may have been an example of lodgings that were built within the ruins of the Abbey and was still visible in the mid-18th century.

the Chisholme Wud (thu-chi-zum-wud) n. name used locally for the woods around Chisholme House, planted in the 19th century.

Chisnell (chiz-nel) n. Rev. P.D. Superintendent of Hawick Home Mission from 1957 until 1962. He was the first such permanent pastor since an unsuccessful attempt a couple of decades earlier. He moved to St. Monan's Congregational Church.

chist (chist) n. chest, part of the upper body or large box – 'A've got a right pain in ma chist', 'it's bad for yer chist', 'its in the chist o drawers', 'Elizabeth Miller, convicted of stealing and surreptiously theieving and away taking out of lockfast chists . . . ' [BR1695], 'Kist = chest. But note chist o drawers, and note chist = the human chest' [ECS], 'A'd aye a bad chist' [CoH] (cf. kist).

the chistin (thu-chis-tin) n., arch. a chesting, undertaker's term for arranging a body in a coffin. There would formerly be a short service when this happened (also kistin).

chitter (chi-tur, chi'-ur) v. to shiver, tremble with cold, chatter, rattle, vibrate – 'Robbie tried a verse, though his teeth were chittering . . . ' [WNK], 'He shook the frost frae his chitterin' wing, Syne thow'd his taes, and began to sing' [JT], 'I keekit roond the stane wi' caution An chitterin' fear . . . ' [WP], 'For it's chitterin work wi cleek and stick, But naebody's there . . . ' [DH], 'Some'll wade, chitterin', 'bune their kneis, Leatherin Esk wi saumon-fleis' [DH], '. . . ' [BR1638], '. . . when requyred by ane quartermaster of their own trade, two of which they are yeirly to choyce . . . ' [BR1694] (also written 'choyce'; cf. the earlier chese).

chokit (chō-kee', -ki') pp. choked – '. . . an' the thors sprang up, an' choket them' [HSR] (also chowkit).

cholera (ko-le-ru) n. Hawick first suffered an epidemic in 1832, when there was an outbreak in January and February, contained to the West-end, where 4 people died, and a worse outbreak in October. In 1832 there were together 79 cases, claiming 39 lives. Dr. John Douglas wrote a detailed account of the outbreak of that year, including his own symptoms. Thousands of Scottish emigrants to Canada fell victim to the disease in 1834. In an outbreak in 1840 there are 10 people listed in the Town's death register on the same day. There was another minor outbreak in Hawick in 1847. But the most devastating epidemic was in 1849, when there were 558 cases in the area over a period of about 15 weeks, resulting in 197 victims, 141 from Hawick and 56 from Wilton. In addition there were 29 fatalities in Denholm and many more in other local villages. The entire group of Irish navvies working on the railway, who drank from a spring that fed into the Teviot near the goods yard (later Mansfield Mills), died from the disease. The Hawick and Wilton victims were buried in a mass grave in the Wellogate Cemetery, with no ceremony, although a commemorative plaque was erected in 1999. In attempts to ward off the illness, tar barrels were burning in the streets and tar pitchers up the closes. A house on what became Morrison Place was used to treat some of the afflicted and was known as the 'Cholera Hospital'. A description of the 1849 tragedy was written by Rev. J.A. Wallace. The outbreak began in Orrock Place with the wife of an Irish navvy named Crombie (or Crummie), buried on the last day of July, and it lasted much of the year (with the final death on 18th November). Walter Wilson was the most prominent townsman who died, with people from all walks of life struck apparently indiscriminately. The High Street closes and the 'Raws' were particularly hard hit. Nearby villages and rural communities were also not immune, with William Kiddy, the minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk dying in 1849. One positive outcome was the building of new housing, such as at the Terraces, along with the Allan Water reservoir and eventually a sewerage plant.

choosen (choo-zin) adj., arch. chosen – 'For the Lord hæs chusin Jacob untill himsel' . . . ' [HSR].

Clapperton (klaw-pur'-in) n. Chalmers Moyes educated at Hawick High School, he worked in the Geography Department at Aberdeen University. He edited 'Scotland a new study' in 1983. James (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. In 1649 he was one of 2 men chosen 'collectors of the stent of the east wattir'. He is probably the James who married Margaret Hardie and whose children born in Hawick included Robert (b.1648), Isobel (b.1651) and Helen (b.1652). John (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army 'in case the horse come nocht back again or be lost'. He is probably the John, married to Margaret Douglas, whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1634. John (c.1705–bef. 1778) labourer on farms near Hawick Common. From about 1731 he lived at Closses and Sea Croft. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He is probably the Thomas whose son Adam was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1727. His son John died in Hawick in 1777 and his wife Janet 'Fallow' in 1778. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire, with the annotation 'Subst.', presumably meaning that he did not serve in the Militia. His name appears again in 1798, but Walter Rule (son of painter William Rule) from Jedburgh served as substitute for him (with his name being incorrectly listed as 'John'). Robert (b.1802/3) born in Selkirkshire, he was foreman at the woollen mill in Wilton Dean. In 1841 he was living at Burn Row, Wilton Dean and in 1851 was at No. 1, with his occupation now 'Manufacturer of Woollen Yarn'. His wife was Margaret and their children included Adam, Gilbert, John, Elizabeth, Janet, Margaret, Helen and Agnes. Thomas J. (1879–1962) sculptor from Galashiels, who settled in London. He is responsible for the statue of Robert the Bruce at the entrance to Edinburgh Castle, as well as for 'the Border Reiver' statue in Galashiels, 'the Fletcher' and Mungo Park memorials in Selkirk, and the war memorial at Minto. He put in a design for the 1514 Memorial in Hawick, but was unsuccessful. In 1939 he also sculpted the bronze of Jimmie Guthrie that stands in the Park. There is a permanent exhibition of his life and work in Old Gala House.

Clare (klār) n. Richard (b.c.1286) grandson of the Earl of Gloucester and nephew of Margaret de Clare, Countess of Cornwall. Sometime between 1306 and 1311 he obtained the 'benefice' of Hawick church, along with several others, at the insistence of his aunt and with the Pope's permission. He was thus Rector of Hawick for several years, although it is doubtful if he ever set foot in the town; he was Canon, Rector or Prebendary of churches all over Britain, including Penkridge (near Lichfield), Youghal (in Ireland) and Dunmowe (in Essex). He resigned Hawick probably in 1311. He may be the Clerk who was granted lands in Hertfordshire by Richard de Clare, Lord of Thomon in Connaught. He should not to be confused with his more famous ancestor the Earl of Pembroke (often written 'de Clare').

clare constat (kla-rā-kon-stat) n., arch. deed formerly executed in Scots law by a superior to complete the process of inheritance of lands of a vassal. Normally this would mean that the vassal was recently deceased. The term usually occurs in the phrase 'precept of clare constat', and the words derive from the opening Latin of the deed, meaning 'it is clearly established' – 'The session petitioned the Duchess of Buccleuch to grant a precept of clare constat to archibald Scott of Boonraw . . . ' [PR1714].

Clarilaw (klā-ree-law??) n. hamlet on the B6359, about 3 miles north-east of Hawick. John Scott held the lands in the late 15th century, and Adam Scott of Clarilaw was probably a younger son of James Scott of Kirkurd. The Scotts of Alton were derived from this branch of the family. Simon Turnbull is recorded there in 1493. There were Turnbulls there in the 16th and 17th centuries, the last Turnbull Laird probably being Hector, who was last recorded in 1619. For a while there were two separate farms, known as 'Wester Clarilaw' and 'Easter Clarilaw', with the west part being held by Scotts and the east part by Turnbulls. The west part passed back to the Scotts of Burnhead (descended from Hassendean and ultimately Buccleuch) through Hector Turnbull's daughter Elizabeth marrying Robert Scott, tenant of Burnhead. This western part may be the same as the lands referred to as 'Cresswell'. Robert Scott in Clarilaw was listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. The 'Mounkland' was referred to as being in Clarilaw in about 1620. In 1643 William Scott of Clarilaw was owner of lands valued at £156, while Hector Turnbull of Clarilaw's lands were valued at £273. In 1678 the east part was still valued at £273, but by then owned by Scott of Buccleuch, while the west part was valued at £182 and held by another William Scott of Clarilaw. William Dickson was living there in 1682 and William Scott in 1688. When the lands were transferred to Wilton Parish from the suppressed Hassendean in 1690 it was referred to as 'The two Clerilaws', suggesting it was at that time separated into 2 farms. The eastern section was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Lands there owned by the Duchess of Buccleuch were leased to James Dryden and Thomas Henderson in 1692. Residents recorded there in 1694 were James Dryden, Thomas Dryden and Thomas Henderson; separately listed (and hence presumably the other farm) were Andrew Rodger, William Dickson, Walter Scott, John Armstrong, Walter Turnbull, William Scott and shepherd John Turnbull; additionally John Johnston was listed among the poor. Walter Turnbull was there in 1696. William Armstrong was there in at least 1703–34. William Henderson was there in 1704 and 1709, James Douglas in 1709, William Coutart in 1708, William Crozier in 1711, James Lees in 1721, John Lamb, James Dryden in 1724–37, Thomas Liddell in 1724–29 and James Blyth in at least 1724–39. Gideon Turnbull was there in at least 1724–33, Thomas Henderson 1724–29, and Andrew Martin 1724–27. Andrew Harkness was there 1727–29 and Thomas Liddell and Andrew Martin in 1727, as well as Robert Scott of Burnhead living in the main house in at least 1721–27. Robert Gibson was there in at least 1730–36, James Graham was there in 1737, Robert Easton in at least 1737–44, William Gray in 1738, Andrew Smail in 1741, and James Liddell and William Lunn in 1742. John Dodds and John Anderson were there in 1744. James Dryden re-leased the lands from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744, when there was also a declaration about what to do if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided. John Martin was there in 1748, James Dodds and Thomas Cathrae in 1751, William Douglas and Thomas Douglas in 1772 and John Scott in 1780. There was an examination of the boundary between Easter and Wester Clarilaw in 1781. John Gray was a labourer there in 1801. A schoolmaster was recorded there in 1803. Peter Scott was there in 1835 and there were 6 households living there in 1841. There was a village school there at one time, run by Wilton Parish. There was also once an annual Clarilaw Flower Show. The road from there to the Turnpike via 'the Nitton' is recorded being improved in 1775. A bronze dish and a brass 3-legged pot were discovered here in the 19th century, possibly being mediæval, and are in Kelso Museum (also spelled 'Clarelaw', 'Clarylaw', 'Clerilaw', 'Clarilau', etc.; it is 'Clarelaw' in 1526 and c.1537, 'Clarylaw' in 1594/5, 'Clarielaw' in 1606, 'Clarrielaw' in 1689 and 'clarila' in 1704; 'Clarylaw' appears on Pont's c.1590 manuscript, while Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map have transcribed the name 'Corylaw'; the origin may be the same as for the other Clarilaw).

Clarilaw (klā-ree-law) n. farm in Bowden parish, about mid-way between Midlem and Longnewton. The land was once owned by Melrose Abbey, and included Cavers Carre. This is probably the 'Clarelaw' mentioned in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of leading a raid to steal livestock and burn it, along with other places. Until about the 18th century there were 21 cottages here, each with 2 1/4 acres of land and pasture for 2 cows, with the rent being 2 bolls of meal yearly (the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'clæfre hlaw', meaning 'clover hill'; it occurs from about 1300 and was also spelled 'Clarylaw'; it appears on Gordon's c.1650 maps as 'Corylaw' and 'Corilaw' and on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Corylaw').

Clarilaw Hill (klaw-ree-law-hil) n. hill to the right of the road between Appletreehall and Clarilaw, reaching a height of 550 ft. The southern ridge contains the remains of a fort, which once measured approximately 300 ft (90 m) by 100 ft (30 m), but is now much eroded. Aerial photography has revealed some cropmarks on the north-west side of the hill. There are also quarries there, as well as a small pond on the west side.

Clarilaw Schuil (klaw-ree-law-skil) n. former school at Clarilaw, run by Wilton Parish. It was founded in about 1780 and in the 1830s had more than 70 pupils. In 1803 the salary fir the Schoolmaster was set at 100 merks. John Hewitson was Schoolmaster there from about 1839 and James Stewart in 1861. It may have closed around 1968.

Clarilee (klā-ree-lee) n. former farm in Jedforest, perhaps on the Willowford Burn, east of Fodderlee, above Bairnkine. It was listed along with Swinnie in 1538 and 1539 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were 'claimed by the laird thereof'. This is probably the 'Clarely' where George Oliver was listed among the Border Lairds on Monipennie's c.1590 list. In 1610 Adam Robson was found guilty of stealing a cow from Dan Oliver here. William Anderson was there in 1694 (marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Clarÿly; also written 'Clairilu', 'Claralee' and 'Clarelee').

Clark (klawrk) n. Rev. Duncan (1914–84) born in Glasgow, son of Archibald and Ann, he was educated at Kent Road School and served in the R.A.F. 1940–46. He attended Aberdeen University 1960–64, became assistant minister at Aberdeen West of St. Nicholas 1962–64, was licensed by Aberdeen Presbytery in 1964 and was in that ordained as minister at Balilingry. He moved to Hawick in 1971 to become minister at St. Mary's Kirk. He also had responsibility for Cavers and Kirkton from 1976. He remained as minister until his death (see also Clerk).

clart (klawrt, klawr') n., poet. dirt, mud, soil, sloppy mess – 'Owt o' the clart delifer me, an' letna me synk . . . ' [HSR], v. to muddy, cover with dirt (perhaps from Middle English, cf. clairt).

Clayhills (klā-hilz) n. Andrew (16th C.) originally minister of Monifieth, he was translated to become minister of Jedburgh in 1574. At that point Oxnam, Nisbet, Crailing and Southdean were also under his charge, although they all had separately appointed Readers. He was also appointed a Visitor in the bounds of Teviotdale and was a member of 12 separate Assemblies in 1574–89. In 1589/90 he was listed among ministers with a special commission in Roxburghshire for getting people to adhere to the Confessions of Faith. It is unclear when he ceased to be responsible for Southdean. He was translated to Eckford in 1593 and back to Mionifieth in 1599.

clean (kleen) adj. absolute, complete, pure, adv. absolutely, totally – '... 'yin o thae watch-knowe hichts, clean abuin haugh an howe' [ECS] (more common than in standard English).

clean eer feet (kleen-eer-ffe') interj., arch. deal with the small things first – 'Advice given by a certain Teri to a fellow-townsman, and meaning: Methodically tackle and finish off the smaller duties lying immediately ahead so as to clear the way for the main objectives' [ECS].

Clean Jean (kleen-jeen) n. local character of the early 19th century of unknown identity – '... Backbraes and Scaurs from thence take up cleanin (klee-nin) n., arch. placenta of an animal, afterbirth.

the Clear Burn (thu-kleer-burn) n. stream that flows from Clearburn Loch to meet the Rankle Burn at Buccleuch, sometimes also called Buccleuch Burn. It was supposedly a 'cleugh' on this burn, the Buck Cleuch, which gave rise to the name for locally dominant Scotts.

Clearburn Loch (kleer-burn-loch) n. small loch on the Roxburghshire/Selkirkshire border on the right-hand side of the B711 a few miles beyond Alemoor Loch, near Buck Cleuch. It is mistranscribed 'Cloburn Loch' in 1649 among the lochs in Selkirkshire. It is discussed in Andrew Lang's 'Angling Sketches' in a chapter called 'The Bloody Doctor' (marked 'Cleeburne L.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, although shown connected to the Ale).

Clearlands (kleer-lawndz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as 'Cleirlandis', and listed (first) along with the other lands of 'Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss', with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Cleary (klee-ree) n. site of a probable fortified house, just to the west of Adderstoneshiels Cottages, with perhaps an earlier house a little further north, to the east of Mid Hill, where the pasture is called 'Old Town Park'. John Crozier was recorded as being of 'Cleerie' in 1544. There were excavations in about 1905 which uncovered some pieces of 16th and 17th century stonework, now in Adderstoneshiel farmhouse. A field there has been called 'Cleary' or 'Cleerie' until recent times.

cleck (klek) v., arch. to hatch, said of a bird, particularly a hen.

Cleehope (kleep) n. former name for an area near Saughtree, probably on the banks of the Cliffhope Burn. It is listed in c.1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 4 pounds and is valued at 5 merks on the 1541 rental roll, with no tenant at that time. 'Over and Nether Clifhoupis' were among lands granted to Scott of Harden by John Home, Abbot of Jedburgh, in about the 1530s. It was 'Cleishope' among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century and by 1653 held by the Scotts of Buccleuch (it is 'Clehop' in c.1376, 'Cleifhope' in 1541 and 'Cleishope' in 1653; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Cleopp hill' and 'Cleuopshead', but there are no farms in the area in Stobie's 1770 map).

cleek (kleek) n. a hook or hook-shaped object, often home-made, particularly one used for poaching – '... this incantation, 'Wi' cramps and cleeks may he be pest, An' o' diseases be a nest' ' [EM1820], 'I've gotten mony flaips an' fa's, Baith cleek and cross ... ' [JoHa], '... Jamie, as the activest of the two, ran off to obey Caleb's behest, and was back in a couple of minutes with the cleek in his hand' [WNK], 'When he appeared, a cleek and a fishing lantern were found in his possession' [HAd1868], v. to hook, snatch, poach, steal – 'Though soul an' conscience baith should kelter, I'll cleek a shillin', When Meggy's coy, 'twill help to melt her, An make her willin' ' [JR], 'Now mind, aul' luckie, That I am not writin', To cleek ye'r favour by the crook o' fame' [JoHa], 'Ane wi' his nibbie cleeks a lass, An' makes her o'erlins tum'le' [JoHa] 'Caleb seeing the desperate emergency of the case, muttered in Jamie's ear – 'Now, ye soul, up the rigging wi' ye, and cleek up the frying-pan' ' [WNK] (from Old English; some old examples of this instrument exist in the Museum, e.g. one donated in 1910).

Cleekimin see Cleikum Inn

cleek-in-the-back (kleek-in-thu-bawk) n., arch. lumbago, rheumatism, back pain – 'To keep them hale frae cramp an' cleeks, They sheath'd their thighs in gun-mou'd breeks' [JR].

cleeks (kleeks) n., pl., arch. cramp in the legs – 'To keep them hale frae cramps an' cleeks, They sheath'd their thighs in gun-mou'd breeks' [JR], 'Wi' cramps and cleeks may he be pest, An' o' diseases be a nest' [HAST1912].

cleek-the-pursie (kleek-thu-pur-see) adj., poet. thieving – 'An' Robin Hood an' a' his band, O cleek-the-pursie gentry ... ' [JoHa].

Cleethaugh see Cleithaugh

cleg (kleg) n. a horsefly, a large fly the female of which sucks blood – 'A got an awfi cleg bite up the Borthwick', 'Midges are a great annoyance both in the morning and evening; and in the summer Clegs abound' [BNC1889], '... In time o' clegs her tail she'd cock And gallop off frae a' the flock' [TCh] (from Old Norse; also spelled 'clegg').

the Cleg (thu-kleg) n. nickname for George Elliot.

Clegg (cleg) n. Libby, M.B.E., from Newcastleton, she is a Paralympic sprinter. She won a silver medal in Beijing in 2008, silver again in London in 2012 and gold in Rio in 2016. She has also had success in the World Championships and Commonwealth Games. In 2017 she received the M.B.E. for services to athletics and charity.

Cleghorn (kleg-hōrn) n. Adam (d.1765) younger son of Alexander of Fairliehope and brother of Thomas. He was grandson of George, who lived at East Drygrange house and married to Katherine Shiell in 1685. He was a merchant in Edinburgh. He purchased Weens estate from the trustees of John Armstrong in 1760 and almost immediately made some improvements. He was listed being 'of Weins' among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Becoming ill, a change of air was recommended to him, but he only got as far as Newcastle when he died. His nephew David (son of his elder brother Thomas of Fairliehope) succeeded to the estate. He was cousin of Thomas, who purchased Weens later. Andrew (b.1806/7) born in Yarrow Parish, he was a joiner and millwright in Ashkirk. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at Sandyhaugh and was still recorded there in 1868. He married Margaret Ballantyne, and their children included William, Eliza, Margaret, Euphemia (who probably died young), George (described as 'Lame & Dumb from birth', as well as being blind), Thomas, Andrew, Jane and James. David of Fairliehope and Weens (b.c.1740) son of Thomas of Fairliehope in Peeblesshire. He was nephew of Adam of Weens, whom he succeeded in 1765. However, he sold Weens to William Sharp in 1767. Frances (1829–70) youngest daughter of George of Weens and Maria Catherine Dalton. She wrote poetry, including 'The Emblems of Futurity' and 'The Valley of the Rule', printed in her brother's book 'Rulewater and its People'. She had a lingering illness in the last years of her life, and died unmarried. George of Weens (1781–1855) 2nd son of Thomas and Mary Yule. He was grandson of James, who was 3rd son of Thomas and Katherine Shiell. Although his older brother James had succeeded to the Weens estate, he exchanged the lands for others with his brother a couple of years later. He was a well-known local landowner and involved with local politics as a Liberal supporter. He trained for the law, but never practised. A great lover of art, he spent about 6 months a year in Italy for several years, apparently driving there in his yellow post-chaise. From 1810 he was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia. He was probably the George, W.S., who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813, but later withdrew. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832. He was a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also heavily involved in plans for the National Monument of Scotland (which ultimately foundered). In 1822 he married Maria Catherine, 3rd daughter of Col. John Dalton of Sleningford Park near Ripon (and her niece married James Henry Innes-Kerr, 6th Duke of Roxburghe); they met at the Granby Hotel in 1821, on his way back from Rome and she died in 1866, aged 68. The couple lived for a while in London and Edinburgh, since Weens had been let to Maj. William Elliot of Harwood. Their children were: Mary Norcliffe (1822–54), married her cousin Lieut.-Col. Charles Dalton; Susanna (1824–60), married George Mellis Douglas and died in Quebec; Cecilia (b.1826), born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk, a lover of poetry, who married Arthur Campbell of Catrine; Frances (1829–70), also born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk, who wrote some poetry and died unmarried; George (b.1831), who succeeded to Weens and took the surname Tancred; James Charles (b.1833) of Hawburn, born at Weens; Thomas Angus (b.1835), also born at Weens, who died on return from China; and John Dalton (b.1835), twin of Thomas, who married Sarah, daughter of Col. Hawley from U.S.A. He moved to Weens House. His wife gave money to set up the 'Sclenty Schuil'. He published 'Strictures upon Ancient and Modern Art' in 2 volumes. He died at Weens and was buried at Hobkirk. George (see George Tancred). Capt. James of Weens (1778–1852) son of Thomas. He was educated in Edinburgh and Paris and entered the 21st Fusileers in 1796. He became a Captain in 1803 and retired in 1807. He is said to have had a large library. He succeeded his father in 1813, but 2 years later exchanged the Weens estate for other lands with his brother George. He purchased Hawburn, near Melrose, leaving it to his widow. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still 'younger of Weens' (although that was probably out of date). He lived most of his life in Paris and married Marie Seraphina Despards, but they had no family. They are buried in Père Lachaise Cemetery in Paris. James Charles (b.1833) 2nd son of George of Weens. He was born at Weens, and baptised in Kelso. He was educated at Edinburgh and Addiscombe, being in the same classes as his 18-month older brother. He entered the 7th Madras Cavalry as a Cornet in 1852. He returned to India from leave during the Mutiny, retiring soon afterwards. He travelled extensively and was known as a great reader and good sketcher. He inherited the farm of Hawkburn near Melrose from his uncle George, but later sold it. He also lived for a while at Hundalee. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1864. In 1869 he married Sarah, youngest daughter of Rev. Thomas Walker, minister in County Derry. They had 1 son (Charles Angus of the Royal Artillery) and 5 daughters. He lived mostly at Twickenham and in Bedfordshire John (1768–1842) local shepherd, at Falnash and probably elsewhere. He was son of Thomas and baptised in Yarrow Parish. He married Isabella Oliver (1777–1851) at Ettrick Bridgend in 1799. In 1831 he emigrated with some of his family to Guelph, Ontario; the family had attended Caerlenrig Chapel and had a letter of recommendation from Gavin Turnbull, who was minister there. His children (the first 5 baptised in Ettrick Parish, the 6th in Roberton Parish and the rest in Hawick Parish) were: Janet, who died young; Thomas (b.1801), who married Agnes Matheson in Guelph; John, who married Christina Brydon in Hobkirk and died in Guelph; Helen (b.1804), who married Walter Laidlaw; Elizabeth (b.1806), who died young; William (b.1808), who married Ann Anderson and also lived in Guelph; Eliza, who stayed in Scotland; Robert Laidlaw (b.1811), who moved to Guelph and married Mary Quarry; Oliver (b.1813), also died in Guelph; James (b.1818), married Agnes Quarry in Guelph; and Elizabeth (again, b.1824), who died young. John (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Jane was baptised in 1832. John Dalton (b.1835) son of George of Weens and Maria Catherine Dalton. He was an identical twin of Thomas Angus; they were born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and University. He worked in Liverpool for a while and then went to the United States. In 1870 he married Sarah, daughter of Col. Ralph Hawley. Their children were Dr. Charles D. and Sarah. Thomas of Weens (1741–1813) 2nd son of James from East Drylaw, his mother being Malvina Angus (whose brother John married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge). He was cousin of Adam, who had owned Weens in the 17th century. He was a businessman in partnership with Alexander Home, retiring shortly after his marriage. His business included being coachmaker in Edinburgh. He sold his Edinburgh businesses to John Learmonth of Dean (who built the Dean Bridge in Edinburgh). He purchased the estate of Weens in 1804, from the trustees of the recently deceased Adm. Thomas Pringle, this including feu-duties formerly held by Kerr of Abbotrule. In 1805 he added Town-o-Rule and Hallrule Mill to his estate, as well as the 'north-east park of Hallrule' and Hallrule Mill, purchased from John Wilson. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. In 1778 he married Mary (1753–1836), eldest daughter of George Yule of Gibslees; his wife was a great-granddaughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum. Their sons were: James (b.1778), who inherited Weens; and George (b.1781), who exchanged Weens with his brother. He died at his house in Edinburgh and is buried there. Thomas Angus 'Tom' (1835–60) son of George of Weens and Maria Catherine Dalton. He was an identical twin of John Dalton; they were born at Weens and baptised in Hobkirk. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy and University. He worked in an office in Liverpool and in about 1858 went out to China to work in the tea business there. However, it is said that the climate did not suit him, and he died on the voyage home a couple of years later.

Cleikum (klee-kum) n. pertaining to the Devil, or more specifically to a ceremony in Innerleithen, supposed to be ancient, but popularised by Sir Walter Scott in his novel 'St. Ronan's Well' (1823). In the book the 'Cleikum Club' met in the 'Cleikum Inn'. At St. Ronan's Border Games there is the 'Cleikum Ceremony' in which a local schoolboy plays the part of St. Ronan, holding the 'Cleikum Crook' with which he 'cleikit him' by the leg or neck perhaps.

Cleikum Inn (klee-kum-in) n. former hostelry at the junction of the A698 (Denholm to Jedburgh road) with the A68 near Ancrum, and also the name given to the junction and general area. The more famous inn of the same name was in Peebles (now the Cross Keys), run by Marion Ritchie, who was the original of 'Meg Dods' in Sir Walter Scott's 'St. Ronan's Well' (and was a psuedonym for the author of 'The Cook's and Housewife's Manual' in 1826). It was given the name by Scott himself in about 1825. The inn hosted the Cleikum Club, which included Scott as a member, and organised some of the first Burns Suppers. This spawned the renaming of inns throughout Scotland, e.g. near Carfraemill and in Longelly, Fife – 'Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean' [WL] (also spelled 'Cleekimin', 'Cleikiminn' and other variants; 'Cleikum' is an old name associated with trying to catch the Devil or 'cleik um').

cleister (klī-stur, klee-stur) v., arch. to besmear, bedaub with something – '. . . finding himself the object of the pelting, or rather as an eye-witness calls it, the cleistering of the angry mob' [AM], 'It wad take a vast o sow-same, a richt claat o creesh, ti cleester a cloor gotten that gait!' [ECS], n., arch. a mass of semi-liquid stuff, viscid mess, any sticky compound (also 'cleester'; from Low German).

Cleithaugh (klee-taw, -hawf, tawch) n. former farm in Jedburgh Parish, near Mossburnford. It was valued at 24 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. James Ainslie is recorded there in 1541, when it was valued at 25s. Roger (or Ralph) was there in 1590 and Thomas around 1600. Andrew Ainslie was tenant there in 1669, William Ainslie in 1694 and another Ainslie in 1738. There were Amoses there in 1797, when it was listed as part of Southdean Parish. John Sinton was a servant there in 1799 and Walter Henderson in 1801. James Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and labourer Robert Hobkirk's family lived there. James H. Pringle was farmer in the 1860s. The main house had 12 bedrooms. John Lang purchased the house from the Duke of Roxburghe in 1923, including a home farm. In 1958 it became the Jedforest Hotel, promoting itself as 'The First Hotel in Scotland' and was more recently called Mossburn House (also written 'Cleethaugh', it is 'Cleithauch' in 1538 and 1539, 'Cleithauch' and 'Cleethaucht' in 1541, 'Clethaugh' in 1797 and 'Clitehaugh' in 1801; the origin is probably Old English 'clæte halh', meaning 'burdock haugh', and first occurs in the late 16th century).

Clemenson (kle-min-sin) n. John (18th C.) groom at Minto in 1791, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Clement's Hob (kle-mintz-hōb) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of 10 Liddesdale rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567. Possibly the same man was mentioned in Maitland's 'Complaint Against the Thieves of Liddesdale' – 'There is ane callet Clement's Hob Fra ilk pair wife reifis the wob, And all the lave, Quhatever they haife' [SRM].

Clement's Will (kle-mintz-wil) n. nickname of William Nixon.

clengit (klen-jee', -ji') pp., adj., arch. found not guilty, acquitted, cleared, cleansed – 'Item, q^{r} Adame Turnbull, miller in Hartshauchmylne, is accusit for ye thiftuous steilling of thrie ky, . . . perteining to Gilbert Ellot of Stobbis . . . Clengit thairof' [JW] (also written 'clenzit').

Clennel (kle-nel) n. Luke (1781–1840) born at Ulgham in Northumberland, he was apprentice to Thomas Bewick, becoming well known as an illustrator of works on natural history. In 1812 he produced an illustration of Hawick for Sir Walter Scott's 'Border Antiquities'. It is a view from roughly the foot of Tannage Close, and is one of the earliest views of the town. He also made a sketch of the Auld Brig, published in the same book in 1814, which was copied as a vignette for James Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick'. This view is drawn from below the bridge, roughly near the Burns Club.

Clennell Street (kle-nel-stree') n. ancient drove road over the Cheviots, linking Kelso with Morpeth. It goes up the Bowmont valley, crossing the Border at Outer Cock Law and then proceeding southwards to Alwinton. It was also once known as 'Ermspeth'.

Clepane (kle-pān) n. John (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual pension. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere, and whether his surname is variant of something more familiar.

clerk (klerk) n. a clerk, secretary – 'whae's the new Clerk o Works?', 'hei was Clerk o the Course at the Mair', '. . . and none to enter therein until the baillies for the time, old baillies, clerk and thesaurer for the time, be first sitt down' [BR1735], arch. a cleric, especially an assistant priest in a parish before the Reformation (note pronunciation; cf. clairk).

Clerk (klerk) n. nickname for Adam Turnbull in Bonchester.

Clerk (klerk, klārk, klawrk) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) notary for the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton and may have been attached to Wilton Church. Probably the same Alexander was notary in 1511 (in Edinburgh) to a confirming charter for Simon Dalgleish of Falnash. Alexander (18th C.) from Edinburgh, he was foreman at Dickson's nurseries in Hawick from about 1768 for several years. Allan E. (b.1842/3) born in Roberton Parish, he was a joiner in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Allars Crescent with his sister, Christina (widow of tailor John Elliot). In 1867 he donated to the Museum a 'fac-simile of Confession of Faith, and letter of Nürger, the German poet'. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Milsington in the Borthwick valley. In 1684 he was one of the Covenanters named at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh for attending field meetings. Along with his wife, Margaret Bell, he had to flee from the dragoons. However, he and his wife are recorded having a child baptised in Hawick Parish in 1685 (so presumably they escaped persecution). Andrew (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1698 he was fined for 'carreing the ground of the Common and muckeing the arable land with the same contrair to all former practique in the said town'. It is possible that he was the Andrew, who leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1702 and 1703 for weaver Adam Brown, in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport) and wright George Haliburton, in 1706 for weaver John Swan and in 1712 for smith Thomas Oliver. He could be the Andrew, son of John and Jeane Elliot, born in Hawick in 1650. He could also be the Andrew, married to Marion Ruecastle, whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1679), Agnes (b.1680) and John (b.1682). Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was listed as merchant on the west-side of Hawick (and separate from another man of the same name) on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when was taxed for 2 hearths. He (or the other Andrew) is listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1706 his daughter Margaret married John Young, also a merchant in Hawick, in an 'irregular' marriage, which took place in England. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1688. He could also be the Andrew, married to Margaret 'Bell', whose unnamed child was baptised in 1685. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded in Colterscleuch in 1718 when his son John was baptised. Andrew (b.c.1780) stocking-maker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in the 1740s as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £33 6s 8d. He was still listed in 1788 as owner of lands that had formerly been held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf, still valued at £33 6s 8d. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 he is listed as holder of lands among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as servant at Raperlaw and Netherraw in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Archibald (b.1791/2) from St. Boswells, he was a blacksmith living at about 69 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater's 1852 directory. He was a widower, with children Robina, Margaret, Archibald and Robert. Beatrix (18th C.) resident if Wilton Parish. In 1744 she and her husband Thomas (surname missing) were at Burnhead when her son James was baptised. The witnesses were James Dryden and Walter Scott. David (19th C.) married Helen Hardie in Hawick in 1838. Ebenezer (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Harden Anna in 1781. His children included William (b.1778) and James (b.1781). Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) resident of Newton, recorded receiving poor money from the Bedrule Session in 1726. George (16th/17th C.) resident of Crosscleuch. In 1615 he was one of the supporters of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule who were declared as rebels for not removing themselves from the lands of Huntliehill then owned by Stewart of Traquair. James (16th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, probably a merchant of some kind. He was owed £14 5 shillings for his services. James (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (1698/9–1761) tenant in Whitslade. He appears to be in Mabonlaw in 1737. His daughter Marion (who married William Scott, tenant in Parkhill) died in 1798, aged 68. He is probably the James who married Agnes Shortreed in Roberton Parish in 1731 and whose children included: Janet (b.1732), baptised in Ashkirk; Marion (b.1734); and Margaret (b.1737). He is buried in Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott in Hawick in 1764 and their children included: John (b.1765); and Margaret (b.1767). The witnesses in 1767 were Andrew Turnbull (senior) and glazier William Turnbull. James (b.c.1780) servant at Winnington Rig according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. James (b.c.1780) servant to Adam Armstrong at Burnfoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. He may be the James who married Isabel Lumsden and whose son David was baptised in Ashkirk in 1809. James (b.c.1780) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living in 'Allers', which probably meant the Mill Path. His children included Betty (b.c.1810) and William (b.c.1820). James (19th C.) married Christian Rutherford in East Bank Kirk in 1823. James (b.1844/5) son of William, he was a druggist in Hawick. In 1866 he donated an ancient Scottish copper coin to the Museum. Janet (16th/17th C.) received money from the Wilton poor box in 1705. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, recorded in 1599 when he witnessed a charter at Branxholme. Possibly the same 'Johanni Clark' was listed in the testament of William, younger of Branxholme, in 1552. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in late 1648. There were at least 3 men of that name in Hawick at that time: John married to Janet Langlands, whose children included Jean (b.1641), William (b.1642), Agnes (b.1644), Anna (b.1650), Walter (b.1652), John (b.1656); John married to Malie Shiel, whose children included Margaret (b.1648); and John married to Jean Elliot, whose children included Andrew (b.1650) and Ninian (b.1670). William (b.1647), with no mother's name given, may also have been his son. One of the Johns witnessed a baptism in 1652 for George Nichol. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded being 'at ye westport' in 1704 and 1706 when he witnessed baptisms for Hawick's first known Cornet, James Scott 'Laird' (whose mother was probably Janet Clerk, and hence possibly related to him). The other witness in 1704 was James Scott 'Westport', who was Cornet in 1705. He is probably the John whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1696. It is likely that he was involved with the Common Riding, perhaps even once Cornet himself. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of Walter. He married Isobel Armstrong in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Mary (or Marion) Lunn and their children included: Margaret (b.1725); Mary (b.1726); and Janet (b.1731). The witnesses in 1725 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and saddler Francis Ruecastle. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Overhall in 1752. He married Isabel Hoy and their children included: Walter (b.1752); Thomas (b.1753); Janet (b.1756); George (b.1758); John (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Christian (b.1765); and Bessie (b.1768). The witnesses in 1752 were James and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Borthwickbrae in 1772 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the John who married Jean Scott in Roberton in 1771. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Roughheugh in 1780. He married Margaret Pott in 1770 in Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1770); Betty (b.1773); William (b.1775); William (again, b.1776); James

(b.1778); Robert (b.1780); and Betty (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1780 were John and William Thomline, operators of the Waulk Mill at Roughheugh (suggesting that he worked there). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lochend, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William, who was recorded at Lochend in 1797 may have been his son. John (18th/19th C.) tenant in 1794 and 1797 at Templehall, when he paid the Horse Tax. He is listed along with Thomas, with his name appearing first, so they were probably father and son or brothers. The pair also paid tax on 3 dogs in 1797. His servant William Rutherford was recorded at Templehall in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Fulton in Bedrule Parish. In 1797 he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. He may be the John who married Janet Rutherford in Bedrule in 1793. John (18th/19th C.) hind at Belses Hillhead recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Isabel Easton, who was also from Hawick. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1805); and William (b.1809). John (19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch in 1868. Rev. John Ashfield (1874–1921) educated in Ireland, he was licensed to preach by Omagh Presbytery in 1901. He became assistant at Creevan and was ordained as minister there in 1902, but demitted in 1916. He was then assistant at South Leith and Craigmillar and 'locum' at Tranent from 1917. In 1919 he became minister of Hobkirk Kirk, but drowned in a boating accident on the Norfolk Broads only 2 years later. L. M. born in Hawick, he is known as a painter of fishing scenes. Mary 'Mary the Bishop' (d.1799) her death is recorded in the Hawick Parish register. Mr. ?? (19th C.) tenant farmer for a short period at Mackside. He hunted with the Jedforest hounds. Mr. ?? (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant of Dickson Street. In the 1880s he presented the Cornet with a bottle of brandy after the return to Town following the Thursday Chase. Patrick (15th/16th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1502 Martin and John Oliver in Strange were accused of stealing a cow from him. Peter (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Peter (b.1816/9) from Glenholm in Peeblesshire, son of George. In 1861 he was gardener and overseer at Woll Cottages. In a directory of 1868 he is listed at Woll Rig. His wife was Rachel and their children included Margaret and George Alexander. Peter (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1836. Peter (19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, succeeding to the business of Thomas Anderson. Robert (17th C.) married Margaret Hill in Ashkirk Parish in 1653. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1655. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ramsaycleuchburn, recorded in 1716. Perhaps the same Robert had a child with Jean Graham in 1710, the baptism labelled with 'fornicators', and with witnesses merchant John Hardie and Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. The mother's name is not given in 1716, but the witnesses were John Anderson (also at Ramsaycleuch) and 'Mr Tho: Hume' in Commonside. Perhaps the same Robert had a son Robert baptised in 1716. Robert (18th C.) resident of Penchrise in 1729. His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included William (b.1729) and Margaret (b.1732). He could be the 'Clerk in Tower' (with no forename recorded) whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1742. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Synton Pathead according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (1820/1–1905) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of William and Jane Murray (she was the aunt of Sir James A.H. Murray's father and also of local historian Robert Murray). In 1851 he was living on Wilton Path and listed as a frame-worker. He was also listed as a greengrocer on Wilton Path in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 1 Kirkwynd, with occupation given as grocer and wool hosier. His house was later at 13 Allars Crescent. He married Margaret Johnstone, who died in 1881, aged 57, and he remarried to Sarah Beattie. He had 12 children with his first wife, including William (who married Christian Amos), Peter, Andrew (who married Agnes Dickie), John (who moved to Sheffield), Robert (slater and builder in Cowdenbeath, who married Christina Copeland), David, Joseph (stockingmaker of Hexham, who married Mary Grieve), Mary (laundry keeper at Corbridge-on Tyne, who married mason David Crozier), Jane (who married Hexham postmater John Aitchison) and Margaret (who married bricklayer John Bell), as well as another Joseph and Jane who died in infancy. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of hosiery manufacturer Robert, he became a slater and builder in Cowdenbeath. He married Christina Coplend, and they had no children. He left £5,000 to the Cottage Hospital, the largest donation it had received at the time. Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. He is recorded there as 'Thoma Clerc'. Most of the other witnesses were local men. Since his name appears after the Chaplain of Wilton, it is possible he was a clerk of the diocese. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1635. Thomas (18th/19th C.) weaver with Walter Richardson. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant at Templehall along with John in 1794 and 1797. The pair also paid tax on 3 dogs in 1797. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was baptised in 1660. Walter (17th C.) married Margaret Dryden in Roberton Parish in 1687, they probably lived in the former Hassendean Parish. Their son James was baptised in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Henderson and John Dryden. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Roberton for James Scott and Janet Elliot. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant in Commonside. In 1706 he married Marion Dalgleish, another servant in Commonside. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1790. He married Janet Turnbull in 1776. Their children included: John (b.1777); Margaret (b.1779); Walter (b.1784), farm steward at Mabonlaw; William (b.1787); and William (again, b.1790), a mason at Harden Cottage. Walter (b.c.1770s) servant at Belses Mill according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Ancrum Parish. Walter (b.c.1780) resident of Whitchesters according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. He was described as 'Weak Mind' and hence presumably unfit to serve. Walter (1784–1853) born in Wilton Parish, son of Walter and Janet Turnbull, he was farm steward at Mabonlaw. He was one of the founders and first elders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Mabonlaw. He married Margaret Hunter and their children included: Christian (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Adam; Janet and Allan E. William (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being 'in dēnū', which is probably an abbreviation for 'dennum', i.e. he lived in Denholm. William (16th C.) servant of the Laird of Buccleuch recorded in Selkirk in 1580. He may be the William who received sasine for 2 husbandlands in Selkirk in 1579 and who witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. Rev. William (d.c.1640) local minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595 and became minister at Cavers in 1599, but was not presented to the vicarage there until 1601 (when Dean John Watson, portioner of Melrose demitted). In the following year he was a member of the Assembly and was translated to Wilton on the last day of 1602, following the death of John Langlands. There is also a suggestion (in James Wilson's 'Hawick and its Old Memories') that he was jointly minister at Cavers and Wilton in 1599 and 1601. In 1607 he refused a call to Castleton and Ettleton Kirks (the letter of presentation from Walter, Lord of Buccleuch survives), the stated reason being an unfulfilled promised by Sir Gideon Murray. He is also recorded being presented to Borthwick in 1612 and gaving half of that living to Francis McGill. In 1627 he was part of a report on the state of the Kirk and Parish of Wilton. In 1632 he donated £20 towards building the library at Glasgow University. In 1633 he was owed money and grains for the year from the estate of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear exactly when he died, but he left a widow, his second son was John and other sons were Andrew and William (who became a Hawick Burgess in 1640). When his son was made a Burgess he is not recorded being deceased, but must have died soon afterwards. William (17th C.) son of Rev. William, he was made a Burgess of Hawick in 1640. William (17th C.) Schoolmaster of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded in 1681 when he subscribed the names of the witnesses at Hartshaughmill for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Colterscleuch. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw in Harwood. Probably the same William was in Southdeanrig in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Grieve, tenant in Colterscleuch. He may also be the William recorded as 'workman in Castlehill' who married Janet Wilson and had children Andrew (b.1719) and Gideon (b.1721). The witnesses in 1719 were the William Thomsons, older and younger (at Newmill). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Mains in 1714. His children included: John (b.1714); and Walter (b.1724). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1792 he married Betty Ledgerwood, who was from Selkirk. Their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1793, witnessed by the Burgher Congregation. William (b.1770s) servant at Southfield. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia; this is annotated 'Subst.', suggesting someone substituted for him. His name appears again in 1798, with William Boyd in Horsleyhill serving as substitute for him. In 1799 he was listed again among men balloted in 1797 for whom there were substitutes. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lochend in Cavers Parish, perhaps son of John, who was farmer in the same place in 1797. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia, with 'Subst.' suggesting that he may not have served; his name appears again in 1798, with William Waugh, weaver in Hawick, acting as his substitute, as confirmed in the amended list of 1799. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Belses Mill recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1800 and their children included: William (b.1806); James (b.1808); Robert Ebenezer (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Bella Miller and their children included: Betty (b.1812); Margaret (b.1814); Jess (b.1816); and Walter (b.1818). William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Christian Rutherford and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1828. William (b.1777) born in Bowden, son of Robert and Margaret Wilkie. He was an agricultural labourer in Hawick. He was living at Wilton Damhead in 1841 and Upperdamside in 1851. He married Jane (or 'Jeany'), daughter of Andrew Murray (and hence the great-aunt of Sir J.A.H. Murray). Their children, baptised in the East Bank Kirk, included: Robert (b.1821), hosiery manufacturer; Margaret (or Mary, b.1830), who married tailor George J. Riddle; Isabella Henderson (b.1830), twin of Margaret, who married John Christison and later David Smith, and died in Australia; Andrew, who emigrated to Australia, farming at Tarnagulla, in Victoria and marrying Isabella Bell; and Elizabeth, 'Betsy', who married Thomas Ferguson. William (b.1790) born in Wilton Parish, son of Walter and Janet Turnbull. He was a mason living at Harden Cottage in 1841 and 1851. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Jane (or 'Jean') Armstrong in 1822 and their children, baptised in the East Bank Kirk, included: Helen (b.1823); James and Walter Cavers (b.1828); and James (b.1831). He was surely related to Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. William (19th C.) married Christian Scott in 1841, the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Roberton Parishes. William (b.1820/1) son of James, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Allars Crescent and in 1861 he was living at the Episcopal Schoolhouse. He married Helen Scott in Hawick 1844 and their children included James (b.1844) and Isabella J.A. William (19th/20th C.) official Common-Riding Song Singer 1883–1906 (also written 'Clark' and formerly 'Clerke', 'Klark', etc.).

Clerkcroft (klerk-kroft) n. former piece of land in Minto parish, mentioned in 1634. In that year it was among lands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas, Earl of Haddington. It was previously in Hassendean, mentioned as such in a retour of 1637. In 1640 it was listed along with 'Kerswell' (i.e. Cresswell) among lands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Haddington and then by his son John in 1645. It was further listed in 1670 as 'the lands of Clerkcroft Kersual'. It was therefore presumably adjacent to Cresswell (the origin is possibly just 'land belonging to the clerk', suggesting glebe lands for the assistant minister, and may also be related to 'Clerklands').

clerkess (kler-kes) n. female clerk – 'she worked is a clerkess in Pesco's'.

clerkin (klerk-in, -een) n. the act of being a clerk – 'The sodgereen's a hantle different be the clerkeen' [ECS].

Clerklands (klerk-lindz) n. hamlet about 8 miles norh of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, with an ancient fort site nearby. They were formerly owned by the monks of Melrose Abbey, being adjacent to the lands purchased from Adam, son of Adam of Durham, consisting of 'Thodholesid' and 'Standestanerig'. This was confirmed by Walter Riddell of that Ilk in the 13th century. Walter Hislop was recorded there in 1543. Tenants listed there in 1562 were William Kedie, Humphrey Kedie, James Aitchison and David Riddell. James Riddell was also recorded there in 1563 and Robert Riddell in 1580. John Veitch was tenant there in 1590. Alexander Scott of Clerklands was recorded in 1593/4. Walter Waugh was there in 1679. Part of the lands (specifically Easter Clerklands) were included among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk, e.g. when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669; in 1643 they were valued at £182.

The other parts were later owned by the Veitch and Scott families. The lands there were part of the estate of North Synton until 1641; in 1642 they were inherited by Helen, daughter of George Veitch of Clerklands. John Scott of Clerklands paid tax on £180 on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £182 in 1678. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls states explicitly that the lands were not listed (suggesting perhaps an owner who also held lands in another parish). John Dunlop was tenant there in 1718. Andrew Kerr was owner in the 1740s when the lands were valued at £182. Robert Young was there in 1785 and William Walker in 1788. The eastern part was inherited by James Elliot of Ormiston, son of Walter Elliot and Margaret Currer. The western part was leased by the Riddells of that Ilk to Simon Laidlaw in 1773. The western lands were acquired by Sir John Buchanan Riddell from Thomas Currer before 1788, when they were valued at £182. Andrew Smail was a wright there in at least 1797–99. James Lambert was farmer there in the mid-19th century. In 1851 the farm consisted of 575 acres. On the crest of a ridge to the west are the remains of a hillfort, measuring about 60 m by 30 m (the origin is probably just 'the lands belonging to the clerk' or 'cleric'; it first appear as 'Clerkisland' in the early 13th century, and is 'clerklandis' in 1493, 'Clerklandis' in 1502, 'Clerklandes' in 1562, 'Clerklandis' in 1669, 'clarklands' in 1678 and 'Clairkland' in 1694; it appears on Pont's c.1590 manuscript, Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Clerkland').

Clerkleap (klerk-leep) n. area with cottages in southern Castleton Parish, just south of Mangerton. J. Little was there in 1821 and labourer John Elliot and family lived there in 1841. There were 9 huts here housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is 'Clarcleep' in 1841).

Clerk o Works (klerk-ō-wurks) n. paid official of the old Town Council who acted as overseer for the town builders etc.

Clerk's Banks (klerks-bawngks) n. former name for land adjacent to Hobkirk Church and churchyard, later called the braes of Kirknowe. In 1604 it was described as 'the wood called Clerksbank' when part of the lands of Wester Swanshiel included in a charter to Hector Turnbull. It was 'Clerksbankis' when inherited by Hector's grandson Adam Turnbull of Hartshaugh and a wood named 'Clerksbank' in 1683 when inherited by Gilbert Eliott of Craigend from his father Archibald.

Clerkson (klerk-sin) n. (Clarkson) Alison local champion with the Hawick Bowling Club. Originally a darts player, she was introduced to darts in 1978 by her husband-to-be Les. Along with Eve Scott, she was the first Hawick woman to with the Scottish Ladies' Championship in 1996. She is a winner of the Rosalee Cup as well as several club titles. Les (1952/3–) Hawick man known for his skills on the bowling green. He was won 20 titles at the Borders Championship level, won the Pow Cup twice and He represented Scotland at the age of 24. In 2017 he was part of a four that won the Scottish over-55s title. He also played rugby for the Harlequins and snooker for the Con Club team. His wife Alison is also a keen and successful bowler.

Clerk ti the Regality (klerk-ti-thu-ree-ga-li'-ee) n. former office to support the Bailie of Regality, who was the Baron's official within a Burgh, such as Hawick. It was also known as the 'Clerk of the Regality'. The person holding the position was trained as a 'writer' and would act as clerk to the Baron's Court or Court of Regality. The position probably ended with the abolishment of regalities in 1747. John Watson held the office in the early part of the 18th century (certainly the years 1713–19) and Thomas Watson from 1720, still being recorded in 1757.

Clesslee (kles-lee) n. former tower in Southdean Parish, located where the Pinkie Burn meets the Jed Water. There were formerly 2 cottages on the site, called Clessleypeel (recorded in the 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book), which could be the 'Cleslyped' marked on Stobie's 1770 map. James Sinton was resident at 'Clessleepeel' in the late 18th century. William White was farmer at 'Clesspool' in Southdean Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. There is now a mound there, with evidence of banks, some of which are probably walls of the cottages and some from the much older tower. Clessley Plantation is still marked on the modern Ordnance Survey maps, to the north-east. In 1850 an iron dagger 'found under a cairn near Chesley Peel, Jed Forest' was donated to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. Note that Hindhaughhead Tower and Slack's Tower were quite nearby – 'Fair Ellen she rose, put her kirtle on, Just by the skriche of the day; From her casement high, she turn'd her blue eye, And looked to the Klesly brae' [JTe], 'It is said to have been quarried at Klesly, on the farm of Falside, on Jedwater, and conveyed to Hopekirk on a sled drawn by a team of four oxen' [WaD] (also 'Klesly' and variants; 'Clessleypeel' is marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map).

Clessleeheid (kles-lee-heed) n. lost place name, recorded on Stobie's 1770 map near the head of the River Jed in Southdean Parish, and probably associated with a former tower at 'Clesslee'. (the origin is probably 'the head of the clearing by the river Glass', suggesting that the upper part of the Jed was once known by this name; however, another possibilty is 'gless', which is an old Celtic word for 'stream'; it is actually labelled 'Cleslyped' on Stobie's map).

cless (kles) n. class – 'she was in ma cless it the schuil', ' 'Two two's are four', confirmed the cless' [DH], 'There cam a man o' the preachin' cless, Ae day to the royal coort, nae less . . . ' [WL], v. to class – '. . . for the stockingmakers o' oor auld toon were clessed amang the maist intelligent an' mentally wide-awake workin' men in the hale country' [BW1938].

Clesslee (kles-lee) n. site of a former peel tower in Southdean Parish (cf. Cleslyhed.

cleuch (klooch) n., arch. a gorge, ravine, narrow glen, invariably containing a stream – '. . . opposite to the Cleuch on the east side of the Dimples' [C&L], 'The ravished cleugh, in brushwood lost, Unenter'd, save by midnight ghost' [JTe], '. . . But, in the dingle of the cleugh, I left them to their will' [JTe], '. . . And on its tide, borne from afar, Wi' rumbling rocks frae cleugh and scar' [AD], 'He kenn'd a' the knowes, a' the cleughs, a' the cairns, These hills were his hame – here he reared a' his bairns' [DA], 'The oaks in the cleuch stood golden-red, The ripening nuts on the hazel hung . . . ' [WHO], '. . . Still mebbe, wi a glint o late snaw in the deepest cleuchs' [DH] (also spelled 'cleugh'; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo; the word survives in several local placenames, e.g. Birny Cleuch, Blackcleuch, Buccleuch, Cauldcleuch, Colterscleuch, Crosscleugh, Doecleuch, Gamescleuch, Giddenscleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Howcleuch, Lurgiescleuch, Lymiecleuch, Ramsaycleuch, Shirenscleuch, Thornycleugh, Todscleuch, Whinney Cleuch, Wormiecleuch and Wormscleuch; sometimes only part of the course of a stream is referred to as a 'cleuch').

Cleuch (klooch) n. former fortified house marked on Gordon's c.1650 map as being on the south bank of the Teviot valley, approximately opposite Dryden, and hence close to Colterscleuch (so the names may be related).

Cleuchfit (klooch-fit) n. Cleuchfoot, former name for a house in Roberton village, just after the Forman Memorial Hall, on the right-hand side of the road. It may be the same place called Roberton Woodfoot in 1841 and 1851.

Cleuch Heid (klooch-heed) n. Cleuch Head, hamlet near where the B6357 ('Note o the Gate') meets the A6088, about 8 miles south-east of Hawick, south of Hobkirk and east of Forkins. It was formerly known as 'Blackcleughheid'. James Wilson was farmer there in the 1860s. There may have been a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. There was a girl's school there in the mid-19th century, established by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee, and with Miss Gibson as the teacher. In 1958 Walter Armstrong ploughed up a 'discoidal flint knife' there, which is now in the National Museum of Antiquities.

Cleuch Heid (klooch-heed) n. shepherd's cottage on Brighouse Burn, just to the east of Steele Road in Castleton Parish. Hob Crozier from there was declared a fugitive in 1605. This could have been the site of the fortified house at 'Brighousecleughhead', which was once held by the Croziers. This is probably where Dr. Elliot of 'Cleughhead' lived, when visited by Sir Walter Scott on his trip to Liddesdale in 1797. It is probably also the 'Cleughead' and 'Cleugheads' where John Elliot (perhaps the same Elliot) was farmer in at least the period 1785–97. Walter Robson was there in 1835. There were 6 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. A funerary urn was said (in the Old Statistical Account) to have been found in an ancient cairn here (it is marked 'Cleughhead' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie's 1770 map).

Cleuchheid (klooch-heed) n. farm situated to the north of Minto House, also called Minti Cleuchheid. It is situated near the end of a cleuch, with an adjacent mill pond; it is possible that it may be essentially the same farm as formerly known as Minto Mill. It was once a home of the Earl of Minto's family. The farm was valued at £102 7d in 1779 and £109 in 1788 and 1811. Alexander Scott lived there in 1799. The small body of water to the north was once a mill dam (marked 'Cleughheed' on Stobie's 1770 map, it is 'Cleugh-head' in in 1779, 1788 and 1811).

Cleuchheid (klooch-heed) n. Cleuchhead, name used for the main farm on the Wolfelee estate. It was farmed by Adam Pott in the early 18th century, later Thomas Shortreed, Thomas Scott (uncle of Sir Walter) until 1810, then was farmed directly by the Elliots of Wolfelee, also the Wilsons and then the Blyths (it is 'Cleuch-heide' about 1605).

Cleuchheid Sike (klooch-heed-sīk) n. Cleuchhead Sike, small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the southern slopes of Arnton Fell and running south into Bridgehouse Burn. The farmstead of Cleuchhead is on its eastern side.

Cleuchside (klooch-sīd) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end, perhaps associated with Cleuch Heid near there. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Fairside and Tailside, and described as 'Cleucheside otherwayes designed Falset' (there is a farm of the same name in Oxnam Parish, and probably elsewhere).

cleverality (cli-vur-a-li-tee) n., arch. cleverness, a clever person, know-it-all, adj. clever – 'Let cleverality, mockreef folk that are unco smert . . . ' [ECS] (used as an adjective, transferred from the noun).

clew (kloo) n., arch. a ball of yarn – '. . . ilk ane of them not to reill any yarns out of clewis without the sight of the owner . . . ' [BR1643] (from Middle English and related to the modern word 'clue').

clew (kloo) pp., poet. clawed, scratched – 'The kimmer kerlyn didna youcke The places which she clew . . . ' [JTe] (this word is obscure).

Clews (klooz) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1536 this was part of the kirklands of Ashkirk and rented for 3 years (along with 'kempis knowis', together valued at 20 shillings) by Richard Bothwell, Parson, to Simon Shortreed, Vicar. Robert Scott of Headshaw was infefted in these lands (along with Crawknowe) in 1605. In 1643 the lands were valued, along with Headshaw and Crawknoww, at £760 10s. They were inherited by Mary Scott, wife of Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw, from her bother John Scott of Headshaw in 1691. Along with Headshaw, Dryden and Crawknowe they were included in a royal charter to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1705. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Gilbert Elliot from his father in 1778, but the liferent was immediately disponed to Dr. William Elliot (the name could refer to 'cleuchs'; it is 'clewis' in 1536, 'Clevis' in 1605, 'Cleuches' in 1643 and 'Clewes' in 1691).

Clews Burn (klooz-burn) n. small stream in Ashkirk Parish adjacent to the former farm of Clews. It may be the same as the stream that passes through Headshaw Loch.

cley (klī) n. clay – 'He brang me up alsua owt o' ane horrabil hole, owt o' the glarie claye . . . ' [HSR], 'Aa mind yince o' sei-in a wice-like esh-plant that was growin' on a steep cley bankin' . . . ' [DH], 'The waters o' oor life Stir cley alang their course . . . ' [WL], 'In frae the fields, My shoon wi' cley sae clortit . . . ' [WL] (also written 'claye'; note that the diphthong was formerly closer to 'ā-ee' than 'u-ee').

clichen (kli-chin) n., arch. something that is very light, comparatively speaking (noted by J. Jamieson).

clierts (klīurtz) n., pl., arch. a disease affecting the glands of cattle or pigs (from Old Dutch).

Cliffhope (klif-hōp) n. small valley of the Cliffhope Burn in the very uppermost portion of Liddesdale. It lies between Mid Hill and Lamblair Hill. This was an earlier name for the cottage called Saughtree Grain. The farm there was listed in 1632 among the lands owned by the Earl of Buccleuch, inherited by Mary and Anne Scott in 1653 and 1661 and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch was listed among the Scott possessions in the 'lordschip of Liddisdaill, abacie of Jedburgh, and schirrefdome of Roxburgh'. However the lands of 'Ovir et Nether Cleifhoippis' were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. The farm was combined with Dawstonburn on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. Together they covered 2218 acres and were bounded by Singdean, Hudshouse, Saughtree, Stitchelhill and 'Leys' (it is 'Cleifhop' in 1632, 'Cleiffhopes' in 1661 and 'Cleifhope' in 1718).

Cliffhope Burn (klif-hōp-burn) n. stream that joins the Dawston Burn just after Singdean on the Note o the Gate road. It is fed by several smaller streams, including Alison Sike and Dorothy Sike. The former farm of Cleehope were probably on its banks (it is written 'Cliphope' by James Smail in 1880).

Clifford (kli-furd) n. George (1558–1605) 13th Lord Clifford and 3rd Earl of Cumberland, son of Henry, 2nd Earl. In 1603 he was appointed Warden of the English West and Middle Marches and also Lieutenant-General of Cumberland, Westmorland, Northumberland and the town and county of Newcastle. He married Margaret Russell, daughter of the Earl of Bedford and was succeeded by his brother Francis. Henry (1493–1542) 11th Lord Clifford of Clifford and 1st Earl of Cumberland. He was Lord of the English Western Marches 1525–27. He reported a raid he led into the Borders in February 1533, which included buring Branxholme and neighbouring farms, and capturing some servants of the Laird of Buccleuch. He married Margaret Talbot, daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury and then Margaret Percy, daughter of the 5th Earl of Northumberland (the previous English Warden), and was succeeded by his son Henry. Robert (d.1314) 1st Lord of Clifford. He served as 'Keeper of the Marches in the north towards Scotland' from 1296. In that year he was directed by the English King to 'keep the March of Scotland till three weeks after Easter next, taking hostages of Selkirk forest, the moor of Cavers, the vales of Lidel, Esche, Ewes, Annand, Moffat, Nith and Galloway'. He married Maud de Clare and his children were Roger (who succeeded), Robert and Idonea (who married Henry, 2nd Baron Percy). Thomas (c.1363–91) 6th Baron de Clifford, son of Roger the 5th Lord. He was jointly Warden of the English Marches along with Ralph Neville (Earl of Westmorland) from about 1388. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Lord de Ros and was succeeded by his son John, the 7th Lord.

clift (klift) n., poet. a cliff – 'And on the mountain clifts, Proud wave thy thistle tufts' [HSR].

Clifton Park (klif-tin-pawrk) n. former estate in Linton Parish. Although the house is demolished, the tudor-style north lodge and avenue of lime trees survive. The lands were owned by the Pringles, passing to the Elliots of Harwood through marriage.

clim see climm

climm (klim) v. to climb – '... To climm in spirit up the heichts Where caller breezes blaw' [WL], 'But green gress for sturdy shoon To clim where grouse are skirlin' [WL], 'Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleesant – But Aa ken only yin clim's treis To catch a pheasant' [DH], 'A love ti climm the Vertish braes Where yince A sledged in callant days' [IWL], 'Climmin up the balcony. Clinging be their nails tae the cliff' [JuH], n. a climb – 'A beguid the climm as A meent ti end eet ...' [ECS] (also written 'clim').

clink (klint) n., poet. money, cash – 'He lost his kail, his time, his clink, His face made black as h–ll wi' ink' [JR], '... When, d–n them, were't no' for their clink, What would they be?' [JoHa].

clint (klint) n., arch. an outcrop of rock, projecting rock in a river, cliff, crag – '... and made the runner of said Cala-burn the march northward to a pit at the foord in the burn, immediately above same clints and craigs in the bed of the burn' [DCW1765], '... the Slitrig ... the spot where their forbears fished for baggies, or played at tig among the clints' [HAST1861], 'Ca'in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o' Robert's Linn ...' [DH], ' 'Mang rugged rocks and slippery clints, A queer and awkward place to hide' [VW] (possibly from Danish; it occurs in local place names 'Clinthead', 'Clints' and 'Clintwud').

Clint (klin', klint) n. former popular name for a large rocky outcropping in the Slitrig, where Clinthead was built. It is now under the road near where Silver Street meets the Kirkstile.

Clintheid (klin'-heed) n. house where generations of the Oliver family lived, who were shoemakers, tanners and tailors. More than one house stood on the site that was built on a rock ('Clint') at the Silver Street end of the Auld Brig. The location was essentially where the Exchange Bar was built. It was lastly the home of 'Robbie Clinty', famous from the J.E.D. Murray song and the William Norman Kennedy 'Auld Brig' poem – 'I mourn thee in my hour of need, Warm-hearted patient, old Clint-head' [WNK].

Clintheugh Linns (klin'-hewch-linz) n. stream in the headwater of the Tweeden Burn in south-eastern Liddesdale. It rises around Thwartergill Head and is fed by smaller streams, such as Newstell Sike and Claymore Sike.

the Clints (thu-klints) n. ancient earthwork near Chapelhill farm, just to the north of the road passing the 2 Branxholme Lochs, on the south-east slopes of Whitcastle Hill. It is oval in shape, measuring about 40 m by 30 m, being surrounded by a ditch and bank and with an entrance at the north-east. This is probably the remains of a settlement. Small quarries on the south side of the knoll probably gave the site its name (it is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

the Clints (thu-klints) n. another name for Clintwood in Castleton Parish.

Clints Cottage (klints-ko'-eej) n. small house in the hamlet of Kirkton, situated to the east of the A6088, just south of the Kirkton road junction. It was built on the original site of Kirkton School.

Clintwud (klin'-wud) n. former farm or fortified house in Castleton Parish, near Dinlabyre, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The site has been identified by locals as a rocky eminence enclosed by some sheepfolds, to the east of the 'homestead moat' marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It has also been suggested that the de Soulis family were there before moving to Liddel Castle, but that seems unlikely. William Elliot, 'soune to Arche of Clintwood' was among Scotsmen handed over the English Deputy Warden in 1597. Archie Elliot was still there in 1613. James Elliot possessed the lands in 1632. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirndean and Flicht. The Old Statistical Account describes a round earthwork near here, where a surrounding wall was removed in 1793 to build dykes and a brass instrument and small sword were found. The New Statistical Account states that 'the castle of Clintwood, on the farm of Flight, appears to have been a very strong building'. The notes for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club's visit to Liddesdale in 1869 describe it as 'the castle of Clintwood or the Clints, in the fork of two streamlets, forming the Boghill-burn, which falls into the Liddel at Dinlabyre'. However, it is unclear if any building of great significance was ever in this region (the name probably derives from the Old Danish 'klint', meaning 'rock' or 'cliff'; it is marked 'ye Clints' on Sandison's c.1590 map; it is 'Clyntwod' in 1611 and 1613 and 'Clintwod' in 1632).

Clinty (klin'-ee, klin-tee) n. nickname for Robert Oliver, subject of 'Clinty's Song', also sometimes called 'Robbie Clinty'. The name derived from the old name of the family house, Clinthead, which stood close to the foot of the steps of St. Mary's. He also features in some of the poems written about the Auld Brig, e.g. in William Norman Kennedy's 'Dialogue Anent the Auld Brig' and appears briefly in Jed Murray's 'The Gutterbludes' – 'I am Clinty, Clinty, Clinty – fra ma hoose upon the rock' [JEDM].

Clinty's (klin'-eez) n. bar, or bistro, which opened in the early 1990s at 4 Tower Knowe in the heavily ornamented former Commercial Bank building. It closed in 2002 and converted into the Bank restaurant, which closed after only a couple of years to become a bridal shop.

Clinty's Pool (klin'-eez-pool) n. former pool in the Slitrig near where 'Clinty' lived. David Miller drowned there in 1810 – '...or a lively game of 'tig' among the clints from the Towergateside Cauld and Clinty's Pool downwards' [WNK] (W.N. Kennedy stated in 1861 that 'Clinty's pots have been quarried away to nothingness').

Clinty's Song (klin'-eez-sawng) n. song written for the play 'The Gutterbludes' in 1905, with words by J.E.D. Murray and music by Adam Grant. This comic song was first performed in the play by William Turnbull, and has been a favourite ever since; since the character only really appears in the play to sing this song, it is suspected that this was written in simply as a vehicle for Turnbull, who was well known at the time for stage monologues. The inspiration for the song was Robert Oliver, nicknamed 'Clinty', who would have been known personally to the generation before the writers of the song. It was first performed at a Colour Bussing in 1908, again sung by William Turnbull, and published in sheet music form that same year.

Clipher (klī-fur) n. Thomas (17th C.) indweller of Weens, recorded as being the 'bailie in that part' for Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge in a sasine for Hobsburn in 1693.

Closehooses (clōs-hoo-seez) n. Closehouses, former farm in Hassendean Parish, recorded in a charter of 1516 as being '1 merkland' when being gained by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme after forfeiture by Alexander, Lord Home. Its location is uncertain, but it may be related to Westerhouses (the origin may be 'houses by an enclosure').

closemooth (clōs-mooth) n. the opening to a close – 'Now at ilk corner ready staund, Or i' close-mooths keep sentry' [JoHa].

closes (klō-seez) n. there are now only a few officially named passageways in Hawick, mainly off the High Street, But in former times there were a huge number of these, giving access to what was usually poorer housing, often popularly named after someone who lived there. It is unclear when the first feature was given such a name in Hawick, but there were surely closes by the 17th century. Many closes off the High Street (as well as Silver Street, the Howegate and the Sandbed) sprang up through the 19th century, as housing expanded in the spaces behind the main street. In the mid-1800s almost every house along the High Street had a passageway through to the back (as seen on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map), and many (if not all) of these had popular names associated with the residents. Before street addresses were formalised, these close names would be given as the place of abode. Many of them had multiple names, and the location of some of the closes are now uncertain. Most have disappeared as the properties were redeveloped, with perhaps only the Crown Close and Round Close surviving. A list of former closes includes: All Was Others Close; Angus' Close; Bunyan's Close; Carpet Close; Cochrane's Close; the Croon Close; Dalgleish Close; Dickson's Close; Ewen's Court; Factory Close; Fleece Close; Graham's Close; Grapes Close; Gunsmith's Close; Guthrie's Close; Henderson's Pend; Hessel's Close; Irvine's Close; Kemp's Close; Kyle's Close; Linton's Close; Mather's Close; Mershall's Close; Miller's Close; Moncrieff's Close; Nichol's Close; Printer's Close; Punch Bowl Close; Quaker's Close; Reid's Close; the Roond Close; Shaw's Close; Sinton's Close; Tait's Close; Tannage Close; the Toor Close; Turk's Close; the Wide Close; the Wide Pend; Wull the Bellman's Close; and Wulson's Close. Denholm contained the Doctor's Pend.

Closs (klos) n. former fortified house in Liddesdale, on the Roughley Burn not far from the Ninestane Rig. In 1632 it is 'Over and Neather Closse alias Welshaw, sett to Johne Scott and Gawin Ellot'. The farm of 'Ouercloss' was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. It was combined with Byreholm (although this may be an error), Bowholm, 'Wallshaw', Flasket, Millburn and Millburnholm, extending to 1295 acres, bounded by Roughlee, Toftholm, Hermitage, Sundhope and Stitchelhill. The house is shown near the modern Hermitage Cottage (marked 'Closs' on Gordon's c.1650 map, then as 'O. Closse' and 'N. Closs' on Blaeu's 1654 map and on Visscher's 1689 map as 'Closse').

Closses (klo-seez) n. former farm bordering on the old Common, between Whitchesters and Sea Croft, near the head of the Weatland Burn. A building on modern Ordnance Survey maps is marked 'Closses Cottage', along the track to the south-east of Whitchesters farm. Interestingly the lands there appear to be part of Hawick Common on a map made for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. William Cathrae was there in 1725. Thomas Huntly was tenant there in the period 1729–64 – 'John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the touns following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with Closses' [PR1717] (also written 'Clossis'; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; there is a farm of the same name near Canonbie; the origin of the name may be from the fact that this was an enclosed space, bounded on 3 sides by the Common).

clour (kloor, klowr) n., arch., poet. a blow, thump – 'Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr'd the Southrons flee Wi' mony a clash and clure' [TK], 'An' gien an taen was mony a clowr, An' dreadfu'-lookin' gashes' [JoHa], the result of a blow, a bruise, swelling – 'Another fell the harrows o'er, And raised upon his shins a clower' [HSR], '... Nor gi'e a thocht to the awfu' cloors, That may empty oor saddles ere lang' [JBB], 'It wad take a vast o sowsame, a richt claat o creesh, ti cleester a cloor gotten that gait! [ECS], '... A spielin' callant riskin' screeve and cloure' [WL], v., poet. to bruise, dent – 'Sir Harry wi' nimble brand, He pricket ma cap ajee, But I cloured his heid on the strand, An' wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T] (also written 'cloor', 'cloure', 'clowr' and 'clure').

Clovenfords (klō-vin-fōrdz) n. village 3 miles west of Galashiels, with an 18th century coaching inn, having a statue of Sir Walter Scott in front (apparently made of papier-maché). The main road from Hawick through Selkirk to Edinburgh used to go via Clovenfords until 1818, when it was re-routed through Gala. This was also where a vineyard was established in 1869, producing grapes until 1959. In 1873 James Wood of Galashiels donated to the Museum 'a number of iron hammers, spear heads, &c.' found here – 'Catch the laughter-waking chords In the lilt of Clovernfords ...' [WL].

Clover Field (klō-vur-feeld) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is listed as 'Colver Field, or Mill Shot'.

clowns (klownz) n., pl., arch. butterwort plants, Pinguicula vulgaris – 'This is named Sheep-root, Roxb., also Clowns. It is said to receive the former name, because, when turned up by the plough, the sheep greedily feed on it' [JoJ].

clowr see clour

the Club (thu-klub) n. organisation of some sort that existed in Hawick in the middle of the 18th century, perhaps a forerunner of the Hawick Farmers' Club. In 1749 it helped the Town deal with the debt incurred by building the Teviot Bridge – '... and of £4 sterling borrowed from the Clubb in Hawick ...' [BR].

clubhoose (klub-hoos) n. a clubhouse – '... Wi' the worthies in the clubhoose At the Vertish Hill' [IWL].

clubs (klubz) n., pl. organisations, particularly referring to private licensed ones with their own premises. In Hawick this has included the Border Club, the Burns Club, the Con Club, the Ex-Club, the Legion, and the Liberal Club, as well as the 2 Masonic Lodges and several sports clubs. Up until fairly recently they tended to be restricted to male members – 'Much marvelled I that any one should think That Clubs were only there that men might drink. There are, said I, low 'Pubs' as well as Clubs, From touch with which all decent men will shrink' [JCG].

clud (klud) n., arch. a cloud – 'We trow it's a' a darksome clud, Ayont our frozen comprehension' [JoHa], 'O! haud up thy heart till the clud be away, There's sunshine ayont it will shine yet on thee' [JoHa], 'And the merl is i' the wud, And the lav'rock's i' the clud' [JTe], 'In the dayetime alsua he lede thame wi' ane clud, an' a' the nicht wi' ane licht o' fire' [HSR], 'Thy mercie, Lord, is in the heævens, an' thy faithfu'niss raxes untill the cluds' [HSR], 'The laverock frae the fleecy clud Pours out his early sang' [JT], 'When nature gathers overhead, In dark and gruesome cluds, Then bursting, fills the Teviot's bed, With heavy rolling floods' [VW], 'But gi'e to me the hills and heath, The cluds that fleck the lea' [JEDM], 'The spray descending like a clud O'er the Bank aboon the Boosie' [DA], 'In a far Scots moor 'neath the siller mune, A plover's cry in the cluds abune ...' [JYH], 'A pickle blewe reek threh the hoose-lums o Denum draigglet in a swutherin clud' [ECS], v. to cloud – 'I hate to be always a-thrawin' my mou', An cludin' my brow, wi' the gummie o' care' [JoHa] (also clood).

cludie (klu-dee) adj., poet. cloudy – 'He spak' untill thame owt o' the cludie piller ...' [HSR].

cluff (kluf) v. to cuff, strike, usually with the open hand directed to the head – '... a good sound cluff o' the lug was by him a daily form of chastisement' [IWL], 'Jack cluffed his lugs wi' common sense, Subdued him in the present tense ...' [FL], n. a cuff, slap with an open hand – 'A'll gie ee a cluff ower the lug'.

cluit (kli', klū', kloo', kloot) n., arch. a hoof, division of a hoof – 'There's auld Rob Young o' the Back Raw, Hei's of'en shod ma clutes' [JSB], 'This alsua sall pleese the Lord mair nor ane stot or bullok that heth cluts an' hoorns' [HSR], '... Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, roguery and cunnin', Their cloven cloots they've shown at Lon'on' [RDW], 'He will leave us nae doots That his tongue wad clip cloots ...' [WL], a foot – 'Wi' shoeless cloots, an' sockless shanks, Fu' fast they on did toddle' [JoHa], 'Guid-bethankeet, tui, nocht ailed ma cluits' [ECS], (also spelled 'clute' and 'cloot'; the pronunciation varies).

cluity (kli'-ee, kloo-tee) adj., poet. hoof-like, having the nature of hooves – 'The sabille gowne hang his tayle, And hidde his cluty heele' [JTe], '... For she'll ride ye post to the clutye deil, And he to the reikye hole' [JTe].

clumm (klum) pp. climbed – 'they've clumm the stairs ti the great club-hoose in the sky' [IWL] (the past tense is more often cf. clamm).

the Clump o Firs (thu-klump-ō-firz) n. former name given to a landmark near Ruberslaw. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes the boundary between Sir William Eliott's and John Wilson's parts of Outer Hallrule being 'in a straight line to the top of Ruberslaw, passing close by the Clump of Firs, the east fence of which is the march'.

the Clumps (thu-klumps) n. area just over the old railway line from Stobs Castle.

Clunaig (kloo-nāg) n. one of the newer houses in Sunnyhill, at 5 Dean Road, built in the 1960s in a modernist style.

Clunie (kloo-nee) n. John (17th C.) barber in Hawick. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. He was also mentioned in 1682 as one of the Covenanter fugitives assisted by Lady Cavers. And in 1684 he was on the list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He may be the same 'John Clunies, bower in Hawick' whose son William became an armourer's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1680. Rev. John (1708–84) minister at Whitekirk. His lands of Eilrig were valued at £500 in the 1740s. In 1759 he sold Eilrig in the Borthwick valley to the Duke of Buccleuch; how he came to hold these lands is unclear. He is listed as 'John Clunie Eilridge' among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married twice and had 8 daughters and one son, James. Rev. John (18th C.) recorded as Precentor at Markinch and then licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1784. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1790, but translated to Borthwick Parish in 1791. William (17th C.) son of John 'Clunies, bower in Hawick'. In 1680 he became an apprentice armourer in Edinburgh. It is possible that his father was the man recorded as a barber in Hawick in 1680 (also written 'Cluny').

clute see cluit

cluve (kloov) pp., poet. cleaved – '... And her coutter phiz it cluve the aire A yirde afore the brocke' [JTe].

Clyde see Morris Clyde

Clyde's Linn (klīdz-lin) n. former name for a waterfall in the upper part of Denholm Dean, north-west of the farmstead of Todlaw. It is referred to by James Murray in 1863 and is 'Clyde Linn' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is an earthwork a little to the north.

Clyf (-klif) n. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as holding the living of Cavers Parish in 1319, being given it by the English King Edward II. It is unlikely that he ever set foot in Cavers. He was recorded in 1319 being presented by Edward II as Prebend of Kilbride, as well as Precentor of Glasgow (probably unsuccessfully). He bought the manor of Theydon Bois and land in Epping Heath in 1323 (often written 'de Clyfe').

clype (klīp) n. a tell-tale, informer, grass, snitch – 'ee're juist a wee clype, yow', v. to tell on, inform on someone, tattle – 'whae clyped on is?', 'She's aye claipin' ' [GW], 'Whilst times the cheaters wad git caught, or git cliped oan, an they'd git the belt for their bother' [We] (from Old English; also written 'clipe' and variants).

clyte (klī') n., arch. a smart blow – '... But his head got a heartsom' clyte That dinnled baith dour and deep' [TK].

the Coach an Horses (thu-kōch-an-hor-seez) n. former hostelry at the Tower Knowe in the early-to-mid 19th century. The water from the 1846 flood reached the stables here. The site became the new Commercial Bank at 4 Tower Knowe around 1852. The pub also had an entrances from Silver Street at the back. John Beck was innkeeper there in the 1830s. The last proprietor was James Shiel, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. It was one of the sites in Hawick used as a departure point for carriers.

the Coachhoose (thu-kōch-hoos) n. the coach-house for the Tower Hotel, situated where the Exchange Buildings were built (as seen in a photograph of 1860).

coachin (kō-chin) n. the business of transporting passengers by stage-coach. Hawick became a coaching centre in 1762, with the opening up of the road between Carlisle and Edinburgh. The first regular service was started in 1800 on Mondays Wednesdays and Fridays, the coaches leaving both Carlisle and Edinburgh at 2 a.m., and meeting in Hawick. The initial cost was 37 shillings and the speed was an astonishing 6 miles per hour. Coaches also started operating at about the same time between Kelso, Jedburgh and Edinburgh. The Tower Knowe was the main stopping point in town, and a scene of much activity 3 times a week for the first half of the 19th century, rising to become daily. The stages (where the horses were changed) either side of Hawick were at Ashkirk and Teindside. Several years after they started they became mail (as well as passenger) coaches, perhaps in about 1807. The mail coaches carried up to 8 passengers (4 inside and 4 outside), and the guards wore scarlet jackets, hats and top boots, all trimmed with gold braid; they also carried pistols and a blunderbus in case of attack, as well as a timepiece and a tin horn to announce arrivals. Two of the regular coaches used between Hawick and Carlisle in the 19th century were called 'the Engineer' and 'the Favourite'. Walter Wilson, William Nixon several other local manufacturers, along with Mr. Croall of Edinburgh ran a cheaper, rival coach service between Hawick and Edinburgh in the years 1823–46. By the 1830s the journey time between Carlisle and Edinburgh was reduced to 9½ hours. In the 1840s there were the 2 mail coaches, as well as 3 private coaches, called the 'Standard', 'Defiance' and 'Engineer'; the Defiance overturned in Selkirk in 1843, leading to the death of a passenger travelling on the outside. All the coaches ceased operating after the Waverley Line was completed. The final run from Hawick to the south was with 'the Engineer' in 1862, with a great crowd sending them off from the Tower Knowe. Once the railway disappeared again, the coach essentially returned as the No. 95 bus.

Coach Park (kōch-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1811 along with Spoutburn Park, with a joint value of £43 14s 6d.

coal-coom (kōl-koom) n., arch. coal dust – '. . . bar yeh haaflang chaap as black as Eppie Suittie (wui a face aa coal-coom . . .)' [ECS] (see also coom).

coalie-back (kō-lee-bawk) n. a piggyback (from 'coal-back'; also collie-bag).

coal neddie (kōl-ne-dee) n., arch. a pony used for carrying coal, particularly those travelling between Northumberland and Hawick. Droves of these small, sturdy ponies would carry 2 or 3 bags (or creels) of coal, each weighing about 5 stones, from Northumberland, usually over the Carter Bar. Some coal also came via Canonbie and down the Teviot valley. Once in Hawick they would be lined up at the 'Auld Brig' waiting for customers. Ponies continued to be used until at least 1814. The coal brought in this way from Plashetts and other colieries was much cheaper than the Lothians coal, a situation that only changed with the coming of the railway to Hawick in 1845. These ponies were often commandeered by followers of the Cornet in the 19th century.

the Coal Pit Haugh (thu-kōl-pi'-hawch) n. name for a field in Hobkirk Parish, on the former farm of Unthank. The name comes from a former proprietor who sank a pit to look for coal, but instead opened up a useful new spring.

coal-rake (kōl-rāk) n., arch. a rake for coal – 'Mr Cunningham is fined for deforcing the officers with ane collraicke' [BR1676] (this is the first mention of coal in the Town Book).

coal-smush (kōl-smush) n., arch. coal-dross, coal dust and small pieces of coal generally found at the bottom of a coal scuttle – 'Coal-smush = coal-dross (Cf. coal-coom)' [ECS] (see smush).

Coat o Airms see Burgh Seal

the Cobble (thu-ko-bul) n. erroneous spelling and pronunciation sometimes used for Coble – '. . . Or watch my ball from the Cricket Field right into the Cobble soar – But I'd like to be the Cornet' [JYH].

Cobden (kob-din) n. Richard (1804–1865) M.P. for Stockport, he was a great advocate of free trade and a founding member of the Anti-Corn-Law League, helping to repeal those laws. Hawick made him an Honorary Burgess in 1844.

coble (kō-bul) n., arch. a flat-bottomed rowboat, skiff – 'Wi' neither masts nor sails equippit, Line some auld coble' [JR]. The Laird of Langlands had such a boat for ferrying people and goods across the Tevio. In 1721 Andrew Thompson, wright in Rutherford, was paid for making a coble for the town of Selkirk (from Old Welsh; see also cowble).

the Coble (thu-kō-bul) n. popular name for the Coble Pool or Coble Cauld.

the Coble Cauld (thu-kō-bul-kawld) n. weir at the west end of the Common Haugh, built to divert water for the mill lade system to the north of the river passing through Wilton (and ultimately coming out at Mansfield). It was formerly referred to as 'Langlands' Cauld'. An early version is shown on Wood's 1824 map, labelled 'Rough Heuch Dam Cauld'. In its modern form it was constructed in the early 1960s, with the addition of a salmon ladder through the middle. It is often just referred to as 'the Cauld'.

Coble Entry (kō-bul-en-tree) n. narrow vennel that used to lead from Buccleuch Street to the Coble Pool, being an extension of the lane from Myreslawgreen (the 'Common Vennel') described in the 1537 Charter. There was once a well at the head of the lane. It was closed in 1948 and removed entirely in 1951 with the extension of the High School. At the same time a new lane along the water-side from the Coble Pool to the Lawson Bridge was constructed. A stone tablet on the wall outside the school marks its position.

cobleman (kō-bul-mun) n., arch. a man who uses a 'coble', usually to transport people and goods across a river or for salmon fishing. As well as Hawick, Kelso had a 'cobilman' recorded in 1648 and Selkirk had a 'cowbellman' recorded in 1679.

coblemen (kō-bul-men) n., pl., arch. ferrymen at the Coble Pool. The first boatman on record is John Stoddart 'cobilman to the lard of Langlands' in 1576 and 1578/9, and further recorded in 1586/7 and again 1605. The boatman in the late 17th century and early years of the 18th was William Scott; in 1694 he was listed 'in Boathouse' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and in 1709 was 'Boatman in Couble haugh'. Andrew Marshal was living at 'boathouse' in Wilton in 1725. Hector Blaikie was the last boatman. It is possible that the boatman was originally there mainly to ferry the Langlands family across the river, as well as to exercise their salmon fishing rights.

the Coble Pool (thu-kō-bul-pool) n. part of the Teviot near the Cauld, usually describing the area just above it. Its name comes from the ferry boat or coble that was used as the main way across the river when it was not fordable, prior to construction of the Teviot bridge in 1741. There is a boatman on record from at least 1576, with the last becoming redundant when the bridge was built. When frozen the pool was sometimes used in the 19th century for curling matches. It is the scene of the Dipping of the Flag and previous boundary marking ceremonies at the Common Riding – 'You know me well – I'm harnassed to the Coble Pool And haste the waters when they're full . . . ' [WFC].

Cochran (kok-rin) n. Col. Alexander of Ashkirk (1814–1903) eldest son of Archibald, he was the 5th Baronet. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commisioner of Supply in Roxburghshire around 1860. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1861. He was also a Justice of the Peace in Midlothian, on account of his other estate at Linkfield. He appears to have lived mostly in England as a career military man, but some of his children were born at Ashkirk. He was recorded in about 1874 as owner of the lands in Ashkirk that had previously been owned by Thomas Wilkinson, including Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Castleside. He married Fanny, daughter of C. Batsford. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of Charles M. Caldecott of Holbrook Grange. His children included: Rear-Adm. Charles Home (1850–1930) of the Royal Navy; Lieut. Alexander (1848–1911) of the Royal Navy, who succeeded to Ashkirk; Archibald (1852–1885); Bertha Susan (b.1854); Evrard; Frances Margaret; Hermine Louisa; Cecil Geraldine; Ernest Frederick; Paul John; Randolph Alexander Grey; and Herman Randolph Purves. Lieut. Alexander (b.1848) eldest son of Alexander of Ashkirk. He served in the Royal Navy. He married Flora Curling Davison. Their children were: Alexander Charles Purves, who succeeded; Bertha Gabrielle; Flora Cecil, who married Ninian Lewis Elliot, grandson of Roxburghshire M.P. John Edmund Elliot and great-grandson of the 1st Earl of Minto; Rosamond; and Margaret Lucia (b.1892/3), who married Sir Alfred Hamilton Grant. In 1881 the family were living at High Park Featherhead, St. Helens, Hampshire. Col. Alexander Charles Purves (b.c.1879) son of Alexander, he was born at Stewkley in Buckinghamshire. He owned Ashkirk House and also property at Inveresk. He was appointed Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire in 1939 and also served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Florence Hurd. Their children were probably Alexander, Daphne and Euphen Flora. Archibald of Ashkirk (18th/19th C.) owner of the lands and mill of Ashkirk, as well as the Barony, which include Salenside, Broadlee, Castleside, Leaphill, Rhymer's Croft, Rye Croft, Roundhaugh and Lawhope. He bought these in 1795. He and his son, Archibald, younger, were listed as Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He planted more than 40 acres of woodland on his estate at Ashkirk. Archibald of Ashkirk (d.1841) son of Archibald. He is recorded as proprietor in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was also a merchant in the Fisherrow in Edinburgh. He went through bankruptcy proceedings in 1824. He married Mrs. Elizabeth Somerville, but she died in 1804. In 1813 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Purves of Purves Hall in Berwickshire, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Alexander (b.1814), who succeeded; Alexander's elder twin, who died in 1816; Mary (b.1816); Euphemia (b.1818), who married Sir Alexander Milne; and Vice-Adm. Thomas (b.1819). In 1841 the residents of 'Ashkirk Cottage' were Robina (probably his sister), as well as Mary, Euphemia and Thomas (his children) and 3 servants. He is buried at Inveresk. Charles Home (1850–1930) son of Alexander of Ashkirk. He served in the Royal Navy. He was awarded the Ashantree Medal 1873/4, the Jubilee Medal 1897 and the Coronation 1902. He received the Royal Humane Society medal in 1883 from jumping overboard to save a man on a cold, windy night (note this spelling for the family of Baronets, although there are variants such as 'Coughran'; see also Cochrane).

Cochrane (kok-rin) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Thomas (b.1779); and John (b.1801). Andrew (19th C.) tailor of 59 High Street. He was from the same family as the wife of Bailie James Douglas and also the 'Laird' Cochrane who lived in Brougham Place. In 1861 he was at 4 Orrock Place, with his wife Margaret and children James, William B. and Isabella S. David (b.1825/6) from Edinburgh, he was a frameworker in Hawick. He was living at 9 Back Row in 1861. His wife was Margaret Cumming and their children included Thomas, Mary, Elizabeth, John and Helen Cumming. Emily Mabel (19th/20th C.) nee Purdom, daughter of Hawick solicitor Robert. She married Gala manufacturer Walter Francis, who was a Captain in WWI and died in 1917 in Gaza. She had at least 4 children: Helen; Walter, who died aged 2; Robert, who died aged 21 in a motorcycle accident; and Archibald 'Archie' Leman (1909–88), who became an internationally-recognised epidemiologist, with the 'Cochrane Collaboration' set up after his death to systematically study randomised trials. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. Along with James Laidlaw, Andrew Henderson and others, he had joined the Scottish army that went to England to support the Royalist cause against Cromwell. When they returned to their homes they were adminished by the Session and forced to publicly acknowledge their sin. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the Hassendean part. He married Margaret Renwick and their children included Agnes (b.1684), Margaret (b.1686) and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1684 were James . . . and George Scott and in 1686 were James Veitch and James Turnbull. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1700 along with James, son of Adam Anderson, Schoolmaster on Edinburgh Canongate, when they were accused of theft at Hawick fair and instructed never to return to the Town. He was described as 'ane old, lame, tall, black man, with some grey hairs in his head, lame in both elbows, and having ane cutt in the brow'. Presumably the same 'John Cochran, vagabond, and having noe residence' was released from the Tolbuith the following day, along with several other supposed thieves. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dunlop and their children included: Thomas (b.1779); and an unnamed child (b.1784). He may be the weaver whose daughter Isabel was baptised in 1789. James (b.1796), with no mother's name recorded, may also have been his child. John (1739–1823) farmer at East Lilliesleaf. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–97 as owner of a saddle horse. He is also recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 farm horses and he paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Lilliesleaf in 1797. He is probably the John, tenant in Lilliesleaf, whose son John was baptised in 1789. He is probably also the John who married married Janet Knox (1756–1813) and whose children included: Janet (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); William (b.1782); and William (b.1784). He died in his 80s. He and his wife were buried at Bowden. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He got married in 1796; his wife was also from Hawick, but her name is not recorded. John (18th/19th C.) carrier, listed in Pigot's 1825 directory operating along with Thomas Winthrope, between Hawick and Langholm. He could be the 88 year old farmer recorded on the Mill Path in the 1841 census. He could be the John who married (wife's name hard to read) in Hawick in 1796. Rev. John (1789–1832) minister of Hawick Parish 1823–32. He was son of John, farmer at Easter Lilliesleaf. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1811, becoming an assistant to James Stalker, minister at Lilliesleaf. He was then minister at Falstone (Northumberland) and at North Shields (succeeding his uncle, Walter Knox), before moving to Hawick. He was presented by the trustees of Walter Francis,

Duke of Buccleuch (perhaps the first minister on record not to be presented by the patron) in the middle of 1823 and installed a few months later. He joined in the partnership to share a 'gig' with William and Walter Wilson, Joseph and William Nixon, Town Clerk John Oliver and John Elliot; after a few years he bought the vehicle outright. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It seems there are fewer anecdotes recounted about him than many of his predecessors. He married Jessie Elizabeth Knox, daughter of Thomas knox, farmer of Lilliesleaf, and sister of William Knox the poet. A silhouette portrait of him and his family exists. His eldest daughter Barbara was mother of Peter Redford Scott Lang, who was Professor of Mathematics at St. Andrews. His other children were Jessie Knox and Jane Ayres. W.N. Kennedy in 1862 described him thus: 'As a minister and as a man he was neither faultless nor impeccable, yet it seldom falls to the lot of any one to attain such an eminence of universal respect and esteem . . . his appearance was prepossessing, well-made, robust, portly, and dignified, searching grey eyes, and dark hair grizzled with white'. A marble tablet erected in his memory states he was 'simple and unobtrusive in his demeanour, unsuspecting and affectionate in his disposition, pious without austerity, and charitable without ostentation'. Robert (b.c.1780) joiner in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Thomas (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Thomas (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Isabell (b.1746), Janet (b.1749), Mary (b.1751) and John (b.1754). Thomas (19th C.) married Mry Boyd in Hawick in 1843. William of that Ilk (14th C.) son of Glosmus (or Cosmus). In 1360 he received a charter for the lands of Langnewton from John Lindsay, Lord of Dunrod. In 1377 he granted the Barony of Langnewton to Sir Henry Douglas of Lugton and Lochleven. He married Marion Dalyell, who gave a charter of some lands in Langnewton to Sir Henry Douglas in 1392. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Peterson and their children included John (b.1656). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism in 1652 for James Donald. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1739), William (b.1741), Margaret (b.1743) and 'Nanse' (b.1755). William (18th C.) tenant at Newton in Kirkton Parish. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. William (b.1770s) servant at Borthaugh. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He paid the cart tax in 1791 and subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He may be the William who paid the Horse Tax at Ashieburn in 1797. William (1784–1851) son of John and Janet Knox, he was baptised in Lilliesleaf. He worked as a ploughman at Faldonside, Oakwood and elsewhere. He married Margaret Gilroy and their children probably included Willaim (b.1804). In 1851 his widow was living in Selkirk with their grandson William. William (b.1786/7) carpenter, who was originally from Midlem. In 1841 he was 'Ind.' on Brougham Place, in 1851 was 'House Proprietor' at '2 Brougham Place (Cochrane's) and in 1861 was 'House Carpenter' at 4 Brougham Place. In 1865 he donated to the Museum a half-crown of Charles II from 1677 and in 1867 donated part of the elm tree which grew on Slitrig Old Bridge'. He married Agnes Hope, who was from Ancrum and was deceased by 1861. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1828/9), born in New York; and Isabella (b.1829/30), born in Wilton. William (19th C.) married Margaret Walker in Lilliesleaf in 1827. William (1804–85) son of William and Margaret Gilroy, he was a farm servant at Caddonlee. In Melrose in 1842 he married Janet (1810–92), daughter of Thomas Burnet, who was shepherd at Hermiston. Their children were Thomas (who was a mill foreman in Galashiels), John (who emigrated to Michigan, U.S.A.), William Whitelaw (b.1848), Maggie (domestic servant at Elm House) and Jane. By 1861 the family had moved to 'Bewliehill Avenuefoot' in Lilliesleaf Parish, where he was a ploughman. They later lived at Bewliehill Cottages, Teviotbank, Ashybank, Parkhouses and Bucklands Gate Lodge. In old age and poverty he was involved in a dispute with the Poor Inspector of Wilton over whether he was eligible for poor relief from Bowden Parish, since his birthplace was questioned, his baptism being recorded in Galashiels Parish. He died at 16 Wilton Place and his wife died at 3 Albion Place. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Brown in Hawick in 1849. William (1846–1928) son of William and Janet Burnet. He grew up at Caddonlee and Bewliehill and became a forester on the Minto estate. In 1880 he married Helen (or 'Ellen') Amos Lang, who was born in Hobkirk Parish and worked as a housekeeper at Hassendeanburn. They moved to Denholm and also lived for a while at 14 Wilton Place in Hawick. By 1891 he was a roadman living at Leyden's Cottage in Denholm. His wife died just a few weeks after him and they are buried in Denholm. William Elliot Armstrong (19th/20th C.) lived at 4 Douglas Square, Newcastleton. He was a Major in the 1/4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. He took command when Lieut.-Col. John McNeile was killed in the attack of 12th July 1915, and wrote an account of the events in the Batallion war diaries. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire (formerly written 'Couchrone', 'Cowchrine', etc.; see also Cochran).

Cochrane's Close (ko-krinz-klōs) n. passage beside Cochrane's Innery, near the Crown Hotel on the High Street.

Cochrane's Innery (kok-rinz-i-nu-ree) n. tenement also known as Cochrane's Row, immediately west of the Crown Hotel. It was once kept as an inn, at one point by local poet James Ruickbie, and demolished in 1861 to make way for an extension to the Crown.

coci-nit (kō-ki-ni') n., arch. coconut – 'Thus coakih-nit taiblet = cocoanut candy' [ECS].

Cock (kok) n. nickname of John Wigholm.

cock-a-leekie (ko-ku-lee-kee) n. a soup made from fowl boiled with leeks and other vegetables.

cock-bird (kok-burd) n., arch. a cock chicken, a puny youngster.

cock-brui (kok-brū) n., arch. the broth of a boiled cock.

Cockburn (kok-burn) n. former name for lands that were near Northhouse and Stobbicote. It is recorded along with them as 'Cokburn' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540, when William Henderson was the King's shepherd there. It is possible that this is a mis-transcription for another farm.

Cockburn (kō-burn) n. Alexander of Ormiston (15th/16th C.), 2nd son of Sir John, whom he succeeded in about 1470. He leased the lands of Craik to Robert Scott of Eilrig in 1477 for 6 years. He was Sheriff in Midlothian, as described in a charter of 1477/8. His son and heir was John. He was listed as a debtor for the Master of Abernethy in 1491. He may be the Laird of Ormiston who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was probably the same Alexander of Ormiston Hall to whom Robert Scott of Allanhaugh owed 100 merks in 1500, with the lands of Whitchesters as security. He was still alive in 1503 when his son John witnessed a retour for Helen Rutherford of that Ilk. David (15th C.) received 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed among servants of the Laird. It is possible this was the same man as David of Henderland, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. George (17th C.) recorded as resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. Probably the same George married Margaret Shiel, and had children, baptised in Roberton Parish, including: Margaret (b.1683); William (b.1686); and Hector (b.1687). The witnesses in 1686 were William Shiel (surely related to his wife) and Thomas Liddell. Mary from Alton, who married Walter Scott in Wiltonburn in 1713, may also have been his daughter. He was probably father of Hector in Burnfoot-on-Ale, who described in 1764 how he had seen Wilton Common perambulated when he was about 15; he must therefore have died before 1692, when his widow remarried to James Shortreed, described as step-father to Hector. Rev. Harold Andrew (1895–1958) son of George Hanna, Schoolmaster in Paisley, and Isabella Brodie Marshall. He served in WWI as a gunner with the Royal Field Artillery. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1921 and B.D. from St. Andrews in 1924. Licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1925, he became assistant at St. Michael's in Dumfries. In 1927 he was ordained as minister of Castleton Parish, remaining until translated back to Dumfries in 1930. He served as liaison officer between Protestant churches in Britain and the U.S.A. in 1942 and was awarded the Norwegian Freedom Medal in 1947. He married Isabella, daughter of Dr. William Henry Manners. Their children were Eileen Mary and George Hanna Michael. He died in Dumfries. Hector (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Dunlop and their children included George (b.1724), James (b.1726), Jean (b.1728), Katherine (b.1733), Margaret (b.1736), Agnes (b.1738) and Elizabeth (b.1742). Probably he was the Hector 'in Burnfoot of the water of Ale' when he was among those selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765; he was then 'aged 80, or thereby'. He lived most of his life near Wilton Common and remembered in about 1700 seeing the boundaries perambulated by Scott of

Falnash, the Laird of Scotsbank, Thomas Halliday (Clerk of Selkirk), the Lairds of Langlands and Whitehaugh, Robert Easton and 'Muckle Robin' Scott; at that time he was living with his step-father, James Shortreed. Sir James of Skirling (d.1588/9) son of Sir William of Skirling, he succeeded on the death of his brother Sir William. He was granted the lands of Dawyck and Synton in 1552, which had been forfeited by James Veitch of Dawyck. He was recorded as 'Jacobo Cokburne de Scraling. In 1566 North Synton was granted to John Fleming of Boghall. He married Janet Herries, co-heir of William Herries, 3rd Lord Terregles and was succeeded by his son Sir William. John (d.bef. 1512) probably son of John and perhaps grandson of Alexander. He is described as 'of Ormiston of new' in 1507/8 when he appears to have been given the lands of Whitslade (or perhaps just the superiority) by Robert Erskine. In 1508 he was granted the lands of Ormiston, on their resignation by his father John. He is described in 1508/9 as son and heir of John of Ormiston when he was granted the lands of Craik in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. He may have been the same John who witnessed a charter for Henry Wardlaw of Wilton in 1483 (or this may have been his father). It is possible he is the John 'ga richtly ben' (presumably a nickname) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5; probably this is also the 'Johannis cokburn gareluhene' (likely mis-transcribed) in Milsington in 1502 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was fined for his non-appearance in court at Jedburgh. He may also be the 'Johne Cokburne' who was among the men who had respite in 1504 for involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He married Margaret Hepburn, who may have been daughter of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, and was probably succeeded by his son Sir John. Sir John of Ormiston (d.1583) son of William and Janet Somerville. He served as Secretary of State. He was usually referred to as 'Ormiston', so that the contemporary James Ormiston of that Ilk was called 'Black Ormiston'. In 1535 his lands at Craik were raided by a group of Armstrongs, who were denounced as rebels for stealing about 100 cattle and taking 3 of his farm servants prisoner, this was followed a few months later by another raid by the Armstrongs in which 2 oxen (possibly the only 2 left!) were taken. He had remission for assisting the Earl of Hertford in 1544. He is probably the John styled 'formerly of Ormiston' in a charter of 1548/9 in which Walter Scott of Branxholme (and his wife Janet Beaton) gained the lands of Easter Craik that he had forfeited through treason. However, he must have been rehabilitated. He was recorded in a bond of assurance along with the Earl of Bothwell and others in 1561. He was implicated in the murder of Rizzio in 1566. In 1567 he had a charter of the lands of Easter Craik, granted by James, Earl of Bothwell (presumably seized back from the Scotts of Buccleuch). There was a confirming Great Seal charter of the Easter Craik in 1573/4. In 1570 he and William Lauder of Haulton were meant to have 2 Elliots warded with them, namely Hob Elliot, son to 'Elder Will', and John Elliot of Heuchhouse; however, the men were not produced, as stated in 1578/9 when several Elliots were fined. He served as surety in 1571, 1575 and 1577, as well as for Elliot of Braidlie in 1576 and 1577. He was on an assize in 1582. He married Alison, daughter of Sir James Sandilands of Calder. His children included: Sir John of Ormiston (c.1544–1626), who was Lord Justice Clerk; Samuel, who married Elizabeth Douglas; Barbara; Sibyl, who married Sir John Cockburn of Clerkington; and Janet. Sir John of Ormiston (c.1544–1626) son of Sir John. He became Lord Justice Clerk. In 1587 he served as cautioner for William Ker of Cessford (Warden of the Middle March), John Molle of that Ilk, Lancelot Ker of Gateshaw and Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. In 1592/3 he was Justice Clerk when named as a commissioner for appointing the Warden of the West Marches. In 1594 he was appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. He appeared in court in 1595 to represent 7 shoolboys (including Malcolm, who was probably his son), complaining of being unfairly imprisoned for the murder of a Bailie during the siege at Edinburgh High School. In 1597 and 1598 he was listed on documents for Robert of Swinton. He firstly married Janet, daughter of Alexander Home of Manderston and secondly married Elizabeth Bellenden. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as labourer in Lilliesleaf in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Peter of Henderland (14th C.) 3rd son Alexander of that Ilk and Langton, he was a descendant of the Piers who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1298. His name was written 'Piers de Cokburn' and variants. He is well-known because of the ancient gravestone, which long survived in the family chapel at Henderland, near St. Mary's Loch, and was often confused with the grave of his rieving descendant, William. His wife was Marjorie, who may have been a de Soulis, and inherited lands in Eskdale and Annandale. He was succeeded by another Peter. Peter of Henderland (14th/15th C.) son of Peter. In 1383 he had a renewal charter for his father's resignation of all of his lands. He held lands in Selkirkshire (including Dalgleish), Peeblesshire (including Kirkurd), Annandale and Eskdale. He was superior of the lands around the Tima Water, which the Scotts swapped for Bellendean with the monks of Melrose in 1415; he was recorded then as 'Petrus de Kokburne'. He probably had the chapel built at 'Henderland in Rodonna', dedicated to his parents. His daughter Maragret married Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd, and his own lands of Kirkurd may then have been merged with the lands of the Scotts there. His sons were: William, who succeeded; Edward; and Thomas, perhaps the Thomas who was made Chaplain of St. Michael in Peebles in 1462. His seal bore an ermine and 3 cocks. Piers of Henderland (d.1529) said to have been hung as a riever over the gates of his own house by the men of James V. Sir Walter Scott adds 'tradition says, that Cockburne was surprised by the king, while sitting at dinner'. His wife Marjorie is then meant to have gone to the 'Dow Glen' to contemplate drowning herself, as remembered in the ballad 'Lament of the Border Widow'. A stone in the old graveyard at St. Mary's Loch is said to have been inscirbed 'Here lyes Perys of Cockburne and his wife Marjory'. It seems that the story is loosely based on the execution of William of Henderland in Edinburgh in 1530, with confusion over his forename and artistic license in describing the circumstances of his death. Rev. Samuel (d.c.1624) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1600, he became minister at Kirkmichael (Banffshire) in 1601 and was translated to Minto in 1609. In 1613 he was ordered by the Presbytery to pay back the minister of Hownam for a book of his! In 1619 he witnessed a bond between Adam Turnbull in Bonchester Townhead and Walter Lorraine in Gatehousecote. William Wishart served as his assistant in the period 1613–18. He is described as 'verie seik' in 1623 and died before August the following year. He had a son, Andrew, and a daughter, Helen. Thomas (19th C.) from the Duns area, he purchased Menslaws in 1860. However, he sold it again soon afterwards. He was a major landowner in Bedrule Parish in the 1860s. In about 1874 the land tax for Menslaws was paid by his trustees (suggesting he was deceased by then). Rev. Thomas (c.1842–1923) born in Berwick, where he attended the Wallace Green Presbyterian Church. He was ordained in 1869 as minister of the West End or 'Green' Kirk, moving to Orrock Place with the congregation 5 years later. His time as minister saw the new church opened in 1874 and the Manse being replaced in 1875. He retired in 1905. He married Ann Betram and their children were: Joseph Ernest (b.1875); Bertram (b.1876); Annie Cowan (b.1878); and Arthur (b.1881). In 1907 he secondly married Jemima Euphemia Millar Linn. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Doveshaughmill according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. William of Henderland (15th C.) son of Piers of Henderland. Walter Scott of Buccleuch's wife Margaret Cockburn was his sister. In 1446 he witnessed the charter of Branxholme for his brother-in-law Sir Walter Scott; he was there 'Willelmo de Kokburne de Henrilands'. He was witness to a 1447 feu charter of the lands of Birkwood near Hawick, where he is referred to as 'Hanerland'. In 1449 he was 'Willelmi de Cokburn de Henrilande' when he witnessed another charter for Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was a supporter of the Black Douglas and forfeited some of his lands in the 1450s as a result. In 1451 either he or his son William paid a fine for killing the King's deer in Ettrick Forest. He had a sasine for Henderland and 'Bothill' in 1457. In 1468 he resigned his lands of Lempitlaw to David Scott, heir of Walter. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King's enemies. He married Egidia or Gelis, daughter of Fraser of Overtoun. His children included: William, who succeeded and married Katherine, daughter of George Rutherford of Chatto; Gilbert of the Glen; Marjorie, who married Walter Scott of Synton; Margaret, who married John Lindsay of Wauchopedale and secondly William Hay of Tallo; and Geilis, who married Alexander Murray of Shillinglaw. He was probably the grandfather of the famous riever of the same name. William of Henderland (15th/16th C.) eldest son of William and Egidia Fraser. Jointly with his wife he held the lands of Sunderlandhall, and he succeeded to all his father's estates in the period 1480–5. This included part of North Synton, which had been forfeited by Veitch of Dawyck. He is probably the William, Laird of Henderland who in 1498 served as surety for Edward, and in 1502 was surety for John and David. He was 'Willelmo Cokburne de Hennyrland' when witnessing a transaction in Edinburgh in 1503. He married Katherine, daughter of George Rutherford of Chatto. Their children were: William, who succeeded, and was killed as a reiver; John, who succeeded to Glen; Margaret, who married John Veitch of Dawyck; and Christian, who married Robert Scott of Whitchesters. William of Henderland (d.1530) son of William and Katherine Rutherford. He was Laird of the lands of Henderland, as well as Sunderland in Peeblesshire. He is notorious as a reiver, although there is little reason to believe his behaviour was any different than other Border Lairds of the time. It does seem that he had financial difficulties, and was forced to sell some of his properties in the early 1500s, e.g. part of Bold to John Murray of Falahill. In 1518 and 1519 he was warded, and released only when his tenants complained that they were being attacked in his absence. Supposed to return to prison after 3 days, he evaded capture for the next decade. In 1529 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was charged by the King to apprehend him. In 1530 he was arrested along with Adam Scott of Tushielaw, and hung in Edinburgh as an example to other rievers of the time. He was explicitly convicted of high treason, in bringing Englishman Alexander Forester, his son and others to plunder lands in Scotland, as well as convicted of theft, reset, etc. He was hung in Edinburgh (probably not on his own door, as in the tradition) and his head fixed to the Tolbooth there. His lands and goods were confiscated, and in 1532 granted to James, brother of Malcolm, Lord Fleming, although his son William tried to have these restored, and eventually recovered some of them, with the help of Scott of Buccleuch. The story of his death was the basis for the ballad 'The Border Widow's Lament', and an old stone at Henderland is meant to commemorate him and his wife Marjory; however, the name of his real-life wife is not recorded, and it is not even clear if the ballad originally related to him at all. Note that his name is given incorrectly as 'Piers' (the name of some of his ancestors) in several Border histories. William of Ormiston (16th C.) son of John. Some Kers were charged with causing trouble while hunting deer at night on his farm at Ormiston in 1528. He married his cousin Janet Somerville. He was succeeded by his eldest son John (formerly spelled 'Cobburn', 'Cobron', 'Cokburn', 'Cokburne', 'Kokburne', etc.).

Cockburnspath (kō-burnz-pawth) n. village in Berwickshire, surrounding a market square with mediæval cross surviving. The nearby Pease Bridge was the highest in the world (nearly 39 m or 130 ft) when constructed in 1786. The 15th century ruined Cockburnspath Tower is also close by (locally it is 'Co'path').

cocker (ko-kur) n., arch. someone who trains cocks for fighting. 6 were charged in 1863 after a public fight at the Nipknowes, 4 being found guilty of cruelty to animals, effectively ending the local activity.

cocker (ko-kur) v., arch. to oscillate, rock, teeter.

Cocker (ko-kur) n. James of Hawick (17th/18th C.) recorded as a yoeman in a lease in Lancashire in 1709. This may be 'Hawick' in Northumberland.

Cockerheugh (ko-kur-hewch) n. former farm near Hassendeanbank, precise location uncertain, but presumably close to Cocker Syke. Robert Scott of 'Cochehaucht' is recorded in 1484/5. It is described as a 'merk land in Hassendeanbank' in 1556. William Turnbull of Knowe had a sasine for the lands in 1556, probably being the same 'piece of land in Hassendeanbank' which he held since 1536. His son Thomas of Knowe inherited the lands in 1622 and they were part of the lands included along with Knowe in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire. They were next inherited by Thomas Turnbull in 1655, who sold them to John Scott of Brieryyards and his sons in 1656. Walter Scott of Cockerheugh paid land tax on £52 2s there in 1678. Along with much of the area it became part of Minto Parish in 1690, when Hassendean was suppressed. John Scott is recorded there in the 1690s and Robert Turnbull in 1694. Walter Scott of Cockerheugh is recorded in 1721 when his sister Bessie married Walter Scott, uncle to Crumhaugh. Walter Scott, late of Cockerheugh, is recorded in 1743. By 1788 the lands were owned by the Duke of Roxburghe. It is probably the place referred to by Lord Minto when talking about John Leyden – '. . . or seen anything more like a ship than a pair of trows in Cocker's haugh pool'. W. Turnbull from there was witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1796. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was owned by the Duke of Roxburghe and still valued at £52 (also 'Cockersheugh'; it is 'kokerheugh' in 1694; not to be confused with 'Cockleheugh' near Melrose).

Cockerscaur Burn (ko-kur-skawr-burn) n. stream that runs into the Teviot from the north, between Teviot Bank and Hassendeanbank. It is named after the cliff by the Teviot there.

Cocker's Scaur (ko-kurz-skawr) n. popular name for a cliff-like bank of the Teviot near Denholm, referring to a steep part on the north side of the river shortly before coming to the village (the name was used by James Murray in 1863).

Cocker Sike (ko-kur-sīk) n. former name for a small stream near Hassendean, and name of a farmstead there, recorded in 1655. It is probably the same as Cockerheugh (also written 'Syke').

cock-fightin (kok-fī'-in) n. sport, usually involving gambling, in which cocks were enticed to fight with steel spurs fastened to their feet. It was popular locally until well into the 19th century. The Nip Knowe Woods and Thorterdykes were the most frequent locations, with the Nag's Head Inn being used in inclement weather (with the floor covered in turf). The last public meeting was at the Nipknowes in 1863 (12 years after it was prohibited by act of Parliament), with 36 birds and over 500 spectators. In the late 18th century the master and pupils from the Grammar School used to gather on 'Bleeze-money Day' (Candlemas) for this activity. This was sometimes in the schoolroom itself and also at the Little Haugh, with the school forms being arranged around a ring. Each schoolboy had to supply a cock, and 200–300 birds might be involved in all. The Schoolmaster would profit from the entry money and the dead cocks. This practice ended about 1780. There is also mention of a similar activity being traditionally organised in Lilliesleaf, with the Schoolmaster getting money from the fights to supplement his wages; this suggests the same thing happened in many neighbouring parishes. Dr. Charters (of Wilton) worked to abolish the sport entirely. Some of the rural place names containing the word 'Cock' may have been associated with this sport – 'The youth whose foul does moniest pay Is victor ca'd for year and day. But he whose cock disdains to fight, Or flies away must bear the slight Of fugy coward, whilk oft breeds Among the youths mischievous deeds' [JoHo].

cockie-leekie see cock-a-leekie

cockie-rosie (ko-kee-ro-see, ko-ke-ro-see) n., arch. game played by children riding on each others shoulders – '... Kick the can, Still, and Coker Ossie Then oo went for a walk'i [AY], 'Cockerossie, off oo ran, Beds, guesses, bools and kick the can, Kep-a-gush and gainin grund, Skatin on the curlin pond' [IWL] (many spelling variants exist).

cockit (ko-kee', -ki') pp. cocked – 'A feelin-herteet yallih-yorleen ... cockeet eis luggie an cheepeet-in rale kaif an innerly' [ECS], '... wi his heid cockit off at the side ... listenin ...' [DH].

Cock Knowe (kok-now) n. small hill just to the south of Mangerton in Liddesdale.

Cocklaik (kok-lāk) n. former lands in Liddesdale, situated north of the farm of Ovenshank, between the Liddel and Hermitage Waters. The name was surely associated with the nearby Cock Law. In the 1541 rental roll it is valued at 10 shillings and tenanted by Simon Elliot. It was still a separate farm in 1718, when surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 341 acres, bounded by Whitehaugh, the Liddel Water, Powisholm and a piece of common ground (on the north); the farm also possessed 3 small pieces of land on the other side of the Liddel, adjacent to Byreholm. There were 2 farmhouses marked, one corresponding to the modern Mains and the other a few hundred metres north-east, both on the banks of the Liddel. It was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755 (it is 'Coklaik' in 1541; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Coklak', Blaeu's c.1654 map as 'Coclak' and is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as 'Cocklaike'; the name could mean a place where cock fighting took place, with 'laik' meaning 'sport').

Cocklaw (kok-law) n. tower that has been identified with Ormiston, just outside Hawick. The ruin was covered up when the present farmhouse was built in the 18th century, with only the grass-grown mound in front of Ormiston house remaining. This was the site of the 'Siege of Cocklaw' in the Summer of 1403. King Henry IV had granted the Percy family some lands in southern Scotland (although technically still in Scottish hands), perhaps to placate them. As a result a force led by the younger Henry Percy, known as 'Hotspur' (and possibly his father), laid siege to 'Cocklaw Castle'. The Duke of Albany (Robert Stewart), the Scottish Regent, threatened to send a great army to relieve Cocklaw, and King Henry essentially refused assistance. This led the Earl of Northumberland and his son 'Hotspur' to hatch their plot against the English King, entering an alliance with Albany and the Earl Douglas, which led to the Battle of Shrewsbury and Hotspur's death. The siege itself apparently lasted a few weeks, with the owner James Gledstains absent, but his esquire John Greenlaw putting up a gallant defence (Greenlaw is presented as the owner of Cocklaw in Wilson's fictionalised account of the siege). It has been suggested that the whole episode was simply a ruse to gather allies for the attack on the English throne. The tower was mentioned by Bower in his continuation of the 'Scotichronicon', written about 1440. An earthenware jar containing many coins of a date preceeding the siege were found in the mid-19th century close to the site of the old tower (and is in the Museum). An 'iron ornament' found there was donated to Museum in 1875. The lands near Hawick were probably named after the Cocklaw in Lanarkshire (a few miles north of Biggar), adjacent to the ancestral lands possessed by the Gledstains of that Ilk. These may be among the lands inherited by Margaret Turnbull and passed to the Gledstains family through marriage in about the 1390s (and hence had only been occupied by the Gledstains for a few years before the famous siege). The estate originally consisted of Orchard, Ormiston and Hummelknowes and was in the hands of the Gladstains from around 1400 until sold about 1741 by relatives of the last Laird. Stories of the ghost of a white lady were told about the place in the early 19th century, and a spring there was called the Castle Well until relatively recently. J.E.D. Murray wrote a play called 'Kirsty o' Cocklaw Castle'. A romanticised version of the story of the siege appears in 'Wilson's Tales of the Borders' and it featured as an episode of the TV series 'The Borderers' in 1970. There are several other Cocklaws, including the one north of Biggar, a ruined 15th century Tower near Corbridge, another peel tower near Hexham, lands near Morebattle, a farm near Ayton, another in the hills north of Moffat, in East Lothian and in the Cheviots (also spelled 'Coklaw', 'Cocklawis' and other variants; the origin seems likely to be Old English 'cocc hlaw').

Cock Law (kok-now) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, lying to the west of Old Howpasley, and reaching a height of 343 m.

Cock Law (kok-law) n. area in Liddesdale, lying just to the north of old Castleton, the hill there reaching a height of 169 m. It is probably related to the former lands of 'Cocklaik'. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork near there (it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Coklak' and on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Coclak').

cockle (ko-kul) v. to cock a limb or joint – 'A'm hirplin the day cos A cockled ma ankle'.

Cocklecooty (ko-kul-koo'-ee) n. former name for the Victorian villa known as the Coille about 2 miles north-east of Hawick. The nearby Cocklecooty Cottage is off the road between Bucklands and Hassendean. Robert Walker was farmer there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (also written 'Cocklecootie', it is 'Cocklecokie' in 1797 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

cock ma dye (kok-maw-dI) n., arch. a cocky person – 'A cocky character was usually dubbed as a 'Cock ma dye' ' [WL].

Cock o the North (kok-ō-thu-north) n. tune that the Drums and Fife's play at specific times during the Common Riding. The tune is known by several other names, including 'Jumping John', and dates back to at least the 17th century. The name was a nickname for the Duke of Gordon, and the tune was later associated with a Gordon Highlanders piper who won the Victoria Cross in 1897 for continuing to play after being shot in both legs. It is one of the tunes specifically played on the Saturday, when the band lead the Cornet and mounted supporters down the Loan after they return from the Moor.

the Cock o the North (thu-kok-ō-thu-north) n. nickname in use around the beginning of the 19th century.

Cockplay (kok-plā) n. name for one of several remote local area, some of them called 'Cockplay Hill' or 'Cock Play'. There is one behind Drinkstone Hill, just to the west of Long Moss; it is 'the Cock Play' in the description of the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765 and is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, as well as modern maps. There is another above Merrylaw, one north-east of Hellmoor Loch, another behind Milsington, and two more above the Hermitage Water, as well as one west of Langholm, one in Cumbria and several in Northumberland (sometimes 'Cock Play'; the name presumably relates to areas where wild fowl could be found, more specifically a lekking site for black grouse, or perhaps where cock-fighting or some similar former activity took place, rather than the modern connotation).

Cockplay Hill (kok-plā-hil) n. hill to the south of Twislehope in the upper Hermitage valley. It reaches a height of 477 m and lies to the north of the higher Wetherhorn Hill (it is marked 'Cockplay' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; note there is another hill of the same name just about a mile to the west, in Dumfriesshire).

Cockrig (kok-rig) n. area on the south side of Ale Water, between Esdale Sike and Harehope Sike. It is marked on a map of Shielswood farm in 1767.

cock's comb (koks-kōm) n., arch. the adder's tongue, Ophioglossum vulgatum (said to be from its resemblance to the comb of a cockrel).

cock's kaim (koks-kām) n., arch. a red poppy, especially Papaver rhœas, the cuckoo flower, Orchis mascula.

Cockslands (koks-lawndz) n. lands in the village of Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1654 when inherited by James Pringle of Torwoodlee from his father George. The name is given in the service of heirs as 'Cockslandis', but it is possible this is an error for Clerklands.

Cocks Pairt (koks-pār') n. Cockspart, former name for an area to the east of Robert's Linn, on the farm of Langburnshiels – '... (where three lairds' lands meet, named the Duke of Buccleuch, Stobs, and Harwood) vulgarly called Goks' pairt or Cocks part' [WaD] (described as part of the possible course of the Catrail in Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick'; it is marked as 'Cockspairt' on Blaeu's 1654 map, somewhere near Saughtree).

cockstride (kok-strīd) n., arch. a short length, space or amount of time – 'The days keep in a cockstride every nicht efter the Fair' [GW], 'Juist an hoor an' a cockstride frae here' [GW].

codlin (kod-lin) n., arch. a codling, young cod.

cod-ware (kōd-wār) n., arch. a pillow-case – '... did entice her to take some meale from her master, and give her ane cod-waire to put the samen in' [BR1690].

co'erlet (cōr-li') n., poet. a coverlet, bedspread – 'Then Dickie's com'd hame to his wife again, Fala, &c. Judge ye how the poor fool sped, He has gi'en her threescore English punds For the three auld co'erlets was tane aff her bed. Fala, &c.' [CPM].

coff (kof) v., poet. to buy, purchase – '... but gang ye rather til them that sell, an' coff for yoursels' [HSR], '... sen' the multitud awa, that they may gae intill the clauchans an' coffe themsels vittels' [HSR] (also written 'coffe').

the Coffin End (thu-ko-fin-end) n. a group of low, wooden buildings, mainly used as shops, which extended from the end of Bridge Street to roughly where the Horse now stands. The shops were reached by descending a few steps from street level. They can be seen in a photograph of around 1890 (mainly housing Turnbull's coal merchants), and were demolished around 1894, when the Central Hotel was built. George Luff had offered to demolish them at his own expense if the Town granted him a liquor licence; although the offer was refused, he was granted a licence after improving his hotel and remained true to his word, demolishing the buildings and gifting the piece of land to the Burgh. The nickname came from the tapering shape of the group of buildings, which is still partly retained in the Prudential building, later the Coffin End coffee shop and then the gift shop Rum and Milk.

coft (koft) pp., arch. bought, purchased – '... mair 30s. for skins coft and receivit by him at Whitsunday last ...' [BR1642], '... the thrie barrels of strong watters coft be the said John Scott ...' [BR1656], 'Mind they congregatione, whilk thou hest coft o' auld ...' [HSR], '... een til this mountan whilk his richt han' had coft' [HSR] (from Mediæval Dutch).

cog (kōg) n., arch. a pail, bowl, wooden vessel for holding porridge, broth etc. – '... kists, barrels, tubbs, koags and bickers' [DMW1681], 'Then up cam' the wife o' the Mill Wi' the cog and the meal, and the water' [ES], 'Whan cottars liv'd on cogs o' brose, An wi' stow-struntin' tied their hose' [JR], 'Nae knives nor forks war then in vogue, Nor ilka ane a diff'rent cog' [JR], 'It was a wooden cog in which the clothes were washed, and the children scrubbed, the cow was milked into it at night, and in the morning it was the medium of carrying out the ashes' [WNK], 'An' aye we ca'd the ither cog, An' toom'd the reamin' horn!' [JT] (also spelled 'koag', etc.).

coggly (kō-gul) v., arch. unsteady, tottering – '... or maun heh cowblt on ov a gey coaggly foond' [ECS].

Cogs Knowes (kōgz-nowz) n., pl. local name for hills near Cogsmill schoolhouse (the name could be a corruption or euphemism for 'God's Knowes', connected with the chapel of St. Cuthbert there).

Cogsmill (kōgz-mil) n. hamlet on the Newcastleton Road, past Stobs. Little now remains of what was once a thriving village, except the community hall and former school. There were once several more houses, including a post office, which also served as a shop, as well as a school and blacksmith's. In the early 20th century there was a post office, which was also a small shop. The church hall (for Cavers Parish), later a community hall, was built in 1933. The local branch of the W.R.I. was founded in 1934. For much of the 20th century there was a public phone box there. In a circle of trees behind the school lie the remains of what has been traditionally identified with the chapel of St. Cuthbert that is mentioned in 12th century writings. The village has also been the site of Ride-outs during the lead-up to the Common Riding. Philip Scott was recorded there in 1709 and John Nisbet in 1721. James Cavers was there in 1860 (it is 'Cogsmiln' in 1710 and 1721).

Cogsmill Burn (kōgz-mil-burn) n. stream which rises from several smaller streams around Berryfell Hill and flows in a roughly western direction, through Cogsmill, to reach the Slitrig near Stobs.

Cogsmill Gate (kōgz-mil-gā') n. former name for a farmstead near Cogsmill.

Cogsmill Hill (kōgz-mil-hil) n. name for a hill near Cogsmill, possibly the one also called 'Denholm Hill'.

Cogsmill Hall (kōgz-mil-hawl) n. hall in the hamlet of Cogsmill. The original building was a wooden hut, erected by the Laird of Cavers in 1859 to provide Sunday services for railway workers in the area. In 1877 the old building was bought by the Schoolmaster for use as a hayshed and the newly constructed school doubled as the district hall. A new hall was built in 1933 and monthly Sunday services continued there until at least the 1950s. The hall is still in regular use by the local W.R.I., as well as for other community events.

Cogsmill Post Office (kōgz-mil-pōst-o-fees) n. former village post office in Cogsmill, which also served as the only shop in Slitrig Water. It stood near the main road, in the former schoolhouse, at the corner of the side road to the later school building and was demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. In the early 1900s it was run by Mrs. Rutherford.

Cogsmill Schuil (kōgz-mil-skil) n. former school at Cogsmill, near to the site of St. Cuthbert's Chapel. There had long been a school run informally in that area, but it was not founded until 1829. It was run by Cavers Parish and later by the combined Cavers and Kirkton School Board. The schoolroom and schoolmaster's house were built by public subscription. It had more than 40 pupils in the 1830s and in 1841 was referred to as 'Slitrig Cavers'. Thomas Shiel was Schoolmaster from 1829. William MacNeill was teacher there 1849–55. James W. Scott is recorded as Schoolmaster (as well as postmaster) there in 1857 and until at least 1877. Andrew Oliver was Schoolmaster in the 1880s. George Skea was Schoolmaster in at least the years 1903–06. In the early 1900s there was a Mr. Scott, followed by a Mr. Wordhaugh. A new building was constructed as a school and house for the master in 1880, replacing an earlier schoolhouse (which stood close to the main road, to the south). The building was also used for occasional Sunday sermons for the local area and as the district hall for community events until 1933, when a purpose-built hall was built. The school closed in 1961 and the building was then converted into a private dwelling.

Coila (koi-la) n. Pictish King of the 2nd century, possibly the original for 'Old King Cole' and origin of the 'Kyle' district in Ayrshire. The word was used by Burns as the name for his muse, and is sometimes used for all of Scotland – 'Give me the hills where Ossian lies And Coila's Minstrel sang' [HSR].

the Coille (thu-koil) n. J.P. Alison designed home, easily seen from the Denholm Road below Crow Hill. It was built for manufacturer William Boyd Sime around 1910 and was formerly called Cocklecooty.

coinye (koin-ye) v., arch. to coin – '...being £11 money of this realme thereintil, being three 4 merk peices coneyst (i.e. coined) with the milne rynd ...' [BR1642] ('coinyit' would be the normal past tense, but several variants existed).

Coit Acre (koi'-ā-kur) n. former name for an acre of farmland in Lilliesleaf Parish. It was rented by William Middlemas (tenant farmer at Friarshaw) to John Redford in 1563.

Coitlaw see Cottlaw

Coldhouse Kipp see Cauldhoose

Coldingham (kōld-ing-hum) n. village near the coast in Berwickshire, partly hidden in a valley. The Mount is probably the 'Holmelenoll', a Norman motte where courts were held. Population (1991) 512.

Coldingham Loch (kōl-ding-um-loch) n. loch near the sea in Coldingham Parish, Berwickshire. It is 22 acres in size and used for fishing and an important site for wildfowl.

Coldingham Priory (kōl-ding-um-prI-o-ree) n. ancient priory near Coldingham, founded by King Edgar in 1098 and dedicated to St. Mary. An earlier monastery may go back to the 7th century, established by St. Abba (or Ebba) who ran it until her death in 683. The nuns are supposed to have cut off their lips and noses to preserve their honour when the vikings attacked in 870. It was sacked by King John in 1216, burned by the English in 1430 and 1544 and demolished by Cromwell in 1648. It was then reconstructed in 1661 and partially rebuilt 1835–58 to form the parish church. From the 16th century the priory and estates were run by the Homes.

Coldinghamshire (kōl-ding-um-shIr) n. unofficial name for the area around Coldingham in Berwickshire, once governed separately from the priory.

Coldstream (kōld-streem) n. town on the River Tweed in Berwickshire, being for a long time the first reliable ford upriver from Berwick. Hence it was a historic crossing point for the Tweed and has a strong military past. It is said that many notable people (including royalty) spent nights in the town while waiting for the ford to be crossable. The town gave its name to the Coldstream Guards in the late 17th century. It is built around a large Market Place. The area once had a Priory, founded in the mid-12th century, run by Cistercian nuns, who were said to have buried many of those who died at Flodden; the buildings were destroyed by Hertford's men in 1545 and the last Prioress resigned in 1588. The town became a Burgh of Barony in 1621. The main bridge over the Tweed was built 1763–66, making the town one of the main Edinburgh to London routes, since it was the first bridge built between Berwick and Peebles. The bridge also has the Marriage-house at its north end, a reminder of times when the town served as the eastern version of Gretna Green for eloping couples from England. The 'Ba Green' on the English side of the Tweed is part of Scotland, won, it is said, in the baa games formerly played between this town and Wark. Coldstram Civic Week started in 1952 and includes a ride to the Flodden Memorial. A huge sycamore tree nearby is supposed to have been planted to commemorate those lost at Flodden. The local pronunciation is 'Castrum'. Population (1991) 1,746. 'Second to None – a History of Coldstream' was published in 2010 (the origin of the name is related to the fact that a bridge was only built across the Tweed there in 1766).

Coliburn (ko-lee-burn) n. lands that were part of the former extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield, somewhere in or near the upper Teviot valley. It is not impossible it is connected with Colifort. It is transcribed 'Co ... burne' in the 1634 service of heirs, 'Coatburne' in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch and 'Coatburn' in the 1693 charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith (it is 'Coilburn' in 1621, 'Coilburne' in 1653 and 'Coliburne' in 1660 and 'Coitburne or Coilburne' in 1661).

Colifort (ko-lee-for') n. former farm in the Slitrig valley, recorded as early as 1428, with the name surviving in 'Coliforthill'. This area is probably the 'Colyfordland', half of which is included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It was 'Collifurdlandis' in 1509/10 when listed as part of the lands of John Gledstains of that Ilk going back to much earlier charters. The 'twenty shilling land of Collefurd' is recorded in a 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers and was mentioned again in 1539. Elizabeth Scott 'of Colinfurd' was probably there in 1540. In 1550 William Scott, son of Wat 'of Teviotdale' took sasine of the lands from James Douglas of Cavers; it is described as lying between the 'routlyn syik' on the north, 'chirnburn syik' on the south and the Slitrig on the west. Hob Scott 'callit of Colyfurd' was hanged for theft and related crimes in 1564. William Scott, 'sone to Wyll of Collefurde, callit Reid Wyllie' witnessed a document in Hawick in 1585. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698; at that time along with Coliforthill it was described as a 20-shilling land. James Scott 'colifert' was recorded on the 1694 Hearth tax rolls in Hawick and in the Hawick Parish records of 1704–13. Thomas Stavert was farmer there in at least 1785–93 (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name 'Cola' plus 'ford', since the spellings often ended with 'd' rather than 't' until about 1700, e.g. it appears as 'colefurd' in 1550, 'Collefurd' in 1562, 'Collifurd' in 1550 and 'Collefoord' in 1687; there is some confusion over the origin of the name, since the nearby hill contains a fort; it is 'Collifort' on Gordon's c.1650 map and is often spelled that way later).

Coliforthill (ko-lee-for'-hil) n. farm on the Slitrig a few miles outside Hawick, with a hillfort nearby. It was part of he Barony of Cavers, whose superiority was long held by the Douglases. It was for a time the home of a branch of the Gledstains family. James Gledstains of Cocklaw served as surety for the residents there in 1574. It was valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643, when owned by William Gledstains 'of Collifirthill'. By 1678 the owner was William Douglas 'of Collifordhill'. Walter and William Glendinning and Walter Martin were there in 1694. Gilbert Amos was tenant in the early 18th century. In the mid-18th century it was occupied by Thomas Stavert, it is said as a reward for military services rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. It was still valued at about £267 in 1788 when owned by Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and in 1811 when owned by Douglas of Cavers. James Angus and Robert Brown were servants there in 1799 and Robert Stavert and Robert Brown in 1801. James Scott was farmer there in the mid-19th century. A stone ball found there is in the Museum. The remains of the hill-fort are on the crest of a ridge, now almost obliterated by cultivation, but with the western apex surviving (also spelled 'Califordhill' and variants, being 'Colyfurdhill' in 1574, 'Colliforhill' in 1678, 'Collefuirdhill' in 1687, 'Collifarte hill' in 1694, 'Collifordhill' in 1698, 'Colliford-hill' in 1788, 'Collyfordhill' in 1797, 'Coleyfordhill' in 1799, 'Coleyforthill' in 1801 and 'Colliford Hill' in 1811; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Collyfort hill' and on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Collifordhill').

Colishead (ko-liz-heed) n. James (17th/18th C.) reprimanded by Hawick Session in 1715 for harbouring John Faa, who had failed to produce a 'testificate' of his marriage.

Colislinn (ko-leez-lin) n. house 2½ miles from Hawick along the Slitrig, built in the Scottish Baronial style in 1896 by the Haddon family as a country retreat. The initials of Walter Haddon and his wife Caroline Ross are carved above the front door. The architect was J.P. Alison. The land was formerly part of Coliforthill farm, sold by Douglas of Cavers to the Haddons in 1896. In the 20th century it was home to the Young family. It is now available as a self-catering luxury holiday property. It is named after the nearby waterfall. The land was formerly part of Coliforthill farm, sold by Douglas of Cavers to the Haddons in 1896. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building and enclosure to the south of the house – 'There comes from Slitrig's source a mourneful din, Replied to by a groan from Coli's Linn' [WNK] (see also Collie's Lynn).

Collace (ko-las) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) described as 'reader of Hassinden' when he married Janet Blaikie in Edinburgh in 1606. The minister at this time is recorded as John Mader, so it was unclear who had the 'living' and who was actually the minister. In deeds of 1613 and 1632 he is recorded as Schoolmaster in Hassendean Parish. He may have been one of the Collaces of Balnamoon near Brechin (also spelled 'Collas').

collar-binnder (ko-lur-bin-dur) n. a person who attaches collars to garments in the knitwear trade, using a machine that makes a link chain. This was part of the clean side of the mill, after the wool had been washed, and traditionally a woman's job. Also sometimes called a 'linker'.

collation (kō-lā-shin) n., arch. formal admittance to a benefice – '... Mr Thomas Cranstoun minister of goddis worde having in his hands ane collation and institutionne of the parsonage and vicarage of the parish kirk of Askirk' [SPB1580].

colleckit (ko-le-kee', -i') pp. collected – '... cursing the woman's 'lang tongue, which she micht hae keepit cannie till the happinnies had been collecket' [WNK], '... The hempies, too, when young and glaickit, And strung in bands, like gems colleckit' [AD] (also collectit).

collectit (ko-lek-tee', -ti') pp. collected – '... won ... be Wricht, the wrestler, whae collecteet anither ten bob' [BW1974] (also colleckit).

Colledge (ko-leej) n. Adam Norman McLeod (1872–1965) born in Summershall Edinburgh, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Darling. His grandfather William was born in Denholm, and his great-grandfather Joshua was probably brother of Denholm stocking manufacturer Thomas. After his father died his mother raised the family in Selkirk, where he became a solictor's clerk, later moving to Annan. Keen on music, he became organist at Lamlash Parish Church, then at the Episcopalian Kirk in Edinburgh and at Walkerburn. Meanwhile he carried out formal training at St. Mary's Cathedral Edinburgh, gaining the A.L.C.M. diploma in 1901 and L.L.C.M. in 1903. In 1901 he became organist for the Old Parish Church, succeeding K.E. Reinle. He was a private music teacher in Hawick, living at 6 Dakers Place. He quickly became a part-time music teacher in Hawick schools, obtaining a full-time appointment at Hawick High School by 1907, remaining until his retirement in 1937. He lived at 6 Douglas Road and later 'the Poplars' in Denholm. Apart from music, his other great love was horse-riding, and he was an enthusiastic follower at Hawick and Selkirk Common Ridings as well as of the Buccleuch Hunt. In 1928 he who wrote the music for 'The Mosstrooper's Song', with words by J.E.D. Murray. He married Agnes Lily Grierson, from Jedburgh. Their son Tom (1902–83) was Acting Father in 1953 and married Margaret Elizabeth Douglas Scott. Joshua (1766–1851) resident of Cavers Parish. It seems likely he was a brother of Thomas, who lived in Denholm at the same time; he also married a Leyden, his wife being Isabel. In the 1789 record of their marriage, his forename is given as 'John' and his wife's as 'Mellow'. Their children included: Jean (b.1795); Mary (b.1796); Isabel (b.1798), who married James Munn; Thomas (b.1800); Grace (b.1802); Anna (b.1803); William (b.1805), a surgeon in Edinburgh; Elizabeth (b.1807); Joshua (b.1809); James (b.1812); and Joshua (again, b.1815). Joshua Leyden (b.1815) born in North Leith, son of Joshua and Isabella Leyden. He was a stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living at about Kirkside. He emigrated to New Zealand. In 1857 he donated 'trophies from the Eastern war' to the Hawick Archæological Society. In 1877 he was in London when he donated a 'South American hunting knife'. He married Elizabeth Farquhar from Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth Isabella (b.1838), who died young; Isabella Leydon (b.1839), also died young; Joshua Leydon (1841–86); Elizabeth Farquhar (1842–99); Isabella Cowen (1844–89); Peter Farquhar (b.1846), died in infancy; Margaret (b.1847); Catherine (b.1849); and James Farquhar (b.1853), died young. He died at Dunedin in New Zealand. Joshua Leydon (1841–86) son of Joshua, he was born in Edinburgh. In 1861 he was 'Manufacturer's Clerk' living as a boarder at 5 Cross Wynd. Thomas (d.1841) probably the first hosiery manufacturer in Denholm, at the end of the 18th century. Andrew Scott was an apprentice with him. He married Janet Leyden. She was a widow living in Kirkside in Denholm in 1841 and 1851 (aged 79). Their children included: Janet (b.1796), who married stockingmaker Robert Scott; Grace (b.1797); Jane (1799–1893), who married farmer Andrew Haig; William Wilson (1802–72), who died in Lanark; Mary (1804–72), who married grocer John Mack and then Jedburgh shoemaker James Halliburton; Leyden or Lydia (b.1806), who married John Ballantyne and died in New Zealand; and Betty (b.1808) (also written 'Collidge').

the Collie failure (thu-ko-lee-fāl-yur) n. economic disaster across Britain in 1875, following the failure of Alexander Collie & Co., woollen merchants of Manchester and London, with liabilities estimated at about £3,000,000. It was devastating for the Hawick knitwear industry of the time.

Collie Linn (ko-lee-lin) n. name for part of the Ale Water near the farm of Dimpleknowe (note the similarity to Collie's Lynn).

Collier (kol-yur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Grange in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is listed as 'Collyer' and he paid tax for 2 hearths. He could be the Andrew who had children Janet (b.1691) and Andrew (b.1693) baptised in Bedrule Parish. Andrew (18th C.) married Isabel Leyden in Cavers in 1713. Andrew (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. In 1722 he was witness to a baptism for Walter Scott in Fenwick. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of the deceased Walter Scott, who had been Beadle of Hawick Kirk. Their children included: Katherine (b.1720); Margaret (b.1722); Violet (b.1724); Agnes (b.1731); Robert (b.1737); and Andrew (b.1740). Additionally, Margaret (b.1741) and Christian (b.1746), baptised in Cavers, may have been his daughters. The witnesses in 1720 were masons John and Andrew Turnbull. He could be the Andrew, son of James, baptised in Bedrule in 1693. His surname is also written 'Colwort'. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Helen Brown and their children included: Andrew (b.1772); Christian (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Cavers Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is transcribed 'Coiliart'. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1772, when his daughter Mary was baptised. Perhaps the same Gideon had a daughter Violet baptised in Cavers in 1753. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. His wife was Christian Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1699); Andrew (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). The witnesses in 1699 were Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and glover John Hart and in 1702 were James Lamb and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. James (18th C.) married Janet Freeman in Hawick in 1762. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Another 'J. Collier, London' was also listed, and so there must have been a local connection to the family. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, possibly the son of Andrew and Agnes Scott born in 1737. He married Margaret Inglis and their children included: Janet (b.1774); Thomas (b.1777); and Margaret (b.1779). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Hawick weaver Charles Scott in 1766. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant to Walter Richardson, recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area (also formerly written 'Coalyart', 'Colliart', 'Collyieart', 'Colwort', 'Colyier', etc.).

Collier's (kol-yurs) n. former grocer's shop at the corner of Wellogate Brae and Wellogate Place in the mid-1900s.

Collier's Plantin (kol-yurs-, ko-lee-urz-plawn'-in) n. former name for an area of trees in Wilton near Burnfoot Mill. It was named after a man called Collier who committed suicide there about 1817 (and his daughter is also recorded as taking her own life in 1855). It once held an old hovel, which until the late 19th century was about the only house between Hawick and Burnfoot (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, just to the south of the railway line, roughly opposite Weensland Mill, so further west than Burnfoot Mill).

collie-shangie (ko-lee-shawng-gee) n., arch. a dog fight, uproar, disturbance – '... the fitting of the seats with doors, by which each shepherd could keep his fidus Achates beside him, was the first blow ... to the almost weekly collie-shangie' [RJR].

Collie's Lynn (ko-leez-lin) n. place name in the Slitrig valley, possibly an older name for the Horseley Burn and for a waterfall there. The name survives in the house Colislinn (possibly related to Colifort; it is referred to by W.N. Kennedy in 1857 and J.A.H. Murray in 1861).

Collie Sike (ko-lee-sīk) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Hazelyside and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn to join the Hermitage Water. On the western bank there are the remains of what may be a chambered cairn, as well as a homestead, some lazy-beds and a sheep-fold. To the south there is a separate ruined building.

Collifort see Colifort

Collin (ko-lin) n. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton, when it contained Hassendean. His surname is written 'callime'. In 1687 he 'had a sone baptized gotten in fornica[tio]ne wt Issobell Magowins', with witnesses Thomas Caldwell and Thomas Lockie. Later that year he married Isobel 'Gowins' in Roberton Parish. William (17th C.) recorded at Horsleyhill in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. His name was written 'colline'. He married Grisel Scott and their children included: William (b.1680); Janet (b.1682); and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1682 were John Noble and Thomas Robson and in 1687 were John and Robert Noble.

Collingwood (ko-lin-wood) n. Sir Cuthbert of Eslington (c.1540–96) son of John, he was Sheriff of Northumberland and Commissioner for the English West and Middle Marches. He was taken prisoner by the Scots at the Raid of the Redeswire, but released soon afterwards. This is celebrated in the ballad – 'But if ye wald a souldier search Among them a' were ta'en that night, What name sae wordie, to put in verse, As Collingwood, that corteous knight'. In 1587 he led a group of 800–900 men into Teviotdale (without the knowledge of the Warden), presumably intending to raid the area. However, the Borderers were warned in advance and emptied their houses, so that he returned to England with nothing. Then Scott of Buccleuch and Ker of Cessford led a band over the Cheviots to Eslington, attacking the town and taking prisoners. He rode out with his sons and servants, was attacked, and then a group including Captain 'Bellowsis' fought with the Scots, several being killed on both sides and around 150 Scots prisoners being rounded up. One of his sons was wounded and another taken prisoner. He married Dorothy Bowes and was succeeded by his son Thomas. His descendant of the same name was second in command of the navy at Trafalgar and famous for writing the letter that gave the news of the death of Admiral Nelson.

collogue (ko-lōg) v., poet. to chat together, be in league – 'The World, The Flesh, and the Deil are colloguin' there, As the Auld Year patiently stands to thole his assize' [DH].

collop (ko-lup) n., poet. portion of food, slice of meat – 'For the Cat will find out to her cost We're a most expensive collop' [WE].

Colmslie (kōmz-lee) n. ruined 16th century tower a few miles north of Galashiels, very close to Hillslap and Langshaw towers. It was the original home of the Cairncrosses of Colmslie and later a stronghold of the Borthwicks – 'Colmslie stands on Colmslie Hill, The water it flows round Colmslie Mill; The mill and the kiln gang bonnily, And it's up with the whippers of Colmslie' [T] (the origin is probably Old English 'cumb leah' for 'the clearing in the valley', and is first recorded in 1160).

colour (ku-lur) n. flag, emblem – '. . . and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carrie the colour' [BR1706], '. . . Routed them and took their colour' [JH], 'Thus we boast a Moor and Colour, Won by feats of hardy valour' [JH].

colour (ku-lur) v., arch. to represent falsely, pass off goods as one's own – 'I shall colour no man's goods under colour of mine own, as I shall answer to God' [BR1681], n. pretence, semblance, especially intended to mislead – 'We doubt not bot your lordschip sicklick, under coloure, will shawe favoure unto us, seeing wee are mynded to keip' [CBP1597].

The Colour (thu-ku-lur) n. original name for part of James Hogg's song about Hornshole, now known as 'Teribus'. It was published along with 'Flodden Field' (which has the same chorus, but is not now sung) in 1819. Although of course taking much poetic license, it nevertheless gives one of the earliest accounts of the events of 1514, including the first published mention of a connection with Hornshole. The publication was in Kelso rather than Hawick, with the two political verses removed, to be re-inserted decades later. The third edition of Hogg's verses was entitled 'Flodden Field and the Colour; or Hawick's Common Riding', and was printed in 1829. Hogg's last revision was published in 1837, and since then the order of the verses has changed considerably, for example the original first verse, 'Hawick shall triumph 'mid destruction . . . ', has been moved towards the end, and the original second verse, 'Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin . . . ' is now the first.

the Colour Bussin (thu-ku-lur-bus-in) n. event in the Town Hall on the Thursday evening of Common-Riding week, tickets being available by ballot. It is perhaps the highlight of the ceremonial part of the Common Riding, with a format that has been largely unchanged for over a century. The Cornet's supporters traditionally fill the gallery, and are each given a ribbon by the Maids of Honour. At 7 p.m. the Burgh Officer asks the audience to stand as the Provost and Magistrates are played in by the Drums and Fifes, followed by the Lasses and the Maids of Honour. The Cornet's Lass carries the flag and 'busses' it on the stage, by tying ribbons of blue and gold to the head of the staff as it is held by the Right- and Left-Hand Lasses. She then passes it to the Provost as Chief Magistrate, saying that she hopes he finds it 'well and truly bussed'. The Provost presents it to the Cornet, charging him to 'ride the meiths and marches of the Commonty of Hawick according to ancient custom', and to return the flag 'unstained and unsullied'. The Cornet's Lass is also presented with her badge of office and puts the sash on the Cornet to complete his uniform. The Provost chairs the schedule of entertainment, introducing the Chief Guest, who gives their speech. This is followed by a programme of singing and recitations, ending with the Song Singer leading 'Teribus'. The Drums and Fifes then play out the Principals and dignitaries, after which the Burgh Officer then reads the Proclamation from the balcony to the crowds outside. The Cornet then begins his procession round town, accompanied by the Saxhorn Band and the Drums and Fifes, stopping at the Horse to 'buss' the flag on the statue. This involves the Cornet clumbing a ladder to tie blue and yellow ribbons onto the statue's flagpole. The Cornet then removes his hat and raises it 3 times, leading the crowd in cheers. The origin of the bussing cermony is surely quite ancient, although it is not mentioned in the Burgh Records until 1809, when it was stated that 'the Cornet and his two men shall wait upon the Chief Magistrate the evening before the Common-Riding day to know the hour of his riding next day, and may then dress the Colour'. Before the Ceremonial Committee was formed the Colour Bussing was much lower key, being performed at the Senior (or sometimes Junior) Bailie's house until 1861, with the Bailie refusing to allow this custom the following year. In 1855 it is recorded that at the house of the Chief Magistrate 'the young ladies of the town had a manful struggle for the coveted honour of sewing on the first ribbon' (suggesting that there was no Cornet's Lass appointed for the task). Until 1886 the ceremony occurred at an inn selected by the Cornet. It moved to the Council Chambers in 1887, with 'Teribus' sung from the window immediately afterwards, followed by the Cornet's Walk and then musical entertainment and speeches in the Town Hall afterwards. The concert after the Bussing was tried out in the main Town Hall as a public event in 1894, although not repeated the following year. The Colour Bussing ceremony was first performed in the main Town Hall (but only by the Cornet's invitation) in 1896, and was a public event from 1897. The first admission charge was made in 1906. Two separate ceremonies were carried out in 1914, 1919 and 1920, due to demand. 'Bussing' the flag on the Horse monument began in 1923 and loud speakers were introduced outside the Town Hall in 1928.

The 1933 Colour Bussing was held in the Volunteer Park (part of which was filmed), while the 1934 ceremony was broadcast on BBC radio. The events were shown on TV screens visible from the Street since about 1990 and transmitted live to the Heart of Hawick since 2014 – 'Come lads, get on with your work and let's hear no more about the Buller-Cussing!' [RM], '... if that pride to evident at the Colour Bussing could be bottled and sold, the town would be worth a fortune!' [ZE] (sometimes hyphenated as 'Colour-Bussin').

Colquhoun (kol-koon) n. Rev. James (18th/19th C.) first minister of the secession church in Lilliesleaf. He was minister of the Relief congregation of Campsie, but was involved in some sort of dispute and was suspended. He was minister of the Congregational Church in Perth for 5 years and then in 1801 became minister at North Shields. His appointment at Lilliesleaf in 1808 was not sanctioned by the Relief Synod, because of his earlier suspension by Glasgow Presbytery. This resulted in the congregation being cut off and later becoming part of the 'Burgher' Kirk. He remained in Lilliesleaf until 1814 (being 'ultimately suspended for intemperance'), returning to England where he stopped being a minister. He may be the Rev. Colquhoun who died in Hull in 1829 and was brother of Rev. Dr. John Colquhoun of South Leith.

Colt (kōl') n. Rev. John (d.bef. 1688) second son of Adam, minister of Inveresk and Elizabeth Johnston. His father had previously been minister of Borthwick Parish in Lothian (making for some possible confusion). He was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery in 1635, became minister of Longnewton in 1642 and appears to have continued there until about 1665. He was minister at Roberton during the time of the reinstatment of Episcopalianism (i.e. rule by bishops), roughly 1660s–80s. The parish was instituted in 1659, but suppressed again in favour of Hassendean in 1666, and not reinstated until 1690. Although it is unclear exactly when he served as minister, he appears to have been the first one, and may have started in 1663. He is recorded in a letter of late 1663 discussing financial matters with the Earl of Lothian, so he was still minister of Longnewton at that point (although could have held overlapping positions). He seems likely to be the 'indulged Presbyterian minister', preaching at Roberton Kirk in about 1675, who Richard Cameron refused to hear preach at Roberton, leading him to be dismissed from his position as chaplain to the Scotts of Harden and pursue his 'Cameronian' agenda. He is recorded doing penance for immorality in Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1682. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included John, Rebecca (who married George Cleland, minister of Morton) and Margaret. His daughter Rebecca is recorded receiving support from the Kirk Session of South Leith in 1688. The date of his death is unknown.

Coltart (kōl-, koo-tur') n. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as tenant in 'Quhelerig', which is probably Wheelrig. He and Andrew Armstrong 'Quhythauche' were accused of stealing lambs from 'Partburne'. He was found guilty of resetting the animals and ordered to be branded on the cheek. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Francis (18th C.) farmer in Woodburn in the Borthwick valley in the early 18th century. He is recorded at Woodburn in 1727, 1732, 1737 and 1742. In 1724 he married Isabella Young. Their children included: Mary (b.1727); George (b.1732); John (b.1734); an unnamed child (b.1737); Isobel (b.1737), who probably married James Cavers; William (b.1739); Agnes (b.1742); and Agnes (again, b.1745). Francis (b.c.1770s) servant at Headshaw according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the Francis who married Agnes Glendinning and whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Ashkirk in 1798. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1763, Whitfield in 1765 and Todshaw in 1767. He married Jean White in Roberton in 1758 and their children included William (b.1763), Jean (b.1765) and Francis (b.1767). Gilbert (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Heidshaw' when he (along with several others) gave security for Mungo Scott of Castleside in 1623. His name was written as 'Coutart'. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 and another for James Donald in 1652. He is probably related to William, who died in the same parish in 1765, aged 102. John (17th C.) resident of Shielswood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His name is written 'Coutert'. John (18th C.) resident at 'Borthwickburnfoot' (i.e. Borthwickbrae Burnfoot) when Robert (b.1772) and William (b.1775) were baptised. He was probably the John who married Margaret Cowan in 1766 and whose other children included: Francis (b.1769); Jean (b.1770); John (b.1777); and Agnes (b.1782). Walter (17th C.) resident Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed baptisms for John Dykes and for John Hislop. He married Jean Brown and their children included Jane (b.1651), Bessie (b.1657) and Isobel (b.1660). Walter (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name is listed as 'Couthart'. He is surely related to James, who was at Headshaw earlier. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Veitch and Jean Coltart in 1689 and another for James Murray and Helen Nivison in 1690. Probably the same Walter married Isobel 'Heline' or 'Hellam', with children including Janet (b.1689) and Mary (b.1692). The witnesses in 1689 were Robert Hope and James Murray. Walter (1698/9–1781) smith at 'Brickhall' (although it is unclear where this is) according to his gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. He may have been son of William, who was smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He is recorded at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1736 and 1741. He married Agnes Reid in Roberton Parish in 1733 and she died in 1780, aged 69. Children baptised in Roberton Parish who were probably his are: William (b.1736); James (b.1738); Margaret (b.1741); Margaret (again, b.1745); Jean (b.1747); Robert (b.1751); and twins Walter and Robert (b.1756). Walter (18th C.) married Betty Rae in Roberton Parish in 1762. He was at Harden Burnfoot in 1771. His children included Francis (b.1771), who may be the Francis 'Coulter' who emigrated and settled in Delaware, U.S.A. William (1662/3–1765) smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He is buried in Ancrum Parish, where it is recorded that both he and his wife Margaret Renwick (d.1749) died at the age of 102. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1708. His children included: Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servant in Commonside in 1722. In that year his daughter Margaret was baptised in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. His wife was Janet Allan and they also had a daughter Agnes (b.1724) baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1722 were 'Mr' James Hume in Commonside and James Grieve. It is possible he is the same man as the smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Northhouse in 1726 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Other children who were probably his include John (b.1723) and William (b.1732). William (1701/2–62) wright at Langhaugh in the Rule valley. He married Agnes Mair, who died in 1757, aged 62. Along with his wife and daughter Helen, he was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. The family name was spelled both 'Cowtard' and 'Colthard'. William (d.1770) resident of Rulewater. He married twice, his second wife being Janet Armstrong in Langside. Their daughter was Elizabeth, who married mason Alexander Dalgleish. His name is 'Coltherd' in the parish register. He died at Hillshaugh. He could be related to the William 'Coltherd', smith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, who had a tombstone in Ashkirk Kirkyard recording that both he and his wife died at the age of 102 (also written 'Coatard', 'Coltard', 'Colter', 'Coltert', 'Colthart', 'Coltherd', 'Coutart', 'Coutert', 'Couthart', 'Coutherd', 'Couthird', 'Coutterd' and variants; see also Coulter and note the possible confusion with Collier, which was also written 'Colwort').

Colterscleuch (kol-turz-clooch) n. area on the A7 just before Teviothead, once the site of a toll bar. This part of the road was upgraded in the mid-1990s, and formerly a notoriously bumpy stretch. The farm there has long belonged to the Duke of Buccleuch. Ninian Elliot was tenant there in 1590. Scott of Satchells describes that John Robertson lived at 'Cauterscleuch', perhaps in about 1680. 4 people were recorded there in 1694. It was surveyed as part of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that time it consisted of 593 acres and was bounded by Northhouse, Southdeanrig, Bowanhill, Commonside and the River Teviot. Andrew Clerk was there in 1718, Francis Bell in 1724, John Pott in 1732 and William Scott in 1753. William Grieve was tenant in the mid-1700s. There was a Tully there in the late 18th century. James Ruickbie ran the toll-house there in the late 18th century, and Gideon Murray after that. In at least 1794–97 the farmer there was John Little, with John Turnbull being a shepherd at the same time. William Scott was a servant there in 1796, Thomas Elliot in at least 1799–1800 and John Little was tenant in at least 1799–1801. Other residents in 1801 included James Storie and Andrew Little. Henry Elliot and his son William were farmers through much of the 19th century, followed by Henry's daughter Margaret, and then his daughter Joanna's sons, called Harrison. Three flints found on the farm here are in the Museum, as well as a perforated stone disk. A burial cairn on the farm (near the Cromrig Burn) was described in 1857 by W.N. Kennedy. It was said to be tenanted by Jock Grieve in one version of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid' – 'He has turned him to the Tiviot side, E'en as fast as he could drie, Till he cam to the Coultart Cleugh, And there he shouted baith loud and hie' [T], 'Coltherdscleugh and Cauldcleuchheid Sae lang's ye mind thae words Loupin oot at ye fae the hauf-inch Tweeddale map Ye've sma cause tae be warsellin wi sair heid Ower the demise o the guid Scots tongue' [LSF] (also written 'Colterscleugh'; a house near there is marked 'Cleuch' on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map, while 'Cauthirscleuch' is marked by Blaeu closer to Colterscleuch Shiel and 'Cousoldcleuch' is marked between; it is 'Couthwartiscleuch' in 1590, 'Couterscleugh' in 1694, 'Colterscluch' in 1708, 'Coltherds cleuch' in 1724, 'Coltherdscleugh' in 1732, 'Coultres Cleugh' in 1744, 'Coltherdscleuch' in 1753, 'Coulterscleugh' in 1797, 'Colthers cleugh' in 1799, 'Coltherdscleugh' in 1800, and 'Coltherdscleuch' in 1821; the origin is probably related to the 'coulter' of a plough, perhaps from the shape of the land).

Colterscleuch Shiel (kol-turz-clooch-sheel) n. farmstead in the hills high above Colterscleuch Cottage, near the head of the Cromrig Burn. It has long been derelict.

Coltman (kōl'-min) n. Charles (b.1817/8) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of the men who helped introduce cricket. In 1841 he was living at Dovemount. He married Charlotte Page in Hawick. Their children included Frederick, Charles (b.1855) and George (b.1861). F. (19th/20th C.) along with his bowling partner W.M. Pennycook, he was the first winner of the Pow Cup in 1905. James 'Jim' (??–) a gas-man by trade, but well known as a local artist, particularly for the 'Rum and Milk' comic strips, other contributions to the Hawick News, and caricatures, some of which were published in 'Yow Yins' (1999). He also provided the sketches for the 'Hawick Common Riding' and 'Airchie Oliver's Birthday Cairds'. John (1933/4–) painter in Hawick. He served his apprenticeship with Scott the painter, then worked at Pesco's, the Co-op and for himself. He married Nora in 1960 and the couple celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2020. Their children are Alan (b.1967) and Alison (b.1970). John L. 'Jake' (??–) wrote 'First hundred: Teviotdale Harriers Club centenary, 1889–1989' (1989). Marjory H. (??–) wrote 'Lest We Forget: Tom Scott, R.S.A. – His Link with Hawick Common-riding' in 1991 and 'Tom Scott, R.S.A.: the Scottish Borders artist (1854–1927)' in 1996.

Colville (kol-vil) n. Andrew 'Shovie' Hawick football player. He was sweeper at Hawick United for 6 years and also played for the Albert. son of Robert of Ochiltree. He exchanged Ochiltree for East Wemyss in 1529. He was appointed Comptroller before 1527, then Directory of the Chancery in 1529. He was Auditor of the Exchequer and in 1538 served as Comptroller for the lands of Jedforest that the Crown had gained. For his work on these accounts he was granted a fee, as well as the 'fermes' from Stryndis, Lethem and Wester Harelawcleuch. He became a judge of the College of Justice in 1532 and was one of the Commissioners for the truce of Newcastle in 1533. He was found guilty of treason in 1539 for supporting the Douglases0 James (18th/19th C.) labourer at Longnewton, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was listed as a 'Householder West quarter Longnewton' on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish. Robert of Oxnam (14th C.) son of Sir Robert of Oxnam and Ochiltree. His father witnessed a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh in the 1330s. In 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was witness to a charter of 1357/8 granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers, a few years after being given up by the Rules. He also witnessed further lands being granted to the Kers by the William of 'Blakdene' in 1358. In about 1370 he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. In 1390 he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart. He was succeeded by his son Sir Thomas. Sir Robert of Oxnam and Ochiltree (d.bef. 1466) son of Robert of Oxnam and Margaret. He had the lands of Feu-Rule granted to him by Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1453. Also in 1453 he had a bond of loyalty with the same Andrew Ker. In 1464/5 he was on the panel that ruled on the argument over the lands of Flex between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Thomas (d.1219) son of Philip. He witnessed several undated charters of gifts to Melrose Abbey and the Church of Glasgow around the 1190s and early 1200s. His seal bears the legend 'THOME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTTI' and he is referred to as 'Thomas de Colevilla cognomento Scot' when he donated land to Melrose Abbey. He therefore joins a long list of men for whom 'Scot' was used as an additional name. He was imprisoned in 1210 for plotting against the King, but was redeemed. In about 1215 he donated land at 'Keresban' (Carsphaim in Galloway) to Vaudey Abbey. He had 7 children, John, William, Thomas and 4 unnamed daughters. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmum Colwele' in 1427 when he was on the 'inquest of retour' for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He is listed beside Turnbulls, Kers and other local men, and so is probably related to the Colvilles of Feu-Rule. Sir William (d.1508/9) grandson of Sir Robert. In 1488 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Branxholme. In 1499 he resigned half the lands of Feu-Rule into the hands of their superior, William Douglas of Cavers, in order to transfer them to Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing. He had a representative stand in for him at the Justice-aire in 1502, for his lands of Maxton. He also held the Barony of Oxnam and in that capacity granted sasine of Maxton Craig to William Turnbull (son of Adam of Philiphaugh) in 1504. His daughter Elizabeth married Patrick Colquhoun and granted to her son-in-law, Robert Colville of Cleish, the reversion of the lands of Feu-Rule. In 1511 (by which time he was deceased) his daughter and heir Margaret granted lands in Oxnam to Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. (formerly 'Coleuile', 'Colvil', 'Colvill', 'Colwil' and variants).

Colvin (kol-vin) n. Mr. (18th C.) recorded as a dancing-master called 'Colvine' in 1751 when he paid the Hawick Town Council for renting the 'for three months' liberty of the tolbooth for dancing in'. There is no other record of him, and so he may have gone round other towns giving dance lessons. There was a family of this surname in Kelso at about the same time. Rev. Robert Francis (1827–88) youngest son of Robert, minister of Johnstone in Annandale. He was educated at Glasgow University, became minister at Johnstone in 1852, resigned in 1854, was Chaplain in Bombay 1854–58, then minister at Kirkpatrick-Juxta 1865, resigning 1876 and living in Edinburgh without a charge for the next 8 years. In 1884 he became minister at Teviothead, where he remained until resigning in 1887. He died in Edinbugh. He married Helen Brown of Edinburgh and their children were Alice Mary, Annie Edith (missionary in the Calcutta Free Church), Robert Francis, Constance Helen, Marion and William.

Combe (kōm) n. farmstead in Craik Forest, just south-west of Craikhope, also known as 'Howpasley Comb'. The stream there is Comb Sike, with Comb Hass just to the south. Andrew Anderson was living there in 1762. John Beattie was shepherd there in the mid-19th century (it is 'Coom' in 1762, 1841 and 1851).

Combe (kōm) n. John (b.1825/6) from Edinburgh, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Bourtree Place. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jessie, Elizabeth, Francis, Margaret and Ann. In 1873 he donated a copper coin to the Museum. Rev. Neil Robert (1949–2023) born in Stockport, son of Robert Davidson and Betty Wylie, he grew up in Nottingham. He studied at Dundee University (B.Sc., 1971) and Sheffield University (M.Sc., 1973), worked in Information Science 1971–75 and was a Library Systems Analyst 1975–78. He became a member of the Church of Scotland congregation of Sandyford Henderson Memorial in Glasgow and trained for the ministry at Glasgow University (B.D., 1981). He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1981 and was assistant at Chryston near Glasgow before being ordained as minister of St. George's West (then combined with St. Margaret's and Wilton South and Roberton) in 1984. His charge became Teviot linked with Roberton in 1988 and this extended to include St. Mary's & Old Parish in 2013. He became Moderator of the Jedburgh Presbytery in 2008 and was School Chaplain at Drumlanrig. He retired in 2015 and wishing to continue to live in the Borders, he moved to Galashiels. In 1978 he married Janet Kirsteen (b.1952), daughter of James McLaren Fraser and their children were Esther Joy (b.1981), Hannah Elizabeth (b.1983) and Jonathan Paul (b.1985). Walter (1892/3–1915) son of Walter and Margaret of Teviot Crescent. He is the only Hawick man killed on 12th July 1915 who has a known grave, at Skew Bridge Cemetery.

combination (kom-bin-ā-shin) n., arch. word formerly used to refer to a trade union – 'Such combinations were at one time illegal, and queer schemes had to be adopted to evade the law' [RM].

Combination Acts (kom-bin-ā-shin-actz) n. also known as the 'Combination Laws', a set of Parliamentary Acts passed in 1800 which essentially made it illegal to form trade unions, and made it difficult for workers to organise meetings. On one occasion the acts led to a meeting at the Little Haugh being officially chaired by a dog (Jock Paisley's dog). The Acts were used against strikers in Hawick in 1817 and during the 'Lang Stand Oot' of 1822–23, but were repealed in 1824.

the Combination Pairhoose (thu-kom-bin-ā-shin-pār-hoos) n. main poor house for the Hawick area, being a residential facility for the sick and poor, situated at the top left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. It was a long range of buildings, erected in 1856/7 to serve the needs of 11 neighbouring parishes, eventually extended to 13 (Ashkirk, Canonbie, Cavers, Ewes, Hawick, Hobkirk, Kirkhope, Kirkton, Langholm, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Roberton, and Wilton). The building was designed to accommodate up to 133 inmates. It was built out of whinstone, with red sandstone dressings. The building was used by the military authorities during WWI. After 1930 it became the Drumlanrig Poor Law Institution, and served the whole of Roxburghshire. As social welfare norms changed it was converted to a care facility for the elderly and disabled, becoming Drumlanrig Hospital. The building had the Burgh coat of arms from the Buccleuch Memorial incorporated into its gable in the early 1970s. It ceased to be used as a hospital in 1994, and has been unoccupied since 2001.

the Commercial Bank (thu-ko-mer-shul-bawngk) n. the first Hawick agent for this bank was John Oliver, the Town Clerk, around 1820, in premises at 11 Buccleuch Street (now Pesco's). This was the first building erected on the New Road after it was opened up. George & James Oliver were listed as local agents of the bank in 1852 and 1868. The purpose-built Hawick branch was constructed at 4 Tower Knowe by James Harkness, builder, in 1852. It was probably designed by David Rhind, the Commercial bank's official architect (and not as sometimes attributed to John Dick Peddie, who worked with the Royal Bank, which this building would later become). The design is enhanced through Italian-style ornamental stone-work by Alexander Pirnie. The building was renovated and enlarged in 1935, when Armstrong's ironmonger's shop on the corner was demolished. The renovations involved intricate interior fittings by Scott Morton & Co. The bank later became the National Commercial, and amalgammated with the Royal Bank of Scotland in 1969, with the branch closing in 1986. The building then houses Clinty's bar, followed by the Bank restaurant, and has an unprecedented view down the High Street. It is a Category B listed building.

the Commercial Inn (thu-ko-mer-shul-in) n. Hawick inn of the mid-19th century, on Buccleuch Street, opposite the Grapes Inn, at about No. 13. Robert Watson was innkeeper there in 1841 and his wife Isabella was proprietor there in 1852, James Wood in 1856 and James Govenlock in 1865. Its assembly rooms (previously the Subscription Rooms) were used for lectures and other entertainments. The building was later used as Brodie's school and several other uses (also sometimes called the 'Commercial Hotel', as well as just 'the Commercial').

the Commercial Inn (thu-ko-mer-shul-in) n. former name for a hostelry in Newcastleton. It was probably at 17 Douglas Square, having previously been the King's Arms, and later the Liddesdale Hotel. John Scott was proprietor in at least the 1860s to 80s.

Commercial Road (ko-mer-shul-rōd) n. originally part of the Common, being the Under Haugh, it was developed for industry through the 19th century, particularly in the period 1871–74. The owners paid feus (rent) to the Town, and later purchased parts outright. Many feus continued to be paid into the Common Good fund until the Land Tenure Act of 1974. The street was opened to traffic in the 1870s, named in 1884 and once had granite setts that were only replaced by tarmac in 1962. Previous to the naming, the north side was referred to as Common Haugh and the south side as 'Teviotside Road'. Before the North Bridge was built the road used to split in two, part leading up to the bridge level and the other part leading along the riverside through a small arch. Nos. 16, 18, 20, 24 are grade C listed, and 31 and 32 grade B listed.

commissar (ko-mee-sar) n., arch. a commissarry, official delegate, representative of a Burgh, deputy of a Bishop – '. . . nor yet pursue ane and other before the Sheriff, Commissar, or other judge, but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court . . . By the said Dutches of Buccleuch' [Buc1692], '. . . the Baillies and Councill hereby impower Bailie Roucastle and Walter Scott of Crumhaugh to concert with Robert Paisley, wright, anent the rebuilding of the Bailie's seat . . . , whereanent they have hereby full commision' [BR1734].

Commissioner (ko-mi-shi-nur) n. a person appointed to represent a county at the Scottish Parliament, essentially the antecedent of Members of Parliament. This followed an Act of 1427 proscribing that 2 such men should be selected from among the 'small Barons', although it was not fully enforced until after a new Act of 1587. A set of disputes led there to be no Commissioners appointed when the small Barons and free-holders were ordered to convene to make appointments in 1628. Roxburghshire thus had 2 presentatives to the Scottish Parliament until the dissolution of that body in 1707, with perhaps 2 extra Commissioners being appointed in the last decade or two. The word 'Commissioner' was also used to refer to the 10 members of the commission set up in 1605 by King James to bring law and order to the Commissioners Court (thu-ko-mi-shi-nurz-kōr') n. Commissioners' Court of Judiciary of the Sheriffdoms of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Peebles and Dumfries, and the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Annandale, also known as the Circuit Court. It may have replaced the 'High Court of the Judiciary' or King's itinerant 'Justice-aire' for which there are local records in the period 1493–1513. The Commissioners' Court existed from at least the 16th to the 19th centuries, and typically met twice a year at Jedburgh or Dumfries. By the 19th century the area had been extended to include Ayrshire. Originally it mainly heard cases from the wildest rieving regions of Liddesdale, Annandale, Nithsdale, etc. From the time Hawick was a Burgh the Magistrates would deal with crimes committed within the Town's boundaries, but rural cases, and later more serious crimes, would be dealt with by the Circuit Court. The Border Commission met in Hawick in August of 1605. Copies of the proceedings from 1622 and 1623 were preserved in the Town archives, probably because Hawick Town Clerk Gilbert Watt had been Clerk to the Circuit. The Commissioners at that time were Walter Scott of Buccleuch, Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam, Sir William Seton of Kylesmure, Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh and William Lord Cranstoun. Commissioners in 1623 included James Maxwell of Kirkconnell, Sir William Grierson of Lag and Sir John Charteris of Amisfield. The text of this 'Commissionaris Court Buik' is transcribed in a supplementary part of James Wilson's 'Annals of Hawick' (1850).

the Commissioners o Supply (thu-ko-mi-shi-nurz-ō-su-plI) n. organisation set up in each county to collect land taxes and raise the local militia, following the Act of Convention in 1667. Individuals were usually appointed on an annual basis. They were later concerned with the upkeep of roads and bridges, the success of the harvest, maintaining law and order, overseeing the erection of schools and ensuring that military quotas were met. The Head Court of the Commission was held on the first Tuesday of October each year. Early lists of Commissioners for the county of Roxburghshire are useful information about the most prominent landowners of the time. Their responsibilities were largely taken over by the newly created County Councils in 1889. In Hawick they made contributions in 1761, 1762 and 1763 to help pay off the debt incurred by building the Teviot Bridge.

commit (ko-mi') pp., arch. committed – '... the said Wm. Payslay was onlawed in ane ryott committ by him upon the sd. Johne Briggs, and the said John in ane ryott committ by him on the sd. Wm. Payslay' [BR1683], '... in ane egregious and most insolent ryott committ by him upon Adam Young ...' [BR1685], '... and was in a most sharp manner told if he committ the like fault in time comeing he should not reside either in toun or ye Landward part of this parish' [PR1718].

the Committee (thu-ko-mi'-ee) n. informal name for the Common-Ridin Committee.

the Committee Room (thu-ko-mi'-ee-room) n. name usually applied to the building inside the Paddock at Hawick Mair, from the roof of which the Cornet waves and then displays the Flag.

committei (ko-mi-tī) n., arch. a committee – '... but for sic a monument as th' committei hae decided on, aw'm thinkin' th' Pairk wad bei th' place for it' [BW].

committit (ko-mi-tee') pp., arch. committed – '... for the slauchtir off wmquhill George Scott, our brother, committit be the said Robert and Williame ...' [SB1581].

common (ko-min) n. a tract of land belonging to the community, as described in a town charter and used by the citizens for certain purposes, e.g. pasturage and peats – '... That some day they, Like mei, will turn grey, Yet Commons they'll ride for a', Yet Commons they'll ride for a'' [JEDM], adj. relating to the common, public – '... and, as common herd, he took in beasts from all parts of the old parish of Wilton, and from none else' [DCW1765].

the Common (thu-ko-min) n. Hawick's common land. When granted in 1537 it consisted of about 1,549 acres in the 'Common Moor', together with land at Myreselawgreen and beyond, and other parts within the Burgh boundary, particularly the flat land on the west of the Teviot. The Common Moor extended from the Vertish to the current racecourse, and to beyond the 'Caa Knowe'. It was described in the 1537 Charter in pidgin French as 'le common hauch et le common mure de Hawick', making it clear that these rights pre-dated the charter. The Common was certainly granted earlier than 1537, and most likely at least as early as the first (lost) charter giving Hawick its 'burgh of barony' status in the 15th century; it may even have existed as communal land before the granting of any charter. The earliest description is 'between Burnford on the east, Troutlawford on the west, and the syke of Wintownmoss on the south, and the ditches of Goldelands and Fynnik on the north sides from the one to the other'. A map surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 shows the estimated outline at that time, bounded by Burnflat, the Slitrig, Little and Meikle Whitlaw, the lands of Eliott of Stobs, the farms of Over and Nether Southfield, Newbigging, Whitchesters, Alton Croft, Goldielands, Crumhaugh and the West Mains; there are some minor differences compared with the map drawn up by J.P. Alison in the 1890s and the area was stated to be 1706 acres. In 1734 it was described as 'lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South'. The boundary of the old Common stretched for over 10 miles in length. The Common was certainly granted earlier than 1537, and most likely at least as early as the first (lost) charter giving Hawick its 'burgh of barony' status in the 15th century; it may even have existed as communal land before the granting of any charter. In about 1766 the Council reserved some higher ground for plantations, but they were not planted until almost 60 years later, covering about 60 acres. Following a legal opinion about ownership from advocate James Montgomery, parts of the Common at Myreslawgreen were first feued in 1766 and in the same year small pieces of the Common were let, adjacent to the lands of the neighbouring tenants, in an attempt to prevent encroachment onto the Moor. This led to clashes with the tenants of the Duke of Buccleuch and a formal legal action to discussion the division of the Common was brought by the Duke's agents in 1767. In that year a small party (including legal representatives from both sides) walked around the full Common, pointing out the precise boundaries; this was commemorated by a walk around the old boundaries in 2017. After 1777 the Common Moor was reduced to 1,084 acres (or in Scots measure, 852 acres, 1 rood and 28 falls), the other roughly $\frac{1}{3}$ went to neighbouring landowners; parts were then enclosed and used to generate rent for the town, while preserving certain rights of access and use for fairs and the Common Riding. The Trysting Ground (now Thorterdykes) was feued in the late 18th century and part of the Under Haugh (now Commercial Road) was sold off in 1847. Also in 1847 a field of $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres at the west of the Vertish Hill was sold to the heritors of Hawick Parish and exchanged with the Duke of Buccleuch for a piece of land that was used for part of the Wellogate Cemetery. Until the mid-19th century the 'cattle stent', collected for animals being grazed on the Common, provided part of the Burgh's income; additionally there was a quarry on the Common, stones from there being sold off. J.P. Alison drew a map of the Common, which was published as part of Craig & Laing's 'Hawick Tradition' book (1898). Norman R. Kennedy also drew up a plan of the Common in 1949 and Frank Scott drew up another map of the state in 1977, with field names included – 'We've a Common, we'll defend it From the spoiler evermore' [TC], 'T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common' [T], '... Aye defend your Rights and Common' [JH], 'Purse and person we'll support him, Round the Common we'll escort him; Still preserving peace and order, Like the bowmen of the Border!' [JH], 'Ride the Common, Hawick Callant, Mounted, hold the banner high' [IWS].

Common (ko-min) n. A. (18th/19th C.) resident of Burnmouth in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He must have been related to 'Miss A.' who was also at Burnmouth and subscribed. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name is given as 'Adame Cawmande', among a list of Olivers from Jedforest. Adam (b.1782) son of John, farmer at Highend. He was recorded there on the 1801 ballot for the Militia, along with his brother Thomas. He was later tenant farmer at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living there with his brother Andrew and sister Janet. In 1851 he was farmer of 405 acres, employing 3 labourers. Andrew (18th C.) tenant farmer at Over Whitton in Hownam Parish, who was ancestor of the Southdean Commons. He may have been son of James and Isobell Lindsay. He married Agnes Sharp and their children were: Christian; James, farmer at Wolfehopelee; John; Richard; Janet; and Margaret. Andrew (b.1783/4) from Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at High Tofts. In the 1833 electoral roll for Hawick he was listed, along with Adam, as a joint tenant of lands owned by Andrew Dickson of Alton. In 1841 he was farmer at High Tofts with his brother Adam. Andrew (b.1796) eldest son of James. He was said to be a great reader, knowledgeable about local folklore and keen on wild flowers. He farmed at Westshiels in Southdean Parish from at least 1841. In 1861 he was recorded there as farmer of 950 acres.

He was still farmer at 'Westhills' in a directory of 1868. He married Isabella Murray. Their children were: James; John, who emigrated to New Zealand; Margaret, who married George Balfour, a Jedburgh grocer; William, who became a marine engineer; and Andrew, who served as a volunteer in South Africa. Andrew Ainslie (1841–1903) son of a surgeon, he was born in Newcastle Upon Tyne, but was related to the family of Southdean Parish. He trained as an engineer, then became a professional astronomer. He was involved with early astro-photography, eclipses and telescope making. He received the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1884, later becoming the Society's Treasurer and then President. He was also elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and also received an honorary degree from St, Andrew's University. In later years he also worked on gun sights and rangefinders. He lived at Ealing and died of a heart attack. David (17th C.) resident of Falside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Elizabeth 'Betty' (18th C.) housemaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. J. (18th/19th C.) listed as 'Miss J. Burnmouth' in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He must have been related to 'A.' who was also at Burnmouth and subscribed. James (b.1751) eldest son of Andrew. He farmed at Wolfehopelee and then at Easter Fodderlee around 1812–30. He was at Wolfehopelee on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He married Isabella Wood around 1795 and their family of 8 were born at Wolfehopelee. Their children were: Andrew, who farmed at Westshiels; Mary, who married Kennedy Storie and emigrated to Guelph, Ontario; William; Agnes, who lived into her 90s; Richard, 'Dick', said to have been a bit of a character; Janet; Christian, who married James Irvine; and Adam. James (b.c.1780) labourer at Dinlabyre according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Shepherd Thomas is also listed there and may have been his brother. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Pott and their children included: John (b.1817); Thomas (b.1822); Adam (b.1825); and Janet (b.1828). James (b.1843) eldest son of Andrew. He was tenant farmer at Dykeraw and Westshiels in Southdean Parish. In 1895 he married Elizabeth Oliver from Newcastleton. They are probably the Mr. and Mrs. Common of Dykeraw who were said to be often provide refreshments to members of the Jedforest Hunt. John 'Jock' (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1571/2, listed among men for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge. John (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Turnbull. He married Ann Shiel and their children included Helen (b.1721) and an unnamed chile (b.1730). John (b.1754) tenant farmer in Rulewater, he was probably the 2nd son of Andrew and Agnes Sharp. Around 1778 the small lands of Highend, Little Gledstains and the Sneep were combined together and he was the tenant. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was recorded as tenant of Highend and Midburn, and owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Millburn in 1797. His children included Thomas (b.1780), Adam (b.1782), Andrew (b.1784), James (b.1796), Christian, Janet (b.1779) and Margaret (b.1778). Other sons, John (b.1788) and Richard (b.1790), were baptised in Hobkirk Parish when he was at Highend. Additional children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish at about the same time were presumably also his, namely Janet (b.1786), Robert (b.1792), Sibella (b.1794), Robert (again, b.1798) and Jean (b.1800). He was recorded at Highend in 1799 when his son Thomas was on the ballot list in the Lieutenancy Book and in 1801 when sons Thomas and Adam were on the Militia ballot. John (b.1788/9) from Hobkirk Parish, he was a local farmer. He was probably son of John, tenant at Highend and other farms in Rulewater. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Middlemoss in Ewes. In 1861 he was at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish, farming 390 acres and employing 2 labourers. He married Euphemia (or Elspeth) Turnbull and their children included Cecilia, John, Esther, James, Thomas, Elizabeth and Francis. John (b.1804/5) born in Castleton Parish, he was tenant farmer at Meikledale. He was recorded there in 1841, by 1851 was farming 2000 acres, with 6 employees and in 1861 was farming 2200 acres with 2 shepherds and 4 other servants. In 1851 his niece Helen Dalgleish (a widow) was his housekeeper. By 1861 he was a widower, with children Elizabeth, Margaret, Agnes and Richard. He was still at Meikledale in 1868. He may be the John who married Anne Jardine, and whose son James (b.1823) was baptised in Castleton Parish. John (19th C.) married Anne Elliot in Castleton Parish in 1853. Richard 'Dick' (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnmouth. He was a Kirk Elder in Newcastleton around 1800. He had a bond with Haddington distiller Archibald Dunlop in 1823. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: Thomas (b.1780); James (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); Richard (b.1789); Nelly (b.1794);

Johnn (b.1797); and (b.1802). Richard 'Ritchie' (19th C.) tenant at Westshiels in Southdean Parish. His father and the wife of 'Sookin' Sandy Airmstrong were sisters. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwickbrae in 1761, 1763 and 1764. He married Janet Laing in Roberton in 1760. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included David (b.1761), Nelly (b.1763) and Thomas (b.1764). Thomas (b.1780) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. He was listed as son of John from Highend in Hobkirk Parish according to the Militia ballots in 1799 and 1801. He was later an agricultural labourer in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at High Tofts. He married Mary Shiel in 1810 and their children included: Janet (b.1812); Mary (b.c.1815); John (b.1817); Andrew (b.1820); and Thomas (b.1823). Thomas (b.c.1780) shepherd at Dinlabyre according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Labourer James is also listed there and may have been his brother. William (16th C.) recorded at Blackchesters in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His surname was given as 'Cawman', and he was only one of 2 Commons listed among many Olivers of Jedforest. William (b.1849) son of Andrew, farmer in Southdean. He was a marine engineer. In 1889 he married Janet McNeil, daughter of farmer Robert Boyd. Their children included Andrew Ritchie and Norman (also written 'Commoun'; the name is probably the same as the earlier Comyn).

Commonbrae (ko-min-brā) n. area in the upper Teviot valley, reached by the side road at Teviothead. The farm there is where Commonbrae Sike joins the Teviot, and Commonbrae Hill is above. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Rashiegrain and Wormscleuch, valued jointly 'in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb'. Part of these lands were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. This could be the 'Couny' transcribed among a list of lands in upper Teviotdale that were part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. Walter Elliot was there in 1705–08. By 1707 it was valued along with Rashiegrain at £261 19s 4d. John Nichol was there in 1720. They passed to Turnbull of Fenwick in the mid-18th century. Ninian Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-18th century. In 1788 it was owned by William Turnbull of Rashiegrain. John Anderson was farmer there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued (with Rashiegrain) at about £262. Walter Murray and his family lived there in 1841. A receipt relating to the poor rates from there in 1875 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection (marked 'Comonbrae' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it was 'Cowmonbrae' in 1675 and 'Commonebrae' in 1695).

Common Cleuch (ko-min-klooch) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Hermitage Water just north of the farm of Shaws. There were formerly several pieces of common ground in Liddesdale that were shared by neighbouring farms, which could explain the name.

Common Cleuch (ko-min-klooch) n. small stream that joins the south side of the upper Hermitage Water to the east of Twislehope.

common good (ko-min-good) n. funds and lands that can only be used for the benefit of the whole community, derived from the common – '. . . all the fynes and amerciaments that shall be exacted and taken be the baillies of thice burgh . . . be applied and maid furthcummund as ane common good for the propper use and benefire of this burgh . . . ' [BR1670], '. . . since thair is ane large toune whiche has no common gudes at this time not casualties wherebie they may sustene a scole-maister' [RRC] (here 'good' is in the sense of 'goods' and so 'common guid' would be incorrect).

the Common Good (thu-ko-min-good) n. Hawick's community fund, with the Magistrates and Town Council formerly acting as trustees, and now administered by the Council – 'Hawick Common Good canni be yaised ti benefit other toons'. The pecuilarly Scottish concept of the Common Good dates back to the 1491 Act of King James IV. Hawick's Common Good consists of the lands that were granted to the Town through receiving Burgh of Barony status in the 15th century, and subsequent changes to those lands and rights. Historically the income from Hawick's Common, which became the Common Good funds, arose after the Division of the Common in 1777. After this point lands were enclosed and parts let to individuals, typically on a yearly basis, as well as revenues from market stands etc. Hawick's Common Good also includes moveable assets, such as Burgh regalia, and paintings and other gifts that were donated to the Town prior to Reorganisation in 1975. The administration of the Common Haugh (thu-ko-min-hawch, hawf) n. part of Hawick Common occupying the flat land on the Wilton side of the Teviot (the Little Haugh on the south side was generally not included in what was meant by the 'Common Haugh'). The reason why the townsfolk of Hawick would have common land on the Wilton side of the river is unknown; however, it is referred to in the earliest charters, and so presumably goes back to at least the 15th century. This part of the Common was unaffected by the Division of 1777, although a part was let to the Inkle Company soon afterwards as a bleaching field. The original Haugh stretched from the Coble all the way up to where the North Bridge now stands. Most of the northern part was feued and then sold off in the latter part of the 19th century, forming Commercial Road. It was divided into the Upper and Under Haughs, part of the former being what has more recently referred to as the Common Haugh or Big Haugh. The Upper Haugh used to have a small stream running across it, used to carry excess water from the mill lade. The area to the west of this drain was formerly used as a drying green. In the early 19th century Robert Wilson argued that part of it should be used as housing, with some green space preserved, to solve Hawick's overcrowding problems. The land has been used for common drying, sports events, temporary army purposes, fairs, sports events and more recently a car park and Saturday market site.

the Common Haugh (thu-ko-min-hawch, hawf) n. former name for a piece of land on Deanfoot farm. It was recorded in 1780 as 'the haugh called the Common-haugh' and presumably lay on the north bank of the Teviot.

the common kist (thu-ko-min-kist) n. shared coffin for those who could not afford one of their own. Session records of 1723 state 'seeing ye Box is burdened frequently by paying of coffins to strangers, and maintaining of ye poor, ... the coffin commonly called ye common coffin should be made use of unless they be persons of good character'. Up until about 1770 the poor of Hawick Parish were all buried in the same coffin, which had bolts that could be pulled out to release a false bottom as the coffin was lowered into the grave. The same strong, roomy, oak coffin was said to have been used for centuries.

the Common Loft (thu-ko-min-loft) n. name sometimes used for the High Loft in St. Mary's Kirk.

the Common Lone (thu-ko-min-lōn) n. former name for the Loan, used up until about 1860.

the Common Moor (thu-ko-min-moor, -mewr, mūr) n. another name for the main part of the Common. The phrase 'le commoun hauch et commoun mure de Hawick' occurs in the 1537 charter.

common ridin (ko-min-rī-din) n. the marking of the boundaries of a town's common, also called the riding of the marches. This is carried out in many Border towns in a ceremonial manner, long after the marking itself has become unnecessary. Locally, only Hawick and Selkirk have ancient traditions with a continuous history. Some Border towns, such as Lauder and Peebles, have reinstated older traditions, while others have less ancient traditions, such as Langholm, or institued similar festivals in the 20th century, such as Galashiels, Kelso, Jedburgh and Melrose. These events no longer take place in the English Border towns, although many parishes in England used to have a perambulation of the boundaries on Ascension Day (and some still do). Other Scottish towns with similar march-riding traditions include Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar. Edinburgh's tradition was held from at least 1579 until 1718, with a one-off in 1946 and revived in 2009. Hawick's festival was exported to the Boston area, the Guelph/Galt and Toronto areas in Ontario and the Vancouver area in British Columbia, with exiles and their families holding their own festivals for many years in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. There are also reports of gatherings of Teries on Ceylon and Australia in the first half of the 19th century (note that the original meaning of 'ride' in this context was 'to fix boundaries', but it became compounded with riding on horseback).

common ridin (ko-min-rī-din) n. a monetary gift given at the Common Riding, particularly to children – 'here's yer commin ridin son' (cf. New Year).

the Common Ridin (thu-ko-min-rī-din) n. ceremony that links the traditional marking of Hawick's Common lands with the celebration of the victory at Hornshole in 1514. Each year an unmarried young man is chosen to be Cornet; records of the Principals go back as far as 1703, with the riding of the town's marches first mentioned in 1640, and it is clear that the ceremony had been going on long before. In 1706 it is referred to as an 'ancient custom and practive of the said town for many generations and hundreths of years past'. It is recorded having taken place each year since 1703, with the exception of the 1915–18, 1940–45, 2001, 2020 and 2021. The earliest descriptions are of a party armed with swords and pistols setting off at noon to ride the boundaries of the Common. Nowadays the Cornet leads his supporters on horseback on a series of Ride-outs in the weeks before the main three days in early June. This starts with the Colour Bussing on the Thursday night, the actual riding of the marches on the Friday and the return of the Flag on the Saturday. Previous to 1752 (when the Gregorian Calendar was introduced) the Common Riding took place on the last Friday in May, but is now the first Friday after the first Monday in June. The popularity of the ceremony has fluctuated over the years, with the Council debating whether to continue the Common Riding in at least the years 1786, 1790, 1791 and 1794. There were major disputes in 1706, 1790 and 1809, and much arguing amongst the Council in the second half of the 19th century. The accompanying celebrations have always involved alocohol, with the Hawick minister complaining in 1723 of 'that scandalous practice of distributing strong Liquor to one another in the open street to an excessive measure'. A report of 1836 states that the cost to the Burgh was £14 2s. In 1840 there were almost 100 unmarried men in the Cornet's party and about 60 in the Magistrates' party. However, over the next few decades the popularity of the ceremonies waned. In the 1850s about the only connection with the municipal authorities was that the Town Clerk read the Burgess Roll. In the late 1800s the local clergy, with only a few exceptions, vehemently attacked the Common Riding from the pulpit. Several of them refused to attend functions when specifically invited, causing great resentment, particularly because almost none of the incumbents were from Hawick. In 1891 the Council withdrew its support, only reinstating it after 2 public meetings. The popularity rose again at the beginning of the 20th century. Hawick's Common Riding is the first of the other similar Scottish Borders events of the summer. Interestingly, in the early 20th century, the actual riding of the marches was tried on both the Thursday and the Saturday, finally moving back to the Friday in 1934. Hawick Exiles held Common-Riding celebrations for many years in the Boston (1877 until at least 1926, perhaps intermittently), Toronto (1921 until at least 1927) and Vancouver (from 1920 for a few years) areas. There are also records of a celebration at Hespeler, Ontario in 1889 and annual dinners in Brisbane from 1890, as well as elsewhere. Early histories can be found in the books by R. Wilson (1825) and J. Wilson (1850, 1858) and article by W.N. Kennedy and A. Michie (1866) and D.M. Watson (1867) – 'Item, quhatsumever persoune that beis not present yeirlie at the Commoune ryding and setting the ffairis sall pay fourtie schillingis . . . ' [BR1640], 'The said say the Common rydeing was ordained to be upon Fryday, . . . James Scott, called laird, was voted to cary the pencell' [BR1703], 'This colour or its emblem has been carried round the marches of the burgh property at the Commonriding ever since' [RW], '. . . Where its brave sons the flag they pride in Bore off to grace the Commonridin' ' [AD], 'Absent Teries' thoughts fly homewards On each Common Riding morn' [TC], 'It's no in steeds, it's no in speeds, It's something in the heart abiding, The kindly customs, words and deeds, It's these that make the Common Riding' [RH] (sometimes hyphenated as 'Common-Riding', although that is probably only correct when used adjectivally, and occasionally written as one word 'Commonriding'; note that the stress is always on the first word, not the second; see also the Ridin o the Mairches).

Common-Ridin (ko-min-rī-din) adj. relating to the marking of the boundaries of Hawick's Common or the ceremonies taking place each year in June – 'No colour to be carried on the Common-Riding day, but the town colour allenarly' [BR], '. . . remembered so fervently each June during the annual 'riding of the marches', the Common-Riding celebrations' [RES], 'Here's much good cheer, join in the fun, There's laughter in the air, The Haugh goes smiling once a year, At Common-Riding Fair' [WFC] (more often hyphenated when used adjectivally than as a noun).

the Common-Ridin Committee (thu-ko-min-rī-din-ko-mi'-ee) n. committee that organises the Common-Riding events, with a large part of the responsibility falling on the Secretary. Originally the Race Committee was the important organisational body, with Common-Riding events being arranged by the Council and by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. A Ceremonials Committee was established in 1887, at a public meeting in April, followed by the first Committee meeting in J.Y. Hunter's photogrpahic studio, with Hunter as the first Chairman, James Edgar as the first Secretary and Walter Boyd and others also present. They immediately took charge of the Cornet's Races, as well as the other ceremonial aspects, and saved the Common Riding from the downward spiral into which it had descended. The annual public meeting in April was a focal event, but detracted from business of the committee; it was reorganised in 1908 with the main Committee consisting of 22 members appointed by the Town Council, and being composed of 3 sub-committees: Ceremonial; Race; and Games. Since local government Reorganisation the Common-Riding Committee has operated independently of the Council. At the end of 2003 the General and Ceremonial Committees were amalgamated. It is also referred to simply as 'the Committee'. It was formally disolved in 2019 and reconstituted as a Scottish Charitable Incorporated Organisation, with the numbers reduced from 37 to 29.

the Common Ridin Denner (thu-ko-min-rī-din-de-nur) n. official name for the Denner.

the Common Ridin Sang (thu-ko-min-rī-din-sawng) n. name used for both Arthur Balbirnie's song of about 1800 and James Hogg's of 1819, also known respectively as 'The Auld Sang' and 'Teribus'.

Common Ridin Week (ko-min-rī-din-week) n. main week of events at the Common Riding, beginning with the Kirkin and continuing through to 'the Seterdi'.

common-ridiny (ko-min-rī-di-nee) adj. related to the Common Riding, enthusiastic about Hawick's annual festival – '. . . and as her man isni that Common-Ridiny she askeet iz if A wadn'i like ti gaun wi er' [BW1995].

commons (ko-minz) n., arch. the common people, body of citizens – '. . . Mr. Alexr. tuik the people, bothe gentill men and gentill women, and ye commonis both man and woman and causit thame yeild up thair hands and sweir thame selfs to be faithfull servands' [Ash1638].

commons (ko-minz) n. lands used by a whole community. Most burghs and many baronies had such lands, with specific rights of pasturage, peat-cutting etc. enjoyed by the citezens, often with special rights enjoyed by burgesses. Locally these 'commonties' were mostly 'divided' in the later part of the 18th century, driven by the major landowners, who typically gained land in exchange for allowing the citizens to build walls and develop the rest. Minto Common still existed in 1695, disappearing some time in the following century. Bedrule Common was divided in 1696. Hassendean Common was lost entirely in 1762–63, Wilton Common in 1764–65, Lanton Common in 1769, and many others in the Borders around the same time. Of course Hawick lost 30% of its own Common in 1777, after years of wrangling and legal battles. The annual perambulation or riding of the boundaries of commons tended to die out after divisions; Hawick's Common Riding survived in ceremonial form, probably because of the additional connection with the 1514 Flag.

Commons (ko-minz) n. Peter (1916–45) born in Hawick, son of Patrick Commons and Bridget Falls. He was a Private with the K.O.S.B. and was killed during the liberation of Brunssum in the Netherlands.

Commonside (ko-min-sīd) n. farm and hamlet about 8 miles south-west of Hawick on a side road off the A7. It was once the site of a major ford across the Teviot. Teviotdale Lodge Country House is near there and a footbridge crosses the Teviot nearby. The carved stone at Borthwick Mains was once here. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 1911 acres, bounded by Outer Slaidhill, Inner Slaidhill, the River Teviot, Falnash, Woodburn, Chisholme, Philhope and Broadlee. The farm buildings were rebuilt in the mid-19th century, replacing those built in the late 18th century, with earlier buildings there going back for centuries. The lands were said to be among those (along with Dryden and Harwood) gained by the Muirs of Rowallan through marriage with an heiress of the Comyns. There is no original document to confirm this, but it is stated in a 17th century family history by poet and politician Sir William Muir; if true it would suggest that the name of the farm may come from the Comyns. The lands were given in 1462 (along with Dryden and Over Harwood) in security for a loan by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan. The loan was fully discharged in 1477 by Robert Scott of 'Dogehauch'. Adam 'howatson' and Alexander Turnbull were recorded there in 1494/5 and Alexander Turnbull was still tenant there in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick; this continued until at least 1572. However, it seems that there may have been 2 parts of the lands with separate owners. In 1574 they were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, but held 'in chief' of Sir James

Douglas of Drumlanrig (for payment of a penny Scots), and valued at £5 'in time of peace'. The lands were owned by George Scott of Borthaugh in the early 16th century and were sold by Alan Mossman, Burgess of Edinburgh, to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532. James Cessford was shepherd of the King's lands there in 1540 when he was paid for grain. John Scott in Commonside signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It was described as a 40-shilling land in 1591 when leased by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme to Gilbert Elliot. 'Wester Comounsyde' was released to Gilbert Elliot in 1603. The lands are stil listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In 1627 the farm was described as a '12 lb. land' paying '240 lb. in stok, 48 lb. in teynd'. It was tenanted by Harry Stewart, son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell in the 1640s. The lands were listed in 1663 (and confirmed in 1686) among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Grieves farmed there in the 17th century and then Scotts in the 18th. The householders listed there in 1694 were James Grieve, William Grieve and John Waugh. Thomas Hume was there in 1719. William Coltart was there in 1722. It is said that turnips were first grown locally at this farm in 1764. Walter Riddell was there in the 1780s. Charles Scott is recorded there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 10 horses on the farm. John Riddell was also there in 1797 and Charles Hart in 1801. Archibald Scott was there in 1841, with 5 servants. In the mid-19th century there was a small community of people living in the neighbouring cottages, including Gamekeeper Alexander Robertson, tailor William Wylie, gardener John Morton, labourer David Scott and farm steward John Michie, with their families. J. Stevenson was farmer there in 1868. In the 1860s there were 2 cairns on the farm, close to the road, which were deconstructed to build dykes, with an iron spearhead discovered by Rev. Henry Scott Riddell being donated to the Museum. One stone of a quern and the possible site of an ancient cremation were discovered there in about 1870 (found when digging a drain on the lawn in front of the house). Flints, stone beads and hammers have also been recorded being discovered on the farm in the 19th century – 'Warn Wat o' Harden, and his sons, Wi' them will Borthwick water ride; Warn Gaudilands, and Allanhaugh, And Gilmanscleugh, and Commonside' [T], 'The lasses o' Lin'op are braw, An' them o' Mosspaul they are bonnie; There's Haz'lop an' Fa'nash an' a', Aul' Commonside yields na to mony' [JoHa], 'The three Scotts o' Commonside, The Tamsons o' the Mill, There's Ogilvy o' Branxholm, And Scoon o' Todgiehill' [DJG] (the name appears at least as early as 1462, where it is spelled 'Colmanside', it is 'commonesid' in 1502, the 'Colemanside' in 1508/9, later being 'Comansid', 'Commounside', 'Commonnsyde', 'Commounsyde', 'Commonsyde', 'Comonside', etc., it is 'Commosyde' in 1510/1, 'Commonside' in 1511, 'Commounsyde' in 1540, 'Commounside' and 'Commounsyde' in 1572 and 1591, 'Commounsyd' in in 1574 and 1594, 'Commonsyd' in 1615, 'Commounsyd' in 1643, 'Comonsyd' in 1663, 'Cammansyde' in 1686 and 'Coumonsyde' in 1694; it is marked as 'Comonsyd' on Gordon's c.1650 maps, while 'O. Comonsyid' and 'N. Comonsyid' are marked on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin is probably 'Colman's slope' from an Old Irish personal name or the surname 'Comyn' and Old English for 'slope').

Commonside Bankheid (ko-min-sīd-bawngk-heed) n. cottages to the east of Commonside farmhouse. Tailor William Wylie, farm labourer John Welsh, mason William Smith, weaver Walter Richardson and labourer James Graham lived there in 1841. It is marked just 'Bankhead' on modern maps.

Commonside Lynn (ko-min-sīd-lin) n. former farmstead near Commonside. William Robson lived there in 1841.

Commonside Park (ko-min-sīd-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Rulewater near Blackleemouth, between the Catlee and Harwood Burns, shown on a map of 1772.

commonty (ko-min-tee) n., arch. Scots law term meaning a piece of land having common rights by more than an individual person, another name for common – 'Men bound together in runrig commonty And in the old unity of hall and hallan, tholing together . . . ' [DH].

the Commonty (thu-ko-min-tee) n., arch. Hawick's Common land – '. . . upon account whereof some difference betwixt the Earl and the town anent the Commontie, whereunto the town has undoubted right and possession' [C&L1673], '. . . betwixt the landes of Burneflatt, which is his propertie, and the Commontie of the said towne . . . ' [BR1713], '. . . the Baillies and Council prohibite and discharge and Burgesses of the Burgh to keep or pasture on the Commonty of Hawick any number of sheep, &c, exceeding twenty . . . ' [BR1733] (also written 'Commontie').

the Common Vennel (thu-ko-min-ve-nul) n. appellation in the 1537 charter for the path running from the Coble Pool to Myreslawgreen, which formed part of the Town boundary. It probably followed roughly Morrison Place and Coble Pool Lane: 'lying between the lands commonly called Bourtrees on the east and the common vennel at Myrselawgreen on the west parts'. It is also mentioned in a sasine of 1558. In the 18th century it is said that the Common-Riding procession would ride down here from Myreslawgreen to the Coble Pool to cast stones and earth into the water (note this is 'Common' as in common).

commune (ko-mewn) v., arch. to meet with. discuss, confer – '... and agreed that Falnash, Bailie Martin, Bailie Scott, and W.R. Purdom, and John Swan should commune with ye said Bailie ...' [PR1718], '... ye Brethren of ye Presbyterie went into ye kirk and communed among themselves ...' [PR1722].

communicant (ko-mew-nee-kin') n., arch. someone who takes part in communion. Historically, this only applied to adults (although the precise age is not clear). An important local list of comminicants exists from 1650 for the Borthwick valley (made up as part of discussions to suppress Hassendean Parish and create a new Parish of Roberton); it clearly contains only adults, and lists wives with their maiden surnames.

communion (ko-mewn-yin) n. celebration of the Eucharist, formerly an important event in the calendar. In Hawick this was held annually (although with exceptions), often following the harvest, usually in October, but the date changed regularly, depending on convenience and other events. In the mid-17th century it was held twice a year, in March and August (at least in Ashkirk Parish). It appears to have sometimes been held in a tent erected in the churchard. For about 50 years after the Reformation the morning service started as early as 5 a.m. By at least the 1720s there was also an associated fast day, on the Saturday before the Sunday Communion. In those days there was an extended series of lengthy sermons on the Saturday, Sunday and Monday, with other local ministers helping out; the Sunday service started at 9 a.m. and rarely concluded before 6 p.m., although there was a 1 hour break in the middle! Seen as a time of general celebration, some people attended communions in several neighbouring parishes. Previous to about 1700 one strictly needed to have been issued with a token in order to attend that parish's events, but this seems to have been relaxed later; there are even records of tokens being given to neighbouring ministers to distribute. In former times the wine used was a claret, and in relatively large quantities. It is unclear what kind of bread was traditional locally, with barley bread, short-bread and seasoned loafs of various sorts noted throughout Scotland.

communion token (ko-mewn-yin-tō-kin) n. specially produced coin-like token that was given to church members, and possession of which entitled the bearer to take communion. They were often made of lead, or an alloy, and were fairly plain in early times, eventually having elaborate inscriptions. They were important in the Protestant Church for about 2 centuries. finally being replaced with printed cards. Many local early examples still exist. Records show that 420 such tokens and a stamp were made for Hawick Kirk in 1751. Cavers Parish has examples dating from 1699 and Kirkton has 2 heart-shaped examples from 1734 and 1761. Mr. Heatlie donated his collection to Hawick Museum in 1901 (also just token).

Community Cooncil (ko-mew-ni'-ee-koon-sul) n. independent voluntary body set up to deal with local matters, organise community activities, etc. It began after Reorganisation in May 1975, partly to act as a watchdog for local affairs. Bizarrely there is a separate council in Burnfoot.

the Community Gallup (thu-ko-mew-ni'-ee-gaw-lup) n. community horse riding track built in Nip Knowes Field, on the right just before St. Leonard's, in 2003.

comovit (kō-moo-vee', -vi') pp., poet. moved to anger or other strong feeling – 'The heæthin frennet, the kingdooms wer comuvet ...' [HSR].

compac (kom-pak) adj., poet. compact – 'Jerusalem is buggin as ane citie that is compak thegither' [HSR].

the Companion (thu-kom-pan-yin) n. the 'Companion to Hawick and District', written by R.E. Scott, with original sketches by the author. It was first published in 1970, revised in 1981, then again in 1998 by Frank Scott, with a 4th edition in 2010, updated by Frank's 3 sons. It is the definitive modern Hawick guide.

compairt (kom-pārt) pp. compared – 'hei looks the pairt, it least compairt ti yow onywi', 'And what's a rabbit's chowkan dance Compare't wi snares o circumstance' [DH] (note the pronunciation).

compass (kum-pis) v., arch. to consider, plan – 'Jean Gibson, in Dryden, for going bye the church on the Lord's day, neglecting worship, and compassing her own ends' [Ash1640], '... that he had used a great deal of pains with the inhabitants in presuading of them to proper measures for compassing that design' [PR1724].

compear (kom-peer) v., arch. to appear before a court – 'Compeired before the bailies, Robert Deans, late balie, and Robert Scott in Grundiston ... for bluiding aither of them uthers ...' [BR1640], 'Compeared the haill Council, and voluntarily of their awin free will ...' [BR1644], '... who, all of them, being lawfullie cited and sommoned, personally apprehended, to compeir before the said Robert Hardie, baylyea' [BR1706], 'Upon citation compeared John Scott – Soger – to answer for his sin of adultery' [PR1714] (Scots law term; also spelled 'compeir' etc.; see also compearand and compearit).

compearance (kom-pee-rins) n., arch. appearance before a court – '... in respect of both, their compeirances, confession, and coming in will for the same' [PR1706], '... in respect of his compearance confession and judiciall producing of ane testimoniall ...' [BR1706].

compearand (kom-peer-ind) v., arch. appearing before a court, presenting oneself – '... and the said Samuel Newbie compeirand personallie acknowledged and confest ...' [BR1669], '... David Young was fyned ... for not compeirand when personally sumond to compeir ...' [BR1707].

compearit (kom-peer-i') pp., arch. appeared before a court – 'The quhilk day, comperit ane honest young man, Alexander Scot, sone and aer to Stevin Scot ...' [JW1558], '... compeirit Johne Scot ane of the baillies of Hawik forsaid' [SPB1579], 'The said John compearit, and said it was Marion Dickson, his mistress, that causit him put on ye mill' [Ash1640].

compellit (kom-pe-lee', -li') pp., poet. compelled – '... him they compellet til bear his cross' [HSR].

competeetion (kom-pe-tee-shin) n. a competition – '... In ony competeetion A never make the cut' [IWL].

competent (kom-pe-tin') adj., arch. suitable, appropriate – '... and that Bedrule had a comptent salary 'considering the place'' [RGl], '... the said Kirk Session should have the power to ... give the said Janet Wight such a competent allowance as they should judge proper for her subsistence ...' [PR1751] (this shade of meaning no longer in use).

complainand (kom-plā-nand) pres. part., arch. complaining – '... to mak satisfaction to al parteis complenzeande eftir the forme and tenor of an Act extract be ...' [SB1500].

compleen (kom-pleen) v., arch., poet. to complain – 'O! slighted love is ill to thole, And weel may I compleen' [JTe], '... ye hae been a bairn that never yet, by either word or deed, gae me cause o' compleening' [JTe], 'Oh, the cluds then grew starless an' black, An' my hert could do nocht but compleen!' [FL], '... And farmers now nae mair compleen Of asses feeding on their clover' [TCh], 'I murn in my compleenin an' mak' ane noyse' [HSR].

complice (kom-plis) n., arch. an accomplice, associate – 'They and their complices, all bodden in feir of weir, armed with swords and other weapons invasieff ...' [BR1673], '... complain agt. Margitt Drummond and Elizebeth Miller, their adherents, complises and resetters, for stealing out of the complainers' housses ...' [BR1697].

compliment (kom-plee-min') v., arch. to present, give as a gift – '... that Walter Elliot, late Baillie Depute of the Regalitie, had complimented to the toun as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell' [BR1721] (this sense already archaic in standard English).

compone (kom-pōn) v., arch. to compound, to settle a dispute by making a payment. This word is particularly used in old legal documents, e.g. in the itinerant courts of many centuries ago. Componing appears to have been used as a way of avoiding formal fines or other punishment for crimes and it seems hard to avoind the conclusion that this was often an abuse of the system by those with powerful connections.

composition (kom-po-zi-shin) n., arch. a fee, particularly that paid for admission as a burgess – 'Walter Turnbull, English Schoolmaster in Hawick, was sworn and admitted heritable burgess of this Burgh in common form, and his composition past from, for his service in the place' [BR1737].

comprise (kom-prIz) v., arch. to appraise, assess value, particularly of agricultural goods – '... their declaration, that they comprised the said corn to three half firlots aits, and in £7 for the boll thereof' [BR1642], 'Sic lyke, there is comprised ane seck pertaining to Andrew Leyden, to 20s. ...' [BR1644], '... and ordeines four men appoynted by the Baylyeas to compryse the said skaith' [BR1688] (cf. apprise).

compt (komt) n., arch. a count, accounting, inventory – '... Robert Scott of Allanehauch, his gudschir, my tutour for the tyme of all comptis of the intromissioun ...' [SB1569], 'The quhilk day, in presence of the bailies and council, the haill comptes for the receipt of the monies for advancing of the sodgers ...' [BR1644], particularly in the phrase 'compt and reckoning', meaning a formal statement of expenditures – '... another to pay £7, 16s. as compt and reckoning for a boll of wheat' [BR1638], '... to see right compt and reckoning done and perfyted betwixt John Hardie and the sd. Walter Rowcastell ...' [BR1693], '... the toun counsell did take in the accompts of Baylyea Graham, and after compt and reckoning did find that ...' [BR1701], v. to reckon, enumerate, make an account – '... being all comptit and allowit, rests in the hands of William Liddell, merchant ...' [BR1644].

comptable (kom-ta-bul) adj., arch. accountable – '... that as he should answer to God he would make them all compteable to him for ther intromissions' [PR1718] (also spelled 'compteable' etc.).

compter (komp-tur) n., arch. a counter, count – '... the haill compter for the receipt of the monies ...' [BR] (from the French).

the Comrades (thu-kom-rādz) n. popular name for the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association, which was established in 1933, following more informal meetings starting in 1925. Based in Hawick, it included men from around the Borders, and had the aim of fostering 'the old-time comradeship' and paying 'annual tribute at the local war memorial to the Comrades who made the supreme sacrifice'. The main event in the calendar was the annual dinner on 12th July. To mark the 50th anniversary in 1965, there was a parade of members from the Drill Hall to Trinity Church for a special service, followed by remembrance at the War Memorial. Inevitably membership dwindled over the years and in 1974 the Callants' Club took over the administration of the Association's affairs (and ownership of the decorative shell-case displayed every year at their dinner). The last surviving Comrade, John Murray, passed away in 1992. A memorial plaque, recognising the 'loyalty of the members of the Hawick Gallipoli Comrades Association' was unveiled near the Horse in 1988.

Comrade's Haa (kom-rādz-haw) n. wooden and corrugated iron hall erected in September 1921 at the lower end of the East Bleaching Green in Denholm by the Comrades of the Great War (later the British Legion) for recreational and social uses. The building had previously been the Y.M.C.A. at Stobs and was moved to Denholm. It later became a grocer's shop.

Comyn (ku-min) n. John 'the Red' (d.c.1277) son and heir of Richard. He owned tha family lands in Galloway, Liddesdale and Nithsdale. He was also known as 'Kirkintulloch' and succeeded his uncle, William Earl of Monteith as Lord of Badenoch. It is possible he also held lands in Roxburghshire, possibly inlcuding Bedrule (although there is a suggestion that his uncle Walter held this Barony). He made a grant to Melrose Abbey in 1250. He is listed in the 1256 assize roll for Northumberland, holding lands near Corebridge. He was an important figure during the minority of Alexander III, being appointed Justiciar of Galloway in 1258. In 1258/9 he was among Scottish noblemen who signed a bond with some of their Welsh counterparts. He was part of the Scottish force, also led by John Baliol and Robert Bruce, who helped Henry III against the rebellious English Barons in 1264. Several of his supporters were killed at York in 1268, but the 2 Kings forced the citizens to pay him compensation. He may also be the 'Johanni Comyn' of whom someone held lands at Newcastle on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He may have been the Comyn who had Bedrule Castle built, since it certainly existed by the late 13th century. He married firstly Eva (whose surname is unknown) and secondly Alice de Lindsay. His children included: William, who married a daughter of the Countess of Monteith, but died without issue; John 'the Black', who succeeded; Alexander, who signed the Ragman Roll of 1296; John, described as 'junior'; Robert; Alice; and 5 unnamed daughters. John of Badenach 'the Black' (d.c.1302) second son and heir of John 'Red' Comyn. In 1277 he succeeded his father as Lord of Badenoch. He may have owned the lands of Bedrule among others, including Tynedale. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by him of the lands of 'Rulehalch'. He was present at Roxburgh in 1281 when the marriage of Margaret, daughter of Alexander III was agreed on with the King of Norway. He was one of the Magnates Scotiae who maintained the title of the Princess of Norway in 1284 and one of the 6 Guradians of Scotland appointed after her death. He was probably the Sir John who was witness in 1284/5 to a resignation of lands by Simon Cornet, along with Sir John of Buchan, Sir William of Kirkintilloch and Sir William de Soulis. He swore loyalty to Edward I of England in 1291 and 1296, where he is Sir John 'Dominus Johannes de Badenach, senior'; his seal read 'S'SECRETI JOH'IS CVMIN' has an equestrian sybmol, with garbs on shields and trappings. He and his son John junior were listed in 1296 among Scotsmen who were to be removed from their lands in Northumberland. He was one of the 13 claimants for the Scottish crown, through being descended from Bethoc, daughter of Donald III (and through whom he may have inherited Bedrule). But he later supported the claim of Baliol (who was coincidentally connected with Cavers, neighbouring Bedrule). He was security for his brothers Alexander and Robert and his son John in 1297, after their capture by the English. He married Marjory (also referred to as Eleanor), sister of King John Baliol. He had a daughter called Dornagilla (who married Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway) as well as his heir John. He died at Lochindorb. John 'the Red' of Baddenoch (d.1305/6) son of John 'the Black', but called 'Red' like his grandfather. He was also nephew of John Baliol and married a cousin of Edward I of England. He held numerous lands, including the part of Tynedale and possibly the Barony of Bedrule. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1291, with his seal reading 'S'JOHANNIS COMYN' and showing an eagle. He may be the John of Scraesburgh who swore fealty to Edward in 1296. He was part of the Scottish army that invaded Cumberland, but he was captured by the English at Dunbar in 1297, along with several other Comyns and many other Scottish nobles. He was appointed sole Guardian of Scotland in 1302. Following supposed treachery, he was slain by Robert the Bruce and his supporters at Dumfries. After his death, King Robert granted all of his lands to Sir James Douglas, and thus Bedrule passed to the Douglases. His married Joan, daughter of William de Valence. Their children included: John, who was killed at Bannockburn; Adomar, who swore allegiance to Edward I in 1296; Elizabeth, who married Richard Talbot and Sir John Bromwych; and Joan, who married David, Earl of Atholl. Marion (14th C.) wife of John Langlands of that Ilk. In 1363 she had a charter for the lands of Milsington and Outerside, which had been held by her deceased husband. Her name is recorded as 'Mariote Comyne' and 'Cunyne'. It is unclear how she was related to other Comyns. Richard (d.1180) son of William and nephew of William, who was Chancellor of Scotland. In 1144 his uncle gave him Northallerton Castle and later the castle and Honour of Richmond in Yorkshire. In 1145 he married Hextilda (or Hestilla), daughter of Uchtred (son of Waldeve), Lord of Tynedale and Lady Bethoc. His mother may have been a granddaughter of Donald III of Scotland and held the Barony of Bedrule (which was probably named after her). He gained the Barony of Bedrule through marriage to Hextilda; this passed to his son William and remained with the Comyns for a few generations. He became Justiciar of Lothian and witnessed many charters in the reigns of Malcolm IV and William I. He was also Lord of Tynedale, with the grant of his lands in Tynedale being confirmed to his great-grandson John by the English King in 1261/2. He is listed as holder of a 'wenelachia' (near Todrig) that neighboured the lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk in about 1170. He was 'Ricardo Cumin' when he witnessed a royal charter for the lands of Whitslade at Traquair about 1170. He was captured along with the Scottish King in 1174 and was a hostage for the King in the Treaty of Falaise; he was a witness to the document whereby King William of Scotland yielded the castles of Roxburgh, Berwick, Jedburgh, Edinburgh and Stirling to King Henry of England. With the permission of his wife he gave lands to the monks of Hexhamn, Kelso and Holyrood. He died sometime between 1179 and 1182. His children with Hextilda included: John (d.1150s), who is buried at Kelso Abbey; William, Earl of Buchan; Odinel (or Odo), who was a priest; Simon, mentioned in 1166; Idonea; Ada; and Christien. His wife also married Malcolm, Earl of Atholl; genealogies are confused about which marriage was first, but since she was Countess of Atholl in the 1150s, that marriage must have been first and his was second. Richard (d.c.1249) eldest son of William. He witnessed several charters along with his father, who died in 1233. Thereafter he inherited the family lands, perhaps including Bedrule. Along with 2 of his brothers he was a guarantor for a 1244 treaty with England. His only known child was John (although these generations are uncertain). Walter (c.1190–1258) son of William, Justiciar of Scotland and brother of Richard. He was Lord of Badenoch and was also known as the Earl of Menteith after marrying Isabel, Countess of Menteith (probably daughter of Earl Maurice). He held great political power in Scotland, particularly during the minoroty of Alexander III. In 1244 he was involved in a feud over the murder of his relative Patrick, Earl of Atholl, which almost brought Scotland into a war with England. In 1258 he was involved with others in establishing a relationship between Scotland and Wales. He established a Priory on the Isle of Inchmahome. He had a son Henry, who predeceased him. According to the English, he died after his horse stumbled and fell on him; however, there were those in Scotland who believed he was poisoned. His widow secondly married English knight, Sir John Russell. His wife had a daughter Isabella (probably with her second husband, although possibly with him); she married William Comyn of Kirkintilloch. Sir Walter of Rowallan (d.1332) said to have been holder of lands in the Barony of Hawick during the reign of Robert the Bruce. He specifically held a portion of Branxholme, consisting of 7 pounds and 6 pennies worth of land; the rest went to Sir Henry Baliol. Before 1329 Sir Maurice Murray, Earl of Strathearn was granted the ward of these lands, along with the town of Branxholme, and perhaps the Barony of Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Comyns or what these lands near Hawick were. There is an undated charter in which he granted part of Rowallan to William Sturgess. He probably died at Arran, killed in support of Edward Baliol. His estate of Rowallan was inherited by his daughter (perhaps Isabella), who married Adam Mure. William (c.1160–1233) son of Richard, Lord of Tynedale and Hextilda, who was a grand-daughter of King Donald III. He inherited his father's lands in Northumberland and Scotland, which probably included Bedrule from his mother. He was an envoy to England for William the Lion and also served as Sheriff of Forfar and Justiciar of Scotland. He married Marjory, Countess of Buchan, thereby becoming Earl of Buchan. He founded Deer Abbey in Buchan, and made grants to several religious orders, including Dryburgh. In 1221 he witnessed a charter granting dowry lands to Joan of England (the new Queen of Scotland), including Jedburgh, Hassendean and Lessuden. Also in 1221 he was granted by the English King a weekly market at his manor of Thornton in Tynedale. In 1230 he witnessed a charter by Henry, King of England, confirming that King Alexander of Scotland had granted his Tynedale lands to his younger sister Margaret for marriage. Other transactions involving him make clear his connection with Roxburghshire, through for example Hownam, Lessuden and Muirhouselaw. He had 4 sons and 1 daughter with his first wife (whose name is unknown): Richard, who succeeded to most of the lands and titles; Walter, Earl of Menteith; William; David; and Jean. His children by his second wife were: Alexander, who succeeded as Earl of Buchan; William; Fergus; Idonea; Agnes; and Elizabeth. William (13th/14th C.) son of John 'the Black'. He was appointed as Keeper of Selkirk and Traquair Forests in 1291/2 by Edward I. However, Thomas de Burnham was appointed only a few months later. He died without issue. (also spelled 'Cumyn' and 'Cumin', the name derives from 'Comines' on the France-Belgium border, and may also be connected with the surnames Cumming and Common).

the Comyns (thu-ku-minz) n. family that was locally important in early times, and related to the modern Cummings, Common, etc. The first mention is of a Norman family, granted lands in Northumberland, and in the 12th century they gained lands in Scotland, including at Bedrule. It seems possibly that the original 'Bethoc' of Bedrule was part of the Canmore family of Scottih Kings, into which the Comyns married. In the late 13th century John Comyn was one of the claimants of the Scottish throne, because of this connection. In 1306 John 'the Red' Comyn was killed (probably by Robert the Bruce) and they were branded as traitors, with their influence in Scotland soon being over. It is suggested that Walter Comyn, 4th Earl of Menteith may have been involved in construction at Hermitage Castle. Marion 'Cumyne' was the wife of John de Langlands in the 14th century, and they held local lands at Milsington and Outerside, as well as Langlands. It is possible that the family of 'Common', known from at least the 16th century in Jedforest and Rulewater, were related.

Conacher (ko-na-chur) n. Alexander (1803–73) son of John and Margaret Borrie, he was born in Tullybelton, Auchtergaven, Perthshire. He was at Little Cavers as a forester in 1841 and then worked in Hawick as a dyer. He lived on Allars Crescent, then at 1 Village and lastly in Wilton Place. He was said to have been a strict Calvinist. He married Margaret (or 'Mary') Scott and their children were: John Craig (b.1825), who emigrated to Australia and took the surname Scott; Peter (b.c.1827–1904), who died on the Isle of Wight; Alexander (1829/30–94), who also went to Australia, dying at Creswick, Victoria, and also took the surname Scott; Robert (b.1836/7); Susan (b.1838/9–55); and Elizabeth (b.1844/5). Mungo (b.c.1880) born in Dumfriesshire, he had a joiners business at 6 Mansfield Crescent. His business went bankrupt in 1906. He emigrated to Alberta, Canada right after that. Thomas Dewar (19th/20th C.) teacher in Hawick who lived at 10 Lothian Street. Isabella Govenlock Buchanan brought a paternity suit against him in 1895 (also written 'Conachar' and 'Connacher').

conceivit (kon-see-vee', -vi') pp., poet. conceived – '. . . for that whilk is conceivet in hir is o' the Haly Ghaist' [HSR].

the Con Club (thu-kon-klub) n. a social and political organisation, Hawick Conservative Club, situated for over a century at 22 Bourtree Place. The club began in 1895, meeting in the Temperance Hall. The memorial stone for the new Bourtree Place premises were laid by the Countess of Dalkeith in 1897 (as can be seen in photographs). The site there was formerly stabling etc. for the Wellogate fields farmed by the landlords of the Tower Inn. The design for the new building was by J.P. Alison and it includes a large Doric-columned entrance porch. The club was known as the Hawick Constitutional Club until its name was changed, only in 1970. The building contained a billiard room on the lower level, with 6 full-sized tables, plus a bar, other small rooms, and a large hall upstairs. The roof of this function room is held up by a concealed cast-iron frame. There was also a second-floor flat, which was originally the residence of the club master. The building was converted into a Weatherspoon's restaurant in 2011 and renamed 'the Bourtree'. It is a grade B listed building. The club meanwhile moved to smaller premises on Croft Road.

concrete (kong-kree') n. early concrete houses in Hawick included a block of flats on the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street (built by Charles Drake and demolished after a fire in the 1980s) and the Congregational Manse on Orchard Terrace (built in 1874 with material supplied by Charles Drake's Patent Concrete Building Company).

Condosus (kon-dō-soos) n. place name mentioned in the royal charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170. It lay on the south of the Ale Water, although the precise location is unclear. The description appears to define the lands of Whitslade proceeding along the Langhope Burn as far as 'Condosum' on the south side of the Ale (which does not make much sense!).

Conevethe (kōn-veth) n. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johan de Conevethe, persone del eglise de Alnecrom' when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. He was thus an early parson of Ancrum Kirk. His name appears twice, and these are apparently the same man, although the second name is transcribed 'Corweth', but also parson of Ancrum. His seal is a 'vesica' with an eagle standing on a scroll and the name 'S'JOH'IS DE CONVETE CLERICI'.

the Confessions of Faith (thu-kon-fe-shinz-ov-fāth) n. formal name for the document denouncing episcoplianism, signed in 1638. A different copy was made for each district, signed first by the major aristocrats, then by M.Ps. and lastly by the local men. The local one is believed to have been signed in Hawick, and preserved for centuries at Cavers House. It is 32 inches by 28 inches in size. It reads 'Confession of Faith, subscrybed at first by the kingis majestie and his household in the year of god 1589. Thairefter by persons of all rankis . . . and now subscrybed in the yeir 1638 by the Congregational Kirk (th̲u-ko n̲g-gree-gā-shin-ul-kirk) n. church on Bourtree Place with a complicated early history. Its roots in Hawick lie with the Independent Church formed after the visits of evangelical preachers (such as James and Robert Haldane and John Aikman in the late 18th century). Although this went defunct, evangelical preaching was continued by itinerant preacher Francis Dick from about 1824. A church was founded in 1836 in O'Connell street, partly from members of the Independent Church, which sided with the Congregational Union of Scotland, a group having strong temperance leanings. It originally had 15 members and met in an upper flat of either 3 or 5 O'Connell Street, with William Munro as minister. It lasted until around 1877, although never with a large congregation, and had dwindling numbers in the later years. A separate congregation formed in 1842 (as the 2nd Congregational Church, hence presumably before the demise of the 1st), following the interest in evangelical preaching and the temperance movement, with William Dobson as minister for a year or two. It is unclear how long this 2nd church lasted (and how it was related to the later Evangelical Union Kirk), but not long past 1845. In Spring of 1848 John Rutherford of Kelso took up the invitation of William Munro to preach a 'mission' in Hawick. Joined by Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh (with relief from several other preachers), the intense series of prayer meetings and sermons lasted 7 weeks, moving from O'Connell Street to the East bank Kirk and finally expanding to the Subscription Rooms, and leading directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Hawick (which became formally part of the E.U. in 1859, became the E.U. Congregational in 1897 and finally changed its name to the Congregational in 1930). Apparently some dispute led to Mr. Munro withdrawing his support for the 'mission', hence the forming of the E.U. Kirk, separate from his own, which lasted perhaps into the 1870s. The first meeting of the new E.U. Kirk was in May 1848, led by Rev. John Hunter Rutherford in the Subscription Rooms, with 45 founding members (perhaps mostly having come from Rev. Munro's Congregational Kirk). Further meetings were held in the Town Hall during Common-Riding week! The evangelism of the early ministers hed a hostile reception from Hawick's more established churches, this only really changing in the time of Rev. David Hislop. The church was originally run by 6 Deacons. Disputes over association with the E.U. rather than C.U. led to 25 members leaving for Mr. Munro's C.U. church in 1859. The schism was finally healed by a positive vote in 1894 and formalised in early 1897. A chapel was erected in O'Connell Street in 1848–9 (now a doctor's surgery), designed by Robert Hobkirk and built by James Hobkirk (farmer at Broadhaugh). The interior can be seen in a photograph of 1892. The present church was built in Bourtree Place in 1893–4, following an abortive plan to build next to the Buccleuch Memorial a few years earlier. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the Early Gothic-style design includes some fine interior detailing as well as adjacent church halls. It is a grade C listed building. The foundation stone was laid by John Wilson, M.P. for Govan and President of the Evangelical Union. A manse was built on Wellogate Brae in 1874 (an early concrete building, with material supplied by Drake's Patent Concrete Company). An organ was added to the church in the mid-1920s. A Handbook of the Hawick Church was published in 1889 and 'Congregationalism in the Border District, 1798–1898' in 1898. Note that there was also a Congregational Church in Newcastleton, the congregation being established in 1849, and another in Denholm, which used the Cameronian Chapel from about 1830 until about 1876. An approximate roll of the ministers is: William Munro 1836–73 (earlier Congregational Kirk); W.L. Walker 1873–76 (earlier Congregational Kirk); W. Matheson 1877 (earlier Congregational Kirk); Archibald (or Alexander) Duff 1849–56; James Proctor 1857–58; Robert Mitchell 1860–64; David Hislop 1864–1902; Winning Russell (assistant) from 1894; W.J. Ainslie 1903–21; Æneas Anderson 1922–27; Alexander Baxter 1927–33; John Safely 1934–41; George Burill Hewitt 1942–??; Douglas Malcolm Rogers 1969–71; Stanley Britton ??.

He married Helen Smail in Roberton in 1820 and their children included: Cook (b.1821); Thomas (d.1838); and Janet (b.1834). James (19th C.) married Janet Jackson in Cavers Parish in 1826. John (17th C.0 resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Brown and their son James was baptised in 1646. John (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He probably lived near Hassendean Mains. John (18th C.) resident of Newton in Wilton Parish in 1731. He married Janet Hardie in Minto Parish in 1727. Their children included: John (b.1728); Janet (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1733). The witnesses in 1731 were John 'Thoms' and John Scott. John (b.c.1710) shepherd at Whitchesters. He had been there for 23 years in 1761, when he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He gave evidence at the court case for the division of the Common in 1767; he was then said to have been shepherd at Whitchesters for 27 years, ending in 1764. After that he lived at 'Millside' (although it is unclear where that might have been). He may be the John, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. He may be the John, married to Margaret Wilson whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1737) and Marion (b.1739). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Greensidehall in 1797. He married Janet Ferguson in 1795 and their children included: William (b.1795); and John (b.1797). Perhaps the same John was recorded as labourer at Wiltonburn on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1804) and Robert (b.1808). Kelly (18th C.) cook and maid at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Laidlaw and their children included: John (b.1651); and Robert (b.1672). Peter (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabella Deans in 1832 and their children included William (b.1836) and Janet (b.1844). Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Scott and their children included Helen (b.1685) and Jean (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were William

Wilson and John Telfer and in 1687 included Walter Scott of Alton, who may have been related to his wife. In 1689 he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for Walter Scott of Altoncroft. He could be the Robert recorded as resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Robert in Branxholme who was given £3 10s. in 1701 'for teaching poor lads to read' and the Robert in Branxholme who witnessed baptisms in 1705 for carrier Robert Scott (also in Branxholme) and for William Oliver, 'servitor' in Todshawhaugh. Robert (1771/2–1845) innkeeper in Hawick. He was listed as a vintner on the Sandbed in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Plough Inn on the 1841 census. Margaret, who also lived there, may have been his sister. He married Janet Lockie, from Cavers Parish, and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: Jane (b.1804); Agnes (b.1805), who married a Scott; Margaret (b.1807); Janet (b.1810); William (b.1813); Mary (b.1815); James (b.1816); and perhaps Elizabeth (b.c.1820). Burgh Officer Thomas was also their son. In 1851 his widow Janet was living with their daughter Agnes Scott. Robert M. (1851/2–95) baker in Newcastleton. He married Lillias Finney, who died at Biggar in 1930, aged 77. Ronnie (1914–2008) 'Cook o Hawick', from Myreslawgreen, he was a baker to trade. He lived for about 50 years in Langholm, but still answered the phone 'Cook o Myreslawgreen'! A great old character, he was taped by Ian Landles, these audio recordings providing a wealth of stories about Hawick between the wars, and including many examples of dialect usage (some of which are quoted in this Word Book). David Stevenson called one of his racehorses 'Cook o Hawick' after him. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Dovemount in 1790. He married Janet Pott in 1790 and their children included: James (b.1786); and John (b.1790). Thomas 'Tom' (19th C.) son of Robert and Janet Lockie. He was landlord of the Bridge Hotel and also served as Burgh Officer and Bellman. He is recorded at the Bridge Hotel in 1875. He acted as Halberdier in the 1880s, for many years along with Michael Wintrup and after that with Fraser Richardson. Like many of his predecessors he was known as a great wit. He may be the Thomas who married Elizabeth Brown in Hawick in 1870. Walter (18th C.) recorded at Greensidehall in 1708 and Alton Croft in 1710. His children included John (b.1706), Jean (b.1708) and John (again, b.1710). His daughter may be the Jean who married James Blaikie in Minto in 1732. He may be the Walter, married to Jean Mitchel whose children included: Margaret (b.1710), baptised in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1718) and Helen (b.1720), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1710 were John and Walter Dalgleish. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme recorded in 1709 when he married Bessie Dryden. His wife was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: John (b.1710); and Isabel (b.1716). He may have also been father of the later gardener Walter. Walter (18th C.) gardener at Branxholme. In 1762 he (along with Thomas Cowan) witnessed a baptism for gardener John Kyle. His wife was Isobel Stavert and their children included Bessy (b.1738) and Isobel (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were William Veitch (gardener at Branxholme for Robert of Midlem Mill) and John Telfer ('Coater there'). He may have been related to Robert, who was earlier associated with Branxholme. William (18th C.) resident of Wiltonburn. He married Agnes Crawford in 1769 and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The baptism in 1772 was conducted by Rev. John Young of the Green Kirk and the witnesses were James Scott and Adam Crawford. William (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Brydon in Wilton Parish in 1796. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish in 1837 and their children included Robert (b.1839). William (19th C.) married Helen Nisbet in Hawick Parish in 1853. William (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of aerated waters at 13 Teviot Crescent. William 'Willie' (19th/20th C.) one of the last 2 men to work on stocking frames in Denholm (the other being John Stafford). They worked in a building to the east of the Fox and Hounds (formerly also 'Coock', 'Cooke', 'Couke', etc.).

Cooke (kook) n. Thomas (1752) founder of Cook's Circus, which is first recorded in Ayrshire in 1784, but toured extensively. Many members of the family performed in equestrian and other acts. His son Thomas Taplin Cooke became owner, followed by his son William Cooke. The circus had a semi-permanent home in Edinburgh from 1835. He is probably the man mentioned in the donation to the Museum by Councillor Smith of Selkirk in 1876: 'training switch of Mr Cook senr., the celebrated equestrian.

cookie (koo-kee) n. light round, plain bun (not a hard biscuit from Dutch).

Cookswing (kooks-wing) n. former name for a cottage on the Borthwickbrae estate, to the right of the 'high road' before the sharp bend towards Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. It is mentioned on the 1841 census as one of the Borthwickbrae Cottages.

coom (koom) v., arch. to come.

coom (koom) v., arch. the dust or residue from burned coal or peat, a flake of soot (see also coal-coom; J. Jamieson notes the use of 'coom' on the bars of a grate to foretell the arrival of strangers).

Coomb Edge (koom-ej) n. hill between the upper Jed valley and upper Liddel valley, to the east of Singdean. It reaches a height of 444 m (it is marked 'Coom Edge' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Coomb Shank (koom-shawngk) n. hilly region in the upper Hermitage valley, to the east of Geordie's Hill. On the eastern slopes, near where the Twislehope and Billhope Burns meet there are the remains of a settlement, with enclosures and hut circles, largely obliterated by ploughing.

Coomb Sike (koom-sīk) n. stream that rises on Coomb Edge and joins the Wormscleuch Burn in upper Liddesdale.

Cooms (kooms) n. farm located where the Cooms Burn meets the Tarras Water, on the east side of Ewes Parish. There were Elliots of Cooms in the 18th and 19th centuries. Robert Elliot of Redheugh sold it to Humble Lamb of Ryton in the early 19th century. John Ogilvie was farmer there in 1841 and still there in 1868 (also sometimes 'Coombs', it was 'Cowmes' in about 1748; it is marked 'coumes' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Coumm' on Blaeu's 1654 atlas and 'Coumes' and 'Combes' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

cooncil (koon-sul) n. council – 'Cooncil cancelled celebration, Muckle tae Hawick's indignation . . . ' [MB], 'The cooncil, whae hed awready elected a Cornet and due ti their apparent disregard for some o the ancient customs and traditions o the toon hed galvanised . . . Hogg . . . ' [IHS] (also spelled 'coonsul', etc.).

the Cooncil (thu-koon-sul) n. Hawick Town Council before 1975, thereafter referring to Roxburgh District Council or Borders Regional Council, and since 1996 Scottish Borders Council (see the Toon Cooncil).

the Cooncil Chambers (thu-koon-sul-chām-burz) n. meeting room in the Town Hall, formerly used by the Town Council. In the old Town House the Chambers were reached by an outside staircase and consisted of a large room with adjoining ante-room. The modern chambers are at the front of the first floor, with its balcony over the front entrance.

the Cooncil Hoose (thu-koon-sul-hoos) n. another name for the Town House or old Town Hall – 'Received from Mr Clarke for use of council-house when delivering his lectures, . . . 0 10 6' [BR1785], '. . . when they were assembled in the Councel-house' [C&L]. cooncil hooses (koon-sul-hoo-seez) n., pl. houses built by the council, generally low cost and usually rented to the tenants. The earliest council development was at Oliver Park. Silverbuthall was a large housing estate developed after WWII, shortly followed by Burnfoot, then Mayfield in the 1960s and Stirches in the 1970s. Subsequent government policy changes have seen many houses purchased by their tenants.

cooncillor (koon-su-lur) n. a councillor – 'hei was a cooncillor for thirty-yin year', 'Ah sei it's time for the coonclir's expenses again' [JCo].

coonjure (koon-jur) v. to conjure – 'He coungers our kyloes, and causes our kebs, And a fearfu' auld carl is Johnie Nip-nebs' [HSR], to overawe, intimidate – '. . . whan the grewsome gaishener ov a geizart, i the girnin Daith's Heed, coonjert wui its moween an its skeeletin-maigs aa the braw folk wheengin an dancin' [ECS] (also written 'counger' and variants).

coonty (koon'-ee, koon-tee) n., adj. territorial division for administrative, judicial and political purposes. Specifically, Scotland was divided into 33 counties following the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1889, Hawick being in Roxburghshire. County Councils ceased to exist after 1974, but the old counties are still used for land registration and some other purposes – '... an thegither oo turnt ti the richt for the Teiot an the coonty toon' [ECS], 'The auld kirk bell's no long rung. A' the shairper 'Gentry o' the Coonty'll be throngin' in ere long' [JEDM].

the Coonty Cooncil (thu-koon'-ee-koon-sul) n. county council, specifically Roxburghshire County Council, set up in 1889 following the Local Government (Scotland) Act to deal with roads, some policing and legal administration, health and sanitation supply. Jedburgh was adopted as the county town, but there was an unsuccessful proposal to substitute it for Hawick in 1891. Its powers were extended through the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1929, when it took over education and poor law from the parochial councils, as well as some further power from the Town Councils. It was replaced by Roxburgh District Council in 1975. Papers from the County Council are in the Borders Archive.

the Coonty Police Station (thu-koon'-ee-po-lees-stā-shin) n. county police station, which was on the Mill Path at the end of the 19th century.

the Co-op (thu-kō-op) n. Hawick Cooperative Society, which began as a local branch of the Chartist Association formed in 1838, opening its first shop in Silver Street in 1839. Its success led to the lowering of food prices throughout the town. Specialising in general provisions to start with, the Society eventually sold almost everything. The drapery and shoe departments opened at 65 and 67 High Street in 1873. The main shop, 'the Store' opened on the High Street in 1885, covering Nos. 65–67, redesigned by Michael Brodie and having a decorated stone frontage. It eventually stretched from 65–71 High Street, from Tannage Close to Baker Street, and closed in 1987 after more than a century. In its hey-dey it employed close to 100 staff, and was the envy of other Border towns, with its modern fittings and the vacuum tubes to move accounts quickly between floors. It ca be seen in a picture of about 1886. There were also further general shops in the Sandbed, Havelock Street, Wilton Place, Myreslawgreen and the bottom of Trinity Steps (the Weensland Store), plus a grocery shop at 62 High Street and stableyards on Orchard Terrace. The Hawick Society merged with others, first becoming Hawick & Jedburgh Cooperative Society, eventually becoming part of the Scottish Co-op, which in turn merged with those in England. Customers were also stake-holders, receiving an annual dividend and later collecting stamps to redeem for goods. However, by the 1980s there was little to distinguish the Co-op from any other supermarket, and it was running at a loss. Once the biggest shopping institution in Hawick, the one at Burnfoot is all that remains. However, the Co-op purchased the Summerfield supermarket chain, and so in recent years the store on Croft Road has effectively become a Co-op.

cooper (koo-pur) n., arch. a horse dealer – 'Laird, 'horse-couper' and farmer, Wullie was a familiar figure at all the horse-fairs of the Borders ...' [DH] (there are spelling variants).

Copeland (kōp-lind) n. John (d.1363) from the land of 'Coupland' near Wooler. However, he also held lands in Scotland, including Ormiston in Roxburghshire. He was probably at the siege of Dunbar Castle in 1338. In 1340 he was in the group of English soldiers, under Thomas Grey and the garrison of Roxburgh, which routed the Earls of March and Sutherland. He is credited with capturing the young King David at the Battle of Neville's Cross in 1346. Thereafter he was knighted by the English King and given an annuity as well as additional lands. From 1347 he was Governor and Constable of Roxburgh Castle, and also referred to as Sheriff of Roxburghshire. He also acted as Sheriff of Northumberland, and in 1352 was given the collectorship of the forests of Selkirk, Ettrick and Peebles, as well as collecting fee-farm rents in Roxburghshire. He was several times appointed to a commission for arranging or keeping truces with Scotland. In 1353 he was ordered to resign the offices of Governor and Constable of Roxburgh and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in favour of Henry de Percy. He is recorded as 'Johanni de Coupland' in about 1354 when he and his wife 'Johanne' were granted the lands of 'Haletonburne' (i.e. Altonburn) by Adam of Rule. In 1357/8 he granted these same lands to John Ker, who thus became the first of the Kers of Altonburn. He was associated with the garrison at Berwick in the late 1350s and in 1359 was appointed as a Lieutenant to the Wardens of the East Marches. In 1361 he was reappointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire and became Warden of the Marches. It is unclear how he died, but he was possibly slain by other Englishmen in 1363 on Bolton Moor. He was buried at Carham, but his widow had his body moved to the Priory of Kirkham. He married Joan (or Joanna), sister of Henry del Strother of Kirknewton. Peter (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wilton Lodge in 1797, when he was working for Lord Napier. Also in 1797 his name appears on the list of those on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was still at Wilton Lodge among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish'.

Coppitholme (ko-pi'-hōm) n. farm, or possibly mill, marked on Blaeu's 1654 map on the south side of the Borthwick near Roberton. It is unclear what this corresponds to on modern maps.

Copshaw (kop-shu, -shee, -shaw) n. former lands in Liddesdale, now used as an alternative name for Newcastleton. In 1541 the farm there was valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Robert Elliot. Jock Elliot was 'callit Copschaw' in 1580. Tom Armstrong was recorded there in 1587/8 and 1590/1 – 'oo drove oot be Copshaw', adj. someone or something from Newcastleton – 'she was a Copshaw lassie' (this name goes back to at least 1541, when it is 'Copschaw'; it is 'Copeschaw' in 1580, 'Copschaw' in 1580, 1581, 1584 and 1599, 'Coppshaw' and 'Capschaw' in 1607; it is 'Copshawes' on Sandison's c.1590 map and 'Copshaw' on Gordon's c.1650 map, while Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'Copshaha', 'Copshaw' and 'Copshaw pk').

Copshaw (kop-shu) n. nickname for Francis Elliot.

Copshawholm (kop-shu-hōm) n. familiar name for Newcastleton, so called because it was built on the site of three former holdings, Copshaw Ha', Copshaw and Copshaw Park. In 1597 an indenture was signed at 'Copshawe Holme' in which pledges were made for the delivery of 5 Scotsmen to the English Deputy Warden, by the Lord of Liddesdale, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The farm of 'Copshaholme' is explicitly listed under the Liddesdale possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 – 'Great-uncle Wull at Copshaw Holm, Wha dealt in swine and kye, Relished 'bune ony butcher-meat, A denner o' crawpie' [DH], '. . . Till the lost joy that gar'd me roam I recaptur' by Copshawholm' [WL] (the name derives from the Old English 'copp sceaga', meaning 'wood by the summit'; it occurs at least as early as 1541 as 'Copschaw', while 'Copshawe Holme' occurs in 1597 and 'Parke callit Copshaholme' in 1632; it is on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Copshaw' and on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Copshaha', 'Copshaw' and 'Copshaw Park').

Copshawholm Fair (kop-shu-hōm-fār) n. hiring fair held in Newcastleton. At one point there were 3 of these a year, in April, May and november. The fairs were held twice yearly, in May and Novemeber, in the early and middle parts of the 19th century and later became yearly, lasting until 1912. It is also the name of a song, written by David Anderson in 1830, to the Northumbrian pipe tune 'The Wild Hills o' Wannie', which celebrates the occasion. These were the highlights of the year for the country folk, with 'shows' and other attractions, as well as the actual hiring of farm labourers.

Copshawholm Kirk (kop-shu-hōm-kirk) n. name originally used for the Secession church that was later called Newcastleton Burgher Kirk.

Copshaw Park (kop-shu-pawrk) n. former name for lands close to the modern Newcastleton, also known as 'Park'. It appears as 'Copshepark' on the 1694 Hearth Tax records, with Walter Scott the tenant there at that time. It is 'Copsha park' and 'Copshepark' in 1718 in a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 527 acres and was bounded by the Liddel Water, Millholm and Blackburn. The house is shown along a strip of young wood, surrounded by a grove of ash trees (see also Park).

Copshaw Place (kop-shu-plis) n. street in Newcastleton off South Hermitage Street, opposite Stopford Street.

Copshaw Toor (kop-shu-toor) n. former tower at the modern Newcastleton. It has been suggested that is lay just beside the Langholm road, on a bend just outside the village, but there is no proof of this – 'We'll no tarry lang by Copshaw Toor, Nor linger at Mangerton keep; Noo the heels o' oor nags kick up the stoor On the bridle track worn and deep' [JBB] (the tower is marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map opposite and slightly south of Whithaugh and between 'Copshaha' and 'Copshaw pk').

Copshaw Tub (kop-shu-tub) n. principal in the Newcastleton summer festival, which is effectively a spoof of the Common Ridings in Hawick and Langholm. It started in 1998, founded by 9 locals. The 'Tub' is elected in May and leads a bicycle cavalcade during the traditional music festival, accompanied by the 'Flake'. The village flag, prominent in the festivities, carries the motto 'Purious Bunkumos' (the name is an ice-cream-inspired joke).

Copshie see Copshaw

the Coquet (thu-ko-ki') n. river in Northumberland, in the east of what was the English Middle March, with principal town Rothbury. There was no direct path from the head of the Coquet valley into Scotland, although the river rises only about a mile from the Border.

Coquetdale (kō-ki', -kit, -dāl) n. valley of the river Coquet in Northumberland, known for being picturesque, formerly part of the English Middle March – 'In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi' glee, And lunder the lubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i' me?' [T].

Corbet (kōr-bi') n. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Barnes in Cavers Parish. Probably the same Gilbert was recorded as 'Distiller' in 1757 when he witnessed a baptism for Hawick distiller and merchant John Aitchison. He paid the Horse Tax at Barnes in 1785–94. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Sir Francis Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was recorded as owner of 6 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Matilda (12th/13th C.) probably daughter of Walter, Lord of Yetholm and Morebattle. She was wife of William of Ryedale, or Riddell. She is recorded in a charter of unknown date (but sometime around 1200) in which Walter of Riddell granted lands in Lilliesleaf that she had previously held in dowry. This included 'Lintedikes', 'Benelandes', 'Burnerig', 'Kaueres' and 'Ch'ngisflat'. Her dowry lands are mentioned as neighbouring properties that were gifted to Melrose Abbey in the period 1185–1215, where she is recorded as 'matilde corbet'. Sometime in the period 1214–40 she resigned her lands in Lillieleaf to her superior Patrick of Riddell. She may have secondly married Philip Seton and had a son, Alexander Seton. 'Rogier Corbet' from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and could have been related; he held the lands of Fairnington (also written 'Corbett').

Corbett (kōr-bi') n. Raymond (d.2007) rugby columnst for the Hawick News, using the pseudonym 'Waverley'. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and was also a keen golfer and bowler.

corbie (kor-bee) n., arch., poet. a crow, sometimes also a raven – 'He looked o'er fell, and looked o'er flat, But nothing, I wist, he saw, Save a pyot on a turret that sat Beside a corby craw' [JL], 'The auld gray corbie hoverit aboone, While tears downe his cheeks did flowe' [JTe], 'For a raven, Sir, as it's kenned by every body by the name of a corbie craw . . . ' [JTe], 'Now croupin' corbies bauld are swearin', Guid weather's dead' [JoHa], '... his olks ar thyk curlet an' blak als ane corbie' [HSR], '... His hair was black as the corbie's wing, His dark eyes deep as the Hellmuir water' [WHO], 'Then haste on our tracks; ye may gather at least Some shred of the bones where the corbies feast' [WHO] (also 'corby'; occurring in some place names, e.g. 'Corbie Shank' and 'Corbyhaa').

Corbie (kor-bee) n. nature columnist for the Southern Reporter, a pen-name for Douglas Methven in the latter part of the 20th century and early 21st.

the Corbie (thu-kor-bee) n. nickname for Robert Liddersdale.

Corbie Shank (kor-bee-shawngk) n. spur at the head of the Wrangway Burn (in the headwaters of upper Teviotdale), lying between Causeway Grain Head and Haggis Side. There are signs of an old road near here.

Corby Burn (kor-bee-burn) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It rises in Stonedge Forest and runs roughly eastwards, past Harwood House, near where it joins the Harwood Burn (the name may be associated with crows or ravens).

Corbyhaa (kor-bee-haw) n. Corbyhall, former shepherd's cottage to the south of Stonedge, in Stonedge Forest. James Douglas, tenant there, was buried in Hawick in 1829. The Ordinance Survey maps show a small building and an enclosure, and there is an old quarry to the north (the name is probably a jocular one from being a small cottage on Corby Burn).

corce (kōrs) n., arch. a body, corpse – 'When the corce came to Hawick, the burial-place, the company were all invited to dine in the Tower' [HAST1866].

cord (kōrd) n. one of several ropes traditionally held by male friends and relatives and used for lowering a coffin into the grave, now carried out symbolically.

cordiner (kōr-di-nur) n., arch. cordwainer, explicitly someone who works in cordwain, i.e. Cordovan leather, but often synonymous with 'shoemaker'. In 1722 the 'cordiners' of Hawick petitioned the Council to be incorporated separately from the shoemakers (who were those cobblers making single-soled shoes). Together they had been an incorporation from early times, with the original date unrecorded in the Burgh Records – 'The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit shone ...' [BR1643], 'Robert Hardie, cordener, fyned for ane night rambling ... disgised in women's apparell, qrby he terrified and afrighted several persons' [BR1702] (several spelling variants exist).

core (kōr) n., poet. a party, company – 'Weel may ye greet, ilk social man, The king o' a' your core is gane' [JoHa].

corky-noddled (kor-kee-no-duld) adj., poet. thoughtless, flighty – 'What mak's ye spae o' caul' an' want, To gliff puir corky-noddl'd flatties?' [JoHa].

Corlaw Burn (kor-law-burn) n. stream that rises near Teviot Stone and flows to the west to eventually join the Meggat Water. There is a linear earthwork there, about 590 m in length.

Cormack (kor-mawk) n. Mr. ?? Headmaster at St. Cuthbert's School from about 1945 until 1948.

corn (kōrn, kō-rin) n. generic term for grains, including wheat and also oats – '... and south west side of the said corn-riggs or butts, and from that pit up the west side of the said corn-land by pits, to a bank betwixt the moss and the corn-land' [DCW1765] (plural sometimes corns).

corn (kōrn) v., arch. to feed with oats, used in the phrase 'waur ti witter than ti corn' applied to an alcoholic – 'A maun heh been woare ti waeter as ti corn, a hantle, for A'll ouwn A was dry again' [ECS].

cornet (kōr-ni', kor-ni') n. a young man in certain towns in south-east Scotland chosen to be standard bearer. This includes Langholm, Lauder and Peebles, as well as (of course) Hawick, and the exiles' communities in the Boston and Vancouver areas in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

the Cornet (thu-kōr-, -kor-ni') n. principal during the Common Riding, representing the young man who returned from Hornshole with the Flag. By tradition he must be a 'Teri', unmarried, and remain so for the following 2 years. Usually he has been a mounted supporter for several years previously. The first known list of Cornets was published by John Elder (in Edinburgh) in 1836, along with Hogg's 'Teribus', and contained the names from 1719 to 1835 only; it is unclear who compiled the list, or who added the extra names later, when it was extended in 1868 and beyond. The first recorded Cornet, in 1703, was James Scott, 'called Laird', although it is clear there had been Cornets long before that. However, it may have been that the Cornet was previously not such a central figure. Until 1784 the Cornet and some of his supporters rode the marches armed with pistols. In the early days it was traditional for the Cornet to be chosen alternately from the 'Easla' and 'Wasla' sides of Hawick. And once appointed the Cornet was allowed to sell spirits from his house, without a licence, in order to raise money. Until the mid-19th century only the sons of Burgesses were elligible, therafter it could be any man born in Hawick. After 1993 the rule changed to having birth registered in Hawick and born of parents living in Hawick. Before 1865 one of the Cornet's duties was to collect funds for the races. He first started to get an allowance from the Committee in 1856, with a token amount now being given annually. Originally the Cornet was selected by the Town Council by voting from a short list, but more recently he has been chosen after considering the nominations forwarded by the previous 2 years' Cornets. In 1706 the Cornet-Elect refused to carry the flag due to its state of disrepair, and so the Bailies had to do the duty. Disputes led to there being two Cornets in both 1790 and 1809, and almost again in 1825. The Council declined to elect a Cornet in both 1856 and 1877 (with the election being at a public meeting instead), and there were further votes over whether to elect a Cornet in 1857, 1860, 1862, 1876 and 1878, leading to a virtual severance of ties between the Common Riding and the Council until the 1880s. Previous to 1891 the Cornet wore white trousers, then changing to white riding breeches and top boots. He traditionally wears a green coat, with unknown origin. A photograph taken about 1894 show a group of 20 Cornets, this being supplemented with another dozen individial photographs and issued as a postcard in 1905. A medal has been presented to the Cornet since 1895, a riding since 1906 and more recently also a badge – '. . . and nominat James Scott, called of Westport, to be Corronett for that year' [BR1705], 'We'll follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet, follow oor Cornet roon' ' [DJ], 'While 'here they come' is heard the cry, 'The Cornet's First' the bairns reply' [RH], 'Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again! I'll try to behave like a Cornet brave, you will follow, I know, like men' [JEDM], 'The Cornets, God bless them, all Gentlemen, true, They still guard the Pennon and new life imbue' [WFC] (from Old French 'Cornette', the ensign of a company of cavalry).

the Cornet-Elect (thu-kōr-ni'-ee-lekt) n. designation for the young man selected to be Cornet, used before the official Picking. Since the name is meant to be secret the phrase is rarely used except in relation to the Picking itself. Note that in the late 19th century the term was used for referring to the Cornet in the days leading up to the Friday of the Common Riding itself (also 'Cornet Elect').

the Cornet's Badge (thu-kōr-nits-bawj) n. badge of office of each new Cornet, presented to him during the congratulatory Smoker on Picking Night. The design shows the town coat-of-arms in blue and yellow, with the year written below (distinct from the Cornet's Medal).

the Cornet's Band (thu-kōr-nits-bawnd) n. popular name for the drum and fife band, from the fact that they march directly in front of the Cornet during some Common-Riding ceremonies.

the Cornets' Board (thu-kōr-nits-bōrd) n. large oak plaque, placed in the pend at the Tower in 2014, containing the names of all known Hawick Cornet's. It was commissioned by the Callants' Club and made by Alec Cuthbertson, with lettering by Ray Nichol and Colin Wilson.

the Cornet's Breakfast (thu-kōr-nits-brek-fist) n. ceremonial breakfast on the Friday morning, for the Cornet and guests, joined by the Drums and Fifes after their march round the old town. Principals from neighbouring towns are also invited, and there is a simulataneous breakfast for the Provost, Bailies and guests. The breakfast took place for the last time in the Cornet's own house in 1885. The event really took off when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John's Kirk) accepted the invitation to attend in 1887, when it was held in the Buccleuch Hitel. It later took place in the Tower Hotel, while the Provost and guests breakfasted in the Town Hall. Most recently the breakfast has been held at Robbie's. After the breakfast the oak leaves are distributed and the Old Song is sung at the door of the Tower. After the Chase the Cornet and followers have a second 'breakfast' of curds and cream at St. Leonard's.

the Cornet's Chair (thu-kōr-nits-bōrd) n. ornamental oak chair specially designed for the Cornet to sit on during the quincentenary Colour Bussing. It was made by local craftsman Alex Cuthbertson (with additional help from Hawick Upholstery and Wilson Signs) and gifted to the Common-Riding Committee. It contains the dates 1514–2014 and the words 'Lest We Forget'. Embarrassingly left out of the 2014 ceremony, it was first used in 2015.

the Cornet's Chaplain (thu-kōr-nits-chawp-lin) n. title used to refer to the minister officiating at the Kirking of the Cornet ceremony.

the Cornet's Chase (thu-kōr-nits-chās) n. name given to the part of the Chase involving the Cornet and the unmarried men, distinguishing it from the Acting Father's Chase. This particularly refers to the Thursday and Friday mornings, when the Cornet carries the Flag – '. . . The road is cleared, and now the Cornet's chase Attracts all eyes. Now to the Nipknowes' crest The eager horses with their riders fly, All madly striving hard to do their best' [JCG].

the Cornet's Crop (thu-kōr-nits-krop) n. race-crop presented to the Cornet on the Friday of the Common Riding, the tradition beginning in 1906. It has been inscribed before presentation since 1958. A crop is also presented to the Acting Father each year.

the Cornet's Denner (thu-kōr-nits-de-nur) n. formerly another name for the Denner and in more recent times for the Greetin Denner.

Cornetship (kōr-ni'-ship) n. the position of being Cornet – 'In 1853, during the cornetship of Mr John Scott, the Common-Riding was celebrated in the old style on the Haugh for the last time' [HAST1865], 'His acceptance of the cornetship he had made conditional upon there being 30 horsemen to accompany him' [AM], 'Mosstroopers in their hunders folleed Chairlie Bell that June, Honoured in nineteen forty-six wae Cornetship o' toon' [MB], 'It's a hunder eer this eer sin their ancester, Geordie Cavers, was the first o' the name teh gaun the Cornetship' [BW1979].

the Cornet's Kirk Parade (thu-kōr-nits-kirk-pu-rād) n. the procession of the Common Riding Principals and their supporters from the Council Chambers to the Kirking. There is a specific order to be followed, with the Cornet first, flanked by his Right- and Left-Hand Men, then the Acting Father, then ex-Cornets, ordered by year of office, then ex-Acting Fathers by year of office, and finally the rest of the supporters. Everyone except for the Principals walk in pairs.

Cornet's lad (kōr-nits-lawd) n. phrase formerly used to describe any of the young men invited to attend the Common-Riding festivities.

the Cornet's Lancers (thu-kōr-nits-lawn-surz) n. piano tune written by T. Tinniswood, as an amalgamation of Common-Riding songs. It was published in Hawick by W. & J. Kennedy in 1896, under the title 'The Cornet's Lancers' Quadrille'.

the Cornet's Lass (thu-kōr-nits-laws) n. partner of the Cornet during the Common Riding. She is selected by the Cornet, and does not have to be from Hawick. Although she does not ride, she plays more of a role in Hawick than in most other Border town festivals. Most importantly, at the Colour Bussing ceremony, she carries in the Flag and ties the ribbons on it, saying 'Provost . . . , I very much appreciate the great honour conferred upon me in being allowed to present this ancient banner and trust you will find it well and truly bussed'. After that she puts the sash on the Cornet to complete his uniform. She also lays the wreath at Hornshole, attends most of the functions, and generally supports the Cornet. She also returns for the next 2 years to support him as Right- and Left-Hand Man. For these 3 years she also helps make all the ribbons that decorate the Principals and their horses, as well as the lads in the gallery, etc. at the Colour Bussing. At the Colour Bussing the Flag is held by the 2 previous Cornet's Lasses as the new Lass tied on the ribbons. At the Ball she partners the Cornets in the Grand March, and wears his sash during the dancing of the Reel. The position only gained importance with the rejuvenation of the Common Riding in the 1880s, when the Colour Bussing became a more ceremonial event. The first known Lasses are from this period, and are recorded as the person who bussed the colour and as the Cornet's Ball partner. It is unclear when the term 'Cornet's Lass' began to be applied. However, in earlier times there was not a clearly defined role, e.g. in 1855 'the young ladies of the town had a manful struggle for the coveted honour of sewing on the first ribbon'. Previous to about 1890 the Lasses would only attend the Moor in an informal capacity, and even then mostly just on the Saturday. The Cornet of 1893 (W.P. Scott) started a tradition of the Cornet presenting his Lass with a bracelet (the design probably being his own). The Lass was first given a modest allowance in 1973, and has been presented with a special brooch at the Colour Bussing since 1957. There was an exhibition of Lasses' memorabilia in the Museum in 1989 – 'We'll pledge his health, his Lass as well and give them our salute' [NM].

the Cornet's Lasses Association (thu-kōr-nits-law-seez-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. the Cornet's Lasses and Acting Mothers Association, also known as the 'Ex-Cornet's Lasses and Ex-Acting Mothers Association'. It supports Common-Riding activities and gives a forum for those who have held these offices to reconnect. It was started in 1954 by Ex-Cornet's Lass Peggy Davidson, with Acting Mothers invited to join in the following year and the name officially changed to include them in 1998. They hold a dinner to celebrate the start of events on Picking Night, presenting badges to the new Cornet's Lass and Acting Mother. In 2014 the association arranged for a commemorative stained-glass window to be made, which is in the Museum.

the Cornet's Lass's Badge (thu-kōr-nits-law-seez-baj) n. badge or brooch presented to the Cornet's Lass each year at the Colour Bussing. The first year this was done was 1957, with each surviving Lass being given a brooch that year.

the Cornet's Lass's Lunch (thu-kōr-nits-law-seez-lunch) n. lunch for the 8 Common-Riding Principals taking place on Kirking Sunday.

the Cornet's Medal (thu-kōr-nits-me-dul) n. gold medal memento presented since 1895 to each cornet at the Dinner on the Friday (already referred to as 'customary' in 1899). It bears the Burgh coat of arms, crossed halberds, oak leaves, Burgh motto, date and Cornet's name. When it was first issued, several of the previous Cornets had Rutherford the Jewellers also make medals for them, and so earlier examples exist than the first one presented. When the original batch (die-stamped from Birmingham) ran out in 1997, Hamish Smith made a hand-made replica, and has done so annually since then (note, it is distinct from the Cornet's Badge).

the Cornet's Pairty (thu-kōr-nits-pār'-ee) n. name sometimes used to refer to the Big Eit.

the Cornet's Races (thu-kōr-nits-rā-seez) n. the races at Hawick Mair that are specifically for horses and riders that have followed the Cornet. Some of these races are also restricted to married or unmarried men. The races were for a long time organised and officiated by members of the Ceremonial Committee. The prizes have often been silver-mounted riding crops, etc.

the Cornet's Reel (thu-kōr-nits-reel) n. another name for the Reel.

the Cornet's Room (thu-kōr-nits-room) n. name used to refer to a side room for entertaining the Cornet's guests during the Ball. Formerly in the Tower Hotel and moving to other venues, the last year there was such a room was 2003. The phrase is also used to describe a private room used by the Cornet's party at other times, e.g. after returning from the Mair on the Friday. This has been located in the Queen's Head and the Angling Club.

the Cornet's Sash (thu-kōr-nits-sawsh) n. crimson silk sash worn by the Cornet during the Common Riding. The origin of the tradition of wearing the sash is unknown. He gets it from his Lass just before the Provost gives him the Flag at the Colour Bussing on the Thursday evening. At midnight during the Ball he gives it to his Lass, who wears it while they dance the Reel, and then returns it to him. A new sash was sent from Nottingham by William Nixon in 1806, which is still preserved. It is possible that this was the first one, and also the beginning of the wearing of a formal uniform of any sort by the Cornet; this is simply unknown. George MacNee presented a new sash in 1898 and in 1959 a new sash was made by hosiery apprentices at the Henderson Tech.

the Cornet's Schottische (thu-kōr-nits-sho-teesh) n. piano tune written by T. Tinniswood, ?.

Cornet's Silver Challenge Cup (kōr-nits-sil-vur-chaw-linj-kup) n. cup presented at the Common-Riding race meeting, for a race run over 6½ furlongs. It is also known as just 'the Cornet's Challenge Cup' and was bought by public subscription in 1888. The original was kept by Mr. Robson of Havelock House in 1892, after winning it 3 times. A new one was then provided by the Ceremonial Committee in 1893, with the stipulation that it would not become the winner's property, even if won 3 times! This cup stands nearly 2 feet high, has the Burgh arms engraved upon it and is topped by a model of the Cornet holding the Flag aloft. It was supplied by Lawson the jeweller. The winner of the cup also received a gold medal.

the Cornet's Stables (thu-kōr-nits-stā-bulz) n. stables used for the horses of the Common-Riding Principals during the main 6 weeks of ride-outs and Common-Riding week. It was situated on Rosebank Road until 1993, moving then to off the Mill Path.

the Cornet's Sweepstakes (thu-kōr-nits-sweep-stāks) n. former race run at the Common Riding as part of the Cornet's Races, from at least 1894.

the Cornet's Tie (thu-kōr-nits-tI) n. neck-tie chosen each year by the Cornet-Elect, and worn by many supporters during Common Riding functions and during the following year. The Cornet gives his input to the design of the tie while he is 'Cornet Elect'. Traditionally it is only revealed in a shop window right after the 'Pickin' and not worn until the Kirking and then not again until the Colour Bussing. Ties go back to the late 19th century, but there is a continuous run from only 1914 onwards. In recent years they have been made by Lochcarron. In 1953 the Cornet reverted to wearing stock instead of a tie during Common-Riding Friday and Saturday, but from 1957 this has been left to the Cornet's choice.

Cornet's Up (kōr-nits-up) n. traditional toast that ends Common-Riding dinners etc. The Cornet, Right- and Left-Hand Men, and all ex-Cornets present stand on their chairs and each sing a verse of 'Teribus', while the rest of the company stand. This happens at the Dinner, as well as at the Overseas Night (but not the Colour Bussing, for example). The Cornet always finishes with 'Peace be thy portion, Hawick for ever! . . . '.

Cornet's Walk (kōr-nits-wawk) n. perambulation by the Cornet and followers around the town after the Colour Bussing. The traditional route starts at the Town Hall after the Proclamation has been read. The Saxhorn Band, Drum and Fife band and Halberdiers lead the Cornet and his followers. Usually the 2 previous Acting Fathers join the current Acting Father on the walk. It proceeds along the High Street, with a stop to tie ribbons on the Horse, then continues along Bridge Street to Princes Street, and then down Wilton Path via the Sandbed to Grape's Close, back to the Sandbed and up to the Loan Old Toll Bar, then via the Kirk Wynd, Slitrig Bank, Old Manse Lane, Kirkstile and back to the Town Hall along the High Street. The precise route has changed over the years. The march is led by the Drums and Fifes and the Saxhorn Band playing alternately. Following the walk many of the children proceed to the Shows. In former times there were two additional walks, one after the Picking, and one after the May hiring fair. Both were discontinued in the 1880s, but the one after the Picking was reinstated later. In 2002 the Walk was tried out before the tying of the ribbons at the horse.

the Corn Exchange (thu-kōrn-iks-chānj) n. built in 1865/6 on the banks of the Slitrig to conduct agricultural business as well as to provide an entertainment venue. The land was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, the decision to build came in 1861, and money was raised by subscription to a private company. In that year W.N. Kennedy read a paper to the Archæological Society about the history of the location. The Duke of Buccleuch contributed £150, this being the money that the Town Council had paid him to purchase outright the customs that he had historically collected from Hawick merchants. The design was by John T. Rochead, and included a large open structure, together with a corner tower and lower adjacent structure. There were many delays in construction, including the collapse of the arch during building work in 1863. The foundation stone was laid in 1865 to great jubilation, with a public holiday, 310 Freemasons in attendance, and a glass 'time capsule' placed in the stone. It served many purposes over the years, but principally as a municipal entertainment complex rather than an agricultural hall. In about 1910 it was acquired for showing 'moving pictures', and was renamed the King's Theatre in 1920. Subsequently called the Odeon, the Classic and then the Marina, it became a bingo hall and then a nightclub, 'Humphrey's'. The building largely burned down in 1992, with only a small part remaining, the rest being turned into a car park. A coat of arms bearing the date 1865 had previously been removed to behind the War Memorial in the Park.

the Corn Laws (thu-kōrn-lawz) n., pl. set of tariffs and trade restrictions passed into law in Britain in the period 1815–46. The first main bill was enacted in 1815, when the price of wheat and other grains was low, with the intention of helping domestic farmers, and particularly rural landowners. This was broadly unpopular in Hawick, especially after the disastrous crops in 1816 and 1817, which drove up the price of domestic grains, causing considerable hardship. The laws also meant less disposable income, which affected the local hosiery and tweed industries. Opposition in Hawick (and elsewhere) was effectively a forerunner of the political turmoil around the later Reform Act. There was a petition to repeal the laws, sent from Hawick to the House of Commons in 1817. Hawick's first Provost was a prominent member of the Anti-Corn Law League, formed in 1837 and his brother James wrote a book about the subject in 1840. Robert Wilson wrote about the situation in his 'History of Hawick' and manufacturer Walter Wilson (brother of James and George) described the local circumstances around the laws in his 1874 talk to the Archæological Society. Bright Street was named after one of the most active anti-Corn Law politicians. The laws were finally abolished in 1846.

the Corn Mill (thu-kōrn-mil) n. Hawick's main mill for grinding corn, built around 1805 and still surviving on the Mill Path. It is a 3-storey building of whinstone with red sandstone dressings, while the adjacent Mill House is 2-storey. The mill was powered by 2 water wheels, using Slitrig Dam, and was the last use of water power in Hawick when discontinued in 1965. Through much of the 20th century it was owned by W. Grieve & Son. It was re-developed in 2002 into housing for older people. It is a grade B listed building. An earlier Corn Mill stood at Mill Port, and was largely swept away in the great flood of 1767. Wood's 1824 map labels this as the 'Flour Mill', with the 'Corn Mill' being a separate building on the modern Allars Crescent.

Cornmill Court (kōrn-mil-kōr') n. housing developed by Eildon Housing in the old Corn Mill building in 2002.

corn-pickle (kōrn-pi-kul) n., poet. a grain or ear of wheat – '... an' his discipels wer ane hungeret, an' begoude till pu' the corn-pickles an' eet' [HSR].

corps (korps) n., arch. a corpse, often treated as a plural – "... the corps were sett in the church ther, ... transported to hes auen hous of Branksholme, quher they remained till 11 day og Junoo, in anno 1634, from quhence they wer solemnly carried to Hauick church' [SB1634], '... marched they from Branxholm to Hawick Church, where, after the funeral-sermon ended, the corps were interred amongst his ancestors' [SB1633].

correck (co-rek) n., arch., poet. to correct – 'Whan thou wi' rebuiks dest correck man for iniquitie ...' [HSR].

corrie (co-ree) n., poet. a hollow between hills – 'To his shiel in the corrie the shepherd has wended – The bleat of his lambkins dies faint on the gale' [Fi], 'And Chamberlain, when hei comes back, Frae hilend glens and corries ...' [JCG], 'There's men that chase the fox on nags, Crawl Hielan' corries efter stags ...' [DH] (occurring in the place names 'Corrie's Shiel' and 'Corrie Sike').

Corrie (ko-ree) n. George (18th/19th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1778, when he was working for James Douglas. His name appears to be 'Corie'. John (d.1917) born in Langholm, he played for Langholm R.F.C. from an early age, moving to Hawick in 1912. He worked at Noble's and played for Hawick R.F.C. as a forward until WWI started. He was called up to the Lancashire Yeomanry in 1914, and kept a war-time diary. Honorably discharged in 1916, he re-enlisted in the Machine Gun Corps, became a tank driver, was promoted to Lance-Corporal and was killed during the taking of Messines Ridge (on what would have been Common-Riding Thursday). His diary was returned to his sweetheart, Lizzie Rutherford, who never married.

Corrie's Shiel (ko-reez-sheel) n. former farmstead in the hills near Hartsgarth, above the Hermitage Water. It is probably the place recorded as 'Carryschelis' on a rental roll c.1376. It could be the same place marked as 'Herusheels' on Blaeu's c.1654 map around the Ralton Burn In 1479 the lands were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh, along with 'Layhalcht' (probably Leahaugh) and Hartsgarth. It was possessed by the Elliots of Redheugh in the 16th century (written 'Carolschelis' in 1479, 'caraschele' in 1489, 'Careschel' in 1526, 'Carriescheill' in 1613, 'Corrischeill' in about 1624 and 'Carriescheill' in 1637).

Corrie Sike (ko-ree-sīk) n. stream that runs north to join the Frostlie Burn near Castleweary, in the headwaters of the Teviot. There was formerly a farmstead here, called Corriesike).

Corriesike (ko-ree-sīk) n. former farmstead by the stream of the same name, in the headwaters of the Teviot. It belonged to Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1561 when rented to Archibald 'Willat', also recorded as 'Arche Ellott'. It was purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620, along with Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and Caerlenrig. It was 'Corrysyke' owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch (along with Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) when sold by William Eliott of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was included in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott of Stobs from his father in 1692 (marked 'Corysyick' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it could be the 'Corrisheuche' recorded in 1494/5, is 'Corresyke' in 1561, 'Corresik' and 'Corresyke' in 1569, transcribed combined with Binks as 'Corisykbinks' in 1687 and 'Corrissykebank' in 1698 and 'Corrysyck' in 1692).

corrup' (ko-rup) v., adj., arch. corrupt – 'Thaye ar corrup, an' speik wicketlie anent oppressione . . . ' [HSR], '. . . but ane corrup trie bringith furth ill frut' [HSR].

Corronett (kōr-ni') n. first recorded spelling of the word 'Cornet', from the 1704 Burgh Records.

corse (kōrs) n., arch. a cross, market cross, wayside cross – '. . . and thairof gert mak opin proclamatioun at the merkat cors of Jedworth . . . ' [SB1500] (in place names, e.g. Corsecleuch, Corse Grain and Shiplaw Corse).

Corsecleuch (kōrs-klooch) n. former farm on the east side of Rule valley, between Bedrule and Fulton, also known as Crosscleugh.

Corsecleuch (kōrs-klooch) n. former lands in the upper Yarrow valleys, near Tibbie Shiel's Inn, now known as 'Crosscleuch'. The lands were assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw and his son Walter in 1513. John Scott in Thirlestane was tenant in 1541, paying £12 yearly. The Scotts were 'kindly tenants' of the lands for about a century, with Robert Scott of Thirlestane purchasing them from Alexander, Lord Home, in 1590 (it is 'Crocecleuch' in 1541; 'Crascleuch' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Corseflat (kōrs-fla') n. name formerly applied to the flat fields in the 'carse' of the river, between Longbaulk Road and the Teviot, in the general area of the playing fields. This could be the 'Corsback' listed among the lands of the Scotts of Crumhaugh in 1696.

Corse Grain (kōrs-grān) n. stream in Craik Forest, at the extreme western edge of Roxburghshire. It leads from Craik Cross Hill to the north, joining the Northope Burn. The name presumably derives from the wayside cross that was formerly on the road there.

Corses (kōr-seez) n. former farm near Ashkirk.

Corse Scott (kōrs-sko') n. John (1756–1840) of Bughtrig, born John Corse, he changed his name after marrying Catherine Scott of Synton. He owned the Synton estate and was proprietor of Synton Mill in the early 19th century. When in India he was in charge of his company's elephants, and contributed elephant skulls to the East India Company museum in 1801. His valet, footman and coachman were listed at Synton on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was listed as owner of Synton and Synton Mill in the Land Tax Rolls of 1803. He was also the Capt. Scott of Synton who commanded one of the 2 local volunteer units that was mobilised at the False Alarm of 1804 and mustered in Hawick. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary (for 3 copies). He was a major heritor of Ashkirk Parish, as recorded in a complaint of 1814 about payment for work done on the Manse. He was a Director of the Royal Bank of Scotland in 1816. Pigot's 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Synton. He and his wife both subscribed to Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1828. He planted about 230 acres of woodland on his estate. His sons were: John (b.1801), who succeeded; Henry; Lt. Col. Alexander (b.1804), of the Bengal Native Infantry; Maj. James (b.1810) of the Bengal Native Infantry; Robert (b.1812); and Edward Williams (b.1820), who also served in India. His daughters included: Helen Eliza (b.1802), who married William Downe Gillon, M.P. for Linlithgow and Falkirk; Catherine (b.1806), who married Edward Binny Glass; and Margaret (b.1808), the youngest, who married David Laird of Strathmartin. John of Synton (b.1801) son of the first Corse Scott of Synton, he was born in Edinburgh. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819 when still younger of Synton. In 1844 he wrote letters to the Duke of Buccleuch relating to the trapping of foxes. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He became a life member of the Hawick Archæological Society in 1862 and donated a stone celt to the Museum in 1864 (found in a square of peat, dug up on Synton Moor). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1881. He married Mary Baptie and was succeeded by his son John. His daughter Jane married James Turnbull, W.S. in 1867. John of Synton (b.1854) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He served in the 7th Dragoon Guards. In about 1874 it is recorded that his curators paid the land tax for Satchells. He became a member of the Jeforest Club in 1882, and was also a member of the Forest Club. He was J.P. for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. In 1880 he married Esther Jane, daughter of Dr. Robson Scott of Ashtrees. His wife died in 1910 and a memorial window was installed in Ashkirk Kirk. He was succeeded by his son John. Capt. John of Synton (d.1888) son of John. He married Eugenia Margaret Camaron Money and they had 3 children. He died at Dharmsala in India, while being 2nd in command of a battalion of Gurkhas. Maj. John Michael of Synton (1882/3–1917) eldest son of John. He fought in WWI and died in Macedonia. His younger brother Alexander also died in 1919 of disease caught during WWI. He was probably father of Violet, who married Herbert Eustace Johnston-Stewart in 1912.

Corson (kōr-sin) n. Rev. George (1789/90–1868) from Burnhead, Dumfriesshire, he became second minister of Allars Kirk in 1820. Following a dispute with owners of the bonds for the church building, he was locked out of his church by some of the congregation (although ultimately supported by the rest). He subsequently resigned in 1824, joined the Established Church, became English Master of Irvine Academy and died at Hillhead, Glasgow. He may have had a son who became minister at Govan. An early photograph of him exists.

Corvie (kor-vee) n. John (18th/19th C.) footman at Wilton Lodge in 1797, when he was working for Lord Napier.

cosie (kō-zee) adj., poet. warm and comfortable – 'Fu' cozie we will seat oursel's – the chumla is fu' wide' [JJ], 'Happit cosy, trig and sweet, Fifty bairns are waur . . . ' [JT], '. . . At our cosie bield and our warm hearthstane' [JT] (there are spelling variants; this was common first in Scots and probably popularised in English through Burns 'To a Mouse').

Cospatric see Gospatric

the Cossack (thu-ko-sawk) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Cosser (ko-sur) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Parkhill in 1717 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is possible that his surname is an error for some more common name. William (18th/19th C.) simpleton from Ettrick, known for his violent nature. A 'Willie Cossar' was what a 'boddle pin' was called in Etttick, apparently because he had met a young woman on Michmoor and picked out both her eyes with such an implement (also written 'Cosser').

cot (ko', kot) n., arch. a cottage, small house – 'And toiling lab'rersm sweating, sought The shelt'ring cot or farm' [JTe], 'In humble cot, and lordly dome, 'Twas silence, loneness all . . . ' [JoHa], 'In some bit cot, were it my lot, I'd spend my days wi' right guid will' [JoHa], 'Oh, were it mine, upon thy bank, Fair stream, in some sweet cot to dwell . . . ' [AD], 'After her husband's death she left Hawick and took a cot house on the Stobs estate . . . ' [WNK], 'Over bien cot an' ha', Soft may the evenings fa' ' [HSR], 'The remote shepherd's cot at Wolfcleuchhead, near the source of the Borthwick, often boasted that its humble walls afforded a safe retreat to the venerable Peden' [JAHM], '. . . Of the wives and mothers that sadly sit Deeply brooding in cot and ha' ' [JBB], '. . . Cotecleuch (ko'-klooch) n. former cottage in Cavers Parish, located just north of West Mains, and close to the modern Kinninghall Cottages (it is 'Cotcleugh' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Cotes (kōts) n. William (16th C.) presented to the Vicarage of Castleton in 1535. His name was written 'Cottis'.

the Cotes (thu-kōts) n. former name for the farms of Little Cote, Muckle Cote, East Cote and West Cote, being part of the Cavers estate on the south bank of the Teviot. This could be the 'with cotiers' listed along with the demesnes of Denholm in a c.1380 document. In 1511 'the one called Cott' is listed as one of the 2 'domain' lands of the Barony of Cavers, and again is one of the two 'mainssis' in 1558, when the liferent was confirmed to Christian Kerr, widow of the former Laird of Cavers. The area was burned by Hertford's men in 1545, perhaps the closest they came to Hawick itself. The 'mains' lands of this name were inherited (along with Ashybank, as the other mains land) by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is 'Cootes' in 1545 and 'the Coat' in 1687 and 1698).

Cotfield (ko'-feeld) n. farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. The Stewarts of Hermiston were owners in the mid-19th century. Someone called Mackintosh was recorded there in 1868. A story is told (by Frank Hogg in 1876) of how once a female beggar was carried in a rough handbarrow from the farm of Huntlaw to here, in the days when beggars were passed from place to place.

Cotlaw see Cottlaw

the Cottage (thu-ko'-eej) n. abbreviated name for the Cottage Hospital.

the Cottage Hospital (thu-ko'-eej-hos-pi'-ul) n. Hawick Cottage Hospital, overlooking Buccleuch Road, built by public subscription, on land gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, and opened by the 6th Duke and Duchess in 1885. The main instigator for the hospital was Dr. J.R. Hamilton, and although there was some early opposition, a series of health lectures were used to raise an initial fund, with a committee formed to gather the rest of the money. The memorial stone was laid with full masonic honours by the Grand Master Mason of Scotland, the Earl of Mar and Kellie in 1884 (a photograph of the event exists). The building was designed by John McLachlan (of Edinburgh), who later designed the hospital in Coldstream; the design has particularly interesting downpipes on the arts-and-crafts style barge-boarded gables. After opening it served the health needs of Hawick for accidents and non-infectious cases, with X-ray and physiotherapy departments added. It also had a dispensary in its earliest years. Patients had to be recommended by a subscriber and doctor, except in the case of emergencies. There were initially 12 beds, but that number soon had to be increased, reaching a maximum of 30. Alexander Inglis and J.P. Alison were both involved with alterations in the early 1900s. The Esmond Elliot wing was open in 1924 (by the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VIII), with construction finished in 1926, and the James Henderson Memorial building (housing an X-ray department) was opened in 1933. The Silver Jubilee in 1935 was marked with several fund-raising events. The hospital was taken over by the National Health Service in 1948. In the 1950s Oakwood House was used as part of the Hospital and a new physiotherapy department was built on the former tennis courts. Major renovations were carried out in 1965/6. D.W. Cameron wrote an article on its first hundered years in 1985. The hospital was run by the Borders Health Board, and from 1987 the majority of surgical cases were transfered to the B.G.H. In the period 1985–9 the community radio station Radio Roxburgh was run out of space there. Minor treatments moved to the Hawick Community Hospital in 2005 and the hospital finally closed in 2007. The Borders College purchased the land and developed their new Hawick Campus at the Buccleuch Street level, opening in 2009. Hospital records are achived for the period 1884–1948. Some items from the hospital are in the Museum collection, including the ceremonial trowel used by the Prince of Wales in 1924.

Cottage Park (ko'-eej-pawrk) n. name for the field at St. Leonard's where the horses are kept while their riders are in the Hut. It is named after the former cottage ('Annie Jolly's') across the road by the old curling pond.

cottar (ko-, kō-tur) n., arch. a tenant who lives in a cottage having only a small amount of land, and works for the landowner at harvest in lieu of rent – 'He and his cottars were in the use to cast their peats in the long moss of Wilton common' [DCW1765], 'The cottar lassie paid nae charge, But Lairdy he paid double' [JRE], '... got his peats and turf ... from the mosses and muir in the Common, as did the other cottars' [C&L], 'It's hard terms at present, of this I am sure, That puir cottar bodies find it ill to endure' [JCG] 'Oh, love dispels the gloominess Of cotter and of king' [WiI], (also formerly written 'coattar', 'cotter' and variants).

Cottlaw (ko'-law) n. former name for lands near Hawick, listed along with Midshiels, Appletreehall and Crawhill in the 16th and 17th century. In 1562/3 it was one of the lands around Chamberlain Newton and Hassendean that the superior Alexander Lord Home tried to remove his 'pretended tenants' from. It may be the same place as 'Courthill' (also called 'Coitlaw'; it is 'Cotlaw' in 1535 and 1562/3, and 'Coitlaw' in 1611).

Cotton's Patent Frame (ko'-inz-pā'-in'-frām) n. knitwear frame patented by William Cotton of Loughborough in 1864. With some modifications over the years it became the main manufacturing machine in Hawick for almost a century. It could knit up to 10,000 loops per minute, and allowed garments to be shaped automatically.

cottoush (ko-toosh) n., arch. a loose-fitting jacket formerly worn by women at work – 'A short gown, jerkenet, cottoush' [JoHo] (see also cartoosh and Sibbie Cartoosh).

couch (kowch) v., arch. to lower a spear to a resting or attacking position – 'For a bolder or a sterner man Had never couched a spear' [??].

couch (kowch) n., poet. a cradle cloth – '... Whose croup and cantle could scarce be seen For a couch's spoil and its silken sheen' [WHO].

could (kood) v. auxiliary verb, more heavily used locally and also in some no-English senses, been able to – ' Thay haena cuid gaete eane', they have not been able to get one' [JAHM], ' 'Aha!', think A, 'it'll no hev cood gar ends meet this bittie back, nih, A'se warran!' ' [ECS], past or conditional tense – 'If wey hæd cuid cum' [JAHM], 'Hei wadna cood get' [GW], also use as a double modal with 'might' – 'Yince an A'd wun there, A thocht, A micht mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick' [ECS] (also spelled 'cood' and 'cuid').

coulden (koo-din, -d'n) contr. couldn't, could not – 'coulden ee jist forget aa aboot eet?', 'hei could be Cornet, coulden 'ei?' (note the pronunciation with the swallowed second syllable; see also shoulden and wudden; this form is used inquiringly and always precedes the pronoun, cf. couldni).

coulden've (koo-di-nuv, kood-'n-uv) contr. couldn't've, could not have (also couldni've).

couldni (kood-ni, -na) contr. couldn't, could not – 'ee couldni gie's a lift hame, could ee?', '... the logistics o sendin a chair frae London in the mid 18th Century couldna hev been easy' [IWL], 'O! we hae been amang the bowers that winter cou'dna bare ...' [JoHa], 'I couldna' thole the wa's ower-grown, And what is gane forgot' [JEDM], 'There couldna be a fairer sicht on Forth or Clyde or Tay, But my heart is homing south for the Border' [JYH], 'Ee couldna afford tae fling owts oot ...' [AY] (also spelled 'couldna' etc.; this form always follows the pronoun, cf. coulden).

couldni've (kood-ni-uv, -niv) contr. couldn't've, could not have (also coulden've).

coulter (kool-tur) n. a cutting-blade on a plough – 'Assaults were common; the weapons ... 'ane cultar irne' ...' [JW1649], 'Paid James Gledstains for making ye coulter 2 14 0' [BR1735] (also cooter).

Coulter (kool-tur) n. local nickname, probably of the 19th century – 'Dan Narry and Kit i' the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O'clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock' [HI] (perhaps related to 'Coulter's Candy' or to a 'cooter', i.e. a blade of a ploughshare or a big nose).

Coulter (kool-tur) n. Francis (1771–1846) from the Hawick area, he may be the son of Walter 'Coltart' and Betty Rae who was baptised at Harden Burnfoot in 1771. He married Nancy Glendinning (b.1771). Their children were: Isabella (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800); Agnes (b.1802), who married James Miller; Walter (b.1804); Mary (b.1806); James (b.1808); Ellen (b.1810); David (b.1813); and William (b.1817). In about 1800 the family emigrated to Albany, then Stamford and finally Bovina, Delaware County, New York. His grandson James A. was born in Bovina in 1834. The road on which the family lived was called Coulter Brook (see also Coltart).

Coulter's Candy (kool-turz-kawn-dee) n. confection formerly made by Robert Coltart, who was based in the Melrose and Galashiels areas. He travelled around selling his wares at fairs and other events throughout the south of Scotland. The candy was aniseed-flavoured, but the recipe was lost on Coltart's death in 1890. He would also sing a jingle as a form of advertisement, which he is said to have been composed himself – 'Ally bally, ally bally bee, Sittin' on yer mammy's knee, Greetin' for anither bawbee, Tae buy some Coulter's Candy' [T].

Coulter Sike (kool-tur-sīk) n. small stream on the north-west side of Newcastleton. It flows roughly southwards to join the Liddel Water.

the Countess of Minto (thu-kown-tes-ov-min-tō) n. 265 ton barque built at Whitby in 1839, which sank off Macquarrie Island (between Tasmania and Antarctica) in 1851 while collecting guano.

couper (kow-, koo-pur) n., arch. a dealer in horses or cattle – '... hearing the complaints of quirky horse coupers, redressing the wrongs of the oppressed, and generally acting as terror ro evil doers' [RM].

couple (ku-pul) n., arch. one of the sloping rafters that form 2 sides of a triangle to hold up a roof – '... an paraffin lamps hangin frae the couples or hangin frae the beams ... the old Scotch word wis the couples' [TH], 'Went down to Newmill ... and inspected the byre roof ... it will want two or three couples in the old kiln' [RGr], 'She describes it as a peculiarly rude erection, the cupples of which seemed to rest upon the ground; the space where the walls should have been, seeming to be supplied by turfs filled up under the cupples' [HAST1875] (also written 'cupple').

Courthill (kōr'-hil) n. farm and surrounding area, a couple of miles north-east of Hawick, between Appletreehall and Hornshole. James Turnbull was recorded as a resident there in 1770. It was the home of Thomas Usher and Isobel Pott from 1794, originally as tenants, and passed through their descendants to the present day. John Oliver was a servant there in 1797, Thomas Hutton in 1799, John Turnbull in at least 1799–1801 and William Douglas in 1801. There are fairly complete farming records dating back over 200 years (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Court Hill (kōr'-hil) n. hill reaching 586 ft (179 m), about 1/4 mile (400 m) south-west of Courthill farm, commanding a wide view of the surrounding countryside. The summit contains remains of a hill-fort, mutilated by quarrying and a cart track. It is about 400 ft (120 m) by 200 ft (60 m), with a probable entrance on the east and consists of a double rampart. The interior contains several hut circles and apparent courts with surrounding banks. It is unclear whether the remains represent settlement at one epoch or over a range of different times (there is no obvious connection here with the site of an ancient court, and hence the origin of the name is unclear; it us not known how old the name is).

Court Knowe (kōr'-now) n. name for a small rise just to the north-east of Cavers House, with another called Castle Knowe nearby. Whether the name was connected with a courtyard or a legal court is unknown.

Courtney (kōr'-nee) n. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) son of Rev. David and Margaret MacCall. Graduating from Edinburgh University in 1636, he became minister of Mertoun in 1640 and was recorded as minister at Kirkandrews (in England) in 1661. In 1663 he became the first new minister of Ashkirk after the re-establishment of Episcopacy (and after the removal of Robert Cunningham). He was still minister in 1667, but gone before Archibald Inglis arrived in 1675. He may have also remained minister of Mertoun 1663–67, and held a sasine of the 'kirklands of Home' in 1668. He married Barbara Hamilton (also written 'Courtie').

Court o Session (kōr'-ō-se-shin) n. Scotland's supreme civil court, based in Edinburgh, also known as the College of Justice, consisting of an Outer House and an Inner House that hears appeals. It was the national court thatheard the case of the division of the Common in 1766.

Cousaldsyid (cow-sald-sīd) n. house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, just south of Braidhaugh, the modern identification of which is unclear.

coushed (kooshd) adj., arch. ?? – 'A'm gettin' aboot sick o'd, this Canadian wunter's a coushed' [JEDM].

Cousin (ku-zin) n. Margaret (15th C.) daughter of William (who must have been an important landowner, but no identification has been made). She was wife of Simon Routledge according to a charter of 1447 in which the 'Cusinglands', which were her dowry lands, were conveyed by her husband to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Her son and heir is stated to be Robert Scott, which means she must have previously been married to a Scott; it is not impossible that she was widow of Robert Scott of Rankilburn, making her step-mother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, with her son perhaps being Robert of Haining (but this is all speculation). In the accompanying sasine she is stated to be daughter and heir of William 'Cusyne'. Her name is given as 'Mergareta Cusing' and 'Mergrete Cusyne' (formerly written 'Cusyne', 'Cusing' and variants).

cousing (kow-zing) n., arch. a cousin, kinsman – 'I, Schir Walter Scott of Branxhelme, knycht, be the tennour heirof, grantis me weill content, satisfeit and payit be my cousing, Robert Scott . . . ' [SB1569], 'My worthy Cusing, I must to thee commend, Him who of his Talent surely has made ten' [CWS] (also written 'cusing'; cf. the later cuisin).

Cousinlands (ku-zinlandz) n. lands referred to in a charter of 1447, when they were sold to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch by Margaret Cousin. The lands were referred to explicitly as being commonly called 'Cusingisland, in the town and territoty of Brankishame, on the north part thereof, in the barony of Hawick'. The 'precept' between Margaret Cousin and her son Robert Scott was signed in Hawick. It is possible this is the same as the house marked 'Cousaldsyid' on Blaeu's c.1654 map (it is 'Cusingisland' and 'Cusynlandis' in 1447).

Couston (kow-stin) n. James (d.1679) from Southdean Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge.

cout (koo', kow') n., arch. a young horse, colt, a mildly contemptuous term for a young man – '. . . an' sittin' upon ane ass, an' ane cowt, the fol o' ane ass' [HSR], 'He yet might keep the causa' croon Alang wi' decent folk – A raggit cout a race has won, And sae might little Jock' [JT], 'The eddy, in which he perished, is still called the Cout of Keeldar's Pool . . . and the popular epithet of Cout . . . is expressive of his strength, stture, and activity' [JL] (also spelled 'cowt').

the Coutard Fund (thu-koo-tur'-fund) n. fund set up in the mid-19th century to help poor residents of Hobkirk Parish. It was established form a £1,000 bequest by John and William Dalgleish in memory of their mother Elizabeth Dalgleish, nee Coutard.

coutcher (kow-chur) n., arch. a base fellow, someone who lies down – '... who ansuerit the deponner that Gib wes bot a feible coutcher and wald never do the turne' [SB1624].

couter (koo-tur) n., arch. the blade of a plough – '... Auld pleughs that wanted couters, new wheels that wanted rings' [JT], a humorous name for the nose – '... And her coutter phiz it cluve the aire A yirde afore the brocke' [JTe].

couthie see couthy

couthily (koo-thu-lee) adv., arch., poet. pleasantly, agreeably – 'Inspir'd by love, inspir'd by drink, How couthily they blether' [JoHa], 'Aye, they tell it still when the tale they raise, Hoo the pair lived couthily aa their days' [WL].

couthy (koo-thee) adj., arch., poet. pleasant, affable, agreeable, kind – 'The mistress o' Bortugh cam' ben, Aye blinking sae couthy and canny' [ES], '... An' try to rouse her up, till cantie She sing some couthie, kindly rantie' [JoHa], 'The sternies, blinkin' bonnie, tell the couthie hour is nigh' [JoHa], '... couthie an' blythesume sall ye be, an' weel sall it be wi' ye' [HSR], '... Wi' a couthie bit smile, and a kind word to a'' [JT], '... And to our hearts there's none so dear As couthie, kind September' [TCh], 'Twa had rase high in the warld's een, But ane was puir: They cracked o' wisdom whaur they sat Sae couthie there' [WL], snug, comfortable – 'The maist feck o the hooses cooer coothy on the tae hand ...' [ECS] (also spelled 'couthie' and 'coothy').

Coutlair Knowe (koo'-lār-now) n. hill in Craik Forest, about midway between Craik and Buccleuch. It reaches a height of 418 m and has a triangulation pillar on top.

Cout o Kielder (koot-ō-keel-dur) n. ballad about the young Laird of Kielder, particularly known from the version collected by John Leyden. In the story Kielder rode to Liddesdale and was invited into Hermitage Castle by Sir William de Soulis, who then tried to kill him. Kielder escaped, but was drowned in 'the foamy linn', i.e. a pool in the nearby river. This happened about 1290, and he is supposedly buried in a low mound at Hermitage Chapel – 'And now young Keelder reached the stream Above the foaming linn; The Border lances round him gleam And force the warrior in' [JL], 'If all be true which records tell, The 'Cout' of Kielder here is laid; In that deep pool, 'tis said, he fell, And it we wond'ringly surveyed' [TCh] (see cout).

Cout's Pool (koots-pool) n. pool in the Hermitage Water, just upstream of where the bridge crosses for access to Hermitage Castle. It is here that legend says 'Cout o Kielder' was drowned.

Coutstane Linns (koot-staān-linz) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Wilson's Pike and running westwards to become the Harden Burn.

the Covenant (thu-ku-vin-an') n. an artcicle of faith, particularly referring to the 'Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union for the maintenance and defence of Presbyterianism' (or National Covenant) of 1638 and the 'Solemn League and Covenant' of 1643. The principle was to bind the Scottish nation together in defence of its religion against the interference of the King. The 1638 Covenant was signed in Hawick by Sir William Douglas of Cavers, Sheriff of Teviotdale, and essentially all the local Lairds, Bailies and Ministers; this was a verbatim copy of the one signed in Greyfriars' Churchyard, and may already have been signed by several noblemen before it reached Hawick. The signing of this document was taken very seriously at the time and it was probably read at each of the local churches, with the congregations swearing to uphold it (the event in Ashkirk being thus recorded); however, by the 1660s those clinging to their principles were outlawed, heavy fines were imposed on local nobles, ministers were ousted, and preaching by them declared illegal. Hawick officially repudiated the 'Solemn League and Covenant' in 1681, the tailors and weavers took the 'Test' in 1684 and others followed, but Covenanting feelings continued to be strong among some. The Covenant signed in Hawick was held by the Douglases of Cavers, but eventually acquired by the Museum. The document is on sheepskin, measuring 36 inches by 30 inches. A facsimile was donated to the Museum by John Davidson in 1861.

Covenanter (kuv-in-an'-er) n. an adherent of the National Covenant of 1638 or the Solemn Legue and Covenant of 1643, which established the organisational structure and principles of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland (note that formerly the accent was on the 3rd syllable).

the Covenanters (thu-kuv-in-an'-erz) n. in the 17th century a group of Presbyterians who supported one of two agreements intended to defend and extend their religion against the rules of Charles I, and in particular the Anglican-type prayer-books he attempted to introduce in 1637. Almost all prominent men of Teviotdale signed the Covenant of 1638. It led to great complications in Scotland's relationship with England during the English Civil War, and also fervent passions, culminating in the massacre at Philiphaugh. Hawick collected monies for the Covenanter's army in 1639 and 1641 and local soldiers were recruited through the 1640s. Sheriff Douglas raised a strong force in Teviotdale to fight for the Covenanters' ideals, eventually fighting alongside Cromwell's Ironsides, with several locals being at Aulderne in 1645. When Charles II assumed the throne, lay patronage returned, the Covenant was declared treasonous, and the tide turned. The remaining Covenanters had to hold secret meetings in the countryside, and many people were persecuted and died fighting for their beliefs. The Rule valley was a local Covenanting centre in the mid-to-late 17th century, and a band of fugitive Covenanters, led by Turnbull of Standlaw, successfully laid siege to Drumlanrig's Tower in 1679. Other local landowners who were sympathetic to the Covenanting cause were Scott of Harden and Douglas of Cavers. Preachers William Veitch and George Bryson hid in a remote part of Southdean Parish. After their disastrous defeat at Bothwell Brig in 1679 many local men were captured, including about a dozen who perished when the ship they were being transported to America in wrecked off the Orkneys; there is a monument to this disaster near the spot the ship went down at Deerness. Into the early 1680s proclamations were fixed to the town market crosses bearing the names of those accused of frequenting Conventicles; this was the 'Killing Times', when attending field conventicles was punishable by death. The Town Council repudiated the Solemn League and Covenant in 1681 and a long list of fugitives was declared in 1684, including many from Hawick and neighbouring areas. The tailors and weavers in Hawick petitioned the Council to let them take 'the test' (against Covenants, etc.) en masse, which they did in 1684. In the following year 9 local farmers took the same 'test' in Hawick, in the presence of Sir William Eliott of Stobs, the Earl of Lothian's Lieutenant. The number of followers (and hence harsh punishments) declined in about 1686 after the death of Alexander Peden. And the whole situation turned around again with the Revolution of 1689/90 and the re-establishment of Presbyterianism. Many of the Episcopalian ministers were ousted and those surving Presbyterians who had been ejected in the 1660s were restored. The Cameronians continued for a while as the lingering extremists of the Covenanter days (including a group around Denholm) and would ultimately join the Free Kirk. The history of the period was later romanticised, partly due to the work of Hawick-born Robert Paterson, immortalised by Sir Walter Scott as 'Old Mortality', who travelled the country erecting graves to Covenanter martyrs.

cover points (ku-vur-points) n., pl. set of 6 or 8 needles on a knitting frame that transfer the selvedge stitches to fashion part of the garment either narrower or wider (cf. tickler).

covers (ku-vurz) n., pl. bedsheets, blankets – 'when it was thunnerin ootside, A pulled the covers ower ma heid'.

covert (kō-ver') n., poet. a hiding place, concealment – 'O quit not covert of the wall – Avoid the range, my May!' [JTe].

covet (kō-vi') v. to covet (note pronunciation).

covey (kō-vee) n., arch. a covey, flock of birds (note pronunciation).

cow (kow) v., arch. to upbraid, scold, snub, surpass – 'For either gimmer, hogg, or croak, By George, I'll g'ye a cowin' ' [JoHa], 'They'd cowed the bauldest o' the toon That lifted hand to pit me doon' [AD], 'That cows th gowan = that surpasses all belief' [GW].

cow aa (kow-aw) v., arch. to surpass, beat everything – 'Hech sirs, what science now has brought to pass, And what cowes a' – a Palace built o' glass' [AD??], 'That cows a' " [GW] (also written 'cowe aa').

the Cow (thu-kow) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century. There was also separately Robbie the Cow and Babbie the Cow.

Cowan (kow-in) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1717 for tailor Robert Chisholme. Andrew (18th/19th C.) journeyman smith recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Andrew (1768/9–1848) shepherd at Northhouse. His wife was Hannah Gillespie (1778/9–1849). They are buried at Teviothead. Rev. Andrew Hutton (1820–85) born in Kilmarnock, he studied at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was licensed in Cupar in 1852 and assisted in Regent Square, London. He was ordained at Denholm Free Kirk in 1844, but left for Troon in 1846. He married Catherine Bedingfield Collyer in 1848 and they had 3 daughters. He died in Troon. Elliot (b.1825) son of William and Anne Henderson, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a hosiery worker in Hawick, but married Jeanie Hunter and took over his father-in-law's farming activities up the Loan. The family were living at about 5 Drumlanrig Place in 1861, when he was a warehouseman. He married Jane Hunter in 1853 and they celebrated their golden wedding in 1903. Their children included: William (b.1853), who probably died young; Thomas (b.1856), who carried on the farming; Margaret Dodds (b.1859); Annie Henderson (b.1861), who married John Smith, plumber and Cornet; Mary (b.1864); Janet (b.1867); and Agnes (b.1870). His grandson Elliot Cowan Smith was named after him. James (16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1580 when he a witness to Hector Turnbull of Belses giving sasine to his daughter Katherine. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1703) and Elspeth (b.1705). James (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'indweller in —uch' in 1700 when he was imprisoned in the Tolbooth after spending 10 days in the stocks. This was for stealing 2 sheep from Robert Scott in Selkirk. Sentence was passed by Gideon Scott of Falnash, acting as Regal Bailie for the Duchess of Buccleuch, and he was banished not only from Hawick, but from 'the bounds of sd. regalitie and all other bounds of royaltie, baronie and other lands qrsomever wtin the kingdom pertaining to the sd. Duchess'. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1701 John Scott, 'of Whytyetts' was fined for not prosecuting litster John Scott for assaulting him. In 1707 he was witness for a baptism for fellow tailor John Hardie. He was recorded in 1724 being paid 'for ribbons to the race, mell, and calk'; given that this was in late May, it seems likely that it was connected with the Common Riding, although the meaning of 'mell' (perhaps a mallet given as a booby-prize) and 'calk' (perhaps chalk used for marking for races) are obscure. He married Marion Falsyde in 1706 and their children included: Margaret (b.1705), born in 'forn.'; John (b.1707); and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1705 were Henry Orrock and merchant James Weens and in 1707 were glover John Scott and John Hardie. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Swan in Hawick in 1695. He could also be the tailor who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1694 as a result of volunteering to be one of the Militia men for the Burgh. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was herd at East Burnfoot (on Ale) from at least 1715 until 1722. He was herd at Drinkstone 1723–26 and then became ill and his family dispersed. However, he must have recovered because he was herd at Salenside in the years 1739–42, then moving to East Burnfoot. His children included William (b.1715) and at least one other son. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded in Hoscote in 1733 and Deanburnhaugh in 1737. He married Margaret Clerk in 1728 and their children included: William (b.1729); Jean (b.1731); Isobel (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); William (b.1738); and Elizabeth (b.1740). James (1861–1924) son of James and Alison Lees, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a stonemason. He married Janet (1863–1947), daughter of James Cavers; she died in Hawick. Their children were: James (b.1886); Jane (b.1888); Frank (1890–1917), who served with the K.O.S.B. and died in Palestine; and Alice (b.1889). John (18th C.) married Janet Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1651. John (17th/18th C.) Burgh Officer of Hawick recorded in 1723. That year he was given money by the Session because he was 'at present labouring under a sad and severe sickness'. He may have been the John born in Hawick in 1670 to Thomas and Margaret Waugh. John (18th C.) recorded 'in Guildiesgreen' in 1765 when he was among the men selected to perambulate Wilton Common. It is unclear where he lived. John (18th C.) part of the group of 3 men and 1 woman who were jailed in Edinburgh for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. He was surely related to William, who was also imprisoned. The group were soon released. John (18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1773. Katherine (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1765 when her daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Margaret (1801–62) resident of Newcastleton, son of William and Alison Hardy. She married Walter Armstrong (1800–34), who was a mason in Castleton, son of mason John and Isabella Marshall. She was a 'Widow & Teacher' on North Hermitage Street in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as a mason's widow, receiving parish relief. Mary (18th/19th C.) resident of Borthaugh in Roberton Parish. Her son Robert (b.1806) was baptised in Roberton in 1808, with 'the mother being Sponcer'. It is possible she was the Mary, daughter of Robert, baptised in 1765. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded at the 1623 Circuit Court when Simon Wilson (Priesthaugh), John Martin (Branxholme Town) and William Cowan (Craik, his brother) were surety for him. He was described as 'Hob Cowane in Ailmure'. Robert (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with fellow wrights John Tudhope and James Boyd, to examine the sled that John Barrie claimed had been stolen from him by George Renwick. Perhaps the same Robert was fined in 1688 for allowing his horse to graze in 'Westport's corne'. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably also the Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He is probably the wright who was fined in 1700 for 'breach of the fair, in throwing of ane stoupe full of wine, and striking at William Aitkin'. In 1710 he was witness for a baptism for wright Andrew Winthrope. In 1711, along with John Boyd, he was fined for being found in an alehouse on the Sabbath. He could be the Robert who married Helen Fowler and whose children born in Hawick included Bessie (b.1679), John (b.1681), Robert (b.1686) and Helen (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were 'cordiner' John Scott and tailor Walter Gledstains. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms for James Brydon and William Scott in 1676, John Glendinning in 1678 and for taylor John Binnie and for Thomas Turnbull in 1685. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains, where he was recorded in 1710 and 1716. He is probably the Robert who was married in Roberton in 1702. His children included: Bessie (b.1702); Adam (b.1704); Thomas (b.1706); John (b.1716); and Helen (b.1719). He could be the Robert from Roberton Parish who paid for the use of the Wilton mortcloth in 1705. Robert (b.1696/7) resident of Wilton Parish. He was 'the late Walter Scott of Harden's riding servant, while he was laird of Whitfield, and lived at Harden; that was when he was about 12 or 14 years old. In about 1708 he was a servant to James Murray, herd in Whitfield; he recalled a dispute then over turf cut in the 'headroom' of Whitfield for the use of the Laird of Langlands and these were burned at the instruction of the Laird of Whitfield. He moved to Borthaugh in 1714 and was there until at least 1764. He was married in 1718, with no wife's name recorded. Perhaps the same Robert also married in Wilton in 1715, also with no wife's name given. He is probably the Robert who was married to Marion Scott and living at Borthaugh in 1724 and 1732. Their children included: Margaret (b.1720); Jean (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); an unnamed son (b.1728); Robert (b.1730); and John (b.1732). The witnesses in 1724 were William Turnbull and James Scott; in 1724 he also witnessed a baptism for James Scott at Borthaugh. The witnesses in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell at Borthaugh. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Scott in Whitfield in 1741. He was probably the Robert who was 'in Borthaugh' in 1764 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common; he also gave evidence regarding the former uses of the common. He recalled the event in his youth when he was with Walter Scott of Harden and saw timber stacked on Wilton Common, intended for a herd's house. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1742. His children included: Margaret (b.1740); Robert (b.1742); Gilbert (b.1746); Jean (b.1748); and Agnes (b.1755). Robert (18th C.) resident of Borthaugh. He may have been related to the earlier Robert who was at Borthaugh. He married Janet Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1757 and their children included: Robert (b.1758), Janet (b.1761); William (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); Robert (b.1768); Helen (b.1770); John (b.1772); James (b.1775); and Thomas (b.1778). The witnesses in 1758 were John Scott and Walter Ker and in 1770 were John 'Matthewson' and Robert Ormiston. Perhaps the same Robert was farmer at Calaburn in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Waugh and their children included: Margaret (b.1671); Thomas (b.1679); Jane (b.1681); Marie (b.1684); and Thomas (again, b.1685). The witnesses in 1671 were James Thorbrand and John Cowan. It is possible he was the Thomas 'couine' who witnessed baptisms in 1687 in Hassendean for Robert Stewart and for William Cairncross. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Anna (b.1696) and Elizabeth (b.1707). Janet (b.1705), with no mother's name given, may also have been his child. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Grieve and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1706. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1709 he was a gardener at Todrig. His children included Thomas (b.1709). He is probably the same as the Thomas who married either Bessie Scott or Elspeth Grieve. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he (along with Walter Cook, gardener at Branxholme) witnessed a baptism for gardener John Kyle. He also witnessed a baptism for gardener John Storie in about 1765. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant to William Pringle at Bedrule according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1767 he married Jane Scott, from Hawick Parish. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) from Craik, he stood as caution for his brother Robert ('Hob') in 1623, along with 3 men from Priesthaugh and the Branxholme area. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Telfer and their children included William (b.1690) and Isobel (b.1693). The witnesses in 1690 were John Scott and Andrew .... William (d.c.1706) herd in Southfield. He married Marion 'Bleak'. He was already deceased when his daughter Agnes was baptised in 1706. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. He could be the William listed at Whitchesters among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Hawick Parish. He may have been son of the earlier William. In 1713 he was herd in Nether Southfield when his son Thomas was baptised, with witnesses John and Walter Scott, tenants in Whitchesters. William (18th C.) resident at Parkhill in 1743 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. Helen (b.1740) and Margaret (b.1746) were probably his daughters. William (b.1715) son of James, he was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was herd at Overhall in 1727, then farm servant at Mervinslaw 1728–30, Burnfoot 1731–32, Shielswood 1734–38, Salenside 1739–42 and Easter Burnfoot 1742–46. He was resident of Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1764 when he was one of the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common; he gave evidence regardinghis recollections of the use of Wilton Common and stated he was then 48 years old. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Along with John and 2 others he was imprisoned in Edinburgh for opposing the ordination of Simon Haliburton as the new minister in 1751. The group were soon released and returned to Liddesdale. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Anne (also known as Agnes) Henderson. Their children included: John (b.1812); Francis (b.1815); Margaret (b.1816); Walter (b.1818); William (b.1821); George (b.1824); and Elliot (b.1825). He is probably the William, son of John and Mary Robson born in Castleton in 1786. He appears to have been deceased before the 1841 census. He could be the William who was shepherd at Kershope on a list of heads of households in 1835–41 (also formerly 'Couan' and 'Coine').

Cow Andrew (kow-an-droo) n. nickname for someone in the early 19th century.

Cowanlaw (kow-in-law) n. former farm in Ettrick. In 1541 it was 'occupiit be the said William Scott into Tuschelaw, payand thairfore viij libris'. It is unclear exactly where this was.

Craggs (kragz) n. farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, also known as 'Lilliesleaf Craggs'. It lies just to the east of the village. William Gray was there on the 1797 Horse Tax rolls and also his son John in 1801. James Alexander was farmer there in 1841 and Archibald Brown in the 1850s and 60s.

Craggy Squair Moss (kra-gee-skwār-mos) n. former name for a boggy area to the west of Woolaw Moss, draining into the Woo Burn. It is marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common (the meaning of the name is obscure, but could be 'craggy swire moss').

Craggy Wells (kra-gee-welz) n. former name for several springs to the north-west of Coldhouse, feeding into the Stinting Burn. They are marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common and the description of the boundary of the Common gives the name as 'Craigiewell' and 'described the march from a pit and stake on the Craigiewellhead' (see also the Craigie Well).

Cragwood (krag-wood) n. former place name that was once home of a branch of the Turnbulls. In 1534 it was'Cragwod in water off roul' when Rlizabeth Ker, wife of John Waugh of Heap renounced her claims to part of Heap and also these lands in exchange foe annual payments. In a 1540 list of Scottish rebels who had fled to England 3 sons of 'Cragwode' are mentioned, namely 'Pate', 'Hodghe' and 'Ade'. We might speculate that 'Cragwode' himself was also a Peter. They were listed with Turnbulls from Catlee, and so they may also have been from the upper Rulewater.

the Craggy Burn (thu-kraw-gee-burn) n. name sometimes used for a stream near Hawick Mossbrow. It was mentioned in descriptions of the Common given in the court case brought in 1767, but it's precise location is unclear.

craig (krāg) n., arch., poet. a crag, cliff, projecting rock, rocky ground – 'There levels low, here craigs sublimely wild, Round which the winds, untained, gamboling play' [JoHa], 'O they may sing o' ither lands Wi' craig and wild ravine' [JEDM] (the word is used in local place names, e.g. Alemoor Craig, Burnt Craigs, Craig Hill, Dean Craig, Minto Craigend and Skelfhill Craig).

craig (krāg) n., arch., poet. neck, throat – 'An' in they gae to weet their craigs, Wi' porter, yill or whusky' [JoHa], 'It's all away down Craig's Close; i.e. swallowed' [JAHM], 'A new guid-son is a thoucht mair cheery Than thrawin' craigs i' the mornin' eerie' [WL] (also craigie; from Dutch).

Craig (krāg) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for James Main (who may have been related to his wife). In 1681 his son William was baptised in Roberton, with no mother's name given and witnesses Thomas Scott and John . . . . He married Isobel 'Maine' and their children included: Adam (b.1683), James (b.1687) and Bessie (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were William Martin and Thomas Robson, in 1687 were Dand Elliot and James Scott and in 1688 were John Hardie and James Main. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at 'Falsecastle' (presumably Fastcastle) in 1717. His children included: Isabel (b.1712); Bessie (b.1714); Margaret (b.1716); and Bessie (again, b.1717). Rev. Allan McDonald Craig (1892–1963) born in Mortherwell, son of Daniel and Margaret MacDonald. He was educated in Carluke, at Dalziel High School, at Glasgow University (where he graduated M.A. in 1913) and Glasgow College (where he received a Diploma in theology in 1919). He served with H.M. Forces during WWI. He was licensed to preach in 1919, became assistant at Stirling North that same year and was ordained as minister of Waterbeck in 1920. In 1925 he moved to Comrie St. Kessog's. In 1931 he became minister of Castleton Parish Kirk. From 1946 he became minister of the united charge, including the congregation of old Castleton Kirk. In the 1950s he wrote papers on the medical history of Castleton Parish in the 18th century. He retied as minister in 1960. In 1920 he married Jane Tweedie Forsyth (b.1891), who was the first President of the Parish Guild, formed in 1932. Their children were: Neil Douglas (b.1922); and Isobel Jean (b.1929). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name is written 'Craige'. Rev. Archibald (1781–1876) minister of Bedrule. Born at Coldingham, son of a farm labourer (who was apparently living near Prestonpans the day of the battle of 1745). It was said that he almost died in the harsh winter of 1794. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1810, and there became an expert in Greek. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Chirnside in 1812 and became assistant to Rev. William Brown at Bedrule in 1832, taking over in 1836 and remaining until he died. He was recorded living in Bedrule Manse in 1851, along with a house servant. He read in several European languages, as well as ancient Hebrew. He published 'A Monody to the Memory of Joseph Hume, Advocate' (1819), 'Introduction to Greek Accentuation' (1832), and a translation of 'Apollonius Rhodius' (1876). He also wrote some other verse, for example 'The Piper of Coldingham'. In addition he kept a diary, some excerpts of which were published in an article by Rev. John Thomson in 1877. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account; this contains much useful information c.1837, including a brief discussion of dialect, with some examples, ending with the condescending statement that 'these peculiarities of dialect are, of course, generally confined to the lower ranks of the people, – although, such is the effect of habit and imitation, you hear sometimes people, from whose education and rank you might augur differently, utter the same harsh and barbarous sounds'. He was known for his generally conservative views, including on locally hot topics, such as enfranchisement. He insisted on being driven to Jedburgh to vote for the Conservative candidate in the election of 1874. He lived to the age of 95, being able to clearly recall incidents from his early life until the end. He died unmarried in the Manse and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (1832–1919) proprietor of Craig the chemists at 17 High Street. He was born in Ayrshire, served an apprenticeship as a chemist in Castle Douglas and studied at the Apothecaries Hall in Glasgow. He moved to Hawick in 1855, setting up his chemist's shop on the High Street. He was a lodger living at 6 Cross Wynd in 1961. He was Honorary Divisional Secretary of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society. He was also an Elder at Allars Kirk for 45 years. From about 1870 he produced aerated waters from premises at 22 Buccleuch Street, and these were sold in his own shop, as well as many other local locations. Bottles still exist for 'Craig's Stone Ginger'. A 'codd bottle' for lemonade is in the Museum, labelled 'Lemonade, J. Craig, Chemist, Hawick'. He married Margaret Graham Notman and their son 'R.S.' was a prominent local lawyer. Joseph (b.1834/5) born in Southdean Parish. In 1861 he was a farm steward at Dolphinston. He married Jessie Mather Maben (daughter of farmer William Maben) and their children included Robert (b.1861). Mrs. M.C. (19th/20th C.) writer of 'Enclosures, with special reference to a Border Survival', published in Hawick in 1896. This was based on a lecture she gave to the Archæological Society and includes a particular theory of the origin and purpose of the Catrail. She was also one of the people present at the excavation of the cairn at Belvedere on the Cavers estate in 1895. Margaret Graham nee Notman (1839–1914) daughter of William Notman and Joan Helm. She was born in Hawick and was a teacher there, living at 17 Allars Crescent in 1861. She married pharmacist and aerated waters manufacturer John Craig. She was a member of Hawick School Board. Mary W. from Stow, she wrote 'The Border Burnings – The Story of the Witchcraft Trials of the Scottish Borders' (2008). Matthew Robert Smith 'R.S.' (1867–1921) Hawick-based advocate, with premises at 22 Buccleuch Street. He was son of chemist and aerated waters manufacturer John. He was writer of the words for 'Safe oot, Safe in' and 'Teribus: The Ballad of Hornshole and the Fight of 1514' (better known as '1514') as well as poems such as 'The Mosstroopers', 'A Border Town', 'Queen of the Moorlands', 'To Teviot', 'Teviot', 'A Dream of Flodden' and 'St. Mary's'. He co-wrote the book 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' (1898) with Adam Laing and wrote 'Hawick and the Borders' (1927), as well as his collected poems 'In Borderland: Border and Other Verses' (1899 and 1922). The careful research behind 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' led to an end of the 19th century criticism of the lack of historical basis for the Common Riding. In addition he wrote the introduction to the 1907 edition of the collected poems of John Inglis. He emigrated to Australia in the period 1899–1905, thereafter living in the south of England, where he died. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Rev. Neil Douglas (b.1922) born at Waterbeck, son of Rev. Alan McDonald, minister in Newcastleton. He was educated at Comrie, in Newcastleton and at Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1942 and B.D. in 1945. He was with the Church of Scotland Huts and Canteens and was licensed by Hawick Presbytery in 1945. He was ordained in 1947 as minister of St. Andrew's Kirk. In 1953 he moved to Carstairs and in 1961 to Dalbeattie Craignair. In 1947 he married Florence Grimmond Sproul and their children were: Alison Forsyth (b.1948); and Alan Robert McDonald (b.1952). R. Hunter (19th C.) minister of Newcastleton Congregational Kirk 1891–95. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptism in 1708 for baxter Walter Boyd and in 1713 for carrier William Rae. He married Mary Roderick and their children included: Janet (b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1714). The witnesses in 1709 were baxter John Whillans and William Hodge (formerly written 'Craige').

Craig-Broon (krāg-broon) n. (Craig-Brown) Thomas (1844–1922) born in Galashiels, son of James Brown, publisher of the Border Advertiser. He was educated at Edinburgh University, was appointed as editor of the Border Advertiser shortly after graduating, but shortly moved to Selkirk where he had a wool-spinning business at Yarrow Mill. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and served as Provost of Selkirk 5 times. He purchased the old prison of Selkirk and presented it to that town for use as a library. He contributed several historical articles to local learned societies and his most important work was his comprehensively researched, 2-volume 'History of Selkirkshire' (1886). He also edited the 'Letters of Mrs. Cockburn, 1713–1794' (1900). His house at Woodburn contained an unrivalled collection of books connected with the Scottish Borders, as well as relics from the 'Souters' incorporation and many sketches by Tom Scott. He married a daughter of Archibald Craig and thereby changed his surname. The couple had 4 sons and 1 daughter.

Craig Douglas (krāg-dug-lis) n. farm on the Yarrow Water, between the Gordon Arms and St. Mary's Loch, also called Douglas Craig. Blackhouse tower is up the Douglas Burn to the north. It was formerly also known as 'Douglas Craig'. There was once a tower here, one of the seats of the Earls of Douglas, which was destroyed by James II in 1451. The lands were owned by the Crown after being forfeited (along with much of Ettrick Forest) by the Douglases. It was leased to Alemoor of that Ilk in the late 15th century and to John Murray and David Pringle in the early 16th century (formerly written 'Douglascrag', 'Dowglascrag' and variants).

Craigend (krāg-end) n. name formerly used for part of Minto, presumably because of being at the (north-east) end of Minto Crags. Gilbert Eliott of Stobs ('Gibbie o the Gowden Garters') and some of his descendants were sometimes called 'of Craigend'. Thomas Young was tenant there shortly before 1502 when it was burned by a group of Scott, Armstrong and Turnbull rievers. 'The Cragge End' at Minto was burned by Hertford's men in 1545. It is listed as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608. A later Gilbert Eliott (also of Hartsgarth) had a charter of the lands in 1638. In 1643 it was valued (along with Deanfoot) at £660. Dying without male issue, it was inherited by his nephew Archibald, whose son Gilbert inherited it in 1683, when it is described being valued at £8 10 shillings of new extent, and included a piece of land called 'lie Grassland', as well as common pasture rights in Minto. Gilbert Eliott in turn sold it to Lord Tarras. To confuse matters, the lands were among those purchased in 1703 by Sir Gilbert Elliot (a different, but related Gilbert), who united them with Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. This could be the 'Craigend' or 'Craighead' where the Douglases of Cavers held 4 acres of land, as recorded in 1687 and 1698. There are 10 men listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax records, owners of 12 hearths. In 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), there are several separate pieces of land listed there as part of the Minto estate, including 'Craigs' (valued at £73), 'Mill Banks' (£91 5s), 'Haugh be-east Spittal-road' (£65 14s), 'Three Parks at Craigend' (£125 18s 7d), 'Craigend haugh' (£18 5s), 'Mill haugh' (£45 19s 10d) and 'House and yeard' (£1 16s 6d), all having the liferent held by Sir John Stewart of Allanbank. In 1780 the boundary of the former 'Craigend and Minto-mill farms' was described as being 'Stobbedge planting dyke', Cleuchhead farm, Lillielaw Park, the road from Minto to Jedburgh, Spittal and Barnhills. Gilbert Sharp was a mason there in at least 1799–1801 (it is 'Cragend of Mynto' in 1502 and 'Cragend' in 1638; a tower on Pont's manuscript map of the 1590s appears to be marked 'Kragend', distinct from 'Minto Craig', but is not on Gordon's c.1650 map or Blaeu's 1654 map).

Craigend Burn (krāg-end-burn) n. small tributary of the Teviot in Minto Parish, between Minto Crags and Barnhills farm. The site of the former Barnhills peel-house is probably on its banks. Although on the east side of Minto Crags, it may be that the farm of Craigend was on the west side.

Craighill (krāg-hil) n. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw, along with his mother Marion. in a rental roll of 1541. Their steading was valued at 12s 6d. Marion (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in 1541, along with her son James. Her name is recorded as 'Mariote Craghill'.

Craig Hill (krāg-hil) n. hill to the east of the Rankle Burn, a mile or so north of Buccleuch, having rocky outcroppings on its western side and reaching a height of 384 m (it is marked 'Kraig Hill' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Craighope Burn (krāg-hōp-burn) n. stream that rises on Black Knowe Head and flows north to join the Yarrow. Despite being a fairly small water feature it is listed in a 1649 description of Selkirkshire among the main streams feeding the Yarrow – 'Craighope Water falls off a Mountain called Caplaw and runs into Yaro beneath Deuchar foreanent the Tynnes' [MMGC1649].

craigie (krā-gee) n., arch. neck – 'Ma collar lay roond ma craigie as wanrestfih as branks an brecham roond a yaud' [ECS] (diminutive of craig).

craigie (krā-gee) adj., arch. craggy, rocky – '. . . But I missed my fit in a craigie slit, And fell ower the lugs wi' a plash' [WaD] (also written 'craigy').

Craigie (krā-gee) n. John of Kilgraston (d. bef.1762) son of Lawrence of Kilgraston and Anne Drummond of Megginch. He was described as Commissioner and Cashier to Buccleuch. In 1757 his servant Alexander Brewer witnessed a baptism in Hawick. In 1762 his widow Mrs. Alice Powell (alias Scott) received £200 sterling from the Scotts of Buccleuch as part of an agreed half-year's rents from the Barony of Hawick and other parts of the Buccleuch estate. He may also be the John who married his cousin Anne, daughter of Lawrence Craigie. Robert Craigie, advocate, had worked for the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 1730s, and was presumably related. John of Kilgraston (18th C.) Edinburgh advocate, probably son of the earlier John of Kilgraston. He feued the lands of Howpasley and others from Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763. He also served as Chamberlain of the Duke for Eskdale and Canonbie for at least the period 1760–66. He served as Commissioner and Cashier for the Duke of Buccleuch during the first court case for the division of the Common in 1767. His son John was Deputy Comissary General for Lower Canada. John (18th/19th C.) eldest son of John, who was Commissary-General of Lower Canada, and Susan Coffin. He was Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire 1835–61. In this capacity he was present in Hawick at the election of 1837, in which the crowd attacked several of the Tory voters. He tried to close the poll (which he really did not have the authority to do), but was pressed to reopen it; he called in the military to help keep the peace. He bought Jedbank. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. Henry Hutton and assumed the additional surname 'Moreton'. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1836.

the Craigie Well (thu-krā-gee-wel) n. spring on the eastern boundary of Wilton Common, mentioned in the 1765 court case. It lay near the Inner Grey Hill, at the boundary of the 'headroom' of Drinkstone farm (see also Craggy WElls).

craigit (krā-gee', -gi') pp., poet. necked – 'Back cam' the soople spugs And ate the auld breid, But puir lang-craigit hernseugh Had mair pride than greed' [DH], '. . . O yon arra-heid o geese, Straucht-craigit and shair, I' the reid-rosie, the caller, the clear, Sunset air!' [DH].

Craigmore (krāg-mōr) n. original name for the villa Woodnorton in Sunnyhill.

Craigmount (krāg-mown') n. private school for girls, based at Minto House from 1952–66. The school originally leased the house, purchasing it in 1962, but went into liquidation 4 years later. The school appears to have existed elsewhere before it moved to Minto, since School Inspectors' Reports from 1931 are in the National Archives.

Craig Pool (krāg-pool) n. pool in the River Teviot, located in a bend to the south just near Ashybank (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Craigs (krāgz) n. former name for a farm on the Minto estate. It is listed in 1779 (and later in 1811) as part of the estate of Lord Minto, valued at £73, and appears to have been associated with Craigend. It was stated that Sir John Stewart of Allanbank had held the liferent of these lands.

Craig's (krāgz) n. chemists at 17 High Street for several decades at the end of the 19th century and beginning of the 20th, proprietor John Craig. It was also the name for the aerated waters manufacturing plant at 22 Buccleuch Street. This was taken over by partner David Michie in 1919, following the death of the founder John Craig. In 1948 Mitchell sold the firm to the Scottish Cooperative Wholesale Society, with Henry Mitchell continuing as manager. Production in Hawick was halted in about 1960, with the former factory being used as a warehouse and distribution centre for 'Hendry's' line of sodas. It finally closed in 1978, the premises later being used by Wilson Signs and C.C.T. Motors. It is said that the artesian well sunk 100 ft below the factory (to provide the basic material for the carbonated water drinks) is still there.

Craigview (krāg-vew) n. large house just to the south of Denholm. It was built for the Walter Scott of Lyle & Scott, and is now called Denholm Lodge.

craik (krāk) n., arch. a rasping or croaking noise, grumbling talk – 'A ray now on their souls had dawned, Which their keen craik silenced' [HSR], '... Withoot e'en a gledge At the craik and penwhussle O yon arra-heid o geese ...' [DH], v. to croak – 'Do they craik and churl and gossip, there, I' the gethering derk ...' [DH], to complain, harp on about.

Craik (krāk) n. village on the Borthwick Water, about 11 miles west of Hawick, and beside Craik Forest. The site was formerly a farm, with the first known owner perhaps being Henry Turnbull 'de Crak', who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1431. It was owned by the Cockburns of Ormiston from at least the mid-15th century to the mid-16th century. John Morton was recorded there in 1502. In 1508/9 it was granted to John, son of John Cockburn of Ormiston, and was at that time included in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It is recorded in the early 16th century being occupied by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1535 the farm there, belonging to John Cockburn of Ormiston, was raided by a large group of Armstrongs and others, who stole 70 oxen, 30 cows and other goods, and took away 3 of the farm servants 'detaining them against their will for a certain space'. In 1548/9 Walter Scott of Branxholme (and his wife Janet Beaton) had a charter of the lands of Easter Craik, which had been forfeited by John Cockburn (for treason). But in 1567 the Earl of Bothwell (then superior of the lands) granted them back to Cockburn of Ormiston, including the mill there, this being confirmed in 1573/4. It is unclear who owned Wester Craik in the 16th century. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1610 and William Cowan in 1623. By at least 1643 it was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch. There were 12 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Adam Pott, Malie Dickson, John Hislop, Helen Thomson, John Nichol, Robert Laidlaw, Bessie Elliot, William Laidlaw, Marion Grieve, William Stoddart, Bessie Pott and Janet Laidlaw. Tax was paid on 4 hearths there in 1694. William Ogilvie was there in at least 1713–27, James Murray in 1720, George Dickson in 1720–22, Andrew Goodfellow in 1721–33, William Park in 1726 and Walter Stewart in 1733. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with the lands of 'Winniecleuch' (i.e. Whinney Cleuch'); at that time it covered 2620 acres and was bounded by Borthwick Water, Wolfcleuchhead, Buccleuch, Henwoodie common and Meadshaw. It was later the home of the Potts and was leased from the Buccleuch Estates by Walter Scott of Merrylaw in 1744. Robert Scott and William Rieve were there in 1742 and John Watson in 1743. There was flood damage reported in the area in 1745. John Nichol was there in at least 1762–66, Walter Currie in 1762, William Brydon in 1762–71, Robert Beattie in 1771, Andrew Chisholme in 1774 and John Anderson and Walter Currie in 1785. John Grieve inherited the farm from his uncle George Pott and his son George Grieve was farmer there in at least 1787–94. The farm was valued along with Whinneycleugh and Midshiels at about £667 in 1785 and 1802, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Residents there in 1812 included shepherds James Grieve and Robert Waugh and ploughman Walter Scott. About 1819 it passed from George and Walter Grieve to their sister Jane and her husband William Moffat. Thomas Douglas and family were there in 1841. John Moffat was farmer there in the 1860s and 70s. The small cluster of houses was built up after WWII to provide accommodation for forestry workers. However, they are now mainly used as holiday homes, or by people commuting into Hawick. A Roman road leads from near here across Craik Cross Hill to a Roman fort by the White Esk River. This was part of a main east-west highway until the 19th century. A Halifax bomber crashed nearby in 1944, marked by a plaque in the car park, on a cairn erected in 1994 (the origin is probably the Old Welsh 'creic' for 'rock', although the Gaelic for 'fell' has also been suggested; the name first definitely appears in 1508/9 and spelling variants include 'Craick', 'Craike' and 'Creak'; it is 'le craik' in 1502, 'Crayk' in 1610, 'Crek' in 1713, 'Creak' in 1725 and 1726, 'Craick' in 1742, 1771 and 1785, and 'Creak' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is 'Craike' on a 1650 parish map, 'Craik' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Craick' on Blaeu's 1654 map and Adair's c.1688 map).

Craik (krāk) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) listed as 'Adam de Crake' in an inquest of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. Given that most of the other men were local, this is likely to be the Craik in the Borthwick valley. He was probably related to the slightly earlier James. Adam (14th C.) listed as 'Ada de Craykes' in an inventory of Coldingham Priory in 1371. David (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Dawe Crak' in 1500 when he witnessed a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers. James (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'James de Crak' of Selkirkshire when he swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296. This could well be Craik at the head of the Borthwick valley, which at that time was probably in that county. There are also 2 other men of the same name listed, Henry (of Dumfriesshire) and John (of Edinburgh), who may have been related. Richard (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was pardoned by Edward III for crimes in Scotland, along with Eustace Lorraine and William Falsyde. His name is listed as 'Rico de Crake' and it is possible he was a descendant of James. Walter (14th C.) recorded in an inventory of lands associated with Coldingham Priory in 1343. His surname is given as 'de Crayk', but it is unclear if he was connected with Craik or somewhere else. In 1348 he was 'de Crek', owner of lands in Fishwick in another Coldingham Priory, and in 1350 he was 'de Crayke'.

Craik Cross (krāk-kros) n. one of the highest points in Craik Forest, 1,482 ft (451 m), once used as a Roman signal station. The Roman road can easily be followed from Craik village to the summit here, sometimes being a cambered grassy causeway and sometimes a hollow track. At the summit a roughly square mound just beyond the boundary fence marks the signal station. Forest tracks then follow the Roman road all the way to Eskdalemuir. There was presumably once a wayside cross here that gave its name to the hill, but there is no evidence of where this may have been or when it disappeared. It was a significant boundary marker in the 16th century, with reports of the English attack on upper Teviotdale in the spring of 1514 being described as being from the mouth of the Borthwick to here, and later Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being appointed Warden of the Middle Marches from here to Minto Crags – 'Atween Craik-cross and Eildon-tree, Is a' the safety there shall be' [T], 'Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Ettrick head; – Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade's dead' [CWS], 'On my hills the moonbeams play From Craik-cross to Skelfhill-pen, By every rill, in every glen' [SWS] (it is marked as 'Craik crosse' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'craicks cors' on Adair's c.1688 map; it is 'Craike-cross' in 1514, 'Craykcorse' in 1540, 'Craykcorse' in 1550 and 'Craikcorse' in 1649).

Craik Faulds (krāk-fawldz) n. former shepherd's cottage on Craik farm, located to the north of Craik village. The last shepherd there was Robert Byres. The house has been a ruin since at least the middle of the 20th century. A bike track now passes near there.

Craik Forest (krāk-fo-rist) n. man-made forest straddling the Scottish Borders and Dumfries & Galloway Regions, about 10 miles to the west of Hawick. It was mainly planted in the 1960s and 1970s, and many of the trees matured by the 1990s. It is managed by the Forestry Commission. The Borthwick Water and Rankle Burn both have their source there. It contains several hills, including Craik Cross Hill and Black Knowe, and a picturesque waterfall on the Wolfcleuch Burn. There are extensive woodland walks (Policy Wood, Green Ride, Aithouse Burn, Wolfcleuch Waterfall, Drove Road and Crib Law) as well as mountain bike trails (Wolfcleuch Loop and Crib Law Trail.

Craikhope (krāk-hōp) n. herd's cottage in Craik forest, up above Howpasley, below Ladder Law. The farm was listed along with 'Noirhop' in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish; together they were estimated at '100 lb., vicarage 16 lb'. There were 4 'communicants' listed there in 1640, namely William Little, William Little 'Younger',

Margaret Nichol and Bessie Nichol. It formed the most distant part of Hawick Parish, until Roberton was created in 1689/90. It was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is a survey in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms; at that time it covered 1077 acres and was bounded by Howpasley, Longshawburn, Wolfcleuchhead, 'Mudlaw' and the Borthwick Water. Alexander Bell was there in 1721, John Nichol in 1723, William Moffat in at least 1726–36, Thomas Park in 1728, George Anderson in 1731–36, Robert Anderson in 1736 and James Scott in 1742. The tenant there reported that floods had damaged the crops in 1745. It became a 'led' farm, rented along with Billhope in Eskdale, which had a larger farmhouse. James Scott was there in 1742, Robert Renwick in 1753–57, William Dickson in 1762 and William Beattie in 1763–80. John Anderson was there in 1781 and Andrew Beattie in 1794. It is probably the 'Clarkhope' listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with William Beattie as farmer. James Beattie was living there in 1799 and perhaps a different James Beattie was shepherd there in 1812. In 1841 it is recorded that one resident was 'Traveler' Sarah Brown and her 5 children named 'Gilles', and Alexander Armstrong and family were also there. The shepherd there was Andrew Glendinning in the mid-19th century and his grandson James in the late 19th and possibly early 20th centuries. The dilapidated cottage was turned into an outdoor education centre by the local Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme group about 1980 (it is recorded as 'Craich-hope' in 1690, 'Creakhop' in 1723, 1726 and 1728 and 'Craickhope' in 1757, 1781 and 1851; it is 'Craikehope' on a parish map of 1650, 'Craukehope' on the Buccleuch survey of 1718 and is 'Craickhope' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Craikhope Burn (krāk-hōp-burn) n. stream that joins the Howpasley and Wolfcleuch Burn to form the Borthwick Water. It passes the old farmstead of Craikhope. It is fed by smaller streams, including Hazely Sike, Comb Sike, Ladder Cleuch, Garnel Sike, Gulf Sike, Sheil Cleuch and Little Shiel Cleuch. Kidd's Scar is a cliff on the steam.

Craik Moor (krāk-moor) n. high area between Craik village and Craik Cross, with the Roman road running through it. A millstone was found by the side of Craik Cross Road there, reported in 1974. There is also a place with the same name above the Hownam Burn – 'Upon the Water of Borthwick, which has its rise from Craikmoor, there are some few Steeds belonging to this Shire' [MGC1680].

Craikshiel (krāk-sheel) n. former shepherd's cottage in what is now Craik Forest, just to the east of Ropelawshiel. John Laidlaw was recorded there in 1712, Jame Murray in 1718 and Henry Mitchellhill in 1726. William Anderson and family were there in at least 1841–61 (it is 'Craikshiels' in 1712 and 'Creaksheils' in 1718 and 1726).

Crailing (krā-lin) n. village a few miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name of the surrounding parish. The more recent parish contains the ancient parishes of Crailing, Nisbet and Spittal; Crailing and Nisbet were united in 1606 (despite being separated by the Teviot), and there is an existing communion token labelled 'C.N.K.' from 1699. There were once 2 mediæval hospitals here, at Cralining Spittal (near Monteviot) and at Spittal (in the extreme north). The estate of Crailing was once a seat of the Cranstouns. The Marquess of Lothian, with residence at Monteviot House, has long been the major land owner of the parish. The village has a church dating from about 1775, as well as formerly a Free Kirk (now Lothian Hall) and a school. The 1803 Crailing House (designed by William Elliot) also stands above the Oxnam Water there; it may have been built near the site of the former castle of the Cranstons. There was formerly a toll at the village on the main Hawick to Berwick road. A bridge was built over the Oxnam Water here in the 1830s, replacing an inconvenient old bridge and ford (the origin of the name is uncertain, perhaps meaning 'slope by the river Crai or 'the ridge at the corner'; it first occurs as 'Crailingis' in about 1147).

cramesye (kra-me-see) n., arch. crimson cloth – '. . . carried the bible from the manse to the pulpit, clad in a conspicuous mantle of cramesye, and threading her way with impressive dignity' [WNK].

Crammond (kraw-mind) n. John (19th C.) Steward for the Common-Riding Races in 1861. Kenneth W. Depute Town Clerk in Hawick from 1969, having previously been senior legal assistant in Inverness. He became Director of Administrative and Legal Services of Roxburghshire District Council and Chief Executive from 1987. William (13th/14th C.) son of Simon, son of Nicholas. He was 'de Cramond' after he acquired the lands of that name in Midlothian, some time before 1278. He was qualified as 'Master' by 1278, although it is not known where he was educated; he was then recorded being a clerk of the King's wardrobe when witnessing a charter. He was also still in the royal service at Scone in 1282/3. He was recorded several times in the period 1288–90 as a clerk to Alexander Baliol, Chamberlain of Scotland. By 1296 he held the Church of 'Wynchedurris', which was the same as Ewes Doors, or the Over Kirk of Ewes. He was the William 'de Cramund', clerk in the county of Edinburgh, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He had his lands in Dumfriesshire and Midlothian (Cramond and Clermiston) restored in 1296; these lands are referred to in accounts after his death in the period 1335–37. He no longer held Ewes Doors in 1319 (at least as far as the English were concerned. He had an illegitimate son and heir, Laurence. He was probably dead by 1329 when his son was paying relief to the Scottish Escheator (also written 'Cramond').

cramp (krawmp) n., arch. an iron spike – '. . . this incantation, 'Wi' cramps and cleeks may he be pest, An' o' diseases be a nest' ' [EM1820].

Cramptlands Croft (krampt-lindz-kroft) n. former name for lands that were part of East Mains, hence perhaps somewhere near Crumhaugh Hill. They were sold in 1684 by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop, who disponed them to his wife Bessie Ruecastle in 1688. The lands were bounded by 'the King's hie streat' on the east, 'the Burn called the ever Burn' on the south and 'the arable lands' of the Duke of Buccleuch on the west and north.

crane (krān) n., arch. the cranberry, Oxycoccos palustris – 'Ye broomie howes and cranered fens, The rural cot, and lofty ha' ' [JoHa], 'When simmer came blythesome I milked the yowes, Or stackit the peats on the crane-cover'd flowes' [JoHa].

Cranksteale (krawngk-steel) n. possible name for a piece of land in the Barony of Cavers. This is the way the name is transcribed when Cavers was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and it is 'Cranksewell' when Archibald Douglas succeeded to the Barony of Cavers in 1698. However, it may be a transcription error for another place.

cranreuch (krawn-rooch) n., poet. hoar frost – 'When munelicht glintin on the beads o' cranreuch . . . ' [WL], 'There wasna snaw on the braes then, But the cranreuch glistened white . . . ' [WL].

Cransfield Drive (krawms-feeld-drīv) n. short street in Ashkirk, one of only 3 named streets in the village.

Cranston (kran-stin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as resident of Oakwood in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes. This included stealing sheep from Harthern and from Yair, stealing goats from Glensax, resetting George Henrison and plundering Fastheugh. The Junior Laird of Cranston (possibly William) served as his surety. He may be the Adam 'in elinburn' who served as surety for David Lauder at the Jusitice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1631. Agnes (18th C.) resident of Denholm. In 1784 Betty Black was accused of stealing half a bowl of grain from George and John Dryden in East Mains and passing it to William Douglas, who transferred it to her. Betty was rebuked by Cavers Parish. Alastair Gerald (1949–) born in Hawick, he has lived most of his life near Lilliesleaf. He played centre for Hawick R.F.C. and also served as Captain. He was capped 11 times for Scotland in the period 1976–81. He was associated with the Borders rugby team. He was elected Councillor for Hawick and Denholm in 2012. Alexander (16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581/2. Alexander of Mordiston (16th/17th C.) received lands of Midshiels, Appletreehall, 'Coitlaw' ('Courthill' perhaps) and 'Cranlaw' ('Clarilaw' perhaps) in the Barony of Hassendean from Philip Scott of Dryhope in 1611 (through a 'letter of revision', suggesting he had previously owned the lands and they were being held 'in wadset'). There is a confirming charter from him to Scott of Dryhope in 1617. It is unclear how long he was superior. His great-great grandson James, Lord Cranston, was served as his heir in 1681. Andrew (15th/16th C.) one of the Bailies appointed by Sir James Douglas of Cavers in 1512 to give sasine of the lands of Denholm to William Cranston of that Ilk. He was also witness to the 2 related charters. It is unclear how he was related to other Cranstons. Andrew (1969–) born in Hawick, he attended Drumlanrig and the High School. He then studied art at Manchester Polytechnic and Grays School of Art in Aberdeen and graduated with an M.A. in painting from the Royal College of Art in 1996. He has had several solo exhibitions, including one in 2013 inspired by his grandfather's memories of living at the Wilton Lodge Stables, and the painting of it made by his uncle Walter. Charles (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1512 as 'Karolo Cranstone' when he was witness to the charter of Denholm given to William of that Ilk. He was probably related to the other Cranston witnesses, Andrew and Patrick. Gavin (18th/19th C.) shepherd from Yarrow. He married Christian Elliot, who was probably daughter of Walter Elliot, farmer at Henderson's Knowe at Teviothead. Their children, baptised in Yarrow Parish, included: Janet (b.1812); Isabel (b.1813); James (b.1815); and Walter (b.1816). Based on letters to Christian's brother Thomas, they were at Philhope in 1818, Harwudsikefit by 1823, and still in Scotland in 1833. George (17th/18th C.) contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is listed being 'in Baxtounleyes', which could be the farm near the edge of Liddesdale later known as Peel. George (18th C.) tenant in Nether Crailing. In 1764 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the lands of Wilton Common and value each plot. George of Longnewton (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded in 1788 as liferenter of part of the Ancrum Parish lands of Sir George Douglas. He was probably one of the men added to the voters' roll for purely political reasons. Henry (17th C.) probably a younger son of Sir William (although he may be the next generation), and brother of Lord John. In 1627 (referred to as 'Harry') he was part of the marriage contract between William, son of Simon Elliot of the Binks and Christian Grahamslaw, whose own father had died. He himself married Margaret Wauchope about 1653. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the 'Hendrie Cranstoun, vncle to the Lord Cranstoun' who named on the Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border in 1648. He may have been partly the insipration for 'Henry of Cranstoun' in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel'. Isobel (17th C.) inn-keeper in Ashkirk. In 1642 she was accused by the kirk Session of selling ale after sunset, but denied this. James of that Ilk (d.c.1494) son of Sir Thomas, succeeding after his older brother William died. He may be the Laird of Cranston who was assigned the 3 steadings of Redford in 1480 for 11 years. He was probably succeeded by his cousin John. James Master of Cranstoun (d.1633), 2nd son of Sir William, the 1st Lord. He assisted his father (and brother Sir John) on the commission to keep peace on the Border in the 1610s. He married Elizabeth Makgill of Cranston Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. His son William became 3rd Lord Cranstoun, while his daughter Isobel married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and Margaret married a Cockburn of Clerkington. James (d.bef. 1688) 4th Lord Cranstoun, son of William. In 1642 he was probably the James, Master of Cranston, who was named to a commission to try a large number of Borders fugitives. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother (gratis) of Glasgow in 1666. He paid the land tax in Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh and Smailholm Parishes in 1678. By this time the family's lands in Cavers Parish were in the hands of the Douglases of Cavers. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire charged with raising money for the King, and again in 1685. In 1679 he was served heir to John, Lord Cranston, who was his grandfather's brother and in 1681 he was served heir to his great-great grandfather Alexander of Mordiston. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. Like generations before him, he still owned land locally. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their oldest son William became 5th Lord and married Jean Kerr, eldest daughter of the Marquess of Lothian. Another son Alexander died without issue. James of Crailing (d.1773) 6th Lord Cranstoun, son of William and Jean Ker, daughter of the 2nd Marquess of Lothian. He retained superiority over lands in Rule Water, e.g. granting a disposition for Wolfelee in 1740. His estate was valued at more than £6000 in the 1740s. In 1767 he sold off his last local estate, Wauchope, to Walter Scott of Howcleuch, in order to pay off debts. The family had held Wauchope for more than 150 years. He married Sophia, daughter of Jeremiah Brown of Abscourt, Surrey. His sons William and James in turn succeeded, and since neither of them produced an heir, succession then went to his younger son Charles' son James. The family soon also sold off Crailing, and so held no land in Roxburghshire. James (1800/1–74) son of mason Thomas and Agnes Smail. He was a mason and farmer at East Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41, when he was at Lees. In 1851 he was farmer of 16 acres at East Lees, as well as mason. In 1827 he married Susan Scott, who was probably a daughter of millwright Gideon Scott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1828); Gideon (b.1829); Mary (b.1831), who married blacksmith William Pow; Agnes (b.1832); William (b.1834); James (b.1836); Margaret (b.1838); Helen (b.1839); John (b.1841); and Jane (b.1845).

He died at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish. John (14th/15th C.) squire of the Earl of Douglas. In 1403, after his father's death, he was granted the town and lands of Sprouston by Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. His father is stated to have been Sir William, but this may be an error for Thomas. John of that Ilk (d.aft. 1494) son of William, and probably nephew of Sir Thomas, succeeding from his cousin James. He held lands in and around Denholm. He leased the Weststead of Gildhouse in 1479. In 1483 William Douglas of Cavers gave him the lands of 'Fowlarislandis' and half of Denholm Mains. He was Bailie of Ettrick Forest, and for his fee had the rental of the farm of Kirkhope in the period 1473–90. He also leased Redford, Mount Common and Langhope in the 1480s, was responsible for the 'grassums' of 'Weststeid of Langhop' and was involved with the customs from Selkirk and Jedburgh. In 1492 the lands of 'Gildhouse' and Middlestead were assigned to him. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William. Another son John married Agnes Whitlaw (and may be the John who witnessed the sasine for Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1508). Thomas, recorded in 1494/5 as brother of Lord Cranston, may also have been his son. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as brother to the Laird of Cranston in 1504 when he was surety to enter a man to answer for a murder. He was presumably brother of Sie William and son of the previous John. This John married Agnes Whitlaw, and may be the John who witnessed the sasine for Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. It is possible he is also the John recorded in 1502 when the Olivers in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing a horse from him from Crailing. John of that Ilk (d.1552) son of Sir William. He held lands at Denholm. In 1521 he had a 'precept of clare constat' of the lands of Denholm, 'Fowlersland', Little Rulewood and others from Douglas of Cavers. In 1525 he was on the panel for the succession of the Gordons of Stichill. In 1526 he had a charter of the lands of Smailholm and Sprouston. Also in 1526 he was part of the remission for a large number of Borderers (led by Walter Scott of Branxholme) for fighting against the Earl of Arran. Additionally he was named in the letter of treason, nominally written by King James V, for his role in the Skirmish at Melrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. However, in 1526/7 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. Additionally there was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Branxholme, Walter Scott of Synton and their followers. Also in 1527 he was witness to a bond of friendship between William, Lord Borthwick and Walter Scott of Branxholme, and was also mentioned in a document made at Selkirk, in which he is requested to appear at 'his principal dwelling house of Kirkhoup'. In 1528 he and his wife had sasine for their lands in Smailholm and Sprouston. In 1528/9 he purchased lands in Smailholm from Robert Lauder of that Ilk; William of Lauder was one of the witnesses. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to the King to keep better order. Also in 1530 he was recorded as a witness in Selkirk to proceedings taken against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk. He was recorded as superior of lands in Denholm in 1535 when giving a precept of sasine. In 1540 he paid Katherine Scott of Colifort in redemption for 4 husbandlands in Denholm. In 1541 he is probably the Laird of Cranston recorded in 1541 as tenant of Shaws, 'Elineburne', Kirkhope, 'Fawdschele' and 'Fawdograns' in Ettrick. Also in 1541 he complained about servants of David 'Frissaill' stealing from his house in Selkirk. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He could be the John who witnessed a lease at Branxholme in 1550 and the John mentioned in the inventory of goods after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552. He was recorded in a precept of sasine in 1551 as superior of Smailholm. He married Jean (or Janet), daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch and was succeeded by his son Sir William. Robert, brother of Sir William, is recorded in 1560, and hence presumably was another son of his. He also had an illegitimate son, Capt. John. Sir John of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Sir William. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he had a discharge with William Douglas of Cavers for rentals on his lands of Denholm Mains, Little Rulewood and Fowlerslands, and for non-entries of lands in the Lordship of Denholm, including Denholm Dean, 'Balze Hag' and Stobs. Also in 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott; he also served as an executor for the will of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. In 1581 he was probably the 'J. Cranstoun of that Ilk' among men who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1581 his daughter Margaret was involved in a transaction for lands in Thirlestane and Hopehouse. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was fined for not presenting at trial Walter and Thomas, sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1584/5 he was documented refusing to subscribe to a bond for the Barons to assist the Warden of the Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was surety for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was William 'fiar of that Ilk'. He gained lands at Kirkhope in 1592. In 1600 he was accused, along with William, his son and law and James Douglas of Cavers, with resetting Thomas of Morriston. He married Margaret Ramsay of Dalhousie and had 6 children. His son John died without issue and the family lost their lands at Denholm. His daughter Sarah married Sir William the 1st Lord Cranstoun, while Margaret married Sir James Douglas of Cavers, Elizabeth married William Douglas and Jean married Thomas Rutherford of Hunthill. John (d.bef. 1648) 2nd Lord Cranstoun, son of Sir William. He assisted his father on the commission to keep peace on the Border in the 1610s. He was served heir to his father in 1627, this including the Regality of Sprouston, as well as lands in Smailholm, Nether Crailing, Langton and 'Fawodscheill'. He also became Laird of 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee), which included 'Over Wolley', 'Natherwolley' and 'Wolfhipley', and held other local lands (or the superiority of these lands in some cases), including Wauchope, Langhaugh, Denholm, Denholm Mains, Rulewood, 'the foulleris lands' and Stobs. He resigned these lands in 1636 in order to pass them to his nephew William. In 1643 he was one of the men appointed Colonel of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued in 1643 at £1850, in Hobkirk (consisting of Wauchope and Catlee) at about £1670 and in Southdean at £1000; he also held lands in Crailing and Smailholm Parishes. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Scott, 'the Bold Buccleuch', and later Helen Lindsay of the Byres, but died without an heir. Having no children, he was succeeded by his brother James' son William. John (b.c.1685) recorded in Saughtree in 1683 when his will is listed in the Peebles Commissariot. Rev. Michael (d.1631) son of Rev. Thomas, who was minister at Ashkirk. He was ordained in Selkirk in about 1580. In 1580 he was witness to a couple of transactions in Selkirk, one of them explicitly stating that he was son of Thomas. In 1581 there was an agreement among lairds and their tenants to pay him for a year. He was translated to Liberton in 1585 and then Cramond in about 1590. In 1596 was imprisoned for 'stirring up a tumult and uproare' in Edinburgh. He remained as minister at Cramond until his death in 1631. He married Agnes Murehead, whose brother was minister at South Leith. His children included Nathaniel, Caleb, Jean, William and Margaret. Patrick (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter to William Cranston of that Ilk for the lands of Denum. He was probably related to the other Cranstons who were witnesses, i.e. Andrew and Charles. He was also one of the Bailies appointed by James Douglas of Cavers to give sasine to William Cranston. Peter (16th C.) Chaplain and factor of the Church of St. Mary of the Forest. He was 'Sir' (or 'domino') because of his status as a priest who lacked a masters degree. In the 1540 Exchequer Rolls it is recorded that he was paid for the teind lambs and teind wool bought for the King. Also in 1540 he is probably the chaplain Cranston who witnessed an agreement between Katherine Scott of Colifort and John of that Ilk. He was said to be an enemy of the Scotts, perhaps being suspected of involvement in the 1552 murder of Sir Walter Scott. In 1554 he was witness to a memorandum regarding the murder of Richard 'Luderdaill'. In 1557 a band of about 200 Scotts and others broke open the doors of the Kirk of the Lowes at St. Mary's Loch looking for him. Later many of the Scotts paid fines for this crime, including Scotts from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane; the attempt to kill him was unsuccessful and the Scotts had to pledge not to harm him or his servants in future. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Murray and their children included Thomas (b.1724), Agnes (b.1726) and Jean (b.1728). The 1724 baptism was carried out at Wester Essenside. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1730. Robert (18th

C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Bellendean in 1781. He married Ann Lees in 1780, the wedding being recorded in both Roberton and Selkirk Parishes. His children included Margaret (b.1781). Stephen (1980/1–) attended Denholm and Hawick High Schools. He played rugby for the Wanderers and then joined Hawick R.F.C. when still at school. He was part of the team that won the championship in 2000/1 and 2001/2, as well as the Scottish Cup. He joined the Border Reivers in 2002 and played there as a professional for 4 years. He played in a Scotland side against the Barbarians in 2004 and he toured with the national side, although injuries prevented him getting a cap. He runs his own joinery company in Hawick. He married Joanne and has children Evie and Sam. Thomas (d.bef. 1409) son of John, and great-grandson of the first known Cranston. He may have been the first of the family to have local lands. He was granted the lands of 'Little-Rulwod near Denum' by William, Earl of Douglas during the reign of David II; these may have been lands once owned by the family of Rule. In 1368 he witnessed a resignation of lands in the Barony of Cavers by Thomas Baliol to his superior, William, Earl of Douglas. Sometime before 1375 (perhaps 1368) he was granted the lands of Denhom, Denholm Dean and 'Balleolhage' by Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers; this excluded the domain lands of Cavers and the lands of Stobs. There was a confirming charter for 'Foullerysland in Denum, and Little Rulwod near Denum' in the 10th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1380). And sometime in the period 1384–97 he was granted the lands of Falnash in Roxburghshire and others in Tranent by James Sandilands, Lord of Calder and John, Lord Haliburton. His wife's name was Marion and their sons were William (who succeeded) and John. If the sasine for John was dated 1403 (and not 1413 as stated by the 'Scots peerage') and this John was really his son (and not the son of Sir William as stated), then he was dead by 1403. Sir Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1473) son of William. He was Receiver-General of the King for the area south of the Forth from about 1426. He served as a Scottish ambassador to the Court of Eric, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden in 1426 and helped negotiate with the English. He was the first to be called 'of that Ilk'. He may be the Thomas who was listed on a 'retour of inquest' in 1424 in Hawick for lands of Hownam. And in 1427 he was on another panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He had a charter of the lands of Denholm in 1428. In 1429/30 he was on the 'retour' for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he witnessed a charter between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1432 he was specially deputed by the King as Bailie of Cavers to assign sasine of the Barony to William Douglas. Also in 1432 he had a charter for lands in Sprouston, from Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was witness to a charter involving the Inglis family in lands at Branxholme etc. in the Barony of Hawick in 1435, a sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee for the Homes of Wedderburn in 1436 and a sasine for the lands of Grahamslaw in 1436/7. In the 1436 sasine he is 'of Denum' and it was also witnessed by George and James, who were probably related. He was granted the lands of Denholm by Thomas, Earl of Mar, for faithful service, having to pay a yearly amount of one penny of silver. This was confirmed in a charter of 1441. He witnessed a charter for lands in Primside for the Kers of Altonburn in 1439. He had a further charter for lands in Sprouston in 1446, for his services to William, Earl of Douglas. In 1446/7 he witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, regarding the lands of Teindside and Harwood. Also in 1446/7 he had an obligation with George of Caverhill over lands in Nether Crailing. He was witness to a feu charter of 1447, for the lands of Birkwood (possibly the present day Duke's Wood) between Simon of Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1447 he witnessed a decree about James, Earl of Douglas being older than his twin Archibald; another Thomas and William were also witnesses and probably relatives. He was recorded as Constable of Edinburgh Castle and customs officer for the King in the 1440s and 50s, being receiver of rents on Crown lands south of the Forth. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1449 and another for for Douglas of Cavers (for the lands of Blackpool) in 1450. He was one of the Conservators in 1451 for the truce with England. In 1451/2 he had a charter for the Barony of Greenlaw in Berwickshire. He was probably the Laird of Cranston who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh in 1456. He was appointed Bailie of Ettrick Forest from 1456, for which he had the rent of Kirkhope for his fee. In 1458/9 he had a discharge with Archibald Douglas of Cavers over his lands of Denholm Mains, Little Rulewood, Stobs, Denholm and Fowlerslands. He was appointed Warden of the Marches in 1459. He also rendered the accounts of the Bailies of Jedburgh and Selkirk in the 1460s. In 1463/4 he witnessed the document rewarding a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. In 1464/5 he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. Also in 1464/5 he was involved in the court case betwen William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains over the lands of Flex; he acted as 'forespekare' for Gledstains at the justice aire. He transferred Denholm Mains to his son William in 1465/6, and made a deal with Archibald Douglas for half of it shortly afterwards; the family held lands at Denholm for over 200 years. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1468. Also in 1468 he was on Parliamentary inquest for Roxburghshire 'gif he be hale' (suggesting he was already elderly and failing). He was still listed as Bailie for Ettrick Forest in 1471, for his fee having the lease of Kirkhope. His eldest son William pre-deceased him, so he was succeeded by his younger son James. Mary, who was probably his daughter, married Sir Richard Maitland, while another daughter married Patrick Ruthven of that Ilk. A 'natural' son, also William, is mentioned in a 1461 document. Another son, George, is mentioned in 1469 in relation to a fine remitted to him in Ettrick Forest. The widow of the late Thomas is mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, and so she may have still been alive at that point. Thomas (d.bef. 1502) brother of Lord Cranston, probably Sir William, and hence son of John. In 1494/5, along with James in Jedburgh, he had remission for the crime done at Denholm to James Grahamslaw of Newton; Walter Ker of Cessford was his surety. In 1502/3 his cousin William Cranston was recorded in a sasine in Edinburgh. Thomas (16th C.) 2nd son of William of that Ilk and brother of John. In 1536 he had sasine for the lands of 'Elburne alias Veststeid of Langhoip' in Ettrick Forest. Ninian and Robert were witnesses and possibly clerics that were related to him. Rev. Thomas (d.1585) minister of Borthwick in 1567, he was translated to Liberton in 1569, then went briefly to Peebles, returned to Liberton and was translated to become Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579. He is recorded being presented to the vicarage there on the death of John Muir. A record in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1579/80 states that he had 'ane collation and institutionne of the parsonage and vicarage of the parish kirk of Askirk', with the Reader, John Scott, taking him to the kirk 'and thair to place him in the pulpat and deliver the buk of god in his hands', giving him possession of the parsonage and vicarage, as well as the 'manss gleib and kirkland'. It seems clear therefore that he had the fruits of the Parish, while John Scott was probably actually the deliverer of sermons etc. He was also presented to Annan in 1580, but appears not to have accepted the move. There were a set of complaints made against him to the Assembly of 1580, alleging negligence, holding improper communions and private baptisms, having readers perform the examinations of the congregation, etc. (in other words he was holding on to pre-Reformation ways). In 1580 his son 'Mr. Michael was recorded as a witness in Selkirk'. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction that was recorded in Selkirk. Another transaction was witnessed by him in his house in Selkirk in April 1582 (suggesting that he lived in that town, rather than in Ashkirk). He was still recorded as minister in 1582 (in a document relating to the former Bishopric of Glasgow). Although he continued as minister at Ashkirk for a while, he was translated back to Liberton again some time between 1582 and 1585. He married Janet Liddell, Lady Makerstoun and later Janet Mowbray. His son Michael became minister of Selkirk in 1580 and then moved to Liberton like his father. Another son, Andrew, became Schoolmaster at Peebles, and there was also a daughter, Isobel. He may have held some of the benefices of Ashkirk until his death. He was probably from the local family of the Lords Cranston and may be the 'Maister Thomas Cranstoun' who in 1541 claimed to hold in feu the lands of 'Elineburne' in Ettrick (also claimed by John, Lord Cranston). Thomas (17th/18th C.) notary public in Roxburghshire. In 1696 he was involved with the legal proceedings to divide Bedrule Common. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Coldhouse (Wilton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the mason, married to Agnes Smail, whose son James (d.1874) was also a mason and farmer; he married Agnes Smail in 1796 and their children included Nelly (b.1795), William (b.1796), Janet (b.c.1801, who married William Pringle), Walter (b.c.1804) and Thomas (b.c.1811). Thomas (b.c.1811) son of Thomas. He was listed at Newton among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 he was listed at Pityhouses and in 1841 at Parkhouses. In the 1841 and 1851 censuses he was a journeyman mason, living at Parkhouses in Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Ormiston and their children included Elizabeth, Agnes, Helen, Margaret and Isabella. Walter (b.c.1803/4) mason at Appletreehall, probably son of Thomas and Agnes Smail. He was listed at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Thomas (also a mason), Janet, John, Agnes, Helen (b.1837/8, who married John Tait), Margaret, Christian, Isabella, William and Mary. William (d.bef. 1428) son of Thomas, he must have also held lands near Denholm. He is easily confused with a nearly contemporary Sir William. He witnessed a charter for Haliburton of Dirleton in 1409. He was 'Lord of Denum' in 1417 when he witnessed a chartrer for the Earl of Douglas. Another William, possibly a relative, was recorded as a notary for an instrument in the presence of the Regent Albany in 1410. He was father of Sir Thomas, who succeeded. Sir William (d.bef. 1413) recorded in 1413 when John 'son of the late Sir William' is recorded in a charter. In 1419 there is confirmation of a charter to him by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, for the lands of Nether Crailing. William of Crailing (d.c.1466) eldest son of Sir Thomas. He had a charter for Nether Crailing from Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1434. He could be the William who was among the conservators for the truce with England in 1451. He was witness to a Linlithgow sasine for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1451/2. In 1464/5 he was 'William of Cranstoun of Crayling' when he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. His father transferred the lands of Denholm Mains to him in 1465/6, but he died soon afterwards, and the estates were later inherited by his brother James. William (d.bef. 1483) father of John of that Ilk, as recorded in a document of 1483 relating to Denholm Mains. He was probably brother of Sir Thomas of that Ilk. Sir William of that Ilk (c.1478–1515) son of John. In 1499 he was witness to the resignation of the lands of Feu-Rule by Sir William Colville into the hands of their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1500 he was 'Wilzem of Crenston' when among the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope. In the years 1498–1501 he gave the accounts for Selkirk, Jedburgh and parts of the related counties, according to the Exchequer Rolls. He served as Coroner for Roxburghshire and had sasines for Sprouston, Smailholm and Nether Crailing. He was also assigned the 'Weststede' of Langhope in 1499 and 1501. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, failing to 'give suit' for his lands of Smailholm. In 1502 he also served as surety for James Davidson in Sprouston and was recorded as 'coronator principalis de Jedworth' when he was fined several times for failing to arrest James Moffat, John Rutherford, Edward Oliver, David Turnsull of Wauchope and James Bell. Also in 1502 George Armstrong of Ralton was convicted of stealing sheep from him at Helmburn. Also in 1502 he presented his servant, also called William, at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. He received further payments for Crown lands in 1504. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh and in 1508 was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Also in 1508 he had a sasine for 2 husbandlands called 'the Stewart lands' in the Lordship of Crailing, with precept given by the superior, Sir John Stewart of Minto. He was fined in 1510 along with 35 others for 'destroying the Woods of Ettrik-Forest'. He feued the lands of Kirkhope and Howford in 1510, and acted as pledge for Patrick and Thomas (probably his sons). In 1512 he had charters from James Douglas of Cavers, for the 10 pound land of Denholm, as well as for Fowlerslands and Little Rulewood. He married Margaret Hume and was succeeded by his son John. Sir William of that Ilk (d.bef. 1569) son of John and Janet Scott, who was daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1553/4 he was 'William Cranstoun of Smalem Knycht' listed along with several Scotts and others in a pledge made by the Kers not to harm them. He was also listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He appeared, along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, as cautioners for his brother Thomas, who was to remain in ward in Edinburgh as their pledge. In 1535 he was one of the 'bailies in that part' dealing with a sasine for lands in Denholm. He could be the 'Wylle Cranston' listed among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. Alexander Hoppringle of Newhall was charged with killing cattle on his lands in 1556. In 1560 he was stated to have been present when Rutherfords killed Andrew Ker of Corbethouse, and as part of the agreement for ending the family feud his brother Robert was to ask forgiveness of James Ker of Corbethouse. Also in 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; additionally Sir Andrew Ker of Littldean agreed to ask forgiveness from him and his brother Robert for being present at the slaying of their uncle, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he and his brother James and 'George Wodderat, in Lawder' were charged with attacking lands of Alexander Hoppringle of Craigleith, trying to kill him. In 1563/4 he served as cautioner for John Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is probably the 'Lard of Cranstoun' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a contact with the Kerrs (and there is referred to as brother of the deceased Laird of Chisholme). He may also have been a half-brother of Walter of Elphinston. He had 8 children, including: Sir John, who succeeded; Marion, who married Robert Scott of Aikwood and then John Home of Crumstane; and Margaret, who married Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He is probably the William of that Ilk, whose grand-daughter Margaret Cranston married Sir James Douglas of Cavers in 1580, and whose great-grandson Sir William Douglas of Cavers was served as his heir to some lands in 1629. William (d.1567/8) held the benefice of Kirkton Parish until his death, when it was presented to George Douglas. He was presented to the Parish in 1550, following the resignation of Archibald Heriot. He may only have held the 'living' rather than the ministerial duties. It is also possible that this is the same as Sir William of that Ilk. He is said to have died in 1563, although was not replaced until about 4 years later. Sir William (c.1560–1627) son of John of Morriston, he became 1st Lord Cranstoun. He is probably the 'fiar of that Ilk' who was cautioner for Sir John of that Ilk in 1590 and for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1592. He was 'fiar of that Ilk' when he had a dispute with Arthur Scott in 1593, and besieged the house at Thirlestane, where a messenger had taken refuge. More specifically, he complained about Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch, James Scott of Gilmanscleuch and James' son Robert, who led about 200 people to Ittack him when he tried to take sasine of 'Fawodscheill' and then chased to Thirlestane the messenger bringing legal warnings against them. In 1594 Robert Ker of Kippielaw was surety for Arthur Scott to answer his complaint. In 1594/5 he was cautioner for James Scott of Hundleshope. In 1595 he was 'apparent of that Ilk' when ordered to appear in court to resolve a feud with the Lauders. In 1596/7 he was 'The Laird of Crenston' when he brought charges to the English Warden against Lionel Heron, presumably for raiding his lands. In 1600 he was accused, along with John of that Ilk and James Douglas of Cavers, with resetting Thomas of Morriston (presumably a close relative); he was described as 'fiar of that Ilk' and son-in-law of John of that Ilk. In 1600 he sold 'Elinburn, Schawis alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest' to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1601 he complained about several Englishmen stealing his livestock. He is probably the 'Cranstoun' who signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. Also in 1602 he surety for Mark Turnbull of Bewlie and Hector Turnbull in Firth to re-enter ward in Edinburgh. In 1605 he purchased the superiority of lands in Rulewater (including Stonedge) from the Earl of Angus. Also in 1605 he purchased Over and Nether 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee) from Sir George Home, and a few years later he also bought Wauchope. He was appointed chief of a new police force of 25 horsemen by an English/Scottish commission set up in March 1605. His men spread terror, scouring the Borders for criminals, who were tried at special 'courts' in Hawick, Jedburgh, Peebles and Dumfries. 32 men were hanged in the first year alone. His tactics also included the first forced emigration (to Ireland) of Border families. Local men who were hanged during his period of control include Thomas Turnbull of Harwoodtown and Archibald Crozier of Brighouse of Cleuchhead. For his 'good deeds' he was created the 1st Lord Cranstoun in 1609. He was later part of the local Commissioners' Court, where more reasoned justice was meted out. He sometimes met with resistance, however, for example reprimanding the Bailies of Jedburgh for not imprisoning his captives. Correspondence shows that he was living in Denholm during some of that period. In 1608 he sat in Parliament as a minor baron for Roxburghshire. In 1612 it was described that those assisting him in his Border commission included 2 of his sons (Sir John and James), one of his brothers (John), 2 other Cranstons, an Elliot and an Armstrong. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 was appointed as a Commissioner for Teviotdale, in the absence of Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. In 1623 he was a Commissioner on the Justice Court. He married Sarah Cranston, daughter and heiress of Sir John of Cranstoun and was succeeded by his son John, who married Elizabeth Scott of Buccleuch.

Another son was Harry, and one of his granddaughters married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. William (17th C.) 3rd Lord, son of James, he succeeded his uncle John. In 1649 he was served heir to some of his grandfather William's lands. He was last of the family to own the 'Woollee' (i.e. Wolfelee) estate. He also held the superiority of lands in Rulewater. He accompanied Charles II south in 1651, was captured and imprisoned in the Tower of London. Before leaving he made a private arrangement with Gilbert Elliot, younger of Stobs (and including his father William) to sell his lands of Woollee and Stonedge, confirmed by his Commissioners in 1659 (when Sir Gilbert also receive Over and Nether Wells and Macksideshaw). He may have sold the lands of Denholm and Spittal to Sir Archibald Douglas in 1658, after his family had held them in feu for generations. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes in 1663 (e.g. £1000 in Southdean). He married Mary Leslie, daughter of 1st Earl of Leven; she is recorded in a deed of 1663. His children included James (the 4th Lord). Although his estates were seized, his wife and children were given an allowance by Cromwell. William (d.1726/7) son of James, he became 5th Lord Cranstoun. He was probably the Lord Cranston whose name heads the list of those on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. He married Jean, eldest daughter of William Kerr, 2nd Marquess of Lothian. They had 5 daughters and 7 sons, including James of Crailing, who became 6th Lord Cranstoun, and William Henry, who achieved some notoriety. William Henry (1714–52) 5th son of William, 5th Lord Cranstoun, and brother of James, the 6th Lord. He was thus ancestor of the family that had been important in Cavers and Rulewater. He was said to be unnatractive in appearance, short in stature and scarred by smallpox. While he was in the army he secretly married Anne Murray from Leith, who was a Catholic, but disowned her a year later after she gave birth to a daughter. His wife brought a court action against him, which she won. While this was ongoing, still married, he formed an attachment with Mary Blandy, a promising heiress from Henly-on-Thames. Their relationship forbidden by her family, Mary poisoned her father, perhaps with the help of William Henry, for which she was hanged in 1752. He fled to France and Belgium, where he died in miserable circumstances, perhaps through taking poison himself (also spelled 'Chranston', 'Craniston', 'Cranstone', 'Cranstoun', 'Cranstoune', 'Cranystoun', 'Crenstone' and 'Crenstoun').

the Cranstons (thu-kran-stinz) n. family that takes its name from Cranston in Midlothian (although Lanton was also formerly known as 'Cranston'). Elfric de Cranston is the first on record about 1170. The family owned land around Edinburgh and also in Roxburghshire. In particular, Sir Thomas received lands around Denholm in the early 15th century, and the family held them until purchased by the Douglases in the mid-17th century. The family failed in the direct male line and the heiress, Sarah, married Sir William, from another branch of the family, who became first Lord Cranstoun. It was he who was in charge of the force that ruthlessly hanged rievers in the early 17th century. After that the family had little local involvement, and the Lordship ended with the death of the 11th in 1813. There is a family tomb at Melrose Abbey. The family motto is 'thou shalt want before I want' – 'Then Tiviotdale came to wi speed, The sheriff brought the Douglas down, With Cranstane, Gledstane, gude at need, Baith Rule-water and Hawick town' [CPM], 'Johnstone and Maxwell also cam Their wooing skill to prove, And young Cranstoun, of Crailing, too, But he never told his love' [JTe] (spelled 'Cranstoun' in earlier documents).

Cranswat (kranz-waw') n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Gusbank, Hurklebuss', with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

crap (crap) n., poet. a crop – '... where there waur, on the other side o' the hedge, a fine crap o' new cut hay, put up in rucks' [AAH], 'Says the auld laird 'We'll hae nae crap This drookit year' ' [WL], 'For aa that I've sawn I've a guid crap gathered, The hervest has aye come roun' ' [WL] (not particularly Hawick).

cratur (krā'-ur) n., arch. creature – '... As flower, an' herb, an' leevin' cr'ature (Wi' doughty care), That crawl in earth, or soom in water, Or wing the air' [JoHa], 'Fleis an midges an bummies

. . . kittle craiters (mae ways as yin) . . . ' [ECS], 'He owned a bit land near the side o' the waiter, No worth tippence a year to ony puir craitur' [JCG], 'Eh! what a fuilish cratur, For little does she ken, She'll no be happy later, Wi' a' her bairnies gane' [IJ], '. . . Ye'll ken the creater ony place – It's our little Jock' [JT], 'As roon it ran wi stertan een, A waesome squeal the craiter gien' [DH], 'A wiry wee cratur and yauld. Wi' his bundle and shears At the guidwife he speirs Gin we're aa keepin' clear o' the cauld' [WL], an alcoholic drink – 'A drap o' the cratur, ye'll bring o' the auld, I'm bevering and growzing wi' terror and cauld' [JTe] (there are various spellings, including 'craitur', 'craiter', etc.).

craturie (krā'-ur-ee) n., poet. a small creature – '. . . and wha does he see, but a little, wee creaturie; a' clad i' green, and wi' lang hair, yellow as gowd, hingin' round its shoulders' [LHTB] (also written 'creaturie').

crave (krāv) v., arch. to beg, ask for, request by a court – 'Seeing the said James, her husband, was of late craved and required to pay the bygone rents . . . ' [PR1721].

craw (kraw) n. a crow or rook – 'We'll trust in Him wha feeds the craws, An hope He still will gie us plenty' [JoHa], 'There fairer seems the tunefu' race, Mair fair the very craw . . . ' [DA], 'Threi craws sut upon a waa . . . ' [T], '. . . And Back-Brae craws on the riggin' ' [DH], 'The craw coored ower the dry stane dyke . . . ' [WFC], v. to crow, caw, croak, boast, brag – 'And well this night may Robber's Law Take off his hat and loudly craw . . . ' [MP], 'E'en now I hear them crously crawin', I' the lum-head . . . ' [JoHa], '. . . becaus mine enimie desna crouslie craw ower me' [HSR], '. . . That this nicht, afore the coke craw, thou sallt disown me thrice' [HSR], '. . . she's been croose eneuch tae craw' [JEDM], 'We rise today, to-morrow fa', O'er those that's doon we need not craw' [TCh], 'He crawed and flappit ower the dyke, An' roosed the bees ayont the bike' [WFC], 'O' Juden Murray, ye craw and threep Like a struttin' cock on the midden heap' [WL].

Craw (kraw) n. (Crow) A.H. (19th C.) printer with the Hawick Express, eventually becoming a partner with James Dalgleish. He was secretary of the Golf Club for many years in the latter part of the 19th century, and also served as Club Captain. He was additionally a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Allan, and their children included: John (b.1640); Janet (b.1643), perhaps the husband of John Roger whose son John was born in 1674; and Robert (b.1644). In 1639 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Martin. George (18th C.) weaver who was living at Weensmoor in 1776. He married Mary Scott in 1774, the marriage being recorded in both Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes. His children included: James (b.1775); Archibald (b.1776); and George (b.1777). Helen 'Nellie' (18th/19th C.) member of the family from the Branxholme area. She told some of her family stories to James Grieve of Branxholme Park, including the connections with the 'Bonnie Lass o Branxholme'. Grieve wrote in 1821 that 'during her lucid intervals [she] was very intelligent'. She may have been the Helen (b.1763), daughter of James, or perhaps an earlier generation. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably the tenant farmer at Hawick Shiel mentioned in evidence given in 1767 about the former state of the Common; he apparently complained to Auld Falnash about their flocks being disturbed by the Hawick Town Herd when they encroached upon the Common. James (b.1656) son of William and Margaret Murray. He is recorded in the period 1690–93 as tenant of one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town, and $^2/_5$ in 1694–97. He is probably the James listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was later a tenant at Branxholme Town along with his brother Walter. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for a Grieve in 1698 and for James Storie (undermiller at Newmill) in 1700. In 1707 it is recorded that he was provided with the timber that he needed (presumably for building purposes). In 1707, 1708 and 1713 witnessed baptisms for Walter in Branxholme Town (probably his brother). In 1710 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, carrier in Branxholme Town. In 1712 both he and Walter were summoned to appear before the Hawick Session for breaking the Sabbath, his specific crime being that he gutted herring on Sunday evening 'thinking they would spile if lying ungutted until ye Monday'. His 'servant' John Riddell was also implicated, as well as William Wilson, servant to Alexander Thomson, Whitchesters. This being their first offence, they were let off with a mere rebuke. He is probably the James who was in arrears for rental of Branxholme Town in the period 1713–18. He is probably the James who in 1719 witnessed a baptism for tailor James Scott. He was still renting in 1725. In 1715–24 he was witness to several baptisms for the Scoon family, also tenants at Branxholme Town.

He was probably also the James in Branxholme Town who witnessed the baptism of John Wilson's son William in 1705 (suggesting that Wilson's wife Margaret Craw was his sister or other close relative). In 1720 he and Walter witnessed a baptism for Robert Scoon (also in Branxholme Town) and he (along with Walter Scott) also witnessed a baptism for Walter Scoon. In 1723 he appealed to the Hawick Session to provide support for Archibald Riddell, who had moved to Roberton, but had no income. He and Walter witnessed baptisms in 1725 for Andrew Wilson (servant to Falnash) and for William Mitchellhill in Branxholmtown. In 1728 the rental arrears he was owed was lessened, but in 1729 he was made to pay his neighbours for encroaching on their lands. He married Marion Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1702); and Marion (b.1704), who married Adam Hogg in 1725. His wife Marion is recorded on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery, stating that she died in 1707, aged 42. He secondly married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Mary (b.1710); William (b.1711); Bessie (b.1713); Janet (b.1717); Francis (b.1721); and Robert (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Robert Scoon and John, also tenant in Branxholme Town (perhaps his brother), in 1713 were Elders James Gray and Andrew Riddell, and in 1723 were John Craw and John Wilson, tenants in Branxholme Town. Other children that were probably his (with no mother's name given) are James (b.1715) and John (b.1719). He may be the James who was recorded leasing half of Branxholme Town farm in 1735; it seems probable that he was son of a previous tenant in Branxholme Town. Probably the same James was also in arrears for rent on Branxholme Town in 1742. James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. He was also recorded in Whithope in 1764. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Janet (b.1761), Helen (b.1763), Bessie (b.1764), and James (b.1766). James (18th/19th C.) mason in Roberton Parish. He was living at Harden in 1798 and 1800. His wife was Helen Scott. Their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Mary (b.1796); John (b.1798); Scott (b.1800); Walter (b.1803); Elizabeth (b.1806); James (b.1809); and Thomas (b.1811). John (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Branxholmetown. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for James, who was also tenant at Branxholme Town (and probably his brother or other close relative). In 1712 he was 'fowler in Branxholm toun' when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, younger in Weens. In 1724 he married Joan (or Jean) Shiel in an 'irregular marriage' at Carham, and afterwards refused to give anything to the poor box as a fine. It was suggested that Joan was from Kelso, but alternatively it is possible this was the same as Jean, daughter of Thomas Shiel, tenant in Todshawhill, related by marriage to the 'Bonnie Lass o Branxholme'. He was surely related to James and Walter, who were also in Branxholmtown at about the same time; in 1725 they both witnessed the baptism of his son William, who may have been 'Blinnd Wullie'. He replaced Walter as tenant at Branxholme Town in 1726. He could be the John whose widow was recorded in rental arrears for Branxholme Town in 1740–42. John (18th C.) married Bessie Little in Roberton in 1758. He was living at Chapelhill in 1761 and Whitecleughside in 1763. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: James (b.1759); Walter (b.1761); and Mary (b.1763). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Bedrule according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant at Branxholme Town, who is also described as a 'servant' there. He was recorded as tenant 'in Branxhomtoun' in baptismal records of 1707, 1708 and 1710. According to the Buccleuch records he was renting part of Branxholme Town in 1708 and was in arrears in the period 1712–17; at that time he was renting $\frac{1}{5}$ the farm with John Wilson. Also in 1712, along with his brother James, he was summoned to appear before the session for breaking the Sabbath; the offence involved transporting a load of herring along with William Wilson (servant at Whitchesters), arriving at Hawick on the Sunday morning. He and James witnessed baptisms in 1720 for Robert Scoon (in Branxholme Town) and in 1725 for William Mitchellhill (also in Branxholme Town). He was still renting part of Branxholme Town in 1725, but was replaced by John Craw in 1726. He and James witnessed a baptism in 1725 for Andrew Wilson (servant to Falnash). He is probably the Walter in Branxholme Town whose daughter 'Margrie' (i.e. Marjory or Margaret) was baptised in Roberton in 1717. He is probably the Walter recorded in 1746 still being in arrears for rent from Branxholme Town from 1726. He married Janet Hastie in 1706 and had children William (b.1707), James (b.1708), William (again, b.1710), John (b.1713), Margaret (b.1715), Francis (b.1717), Mary (b.1720) and Martha (b.1724). 'Margrie' (b.1717), baptised in Roberton Parish, may also have been is child. The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and James in Branxholme Town (probably his brother), in 1708 were Robert Graham and James again, in 1710 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and William Ogilvie in Branxholme, and in 1713 were James (again) and James Gray (tenant in Whitlaw). Walter (18th C.) shepherd at Fulton. An old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard recorded the deaths of his young daughter Isobel and young sons Thomas and Hector in the early 1780s. William (1618/9–71) buried in Borthwick Waas Cemetery, where he had one of the earliest readable gravestones, with his name spelled 'Crou'. He is described as a 'guner', with the back of the stone depicting a gun, a dog and 2 birds (although none of this now legible); this presumably meant that he was a gamekeeper, perhaps on the Branxholme estate. He was surely related to the later John, who was recorded as a 'fowler' in 1712. His wife Margaret Murray died in 1707, aged 77. He is said to have been a gamekeeper for Buccleuch; a story is told of his struggle to get his cottage repaired, so he dragged a fallen tree in front of the Duke's carriage and when accosted said 'a pity a Craw couldna take a bit stick to its nest withoot being quarrelled for't', which eventually resulted in him getting a new cottage (however, the same story is also told, more credibly, about the much later 'Blinnd Wullie', who was probably his descendant). James (b.1756) was his son. He is buried along with James' wife Marion Scott. William 'Wullie' or 'Blinnd Wullie' (18th C.) son of a Branxholm gamekeeper, and said to be descendant of Jean the Ranter. He may be the William, son of John and Joan Shiel, born in Hawick Parish in 1725. He was described in the diary of James Grieve of Branxholme Park, as recounted in Sir Walter Scott's 'The Antiquary'. At one time he carried all the bread from Hawick out to Branxholme Park, and "laid the town of Hawick under contribution for bawbees, and he knew the history of every individual'. He was blind, but said to have the gift of second sight. For example, he is meant to have predicted the time that the Highland host of 1745 passed Branxholme Cross. He produced rhyming couplets about local families, and some of his poetry was said to have been published, but lost. He wandered the Borders, walking with the aid of 2 sticks. He had the free use of a house at Branxholme Town, and spent much time in Hawick, where he would make scurrilous rhymes about people until they gave him a small coin to go away! In order to get his cottage repaired he is meant to have dragged some tree branches across the road in front of the carriage of the Duke and his Chamberlain and said 'Aw daursay it's come to a puir time o' day when a Craw canna get a grain to build a nest wi', for a the trees there is at Branxholme' (however, the same story is told of an earlier William, probably an ancestor). His portrait hangs in the Museum and he is buried in Borthwick Waas. When once locked in to his cottage (for some misdemeanour) he apparently climbed up to the joists himself, after which the cottage was known as 'The Spider's House'. When 'Rob the Naig' (the Beadle) sat next to him in Hawick Kirk, he is said to have uttered 'The likes o' this I never saw, A 'Naig' set doon to herd a 'Craw' ' [RM]. William C. (19th C.) printer and publisher from Dumfries, he was proprietor of the Hawick Express for a few years towards the end of the 19th century (formerly spelled 'Cra', 'Crae', 'Crou', 'Crow', 'Crowes' etc.).

the Crawbrae (thu-kraw-brā) n. former name for part of Hallrule farm. In the mid-19th century workmen making a quarry there discovered 2 Roman bronze coins of the emperor Maximinus.

Crawbyres (kru-bīrz) n. area around Crowbyres Cottages and Crowbyres Bridge. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in the 1860s. There was once a curling pond near there. There may also have been a mission set up near here to cater to the navvies working on the railway about 1860. Near here a line of boulders was visible, marking the division between 2 layers of glacial till – '. . . While Greenbraehead (in older time Priestcrown), To meek Crowbyres sends the signal down' [WNK] (note the usual pronunciation puts accent on the second syllable).

Crawbyres Brig (kru-bīrz-brig) n. bridge across the Slitrig just outside town on the Newcastleton road. It is a grade C listed building – 'In through the knowes o' bracken That huddle roun' Winnington Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That saiddles Crawbyres Brig?' [WL].

Crawbyreshaugh (kru-bīrz-hawch) n. Crowbyreshaugh, former name for part of the East

Mains of Hawick, presumably a flat piece of land by Crowbyres. It was recorded in 1822 when William Scott in Milsington complained to the Duke of Buccleuch over interference with his rights of 'tack' of the lands.

Crawbyres Pond (kru-bīrz-pond) n. Crowbyres Pond, a curling pond on the opposite side of the Slitrig from Crowbyres Cottages. It was opened in December 1890, with the first stone thrown by ex-Provost Milligan. It can be seen in a photograph of 1902. Whitlaw Gardens is there now.

Crawdenford (craw-din-furd) n. another name for the place on the Fodderlee Burn also known as the Sclaterford.

Crawfieldsteed (craw-feeld-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Crawfeildsteid'. It is unclear where these lands were.

craw-fit (kraw-fi') n., arch. crowfoot, plant of the ranunculus family with white or yellow flowers.

Crawflat (craw-flaw') n. former lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was listed as being valued at 14 shillings. Note that there is a Crow Sike just to the east of Steele Road, which may be associated.

craw-flooer (kraw-floor) n., arch. crow-flower, common name for the hyacinth – 'The swift-pinioned swallows hae left the auld shed; The craw-flower and blue-bell sae bonnie are dead . . . ' [TCh].

Crawford (craw-furd) n. Adam (15th C.) received 1 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He may have been a local man. It is possible that the same Adam was killed by Robert Scott of Whitchester; Scott was allowed to 'compone' for the crime at the Justiceaire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Charles (16th/17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott of Harden, who was in 1617 among those who Lady Bonnington complained had harassed her family. He was decribed being 'in Kirkhoupe'. James (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787. He could be the same farmer who was later at Appletreehall. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreehall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He is probably the James who was married to Janet Elliot and whose daughter Janet was born in Wilton Parish in 1784. Perhaps the same James was recorded at Clarilaw in 1790 and secondly married Nelly Armstrong, with children including John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). James 'Jimmy' (20th C.) band leader of the Drums and Fifes. Jessie E. nee Burnet (1900–73) born at Newton Cottage, Barnes, near Stobs, daughter of shepherd John, with her maternal grandfather being blacksmith Robbie Davidson. She moved to Denholm with her mother in 1922. She was a teacher in Lilliesleaf and then in Denholm. She was known as an authority on local history and traditions, contributed to the Scottish National Dictionary and acted as Registrar for Denholm. She gave an account of early stories from her life and gathered from her family, relating to Appletreehall, Stobs and Cogsmill in particular; a version was published in the Archæological Society Transactions. She married William G. Crawford (who died in 1967) and they lived at Ruberslea in Denholm. They are buried in Denholm Cemetery. She was known as 'Miss Jess Burnet' for much of her life, because of her time as a teacher. John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Hownam in 1702, the couple both being from Ashkirk. Their children included Robert (b.1703); and Christian (b.1706). He may be the John 'late tenant in Draydian', buried in Ashkirk Cemetery, who died in 1744, aged 78; his son Robert, tenant in Branxholme Town was buried beside him, the inscription saying that he died in 1767, aged '363 years'. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes in 1776 and 1779. His children included Alison (b.1776) and Janet (b.1779). Kevin 'Beak' Denholm resident and long-time supporter of the Denholm Baa. Mary (19th/20th C.) recorded as 'mistress' at Ashkirk School in Slater's 1903 directory. Matthew (16th C.) farmer at Weens. 'Mathew Crawfurdis dwelling hous and zaird' are listed in the 1562 Baronial dispute for lands in Feu-Rule. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as chaplain and notary for a charter for lands in Hassendean Parish, granted by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. He was thus presumably chaplain of Hassendean or a nearby kirk. In 1554 he was the notary for an instrument granting an acre of land in the Barony of Cavers to Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry and for the following letter of reversion; he was there described as a Persbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It seems likely he was the same man as 'Sir Patrick Crawfurd', who was notary for a transaction in Selkirk in 1562 and was the 'vicar perpetual' of Longnewton who died in 1565. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably in the Branxholme area. He married Helen Martin and their children included: Marion (b.1640). She is probably the Marion who had an unnamed child with John Paterson in 1673. Robert (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Robert (c.1695–1732) minor Border poet, son of Patrick and descended from the Crawfords of Drumsoy. He was a friend of Allan Ramsay and William Hamilton. His pastoral poems 'Tweedside' and 'The Bush aboon Traquair' remained popular throughout the 18th century. Robert (d.1767) son of John who was tenant in Dryden in Ashkirk Parish. He was tenant in Branxholme Town. His headstone in the burial ground is marked 'Here lyes ... Robert Crawfurd ... died Sept 7 1767 aged 363 years'; this is presumably a mason's error for '63'. Probably the same resident of Branxholmtown was one of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. Robert (d.bef. 1816) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). In 1792 he was mentioned as husband of Betty Weens, who was found guilty of stealing a shirt, but absolved. He married Betty Weens, who died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: Mary (b.1773); Elizabeth (b.1775); Christian (b.1777); Janet (b.1781); and Robert (b.1786), who was probably the joiner. The witnesses in 1773 were John and Adam, who were surely related. Robert (b.1785/6) joiner on the Loan, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was probably son of wright Robert. He may be the 'Mr. Crawford' whose piece of land is shown on the right side of the top of the Loan on Wood's 1824 map. He is recorded at about 44 Loan in 1841 and 1851. He must have also worked as an undertaker, being recorded as such in 1857. His wife was Margaret. Thomas (d.c.1680) merchant in Edinburgh, referred to as 'junioris' and 'merchant burgess of the said town'. In 1681 his son Thomas inherited his lands of 'exterioibus et interioribus de Slaidhills, superioribus et inferioribus de Harwood' (i.e. Outer and Inner Slaidhill and Over and Nether Harwood) in the Parish of Hawick. It is unclear how he acquired these lands. He could be the Thomas who was admitted a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1654, and whose son Thomas was admitted in 1675. Thomas (17th C.) son and heir of Thomas, merchant in Edinburgh. He was served heir to his father's lands of Slaidhill and Harwood in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas. In 1683 he was served heir to his grandfather's 300 merlklands of Slaidhill and Harwood in 1681. Presumably his father had already died by then. Rev. William (1682–1737) minister of Wilton Parish. He was born in Kelso, graduated from Edinburgh University in 1700 and was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery. In 1711 he argued for appointment of ministers by election rather than presentation. He was called to Wilton in 1712, ordained in the middle of the following year, and remained until his death. At the very end of 1712 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Crozier (weaver in Clarilaw) and was recorded as 'preacher'. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew Scott in Hawick in 1722. In 1723 his servitor John Wilson accused a Selkirk couple of stealing clothes. He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1730. A copy of his lectures on the Catechism, apparently from 1709, was donated to the Museum in 1860. He published 'Dying thoughts in three parts' (1738, reprinted in Hawick in 1814), 'Christ the Power of God, and the wisdon of God, a sermon' (1731), 'A short Manual against the Infidelity of this age' (1734), 'Zion's Traveller, or the Soul's Progress to Heaven' (1743), a 2 volume 'The Works of William Crawford' (1748) and a 'Short Practical Catechism, to be answered by the Young People in the Congregation of Wilton' (1834). The last of these must have been very familiar to a generation of Wilton school children. He was apparently of a delicate constitution and described as 'a person of great modesty, piety and worth' and beloved by his parishioners. It is also sometimes suggested that he set up the first Sunday School in Scotland in the 1730s (although this may be a confusion with Samuel Charters half a century later). He married Helen Riddle, daughter of the Laird of Muislie (i.e. Muselee) in Edinburgh in 1716 and she died in 1751, in her 68th year. Their children included David, who died in 1720, aged 2. Note that there is some disagreement about the years of his birth and death. The inscription on his monument in Wilton Kirkyard contained a long panegyric in Latin. William (18th C.) gardener at Wells in 1778, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot. His name is given as Walter in 1779 (formerly 'Craford', 'Craufoord', 'Crawfoord', 'Crawfurd' and variants).

Crawgill (craw-gil) n. Henry (15th C.) listed among a large number of men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is given as 'henrici crawgil', but the surname is otherwise unknown locally.

Crawhill (kraw-hil) n. Crowhill, former name for an area in Wilton around Crow Hill. The general area later became known as Burngrove and then Bucklands. It was farmed by the Scotts of Burnhead, and there was also a corn-mill there. The lands there may also have been known as 'Crawhall'. It is probably the 'Crawlawhill' recorded in 1535 when there is a revocation of the charter giving superiority of lands in Hassendean, together with Appletreehall and Midshiels, to James Lundie; instead they passed back to the Homes. In 1611 the same lands are resigned by Philip Scott of Dryhope to Alexander Cranston. Robert Scott of Falnash was living there in 1733 and James Scott in 1738. Mrs. Betty Scott paid the window tax for 11 windows there in 1748. John Scott was there in 1751–64 and William Beattie in 1780. William Scott of Burnhead owned the lands (along with Appletreehall Townfoot) in 1788 and still according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Document of 1762 and 1765 describes a dispute over the sale of 'Easter Crawhill, commonly called Easter Burnfoot', between Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and William Scott of Burnhead. Thomas Laidlaw was a labourer there in 1799. The lands were owned by William Scott Watson in about 1874. Rev. James Scott, minister at Perth and great antiquarian, was born here, son of Robert Scott of Falnash. Stockingmaker John Turnbull and family are recorded at 'Crowhill Pk.' in 1841 – 'One day I was fishing at bonnie Crawhill, An' trying my best twa three trouts to kill' [UB] (it is 'Crauhill' in 1611, 'Crahill' in 1733 and 'Crowhill' in 1764; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Craw Hill (kraw-hil) n. small hill between Bucklands and the Coille, which formerly gave its name to the general area. It reaches a height of 139 m. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as a small wooded hill.

the Craw Hill (thu-kraw-hil) n. popular name for hill by Wilton Dean, probably the one adjoining Overhall Road. It contains an extensive earthwork, about 90 × 50 m (partially destroyed by quarrying), as well as a smaller enclosure to the south, measuring about 33 × 27 m.

Crawhill Mill (kraw-hil-mil) n. former corn-mill in the area once known as 'Crawhill', being further down the Teviot than Burnfoot Mill, and roughly where Bucklands now stands. In the early 18th century it was tenanted by James Scott, who later moved to Hawick Mill.

Crawknowe (kraw-now) n. former lands in Ashkirk Parish. There are deeds relating to the lands among the papers of the Elliots of Minto. George Waugh was there in 1579/80 and was 'Geordie Vauch in Crawis Know' in 1586/7. Robert Scott of Headshaw had a charter for the lands in 1605. In 1643 the lands were valued, along with Headshaw and Clews, at £760 10s. In 1691 they were inherited along with Clews in Ashkirk Parish by Mary Scott, brother of John of Headshaw. There were 2 poor people listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It was included (along with Headshaw, Dryden and 'Clews') in lands ratified by royal charter to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1705. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Gilbert Elliot from his father in 1778. In 1780 'Infield Crawknows' was listed among the lands in Dryden and Clews whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot. It is probably the 'Crawnous' where shoemaker Walter Young is recorded in 1788 and where James Young was in 1794. The name was later used for the house that held the village blacksmiths, recently converted to a pub. John Matthewson was living there in 1868 (it is 'Craw know' in 1579/80, transcribed 'Crawknok' in 1605, 'Crawknows' in 1643, 'Cranknow' in 1691 and 'Crawknow' in 1705).

Craw Knowe (kraw-now) n. Crow Knowe, hill to the north-east of Limekiln Edge, reaching a height of 427 m.

Craw Knowe (kraw-now) n. Crow Knowe, small hill in Liddesdale, just over the Liddel from Riccarton Mill (note that this is not far from the other hill of the same name).

craw road (kraw-rōd) n., arch. the direct way, as the crow flies – 'He got . . . shelter in a garret for three days and three nights, after which he took the craw road to Stirling' [RM].

Crawshope (kraw-sup) n. former lands in the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield, recorded in 1621, 1634, 1653, 1661, 1663 and 1693. It is included as part of the farm of Braidhaugh in the 1718 survey of properties of Scott of Buccleuch, but it is unclear which part corresponded to Crawshope. 'Braidhaugh and Crawshope, lying in Tiviotdalehead' were listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755 (it is 'Crowishoip' in 1634, 'Crawishope' in 1661, 'Crowishoipe' in 1663 and 'Crawship' in 1718).

Crawshup (kraw-shup) n. Jenny (19th C.) credulous individual from Hawick, often the butt of practical jokes, particularly an elaborate one involving her potential marriage to Blind Jock. She had been married to a Mr. Brown, became hen-keeper for Mr. Pringle, Schoolmaster, and worked at Wilton Mills (the name could be 'Kershope' or she may have been associated with the lands of Crawshope).

Craw's Moss (krawz-mos) n. Crow's Moss, small boggy area on the Minto estate. It was opened as a marl pit in 1755 and used by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to fertlise 200 acres, possibly the first done locally. In 1780 there was a description of the lands of Minto Muir Parks, describing that 'Crowsmoss' was part of the northern boundary, adjacent to 'Walrigpark' and near the road connecting Lilliesleaf and Jedburgh. It is probably associated with the modern Crowbrae Plantation.

Craw Sike (kraw-sīk) n. small stream to the east of Steele Road in Liddesdale. It runs into Bridgehouse Burn.

Crawstruthers (kraw-stru-thurz) n. part of Hawick Common Moor, lying near Wulliestruther and Reedwell Knowes, but whose precise location is no longer known. One possibility is that it was part of the boggy area which became Wulliestruther Loch after damming in the early 19th century. It was mentioned in depositions given in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common, and there it was stated that the road to Lineart Moss lay on its north side (the name derives from Old Scots 'struther', meaning a marsh, with the prefix probably suggesting crows or perhaps a sheep-fold from the Gaelic).

creat (kree-a') pp., arch. created, appointed – '...John Gledstaines of Hillisland, and John Scott, smith, were admittit and creat Burgesses and gave thair Burgess Oaths' [BR1692], 'The said day Michael Trumble was admitt and creat burgess upon the accompt that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple' [BR1714].

creater see cratur

creein-trough (kree-in-trof) n., arch. a trough used for crushing barley – 'At Singdean we are shown a rather remarkably home-made-looking spade for cutting foot-drins; and the shepherd has an old 'creeing-trough,' for husking bear or barley' [BNC1889].

creel (kreel) n. a basket, especially a wicker basket used by anglers for carrying fish or by gardeners for collecting potatoes – ''Tis thought they ken the verra creel O' Lean Yeddie Gibson' [T], 'Wull has gotten a creel like a muckle big kist, And swears he will filled – let us a' dae oor best' [UB], 'If saugh wands are not at hand to enable him to engage in his favourite recreation of making children's baskets and tatoe creels ...' [WNK], 'Come wi' ye're rods, come wi' ye're creels, When ye ha'e time for sportin' ...' [TCh], a basket worn on the back for carrying produce – '...as he just went out with graip and creel to his father's tata field ...' [RM], '...an A thocht the sowl wad take a dwam, an kilt owre, – banyels, creel, an aa thegither' [ECS] (from Old French or Gaelic).

creeper (kree-pur) n. a device in weaving that keeps the cloth moving through the machine. Formerly also an alternative name for a 'creepin cloth', onto which 'cardings' were connected, while it was continually in motion, to feed the carded wool into the 'slubbin billy'; before the mid-1800s this job was done by children, who worked long hours, and whose fingers would sometimes bleed as a result of the repeated action of the threads and the roughness of the cloth of the creeper.

creepie (kree-pee) n., arch. a low stool, once ubiquitous throughout Scotland, the usual design having 2 flat sides with notches cut to make legs and with the top overhanging on the other 2 sides. They were used at home and also in church until part way through the 18th century – '...or sat on the stools or 'creepies', which they either brough with them each Sunday or set aside in the church' [JJV], 'She sat on a creepie a' huddled thegither, Wi' her haunds roond her knwwes claspit in ither' [BM1901].

creepit (kree-pi', -pee') pp. crept – 'Sae or twa towmonts by had creepit, The gear and Cash accounts he keepit' [RDW], '...Then quietly creepit into kirk, Wi'oot ae sound or ca' ' [WFC] (also written 'creepeet'; cf. crap, which is the past tense and cruppen the past participle).

creeple (kree-pul) n., arch. a cripple – 'John Rae creeple in ye toun had a child baptized called Elizabeth . . . ' [PR1708], 'Paid to Walter Scott, beddall, for taking away creples £0 3s 6d, and he was ordered to take ye creeples out of ye toun' [PR1711], 'To a creple that did truble us no more, 2s' [PR], '. . . ye Box was much prejudiced both by hiring horse for taking away of creeples . . . and other indigents in ye toun and landward part of ye parish' [PR1721] (there are spelling variants; what exactly was done with these unfortunates is unclear).

creesh (kreesh) n., arch. grease, fat – 'Gang coole i' the same creesh ye hette, Or haith, ye'se rue youre raide' [JTe], 'It wad take a vast o sowsame, a richt claat o creesh, ti cleester a cloor gotten that gait!' [ECS], 'Snot that cannl; it's aa gaun ti creesh – there's a waister on't' [ECS], v. to grease, oil, 'ti creesh someone's loof' means to pay or bribe someone – 'For, by mysel', gin that he dreads yer puirish, An' hasna wherewitha' to creesh his loof wi' . . . ' [JoHa].

creeshy (kree-shee) adj., arch. greasy – 'An' wabster lads now leave the loom, An' doff their creeshie claithin' ' [JoHa], '. . . or clairty wui lifty glaar an creeshy glet threh fooel seidaer an brander' [ECS], n., arch. a greasy person, especially a mill-worker.

Creighton (crī'-in) n. Penny nee Halfpenny (1934/5–2020) from a family with close Hawick connections, she grew up in the Govan area of Glasgow. She landed the job of driving the Beatles around when they were in the city on tour. In 1967 she moved to Hawick with her partner and son Cameron. They lived on Ivanhoe Terrace, Hassendean Court and Marmion Road. She worked as a telephonist at Pringle's, later joining their public relations team. In 1981 she started working for Borders Police at Wilton Hill. In 1988 she was on the night shift when calls started coming in about the Lockerbie air disaster, and she coordinated the emergency services single-handedly in the early stages of the response. The events of the next few traumatic days, including documenting the personal effects of victims, left a lasting impression on her and she retired from the police in 1993. From about 2000 she lived in Leadhills, near her son. She died in Biggar.

the Crescent (thu-kre-sin') n. original name for Slitrig Crescent, and popularly used long after the name was officially changed to distinguish it from other crescents (also sometimes just 'Crescent').

Crescentfit (kre-sin'-fi') n. Crescentfoot, name used for a while for houses at the east end of Backdamgate, e.g. in the 1861 census.

Cresswell (kres-wel) n. former lands in Hassendean Parish, with precise location uncertain, but approximately corresponding to later farm of Wester Clarilaw. Around the 1220s these lands were granted by Christina (daughter of William son of Adam of Hassendean) to Hugh, brewer of Hassendean. The land was held for a penny, to be paid annually at Pentecost. It is also possible that this was the 'Croswaldef' which was granted by Walter of Berkeley to William, son of Richard in about 1190 (although it has been suggested this was a different place in Kirkcudbrightshire). 'Symund de Cresseuelle', who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, could have been associated with these lands, and may have been a descendant of Hugh. The lands may be connected with the surname 'Carswell' (perhaps even leading to the local name 'Kersel'), which may have originated even earlier in a place of the same name in Renfrewshire; however, there are Crosswells elsewhere, and it may be that the name was transplanted between some of them by the same family. One of the earliest known is Alexander 'de Cressewell' who witnessed a charter at Loch Kindar in about 1198. 'Rogerus filius Simonis de Cressewell' and 'Robertus le Serjuant de Cressewell' are recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, suggesting that the place of the same name there (on the coast between Amble and Ashington) may be connected with the same family; they held the Northumberland estate and were still a prominent Northumberland family into the 19th century. As another example, William 'de Cressewell' was Chancellor of Moray from about 1294 and precentor there later. The name was still used for the Hassendean lands in about 1621 when Gavin Turnbull had a charter for them from the Commendator of Melrose; he paid the yearly sum of 13s 4d. It was listed along with the lands of Clerkcroft in 1640 when the superiority was inherited by Thomas Hamilton, 3rd Earl of Haddington. The lands of 'Clerkcroft Kersual' are recorded in 1670, when they were still part of the Lordship of Melrose, and were inherited in the same year by Charles Hamilton, Earl of Haddington. There is a 1767 inventory of writs belonging to William Scott of Burnhead for the 'Lands formerly called Kerswill of Hassendean now called Clarilaw' (it is 'Cressewelle' in the 1220s 'Kerswell' in about 1620 and 'Kerswell' in 1634, 1640 and 1670).

Cresswell (kres-wel) n. Adam see Adam Kersel. Robert (13th C.) listed in 1296 in an English document with the names of men dewlling in Scotland whose servants were to be removed from their lands in Northumberland. Many of the other names were from Roxburghshire or nearby. He was listed in 1296 as a Scotsman holding the lands of 'Heburne' in Northumberland; his name is given there as 'Roberti de Cressewelle'. He was captured at Dunbar in the same year and imprisoned at 'Hardelaghe' (i.e. Harlech) Castle. He may well have been a close relative of Simon. In 1303/4 he had his lands in England returned to him; he had acquired those from John 'Daguillon' and his wife Joanna. Perhaps the same Robert 'de Creswelle' had his horse appraised in Berwick in 1311/2. Note that an earlier Robert Cresswell, recorded in 1248, was an English knight. Simon (13th C.) recorded in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was son of 'Roberti de Gresewell' and gave lands in 'Grescewell' to the Priory of Tynemouth. His name is also written 'Kercewell' and 'Cressewell'. These were presumably lands in Cresswell in Woodhorn Parish in Northumberland. Nevertheless, it seems likely he was a direct ancestor of (or even the same man as) the Roxburghshire Simon of 40 years later. 'Rogerus filius Simonis de Cressewell' is on the asszie roll of Northumberland in 1279 is surely his son. John 'de Cresswel', who owned a free tenement in 'Rothewell' is also mentioned in 1256 and presumably related. Simon (13th C.) recorded as 'Symund de Cresseuelle' when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His lands were in Roxburghshire and could be the place of that name in Hassendean Parish. His seal bears an 8-rayed figure and the words 'S'SYMONIS D'CRESVILE'. Another swearer of fealty in 1296, David, of the same designation but in the county of Lanark, may have been related. In 1300 he was 'Simone de Cresseville', when he had his lands restored to him. Another potential relative is Robert 'de Cresswelle', who is also mentioned in 1296 and is recorded in 1303/4, having his lands in Northumberland restored. William (12th/13th C.) witness in about 1200 to a renewal of lands and rights in Hownam and Mow to Melrose Abbey. Probably the same William witnessed 2 other documents for Melrose Abbey in about the 1210s. It is unclear if he was connected to the local Cresswell lands.

the Crib (thu-krib) n. area just north of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley, with Crib Sike passing through it and Crib Head to the north.

the Crib Burn (thu-krib-burn) n. small stream on the north side of the Hermitage valley near Braidlie. It rises on Cauldcleuch Head and joins the Barley Burn to become the Braidlie Burn.

Crib Heid (krib-heed) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, just to the north of Lairhope. There is a linear earthwork there, stretching at least 160 m, from the deep gully at the head of Crib Sike to a hollow that drains down to Philhope Loch.

Crib Law see the Crib Law o Craik

the Crib Law o Craik (thu-krib-law-ō-krāk) n. hill just to the north-west of Craik village in the upper Borthwick valley. It reaches a height of 424 m (1,389 ft) and contains a fire tower. A forest walk leads from Craik village to its summit. The hill has a fairly conical form, but this is now obscured by forestation. It was formerly in Selkirkshire, until the boundary was moved to the north (also called just 'Crib Law'; there is another hill of the same name in the Lammermuirs).

Crichton (krī'-in) n. Alexander (15th C.) listed as a witness in 1464/5 to the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He is recorded there as 'Alexandro Crechtoune'. Perhaps the same Alexander witnessed a transumpt for the Swintons in 1462. Alexander (d.1588) Rector of Abbotrule in 1539. He was also recorded as Parson of Abbotrule when he was witness to a document of the Homes in 1552 and another charter confirming transfer of the lands of Harden in 1559 (although this may be 1550). In 1556 he was 'rector' of Abbotrule when he witnessed another document for Alexander Lord Home. Also in 1555 Alexander 'Creychton' brought an action against 12 Turnbulls for spoliation of his glebe lands. He probably served the Parish until the time of the Reformation. He was recorded being 'at the horne' in 1562. He may be related to the later Rev. Alexander. Rev. Alexander (d.1605) minister of Abbotrule up until 1605 when the parsonage and vicarage of that parish is recorded being presented to Joseph Tennant. He probably held the position since about 1595 when John Bonar was translated to Girton. It is possible he was directly related to the earlier Alexander (but is unlikely to be the same man, who was meant to have died in 1588). Daniel (b.c.1785) gardener at Minto House. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Catherine. David of Cranston Riddell (d.bef. 1485) Keeper of Edinburgh Castle and Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He held a lease of the King's lands of Catslack in 1460. He was granted lease of the Crown lands of Montberger, Catslack and Blackgrain (in Yarrow) in 1480. He married Margaret Shaw and was succeeded by his son Patrick. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. George of Cairns (d.1454), 1st Earl of Caithness, eldest son of Stephen of Cairns. He was Sheriff of Linlithgowshire and was later Lord High Admiral of Scotland and Keeper of Stirling Castle. In about 1425 he was granted the lands of Borthwickshiels by his father-in-law Sir William Douglas of Strathbrock (whose daughter's name is unknown). In 1433/4 he sold half of these lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn; he was then referred to as 'of Blackness'. He confirmed this with another charter in 1444, in which he granted all of Borthwickshiels to Ker. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Borthwick of that Ilk, widow of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. He was succeeded by his son James (despite serious disputes between father and son). He also had a daughter, Janet, who married Robert, 2nd Lord Maxwell. James of Cranston Riddell (16th C.) son of Sir James and Janet Beaton, who became wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1540 he succeded to the lands of Montbenger, Blackgrain and Catslack (in Yarrow). In 1550 he leased the lands of Cranston Riddell, Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain for 19 years. This was with the consent of his curators, William Scott of Kirkurd and Walter Scott of Synton. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johanne de Creichtoun' in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Many of the other witnesses were local men. Sir Patrick of Cranston Riddell (15th C.) son of David. He succeeded his father as Master Ranger of Tweed in 1485. He was also Keeper of Edinburgh Castle. He leased the Crown lands of Catslack, Montbenger, and Blackgrain until at least 1510. His son and heir was James of Cranston Riddell and he had other sons, David, Robert and William. William (b.1829/30) from Perth, he was a bookseller in Hawick. He became a member of the Archæological Society in 1857. He was living at 32 High Street in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included John B., Isobel F. and Margaret (spelled 'Crechtone', 'Creichtoun' and variants; see also Creighton).

cricket (kri-ki') n. sport, played with a bat and ball, with 11 players on each side, popular throughout the Commonwealth countries as well as on Buccleuch Road. The game was introduced into Hawick around 1844 by English textile workers, including Val Godfrey, Thomas Esplin, Henry and Alfred Hunt, Joe Stafford, Jack (or John) and Henry Turvill, Sam Brown, Charles Coltman, Charlie Bramber and William Newbury, with 2 of the first Hawick-born players being Jim Fiddes and Dandy Henderson. It was played informally, particularly on the Brewery Haugh and the Upper Haugh, and originally bowling was under-hand. Another important instigator was Thomas Rawlinson, who came to work in Hawick from Yorkshire in about 1849. Three teams were formed in 1849, Hawick, Western Star and Wilton. The Hawick club was reorganised at a meeting in the Printer's Close, by the apprentice law clerks there. The first game was the last Saturday in July (when the first case of cholera occurred). Other local teams included Albert and St. Cuthbert's. Hawick amalgamated with the local Englishmen in 1850 to become Hawick Teviotdale, and then amalgamated again with Wilton (perhaps in 1859). They were gifted Buccleuch Park in 1860 and have been there ever since. The first match between Hawick and another town may have been against Langholm in 1860. An M.C.C. team visited Hawick in 1904, captained by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. A book, 'History of the game of cricket in Hawick' was written by John Scott in 1889.

cried (crId) pp., arch. to be cried means to have one's name read out in church as an announcement of a forthcoming wedding, to have one's banns read. The local tradition was that the name was read on 3 separate occasions, and it was considered unlucky for the woman to attend church those days – 'Ther names'll be cried i Sunday' [ECS] (see cry and cries; names-gaein-in).

the Crimean War (thu-krī-mee-in-wawr) n. war of 1854–56 with Britain, France and Turkey fighting to stop Russia controlling the Dardanelles. A story is told of a naval engineer from Hawick touring Sabastopol after the siege there ended in 1855, and finding a Common-Riding bill pinned up to a door there. A bonfire was lit at the Tower Knowe in celebration of victory, nearly setting fire to one of the houses. This would be the last bonfire there. The hillside at Gala law was also set on fire, and took many years to recover.

crimpson (krimp-sin) adj., arch. crimson – 'Item, a horsse with a footemantle of crimpsone weluet embrodered with siluer' [SB1634].

crine (krīn) v., arch. to shrink, shrivel – 'His photo ... very imperfectly represents him – he must have crined very much' [BM1898], 'Frae summer, whan the scorchin' heat Crines a'thing up, Till winter, whan the cruel sleet Cuts like a whup' [JJ].

Cringle Law (kring-gul-law) n. one of the highest hills to the south of the 'Hill Road to Roberton', between Whitslade and Shielswood. It reaches a height of 353 m. On the unnamed peak to the east there are the remains of a settlement. It appears to be labelled 'Clench a law' on a 1767 map of Shielswood farm.

Cringles (kring-gulz) n. former farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. Robert Scott was recorded as tenant there in 1585. In about 1620 Andrew Riddell of that Ilk had a charter for half of these lands from the Commendator of Melrose, with Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane having a charter for the other half. It is recorded in 1643 as 'Cringles, or Cringlaws', when owned by the Riddells of that Ilk and valued at £100. It is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map just to the east of North Synton. In 1643 the lands were valued at £156 and owned by Robert Scott of Satchells. In 1663 it was valued at £156, split between William Ormiston and John Riddell. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. According to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, the lands were valued at £100 (with no owner's name given). In 1788 it was owned by Sir John Riddell. The area today is marked with North Cringles Strip and South Cringles Plantation (spelled 'Cringills' in 1564, 'Cringillis' in 1585 and in about 1620, 'Cringills' in 1643, 'cringilles' and 'Cringelly' in 1663 and 'Cringlis' in 1670; it is 'Cringills' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Cringils' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Cringills' on Blaeu's 1654map).

Crinklaw (kringk-law) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'Merton' and they had an unnamed child baptised in 1708. James (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. There is a man of the same name who had children baptised in Jedburgh Parish in the 1680s and 1690s. James (b.c.1780) servant to Admiral Pringle at Weens, according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish. His name there is recorded as 'Krinklaw'. He is probably the James who married Elizabeth Watson and had children including: Margaret (b.1804) and William (b.1805), baptised in Jedburgh; and Betty (b.1807), John (b.1809) and Mary Harriot Elliot (b.1811), baptised in Minto. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (when it contained Hassendean). He married Margaret Brunton in 1682 and their children included John (b.1682) and William (b.1683). The witnesses in 1686 were James White and John Hope.

Crink Law (kringk-law) n. hill in Southdean Parish, to the left of the A6088, just before the turn-off for Lethem. It reaches a height of 301 m. The area is a rich archæological landscape, particularly on the north-west side, with a scooped settlement (perhaps from the first millennium B.C.E.), prehistoric field system, rig lines, remains of 3 buildings and several banks and enclosures. There are also patches of cord rig visible on the north-east side, along with the remains of 2 turf-walled buildings, 2 turf huts and several enclosures and boundary banks. And on the northern slopes are a square enclosure and disused quarry.

cripple (kri-pul) n., arch. the crupper of a horse, i.e. the leather strap passing under a horse's tail to secure the saddle – 'At the Ca' knowe we halt a lttle; Slack our girths and ease the cripple' [AB].

crivvens (kri-vinz) interj. mild exclamation of surprise (perhaps shortened form of 'Christ defend us').

croak (krōk) n., arch., poet. an old, barren ewe – '... Russian deuks, and Solan geese, O' a Siberian Crock, a fleece' [JoHa], 'For either gimmer, hogg, or croak, By George, I'll g'ye a cowin' ' [JoHa], 'Our croaks and our hoggs in the spring time might dee' [HSR], '... and teeth did the duty for knife and fork on the rare occasions when they were called into requsition by the death of the 'crock-ewe' ' [JJV] (also 'crock').

Croall Bryson's (krōl-brī-sinz) n. Croall, Bryson & Co. Ltd., motor dealers, mechanics and at one time bus operator. Their garage was at 1

Earl Street and in the former Tower Inn stables. The firm also had a set of garages across the Borders, eventually reduced to just one in Kelso.

crock see croak

croft (kroft) n., arch. a small-holding, a piece of high quality land kept under crop – '... with power to any that finds them in their skaithe, corne yairds, or croftes, within the said space ...' [BR1640], '... and the croft or aiker and one fourth pairt of ane aicker lyand by west the said water and the said path leading thereto' [BR1688] (the word appears in many local place names, some of which are of unknown location, e.g. Alton Croft, Castleton Croft, Cramptlands Croft, Croft Angry, Croft Road, Crumbletoon Croft, Dovecote Croft, Dykecroft, Jamieson's Croft, Kill Croft, the Lang Croft, Matthew Henderson's Croft, Monk's Croft, Moat Croft, Morlaw's Croft, Nichol's Croft, Northcroft, the North Crofts, Poodercroft, Porteous Croft, Rhymer's Croft, Roon Croft, Rye Croft, Salenside Croft, Sea Croft, Temple Croft, Weens Croft and West Sooth Croft).

the Croft (thu-kroft) n. former name for a field in Denholm on the north side of Eastgate, opposite the police Station.

Croft Angry (kroft-awng-gree) n. older name for the region known later as 'the Allars', delineated by Backdamgate, Cross Wynd, Millpath and the Slitrig mill lade. Held by the Scotts of Crumhaugh for many years, it was last referred to in the mid-1800s. In 1678 it was the 'tocher' given by James Burn when his daughter Marion married Robert Burn (presumably a cousin or other relative). In 1728 it was granted to Marion and Robert's son James Burn, who sold it to Walter Scott (formerly tenant in Crumhaugh and uncle of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh). By 1743 it had passed to Robert Scott, Walter's youngest son with his first wife. It is then described as 'now enclosed and turned into an orchard or garden, with houses thereon, and others, including the mill that is presently occupied by the said Bessie Scott (2nd wife of Walter) as liferentrix thereof'. The name occurs in several other parts of Scotland, but its origin is uncertain, and may not all be the same; the ones in Edinburgh and Wigtown have both also been written 'Croft-an-Righ', with the Edinburgh house at Abbeyhill (once the residence of the Regent Moray) said to mean 'field of the King'. Also note that 'Chrystal Croftangry' was the fictitious editor of the 'Chronicles of the Castlegate' used as a pseudonym by Sir Walter Scott, and this may have popularised the name elsewhere in Scotland from the early 19th century. The name is preserved through a house on Allars Bank (it was 'Croftangry' in 1728 and 1743).

Croft Cottage (kroft-ko'-eej) n. former cottage that stood a little north of Denholm Kirk until the early 1900s. In its last years it was occupied by a thatcher. Also the name of a house at the top of the Loan on the right hand side.

Croft Field (kroft-feeld) n. new street on the north side of Denholm, leading to Croftfield Court.

Croftfield Court (kroft-feeld-kōr') n. new street in Denholm, off Croft Field.

Croft Lane (kroft-lān) n. alley off Croft Road, between Oliver Crescent and North Bridge Street.

Croft Plantin (kroft-plawn'-in) n. forestry plantation in Southdean Parish, a little north-east of Southdean Lodge. Nearby is a quarry, some hollow ways and a track leading north to the Jed Water, which might be part of a drove road.

Croft Road (kroft-rōd) n. street off North Bridge Street, named in 1877 and developed from 1880. Before that it existed as a narrow lane. The name derived from the croft (or field) belonging to the Brieryyards estate, used as a nursery, which was in the area now between Oliver Crescent and Dovecote Street. The street had the Post Office at its corner for about a century, while No. 6 has been the Temperance Hall, 'Wee Thea' and Salvation Army Citadel. No. 1 is grade C listed.

Crofts (krofts) n. James see James Scott, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch.

Crombie (krom-bee, kru-mee) n. Andrew (17th C.) cleric of St. Andrews Diocese. In 1632 he was notary for the charter of Harwood, sold by Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir to Gilbert Eliott, as well as the sasine for Appotside and Tythehouse. He was also notary mentioned in the document whereby Edward Lorraine sold Harwood outright to William Elliot in 1637. Probably the same Andrew was Sheriff Clerk in Jedburgh and married to Bessie Turnbull. Archibald (18th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He may have been son of John, who earlier held the same position. He signed a 'bond of tailzie' from Robert Scott of Falnash to his son Gideon in 1736; this was along with 'Will', who was probably his son. He was somehow a relative of the Gledstains of Cocklaw and gained the lands of Orchard from them, which he sold to Robert Howison in 1744. John (18th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Teviotdale, based in Jedburgh, in the 1690s and early 1700s. He may also have served as 'curator' for the Laird of Whitlaw around 1711 (with his surname recorded as 'Crumbie'). He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. John (d.1849) Irish navvy, living at the Sandbed (probably Orrock Place). He apparently died of 'gluttony' on July 29th 1849, with his wife Margaret being buried 2 days later, her death was caused by cholera (although there is some confusion over whether he was in fact the first cholera victim). His name is also given as 'Crummie'. Margaret nee Miller (d.1849) wife of John. She was Hawick's first victim in the devastating cholera epidemic. She is buried in the cholera section of the Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) 'postillion' (i.e. in charge of the coach) at Borthwickbrae in 1792, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. His name appears to be written 'Crumbie'. William (17th C.) son of John. He was Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire in 1668 when involved in clearing a debt between John Turnbull of Knowe and John Turnbull of Minto. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He is probably the William who paid the land tax for the stock of Bankend in 1678. William (18th C.) possibly son of Archibald. He was listed as 'William Crumbie of Ormstone' among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is possible he was a son of Archibald, who held the lands of Ormiston. He is probably the William who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He is probably the 'Will' who, along with Archibald, signed a 'bond of tailzie' from Robert Scott of Falnash to his son Gideon in 1736 (also formerly 'Crummie' and 'Crumbie').

Cromdale (krom-dāl) n. Cristin (d.bef. 1393) Canon of Moray, who was Prebendary of Botary, Master of Ballencrieff, Papal Chaplain and also Rector of Hawick. His name is written 'Cromdoll' and may be connected with Cromdale in Moray. He became Canon of Moray in 1364 and was probably Rector of Hawick after John Leche, who held the benefice until at least 1378. In 1389/90 was given a Canonry and Prebend of Moray, with dispensation to retain 'the parish church of Hawiyk' in Glasgow Diocese, as well as the 'Red Spittal' ('Rubeum nuncupatum') in St. Andrews Diocese. He was also recorded as 'Christian de Cromdale, papal chaplain', whose death left a Canonry of Moray vacant in 1393. He died at the Papal court and was probably succeeded in Hawick by John Scott. John (c.1320–c.63) from Dunkeld Diocese, he was kinsman of King David II, and may have been related to the Rector of Hawick. He held benefices in Aberdeen from at least 1345, was involved in embassies for the Scottish King in 1350 in 1357, and witnessed charters in 1358 and 1359 (also 'Cromdole' and variants).

Crom Rig (krom-rig) n. hilly ridge to the left of the A7, south of Commonside. Its slopes contain old signs of cultivation, including 'cord rig' and enclosures. There is an earthwork, probably the remains of a settlement on the north-east side of the ridge, at a height of about 260 m, measuring about 60 m by 50 m. Lower down, about 180 m to the north-east are the remains of a farmstead, and nearer to the road is another enclosure. The farmstead has a larger double-walled building and 2 smaller structures, and may have been a mediæval fortified house. South of the peak there is a linear earthwork about 340 m in extent, stretching between the Cromrig Burn and part of the Nest Burn. Like the nearby Catrail, this was probably a boundary ditch continuing a line marked out by streams. At the north-east end of the ridge, near the road to Skelfhill, is a mound; this was excavated in 1869, and although found to be essentially natural, some flat stones, pieces of flint and decayed human bones were found. All of these archæological features suggest that the area was once a more significant site.

Cromrig Burn (krom-rig-burn) n. stream that meets the Northhouse Burn from the south before joining the Teviot. Crom Rig is a long ridge between the burn and the Teviot, above Colterscleuch Cottage, having earthworks and an old farmestead on it. A mound by the lower banks of the stream was described by W.N. Kennedy in 1857, excavated sometime before 1872 and found to contain worked flints and calcined bones. Another adjacent cairn was dug out before 1856 and found to contain an urn with bones; the stream is referred to in 1856 as 'Cromrigg or Cromlech Burn' (possibly marked as 'Cairtann B.' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Cromwell (krom-wul, -wel) n. Oliver (1599–1658) born in Huntingdon, of fairly humble beginnings, he converted to Puritanism, became an M.P., and began criticising the royalty. He then led the New Model Army in the English Civil War. In the early 1640s Scottish Covenanters fought alongside him, but his men fought against Scottish forces in the 1650s. He became Lord Protector and resisted being named King. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, but after Charles II resumed the throne, his body was exhumed and hung, with his head remaining on display for the next 20 years. Hawick soldiers fought alongside Cromwell's Ironsides in the 1640s. He may have visited Hawick himself in 1648. Part of his army, under Colonels Bright and Pride stayed in Castleton for a few nights in 1649, during which time they ruined the church and lit their pipes using the session books. During the time of the Commonwealth some of the Parliamentary army were quartered in Hawick in 1651/2. One resident ('Lord Olifer') is on record for refusing to act as guide for them to Langholm.

Cronin (krō-nin) n. Arthur (20th C.) shopkeeper on Wellington Street, who later became Registrar in Hawick.

crooch (krooch) v. to crouch, huddle up – 'He crooched an' streekit as wi' bile, An' threepit wi' himsel' the while' [WFC], 'Sae Wull sat crooched wi' his hurdies chilled, His heid wi' the black forebodin' filled' [WL], 'Croochin wi scaly claws lockit ticht to the spaik . . . ' [DH].

crood (krood) n. a crowd – 'a muckle crood gethered ti sei the tyin o the ribbons', 'But, gudesake, see what draws yon crood thegither, A' swarmin thick, joost like a bee-hive' [JoHa], '. . . An', heedless o' the crood that roon' him bus'les . . . ' [JoHa], '. . . for I had gane wi' the crood . . . wi' ane crood that keepet haly-day' [HSR], 'An' as they gaed awa frae Jericho, ane grit croowd folloet him' [HSR], 'This is to inform ye a' that if Maister Melrose o' Hopehill is present in the crood that hei is wanted at yaince . . . ' [JEDM], 'Pavements for shoppin crouds, Tarmac for traffic birlin . . . ' [WL], '. . . And, O, what croods ilk Sabbath day Wi' me a special day o' healin' ' [VW], '. . . Like a chip, garrin' his words Soond half-defiant, less than half believed By the silent crood' [DH], v. to crowd – 'What memories crood upon my brain Familiar form I see' [JT], 'And the thoucht's croudin' my heid noo – For the warld's a sorry sicht . . . ' [WL] (also spelled 'croud').

crooded (kroo-deed) adj., pp. crowded – '. . . how it was yince a gey crooded hame' [IWL] (also croodit).

croodit (kroo-dee') adj., pp. crowded – 'When I'm scunnered by a' the stramash O' the thrang, croudit streets in the toun . . . ' [WL] (also crooded).

croodlin doo (krood-lin-doo) n., arch. a wood pigeon, a term of endearment – 'And yet ye winna close yer een – Ye wee croodlin' doo' [JT].

crook (krook) n., arch. a pot-hook – '. . . ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer' [DMW1681], 'The thoughtful guidwife . . . ran in to hing on the frying-pan on the crook . . . ' [WNK], 'Come haste and mak' a clean hearth-stane, Gar shine the crook and swey . . . ' [DA] (see also cruik).

crook (krook) v., arch. to make lame – '. . . run after Mungo Armstrong's dogs and beat them off either with stones or a stick, and crooked one of the dogs, and he minds that dog's name was 'Company' ' [C&L1767].

Crook (krook) n. former name for a farm on Cavers estate, marked at roughly the present location of Trowburn Cottage on Stobie's 1770 map. John, son of Simon Routledge in the Trows was recorded being here in 1502. There are deeds relating to the lands from as early as 1523 and 1529/30 (not a century earlier, as appears to have been written) when Routledges held half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument William 'Routlech', son of the deceased John, resigned all rights to his half of these lands, the 'kyndness' of which was held of James Routledge. It thus appears that the Routledges held land here from some years earlier. In 1568 there is a charter from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey granting the abbey's 'three merk lands' there to William Douglas. Other residents mentioned in 1568 and 1569 are William Paterson and Walter Scott. Probably the same William Douglas was recorded in 1574 when it was recorded in the testament of Walter Scott of Branxholme that there was a dispute over the tithes at Crook. In 1581 William Douglas 'of Cruik' and his wife Elizabeth Scott granted several pieces of land to their son James; this included a small herb garden ('hortulo herbario') called the 'Taillyard' on the west, a barn called 'Trone et Troneland' in the north, perhaps a small orchard, and 'lie onesett de Cruik'. In 1592 lands there were inherited by Martin, son of William Douglas; the lands were then part of the Lordship and Regality of Melrose, with superior being James Douglas of Lochleven, Commendator of Melrose. Other residents at that time were Simon Routledge and Robert Thorbrand. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. Residents (called Grierson) from there were supposedly involved in the riot at the deroofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. John Douglas was listed there in 1694. It could be the 'Cruik' recorded in 1698 when Archibald Douglas was served heir to the Barony of Cavers, including 3 merkland of land there that were among the kirklands of Cavers. William Kinnaird was there in 1730, Francis Riddell in 1737–41, Thomas Douglas in 1741, Walter Scott in 1745 and Adam Henderson in 1773. The name seems to have disappeared not long after this – 'Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes' [T], 'The lousy Griersons o' the Crook, An' Douglas o' the Trows, An' Caddon wi' his bluidy lang shiers, Frae the clipping o' his ewes' [T] (the name presumably comes from a curve in the burn there; it is 'le cruk' in 1502, 'Crouk' in 1529/30, 'Crowk' in 1553/4, 'Cruik' in 1572, 'the Cruke' in 1565, 'Cruik' in 1568, 1574, 1581 and 1601, 'Cruke' in 1575, 'the Cruiks' in 1584, 'Cruik' in 1640 and 1670 and 'Cruke' in 1694; it is marked 'Cruck' on Pont's c.1590 map and 'Cruick' on Blaeu's 1654 map, between Cauldmill and Trows, but probably incorrectly placed on the western side of the Kirkton Burn; note that Douglas of Crook could easily be confused with Douglas of Cruixton/Crookston in Forfarshire; there are several places of the same name elsewhere).

Crookedhaugh Moss (kroo-ked-hawch-mos) n. boggy area just to the north of Priestrig farm, between Fiddle Hill and Coldhouse Kipp. It is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, while 'Cruickedheugh-sike' is mentioned in the 1765 description of the boundaries of Wilton Common).

Crooked Loch (kroo-ked-loch) n. small loch on the Roxburghshire/Selkirkshire border about 8 miles west of Hawick, between Windylaw Loch and Kingside Loch. A small stream to the south is Crookedloch Sike (it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Crooked Wat (kroo-ked-waw') n. nickname for Walter Scott, Town Herd of Hawick in the early 18th century.

crookit (kroo-kee', -ki') adj., pp. crooked – 'Dav' Jackson catcht Nell Cameron's catte In cruicket Sandy's byre' [WiSp], 'Some cruikit beam aboot the moon Was said ti play on Robbie's croon' [WP], 'Grand auld cruikit sneeshin' horn, Worthy sic a glorious morn' [RH] (also spelled 'cruikit').

Crookit Bank (kroo-kee'-bawngk) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Cruikit Bank' on the 1541 rental roll. The lands were valued at 10 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by William Armstrong. The location is unclear, but it is listed between Whithaugh and Mains, and is probably the 'Cruckhanck' shown to the south of Whithaugh on Blaeu's c.1654 map, on the west side of the Liddel Water, roughly opposite the modern Florida. It is possible this was the 'Crouke' among lands granted in 1476 to Robert Elliot by Archibald, Earl of Angus.

Crooks (krooks) n. George (19th/20th C.) long-time resident of Rulewater. He worked for a while as ploughman to John Waugh at Highend. He was well-known as a singer of humorous songs at local concerts. In later life he lived next to the blacksmith's shop in Bonchester Bridge. In 1879 he married Elizabeth Burrel, whose father was a farm steward in Berwickshire. They had 3 sons and 2 daughters. George worked in Weens garden and James in Harwood garden. Peter (1799–1844), W.S., daughter of Peter, gardener at the Dean in Edinburgh. He became Writer to the Signet in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and hence presumably had a local connection. In 1824 he married Marion, daughter of Peter Dods.

crook-trei (krook-trī) n., arch. a transverse bar built into a fireplace to hang a crook from – '. . . she clung with amazonian resolution to the crook-tree and refused to be removed . . . ' [RW].

croon (kroon) n., poet. a lament, wail, bellow – 'We'll gie the sang anither croon, And wish lang life to auld Blink-bonny' [DA].

the Croon (thu-kroon) n. the Crown Hotel formerly at 20–22 High Street, next to the 'Croon Close'. It was tenanted by Robert Hay in the early 19th century, then by his wife Ann, followed by his daughter Mrs. Jane Grieve from 1848 until 1866 (also helped by her husband Robert Grieve). In 1861 the building to the west, which had been Cochrane's Innery, was demolished to make way for an extension to the hotel. Jane Burns was proprietor in 1871. It was altered to designs of J.P. Alison in the early years of the 20th century. Later it became a popular dance venue. The hotel closed in the late 1980s and the ballroom was destroyed in a fire in 1990. It was converted to offices (the Crown Business Centre) in 1993. The building is distinctive for its French style mansard roof, with the upper dormer making this one of the few 5-storey buildings on the High Street. The mosaic flooring in the entrance to No. 22 still proclaims this as the Crown Hotel. Apart from that the only part of the original interior surviving is the staircase. A solid iron key, of mediæval type was found was found when digging the foundations for the hotel, and is in the Museum. Around 1992 a well was discovered under the south-east end of the former hotel.

the Croon Buildins (thu-kroon-bil-dinz) n. the Crown Buildings, government offices opposite the Library on North Bridge Street, built in splendid 1974 architectural style, housing the Inland Revenue and Department of Social Security (also sometimes 'Town Buildings').

the Croon Close (thu-kroon-klōs) n. Crown Close, passageway off the east side of the High Street, named for its proximity to the Crown Inn, later Crown Hotel. This right of way originally gave access to the stables which served the inn, as well as a blacksmith's. Before the latter part of the 19th century the close did not exist, access to the stables being via Backdamgate. The area surrounding and behind the close was redeveloped in the 1990s. An old building behind the High Street there was once the Hawick Advertiser printworks and was recently converted into a private dwelling.

the Croon Hotel see the Croon

the Croon Inn (thu-kroon-in) n. former public house in Denholm, at 3 Main Street. Robert Bulman was there in 1853 and James Elliot was proprietor in the 1860s.

the Croon Inn (thu-kroon-in) n. former public house in Newcastleton, at 8 Douglas Square. It was listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, when Thomas Scott was the landlord. John Richardson was inn-keeper in 1852, Richard Murray in 1861. It had a ballrron, which was the first place used by Newcastleton Free Church in 1850.

Croon Lane (kroon-lān) n. a name sometimes used for the Croon Close, e.g. as the address for Telfer's the blacksmiths.

the Croon Plantin (thu-kroon-plawn'-in) n. plantation in the Rule valley. It lies just to the east of the B6357, where it joins the A6088, south of the farm of Braidhaugh, and north-east of Cleuch Head.

croons (kroonz) n., pl. crowns, heads of state. In the earliest times for which there are records, Hawick would have been in the Kingdom of Bernicia, which became part of Northumbria perhaps around 600, and part of Scotland in 1018. The union of the crowns meant that Hawick's monarch was also that of England from 1603. The early information is quite uncertain, and the dates given below are one interpretation of the available information (and spelling also varies). Hawick's Kings and Queens have been: Esa (c.500, possible 1st King of Bernicia); Eoppa (c.520–c.47); Ida (547–59); Glappa (559–c.60); Adda (c.560–c.68); Æthelric (568–72); Theodoric (c.572–c.79); Frithuwald (c.579–c.85); Hussa (c.585–c.593); Æthelfrith (c.593–616); Edwin (616–32); Eanfrith (c.632–c.33); Oswald (633–42); Oswiu (642–70); Ecgfrith (670–85); Ældfrith (685–704); Eadwulf (704–05); Osred I (705–16); Coenred (716–18); Osric (718–29); Ceolwulf (729–37); Eadberht (737–58); Oswulf (758–59); Æthelwald Moll (759–65); Ealchred (765–74); Æthelred I (774–79); Ælfwald I (779–89); Osred II (789–90); Æthelred I (again, 790–96); Osbald (796); Eardwulf (796–806); Ælfwald II (806–08); Eardwulf (again, 808–10); Eanred (810–41); Æthelred II (841–44); Rædwulf (844); Æthelred II (again, 844–48); Osberht (848–63); Ælle II (863–67); Ecgberht I (867–72); Ricsige (872–76); Ecgberht II (876–78); period of the Norse Kingdom of York, unclear whether they held sway over the Borders; Eadulf (?–913); Ealdred I (913–30); Osulf (930–63); Waltheof (963–970); Uchtred (995–1018); Malcolm II (of Scotland, 1018–34); Duncan I (1034–40); Macbeth (1040–57); Lulach (1057–58); Malcolm III (of Scotland, 1058–93); Donald III (of Scotland, 1093–94); Duncan II (1094); Donald III (again, 1094–97); Edgar (1097–1107); Alexander I (1107–24); David I (1124–53); Malcolm IV (of Scotland, 1153–65); William I (1165–1214); Alexander II (1214–49); Alexander III (1249–86); Margaret (1286–90); John Baliol (1292–96); Robert I (1306–29); David II

(1329–71); Edward Baliol (1332–38); Robert II (1371–90); Robert III (1390–1406); James I (1406–37); James II (1437–60); James III (1460–88); James IV (1488–1513); James V (1513–42); Mary I (1542–67); James VI (1567–1625); Charles I (1625–49); Oliver Cromwell (Lord Protector, 1653–58); Richard Cromwell (Lord Protector, 1658–59); Charles II (1660–85); James II (of England, 1686–89); Mary II (1689–94); William III (of England, 1689–1702); Anne (1702–14); George I (1714–27); George II (1727–1760); George III (1760–1801); George III (1801–20); George IV (1820–30); William IV (of England, 1830–37); Victoria (1837–1901); Edward VII (of England, 1901–10); George V (1910–36); Edward VIII (of England, 1936); George VI (1936–52); Elizabeth II (of England, 1952–).

Croontail Plantin (kroon-tāl-plawn'-in) n. plantation in Hobkirk Parish, to the north of the Croon Plantin. It is in irregularly shaped plantation to the east of Braidhaugh farm.

Croon Wud (kroon-wud) n. Crown Wood, area of woodland, covering about 13 hectares, south of Bonchester Bridge and near the farm of Cleuch Head. It is managed by the Borders Forest Trust.

croose see crouse

crooshie-peen (kroo-shee-peen) n., arch. a crochet needle (noted by E.C. Smith).

crop (krop) n., poet. crops, produce of the land – 'Dear Grizzy, how shall we get fendit, Whan a' our crop an' kail are endit?' [JR].

crop for corn (krop-for-kōrn) n., arch. an omnivorous apetite, eclectic interest – 'As he knew I 'had a crop for a' corn' of a like nature, he brought it to me' [RB].

cropt (kropt) n., arch. the yield of a season – 'Item, be the tennentes of Branksholme of the rentes therof, the cropt jm vjc threttie ane yeares . . . ' [SB1633], 'Set at Hawick the 20th April 1733 for cropt one thousand seven hundred and thirty four payable between Yuill and Candlemas 1735' [Buc1735].

Crosar see Crozier

Crosbie (kroz-bee) n. James (b.1814/5) from Tinwald in Dumfriesshire, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Kirkyard, in 1851 on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 at 5 Mid Row. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Isabella, Elizabeth, James, Janet, Walter, Jean and Mary. He may be the James who donated a coin to the Museum in 1865 and the Mr. Crosbie who in 1875 donated a 'highly ornamented flint-lock pistol'. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Best and their Alexander was baptised in 1840. James (19th C.) boot and shoe maker recorded in Newcastleton in 1852. He could have been the brother of teacher Robert. John (17th C.) married Marion McKlellan in Ashkirk and had a daughter Isobel (b.1650). His surname is written 'Corsbie'. John (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Orchard Cottage in 1797, when he was working for Robert Scott. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Hardie, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1795); Rebecca (b.1796); and Thomas (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his father-in-law) and W. Turnbull, Cockerheugh. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as brewer in Hawick on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he had 3 working horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He may be the same man as John Crosby who married Janet Hardie in Hawick in 1794. During a time of famine he is said to have allowed the poor of the Parish to take turnips from a field he had at Moat Croft. John (18th/19th C.) painter on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 register. He could be the John who married Janet Rutherford and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Catherine (b.1827) and John (b.1829). John (19th/20th C.) woollen merchant of 8 Howegate. He married Nellie, daughter of baker John Young. Mrs. ?? (18th/19th C.) marked on Wood's 1824 map of Hawick as owner of land at Orrock Place. She was presumably a widow, but it is unclear who her husband was, although it is possible it was the brewer John recorded in 1797. Robert (b.1827/8) born in Hawick, he was a frameworker in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was living at Dovemount. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: Agnes (b.1854); Thomas (b.1856/7); and Isabella (b.1859/60). Robert (b.1825) born in Applegarth, Dumfriesshire, son of Robert and Jean Sales. He was a teacher in Newcastleton (but not at the Parish School). In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street with his mother Jane and brother James. In an 1852 directory he is incorrectly listed as John. Perhaps the same Robert was in Liverpool in 1864 when he presented an albatross to the Museum. Thomas (b.1796) son of John, he was a frameworker in Hawick. The family were on Slitrig Crescent in 1851 and at the Dean in 1861. He married Agnes, daughter of James Elliot (who in 1861 was a Chelsea Pensioner, living with his family). Their children included John, James, Robert, Thomas, Janet, George, William, Mary, Agnes and Walter (formerly 'Corsbie', 'Crossby', etc.; see also Crosby).

Crosbie Bow (kroz-bee-bō) n. nickname of the 19th century – 'There goes Magenta (whose face is woe) – Whose tales wi' simple fun are gay, And there's Jock Buckham and Crosbie Bow, And Tammy Porritch and Uffie Rae' [HI].

Crosby (kroz-bee) n. Thomas E. 'Tom' (20th C.) Cornet in 1950. Thomas N. 'Tom' (20th C.) established the chemist's business on North Bridge Street in 1951. He was cousin of the 1950 Cornet and Acting Father in 1961. He broke his leg at Denholm Ride-out, so that he was unable to carry the Flag. He was also a member of Lodge 424. His wife was Maimie and their daughter Ruth was Cornet's Lass in 1972 to Philip Murray. He served as President of the Mosstroopers' (1960) and Callants (1975) Clubs (see also Crosbie).

Crosfield (kros-feeld) n. Rev. George Philip Chorley, O.B.E., 'Philip' (b.1924) son of James Chorley Crosfield, with his mother being Marjorie Louise. He was educated at George Watson's, Selwyn College, Cambridge and Edinburgh Theological College. He became an assistant priest at St. David's Episcopalian Church in Edinburgh and then at St. Andrews. He became the Rector at St. Cuthbert's in Hawick 1955–60. He also served with the Royal Artillery. He married Susan Martin of Sedlescombe, Sussex. He left Hawick in 1960 to become Chaplain at Gordonstoun School. He was later made was minister at St. James' in Penicuik and later and Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral in Edinburgh. He retired in 1990, and continued to work with St. James' in Penicuik. He married Susan Mary Jullion Martin and had 1 son and 2 daughters.

cross (kros) prep., arch. across – '... and from thence, along Stously march, to the head of Heip-loan; then cross that loan to Whitehaugh's march' [DCW1765].

Cross (kros) n. Mary Ann 'English Mary' (19th C.) Hawick resident of the mid-1800s. Her name presumably referred to her place of origin. She married Charles Affleck, Hawick stockingmaker.

the Cross (thu-kros) n. Hawick's 'Mercat Cross', also the former popular name for the area around the Cross, basically meaning the centre of town. 'The Town Hall' is the modern equivalent. The Cross itself was removed in 1762 and in 1793 a 'tree to liberty' was planted there. The 'Police bounds' of the town in the early 19th century were taken to be within 1000 yards of the Cross – '... and ther in publocke markitt tyme of day to sett att the crosse for the space of two hours with the said pan about her necke' [BR1693], 'Bailies Martin and Ruecastle were ordered to gather from ye Cross upon both sides of ye toun even unto the bridge' [PR1717], 'Payd for lead to the Cross building' [1730], '... and the present Baillies for the time to take their horses at the Cross, respectively, yearly, in all time coming' [BR1735].

Crossar see Crozier

Crosscleugh (kros-klooch) n. hamlet that formerly stood between Bedrule and Fulton tower. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. It is probably the 'Corscleuch' listed among Crown lands in the Exchequer Rolls in the latter half of the 15th century. It was settled by the Turnbulls before 1490, with John Turnbull being assigned the lease by the King in that year. It was destroyed by Hertford's men in 1545. In 1571 it was granted to Margaret, daughter of John Home of Cowdenknowes, along with Fulton. George Turnbull was tenant there in 1516. There were Turnbulls farming there at the beginning of the 17th century when it was described as consisting of 'twa rowmes'. George Clerk was there in 1615. In 1619 John and William Turnbull, as well as Thomas Ainslie, were tenants there when they were among a group of Turnbulls accused of cutting down wood on a neighbouring farm. It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £160. It was part of the lands held by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the 17th century and still owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. John and Robert Rutherford were weavers there in 1799. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811 (also written 'Corsecleuch'; it is 'Corsclewch' in 1456, 'Corscleuch' in 1490, transcribed as 'Crossebewghe' in 1545, is 'Crocecleuch' in 1571 'Crocecleucht' in 1602, 'Corscleuch' in 1619 and 1623, 'Corscleugh' in 1643, 'Corseclewgh' in 1672, 'Corriscleuch' in 1678 'Cariscleugh' in 1684, 'Corscleuch' in about 1795 and 'Corse Cleugh' in 1811; it is marked 'Corscleuch' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Cors-cleuch' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Corscleuch' on Blaeu's 1654 map; there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near St. Mary's Loch).

Crossgill Sike (kros-gil-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale that rises on Priest Hill and runs southwards to join Whithaugh Burn.

Crossgreen Entry (kros-green-en-tree) n. name for road running north-south in the middle of Chesters village (labelled on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map).

Crosshaa (kros-haw) n. Crosshall, former name for a house at the site in Stirches where the Heap Cross was located, near the end of Guthrie Drive. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in 1797 (marked 'Crosshall' on Stobie's 1770 map, to the east of the main road, shortly before Stirches House).

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. former inn at the Sandbed, favourite hostelry of James Hogg and friends in the early 19th century. It was at the Buccleuch Street side of the Sandbed, at No. 11, on the south side of the Plough Inn, in a building that later became an office of Mactaggarts. It was started by William Aitchison and his wife Mary Shortreed (parents of Elliot the local poet) in about 1784, and he was still proprietor in 1825. Nellie Nisbet was also a well-known proprietor. It is easy to confuse with the hostelry of the same name on the High Street.

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. former public house on the High Street. It was recorded on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory when the proprietor was William Armstrong (although this may be confusion with the pub of the same name on the Sandbed). It might be the place where Robert Scott was recorded in 1766. Its newly built stables near the Millport were carried off in the 1767 flood. This was probably the same as the inn of that name started by Walter Wilson ('Haunless Wat') at 9 High Street; Walter's death is recorded at 'Auld Cross Keys' in 1795. It is probably the place where George Turnbull was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 work horses. This is probably the Cross Keys where William Graham and Adam Robson were hostlers in 1799. John Turnbull was proprietor in the early 19th century. The newly built stables for the inn were carried away by the flood of 1767. W.N. Kennedy told a story about a group of gentlement drinking in the "Cross Keys Hotel" at the end of the 18th century, stating that it was where draper James Turnbull's shop then was, meaning 11 High Street.

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. inn situated on Main Street in Denholm, overlooking the Green. It was built in 1800 as a bakery and later became a coaching inn. It is today a local pub, with bed an breakfast accommodation, and is a regular venue for folk music. There were once stables in the back. The proprietor in 1861 was John Turnbull and later in the late 19th century was Mr. Anderson (also sometimes called the 'Auld Cross Keys').

the Cross Keys (thu-kros-keez) n. former public house in Newcastleton, probably located at 48 South Hermitage Street. The location, on the corner of the square, now has a bank. John Armstrong was proprietor in 1837. Joseph Pattison was inn-keeper there in the 1840s and 50s.

the Cross Keys Inn (thu-kros-keez-in) n. public house in Lilliesleaf. It is situated on the west side of the village, on the north side of the Main Street. It was built in the 18th century. James Young was innkeeper for at least the years 1841 to 1852.

Crosslee (kros-lee) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just north of Tushielaw. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. It was formerly Crown lands, assigned to William, son of Alexander Cockburn of Lanton until 1488 and then William Veitch of Dawyck and his son John. This is probably the steading of 'Corsley' in Ettrick Forest where in 1575/6 Walter Veitch of North Synton complained that he was due the 'mails'. In the 18th century it was farmed by Walter Byrdon, friend to the family of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it was 'Craighill alias Corslee' and there was a common between this farm and Tushielaw. 'Auld Jock Gray' and his son 'Daft Jock Gray' lived there in about 1800. There were Goodfellows and Scotts there in the 19th century (it was 'Corsle' in 1488, 'Corslee' in 1492, 'Corslee' in 1541, 'Corslies' in 1650 and 'Corslie' in c.1680; there is a farm of essentially the same name on the Gala Water).

the Cross Port see Crosswynd Port

the Cross Road (thu-kros-rōd) n. former name for Wester Braid Road, called that either because it crossed Wellogate Brae or because it crossed from the Wellogate towards the Slitrig.

the Cross Roads (thu-kros-rādz) n. name sometimes used in the 19th century for the Tower Knowe.

cross-trei (kros-trī) n., arch. a cross-beam – 'Paid whisky when putting up the cross-tree in the Fleshmarket, L.0 1 4' [BR1755].

the Cross Well (thu-kros-wel) n. former public water supply at the bottom of the Cross Wynd, fed by the spring at the 'Well o Gate'. The site is marked by a stone, bearing the date 1755, which was moved to the pavement in the 1980s. There is a resolution recorded in 1755 to 'bring in a well to the Cross from the Wellygate' and a further record to erect a street well at the Cross in 1783 (which may have been a re-construction). Its position can be seen in the existing photograph of the old Town House in about 1880 – 'Several men have at present employed lifting the old lead pipes from the cross well to the fountain head in the well-o-gate' [RRe].

Cross Wud (kros-wud) n. small wooded area between the farms of Wollrig and Outer Huntly. This is probably connected with the place referred to as 'the cross' in a charter of about 1170, in which the pasture granted to Orm of Ashkirk is described. It is possible that the 'cross' was an early marker in roughly the same position as the Bishop's Stone, which is just a little to the north-west of the wood.

the Crosswynd see the Cross Wynd

the Cross Wynd (thu-kros-wīnd) n. street named after the Market Cross that used to stand in the middle of the High Street at the bottom of this road. It was once the site of the South Port (at least partially removed in 1732, and fully removed in 1762 along with the Cross) also called the Crosswynd Port, and the beginning of the main road to Newcastle until the 1830s. It was later referred to as the Policeman's Brae for the police station there. Further up the street the name changes to Allars Bank and then Wellogate Brae. There used to be a second Chase here on the Friday of the Common Riding, after the races were finished in the Haugh, the practice discontinuing when the races were moved. However, the cavalcade still goes up the street before the Song Songing ceremony. The street may have been where the first weaving factory was set up in Hawick, in about the middle of the 1700s. Allars Church was on the south side behind the Town Hall from 1810–1947. Nos. 2 and 4 are grade B listed buildings (also written 'Crosswynd').

the Cross Wynd Kirk (thu-kros-wīnd-kirk) n. popular name for Allars Kirk. It was formally known as the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Church after 1847, when the Relief Church merged with the Secession Church, and the name was officially changed to Allars soon afterwards.

Crosswynd Port (kros-wīnd-pōr') n. name sometimes given to Sooth Port or the 'Cross Port'. The name is recorded in 1732 when lime was taken there, presumably to repair it, and there is also a record of 'what was spent that night the Cross Port was taken down'. It could only have been partly taken down, since in 1762 there is a record of payment to labourers 'for taking down the Cross, and Cross Wynd Port' and also for auctioning off the materials from there; it took 2 days to dismantle the structure and the stone and timber was sold for 11s 6d. This was part of the removal of all the Town's ports during a time when roads were being improved, e.g. the Edinburgh and Carlisle Turnpike Roads (also written 'Cross Wynd Port').

crottle (kro-tul) v., poet. to crumble, cover in small fragments – 'But naebody's seen him In the caller pule First crottled wi' soil, Then white – the auld fule!' [DH].

croud see crood

croupier (kroo-pee-ā) n. a person who assists the chairman at a dinner, often being involved with drink orders.

crouse (kroos, krows) adj., arch. lively, bold, cheerful, pleased with oneself, conceited – '... But yet for a his cracking crouse, He rew'd the raid of the Red-Swire' [CPM], 'May happiness make yours his house, And may she thrifty be and crouse' [JoHa], 'We Wullie, the cowherd, sae hardy and crouse ...' [JoHa], '... An' we're a' sae croose an' cantie round our ain fireside' [JJ], '... Sae in oo baith walkit, as crouse as could be, An', losh man, it was a fine sicht for tae see!' [BM1900], 'There, yoint the waeter, an fell croose an canty on the brae-face, lay Ancrum!' [ECS], '... By guid-wives, crouse wi saip's salvation' [DH], 'But despite the power o' a', she's been croose eneuch tae craw' [JEDM], 'She's a douse kind o' body, auld Eppy M'Gee, A crouse kind o' body, auld Eppy M'Gee' [JT], 'But Meg was canty, and settled crouse, And she made a hame o' her guidman's hoose' [WL], adv. boldly, proudly, arrogantly – 'deh craw si crouse', ''Ye needna craw sae crouse, Tam', said an old weaver ...' [MrsO] (also written 'croose'; from German via Middle English).

crously (kroos-lee) adv., arch. cheerfully, boldly – 'E'en now I hear them crously crawin', I' the lum-head ...' [JoHa], '... And ride tae Mycelaw Green sae crously' [AB], 'He laughs at switches, belts and tawse, And ne'er a bantam cock, Sae proudly struts sae crously craws, As our little Jock' [JT], '... becaus mine enimie desna crouslie craw ower me' [HSR] (also written 'crouslie').

Crow see Craw

crowdie (krow-dee) n., arch. a mixture of oatmeal and water, eaten uncooked – 'Sae weels on thee, my tartan plaidie, While I hae pith to work for croudie I'll wear thee, and I will be proud o'e' [JoHa].

Crown see Croon

crowp (krowp) v., arch. to croak, speak hoarsely, make a noise like a frog – 'Now croupin' corbies bauld are swearin', Guid weather's dead' [JoHa].

the crowp (thu-krowp) n., arch. croup.

crowpit (krow-pee', -pi') adj., pp., arch. hoarse, croaky – 'And he croupit sae queer when he offer't to talk, That the youngsters, affrighted, did yelloch and jauk' [JoHa], 'A crowpit cough' [GW] (also written 'croupit'; cf. roupit).

Croyser see Crozier

Crozier (krō-shur, -zur, -shee-ur) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Adam Croser' and 'Crosar' in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 as an associate of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. A group of Liddesdale men were given respite for their crimes for 19 years to come. 'Liell Croser' is also listed, so possibly his son or brother. He is also listed in another remission given to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his associates in 1515/6. Adam (16th C.) resident of Adderstoneshiel in 1544, when he was among Scotsmen who pledged allegiance to Henry VIII. John is also listed, and so probably a close relative. Adam 'Ade' (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Adde Crossyer Marke Crosser sone', with his brother Archie also listed, although it is unclear who Mark was. Adam 'Ade' of Adderstoneshiel (16th C.) recorded in the records of the Privy Council in 1571, when there was 'relief at the hands of'. He was 'Ade Crosar of Edderstonsheills'. It is possible he was the same man as 'Megat's Ade' or 'Kate's Adie'. Adam 'Megat's Adie' (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants at Hummelknowes in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569. His name is given as 'Ade Crosar, alias Meggaittis Ade', suggesting perhaps that his mother was Margaret, or that his father's nickname was 'Megat'. He was surely related to the other Croziers listed. In 1574 he was 'Adie Crosar callit Megettis Adie', listed among Croziers in Earlside who William Douglas of Cavers was fined for not removing. He is listed in 1578 as 'Adie Crossar, callit Megattis Adie' among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with Lord Claude Hamilton, Commendator of Paisley) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1579 he was 'Adie Crossar, callit Megottis', when stated to be in ward within 'Traif' castle. In 1587/8 was recorded as 'Adie Crosar, called Megitt's Adie' when held in ward (with the Laird of 'Audy') as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. Adam 'Kate's Adie' (16th C.) listed in 1574 among accused thieves who resided at Earlside. His name was recorded as 'Kaitis Adie'. 'Kate's Jock' was also there (and presumably his brother) as well as 'Cock's Clem' and several other Croziers. He was also accused in 1590 along with Martin's Clem, John and Archie, as well as Airchie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. His mother was presumably Kate. Adam 'the Pleg' (16th C.) recorded as 'Eddye Croser the Pleg' in 1590 when he was among a group of Croziers accused of stealing goods and livestock from Englishman Nicholas Storie. Others listed were John of Staneshiel, 'Quentin's Airchie' and Quentin's brother Hob. His nickname may indicate that at one point he was a pledge for someone else. Adam (16th C.) recorded along with 'Quentin's Airchie', 'Adie's John' and Hob Armstrong 'the Tailor', when they were accused of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase. His name is recorded as 'Edward Croser alias Adey Farlamdes'. It seems likely he was 'Adam' rather than 'Edward', but the meaning of his nickname is unclear. Adam (17th C.) resident near Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (19th/20th C.) born in Hawick Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1901 he was living at Adderstoneshiels Cottages. His wife was Catherine and their children included Agnes and Janet. Alexander 'Sandy' (16th C.) recorded as son of Edward when he was among family members who supported the English Crown in 1544. It is unclear where their lands were. Andrew 'Dand' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'Andreas Crosar alias dand'. He and Matthew were convicted in Jedburgh of stealing 30 sheep from James Dalgleish from 'camys' (perhaps Minto Kames) and were sureties for themselves. Andrew (d.1509) convicted for killing Robert Scott of Synton, Adam Turnbull in Chamberlain Newton, Adam Turnbull called 'Gaberlunzie' and John Fenton of that Ilk. He also stole a horse and other goods from Thomas Bell 'in Baginw' and brought in 'Englishmen and Traitors of Levin' to raid Blindhaugh and to raid the farms of Alexander and James Chalmers. For these and other crimes he was drawn and hanged in Edinburgh. He could be the same 'Andrea Crosare' recorded in 1507 among rebels, which some members of the Dalgleish family had remission for associating with. Perhaps he was one of the 2 Andrews who were listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5: one after James, 'turni'; and the other not immediately beside other Croziers on the list. Andrew 'Dandy' (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Dande Crosyer Martyne Crosyer sone', with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. Andrew 'Dandy', 'Richardtoncleucht' (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Murray and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. His surname is transcribed as 'Grosar', which is surely an error. His nickname probably derives from the lands of Riccarton Cleuch, where Croziers were tenants in 1541. Andrew 'Mark's Andra' (16th C.) listed in a 1569 bond of security signed at Hawick by 'Clame Crosar' and his tenants. His name is given as 'Andro Crosar alias Markis Andro'. His father was presumably Mark. He must have been related to the other Croziers named in the bond. Andrew 'Part's Dand' (16th C.) tenant of the Hummelknowes area listed in a 1569 bond of security if 1569 along with 8 other Croziers (probably relatives). His name is recorded as 'Dande Crosar alias Parttis Dande', so he was presumably Andrew, son of someone with a nickname of 'Partt' (perhaps an error for 'Pate', i.e. Patrick). Andrew 'Maddy's Dand' (16th C.) among men accused of stealing cattle from a farm at Huntly in 1581/2. His name is listed as 'Dandie Crosar, callit Maddeis Dandie'. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. Andrew (16th/17th C.) resident of Toftholm. In 1623 his son Hob appeared before the Commissioners' Court in Jedburgh. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Andro Croser, called Jeans Andro, in Greinis' when he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in 1623. He presumably lived at Greens in Liddesdale and had a mother called Jean. Andrew (1825/6–1909) son of William and Margaret Elliot, he was a clogger in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was with his brother Robert (also a clogger), and in 1861 was at about 24 South Hermitage Street. He married Isabella Inglis and she died in 1929, aged 101. Their children included: Margaret (1850/1–1907); Isabella (1851/2–91); William; James; and Robert. He and his wife are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He and his brother were singers at the Burns centenary dinner in Newcastleton. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Arche Crosser Markes sone', with his brother Ade also listed, although it is unclear who their father Mark was. He could be the same man as 'the Piat'. Probably the same 'Archie Crosar callit Markis Archie' was listed in 1574 among men residing at Earlside, who William Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from there. A separate 'Archie Crosar thair' is also listed. Archibald 'Airchie the Piat' (16th C.) tenant of the Hummelknowes area recorded in 1569 as 'Arche Crosar alias Arche the Pyatt', his nickname presumably coming from some perceived similarity with the magpie. In 1574 he is 'Archie Crosar callit the Pyott', listed after Barty in Kirkton and Mirk Hob in Penchrise. This was among Croziers who William Douglas of Cavers had been ordered to remove from his lands. Archibald 'Gib's Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many Elliots. His name is listed as 'Arche Croser 'Gibs Arche' ', meaning that his father was Gilbert. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1584 when, along with Clem, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, 'for all the Crosers in Liddesdale'. He may be the Archie along with Will who was accused of raiding into England in 1590; they were acquitted by their oaths, referred to the oaths of Robert and Martin Elliot, but then found guilty when Robert refused to swear. He is probably the Archie accused in 1590, along with Martin's Clem, John and 'Kate's Adame' Croser, as well as Airchie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He may be the 'Archie Crosar' listed among residents of Earlside in 1574, when their superior was fined for not removing all the Croziers accused of being thieves. He may be the same as one of the other Archies. Archibald 'Quentin's Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when the English Warden accused him and 'Illwilled Will' of stealing cattle from 'Medupp'. He was also accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from Englishman Nicholas Storie; others listed include his brother Hob, John of Staneshiel and Adie 'the Pleg'. Additionally in 1590 he and 'Adie's John' were accused of stealing sheep from the Herons of Chipchase, and along with 2 Liddesdale Armstrongs he was accused of stealing more sheep from the same place 2 days later, as well as stealing horses 6 months later, cows after that, and horses on 2 earlier occasions; he was there recorded as 'Whyntynes Arche', 'Whyntons Arche' and similar. He was also accused by William Hall of 'Gersomffeld' in 1590 of rieving at 'Steward sheile', along with Hob Elliot of Staneshiel and others. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of 'Allenton' and 'Linbriggs', taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. In 1590/1 he was 'called Quinten's Archie' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. It is unclear which Quentin was his father. He may have been brother of 'Quentin's Hob', recorded in 1595. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Henheid' (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Elliots, Armstrongs and others accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. His name is recorded as 'Arche Croser 'Henhead' ' and the other Crozier listed was 'Quentin's Airchie', who may have been related. Archibald 'Airchie' of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded in 1591 as part of a group (mostly of Elliots) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Archibald 'Airchie' (d.c.1605) farmer at Brighouse of Cleuchhead in Rulewater. He was one of the local men hanged following the draconian efforts of Border Commissioner Sir William Cranston to stamp out lawlessness. Bartholomew 'Barth' (16th C.) father of Matthew, who gave his assurance to the English in 1544, along with many other Croziers from the Slitrig valley and elsewhere. His brother (or possibly son) Hugh was also listed, and he was probably the same Barth whose son John was also named. Bartholomew 'Barty' (16th C.) resident of Kirkton. He is recorded in 1574 among Croziers who had been ordered by the Privy Council to be removed from William Douglas of Cavers; Douglas was fined for their non-removal. He is listed as 'Barty Crosar in the Kirktoun'. He was probably related to the earlier Barth. Clement (16th C.) recorded in 1531/2 when he and Simon Armstrong had remission from the King for burning Little Newton, as well as the 'tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knycht, in cumpany with Inglismen'. Clement 'Clem' (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as 'Clemme Crosar' along with Martin (to whom he was surely related), Elliots and Foresters, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Clements. Clement (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Elliots who were accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at 'Tredermayn'. It is unclear when this event occurred. He could be the same as one of the other Clements. He could be the 'Clemy Croser' from Liddesdale mentioned in another English document of 1541, listing English rebels who had been reset in Scotland; these men included Robsons, Dods and Charltons. He was listed along with Robert Elliot of Thorlieshope (perhaps a neighbour) and also John, who was surely related to him. Clement (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert is listed first, and then also Leon and Gilbert. Either he or a different Clement is also tenant of 'Culigrath' (or 'Kilgarth') on the 1541 rental roll. He may be the same as one of the other Clems. Clement (16th C.) recorded as 'Clemyt Crossier' in 1544 when he was the first known owner of the lands of Stobs. He was among Scotsmen who pledged allegiance to Henry VIII, and one of the first Croziers listed. He must have shortly afterwards sold them to the Gledstains family. He was probably the same 'Clement Crosers' whose farms of 'Hoble Knowes' and 'Gallaslande' in the Slitrig valley were among those burned by the English in 1547/8. He may be the same as the Clement recorded in 1531, or the later 'Clame' tenant in Hummelknowes. It seems likely he was the Clement who headed a list of 4 Croziers who in 1537/8 had a bond not to harm John Gledstains of that Ilk, or his friends or servants, with Elliots being the cautioners; the other Croziers were brothers John and Adam, as well as James, son of Ninian. He may be the Clem who, in 1544, had servants Willie Young, John 'Carborne' and James 'Hindemers', who were also listed on the bond of allegiance with the English, as well as 'Hobbe Elwode Clemyt syster sone', presumably meaning that his sister was an Elliot. It seems likely he was the Clement who, in 1548/9, was sent (along with Adam Scott of Burnfoot and William Scott of Harden) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. Clement 'Clem' (16th C.) listed in 1544 among those who supported the English Crown. He was recorded as 'Cleme Crosyer his brother', probably meaning he was brother to Jeffrey, or perhaps William. In any case, he seems distinct from Clem of Stobs. Clement (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Jamie, Martin and John. Based on the 1544 list be may have been grandson of 'Cock', and seems distinct from Clem of Stobs and Clem, brother of Jeffrey (or William). However he may be the same as one of the later recorded Clems. Clement (16th C.) listed in 1544 as Gib Crozier's son, among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His brother (or possibly his father's brother) Willie is also listed. It is unclear who their father Gilbert was. Clement 'Clame' (16th C.) recorded as one of the men who signed the bond of security in Hawick in 1569. Thomas Ker was surety for him. He clearly lived locally, given the Scotts and Elliots of the lands south and west of Hawick who also signed. He was probably the same as the 'Clame Crosar in Hammilknowis' who was surety for his tenants in 1569, these being 8 other Croziers. In 1578/9 he was 'Clemme Crossar, sumtyme in Hummyll Knowis' when the Privy Council restated that he was to be entered into ward with John Maxwell in Nether Pollock, with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk, as surety; however, 'young Clemmy Crossar has not re-enterit in ward', and so his cautioner was fined. He could be the 'Clemie Croser' accused by the English of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner in 1581. He could be the 'Clemye Croser' recorded in 1584 when, along with Airchie, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, 'for all the Crosers in Liddesdale'. Clement 'Cock's Clem' (16th C.) listed among the tenants near Hummelknowes in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569, hence clearly distinct from the proprietor Clame Crosar in Hammilknowis'. His name is given as 'Clemme Crosar alias Cokkis Clemme'. His father's nickname was thus probably 'Cock' (like John Wigholm in Liddesdale around 1500). His brothers John and 'Rowy' are also listed, and he was probably related to the other 6 Croziers also named in 1569. Also in 1569 it is recorded that the Lairds of Cessford and Buccleuch were sureties for 'Cokkis, Clame Crossar and Rowy Crossar in Yairdsyde' (i.e. Earlside). In 1574 he is recorded as 'Clemme Crosar callit Cokkis Clemme in Yarlside', listed first among men accused of crimes who Douglas of Cavers was fined for not removing from his lands; they were specifically meant to have 'removit thame selffis, thair wyiffis, cornis and guidis outwith the Swyris'. His brothers John and 'Rowy' were again listed along with other Croziers residing in Earlside, Kirkton and Penchrise. He was 'Clemmie Crosar, callit Cokis Clemmie' listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with John Edmondson of that Ilk or William Douglas of Cavers) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. Clement 'Clement's Clem' (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His nickname suggests that his father was also Clem. He may be the 'young Clemmie Crosar' listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Clements. Clement 'Neble's Clemie' (16th C.) indicted in 1584 for raiding with 100 others in the Middle Marches, stealing 300 oxen and 49 horses, 'spoiling' 30 'sheles' and taking 20 prisoners. His name is given there as 'nebles Clemey'. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584 (perhaps the same one), along with Elliots, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. His brother 'Rowie' was among a large group of Elliots, Armstrongs, Croziers and others accused of rieving in 1590. He is recorded among Borderers in Monipennie's list of the 1580s as 'Nobles [or 'Nebles'] Clemeis Croser'. It is unclear if his father was nicknamed 'Neble' or 'Noble', or whether his nickname was 'nebless' (i.e. noseless). Clement 'Martin's Clem' or 'Martin's Clemie' (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named along with men associated with Elliots of Redheugh and others. Thomas Laidlaw of Haugh was also charged with resetting him, along with William Oliver of Lustruther and others. He is recorded as 'Martin's Clemie' in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick; others listed include Elliots of the Hill, James Douglas of Earlside, Thomas Laidlaw of 'the Hawghe' and John Henderson of Plenderleith. Along with his father Martin he was also accused of rieving from 'Borne' in Redesdale in 1590, along with the Elliots of the Hill and others. His name was also given in 1590 along John Elliot of Heuchhouse and Gib Foster of Foulshiels, who were accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. He was further accused in 1590, along with other Croziers and Airchie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was futher listed in 1590, along with Nixons, Nobles and Shiels, accused of stealing from the tenants of 'Lynbrigges'. Also in 1590 Thomas Laidlaw of Haugh was accused of having reset him (and William Oliver of Lustruther) in the previous year. He could be the Clement, listed along with his father Martin 'late of Baxtoun lee' among a group of Teviotdale men accused in 1590 of a raid on Woodburn. Perhaps the same Clement was accused of further raids in 1595. Clement of Burnhead (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with a group of Armstrongs accused by Ralph Anderson of 'Davisheile' of stealing oxen and ransoming an Anderson prisoner. He is recorded being 'of Bornheades', which is probably Burnhead in Liddesdale. Cock (16th C.) important member of the local Crozier family in the first half of the 1500s. His sons Clem, 'Cock', John, Lyle, Rowie and Thomas are all recorded about the 1540s to 1560s, some clearly in relation to Hummelknowes and other lands around the Slitrig valley. It is unclear whether 'Cok' or 'Coke' was a nickname or a short form of some forename. It is also possible that there was more than one man of that name at about the same time, since there is no direct proof that all these brothers were sons of the same man. Cock (16th C.) brother of John and presumably another son of 'Cock'. He was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brother 'Lyell Crosyer' was also on the list, and other brothers may have included Clem, Rowie and Thomas. David (15th C.) brother-german of William, archdeacon of Teviotdale. He was Abbot of Newbattle 1423–43. His brother acted as Proctor for him in 1422/3. David (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been related to James, who is listed after him. David (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed 'apud tempilhal', i.e. at Templehall. He was also recorded as 'at the Tempilhall' in 1498 when he pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, along with a large number of Croziers, Elliots, Armstrongs and others. It seems likely this was Templehall in Rulewater, but this is uncertain. Edmond (16th C.) recorded in 1544 when his son 'Dyke' (presumably Dick) was among local men who gave their support to King Henry VIII. Edmond (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He was 'sumtyme in Bedroull'. Edward (15th C.) recorded as 'Senior' among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. This suggests that there was also a younger contemporary Edward. Edward (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Edwarde Crossier Martyne son', with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. It is possible he was the same Edward whose son Sandy is also listed in 1544. George (15th C.) brother of Jack, he was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to other Croziers who were listed there. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert is listed first, and then also Clement and Leon. Gilbert 'Gib' listed in 1544 as 'brother son' to John, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. His brother Tom is also listed. It is unclear which brother of John was their father. He could be the Gib whose son Clement (and probably other son Willie) is also listed, although this seems likely to be other people of the same generations. Hugh (16th C.) either brother or son of Barth. He was listed in 1544, among local family members who gave their assurances to the English, his name appearing as 'Hewe'. His nephew (or brother) Matthew was also listed. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. There are 2 men of the same name listed: one right before William, James and Andrew; the other along with George, David, Quentin, Jack, John, Matthew and Lyle. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1544 when his son 'Rane Crosser' (probably Ringan, i.e. Ninian) was among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is unclear how he was related to other Croziers. James (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobi Crosare' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. James (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the resignation of William 'Croyser' in 1440. It was said that they were kinsmen, although the preise relationship is not known. It appears that nothing ever came of this plan. James (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been related to David, who is listed before him. He may be the James whose son William is also later on the list. James (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He is listed as 'Jacobi crosar turni' (and separately from another James). It is possible that he resided at Turn near Stobs, or alternatively the designation was a nickname. James (15th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was given as 'longi Jacobi crosar', his nickname of 'Long' presumably to distinguish himself from other Jameses. James (16th C.) son of Ninian. At a Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8 he is named along with brothers Clement, John and Adam, swearing not to harm John Gledstains of that Ilk, or his friends or servants, with the Elliots of Redheugh as cautioners. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of the lands of Dawston. James (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Jame Crosyer Martyns brother', with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. He may be the James whose son Lyle is also listed in 1544 and also the James whose son Rowie is listed. James 'Jamie' (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Clement, Martin and John. He appears to have been grandson of 'Cock', and may have been the same as the later 'Taylor'. James 'Jamie the Taylor' (16th C.) one of the tenants of the Hummelknowes area listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. He was probably related to the other 8 Croziers listed. His name is given as 'Jame Crosar the tailyeour', suggesting he may actually have been a tailor, rather than this being a nickname. James 'White Lips' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ' 'Whitlipps' Jame Crosier'. James (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded being 'in Hasindane', which is presumably Hassendean. James (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Toftholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William was also listed there and so probably closely related. James (18th C.) married Christian Beattie in Castleton in 1766. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Lymiecleuch according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (b.1795/6) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed as a wright in Newcastleton in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 Doncaster Street. He married Jeanette Scott, who died in 1848, aged 53. In 1850 he secondly married Margaret Turnbull. His children included: William (1832/3–41); and Elizabeth (1832–89). In 1851 his step-daughter Margaret Blacklock (b.1836) was living with them. Jeffrey (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Swansdale in Liddesdale in 1541. His name is recorded as 'Jaffray Crosar'. It is possible he was the Jeffrey whose sons Quentin and Willie and brother (or other son) Clem were among the Croziers who gave their support to England in 1544. John (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 as one of the accomplices that helped George Heiton of Gateshaw in stealing sheep from Yair. He may already have been a rebel at that time, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Croziers. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name was given as 'Jac crosar'. He is probably the 'Jak' whose brother George was also recorded in 1494/5. John (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document dealing with the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Quentin is also listed, so probably a relative. Perhaps the same John was listed (separately from 'Jack') among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Clement. They were accused of resetting English fugitives in Liddesdale. John (16th C.) mentioned in 1541 when his son Matthew was listed among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His cousin Matthew Hunter was also listed. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) recorded in 1544, with a connection to 'Cleerie', which was near Adderstoneshiel. He could be the same as the tenant of Hummelknowes. He is probably the same as 'John Crosier of Agerstonesheldes' who was the first Crozier listed among many local men swearing allegiance to Henry VIII. John (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'John Crossyer Thome Crossyer sone', along with other Croziers of the Slitrig valley, although it is unclear who his father Thomas was, or where they resided. John (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Thomas and 3 Elliots. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. It seems likely that he lived in the Slitrig valley. John (16th C.) brother of 'Clemme' and 'Rowy', listed among the tenants of Hummelknowes in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569. He was also listed along with his brothers Clam and Rowie (along with other Croziers) as tenants of William Douglas of Cavers at Earlside in 1574, when Douglas was fined for not having them removed. Since Clement was known as 'Cokkis Clemme', then presumably their father's nickname was 'Cock'. This makes it likely he was the same as 'Cockes John Crosers', who was listed as possessor of the lands of 'Askar Knowe' (probably Acreknowe) in 1547/8 when they were burned by the English (unless this was an earlier generation). He may be the same 'John Crosyer' who was taken prisoner 'with above xxx. other of the best sort' in this English raid on Hawick and the Slitrig valley. He is probably the 'John Crosyer Cokis Crosyers sone' who was among Croziers who supported England in 1544; also listed were his brothers Lyle and 'Coke', sons Clement, Jamie, Martin and John, and 'kynsman' Matthew Hunter. He is probably also the John whose servants, Quentin Crozier, Thomas Crossier and 'Wille Redde' are also listed in 1544, along with his nephews Gib and Tom Crozier. He must have thus been an important leader in the clan at that time. He may be the John who witnessed (along with a Bailie of Hawick and others) a bond for entering Elliots as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1546. He may be the same as 'Cokkis John' who appears on Monipennie's c.1594 (but probably drawn up in the 1580s) list of Border chiefs. John (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Clement, Jamie and Martin. John (16th C.) son of Barth, he was among the local men who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. He is presumably distinct from the other Johns listed in the same document. John 'Adie's John' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 as 'Eddies John'. Along with Martin's Gib Elliot and Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of 'Fallofeeld'. Additionally in 1590 he and 'Quentin's Airchie' were accused of stealing sheep from the Herons of Chipchase, as well as of stealing horses from the same place 6 months later, later also stealing cattle, and having stolen other horses 2 years before; he is there recorded as 'Eddies John' and 'Adams John'. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. It is unclear which Adam was his father. Perhaps the same man was in 1590/1 listed as 'brother-son of Martine' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council; he was listed right after Quentin's Airchie. John 'Kate's Jock' (16th/17th C.) listed in 1574 among Croziers residing in Earlside. 'Kate's Adie' was also listed and hence presumably his brother. They were among a list of men accused of being thieves who were to be removed from their lands. John (16th/17th C.) accused in 1590, along with Martin's Clem, Archie and 'Kate's Adame' Croser, as well as Airchie Elliot of the Hill, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. Probably the same John is on a list in 1590 of Elliots, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. Perhaps the same John is recorded in 1595 among Elliots, Nixons and others of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. John of Staneshiel (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused of stealing livestock and goods from Englishman Nicholas Storie. Others listed include 'Quentin's Airchie', his brother Hob and Adie 'the Pleg'. John 'the Friday Thief' (d.bef. 1642) recorded in 1642 when his brother Will was listed among Borders thieves who were to be captured and tried. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and they had an unnamed child in 1671. John (17th C.) resident at 'Julian' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Greena in Castleton Parish in 1697. He was rebuked, together with Archibald and James Armstrong in Haughhead, for not observing the Sabbath. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Young in 1767 and their children included: Janet (b.1755), possibly an error for 1775; Jane (b.1768); Margaret (b.1770); and Robert (b.1773). His wife died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Rutherford and their children included: Richard (b.1782); Christian (b.1784); and William (b.1791). John (18th C.) groom at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Phaupknow' (i.e. Fawhope Knowe) in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was shepherd there on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He was also shepherd at Phaupknowe on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. John (b.1774/5) from England, he was a shepherd in Castleton. In 1851 he is recorded at Leahaugh and listed as 'Formerly Shepherd'. In 1861 he and his wife were living with their daughter Christian and son-in-law William Elliot at Scotch Kershope. He married Isabel Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1791); Betty (b.1800); John and Robert (b.1803); Christian (b.1805), who married shepherd William Elliot; and John (b.1808). John (b.c.1775) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. I He is recorded as a shepherd at Tweedenhead among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was at Tweedenhead with his wife Elizabeth. John (c.1770s–99) shepherd in Scraesburgh. He was substitute for George, son of Robert Barrie at Weens, to serve in the Militia for Hobkirk Parish. However, he died before serving, with Francis Armstrong, shepherd at Longburnshiels, was drawn in his place. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Kershope in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. John (b.1808/9) shepherd at Hartsgarth and Whithaugh Mill. He was listed as shepherd among heads of households in Castleton in 1840 and was at Hartsgarth in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was shepherd at Whithaugh Mill. His wife was Nancy (or Agnes) Oliver. Their children included: John (b.1837); William (b.1839); Christian (or Catherine, b.1841); Isabella (b.1843); Thomas (b.1845); Robert (b.1846); Janet (b.1848); Walter (b.1850); an unnamed child (b.1854); Elizabeth (b.1854); and James Armstrong (b.1860/1). John (1822/3–63) draper in Newcastleton. In 1851 and 1861 he was living on North Hermitage Street. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory as a draper, and may also be the same John listed as a grocer and spirit dealer. He married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1910, aged 87. Their children included: John (b.1847); Marion (1848–65); Sibella (b.1850), who died in infancy; James (b.1852); William (b.1854); Margaret (b.1856/7); Thomas Nichol (b.1859/60). John (19th C.) married Agnes Beattie in Castleton in 1840. John (b.1824/5) wood sawer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Whitchester Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included George (b.1859/60). John (1861/2–1906) mason in Newcastleton. He married Annie Ashley Davenport, who died in 1935, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (1893/4–1956); and Mary (1901–06). Leon (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert is listed first, and then also Clement and Gilbert. Lyle (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Liell Crosar alias Schevill' when he pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. He may be the same 'Liell Croser' listed in 1510 among associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh receiving respite for their crimes; Adam is also listed, so probably a near relative. He may be the same Lyle recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Lyle (15th C.) brother of Adam, he is recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Another Lyle is listed separately. Lyle (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Lyell Crosyer James Crosser son', with James perhaps being a brother of Martin of Earlside. Lyle (16th C.) brother of John and presumably another son of 'Cock'. He was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brother 'Coke Crosyer' was also on the list, and other brothers may have included Clem, Rowie and Thomas. Lyle (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot in Hawick in 1639. His name is written 'Lyall Crozer'. Lyle (17th C.) recorded among a 1642 list of fugitives as 'Lyell Croser'. His son (whose name is not transcribed) was also listed. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale, and the name suggests that he was descended from the earlier Lyle. Mark (16th C.) local Crozier, probably of the Slitrig valley. In 1535 Robert Haig was charged with stealing from the Haliburtons of Mertoun in 1521 and resetting horses with him, Martin (probably a relative) and 'ane callit Elwand, common thieves and traitors of Liddisdale'. His sons Ade and Archie were listed in 1544 among members of the family giving their support to England. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1532 along with Clem (to whom he was surely related), Elliots and Foresters, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Martins. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1535 when the Lords of Council accused Robert Haig with stealing from the Haliburtons of Mertoun in 1521 and resetting horses with him, Mark (probably a relative) and 'ane callit Elwand, common thieves and traitors of Liddisdale'. His name is written 'Mertyne Crosar'. He may be the same as one of the other Martins. Martin (16th C.) tenant of Riccarton Cleuch, along with Patrick, as recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Probably the same Martin and Patrick Crozier were also tenants of the neighbouring lands of Riccarton (along with Roland and William Elliot). Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as 'Martyne Crosyer of Yarsaye', when he was among Olivers, Nixons, Croziers and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Given that he was named along with Croziers of Adderstoneshiel and Stobs, it seems likely that his lands were Earlside, or 'Yairlside', as they were then known. He appears to have been an important leader of the clan, since his brothers Patrick and James, and sons Dandy, Hob and Edward were also named in 1544. Martin (16th C.) recorded as son of Willie when he was among family members who gave support to the English in 1544. It is unclear if this was Willie son of Jeffrey, or some other William. Martin (16th C.) listed among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as 'Martyne Crossyer Wille Crossyers sone', and he was presumably distinct from other Martins mentioned there. It is unclear which William might have been his father. Martin (16th C.) son of John, he was listed among several other closely related family members in a list of Scotsmen who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. His brothers may have included Clement, Jamie and John. He appears to have been grandson of 'Cock'. Martin (16th C.) listed as possessor of the lands of 'Thornebogg' on the Slitrig valley in 1547/8, when they were burned by the English. He was probably related to Clement, who was at Hummelknowes, and 'Cockes John', who was at Acreknowe. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1574 as 'Martene Crosar his broder in Hawik', after Clem in Hummelknowes; this was in a list of men who had been ordered to be removed from local lands, these 2 men in particular being the reponsibility of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. Martin (16th C.) listed as 'Martine Crossar in Beddroule' in 1576 when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was surety for him. There was a promise that he, his son Martin, younger, and Archie Thomson (servant to Turnbull of Bedrule) should refrain from theft; the promise was deemed to have been broken by 1578/9. Martin of Baxtonlees (16th C.) recorded as 'late of Baxton lee' when there was a complaint against several Borderers for stealing livestock from Woodburn in England in 1589. His son Clement is also mentioned, and this may be 'Martin's Clem'. His tower in the upper Liddel valley is recorded on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Debateable Land as 'Martin crosiers of bakstonleis'. It is unclear how he was related to other Croziers. He was indicted for raiding 'Borne' in Redesdale in 1590, along with his son Clement, as well as Elliots of the Hill and 20 others. In 1590/1 he was 'Martine Crosar of Bastanley' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He may be the same Martin in Monipennie's c.1594 list of Border chiefs. Mary (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Matthew (15th C.) son of Quentin. He is listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separarely from the son of Quentin. Matthew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 at the court in Jedburgh. He and Andrew were convicted of stealing 30 sheep from James Dalgleish from 'camys' (perhaps Minto Kames) and were sureties for themselves. Matthew (16th C.) son of John. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. The others listed were Armstrongs, Elliots, Nixons and others of Liddesdale. Matthew (16th C.) son of Barth. He was among local family members who gave their assurances to the English in 1544. Ninian (16th C.) probably a Crozier of the Slitrig valley or Liddesdale. At a Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8 his son James is named along with brothers Clement, John and Adam, swearing not to harm John Gledstains of that Ilk, or his friends or servants. He may be the same as the son of Ingram, or otherwise related to him. Ninian 'Ringan' (16th

C.) probably name for 'Rane Crosser Engram Crossers son', listed in 1544 among many local family members who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He may be the Ninian 'of Schawis' listed on the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands and ask forgiveness from Thomas Haitlie, brother of the Laird of Mellerstain. He signed the bond 'at the pen led by the notar', meaning that he could not write himself. Ninian (18th/19th C.) shepherd and labourer at Kershope, on the English side. He is listed among heads of households in Castleton Parish in 1836–38. Patrick (16th C.) tenant listed after Martin in the lands of Riccarton and Riccarton Cleuch. They were probably father and son or brothers. He could be the 'Patan Crosyer Martyns brother' listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who gave their support to England. His son Quentin was also listed. Patrick 'Pate' (16th C.) local family member who gave his assurances to the English in 1544. He was son of 'Wille Crosyer', although it is not clear where their lands were. His brothers (or possibly his father's brothers, since the wording is ambiguous) Hob and Rowie, also signed the bond of allegiance. Philip (16th C.) recorded as 'Philippo Crosar' in 1541 on the rental roll of Liddesdale. He was tenant of Hudshouse. Quentin (15th C.) tenant in 'hirdmanstoun' listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been from Hermiston. It is possible that Matthew 'filii quintini', recorded in 1494/5, was his son. Perhaps the same Quentin was listed as 'Quyntin Crosar' in 1497 when he was one of the Liddesdale witnesses for a precept of sasine for Robert Elliot of Redheugh; John was also listed, so probably a close relative. Quentin (16th C.) listed as 'quintino crosar' in 1550 when he was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers, for the lands of Colifort. He may have been related to the earlier Quentin. It is possible he was the 'Qwinten Crosyer Patte Crossyer sone' listed in 1544 among men who gave their support to the English Crown. Quentin (16th C.) son of Jeffrey and brother of Willie. In 1544 he was among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Quentin (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'John Crossers servaunte', among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Croziers. He could be the Quentin who was father of Archie, recorded in 1590 and Hob, recorded in 1595. Quentin (17th C.) resident at Mains in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Richard 'Lang Dick' (16th C.) listed among local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name is given as 'Lange Dyke Crossier' and his nickname was presumably to distinguish him from the other Dick who was listed. Richard 'Dick' (16th C.) listed as 'Dyke Crossier Emond Crosiers son' in 1544 when he was among a group of Croziers, Olivers, Nixons and Halls who gave their assurances of support to the English. His father was presumably Edmond. Robert (16th C.) tenant of Byrestead in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Also listed as tenants were Clement, Leon and Gilbert, some of whom may have been related. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Hobe Crossier Martyne son', with Martin perhaps being resident at Earlside. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) local family member who gave his assurances to the English in 1544. He was son of 'Wille Crosyer', although it is not clear where their lands were. His brothers (or possibly his father's brothers, since the wording is ambiguous) Pate and Rowie, also signed the bond of allegiance. Robert (16th C.) prisoner recorded in 1548 when a group of Liddesdale Elliots had a bond to hand him over to the Laird of Ferniehirst. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert 'son o Cockston' (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) son of John. He was listed in 1574 among Croziers and others who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers. His name appears as 'Hob Crosar, sone to Johne Crosar'. He may be the same as one of the other Hobs. Robert 'Hob of Ricarton' (16th C.) listed among Border chief's in Monipennie's compilation puyblished about 1594. He is the first of the 'Crosers', along with Martin, 'Cokkis' John and 'Noble Clemeis'. He may thus have been the chief of the family at that time. He may be the Hob recorded in 1590 among a group of Elliots, Nixons and others accused of taking livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) son of Quentin. He was accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from Englishman Nicholas Storie; others listed include his brother 'Quentin's Airchie', John of Staneshiel and Adie 'the Pleg'. He was also listed in 1595 among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England; he was listed there along with Will 'Greathead', to whom he may have been related. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) resident of Cleuchhead. He was listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew in Toftholm. In 1623 he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in Jedburgh. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Renwick and their son William was baptised in 1641. Bessie (b.1648), with no mother's name given, was probably also their child. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant of 1/3 of Overhall in at least about 1716–19, as described in 1764 in the court proceedings for the division of Wilton Common. His name was transcribed as 'Corsar'. Robert (b.1716/7) workman in Hawick, one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh's land in 1767, during proceedings for the division of the Common. He married Margaret Bridges and their children included John (b.1741), Jean (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were baker Robert Scott and merchant Charles Tudhope. Robert (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He could be the son of John and Janet Young baptised in Hawick in 1773. Robert (b.c.1770s) butcher in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Robert (19th C.) married Mary Rutherford in Hawick in 1837. Robert (b.1800/1) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Mid Row, in 1851 on the Back Row and in 1861 at 7 Back Row. He married Agnes Ballantyne in Hawick in 1835 and their children included Elizabeth, Jane, Margaret, Isabella, Christopher and Janet. Robert (b.1802/3) carrier in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was at around 6 Doncaster Streetm with wife Rebecca and children John, Katherine, James, Isabell, Betty and Thomas. Robert (b.1818/9) clogger in Newcastleton, son of mason William and Margaret. He appears to have been recorded as a clogger in Pigot's 1837 directory (unless that was an older relative) and in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 25 South Hermitage Street. His brother Andrew also worked at a clogger, while other brothers William and Archibald were masons. He married Elizabeth Inglis, who died in 1908, aged 83. Their children included: William (1853/4–92); James (1854/5–1920); John (b.1857), who died in infancy; Adam (b.1859), who died in infancy; Margaret (1861/2–80); and Andrew (1866/7–1941). The family are buried in Ettleton. Robert 'the Gover' (19th C.) known as an athlete, his name appears in the Common-Riding Games in 1857 and 1860. He won the 250-yards hurdles and foot race round the course at the Moor in 1860 and the foot race around the course in 1864. He is probably the stockingmaker who was son of Robert and step-son of Joseph Barton; he was in Hawick Jail in 1847 and 1848 when still a schoolboy, and who was living with his mother and sister at 3 Old Manse Lane in 1861. Roland 'Rowie' (16th C.) recorded as 'Rowe Crossyer James sone' in 1544 when he was among family members who gave their assurances to England. James may have been brother of Martin of Earlside, but there may well have been another contemporary James. Roland 'Rowie' (16th C.) local family member who gave his assurances to the English in 1544. He was son of 'Wille Crosyer', although it is not clear where their lands were. His brothers (or possibly his father's brothers, since the wording is ambiguous) Pate and Hob also signed the bond of allegiance. He could be the 'Rowie' whose son Thomas is also listed in 1544. Roland (16th C.) listed as 'Rowy Crosar' among the tenants of Hummelknowes in a 1569 bond of security signed in Hawick. His brothers Clem and John were also listed, and he was likely to be related to several of the others. His name is given as 'Rowy', probably a short form of Roland, but this is not certain. Their father's nickname was probably 'Cock'. Also in 1569 he is recorded as 'Roway Crossar in Yairdsyde' (i.e. Earlside), along with 'Cock's Clem', when the Lairds of Cessford and Buccleuch were sureties for them. In 1574 he was listed along with his brothers Clem and John, among tenants of William Douglas of Cavers at Earlside, when Douglas was fined for not having them removed. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'; there he was 'Rowie Croser brother to 'Nebles' Clemye'. Roland 'Rowie' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Hartsgarth. In 1611 he was 'Rowie Croser in Harthskarthburnfute' when failing to appear at court in Jedburgh; Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage was fined for his non-appearance. In 1622 Robert Elliot of Redheugh acted as his cautioner at the Justice Court in Jedburgh, and this was continued in 1623. Thomas (16th C.) probably a Crozier of the Slitrig area. In 1544 his son John was among locals who gave their support to the English Crown. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as 'Cokis Crosser son' in 1544 when he was among local family members who gave their assurances to England. His father was presumably the same 'Cock' who was father of Clem, John and Rowie. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of 'Cowarthous' (probably near Saughtree) in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'Thome Crosser John Crossers servaunte', among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Croziers. Thomas 'Tom' listed in 1544 as 'brother son' to John, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. His brother Gib is also listed. It is unclear which brother of John was their father. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) listed in 1544 as Gib Crozier's son (or possibly his brother, since the wording is ambiguous), among the local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. His brother (or possibly his father's brother) Clement is also listed. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as son of 'Rowie' when he was among local men who gave their support to King Henry VIII. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with John and 3 Elliots. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. It seems likely that he lived in the Slitrig valley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 'Hilhous' in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in Jedburgh. He was probably from Hillhouse in Liddesdale. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Smith and their children included Robert (b.1641). Thomas (b.1788/9) dyker of Branxholme Park who was elder in Allars Kirk. In one famous incident he kept the key for the church, preventing a former elder (who had become a revivalist minister) from giving the fill-in sevice while the regular minister was out of town, to the amusement of many of the congregation. In 1841 he was listed as a grocer at Martin's House. In 1851 he was a dyker living at Todshawhill. His wife was Elizabeth (from Yarrow) and their children included Isabella. Janet, whose death is recorded at 'Meertons house' in 1840 was surely related to him. Whinton (16th C.) said to be from Liddesdale, he is mentioned in the first verse of the ballad 'The Death of Parcy Reed'. Assuming that he existed, his forename was probably just a variant of Quentin, which was known in the family; indeed he may be the same as one of the documented Quentins. In the ballad he is taken prisoner as a young man by Parcy Reed, believed to have been Laird of Troughend in Redesdale. The leader of the Croziers vows to take revenge and Reed is betrayed by 3 men of the name Hall and killed by the Croziers. William (c.1389–1461) cleric of St. Andrews Diocese, but probably associated with the family of the Liddesdale area. His name was written 'Croyser' and variants. He was brother-german of David, Abbot of Newbattle, and also related to James and Robert, as well as Robert 'de Lythow' and the Earls of Douglas. He graduated B.A. in Paris in 1406/7 and M.A. in 1409. He was one of the first masters of Philosophy when teaching began at St. Andrews University in 1410 (with the founder being Henry Wardlaw, from Wilton). He was a Licentiate of Theology by 1423/4, so that he must have continued his studies, perhaps at a mixture of Paris and St. Andrews. In 1415/6 he had dispensation to hold 3 incompatible benefices, and this was repeated in subsequent years. He was first promised a benefice in St. Andrews Diocese in 1412, but this never seems to have materialised. In 1413 he was granted a safe passage through England, perhaps being involved in negotiations for the release of the Earl of Douglas from captivity. He was promised Kirkgunzeon in Kirkcudbrightshire in 1413/4 and promised his 'annates in papal chamber' in 1414. Also in 1414 he was presented to Tarbolton Church by Melrose Abbey, but another patron put forward a different candidate and litigation followed. He was promised the Prebend of Obney in Dunkeld in 1415, which he held shortly afterwards, and although he lost it in 1424, he held it again 1426–30. In 1417 he was witness to a document at Melrose Abbey and he was recorded in Edinburgh as part of legal proceedings with the Abbey in 1418; these are rare examples of proof of him being in Scotland, rather than on the Continent. In 1417/8 he was promised a benefice in Moray, but this also did not transpire. In 1417/8 he was 'resident in the Roman Court' when he requested that he be given the benefice of 'Magna Cavers'; he already held a Canonry and Prebend of Dunkeld and the Parish Church of Kinkgunzean, and was litigating to get Tarbolton Church and the Precentorship of Moray, hence was instructed to resign his claim to Cavers (i.e. he was probably bought off). He was nominated as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418, winning out over rivals, including Edward Lauder (who instead became Archdeacon of Lothian); he took over from John Scheves in 1419. In that year he was given permission to have a deputy visit his Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, and this was renewed for 10 years in 1422 (hence making it unclear how much time he ever spent in the area). There were also complicated disputes over Innerleithen, Gogar, Lothian Archdeaconry, Ross Prebend, Fetteresso and other benefices in the period 1418–24. In 1423/4 he was at the Council of Siena along with Andrew de Hawick and he served as envoy to Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1424. In 1424 he was again given Kirkgunzeon (which was connected with Holm Abbey across the Border), as well as Glenbervie. In 1424–26 there was a dispute over Kirkgunzeon with Patrick Lethe, but he prevailed, and in fact that church was annexed to Teviotdale Archdeaconry in 1435. He was restored to the Archdeaconry in 1425 after being mistakenly deprived (as discussed in a papal decreet of 1429), with Andrew de Hawick being promised the benefice instead. In 1425 he was said to have illegally held the Church of Dunkeld for 10 years and described as 'alleged priest'; however, in 1428 he won his legal battle over the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, including costs from John Bowmaker. In 1426 he secured the promise of a benefice that had been resigned by John Kirkmichael (perhaps Lilliesleaf). He appears at this time to have been in dispute with John Cameron, Bishop of Glasgow, leading ti him having a passport of safe conduct from Bruges through England in 1429 to deliver Papal letters. He also tried to become Rector of Lilliesleaf in 1430, but after disputes in the 1430s, this benefice went to others. He was additionally in dispute with Thomas Greenlaw and Gilbert Forester over the Archdeaconry of Lothian, eventually hold that along with Teviotdale from 1431. In 1430 he was given the benefice of Arbuthnott and in 1431 the Prebend of Ancrum. In 1432/3 he witnessed the aoth of William Turnbull (later Bishop of Glasgow) as Papal Chamberlain and he and Turnbull had safe-conduct promises for Papal business afterwards. His disputes with Bishop Cameron continued in the 1430s, although Papal emissaries to Scotland argued for the charges of treason against him to be dropped. In 1439 there were dispensations given to some of his 'nephews and friends' in Scotland. He was appointed Papal nuncio to Scotland in 1439/40, but probably did not travel there. In 1440 there is mention of him resigning the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in favour of his kinsman James and Lothian in favour of another relative, Robert 'de Lythow'; however, nothing seems to have come of this. In 1441 he was deprived for adherence to the council of Basel, and condemned for treason in the papal courts of Florence. He set out for Scotland to resolve issues between the Roman and Scottish courts, but was imprisoned in Strasbourg in 1444 However, his Scottish benefices were restored again in the late 1440s, after litigation with Walter Blair and Patrick Home. In about 1451 he visited Scotland again to secure his Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, with William Turnbull now Bishop of Glasgow. In 1452/3 he witnessed a document for James, Earl of Douglas at Dumfries and had another letter of safe passage through England in 1453. By 1455 he had lost all his local possessions, and was probably living in the Lyons area. He was was still referred to as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1460 when he resigned benefices in France in return for an annual pension. He was by then an invalid living in Avignon, and he died soon after.

William (15th C.) recorded among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire held in 1494/5. In fact 2 men of this name are separately listed, but with no other designation. One is listed after Andrew, son of Quentin and the other is listed between Ingram and James. A third was son of James.

William (15th C.) son of James, listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5.

William 'Willie' (16th C.) listed in 1544 among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He was listed as 'Wille Crossyer Jefferays sone', although it was unclear who his father Jeffrey was. He may be the William whose son Martin was also listed in 1544 (although that may be another of the Willies).

William 'Will' (16th C.) local man whose sons Pate, Hob and Rowie gave their assurances to the English in 1544. It is unclear who he is, or where he lived, but other men listed were in the Slitrig valley. Note that the phrase 'his brother' is also ambiguous, and so some of these men may have been his brother, rather than sons.

William of Riccarton (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He is recorded there as 'Will Croser of Ryckerton'.

William 'Ill-willed Will' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 as 'Will Croser, called ill wild Will, belonginge to Martin Elliott'. Along with 'Quentin's Airchie' and Martin's son Sim Elliot, he was accused of stealing 8 cows from 'Medupp'. He was presumably a servant of Martin Elliot of Braidlie.

William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots, Nixons and others of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England. He is recorded as 'alias greathead' in accusations for 2 raids, one along with Hob, son to Quentin. He may be the Will along with Archie who was accused of raiding into England in 1590. He may also be the man whose name is transcribed as 'Wille Croyme' in 1590 in a complaint against Nixons, Elliots and others for a raid in 1588. William 'Will' (17th C.) brother of John 'called the Fryday theefe'. In 1642 he is on a long list of Borders 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift' who were to be captured and tried. William (17th C.) resident at Toftholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James was also listed there and so probably closely related. William (17th/18th C.) weaver at Clarilaw, where he was recorded in 1711 and 1712. In 1708 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Turnbull. Their children (all but the first baptised in Hawick) included: Marion (b.1711), baptised in Wilton; James (b.1712); Bessie (b.1715); Margaret (b.1718); and Janet (b.1721). The witnesses in 1712 were 'Mr William Craford preacher' (newly appointed minister of Wilton) and Robert Huntly (servant to Rev. Cunningham), in 1718 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and tailor James Gledstains, and in 1721 were Walter Scott ('uncle to Crumhaugh') and shoemaker Robert Elliot. He could be the same man as the weaver at Appletreehall, whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1708. William (b.1713), baptised in Cavers, could also be his child. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Wolfcleuchhead. He married Katherine Little and their children included: Thomas (b.1786); William (b.1790); and Helen (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Langburnshiels, who later became a country trader. In 1814 he married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Smith (farmer at Hartshaugh Mill) and Mary Scott, 'the Flooer o Rankleburn'. They had several children, including William, who was landlord of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. In later years he and his wife lived at Harwood Lodge. He may have been known as 'the Clocker'. William (b.c.1780) mason in Newcastleton. He is probably the mason William in Newcastleton recorded on the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was one of the builders of the Holm Brig. In 1841 he was living at about 25 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Elliot (1769/70–1745), who was born at Deeburn. Their children included: John (b.1804); William (b.1806), also a mason; Mary (b.1810); James (b.1812), who probably died young; Robert, clogger; Archibald, mason; and Andrew, clogger. William (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was a cattle dealer living at Harwood Lodge in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret and their children included Thomas and Margaret. He could be the William, resident of New Harwood in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1814. William (b.c.1795) grocer recorded at Martin's House in 1841. William (b.1807/8) mason in Newcastleton, son of the earlier mason William. He was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. His brother Robert was a clogger, and in 1851 he was living with him and 2 other brothers on South Hermitage Street. William (c.1825–77) son of shepherd William, he was long time hostler of the Tower Hotel and also driver of the mail coach. There is one story told of how, during a snowstorm, he steadfastly arrived with the coach in Hawick nearly 6 hours late. He was the last driver of the coach south from Hawick in 1862. In 1873 and 1875 he was one of the Stewards at the Common-Riding Races. He was advised to take a trip to Australia to help with his failing health, but died on the outward journey. He was buried at sea, and a memorial was erected in the Wellogate cemetery. A portrait of him exists (there are many early spelling variants, including 'Corser', 'Crosar', 'Crosare', 'Croser', 'Crosier', 'Crossar', 'Crosser', 'Crossier', 'Crossyer', 'Crosyer', 'Crowser', 'Croyser', 'Crozar', 'Crozer' and incorrectly as 'Groser').

the Croziers (thu-krō-shurz) n. family that was locally prominent during rieving days. In the 15th and 16th centuries there were many men of that name in Liddesdale, e.g. at Byrestead and Riccarton Cleuch. They were also tenants of Hummelknowes and nearby farms in the Slitrig valley. In 1494/5 among more than 80 men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justiceaire there were 22 Croziers. In 1553 they gave in 'thair plegis for gud reule'. Members of this surname lived on both sides of the Border. In Northumberland the Liddesdale Croziers were infamous for their involvement in a vicious murder in revenge for the capture of one of their own, as recounted in the ballad 'The Death of Parcy Reed' – 'Now Parcy Reed has Crosier ta'en, He has delivered him to the law; But Crosier says he'll do waur than that, He'll make the tower o' Troughend fa' ' [LHTB].

Crozier's Acre (krō-shurz-ā-kur) n. former name for an acre of land at Hassendean. It was given in warranty by Thomas Turnbull (tenant farmer of Hassendeanbank) to John Turnbull of Knowe in 1655 against money borrowed, and is described as 'the acre of land called Croseris Acre, lying in Cockersyke, at the east end of the Knowe meadow'.

cruds (krudz) n., pl., arch. curds.

Cruickshank (krook-shawngk) n. Arthur R.I. (1932–2011) palæontologist, who latterly lived in Hawick. Born in Kenya, son of Scottish expatriates, he was educated in Scotland and spent holidays in Coldstream as a youth. He studied zoology at Edinburgh University, followed by a Ph.D. at Cambridge, returning to Edinburgh as lecturer, then to Napier College, before moving in 1967 to the University of Witwatersrand in South Africa. He became a specialist in the Permian and Triassic periods, and particularly dicynodonts (herbivorous land vertebrates). He returned to Scotland in 1978, taking up a number of temporary posts, working for museums and the Open University. Living for a while at Minto and then Jedburgh, he helped catalogue ancient buildings in the Borders, and catalogued and rearranged geological and natural history specimens in Hawick Museum. He became a member of the Archæological Society. After his wife was appointed as a librarian in Rugby, he worked with Leicestershire Museums, focussing on plesiosaurs, and he travelled extensively to compare the British species with those found elsewhere. In 1963 he married Enid, daughter of Hawick solicitor and Denholm farmer Andrew Haddon, and their children are Peter, Susan and David. They moved to Denholm in 2006 and then to Hawick. David (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1689 he was 'onlawed tenn pounds for committing ane ryott in presence of Baylyea Wright, and also for speicking unrevered language of the Counsell and Toune-Clarke, and for his disobedience to ye sd baylyea'. He had a daughter Helen in 1691. Phoebe (d.1930) widow of Rev. Charles Alexander Davidson of St. Andrews and Lhanbryde Church. She died in Hawick at the age of 93 (also written 'Crockshanks' and 'Croockshanks').

cruik (krūk, krook) v., arch. to bend, crook – 'A cruikeet ma hoach an clappeet masel doon' [ECS], 'There's a feck o' braw bit nuiks Where the silvery Teviot cruiks' [TK], 'Ti cruik yin's hough, to bend the thigh, in the act of sitting down or in lying' [GW], n. a bend, crook, nook – '. . . An' bringe the cruke, an' eke the lynkis Doon frae the rannel trie' [WiSp], an iron hook for suspending a pot over a fire, especially in the phrase 'as black as the cruik' (see also crook).

Cruik see Crook

cruik-trei (krik-, krook-trī) n., arch. a bar placed horizontally across a fire for a pot 'crook' to hang from – '. . . though to quote our old friend John Turnbull 'they wad neid a gaye lang cruick-tree' ' [HAST1864].

cruise (krooz) n., poet. a kind of oil lamp – '. . . Owre it had wastit mony an houre, An' mony a cruise o' oyle' [WiSp] (cruisie is more common).

cruisie (kroo-zee) n., arch. an iron lamp with a rush wick, consisting of two bowls, one above the other, suspended from a bar – 'But the wyse tuik oulie in their crusies wi' their lamps' [HSR], '. . . In ilka hoose a cruisie licht, in ilka heart a prayer' [JYH], '. . . 'Twas Maggie's cruzie, flaming bright, Its beams across the muirland throwing' [JT] (there are examples in the Museum, one donated by C.M. Wilson in 1871; also spelled 'crusie' and 'cruzie').

cruivle (krū-vul) n., arch. a sour-tempered person (also written 'cruivvle'; pronounced with a deep vowel containing elements of i and ā.

Crumbirche (krum-birch) n. former lands in the upper Teviot valley, mentioned as part of the boundary of Ringwood, when it was given to the monks of Melrose in the 1160s. The precise location is unclear, but it seems possible this the same as Crummiecleuch Rig or perhaps Cromrig (the name suggests an origin as 'crooked birch').

Crumbletoun Croft (kru-mul-toon-kroft) n. former farmstead near Hawick, the name being used after the farmhouse itself was gone. It is mentioned by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900, by which time the location was already uncertain (also written 'Crumbletown Croft').

Crumelknowes (kru-mul-nowz) n. house at the top of Crumhaughhill. The name was invented for the house when it was built in 1954/5 for Provost James Henderson. To the south-east of the farm are some irregular hollows that may be the result of quarrying.

Crumhaugh (krum-uch) n. flat land by the Teviot below Crumhaugh Hill, more or less corresponding to the modern Parkdaill. It is possible that the lands here were the 'Crumesethe' (or 'Crumseche') that were recorded in 1165 as part of the possessions of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The lands were given by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir William in 1494; at that time valued at 40 shillings 'of old extent'. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1502. In 1511 the lands are listed among those held by the Baron 'in property', this continuing in the lists recorded in documents of 1559 and 1572. In 1627 it was described as paying '20 bolls aits; estimat to 8 bolls victuall in stok, 2 bolls teynd'. The tower and land here was once the domain of the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who were descended from the Scott of Goldielands (although the precise succession of the generations in the 16th and 17th centuries is quite uncertain). The lands of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh were valued at £1116 13s 4d in 1678. William Elliot was tenant there in 1716 (in 1720 was 'late tenent', but was still there in 1729) and Walter Inglis was servant there in 1719. Adam Mark was there in 1724, Andrew Leithead in 1725 and Robert Scott in 1742. The lands of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh were valued at £1223 16s 8d in the 1740s. This branch of the Scotts died out in 1809. In former times the main road into Hawick was over the Longbaulk, while Crumhaugh (where one of the few Teviot river fords was located) had a Toll Bar with a turnstile to prevent the passage of horsemen, sometimes referred to as 'the Auld Tollbar'. John Martin is listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694 (origin probably Old Welsh for 'crooked, winding' or Old English for 'low lying land in the bend of the river'; the name first appears as 'Crumhawch' in 1494 and is 'Crumhauch' in 1502, 1511 and 1514, 'Crumhawcht' in 1511/2, 'Crumhauch' in 1572, 'Cruhauch' in 1594, 'Crumbhauch' in 1615, 'Crummuch' in 1733 and 'Croumach' in 1737; it is marked 'Crummhauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map; there is an unrelated place of the same name in Lanarkshire).

the Crumhaugh Aisle (thu-krum-uch-I-ul) n. former name for the part of the pre-1763 St. Mary's Kirk below the steeple. This was the burial place of the Scotts of Crumhaugh and Goldielands, and was used as an additional seating area in the church – 'Walter Purdom to collect in ye Bailies Loft, Crumhaugh Isle, Parkhill Loft, and porch' [PR1718].

Crumhaughill see Crumhaugh Hill

Crumhaugh Hill (krum-uch-hil) n. hill, farm and surrounding area, being the heights along Longbaulk Road (the 'Lumback'), named after the haugh at its northern base. The highest point of the hill was once the 'Watch Knowe', site of the warning beacon in former warring days, and where sometimes a beacon was lit for special celebrations. The farm is probably the 'towne in Tevedall caulyd Cromokhilles', which was burned by an English raiding party led by Robert Forster in 1542. By 1707 it was valued along with Blackcleugh at £266 13s 4d. By the late 18th century it was part of the Buccleuch estates. James Oliver, ironmonger in Hawick was tenant there. The tenant of the farm in 1797 was Walter Scott, and he was recorded having 6 horses at that time. James Anderson lived there in 1801. James Hogg was tenant in the mid-19th century. It is still valued (with Blackcleugh) at £266 13s 4d in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch (but mistranscribed in 1788 as 'Crumhaugh-hott'). A set of 13 urns was unearthed in about 1818, found when levelling 'a hillock between the site of the old farm house of Crumhaugh, and the old road to the south'; these were disposed of after discovery. A 'little wheel' from the farm, once used to spin lint, was presented to the Museum by Mrs. Hogg in 1863. Some flint and stone artefacts from the area were donated to the Royal Museum of Scotland by Mrs. I. Turnbull in 1948/9. In the 1950s and 60s it had a TV receiving mast for a local TV relay company run by Frank and Alec Lawrence. The farm was the location for the Curds and Cream repast (i.e. the Friday morning 'Hut') in 1860 – '...As Southern wrongs did Border breasts embolden, And balefires lighted Crumhaugh's midnight gloom' [JAHM], '...Or spellbound stand on Crumhaugh Hill And view the silvery Teviot' [JCa] (also written 'Crumhaughhill').

Crumhaughhill Road (krum-uch-hil-rōd) n. street developed in 1933 and named for leading to Crumhaugh Hill (also sometimes with a single 'h', 'Crumhaughill').

Crumhaugh Plantin (krum-uch-plawn'-in) n. plantation at Crumhaugh, being situated opposite Parkdaill, immediately to the left of the A7 when leaving Hawick. The knoll there contains the remains of a mediæval farmstead and older long house.

Crumhaugh Road (krum-uch-rōd) n. street in the West End built around 1930, and named after Crumhaugh. This is confusing both because it isn't near Crumhaugh and because it can be confused with Crumhaughill Road.

Crumhaugh Toor (krum-uch-toor) n. tower possibly once in the Crumhaugh area, overlooking Parkdaill, marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map as being in Crumhaugh Plantation, but of which there is no sign. The site of this low hill was excavated by the Archæological Society during 1962–65 and found to contain evidence of a 16th or 17th century farmstead built on the site of a roughly 14th century long house, with no evidence for any stronger building.

Crummie see Crombie

Crummie (kru-mee) n., arch. a pet name for a cow, sometimes one with crooked horns – 'It was a wooden cog in which the clothes were washed, and the children scrubbed, the cow was milked into it at night, and in the morning it was the medium of carrying out the ashes, before being put in requisition for Crummie's matutinal meal' [WNK].

Their son John was baptised at the East Bank Kirk in 1810. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish married to Jean Wigholm. Their son John was baptised in 1648. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish married to Agnes Beattie. Their son James was baptised in 1670. John (b.c.1795) hosiery worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about the Crown Close with his wife Cecilia. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish married to Bessie White. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1642. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. Thomas (b.1859) born in Newcastleton, son of Robert (who was from Morebattle and whose family had been blacksmiths) and Anne Riddell (whose family were Border shepherds). Brought up in Oxnam, at age 14 he became the pupil teacher there, moving after 5 years to the Edinburgh Training College, and becoming qualified as a teacher in 1881. He worked at Denholm School for about 4 years, returned to further education at the University of Edinburgh and in 1886 was appointed Schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was elected a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland in 1901. He also served as Inspector of Poor and Registrar for Hobkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Nichol, who was from Denholm. They had 2 sons and 1 daughter. William (18th C.) married Margaret Stalkers in Kirkton Parish in 1755 (also written 'Culbertsone', this could be simply a variant of Cuthbertson).

Culgate (kul-gāt) n. lands in Liddesdale written as 'the tuelf schilling land of Culgatis' in 1586. They were said to be occupied by Martin Elliot of Braidlie, and then leased by Francis, Earl of Bothwell, to 'Wille Ellot, sone to vmquhile Willie Ellot, callit the Tod'. It is unclear where these lands were, but one possibility is that they are the same as Kilgarth.

Culling (ku-ling) n. William (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname could be a transcription error for some more familiar name.

culyie (kul-yee) v., poet. to fondle, cherish – '. . . thay culyie wi' thair tung' [HSR].

cum (cum) v., arch. to come to a person's attention – 'Tyll all and syndry off qwam the knawlege thir presentis letterys ma to cum, gretyng . . . ' [SB1431], 'Till all and sindry quhais knaulage thir present lettris sal to cum . . . ' [SB1470].

Cumbria (kum-bree-a) n. county in the extreme north-west of England, over the Border from Dumfriesshore and Roxburghshire. The county was formed in 1974 from Cumberland and parts of neighbouring counties. It contains Carlisle, the Lake District and the western end of Hadrian's Wall. The name comes from the Cumbric language once spoken there, essentially ancient Welsh, which was also spoken in Hawick and into the Lothians. The name is etymologically related to the word 'Cymru', the modern Welsh name for Wales. The area corresponded with the English West Marches, and incursions over the Border into the Scottish West and Middle Marches were common until into the 17th century. The Cumbrian dialect shares many similarities with Border Scots.

Cumbric (kum-brik) n. form of the p-Celtic language spoken in southern Scotland and northern England, essentially the same as what is also called Northumbrian. Its distinction from Old Welsh is based on very limited evidence, mostly just place names. It probably differentiated after Wales broke off into a separate kingdom in the 7th century, and was likely to have been displaced by cummie-wull (ku-mee-wul) n., arch. a 'come-o'-will', an illegitimate child, an animal that appears unbidden, a plant that sprouts spontaneously (also come-at-wull).

Cumming (ku-min, ki-min) n. Agnes 'Nannie' (1788–c.1851) daughter of Jean, and sister of Katie, she was the last of the family to run the hardware shop on the Howegate (around No. 4). She never married, but was a popular shopkeeper, and in her later years was sought out for stories of old Hawick. There is an amusing story of a horse getting into the shop and her sister panicing outside, shouting to her 'If you're leevin' speak, and if you're dead shoot your head out at the window!' She also used to tell of the day that James Know ran past her shop-door to raise the 'False Alarm' in Hawick in 1804. She is listed on the Howegate in Pigot's 1837 directory and in the 1841 census. By 1851 she was listed as a 'Retired Hardware Merchant'. She is still listed on the Howegate in Slater's 1852 directory, but may have been deceased by then. Her portrait, by Adam Brown, is in the Museum. Catherine 'Katie' (b.1793) daughter of Jean and sister of Nannie. W.N. Kennedy describes her as 'an old spinster in the Howegate, remarkable for her unbending Calvanism, sound theology, good needles, snuff-taking and nasal obstructions, who judged everything under the sun as she did her needles, by their eyes and points'. She was an Anti-Burgher and disapproved of anything she deemed theologically unorthodox, stating about a child baptised in its parents house on account of its illness, 'point o' fack, an' in the eye o' the gospel an' the law, that bairn's nather mair nor less than a sooking Pagan' and referred to a non-Anti-Burgher publication as being 'fou o' inseepeedity'. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as a cottar in 'Langton/ (i.e. Langtonheight) in 1717 and 1724. He married Isobel Scott in 1715 and their children included: Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1722); Robert (again, b.1724); and Andrew (b.1726). The baptism in 1717 took place at Langton, the child 'being weak'. Francis (b.c.1760) agricultural labourer, living at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1841. His wife was probably Helen, and they also had a daughter Helen. George (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bewlie. In 1716 he had a tack (jointly with Thomas Riddell) for lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. James (18th C.) married Helen Elliot in Ashkirk Parish in 1744. His name is written 'Cummine'. It is unclear how he might be related to other local Cummings. James (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Janet Fairbairn (probably in 1757) and their children included: Nelly (b.1758); and James (b.1759). James (b.1788/9) from Bedrule Parish, in 1861 he was an agricultural labourer living at Clarilaw with his niece Helen Rutherford. Jean nee Stevenson (1762–c.1825) son of Robert Stevenson and Agnes 'Red'. She married Robert, but must have long survived him, because she was known as 'Widow Cumming' for many years. She was proprietor of a shop on the Howegate in the late 1700s and early 1800s, which sold almost anything edible or useful. She was described by W.N. Kennedy in an early Transactions and was also the subject of a song by 'Soapy' Ballantyne (which unfortunately does not survive) in the first years of the 19th century. She was an early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. In later years she used an ear-horn to help her hearing, and this is preserved in the Museum. Her sister Betty and her daughters Agnes ('Nannie') and Catherine ('Katie') were all known as eccentrics. She is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory as 'Jane Cummings, smallware dealer, Howgate', and her place is marked 'Cumming' on Wood's 1824 map. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Elspeth Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1689), who probably married William Hutton and had children in the 1720s. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Jedburgh. In 1719 he married Anna, daughter of workman John Shiel from Hawick. Their daughter Agnes (b.1724) was baptised in Hawick. John (c.1800–bef. 1841) weaver living on the High Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and their children included Janet, Margaret, Mary, William and Elizabeth. In 1851 his widow was living at 'Facing Teviot', probably meaning the back house of 11 High Street. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet 'Dunlape' in 1706. Their children included Elspeth (b.1708), who probably married John Brown in 1727. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Katherine Scott and their daughter Sarah was baptised in 1775. Robert (b.c.1760) possibly son of Walter, he was born in Hawick. In 1788 in Hawick Parish he married Jane (b.1762), daughter of Robert Stevenson and Agnes 'Red'.

Their children included: Agnes (b.1788); Robert (b.1790); and Catherine (b.1793). He is probably the merchant whose death is recorded in 1794. His wife was 'the Widow Cumming', who became known as an eccentric who kept a shop on the Howegate. He is probably the merchant Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1811. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Mary, daughter of Alexander Lillico and Isabel Douglas, who was from Hobkirk. Their children included: Isabell (b.1809); Margaret (b.1811); William (b.1813); Alexander (b.1815); Mary Marion (b.1818), who married Alexander Smith; and Helen Catherine (b.1820). Robert (c.1805–67) born in Ashkirk, probably son of Robert. He worked as a woolsorter and lived on O'Connell Street. In 1827, in Wilton Parish, he married Isabella, daughter of Walter Laing and Janet Brown. Their children were: Robert (b.1828), who married Helen Dodd; Walter (b.1829), who married Jane, then Isabella Deans, and finally Mina Nelson, and died in Ontario; Janet (b.1831), who married Ormiston Hardie; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; N.H.; Margaret (again, b.1843), who married Alexander Greig and died in Ontario; and Elizabeth (b.1845), who died in Ontario. In 1857 he emigrated with his wife (and some of his family), and they both died in Ontario, Canada. Robert (1828–85) from Hawick, he was son of Robert and Isabel Laing. He worked as a skinner, being listed at about 77 High Street in 1851. In 1861 he was working at Cumledge Mill in Duns. In 1848 he married Helen Lennox Dodd, and she died in 1914, aged 85. Their children were: James Laidlaw and Alexander Greig, who both died young; Isabella (1849–1918), who died in Hawick; Janet (1851–1918), also died in Hawick; Robert (1853–1929), joiner, who married Christina Goodfellow and moved to Sheffield; John Dodd (1855–1913); Margaret (b.1857); Walter (1860–1937); Edward Dodd (1862–86); Elizabeth (1864–89); Francis Bell (1869–1940), a draper's traveller; and Eleanor Lennox (b.1873), who married Thomas Henderson Brotherstone. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1853–1929) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Helen Dodd. He moved to Sheffield to work as a joiner. He married Christina Goodfellow in Wilton in 1878 and they had 7 children. Walter (19th C.) married Isabella Deans, their son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1854 (also spelled and pronounced 'Kimming'; other alternative forms include 'Cumine', 'Cuming', 'Cummin' and 'Cummine'; it is possible that this name is a variant of Common and Comyn).

Cummings Hill (ku-minz-hil) n. small hill between the Rule and Jed valleys, situated to the north of Belling Hill and roughly between Westerhouses and Mervinslaw. It reaches a height of 302 m and has an enclosure and quarry on its north-eastern side.

Cumming's Pend (ku-minz-pend) n. former name for a close on the Howegate, presumably associated with Jean Cumming. 'An antique spoon found in the walls of Cumming's Pend' was donated to the Museum by W.N. Kennedy in 1862.

cundy (kun-dee) n., arch. a covered drain or gutter at the side of the street, particularly one for receiving rain water, a conduit – 'ma bool's doon the cundy', '... Doon the cundies o' The Loan' [DH], a rabbit hole – 'Jim had seen him sit down at one end of a cundy, while he put the dog in at the other' [RM] (also written 'cundie').

Cunningham (ku-ning-hum) n. Sir Adam of Woodhall (d.1639) Commissary of Dumfriesshire and one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He purchased Arkleton from Robert Elliot of Falnash in 1623. In 1633 he also had a charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledale-hope. However, there was a case before the Court of Session in 1727, claiming that his original purchase was merely a 'wadset' and hence that the Earl of Nithsdale (Maxwell) retained a right to reversion (i.e. repurchase the property). Adam (17th C.) son of Sir Adam. He sold Meikledale and Meikledale-hope to to Walter Scott of Braidhaugh in 1643. In 1651 he sold Arkleton to Walter Scott of Harwood. Sir Alexander (d.1488) son of Sir Robert. In 1452 he helped James II defeat the Douglases and was thereby had his lands erected into the Barony of Kilmaurs and became Lord Kilmaurs in 1460. In 1462 he granted lands in Edinburgh to Sir John Cockburn. He confirmed a land transfer at Hassendeanbank in 1464 and in 1464/5 a record shows him as Baron of the eastern part of Hassendean, protesting to the King that the land should be formally pledged to him. However, royal letters of the 1470s charge him to yield up lands to George Cunningham, which had formerly belonged to his father, William of Belton. He later became the 1st Earl of Glencairn. He married Margaret Hepburn (daughter of the Master of Hailes) and was succeeded by his son Robert. Alexander 5th Earl of Glencairn (d.1574) son of William and Katherine Borthwick (daughter of the 2nd Lord Borthwick, who still held lands in the Borthwick valley). He succeeded as Earl in 1548 and was confirmed in the Barony of Hassendean in 1551, as heir to his grandfather Cuthbert. In 1556 he granted the lands of Hassendeanbank and Capelrig to Sir Walter Ker and his wife Isabel. In 1557 he granted lands in Kilmaurs, the sasine listing several other Cunninghams. He wrote a poem called 'The Hermit of Allareit or Loretto, near Musselburgh', which expressed his anti-Catholic sentiments. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He is also said to have been responsible for defacing the Chapel Royal of Holyrood when Mary Queen of Scots was taken to Loch Leven in 1567. He firstly married Johanna, daughter of James Hamilton, Earl of Arran, and secondly Janet, daughter of John Cunningham of Caprington. He was succeeded by his son William. Rev. Alexander of Hyndhope (17th C.) from the family of the Earl of Glencairn. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1631 and was appointed as minister at Ettrick in 1641. He refused to conform to Episcopalianism and moved to his estate. His wife's name is unknown, but their children included: James of Hyndhope (1651–1709); Alexander (1654–1737), diplomat and historian; Walter, who became a stationer's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1667; and Elizabeth, who in 1671 married Adam, son of William Scott of Galalaw. Alexander (18th C.) cooper in Wilton Parish. He was living at Leaheads in 1747. It was said that in about 1754 he built a 'dyke on the north end of the west side of Heip-loan, which lies betwixt Stously and Leeheads'. He married Janet Hood in Wilton in 1742 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1746); Janet (b.1748); and Jean (b.1756). The witnesses in 1746 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Andrew (b.1785/6) from Mertoun in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Jerusalem near Lilliesleaf. His wife was Isabella and their children included Janet and Isabella. Charles Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of James, from whom he inherited the Abbotrule estate in 1891. He was recorded as owner of part of Abbotrule in the Land Tax Rolls from about the end of the 19th century. He attended Harrow and entered the Army in 1899, joining the Leicestershire Regiment, but fell into ill-health in Egypt and retired in only 1904. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married a daughter of John M. Barwick of Lowhall. His children were: Sybil, who married her cousin Mr. Church and settled in Northern England; and Violet, who rode with the Jedforest hounds. Cuthbert (d.1540/1) 2nd Lord Kilmaurs and 3rd Earl of Glencairn, he was son of Robert. In 1492 he had a sasine for the lands of Hassendeanbank and Brieryyards. He may be the Laird of Hassendeanbank fined for not being present at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He led his clan in an attack on Irvine in 1499 and in 1503 had the title Earl of Glencairn restored by James IV. He was granted the lands and half Barony of Hassendean in 1510/11. However, in 1511 he forfeited the lands of Briery Yards, 'by reason of having alienated the greater part of them'. The lands of 'Lang Hassindean' (also referred to as 'Eister Hassindene') were confirmed to Elizabeth Cunningham by him in 1514. In 1512 he gave a charter of half the lands of Hassendeanbank to Thomas Elphinstone and his wife Janet Turnbull. He was present at the Battle of Flodden and is said to have managed to escape from the battlefield. He was wounded in 1526 trying to rescue James V from the Douglases at the Battle of Linlithgow. In 1540 he was superior of the lands of Hutton, which he assigned to the Homes of Wedderburn. In 1492 he married Marion (or Marjory or Mary), daughter of Archibald 'Bell-the-Cat' Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus. Their children included: William, who became 4th Lord; and Alexander. David (19th C.) valet to Lord Napier. In 1860 he donated to the Museum a 'very fine Stone Celt from bed of a stream in Selkirkshire', as well as 'Spanish Military Spurs, and Chinese Locket'. Elizabeth (15th C.) daughter and heir of George of Belton. She married John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1469. In 1480/1 she claimed lands in Hassendean from Alexander, Lord Kilmaurs, superior of the half Barony of Hassendean. She had a 'retour' for Appletreehall in 1482 and was finally given the lands of 'Ester Langhassindene' in 1483 in a sasine of William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburgh. Alexander, Lord Home gained her lands at Appletreehall in 1494. Her husband died in 1508 and in 1511 David Scott 'of Gallowlaw' claimed a right to her lands in Hassendean, which were confirmed to her in 1514. The sasine mentions 'and tower thereof', suggesting that these lands contained Hassendean Tower. The 'precept of sasine' of 1514 refers to the lands of 'Eister Hassindene', which are probably the same, and confirmed by the Baron Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn, who must have been a distant relative. She was mother of Sir John Hay, 2nd Lord of Yester, who died at Flodden. Francis (b.1646) youngest son of Rev. Robert, minister of Hawick. His father was already deceased when he became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh with John Rankine. Francis of North Synton (d.c.1691) recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1691 his sister Maria was served as his heir to the lands of North Synton. George of Belton (d.bef. 1482) son of William of Belton. Royal letters from the 1470s charge Alexander Cunningham, Lord Kilmaurs to give him the lands in the eastern half of Hassendean, which had been held by his father. He also held the lands of Appletrehall. His daughter and heiress Elizabeth married John, Lord Hay of Yester. George (b.c.1770s) spinner in Hawick. He also worked as a manager at a woollens factory, perhaps Nixon's. He is probably the weaver recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799 and listed as a dyer on the 1801 list. In 1795 he married Betty Cook from Melrose, with Robert Heymers as cautioner. She died in 1840, around the same time as a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Their children included: Beatrice (b.1796), who married William Broadwood; Anne (b.1799), who married Robert Kennedy; Margaret (b.1800), who married Thomas Turnbull; Helen (b.1808), married John Lunn; Janet (b.1810), married Andrew Byers; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); and Catherine Nixon (b.1815), married William Scott. George (b.1842) born at Lynnwood Mill on the Slitrig. He became a clerk with the railway at Jedburgh in 1857, being appointed Superintendent of the Western District of the North British Railway in 1884, retiring in 1907. Sir James (13th/14th C.) son of Gilbert and nephew of Robert (whose head was put on top of Lochmaben Castle by the English in 1299). In 1316 he was granted the lands of Hassendean by King Robert I, presumably in reward for support at Bannockburn etc. This was confirmed in a charter of 1321. He held Hassendean in feudal and military tenure, for the payment of £11 at Whitsunday and Martinmas. James (14th/15th C.) holder of the lands of Hassendeanbank, which he resigned to Sir William of Kilmaurs. A charter of 1409 describes him as son and heir of the deceased 'Christal Cunningham', relative of Sir William. James (c.1552–1631) 7th Earl of Glencairn, son of William, grandson of Alexander. The family owned extensive lands and titles in Renfrewshire, Dumbartonshire, Ayrshire, Stirlingshire and Dumfriesshire, as well as the half Barony of Hassendean. He is recorded in 1588 and 1591 requesting that individuals produce charters to lands they owned within Hassendean, suggesting perhaps that he was a tough Baron. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He was confirmed in the Barony in 1599, as heir to his grandfather Alexander (who had died about 15 years earlier). In 1601 he issued a warning to Alexander, Lord Home, Robert, Lord Roxburgh, Walter Scott 'of Edislaw' and others to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean. And in 1603 he issued a 'summons of removing' to a large number of Scotts, plus some Douglases, Eliotts and Turnbulls who are described as 'pretended tenants'; he must have been unsuccessful in this attempt. He is recorded in 1604 still being the superior of the eastern half barony of Hassendean, and he is confirmed to his rights in Hassendean in 1610. In 1610 he granted some lands in the Barony of Kilmaurs. He resigned Hassendean to the King in 1613 in favour of his son William, who succeeded in 1618 and a 'bond of relief' for these lands is recorded in 1622. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Colin Campbell of Glenorchy and was succeeded by his son William. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1688. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779, with a value of £2 14s 11d. In 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto and valued at £1 16s 7d. Probably the same James had a daughter Eupham baptised in Minto in 1783. James (b.1809/10) from Lanark, he was an agricultural labourer. He was a 'General Labourer' at Turn in Kirkton Parish in 1851 and a ploughman at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish in 1861. His wife was Mary (from Castleton) and their children included: John (b.1839/40); Mary (b.1842/3); James (b.1845/6); Sarah (b.1847/8); Agnes (b.1849/50); Jessie (b.1851/2); and Georgina (b.1856/7). In 1861 his wife donated to the Museum a brass sword handle and silver coin of Edward I, found in the old tower at Southdean. James W.B. (1846–91) son of John and Eleanor Brodie, he came from the Hyndhope family. He was tenant farmer at Grahamslaw. He was a cousin of David Henderson, from whom he inherited the Abbotrule estate in 1887. He had the main house internally renovated, and the lands improved in various ways. However, he was in the house for only about a year before he died. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Julia Dinsdale, daughter of John Marshall Barwick of Lowhall, Yeadon. The Abbotrule estate was inherited by his son Charles Alexander. He also had 2 daughters. He was buried at Southdean. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Robson and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1644. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Howpasley in 1711 when his son Alexander was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as a student in 1722 when he witnessed at least 4 baptisms in Hawick. In 2 cases he was witness along with student Robert, who was presumably his brother. He was likely to have been a son of the minister, Rev. Robert. John (b.1842/3) from Galashiels, he was Assistant Schoolmaster in Lilliesleaf in 1861. Keith local police sergeant. He played for Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club for 35 years, being on the first XI in the years 1974–2005. Maria (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of North Synton, she was also known as Margaret. In 1691 she was served heir to her brother's 50-shilling land of North Synton. In the same year she married Gideon Elliot, surgeon pharmacist and Burgess of Edinburgh, who was 3rd son of Thomas Elliot, Laird of Bewlie and tenant of Borthwickshiels. Neil (15th C.) son of William, who granted him lands at 'Langhassendean' in 1457. It is unclear how he was related to the other family members who held land in that parish. Rev. Patrick (1636–c.1706) probably eldest son of Robert, the Hawick minister and Margaret Shaw. He is recorded as residing in Hawick after he graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1666. In 1669 he was a Burgess in Hawick and stated to the Council that thereafter he would no longer sit in the Baron's Court (this presumably being considered to conflict with his interests as a Burgess). He is mentioned in the court case following the disturbances at St. Jude's Fair in Hawick in 1673, when there were disputes between the Baron's tenants and agents and the townspeople; the court case mentions 'in special occasion of some debates and differences between them and Mr Patrick Cunningham, vassal to the Earl'. He is probably the Patrick (named explicitly as 'Mr') who was fined for reproachful language against the Bailies in 1676, 'saying that in spite of them, and they were hanged, they should not poind him upon their decreet, and that he had been £1000 out of their way already, and would be another, and would make them stand where they should tremble'. He was additionally fined that year 'for deforcing the officers with ane collraicke'. In 1677 James Chisholme was fined by the Hawick Bailies for moving the march-stones between their properties. In 1678 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £126 13s 4d; the precise location of these lands is unclear, but by 90 years later they are recorded being separated into parts owned by George Oliver at Burnflat, as well as parts owned by Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, by John Scott (at Allars) and by Walter Scott. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh, becoming minister at Lochrutton in 1684 and being presented to Kirkton in late 1686 and installed there the following year. He remained in Kirkton until his death, and appears to have been one of the few local ministers not to have been 'outed' during the Revolution of 1689. However, whether he carried on as minister continuously is unclear. In 1684 he is described as 'Mr. Patrick Cunningham burgess in Hawick' when he sold 'Cramptlands Croft' (in the East Mains of Hawick) to Alexander Hislop. In 1692 he paid the feu duty on the 4 acres of land in Hawick that had been feued to his father by the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1694 'Mr Patrick Cuningham for an kiln' is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls for the west-side of Hawick Parish. It was stated in 1767 that lands he had once possessed were then partly in the hands of Bailie Turnbull; they were still referred to as 'Mr. Patrick Cunningham's Lands in Hawick' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when 2 parts were owned by Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick and valued jointly at £47 13s 4d; Walter Scott owned another part, valued at £28 1s, and the part called 'Allers Garden' was owned by John Scott and valued at £10 19s. He married Marion Turnbull, with their sons, baptised in Hawick, being: Robert (b.1669), who became minister of Wilton and later Hawick; Thomas (b.1671), who probably died young; John (b.1680), who may be the man who became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1727 (although he could not have been born in 1680); and William (b.1682). The witnesses to the 1671 baptism were 'Mr' George Scott and 'Mr' Archibald Gledstains, and in 1680 were Robert Burn and William Laing as witnesses. It is possible that his son was the William, writer in Edinburgh, who wrote and witnessed the Orrock bequest. Rev. Patrick (18th C.) probably related to one of the local ministers, perhaps son of Rev. Robert of Wilton and Hawick. In 1742 he was described as Chaplain to Col. Stewart's Regiment in service in Holland, when, along with ex-Bailies John Scott and Thomas Turnbull, he sold the lands of East Mains of Hawick to the Duke of Buccleuch; this is probably related to lands connected with Rev. Robert in 1649 (hence he was likely to have been an ancestor). His lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £86 13s 4d in the 1740s. In 1762 he was 'chaplain to one of the regiments in the service of the States General' when Rev. Henry Erskine of Roberton had a commission to grant his lands 'below the middle of the barony of Wilton ... south of the water of Teviot' (possibly near the Sandbed) to Walter Scott, after previously being possessed by James Irving; given that Henry Erskine was married to Janet, daughter of Rev. Robert, if he was also a son of Rev. Robert, then Erskine would have been his brother-in-law. In 1763 he is still recorded in documents relating to teinds on his lands in Hawick, by which time he was Chaplain to Col. Villegas's regiment in Holland. Probably the same 'Mr Patrick' was recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1725 (since the earlier Rev. Patrick died about 20 years before that). He inherited the lands of his forebears in Hawick and he is the 'Mr. Patrick' whose lands were still named after him in the early 19th century. Perhaps the same Patrick was listed as 'student' in 1716 when he witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased Adam Turnbull, merchant in Hawick. He is probably the 'Mr Cunningham' who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Rev. Charles Telfer in 1730. Sir Robert of Kilmaurs (d.c.1450) son of Sir William. In 1413 he was granted the lands of Kilmaurs, 'Lambrachton', Kilbride, 'Skelmorele' and 'Polqwharne' in Ayrshire, Redehall in Edinburgh, 'Ranfarule' in Renfrew and Hassendean in Roxburghshire. His brothers Thomas, Alexander and John are also mentioned, as well as their cousins Sir Humphrey and Archibald. In 1422 he is recorded as superior of lands in Larkshire. He married Anne Montgomery and was succeeded by his son Alexander, Earl of Glancairn. Another son, Archibald, is recorded as witness to a document for Alexander in 1452. Rev. Robert (d.1656) graduating from Glasgow University in 1608, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Haddington in 1617 and was presented to Hawick Parish by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in April 1625. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was the minister who first recorded the need for a school in Hawick in 1627 and signed the National Covenant at Hawick in 1638. He was a member of the Assembly in 1638, being one of the Commissioners appointed for the Presbytery of Jedburgh and was also on the Commission in 1647. In 1633 he was owed £266 13s 4d for his stipend from the deceased Earl of Buccleuch, and £14 8s for the communion. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls paying £20 for 'the crofts of land' in Hawick Parish in 1643, as well as being recorded as one of the owners of part of West Mains and paying an additional £66 13s 4d for other lands in Hawick. In 1648 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Bell. A document of 1649 from Francis, Earl of Buccleuch records teinds of lands in Hawick given to him. In 1692 his son Patrick paid the feu duty on the 4 acres feued to him by the Earl of Buccleuch. He married Margaret Shaw and their children were: Patrick (b.1636), minister of Kirkton; Catherine (b.1635); Thomas (b.1637); Margaret (b.1639); James (b.1640); Alexander (b.1643); Anna (b.1644), who may have died in 1662 and been buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh; and Francis (b.1646), who is recorded becoming an apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663. The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were James, Earl of Queensberry and Rev. Alexander Reid, minister of Ashkirk (whose wife was also a Shaw). His widow discharged payment to Sir William Scott of Harden for building and repairing the manse in 1665. Rev. Robert (d.c.1690) minister of Ashkirk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and was admitted to Ashkirk Parish in 1649. When he was appointed he 'desiret that all public scandals unsearched out might be represented, that so all faults of eccelesiastical cognizance committed since the late minister's death, might be censured according to the order and discipline of this church'; this led to a period of regular and extreme victimisation of apparent sinners in the Parish, using the jougs or stool of repentance. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was ousted from Ashkirk in 1662 for opposition to Episcopacy, and probably forced to leave the limits of the Presbytery of Selkirk. Nevertheless, he was 'indulged by the Privy Council' (i.e. reinstated) in 1679, although deprived again in 1685 (and must have overlapped for a while with Archibald Inglis). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of North Synton, valued at £600. However, he survived past the Revolution and became Presbyterian minister again in 1689 for about another year (he was certainly dead by July of 1691). He married Elizabeth Scott in 1654 and she died in 1661 (it is unclear which branch of the Scotts she came from). Their only surviving daughter was Mary, who married Gideon Elliot, surgeon in Edinburgh. However, Margaret (b.1657), William (b.1659), Margaret (again, b.1660) and Francis (b.1661), all baptised in Ashkirk Parish, were also his children. The baptismal witnesses in 1657 were 'Thomas ...' and 'Mr Robert ...', who was presumably the local Schoolmaster or one of the neighbouring ministers (but not the earlier Rev. Robert, who died the previous year). It is interesting that there are 3 separate local ministers of the same name who lived in the same century, with no clear indication that this one was related to the others (although probably the Wilton and Hawick minister was grandson of the Hawick one). Rev. Robert (c.1668–1722) probably son of Patrick, minister at Kirkton, and hence grandson of the previous Rev. Robert of Hawick. He may be the Robert 'student' who witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick in 1682. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1689 and was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1693. He became minister of Wilton in 1694 (having also received a call to Selkirk), becoming the first minister after the Revolution, and filling a vacancy of over 5 years. He had to deal with several matters of discipline early on, but soon became a popular minister. He joined Alexander Orrock (plus Robert Bell of Cavers and possibly Robert Scott of Roberton) in a protest against an Act of the Synod in 1705 (or possibly 1703) relating to the government of the Church. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, his lands there were valued at more than £80; this was probably the croft of land granted to his grandfather by the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1711 he was one of the witnesses to the Orock bequest. His servant in 1712 was Robert Huntly and his gardener in 1715 was Walter Paterson. In 1714 Anne Douglas, 'Nurse to Mr Rot Cunningham' was married in Hawick. In the 1718 survey of the properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch he is recorded as 'Mr Robart Kilinggame', who owned 2 acres, 1 rood and 1 perch within the East Mains of Hawick (but the precise location is not described). He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1711 and moved across the Teviot in 1712, despite efforts of the Wilton Parishioners to keep him, and debates at the Presbytery for several months. This included an initial vote against the call to Hawick, which was appealed by Gideon Scott of Falnash, the Duchess of Buccleuch's representative; there was also an objection by the Hawick Bailies and others that he could not be heard in the west-end of the Kirk. Nevertheless, he became the only minister to move over the Teviot, and against his own preference. He appears to have been more diligent than his predecessor in exacting fines for various transgressions. He acted to suppress 'irregular marriages' and non-observance of the Sabbath in any form and also increased the eldership from 8 to 19. Like other ministers in the south of Scotland after the Revolution, he was sent north, for priods up to a few months, to praach to congregations that were still without a minister of their own. He is the first Hawick poet of which there is authentic record, writing the poem 'Ode to Hawick' in 1710; it is also known as 'Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick'. Originally in Latin, the poem was translated to English by Town Clerk Walter Gladstains. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 when the new Hawick Schoolmaster was appointed. In 1714 his servants Robert Henderson and Andrew Turnbull witnessed a baptism and his servant Walter Scott witnessed another in 1720. He was often in ill-health in later years, and so helped by an assistant, Charles Telfer, who would eventually succeed him. In 1721 he went to Cornwall for his health, but died a year later. He married Marjory Ker of Sunderland Hall, and their children included: Robert (b.1704); Jean (b.1707), who married bookseller Arthur Armstrong; Alexander (b.1713); and Janet, who married Henry Erskine, minister of Roberton. William (b.1703), Marion (b.1706), Elizabeth (b.1708) and Marjorie (b.1710), baptised in Wilton Parish, were probably also his children (but may not have survived). It seems likely that Patrick, who is recorded in around the 1720s as owner of some of the same family lands in Hawick (and was later a military chaplain), could have been another son. Additionally John, listed as a student in 1722 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick, may have been one more son. He is buried in St. Mary's churchyard. Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer recorded in Barnhills in 1799. Robert (19th/20th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles in the early 1900s. He lived at Branxholme, but owned the farm of Menslaws. He was earlier managed of the Earl of Home's estates in Jedforest. He also serve on Roxburghshire County Council. He had one son and several daughters. Sir William of Kilmaurs (d.bef. 1415) cousin (distant possibly) of Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany, who was Governor of Scotland. He was son of William and Margaret Danielston. He was Sheriff of Ayrshire. Among other holdings, he was superior of the half barony of Hassendean, as confirmed by Robert III in 1399. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. In 1409 he confirmed lands at Hassendeanbank to John, son of Adam Turnbull. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Danielston of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert of Kilmaurs. Other sons (named in the 1413 charter to Sir Robert) were Thomas, Alexander and John. He may have been the Sir William whose daughter Margaret married Fergus Macdowell of Makerstoun. William (15th C.) described as 'Laird of Beltoun' in a charter of 1457 where he gave some lands in Hassendean to his son Neil. His son and heir George was one of the witnesses. It is unclear how he was related to the Cunninghams of Kilmaurs, who held the eastern half Barony of Hassendean. His brother was Thomas (possibly of Wemys). William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. He is listed there as Laird of the feu lands of Kilmaurs, and was fined for failing to appear to 'give suit' for his lands of Hassendeanbank. It is possible that he was the same as William, son of Cuthbert, but it seems more likely he was from an earlier generation, perhaps son of Alexander. William (15th/16th C.) Parson of Hawick, witness to the 1519/20 marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and James Gledstains. He is listed as 'Master Wilzaime Cvninghaim, persoune of Hawyk' and 'Sir Johanne Hardy, chaplane' is listed as well. He clearly had a masters degree and was the main clergyman at that time, presumably replacing Alexander Newton, who is recorded as Vicar in 1514. Sir William 5th Earl of Glencairn (d.c.1548) son of Cuthbert. In 1525, while still Master of Glencairn, he was part of a group (including Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) who had remission for a breach of peace and crime committed by them in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and help in 'repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers'; on the back of this document is an obligation to them for 'the slauchtir of Duchemen, etc.' In 1527/8 (when still Master of Glencairn) he was one of the men listed as caution for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme during his exile to France. In 1531 he was 'lord of fee of the lands of Glencarn and superior' of Hassendeanbank when he granted those lands to Walter Ker of Cessford. He succeeded his father as Earl of Glencairn in 1540; this included being Baron of the half lands of Hassendean. In 1519 (before he succeeded) he gave a 'precept of clare constat' for Hassendeanbank to William Elphinstone, and in 1543 had the lands resigned to him by Walter Ker of Cessford, to be regranted in 1543 to Walter and his wife Isabel. He was taken prisoner at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542 and was said to have been involved in the assassination of Cardinal Bethune in 1544. He was succeeded by his son Alexander after only a few years as Earl. Another son was Robert, recorded as a witness in 1540. William (c.1575–1631) 8th Earl of Glencairn, son of James. He was confirmed in the half Barony of Hassendean in 1618. However, he appears to have sold the Barony in 1622 to James Scott from Leith. He married Janet, daughter of Mark Kerr, Earl of Lothian and was succeeded by his son William, 9th Earl. Other children included Robert (Usher to King Charles II, who married Anne Scott of Scotstarvit), Elizabeth (who married Sir Ludovic Stewart of Minto), Margaret, Jean and Marion. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is listed as owner of 4 hearths along with John Haliburton, but it is unclear who they were or why they were listed together. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism in 1707 for John Turnbull 'oye' to Rev. James Kerr of Abbotrule, along with apothecary Walter Scott. He was recorded as 'notar' in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for John Little, tailor in Hawick. Perhaps the same William witnessed baptisms for William Mitchellhill (workman in Branxholme Town), for Walter Inglis (servant in Crumhaugh) and for William Langlands in 1719. Perhaps the same William was 'son to Mr Cuningham' in 1720 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson and 'son to our Minister' when he witnessed baptisms (along with Walter Scott) for shoemaker Robert Porteous, merchant Andrew Turnbull and weaver Robert Jolly; he was probably also the 'Chirurgeon' in 1720 who witnessed (again along with Walter Scott, sevant to the minister) another baptism for weaver John Anderson. It seems likely he is the William baptised in 1682, son to Rev. Patrick (the spelling

curch (kurch) n., arch. a kerchief – 'Item, sax plain hand cursches' [SB1633].

curds an cream (kurdz-in-kreem) n. traditional dish that was formerly a staple of the working classes, and was eaten across Britain, appearing for example in Shakespeare's 'The Winter's Tale', Act IV, Scene IV.

the Curds an Cream (thu-kurdz-in-kreem) n. dish that the Cornet charges the tenant of St. Leonards farm (or now a local caterer) to prepare after the Chase on the Thursday evening before the week of the Common Riding, to be eaten the following Friday. The Thursday night Chase is hence sometimes referred to as 'the Ordering of the Curds and Cream'. The dish is served at the Hut on the Friday morning. In the distant past this ordering (and hence the 'Hut') happened at a neighbouring farm to St. Leonard's, with several other farms being recorded in the later 19th and early 20th centuries. In 1855 it is recorded that at Whitchesters, the riders 'were plentifully entertained with that cooling and delicious beverage, if we may so speak, 'curds and cream'. Since 1912 the event has solely taken place at St. Leonards farm. The eating of curds and cream during the riding of the marches was probably customary since the early days. The ordering used to be an informal visit to a farm by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. The first official ordering of the curds and cream (i.e. the first real Thursday night Chase) was instituted by J.E.D. Murray in 1888. He carried out the formal duty for almost 50 years, often with an original poem – 'So then get to thy byre, friend Thomas Reid, And let every milk pail ream, That morning spread ye This table ready Wi' plentiful curds and cream' [JEDM], 'A rich repast of curds and cream awaits The cavalcade, who, all with hearty glee, Enjoy the fare for them so kindly spread Beneath the awnings of a grand marquee' [JCG].

curfew (kur-few) n. the bells of St. Mary's, Wilton and the Town Hall used to ring a nightly curfew, celebrated in James Jamieson's poem 'The Aicht O'Clock Bell'. The ringing of the 8 o'clock curfew bell was certainly an ancient tradition and may have originated in Norman times. In the 18th century the public houses were supposed to close on the ringing of the 10 o'clock bell. Wilton Church ended the tradition by the first years of the 20th century, but the tradition continues at St. Mary's – '. . . When Hawick he pass'd, had curfew rung' [SWS], 'There's the old Kirk of St. Mary's that still peals the curfew hour, And has seen the Slitrig raging, with majestic, awful power' [WFC].

Curhaugh (kur-hawch) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Curhauche'. It is unclear where these lands were, but possibly related to Caerby Hill and the lands near there labelled 'Carboch' on Blaeu's c.1654 map.

Curle (ku-rul) n. Dr. Alexander Ormiston (1866–1955) son of Alexander, whose family held lands around Melrose. He went to Cambridge University. Like his older brother James, he was trained in the law, but became well known as an archæologist who excavated extensively around Scotland in the early 20th. He made spectacular discoveries at Traprain Law, Newstead and elsewhere. He is the only person to have held positions at the 3 main Scottish historical institutions. He was Secretary of the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, Director of the National Museum of Antiquties of Scotland and Director of the Royal Scottish Museum. He led the important investigation of the Hawick Mote in 1911, confirming its Norman origin, as well as excavations at Ruberslaw. In 1908 he wrote an article for the Scottish Historical Review describing the 1729 rental book of the factor of Wells House. In 1898 he married Katharine Wray, 2nd daughter if George Tancred. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Trow Mill, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. His surname is recorded as 'Currle'. His son James was recorded on the Militia ballot in 1797–1801. James (b.c.1770s) labourer at Trow Mill, son of the farmer there. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. He was also listed on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (1862–1944) eldest son of James and brother of Alexander. He owned several pieces of land around Melrose, Gattonside, Darnick and Newstead (the family home at Priorwood was later turned into a Youth Hostel). He was a Melrose solicitor who was a self-taught archæologist. In the years 1905–10 he led an excavation of Trimontium, raising money through the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland (the Hawick Archæological Society gave £10). This was an important and influential study, published as 'A Roman Frontier Post and its People. The Fort of Newstead in the Parish of Melrose' (1911). His notebooks were discovered recently and made available on the internet. He was on the first Roxburghshire County Council and was a member of the Jedforest Club. Richard (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as 'Ritchart Curles' and he was listed along with John, who was probably his son or brother. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Redford and their children included Janet (b.1689). Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (18th C.) married Elizabeth Baptie in Southdean in 1840 (also written 'Curl').

curlin (kur-lin) n. game similar to bowls on ice, sometimes called the 'roarin game'. It is unclear how early it may have been played locally, but a record of 1684 states that Sir William Scott, younger of Harden 'was playing at the curling with Riddel of Hayning, and others'. It was formerly played in Hawick at Hilliesland, on the Coble Pool, at Laidlaw's Cauld and at Loch Park. A pond was opened near St. Leonard's in 1866 and a new one at Crowbyres in 1890. A pond at Borthwickbrae Heights was used by residents of the Borthwick, where the game was extremely popular in the 19th century. There were other local clubs based at Branxholme, Rulewater, Hassdendean and Minto. The Hawick Curling Club was established in 1803, with patronage by several prominent local gentlemen, including Rev. Dr. Young and Provost Milligan. A minute of 1812, when there were 13 official members, mainly discusses the process of betting on the outcome of various short games; in 1826 members of the club were engaged in a wager over whether Dovemount Well was higher than Hassendean Pond! The game died out locally before about the time of WWI. There are some examples of old local curling stones in the Museum. One stone used in Hawick was called 'the Whaup', since its handle was like a curlew's bill, and another stone was called 'the Toon Clerk'. An 'antique stone inscribed 'Geo. Wat. Henderson 1772' ' was donated to the Museum by saddler Mr Strother.

the Curlin Pond (thu-kur-lin-pond) n. pond near St. Leonard's farm, used from 1866 until the new pond at Crawbyres was opened in 1890. Thereafter it slowly became abandoned, although still used for skating sometimes, this lasting until the 1960s. After 1890 it was scythed annually for thatch, the job being later taken on by the Town Clerk. The pond had a sluice gate at one end that would open automatically when the water level got too high, emptying into Wulliestruther. There was an earlier curling pond at Loch Park and another in the hills behind the Miller's Knowes.

Curlin Pond Plantin (kur-lin-pond-plawn'-in) n. plantation to the south of the road after Greenbank, on Borthwickbrae Heights. The former curling pond is situation within the woods there (marked clearly on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Curly Hogg (kur-lee-hōg) n. nickname in the 20th century.

curmudd (kur-mud) adj., arch. snug, comfortable – 'Sittin curmudd ahint, an geetin a hurl for nochts, twae-threi bleitheleike fallihs ... smokeet their claey peipes' [ECS].

curney see curny

curny (kur-nee) adj. curranty, containing currants – 'she made a grand curny banni', 'There's a sugar bool an taffy, tipenny pies, curney scones an' Hawick bakes ... ' [JEDM], 'A made a faisable mael oot o pei-soop ... wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen owre-an-abuin' [ECS], 'Douce as a curny dumplin' Sat The Moat' [DH] (also spelled 'curney').

curny banni (kur-nee-baw-ni) n. a rich curranty cake with a pastry covering – 'A sheive o' curnie-banna' [ECS] (cf. Selkirk banni).

curpin (kur-pin) n., poet. rump, crupper of a horse – '... if I had my leg yence owre him, if I don't make his cirpin crack, it's a pity' [JTe].

curran (ku-rin) n., poet. a currant – 'The tossilit curran weips hir teirs of blude, Nae primroisis will starre the wanhope wud ... ' [DH].

Currer (ku-rur) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1742. Andrew (18th C.) tenant in Whitrigs. He is recorded there in 1781, 1783, 1784, 1786 and 1794. He married Betty Riddell and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Margaret (b.1781);

Andrew (b.1783); Walter (b.1784); Thomas (b.1786); Janet (b.1788); George (b.1790); Margaret (again, b.1794); Robert (b.1798); and John (b.1800). Andrew (19th C.) married Bell Hardie in Cavers Parish in 1839. George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Hartwoodburn. In 1627 he was forcibly ejected from the lands that he leased from the Earl of Home, this by a band led by Walter Scott of Whithaugh, who claimed some right to the lands. He must have been ancestor of the later George. George (17th C.) tenant at Hartwoodmyres, recorded in 1692 when his son Thomas witnessed a document. In 1695 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Selkirkshire when he was 'off Hartwoodburn'. Probably the same George paid the land tax on Lindean in Selkirk Parish in 1678. He is probably the George who in 1693 witnessed a baptism for John Scott, younger of Gilmanscleuch. He seems likely to be the man referred to by Scott of Satchells in 1688: 'George Curror in Hartwood-myres, He is a Religious Man' and 'George Currors then a Shepherd Swain, That gains both Corn and Store, And doth afford both Bed and Board, And much relieves the poor; In Hart-wood-myres his Barns and Byres, And Shepherds do remain'. It was probably his son George who had a 'special retour' to his father in 1713. George (18th C.) tenant at Hartwoodburn. His daughter Margaret married Walter Elliot of Ormiston in Roberton in 1735. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Lockie (or Turner, or perhaps both) and his children included: William (b.1701); Isobel (b.1706); Isobel (again, b.1722); and Agnes (b.1724). James (18th C.) eldest son of William and Anna Elliot. He was tenant at Stanedge when recorded in a discharge of money to William Elliot of Harwood in 1725. It is possible he was the James whose children included: Henry (b.1727), baptised in Hobkirk; James (b.1728), baptised in Hobkirk; Robert (b.1731), baptised in Bedrule; Margaret (b.1733), baptised in Bedrule; Helen (b.1735), baptised in Bedrule, who married Hawick shoemaker John Oliver; and Elizabeth (b.1737). He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1766 for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer (who would therefore be his daughter). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Mary Hogg. Their children included: Ann (b.1767); and Isabel (b.1767). John (d.1776) skinner in Hawick. He paid tax for 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. He married Isabel, daughter of merchant John Cavers. Their children included: Thomas (b.1742); Mary (b.1743); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were workman Robert Boyd and flesher Robert Tudhope and in 1745 were surgeon Robert Scott and flesher Robert Tudhope. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Billhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is probably the John from Castleton who in 1788 in Cavers Parish married Margaret Jackson. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant 'in Buckeleugh' recorded as witness to the marriage of Anna Elliot of Harwood and William Currer, tenant at Hyndhope. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of George, tenant at Hartwoodmyres. In 1692 he witnessed the marriage contract between William and Anna Elliot of Harwood. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded at 'Kirkhouse' in letters to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He may have lived at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish. Thomas of Ormiston (18th/19th C.) listed in 1785 and 1787 as 'Curar' when he paid tax for having a female servant at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. He also paid the Horse Tax at Ormiston in 1785–97. He may also be the Thomas recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls at Yair in 1785–88. In 1788 he had a cook and chambermaid. In 1788 his lands of Ormiston were valued at £675 15s 4d and he also owned 'Overnscloss' in Selkirk Parish, as well as Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish (valued at £182). He also appears on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where his name is recorded as 'Curror'. He is probably the 'Thos Curror Esq' who in 1799 and 1802 witnessed baptism for William Scott in Flex. He is probably the same man as Thomas of Brownmuir (who paid tax on that place in 1802). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He is also recorded as a freeholder on the 1811 Head Court held in Jedburgh and was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He may be the Thomas from whom Clerklands (in Ashkirk Parish) was acquired before 1811. He also held the lands of Deanbrae in Cavers Parish in about 1811. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Ormiston. The will of his wife Margaret Easton is recorded in 1686. Although it is unclear if this is the Ormiston near Hawick, he may be related to the later Currers of Ormiston. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. William of Whitmuir (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1691 in a bond with James Shiel, miller in Southdean Mill. William (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Hyndhope in the Ettrick valley. In 1692 he married Anna, daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood. Robert and Thomas, son of George were witnesses, so presumably close relatives. Their son was James, recorded as tenant at Stanedge in a discharge of 1723. He may be the same as 'William Currior in Halydean' who witnessed a bond for Elliot of Harwood in 1693 and 'William Curror in Newhouse' who witnessed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Harwood in 1700 (also written 'Curror', 'Currour', etc.; formerly mixed up with the name Currie).

Currie (ku-ree) n. Adam (d.1840) resident of Stintyknowe. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was described in 1827 as a 'hosier, manufacturer of lambs wool hose, shirts, drawers, dresses'. He was listed as a manufacturer among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and as a hosier when he died. He married Elizabeth Borthwick (1794–1836). Their children included: William (b.1813), who married Anne Lugton; Martha (b.1814); Robert (b.1815), hosiery manufacturer; David (b.1820/1); Adam (b.c.1825); Margaret (b.1827/8); Eliza (b.1830/1); Jeannie (b.1833/4); and Lawrence (b.1836). He died at Stintyknowe, where several of his family are recorded living in 1841. Andrew (18th C.) tenant farmer of Hallrule. He is recorded as 'Andrew Curror in Harule' in 1758, among parishioners in Hobkirk Parish who were asked to provide broom for thatching the roof of the kirk. He was also ordered to buy '42 ells of harden at Selkirk Fair at 2d per ell, with 500 tacks', presumably also for the church ceiling. The family were originally of Brownmoor (Dumfriesshire) and later of Howden. His son George married Elizabeth Sibbald, Jean married Andrew Blaikie in 1768 and Margaret married Robert Oliver of Ancrum in 1763. A story is told of how he always used to gather his family and labourers together for a meal after the day's work, when he would pray for the devil to be chained to protect the crops for the season, until some of the youthful diners sneaked into the loft and rattled a chain during this prayer! He may be the 'Andrew Currier, town of Rule' who subscribed to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included James (b.1774) and unnamed children born in 1793 and 1799. Andrew (b.c.1780) recorded as servant to 'Mr Currie' at Hallrule on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the son of George, farmer at Hallrule, who was baptised in 1777. Andrew (1812–91) native of Ettrick Water, who was a sculptor. He was said to have known the Ettrick Shepherd personally. He was apprenticed to a millwright in Denholm and later lived at Darnick. He also became known as an antiquarian and donated casts of Roman artefacts to the Museum in Hawick in the early 1860s, being made an honorary member of the Archæological Society for 1860. He was responsible for sculpting the Ettrick Shepherd's memorial near St. Mary's Loch, as well as the statues of Mungo Park in Selkirk and Robert the Bruce at Stirling Castle, and the figures of Edie Ochiltree and Old Mortality on the Scott Monument. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule in 1685 when his wife Margaret Ker's will was recorded. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hallrule, according to the Horse Tax Rolls in 1786 and 1789–97. Note that his name appears to be written 'Currer' on some of these records. He is recorded in 1797 as owner of no less than 17 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He is probably the 'Mr Currie' at Hallrule who had 4 servants listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the George whose children, baptised in Hobkirk, included Agnes (b.1776), Andrew (b.1777), Margaret (b.1779), Jane (b.1780), Mary (b.1782), Betty (b.1784) and Isabel (b.1787). George (19th C.) millwright in Lilliesleaf in 1852. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. He is probably the James whose children, baptised in Bedrule, included: Helen (b.1702); Isabel (b.1706); John (b.1704); Margaret (b.1709); and John (again, b.1716). In 1726 it is recorded that 'James Curry in Ruecastle & family' were recipients of poor money from the Bedrule Session. James (17th/18th C.) farmer at Brugh in Hawick Parish. In 1741 his daughter Agnes married glover David Donaldson in Edinburgh. James (18th C.) teacher at a private school at Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish in 1759. He may have been related to the earlier James from Bedrule. James (19th/20th C.) resident of Nether Tofts. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. John (16th/17th C.) resident of Todshawhaugh who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands. He was named along with Walter Scott of Todshawhaugh and James Donaldson in Cavers. John (17th C.) recorded as an 'indweller' at Weens when he was witness to a Rulewater sasine in 1631. His son Thomas was also a witness. John (19th C.) married Janet Wight in Hawick in 1844. John (b.1838/9) partner in a small hosiery firm with his older brother Robert. In 1851 he was lodging at the Commercial Inn and listed as a commercial traveller. Lawrence (19th C.) member of Hawick Archæological Society from 1857. Mark (1845–1916) tweed merchant, probably son of John Bunyan and Janet Wright. As a monitor, he assisted with the school run by William Murray, which became St. Mary's School. His firm was Currie, Lee & Gawn. In 1876 he donated to the Museum a case containing 'twenty-three South American bird skins'. He had a large double cottage built for him at Loch Park in about 1879. He married Janet, daughter of farmer James Henderson; she may be the Mrs. Curie who presented the 'Chinese Shelter' to the Town. Richard (17th C.) recorded as 'Richerd Currill in Mervingislaw' when he witnessed a document for William Elliot of Harwood and Appotside in 1657. Robert (b.1815/6) born in Wilton, son of Adam and Elizabeth Borthwick, he was a hosiery manufacturer. He was listed as a stocking-maker at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he was listed as a hosier on Wilton Damside. His partnership with his brother John was listed on Allars Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street, and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 26 men. He married Jane Linton in 1839 and their children included Eliza, Sarah and Robert. Samuel (b.1802/3) from Dumfries, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Cross Wynd. His wife was Ann and their children included William Joseph (who competed in the shot putt at the 1857 Common-Riding Games), Margaret, Agnes, Ann, John, Samuel and Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) Burgess who was recorded as witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1768) and Betty (b.1771). Lt.-Col. Thomas (d.1815) probably son of farmer Andrew. He served at the Battle of the Nile under Sir Thomas Trowbridge of the Culloden where he was Captain. He was later promoted and after retiring he lived at Town-o-Rule farmhouse. He is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Thomas (b.1791/2) millwright in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he was on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Jessie, Jane, George, Thomas, Helen, Robert and John. Walter (18th C.) resident at Craik. His son George was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. He is probably the Walter 'Corrie' who acted as sponsor for tha baptism of a child of Robert Aitchison in Roberton in 1771. He may have been father of the later Walter. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Craik in 1785 and Broadlee Burnfoot in 1787. He was married in 1784, although his wife's name is not recorded. His children included Walter (b.1785) and James (b.1787). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name appears to be written 'Currey'. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Craik. The death of his daughter Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1804. William (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. The death of his son Walter, also a stockingmaker, is recorded in 1799. William of Linthill (d.1858) from Lanark, he purchased Linthill in 1822 from William Riddell. He married Jane Falconer. Their children included: Charles Russell (1825–55), the eldest son, who died while on duty with the Edinburgh County Militia; Jane Falconer (b.1826), who married John Cowan; George Falconer (b.1827), who died young; Mary (b.1829), who married Walter Riddell-Carre, as his second wife; William (b.1831); and Helen. William of Linthill (1831–89) son of William. Either he or his father was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire, as well as a Tax Commissioner for the county. He lived at Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, and was recorded there in Slater's 1852 directory. He was recorded at Linthill in a directory of 1868. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was owner of lands in Chapel, Porteous Croft and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, including those formerly owned by William Manuel and Thomas and John Telfer. He married Mary Margaret Hunt. His wife partly funded the local village hall and her nieces provided Lilliesleaf Kirk with a communion table. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard (formerly written 'Curry', possibly formerly also written 'Curror', and hence perhaps sometimes the same as Currer).

Currie Hall (ku-ree-hal) n. village hall in Lilliesleaf, also called Currie Memorial Hall, situated next to the school. It was built in 1900, funded by a donation in 1891 from the Curries of Linthill, with architects Dunn and Findlay.

Cuthbert (kuth-bur') n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant at Langlands in at least 1742–47. He married Mary Cooper and their children included: Isobel (b.1734); isobel (b.1736); May (b.1738); William (b.1740); Robert (b.1742) and Margaret (b.1742). The witnesses in 1742 were John [. . .] and Robert Easton. In 1764 it was stated that he had cut peats in Woolaw Moss within the previous 20 years. David 'Cannie Davie' (1855–1900) born in Leslie, said to be a simpleton he loitered around in Hawick, Selkirk and Galashiels at the end of the 19th century. He disliked work and was often drunk, dying in Dysart Poorhouse. J.C. Goodfellow wrote a poem about the injustice of the Hawick Magistrate sentencing him to 21 days in Jethart Jail for begging, when a wife-beater was fined only a few shillings – 'To puir Cannie Davie, O Hawick be kind, To work or to want he was never inclined' [RM]. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Adam (b.1774) and Elizabeth (b.1776) (also written 'Cuthberte').

Cuthbertson (kuth-burt-sin) n. Alexander 'Alec' or 'Cubby' local joiner, known for his craftsmanship. He presented a ceremonial lectern to the Council in the early 2000s and the ornamental chair for use at the Colour Bussing in 2014. He also gifted several hand-crafted items to the 1514 Club (including a piano stool in memory of Adie Ingles) and Burns Club and created the Cornets' Board by Drumlanrig's Tower. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk, who in 1642 confessed to the Session there that he and George Allan had shared part of a quart of ale after sunset, purchased from Isobel Cranston. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1651 for James Aitchison. John (17th C.) married Isobel Fletcher in Ashkirk Parish in 1692. John (17th C.) leased half of the farm of Todshawhaugh in 1672 and 1673. Perhaps the same John witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Janet Jackson in Hawick in 1673. John (17th C.) tailor at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. In 1691 he witnessed a baptism for James Rutherford. He married Isobel Fletcher and their children included Robert (b.1694), Bessie (b.1698), Jean (b.1703), George (b.1706) and Agnes (b.1708). The witnesses in 1694 were William and Andrew Fletcher (probably related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) Schoolmaster and reader in Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as Schoolmaster there in deeds of 1618 and 1629, the first teacher on record. He was also recorded as 'reader of Ashkirk' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He may be the Robert who married Margaret Turnbull in Ashkirk Parish in 1636. William Fergusson, F.S.A., 'W.F.' (1885–1947) librarian of Hawick Public Library from 1929, previously working at Cambridge University Library. He wrote poetry, much collected into 'Just Ebb and Flow' (1930) and 'Teries All, Poems, Hawick and the Borders' (1946). He also wrote the children's books 'Teri at the magic isle, adventures of the black cat' (1944), 'Teri on the prowl, more adventures of the black cat' (1946), and 'Naughty Coyote' (1947), which he illustrated himself. He died when on holiday in Girvan.

the Cutted Sike (thu-ku'-eed-sīk) n. name given in the 1767 description of the Common for the upper part of Fenwick Burn, near Whitchesters farm. It formed part of the old boundary of the Common – '. . . and then north by hillocks along Whitchester March to the cutted Syke' [C&L1767] (also written 'Syke'; it is unclear if this is intended as a name, or simply a description).

cuttelt (ku-tul') pp., poet. sharpened, whetted – 'Thy rough and ready weapon's nane sae blunt, 'Twill staun' a rattle 'gainst their cuttl't gullies' [JoHa], 'Blythe Bobbie, the butcher, gaed in for a shave, the barber got cuttl't, syne croppit him cleverly' [JoHa].

Cuttin the Sod (ku'-in-thu-sōd) n. ceremony performed by the Cornet at the outermost part of the town Common, where the 'Three Lairdships' meet, at the end of the Bull Field beyond what was once called Winnington Moss. This is on the Friday of the Common Riding, during the Riding of the Marches itself, and before proceeding to the Moor. In the past there would have been many sods turned over to mark different parts of the Common. Now there is a ceremonial sod turned over in the corner of a field, at the southern extremity of the Common, a nearby plaque marking the spot. A ceremonial implement, 'the Flachter Spade', is used for the task and the 25-year Cornet observes the event, giving a short speech afterwards. A ceremony of cutting a sod at the western extremity of the Common was inaugurated in 1905, but was soon abandoned. The ceremony may also symbolically replace the calling of the Burgess Roll, which used to take place at the Caa Knowe, further south (and no longer within the Town's Common) – 'Then ride the mairches; cut the sod, An' dip the flag in Teviot water' [IJ], '... Mindin' o' the Cornet whae'd lang syne cut oor sods' [MB].

cuttit (ku'-ee', kut-i', -tee') adj., pp. cut – 'An' than a bit o' plate had cutit yin o' her muckle taes, and aw tied a cloot on't ...' Dacre (dā-kur) n. Sir Christopher (c.1470–c.1540) 3rd son of Humphrey, 1st Lord Dacre. He is sometimes referred to as 'Cristell', 'Kerstiale' and variants. He was Sheriff of Cumbria and later Northumberland and Deputy Warden of the East Marches. He was brother of Lord Thomas, who led part of the English force that ravaged the Teviot valley in late 1513. His force effectively arrived as reinforcement from Belling Hill when Lord Dacre's attachment was surprised by the Scots at the Sclaterford. He also assisted his nephew, William on the Border. He was part of the force that assailed Ferniehirst in 1523. In 1534 the pair were accused of using his Scottish contacts to further his family's English feuds. They were imprisoned in the Tower of London, but later acquitted, and he was pardoned in 1534. He is last recorded in 1540, and it is not known if he married or had offspring. Leonard (c.1530–73) son of William, 3rd Baron of Gilsland and brother of Thomas. He was one the main promoters of the so-called 'Northern rebellion' against Queen Elizabeth in 1569. He was pursued by the Earl of Hunsdon in early 1570, hiding for a while in Bedrule Castle and eventually fleeing to Flanders. Lord Hunsdon's men 'burnt also Bedrowle, which was the first howse that Leoanard Decres took for hys succor, when he fled out of Ingland'. He died in Brussels. Philip (15th/16th C.) brother of Lord Thomas. He was Captain of Norham Castle. He led part of the detachment that laid waste to the Border in 1513, having a force of 300 men, which burned Ruecastle, 'with all the cornes in the same and thereabouts, and wan two towres in it, and burnt both roffe and flores'. He was captured by the Scots at Flodden. Ranulph (c.1290–1339) also known as 'Ralph', he was son of Sir William and 1st Baron Dacre. In 1331 he was appointed High Sheriff of Cumberland and Governor of Carlisle Castle. He was succeeded in turn by his sons William, Ralph and Hugh. He commanded the English troops at the Battle of Dornock in 1333. He was given lands in Annandale by Edward Baliol, but lost them in 1334; however, he had his father's land of Crailing restored to him in 1334/5. Sir Thomas (d.1525) 2nd Lord of Gilesland (or Gilliesland). English nobleman and Hawick arch-villain, from an old Cumberland family, with their seat at Gilsland. He was appointed as Deputy Warden in 1485 and Warden-general of all the English Marches in 1509, and was reputedly cruel and fierce in this role. His main residence was then at Harbottle Castle, and he was also Bailiff of Hexham. He fought at Flodden, where he commanded the reserve forces and supposedly found the body of James IV. He led several bands of raiders into Scotland, to ransack towers, pillage towns and burn crops, himself writing that 'there was never so mekill myschefe, robbry, spoiling, and vengence in Scotland than there is nowe, without hope of remedye; which I pray our Lord Gode to continewe'. His men served under the Earl of Surrey at the Battle of Flodden. There were raids within a few miles of Hawick recorded in November 1513 and May 1514. He wrote to the English Privy Council on 17th May 1514 describing the destruction of Liddle, 'Ludder' (uncertain what this is), Caerlenrig, Ewes, Teviot down to Branxholme, Borthwick from Borthwick mouth to Craik Cross, and Ale valley, describing that 'all, and euery of them, waist now, and noo corne sawne upon none of the said grounds'. The events at Hornshole could well have been during this campaign. In his own words to Henry VIII: 'In the next (moon)light, I shall, God willing, perform the said raid, and in the meantime shall cause small raids to be made, which shall be as great annoyance to the Scots as a great raid shall be, and thus shall your money be employed to the best I can and to the greatest hurt and destruction of the Scots'. He was personally present at the burning of Jedburgh in 1523. He married Elizabeth of Greystoke and was succeeded by his son William. He was killed in a fall from his horse – 'So much to sing. Do you remember fearfully Dacre's red bull's full-throated routing roar, And Teviot's pastures pillaged piteously Blasted and broken, swept and savaged sore?' [JYH], 'Yet when bold Dacre sent a force By Hornshole to raid, Two hundred Callants bravely marched, Nor any disobeyed' [WFC]. Sir Thomas (bef. 1527–66) eldest son of Sir William, he was 4th Lord of Gillesland and Greystoke, but only for 3 years. There is another contemporary Sir Thomas, who was an illegitimate son of Thomas, 2nd Lord Dacre; as a result he was sometimes referred to as 'younger'. He may be the Thomas (cousin of Thomas Wharton) who accompanied Sandy Armstrong and others in burning Dumfries in 1542. He was knighted at Roxburgh in 1547. He appears to have spent most of his life assisting his father as Warden of the West Marches. A bond of 1558 by him and his son and heir 'Christoll' promises to present a certain Englishman to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He died intestate, his heir being the 5 year old George. His widow married the 4th Duke of Norfolk. Sir William of Cumberland (13th/14th C.) granted Crailing by the Bishop of Durham in 1310. He was succeeded by his son Ranulph. Sir William (d.1563) 3rd Lord Dacre of Gilsland, he continued as Warden of the West Marches for several years after his father Thomas's death, probably serving 1549–53. He is probably the Lord Dacre who led a raid on Eskdale in 1527, with 2,000 men, although this was resisted by the Armstrongs. Along with Sir Christopher (his uncle), they led a force that burned Denholm and Cavers in 1535 (supposedly with the assistance of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholm). He married Elizabeth Talbot and was succeeded by their son Thomas. His lead coffin was stolen out of Lanercost Priory in 1775.

daithless (dāth-lis) adj. deathless – '. . . But they've left us the licht o' the mune And a daithless memoree' [TK], '. . . Clad in its daithless minstrelsy' [JBS].

daiths (dāths) n., pl. deaths. The number of deaths recorded in the Parish of Hawick in 1791 was 71, and it was exactly double that in 1836, although skewed in the following year because of cholera. When someone was known to be dying the Minister in 1839 said that an old custom was for the friends and family to gather at the house and worship together, singing a few verses of Psalm 107.

Dakers (dā-kurz) n. Rev. John Rose (1827–1899) a native of Dundee, he was Episcopalian minister in Brechin 1852–3. He was then minister of St. Cuthbert's Episcopal Church 1854–82, being the incumbent when the new church was built on Slitrig Crescent. He introduced morning services 3 days a week and a daily evening service. His sister was the first recorded organist and choirleader of St. Cuthbert's. He was also a Director of Hawick Working Men's Building & Investment Co., Ltd., as well as being President of the Archæological Society, having joined in 1856 (as the 43rd member). He gave a talk on 'Mediæval Guilds' in 1874 and Dalkeith House and Newbattle Abbey in 1877. He gave evidence before a Parliamentary Commission about the effects that local child labour had on education. He left Hawick in 1882 for Cumbrae, becoming Rector of St. Andrews and Canon of Millport Cathedral.

In 1892 he retired to Clifton near Bristol. Dakers Place is named after him. In 1862 in Hawick he married Frances Margaret, daughter of John Scott, who was a doctor in Edinburgh. Their children were: Hugh John; Cuthbert Carrique; Francis Scott; Bernard William, a surgeon who died in East Africa; Mary Louisa; and Margaret Charlotte. Frances Margaret nee Scott (19th C.) daughter of John Scott, who was a doctor in Edinburgh. Her mother was Louisa Plimer, and she owned a watercolour miniature of her mother and other portraits by her grandfather Andrew Plimer. In 1862 in Hawick she married Rev. John Rose of the Episcoplian Kirk. In 1866 she loaned some items for the Museum's temporary exhibition: 'rare specimens of Chinese, Turkish, Dutch, and Dresden crockery-ware; Indian (Sorat) workboxes, carved ivory, and sandal wood card cases, antique medicine chest, found on the battle-field of Culloden, and a portrait of the late Dr Scott'.

Dakers Place (dā-kurz-plis) n. street in the Terraces, with houses constructed in 1880, named after Rev. J.R. Dakers.

Dalcove (dal-kōv) n. farm near Makerstoun, on the north bank of the Tweed. A tower here was razed by Hertford's men in 1545. James Newton of Dalcove owned lands at Boonraw in the late 15th century (it is 'Dawcofe' in 1481, 'Dalcow' in 1484, 'Dawcofe' in 1494 and 'dalcof' in 1502).

dale see dail

dale (dāl) n. a river valley, used locally to split the Borders into its major watercourses, hence Eskdale, Ewesdale, Liddesdale, Teviotdale and Tweeddale.

Dalfernocksgill (dal-fer-noks-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Dalfernokisgill' in the c.1376 rental roll. They are listed under the 'Foresta' Section, with a value of 40 pence. This is probably the lands of 'Dalferno' that were leased by Simon and Christopher Armstrong according to a rental roll of 1541, with a value of 20 shillings.

Dalgetty (dawl-ge-tee) n. Sgt. (18th/19th C.) local man who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. He was presumably serjeant in some military unit. Perhaps the same man is recorded in these lines by Bet Young: 'Hawick, it's a trading town, and loyal men therein, The first of their adventures, they march'd to serve their king. So well Dalgaty he can tell, they march'd to him full speed, So many of our Hawick men wears yellow and the red'.

Dalgleish (dawl-gleesh) n. former name for lands in Ettrick Parish, on the Tima Water, near the border with Dumfriesshire. This may be the original location that gave rise to the surname. Note that it was included for a long time as part of a barony, along with Synton and Whitslade, even although it is on the far side of Selkirkshire; so it was essentially a detached part of the Barony of Synton, through annexation. The Nether Dalgleish and Over Dalgleish Burns, with their adjacent farms, are still marked on the Ordnance Survey map, near Tima Loch on the B709. In 1383 Peter of 'Koeburn' (Cockburn of Henderland) resigned the superiority of 'Dalgles' (the annual rent from the lands or a pair of gilt spurs) to Thomas Erskine of Dun. There was already a family by the name of Dalgleish living there in 1407 and Simon 'of Dalgles', was Vicar of Ashkirk in the early 15th century. It was inherited by Alexander Erskine in 1489 and the Erskines continued as superiors through to the early 17th century. In 1507/8 the land passed from the Erskines to John Glendinning, Coroner of Eskdale. Simon Glendinning (also Coroner of Eskdale) owned the lands in 1540 when he acknowledged payment from his tenant, John Scott of Thirlestane. It was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1609 and tenanted by Matthew Graham and William Dickson, with his mother Margaret Scott. It was annexed to the Barony of Synton and inherited by Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whitslade in 1647. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655. Thomas and Adam Scott were there in 1797. It was part of the Buccleuch estates in the 19th century (the name was formerly 'Dalglise', and variants, being 'Dalgles' in 1415 and 1418, 'Dalglesche' in 1507/8, 'Dalgleische' in 1609 and 'Dalgleiss' in 1635 and 1647; 'Dalgleisshes hill' is marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map; it has been suggested that the origin is 'de l'eglise', i.e. an association with church lands, however the initial 'dal' may be Cumbric for 'haugh', with 'gless' being a stream).

Dalgleish (dawl-gleesh) n. Adam (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He may be related to other contemporary Dalgleishes. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded being in 'candill neis' in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He served as surety for himself, but was fined for not appearing. It is unclear where he lived, perhaps 'Candle Naze'. Adam 'Ade' (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Ade Dalglesch in Braidhauch' in 1507 when he received remission for receiving and communing with Simon Turnbull, Robert Turnbull and others. Thomas and William are also mentioned, and so may have been his sons or brothers. In 1507 he separately had remission for associating with 'Willelmo Dalglesch', 'Andrea Crosare' and rebels of the 'Levin' (probably the Leven valley in Cumbria). This seems likely to be the Braidhaugh on Teviot (but it is not impossible it was the one in the Rule valley). He may be the Adam who was listed in the 1526 remission that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He may also be the 'Adam Dauglesche' listed in the Exchequer Rolls for 1501, when he had a fine remitted for absence from Jedburgh Aire. He was surely related to William, who is recorded in Braidhaugh at about the same time. Adam (16th C.) owner of the lands of Deuchar in Yarrow, according to a rental roll of 1541. He could be the Adam who witnessed documents in Selkirk in 1528, relating to Lewenshope. He is also recorded 'in Dewquhair' when acting as a witness in Selkirk in 1539. In 1539 he was recorded as 'gudschir' to Elizabeth (daughter of Marion Dalgleish) in a marriage contract with Walter, son of Robert Scott in Howford. Elizabeth was separately described as his niece, and hence he was presumably brother of Marion. His son James was also a witness. In 1540 he witnessed a transaction between Simon Glendinning of Dalgleish and John Scott of Thirlestane. Adam of Deuchar (d.bef. 1618) said to have been murdered by James and William, sons to John Scott of Newark. In 1618 there was an instruction given to Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch, to apprehend the 2 men, with his widow Helen Donaldson and daughters Isobel and Marion, making the complaint. Adam (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscote in 1718 in 1720 and Outerside in 1725 and 1727. His children included: William (b.1718); Adam (b.1720); Helen (b.1723); Maly (b.1725); William (again, b.1727); and Archibald (b.1730). Adam (17th/18th C.) married Mary Elliot in Roberton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Ann (b.1741), William (b.1745), George (b.1747). Mary (b.1743), baptised in Jedburgh, may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Hardie in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Adam 'Yeddie' (18th C.) warder at Oakwood Tower in 1745, according to a story told about the Laird of Harden escaping the dragoons there, after he was on the run following the 1745 Jacobite rebellion. He could be the Adam, son of Walter, born in Yarrow Parish in 1694. Alexander (1754–93) son of John, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish and was a mason of Rulewater, living at Hillshaugh. His brother John was also a mason, while William may have been another brother. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Coutard, and she died in 1835. They had sons John (b.1787) and William (b.1792), who became merchants in London, as well as a daughter Janet (b.1790). Alexander (b.1799/1800) stocking-maker in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households at the Dean in 1835. He was living at Coldhouse in 1841, perhaps the last person to do so. By 1851 he was on Wilton Kirkstyle. He married Margaret Lockie and their children included Jane (b.1819), Walter (b.1821), John (b.1825), James (b.1828), Mary (or Marianne, b.1831), Margaret (b.1834) and Alexander. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for Mangerton lands going to the Scotts of Branxholme. Given the other signatories, he was probably a local man. It seems likely that he was related to the earlier clergymen John, Thomas and Simon. He may be the 'Dauid Daugles' who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in 1491/2 (unless that was 'Douglas'); he was also listed among those owing Sir David money. He may be the David from whom Gilbert Scott was said to have stolen a horse (according to a remission for Adam Scott in 1502). David (16th C.) recorded in 1550 as 'Dauid Dalglece' when he witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme. He may be related to the earlier David. David (d.bef. 1580) recorded in Harehead and deceased in 1579/80. Thomas in Deuchar (who was surely related) made an agreement for his family and associates, along with Simon Scott of Gamescleuch, against Robert Scott of Burnfoot and Robert Scott of Burnhead. This agreement pertained to his 'suddane slauchter' and was witnessed at Kirkhouses (presumably near Ashkirk). Judges were appointed on both sides to rule on the agreement. George (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Blackgraine' when he was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1622–24. George (1752/3–1828) resident of Newcastleton. He married Violet Elliot (1744/5–1832), who was daughter of William Elliot in Park. Their children included: William (1789/90–1869), who married Jean Beattie and died at Gillside. He is probably the resident of Newcastleton recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th C.)

recorded as 'Jacobus de Dalgless' in a record relating to Glasgow Diocese in 1478. He was a Bailie of Glasgow. James (16th C.) recorded in 1539 being 'in Vodende' (probably Woodend). Along with Adam Scott in Whitehope he was witness to a transaction between Scott of Buccleuch and Douglas of Cavers. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Outerside in 1710. He married Mary Armstrong in Roberton in 1700 or 1701 and their children included: Michael (b.1702); Janet (b.1704); and Mary (b.1710). Dr. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'Mr James Dalglies Doctor of ... [probably Phisick]' in 1722. He was then witness to a baptism in Hawick for Walter Scoon, tenant in Branxholmtown. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Outerside in 1763 and 1766. His children included: William (b.1758); Janet (b.1759); John (b.1761), Jean (b.1763); James (b.1766); and George (b.1768). He is surely related to the earlier James in Outerside. James (18th C.) resident of Goldielands. In 1777 he married Mary Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children: included Mary (b.1778), baptised in Hawick; and Adam (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1778 were Adam Hart and William Dalgleish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Ruletownhead according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. James (b.1770s) resident of Langlands. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia; his name appears again in 1798, but by 1799 someone had substituted for him, although it is unclear who this was. In the amended list in 1799 he had moved from Langlands to Mervinslaw. However, he is probably the mason listed at Langlands Dean on the 1801 Militia ballot; the annotation 'Hawick Vol' suggests that he was already a volunteer and hence exempt from serving in the army. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a labourer at Whitriggs in 1800. His children included James (b.1800). James (b.1791/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a spinner in a woollen mill and father of publisher James. He was precentor of Wilton Kirk for many years. One of his daughters frequently contributed poems to the local press. He was listed among heads of households at Damside in 1835–41. He married Betty Turnbull in 1812. Their children were: Walter (b.1813); Thomas (b.1815); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1817); James (b.1819); William (b.1821); John (b.1823); Alexander (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and Helen (b.1830). James (b.c.1805) woollen factory foreman. He lived on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Jean and their children included Rebecca, John, Christian, Ann and Mary. James (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son William was baptised in 1827. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1839 he married Helen 'Bailiff'. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Dickson and their son James was baptised in 1853. James (b.1816/7) from Symington, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1851 he was a widower living with his brother John at Slitrig Cottage. In 1861 he was living at '8 Howegate, Second Back House'. His wife was Isabella and their children included Anne. James 'Auld Velvet Feet' (1819–1897) bookseller, printer and publisher. He was son of James and Betty Turnbull, and was born in Upper Damside. An apprentice printer with John D. Kennedy, he started his own business when only 18 in a shop at the foot of 'the Tunnel', where he sold whisky and bibles. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a bookseller, stationer and printer on the High Street. He was the original publisher of 'The Hawick Advertiser' (Hawick's second newspaper, and the sole one existing for a period of over 15 years), which he started in January 1854, selling it to James Haining 6 months later. He then went to Langholm to start a tweed business, but was unsuccessful and returned in 1857, when he took over the stationary business from Haining. After Haining refused to take his son William into partnership, he started 'The Hawick Express' in 1870 and later published the 'Hawick Monthly Advertiser' for a short period. He continued in business at 11 High Street until 1892. He then severed his link with the Express and went into business as a stationer at Oliver Place with his son William. He was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk and served as Treasurer 1873–76. He was also for a while on the 'Eternal Cooncil'. He is probably the James who wrote 'The Rich and the Poor, A Sermon for the People, By a Layman'. In 1867 he donated to the Museum a 'historical sketch illustrative of Confessions of Faith', as well as copies of James Wilson's 2 Hawick history books. He married Elizabeth Nichol (sister of Provost John), who died in 1891, aged 71. Their children included: Mary (1844–59); Elizabeth (b.1846), who married Robert Blair; Margaret (1849–52); Jane (1851–52); Isabella Nichol (1853–74); James (1856–97), who became a doctor in Reading; and William Nichol (1860–1933), who worked with his father. James (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Helen Dickson and their son James was baptised in 1853. James (1856–97) son of Hawick bookseller and publisher. He became a doctor in Reading. He may be the 'Mr James Dalgleish, jun., High Street' who in 1876 donated to the Museum a 'one pound note of Leeds Bank, 1809'. James (1900–59) local tenor singer. He was born in Gala, oldest of a family of 8, who were brought up in Brougham Place, with his father being clubmaster at the Liberal Club. He had brothers Harry, who was a painter, and George, who had a shoe shop in Hawick. He worked in Wilson & Glenny's and ended up owning a butcher's shop in Gala. He used the pseudonym 'Allan Ramsay' and was also known as 'the Border Tenor'. He sang with the Selkirk Opera. He toured America with an operatic company and also sang solo. He made several records for the Beltona label, mostly in about 1932, usually using his own arrangements. These recordings included: 'The Hawick Common Riding, Parts 1 & 2' (Bel 1796); 'The Selkirk Common Riding, Parts 1 & 2' (Bel 1797); 'Braw, braw lads o' Gala Water & Border Ballad' (Bel 1798); 'Jedburgh Songs & Langholm Common Riding' (Bel 1834); 'Dumfries guid Nychburris Day, Parts 1 & 2' (Bel 1835); 'Peebles Beltane Queen Festival, Parts 1 & 2' (Bel 1836); 'Gala Toon & Bonnie Kelso' (Bel 1837); and 'Hawick Cronies & Hawick' (Bel 1838). In 1923 he married Ethel Gwynn Thomas, with both of them being described as 'music hall artistes', and she also recorded for Beltona as 'Gwen Thomas'. They divorced in about 1950 and he later married Dien Bodika, who was Dutch. John (d.c.1413) Canon of Glasgow, recorded in 1405. In 1406 he asked for confirmation of his Canonry and Prebend of 'Alcrum' (i.e. Ancrum), which he held after the death of Thomas Barry. In 1408 he was in dispute with another priest, William Govan, over a Canonry of Glasgow and Prebend of Ancrum; the Pope ruled in his favour. In 1413 these benefices were vacated by his death. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johannes de Dalgles' in 1438 when he was served heir to his brother (also a chaplain) Thomas' property in the Burgh of Irvine. He is also recorded in Glasgow Diocese records in about 1465 and in 1477. He may have been related to the slightly later David and James. John of that Ilk (d.c.1495) recorded in 1494 when he received remission for his crimes. He was probably succeeded by his son John. He must have been a descendant of the earlier Simon. John of that Ilk (15th C.) recorded in 1495 as son and heir of the late John of Dalgleish. Probably the same 'Johannis Dalglesch' was recorded in 1507 along with Robert and Adam receiving remission for associating with 'Wilelmo Dalglesch', 'Andrea Crosare' and rebels of 'Levin'. He may be the same John who was hanged in 1510 for being involved in many crimes, including the burning of Branxholme (with some Englishmen) and Ancrum (with the Armstrongs), stealing sheep from Thomas Murray, stealing horses, cattle, grain and other goods from Branxholme, stealing cattle from John Scott at Northhouse, stealing horses from Philip Fawlaw, associating with 'the Armstrangis' and with Simon Turnbull, resetting William and Simon Dalgleish and assisting English thieves, including 'Black John' Routledge. He must have been related to the other nearly contemporary family members, such as Simon, Thomas and William. William might have been his father. John (16th C.) servant to George Ker, who was assistant to Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1581/2 Walter Scott (probably of Goldielands) came to Hermitage and got their help to track the gang that had raided Harwood on Teviot. In 1582 he was 'servitor to the Laird of Cesfurde' when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recored in 1562 being 'in Douchquair' (i.e. Deuchar) when he rented the farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He was tenant in Whitehope in 1582 when his farm there (along with those of Montbenger and Deuchar) were attacked by a gang of Armstrongs and their followers. He was probably related to Thomas in Deuchar. He may be the John of Deuchar who signed the bond between Border lairds in 1602. John (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed as 'servant and officiar of the forrest' in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. John (17th C.) tenant in 'Carsope' (probably Kershope, perhaps the one in Yarow). In 1685 he was charged, along with other local men, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the 'Test' and promised not to frequent conventicles. John (17th C.) resident at Peelbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) wright at Alton Croft. In 1710 he (along with Walter) was a witness for Walter Cook in Alton Croft and in 1716 (along with William Turnbull) was witness for John Wilson, younger tailor. He married Bessie Cowan and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Marie (b.1700); Euphan (b.1702); and probably John (b.1704) and Beatrix (b.1707). Walter, who was a later wright in the same place was probably also his son. The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Martin and William Bell in Whitchesters and in 1707 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot. He is listed as wright at Alton Croft in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married George Turnbull 'Young Whitegates'. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was probably a mason, like his sons Alexander and John. He married Janet Henderson in 1749 and their children included: William (b.1749); Robert (b.1751); Alexander (b.1752), a mason in Rulewater; Janet (b.1753); Agnes (b.1758); and John (b.1760), also a mason in Hobkirk Parish. He may have secondly married Margaret Currier in 1761 in Kirkton and had another son Thomas (b.1764). John (b.1760) son of John and brother of Alexander, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was also a mason, like his brother, and lived at Tythehouse farm. He married Margaret Scott and had children: Margaret (b.1789), who was a teacher in Wilton; John (b.1792), mason and dyker at Swanshiel; and Janet (b.1796). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was also on the Militia ballot at Turnpikeside in 1801. John (1787–1850) son of Alexander, born at Bankend in Hobkirk Parish. Along with his brother William he went to London and the pair became successful merchants there. They made a bequest to the 'Coutard Fund' in memory of his mother Elizabeth Coutard, to help the poor of the Parish. John (b.1792) son of John and Margaret Scott. He was resident of the Harwood estate and related to the other Dalgleishes of Hobkirk Parish. He had many jobs, including mason and dyker. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer living at Swanshiel. In 1861 he was a widower living with his daughter Mary's family at Hobkirk Glebe, Chesters. In 1815 he married Jean (or Jean), daughter of Thomas Smith, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill, and she died at Swanshiel in 1860, aged 66. Their children included: John (b.1815); Thomas (b.1817); Mary (b.1820), wife of William Short of Hartshaugh Mill; Andrew (b.1822); Helen Elliot (b.1824); Margaret (b.1827), who married Thomas Carruthers; James (b.1829); Robert William (b.1832); Peter (b.1833), who married Violet, daughter of William Oliver from Langraw; Jane (b.1835), who married Adam Scott, shepherd at Shankendshiels; and Archibald (b.1839). He died at the age of 87 at Hyndlee. John (b.1811/2) from Symington, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Slitrig Cottage with his wife Mary, step-daughter Mary Corbett, daughters Ann and Margaret, and brother James. In 1861 he was living at the back house of 12 Howegate. John (d.1892) son of John and Mary Veitch, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. His death certificate was witnessed by his 'Uncle in Law' James Davidson. Keith (1983–) Hawick-born jockey and trainer. He was named Apprentice Jockey of the Year in 2002, after riding 50 winners in the previous season. He rode over 200 winners on the flat, including winning at Ascot. He then became the first jockey to fail a random breathaliser test, and was forced to retire in 2004 (aged just 21!) after not managing to keep his 6 ft 1 in frame below 9 stones. He returned later in 2004, with a brief career as a jump jockey. He then got involved with horse training, taking over at Belstane Stables in 2011. He had 52 winners in the 2012 Flat season and became the champion trainer in Scotland in 2016, with 80 winners. He won more than 970 races over both codes and in 2017 became the first trainer in Scotland to have more than 100 winners in one year. Kevin (1972/3–) chef from Hawick. Son of Jim and Ida, he attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools, then Borders College, working at Rendezvous Bistro on Wilton Path. He trained at the Savoy under Anton Edelman, and was later appointed head chef at Scortulloch House, Darville, then at Troon's Loch Green Hotel. In 2000 he was appointed as head chef at Ackergill Tower, near John O'Groats and later moved to the Chester Hotel in Aberdeen. Louise (1981–) rugby player from Hawick, playing scrum-half or stand-off. She played for Edinburgh University and then Melrose before joining R.H.C. Cougars. She has represented Scotland more than 50 times. She works as a P.E. teacher. Marion (16th C.) recorded in 1539 when there was a marriage contract between her daughter Elizabeth and Walter, son of Robert Scott in Howford. Adam of Deuchar was described as 'gudschir' (i.e. grandfather or other senior male relative) of her daughter; however, Adam was separately recorded as Elizabeth's uncle, and hence was presumably her brother. Adam was one of the witnesses, as was his son James (and hence her nephew). The marriage contract stated that she was to recieve $1/3$ of the lands of Howford. In fact she married Robert Scott in Howford, and hence the marriage contract was between a daughter of her previous marriage (with an unknown husband) and her new stepson. In 1539/40 she was ordered by her brother Adam of Deuchar to remove her servants and goods from her third of the lands of Deuchar. In 1540 there was still a dispute with Adam over the lands in Deuchar, and the contents of her house are listed in detail (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) when they were removed, providing a useful indication of the property of the tenants class at that period. Mungo (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as 'Mongo Dalglesche' and his brothers William, Robert, Alaxander and John are also listed, as well as separately James, Robert, another Robert, John, another James and Adam. He is probably the 'Kentigerno Dawglesche' when appointed as one of the Bailies for infefting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1528. He is probably the 'Kentigerno Dalglesch' recorded in 1511, when his father, Simon of Falnash, had a confirming charter for his lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and 'Cawsya', as well as a 40-shilling land in the town of Minto; this was with his consent and that of his wife Elizabeth Elphinstone. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as 'Quintigernus Dalgleis' in 1616. He was served heir to his grandfather, who was also 'Quintigerni' in a 40-shilling land in the town of Minto. His grandfather may have been the Mungo recorded in the 1520s, unless that was an earlier generation. It is also not impossible that he was the Mungo recorded as tenant in Winningtonrig in 1622. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Windingtonerig' (i.e. Winnington Rig) in the 1622 Circuit Court records when Archie Henderson was accused of stealing 4 of his sheep. Narda (1950/1–) born in Israel, in 1987 she came to Chisholme House for a 6-month course, where she met her husband and they were married in Hawick in 1989. She spent time in Oxford, where she designed and made clothing and in 2007 moved back to Hawick, running a boutique at 2 High Street and later opening a contemporary art gallery at 3 Silver Street. She is also a painter and poet. She had children: Neshem, who works in broadcasting; Rotem, who was killed in Sinai in 2004; and Hannah, an astrophysicist. Ninian (15th/16th C.) Prebendary of Bothwell, recorded in 1503. His relationship with the other Dalgleishes is unclear, but his connection with Glasgow Diocese makes direct relationship to Simon etc. very likely. Pearl (1960/1–) Hawick hairdresser. She trained at Telford College, worked for John Rae's on the High Street, then started her own business at 13 O'Connell Street in 1980, closing in 2022. Peter (b.1833) son of John and Jean Smith, he was a mason at Swanshiel. In 1851 he married Violet, daughter of William Oliver, hind to the Laird of Langraw. Their children included: Helen (b.1852); John (b.1855); John (again, b.1857); and Jane (b.1860). Robert (15th C.) listed among Borderers who were captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, 1482/3. The others were several Elliots and Robert Turnbull. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1503 as 'Rob of dalglesch in dridane'. He was listed among men who were fined (in his case 12 cows and 40 sheep) for failing to attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He probably lived at Dryden near Teviothead (but a different place could be meant). Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John and Adam when they received remission in 1507 for associating with William Dalgleish, Andrew Crozier and rebels of 'Levin'. His name was listed as 'Roberti Dalglesch'. He was probably related to the family of Braidhaugh. In 1510 either he or another Robert was 'in Howdane' when he had remission for associating with John Davidson; this same Robert in Howden had remission in 1493 for his earlier suppor of the Duke of Albany. He may be the same Robert who is listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran; this name is listed twice (which could be an error). Robert (16th C.) brother of Thomas of Deuchar. In 1579/80 (along with his brother and others) he witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar in Ashkirk. Robert 'Hob' (d.1570s) servant of the Laird of Branxholme at Braidhaugh. He was killed by a group of Scotts from Allanhaugh, setting off a feud in which David, son of Adam Scott of Allanhaugh, was killed (apparently by accident) by Sir Walter during his minority. The feud was patched up by a bond in 1585. Given the close connection with the Scotts of Branxholme, this seems like to be the Braidhaugh on Teviot, rather than the one on Rule. Robert (b.1821/2) from Langholm, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1872 he donated to the Museum a 'curious iron implement, found at Denholmhaugh'. In 1861 he was living at 17 Allars Crescent. His wife was Matilda and their children included Elizabeth, James, Robert, Thomas, William and Isabella. Simon (14th/15th C.) he was 'de Dagles' in 1387 when there was a request by the Bishop of Glasgow for a benefice for him in the gift of the Abbot of Kelso. He is recorded as 'Symon de Dalgles' in 1407 when he witnessed a charter by Robert, Duke of Albany for lands of 'Hawdene and Yethame' to 'John de Hawdene'. He may be the earliest known Dalgleish and may have been father of the Ashkirk Vicar. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He is probably the 'Symon of Dalgleish' who was listed on a 'retour of inquest' in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam and the 'Symonem de Dalgles' on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick in 1427. In 1429/30 he was on the 'retour' panel for the lands of Caverton. Perhaps the same man was 'Symon of Dalglese, canon and official of Glasgow' when he witnessed a transumpt of a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas, in 1400. Simon (d.1475/6) possibly son of the earlier Simon, he was certainly an early member of the family from 'Dalgleish' in Selkirkshire. Probably the same 'Simon de Dalgles' was notary for the sasine giving William Douglas the Barony of Cavers in 1432, and also notary for a sasine of lands of 'Silwynislandis' in 1436. He is recorded as 'Master Simon of Dalgles' in 1448 when he was Canon and Prebendary of Glasgow and Vicar of Ashkirk. He was recorded as 'licentiate in decreets, precentor and official general of Glasgow' in 1459 in a 'transumpt' relating to the Earldom of Lennox, and as an official of Glasgow Diocese in 1460/1 when he authenticated a copy of the same document. He was Precentor of Glasgow from sometime in the period 1456–71 probably until his death. He was 'Symore de Dalgles, Judge and Official of Glasgow' in 1459 and 'Master Simon of Dalgles' in another Glasgow document of 1462. He may have been a son of the earlier Simon. It seems likely he was related to the roughly contemporary clergymen David, John and Thomas 'of Dalgles', as well as William of Falnash. Simon (15th C.) probably son of William of Falnash. In 1464 he had a sasine for the lands of 'Fallinesch, Candelles, Calfshawis, et tribus husbandiis in Mynto'. He thus must have succeeded to the lands of Falnash and Minto that has been held by William. Calfshaw is adjacent to Falnash, and presumably the same is true of 'Candelles'. Simon of Falnash (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when James IV confirmed a charter for the lands of 'Fawnesch, Cawsya, et Tandilnes' in Roxburghshire, with the consent of his son Kentigern and his son's wife Elizabeth Elphinstone. His lands were presumably those of Falnash and Tanlaw Naze, with the meaning of 'Cawsya' being less clear. He also held a 40-shilling land in the town of Minto. Perhaps the same 'Symone Dalgles' was witness to the 1505 charter of Boonraw, granted to Robert Scott of Stirches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He seems likely to have been succeeded by his son Kentigern (or Mungo). Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510, along with Walter, when Thomas in Braidhaugh was accused of stealing horses. Probably the same 'Symon Dalgles' is also listed in 1510 along with William as 'Thieves and Traitors of Levin' in the conviction of John Dalgleish for associating with several different rebels and other crimes. Simon (b.c.1770s) wright in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. It is possible he is the Simon who married Janet McDougall in Eckford in 1801 and had several children baptised in and near Kelso in the early 1800s. Thomas (15th C.) Chaplain, recorded in 1438 when his brother John (also a chaplain) was served heir to his lands in Irvine. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1455 to the document attesting that John of St. Michael inhertited Whitchesters from his father, signed in Hawick. Another witness was William, so probably a near relative. He is surely the same Thomas who witnessed a related document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. William was again listed right after him, as well as a second William (one of whom was surely William of Falnash). Thomas (15th/16th C.) farmer at Braidhaugh, perhaps the one on Teviot. He is recorded in 1510 for stealing horses, with his kinsmen Simon and Walter also mentioned. He is also recorded as 'Thome' in 1507 along with 'Ade Dalglesch in Braidhauch' and William, receiving remission for associating with Simon and Robert Turnbull. In 1510 he was imprisoned with the promise that he would be hanged if surety could not be found. At the same time he was convicted, along with William, also in Braidhaugh, of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of Crookston, as well as for resetting Walter. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1516 receiving remission for his crimes, along with several Nixons and other men from Liddesdale. It is unclear if he is the same man from the Rule valley. Thomas (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Adam Turnbull, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsiegill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided 'within the boundis of Teviotdale'. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) tenant in Deuchar on the Yarrow Water. In 1578/9 there was a complaint that he had not paid the 'mails' on his farm, he made a marriage contract for his daughter Elizabeth with Andrew, son of the deceased John Brydon 'of the Well', he made another agreement on behalf of the deceased David in Harehead and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch, against Robert Scott of Burnfoot and Robert Scott of Burnhead, and also witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar in Ashkirk. In 1580 he gave sasine of land in Deuchar to Helen, daughter of John Scott of Catslack and also gave sasine of Deuchar Mill to his wife Marion Scott. In 1582 his farm was raided by a group of Armstrongs and others, and he was taken hostage, along with Adam Scott from the nearby farm of Montbenger. His son John is also mentioned, as well as John 'in Quheithoip', who was probably related. He was was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. W. (18th/19th C.) resident of Whitropefoot in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Walter of Greenwood (15th C.) resigned the lands of Greenwood, which were granted to Adam Turnbull by a charter of James II in 1439. This is probably Girnwood in the Borthwick valley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as an accomplice of James Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope. Their crimes included stealing sheep from Bowhill and also for stealing doors and windows from Howpasley. It is possible he is the 'Wantoun' Walter recorded in 1494/5, when William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting him and William Scott, with surety being Walter Scott of Howpasley. Walter (15th/16th C.) mentioned in 1510 along with Simon when their kinsman Thomas in Braidhaugh was accused of stealing horses. Also Thomas was accused of resetting him at 'the time of the Theft if xvj oxeb from the said David [Hoppringle of Tinnis], furth of Bochill'. Walter (17th C.) married Bessie Scott. Their children, baptised in Hawick, include: William (b.1643); Janet (b.1641); Margaret (b.1646); Janet (b.1651); and Helen (b.1652). Walter (17th/18th C.) wright at Alton Croft, probably son of John. In 1710 he and John were witnesses for Walter Cook in Alton Croft. He may be the 'servitor' who witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for Walter Paisley in 1712. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Fenwick. In 1723 he married Helen Armstrong, who was from Castleton Parish. Their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1725, with witnesses Robert Grieve in Fenwick and William Turnbull in Over Southfield. Walter (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He married Bessie Lamb in Wilton in 1721 and their children, included Jean (b.1723), baptised in Hawick, with witnesses Bailies George Martin and James Burn. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott in Hawick in 1799 and their children included Agnes (b.1799), Elizabeth (b.1801) and Walter (b.1804). The witnesses for the baptism in 1800 were the congregation and in 1802 and 1804 were Mrs. Arkle and Isobel Scott (both women, which was highly unusual). He is probably the weaver listed in Hawick on the Lieutenancy Book for 1799; in 1800 he was selected in place of John Scott, who could not be found, but produced George Liddell as a substitute. Walter (b.c.1780) shepherd at Hartsgarth according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Perhaps the same Walter married Janet Easton and had children baptised in Castleton, including: Janet (b.1806); Betty (b.1809); John (b.1811); William (b.1813); and Jean (b.1816). Walter (19th C.) married Anne Dobson in Wilton in 1838. Walter (19th C.) from Potburn on the Ettrick Water. He published several poems in the Hawick newspapers, which were collected with other contributions in 'Poems and songs' (1891). He is probably the son of farmer John recorded at Potburn in the 1861 census, aged 32. William (15th C.) Steward to the Bishop of Glasgow in 1452 and later also Steward to the King. He was probably related to the other contemporary Dalgleishes, possibly a son of Simon. Probably the same 'Wilelmo Dalgles' witnessed a charter in Wilton in 1454 and a document in Hawick in 1455. William of Falnash (15th C.) had a sasine for Falnash in 1456, before which the farm had been temporarily in the King's hands. He was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme in 1461. He is recorded as 'Wyl Dalgles of the Fallyn Eche', and since all the other signatories are local, this is probably the Falnash in upper Teviotdale. He must be one of the 2 Williams who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch (made at Branxholme) in 1456. He is probably the William who had a sasine for lands in Minto in 1457. He was probably succeeded by Simon, who had a sasine for Falnash and other lands in 1464. Either he or a son may have been 'Wilzam of Dalgles with Hector Armistrangs bruther' who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere; they are listed right after John Burn 'in Branxholm'. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Braidhaugh (probably on Teviot, but possible the one in Rulewater). In 1502 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, and was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded in 1507 in the Register of the Privy Seal as 'Willelmi Dalglesch' along with Adam and Thomas 'in Braidhauch' when they received remission for associating with Turnbull and other rebels. He could be the same as 'Willelmo' who was one of the rebels who Adam and other Dalgleishes separately had remission for associating with, also in 1507; however, this may be a different William. It seems likely that the same William 'common Thief' was one of those rebels who John Dalgleish was convicted of assisting in 1510, particularly in the theft of 80 sheep from Thomas Murray; he was also mentioned along with Simon, who could have been his brother or other close relative. Also in 1510 he and Thomas, both 'in Braidhauche' were convicted of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of Crookston and imprisoned to await execution if surety could not be found. William (16th C.) tenant in Crookston. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining, signed at Todrig Shank, along with Walter of Goldielands, John of Roberton and William Chisholme of that Ilk. William (17th C.) listed at Over Southfield among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born to Walter and Bessie Scott in Hawick Parish in 1643. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Yarrow Parish. He married Agnes Kedie in Ashkirk Parish in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1704 he married Agnes Grieve, who was from Hawick Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at 'Porter Lodge' in 1790 (but it is unclear what that meant, perhaps the lodge for Wilton Lodge or another mansion). In 1791 he was at Roadhead. He married Peggy Dalgleish and their children included Walter (b.1790) and Ann (b.1791). The witnesses in 1790 were 'Mr. Scott' and 'Mr. Johnston' and in 1791 were George Scott and James Blaikie. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Tythehouse, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He could be the William (b.1749), son of John, who was baptised in Kirkton Parish, and whose brother John was a mason at Tythehouse. William (b.c.1780) servant at Kirkton, according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Abbotshaws in Castleton Parish in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. William (1792–1849) son of Alexander, born at Bankend, on the Harwood estate in Rulewater. Along with his brother John he moved to London, becoming a successful merchant. They bequeathed the 'Coutard Fund' of £1,000 to help the poor of the Parish, as well as a gift to the Hobkirk Library. This fund was set up in memory of their mother Elizabeth Coutard. His cousin Margaret Dalgleish married Wilton Schoolmaster James Turnbull. William 'Willy' (b.1827) son of James, labourer at Tythehouse and Mary Falside. He was a carpenter with Douglas Taylor at Bonchester Bridge for many years. His mother died giving birth to his twin siblings, James and Mary, when he was about 4. He married Jane Buckham and their sons were James (shopkeeper in Hawick) and Robert (in Lord Provost Gibson's workplace in Edinburgh). He left the Parish after Douglas Taylor left. William (19th C.) son of publisher James. He was said to be rather simple, and although he went into partnership with his father in the Oliver Place stationers, he ended his days selling newspapers on the streets of Edinburgh. William (19th/20th C.) grandson of carpenter William. He lived at Hillshaugh and was probably raised by his grandfather's 2nd wife, Margaret Buckham. He married Janet Wilson, daughter of the shepherd at Birney-Knowe and Bella Elliot. Their children were Isabella, James (carpenter in Denholm), William, Robert and Margaret. William (19th/20th C.) helped James H. Haining with transcriptions of the monumental inscriptions in St. Mary's Kirkyard (formerly spelled 'Dagleish', 'Dalgees', 'Dalgles', 'Dalgleis', 'Dalgleische', 'Dalgleishe', 'Dalglesch', 'Dalglesche', 'Dalglese', 'Dalgless', 'Dalgliesh', 'Dawgleis', 'Dawgles', etc.).

Dalgleish Close (dawl-gleesh-klōs) n. passage off the High Street in the middle of the 19th century, position uncertain, but named for James Dalgleish.

Dalkeith see Earl o Dalkeith

Dalkeith Hoose (dawl-keeth-hoos) n. large stately home north-east of Dalkeith, on the banks of the Esk, one of the main residences of the Scotts of Buccleuch, but recently leased to the University of Wisconsin. It was probably first built in the early 14 century, owned by the Grahams and then the Douglases, becoming for a while known as 'Dalkeith Palace'. It was bought by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1642 and largely rebuilt 1701–11 for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch by architect James Smith, with later later additions by John Adam and James Playfair. The Duchess would occasionally visit her tower in Hawick during the time she stayed there. King George IV was entertained there during his visit to Scotland in 1822 – 'Our Sovereign's arrived, and landed at Leith, What great decoration he'll find at Dalkeith . . . ' [BY].

Dalkeith Place (dawl-keeth-plis) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellogate, built in 1870 by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company, and named after the title 'Earl of Dalkeith' borne by the heir of the Dukes of Buccleuch. The lower houses were called Branxholm Terrace until 1882.

Dall (dawl) n. Margaret (d.1930) member of Wilton Kirk. A commemorative stained glass window is in the church.

Dallmeyer (dawl-mI-ur) n. Andrew (1945–) born in St. Boswells, he became a well-known actor, writer and director. He has directed more than 50 productions and written over 40 plays, including 'The Boys in the Back Room' (1982).

dally (daw-lee) n., arch. a rod used in the process of tying sheaves of corn together – 'Dally, the stick used by one who binds sheaves, for pushing in the ends of the rope, after they have been twisted together, Bord.' [JoJ], '. . . dally pin, an instrument formerly used in binding the sheaves of corn – disused for nearly a century' [HAST1868].

Dalmahoy (dawl-ma-hoi) n. Alexander of that Ilk (15th C.) probably son of Robert. His main lands were in the Lothians. In 1484 he had a lease of half the lands of Douglas Craig. The lease was joint with his son, also Alexander. He also leased Altrieve at about the same time. David (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk granted Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably a resident or near neighbour of the Barony of Wilton. Probably the same man is recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. David is also listed, so surely a relative. William (16th C.) merchant in South Synton. He is recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581 his wife, Katherine Scott, who was widow of Robert Scott of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas Scott, with his consent.

Dalman (dal-mun) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably the same as the later Demainholm. The lands of 'Dalmayne per forincecum [i.e. for outsiders] et vi lbr piperis' and 'Dalmaynemore' are recorded as part of the 'Foresta' area, with a value of 10 shillings.

Dalrymple (dawl-rim-pil) n. David of Westhall (1719–84) son of Hew, Lord Drummore. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, who was raised to the Bench as Lord Westhall and lived at Advocate's Close in Edinburgh. In 1779 he is listed as liferenter of Minto Hills, Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park. This was almost certainly just a ploy by Elliot of Minto to get supporters of his on the voters' roll for Roxburghshire; the lands were valued at £438 2d, just over the required £400. Despite objections by Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule, his name was added to the list of freeholders in Roxburghshire. However, he was deceased in the draft Land Tax Roll of 1788, but listed as having held the liferent of Minto Hills farm and other lands in Minto Parish. Any local connection is unclear (although one of the Lady Elliots of Minto was a Dalrymple), but he was probably just a Whig friend of Elliot of Minto. Sir John of Cousland (1726–1810) advocate, chemist and author, he was eldest son of Sir William of Cranstoun and was also known as Baron Dalrymple. He was a co-founder of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was disponed lands within the Barony of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot; this was probably merely for the purposes of allowing him to vote in Roxburghshire and hence to support the candidacy of Elliot. After lengthy discussion he was allowed to be enrolled as a voter, although the vote was only 28 to 22. His 'property' consisted of the liferent of Kames, Kameside Park, Muir Park and Minto Muir Parks, valued at £441 13s 3d (just over the £400 required to be considered a free-holder).

Dalton's (dawl-tinz) n. popular name for the Exchange Bar, because John Dalton was proprietor in the years around 1900.

Dalyell (daw-yel) n. Sir Robert (d.1639) of Elliock and that Ilk, eldest son of a prominent Lanarkshire family, his father being Robert of that Ilk and his mother Janet Hamilton. He sat in Parliament in 1628 as Lord Dalyell and became the first Earl of Carnwath just before he died. The family gained lands from the Chisholmes, but may have also held other local estates. There was certainly a connection between this family and that of the deceased Sir William Douglas of Hawick. He married Margaret Crichton and their children were: Robert, who succeeded; Sir John of Glenae and Newton and later of Amisfield; James; Thomas; William; Margaret; Mary; and one other daughter. Robert (d.1654) eldest son of Robert, he was 2nd Earl of Carnwath. He was a Privy Councillor, but was later charged with treason and forfeited his estates (although late recovered them). He is supposed to have convinced King Charles to flee at the Battle of Naseby. He was captured at Worcester and imprisoned in the Tower of London, dying while still a prisoner. He is listed as owner of land (along with Robert Scott of Hartwoodmill) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (the lands being valued at £533 6s 8d). He married Christian Douglas, daughter of Sir William of Hawick, and their children were: Gavin, 3rd Earl of Carnwath; William, who died unmarried; and Anna, who married John Hamilton of Preston. He secondly married Katherine, daughter of John Abingdon of Dowdeswell. William (d.bef. 1647) son of Sir Robert and brother of Robert. His sister was offered in marriage to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, by right of his feudal superior Douglas of Drumlanrig. When Chisholme refused, the wardship of the estate was given to William, and after the required fine was not paid he gained the Chisholme estate (in the Borthwick valley) in 1624. The lands may have passed to his brother Robert later (also spelled 'Dalzell' and 'Dalziel').

dam (dawm) n. a lade, mill-race, more specifically used to refer to an open stretch of water in a lade – 'oor mother aye telt oo no ti play near the dam', 'King Joseph he fought manfully, but then at last he ran; He may thank an honest miller by the means of his mill dam' [BY], 'This is the maist damnable cry I've gi'en this day, for the dam will hae tae be dammed tae get the horse oot, so will Maister Melrose o' Hopehill please come forrit at aince tae assist in gettin' the dammed horse oot o' the dam' [JEDM], 'Wellington Street, that's a thing o' the past Where the dam ran deep and wide' [AY] (this usage seems to be peculiarly local).

Dam Brig (dawm-brig) n. former name for an area of Hawick, presumably relating to the bridge over the 'dam' or main mill lade running alongside the Slitrig. It seems likely this bridge went over the lade at the Backdamgate, but the foot of the Mill Path is also possible. In 1704 the 'dam brigs' are mentioned in the Burgh Records. In 1719 merchant Andrew Turnbull was 'att ye Damme bridge'.

dam brod (dawm-brōd) n., arch. a board for playing draughts, the game itself – 'The Draft-board. It was generally called the Dam-broad . . . the Damside (thu-dawm-sīd) n. area alongside Wilton Dam, with the main street renamed Victoria Road in 1864. Also called 'Upper Damside', it bordered the Upper Haugh and lay along the top stretch of the mill lade. The lade crossed Victoria Road near the end, before what became the supermarket. The name also appears to have applied to the lower part of Wilton Path. Residents there included William Turnbull in at least 1751–59, James Scott around the 1760s, Robert Stewart in the 1770s, Thomas Turnbull in 1772 and James Knox and James Wilson in 1780. George Weir was a wright there around 1784 and James Knox was gardener there at the end of the 18th century. n 1797 Thomas Rae was a weaver there and Walter Dickson was a slater.' John and William Purdom were hosiers there in the early 19th century. In 1825/6 Robert Blaikie was a wrigth there, Thomas Cathrae was a slater and Andrew Walker was a cooper. Dr. Robert Douglas had his premises there in the early 19th century. The male heads of families there in 1835 were James Anderson, James Aiktin, Alexander Corbet, James Dalgleish, Robert Dryden, Thomas Filmer, David Fiddes, Thomas Goodfellow, Walter Grierson, William Purves, John Purdom, Martin Potts, Joseph Renwick, James Scott, William Scott, James Turnbull, Gavin Tudhope, George Wallace and George Young (sometimes just 'Damside'; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map of Roxburghshire, and is on Wood's 1824 map).

dancit (dawn-see', -si') pp., poet. danced – 'We hae pipet untill yow, an' ye haena dancet: we hae murnet untill yow, an' ye haena lamentet' [HSR].

Dand (dawnd) n. short form of Andrew, e.g. the nickname given to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst (also Dand).

dander (dawn-dur) n. a stroll, leisurely walk, wander – 'A'm juist gaun for a dander up the road', '. . . an ma lang Dander throwe the Bonnie Borderland, mang Howes an Knowes, an alang the Waeter-gates, – cam ti an end . . . Dandie (dawn-dee) n. former pet form of Andrew, also occurring as 'Dand', 'Dande', 'Dandy', etc. (see also Dand).

Dandie Dinmont (dawn-dee-din-mon') n. breed of terrier, long and low in shape, with a distinctive silken top-knot and scimitar-shaped tail. The breed is an old one, with its origins in the Border country, where the dogs were probably raised to kill vermin. Similar dogs appear in the 1770 Gainsborough portrait of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. It is called after the character of the same name in Sir Walter Scott's novel 'Guy Mannering' (1814). He was a farmer who kept this sort of terrier, and is at least partly based on James Davidson, farmer of Hyndlee, and perhaps also by Willie Elliot, farmer at Millburnholm. Every modern example can trace its ancestry back to 'Old Ginger', which was born on the Haining estate near Selkirk in 1842. The breed was popularised by Scott's novel, and the Dandie Dinmont Club, formed in Melrose in 1876 claims to be the oldest continuously existing breeders' club in the world (also erroneously written 'Dandy Dinmont'.

dang (dawng) pp., poet., arch. smote, overcame, struck, blew with great force, pushed forcibly – 'When they cam to the Stanegirthside, They dang wi' trees, and burst the door; They loosed out a' the captain's kye, And set them forth our lads before' [T], 'Lockt in a box – but few may see – Is Eve's first glance o' wanton glee, Whilk dang puir Yeddie's head agee . . . ' [JoHa], 'Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihs) a turbleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the firrst Peinelheuch Moniment' [ECS], '. . . She kept the lads a' jumpin' crazy An' dang them a' ' [WP] (past tense of ding; cf. dung, the more usual past participle).

Dang (dawng) n. Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Todscleughside, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797.

Dangerfield (dān-jur-feeld) n. name of the 'haugh' which defined the boundary of the Common at its north-west end, probably the site of an archery range in former times. On Wood's 1824 map the area so marked lies between the mill lade and the track that became Commercial Road, stretching from about Watson's Mill to Wilton Mills. Carrier Robert Miller was there in the late 1700s.

Dangerfield Mills (dān-jur-feeld-milz) n. spinning mill and tweed factory built by Wilson & Watson's in 1804, on land next to the Common Haugh, off the present day Commercial Road, with address 24 Commercial Road. When the partnership ended in 1818, the mill became the main part of William Watson & Sons. There was a fire in the drying house and gas works there in 1842. The main building was constructed in 1860, with the ground floor still being empty when a concert was held for the Volunteers, with over 1,000 people seated and gas lighting specially installed. The Carding Shed was constructed 1872–73 for Watson's and extended in 1882 with a yarn store and weaving shed. There was also the Watch House, constructed in 1882. The main building was 3-and-a-bit stories and into the 21st century contained some original machinery, including Platt spinning mules, and an external vertical driveshaft, leading to a lineshaft driving system running the length of the upper floors of the building. This represented probably the oldest collection of spinning machines in working order in the Borders. In its hey-day (around the 1870s) the mill employed about 600 people. Steam engines were first installed in 1873 and they still operational in 1937. Some of the buildings were demonished in the 1960s to make way for the Henderson Technical College. The mill was sold to Thuleknit in 1983, to make yarn for their factory in Jedburgh. However, the firm went into liquidation in 1991 and the spinning machines lay idle. The building was largely empty in the latter 20th century, and as a 'Category A' listed building, there were some attmpts to save it. However, the carding shed and then the spinning mill were destroyed in fires (probable deliberately set) in 2003 and demolished in early 2004, the site being developed for Sainsbury's supermarket. Some items from the mill are preserved in the Museum.

the Danger Signal (thu-dān-jur-sig-nul) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Darcy (dawr-see) n. Sir Anthony (d.1517) Frenchman who was appointed Lord Warden General of the Scottish Marches in 1516 in place of Lord Home, who was executed for treason through the orders of the Regent Albany. In 1517 he was killed by Sir David Home of Wedderburn in revenge, at the farm of Swallowdean in Berwickshire, his head being displayed atop Home Castle. He is also referred to as 'De la Bastie' or 'Seigneur de la Beauté'.

darg (dawrg) n., arch., poet. a day's work, more specifically the amount of turf that can be cast with one spade in a day, formerly part of the lease agreement for a farm – 'The schoolmaster's salary is L.26 sterling, with the usual quantity of garden ground, and six days darg of turf' [RAC], 'He has the right to cast 10 darg of turf annually, viz. 6 on the muirs of Fulton, Corscleugh and Bedrule ...' [RWB], '... the proud though poor inheritors of toil and daily darg' [HAST1863], '... and their fingers were often worn and bleeding long before their daily 'darg' was done' [DMW], '... and this included the right to one darg of turf from the common on Ruberslaw ...' [JAHM], 'Bannockburn was the best summer day's darg Scotland ever did' [HA1869], 'Mair din than darg' [RJT], 'And some dear day, when my darg is dune, Oh it's back that I wad be ...' [JYH], '... Dargavel (dawr-ga-vul) n. Rev. John graduating from Edinburgh University in 1665, he became minister of Southdean in 1667. He was translated to Prestonkirk in 1670, but after only 1 week in office he was accused before the Kirk Session (by Isabel Cruickshanks) of 'immorality', and was probably deposed soon afterwards (also written 'Darngavel').

the Darien Scheme (thu-da-ree-in-skeem) n. name often given for the Company of Scotland Trading to Africa and the Indies, set up in 1695 to establish Scotland as a world trading nation, specifically by establishing a colony, 'Caledonia', on the Gulf of Darién on the Isthmus of Panama. In contemporary documents it is sometimes (confusingly) referred to as 'the African Company'.

A huge amount of money was raised in Scotland, with the promise of huge returns and national glory. It is estimated that 25–50% of all money circulating in Scotland was collected for this venture. However, it was ill-conceived from the outset and poorly planned, with disease and a siege by Spain resulting in abandonment of the colony by 1700. This financial failure virtually ruined Scotland at the time, and may have led to weakened reistance to the 1707 Act of Union. Many of the Borders gentry (including Douglases, Elliots, Riddells, Rutherfords and Scotts) contributed substantial amounts to the cause, as well as the Burgh of Selkirk.

Darling (dawr-lin) n. Adam (1855/6–1908) apprentice with William Watson's, he became a manager of Ballantyne's in Innerleithen in 1888, and a partner in Kedie, Darling & Co. in 1898. He lived at Langside (39 Weensland Road) and married Anne, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were Thomas (Cornet in 1900), Agnes Reid of the Buccleuch Hotel), Anderson (commercial traveller who married Jane Thompson), Adam (a sheep farmer in America), George (also emigrated to America), Rita (who became Mrs. Lindsay), Michael and Jemima. Rev. Robert (1668/9–1716) born in Galashiels, he was son of Andrew and brother of Hew, minister of Innerwick. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1685. He was ordained as assistant and successor at Ewes Kirk in 1694. Although called to Gask in 1699, he did not accept the call, but remained at Ewes until his death. Apparently not liked by some of his parishioners, he was nicknamed 'the malignant'. In 1697 he married, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James Urquhart, merchant in Linlithgow. Their children included: Rev. James, minister of Kintore; Elizabeth, who married Edinburgh gardener John Harley in 1741; and Alison, who married sailor Robert Spence in Edinburgh in 1745. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers and Wilton Parishes. He was living in Denholm in 1729 and 1730 and at Boghall in 1733. He married Agnes Young in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in both Cavers and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Adam (b.1730), baptised in Cavers; and David (b.1731) and Helen (b.1733), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1733 were John Noble and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Wiltonhall' in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) slater in Hawick. He married Helen (or Nelly) Smith, who died in 1808. Thomas D. (d.1951) son of Adam. He was Cornet in 1900 and one of the founder members of the Callants' Club in 1903. He married Agnes (d.1953) daughter of the Buccleuch Hotel proprietor William Reid, who had been his Cornet's Lass. It is possible that he is seen in an old photograph outside his premises in the building next to the Auction Mart offices. He worked for the family firm of Keddie, Darling & Co., riverside Mills He later worked as a commercial traveller in Huddersfield. He was also President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1910/1. Both he and his wife were present in Hawick as Jubliee Cornet and Lass. He was buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

Darnick (dawr-nik) n. village that is essentially the western part of Melrose. It contains the 1595 Darnick Tower (home of the Heitons, covetted by Sir Walter Scott and much altered in the 19th century), and the 16th century Fisher's Tower (altered in the 18th century). It also had railway sidings in the days of the Waverley Line. The battle of Skirmish Hill (located between Darnick and Melrose) in 1526 is sometimes called the Battle of Darnick. The village was also burned by Hertford's men in 1545. There was an ancient bridge near there (at 'Briggend'), which was the only bridge across the Tweed between Peebles and Berwick, but probably destroyed in the early 16th century. There was therafter a ferry and then a bridge from 1750. The village was also on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh until 1755. A boy was killed by lightning there in 1770 (the origin is Old English 'derne wic'. meaning 'the hidden dwelling' and it is recorded as early as 1124).
