Ti ma fither an ma papa Scott —
A hope they wud’ve approved.
The simple word and hamely sound
Will still be dear to me;
For I will love the mither tongue
Until the day I dee.
— James Thomson

Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear’d in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood;
Still doom’d to prosper since on Flodden’s field
Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial King and (glorious boast!)
Gain’d proud renown where Scotia’s fame was lost.
— John Leyden

In cause of truth, on honour’s roll,
Our instincts all have sprung
From the untutored, proud of soul,
That framed our mother tongue.
— J.E.D. Murray

The story of Hawick cannot all be told.
— R.E. Scott
The Stert (Introduction)

To speak a strong dialect, with its roots firmly planted in the history of a particular place and its people, is a wondrous thing. The speaking of ‘broad Hawick’ is, I suspect, a far greater treasure than most of its speakers realise. The identity of Hawick folk has its basis in this linguistic tradition, which was spoken, not written – passed down through generations, enriched by incremental influences from outside – a living language steeped in tradition. But it is a local treasure that is increasingly under threat. What James ‘Dictionary’ Murray said as far back as 1873 seems more true today – ‘The local dialects are passing away: . . . even where not utterly trampled under foot by the encroaching language of literature and education, they are corrupted and arrested by its all-pervading influence’.

The main purpose of this compilation of Hawick words is to provide a handy reference for Hawick residents (and exiles!) to help keep the richness of their language alive. The secondary purpose is to provide an accessible source for looking up information about Hawick and its past. These two functions seemed to become increasingly inseparable as this Word Book was being compiled. So this book serves as both dictionary and encyclopaedia. More on the encyclopaedic entries later. For now let us discuss the Hawick vernacular.

A large body of distinctive words, phrases, pronunciations and shades of meaning have been used in the Hawick area throughout recorded history. The guiding principle here was to include in this Word Book any words or meanings that are not in common usage throughout Britain. Certainly words that are often used in other parts of Scotland are included, although in many cases with different pronunciation; it is not possible to impose a sharp boundary between the Hawick accent and other neighbouring branches of Scots, so no attempt has been made to do so. In addition, no attempt has been made to exclude any words that might have entered the English language at some point, but are more frequently used in Hawick than elsewhere in Britain. Comprehensive English dictionaries will typically contain many of the words described here (indeed, it is sometimes claimed that because of James Murray, Hawick words are disproportionately represented in the Oxford English Dictionary!).

Place names and other proper nouns are inextricably part of the local language. Hence, it seemed important to be relatively comprehensive here also. As a result of the combination of vocabulary and proper noun entries, this work can serve as a reference for all things Hawick. In keeping with the rest of the Word Book, such entries usually appear under their Hawick pronunciations, with an approximation to the most appropriate spelling. Other words would only really be pronounced in ‘proper English’, and in these cases the standard spellings were kept. Multiple spellings or pronunciations are entered separately and cross-referenced to a single definition. The main criterion was to be as comprehensive as is feasible. The other principle was to assume that no one will ever read this far into the introduction, and thus it is important to make the meanings of the entries as self-evident as possible.

A wee bit background (History)

Hawick vocabulary and pronunciation are obviously very similar to those of other Border towns, but with many peculiarities. The Hawick dialect also shares much with other variants of the ‘Scots language’. The relative isolation of the Border towns has kept their dialects quite distinct and preserved many words that have long gone out of use elsewhere in Britain.

Like the rest of Scots, the language can be traced back to various Germanic dialects brought to Britain by the Angles, Jutes and Saxons, who started to settle from about the 4th century. These dialects developed into Old English, which, by around the 7th century, was used throughout most of England and in southern Scotland. The particular dialect spoken in a region centred around Northumbria spread north to form what would become the Scots language.

Originally this language was spoken only in south-eastern Scotland and referred to as ‘Inglis’ to distinguish it from the Gaelic, Welsh, Pictish and Norse related languages spoken elsewhere in Scotland. However, as it spread throughout Scotland it became known as ‘Scots’ to distinguish it from what was spoken south of the Border. It developed in parallel with modern English, and retains many words of Old English (Hawick folk find it a little easier to read Chaucer than the average Briton!). Other influences for Scots (and hence the dialect of Hawick) came from Norse, French and Gaelic. Most Gaelic words used in Hawick probably entered fairly recently from elsewhere in Scotland, since it was never spoken in the Borders. Earlier Celtic influences come from the Brythonic (or ‘p-Celtic’, similar to Welsh) branch, which was spoken in the area before the Germanic dialects took over. Place names in particular have a complete mix of origins, with hill and river names often retaining the oldest influences.

There is no clear split between Scots and English – indeed there is also much in common with northern English dialects (which were also derived from Northumbrian). This is more true of Border dialects like Hawick, which shares much with the speech of regions just across the border, i.e. Cumbria and the English north-west (‘ahint’, ‘mony’, ‘thowt’, etc.) and Northumberland and the English north-east (‘bide’, ‘cowp’, ‘nithered’, etc.). In addition, Hawick’s manufacturing connection with Yorkshire has probably had an influence since the late 18th century.

Scots was the official language of Scotland for centuries, with its pinnacle being perhaps the 16th century. It lost ground with the coming of the Reformation, when the Church of Scotland adopted an English rather than Scots version of the Bible. Official status was lost with the Union of the Crowns and then Parliamentary Union. This combination of events led to the abandonment of Scots by the upper and middle classes. Nevertheless, Scots has survived, particularly among the working classes, and in rural areas. Hawick’s own oldest surviving Town Books (going back to 1638), kept by the legally trained Town Clerk, are written in a form of Scots. This is despite them being official records, and hence presumably much closer to English than the speech of Hawick’s ordinary folk of the time. And the Parish Session Books still contain a mixture of purely dialect language throughout the 18th century (despite typically being written by the schoolmaster). The suppression of dialect in local schools has been unrelenting, but slow, probably only assuming its full strength as a symptom of Victorian propriety – John Leyden (1775–1811), the celebrated Teviotdale poet and linguist spoke in a strong accent and dialect his entire life and is said to have once retorted ‘Learn English! no, never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch’. Fifty years later such an attitude would probably have been untenable.

It has long been noted as a peculiarity of the language of Teviotdale that it has retained many of the Old English forms that have been lost elsewhere. So Hawick has preserved its own particular version of Scots better than most regions. The majority of the population has lived locally for many generations, and there is a good chance that we would be able to understand much of the speech of our ancestors who fought at Flodden. This relative isolation and cohesion of language means that Hawick folk can easily recognise the differences in dialect of someone from as nearby as, say, Selkirk or Jedburgh.

That is not to say that the language spoken in Hawick is entirely uniform. There are clearly slight differences in speech depending on which part of Hawick the speaker is from. These changes are subtle however, and may be swamped by the equally real variation that exists among families and between generations. It is also clearly true that rural areas around Hawick have many distinct variants in language. Tracing all of these variations in detail is well beyond the scope of this modest Word Book.

Since there is no such thing as ‘pure Hawick’, then it is better to attempt to be comprehensive, rather than deliberately omitting words that might have only recently been introduced by ‘in-comers’, or words of local origin, which would nevertheless be recognised by someone from southern England. The goal was to include words that would be spoken by some reasonably large fraction of Teries. However, the language doesn’t stand still (and is, in fact, disappearing), so any word that might be peculiar to Hawick (as opposed to standard English) was included. There has been a fairly careful effort to include words from the published parts of the Burgh and Parish records, since these are quite finite and unique sources of the local language of the 17th and 18th centuries. There are also examples included from other surviving records (e.g. from the document collection of the Scotts of Buccleuch), but only when the origin of the specific text was relatively local, so that there is a reasonable chance that it might reflect the speech of the Hawick area in earlier centuries. Of course it has to be acknowledged that documents of a legal type will not be written in the same idiom that was used on the street at those times, but unfortunately it is the only information we have. Similarly, the best information about the late 18th and early 19th centuries comes from the ‘Dictionary of the Scottish Language’ by John Jamieson and the extensive glossary for the medival book ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ compiled by John Leyden; however, in neither case is it clear whether words were in use in the Hawick area specifically. Nevertheless, words have been included when it seems reasonably likely that Hawick can claim some ownership.

Many words that were once common appear to be already out of everyday use, and where that seemed clear, they are marked with ‘arch.’ – these represent words not used by people born after, say, the middle of the 20th century. This should only be considered as a rough guide of course, since many older words may retain currency in individual households or specific situations. Note also that no serious attempt has been made to trace the history of specific words, so that a word found in the 17th century records of the Burgh will still be labelled arch.; however, in many cases of the older quotations, the year may be included in the reference as an indication of the provenance of the word. As an additional point, proper names are never designated as arch., even when long out of use.

Yet other words are used frequently by our poets, even if they have never been common in local speech. The vocabulary of well-read Scottish bards, and Burns in particular, becomes known to all lovers of Scots verse. Words that are used in this poetic sense, but are suspected not to have been common in spoken Hawick are indicated by the use of ‘poet.’ – again this should only be considered as a rough indication. Many words are both ‘arch.’ and more recently ‘poet.’, and the distinction is often impossible to make.

‘Standard Scots’ is dominated by the speech of west-central Scotland, and so many (too many!) of the conventions used in Scots dictionaries reflect the pronunciations used around Glasgow. This work quite deliberately departs from such bias, and attempts instead to be as Hawick-centric as possible!

Funny hings oo say (Local peculiarities of language)

Let us begin the description of the richness of our local dialect by simply giving a collection of examples. There are many peculiarities of language in Hawick, or more broadly in Teviotdale or Roxburghshire. The existence of ‘double modals’ is a good example, i.e. constructions using ‘might could’, ‘should can’, ‘wull can’, etc. This usage is found only in a few distinct regions of Britain, with the Hawick area often given as the exemplary case.

There are also many interesting contractions involving auxiliary verbs that are commonly heard in speech, but rarely written down (and hence the spelling is unclear). Examples include ‘hel’i’ (have to), ‘tra’i’ (try to) and ‘wai’ (want to), as in phrases such as ‘ee’ll hel’i dae’d’. This is also extended to where ‘to’ is a preposition rather than part of a verb, e.g. ‘ga’i’ (go to) and ‘we’i’ (went to), in sentences such as ‘oo’re ga’i the picturs’.

Such peculiarities of the speech have often been thrown up as examples of how slovenly and uncouth the local dialect is! However, a more enlightened view is to see these for what they are, i.e. manifestations of a genuinely different grammar. The use of double modals is a case in point. Another good example is the double negative used interrogatively, e.g. ‘Ee’re no gaun, irn’t ee no?’, to which the expected reply is ‘No, A’m no gaun’.

Another difference, which was common up until about a century ago is the distinction between the participle and the verbal noun (or gerund). Hawick people used to say ‘A’m weshin the claes’, but ‘A’m daein the wesheen’. This was a vestige of the difference between words like ‘singand’ and ‘singing’ in Old English. The local difference in this vowel sound was slight (James Murray described it as ‘a woman scheiran’ vs ‘guid at scheirin’), but now seems to be almost gone for good (although perhaps a vestige survives in the pronunciation of ‘this morneen’).

One more illustration of a remnant of older speech patterns is the continued existence in Hawick of ‘een’ (eyes) as the plural of ‘ei’. The plural ‘shuinn’ (shoes) was also prevalent until fairly recently. These follow the same Old English weak noun declension seen in the modern words ‘brethren’, ‘children’ and ‘oxen’.

Another grammatical peculiarity is that some nouns expressing measurement can be used as a plural in their singular form, e.g. ‘it was eeleeven mile away’, ‘she was threi year auld’ and ‘hei weighed eiteen stane’.

It is sometimes said (by people who did not have the benefit of growing up speaking Hawick as well as English) that the local dialect is simply a lazy or sloppy version of English. A good example to throw back at such people is the lack of ‘amn’t’ in English, while there is a perfectly good (and actually more irregular) form that Teriies grow up learning, namely ‘Am erni’. It is an idiosyncrasy of modern English that the contractions ‘isn’t’ and ‘aren’t’ exist, but there is no equivalent for the first person. In some parts of the world the word ‘ain’t’ has appeared to fill this gap. But in Hawick we have the peculiar construction ‘Am er’ in place of the English ‘I am’, so that it is easy to negate that to ‘Am erni’. Hence we can choose between saying ‘Am erni gaun’ or ‘A’m no gaun’ (depending on emphasis), while in English there is only ‘I’m not going’.

In general we have contracted negatives that differ from English, and these come in 2 forms, one being reserved for emphatic or interrogative statements. So we have ‘divni’ (which can be further contracted to ‘dinni’) vs. ‘divven’, in sentences such as ‘A divni gaun’ and ‘A gaun, divven A?’ Other examples are: ‘disni’ vs. ‘dissen’ (the most appropriate spelling is of course unclear, since this is conversational, not written language); ‘coulndi’ vs. ‘coulden’; ‘daurni’ vs. ‘daureen’; ‘didni’ vs. ‘didden’; ‘enni’ vs. ‘ennmen’; ‘erni’ (or ‘irni’) vs. ‘erren’ (or ‘irren’); ‘hedni’ (or ‘hadni’) vs. ‘hedden’ (or ‘hudden’); ‘hesni’ vs. ‘hessen’; ‘esni’ (or ‘esni’) vs. ‘issen’ (or ‘essen’); ‘shouldni’ vs. ‘shouldden’; ‘wasni’ (or ‘wusni’) vs. ‘wassen’ (or ‘wussen’); ‘werni’ (or ‘wurni’) vs. ‘werren’ (or ‘wurren’); ‘wudni’ (or ‘wadni’) vs. ‘wadden’ (or ‘wadden’); and ‘wunni’ vs. ‘wun’t’.

These are still quite prevalent locally, and much more so than in most of the rest of Scotland.

Because of Hawick’s rich store of contractions, some attention has been given to trying to include as many examples as possible. As well as those given above, this includes less common instances such as ‘ee’ll’ve’, ‘he’ll’ve’, ‘oo’ll’ve’, ‘shouldni’e’, ‘wudni’e’ and ‘whae’ll’v’e’.

Exclamations and interjections occur frequently in spoken language, and several of these are quite peculiar to Hawick. The most common form for expressing the negative is the word ‘nut’ (pronounced with a strong glottal stop). ‘Hello’ and ‘goodbye’ are usually ‘hiya’ and ‘cheerio’. Euphemisms for words such as ‘Hell’ include ‘buffer’, ‘desh’, ‘Dod’, ‘go ti Hawick’, ‘help’, ‘losh’ and ‘sakes’ (not all of which are still in common use). Other examples of local interjections are ‘fancy’, ‘howts’, ‘mercy’ and ‘wheesht’, as well as older forms such as ‘aweel’, ‘ay whow’, ‘faiks’, ‘hech’ and ‘megginstie’. Exclamations that are commonly used in conversation, to the point of being almost like punctuation, include ‘ee ken’, ‘go’n’, ‘hyeh’, ‘ih?’, ‘munn’, ‘nae doot’ and ‘now ni’.

The use of pronouns is also different in Hawick than in standard English. One particular example is that there are two versions of the second person pronoun, namely ‘ee’ and ‘yow’, while English has only the one pronoun, ‘you’. These are not interchangeable, and there are specific rules for when one or the other is preferred. ‘Yow’ is mainly used to indicate a particular person, for emphasis and in the imperative, e.g. ‘yow dae eet’, ‘yow, rither is mei should gaun’. ‘Ee’ is always used as the subject of a verb in the past tense (except in combinations such as ‘yow an mei’), always in the conditional and subjunctive tenses and before most auxiliary verbs, as well as before parts of the verb to be. Hence we always say ‘ee er’, rather than ‘yow er’. An additional elaboration comes from the occasional use of a third form, ‘yih’ (or ‘ya’), particularly for interjections. E.C. Smith illustrates the three forms of ‘you’ in the following set of statements: ‘Yow? Yih muckle gowk! Yow haad eer tongue; ee ken nochts aboot eet!’ From the perspective of examples such as this, English seems quite impoverished compared with the Hawick dialect.

There are also many word usages that are different in Hawick than in other versions of Scots. For example, nouns describing quantities have no ‘of’ in many parts of Scotland, e.g. ‘a bit breid’, ‘a pund ingans’. In Hawick these would be more usually ‘a bit o breid’ and ‘a pund o ingans’. In many parts of Scotland, ‘whae’, ‘twae’ and ‘away’ are pronounced (and hence presumably spelled) ‘wha’, ‘twa’ and ‘awa’. This would never be the case in Hawick. No Teri would ever say ‘coo’ for a cow. However, other features are common with elsewhere in Scotland, e.g. plurals ending in ‘th’, like ‘Baths’ or ‘moths’, are pronounced ‘th’ rather than the standard English ‘th’ (pronunciation is discussed more fully in the next section).

In general Scots, the past tense ending for verbs or the adjectival form is typically denoted ‘-it’, rather than ‘-ed’. While this ending is also used in Hawick pronunciation, and often used in written dialect (in common with the more familiar Scots form), the more normal ending for verbs is ‘-eet’ in Hawick. Hence we have ‘glaikeet’, ‘askeet’, ‘threi-legeet’, etc. However, in the entries of this book the ‘-it’ form will generally be used, with both pronunciations (although the ‘ee’ ending is definitely preferred). Because of the peculiarities of these verb forms, they are often given separate entries in this book (unlike the usual practice for dictionaries).

Past participle forms for verbs ending in ‘-[consonant]l’ (or ‘-le’) or ‘-r’ are usually treated differently than the description above, receiving only an additional consonant ‘d’ or ‘t’ (or glottal sound) for the past tense, with no extra vowel sound. For the ‘l’ case, examples include ‘birlt’, ‘dwinglt’, ‘kinnelt’, ‘merlt’, ‘new-fangelt’, ‘v and the ew such as in `buy', `five', `boy' etc. The ow rounded oi main/mane, feet/feat, heel/heal, etc. The local pronunciation of words like `oil' and `point' uses the full floor bikes on Fridays'.

`did ee eat eet?'. An astonishing array of adjacent vowels can be found in the phrase `the threi o oo aye oil

The b sound is often lost after an m, hence `tummle', `brammle', and similarly in `climm', `thoom' etc. The d is also lost in words like `hannel', `kimlin', etc. Similarly the hard g sound is lost in words such as `finger', `singel' and `dangel'. Several words have had the r and vowel sounds interchanged (metathesis), e.g. `gerss', `girsel', `hunder' and `kirsten', although, as with other linguistic idiosyncrasies, these used to be very much more prevalent than they are now. Another peculiarity of Teviotdale is the group of words beginning with `hy-', the pronunciation being somewhere between hy and shy. Current examples include `hyim' and `hyeh' (meaning `have it'), but there were once several more.

The e sound is very prevalent in Hawick where standard English would have a different vowel. Example include `berk', `derk', `sperk', `ferm', `sherp', `gress', `festen', `gether', `plet', and many similar words, as well as `menna', `echt', `ern', `telt', etc. Similarly, there is a tendency for words starting `wi-' to become `wu-', e.g. in `wush', `wutch', `whup', etc. Many words that have i in English will have i locally, e.g. `writhe', `dive', `rise', etc. Although these features are found in general throughout Scotland, they are much more prevalent in our local language.

There are some idiosyncrasies that do not appear to have been noted (at least not in standard texts) and hence it is hard to say whether they are local or more widespread. One example is the use of the contraction `it's' at the end of a phrase, e.g. `Aw've funnd eet, here it's!' Another example is the use of the interjection pronounced o' (with a glottal stop) in place of the English `oh' or `uh-oh' to suggest a mixture of surprise and sympathy. One more example is the use of sudden inhalation (which is impossible to spell!) as an exclamation of agreement in conversation.

In some Scottish dialects final consonants are not pronounced. While Terries are keen on replacing t with the ubiquitous glottal stop, all other terminal consonant tends to be pronounced. So, for example, `haund' and `auld' very much have their final `d's.

As previously stated, and in common with much of the rest of Scotland, the t sound replaces d in many past participle endings, e.g. `glaikit' and `nithert', although most of these are still pronounced the usual way as well, depending on context and emphasis. Another peculiarity, however, is the conversion of t to d in some contractions. Hence we have `dae'd', `fri'd', `gie'd', `inti'd', `o'd', `onti'd', `sei'd', `ti'd', `wi'd', etc., being much more common around Hawick than elsewhere. There are many other examples that will be apparent in the Word Book and that illustrate that in general Hawick and surrounding areas seem to have retained vocabulary and grammar from Old English longer than other parts of Scotland.

Southern Scots in general is distinguished from other forms of Scots by its vowel sounds. In particular `oo' becomes `ow' and `ee' becomes `ey' (or ei) – hence elsewhere in Scotland the speech of the south (or Teviotdale in particular) is sometimes referred to as the `yow' and `mei' dialect. The almost complete absence of the t-sound, except at the beginnings of words, is also quite characteristic. The combination of these last two features enables Terries to utter streams of vowel sounds with nary a consonant. An oft quoted example is the triple vowel sound in `the twae o oo' (θhu-twα-u-oo). Another nice example is the triple ee sound in `dide eat eet?'. An astonishing array of adjacent vowels can be found in the phrase `the threi o oo aye oil our bikes on Fridays'.

There are also many peculiarities in vowel sounds that are too subtle to indicate in the listings in this book. For example there are (or were) slight distinctions in words such as pail/pale, laid/lade, maid/made, main/mane, feet/feat, heel/heel, etc. The local pronunciation of words like `oil' and `point' uses the full rounded oi, unlike in much of the rest of Scotland. Long vowel sounds abound, and even apply to diphthongs such as in `buy', `five', `boy' etc. The ow sound in words like `cow' and `how' are broader than in English, and the ew in `new' is more distinctly a combination of two vowel sounds. Formerly the long ò sound in words like `body', `sod', `George' and `border' were almost lengthened to a diphthong. The confusion of local diphthongs is discussed in detail by Murray in `The Dialects of the Southern Counties of Scotland' (1873, the first systematic survey of any dialect). He gives examples of diphthongs such as in `bore' and `foal' and in `name' and `tale', which have now almost disappeared.

Many Teviotdale vowels are hard to represent, since the differences compared with standard English can be subtle, and depend on context. One example is in the pronunciation of `Hawick' itself. Although Terries always correct outsiders by insisting that it should be pronounced hoik (or ‘ho-eek’), in general conversation it is more usual to say something similar to Hick (or ‘haw-eek’). The pronunciation varies depending on context and emphasis, and often lies somewhere between these two extremes. Throughout the book we will stick with Hick as the pronunciation, with the understanding that in practice it is more complicated than that.

Hawick dialect, then, represents a particular form of Lowland Scots speech. An accounting of Hawick’s idiosyncrasies is one of the functions of the word list that follows.

How’s eet soond? (Pronunciation)

As we have seen, Hawick shares much in common with the rest of Scots, but has some important differences. Like in the rest of Scotland, where ‘all’ appears in a word it is always pronounced as a long aw sound. The English diphthong ‘ou’ is typically pronounced as ‘oo’ in Scots. Verbs ending in ‘-ing’ in English usually end in ‘-in’ in Scots. The ‘wh’ at the beginning of a word tends to be pronounced fully, even when it might be a w sound in English. The r is almost always pronounced (Scots has 26 letters rather than the mere 25 existing in much of England!), this is particularly clear in words like ‘furry’, ‘stert’, ‘ferm’, etc. It is also common to pronounce some words with an extra syllable compared with English, e.g. ‘twirl’ and ‘aim’, or to fully pronounce the letters, such as in ‘raspberry’. Although these sorts of rules apply fairly generally, there are of course always exceptions. Hence it is necessary to indicate the pronunciation of each word using some convenient system. This is given in brackets after each word entry.

A compromise was sought between formal phonetic transcription of the sounds, and simple schemes like ‘rhymes with . . .’. In the dictionary entries, the following pronunciation scheme is followed. The consonants b, d, f, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w and z have close to their usual English sounds, although some differ slightly, e.g. the r sound is rolled more. For the other consonants and the vowel sounds the following convention is followed (with mainly standard English words given as examples):

- g is always the hard sound of ‘Gala’ and ‘grimy’ (never the soft sound of ‘genteel’);
- h is always aspirated at the beginning of a word;
- ng is the usual sound in ‘ring’ and ‘doing’ (underlined to clarify it is one sound);
- ch stands for the sound in ‘cheese’ and ‘leech’;
- cl is the guttural sound in ‘loch’ and ‘nicht’;
- th is the unvoiced (or breathed) sound in ‘three’ and ‘path’;
- th is the voiced sound in ‘that’ and ‘lathe’;
- sh is the usual sound in ‘sheep’ and ‘sham’;
- sh is the voiced sound in ‘leisure’ and ‘vision’;
- wh is the usual sound in ‘what’ and ‘whip’ (i.e. aspirated, and not the same as w in American English);
- a is the short vowel sound in ‘apple’ and ‘bat’;
- aw is the longer vowel sound in ‘draw’ or ‘bawl’;
- ã is the hard sound in ‘cake’ and ‘ate’;
- e is the short vowel sound in ‘pet’ and ‘led’;
- ee is the sound in ‘seen’ and ‘deer’;
- ew is the diphthong sound in ‘few’ and ‘puny’;
- i is the sound in ‘sit’ and ‘is’;
- ï is the short diphthong sound in ‘bite’ and ‘side’;
- I is the longer diphthong in ‘fly’ and ‘five’;
- o is the short vowel in ‘hot’ and ‘stop’;
- ò is the longer sound in ‘boat’ and ‘own’;
- oi is the diphthong in ‘coin’ and ‘toy’;
- ow is the diphthong in ‘cow’ and ‘brown’;
- u is the sound in ‘sun’ and ‘bus’;
- oo is the long vowel sound in ‘moon’ and ‘cool’;
- ū is the long vowel (like the French ‘peu’) in the local ‘musik’ and ‘huirn’;

The Scots ch sound used to be much more prevalent, e.g. ‘haugh’, ‘ocht’, ‘echt’, ‘michty’, etc., but has been disappearing over the last couple of generations.
The genuinely short a is in fact rarely used in Hawick, so ‘aunt’ and ‘ant’ are pronounced identically. Instead there are various lengths of long aw vowels (with words like ‘wad’ and ‘can’ having shorter vowels, for example). These are not distinguished here, since in practice different lengths may be used for the same word in different contexts. The short o sound is also used less commonly, and ŏ takes on a variety of lengths. So words such as ‘doll’ and ‘dog’ are always dōl and dōg in Hawick. Similarly with ‘fog’, ‘border’, ‘cord’, etc.

Diphthongs were generally more complicated in the past in Hawick. E.C. Smith notes that in some words, such as ‘drowe’ and ‘rowan’, the ow sound is lengthened into a combination like ŏ-oo. There was also once a longer version of the ee-oo diphthong in words like ‘eneuch’ and ‘leuch’. There is a broad form of the o vowel that was once locally prevalent, where ‘men’ is pronounced almost like the Southern English ‘man’, ‘penny’ can sound close to ‘panny’, etc. This broad e sound is also dying out. Similarly the I sound is in fact longer than the closest corresponding diphthong in standard English. Note also that i sound is essentially always pronounced the same, even in words such as ‘dirt’ and ‘first’, where in English the vowel tends to change (although like other distinctions, this one too is disappearing).

The vowel sound ‘ui’ is complex, since it is often ŭ, but can vary between i, oo and ā. The precise vowel sound probably depends on the adjacent consonants – or at least did, since these variations are all becoming homogenised in today’s speech.

The r sound is rolled more in Hawick than in standard English, but perhaps not as much as in some parts of Scotland. The glottal stop is not usually represented here in spelling, but most certainly is present in pronunciation. It effectively replaces the t sound everywhere except at the beginning of a word, or when special emphasis is called for.

Some words clearly have multiple pronunciations, depending on context, precise part of speech or stress. In addition some words have been pronounced differently over time. Such multiple pronunciations have been included in the list, generally with the more common pronunciation given first. Sometimes the pronunciation can be so different that it effectively gives rise to a new words – to avoid confusion, there are separate entries in some cases, usually with a cross-reference. This can be particularly important for proper nouns, as discussed later (e.g. ‘Binster’, ‘the Lumback’, ‘the Nitton’). A specific problem arises in deciding how to pronounce older versions of place-names. Examples include early variants of Hawick, such as ‘Hauwyk’, or other local place-names that crop up in historic records, such as early transcriptions of Branxholme, Teviot, Minto, etc. In such cases, the suggested pronunciation should be regarded as little more than a guess.

How’s eet spelt? (Spelling)

Hawick is often spoken, but seldom written – there is no authority on spelling, and no agreement among various authors who have attempted to transcribe the Teri tongue. Literary Scots has often been an agglomeration of regional and archaic words, and so is of little use as a guide to spelling, pronunciation, usage, etc. Even relatively local writers such as Hugh MacDiarmid (who even changed his own name to sound more ‘Scots’) are essentially useless as a record of Borders dialects. Instead this book has been guided by some of the spelling of ‘Standard Scots’ (where there is a written tradition, even if it does not always agree on spelling!). Here there are some learned Scots dictionaries to refer to, and these spellings can be adapted where appropriate to reflect Hawick pronunciation more closely. This was guided by previous attempts to transcribe the language (but not taking quite as extreme a position as James Murray or Elliot Cowan Smith). In general the adopted spelling conventions are entirely subjective, although some attempt has been made to maintain consistency.

Smith writes that ‘the representation of the Scottish vernacular is marred by the tendency to Anglicize its spelling’, a sentiment that we share. Apostrophes indicating ‘missing’ English letters are generally avoided in this book, since those letters were never obviously missing in Hawick. So present participles are written ‘hev’in’, ‘girnin’, etc. However, apostrophes are used in genuine contractions, such as ‘ee’ll’ and ‘A’d’ve’. It is not safe to assume that because a word is spelled the same as in English it is pronounced the same. Some words are spelled and pronounced the same, or at least approximately the same, e.g. ‘come’, ‘for’, ‘the’, but they are probably the exception.

Words ending in ‘ae’, like ‘frae’ and ‘sae’ in the more familiar Scots spelling, are almost all pronounced ‘frı’, ‘si’, etc. in Hawick. Therefore this spelling has been adopted here (although the alternative is sometimes cross-referenced). This also applies to negatives, such as ‘didni’, where more standard Scots would have

Since the English diphthong ‘ou’ is almost always pronounced oo in Scots, then words with an oo sound tend to have the ‘ou’ spelling in many Scots texts, e.g. ‘broun’ or ‘flour’. On the other hand, words that are pronounced differently than in English, e.g. ‘about’, are preferentially spelled with ‘oo’, e.g. ‘aboot’. Here we do not stick to these conventions, but use the ‘oo’ spelling more freely (although including some ‘ou’ spellings as pointers to the ‘oo’ entries).

Many local (and Scots) words are spelled with ‘ui’, where English would have ‘oo’, e.g. ‘ruif’, ‘stuil’. This spelling is generally used (although there are exceptions) to indicate the difference in pronunciation. In fact the vowel sound can vary between i and oo, and is sometimes somewhere between, i.e. the once much more common ü. But the situation is more complicated than that in Hawick, because together with the evolution towards pronouncing it today as i, ‘this tendency is coupled with a like slight inclination towards ai (as in Scoto-English wait); so that our pronunciation of guid leans towards gaid, pronounced sharply and still retaining its ui-properties in a manner that is difficult to represent here’ (as E.C. Smith described). This explains why the English word ‘moor’, which was locally ‘muir’, has tended to become ‘mair’.

Pronouns, forms of the verb ‘to be’, and other common words are particularly tricky to deal with. Here the Hawick pronunciation should be at least approximately reflected in the spelling. For example ‘ye’ in general Scots is more appropriately ‘ee’ in Hawick, and ‘ur’ is better as ‘er’, so ‘ur ye right in the heid’ becomes ‘er ee right in the heid’ in Hawick. Although it should be noted that ‘er’ can be pronounced variously as er, ir or ur!

Whether to be consistent about the use of ‘ee’, ‘ei’ and ‘ie’ in words with the ee sound is a difficult choice. Here we are somewhat guided by some conventions from standard Scots, e.g. the spelling of ‘heid’, and some other words, seems fairly well established. However, the spelling ‘ee’ is sometimes used to distinguish the pronunciation from standard English, e.g. in ‘meenister’ or ‘freend’. The complication is that ‘ei’ seems like it should reserved for Hawick’s distinctive diphthong sound. There are no rules here, and although choices were made, it is all rather subjective.

Similarly, diminutive forms can end with either ‘-y’ or ‘-ie’. Here we usually favour the latter, which is fairly standard in Scots, for example in ‘beastie’, ‘laddie’, etc. Nevertheless, the alternatives are also often cross-listed. There are also ambiguities between ‘i’ and ‘y’ in some words (like ‘clype’ or ‘dyke’), between ‘ei’ and ‘ey’ in others (like ‘gei’), and between other sets of vowels. Again a decision has been made here, but there are no hard and fast rules.

The initial ‘th’ in some words is sometimes pronounced h. When this is common in Hawick, e.g. in ‘hing’ or ‘hink’, that spelling has been included preferentially in the list. There is also a peculiar extra consonant beginning a few words; this is a strongly aspirated combination of h and y, which we denote with hy, since this is close to that sound, e.g. lyill, lyit.

When the first syllable is stressed in a word, then the middle consonant is often doubled, just as in standard English. So we have ‘domert’, ‘witter’, etc. Additionally double consonants draw useful attention to words that otherwise would have the same spelling, but whose pronunciation is particular to Hawick, e.g. ‘finnd’. Double consonants are not always necessary where differences in spelling with English already exist, e.g. in ‘aiple’.

There are also examples of changes in pronunciation that make it awkward to decide on the correct spelling. This is the case for forming some participles, e.g. ‘dein’ and ‘sein’ for which we have adopted the form ‘dei-in’ and ‘sei-in’. Similarly ‘most wee’ is written ‘wee-est’. Another example is words containing ‘-qui-’ for which the local pronunciation changes the i sound to an u sound. This gives a few words that can only be written with a double ‘u’, e.g. ‘quut’, ‘squunt’ and ‘squurt’.

For some words there are many different possible spellings. When there are several variations existing in local publications, then the word list tends to include each of them as pointers to the main listing for the word. Also note that example quotations use the original spelling, which will sometimes be different from the main one suggested in the entry.

Because of the ambiguities in spelling, a system of strict alphabetical order is followed. This applies even when the entry consists of multiple words, although spaces are ignored (so, e.g. ‘blackneb’ comes before ‘the Black Palins’), i.e. the adopted system is ‘letter by letter’ rather than ‘word by word’. The only exception to this is that leading ‘the’s are ignored.

In general the aim has been to try to build reasonable schemes for pronunciation and spelling, which are motivated by Scots conventions, but adapted for Hawick. It is impossible to make this an entirely objective process. In the end the famous quote of Emerson should be remembered – ‘A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds’!

Where’s eet fri? (Etymology)

There is no intention for this book to be a study of etymology, and in general no information is given about the origins of particular words. A complete etymological investigation of Hawick’s language would be a major undertaking, and is well beyond the scope of the present work. Nevertheless, in some cases the origin of a word is mentioned, particularly where it is not obviously related to common English words or where the source of the word may be of some interest. Such information is usually only given when the origin is fairly clear, although in a few cases it was hard to avoid the temptation to speculate, for example about possible connections with other words. However, no attempt has been made to be comprehensive regarding the etymology of the entries in this book.

Despite these reservations, a few general remarks can be made. Firstly, Hawick’s dialect is essentially an evolved, idiosyncratic version of Old English. Hence the word come predominantly from early versions of the English language. This means that in some cases there is a clear correspondence with words in other modern languages having Anglo-Saxon roots, e.g., German or Dutch – but this does not mean that the Hawick words were derived from those places (even if there are some occasional exceptions, because of Scottish trade with Flanders, or the influence of Scandinavia, for example). There are few words of Gaelic origin, which was never spoken in the Borders; however, the situation here is complicated by some words coming in as relatively recent introductions to the general Scots language, and additionally some placenames can probably be traced to the earlier Celtic language that was spoken in the area before Anglo-Saxon took over.

Wee words (Abbreviations)

In the list of words that follows, an abbreviation is given (in italics) after each entry and its pronunciation. These abbreviations are used to describe the part of speech or other form of the entry as follows:

adj. adjective
adv. adverb
arch. archaic use conj. conjunction contr. contraction
imp. impolite
ins. insulting interj. interjection
n. noun
pl. plural
poet. poetic use
pron. pronoun
pp. past participle (or past tense)
prep. preposition
v. verb (or verb part more generally)

Most of these are self-explanatory. Words that are already out of general use are indicated as ‘arch.’, although this should be understood to be highly subjective. Words that have perhaps only been used by Hawick versifiers are indicated as ‘poet.’. Contractions (‘contr.’) include many that are peculiar to Hawick, such as ‘A’d’ve’, ‘heh’i’, ‘is’t’, ‘wi’d’, etc. A few terms in the Word Book are not obviously suitable for polite company, and they are marked as ‘imp.’, while a few others are likely to cause offence if directed towards the wrong (i.e. intended) person, and these are marked as ‘ins.’ (note that James Murray omitted all such words from the original Oxford English Dictionary, which must have been a response to the Victorian sense of propriety, rather than because he did not know of their existence). Plurals are flagged where they are different from the standard English, or where an apparently singular word has a plural usage.

For verbs ‘v.’ can be either the infinitive or any verb parts sufficiently different from standard English that they require a separate entry. As already stated, the past participle form of many Hawick verbs is typically written ‘-it’ (just like in general Scots), but often pronounced -ee’ or eet; these pp. forms are of sufficient interest that in this book they are often listed separately from the main entry for the verb, particularly when there is a good quotation to show the usage.

Entries for words will often include more than one part of speech. For example the word ‘doon’ can be used as an adverb, preposition, adjective, noun and verb. These will all come under the same word heading (with an initial arch. generally applied to the whole entry), while a separate heading will be used for quite distinct word meanings (e.g. the two meanings for ‘hing’).

For many of the words included in the list, a few example phrases are given. Those given first are usually derived from common Hawick speech (i.e. they were made up for the purposes of illustration), while those at the end are quotes from town records, songs, poems or other local literary work. We should be indebted to all those Hawick folk who saw value in putting dialect into print – especially the earliest ones, when it must have been highly unfashionable. The particular source of the quote is not always given, although most of the time an author will be identified – so readers can amuse themselves trying to guess precisely where they are from! The abbreviations used to refer to individual authors are listed in Appendix A. These literary quotes normally begin with a capital letter, and hence can be distinguished from the more general examples. Dots (ellipsis) indicate that words have been omitted from a quotation.

Quotations are given in approximate chronological order. Thus examples from the Burgh Records or Parish Session books are often first. Since those records go back much earlier than for other published sources, they are used to illustrate words or usages that were already out of fashion by the time of the ‘golden age’ of Hawick songs and poetry. These records span a wide range of time, and so in such cases the year is often also given for each quotation. Note that quotations are often selected because they refer explictly to local places or people, and for this reason are sometimes deliberately longer than strictly necessary to illustrate the usage of the word.

In instances where only a literary quote is given it is sometimes the case that the word has never been in general use. There are certainly instances of words that are used only in a poetic sense, perhaps being obsolete for centuries, or never in local use at all. In particular, words from Burns and other popular Scots poets tend to be used by Hawick poets too. Note that the quotations are usually given exactly, even if the spelling is different from that in this Word List (provided it is clearly the same word). Note also that for some older poems and songs there are multiple spellings in print, and that no attempt was made to use the earliest.

The general principle when compiling the Word Book was to be inclusive, to cross-reference words and to give concise information, including pronunciation, word parts, definitions and examples. It is clear that the dialect has changed considerably over the centuries. Some words will have been used much more in the past than today, while other words are clearly of quite recent origin. It would be a major undertaking to try to trace the historical and geographical variations of particular words. Hence, other than to suggest that certain words are already largely out of use (‘arch.’), no attempt has been made to make historical distinctions. So words that occur in the older town records or in local songs and poetry have generally been included, even when it is far from obvious that the particular word has ever been well used in Hawick, rather than being a more general Scots word. Those words that appear to have been lifted from older Scots or poetic Scots are listed as poet.

Proper nouns that occur locally cannot be separated from the language, and in an attempt to err on the side of inclusiveness, perhaps half of this Word Book ends up consisting of such entries. A fairly large proportion of proper nouns are generally preceded by the definite article in Hawick: ‘the Loan’, ‘the Street’, ‘the Park’, ‘the Colour Bussing’, etc. Words that are usually ‘the . . .’ are entered as such in the list. However, a leading ‘the’ is ignored in the alphabetisation, except in cases where it forms an integral part of the entry, e.g. ‘the day’.

Another point to note is that it has not been necessary to include many rude or obscene words, since Hawick folk make just as much use of the traditional Anglo-Saxon words as the rest of Britain. Although it should be pointed out that there are one or two buried in there!
Other Scots words that are common in Hawick, but perhaps less common elsewhere than might be thought, are often included, e.g. ‘split new’ or ‘rasp’, and a large body of words that only occur locally in the records of the 17th or early 18th centuries. No attempt has been made to distinguish words that have been used throughout a large part of Scotland from those that are peculiar to Hawick.

For proper nouns an effort was made to be as comprehensive as reasonable, and these are discussed in more detail below.

Plisses (Geographic names)

A great many names of areas, towns, streets, etc. are included in this Word Book. The intention was to put in as much as possible that might appear in everyday speech in Hawick, and to give a brief description of each. Here the entries are more encyclopaedic in nature. But the lines between dictionary and encyclopaedia are blurred, since there are many informal proper nouns that would not be out of place in a dictionary. This includes the many examples of informal names, nicknames etc., for places as well as for people. It was felt to be particularly important to include disused place names and popular names for pubs, mills, neighbourhoods, etc. Such entries are usually cross-referenced to the formal names.

Geographical terms are included most comprehensively when they are near to Hawick, with the level of detail falling off with distance from the known centre of the Universe (the confluence of the Teviot and Slitrig). Hence, as many Hawick street names are included as possible, as well as some houses, schools, factories, shops, pubs, clubs, etc. And an attempt has been made to cover the popular names as well as the official names. The boundaries of the Hawick area are taken to stretch as far as the villages of Denholm, Ashikirk, Robertson, Newmill, Bonchester and Cavers, and so within that general area nothing has been deliberately omitted. A slightly lesser level of detail extends to the entire upper Teviotdale valley, as well as the Borthwick, Slitrig and Rule valleys. The names of farms, hills, etc. which are used to denote an approximate geographical area are also included, along with villages, streams, and the like throughout Roxburghshire. Every significant settlement in the Scottish Borders is covered, along with major topographical features in this wider area. Further afield only large cities or countries receive entries. For many places there is an indication of the distance from Hawick, or the road normally used to get there from Hawick.

The rural area encompassed by this book includes the entire district of the southern Scottish Borders that is not within the immediate influence of other towns, particularly Selkirk, Jedburgh and Langholm (who can have their own books!). To be more explicit, the scope includes the former parishes of Ashkirk, Bedrule, Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Robertson, Southdean, Teviothead and Wilton (and the defunct parishes of Abbotrule and Hassendean). This covers an area approximately 380 square miles (or 980 km$^2$) in extent.

Details are included in a completely subjective manner, with some areas having little information, while others have a great deal (this depending on the amount of available material on different locations). Information includes the earliest historical record of the place, former names, possible origin of the name, owners or residents of note, nearby buildings of historical interest, etc. Particular importance is placed on details that are of most relevance for Terries. Places that are nearer to Hawick, and larger settlements generally, have more comprehensive entries. Note also that some places were formerly of much greater importance than today, and hence might have a longer entry.

Local buildings will have details like year of construction and/or demolition, architect and builder added whenever possible. The changing function of a building and its relationship to individuals or organisations may also be included. For streets, the origin of the name, an idea of the construction period, and perhaps important buildings etc. might be mentioned.

In many cases it is not clear which spelling or pronunciation to use. The Ordnance Survey cartographers effectively formalised place names in the mid-19th century, typically choosing the pronunciation of the minister or schoolmaster. Hence the official names of places are often more ‘English’ and less ‘Hawick’ than the terms used by the population as a whole. To redress this, an attempt has been made to include more local spellings and pronunciations, although this is not always practical.

Older names are included as much as possible. But for placenames (and proper nouns in general), these are not marked arch., even when no longer in use. Instead the description will usually indicate whether the word is in current or only former usage.
Folk (People)

Natives of Hawick (and surrounding areas) have an entry in the Word Book if they are deemed to be significant in some way. The intention was to include all individuals whom one might reasonably imagine wanting to look up. Of course this is not actually feasible, and the criteria used were entirely discretionary and driven more by the availability of information than anything else. Being ‘weel-kent’ is a necessary condition. Being Provost, having a street named after you, excelling in international sport, or getting a knighthood are generally sufficient. In earlier times anyone with some position in society (landowner, merchant, Burgess, Bailie, farmer, church official, schoolmaster, etc.) would be included, but for more recent times there is no obvious criterion to follow. This is probably the most subjective part of the Book.

Individuals are entered by surname, although sometimes with cross-referencing from the full name. Within a surname they are arranged alphabetically according to the first fore-name only. For people with the same first name, they are arranged chronologically according to birth, although with the birth year not always known, this can only be approximate.

Concise information is given about each individual, including birth and death years, immediate family members, relationship with others in the list (if known), education, occupation, major achievements, awards and publications. In addition, anything deemed to be of particular interest was also included. This information is far from exhaustive, and occasionally a biographical reference will be referred to for further details. Sometimes only approximate birth or death years will be given (e.g. d.c.1800), and where the year is entirely unknown the centuries in which the person lived will be given. Note that little effort has been made to distinguish between year of birth and year of baptism (which in many case is the only information on record), so, particularly for early entries, the actual birth year may be earlier than given. When the year of death and age of the person is known, then it will be unclear on which of the two possible years the birth occurred, in which case it will be given as e.g. ‘1815/16’. There is another complication with early years, and that comes about because before 1600 the New Year in Scotland started on March 25th. This leads to an ambiguity in assigning the year for any event that happened in the roughly 12 weeks before this. The convention here is again to give both years, so that ‘1513/4’ means within the last 3 months of what used to be called 1513, and the first 3 months of what we now call 1514.

Some non-natives of Hawick are also included when they are of some particular local importance, for example people who have had political or military influence in the area, those who were given the ‘Freedom of the Town’, as well as those who razed it in the middle ages. Cornets and others involved in the Common Riding are obviously prominent in the minds of most Teries. To avoid giving an entry for every single one of them, instead there are a series of Appendices at the end of the Book, which give a fairly complete list of all Cornets (Appendix D), Cornet’s Lasses, Acting Fathers, Common Riding Chief Guests (Appendix E) and Club Presidents (Appendix F). These lists have been compiled as carefully as possible, and hopefully provide useful and compact information to resolve those bar-room arguments!

Ministers were formerly of much greater importance in the community, particularly back in the days when there was a single church in each parish. Hence local ministers (including the rural parishes around Hawick) are included fairly comprehensively. Hawick used to have a Senior and a Junior Bailie, these being the chief administrative and legislative positions in the town. Hence anyone who was a Bailie must have been of some high standing, and therefore every attempt has been made to include information on Bailies.

In early times there is a great deal more information about the local land-owning families than about anyone else. Any such imbalance is not meant to suggest importance, but simply lack of available records. There are fairly complete entries for the local landed gentry, in particular the families of Scott, Douglas, Elliot (and Elliott), Turnbull, Armstrong, Chisholme, Langlands, Gladstains, Lovel, de Charteris, Wardlaw, Cranston, Bariol, Usher and Riddell, focussing on those individuals who were locally significant. These families (in roughly that order) held great local power in various centuries, although they are now almost all entirely gone. It is also the case that the nobility resident over a reasonably wide area were capable of having an influence on Hawick, while working class people are pretty much restricted to those actually living in Hawick. Hence some of the landowners from a little further afield are also included. But to attempt to redress the balance an attempt has been made to try to include Hawick people from former centuries who were not from the landed gentry, wherever possible.

Another related issue is the large historical disparity in the amount of of available information between males and females. With some notable exceptions, women were typically only mentioned as wives of important men. And women from the lower classes were rarely mentioned at all. The only way to try to redress this is to include as much information as possible about any woman who may have been locally important.
However, the lack of available information makes it extremely difficult to make much difference.

One further quandary is what to do about the spelling and pronunciation of personal names. Should it be ‘Douglas’ or ‘Dooglas’? ‘Wulson’ or ‘Wilson’? ‘Andra’ or ‘Andrew’? ‘Paiterson-Broon’ or ‘Paterson-Brown’? The solution was generally to have both in the list, with one simply being a pointer to the other (and with no obvious rule for which is the primary and which the secondary version!).

The information included in these entries was gleaned from obituaries, family genealogies, local historical works and other diverse sources. Hence the coverage of Hawick worthies is extremely heterogeneous, and omissions should not be construed as significant.

Bits an bobs (Miscellanea)
A potpourri of other entries were collected in an attempt to include the sorts of things that, if they were omitted, one would have wished were in the book. One example is occurrences of the word ‘Hawick’ in surprising places (street names, personal names, etc.). Even rather frivolous such entries were included, perhaps to occasionally surprise the casual reader (at the expense of exhausting the careful one). Another example is that of locally popular publications, including music recordings and songs, as well as newspapers and the like.

Important events in the Common Riding are included (e.g. ‘the Snuffin’, ‘the Greetin Denner’), as well as historical events that were locally significant at one time or another (e.g. ‘the Rough Wooing’, ‘Reorganisation’ or the ‘Black Daith’). Dates mentioned in the Word Book are generally only given a year.
Where the specific day might be of local significance (e.g. for celebrating anniversaries) an entry was made in a separate appendix on ‘Important Dates’ (Appendix C).

Organisations of importance in the town show up in the list, including the more prominent clubs and societies, sports teams, knitwear firms, etc. Here it has not been possible to be comprehensive, so the entries are quite selective. It has also proved difficult to find out more than the most meagre historical details about some organizations. Local businesses have been included when they have achieved a certain longevity or notoriety. Inclusion is extremely spotty, and the amount of information given is scant in most cases. These kinds of entries can probably only become comprehensive with the help of readers of earlier editions of the Word Book.

Muckle lists (Compilations of data)
One other inclusion is the collection of lists of various sorts within the entries of this book, in addition to those in the Appendices. Compiling such lists could be an endless task, with the collecting of some information requiring a research project in its own right. Although not done systematically throughout this Word Book, seemed useful to include such information in several cases. Examples include lists of: monarchs of the Hawick area; Barons of Hawick; Baron Deputies; Hawick M.Ps.; Provosts; Town Clerks; Common Riding Committee Secretaries; Song Singers; local signatories of the Ragman Rolls; Wardens of the Marches; Sheriffs of Roxburgh; Ministers (of most of the local churches); churches; Archdeacons of Teviotdale; Bishops of Glasgow; schools; Rectors; early nicknames; local battles; fair days; bridges; tributaries of the Teviot; burns in general; haughs; drove roads; wells; corn mills; blacksmith’s locations; fires; pubs; hotels; closes; streets called after Hawick; toilet locations; …

As well as these more significant lists, there are also many other entries which collect smaller amounts of information. These are sometimes contained within separate entries under the plural of a noun, and discuss local occurrences of that thing. For example, there are discussions (‘short-leets’, if you like) under ‘drooths’, ‘flids’ and ‘wunters’, as well as ‘birds’ and ‘fishes’.

Whae says si? (Sources)
Many sources were used to compile this list. Most of these are listed in a separate Bibliography, given as Appendix B. However, it is worth pointing out those references that were most heavily used. The Transactions of the Hawick Archaeological Society are, of course, an invaluable resource. For the vocabulary of the local dialect the main resources are ‘The Roxburghshire Word Book’ (1923) by George Watson and the article ‘Braid Haaick’ by Elliot Cowan Smith (not published until 1927, but written before Watson’s dictionary), as well as ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’, Smith’s unsurpassed piece of Hawick prose. Watson’s book, in particular, provided a wealth of information, as well as a paradigm for what a good reference book should aim for; note that in this book Roxburghshire is split into regions, with ‘W’ essentially representing the Hawick area. Additionally there are earlier words suggested in John Jamieson’s ‘Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language’ (1808, 1825). Jamieson’s dictionary gives many words that are otherwise not noted anywhere (except by later lexicographers referring to his work); where he ascribes a particular meaning to ‘Roxb.’ or ‘Teviotd.,’ it has tended to be included here.

Areas within Hawick are described in ‘Hawick Place Names’ by W.S. Robson (as well as the 1985 follow-up article ‘Some Changes since the Second World War’ by Henry Nivet and the booklet ‘Street Names of Hawick’ by Lilias Britton). Family histories were helped by James Edgar’s articles on ‘Hawick and its People in the Victorian Period’ and ‘Hawick’s Prominent Men in Victorian Days’, as well as James Hainings registers of inscriptions in St. Mary’s, Wilton and Welloagate cemeteries, with their extensive annotations. And ‘The Companion to Hawick’ by R.E. Scott was a constant source of inspiration.

All of the major Hawick histories were carefully sifted for information. This includes: ‘A sketch of the history of Hawick’ (1825) by R. Wilson; ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) by J. Wilson; ‘Hawick and its old memories’ (1858) by J. Wilson; ‘Hawick Common-Riding’ (1886) by J. Edgar; ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch’ (1887) by Mrs. Oliver (the longest local book, until this one!); ‘The Hawick tradition of 1514’ (1898) by R.S. Craig and A. Laing; ‘History of Hawick’ (1901, 2 volumes) by R. Murray; ‘The Parish Kirk of Hawick (1711–1725)’ (1900) by J.J. Vernon; ‘Rulewater and its people’ (1907) by G. Tancred; ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) by J.J. Vernon and J. McNairn; ‘Hawick in the early sixties’ (1913) by J. Edgar (incidentally one of the best reads); ‘Goodfellow’s Guide to Hawick’ (1914) by J.C. Goodfellow; ‘Hawick and the Border’ (1927) by R.S. Craig (probably the most scholarly treatise on the early centuries); ‘Hawick in Bygone Days’ (1927) by J. Turnbull; and ‘The story of Hawick’ (1937) by W.S. Robson. Many more recent books have also been scrutinized.

In addition most sources of local dialect poetry were scanned for language and examples. Collections that were examined include those of: David Anderson; May Butler; James Caldwell; Thomas Chapman (‘Joseph’); R.S. Craig; W.F. Cuthbertson; Tim Douglas; Robert Fairley; J.G. Goodfellow; David Hill; Isabella Johnstone; Tom Ker; Ian Landle; Wullie Landle; Dr. John Leyden; William Peffers; Henry Scott Riddell; James Ruickbie; Capt. Walter Scott; James Thomson; and Robert Wark (‘Auld Yid’). Additionally the ‘Auld Brig’ (1851) and ‘Verter Well’ (1888) local poetry competitions were perused, as well as the Borders poetry of familiar (although perhaps not entirely local) poets such as W.H. Ogilvie.

The Hawick songs and examples of less well-published poets were carefully scanned through ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’ by Robert Murray, plus ‘Hawick in Song and Poetry’ (3 editions) published by the Hawick Callants’ Club, ‘Notes and Comments on the Songs of Hawick’ by Adam L. Ingles and ‘Hawick Song Companion’ by Ian Seeley.

Prose pieces have also been used, for example the singular ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’ by Elliot Cowan Smith and speeches given in the vernacular. Several people (in particular Ian Landles) were kind enough to provide written versions of lectures or addresses that they have given, and these were a valuable resource for finding more recent examples of the usage of specific words in context. Local literature is replete with the language of the textile mills, much of which is ‘weel kent’, but not recorded in any formal sense. I am indebted to Bill Thomson for help with mill-based terminology.

Many other sources were also scoured for specific information or quotations, particularly Scottish sources that include details about the area around Hawick. Searching old records has become much easier with the availability of databases on the internet. Among the more important ones are the following: several Scots dictionaries, particularly ‘The Scottish National Dictionary’ edited by William Grant and David Murison (available on-line at http://www.dsl.ac.uk) and an earlier resource http://www.scots-online.org; the web-based ‘Gazetteer for Scotland’ http://www.geo.ed.ac.uk/scotgaz/; the National Library of Scotland catalogue http://www.nls.uk and maps site; the National Archives of Scotland catalogue http://www.nas.gov.uk; the on-line catalogue of the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland http://www.rcahms.gov.uk; scanned Edinburgh-based records once available at http://www.scotsfind.org; the ‘Records of the Parliaments of Scotland’ project http://www.rps.ac.uk; the ‘Paradox of Medieval Scotland’ project http://www.poms.ac.uk; the Dictionary of Scottish Architects http://www.scottisharchitects.org.uk; early census information, accessible through the ‘FreeCEN’ project http:// www.freecen.org.uk and Graham Maxwell Ancestry http://www.maxwellancestry.com; and birth, marriage and death records made available through the LDS site ‘FamilySearch’ http://www.familysearch.org. Many older and more obscure volumes were accessed through the open book collections at http://archive.org, http://books.google.com and http://openlibrary.org. Specifically local sources include: the tape ‘Hawick Speaks’ produced by the Hawick Camera Club; ‘Honest Men and Bright-eyed Daughters’ (and its sequels) by Derek Lunn and Ian Landles (which provided many modern quotes); most of the local church histories, together with notes on early ministers contained in the ‘Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticane’; ‘Place-names of Roxburghshire’ by Jessie MacDonald and the earlier work ‘The Non-Celtic Place-Names of the Scottish Border Counties’ by May Williamson; ‘Hawick Characters’ (2 series) collected by Robert Murray; – and a great many other books dealing with specific local topics. It can generally be assumed that for any work listed in the Bibliography (Appendix B), much of its information content has been distilled into this Word Book. It is also worth noting that many of the books consulted were from the ‘R.E. Scott library’, an unrivalled collection of Hawick material collected by 4 generations of the Scott family, particularly by Dick Scott; the collection is full of margin notes, inserted newspaper clippings, etc., and every attempt has been made to include these additional pieces of information.

Quotations to illustrate the use of specific words were taken from many of the above sources. It was felt to be an unnecessary use of space to give the precise book and page-number for each quotation. So instead there are simple abbreviations to the individual authors. The keen researcher will no doubt have fun tracking down precisely where each quote came from! For some general references (e.g. the Burgh and Parish Records, local newspapers and Transactions of the Archaeological Society), years of publication are also sometimes given. The abbreviations used are listed separately in Appendix C.

As a general point, it is important to realise that little of the material contained in this Word Book is original. Most of the information is at least third-hand, and readers interested in veracity or further detail are urged to consult primary references wherever possible.

Thanks (Acknowledgements)

Many people helped beat this project into shape by reading versions of the manuscript and answering interminable questions (especially Ian Landles!). Many other people provided information on specific items, including Glenys Bolland, Eric Borrows, Lois Bradley, Colin Campbell, Hannah Combe, Enid Cruickshank, Jane Currie, Henry Douglas, Sally Douglas, Giacomo Ferrieri, Lesley Fraser, Diana Gendron, Glennys Gow, Don Grant, Peter Murray Hain, John Hoy, Ann Jensen, Gordon Johnson, Andrew Kerr, Bob Lorraine, Chris Lunn, Gordon MacDonald, Graham Maxwell, Bruce McCartney, Christine McLeod, Lindsey Michie, Gordon Muir, Osred, Robert Payne, James Richmond, Murray Richardson, Derek Robertson, Tom Routledge, Larry Ruickbie, James Russell, Frankie Scott, Bill Thomson, Mark Usher, Frank Whillans and Brett Wilson. I am indebted to them for checking facts, adding information, digging up example sentences, and arguing about what we do and do not say in Hawick! I would also like to thank Ole Michael Selberg for help on using \TeX to typeset a dictionary. And particular thanks must go to Iain Scott, Janet Scott and Hilary Feldman for their inestimable contributions.

Feenish (A Last Word)

Hawick’s Mote dates back to the 12th century and the oldest existing part of Drumlanrig’s Tower to the 16th. Of even older buildings, there are only vague traces of foundations left. Our local hills are encrusted with evidence of settlements and forts going back to the iron age, but we have no direct relationship with these sites – although they were no doubt built by ancestors of modern residents of Hawick, their significance has been lost for many centuries. The records of the town are scarce before the 17th century, due to the incursions of ‘Englishmen and thieves’. All in all, Hawick would appear to have little to connect it with its distant past; because of the chaotic history of the Borderlands we are impoverished in historical relics compared with other towns of similar antiquity.

But we do have one extremely special thing, which sets us apart from the rest. And that is our language – the words we still use in everyday speech, our peculiar grammar, the names of local places, these are all a direct link with our past. Possibly the oldest thing still existing in Hawick is the ‘Teribus’ slogan, which has been kept alive probably for well over a millennium through repetition at local ceremonies. Other parts of our language may connect with similar early eras in Teri history, particularly the names of hills and burns, popular names for districts, nicknames, pronunciation – all of it. Hold your heads up high Teries, ‘keep the causa croon’, never be ashamed to speak the way your grandparents did, shout your ‘yows an meis’ fri the ruiftops, be prood o yer language, it’s what sets Hawick apart an wull aye make eet spuishial.

Abbotrule

Abbot Knowe (aw-bee-now) n. small hill in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357 between Abbey Sike and Cliffhope Burn. It reaches a height of 322 m. A boundary ditch extends between the two streams behind the hill, with a sheepfold at the north-east end and an enclosure at the south-west end. The top of the hill is encircled by a low earthen bank and there are rig lines on the south-east slopes.

Abbay Sike (aw-bee-sik) n. small stream near the Dawston Burn in Castleton Parish. Near here in 1850 was found a cross-head, about 4 feet long, and 30 years later a round cross-head. These were deposited in Hawick Museum, although the details are a bit murky. One of them may have been confused with the Heap Cross, and the round-headed one may have been used for the reconstruction of the Hawick Mercat Cross. Near the foot of the stream, on the north side, there are remains of a farmstead, composed of a building, about 21 m by 3.5 m in size, with a bank, dyke and quarry nearby. On the south side of the stream there are remains of another farmstead, on a terrace between the road and the stream. This consists of a round-ended building about 22.5 m by 8 m, with adjacent banks and a quarry scoop. The lands here are ‘Abbottsiseys’ in a charter of about the 1530s in which lands in upper Liddesdale were granted to Scott of Harden. It was ‘Abbottsye’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. The lands of ‘Abbottsyskes’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Abbystsye’ was listed (along with Wheelkirk, Wheelands, Wormscleuch and Abbotshaw) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653. In 1663 it is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch, in the ‘lordschip of Liddisdaill, abacie of Jedburgh, and schirrefdome of Roxburgh’ (it is ‘Abbottsye’ in the early 1600s and ‘Abbotsyc’ in 1663: the name probably comes from the nearby lands once being held by Jedburgh Abbey; see Dawstonburn Abbey).

the Abbot (thu-aw-bi) n. popular name for the Laird of Abbotrule in the 18th century.

Abbotsrule (aw-bi-rool) n. village 8 miles east of Hawick, containing the ruins of a church, and once lying within the large Abbotrule estate. The lands were granted to the Canons of Jedburgh by David I, prior to about 1135, and confirmed by William the Lion about 1165. The original grant was in exchange for land that Jedburgh Abbey held in ‘Hardinghamstorn’ (probably in Northamptonshire). Some time after that the name changed.
from ‘Rule Hervey’ to Abbotrule. The ‘officer’ of the barony is recorded from early times. The monks of Jedburgh Abbey remained superiors of the lands until about the time of the Reformation. Michael Turnbull was tenant there in 1502. The lands were purchased by Adam French of Thornydykes from the Abbey in 1569 (along with many others), and passed to his son and probably grandson. The ‘town caulid Abbotes Rowle’ was burned by the English in 1542. The Turnbulls occupied most of the farms there in the early 17th century. In 1626 the abbacy consisted of Abbotrule, as well as the lands of Mackside, Fodderlee, Gatehousecote, Grange, Hartshaugh, Woollee and Over Bonchester. The barony was acquired by the Kerrs of Ferniehirst about 1642, perhaps earlier. The Abbotrule Kerrs owned the land for about the next 175 years, and it was created a barony in 1667. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 Charles Kerr of Abbotrule owned lands in Abbotrule Parish valued at £572 and lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £300. The Hearth Tax records in 1694 list 72 hearths in the Parish, there being about 66 separate households at that time. The farm of Abbotrule itself was tenanted in 1694 by James Porteous and Ralph Prendergast, with 2 cottars houses also being there. There was also once probably a In 1788 the farm was valued at £405 4s 8d, with Kerr of Abbotrule also owning Grange and neighbouring lands. small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The entire area was a separate parish until suppressed in 1777, when it was divided between Hobkirk and Southdean. The parish corresponded with the original boundaries of the estate, which consisted of 2,348 acres when sold off in 1818 by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, now a ruin, located about 2 miles north-east of Hobkirk, on the banks of the stream that runs from Ruletownhead to join the Fodderlee Burn. The Church there was annexed to Jedburgh Abbey by David I in the early 12th century. By 1220 it was one of the churches disputed between the Abbot of Jedburgh and the Bishop of Glasgow; at Nisbet Chapel in that year it was agreed that the rentals should go to the vicar of Abbotrule, and that he should pay annually to the canons of Jedburgh the sum of five shillings at the festival of St. James. The Rectory was inherited by James Cunningham. It was renovated in 1888–90, with some rooms being added. It eventually became a youth hostel, but suffered a fire and was demolished in 1956. A substantial part of the west gable is still standing, in the woods south of the modern farmhouse. The 1804 stable block is part of the farm and bears the initials of Charles Kerr, who built it before selling off the estate to Robert Henderson. By the stream (south of the house) are the remains of a wash-house, as well as an ornamental fountain. There are also existing plantations that probably date from 200 years ago. This includes a large beech hedge.

Abbotrule Kirk (aw-bi’-rool-kirk) n. church at Abbotrule, now a ruin, located about 2 miles north-east of Hobkirk, on the banks of the stream that runs from Ruletownhead to join the Fodderlee Burn. The Church there was annexed to Jedburgh Abbey by David I in the early 12th century. By 1220 it was one of the churches disputed between the Abbot of Jedburgh and the Bishop of Glasgow; at Nisbet Chapel in that year it was agreed that the rentals should go to the vicar of Abbotrule, and that he should pay annually to the canons of Jedburgh the sum of five shillings at the festival of St. James. The Rectory was mentioned in Bagimond’s Roll of 1275 and also in the Libellus Taxationum. In about the period 1574–85, the Minister of Ancrum also had oversight here. In 1576 the reader of the church (John Turnbull) was also officiating at Bedrule. The church and parish belonged to the Abbey until the Reformation. It then existed as a small separate parish, although the minister of Bedrule also preached here in the years about 1605–21, before it was disjoined again. This situation held until the decision to suppress it in 1776, and it was split between Southdean and Hobkirk in 1777, with the minister preaching his last sermon there.
in 1785. The old church bell was taken to Wau-chope House. It is said that the church was too small to hold communion, which was celebrated in a tent erected in a nearby grassy hollow. The church is oblong, about 6 m by 17.5 m, with the gables being most prominent on the ruin, including a bell tower. The old stone font lay between the kirkyard and the burn well into the 20th century. Tax was paid on 13 windows in the manse in 1748 and 1753. The cemetery continued to be used until the mid-19th century, and there are some surviving headstones (although illegible) from early times, including one dated 1686, and another that used to be set into the east window of the church. A roll of ministers is: Thomas Pitt, Rector in 1472; Alexander Crichton, Parson in at least 1539–1559; George Johnston (Minister of Ancrum) had oversight, c.1574–85; John Turnbull, Reader 1576; Patrick Bishop, from 1591; John Bonar, 1593–c.95; Alexander Crichton c.1595–1605; Joseph Tenant, 1605–c.1621; Thomas Sinclair 1622–23; James Ker 1624–62; Walter Martin 1666–76; Thomas Wilkie 1676–87; Robert Spottiswood 1687–c.89; Thomas Harvey c.1689–c.98; James Ker (officially) 1690–94; Mungo Gibson 1698–1713; George Hall 1714–1728; William Turnbull 1730–64; and William Scott 1764–85 (spellings vary; it is first recorded as ‘Ecclesia de Rule Abbatis’ in 1220; it is ‘Abbot roul’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Abbott roull Kirok’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Abbotrule Parish (aw-bi’-rool-pâ-resh) n. former small parish, located about 2 miles north-east of Bonchester and 8 miles north-east of Hawick. It was situated around the Fodderlee Burn, extending about 3 miles along the eastern bank of the Rule Water. The neighbouring parishes were Bedrule, Hobkirk, Jedburgh and Southdean. It existed since early times, and corresponded closely with the estate of the same name. The original name (recorded in 1165) was ‘Rule Hervey’, with the more modern name being adopted soon after that when it was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The canons of the Abbey acquired the Barony of Abbotrule in 1153 and kept it until the Reformation. The Parish also had its own school. The total value for the lands in the Parish were £1728 6s 8d in 1643, £1528 in 1663 and £1730 6s 8d in 1678. In 1707 the estate of Kerr of Abbotrule was valued at £700 6s 8d, the estate of Grange was another £396, Hartshaugh £60 and ‘Rentallers of Abbotrule’ £139. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. In 1751 Mackside, Briadhaugh, Blackcleuchmouth, Hartshaugh and Hartham Mill were valued at £355 2s and Abbotrule, Grange, plus the ‘lands of the Rentallers’ were valued at £940. It was united with Bedrule for a while, but then divided between Hobkirk and Southdean in 1776/7. The lands of Blackcleuchmouth, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Nether Bonchester, Gatehousecote, Fodderlee Birks, Fodderlee Bankhead and Fodderlee went to Hobkirk, and the rest to Southdean. The suppression of the parish involved much dispute locally, and there are traditions of despicable behaviour by the Laird, Patrick Ker. The old communion tokens went to Southdean and the communion cups to Hobkirk. Baptismal and marriage registers exist for 1755–76.

Abbotrule Schuil (aw-bi’-rool-skil) n. former school in Abbotrule Parish. Walter Scott was schoolmaster there in 1776. It is unclear where exactly it was located or how long it operated.

Abbotrule Toonfit (aw-bi’-rool-toon-fi’) n. Abbotrule Townfoot, former farm on the Abbotrule estate. In 1694 Thomas Turnbull was referred to as being ‘called tounfoot’ on the Hearth Tax list for Abbotrule Parish. David Oliver was tenant there from about 1747.

Abbotrule Toonheid (aw-bi’-rool-toon-head) n. Abbotrule Townhead, former holding near Abbotrule. Adam Turnbull ‘called of Tounheid of Abbotreull’ is recorded in 1617. Walter Chisholme is listed at ‘Tounhead of Abatierreull’ in 1694, with Andrew Haig being a ‘cottar’ there also.

abbots (aw-bits) n., pl. heads of abbeys. There were 4 abbeys in the Borders: Jedburgh; Dryburgh; Kelso; and Melrose. As the closest one, Jedburgh has been the most important for the Hawick area. Nevertheless, each abbey owned significant lands, scattered widely over Scotland, and so all of the abbots must have held some local power. Kelso Abbey was first founded in about 1113 in Selkirk, which was surely also a significant event in Hawick. The 3rd abbot convinced the King to allow them to move to Kelso around 1128. Melrose Abbey held rights over Cavers Kirk, as well as Hassendean. Former lands held by abbeys often retain names that include ‘abbot’ or ‘monk’.

Abbot’s Acre (aw-bits-à-kur) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington, owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. It was listed in the late 17th century as ‘Abbotsacre’. In a valuation of separate farms on the Eliott of Stobs estate from 1788, the Abbotsford

‘Remainder of Acreknow, Hunthill, and Abbot’s- acre’ are valued at £151 2s 11d. The value was the same in 1811, when ‘Abbot-acre’ was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Elliott of Stobs, valued along with part of Acreknowe at £151. The name suggests a historical connection to one of the local abbeys, probably Jedburgh (it is ‘Abbots-aiker’ in 1657).

Abbotsford (aw-bits-furd) n. house on the south banks of the Tweed, about a mile east of Galashiels, built by and lived in by Sir Walter Scott from 1812 until his death in 1832. The original farmhouse, Cartly Hole (or ‘Clarteyhole’ as some would prefer), was demolished to make way for a much grander house in the ‘Scottish Baronial’ style, with copies of historical features from elsewhere. This now forms a museum dedicated to Scott, and including his eclectic collection of historical artefacts (the name was given by Scott, referring to the nearby ford across the Tweed).

Abbotsford Ferry (aw-bits-furd-fe-ree) n. former station on the Selkirk branch line off the Waverley Line, which ran from 1856–1964. Here passengers could take the ferry across the Tweed to visit Abbotsford.

Abbotsford Place (aw-bits-furd-plis) n. planned street in Stirches, which appeared on Burrow’s street map, but was never built.

Abbotshaws (aw-bit-shawz) n. farm in Liddesdale, south of Sorbietrees. A piece of woodland that ran from here to the river was long in possession of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It could be the ‘shaw’ of Sorbie that was granted to Jedburgh by Race Fitz Malger in the late 12th century. The lands passed to Mangerton and then to Flatt. In 1629 the lands were invested in Francis Scott, second natural son of Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1632 they were listed among lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale owned by Scott of Buccleuch. ‘Abbotshawes’ was listed (along with Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Wormscaleuch and Abbotsike) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1663. It is still listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 in the ‘lordship of Liddisdail, abacie of Jedburgh, and schirref-dome of Roxburgh’. Note that the lands of ‘Spittelflat’ are recorded in 1541, suggesting there was once a hospital here. William Dalgleish was there in 1821, labourer William Telford in 1836 and William Armstrong in 1841 (it is marked ‘Abbotshawes’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Abbotshaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; It is on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it was ‘Abbotshawes’ in about 1626, ‘Abbotshaw’ in 1632 and ‘Abotischawis’ in 1663).

Abbotshiel (aw-bit-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, owned by the church, listed as part of the ‘terrarium ecclesiasticum’ in the c.1376 rental roll. These may be the same as Abbotshaws.

Abbotside Moor (aw-bit-siidsmoor) n. former name for rough land to the east of Howahill farm. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map in roughly the same place as Abbotside Plantation on modern maps. The name is a remnant of the former lands of Appotside.

Abbot Sike (aw-bi-sik) n. alternative name for Abbey Sike.

Abbotsmeadow (aw-bit-me-di) n. former lands that were part of Rawflat in the barony of Belses. They were sold in 1629 by Walter Turnbull of Rawflat to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters, and presumably once had a connection to one of the local monasteries. Robert Bennet inherited these lands in 1670. John, nephew of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr inherited the lands in 1684. In the 19th century half the lands were listed as part of the estate of John Edmund Elliot of New Belses.

Abe (ab) n. familiar name, usually for Albert or Abraham.

A Bellendaine (aw-be-len-dai) n. slogan and gathering cry of the Scotts, meaning ‘to Bellenden’, the traditional gathering place near Alemoor Loch in the Ale Water valley. An ancient banner bearing these words may date to the 17th century, perhaps made for Earl Walter Scott and carried at his funeral in 1634, although surely based on earlier banners. The same artefact was carried by Sir Walter Scott (of Abbotsford) at the Carterhaugh Baa game.

Abercorn (aw-ver-korn) n. Adam (17th C.) chaplain to Lady Cavers in about the 1670s. He was among the men arrested around 1678 for supporting conventicles, and transported by ship to Virginia.

Abernethy

Abernethy (aw-ber-ne-thee) n. Sir Alexander (c.1275–c.1315) probably son of Sir Hugh. His lands were in ward in 1292, and so he was presumably still a minor then. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1291 and is recorded as ‘Dominus Alisandre de Abernethy’ when he paid further homage to Edward in 1296. As son of Hugh, he may have possessed lands in the Rule valley, although mostly his lands were much further north (particularly Perth and Angus). In 1303/4 he asked that Alexander Baliol of Cavers deliver his lands north of the Forth to him. He played a diplomatic role for the English King, being sent...

the gift of an annual rent from the King in 1265. His lands in Scotland were forfeited when Robert the Bruce became King. He married Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Menteith. Their children included: Margaret, who married John Stewart, Earl of Angus; and Mary, who married Sir Andrew Leslie and secondly Sir David Lindsay. In about the 1320s his lands (probably in Roxburghshire) were granted to Robert, son of Robert the Bruce; these had been forfeited by him, his daughter Margaret and one of his 3 heirs. One of his heirs was Mary, who married Sir Alexander Lelsie and Sir David Lindsay, through which the lands of Ormiston in East Lothian eventually passed to the Cockburns. In 1324/5 his wife was granted permission by the English King to visit Scotland to recover her lands. Alexander (15th C.) witness to the sasine of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. He is recorded as ‘Alexandro de Abirnethi, armigeris’ along with a number of other local men, with the sasine being witnessed in Hawick. Sir George (d.c.1388) probably son and heir of George and Alicia Wishart, he was 5th of Saltoun. He had remission from paying customs in 1364. He attended the coronation of Robert II in 1371 and was witness to a charter of Longformacus in 1384. He held lands in Minto, which he resigned to Robert II, and were confirmed by his son John to Sir William Stewart in 1391. He was succeeded by William, 6th of Saltoun. He probably died at the Battle of Otterburn. George (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Sir Hugh (13th C.) probably son of Sir Patrick and grandson of Orm. His sister Margery was wife of Hugh Douglas. He acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in about 1264, after the death of Nicholas de Soulis. He also held the position of Forester of Selkirk. He was possessor of the lands of Rule; there is an earlier connection between the Abernethy and Rule families, which may explain his possession of the lands. He may be the same Hugh who in 1258/9 he was among Scottish noblemen who signed a bond with some of their Welsh counterparts. In 1259 he gifted 20 merks of land in ‘Glencros’ or in feu of Chamberlain Newton, ‘in free marriage’, to Hugh (who married his sister), son of William Douglas. Probably the same Hugh was associated with lands in Angus, Perth, Fife and Berwickshire. He is probably the Hugh who witnessed several charters for Alexander II from 1260 until the mid-1270s, had the gift of an annual rent from the King in 1265 and the Sir Hugh recorded in 1288, asking the King for letters to the Pope. He probably married Mary, Queen of Man and was succeeded by Alexander, Lord Abernethy. James (14th/15th C.) 2nd son of William, 6th Laird of Saltoun and brother of Sir William. In 1393 he had a charter (from their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas) for the lands of Teindside and Harwood in the Barony of Hawick. These lands had been resigned by his brother, Sir William. The lands probably later passed to his nephew Oswald. James (d.1504/5) 2nd son of Lawrence. He succeeded his brother William as Lord Saltoun. It is possible he was the Lord of Abernethy who was fined for non-appearance at the 1494/5 Justice-ære in Jedburgh, for his lands of Plenderleith. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. John (14th C.) probably son of Sir George, who was captured at Neville’s Cross and brother of Sir George, who was killed at Otterburn. He had a passport for passing through England (possibly on his way to the Holy Land) in 1381. He appears to have held the advowson of Minto Kirk, which he gave to Sir William Stewart in 1391. John (15th C.) son of Oswald. He was mentioned as son of Oswald in a charter of 1463/4 for Oswald’s cousin William. He is described as ‘of Tynside’ in 1494 when he gave a charter of the lands of Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills and Carlinpool to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. This probably ended the connection of this family to Teviotdale. Witnesses included Alexander of Rothemay and William, his brother. He is probably the John who witnessed a document relating to lands of Camieston (in Roxburghshire) in 1496. Perhaps the same ‘Johannis Abirnethit’ was listed among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, who were given remission for their fines in 1501. Rev. John (d.1639) son of Thomas of Glencorse and older brother of Rev. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1587, was a Reader at Jedburgh in 1588 and ordained as minister there in 1593. There is a suggestion that in 1596 Wilton Parish was united with Jedburgh, and hence he was also minister there for a time (although there is no evidence he ever preached there). He was a member of the Assembly in 1601, 1602, 1608 and 1616. Although he signed a protest against Episcopacy in 1606, he was appointed Bishop of Caithness in 1616. He appears never to have given up his charge at Jedburgh. In 1633 he presented David Fowls as the minister of Bedrule. However, he was deprived in 1638 and died shortly afterwards. He married Alison, daughter of Sir David Home of Fishwick.
Abernethy

and secondly Isabella, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Philiphaugh. His children included: John, M.D.; Andrew, Depute-Governor of Edinburgh Castle; Margaret, who married a Wauchope and then Sir William Maxewell of Gribton; William, minister of Thurso; Anna, who married James Murray of Overton; Agnes, who married William Kerr of Newton; Barbara, who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Elizabeth, who married William Ker of Thankles; and Katherine, who died young. His publications include ‘A Christian and Heavenly Treatise containing Physicke for the Soul very necessary for all that would enjoy true Soundness of Mind and Peace of Conscience’ (1615, 1622) and ‘The Duty and Dignity of a Christian’ (1620). Sir Lawrence (14th C.) 2nd son of William, who is on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and the Declaration of Arbroath. His brother Sir William succeeded as 3rd Laird of Saltoun, and was at Halidon Hill in 1333. He witnessed several charters of Newbattle Abbey and had a grant of lands in Berwickshire from Robert the Bruce (where he is ‘Laurenicio de Abirmethy’). His estates included Borthwickshiel, as well as Hawthornden, ‘Halmyre’, ‘Dunsyre’ and Lamberton. He was forced to forfeit his lands to Robert II because of his attachment to the English, and Borthwickshiel was granted to Sir William Lindsay. However, the lands were mostly recovered by his son Hugh. He granted lands at Maxpoffle to his nephew William in 1320. Lawrence (b.c.1400–60) 1st Lord of Saltoun, son of Sir William and Margaret Borthwick. He succeeded his older brother William and his younger brother was Oswald of Teindside and Harwood. He was witness to the 1427 charter for the Barony of Hawick and the charter of 1435 in which Brauxholme and neighbouring lands were granted to Thomas Inglis. He owned the lands of Borthwickshiel, which passed (probably through marriage) to Sir William Douglas of Strathbrock before about 1425. He was also Baron of Plenderleith near Kelso, a connection with Roxburghshire that the family retained until 1612. He witnessed several charters for James II in the 1450s. He married Margaret, and was succeeded by his son William. Other children were James, George, Archibald, Elizabeth and another daughter. His name was also spelled ‘Laurence’. Orm (d.bef. 1190) son of Hugh. He flourished during the reigns of Malcolm IV and William the Lion. He possessed lands in Fife, including Corbie, Cultra, Balindean, Balindard and Balmerino. His son Lawrence was the first to use Abernethy as a surname. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Henry ‘de Reuel’ (hence establishing a direct link with the Hawick area). It is possible that he is the man who gave his name to Ormiston in East Lothian. Oswald (15th C.) 3rd son of Sir William, he was brother to William and Lawrence, who became 1st Lord Saltoun. He probably inherited the lands of Teindside and Harwood from his uncle James. He witnessed instrument relating to Melrose Abbey in 1444 and 1446. He is recorded in 1446/7 when there was a notorial instrument stating that he publicly asserted at Newark, before William, Earl of Douglas, that the only superior of his lands of Teindside and Harwood was the Baron of Hawick. He was witness to a truce among the Wardens of the marches in 1449. He witnessed a charter for James II in 1451/2. He was succeeded by his son John. Rev. Thomas (c.1576–c.1640) son of Thomas, Laird of Glencorse. Graduating from Edinburgh University in 1596, he became minister at Durisdeer in 1601 and was that same year translated to Hawick, leaving with the advice of the Presbytery ‘for his weill, and the weill of the Kirk’. His elder brother John also became minister at Jedburgh (and may have had a connection to Wilton). Another brother, Patrick, was Laird of ‘Nethrindall’. He was almost removed in 1605 for turning up 2 days late to the Assembly in Aberdeen, owing to a mistake in the date. In 1608 it is recorded that William Scott (called ‘of the Know’), his brother Robert (Bailie of Hawick) and their brothers George and David, were all made to pay a bond, promising not to harm him; he had a reciprocal bond (with his brother Patrick appearing for him) not to harm the 4 Scott brothers. This must have involved a serious dispute of some sort! He was translated to Eckford in 1610, although the circumstances of his departure from Hawick are not known. He was summoned before the High Commission in 1622 for not complying with the ordinances of the 1618 Assembly, but was let off after his brother John (then Bishop of Caithness) intervened. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He married Beatrix Criche in 1603, but probably had no sons, since his nephew Daniel was served heir in June 1641. Another record of 1641 records Grizel Ramsay borrowing £90 from his widow. William of Saltoun (1360–1420) son of Sir George. He is probably the William who witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He was taken prisoner at the Battle of Homildon, but was released later. He married Mary Stewart, daughter of Robert, Duke of Albany. His children included: Sir William, who held lands in upper Teviotdale; Patrick, stated to be ‘grandson of the Governor’ in 1413; and Marion. Sir William (d.1411) eldest son of William, the 6th of Salton, whom he pre-deceased. He held the lands of Teindside and Harwood in upper Teviotdale, which he resigned into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, to be regranted to his brother in 1393. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Borthwick (who may have been the first of his family to take that name from the Borthwick Water). Their children were William (who succeeded his grandfather), Laurence (who succeeded his brother) and Oswald. He was killed at the Battle of Harlaw. His wife may later have married William, eldest son of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. William (d.1488) Lord Salton, son of Laurence. He was mentioned as son and heir of Laurence in a charter of 1458/9. He was confirmed in all his lands in a charter of 1463/4, with his male heirs also being named, including his brothers James, Geoffrey and Archibald, and cousin John, son of Oswald. He was the first man named on the inquest of 1464/5 into the inheritance of the Baron of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglas; all the other men were prominent Roxburghshire landowners. He may be the William who had a sasine for the lands of ‘Pendrirlaith’ in Roxburghshire in 1461. He was probably also the ‘Willelmo domino Abirnethy’ who was among the witnesses in Edinburgh to the erecting of Bransholmie into a Barony in 1463. In the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex he is named as one of the justiciars, along with William Borthwick (also spelled ‘Abernethie’ and ‘Abirnethy’).

Achi Baba (aw-chee-baw-ba) n. prominent hill on the Gallipoli peninsula in Turkey, whose capture was a goal of much of the activity there during 1915. In particular, progress to capture 3 trenches further up the Achi Baba ‘Nullah’ (i.e. dry river bed) was the immediate objective of a... disastrous offensive on 12th July 1915. The soldiers of 1/4th K.O.S.B. were ordered to take these trenches, although the 3rd line turned out not to really be there, so that many men advanced too far forward, tried to retreat and were hit by fire from all sides. When the Battalion was relieved 2 days later it is said that only 70 out of 700 answered the call, the rest being either killed or wounded. More than 80 local men died that day, most of them still lying in the fields where they fell, south of the village of Krithia (now called Alçitepe). Having no known graves, their names are marked on the Helles Memorial.

acht (awcht) interj. expression of impatience, contempt etc. (probably stronger than ach) – ‘acht, A gie up’, ‘acht, ec’re hopeless yowe’.

the Acklington Dyke (thu-awk-lin-tin-dik) n. name generally given by geologists to an intrusion of igneous rock stretching from the formerly active volcanoes around Mull in a south-easterly direction, via Hawick, to Acklington near the Northumbrian coast and off into the North Sea. It is also sometimes called the Hawick-Acklington Dyke. It was laid down in a rapid event in the Paleogene Period, about 61–55 million years ago, possibly connecting with the Mon-eyacres Dyke (with the direct line perhaps being broken by later faults), and hence stretches some 600 km. The basaltic rock has been quarried in various places for road material, e.g. at the Black Quarries near Hawick.

aclyte (a-klí) adj., arch. awry, twisted to the side, overturned (also spelled ‘aclite’).

acquent (ak-wen’,-wán’) v., arch. to ac- quaint – ‘Acquant me, O thou whom my saul loeist, wi’ where thou feedist . . . ’[HSR], pp., arch. acquainted – ‘Bailies went to the ground with one or two Burgesses best acquaint with marches’[BR1717], ‘Thou . . . art acquant wi’ a’ my wayes’[HSR], ‘Hei laid on an ranted off yirrds o Border rheime an lore, – that nae man was better acquaint wu’[ECS], ‘. . . and anither – an illfaured loon that seemed tae be acquaint wi’ them . . . ’[JEDM], ‘. . . an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquant wi’ sae muckle new licht o’ things they hae fund oot noo-a-days about the sterns an’ sae’[BGM1880] (there are spelling variants).

acre (a-kur) n. an area of land, formerly also used to refer to a piece of arable land in general, as well as occurring in placenames, such as Abbotsacre, the Acre, Acrenhowe, Acremoor, the Acres, Blaikie’s Acre, Coit Acre, Crozier’s Acre, Hangman’s Acre, the Mill Acre, Ralph’s Acre and Swine Acre. The exact area was once open to some local variation. In Scotland it was typically 5760 square yards of 37 inches, while the English acre was 4840 square yards of 36 inches, corresponding to a ratio of about 1.26. This leads to ambiguity in deciding how much land is being discussed in older texts.

the Acre (thu-á-kur) n. area of land in Hawick, named in the 19th century, roughly bordered by the present Bucleuch Terrace, Myreslaw Green and Bucleuch Street, and later containing the Old Parish Church hall. It may more specifically have referred to the area between what became Beaconsfield Terrace and Morrison Place. It was marked on Wood’s 1824 map. There is now an Acre Cottage in Morrison Place (from the Old English for a field).

Acrenhowe (a-kur-now) n. Acrenhowe Loch or Reservoir, a man-made lake used to supply drinking water to Hawick, constructed in the 1880s and lying at the eastern boundary of Hawick Common. It is about 3 miles south of Hawick, roughly 22 acres in size, and stocked for fishing. On the Friday of the Common Riding the mounted procession passes here, riding in single file along both sides of the reservoir; the Cornet rides on the Hawick side, with the following free to choose. Before it was dammed to make a reservoir, the area was also known as Greenside Bog. It is probably the ‘Askar Knowe’ belonging to ‘Cockes John Crosers’ listed among the farms on the Slitrig burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnigton purchased by Gilbert Elliot of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It is probably the ‘Arkondknow’ listed among the lands held by Elliot of Stobs in 1657 and still part of the Barony of Winnigton in the late 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1684 the tenant of the farm there was among the men fined for attending conventicles. There were 5 householders listed there in 1694. William Henderson lived there in 1710. George Hardie was tenant in the early years of the 18th century. The farm was owned by Elliot of Stobs in the 18th century. The ground for the reservoir was partly on Hawick Common and partly feued from Stobs estate. In a 1788 valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the lands were in two separate farms, together valued at £173, and appear to have included parts called Hunthill and Abbot Acre. Walter Turnbull was farmer in the 1860s...

and John Turnbull around 1900. When the new water-works, using the reservoir, were opened in 1882 the procession (which can be seen in an old photograph) was said to be 1.5 miles long, and led by the Cornet (see also Acreknoe Ferm; also spelled ‘Aikerknowe’ and other variants; the first definitive recorded spelling is ‘Ackorneknoe’ in 1606, this extra ‘n’ in the middle, suggesting the origin of the name as the Old English ‘aceworn cnoll’, meaning ‘acorn hill’, consistent with the remains of an old oak wood there; it is ‘Accorne-know’ in 1622, ‘Aikerknow’ in 1670, ‘Akerknow’ in 1690, ‘Acreknow’ in 1694, ‘Acercerknow’ in 1710 and ‘Acreknoes’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Akerknow’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Ackerknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Acreknoe Burn (ā-kur-now-burn) n. stream rising on Winnimoss Moor and running roughly to the north-east, passing through Acreknoe Reservoir and continuing to the Slitrig. It was also formerly referred to as the ‘Flex Back Burn’.

Acreknoe Ferm (ā-kur-now-fe-rum) n. farm near Acreknoe Reservoir, which was part of the Stobs estate. William Aitkin was farmer there in 1797. A building and enclosure are shown there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. In about 1902 it became the site of a siding off the Waverley Line, provided for Stobs Camp.

Acremoor (ā-kur-moor) n. Acremoor Loch, an isolated stretch of water of about 40 acres, south of Ettrickbridge, and stocked for fishing. This is probably connected to the ‘rivulet of Akermere’ mentioned in a document of Glasgow Diocese in the reign of William I, relating to lands in Ashkirk Parish. It could be the lands of ‘Achilmere’ in Selkirkshire confirmed to ‘Jacobo de Achilimere’ in 1458/9. On Blaeu’s 1654 map it is the central loch of a group of 3, all draining into the Blindhaugh Burn to the east. However, by Ainslie’s map of 1773 the other 2 bodies of water appear to have been drained and by 1863 it was no longer connected with Blindhaugh Burn. It is now known for being an area of special standing water habitat and as a wintering wildfowl site (also known as Akernoor; it is recorded as ‘Akermere’ in the late 12th century, occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Akermure L.’, Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘aikermuir Loch’ and ‘Oakemmoor Loch’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

act (akt) n., arch. a formal resolution, decision, record of agreement – ‘…whereupon, the procurator-fiscal asked act of court: qua thereafter was put in the stockis’ [BR1641] (used in early records of the local Magistrates Court).

the Actin Fither (θu-ak-tin-fi-thur) n. Acting Father during the Common Riding, who is and is selected by the Cornet. He is presented with a badge of office at the Thursday night Chase. He is officially referred to as the Acting Senior Magistrate, taking the role of the old Senior Magistrate in some of the ceremonies (although these ceremonial duties were taken by one of the actual Bailies until sometime around 1900). Along with the Committee and the Right-and Left-Hand Men he generally helps the Cornet perform his duties. In particular he leads the married men during the Chases and carries the Flag from the Nipkowes to St. Leonard’s on the Thursday and Friday mornings. This tradition had fallen into abeyance, but was revived in 1887, when the actual Senior Magistrate (Bailie Morrison) carried the Flag: it is uncertain when the ‘Acting Senior Magistrate’ took over this duty. In late 19th century records the Acting Father is often referred to as simply ‘the Cornet’s Father’, a source of some confusion (not least because occasionally the Cornet’s actual father took the role!): again it is unclear when the current term came into use. He also carries the Flag to the Moor after the Cutting of the Sod, returning it to the Cornet at the gate. Another time the Acting Father holds the Flag is while the Cornet lays a wreath at the War Memorial. There are no specific rules for who can be Acting Father, other than a knowledge of the traditions and good horsemanship. The first Acting Father on record is John Kyle, who acted for his own son Alexander in 1872. The Father in 1876, Thomas Kennaway, was charged with culpable homicide (and acquitted) after his horse trampled someone during the Thursday night Chase. In 1872, 1878, 1881, 1882, 1887, 1895, 1898 and 1907 the Cornet’s actual father did the duty; this suggests that in earlier centuries it may have been the norm for the Cornet’s father to carry out the duties. In 1891 the Acting Father was unwell on the Friday morning and sent his apologies. Several people have been Acting Father twice, while J.E.D. Murray had the honour on 4 occasions.

the Actin Fither’s Badge (θu-ak-tin-fi-thurz-bawj) n. badge of office presented to each Acting Father in the Hut at the ‘Orderin o the Curds an Cream’ just before he makes his speech. It is a round design, featuring the town coat-of-arms in the centre, with the words ‘CORNETS
the Actin Mother

ACTING FATHER’ around the outside and the year at the bottom. It has been given since at least the early 1960s.

the Actin Mother (thu-ak-tin-mu-thur) n. the name given to the part of the Chase involving the married men chasing behind the Acting Father.

the Actin Father’s Chase (thu-ak-tin-fi-thurz-chis) n. the name given to the part of the Chase involving the married men chasing behind the Acting Father.

Actin Senior Magistrate (ak-tin-seen-yur-naw-jis-trä) n. title given to the Bailie who acted as the Town Council representative at the Common Riding. This was in the period after 1861 until sometime around 1900, and when the Provost was unable or unwilling to play this role. Later these ceremonial duties were subsumed into those of the Acting Father. Bailie Morrison performed this role in 1887, while Bailie Barrie performed the role several times from 1891, combining them with that of Acting Father in 1896 when he also Provost.

the Act o Bailies an Cooncil, 1640

(thu-akt-ö-bä-leez-an-koon-sul-siks-teen-for-ce) n. ‘Act of the Bailies, with the consent of the Council and community of the town of Hawick to be kept within the said burgh in time coming’, dated 1st January 1640, the first known set of town bye-laws, listing 35 separate items. This included imposing (or probably re-imposing) upon the Burgess the duty of riding the marches each year, which become inoperative after the division of the Common in 1777. The relevant text read ‘whatsomever person that beis not present yeirle at the Common-Ryding and setting the faires sal pay forty shillings toties quoties (i.e. for each offence) and wardit (i.e. be imprisoned), without license or ane lawful excuse’. This is the first recorded reference to the Common Riding. The other bye-laws deal with violent crime, theft, use of irreverent language, defiance of the Bailies’ will, posting notices, transacting business (particularly the websters), avoiding disputes between neighbours, becoming a Burgess, receiving strangers, taking cases to any court other than the Hawick Magistrates’ Court and keeping animals within the Town. The Act was signed by the following Councillors (retaining the original spelling): Robert Scott; John Scott; James Burne; James Scot; Robert Layng; Robert Smith; Robert Gillaspie; James Clappertone; William Scott; William Roucastell; Walter Chisholme; Andro Ledderdaill; George Rucastel; John Scott, Merchant; and Robert Deanes. The Bailies were William Scott and G. Deanis (possibly an error for ‘Robert’), with Gilb. Watt the Clerk. The Act was renewed in 1715.

A’d (awd) contr. I’d, I would – ‘A’d say sie’, A’d bet ee owts it’s no’, ‘…but A’d a thousand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘…at the airt A’d comed’ [ECS], ‘Aw’d like tae tell o’ the beauties aw’ve seen That’s aw roond dear auld Hawick’ [AY], I had – ‘A’d aye a bad chist’, ‘…So Aw’d better hide away’ [RM], ‘Ma hert was low, ma hert was low, When a’d ti go, when a’d ti go’ [WIL], ‘A’d aye a bad chist’ [CoH] (also spelled ‘Aw’d”).

A’d’a (aw-da) contr. I’d have, I would have – ‘Aw dinna gaun tae thum aw Aw’d a got killed if aw’d gone tae the Rabble’ [AY] (the best spelling is unclear).

adae (a-, u-dā) v., arch. to deal with, going on, the matter with – ‘O’ll heh nae mair adae wui’d’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ve naething adae the day – oo’re eidl for woaf at the mill’ [ECS], ‘That’s the truth, an’ there need be nae mair adae’ [GW], ‘…And a’body swithered and thocht What’s adae? ’’ [DH], contr., to do – ‘Deed it’s ma oose-nion Tam Weens is gane clean gyte, or hie wad never hed ocht a-do wi’t ‘’’ [DMW], ‘Is’t owt adae wi’ yow hevin’ a hoose up at Stirches?’ [MB], ‘What hev ee adae?’ [ECS] (meaning ‘what business is it of yours?’), ‘Aa want naething else adae Wi money Except to sit at the Dunk And watch the auld currency Floatin’ bye’ [DH], ‘…and ye’ve naething mair a-daе but sned off the twigs …’ [DH], n., arch. fuss, ado, busy activity – ‘E’e maikin owre muckle adae aboot eet’ [ECS] (also adui).

adaes (a, u-dāz) n., pl., arch. worries, troubles, tasks, difficulties – ‘She hes ir ain adaes, wui a no-weel man’ [ECS].

Adair’s map (a-därz-mawp) n. manuscript map of ‘The Sherifdome of Etrik Forest’, drawn up by John Adair (c.1650–1722), who was from Leith. Adair was commissioned by the Privy Council to survey and make maps of Scotland, but for largely political reasons many were never published, like this one, which is in the National Library of Scotland. It was made around 1688 and shows the Borthwick and Ale valleys, as well as Selkirkshire.
Adam

Adam (aw-dum) n. (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam la parsone de Souldone’ (and not ‘Fouldon’, as transcribed earlier) in Roxburghshire, when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems clear that he was an early clergyman of ‘Soudon’ Kirk. His seal was a ‘vesica’ showing St. Katherine holding a sword in her right hand and wheel in her left, with another figure to the left.

Adam (aw-dum) n. James (d.1738) probably son of John, a writer in Edinburgh and macer of the Court of Session. He is described as ‘of Whitslaide’ in 1723 when he purchased the lands of Whitslaide and Dalgleish from John Scott, under the authority of the superior, James Erskine of Grange. He matriculated arms in 1731. He was succeeded by his son John. John of Whitslaide (d.1780) son of James. owner of the lands of Whitslaide, Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel. He was a benefactor of the University of Edinburgh in 1747. He paid the wind tax for Whitslaide in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire (incorrectly as ‘of Whitelard’) in 1761. When he died the lands passed to his sister Agnes, who had married John Lauder, and later passed to his great-nephews Corbyn and John Venner. William (1689-1748) architect, responsible for Hopetoun House, the Royal Infirmary and parts of Floors Castle. He was appointed as the King’s Architect in Scotland. He was made an Honorary Burgess of the Estates and not praying for William and Adam (b.1801). His daughter Christian died in 1809. Alexander (b.c.1770) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. Born outside Roxburghshire, he is listed along with David, who was probably his son. Gerald business studies teacher at Hawick High School and later Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School. He has been a President of Hawick R.F.C. and the Callants’ Club.

Adamson (aw-dum-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as ‘postillion’ at Midshiels in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the Alexander in Wilton who married Betty Gillies in Melrose in 1794. Andrew ‘Andra’ (19th C.) character celebrated in the lines – ‘Dan Narvy and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI]. George (17th C.) resident of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. George (1732/3–1819) carrier of Hobkirk Parish. He is probably the George who is recorded as owner of 2 horses at Hillshaugh on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. About 1798 he moved to the Nursery House at Bonchester Bridge. His 2nd daughter Betty married James Turnbull (ancestor of the Hawick grocers), probably born in 1760. His wife was said to be Catherine, but it is also possible she was Christian Stevenson who married a man of the same name in Hobkirk Parish in 1756. His death at ‘Nursey house’ is recorded in Hobkirk Parish and he was buried in Hokirk kirkyard. James (17th C.) servitor to the Earls of Buccleuch in at least the period 1623–37, being the ‘receiver of all silver rents’, as well as dealing with household expenses for the family. There are ‘vouchers of account’ given by him to the Earl’s ‘tutors’ in 1632–33. In the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is listed as being owed ‘for ane yeares chaimermaill, fyftie pundes’. He was recorded being in Edinburgh in 1634 when still servant to the Earl of Buccleuch. Rev. James (d.c.1690) minister at Bedrule. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and became Schoolmaster of Colinton around the same year. He was ordained in 1663 at Car ridden (Bo’ness) and translated to Bedrule in 1664. He was a member of the Jedburgh Presbytery in 1666. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for William and Mary (i.e. for refusing to give up Episcopalianism). He married Helen Hamilton before 1671 and later Esther Scougall in Edinburgh in 1680. His daughter Margaret married Benjamin Hastie in Edinburgh in 1699, while Janet married Thomas Porteous in 1705. James (18th C.) resident of Blackkemonth in 1786 when his daughter Jane was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Mr. ?? (19th C.) brother of Peter from Nenthorn. He was the original partner of Peter Scott in 1878, taking over the stockmaking business of Peter Laidlaw. He was Scott’s uncle, and had previously had a stocking shop on Drumlanrig Place. The partnership ended in 1884, with Scott forming Pesco’s himself. Peter (b.1797/8) born in Nenthorn, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 Loan, in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan and in 1861 on the Mid Raw. He married Marion Leishman and their children included Alexander, Marion (who married Peter Scott), William, Robert, Elizabeth (b.1839) and Peter (b.1840). Peter (b.1840) hosier in Hawick. He was in partnership with his nephew Peter Scott in 1878–84, before Scott formed his own company, Pesco’s. He married Margaret Doyle and their children included Marion (b.1872), Jane (b.1874) and Alexander (b.1881).

adderstone (aw-dur-, e-thur-stān) n. an adder-stone, round stone with a hole through it (imagined to be made by an adder’s bite), said to have magical power – ‘No danger he fears, for a charm’d sword he wears; Of adderstone the hilt; No Tynedale knight had ever such might, But his heart-blood was spilt’ [JL], ‘Surely nowadays few people believe the silly story of vipers producing ‘adder stones’ [RB] (cf. ether).

Adderstone (aw-dur-stin) n. former farm in Cavers Parish, its precise extent now uncertain, but later meaning the lands that were split into Adderstonelee and Adderstonshiel. Johan de Ethereston, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 may be the earliest recorded owner. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. There are deeds relating to it among the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1497, 1530 and 1553. The Laird of Gledstains is recorded owning these lands (along with Adderstonshiel) in 1502 and John Gledstains had a sassine for these same lands in 1542. It is among the lands listed as held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1559 and 1572; even although these lands were never within the Parish of Hawick, they were nevertheless for a while in the Barony of Hawick. By 1615 the lands were certainly the property of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with Adderstonshiel. In 1670 they were inherited along with Adderstonshiel by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry from his father John; at that point the lands were stated to be in the Lordship, Regality and Barony of Hawick. The lands of Francis Scott of Gorrenberry in Kirkton Parish were valued at £900 in 1678. At the same time ‘Douglas of Adderstone’ (possibly the heir of Douglas of Cavers) held lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1691 John Scott of Goreenberry, son of Francis, was served heir to his father in both these lands. In the 1813 Land Tax Rolls it is ‘Adderston, now called Adderston-Shiels, and Adderton-Lees’; it was owned by Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and valued at £900. The Laird of these lands appears to be mentioned in a version of the Border ballad ‘The Raid of the Redeswire’ (although it has been suggested that this was a reference to the Rutherfords of Edgerston) – ‘Gude Ederstone was not to lack, Wi’ Kirkton, Newtoun, noblemen’ [CPM] (the name occurs in the late 14th century as ‘Ederston’ and ‘Edrys- toyne’, then became ‘Ederstone’, ‘eddirstoun’ in 1502, ‘Edgaristoun’ in 1511, 1559 and 1572, ‘El- derston’ in 1542, probably ‘Edyrston’ in 1594, ‘Edzerstoun’ in 1610, ‘Edderston’ in 1615 and finally ‘Adderston’ by the 1620s, but still ‘Edder- stoun’ in 1670 and ‘Edderstoun’ in 1691; it is ‘Ederston’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, ‘Edderston’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Edderstein’ on de Wit’s c. 1680 map, ‘Edderston’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, and ‘Edderston’ on Cor- nellii’s 1689 map; its origin is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Eadred’ plus ‘tun’, but connection with an adder is not impossible; there is also an ‘Adderstone’ in Northumberland).

Adderstone (aw-dur-stin) n. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Ethereston’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It seems likely that he was an early laird of Adderstone. William (18th C.) footman at Minto in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname is written ‘Aderstoni’.

Adderstonlee (aw-dur-stin-lee) n. isolated farm above the Slitrig valley, part of the former lands of Adderstone. In 1643 the lands with different held by the mother of Gledstains of Dod, ‘being Adderston-Lees’, were valued at £200. By 1678 the lands were owned (along with Adderstonshiel) by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry. John Reid was tenant there in 1694, and it may be the ‘Goranberies Hous’ where John Scott of Gorrenberry was taxed for having 8 hearths at that time. Along with Adderstoneshiel it was purchased in 1750 from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry by Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers. The lands were inherited by Archibald Pringle Douglas when his brother George inherited Cavers in 1786. They were still valued at £200 in 1788. William Wilson was there in 1787–92. Robert Aitken was farmer there in 1797 and David Tait in 1868. An 1846 plan of the lands, along with those of Adderstoneshiel is in the National Archives. About quarter of a mile to the west are the remains of an earthwork, composed of triple ramparts and ditches, perhaps being half of the original structure, the other part being destroyed by cultivation and draining; the interior may have measured 45 m by 40 m. Aerial photography has shown evidence of rig and furrow agriculture just to the north-east and south of the fort. A pear-shaped hammerstone found near here is in Hawick Museum, as well as a spindle whorl (also ‘Adderston Lee’, ‘Edderstonelee’ and variants; it is ‘Etherstonlie’ in 1694, ‘Ederstownshiells’ in 1750 and ‘Aderstonlee’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Alderstonlee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Adderstonelee Moss

(aw-dur-stin-lee-mos) n. boggy area between Adderstonelee and Kirkton Hill, also known as the Pickmaw Moss, and sometimes also referring to the small body of water there. It is known for its birdlife and wild plant species. A bronze vessel (rivetted and patched, 8 inches by 4 inches) found there is in Hawick Museum.

Adderstoneshiel

(aw-dur-stin-sheel) n. farm in the Slitrig valley, near Stobs, with 2 hill-forts and other evidence of former occupation nearby. The Laird of Gledstains is recorded owning these lands (along with Adderstone) in 1502 and John Gledstains had a sasine in 1542. This is probably the ‘Edyerston Scheillis’ listed among lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’ in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615; hence, along with Adderstone, these lands were at one point in the Barony of Hawick. John and Adam Crozier were there in 1544 and Ade Crozier in 1571. George Elliot from there was accused of crimes across the Border in 1563/4. It was once the home of a branch of the Gledstains family. In 1574 this was among the lands that James Gledstains of Cocklaw served as surety for. In 1643 the farm was held by Gledstains of Dod and valued at £700. In 1670 the lands were inherited along with Adderstoneshiel by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry from his father John, and then inherited by Francis’ son John in 1691. Thomas Reid was there in 1682. In 1684 the tenant was among the local men fined for attending conventicles. James Leyden was there in 1690. In 1694 Andrew Jerdan was there, with James Scott being ploughman and George Telfer shepherd. William Elliot was there around 1700 and John Scott in 1709. John Tait was tenant in 1720, with John Scott his ‘servitor’. John Elliot is associated with the farm in 1740. Along with Adderstonelee it was purchased in 1750 from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry by Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers. Archibald Douglas of Adderstone inherited the farm in 1786. It was valued at £700 in 1788. Walter Tait was farmer there in at least the period 1788–97. This is where Gideon Scott built the first local windmill in about 1800. William Davidson was farmer in the 1860s and John Davidson was recorded there in 1868. Davidsions farmed there until at least the mid-20th century. The farm land was used as part of Stobs Camp from WWI. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Cuthbert is only about 400 feet south of the farmhouse. The garden gate contains some ancient globular carved stones unearthed in a 19th century excavation. Other artefacts, such as querns, stone axes and burial cists have also turned up, showing the early occupation of the site. There is a hill-fort to the west on Denholm Hill, and another to the north-west on Mid Hill, with an additional linear earthwork. To the north of the farm there was also once a circular earthwork, now obliterated by cultivation. There may have been a tower near there, called ‘Cleary’, where John Crozier lived in 1544. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building that is no longer evident. 2 spindle whorls from the farm are also in the Museum (also ‘Adderstoneshiels’ and ‘Aderston Shiels’; it is ‘eddirstoun schele’ in 1502, ‘Edgaristounschelis’ in 1511, ‘Elderstounschelis’ in 1542, ‘Agerstoneheldes’ in 1544, ‘Eddertounschelis’ in 1563/4, ‘Edderstounsheills’ in 1571, ‘Edderstoun Scheillis’ in 1574, ‘Ederstoun Scheillis’ in 1610, ‘Edderstounscheillis’ in 1615, ‘Ederstounscheillis’ in 1670, ‘Edgerstounsheills’ in 1682, ‘Edderstonesheills’ in 1684, ‘Ederstonesheills’ and ‘Edderstonesheills’ in 1690, ‘Etherstounsheills’ in 1694, ‘Etherstonesheills’ in 1708, ‘Edderstonesheills’ in 1720, ‘Ederstownshiells’ in 1750, ‘Edderstonesheills’ in 1765, ‘Aderstounsheills’ in 1797 and still ‘Edderstonesheills’ in 1846; it is ‘Alderstonesheills’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Their children included Charlotte, who married printer William Ellis (and their sons were William F, and B.P. Ellis of R. Deans & Co., printers). David (b.1785/6) hand-loom weaver in Hawick, originally from the Langholm area. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Green Wynd. His wife was Margaret Christie, from Wigtownshire. Their children included: Margaret; David, of the Hawick Co-op; Jessey who married stockingmaker Adam Thomson; Mary, who married Andrew Landles; Charles, who married ‘English Mary’; John; Euphemia; and Anne, who married baker George Dickson. He may have been related to the Margaret who married weaver George Scott. David (19th C.) probably son of David. His was the first name on the first Committee list for the Hawick Co-operative Store in 1839. He married Ann McKenzie, who was mother (from her 1st marriage) of hairdresser Frank McKenzie. Their children included: Margaret, who married James Marchbanks; Jess, who married stockingmaker Thomas Elliot; and David, a wool-sorter in Alloa, whose son David became Minister at Ladybank. His husband and 3 children are recorded on the Kirkwynd in 1841, suggesting he might have been deceased. Jessie (d.1904) probably daughter of David and sister of David also. She was known as an earnest Christian. She married stockingmaker Adam Thomson in Hawick in 1849. They emigrated to New Zealand, where her husband became foreman of Otago Woollen Co., Mossgiel Mills, Dunedin.

Africa (aw-free-ku) n. old name for a series of earthworks a little way up the west side of the Camp Burn in the Borthwick valley. Local tradition says that it was an extensive settlement, and it is marked on most maps as a fort. However, it is now classified as an early mediaval homestead, although probably there are remains here from several different periods. The name ‘Africa’ was alternatively attached to the earthwork at Castle Hill near Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. However, there is no evidence that either place ever had an association with this name among locals (the origin of the name, or at what point it was associated with earthworks in the Borthwick valley, is unclear).

Africa (aw-free-ku) n. former name for the farm of Midburn. Local historian Walter Deans said that ‘it was formerly a bleak and barren farm with a poor soil and ‘peasweep’ locality, and from its sterility got the name of Africa’ (there was another piece of land with the same name in Ancrum Parish).

Aikrin (äk-rin) n. local pronunciation of the surname Ekron – ‘The Ekrons, or Aikrins iz oo say, war a respecteet faimly in the burgh an owned property in Silver Street an the Crescent’ [BW1979].

Aikwood (äk-wood) n. (Oakwood) lands on the south side of the Ettrick valley, over Woll Rig from Ashkirk. The lands were once owned by the Crown and were let to the Homes in the 1490s. Lawrence Rutherford and Adam Crauston are recorded there in 1494/5 (and both had remission for their rieving crimes). The lands were still Crown property in 1502. The tower here was once a home of the Scotts. In 1541 it was claimed in feu by Michael Scott in a rental roll of Ettrick. Sometime in the late 18th century a cache of silver coins was dug up nearby, by William, son of James, tenant of Oakwood Mill. Andrew Thomson was farmer there in the late 18th century. Walter Scott of Harden in 1785 and Hugh Scott of Harden in 1802 paid tax on £884 in the Land Tax Rolls for ‘The two Oakwoods & Mill’. Ebenezer Beattie was there in 1821. There is also a nearby Roman fort, to the south-east, occupied roughly from the year 80, and a temporary marching camp just to the north – ‘Ca’ up young Hob, of Gilminscleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Hartwood, and Middlesteed, and Hainen’s valiant Will’ [WSB] (formerly written ‘Aikwood’, ‘Aikwoode’ and variants).

Aikwood Tower (äk-wood-tow-ur, äk-wud-toor) n. 16th century tower house, in the Ettrick valley, 4 miles from Selkirk, built in 1535 for the Scott family, with the existing structure perhaps dating from 1602. The barony of Aikwood encompassed much of the Ettrick valley. The tower was probably abandoned in the mid-18th century. It was restored for David and Judy Steel in 1991–92 (including some wood recycled from Hawick Old Parish Kirk pews). It was, by local legend, home of Michael Scot the wizard and of Border rievers. The tenant of the farm there in 1502 was William Turnbull. The first Scott of Aikwood was Robert, recorded in 1503, possibly son of Robert of Haining. Sometime before 1630 Philip Scott seems to have sold the lands to a Murray of Elibank, through whom it passed to the Scotts of Harden. Ebenezer Beattie was tenant there in the early 19th century – ‘It sets thee weel, thou haughtye youth, To bend such taunts on me; Oft ha’e you hunted Aikwood hills, And no man hindered thee’ [ES] (also sometimes ‘Oakwood’; it is ‘Aikwoode’ in 1502 and ‘Aikwood’ in 1526 and 1528; it is marked as ‘O. Aickwood’ and ‘N. Aikwoode’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

ail (äl) v., arch. to trouble, affect, afflict – ‘Yeh thing ailed iz; A’d turnt awfhi dry!’ [ECS], ‘...nocht ailed ma cluifs’ [ECS], ‘...What ails the ice-cap? Where’s a’ the snaw?’ [DH] (common longer than in standard English).

ailin (ä-lin) adj. ailing, unwell, failing, hard up financially (more common than in standard English).

ailiphant (ä-lee-fin’) n., arch. an elephant.

Aimers (ä-murz) n. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (1822/3–1886) founder of the joiners firm A. Aimers and Son. The family came from Tynedale and the surname had originally been ‘Hymers’. He married Janet Aitken, who died in 1883, aged 63. Their children included Agnes and Nelly, who died as infants, Thomas (who died at 16), James (who died in London) and John (who died in Liverpool). Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) prominent centre half back for the Hawick rugby team in the 1880s and 1890s. He also played for the South of Scotland team and in international trials. William (1845/6–1910) head of the joiners firm A. Aimers & Son. He was a councillor for South High Street Ward for 6 years, member of the Common Riding Committee and one of the oldest members of the Hawick Fire Brigade. He married Jessie, daughter of Francis Napier Scott (also formerly ‘Aymers’).

ain (än) adj. own – ‘Tell your master that here sits Hab o’ Hawick at his ain fireside and a fig for King James and a’ his kin!’ [RW], ‘I wish we were hame to our ain folk Our kind and our true-hearted ain folk’ [HSR], ‘...And bring me back a message frae My ain wee lassie Mary’ [TC], ‘...We’ll unite in a sang tae oor ain auld toon’ [TC], ‘...And times brought many changes To oor ain auld toon’ [JT], ‘To the lassies’ laughin’ welcome in their ain auld Border toon’ [JYH], ‘My ain Borderland, My ain Borderland, Oh, weel do I like My ain Borderland’ [JCG], used redundantly in compound personal pronouns – ‘To these may be added ain (= own), thus: ma-ain-sel, eer-ain-sel, eer-ain-sels, etc.’ [ECS] (cf. the older awin).

Ainslie (ānz-lē) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in ‘Cleituch’ (presumably Cleithaugh) according to a rental roll of 1669. Perhaps the same Andrew is listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He is probably the Andrew listed as owner of lands in Oxnam Parish in 1678. David of Fala and Templelands (16th C.) listed in 1549 as son and heir of William of Fala, among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He became a merchant in Jedburgh, married Mary Rutherford and had sons James, George and John. His wife may have been a daughter of Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Humdalee. He was probably succeeded by his son William (but these generations are confused). James (16th C.) recorded at Cleithaugh in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. Rev. James (1607/8–1702) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1639, he became minister of Minto in 1652. His appointment took almost the whole year to settle, there being an objection because he was a Freemason. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopalianism, and was forced to leave the bounds of the Presbytery of Jedburgh. However, he managed to survive through the Revolution and was restored in 1690 and remained minister of Minto until his death, in his 95th year. He preached at Hassendean in 1692. He had a daughter who married John Scott of Weens, and another daughter, Barbara, who married Rev. John Ritchie, a later minister of Minto. John of Dolphinston (14th C.) witness in 1354 to a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was also witness in 1357/8 to a charter whereby the Kers first gained Altonburn and another charter for the Kers in 1358. John (15th C.) on the ‘retour’ panel for William Douglas inheriting the Barony of Hawick; Richard, probably his brother, was also on the panel. In 1454 he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1463/4 he witnessed the document rewarding a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. In 1464/5 he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh, and he was then appointed deputy Sheriff of Roxburgh, and he was then appointed deputy Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was also listed as a witness in 1354 to a charter for Walter Ker of Altonburn. In 1471 and 1475. He was one of the men named in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the same John, Burgess of Hawick, who is recorded as living at Allars, outside the boundaries of the Burgh; he applied for permission to pasture his cow on the Common, which was permitted provided that he paid an extra fee for the privilege. Perhaps the same John was the Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the John, married to Janet Johnson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: James (b.1757); Margaret (b.1759); John (b.1761); Isabel (b.1767); and Margaret (again, b.1770), whose baptism record says that her father was a gardener; and John (b.1770). John Rutherford of Samieston (1754–1799) son of Thomas Rutherford and Ann Ainslie, he changed his surname when inheriting the body'. Messrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Horsleyhill according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. One of them was probably the Thomas who was recorded at Horsleyhill on the 1789 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear who these gentlemen were, or how long they were associated with Horsleyhill. Ralph (15th C.) recorded as ‘Anyse’ in 1493 when he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany and other crimes, including stealing 24 oxen and cows, 6 horses and goods from ‘the Place of Spittale’. Whether this was Spittal-on-Rule or Ancrum Spittal is unclear. Perhaps the same Ralph ‘in Thickside’ was listed among Ainslies at the 1502 Justice-aire. He could also be the Ralph recorded in 1502 having remission for assisting the former Duke of Albany and being from near Dolphinston when he had remission for stealing livestock from Glen-gelt. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as ‘Raiphe Eansley of Cleethaughe’ in 1590 when accused of taking part in a raid on the English farm of Woodburn. Thomas is also named, and so presumably a close relative. Robert (17th/18th C.) ‘writer’ in Jedburgh, who was witness for many documents relating to the Rule valley in the late 1600s. His brother Thomas also worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. Robert, W.S. (1766–1838) son of the land steward of Lord Douglas’s Berwickshire estates, Robert of Darnchester in Berwickshire. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh. In 1787, when still a law student, he accompanied Robert Burns on his ‘Border Tour’. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s Kirkyard in Edinburgh. Thomas of Swinside (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Eansley of Swinside’ in 1590 when he was named along with 2 Douglases, accused of a raid into England 3 years earlier. He could be the Thomas listed along with Ralph of Cleithaugh in another 1590 accusation of a raid. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Horsleyhill according to the 1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Minto Parish. He is probably one of the ‘Messrs Ainslies’ listed at Horsleyhill in 1797. It is possible he is the same as Thomas of Overwells. Thomas Philip of Overwells (d.1837) son of Thomas. He is listed as owner of Overwells in the 1788 county valuation. He lived at Knowesouth for many years, where his mother died in 1812. He was said to be a great follower of fashion. He was an early member of the Jedforest Club and was a Captain in the Roxburgh yeomanry, being given the rank of Lieut.-Col. when he retired. He never married. Thomas (19th C.) blacksmith in Minto in the 1860s. Walter of Wilton (b.1632) 2nd son of John of Harkers and grandson of David of Fala. Rev. Walter (17th/18th C.) nephew of Rev. James, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1685 and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1695. He was presented to Minto Parish in late 1697 and the next year began as assistant and successor to his aged uncle. However, he was translated to Lundie and Fowlis in 1700, and so never succeeded as minister of Minto. William (17th C.) ‘heckler’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was recorded as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at the farm of Cleithaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Jean Wilson. Their children, born in Hawick, included: Ann (b.1759); and an unnamed son (b.1761). William (b.1792/3) born in Cavers Parish, he was a warehouseman in Wilton and also Wilton Kirk elder. He was listed at Pathhead among heads of households in 1835–41. He lived on Pathhead, at about the modern 3 Langlands Road. By 1851 he was a ‘Dresser of Woolen Goods’ and in 1861 was a factory time keeper. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Helen and William. William (1790–1855) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Jane Plenderleith. He lived in Hawick for a while, where he worked as a brewer and bookbinder. He was listed as a bookbinder on the 1825 subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ and is also recorded in 1825 as a bookseller with circulating library operating in the High Street. He is probably also be the founder of William Ainslie & Co. recorded at Hawick Distillery on Commercial Road in 1818. He was also said to be an amateur piper. In 1795 he married Jessie, brother of poet and abolitionist Thomas Pringle; she died in South Africa in 1880, aged 94. Their children were: William (1818–1901); Robert Pringle (1821–98); Catherine (b.1822), who married William Ashton; George Hilton (1826–71); Jane (‘Jeanie’) Plenderleith (b.1832); and Mary Isabella (1836–1918), married John William Henry Hockly. Their first 5 children were probably all born in Hawick. In 1832 he moved with his wife and 5 children to the Cape, following his brother-in-law, who had lived there in the 1820s. He later purchased a farm at Kaffraria, and the family became embroiled in disputes with native people. William (1818–1901) son of William, who worked as a bookbinder in Hawick. In 1832 he moved with the rest of his family to South Africa, on the advice of his uncle, Thomas Pringle. In order to defend his farm he became involved in the 8th Xhosa War. In 1859 he settled near Fort Beaufort, where he farmed and dabbled in diamond mining. In 1899 he privately published an account of his struggles in South Africa, ‘Sixty-six years’ residence in South Africa: an autobiographical sketch’. He married Mary Ann Pringle (who was probably his cousin) and they had at least 8 children. Rev. William James (1862–1932) son of John, who was one of the founding members of the Evangelical Kirk in Hawick, which grew to become the Congregational Kirk. His mother was a grand-daughter of Thomas Bunyan, farmer to Spittal-on-Rule. He trained at Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall and became minister at Spa Mount, Belfast in 1890 and St. Lawrence Street Church in Greenock from 1897. He returned to Hawick to become minister of the Congregational Church in late 1902, being inducted in early 1903. He was heavily involved with organisations relating to young people, e.g. the ‘Catch-my-Pal Association’ (a temperance movement), Crusaders, Band of Hope and League of Worshipping Children. He also encouraged a Cycling Corps within the church (from 1903) as well as a local branch of the ‘P.S.A.’ movement (from about 1908) and oversaw the ‘Christian Endeavour’ (a movement aimed at youth). He was also on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop in 1909 and received approval for the formation of a Boys’ Brigade Company in 1920, although this did not come to pass until 14 years later. He spent some of 1916 working with the Y.M.C.A. (supporting the troops), and in 1921 moved to become minister at Melrose. He lived at the Manse up the Wellogate. His only son John Elliot was killed in action in 1915; a Communion Cup Service and oak cabinet were presented to the church by

Aw whiles hear o bairns dookin for aipples an that kind o thing’ [BW1961], ‘. . .when no ringin door bells and rinnin away or pollin aipples’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘apple’ and ‘apepple’).

Aipletrei Stell (æ-pul-trē-stel) n. Appletree Stell, former plantation just north of the road between Falside and Mervinslaw. It is now visible as a plantation bank, and was depicted on Ordnance Survey maps from 1860–1920. Above the Stell, near the bridle road between Westerhouses and Mervinslaw there is an old cairn.

airchdeacon (ærch-de-kein) n. an archdeacon, church official, ranking below a bishop, in charge of the temporal and administrative matters within part of a diocese.

Archdeacon o Teviotdale (ærch-de-kein-ō-teev-yi-däl) n. Archdeacon of Teviotdale; person appointed as the delegate of the Bishop of Glasgow Diocese within the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. The position existed from 1237/8 on the death of Hugh de Potton, when the Diocese was split into the separate Archdeaconries of Glasgow and Teviotdale (although some of the earlier Archdeacons of Glasgow are also sometimes referred to as Archdeacons of Teviotdale). There were appointees until the Reformation. It would once have been a position of great power within Roxburghshire. A partial roll of the Archdeaconry is: Peter de Alinton 1238–42; Reginald de Irvine 1242–45; Nicholas de Moffat 1245–70; William Wishart 1288–97 and maybe until 1308; Roger de Welleton 1307–10; William de Hillum 1312; William de Yetholm 1320 and 1321–29; John de Berwick 1354; John de Boulton 1354; Henry de Snalham 1354–58 and 1364; John de Ancrum 1364–93; Thomas de Mathane 1394; John de Merton 1394–c.1404; Gilbert Mouswald 1404–08; William Macmorlin c.1408; James Watson (or Walter) 1408–18; John Forrester 1418; William Croyser 1418–40, 1443, 1446, 1451–60 and 1461; John de Sheves 1418–19; John Lyon 1418 and 1423; Edward de Lauder 1419; Alexander de Foulertoun 1422 and 1424; John Bowmaker 1424–28; Andrew de Hawch 1424–25; John Benyng 1426; James Croyser 1440; Walter Blair 1441–47; Patrick Hume 1443–72, Alexander Inglis 1471; John Lichton 1472; David Luthirdale 1474–75; John Whitelaw 1475; Nicholas Forman 1478/9; James Doles 1478; John Brown 1479; William Elphinstone, junior (probably) 1479–81; William Elphinstone, senior, 1481 and 1482–86; John Martini 1486, 1491 and 1510; James Newton 1488/9; William Ker 1491 and 1510–11; George ‘Herher’ 1509; George Lockhart 1509 and 1520–33; Thomas Ker 1534; John Lauder 1534–51; John Hepburn 1544–64 and 1565; Robert Richardson 1552–65; Thomas Ker 1565–69; Robert Ker (in title) 1580s.

aircher (ær-chur) n. an archer – ‘Oov got threi champion archers Europe’s Logan, and world champions McCombe and Cook’ [AlB].

Airchibald (ær-chee-bawld) n. Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who subscribed
Airchie

He was buried at St. Michael's in Dumfries, not far from the grave of Robert Burns.

aire (ār) n., arch. an eyre, a circuit court, held by senior judges who would travel around major centres. The word is locally applied to the royal court held often in Jedburgh in the 15th to 17th centuries (also spelled ‘ayre’ and variants).

the Air Eternal (θu-ār-e-ee-ter-nul) n. poetic name for the tune of ‘Teribus’, supposedly because when Hogg was asked about its antiquity he replied ‘its air’s eternal’.

Airen (ā-rin) n. older pronunciation of Irvine.

airgee (ār-gee) v. to argue (perhaps less common than arggee).

airgement (ār-gee-min’) n. an argument (also argement).

Airhouse (ār-hows) n. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Riddell, recorded on the 1787–89 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same Robert was at Rink in Galashiels Parish by 1791. It is unclear whether his name is a variant of something more familiar (perhaps a transcription error for ‘Amos’).

airk (ārk) n., arch. an ark, chest – ‘Reaise up, O Lord, intil thy rest, thou, an’ the airk o’ dought’ [HSR].

airlier (ār-le-ur) adj. earlier.

airliest (ār-le-ist) adj. earliest – ‘yin o Bert’s airliest hurls in a bus was nearly his last’ [IWL].

airy (ār-lee) adj., arch. early – ‘…Like the drums and fifes oot airily’ [WL], ‘…There in the airily stillness, Till it was time for hame’ [DH], ‘It gits yin airily oot o bed and raikin owre auld pastures …’ [DH] (also spelled ‘airlie’; cf. air).

airm (ārm, ā-rum) n. arm – ‘he raised his arms in triumph’, ‘…naeither did their ain arm saufe thame; but thy richt han’, ay, thine arm …’ [HSR], ‘Wi’ thine arm ye hae redeimit thy choisin anes …’ [HSR], ‘He up wi’ his sleeve and bares his airm …’ [JEDM], ‘Strang airms, I’ll strang airms ye, now I’ve gien fair warnin’, ye auld …’ [JEDM], ‘Sett me as ane seel apon thyne arm, a-sa yin o Bert’s airliest hurls in a bus was nearly his last’ [IWL].

airly stillness, Till it was time for hame’ [DH], ‘It gits yin airily oot o bed and raikin owre auld pastures …’ [DH] (also spelled ‘airlie’; cf. air).

airm (ārm, ā-rum) n. arm – ‘he raised his airm in triumph’, ‘…naeither did their ain arm saufe thame; but thy richt han’, ay, thine arm …’ [HSR], ‘Wi’ thine arm ye hae redeimit thy choisin anes …’ [HSR], ‘He up wi’ his sleeve and bares his airm …’ [JEDM], ‘Strang airms, I’ll strang airms ye, now I’ve gien fair warnin’, ye auld …’ [JEDM], ‘Sett me as ane seel apon thyne arm, a-sa yin o Bert’s airliest hurls in a bus was nearly his last’ [IWL].

to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Robert who married Janet Elliot in Hawick in 1799 or the Robert who married Peggy Collier in Wilton in 1812. William (16th C.) listed as a ‘broustar’ (i.e. embroiderer) in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not he was local. His surname is written ‘Archibaldis’. William (17th C.) resident in Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Airchie (ār-chee) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Archibald – ‘Airchie o’ the Reuch Sike, ready for the set-tae, Wi blunt auld fingers calloused frae the howe’ [DH].

Airchie Keen (ār-chee-keen) n. nickname of Archibald Elliot, one of 10 rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567. It is unclear what the ‘Kene’ or ‘Keen’ meant in his nickname, perhaps brave or eager.

Airchie Oliver Society (ār-chee-ō-lee-vur-sus-ī-ee) n. joke name for the Archaeological Society (a favourite Landlesism, although it dates back to use by Andra Landles, and possibly even earlier).

Airchie’s Will (ār-cheez-wil) n. nickname for Archibald Crozier.

Airchie’s Hob (ār-cheez-hōb) n. nickname for Robert Elliot of Falnash.

Airchie the Theeker (ār-chee-thu-thee-kur) n. nickname for a thatcher who lived in a thatched cottage on the cul-de-sac lane now known as Rosalee Brae in the 18th century.

Aird (ārd) n. Thomas (1802–76) poet, born in Bowden and popular in his day, although he never rose to the status of his friends Carlyle and Hogg. His father James was a joiner and his mother was Isabella Paisley, said to be descended from the Elliots of Midlem Mill. He was educated in Bowden and Melrose, then at Edinburgh University, where he trained for the ministry, but abandoned this plan for a literary career. He worked as tutor for a Selkirkshire family and there became acquainted with James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’. He became editor of ‘The Edinburgh Weekly Journal’ in 1833, soon moving to the Dumfries Herald, where he was editor for 28 years. He published several books of verse, including his own ‘Poetical Works’ in 1848 (reprinted several times) as well as essays and long narrative poems. In 1871 he chaired a meeting in Dumfries to celebrate the centenary of Sir Walter Scott, whom he had met many times.

Airchie Oliver Society (ār-chee-ō-lee-vur-sus-ī-ee) n. joke name for the Archaeological Society (a favourite Landlesism, although it dates back to use by Andra Landles, and possibly even earlier).
airmfi (ārm-fi) n. an armful – ‘Thaim whae frequent the sales tell iz that they’ve seen an airmfih buiks sell’d for a shillin’ or twae’ [BW1938].

airms (ārmz) n., pl. arms, weapons – ‘For the arms o’ the wicket sall be brokin . . . ’ [HSR].

Airmstrong (ārm-strōng) n. (Armstrong) A. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at ‘Grain’ (presumably Saughtree Grain). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He may have been father of the later Arthur, who was also shepherd at Grain. Aaron (1765/6–1845) gamekeeper of Newlands in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His wife Ann died in 1837, aged 64. George, who was assistant gamekeeper at Newlands in 1841, was probably his son. Abraham (18th/19th C.) surgeon in Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside in 1583. He was probably brother of Simon, and son of Ringane. The diminutive form of his name could stand for other Christian names, e.g. Albert. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th C.) listed in 1582 when Lord Maxwell gave caution for entering him and Tom of Chingill’s and the Earl of Morton was given a decree of forfeiture for failing to produce them. His name is given there as ‘Abie Armstrong of the Gyn’gillis’. In 1583 he is recorded as ‘Thoms Abye’, son of ‘Auld Tom o Chingills’. Abraham of Woodhouselee (16th C.) listed in 1583 as a son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. He is referred to as ‘Ebye Armestronge the goodman of Waduless’. He was probably a brother of Kinmont Willie. It seems that his eldest son, William, lived in England, and ‘enjoyeth that land that Kinge Henry the Eight gavd old Sand Armestronge’. He also had sons Dave and Sandy. He may be the ‘Abie Armestrang’ listed as a pledge in St. Andrews Castle in 1569, with those to be exchanged for him being ‘Will of Kynmonth; Cristie Armestrang brother; Niniane Armestrang’, who may all have been his brothers. Abraham ‘Ebbie’ of Kirkton-hill (16th/17th C.) among the Armstrongs who were acquitted of a murder charge in 1609, on account of the pursuer agreeing that they were not present at the time and place of the murder. It is suggested by Pitcairn that the name may be a clerical error for ‘Ekkie’ or ‘Hobbie’, but given the slightly later Armstrong of almost the same name, it does seem this could be ‘Abraham’ or perhaps ‘Ebenezer’. His location is given as ‘Kirktonhill’, and given the homes of the other men, this is probably the place of that name near Bent-path, north-west of Langholm. Abraham ‘Ebie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Ringan of Arkleton. He was listed in 1606 among men declared as fugitives, his name appearing as ‘Ebbie Armestrange, son of Ringane of Arkiltoun’. He as also among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th/17th C.) from ‘Greinis’ (probably ‘the Greens’ near Newcastle-ton), his name is also written Ābie. In 1623 he was convicted of the shameful murder of John Elliot, a blindman, by robbing him on Ancrum Bridge and throwing him over the side to drown in the Teviot there. He was hanged for this crime, probably in Jedburgh. He must have been related to Jock and Ninian, who possesses the farm of Greens in 1632. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as being ‘callit of ye Syd’ when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buceburne’. He was found guilty along with Simon Elliot ‘callit Guyd’, although 2 other Armstrongs (Archie ‘Raccas’ and Francie ‘Tueden’) were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. It is possible he was the same man recorded as ‘Alie of the Syde’ in 1590 when accused, along with other Armstrongs, of rieving from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland. Abraham ‘Abel’ (18th/19th C.) farmer at Shankend, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Abel’ who took over renting a farm (of the Duke of Buccleuch) from Walter Murray in about 1796. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. It seems likely he was related to Walter and James, who farmed at Langside at the same time. He could be the Abel who witnessed a baptism for James Scott (in Whitlaw) in Hawick Parish in 1766 and another for the same man in 1768. He could be the Abel who married Jane Griev in Hawick in 1762. Abraham ‘Abel’ (b.c.1765) clogger in Newcastleton. He was living at about 6 South Hermitage Street in 1841, along with James (probably his son) and his family. He could be the Abel born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758, son of Adam. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included James (b.1793); and George (b.1798). Adam (13th C.) recorded in 1235 when King Henry III pardoned him for the death of William Sotthred in Carlisle. He could be the same Adam ‘Armestrang’ who was on an inquest in Carlisle in 1250. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) one of the Armstrongs of Harelaw. His son William was listed among fugitives of Harelaw in 1569. ‘Adyis Abe’ and ‘Adyis Andro’, who were also listed, were probably other sons of his. Adam of Whisgills (16th C.) listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. Adam (17th C.) called ‘Rattas in Blackhoip’, he probably lived at Blackhope, between Saughtree and Kielder. In 1646 he was one of the last Border thieves to come before Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, with a bond presented by his neighbouring Beaties. Either he or perhaps his father was probably the Robert ‘callit Rattas’ who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Langhaugh (probably the one in Castleton Parish). The will of his wife Isobel Moffat is recorded in 1683. Adam (17th C.) resident at Netherraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam (17th C.) shepherd near Larriston according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) elder in Castleton Kirk recorded in 1698. Adam (17th/18th C.) shepherd at farms neighbouring on Hawick Common. He was at Whitchesters for 7 years, Alton Croft for 2 years and Goldielands for 2 years. His son Mungo was a cooper in Hawick. It seems likely he was closely related (perhaps brother) to Mungo who was Hawick Town Herd. He could be the Adam whose daughter Jean was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696. He may also be the Adam whose daughter Jean married John Tait in Hawick in 1716. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Harkness in 1727. Their children included: William (b.1728); Euphan (b.1730); Andrew (b.1734); and William (again, b.1736). Perhaps the same Adam also married Helen Dodds in Wilton in 1740, their children including: Helen (b.1742); Isabel (b.1744); and Thomas (b.1747). Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: George (b.1739); and Isobell (b.1741). Adam (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1754); Abel (b.1758); and Simon (b.1762). Adam (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Beattie and their children included: John (b.1756); William (b.1759); Helen (b.1761): Adam (b.1766); James (b.1769); and James (again, b.1775). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in 1791, when he was living at Tandlaw in Wilton Parish. He could be the Adam whose unnamed son was baptised in 1782. Adam (18th C.) servant at Stobs in 1794, when he was working for Sir William Elliott. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnfoot on Ale, recorded as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Burnmouth in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Adam (1736/7–1806) tenant farmer in Demainholm in Castleton Parish. He is recorded at Demainholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (separately from Adam in Nether Burnmouth). He married Betty Wilson, who died at Fairloans in 1777, aged 32. They are buried in Etteleton Cemetery. Adam (1761–1818) eldest son of Hobkirk Schoolmaster William. He was brother of postmaster Robert and dux of Hawick Grammar School in 1777, before going to Edinburgh University. In 1777 he was the last person to carry a colour, other than the official town Standard, at the Common Riding (probably the 1744 flag preserved in the Museum). He was engaged as an instructor to the Robson-Scotts of Belford and for 3 years to the family of the cousin of Dr. Charters (of Wilton), Adm. Greig (whose son would marry Mary Somerville); he was apparently specifically recommended as tutor by Dr. Charters. He accompanied Greig to Russia, where he achieved distinction in the Imperial Government of Alexander I, becoming Senior mining Director of the Olonets Ironworks at Petrozavodsk and then Chief of their St. Petersburg works, where cannons and ammunition were made, as well as ironwork for civic buildings. He had travelled to Britain to bring to Russia Charles Gascoigne, who was manager of the Carron ironworks, and took over from Gascoigne after his death in 1806. In Russia he adopted the middle name ‘Vasilevich’ (for ‘son of William’). It is said that he had a ‘sincere concern for the welfare of the peasants assigned to the Olonets works’, and in 1882 his daughter-in-law willed 3000 roubles in his memory to benefit the poor associated with the factory. He married Isabella, daughter of Dr. Lindsay of Jedburgh, who had attracted the attention of Burns when he visited there, and through her became for a while proprietor of Mary Queen of Scots House. The marriage took place a mere 24 days after she last saw Burns, apparently having suffered criticism locally for her ‘easy manners’ with the celebrated poet. Their elder son Robert Lindsay (known as Roman Adamovich) became Director-General of the Imperial Mint in St. Petersburg, while their younger son John (known as Ivan Adamovich) was in the Russian service. There were also 2 other children, probably daughters (note that there was an Ann born to Adam and Alexandra in St. Petersburg in 1805 and a John born to the same parents in 1807). He probably married a second time, and it is said that the Emperor bestowed a pension on his widow and 2 daughters. He forbade one of his daughters from marrying Count Nesselrode because of religious scruples. He died after catching a cold when returning from St. Petersburg to Petrozavodsk. He is commemorated in Hobkirk kirkyard along with his parents. He was buried in St. Petersburg, where his gravesite is lost, but the house he lived in survives. Alan (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alanum filium Wilhelmi Armstrang’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands appeared to be at ‘Milleburn’ in Westmorland. Albine (17th C.) tenant in Dykecroft in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. It is unclear if his forename was a pet form of some other name. Alexander (c.1262–bef. 1320) 1st Laird of Mangerton. He has sometimes been identified with his contemporary, Alexander, Prince of Scotland, son of King Alexander III, but this seems unlikely. His children included Richard, William and Alexander (who succeeded). Alexander of Mangerton (d.1320) son of Alexander, he was the 2nd Laird. His sons included Alexander (who succeeded), John (who died at Otterburn), Gilbert (Canon of Moray) and Adam. He was murdered at Hermitage Castle by Lord Soulsi, as commemorated by the Milnholm Cross. He was buried at Ettleton Kirkyard. Alexander of Mangerton (d.1398) son of Alexander, he was the 3rd Laird (however, the long passage of time since the previous Laird seems unlikely, so there may well have been another generation here). He is recorded in the margin as the owner of Mangerton on the c.1376 rental roll for Liddesdale, his name being listed as ‘Alyxandir Armystrand’. He was also noted as Laird of Mangerton in 1378. He was accused of stealing cows in 1394/5. In 1398 he was a bondsman for the Earl of Douglas. His sons included Archibald (who succeeded), David, Geoffrey and Rowland. Alexander of Mangerton (d.c.1510) son of Thomas, he was the 6th Laird. He was accused of stealing cows at Jedburgh in 1494/5. Either he or another Alexander was recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was listed right after Thomas and before Robert, Archibald, Andrew and William. He is probably the Alexander who was one of the 9 Liddesdale men who accompanied Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Edinburgh to swear to keep the peace in 1510. It is said that his 7 sons are represented in the branches of the oak tree on the family shield of the time. They are: Thomas, who succeeded; Johnnie of Gilnockie, who was killed at Caerlenrig; George of Barnglies; Robert of Whithaugh; Alexander Andro; Christopher; and William. His gravestone is in Ettleton Kirkyard. Alexander (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from another Alexander and right after Patrick, to whom he may have been closely related. Alexander ‘Ekie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1532 at ‘Glengillis’, which is probably the same place as ‘Chingills’ or ‘Gingills’ in Ewesdale. He may be an ancestor of Alexander of Gingills recorded around 50 years later. Alexander ‘Evil-willit Sandy’ or ‘I'll Will's Sandy’ (16th C.) listed as one of the men responsible for the theft of 100 cattle from the lands of Craik in 1535. His name is recorded as ‘Evil-willit Sandé’. He was also involved with the burning of Howpaseley later that same year, as well as the theft of 60 cows from there, assisted by Simon, Thomas alias Greenshiels, and Robert Henderson, called ‘Cheese-wame’. He was referred to as ‘a sworn Englishman’ in the conviction of Simon for assisting him (although he seems more likely to have been from Liddesdale or the Debateable Land). He is probably the same man known as ‘I'll Will Sandy’ who was said to be ancestor of Kinmont Willie (and probably his father). The 1583 letter from the English wardens recording the men of Liddesdale gives a list of ‘The Armestronges that came of the offspringe of ill Wills Sandy’, including ‘Ebye’ of ‘Waddusles’; Willie, who lived in England; David; Sandy; ‘Sandy’s Christie; Kinmont Willie; Sandy’s Ringan; ‘Sandy’s Archie; Sandy’s ‘Forge’; Jock ‘Castills’; Jock ‘Walls’; Dave of Canonbie; Willie; Jamie; John ‘Skinabake’; Tom and George of ‘Rowenborne’; and several of their sons. It is hard to tell which of these were sons, and which were nephews, etc. The fact that this is ‘ill Wills Sandy’ suggests that he was son of ‘I'll Will’, i.e. William, who was of Chingills. It is claimed that he had 7 sons: Ninian of Ralton (although this is probably ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ and unconnected with Ralton); Kimmont Willie; Christopher of the Gingles; Tom of the Gingles; Hector of the Gingles; Andrew of the Gingles in Kirkton; and Archie of the Gingles (who is more likely to be ‘Sandy’s Archie’ and not connected with Gingles). He also had a daughter who married ‘Gorth’ (probably George) Graham from the English side. It is possible he was the Sandy who accompanied Thomas Dacre, as well as Scotsmen Andrew Bell, ‘Will the flagon’ and others in burning Dumfries in 1542 (perhaps in reprisal for an earlier raid). Archibald and Ninian, brothers if Kinmont Willie, are recorded in 1569, and these 3 seems likely to have been among his sons. Kinmont Willie’s brothers Archie and ‘Fergy’ are recorded in 1574, and hence he had at least one more son. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Jenkin and Archibald. They were accused of coming with 20 other Scotsmen to raid Butterburn in England, killing Christopher Marshal and 4 servants of Nicholas Ridley. Perhaps the same Alexander was accused along with Irvings and Bells of killing 2 English Grahams on another raid. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (16th C.) listed in an English record of 1541, where he was ‘at Monkby...in Liddersdell’ and said to have reset Thomas Waugh, George Waugh, George Purdom and Jamie Purdom, English rebels. He is probably the Alexander of ‘Monkbehirist’ mentioned in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569 and probably lived at Mumbiehirst near Canonbie. It is possible he is the proprietor of Mumbiehirst who was said (by William Scott in ‘Beauties of the Border’) to have married a daughter of Walter Scott of Branxholme; having beaten his new bride, she ran back to her parents, wherupon (in an act that seems inexplicable by modern standards) the Laird of Branxholme whipped his own daughter himself, saying ‘Since Mumbyhirist has had the impudence to whip my daughter, I will whip his wife’. Alexander (16th C.) nephew of ‘Braid’ Christopher. He is recorded in 1541, when accused of having been on a raid with his brothers and cousins Anton, Thomas and John, when Englishman Henry Storie was killed. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with ‘Antony’, when they were said to be English fugitives reset by George ‘Go Wi Him’. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Carglass, ‘Siselscheillis’ and Over Foulwood in 1541. He may have been son of ‘Evil-willit Sandy’. Alexander (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Alexander of Gingills (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘Aly Armstrang, sone to Andro Armstrang of the Glyn-gillis’ among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell and stop their feud with the Elliots of Ewesdale. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with Thomas of Gingills, recorded as ‘Eckkie Armestrange’. He was recorded as ‘Gyngill’, i.e. probably ‘Chingills’ in the 1585 remission received by a long list of men in Dumfriesshire in 1585 (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). His son Andrew is also listed, as well as many other Armstrongs to whom they were probably related. He may be the same ‘Ecki gingles’ recorded on the west side of the Ewes valley in Sandison’s c.1590 map, opposite ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’, and also the ‘Ekke of the Gyngils’ recorded among Border chiefs of Ewesdale in Montipennie’s c.1594 compilation. Alexander ‘the Gatwarde’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Harelaw. He was probably brother or other close relative of Hector of Harelaw. He married a daughter of Englishman Gavin’s Willie Foster. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Elle Armestrange’, brother of Hector of Chingills and Thomas. He married a daughter of John Foster of ‘Krackrop’. Alexander (16th C.) listed in the comprehensive remission of 1585 as ‘Alexander Armstrang of the Gingills’, separate from ‘Ecki in Gyngill’. This was presumably the Chingills. Thomas in Craig may have been his son, and the men listed as ‘Arche, Willie and Hewe Armstrangis, brother, of the Gyngliss’ may be his brothers. He is probably the ‘Alie’ listed along with ‘Eckie’ and their brother ‘younge Thom’, who were all accused in 1587/8 with their father ‘old Thom Armstrang of the Gyngles’ of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) son of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire; there he is ‘Sandie Armestrang, Kynamont’. He is probably the ‘Kinmontes Sandye’ named by an English informer as part of the party who rescued ‘Kinmont Willie’, along with his brothers Jock, Francie and Geordie. Probably the same Alexander ‘callit of Kynmont’ is among several men (including his brother Francis) fined in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thistlelange. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) son of Abrahame of Woodhouselee. He was involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, being described in an anonymous letter as ‘Ebes Sandey’ or ‘Sandy Armestrange son to Hebbye’. It was said that he and Buccleuch ‘was the first that ever brake the hole and come in about Kinmont’. Probably the same man is ‘Sandie Armeanstrangle called Hebbies Sandie’ in 1592 when complained about by Routledge of ‘Comecrocke’ for stealing his livestock: his servant Willie Waugh was also named, along with Fergus’ Willie of ‘Kirkleheade’. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 when there was a complaint against him, along with Robert Elliot of Thorlieshope, Henry Nixon of Kilford and Hob Armstrong, for a raid on ‘Ellinghamamigige’ in England. He was referred to as being ‘called Henxie amiser’, but Scott of Buccleuch argued ‘that there is not such a person’. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) father of Ninian, who was father of Thomas, hanged in 1601 for the murder of Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches. He may have been the son of Kimmont Willie recorded in 1585. One account of the murder of Carmichael refers to him as a brother of Kimmont Willie and also known as ‘Sandies Ringand’ (but this was surely Alexander’s son). Alexander ‘Rob’s Sandy’ (d.1605) recorded in an English letter of 1601 listing Armstrongs and others of the West Marches who were fugitives for the slaughter of the Warden Sir John Carmichael. He was mentioned again in 1605 as ‘Robert Sandie’, captured by William Taylor and other Englishmen. He is probably the Alexander who was executed in Dumfries for the killing of Sir John Carmichael. Alexander ‘Geordie’s Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned by Lord Scrope in 1601 as a Scotsman who reset some of the men who killed Sir John Carmichael. He was a fugitive at that time. He was also accused of resetting ‘Sandies Rynyon and his baynrs’, who burned a mill of the Johnstone’s and raided ‘Bengall’. Alexander ‘Sandy of Rowanburn’ (d.c.1606) listed in an English letter of 1601 as ‘lang Sandy Armeanstrang in Rowanburne’ among fugitives of the West Marches who were wanted for the killing of the English Warden, Sir John Carmichael. He was tried in 1606 for his involvement in the murder of Carmichael. He was probably related to the ‘Will of Rowanburn’ who was executed in 1605. He was found guilty of taking part in this murder, as well as theft and reset, and sentenced to hanging at the Market Cross in Edinburgh. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives in 1606. He was recorded as ‘Sandie Armeanstrange, brother of Catgill’, so perhaps he was brother of George. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘son of Catgill’ among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles in 1605. Presumably he was different from the Sandy, who was brother of Catgill. Alexander of Roan (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. He was listed as ‘brother of the young Laird of Quithauch’, and so may have been brother of Lancelot of Whithaugh and hence son of Simon. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as ‘in Wallis’ when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. It is unclear where this ‘Wells’ or ‘Walls’ was, but the other Armstrongs listed were from Liddesdale and Canonbie areas. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of Francis and grandson of Kimmont Willie. He was recorded in 1622 as ‘sone to Francis Armstrong, callit of Kimmonth’ when he appeared as cautioner for Grahams in Canonbie. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as a fugitive in 1622, when he was ‘callit Winterhoipheid’. Andrew and Adie Beattie, his brother-in-laws, were accused of resetting him. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Harden in Liddesdale. In 1623 he and James Glendinning in Byreholme entered John Armstrong (called ‘of Powsholme’) to the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He and Lancie of Whithaugh also entered John ‘callit pousholme’. Perhaps the same Sandy was listed in 1632 along with ‘Will in the Mylne’ as possessor of the lands of Nether Harden in Liddesdale. Alexander (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the farm of ‘Willock’ (probably Woolhope) in Liddesdale in 1632. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of Ettletonside and Potterlamport. Alexander (17th C.) tenant in Dawstonburn in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert was also listed there and so presumably a close relative. He could be the Alexander, resident of Dawstontown who was rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session in 1699, along with his nephew William, for travelling with laden horses on the Sabbath. Alexander ‘Sookin Sandy’ (18th/19th C.) brother of ‘Muckle Jock’, ‘the Cout o Keilder’. He is said to have been suckled by his mother until the age of 20, hence the nickname. He was also known for being very strong. One story about him is that when his companions got him angry he picked them up one by one, and threw them out, saying ‘I’ll let you see what mother’s milk can do’. Alexander (b.1784/5) from England, he was a farm labourer. In 1841 he was living at Outerside in Roberton Parish, with his wife Margaret (from Castleton) and children Magdalen and Adam. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Knowesouth in Bedrule Parish and in 1861 he was a shepherd at Mossburnford in Oxnam Parish. Alexander (b.c.1785) farm labourer living at Craikhope in 1841. His children included: Hannah, who married Thomas Glendinning in 1840; Georgina; and Helen. Alexander ‘Elec’, ‘the Dabber’ (1929– ) painter decorator in Hawick. Andrew of Chingills (15th/16th C.) younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. He was referred to as ‘Andro of the Gingles’ and similar, recorded in 1494 when he was accused of stealing cows along with his father. Andrew (15th C.) son of Andrew. He was recorded among men of Liddesdale (including many Armstrongs) who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Andrew (16th C.) son and heir of Simon of Whithaugh. In 1536 he had a letter of gift for the estate of the deceased Simon of Whithaugh, along with David, called ‘Lady’ and David’s brother Martin. He could be the ‘Andro Armstrang’, listed in 1541 along with Fosters and others, accused of being on a raid to ‘Dermaynstedes’ in which an Englishman was killed. Andrew ‘Reid Andro’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid with ‘Georgy ga with hym’, ‘Auld’ John Gray and about 20 others. They were said to have raided a farm in Gilsland and killed Wat Atkinson. He was surely related to the later ‘Reid Andro’ (if not the same man). Andrew ‘Andro’ (16th C.) son of ‘Thom of Gingillis’, perhaps the Thomas of Chingills recorded in the 1550s. In 1569 he was pledge for himself, his brother Thomas, his son Hector and nephew Willie, along with their children, tenants and servants, and for Ninian of the Bush, as well as the Littles of Meikledale. He is probably the ‘Andro of the Gyngillis’ whose tenants were excepted from the pledge given for the Littles in Eskdale in 1569. Also in 1569 Tom Scott ‘callit the Stowir’ was a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale, except those ‘under Andro Armstrangis plege of Gyngillis’; this suggests he was from Gingills in Ewesdale (and not Chingills in Liddesdale). He is probably the Andrew ‘of the Gyngillis’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1573. In 1574 he was ‘Andro Armstrang of the Gingillis’ when obliged to remain in ward with Hugh, Lord Somerville. In 1580 he was warded by Alexander Ogilvie of Boyne when ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment in Edinburgh for rieving, along with other Armstrongs, Elliotis and Nixons. Tom, son of Andrew ‘of Gyngillis’ is recorded in a remission of 1585 for many men in Dumfriesshire. He was probably the ‘Andro’ whose son ‘Aly’ was mentioned in 1579 among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. Probably the same ‘Andrew of the Gyngils’ is listed along with ‘Ekke of the Gyngils’ and ‘Thome of Glendoning’ among Ewesdale chiefs on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. Andrew ‘Will’s Andro’ (16th C.) listed among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He was listed as ‘Andro Armistrang callit Willis Andro’. Presumably his father was Will, but which one is unclear. Andrew ‘Reid Andro’ (16th C.) recorded in 1576 when there was a pledge for him before the Privy Council, stated to have been broken by 1578/9. He was ‘Andro Armistrang, callit Reid Andro in Eilrig’, with cautioners John Johnstone of that Ilk and Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His farm was likely to be Eilrig in the upper Borthwick valley (although there are other possibilities). In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is probably the ‘Andro Armstrang of the Gingillis’ whose son Hekie was recorded in 1584/5. He and a near relative Robert are probably the ‘Andrew and ’red nebb’ Hob Armstrong’ listed among Armstrongs and Elliotis complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590. It seems likely he is the ‘Andro Armistrang of the Gyngills’ whose son Hekie was held in Blackness Castle in 1569, as pledge for him, his brother Tom and Tom’s son Willie; however, there may be confusion here with Andrew of Chingills. Andrew ‘Lang Andro’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 as tenant in ‘the Hairlaw’, which was probably Harelaw near Canonbie. It was re-stated at the Privy Council that he was to remain in ward with Patrik Kynynmouth of Craighall, with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk, as caution. However, he ‘hes brokin and eschapat furth of his said ward’, and hence his cautioner was liable for the amount of £2000. In 1578/9 his son Edward was to be entered by Lord Maxwell. Presumably the same man was recorded in 1583 as ‘Andrew Armstrong of the Harlawe’. He was probably brother or other close relative of Hector of Harelaw. Andrew ‘the Lady’s Andro’ (16th/17th C.) probably son of Lancelot of Whithaugh. He is listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, with his brothers Archie and Francis also named. He could also be the Andro, son of Lancie of Whithaugh, who was involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. In 1587/8 he was ‘Andro Armeastronge of Whithaugh’ when accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. He is recorded as son of the Laird of Whithaugh when accused along with his brothers Francis and Simon of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England, burning 25 houses and stealing £1000 worth of goods. He could be the Andrew listed along with John of Whithaugh and ‘Hob of Whithawgh son to John Eamont of Hilhouse’ when they were complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England in 1588. In 1590 he and his brother Francis, ‘sons to the laird of Whyhawgh’, were accused of an attack on ‘Todborne Steile’, stealing livestock and gear, and maiming some Englishmen. He is probably also the Andrew ‘son to the Lurde of Whithawghwe’ listed first among Armstrongs (including his brothers Francis and John) and Elliots complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Along with his father, the old Laird of Whithaugh, he surrendered to the Warden and appeared before the King in Jedburgh in 1592. He is probably the same man as Andrew of Whithaugh listed in 1601 in a letter for the English Warden as one of the ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’; his brothers Francis and John are also listed, all ‘sons to the auld laird of Whithawghwe’. His brother Archibald is also recorded in an English letter of 1606. He may be the Andrew who was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed in 1606/7 by the Earl of Dunbar. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as a ‘domestik servand’ of Francis Armstrong, son of the Laird of Whithaugh. They were accused of being among about a dozen people who raided the farm of Eilrig, owned at that time by the Countess of Bothwell. The fact that there was a man called ‘Reid Andro in Eilrig’ at about the same time may not be a coincidence. He may be the Andrew listed along with Francis of Whithaugh among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. Andrew of Kirkton (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside. It is unclear where this Kirkton was, but perhaps the same as ‘Kirktonhill’. He may be the ‘Reade Androwe Armestrange of Kirkhill’ who signed the 1584 bon of assurance with the English Wardens, along with ‘Sim’s Tom’. In 1607 he was cautions for James of Canonbie. He may be the same as the Andrew of Kirkton recorded in 1616. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in the comprehensive remission of 1585 as being brother of Christie in ‘Carron’, which was probably near Langholm. His brothers Quentin and Geordie are also listed, as well as his son Jock. Later in the list comes ‘Jame Armeis-trang in Carono’, who is probably another close relative. Andrew ‘Ingram’s Andro’ (16th C.) cited in 1591 among Armstrongs accused of the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’; he is recorded as ‘Andrew Armeastrong alias Ingram’s Andro’. He may have been relayed to ‘Anton’s Edward’, ‘Andro’s Will’ and others who were also listed. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as ‘Andro Armstrong the bundgell’, and he is listed along with ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, as well as Hendersons and Elliots of Falnash and Burnhead. Probably the same man is ‘the Bungle’ recorded in 1590, with his given as ‘the Bungell’ and ‘Bungell’, with the first name left blank in the document; this suggests perhaps that his nickname was so ingrained that it was not clear what his first name was! Other Armstrongs listed with him in 1590 include Davie ‘Bung-tail’ and John of Hollows, who may have been close relatives. It is unclear what his nickname meant, although John Jamieson notes the word ‘bunjell’ meaning a bundle. Andrew (d.1606) recorded as ‘bastard son to Will of Kynmont’ when he was listed among men executed by the Borders Commission in October 1606. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He was recorded being ‘in Hollhous’, which was probably Hollows. Andrew (16th C.) acquit of the murder of James Somervile in ‘Eirdhoussis’ along with other Armstrongs in 1609. He is recorded as ‘Andro Airmeastrang of the Langholme’. Others mentioned are ‘Ebbie’ of ‘Kirktonhill’, James of Canonbie, Thomas, called ‘the Mercheon’ and John Murray, miller in ‘the Cruikes’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘Andro Armeastrang, called the Lord’ in 1611 when Archie Elliot of Clintwood acted as cautions for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Andro of the Kirktoun’ in 1605 when his brother Jamie was declared a fugitive in 1605. In 1606 his brother Thomas was also declared a fugitive. He was ‘Andro Armestrang of Kirktooun’ in 1611 when he was cautioner for his brothers ‘Thom, Jok, and Lancie’, that they would leave Scotland. He was also recorded in 1616 as ‘of the Kirktooun’ when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. This was probably the Kirkton near Sorbie. He could be the same man as Andrew of Kirkton, recorded in 1583. William, younger of Kirkton, recorded in 1641, could be his son. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Quhythauchie’ when he and Archie Colthart ‘in Quheilrig’ were accused of stealing lambs from ‘Partburne’ at the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. He was found guilty and ordered to be branded on the cheek. He was presumably related to the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, perhaps son of the earlier Andrew.

Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded at Lairhope in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘Andrew, Eq. Foot Guards’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Andrew who became Assistant Surgeon in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards in 1811, served at Waterloo, was Battalion Surgeon from 1824 and died in 1828. Ann (18th/19th C.) listed as a baker and flour dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She could be the ‘A. Armstrong, baker, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821.

Anthony (16th C.) listed as ‘Anton’ or ‘Antony’, brother of Ingram ‘of the Graynuys’ in 1541. They were among English rebels who were reset on the Scottish side, in their case by Hector Armstrong in Tweeden; Christie was also mentioned, and may have been another brother or close relative. The lands mentioned were probably ‘the Greens’, or perhaps ‘Greenua’. In 1541 he was described as ‘onne Anton Armstrong, Englishman, rebell and fled furthe of Gillseland, when my Lorde of Cumbrelonde was warden, and contyned sence in Liddersdell, a grete offender agaynst Inglishmen’. He may also be the ‘Antony Armstrong’, listed along with Sandy when they were said to have been reset by George ‘Go wi Him’. He may be the ‘Anton Armstrang’, brother-son to ‘Braid’ Christopher recorded in 1541, when accused of having been on a raid with his brothers and cousins Thomas, John and Alexander. He is probably also the ‘Anton Armoronghe’ whose brother Christie and servant Adie Wigholm were listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. It is possible he was the ‘Anton’ whose grandson was ‘Antons Edward Tom’ when captured in 1606; in 1606/7 he wrote to Lord Howard saying that he would agree to banishment. Archibald of Mangerton (15th C.) son of Alexander, he was the 5th Laird. However, the long span of time suggests there must have been other Lairds in the early 1400s. He is probably the Archibald who witnessed a notorial instrument for Scott of Buccleuch in 1456 (where he is listed right after David of Sorbie, who was probably a close relative). He could be the Archibald, who, along with David and also John Routlege, gave pladges in 1471 that Walter Routlege would appear at court in Selkirk. He was already ‘at the horn’ in 1493 when Walter Robson ‘in Harden’ was accused of ‘intercommuning’ with him in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. ‘Joiffe Glenquin’ was involved in the same crime, and so presumably an associate. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Another son was David of Ewesdale. Archibald (15th/16th C.) possibly the same as the man involved with the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. In 1493 Walter Robson of Harden came into the King’s will for communing with him, since he was already ‘at the horn’. Perhaps the same Archibald was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. In 1502 probably the same Archibald was mentioned in a remission for David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches, as being involved in a raid on the tenants of Minto; this also involved Ninian Armstrong (probably a relative), David Turnbull of Bonchester ‘and other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. He is probably also the Archibald mentioned in 1502 as one of ‘the Kingis Rebels’ along with Ninian and also William Scott, when Adam Scott in ‘Hawchesteris’ (probably Highchesters) had a remission for associating with them. And in 1502 Adam Turnbull ‘in Hornishole’ had remission for associating with him and Ninian. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Jenkin and Alexander. They were accused of coming with 20 other Scotsmen to raid Butterburn in England, killing Christopher Marshal and 4 servants of Nicholas Ridley. He is presumably not the same man as Archibald of Mangerton. Perhaps the same Archibald is also listed in 1541 along with Fosters accused of raiding ‘Thornymore’ in Gilsland and murdering a woman. And probably the same Archibald was listed along with Ringan, Simon and Jenkin in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid; they may all have been brothers (although the wording is ambiguous). Archibald (d.c.1570) 8th Laird of Mangerton, son of Thomas. He is ‘Archie Armstrong, the yonge Larde of Mangerston’ listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of Will-iarn Carnaby at Halton; this was while his father was probably still alive. In 1547 he captured Lord Johnstone for the English. He is probably the Archibald who, along with George, witnessed a bond in 1548 by Ninian and Archibald Nixon to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. In 1548/9 he was ‘younger of Mangertoun’ when he had a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and his cousin George Ker to enter ‘John Cragall’ as a prisoner. Also in 1548/9 he and his father Thomas had another bond to enter the same 2 Fosters as prisoners, as well as to re-enter their servants ‘Georde Armstrang and Gorde his son’ as well as ‘Thom Henderson’. He succeeded his father around 1549. In 1569 he entered as pledge for himself, his brothers, tenants and servants, as well as for ‘Reid Sym’, Simon ‘the Feid’, John of Bankhead and other Armstrongs (with the Laird’s Jock and Christie of the Side excepted), the Laird of Drumlanrig being surety; this suggest that he died after 1569, and not around 1558, as suggested in some genealogies. Also in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lancie of Whithaugh, to ‘Rowie Forester’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’. Additionally in 1569 he and Martin Elliot of Braidlie promised to enter to ward John Elliot of Thorlieshope. His sons included: Simon, who succeeded; Ninian, proba-ably the ‘Laird’s Ringan’, recorded in the 1580s, who lived at Thorniwhats; and ‘Rowe’, probably the ‘Laird’s Rowie’, who lived at Tarras-side. He may also have been father of the ‘Laird’s John’ (but not the contemporary ‘Laird’s Jock’, who appears to be a different man), whose son Archibald was held in ward in 1587 as a pledge for all the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh;

if so then he also had a daughter who married Lancelot of Whithaugh (since she was sister to the ‘Laird’s John’). Simon of Mangerton had a brother Francis, who was therefore presumably another son. Archibald ‘Ringan’s Archie’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whitlaw-side in 1583. He was probably brother of Simon, and son of Ringan. Archibald ‘Archie’ of Arkleton (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with George, to whom he was surely related. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Westburnflat (16th C.) recorded by Monipennie in his c.1594 list of Border chiefs.
He is listed under the heading ‘Merietown Quarter’, along with ‘Wanton Sim’ of Whitlawside and ‘Will of Powderlanpat’. Archibald ‘Sandy’s Archie’ (16th C.) son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, so brother of Kinmont Willie, and several others.
He is probably the Archibald listed in 1569 along with Ninian, as brothers of ‘Will of Kynmonth’.
In 1574 he and ‘Fergy’, both brothers of Kinmont Willie, were accused of raiding farms belonging to Thomas Johnstone of Craigburn, stealing horses and goods, and severely injuring one man; not appearing, they were denounced as rebels. He was listed in 1582 among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582, where he was stated to be brother of Sandy’s Ninian. He is listed in 1583 among the descendants of Sandy. He may be the ‘Alexanders Arche, servant to Syme of Whithaughe’ listed among Armstrongs and others accused of a raid on the tenants of the Laird of Bellister in 1587.
Perhaps the same man was ‘Alexanders Arche’ in 1590 accused by William ‘Loren’ of a raid, along with other Armstrongs and Elliot’s. He is probably the ‘Alexanders Arche’ accused in 1590, along with other Armstrongs, of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington. He could be the same man as ‘the Merchant’. He may also be the same as ‘Alexander’s Archie’ who was listed (along with his unnamed brother) in an English letter of 1601 among the Armstrongs who were outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch; he was there said to be ‘of the house of Whithaughe’.
Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘the Merchant’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 as ‘Archie Armstrang, Marche-and’ in a long list of men under Lord Maxwell who were given remission for their past crimes.
He is listed just before ‘Kinmont Willie’, perhaps suggesting a close connection. The same Archie ‘the Merchand’ is listed as being in ‘the Hoilhous’ (i.e. Hollows) when tried in 1605 along with other Armstrongs and followers for burning the House of Langholm and theft in 1581; John is also listed in the same place, and so was possibly a near relative. The charges against him were not pursued. Presumably the same Archibald was listed as being ‘callit the merchant in Thoniquhatis’ in 1607, among a list of Armstrongs and others accused of trying to prevent the appointees of the King from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. Thomas ‘callit the Merchand’ is recorded in 1609, and surely a relative. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. He is listed as being 'in Tarkins', which is possibly 'Tarcoon' near Canonbie. Will 'in Teiknie' is also listed, possibly at the same location. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell and end their feud with the Elliots of Ewesdale. He was recorded with his brother as 'Archie Armstronge and George Armstrong of Arkiltoun, brother'. He is also listed in the long remission of 1585 as 'Lord Archie Armstrang in Arkiltoun', along with his son John. The 'Lord' must have been a nickname of some sort. 'Geordie' (probably his brother) was also listed as being in Arkilton, along with his sons. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded as 'Andrews son' among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. His horse was killed in the raid and so he took a 'lyrehorse'. Archibald 'Airchie' of Whithaughe (16th C.) recorded as having a tower in Ewesdale on Sandison's c.1590 (but based on earlier information) map of the Debatable Land. He is listed as 'Archie of whithaughe' roughly where Fiddleton is located, perhaps at the modern farm of Burnfoot. Although his surname is not given, it seems likely he was an Armstrong. He is probably the Archie, 2nd son of the Laird of Whithaughe, who was put in ward with Sir David Wemyss, to replace Ninian of Tweeden, sort. 'Geordie' (probably his brother) was also listed as being in Arkilton, along with his sons. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded as 'Andrews son' among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. His horse was killed in the raid and so he took a 'lyrehorse'. Archibald 'Airche' (16th C.) recorded as having a tower in Ewesdale on Sandison's c.1590 (but based on earlier information) map of the Debatable Land. He is listed as 'Archie of Whithaugh' roughly where Fiddleton is located, perhaps at the modern farm of Burnfoot. Although his surname is not given, it seems likely he was an Armstrong. He is probably the Archie, 2nd son of the Laird of Whithaugh, who was put in ward with Sir David Wemyss, to replace Ninian of Tweeden, as pledge for 'the gang of Whithauch'; the order was confirmed by the Regent in 1577 and King James in 1579. He is presumably also the Archie, son of Lanie of Whithaugh, who was released from ward in Creich in 1579, to be replaced by his brother Francie. He could also be the Archie, son of Lanie of Whithaugh, who was involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the 'Arche Armstronge his brother' listed in 1583 among the Laird of Whithaugh (and hence son of Lanie). Probably the same man was 'Arche', son to the 'owld laird of Whithaugh' in 1590 when listed among other Armstrongs accused of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington. Perhaps the same man was the Archibald brother of Andrew called 'Whithaugh' who was the subject of complaints by the English Commissioners in 1606 that he had stolen cattle. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) son of the 'Laird's John' and grandson of the Laird of Mangerton, probably Archibald. In 1587 Lancelot of Whithaugh requested that he be held in ward as a pledge for all the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh. He was described by Lancelot as 'neyr cowsein, and my wyfis brother sone'. The request was accepted in a letter from James VI, and he was thus held in Wemyss Castle. A few months later he was exchanged with John, son to Lancelot of Whithaugh. He could be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald of Flaskholme (16th/17th C.) listed among those Armstrongs and followers tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House, taking Herbert Maxwell prisoner and stealing cattle in 1581. He was Laird of the lands at Flask, in the Ewes valley. He was found guilty along with Ingram 'in Inzieholme', with Archibald Beattie, Burgess of Dumfries acting as surety for him. In 1607 he was 'of Flascolme and Barneleigh' when listed among Armstrongs and other charged with trying to prevent James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. Archibald 'Whitehead' (16th/17th C.) recorded in an English letter of 1601, listing 'outlaws under the Laird of Bucleuch's charge'. He is listed as 'Archie Armstrong called whitehead', along with his brothers 'John and Sym' and several additional Armstrongs who are referred to as 'of the house of Whithaugh'. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Archies and 'Whitehead' may even be an error for 'Whithaugh'. Archibald 'Sim's Airchie' (16th/17th C.) part of a bond of caution along with other Elliots in 1581, entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. Probably the same Sim's Archie is recorded in 1596 among men complained about by the English Warden for raids into England. This was along with several other Armstrongs. He is also listed in 1601 in a letter of the English Warden among several Armstrongs and others of Liddesdale. It is unclear which Simon might have been his father. Archibald (d.c.1601) Scotsman executed in England, being described as 'Ebbies Arche' in 1601. It is unclear which 'Ebbie' may have been his father. He was said by Lord Scrope to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie and to have committed many murders of Englishmen. Archibald 'Nan's Airchie' (16th/17th C.) tried in 1605 along with several other Armstrongs and supporters for burning Langholm House and other crimes. 'Nanse Cristie' is also listed, so probably his brother. His name appears as 'Nan's Archie' and 'Anneis Archie', so his mother may have been Agnes. The charges against him were not pursued. Archibald 'Sim's Airchie' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was 'called Sym's Archie of Cowfield', and hence may have been related to the Armstrongs of Calfied. His son Christie was also listed as a fugitive. It is unclear if he was the same as the Sim's Airchie recorded in 1581, 1596 and 1601. Archibald 'Ker Hand' (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. Archibald 'Fair Airchie' (16th/17th C.) accused in 1606 of the murder of Andrew Smith and cutting the nose off Thomas Tweedie. The other men charged were Ninian Armstrong of Tweeden and Andrew Henderson, servant of the Laird of Mangerton. Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk was surety for him. Archibald (16th/17th C.) son of 'Cuddie' of Bankhouse. He was listed along with his father among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. Archibald of Winterhopehead (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives. His son Willie was also listed. Archibald of the Side (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 as 'Archie of the Syd' when his son Jamie was listed among men declared as fugitives. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Armstrongs of the Side. Archibald (16th/17th C.) listed in 1607 among many Armstrongs and others accused of trying to prevent the appointees of the King from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. He was recorded as 'Archibald Armestrange, brother to the unquhile Laird of Mangerton in Brunschilboge and Mengertoun'. He was thus brother of a former Laird of Mangerton, although it is possible he is the same as Archibald, 10th Laird of Mangerton. Archibald (d.1606/7) 10th and last Laird of Mangerton. He probably succeeded his father Simon in 1583. He is probably the Laird of Mangerton who, along with the Laird of Whithaugh and their accomplices, was accused by the inhabitants of 'Temmon' in England of murdering 3 men, carrying off 10 others as prisoners and stealing 100 cattle and goods. He complained in turn about English attacks on his lands, including taking himself prisoner in the 1580s. He is probably the Laird listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590 and on Monipennie's list of clan chiefs of about 1594. He is probably the Laird of Mangerton stated by an English informant to have been involved with the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1597 he was among Liddesdale chiefs demanded from the English Commissioners as hostages; however, he was never produced, despite the efforts of the Warden (Scott of Bucleuch) to capture him. In 1603 he rode with a group of about 200 Armstrongs and others on a raid into England. This was one of the last such cross-Border raids, and led to James VI coming down harshly on the Armstrongs. In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar. He was probably hanged in Edinburgh. His sons included Archibald 'the Young Laird' and William. 'Rosie', recorded in 1623 when someone was accused of stealing sheep from her tenants of Mangerton, may have been his widow. Archibald 'the Young Laird' (16th/17th C.) son of the last Laird of Mangerton. He was involved in the raid of 1603. He probably fled to England or Ireland after 1610. Archibald 'Rowie's Archie' (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Justiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was 'called Rollies Archie, in Broomholme' when accused of stealing horses. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded at the Justice Court of 1623 in Jedburgh. He was 'called Rakkes' and caution for him, along with Francis 'of Tweidane' was given by Robert 'Rakkes in Syde', his uncle. He was also listed as being 'called Raccas' when he and Francis 'Tueden' were acquitted of stealing livestock, while Abie 'of ye Syd' and Simon Elliot 'Guyd' were found guilty. He was presumably also related to John 'Rakass' who was recorded in 1585, as well as William 'Rakkes' also recorded in 1623. Archibald 'Archie' (17th C.) listed as 'Archie Armstrong, called Hollas, who duelltt in the Mearburnheid ane hird to Hobby Rackes' in 1633. He was apprehended when found in possession of a cow stolen from Englishman Arthur Foster. He was sent to Jedburgh, but released by that burgh and subsequently recaptured and taken to Carlisle Jail. It seems likely that 'Hollas' was 'Hollows', and hence that the was a descendant of the Armstrongs there. He may have lived near the head of the Muir Burn. Archibald 'Archie' (d.1672) court jester to James VI. It is said that he came from either Scotland or Cumberland. His first name suggests some connection with the Lairds of Mangerton. He may have first distinguished himself as a sheep-stealer, but by 1611 had a pension of 2 shillings a day as court jester. Outspoken in court, he was favoured by the King, but disliked by others. He was dismissed about 1637, but by then had built up a fortune. He became a money-lender in London, but later settled at Arthuret in Cumberland, possibly his birthplace. He was buried on April Fool’s Day. Archibald (17th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His surname appears to be ‘Arkstrong’, although perhaps corrected to ‘Armstrong’. Archibald (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gullenfiatt & Greeholme’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name appears to be written ‘Arck’, but probably ‘Archibald’ is meant. He may have been related to the John and 2 Jameses who are also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) along with James he was tenant in Haughhead in Castleton Parish in 1697. They were rebuked, together with John Crozier, for not observing the Sabbath. He was surely related to the later Archibald, farmer at Haughhead. Archibald (1691/2–1757) tenant in Heughhead. He married Margaret Elliot, who died in 1773, aged 69. They are buried in Ettleton, next to Armstrongs from Burnmouth and Sorbietrees. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1745); Adam (b.1747); and Margaret (b.1749). Archibald (1738/9–1821) tenant farmer in Sorbietrees. He is recorded at Sorbietrees in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dogs in 1797. He married Margaret Elliot, who died at Saughtrees in 1827, aged 89; she was daughter of William Elliot in Park. Their children included: James (1767/8–84); Helen (1770/1–1857); Janet (1775/6–80); and Margaret (1782/3–1817), who married butcher William Geddes. He died at Saughtrees and is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Kershopefoot Mill. His son Archibald (1704/5–24) is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He is probably related to the earlier James, tenant in Kershopefoot. Archibald (b.c.1790) farmer at Leaahuagh in Castleton Parish. He was listed as a ‘Dissenter’ in 1840 among heads of households and also recorded at Leaahuagh in 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Jane, Elizabeth, Archibald (1826/7–44), Isabella, Andrew and William. Archibald (b.c.1807) draper, grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle upon Tyne. He was recorded as post-master, as well as grocer, spirit dealer and draper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 3 Douglas Square with Walter and Nicholas (probably father and uncle) and Helen (perhaps mother or aunt). Arthur (18th C.) bookseller in Hawick. In 1728 he married Jean, daughter of Rev. Robert Cunningham, who was minister of both Wilton and Hawick. Their son Robert was born in Kelso in 1729; this suggests that he had moved to Kelso by then. Arthur (b.1816/7) shepherd at ‘Grain’ in Castleton Parish in 1861. This is presumably the remote farmstead of Saughtree Grain. His wife was Elizabeth and he also lived with his mother Elizabeth Cowan, a young relative William Cowan, a servant and a lodger. He is presumably related to the earlier shepherd at Grain. Bartholomew (16th C.) joint tenant, along with Ninian, of the lands of Whisgills, Purvanen and ‘Vton’ (perhaps Burnmouth) on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. His son could be the ‘Bartilis Jonne’ listed in 1580. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) resident of Riccarton Mill who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. She could have been a daughter of James, who was farmer at Riccarton Mill. It is possible she was the Christian who was listed as ‘Ind.’ at Saughtree on the 1841 census and was an unmarried housekeeper at Teindside in 1851. Christian ‘Kitty’ (b.1797/8) toll-keeper at Riccarton Toll in 1841, 1851 and 1861. She was a widow and had daughters Ann, Margaret, Isabella (who married a Scott) and Christian. Her mother Mary Scott (nee Telfer) was still living at the age of 92. She is probably the Christian who died in Hawick in 1868, aged 72, and is buried at Ettleton Cemetery among the Armstrongs from Riccarton Mill. Christopher (16th C.) named first in a list of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik in 1535. This suggests he was a prominent man among the clan at that time (since Thomas of Mangerton and others are also listed). His residence is not given, but his sons Archibald and Ninian are also listed. He may be the same ‘Cristallo Armstrang’ who was tenant of Pollach and ‘Toddellis’ in 1541, and the Christopher after whom the lands of Christie’s Hill (also recorded in 1541) was named. It is possible that he was the Christopher who was son of Alexander of Mangerton and brother of Thomas of Mangerton and Johnnie of Gilnockie – ‘God be wi’ thee, Kirsty, my brother, Lang live thou Laird o’ Mangertoun: Lang mayst thou dwell on the Border side, Or thou see thy brother ride up and down’ [CPM]. Christopher ‘Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when his ‘broder, sonny’ Anton, Thomas, John and Alexander were accused of having been on a raid with other Scotsmen on 'Wil晏ven' where Englishman Henry Storie was killed. He may also be the 'Cryste Armstronge, brother to the said Anton' who was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Christophers. Christopher (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as 'Cristallo Armstrang' when he was joint tenant with Simon in the lands of 'Dalforno'. He could be the same as another Christopher of the time. Christopher (16th C.) recorded as 'Cristello Armstrong' in 1541 when he was tenant of Storiestead. He may have been related to John, Ninian or Hector, who were tenants of neighbouring farms. Perhaps the same 'Cristello' was also tenant of 'Powis' in 1541. Christopher 'Cristie' of Barngles (16th C.) son of Johnnie of Gilnockie, he was also called 'John’s Christie'. In 1552 he was appointed Bailie of the lands of 'Barnsglesche' in the debateable lands. He may be the same as 'Christy the Bwll' who was subject of a bond of 1562 with Lancelot of Whithaugh, to be presented to the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1562 he was appointed Keeper of Langholm Castle. He had a cautoner before the Privy Council in 1575 and was probably the 'Cristie' who made an action not to be molest ed in 1576. His son 'Johnne Armstrang sone to Johnnes Cristie' is recorded in 1569. Also in 1569 he was surety for his sons, tenants and servant, as well as several other Armstrongs; he is there 'Cristell Armistrang of Barn-gleis'. In 1575/6 he complained that Arthur Graham and others attacked the men farming for him at Barn glees. In 1579 he requested that his pledge William 'of Tarsumhill' be released by the Laird of Fyntrie; his sons Christie and Rob were also mentioned. In 1579 there was a dispute between him and Lord Maxwell over lands; he was probably the 'Cristie in Barngleis', who was listed as 'Creste Armestronge of Borngles'. In 1583 he and Johnstone of that Ilk were ordered 'to deliver the place and fortalice of Langholme to Johnne, Earl of Mortoun'. He was probably the same 'Cristie in Barngleis', who was listed among the men under the superior Lord Maxwell who had a respite for their crimes in 1585. His 'man, Christie Murray' (presumably a servant) is also listed. He may be the 'Christie Armstrong of Barnleyece' complained about in 1560/1 for a raid on Scotby in England. He married Catherine, daughter of 'Gorthe' (probably George) Graham, called 'Thomas Gorthe of Esk' and his children included: John, 'Jock o the Glen'; Christopher, 'Young Christie o Barnglies'; Robert, 'Rowe'; William; Graham; and Gregory. He may be the Christopher 'alias Barnegleeese' killed by John Musgrave in 1606, but if so, must have been very old. He is mentioned in the ballad 'Johnnie Armstrong' – 'And God be wi’ thee, Kirsty, my son, Whar thou sits on thy nurse’s knee; But and thou live this hunder year, Thy father’s better thoul’t ne’er be' [CPM]. Christopher 'Christie' (16th C.) recorded being 'of Brumeholme' in 1569 when he was held in Dupplin Castle. He was pledge for the 'Laird’s Rowie', John, son of 'John’s Christie' and Ninian of Wauchopedale. He was probably related to these men, as well as to other Armstrongs of Broomholm. Christopher (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as 'Cristell Armstrong callit Cristellis Symon'; however, this seems likely to be confusion and he should be 'Simon’s Christie'. Thomas, 'brother to Mangertoun' was held in Castle Semple as pledge for him, as well as Simon and a son of 'Reid Sym'. He could be the same as one of the other Christophers. Christopher 'Cristie' (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when Lord Maxwell gave caution for him and his 'brother’s son' Robert. He is listed as 'Cristie Armstrong of Aunchingavill'. In 1582 James, Earl of Morton, was given a decree of forfeiture for failing to produce him and Robert. Christopher 'Sandy’s Christie' (16th C.) listed among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was apparently released by special warrant, later in 1580. He was also listed among the offspring of 'Ill Will’s Sandy' in an English warden’s letter of 1583. At that time he had a son called Christie, as well as 2 other sons. He is also listed as 'Krystie' on Monipennie’s compilation of Border chiefs, published about 1594; he is alongside Kinmont Willie under the heading 'Sandis Barnes Armstrangs' (i.e. the 'bairns' of Sandy). He had a daughter who married Rowie Foster (from England). He may be the ‘Cristie Armstrong brother’ listed along with ‘Will of Kynmonth’ and ‘Nini-ane Armistrang’ as those to be exchanged for ‘Aby Armistrang’, who was a pledge held in St. Andrews Castle in 1569; these men were surely closely related and may all have been brothers. Christopher of Langholm (16th C.) recorded in a list of Armstrongs of 1583 as ‘Creste Armstrange goodman of the Langholme castell’. He is also recorded as being in Langholm in 1585 when his sons Archie and Robert were among the huge number of men from Lord Maxwell’s territory who were given reprieve for their crimes. He may be the ‘Cristie’ who was warded to Lord Maxwell in 1580, along with ‘Rowe’ son of ‘Sandies Rinyane’. It is possible he was the ‘Cristie of Langholme’ (surname not given) who along with ‘Andro of the Langholme and 3 other men were denounced as rebels in 1587 for killing 2 servants of Sir James Hamilton of Libberton, and stealing the horses and armour from about 20 others. He married a sister of Robert Graham, called ‘Robbie o the Field’. He must have been related to the younger Christopher of Langholme recorded in 1605. The Scottish Commissioners requested that the English ones hand him over in 1606. Christopher of the Side (16th C.) probably a son or nephew of the Laird of Mangerton. He is listed along with the Laird and the ‘Laird’s Jock’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs at the end of the 1500s. In 1569 he is ‘Cristie Armistrang of the Syde’ who, along with the Laird’s Jock, was excepted from the pledge made by Archibald of Mangerton for the whole of the Armstrongs. He is listed as ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ about the 1580s. It has been suggested that ‘Jock o the Side’ was his brother. Christopher ‘Paton’s Christie’ (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond with the English Wardens, on behalf of ‘hym selfe and his thre brother’. His name appear as ‘Pawtons Cristie Armstrange’. It is unclear which ‘Paton’ his father might have been. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Christies. Christopher (16th C.) listed in the comprehensive remission of 1585 as in ‘Carron’. ‘Quhinnting Andro and Georgie Armestrangeis, brether’ are then listed, so probably he had brothers Quentin, Andrew and George. Christopher (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Armestranges Christie’, young Bowholme’ in 1596, among men the English Warden complained about for raiding over the Border. He was presumably connected with Bowholme. Christopher (d.1628) probably 2nd son of ‘John’s Christie’. He was referred to as ‘younger of Barnglie’ in 1598. He was accused of being in a band that raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope; he was listed as ‘callit young Cristie’, and stated to be brother of John’s Christie. In 1590 he was ‘young Christie of Barnoleshe’ when named among men accused of relieving from Willie Graham in Leven. In 1592 he was ‘younge Christie of Barneleishe’ when listed along with Will of Kinmont and others, accused of attacking Roger Bulman of ‘Skailby’ and stealing his livestock. He (or perhaps his father) was also ‘Christie Armestrange of Barneleish’ in 1592 when accused of being part of a raid on ‘th’Holme Coltram’, along with Will of Kinmont and Kimont’s Jock. He is probably the ‘Christine Armestrange of Barnglieis’ who was at Drye Sands in 1593, as recorded on the ‘respite’ of 1594. He was referred to as ‘Kirste of Barnglieis’ and ‘Christie of Barneligish’ along with brother ‘Rob’ of Langholm when said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1605 there was a complaint against him by John, Lord Maxwell, with his cautioner being Sir James Johnstone. He was killed by John Musgrave, Captain of the English guard at Carlisle, ‘within his awin house of Barniglieis within Scotland, being a Scoticman, in his awin countrie, and not haveing fled from England to Scotland’. He married the eldest sister of Thomas Carlston’s wife. Christopher ‘Nan’s Christie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as being in Hollows, along with Archie ‘the Merchant’ in the same place, when a group of Armstrongs and others were tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House and other crimes. Another Archie in the group was called ‘Nanse Archie’ and so probably his brother. His name appears as ‘Nanse Cristie’ and ‘Agnes Cristie’, so presumably his mother was Agnes. Charges against him were dropped. Christopher ‘Christie’ (b.1576/7) recorded as ‘sone to the Guidman of Langholme (Johnne Airmestrang)” when a group of Armstrongs and supporters were tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House etc. These crimes took place in 1581 when he was 4 years old, and hence he was let off for being a minor (and hence he was too young to be the same Christie in Langholm recorded in 1585). His brother appears to have been John, ‘in the Hoilhous’. The pair are probably the ‘frea the Langholm with him younge John and Kirste his brother’ who were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. Christopher ‘Christie’ in Bankhead (16th/17th C.) listed in 1607 among many Armstrongs and others who were had a court action against them for trying to prevent the King's appointees from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘callit of Longholme in Bigholme and Turresfute’ in 1607 when he was among Armstrongs and others accused of trying to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. It is possible he is the ‘Bighames’ listed in 1596 as one of the 3 ‘Calfhills’ (probably Calfield) said to be involved with the rescue of Kinmont Willie, the others being ‘Jocke’ and ‘Ally, a bastard’; if so he was related to Jock of Calfiel. Christopher ‘Christie’ of Howgillside (16th/17th C.) probably name of a man on the list of those not appearing at court in Jedburgh in 1611. His name is listed as ‘Kirstie of Howgilsyd’, with the surname not given. These were probably the lands of Howgill in Ewesdale where there were Armstrongs at about that time. Christopher of Sorbie (17th C.) recorded on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He was presumably related to earlier Armstrongs of Sorbie. Christopher (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whitehaugh Mill in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Christopher (d.1820) Schoolmaster of Hawick Parish (or ‘English’) School, succeeding John Inglis in 1806. His brother was schoolmaster at Teviothead and he himself helped prepare Tom Jenkins for Edinburgh University. He also published ‘A selection of rules and examples, &c. for the use of schools, etc.’ (1811). He died while still Schoolmaster. He may be the same as the ‘C. Armstrong’ who was a member of the Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He probably married Tibbie, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Colin fictional character from ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘A foundling, brought up by Jean Kaishie – Cow Jean o’ the Mid Raw’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. Cuthbert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as tenant of Over Gubbislie, along with Thomas ‘de Merzentoun’, i.e. the Laird of Mangerton. He may thus have been Thomas’ brother, and possibly the same man as ‘Robert’ who was a joint tenant of Ralton and of Nether Gubbislie. Cuthbert ‘Cuddie’ of Bankhouse (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Cuddie Armstrong of the Benkis’, his forename was probably a short form of ‘Cuthbert’ and his lands were likely to be Bankhouse near Langholm. His son Airchie was also listed among the fugitives. Also in 1605 ‘New-maid Ringan’ and Will of Rowanburn were convicted for resetting him and other rebels. David of Sorbie (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, carried out at Branxholme for the Scotts. He is recorded as ‘Dauid Armstrang de Sourby’. It is unclear how he was related to other Armstrongs of Ewesdale. Archibald was also listed right after him, and so probably a near relative. He is one of the earliest known Armstrongs of Ewesdale. He could be the David, who, along with Archibald and also John Routlege, gave pladges in 1471 that Walter Routlege would appear at court in Selkirk. David (16th C.) son of Herbert ‘Habie’, he had a charter for the lands of Park in Ewesdale in 1535, after they were re-signed by Robert, Lord Maxwell. Probably the same David, along with Ninian, had a ‘letter of reversion’ and ‘bond of manrent’ in 1528 with George, Lord Home, involving lands in Ewesdale. His son and heir Ninian had the original charter copied in 1566 in the presence of Alexander Lord Home (by which time he was deceased). David ‘the Lady’ (16th C.) listed in an English letter of 1525 as one of the chiefs of the Armstrongs, along with Sim the Laird and others, who were captured by the Earl of Angus. Along with his brother Martin, as well as Andrew, son and heir of Simon of Whithaugh, the King granted him the lands and goods of Simon in 1536. It seems likely he is the David who was a younger son of Johnnie of Gilnockie, and so his other brothers included Simon and Christopher. David (16th C.) probably resident of Kirkpatrick Parish in Dumfriesshire. His sons Thomas, Roland and William were killed in 1541 by a band of English Gra-hams and others. Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches, complained about this to his Eng-lish counterparts. It is unclear how they were related to other branches of the family. David (16th C.) son of Thomas of Canonbie. In 1580 he was in ward with Adam Gordon of Auchindoun when ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He is also recorded in 1578 when he was held by Robert Keith, Commendator of Deer, with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. It is possible he was the same ‘Dave of Kannouny’ listed among the offspring of ‘ill Will’s Sandy’ in 1583 (if so this would suggest that his father Thomas was a son of Sandy); he married ‘Pate’s George’ Graham’s daughter, and he had brothers William and Jamie. David of Alemoor (16th C.) recorded in 1573 and included in 1587 on a list of Border Lairds to be held responsible for surrendering tenants accused of disorder. It is unclear what his relationship was with the former owners, e.g. the Alemoors of that Ilk. It may be that he only held Easter Alemoor, since the Earl of Bothwell seems to have owned Wester Alemoor at this time. In 1573 he was to enter John Taylor, tenant in Alemoor, at the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. David ‘Davie’ of Whitlawside (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the near kin of Simon of Whitlawside. He was probably an uncle or brother of the Laird at that time. David ‘Bangtail’ (16th C.) referred to as ‘a notorious outlaw’ who was captured by William Fenwick of Wallington. He was accused of 8 separate crimes, but complained of being tried in England and that ‘the said Armstrong would kis the bar when he went from yt, and vow that never any Scot should be so brought in and dealt with again’. It is unclear exactly where he came from. In 1590 he was accused by the English Warden and Matthew Armstrong of stealing from ‘the Heatherie burne’; he is there ‘Bangtaile’, and others listed include John of the Hollows and ‘the Bungle’, a servant of the Laird. `Bangtaile’ and others listed include John of the Hollows and ‘the Bungle’, a servant of the Laird at that time. The name may be a short form of ‘Dorothy’, but that is unclear. Dorothy (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1724 the Minister had to talk to her about drunkenness, describing her as ‘a weak, silly woman, who seemed to be a person utterly incapable of Church discipline’ and stating that there was no point rebuking her in front of the congregation. Edmund (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Ewmund Armstrang’. Along with his brothers Hector and George, they were accused of being responsible for burning and pillaging Borthwickshields. Hector and George themselves acted as surety, suggesting that they were part of a prominent family branch. Edward (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 as son of ‘Lang Andro of the Hairlaw’. There was an obligation by Lord Maxwell to enter him before the Privy Council. In 1579 there was a warrent for his re-entry, since he was then in the ‘plege chalmr of Drumfreis’ and would be released when the surety was found. Edward ‘Anton’s Edward’ (16th C.) son of Anthony, he lived on the English side. In 1591 he was among Armstrongs cited for the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’; he is recorded as ‘Eward Armstrong of Willyeavide in Gilsland alias Anthons Edward’. In 1595/6 Sir Ralph Evers wrote that ‘Antone Armestrange alias Antons Edward, has lately since my coming fled out of the West March into Liddesdale, and is offered living by Buccleuch’. It seems likely that this was an error and he was ‘Anton’s Edward’, not ‘Anthony’ himself. Elizabeth ‘Bet the Guaird’ (19th C.) kept a cookshop at 57 or 59 High Street in the mid-19th century. She may be the Mrs. Armstrong whose property at about 59 High Street is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. She was listed as an ‘eating house keeper’ on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her nickname came from her previously being a domestic servant with the guard of the Jedburgh-Edinburgh mail coach. She told a story of how a scheming woman borrowed a whole roast of beef, arranging to pay for only what was consumed, this being very little – ‘Deacon Dandy, man but ee’r handy – Yer wit never seems tae desert ye, For ee soon got relief wi’ ‘Bet the Gaird’s’ beef, Deacon Dandy’ [T]. Elizabeth nee Waldie (1789–1869) daughter of John and Helen Scott. She married postmaster Robert in 1836. She is recorded in the 1860s as ‘Mrs. Armstrong’, post-mistress. In 1861 she was a widow and ‘Proprietress of Property & Librarian’ at 5 Silver Street. In 1861 she donated to the Archeological Society a jar of preserved reptiles that had been... caught on Hawick Moor 60 years earlier. Elizabth (19th C.) milliner in Newcastleton in 1852. Fergus ‘Fergy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1574 along with Airche, both brothers of Kinmont Willie, who were accused of raiding farms belonging to Thomas Johnstone of Craigburn, stealing horses and goods, and severely injuring one man; not appearing, they were denounced as rebels. He is recorded as ‘Fergy Armstrong, brother to William Armstrong callit Will of Kinmonth’. Fergus (18th/19th C.) resident of Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He later moved to Cornerhouse near Canonbie, where he was an innkeeper. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th C.) son of Lancelot of Whithaugh. In 1579 he replaced his brother Archie as prisoner held in ward by Betoun of Creich. In 1580 he was warded in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council; however, later that year he was stated to be warded in Edinburgh Castle. He was produced before the Council by James Betoun of Creich. In 1580/1 he was convicted of a number of crimes of theft, along with several other Armstrongs, Elliots and Nixons, and sentenced to imprisonment in Edinburgh. In 1581 he was released from Edinburgh Tolbooth, where he had been held in ward as pledge for his father. In 1581/2 he was accused of leading a band that raided the farm of Eilrig in the Borthwick valley, and later declared a rebel. In 1583 he is listed among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, described as ‘Francis Armstronqe his brother’ (ambiguous, but probably meaning brother of the Laird’s son, previously mentioned). He is also likely the ‘Francie in Quhithauch’ recorded in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. He is recorded as son of the Laird of Whithaugh when accused along with his brothers Andrew and Simon of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England, burning 25 houses and stealing £1000 worth of goods. He is recorded along with Andrews of Whithaugh among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. In 1590 he and his brother Andrew, ‘sons to the laird of Whyhawgh’, were accused of an attack on ‘Todborne Steile’, stealing livestock and goods, and maiming some Englishmen. He is probably also the Francis listed in 1590 among Armstrongs (including his brothers Andrew and John) and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is probably the ‘Francie Armstrang in Quhithauch’ who was recorded in the 1594 respite for the killing of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands the year before. There was a complaint in 1597 against him, Lancelot of Whithaugh and David ‘bredsworde’ for a raid into England. He is probably also the Francis, (brother of Andrew and John), son of the ‘auld laird of Whithaugh’ listed in an English letter in 1601. He may be the same Francis, referred to as the ‘standard Bearer’, who took part in the raid by about 200 Armstrongs and others into England in 1603, one of the last major cross-Border raids. He may be the ‘Francie Armstrang, sone to ald Armestrang of Quhithauch’ listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He may also be the ‘Francie of Quhithauch’ whose sons ‘Lancie’ and ‘Symone’ also failed to appear in Jedburgh in 1611; if this is the case then he may also have been known as ‘of Westburnflat’ and had a brother John, since the pair were fined (along with Lancie of Flat, younger of Whithaugh) for the non-appearance of Lancie and Simon ‘sons to the said Francis’. Francis (16th C.) son of the ‘Sym of Tinnisburne’. He was sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for theft, along with Francis, son to the Laird of Mangerton, as well as other Elliots, Nixons, etc. Francis (16th C.) recorded as ‘Francie Armstrang, Flatt’ in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. His farm was near Kershopefoot. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Mangerton, and hence presumably son of Archibald. In 1599 he was one of the leading Armstrongs and Elliots to write to Lord Scrope in an attempt to get their family hostages freed from England. He may be the same as one of the other Francies. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded as ‘Francy Armstrong, cal-lit Kynmonthis Francy’ when he was accused of leading a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in Yarrow Water. He is probably the ‘Francie of Kynmont’ recorded in the redemption for most of the tenants of Dumfriesshire in 1585. He may be the ‘francie of Canobie’ whose tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He is probably the ‘Kimmontes Francie’ named by an English informer as part of the party who rescued ‘Kinmont Willie’, along with his brothers Jock, Geordie and Sandy. He had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Sir James Johnstone in 1603. In 1607 he was ‘called of Kinmont in Monbiehirst’ when listed among Armstrongs and other charged with trying to prevent James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 he was ‘France Armestrang callit of Kynmont’ when he was among several men (including his son William) fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1611 Walter Scott of Tushielaw complained that he was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst, and hence he was summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was ‘callit of Kynmonothe’ in 1616 when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing; his son William ‘in Grystaill’ was also on the jury. In 1622 he was ‘callit of Kinmonth in Newbeek’ when he served as a cautioner at the Judiciary Court; he also acted as a cautioner for John of Woodhouselees in 1623. His son Alexander is recorded in 1622 when he was cautioner at the Judiciary Court. His sons Francis, George and Alexander were all recorded as fugitives in 1642. Also listed were ‘Johne Kynmont called Perknow, Alexander Kynmont called Frances Sandie, George of Kynmont and James of Kynmont, Johne of Kynmont called Johne of Sark, William of Kynmont his brother’, all of whom might be related in some way (even although their surnames are not explicitly given).

Francis (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Mumbiehirst’ in 1623, when Thomas Carruthers was accused of stealing sheep from him. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit Tueden’ in 1623, when accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buceburne’. He was acquitted along with Archie Armstrong, although Abie Armstrong and Simon Elliot ‘callit Guyd’ were found guilty. He was probably related to other Armstrongs of Tweeden. Francis (17th C.) recorded as ‘Francy Kinnmont’ in 1633 when it was said (by Robert Pringle, Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch) that he had fled to Ireland. He had been tried along with ‘Geordy of Dykraw and Whyttlysye’ for being ‘resetters of my Lady Marques hir ky and maraes’. He is also recorded as ‘sone to Francis Armstrang called of Kynmont’ in 1642 when he was on a long list of Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. He was presumably grandson of Kinmont Willie. Francis (17th C.) listed as ‘brother to Quhithauch’ in a large list of fugitives in 1642. He was presumably brother of the Laird of Whithaugh, perhaps Lancelot. He could be the same as the Francis of ‘Will and Francis Armstrangs, called of Woodhead’ who in about 1645 were as accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlelawside, Geordie of Kinnmont and Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’. He could be the ‘Frances Armestrang of Quhithauch’, listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, etc.; his brother John was also listed, as well as Lancelot of Whithaugh. Francis (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called Gavingis Francie’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He was from somewhere near the Border and was presumably son of Gavin. Francis (17th C.) resident at Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Francis of Whithaugh (17th C.) recorded paying the land tax on £400 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was a major heritor of Castleton Parish, recorded in 1698. His wife was Christian Elliot, whose testament is recorded in 1681. Francis of Whithaugh (17th/18th C.) married Julian, daughter of Henry Ker of Linton. In 1701 she and her husband are recorded in sasines. He is also recorded in a sasine for his son Francis in 1706, and Francis elder and younger are both recorded in 1714. Francis (b.1773/4) agricultural labourer and shepherd at Westburnflat. He was listed there among heads of households 1835–41 and was still recorded there on the 1861 census. His wife was Mary and they had a son, Robert (b.1808/9). Francis (b.1803) born at Hacknow in England. He was a farm worker living at Henwoodie in 1841 and was shepherd there in 1851 and 1861. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (later Evangelical Union) Kirk in Hawick, from about 1848. He married Mary Murray (b.1802) from Eskdalemuir. Their children were: Thomas (b.1825); Janet (b.1827); Jane (b.1829); James (b.1832); Barbara Little (b.1835), who married Robert Linton and emigrated to Australia and then New Zealand; Esther (b.1837); Margaret (b.1839); Eleanor (b.1841); John (b.c.1845); and Elizabeth (b.c.1847). George of Alemoor (15th C.) son of Thomas of Mangerton. Since Armstrongs were accused of killing the Laird of Alemoor in about 1490, it is unclear how he could have been Laird there. It is said that he had 5 sons. George (15th/16th C.) brother of Hector. He was first of a large number of Armstrongs recorded in a document listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. This suggests he was important in the Clan at that time, so probably associated with one of the main Armstrong seats. ‘Wilzam Elwald, his mach’ (i.e. William Elliot, his son-in-law) is also listed. He is probably also the George, who along with his brothers Edmund and Hector were responsible for burning and stealing from Bothwickshieles. And also in that year he was accused (along with a man called Douglas) of several thefts, including stealing a stallion from the Earl of Lennox in Edinburgh, with his brother Hector acting as surety. Perhaps the same George was one of 2 men of that name listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. George (16th C.) first witness recorded on a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537. Other witnesses were Ninian, Mungo (Kentigern) and Hector Armstrong, as well as Stephen Scott, George Scott, Andrew Little and Edward Little. George (16th C.) tenant of Kirndean according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George ‘Geordie Go Wi Him’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when accused of having been on a raid into England with ‘Reid Andro’, ‘Auld’ John Gray and others, in which Wat Atkinson was killed. His nickname is there recorded as ‘Georghi go with hym’. He is also recorded as ‘Georgy gay with hym’ in an English letter of 1541 in which are listed English rebels who had been reset in Scotland; he was particularly said to have reset Sandy and Anthony Armstrong, Edward Noble and a Routledge ‘called tyn spede’. He was presumably from Liddesdale. He was ‘callet Gayvt’ in 1548/9 when along with ‘Gorde his son’, Thomas Henderson and 2 Fosters, there was a bond by the Armstrongs of Mangerton to enter him as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst; the men were referred to as the servants of the Laird of Mangerton. George (16th C.) son of Ninian and brother of Simon. He was involved in a 1557 bond with his brother Simon, as well as Hector of Harelaw and Thomas (son of Will of the Chingills) to present Clement’s Will (Nixon) to the gates of Ferniehirst. He may be the same as ‘Ninian’s Geordie’ who was recorded in Arkleton in 1569. He may be the George who, along with Archibald, witnessed a bond in 1548 by Ninian and Archibald Nixon to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. George (16th C.) one of the Armstrongs of Harelaw. His son Andrew was listed among fugitives of Harelaw in 1569. It is possible that ‘Georgis Jame’, ‘Georgis Will’, ‘Georgis Geordie’, ‘Georgis Alexander’ and ‘Georgis Pawtoun’, who were also listed as fugitives, were other sons of his. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as caucons for his tenants at a meet- ing in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. George ‘Ninian’s Geordie’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 among Arm- strongs who Archibald of Mangerton served as pledge for. He was ‘of Arkiltoun callit Ninianis Geordie’. He is recorded in 1579 as a repre- sentative of the Armstrongs who agreed to stop their feud with the Ellios of Evesdale. He was also ‘of Arkiltoun’ in 1579 among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is recorded in 1583 among a large group of men led by William of Kynmont into Tynedale; he is there named as ‘Renyns Geordie, and his sons, of Arclton in Evesdale’. It is unclear who his father Ringan was. He is recorded in a huge list of men under their su- perior Lord Maxwell, who got reprieve for their crimes in 1585. He is listed as being in Arkleton, and his sons ‘Ninian, Geordie, Martine, Dandy and Mingo’ are also listed, as is ‘Lord Archie Armestrang in Arkiltoun’ and his son John. He may be the same man as ‘Ninian’s Geordie’. His sons were probably the ‘yonge Gorthe of Arkyl- don’ recorded in 1583 among Armstrongs of Whitlawside, along with brothers (and hence also his sons) Ringan (i.e. Ninian) and Martin. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with Archie of Arkleton. Either he or his son is ‘Georhge Armstronc of Arclton’ in 1587/8 when accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. George (16th C.) listed among the 1583 near relatives of Simon of Mangerton. He was stated to be ‘Gorthe Armstronc of the Bygams’, where he lived, and to have married Will of Carlisle’s daughter. He was probably a cousin of the Armstrong chief. It seems likely that ‘ Gorthe’ was ‘George’ and ‘Bygams’ may have been Bygate. George (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside in 1583 as ‘Gorthe’, son of ‘Rynyon’. He was probably brother of Si- mon, and son of Ringan (i.e. Ninian). George ‘Young George’ of Akleton (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside in 1583. He could be son of a previous George of Arkleton, and was probably a nephew (or other near relative) of Simon of Whitlawside. He married a daugh- ter of Will of ‘Radhall’ (probably in England).

His brothers Ringan and Martin are also listed in 1583. George (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. His brother Thomas of Rowanburn is also listed, and he is said to be ‘Gorthe Airmestronge of the same’. He married a daughter of Jamie Taylor of Harper Hill (probably in England). George (16th C.) listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He is ‘callit of Casfield’, which is probably the same as Calfield. He is probably the ‘Geordie of Calfhills’ whose son Willie was subject of a complaint by a man from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland. He was captured by John Musgrave’s men, operating under the English Border Commissioners. He is recorded as ‘George of the Gingler, alias Hennarrow, a man of some repute upon the borders’. It seems likely he was an Armstrong, with ‘Gingler’ perhaps being Chingills and his nickname perhaps being related to Harelaw. George (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Grundunsel’ in 1606/7 when he was on the jury for the case when a man died while imprisoned in the steeple of Hawick Kirk. It is unclear where his residence lay. George ‘Aircie’s Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 among a group of men from whom were declared as fugitives. He was a tenant in Woodhouselee. He was also accused in 1623 of stealing for stealing sheep from several farms, and was acquitted of those crimes, but already a fugitive by then. He was ordered to be banished from the Kingdom. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘sone to Francis of Kynmont’ in a list of Borders fugitives in 1642. He was probably a grandson of Kynmont Willie. He is probably the ‘Geordy of Dykraw and Wyttlysyde’ who was tried in 1633 along with ‘Francy of Kynmontt’ for resetting cattle. He is probably the ‘Geordie Armstrong, called of Kynmouth’, who in about 1645 was accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlawside, Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’ and Will and Francis of Woodhead. George (17th C.) resident at Larriston Rig in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th C.) listed at Weensland among ‘The poor in Hauick Parrioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1720–89) brother of Dr. John, and son of the minister of Castleton. He started studying medicine in Edinburgh at the age of 11 and went on to establish the world’s first dispensary for sick children in London in 1769. Although the first recorded member of the Edinburgh Medical Society he did not receive an M.D. degree there (probably because of non-payment). He moved to London about 1745, lodging with his brother. He acted as a G.P. in

1601 among Armstongs of Whithaugh and elsewhere who were considered to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He was almost certainly an Armstrong, and may be the same as one of the other contemporary Georgies. George (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Geordie Armestrang, called Alie’s Geordie’. He may be the same man as the son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. George (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1606/7 when he was captured by John Musgrave’s men, operating under the English Border Commissioners. He is recorded as ‘Geordie of the Gingler, alias Hennarrow, a man of some repute upon the borders’. It seems likely he was an Armstrong, with ‘Gingler’ perhaps being Chingills and his nickname perhaps being related to Harelaw. He is probably the ‘Geordy of Dykraw and Wyttlysyde’ who was tried in 1633 along with ‘Francy of Kynmontt’ for resetting cattle. He is probably the ‘Geordie Armstrong, called of Kynmouth’, who in about 1645 was accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlawside, Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’ and Will and Francis of Woodhead. London, although not formally qualified. It is said that a struggle to supplement his first child’s diet with cow’s milk (after his wife’s breast-feeding attempts were insufficient) led to his interest in pediatrics. In 1767 he published ‘An essay on the diseases most fatal to infants to which is added rules to be observed in the nursing of children, with a particular view to those who are brought up by hand’, with new editions in 1771, 1777 and 1783. The book was extremely well-known and influential in its day, and was translated into several languages. In 1769 he opened his dispensary for the infant poor near Holborn and that year obtained an M.D. from Aberdeen University. In 1772 he moved to Soho Square. By 1780 it is estimated his dispensary had treated 35,000 children, struggling to support his own family with fees from private patients. In 1779 his brother John died, leaving him and his daughters a large sum of money. However, this led to him borrowing money and later being charged with fraud. He spent some time in prison, but it is not known for how long. Attempts to restart his dispensary were stopped by him suffering a stroke in 1781. A new medical book, published in 1784, heavily criticised his work, although borrowing heavily from his ideas, damaging his reputation (which would only be rehabilitated in the 20th century). In 1755 he married Ann, daughter of Henry Rawlins. They had 3 daughters: Ann (b.1758); Christian (b.1759); and Elizabeth (b.1764). He died in obscurity, the editor of the London Medical Journal being unable to locate him in 1787 and suspecting he was already dead. After his death his name was added to his brother’s memorial obelisk at Castleton. His wife received a royal pension in 1806 and died about a decade later. A biography of the 2 brothers ‘George and John Armstrong of Castleton’ was published by W.J. Maloney in 1954. George F. (b.1799/1800) from England, he was gamekeeper at Newlands in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 among heads of households and on the 1851 census. His wife was Elizabeth Elliot and their children included William, George, Jane Easton and John Scott. George (b.1821/2) baker at 1 Sandbed. He is listed there in the 1861 census. He married Jane, daughter of baker Walter Wilson. Their children included John, Walter, Ann H., George, Mary Jane, William, James and Margaret. George (19th/20th C.) fishmonger on the Howegate. His shop at No. 17 can be seen in a photograph of 1895. The business survived until at least the 1940s, when it was at No. 21. Gilbert (d.c.1375) probably son of Alexander and born at Mangerton. In 1363 he was Commissioner to England to arrange the ransom for King David II of Scotland and was with David in England in 1364. There were payments to him recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1364 and 1366, when he was master of the King’s horse and was an envoy to England. He was Canon of Moray by 1365 when he witnessed a charter. He was witness to a charter granting lands of Denholm to Thomas of Cranston. His death is recorded in 1376 in relation to the vacant position at the Parish Church of ‘Seres’ (which he must have held). Guy H. (1901–76) born at Ardenlea, he was educated at George Watson’s and Edinburgh University. He returned to Hawick in 1926 as a solicitor, joining George & James Oliver, and later becoming a senior partner. He was Acting Father in 1932 and became Common Riding Committee Secretary for approximately 33 years. He was also President of the Callants’ and Mosstroopers’ Clubs, Vice-Chairman of the Con Club, joint Manager of the former Commercial Bank and Clerk to Hawick District Council. He was appointed Chief Observer for Teviotdale in the Royal Observer Corps throughout WWII, carrying out shifts at the hilltop post near Teviothead. He also became an Honorary Sheriff at Jedburgh. In addition he was Secretary of the Cheviot Sheep Society, Secretary of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society and Session Clerk at Wilton. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Hector (15th C.) recorded in Newbattle in 1496, when he was paid by the King’s Treasurer. It is not clear how he might have been related to other Armstrongs. Hector (15th/16th C.) from Liddisdale, brother of Edmund and George. In 1502 they were found guilty of being involved in the burning and pillage of Borthwickshielis. And also that year he was surety for his brother George, who was accused of stealing a stallion from the Earl of Lennox in Edinburgh. It is unclear to which branch of the Armstrongs they belonged. Hector (16th C.) listed as tenant of Dykeraw in 1541. William is listed before him, and so they were presumably related. Either he or a different Hector was tenant of the nearby Byreholm in 1541. Hector (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as ‘young Ector Armstrong’ in Tweed. He was listed as someone who had reset some English rebels, specifically 3 Armstrongs and one Wigholm. He was surely related to the later Hector of Tweed. Hector ‘Auld Hector’ of Harelaw (16th C.) recorded as ‘Eクトor Armstrong’ in 1557 when he had a bond along with Thomas of the Chingills and Simon, son of Ringand ‘which Arche Nykszone owes for Will Wauch’s bill’. Later that year he had a bond to enter ‘Clement’s Will’ to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as ‘Hectors of Harlaw’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. In 1569 it is said that the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland were sheltered by him after their unsuccessful rebellion in the north of England. However, he is said to have delivered the Earl of Northumberland to the Regent Moray. In 1569 he was pledge for entering his son Thomas for his sons Hector and William, as well as Rowie and Ninian (servants to young Hector) and other Armstrongs. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme served as surety that he or his son Thomas would present themselves at Dumfries. Later in 1569 his son Hector was held in Glasgow Castle as pledge for him and his other sons Hector and Willie, as well as his brothers Rowie and Ninian, and other Armstrongs. His son Ninian was recorded being warded with John Colquhoun of Luss in 1574 and was ‘Ringyeane Armstrang’ when warded with David Barclay of Cullerny in 1580. An English list of 1583 includes his closest kin; he is recorded as ‘ould Hector’, along with his son Hector, plus ‘Hector’s Willie’ (presumably another son), ‘Hector’s Tom’, Andrew of the Harelaw, ‘Patton’ of the Harelaw and Alexander ‘the Gutwarde’. Either he or his son Hector had his tower marked ‘Hector of ye harlawe’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map. He had a daughter who married Will, brother of Rob Graham of ‘the Fald’ (in England). ‘Hector’s Tom’ and ‘Hector’s Will’s Tom’, complained about for raids into England in 1601, were probably his son and grandson. Hector of Broomholm (16th C.) probably name for ‘Hekky’ for whom Walter Ker of Cessford was surety in 1573. Perhaps the same ‘Ekie’ was recorded in the 1585 remission of men from Dumfriesshire as being at Broomholm, along with Ninian, ‘Johne’, ‘Antonie’ and ‘Rowe’. Hector (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Ekie braisebelt’ in 1596, among Armstrongs and Elliots accused of raiding into England. Presumably his first name was Hector (or perhaps Alexander) and he was nicknamed ‘Braidbelt’, but it is unclear where he was from. Hector ‘Heckie’ of Tweedlen (d.1603) recorded in 1579 among 400 Armstrongs and followers said to have killed Uswold Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8); Ringan of Tweedlen was also listed. He was recorded among those involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh in 1580; he is ‘Hecke Armstrang, callit Twedden’, and his brother Ninian is also listed. He was recorded in an English complaint of 1583 along with several other Armstrongs, including Jock and Ringan of Tweedlen (who were probably his brothers). He was closely related to Lancie of Whitaugh, since when the bond of assurance with the English Wardens was signed in 1584, he was described as ‘Eckkie Armestrange of Twedden’, and ‘dwellinge benethe Twedden upon the Larde of Mangertons grounde, beinge one of my howse and beinge upon grounde where skaithe was done. He is recorded as ‘Ekkye Armstronge of Tweonden’ when accused along with the Armstrongs of Whitaugh and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was ‘Eckye Armstronge’ in an indenture of 1595 between agents of the Scottish and English Wardens; Will of Tweedlen was arranged to be imprisoned in Carlisle in his stead. He was recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Glisland for raids into England; this was along with Andrew ‘the bundgell’, ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, Hendersons and Elliots. He may have been the head man at ‘Tweedlen in 1596 when ‘three brethren of Twearden, Armstrongs’ were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He was killed by Thomas Hetherington of Holesheils; the Scottish Border Commissioners complained that they wanted his killer apprehended, while the English commended Hetherington for his actions ‘for he [Hector] was a principal murderer, a great and common thief, a spoiler, and a leader of the rest’. He was probably a descendant of ‘young Ector’, who is recorded in Tweedlen in 1541. Hector (16th C.) son of ‘Auld Hector’ of Harelaw. He was listed in 1569, along with his father Hector and brother Willie, as those for whom his brother Tom was being held as pledge in Glasgow Castle. He was recorded as ‘young Hector Armistrang his sone in Tweddale’; this means it is possible that he was the same man as Hector of Tweedan. In 1583 it was stated that he was married to a daughter of Fergus Graham. His brothers may have been William and Thomas. He is probably the Hector ‘in Harla’ listed in 1607 among people trying to prevent possession of lands in the former Debatable Lands. He acted as cautioner for ‘Geordie Scot, his man’ at court in Dumfries in 1611. Hector of Chingills (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of ‘Melyonton’ quarter, along with those of Whitlawside, etc. His brothers Thomas, ‘Elle’, ‘Eme’ and Archie are also listed. It is unclear how they are related to ‘Auld Tom of Chingills’ and his sons, who are also mentioned. Also in 1583 he was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale; he is there ‘Eckye Arnstronoge of the Gyngles’. He is probably also the ‘Hekie Armistrang, son of Andro Armestrange of the Gyngillis’ in 1584/5, when John, Lord Maxwell was denounced for not presenting him and others. It thus seems likely he was the ‘Ekkie Armistrang sone to Andro of the Gyngillis’ who was ordered in 1569 to release an Englishman he had captured. He is also probably the ‘Hekie Armistrang sone to Andro Armestrange of the Gyngillis’ who was held in Blackness Castle in 1569, as pledge for his father Andrew, his uncle Tom and his cousin Willie. He could be the ‘Ecker Arnemstrange’ who signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, being listed after the Armstrongs of Ewesdale. He is probably the ‘Eckie’ listed along with ‘Alie’ and their brother ‘younge Thom’, who were all accused in 1587/8 with their father ‘old Thom Armemstrange of the Gyngles’ of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. Hector (16th C.) listed as being of ‘the Stobbam’ among the Armstrongs of Langholm in 1583. He was also recorded being in Stubholme in the 1585 remission for the men of Dumfriesshire. His location was near Langholm. He was also listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582, where he was ‘Hector Armstrang in Stutholme, warden officiar’. Hector of Hillhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among Armstrongs and about 500 others accused of raiding the farms of the Lairds of Prendick and Ryle in Northumberland. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Sim’s Tom and Kinmont Willie, as well as Elliotis, Crozieris and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. His name is transcribed there as ‘Ecker Armemstrange of the Hillhouse’. He is probably related to ‘Hob of Whithawghoe son to John Eamont of Hillhouse’, who is recorded in 1590. Henry (1749/50–99) baker in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1797. He married Helen Elliot, who died in 1814, aged 63. Their children included: Janet (b.1776); Christian (b.1778), who married stockmaker Robert Rae; Isabel (b.1780); Thomas (b.1782); William (b.1790); and Thomas (again, b.1793). It is possible that he was the Henry from Riccarton Mill who married Helen, daughter of Hawick baker William Elliot. Herbert ‘Habie’ (16th C.) father of David, who had a charter for the lands of Park in Ewesdale in 1535. He is named as ‘Herbert, alias Habie’. Hugh (1809/10–91) born in England. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street, and recorded as farmer of 4 acres. He had brothers Thomas and John and sister Sibella. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Hutchinson (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hutchen Armstrang, called Old Sandie’s Hutchen’. It is unclear whether his name was short for something. In about 1645 he was accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitletswie, Geordie of Kinmont and Will and Francis of Woodhead. Along with another Armstrong he was said to have broken into the home of Rev. Thomas Allan of Wauchope Kirk, beating the minister and his wife and stealing 2 horses. However, through some deal, an English outlaw, ‘Perse Howme’, was arranged to claim credit and take the ransom for the return of the horses. Ay about the same time he and Rob Donaldson (in Reedbank on Esk) were chased from ‘Catteugh and Cringlefold’ in Liddesdale and caught at ‘Bruntshieills’ (probably Bruntshiel Hill between Kershopefoot and Langholm), although subsequently released ‘upon what conditions those who took them can best declare’. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘Ingram Armestrange, Railtoun’ along with ‘Robert and Archibald Armestrange there’. This was among a list of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for their raid on the farm at Craik. ‘Railtoun’ was probably lands near the modern Raltonside, adjacent to Roan in Liddesdale. He could possibly be associated with ‘Ingramsways’, a lost place name further to the south. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1584 as ‘Ingram Armestrange, Railtoun’ along with ‘Robert and Archibald Armestrange there’. This was among a list of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for their raid on the farm at Craik. ‘Railtoun’ was probably lands near the modern Raltonside, adjacent to Roan in Liddesdale. Heron of Chipchase. He is there recorded as ‘Ingram Armstronge of the Castleton’. Along with ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier, ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier and Thomas of the Mains, he was also accused of stealing cattle from Chipchase as well as stealing a horse on a separate occasion. Ingram ‘Ingie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Inzieholme’, tried in 1605, along with several other Armstrongs for burning Langholm House, stealing, etc. His location is unclear, but may even be related to his Christian name. His name is the first given in the record, suggesting he was of some importance. Among the crimes was taking prisoner Herbert Maxwell of ‘Cavens’, this taking place in 1581. He was found guilty along with Archie of Flaskholme, with Matthew Finlayson of ‘Killelyth’ as surety for him. Ivan Adamovich see John. James (16th C.) tenant at Whithaugh according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Given the connection between these lands and the Armstrong chiefs, he was probably closely related to the Laird of Mangerton at that time. James (16th C.) recorded being in ‘the Hairlaw’ in 1576/7 when he was delivered to the March Warden. The Regent, James, Earl of Morton, gave orders for the Laird of Dundas to deliver him to ‘Ewmond Ripeth and James Hume’, men of Dumfriesshire in 1585. He was then tenant at ‘Carrono’, which was probably the same as ‘Carron’. Christie was listed as tenant in the same place, along with brothers and nephews, so they might all be closely related. He was probably the ‘Pawtonis Jame’ listed among the fugitives of Harelaw in 1569; his brother Thomas was also listed. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. He is listed as being ‘in Canobie’. He is probably the Jamie of Canonbie whose son Jamie was executed by the Borders Commission in 1606. In 1607 he was ‘of Cannabie’ when Andrew of Kirkton was cautions for him not to harm James Johnstone of ‘Westraw’. He is probably the ‘James Airmestrang of Cannabie’ who was acquitted of a murder charge in 1609, along with several other Armstrongs. It is possible he is the ‘Jeme’, son of Dave of Canonbie, who is recorded in 1583. He may be the James of ‘Cannabie’ recorded in 1622, when a Little was accused of stealing sheep from him and he also served on the assize. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Andrew of Kirkton. He was declared a fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mangerton Mill. In 1611 he was acquitted of charges at court in Jedburgh. James (17th C.) referred to as being ‘called of Kenimont’ when he was first on a list of ‘mostroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He was presumably descended from the earlier Armstrongs of Kinmont. James (17th C.) tenant at ‘Catheugh’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. 2 men with the same name are listed, as well as John and ‘Arck’. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Haughhead in Castleton Parish, along with Archibald. They were summoned to appear before the Kirk Session to answer charges of non-observance of the Sabbath. James (1684/5–1774) tenant farmer in Kershopefoot. He married Janet Scott, who died at Kershopefoot Mill in 1800, aged 85. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (18th C.) recorded as ‘Town Herd’ in 1740 when his son Mungo was baptised. His wife was Margaret Cathrae. No other children seem to be recorded for the couple. Since Mungo was Town Herd at that time, his designation is confusing; however, it seems likely he was Mungo’s son or other close relative. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Prish. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: Adam (b.1761); John (b.1762); and Simon (b.1764); James (d.1812) farmer at Riccarton Mill. He married Isabella, who died in 1814, aged 58. Their children included James, who also farmed at Riccarton Mill. They are buried at Ettleton. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langside in Cavers Parish. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, with Walter also there. James (18th/19th C.) son of the shepherd at Penchrise under the Potts. He himself became head shepherd at Penchrise before becoming tenant farmer at Greenriver in the Rule valley. His daughter Janet married John Armstrong, shepherd in the Rule valley. James (1766/7–1841) tenant in ‘Gaulhill’ (possibly Gallhills in Dumfriesshire). He married Joan Nichol, who died at Whisgills in 1865, aged 85. They had a son, George, who died in infancy at Caulside in 1810. The family are buried at Ettleton. James (b.1770/1) son of Mungo, farmer at Yethouse, and brother of Francis. His name is on the Militia List in 1797 and again in 1801. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and listed at Yethouse among local heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farmer of 156 acres at Yethouse. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children were: James; Ann; Thomas;

Airmstrong

Janet; and Agnes. Margaret was recorded as widow and head of the family at Yethouse in 1861. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Greenholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (b.1791/2–1855) son of James and Isabella. He was miller at Riccarton Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as miller there among heads of households in 1835–41. He subscribed (for 4 copies) to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821; the ‘Miss C. Rickarton Mill’ who also subscribed must have been related. He was listed as miller at Riccarton Mill in 1841 and 1851 and was listed as miller at ‘Bickerton Mill’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1859, aged 60. Their children included: James, who took over as miller; Mary; Robert; Thomas; and Stavert (1827/8–50). They are buried in Ettrick Cemetery. James (b.1793) clogger in Newcastle, son of Abel and Elizabeth Scott. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 6 South Hermitage Street. He was listed in 1852 among boot and shoemakers, as well as clog-makers in Newcastle. His wife was Isabella (or ‘Sebella’) and their children included Margaret, Betty, Abel, Adam, Jeanie, Robert, John Black, Esther, James and George. His father Abel, also a clogger, was living with him in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (b.1819/20) from England, he was shepherd at Kidd’s Linn. His wife was Margaret Elliot, and siblings Ann, Thomas, Janet and Agnes. James (1820/1–1911) son of James, he was miller and farmer at Riccarton Mill, like his father. He was assistant miller in 1851 and in 1861 was farmer of 25 acres. He married Janet Turnbull, who died in 1919, aged 81. Their children included: Margaret (1860/1–1915); Thomas (b.1869), who died in infancy; Andrew Telfer (1877–83); Elliot, and Elizabeth. Jenkin (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Archibald and Alexander. They were accused of coming with 20 other Scotsmen to raid Butterburn in England, killing Christopher Marshal and 4 servants of Nicholas Ridley. Probably the same Jenkin was listed as ‘broder’ along with Archibald, Ringan and Simon in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid. His forename is otherwise unknown among the Armstrongs. Jessy (18th/19th C.) resident of Kershopefoot. She subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (d.1479) one of the earliest family members on record. In 1274/5 he had a letter of protection from Edward I. In 1278/9 he was deposed when he and Alan de Lascelles had a pardon from King Henry for the murder of Richard Bullok ‘in the field of Cambok’. In 1281 James de Multon had a pardon from the Edward I for his death. John (14th C.) probably a younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. He may be the subject of the ballad in which he wins a contest with Englishman Sir Michael Musgrave over on the love of Isabel Dacre and marries her, only to be killed by Musgrave. It is also said he was the original inhabitant of the castle at Gilnockie. He may have died at Otterburn. John (15th C.) resident of Linton who was listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was fined for the non-appearance of George Tennant in Linton, as well as for his own non-appearance. The pair were again recorded at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Armstrongs. John of Whithaugh (15th C.) younger son of Thomas of Mangerton, brother of Alexander of Mangerton, as well as George of Alemoor and William of Chingills. He was one of the earliest Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He is said to have had 3 sons. He may have been executed at Alnwick in 1528. John ‘Johnnie’ of Gilnockie (d.1530) second son of the Armstrong chief at Mangerton, he was brother of Thomas of Mangerton, but became the effective clan leader. He lived at the Hollows (rather than Gilnockie across the river) near Langholm, and was also referred to as being ‘of Staplegordon’. He ran what was basically a protection racket in Liddesdale in the early 16th century, and was very unpopular with some of the Barons in the Scottish Borders. In 1527 the English Wardens tried to drive the Armstrongs out of the Debatable Land and all their towers around Canonbie were burned by Lord Dacre’s men in 1528. The Earl of Angus led an unsuccessful expedition against them in that year (probably failing due to lack of local support) and they were excommunicated by the Archbishop of Glasgow (although he himself was said to be a good Christian before this). In 1530 he was invited to meet the young King James V at Caerlenrig Chapel (in what is now called Teviothead), with a promise that his life would be spared if he submitted to the King. But instead he was hanged along with many (either 24 or 48) of his followers. A few other men were held as hostages, but executed after a few months, while his brother George was said to have been allowed to go free to spread word of the event. Since the King was still quite young at the time, it seems likely that enemies of Armstrong (e.g. the Maxwells, who received Armstrong lands immediately afterwards) were involved in the events. Nevertheless, the execution of Johnnie was regarded by most Borderers as an act of treachery, and is the subject of a well-known ballad (although full of historical inaccuracies), popularised by appearing ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. The story also became a play, ‘Armstrong’s Last Goodnight’, by John Arden, performed in 1965 (with Albert Finney in the title role). The events of 1530 are marked by a plaque within Teviothead Cemetery, as well as a stone in a neighbouring field (found there about 1980 and re-erected on the probable burial site). He married Elizabeth Graham and was said to have had 5 sons, including: Simon, ‘Lord Sym’; David, ‘The Lady’; Martin; and Christopher, ‘John’s Christy’. The Museum has several items reputed to have been his: a sporran; a tie pin; a drinking flask; and a sword – ‘John murder’d was at Carlenrig. And all his gallant companie; But Scotland’s heart was ne’er sae wae To see sae mony brave men die’ [CPM], ‘But he was tricked to Carlenrig, By his own King was slain. The trees on which his men were hung Ne’er bore a leaf again’ [IWL].

John ‘Black Jock’ (d.1531) hanged along with his brother Thomas for theft and related crimes. This was in the year after Johnnie of Gilnockie and other Armstrongs were hung at Caerlenrig, and so this was probably related. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1535/6 as ‘John Arme strang, alias Jony in Gutterholis’ when, along with Christopher Henderson, he was sentenced to be hung for crimes of theft, murder and fire-raising. He was probably from somewhere in Liddesdale. He could have been son of Bartholomew. His father was presumably ‘John’s Christie’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Armistrang sone to Johnnes Cristie’ in 1569 when listed along with the Laird’s Rowie and Ninian of Wauchopedale. They were the for whom men for whom Christie of Broomholm was held as pledge in Dupplin Castle. His father was presumably ‘John’s Christie’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) listed as ‘callit Bartillis Johnne’ in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh. He could have been son of Bartholomew. John ‘Laird’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 on a list of chiefs of Liddesdale. He is listed among the close relatives of the Laird of Mangerton and after the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (who was therefore a different man). It seems likely he was an uncle of Simon of Mangerton, and hence son of Archibald. He married the sister of Ritchie Graham, called ‘Meadope’, and had 2 sons who were ‘ryders in England’. The eldest, ‘Jock’, married a daughter of Hobbie Foster of Kershope. It is unclear if he or his nephew was the ‘Lairdis Jok’ listed in the Register of the Privy Council in 1581. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the ‘principallis of the branchis of Liddisdaill’. He is probably the ‘Lardis Johnne’ whose son Archibald was held in ward in 1587 as a pledge for the whole of the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whitaugh. John ‘Jock’ of Calfeld (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘Jok Armstrong of Caffeld’ when Lord Maxwell made a promise to bring him before the Privy Council. He was probably ‘Jok Armstrong, callit of Caisfeld’, listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He is also listed among the near relatives of Simon of Mangerton in 1583, his name appearing as ‘Joke Armestronge of the Caufeld’. He was stated not to have married an English woman. He is also recorded being in Calfeld in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. He is probably the ‘Jock of Calfhills’ accused among Armstrongs and others in 1590 of rieving from Bewcastle. He is surely one of the ‘Armestranges of Calfhill’ accused in 1592 of stealing livestock and goods from England and killing Quentin Routledge. He is probably the ‘Jocke’ listed among ‘three of the Calfhills’ who were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596: the other 2 were ‘Bighames, and ‘one Ally, a bastard’. He and his brother Simon were among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about because of a raid to Whitehill in England in 1596 and another on ‘Hawehills’. John of Hollows (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘Johnne Armstrong of Hoilhous’, son of John’s Christie of Barnglies, when his father appeared before the Privy Council because of a feud with the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Armstrong in the Hoilhous, eldest sone to Johnnes Cristie’ when he was accused of being part of a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in Yarrow Water. He is also listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Langholm, where he appears as ‘of the Hollus’. He is recorded as being ‘in Hoilhous’ in a 1585 list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell, who had respite for their crimes. He was accused in 1590 of raiding ‘the Heatherie burne’ in England, along with Davie ‘Bangtail’ and ‘the Bungle’, a servant of the Laird of Mangerton; his designation is written ‘of the Holles’. Essentially the same group (plus 2 servants of the Laird’s Jock) were also accused in 1590 of having stolen sheep from the same farm on a separate occasion. Since his house appears to have been at ‘the Hollows’, he may have been a descendant of Johnnie of Gilnockie. He is listed as ‘John Armstrong of Hoilhous’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is probably the ‘Johnne Armstrong of the Hoilhous’ whose livestock were taken by the Captain of Bewcastle in a retaliatory raid following the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1597 there is a record of a complaint against him by Englishmen for stealing 400 cattle, 20 horses, 200 sheep, £20 and goods worth £200 and the English Warden demanded a pledge for him. In 1599 he wrote to Richard Lowther regarding his disputes with the Musgraves. He married a sister of Walter Graham of Netherby. He may be the same as the John in Hollows who was tried in 1605 and was subsequently recaptured. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. He is referred to as being ‘called Castills’, but it is unclear what that is. He may be the same son of Kinmont Willie. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) another of the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’ listed in the 1583 letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor. He was said to be called Walls, which probably connects him to Alexander ‘in Wallis’, recorded in 1616. John (16th C.) listed among ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’s offspring in 1583, where his nickname is given as ‘Skinabake’ (although it is unclear what this means). He also appears in Monipennie’s list of Borderers from the 1580s; he is listed there under ‘Sandy Armstrong’s Bairns’ as ‘John Skynbanke’. He was thus either brother or other close relative of Kinmont Willie. John of Thorniewhats (16th C.) recorded in 1579 among the supporters of Christie of Barrngles, when that man appeared before the Privy Council in relation to a feud with the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He is recorded as being of ‘Thornequhat’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is listed along with John of Hollows (who may therefore have been a close relative), as well as Will of ‘Ternsnihil’. He is probably the ‘Armestrangel of Thornewhattrie’ (forst name not given) who signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Warden, along with ‘his brothers sonses William and George’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Armstrong

Armstrong of Tornwynholme’ when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens in 1584, on behalf of himself his brother and tenants. It is unclear where he lived, but the Laird of Thorniewhats is listed right after him, and so presumably a different man. John (16th C.) listed as ‘in Gliynyr’ (probably ‘Glinger’ between Longtown and Canonbie) in a long 1585 list of men of Dumfriesshire given respite for their crimes. His son Andrew and brothers Christie, ‘Rowe’ and William are also listed, as well as Thomas also ‘in Gliynyr’. Given the names of his brothers, it is possible he was son of ‘John’s Christie’, i.e. ‘Jock o the Glen’, a grandson of Johnnie of Gilnockie. John (16th C.) listed as being in Wauchopedale in an 1585 remission. John (16th C.) named as ‘alias Reltoun’ in the 1585 respite for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. He was probably related to the other Armstrongs who farmed at Ralton, e.g. Ingram. Perhaps the same John ‘called Raltoun’ was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. John ‘Rakass’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 respite, along with a large number of Armstrongs and others. His nickname probably refers to a place in lower Liddesdale. He was probably related to Airmie ‘callit Rakkes’, Robert ‘callit Rakkes in Syde’ and William ‘callit Rakkeis’, all recorded in 1623. John (16th C.) listed as being in Howgill (probably in the Ewes valley) in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. George is also listed in the same place, so presumably a near relative. John of Munghbyhurst (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond with the English Wardens, on behalf of ‘hym selfe, brether and tenants’. His name appear as ‘Jocke Armestrange of Monckbehirist. He is also recorded in 1585, along with most other men of Dumfriesshire in a respite for those under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. He is listed as ‘in Munkbehirist’ (i.e. Munghbyhurst). ‘Johne, Niniane and Christie Armstrongis, brether’ are listed after him, so possibly his brothers. He was said to be involved in the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. Later that year he was ‘Jockey of Monckbehirist’ when complained about for raiding into England (along with several other Armstrongs) and was ‘Jok Armstronge of Munkwhurst’ when killed in a counter-raid by the English Warden’s men. John (d.bef. 1591) murdered by a group of other Armstrongs, with a complaint being made in 1591 by the English Wardens against those claimed to be responsible. His was recorded as ‘alias Cokespoole’, and was probably from the English side of the Border. John ‘Stoveluges’ (16th C.) cited in 1591 among Armstrongs accused of the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’ (probably an Englishman). It is unclear what his nickname may have meant or whether he was related to ‘Anton’s Edward’, ‘Andro’s Will’ and other Armstrongs who were also listed. John ‘Laird’s Jock’ (16th/17th C.) probably son of the Laird of Mangerton (although there may be confusion here with the son of the Laird of Whithaugh). It is also possible that there were 2 men of the same name, one (sometimes called ‘the Laird’s John’) who was son of the previous Laird, and hence uncle to this one. ‘The Lairdis Jok All with him takis’ is mentioned in Maitland’s ‘Complaynt Aganis the Thievies of Liddesdail’, which dates from the 1560s. He was one of the band of about 300 Armstrongs and Elliotts who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568, murdering George Pringle, the Laird there. In 1569 he is ‘Johnne Armistrang callit the Lardis Jok’ who, along with Christie of the Side, was excepted from the pledge made by Archibald of Mangerton for the whole of the Armstrongs. ‘Lard’s Jock’ was also one of the Armstrongs (along with the Laird of Mangerton and ‘Sim’s Thom’ and others) accused by Englishman Sir Simon Musgrave of having his barns and grains burned in 1582 and of further raids in 1586 and 1587. In 1587/8 he was accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. In 1583 he is listed right after Simon of Mangerton: he is there described as dwelling ‘under Denyshill byesdes Kyrsope in Denishborne’ (presumably ‘Tinnis Hill’ and ‘Tinnis Burn’) and married to a daughter of Anthony Armstrong of ‘Wyllyave’ in Gilsland. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of himself and his tenants and servants. 2 of his servants were accused in 1590 of having been with ‘Bangtail’, ‘the Bungle’ and John of the Hollows when sheep were stolen from ‘Heatherie burne’ in England. His tower is recorded as ‘Larde of the Deabateable Land. He was listed (along with the Laird of Mangerton and Christie of the Side) in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs in about 1594 (although compiled earlier). His servants, Archie, John and Gib Stoddart were accused of stealing cattle from England in 1595. He is ‘Johne Armstrang of Tyneisburne alias lairdis Jok’ among the Armstrongs who signed the bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) of the West March in 1599. He is suggested by some to have been a son of Simon of Mangerton, but may have been son of the previous Laird. He is mentioned in the Border ballad ‘Dick o the Cow’ (where his son is stated to be Johnie). John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) servant of the Laird’s Jock. Along with another servant, Mungo, he was accused of being with ‘Bangtail’, John of the Hollows and ‘the Bungle’ when they were said in 1590 to have stolen sheep from ‘Heatherie burne’ in England. He may be the same as one of the others Johns. John ‘John o the Score’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Elliots, Croziers and other who were accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Whithaugh in Liddesdale (most likely Lancelot). He is probably the ‘Jony Armstrang of Quhithauch’ listed in 1574 among Scots rebels who were reset in England. He is probably also the ‘John Armesstrong, called John of Whetaugh’ listed among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh in 1583. In 1587/8 he was ordered to be exchanged with Archibald (son of the Laird’s John) as a pledge for the Armstrongs, and thus was held in Wemyss Castle; a letter from the King of about a year later orders the Laird of Wemyss to keep him in ward. In 1590 he and Andrew, both ‘of Whithawghe’, as well as ‘Hob of Whithawghe son to John Eamont of Hilhouse’ were complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England. He may be also the John ‘called of Whithaugh’, although was probably closely related. He may be the same John of Tweeden who is recorded in the early 17th century. John of Langholm (16th/17th C.) one of the men who ambushed Thomas Musgrave in 1596, after he had attempted a retaliatory raid on Hollows. He is referred to as ‘the Guidman of Langholme’ in a trial of 1605 for several crimes, including the burning of Langholm House in 1581. This trial included his sons John and Christie and his cautioner was Sir James Johnstone. He was tried separately for burning Murtholm, burning barns and crops at Langholm Castle, stealing 30 cows and horses from Herbert Maxwell of Cavens in 1581, taking Herbert prisoner and transporting him to England, burning Gallowside, stealing 20 cows, as well as sheep and goats, steling 60 cows, 200 sheep etc. from Dikinholme’, which was burned along with Holmhead. His cautioner was Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. However, he was denounced as a rebel and ‘put to the horne’. He could be the John ‘callit of Longholme in Tounischilburne’ listed in 1607 among Armstrongs and others who tried to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the Debatable Lands. John of Whisgills (16th/17th C.) recorded in an English letter of 1601 among Armstrongs of Whithaugh and elsewhere who were considered to be outlaws under the jurisdiction of the Laird of Buccleuch. He may be the same John as the son of Will of Whisgills who was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. John ‘Jock o the Side’ (16th/17th C.) Armstrong who was made famous in the eponymous ballad. It is unclear if he really existed, or was an amalgamation of several people. ‘John of the Syde’ is recorded in an English letter of 1601 among Armstrongs of Whithaugh and elsewhere who were considered to be outlaws under the jurisdiction of the Laird of Buccleuch; he could be partly the inspiration for the ballad character, or else a descendant. ‘Johnne Armesstrang, called of the Syde’ was also listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his brother Sim was also listed. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at courts in Hawick and Peebles in 1605. He was of the Hill, although it is unclear where this was. Paton of the Hill was also listed. John ‘Powdie’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John in Rowanburn (16th/17th C.) listed in 1607 as being ‘in Rowingburne’ when he was among Armstrongs and others who acted to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. John ‘Jock’, ‘Stowlugs’ (16th/17th C.) captured by the English Commissioners in 1606/7. His nickname presumably meant that he had an ear injury. John (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘callit of the Holme’ in 1618 when Gilbert Elliot ‘Gib the Gallowart’ was convicted of stealing his purse when they were both in the house of Alexander Young of Selkirk. John (b.1572/3) recorded as being ‘in the Hoilhous’ among the Armstrongs and others tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House and other crimes. These crimes took place in 1581, when he was only 8 years old, so he was found ‘doli capaces’ and hence could not be tried. He was therefore too young to be the John, tenant in Holmows, who was recorded in 1585. It seems he may have been son of John of Langholm and brother of Christie. The pair are probably those ‘frea the Langholm with him younge John and Kirste his brother’ who were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may be the John ‘in Hoilhous’ who entered a bond at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Archibald and Simon. In 1601 his brother Archibald ‘Whitehead’ was recorded in an English list of ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’, with him and his other brother Simon also named. In 1611 Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, served as cautioner in Jedburgh for him and his brother Simon, both ‘called Quhyteheid’. John ‘Bauld Jock’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whitlawside. He appeared before the Judiciary Court in 1622, his name being ‘callit Bould Jok, in Quhitlesyde’. John (16th/17th C.) listed being in Catheuch among men failing to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was presumably related to other Armstrongs in Catheuch. John ‘Bauld Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Bauld Jok in Hairlaw’ in 1622 when he was accused of stealing sheep from the lands of Rutherford. He seems to have been different from the Bauld Jock in Whitlawside, and was probably the ‘Bauld Jok’ who was condemned to ‘be drowned in the watter of Nith, ay quhilk he be deid’. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether ‘Bagray’, recorded in 1622 at the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh. Along with Thomas in Barngles he acted as cautioner for William of Binks in Sark. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘of Tueden’ in 1611 when William of Tweeden acted as cautioner for him in Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1623 as ‘callit of Tueden’ when William ‘callit Bauld’ appeared as his cautioner. He was probably related to other Armstrongs of Tweeden, e.g. Simon, who was also recorded in 1622. John (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Capelgill’ in 1623 when he was cautioner for William ‘callit Benks’, who was accused of stealing sheep. He was probably related to ‘Jamie Armestrang of Capilgill’ who was acquitted of crimes in Dumfries in 1611. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Hag’ in 1622, when he was entered at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh. John (16th/17th C.) resident at Powisholm, recorded in the 1623 Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was entered there by James Glendinning in Byreholm and Simon Armstrong in Harden, and secondly entered by Lancie of Whithaugh and again Simon in Harden. John of Woodhouselees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was entered in the Justice Court in Jedburgh. His cautioners were David ‘Quhippo in Boig’ and Francie ‘callit of Kinmonth’. John ‘Jock’ (17th C.) along with Ninian, he is recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Greenesse’ in Liddesdale. This is probably the modern Greens near Newcastleton. Abie, who was convicted of murder in 1623 was probably related to him. John (17th C.) called ‘in Syde in Barngles’ when he gave a bond at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was also ‘of Syd in Barngles’ in 1642 on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. He was probably a descendant of the Armstrongs of Side, perhaps a son of Simon. In 1646 there was a bond of caution for him with William in Bigholme and David Irving in Auchinbedrig. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Wintropeid’ in 1642 among many Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. His lands may have been at Whiptrope. John (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called ‘Unschank’ on a list of thieves to be apprehended in 1642. He could have been associated with Unthank in Ewesdale. John (17th C.) included in a list of Borders fugitives in 1642. He is there ‘Johne of Kynmont called John of Sark’, and his name appears with several others associated with Kinmont, including his brother ‘William of Kynmont’. He was thus clearly connected with Kinmont Willie, but his exact relationship is unclear. He is also referred to in 1649 as ‘called Kinmonth of Sark’ when he had a bond of presentation for ‘Lang Will’ Armstrong. He married Katherine, daughter of William Graham of Plomp. John (d.c.1645) referred to as being ‘of Parkknoe’, which was presumably somewhere in Liddesdale. In about 1645 the Armstrongs of Kinmont and their companions (including him and his brother Geordie) stole cattle from Pundershaw in Northumberland and were pursued back into the Debatesable land; he was shot and killed by Edward Charlton of Antoun Hill, after which Charlton was pursued and killed, along with at least 2 other Englishmen. John (17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he appeared before the Justice Court, confessing to the charge of stealing sheep from Kirkconnell. He was ordered to be ‘brunt on ye cheik with ye comone birning irne of ye burgh of Jeburgh’. He was also listed along with Alexander as being ‘called of Catgille’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. They were probably descended from George ‘in Catgill’, recorded in 1585. John of Sorbie (d.1685) buried in the Kirkyard at Ewes. His gravestone includes the arms of the Lairds of Mangerton. He is probably the John who is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm of Sorbie (from the Scotts of Buccleuch) in 1672 and 1673. In 1673 he also leased the farms of Over and Nether Whitlawside and Bankhead. John (17th C.) recorded in 1663 when he paid the land tax in Wilton Parish for William Scott of Hartwoodmyres. It is unclear what the connection was between the 2 men, but he may have been a factor or other agent of some kind. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Westburnflat. His will is recorded in 1683. John (17th C.) resident at Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Mangerston according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been related to the 2 Jameses and ‘Arck’ who are also listed there. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Raesknoe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96, and ‘a quarter and a half’ in 1698. He was also resident at Raesknoe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John, married to Margaret Gray, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Janet (b.1673); Margaret (b.1676); Agnes (b.1684); and Marie (b.1686). The witnesses in 1676 were James Davidson and Robert Riddell. John (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Dr. John (1709–79) born in Castleton parish, eldest son and 3rd child of Robert, the minister there. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1721 and qualified as a doctor in 1732. He was a college friend of Rev. James Laurie, who became minister at Hawick: the pair apparently joined a band of gypsies during the vacation. He moved to London to practise, probably following the literary success there of his countrymen Thomson and Mallet, whom he befriended (Thomson wrote some lines that are probably about him in ‘The Castle of Indolence’). He also got to know Rev. Alexander Carlyle, who mentioned him in his autobiography. He published several articles, including a parody on quack doctors in 1735 and an annotated translation from the Italian of a treatise on venereal diseases in 1737. However, his fame was established by the (anonymous) appearance of a sex manual for newly weds entitled ‘The Economy of Love’ in 1736, whose authorship later became known. The somewhat licentious tone (for the times) of this piece may have compromised his medical career. He is also known for the publication in 1744 of the highly popular didactic blank verse work ‘The Art of Preserving Health: A Poem, in Four Books’; this was often reprinted throughout the next century, including in Hawick in 1811. He became physician to the London Soldiers Hospital in 1746 and was appointed physician to the forces in Germany in 1760, but returning on half-pay following the end of the Seven Years’ War. He was acquainted with Tobias Smollett and was a close friend of the Border poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), whose deathbed he attended in 1748. He is said to have sent the chair that once belonged Thomson to his fellow surgeon, Gilbert Elliott of Wells. He also wrote ‘Mucher’s or Guzler’s Diary’ (1749), ‘Of Benevolence’ (1751), ‘Taste’ (1753), ‘Sketches, or, Essays on Various Subjects’ (1758, as Launcelot Temple) and ‘Miscellanies’ (1770). In 1765 the College of Physicians summoned him for practiseing without a license, ending his medical career. He survived well on his army pension, however, and was able to travel extensively, publishing ‘Short Ramble through some Parts of France and Italy’ in 1771 (also by Lancelot Temple). About 1773 he is said to have quarrelled with his friend the radical John Wilkes, and got... to know the Swiss painter Fuseli. James Boswell described him as ‘a violent Scotsman’, and he was known for drinking, swearing, sarcasm and melancholy. However, he is said to have mellowed in his last decade. He died at his Russell Street home, following an injury getting out of his carriage. His brother John (also a doctor) joined him in London in 1748 (and along with his daughters) inherited his estate when he died. An annuity also went to his older sister Margaret, who had cared for him in London. He is buried in the Castleton parish graveyard at Sandholm, the large obelisk monument being inscribed with 12 lines of verse, ending with ‘To learning, worth, and genius such as thine, How vain the tribute monuments can pay, Thy name immortal with they works shall shine And live when frailer marble shall decay’. His portrait was painted by Joshua Reynolds in 1767. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1779, where he is described as ‘Doctor of Physic’ or Russell Street, Covent Garden. John (d.bef. 1760) referred to as being ‘in Berryhill’ in Northumberland when he bought the lands of Weens from John Scott in 1744. His trustees sold the estate to Adam Cleghorn in 1760. He may have married Dorothy Forster. He may be the same as John of Berryhill and Hayhope (1722–73), who married Jean Ormiston. John (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Jean Elliott and their children included Jean (b.1743). John (18th C.) farmer in Whitaugh in Castleton Parish. In about 1750 he is recorded in business transactions with Robert Elliot in Braidside. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Jean (b.1754); Isabel (b.1756); Elizabeth (b.1758); Christopher (b.1759); William (b.1760); and Walter (b.1762). His son Christopher could have been the schoolmaster in Hawick, with either William or Walter being teacher at Teviothead. John (1714/5–1800) tenant at Longcleuchside. He married Jane Murray, who died at Anthoytown in 1812, aged 67. They had a son John (1791/2–1818). They are buried at Ettleton. John (18th C.) married Agnes Lorraine in Wilton Parish in 1751. John (1721/2–89) tenant in Burnmouth. He married Helen Nixon, who died in 1826, aged 92. Their children included: John, who died aged 3; and Adam (1764/5–1808). They are buried at Ettleton, next to Armstrongs from Solwaybank and Heughhead. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish who married Janet Scott in 1761. These children, baptised in Kirkton (with no mother’s name given) could be his: John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); William (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); and Robert (b.1771). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Easter Grundistone, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 7 horses at that time. He was also recorded on the Dog Tax Rolls in the same year. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falside in Southdean Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. John (1760/1–1816) mason in Castleton. He married Isabella Marshall, who died in 1836, aged 73. Their children were: Janet (1798–1829), who died in America; Walter (1800–34), also a mason; and John (1802–65), also a mason; and Elizabeth (1804–53). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He is probably the John, son of Walter and Janet Veitch, born in Castleton Parish in 1763 (who is buried in the next lair). John (d.1828) baker of the High Street who was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His son John was also a baker, with shop at about 3 High Street. His other children included Andrew, George, Isabella and Elizabeth. John (d.1829) farm steward of ‘Parkhouses’ (or Packhooses, near Burnhead). He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick, and first Chairman of the Session. He is probably the ‘John, Parkhouse’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John ‘Cout o Keilder’ or ‘Muckle Jock’ (18th/19th C.) son of a shepherd. Known for his considerable strength, he was a great wrestler. Tancred of Weens describes how a young Cout was digging a ditch at Keilder when he came across the Duke of Northumberland out shooting; seeing he was scared by the gun, the Duke passed it to him, and tossed his hat in the air to shoot at, which the Cout shot to tatters with both eyes tightly closed. He was shepherd at Ruletownhead, Wauchope Common, Hyndlee, Dykeraw and Lethem. But he was also said to have an argumentative temperament and be difficult to deal with. Another story is when he helped the drunk Southdean minister into his horse, the minister saying ‘Now John, ma man, dinna tell ony body that we were fou’, although he himself was sober at the time. He had a large family. His children included: a daughter who married a shepherd called Young; a daughter who was servant at the Tower Hotel, and said to have once thrown a difficult guest down the stairs; and a third daughter who kept the lodge gate at

Mellerstain and is said to have nursed her daughter until the age of 13. His brother was ‘Sookin Sandy’, said to have been suckled by his mother until he was 20! One of his grandsons was coachman at Wolfelee 1866–7. He became a pauper in Southdean Parish and was buried in the Kirkyard, just on the right inside the gate. His coffin was 7 feet long, and his grave, although marked by no stone, was distinguished with a long mound of earth. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Larriston. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 (separately from the mason). John (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He is listed amongst heads of households in 1835–41. However, he does not seem to be on the 1841 census. He is probably the John who in 1818 married Agnes Scott, sister of ‘Wat o the Knowe’. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) were: Agnes (b.1819); Isabel (b.1821); John (b.1824); Betty (b.1826); John (again, b.1828) also a mason; and Margaret (b.1831). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of the Cross Keys Inn, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.1795/6) mason in Newcastle, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably the mason John who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the mason of that name at Whithaugh Mill in 1835 and 1836, and Newcastle 1837–41. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at about 2 Mid Liddel Street. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Stone Mason (Waller & Hewer)’. He married Janet, daughter of William Glendinning. Their children included: Mary (b.1836), who married John Kyle; Agnes (b.1838), who married Walter Elliot; Betty (1841–48); and Janet (1843–48). Note that he is distinct from the other mason John, who was married to Jane Elliot. John (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Woodfoot Slitrig’. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. John (1802–65) mason in Newcastle, son of John and Isabella Marshall. In 1851 he was at about 6 Douglas Square. He married Jane Elliot, who died in 1860, aged 77. Note that there were 2 masons in Newcastle with the same name at this time. John (b.1805/6) shepherd at Pleaknowe in Hobkirk Parish. He was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was at Pleaknowe with Elizabeth, probably his mother, and several other people. In 1861 he was still unmarried and living with his sister Helen, 2 servants and 8 lodgers who were working on the railway. John (b.1807/8) shepherd at Riccarton, recorded as head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1838 and then in 1840 and 1841. He was at ‘Riccarton roadend’ in 1851, which is probably the same as Steeleroad-end. His wife was Betty and their children included William, Jane, Grace, Christian, Isabella, John, Mary, Hellen and Adam. John (b.1807/8) blacksmith at Dinwoodie in the southern part of Castleton Parish. He is listed there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Henry, Joseph, Ann, Eliza and Margaret. who moved from Rulewater to become head shepherd in the north of Scotland for the Earl of Seafield. In 1833 he married Janet, daughter of James Armstrong, farmer at Greenriver. He was given the lease of West Lees on the Wells estate (it is said this was on the basis of his father-in-law voting for Sir William Elliot of Stobs). He was recorded as farmer at West Lees in the 1860s. He wrote some verse, including some which was read at the Burns centenary celebrations in Rulewater in 1859. One of his children was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. He died at West Lees and was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. John (c.1809–56) 4th child of William and Betty Elliot, he was born at Binks. He worked as a shepherd, possibly at Buccleuch. In 1829 he married Vair (or Veronica) Scott, who was from Ettrick and said to have some family connection with Sir Walter Scott. They emigrated to Australia in 1839 with their children William, Robert Grieve, Thomas, John and Jemima, with Peter Brown Palmyra being born on the voyage (and named after the Captain and ship). They settled at Bush Station, later part of Geelong. He developed a reputation for being the best-informed sheep-farmer in the district, and was the first in Victoria to introduce dipping to prevent insect pests. He was one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church in Geelong and a trustee of the Scotch College in Melbourne. His wife died in 1877, aged 68. John (b.c.1810) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. He was listed there in the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. In 1851 he was farmer of 40 acres. His wife was Janet and their children included William, Helen, Margaret, Jemima, Agnes, James and Janet. He could be the farmer in the Rule valley who was son of William. John (b.1815/6–89) from England, he lived in Castleton Parish. He was shepherd at ‘Guilfoot Upper’ in Castleton Parish in 1851; he was then living with his niece Elizabeth. In 1861 he was shepherd living on South Hermitage Street with his brothers Hugh and Thomas, sister Sibella (1823/4–96) and niece Jane. He is buried at Ettleton. Bailie John (b.1818) son of John and Ann Henderson. He carried on as a baker on the High Street. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at about No. 3, and he was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was unmarried and his sister Elizabeth worked with him as a shopkeeper. He was probably the Bailie John who was heavily involved in the removal of the auld Mid Raw and in the purchase of Wilton Lodge later in the 19th century. John (d.1905) from Hawick, he was a baker who settled in the Guelph area of Ontario. It has been suggested that he is the same as the Bailie recorded in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1854 he married Margaret Thomson and their children were Isabella, John, Annie, Margaret and Elizabeth. His first wife died in 1864, aged 57. In 1870 he secondly married Agnes Aitken and their children were Agnes, Robert, Andrew, James, Annie, Jannie, Elizabeth, Mary and George. In Guelph he co-founded the McCrae & Armstrong Woollen Mills, with David McCrae, and they employed many men from the Hawick area as weavers. Later his family started the Guelph Carpet Company.

John (b.1824/5) son of clogger Lancelot. He was listed as ironmonger and also tin-plate worker at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was an iron-monger, living with his parents on Silver Street. He was ironmonger at 6 Silver Street in 1861. He was already a widower by then. His children included Alexander and Mary. His sister Mary married John Riddle and their daughter Ellen Riddle was famous for her pies.

John (19th C.) 2nd son of Adam and grandson of the schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He lived in Russia, where he took the name Ivan Adamovich. He may have been director of the Alexandrovski cannon works between about 1833 and the late 1840s (although there may be some confusion with his brother Robert Lindsay). The name ‘Armstrong’ appears on some cannons that were used during the Crimean War. He may have married Adelaide Rosen in St. Petersburg in 1843. His wife died in Dresden in 1882, and willed 3000 roubles in her father-in-law’s memory, for the poorest craftsmen of the Olonets iron works.

John (b.1828) mason in Hawick, son of John and Agnes Scott. His mother was sister of Walter Scott (‘Wat o the Knowe’) and it is said that on his father’s side he was connected with the Duke of Roxburgh’s family. In 1861 he was living at Wilton Dean. His wife was Jane and their children included John, Margaret and Agnes Scott. John Scott (1868–1944) born in Selkirk, son of Charles and Isabella Scott. He was a tweed designer with Pringle’s and then worked at a mill in Peebles and then Langholm. In 1892 he married Agnes Elliot in Hawick. He was distantly related to the astronaut Neil Armstrong. Joseph (b.c.1785) from Northumberland, he was a farmer at Demainholm in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Hugh (a sheep dealer), Thomas, Eliza, Sibella and Christopher. Lancelot ‘Lancie of Whithaugh’ (16th C.) possibly son of Andrew and grandson of Simon. He is recorded as ‘Lancy armstrong’ at ‘whythaugh’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. In 1562 he had a bond with the Warden to produce ‘Chyrtse Armstrong, called Christy the Bwll’. In 1569 he was ordered to enter as pledge for his branch of the Armstrongs, with his sureties being Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme and Andrew Ker of Falldonside. Also in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Archibald of Mangerton and Martin Elliot of Braidlie, to ‘Rowie Forester’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’. Later in 1569 he was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for his eldest son Simon, as well as ‘Syme of the Manis’ and John ‘of Quiththauch’. In 1570 he gave assurances, along with Archibald of Mangerton and Martin Elliot of Braidlie to ‘Rowie Forester’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘to keip Lancy Armstrang of Quiththauch’. In 1573 David Wemyss of that Ilk stated that his father had released ‘Lancy Armstrong to libertie upoun band’, and hence he should not be liable. In 1578/9 he promised to make his tenants and servants answerable to the Privy Council. Also in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; he had pledged, along with Sim of Mangerton, that they would present any of their friends and servants who ‘offendit againis the subjectis of England or Scotland’ with 6 days warning, under pain of 2000 merks, but was found to have defaulted. Later in 1578/9 he again promised that his tenants and servants would be answerable to the Warden of the West Marches. Also in 1578/9 John Carmichael had caution to enter him and Sim of Mangerton before the King and Privy Council. In 1579 his son Archie was released from prison as a pledge and replaced by another son, Francis. In 1580 he was ring-leader for a group of Armstrongs and others (perhaps 300 men) who ambushed a group of Scotts, Gledstains and El- liots on their way back through Liddesdale after trailing a group of thieves into England, following...

a raid at Meikle Whitaugh; Walter Gledstains was killed and about 40 prisoners taken for ransom, including Walter Scott of Goldielands. After the complaint to the Privy Council, and their non-appearance, he and his followers were declared rebels (including his sons Sim, Archie and Andro). Also in 1580 it was stated that Martin Elliot of Braidslie had reset him and his sons and nephews, and his supporters and servants joined the Elliots when they raided the farm of Slaidhills. He may have been the Laird whose son Francis was recorded in 1580/1 and who was the ‘Old Lard of Whitaugh’ accused with the Young Laird and others of raiding into England. Also in the 1580s he accused a group of Taylors from England of stealing silver and other goods from his lands. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was allied with Simon of Mangerton and Martin Elliot of Braidslie when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. He was specifically said to have taken Clem Nixon prisoner. Additionally in 1581 he was surety for Francis, his son, who had been pledge for the ‘gang’ of Gorrenberry. And lastly, in 1581 he had a bond of caution with a number of Elliots, entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel for the non-appearance of his supporters who had been accused of raiding Eilrig, Bellendean and other farms (this included his sons Francie and Andrew, as well as Ninian of Tweeden). In 1581 he was cautioned and in 1582/3 was found liable, along with several Elliots, for not entering Rob Elliot of the Park. Along with Sim of Mangerton and 2 Elliots, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. In 1583 he was ‘The larde of Whitaugh’ among the men considered by the English to be principal offenders in the West Marches. In a letter of 1583 from Thomas Musgrave back to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor his closest relatives are named. He is the olde lord of Whetaugh’, with his son Simon being, ‘the yonge lord’. Others are referred to as ‘his brother’ etc., but it is unclear whether it is his brothers or the young laird’s: ‘the Lady’s Andrew’; Archie, his brother; Francie, his brother; John, called ‘of Whetaugh’; Hobbie, his son; Jock, his brother; Ringan ‘Gaudee’; Ringan of Tweeden; Hector of Tweeden; and Jock of Tweeden. It is also claimed in 1583 that he was responsible for slaying the Englishman ‘Will Noble of the Crew’. In 1584 he was ‘Lancey Arnestrange of Whithawghe’ when he signed the bond of assurance for all of his house, dependents and servants; this included ‘Eckkie’ of Tweeden, ‘beinge one of my howse’. He is probably the ‘Lard of Whitaugh’ accused (along with the Laird of Mangerton and their accomplices) of a raid into England in 1587 in which 3 men were killed and 10 taken prisoner. In 1587 he requested that the Laird of Wemyss accept his kinsman Archibald Armstrong as ward ‘as ane of my awine bayrnis’; Archibald, who was son of the ‘Laird’s John’, was stated to be his ‘neyr cowsein’ and also the son of his wife’s brother (which means his wife was also an Armstrong, daughter of the Laird of Mangerton). The request was accepted in a letter from James VI himself, and in another letter a few months later the King orders that his son John replace Archibald in ward in Wemyss Castle. It was suggested in an English letter that in 1592 Sir John Carmichael and the Laird of Cessford would meet to get him to surrender as a pledge for ‘Wythawgh and his howse’. Later in that year the Duke of Lennox and Laird of Cessford arranged to meet with him at Redheugh, but there was some confusion, leading to Cessford attacking him and his followers; however, eventually he surrendered along with his son Andrew, to appear before the King at Jedburgh. There was a complaint in 1597 against him, Francis of Whithaugh and David ‘bredsworde’ for a raid into England. In 1598 there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. In 1599 he was ‘Lancie Armestrang, elder of Quhitauch’ when he was among the Armstrongs who signed the bond (at Branxholme) with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch promising to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale in any complaints from south of the Border; ‘young Lancie Armestrang, sonne to Sym of Quhithauach’ is also listed, and was presumably his grandson. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. Although it is unclear when exactly he died, he was probably succeeded by his son Simon (who perhaps effectively took over when he was still alive, but an old man). Andrew, Archibald, Francie and John are likely to have been other sons; Andrew, Francis and John were listed as outlaws in an English letter of 1601 and said to be sons to the ‘auld laird of Whithaugh’. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ (16th C.) listed as ‘alias Bonybutis’ in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. It is un clear where his lands might have been. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ of Whisgills (16th C.) recorded in 1587 when Englishman Andrew Routledge complained of a raid on his lands. Others named were the Laird’s Jock and Dick of Dryhope, so he may have been related to one of them. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ (16th C.) son of Simon of Mangerton. In 1599 he was one of the leading Armstrongs and Elliots to write to Lord Scrope in an attempt to get their family hostages freed from England. He may be the same as one of the other Lancelots. Lancelot ‘Lancie of the Side’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Lancie of the Syde’ in the trial of several Armstrongs and others for the murder of Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches. He was listed after ‘Sym of the Syde’, who was probably his father or brother, or otherwise he was one of the sons of ‘Sandy’s Ringan’, the main instigator of the incident. Lancelot ‘Lancie of Whithaugh’ (b.1579/80) eldest son of Simon of Whithaugh. He was a landowner around Hawick in the mid-1600s. He is probably the ‘young Lancie Armeastrang, sonne to Sym of Quithaugh’ who was among the Armstrongs who signed the bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) of the West March in 1599. In 1600 he was said to be 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. He may have succeeded to Whithaugh after Simon or an earlier Lancelot. In 1611 he was ‘younger of Quithaugh’ when he was fined (along with Francis of Westburnflat and his brother John) for the non-appearance of Lancie and Simon, sons of Francis. He is probably the Lancelot of Whithaugh listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; Alexander of Roan ‘brother of the young Laird of Quithaugh’ was also listed, and hence probably his brother. He is probably the ‘Lancie in Quithaugh’ who was on the jury for the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler, in 1616. In 1623 he served as a cautioner (along with Sandy in Harden) for John ‘callit Pousholme’. In 1632 he was recorded as possessor of the lands of Westburnflat, Belses and Whithaugh. He is described as ‘Lancelot Armestrang of Quhithauch’ and as a tenant of ‘Belsches’ in Liddesdale when removed as Buccleuch’s tenant in 1638. He is probably the ‘L. Armstrong, Qhithaugh’ whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643. He is probably the man recorded as ‘Lancelot Armstrong in Whythaut’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Lancelot ‘Lancie of Cattheugh’ (17th C.) recorded as a thief in the mid-1600s. It is possible he is the same as Lancie of Whithaugh. In about 1645 he, along with ‘Geordie Rackesse’ and others, stole about 80 cattle from England, and on the way back there is a humourous incident involving an English curate. The minister pleaded with the men to return his few animals, since he was so poor; they said they would do this if he would preach to them, which he refused, then they said all he needed to do was pray with them, which he also refused, and finally they gave him back his beasts when he agreed to take snuff with them! It is stated that the owner of the 80 cattle, Roger Harbottle, tried to bargain with him, but he replied that his family were due the ‘blackmail’ for many years, which his father and grandfather had formerly been paid for ‘protection’. He is recorded as ‘Lancelot of Cattheugh’ when ordered to appear at Selkirk in 1645. Lancelot (1785-1860) from the Langholm area, son of John and Mary Telfer. He was a clogger in Hawick who was ‘Preses’ of the Relief Kirk Session. He is listed at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is on Silver Street. His wife was Helen and children included: Margaret; John, who was an ironmonger; Ann; and Adam. An unnamed son of his died in 1840. Margaret (17th C.) recorded as resident at ‘mylnholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Martin (16th C.) brother of David ‘the Lady’. Along with his brother and also Andrew, son and heir of Simon of Whithaugh, he was granted the lands and goods of the deceased Simon of Whithaugh by the King in 1536. It seems likely he was a younger son of Johnnie of Gilnockie, and so other brothers of his included Simon and Christopher. Either he or a different Martin was tenant of Blackburn in 1541. Matthew (16th C.) accused in 1590 along with ‘Robin the Tailor’, Ringan of Tweedden, ‘Alexander’s Airchie’ and Adam Elliot of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner. He may have been related to some of the Armstrongs he rode with. Matthew (16th/17th C.) brother of William ‘the Bauld’. In 1611 in Jedburgh his brother acted as cautioner for him, his name being given as ‘Matho Armemstrang’. Perhaps the same Matthew was among Armstrongs and Elliotts accused of a raid in 1590 by William ‘Loren’.

Michael (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Michell Armstrang, called Michell’s Thome’, making it unclear if he was Michael or Thomas, and how he might have been related to other Armstrongs. Mr. ?? ‘the Tailor’ (17th/18th C.) teacher at Teviothead in the early 1800s. He was brother of Christopher, teacher in Hawick, but his first name is not recorded. He was the first teacher of young Tom Jenkins, who had come to the area from Africa in about 1803. He was said to he ‘noted for occasional fits of severity, during which punishment was indiscriminately applied to deserving and undeserving’. He would also reward well-performing students by allowing them to punish their poorly behaving classmates. Mungo (16th C.) recorded as keeper of the King’s flock in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540. His name is given as ‘Kantigerno Arminstrang’. It is unclear where he was keeper of the flock, and hence how he might have been related to other Armstrongs.

Mungo (16th C.) listed among a group who the Bailie of Hexham complained had stolen horses from ‘Medhop’ near Haxham in 1579. His nickname was given as ‘Flie the Gaist’. It is unclear where he came from, but ‘Niniane Armestrang, called Gawdie’ (from the Whithaugh branch) was also listed, and so possibly related. Mungo (16th C.) servant of the Laird’s Jock. Along with another servant, Jock, he was in 1590 accused of being with ‘Bangtail’, John of the Hollows and ‘the Bungle’ when they were said to have stolen sheep from ‘Heatherie burne’ in England. Mungo (d.1740s) Town Herd for the animals kept by Burgesses on the Common. In 1723 it was decreed by the Bailies and Council that he should be continued as Herd ‘there being none to object against him’, but it is unknown for how many years he had served before this. He was continued again at a meeting in 1725 and in 1726 was allowed two ‘soum’ of sheep for keeping up the shiel on the Moor, with an annual allowance of one ‘soum’ thereafter. He was known as a strenuous promoter of the Town’s rights to the Common, and for his integrity in defending it against encroachers. He is said to have had the best of dogs, and his prowess at protecting the herd (which could reach as many as 100 score of sheep and cattle in the summer months) was legendary. Apparently he got strong support in protecting the Common from the Town Clerk, but after Walter Gledstains died in 1739, he complained that there was none to assist him in defending the Common. He appears to have been reappointed for the last time as Herd in 1744 and died in the later 1740s. Note that he should not be confused with the later cooper of the same name (who was probably related, perhaps his nephew). He could be the Mungo who married Margaret ‘Wetch’ (i.e. Veitch) in Hawick in 1724 or the Mungo married to ‘Isobell Mu-ture’ whose son Mungo was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1720. Mungo (b.c.1705) son of shepherd Adam, he grew up on the farms of Whitchesters, Alton Croft and Goldielands, assisting his father. He served 5 years in the army and became a cooper in Hawick. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. Given the similarity in the names, it seems likely that he was related (nephew for example) to Mungo the former Town Herd. He may be the Mungo whose children Francis (b.1743) and Betty (b.1744) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. It may have been his daughter Jean who is recorded marrying James Stodart in Edinburgh in 1770. He may be the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Rae in 1778. He may also be the ‘Old Mungo’ whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in about 1810. Mungo (18th/19th C.) farmer at Yethouse in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Hannah Turnbull. His son James is on the Militia List for 1797, and again in 1801, along with another son, Francis. Ninian (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when David, son of James in Hassendean, had remission for a series of crimes. This included accompanying him in the theft of 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell. It is possible he is the same Ninian recorded in 1502. Ninian (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 in a remission for the crimes committed by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches. Along with Scott, Archibald Armstrong and David Turnbull of Bonchester ‘and other Treators of Levin and Liddal-isdale’, he was said to have stolen several horses from the tenants at Minto, along with burning and stealing goods. Also in 1502 Adam Scott in ‘Hawchesteris’ (probably Highchesters) had a remission for associating with him and Archibald, as well as William Scott and their accomplices. And in that same year Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including the ‘treasonable in-bringing’ of him and Archibald. Ninian (16th C.) son of Christopher and brother of Archibald. He is listed along with several Armstrongs and others when they were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. Along with David, he had a ‘letter of reversion’ and ‘bond of manrent’ in 1528 with George, Lord Home, involving lands in Over Ewesdale. Possibly the same Ninian witnessed a sasine for Melkledale in 1537 (along with George, and Mungo Armstrong). He may be the ‘Ryngeard’ whose sons George and Simon are mentioned in a bond of 1557. He may also be ‘Rynziane’ who had a bond with the Kerrs of Feniehirst in 1548 to enter 2 Fosters. Another bond at about the same time, along with Hector was for entering Andrew, so these may have been relatives. He may be the ‘Ringen’ listed along with Archibald, Simon and Jenkin in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid; they may all have been brothers (the wording is ambiguous). It is possible that he was the Ninian of Arkleton whose great-grandson Ninian inherited his lands of Arkleton in 1622. Ninian (16th C.) son and heir of David, who (along with another Ninian) had a charter for the lands of Over Parish of Ewesdale in 1524. He produced the original in the presence of the superior Alexander, Lord Home and had it copied. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Ninians. Ninian (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as possessor of ‘Arnothill’. He may be the same Ninian who had the neighbouring lands of ‘Welstremis’. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded as tenant of Ralton, along with Robert and Thomas. And one more Ninian was tenant, along with Bartholomew, of the lands of Whisgills, Purvinen and ‘Vtonmound’ in 1541. Ninian (16th C.) recorded being ‘of the Buss’ in 1569. Andrew ‘of the Gyngillis’ was pledge for him, as well as several other Armstrongs.

Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.bef. 1583) probable father of Simon of Whitlawside. In the 1583 letter from the English wardens the Armstrongs of Whitlawside are listed, starting with ‘Ringan’s Archie’ and ‘Gorthe Armestronge some to Rynyon’, then Simon of Whitlawside and another son of Ringan, ‘Aby’. It seems likely he was father of all 4 men. It is possible he was the same man as ‘the Laird’s Ringan’. He may be the ‘Renzen Armstrang’ who, along with Archie Nixon, had a bond in 1548 to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) son of Hector of Harelaw. He was probably the Niniane Armstrang brethir, servandis to the said young Hector, along with Rowie, for whom the older Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He is recorded as son of Hector of Harelaw in 1574, when ordered to remain in ward with John Colquhoun of Luss. He was warded with David Barclay of Cullerny in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council; however, it seems he was transferred to John, Lord Maxwell. He was ‘Ecktors Rynion’ among a large group of Elliots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He was also ‘Renyon Armstrong son to Ector’ listed among Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of reviving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. He was presumably related to other Armstrongs of Harelaw. Ninian ‘Edmond’s Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He was listed as ‘Edmondis Rinyane in Claythleyth’ (which could be ‘Claygate’). Ninian (16th C.) recorded in 1585 as ‘of the Neis’ among a large number of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell, all of whom had respite for their crimes in 1585. It is unclear where the location was, but probably around Eskdale, like many of the others he is named alongside (possibly near ‘Naze Hill’). His son Christie is also listed. The similarity of names suggests a close connection with other nearly contemporary Ninians. Christopher in ‘Neis’, along with his brothers Thomas and John were among those complained about by Alexander, Earl of Home in 1610. Ninian ‘the Laird’s Ringan’ (16th C.) son of the Laird of Mangerton. He is probably the Ninian, listed along with his brothers ‘Rowy’ and Ninian, when Christopher of Barnglies was surety for them and other Armstrongs. He is listed in the 1583 letter from the English wardens about the chiefs in Liddesdale. He is there called the lordes Runyon and living at Thorniewhats. Probably the same ‘Rinyane Armstrang’ was listed in 1581, when the man he had been warded with, ‘David Berclay of Cullerny’, stated that he had been delivered to John, Lord Maxwell. He was probably a son of Archibald, since in 1581 he (and ‘Rowe’) were described as ‘father brethir to the Laird of Mangertoun’ who was Simon at that time. In 1584 he was ‘the Larde Ryngie dwelling in Debaitable land’ who signed the bond with the English Wardens, along with his brother ‘the Laird’s Rowe’. He is also recorded in the long 1585 remission as ‘the lairdis Niniane’, along with ‘Joke’ his son. ‘The Laird’s Rowe’ (also mentioned in 1583 and 1585) was his brother. He is surely also the ‘Laird Rinzian’ on Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs published about 1594; ‘Lairdis Robbie’ and ‘Rinzian of Wauchop’ are also listed as part of his gang. In 1595 his son Edward was one of those who accused Elliots and others of raiding their farms. Ninian ‘Ringan’, ‘Gaudee’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh in 1583. He was probably a brother or nephew of Lancelot of Whithaugh. He is probably the ‘Niniane Armestrang, called Gawdie’ who was among a group who the Baillie of Hexham complained had stolen horses from near there in 1579. Mungo, ‘called Flie the Gaist’ was also listed and so possibly related. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Auchenbadrigg’ in 1580/1 when there was a caution for his son Tom. He was listed (apparently twice) as being ‘in Auchenbedrigg’ in the comprehensive 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. ‘Sim, Thomas and Robert Armestrangis’ are listed right after him, and so possibly related. In 1597 he was ‘of Aughenbedrigg’ in a complaint by Captain Musgrave and other Englishmen against him for stealing 600 head of cattle, 20 horses, 600 sheep and goats, and the goods from 20 houses. He was listed in an English letter of 1601 among men accused of the slaughter of the Warden, Sir John Carmichael. He is listed as being ‘in Auchinbedrigg’ in the West March, along with his sons ‘Thome, Hew, Lantie, Waltir, Archie, and Dand’. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission of men from Dumfriesshire as being tenant at Broomholm, along with ‘Johne, Ekie and Antonie Armestrangis their’. ‘Rowe’ is listed as tenant in the same place, so probably another close relative. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) brother of ‘Dickie of Dryhope’. In 1590 he (along with his brother) was part of a group of Armstrongs and Croziers accused by Ralph Anderson of ‘Davisheile’ of stealing oxen and ransoming an Anderson prisoner. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Gingills (16th C.) listed in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He is recorded as ‘Renyon Armestrong of the Gyngills’, along with Will Elliot of Fiddleton, making it likely his lands were in Ewesdale. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Wauchope (16th C.) recorded in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is listed as part of ‘Lardis Rinzians Gang’, along with the ‘Laird’s Robbie’. He is probably the ‘Niniane Airmestrang of Wauchopadal’ recorded in 1569 along with ‘the Lairdis Rowy’ and John (son of John’s Christie), as the men for whom Christie of Broomholm was held as pledge in Dupplin Castle. Ninian ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ (d.c.1605) son of Alexander, probably ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, making him brother of Kinmont Willie. He was listed in 1569 along with Archibald, as brothers of ‘Will of Kynmonth’. In 1569 he may be the ‘Niniane Airmistrang’ listed along with ‘Will of Kynmonth’ and ‘Cristie Armstrang brother’, as those to be exchanged for ‘Aby Airmistrang’, who was a pledge held in St. Andrews Castle; these men were surely closely related and may all have been brothers. In 1580 his son Tom was warded with Lord Hay of Yester. In 1581 his son ‘Rowe’ was warded with Lord Maxwell, along with ‘Cristie Armstrong’. He is probably ‘Sandies Rynyon’ in 1582 when listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope; his brother Archibald was also listed. He is recorded in 1583 as ‘Sandes Rynyon’, along with his son Thomas. In 1600 he accompanied his son Thomas, as well as ‘Lancie, Hew, Archie and Watt’, probably also his sons, and other Armstrongs and supporters in an attack upon Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches, in which Carmichael was killed. He was also ‘Sandies Rynyon and his bayrrs’, who burned a mill of the Johnstone’s and raided ‘Bengall’, before being reset by Geordie’s Sandy. He is probably the ‘Sandy’s Ninian’ whose son David was executed for murder and fire-raising in 1604. One account of the incident with the Warden Carmichael states that ‘a broder of auk Williame Airmstrayngis of Kemewnt, quha was callit Alexander Airm strayng, alias Sandeis Ringand’ was the person responsible for the start of the affair (although this is surely confused between father and son, it nevertheless seems clear he was related to Kinmont Willie). The story goes that he met with the new Warden to sound out, but the Warden’s companions put egg yolks in his scabbard and mocked him. So on the following day he rode out with his sons and killed Carmichael with a shot from a ‘hagbut’. He is probably the ‘Sander Rynion, a rebellious malefactor’ recorded in an English letter of 1605 after he was apprehended. Whether he was executed is unclear, but likely. Ninian (16th/17th C.) listed among the Armstrongs and their followers who were tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House, stealing cattle etc. He is named as ‘in Tortwne’, which could feasibly be ‘Tarcoon’, west of the Hollows. John Michaelson and Christie Armstrong, ‘Nan’s Christie’ are also listed in the same place. Ninian ‘Rowe’s Ninian’ (16th/17th C.) recorded among the Armstrongs and others who were tried in 1605 for the burning of Langholm House and other crimes in 1581. He was tenant in ‘Murthome’, which is just to the south of Langholm. Charges against him were dropped. However, he was among men complained about by Archibald, Earl of Home in 1610. Ninian ‘New-maid Ringan’ (d.c.1605) tried in 1605 along with Will of Rowanburn for assisting and resetting the King’s rebels. These specific outlaws were John Murray of Staplegordon, ‘Cuddie’ of Bankhouse, Christie of Langholm, Andrew of Langholm (possibly Armstrongs) and John Beattie of the Shiel. He was convicted and sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Tweeden (16th C.) from the Tweeden family, he was brother of Hector and Jock. In 1576 there was an order to allow him to be released from ward with Sir David Wemyss, as pledge for ‘the gang of Quhitzauch’. In 1579 he is recorded as ‘Rynione’ among 400 Armstrongs and followers are said to have killed Uswold Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8); Eckie of Tweeden was also listed. He was recorded among the Armstrongs involved in the ambush of Scotts, Gledstains and others at Whithaugh in 1580. He was ‘alias Tweeden’ in 1581/2 when accused (along with his servant, who was another Armstrong, and others) of leading a group that raided the farm of Bellendean, stealing 60 sheep; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He is ‘Rynyon Armestronge called Rynyon of Twedon’ when listed among the near relatives of Lancelot of Whithaugh in 1583; Hector and Jock of Tweeden are also mentioned, presumably his brothers. In 1590 he was accused along with ‘Robin the Tailor’, Matthew, ‘Alexander’s Airchie’ and Adam Elliot of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner. Also in 1590 he was accused, along with Ingram of Castleton and ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Croizer, of stealing sheep from the Herons of Chipchase, and 6 months later of stealing horses from the same place. He is probably ‘the Taylor’ listed in 1590 along with Douglas, Laidlaw, Turnbull, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croizers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Trogwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. He was ‘Niniane Armestrang of Tueden’ among the 180 followers of Sir James Johnstone who had respite in 1594 for the killing of Lord Maxwell and others. He may be one of the 3 Armstrongs from Tweeden who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was ‘Niniane Armestrang of Tueden or of the Maynis’ among the Armstrongs who signed the bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) of the West March in 1599. Probably the same man was accused in 1606 of murdering Andrew Smith and dismembering the nose of Thomas Tweedie. He was referred to as being ‘callit Ninian of Tuedane’. Archibald, ‘Fair Airchie’ and Andrew Henderson, servant of the Laird of Mangerton, were also accused. Robert Scott of Haining acted as surety. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th/17th C.) recorded among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was ‘in Tyneis Burne’ and presumably related to other Armstrongs of Tinnisburn. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Arkleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when his son ‘Ebie’ was declared a fugitive and in 1611 when ‘Ebie’ failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. Also in 1611 his son Francis was acquitted of charges in Dumfries court. He may have been father of the Ninian who inherited Arkleton in 1622. He may also have been father of Esther, who was heir-portioner of Arkleton and married John, 2nd son of William Elliot of Falnash. Jean was probably another heir-portioner (and hence his daughter or other near relative) when she gave her permission in 1623 for Robert Elliot of Falnash selling the farm to Adam Cunningham. Ninian (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1612 of aiding John, Lord Maxwell, who was on the run for murder. Along with ‘Johnne Amulliekyn, in Cruikis’ (probably John Milligan) he hid Maxwell and bought him a gun and shoes in Dumfries. He is stated (by Pitcairn) to be ‘Ninianes Thome’, but this is surely an error for ‘Tom’s Ninian’. He may have been son of the Tom who was involved in the death of Sir John Carmichael in 1601. The pair were said to have kept Lord Maxwell at ‘the Langwoild and Schillingtonehill’, which were probably near Langholm. He was sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Ninian of Whitlawside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 as a member of the commission under Sir William of Cranston for keeping peace on the Border. His name is listed as ‘Niniane Armestrang of Whitslysyd’. He was surely related to the earlier Ninian of Whitlawside. Ninian of Arkleton (16th/17th C.) served heir to his great-grandfather Ninian of Arkleton in 1622. He may have been son of the Ninian recorded a decade earlier. Ninian (16th/17th C.) recorded being

‘in Nershill’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Ninian (17th C.) along with Jock, he is recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Greenses’ in Liddesdale. This is probably the modern Greens near Newcastle. Abie, who was convicted of murder in 1623 was probably related to him. Ninian of Auchenbedrig (d. bef. 1641) along with his sons was possessor of the lands that had probably belonged to his family for generations. In 1641 they were granted to Sir Richard Graham. Ninian (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Shiel and their children included: Adam (b. 1745); John (b. 1747); Grissel (b. 1749); James (b. 1751); Isabel (b. 1755); and Ninian (b. 1762). Paton (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Pawtie Aramstrong of the Harlawe’. He was probably brother or other close relative of Hector of Harelaw. It is possible he was the same man recorded in 1585. In 1590 he was ‘Pawtie of Harlawe’ when among men accused of rieving from Bewcastle. He was ‘Pawtie of Harelawe’ in 1596, among Armstrongs and Eliots accused of being part of several raids into England. He could also be the ‘Petti Armstrong’ who was burned in a tower in 1602 by the English, claiming that he had been one of the murderers of the Warden Sir John Carmichael. The name could be a diminutive of Patrick or Peter. Paton (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as ‘Patone Armestrong’. He was tenant at Betholme, along with George. It is unclear whether his first name was a nickname or corruption of some other name. Later in the list comes ‘Niniane Armestrang, sone to Patonis Niniane’, who may therefore be a relative. Paton (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was ‘of the Hill’, although it is unclear where this was. John of the Hill was also listed. Peter (1727/8–91) herd at Wells. He married Elspeth Armstrong, who died in 1791, aged 63. Their son John died at Doveshaugbraehead in 1807, aged 45. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Peter (18th/19th C.) born in Hawick, was a herd boy at Brauxholme. He emigrated to Canada about 1812, settling near Perth, up the St. Lawrence River. A few years later he coincidentally met Tibbie Paterson, who had been ‘byre-woman’ at Brauxholme. The pair married, had 3 children and for many years lived in a clearing deep in the woods of Lanark County. Quentin (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when said to have been involved in a raid on Bewcastle, along with Fosters, Watsons and 20 other Scotsmen, in which Michael Purdom was killed. His name is recorded as ‘Whynyn Armstrang’. Quentin (16th C.) head of a group of Armstrongs and Littles who raided the farm of ‘Hairhoip’ in Tweeddale in 1582. He is recorded as ‘Quintene Armstrong, callit Pawtonis Quintene’, and hence was presumably son of Paton. The family were probably from Ewesdale. He could be the same as the Quentin recorded in 1585. Quentin (16th C.) recorded in the comprehensive 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as ‘Qjuinting’. He was brother to Christie in ‘Carren’, as well as brother to Andrew and Geordie. His son Christie is also listed. Richard ‘Skaw’ (15th/16th C.) probably from the Liddesdale area. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’ had a remission for ‘resett’ing’ him in his thefts, particularly for stealing 200 sheep from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’, also with the help of Alexander Scott. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘Richardi Armstrong’ when Andrew Tait had remission for associating with him. Richard ‘Dickie of Dryhope’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Dik Armstrong of Dryup’ in a list of 1583, among the near relatives of Simon of Mangerton. It was stated that he lived at ‘Hyghe Morgarton’ (i.e. ‘High Mangerton’) and married a Scottish woman. He is recorded in 1586 along with ‘Lard’s Jock’ of raiding into Bewcastle and recorded in 1587 as ‘Dick of Dryupp’ when (along with the ‘Laird’s Jock’ and ‘Lancie of Whisgills’) he was accused by Englishman Andrew Routledge of stealing cattle and goods. In 1590 he was part of a group of Armstrongs and Croziers accused by Ralph Anderson of ‘Davislehe’ of stealing oxen and ransoming an Anderson prisoner; his brother Ringan is also listed. Also in 1590 there is a complaint by the Stories of ‘Peilehill’ that 2 years earlier ‘Dick of Driupp, the Whisgills, and 100 men’ killed ‘a mylner, John Tailior, and William of the Park’, as well as burning the mill and 12 houses and stealing 100 cows. Additionally ‘Hecky Noble’ complained in 1590 that he had led a group fo about 100 Scotsmen ‘burnying to dede his soune John, and his wief great with child’, as well as burning 9 houses and stealing 200 cows’. Furthermore he is ‘Dick of Dryupp’ listed in 1590 when accused among Armstrongs and others of rieving from Bewcastle. He is ‘Dick of Dryupp’ mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5, but said to not be in Liddesdale. He is said to have been leader of the Armstrongs during the rescue of Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may have been a younger son of

Thomas of Mangerton. It is unclear where this Dryhope might have been – ‘Now Dickie of Dryhope led that band, And the nevir a word o lear had he’ [T]. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Riche Armstronge called Carhaud’. He was probably related to the Armstrongs of Chingills and of Whittlawside. It is unclear what ‘Carhaud’ refers to. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Ekkes Riche’ among the Armstrongs of Langholm. He was thus presumably son of an Alexander or Hector. Richard (18th/19th C.) hosier in Hawick. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. Richard (19th C.) resident of Kershopefoot, recorded in 1879. Richmond (1810–40) son of Southdean schoolmaster Thomas. He took over from his father for a few years, from about 1837. He is recorded as schoolmaster at Southdean in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert ‘Cuthberto’ (15th/16th C.) younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. In 1494 he was accused of stealing cattle along with other Armstrongs. He may be the Robert listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been hanged along with other family members in 1530. Robert (16th C.) listed in 1541 as tenant of Ralton, along with Ninian and Thomas. He may be the same man as Cuthbert, brother of Thomas, Laird of Mangerton; both Thomas of Mangerton and Cuthbert were tenants of Over Gubbislie. Richard ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He was listed as ‘in Millangilsyde’, but it is unclear where this was. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) son of Andrew of Gingills. There was a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573. Robert (16th C.) probably distinct from Hob, son of Andrew of Gingills. In the same year, 1573, he was recorded being re-entered in Blackness. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when Lord Maxwell gave caution for him and his uncle ‘Cristie Armstrong of Auchingavill’. In 1582 James, Earl of Morton, was given a decree of forfeiture for failing to produce him and Christie. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (16th C.) probably son of John, called ‘of Whithaugh’, and hence likely to have been grandson of the Laird of Whithaugh. He is noted in a 1583 list of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and said to have married a daughter of Jamie Foster of Stane-garthside. He is probably the Hob of Whithaugh recorded along with Simon of Whithaugh, among Armstrongs accused in 1587/8 of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. Perhaps the same ‘Hob of Whithaugh’ is recorded in 1590 among several Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He may also be the ‘Hob of Whithawigne son to John Eamont of Hillhouse’ accused with other Whithaugh Armstrongs of stealing from the ‘Cragells’ of ‘Walton wode’: however, it is unclear whether ‘Eamont’ is somehow Armstrong, or Elliot, or something else). He may be the ‘Robine Armstrong of Whithaugh’ listed in 1590 among other Armstrongs accused of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington; the others named were Hob ‘the Tailor’, Airchie (son to the old Laird of Whithaugh) and Alexander’s Airchie. Robert ‘Hob the Tailor’ (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding the English farm of Middleton Hall in 1589. Some others listed lived in Hobkirk Parish, but it is seems likely he was from Liddesdale. He was also accused (along with Rutherford, Laidlaw, Crozier and Elliot) of rieving from Woodburn in 1589. In 1590 he was accused along with Ringan of Tweedmen, Matthew, ‘Alexander’s Airchie’ and Adam Elliot of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner; his name was recorded there as ‘Robine the tail-or’. Also in 1590 he is recorded along with ‘Edward Elliot son to Davye’ when accused of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase, and separately listed with ‘Quentin’s Airchie’, ‘Adey Farlamdes’ and Hob Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ of stealing horses from the same place a couple of years earlier. Additionally he is probably ‘Hob the tayleer’ listed in 1590 along with other Armstrongs and Elliots, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. He was further accused in 1590, along with Airchie (son to the old Laird of Whithaugh), Robin of Whithaugh and Alexander’s Airchie, of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington. Note that there appears to have been a contemporary Elliot with the same forename and nickname, so it is possible there was only one man and confusion about whether he was an Armstrong or an Elliot. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘Reid Neb’ (16th C.) probably a brother or other near relative of ‘Reid’ Andrew. The pair are probably the ‘Andrew and ‘red nebb’ Hob Armstrong’ listed among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590. Robert ‘Robbie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘the Laird’s Robbie’ along with ‘Lairdis Ringiane’ and ‘Rengan of Wauchope’ on Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He may have been brother of Ringan (i.e. Ninian), but it is unclear which Laird would have been their father. He could be the same as ‘the Laird’s Rowie’. Robert ‘Robbie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Langholm’ when listed among those said by an English informer to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was perhaps brother of Christie of Barnglies, who was listed along with him. His name is given as ‘Robby of the Langholm’. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Quhithauch’ when he was listed among men convicted and executed in Jedburgh in 1611. It is possible that he was the Robert associated with Whithaugh who was recorded being ‘in the name of the farm not recorded.

Rev. Robert (1661–1732) 2nd son of John, physician of Kelso, he was licensed by Chirnside Presbytery in 1691 and admitted as minister of Castleton Parish in 1693. He married Hannah Tennant (who died in 1702) and later Christian Mowat (who died in 1753, aged 78). His children included: Margaret, who later cared for her brother John in London; John (b.c.1709), who was a doctor, poet and essayist, famous in his day for ‘The Art of Preserving Health’; George, who was also a doctor and medical writer; William (b.1710), who succeeded him as minister of Castleton; Helen; and Elizabeth. Robert (1716/7–1821) resident of Liddesdale. He was described as being ‘of a cheerful, kind, and serious deportment, and pursued hard labour with continued perseverance till the autumn before his death’. He died at Dinlabyre, at the age of 104. Robert (18th/19th C.) landlord of the Tower Hotel, taking over after Michael Stevenson died in 1789. He was there for 10 years, when his wife died and he found that he had amassed £10,000. He then purchased a farm near Langholm, married a younger woman and settled there. He was recorded as a vintner in Hawick in 1790 when he paid the tax for having a female servant as well as a male ‘drawer’, and for having a waiter in 1791–97. He was also recorded as a vintner in Hawick on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was surely the ‘Robert Armstrong Post Master in Hawick’ who was taxed as owner of 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1790/1, 1791/2 and 1792/3 (that could be the same carriages owned by the previous proprietor of the Tower Inn). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Stobs in 1797, when he was working for Sir William Elliott. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Glendivan in Ewesdale in 1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Bailie Robert (1770–1853) younger son of William, schoolmaster in Hobkirk, and brother of Adam, who was in the Russian service. He was a grandson of Rev. Robert Riccalton of Hobkirk, and it is said he was a direct descendant of Johhnie of Gilnockie. He was a printer, publisher, bookseller and druggist in Hawick, as well as serving as Magistrate from 1814. He was recorded as a printer in 1801 when he witnessed a baptism for William Brown (and another in 1802 for John Wilson, whose wife was Ann Armstrong). He was Hawick Postmaster in the period 1809–52. He seems easy to confuse with another Robert, who was landlord at the Tower Inn in the 1790s, being recorded as Post Master in some of those years when taxed for owning carriages. His business was on Silver Street (about No. 6) and later at 29 High Street. He started as an apprentice with Dr. James Wilson (of Otterburn) in Hawick, but at the end of the 19th century was working as a clerk for the British Chronicle in Kelso. In 1796 he wrote a spoof letter, based on a story he heard from Wat Inglis, which was duly published, leading the authorities to think that revolution had broken out in Hawick! The Chronicle went defunct and he purchased their printing press, moving with it to Hawick, and essentially taking over as local printer from George Caw. He was said to be extremely diligent at editing and overseeing the presses. At least 44 publications came from his presses, including many fine book, such as the ‘Banquet of Euphrasone’ (1811), and the works of local ministers Dr. Somerville and Dr. Charters. It was said that he refused to publish James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ because of the verse that attacked the Hawick Bailies. When Gilbert Burns (brother of the poet) wrote to Hawick, declining an invitation, it was to him the letter was addressed. He also sold books and succeeded Mr. Inglis as Hawick postmaster. He was listed as a printer and bookseller on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory, as well as librarian of the Subscription Library there. He was still listed as the librarian in Slater’s 1852 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a bookseller and printer. He was said to be ‘very doubtful, haughty and not well liked’, but possessing a great amount of energy and common sense. When he was first informed that he was a Bailie, Caleb Rutherford, waiting for his customarily dram, instead was sent flying into the street and onto a heap of dung. He may have firstly married Ann Fraser, and had children including Jean (b.1805) and Adam (b.1809). In 1836 he married Elizabeth Waldie, who was recorded living with him in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. They had a large family, all of whom pre-deceased him (his 2nd daughter Margaret and youngest daughter Jane, both died of typhus in 1817 aged 17). Agnes (b.c.1800 in England) was also living with him in 1841, and was surely a relative. His wife was listed as a widow (as well as Proprietress of Property & Librarian) at 5 Silver Street in 1861. After he was buried at Hobkirk, the inhabitants of Hawick erected a monument there. A silhouette portrait of him exists. Robert Lindsay (1788/9–1863) son of Adam, who was born in Hobkirk Parish (and not son of William, as incorrectly marked on his grandfather’s gravestone at Hobkirk), with his mother being Isabella Lindsay from Jedburgh, who had attracted Burns’ attentions in 1787. Like his father he entered the service of the Russian emperor, where he was known as ‘Roman Adamovich Armstrong’. He must have attended school in Jedburgh, where his great friend was Thomas Shortreed, later Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He was sent back to Scotland to attend Edinburgh University, where he befriended Sir Walter Scott. He became metallurgical chief in his father’s Olonets ironworks and from 1843–58 was Director-General of the Imperial Mint in St. Petersburg, with the rank of Lieut.-Gen. in the Russian service, and was named a member of the Expert Committee of the Corps of Mining Engineers. He died in St. Peters. Note there is some uncertainty over the years of his life, which are also given as 1791–1864. His son, Col. Armstrong, was said to have been the owner of Mary Queen of Scots’ House in Jedburgh. Robert (19th C.) postman in Newcastleton in the 1860s, living on Langholm Street. He could be the 70-year old labourer living at 2 Langholm Street in 1861, with his wife Mary and daughter Agnes. Robert (b.1829/30) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Langholm Street with his brother Alexander. Later in the 1860s he was on Douglas Square. Robert Bruce (19th C.) author of ‘History of Liddesdale’. He was a friend of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Robert ‘Bert’ (1924– ) official Common Riding Song Singer 1973–84. He has lived all his life in Hawick and worked in the mills. His signature song is ‘Oh Lord it’s hard to be humble’ which led to him briefly playing No. 8 for Hawick in his 80s. He received the M.B.E. for services to entertainment in 2002. He sings ‘The Hawick Callant’ and recites ‘Robbie Dye’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’. He was recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project in 2004. Roland ‘the Laird’s Rowie’ (16th C.) probably son of Archibald of Mangerton. In 1569 he is ‘Rowy Armstrong callit the Lairdis Rowy’ when listed along with John (son of John’s Christie) and Ninian of Wauchopedale, as the men for whom Christie of Broonholm was held as pledge in Dupplin Castle. He was probably also the ‘Rowy’ listed in 1569 along with Sim and Ninian, sons to the Laird of Mangerton, when Christopher of Barnglies was surety for them and other Armstrengs. He may be the ‘Rowy Armstrong in Brintschillhill, callit the Landis [probably ‘Lord’s] Rowy’ who was warded with Alexander Stewart of Garlees in 1574; however it is unclear where ‘Brinitscheilhill’ was. He is probably the man transcribed as ‘Robe Armstrongis’ in 1581 among Armstrongs and others who complained to the Privy Council about several actions by Scotts and their allies. He is stated there to be brother of Ringan and ‘father brethir to the Laird of Mangertoun’, who was Simon. He is listed in 1583 among the chiefs of Liddesdale, among the men said to be closely related to Simon of Mangerton. He dwelled in Tarra-side and married a daughter of Auld Archie Graham. In 1584 he was ‘the Larde Rowye’ who signed the bond with the English Wardens, along with his brother ‘the Laird’s Ringan’. He is also recorded in the long 1585 remission as ‘the lairdis Rowe’, along with ‘Johne and Ringane and Thome’ his sons. ‘The Laird’s Ninian’ (or ‘Ringan’) was his brother. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with other Armstrongs who Hector of Harelaw served as pledge for. He is listed along with his brother Ninian, the pair probably being sons of the elder Hector of Harelaw and ‘servandis to the said young Hector’. Roland ‘Rowe’ (16th C.) listed in 1580 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle and ordered presented to the Privy Council. This was along with Sandy’s Christie, a nephew of Sim’s, Tom and Gavin Elliot, son of Scot’s Hob. He is also recorded in 1581 as ‘Rowe Armstrang, son to Sandies Rinyane’ when he and Christie were warded with Lord Maxwell. Roland ‘Rowe’ of Broomholm (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with others Armstrongs who Hector of Harelaw served as pledge for. He is listed along with his brother Ninian, the pair probably being sons of the elder Hector of Harelaw and ‘servandis to the said young Hector’. Roland ‘Rowe’ (16th C.) listed in 1580 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle and ordered presented to the Privy Council. This was along with Sandy’s Christie, a nephew of Sim’s, Tom and Gavin Elliot, son of Scot’s Hob. He is also recorded in 1581 as ‘Rowe Armstrang, son to Sandies Rinyane’ when he and Christie were warded with Lord Maxwell. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1623 when ‘Scabbit Hob’ Nixon was accused of stealing sheep from his tenants of Mangerton. It seems likely that she was widow of an earlier Laird of Mangerton. Serge (16th C.) recorded in the long remission of 1585 for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. He was the brother of Kinmont Willie, although it is unclear if his name was a nickname or short for something. He is listed in 1585 among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, his name transcribed there as ‘Forge Armstronoge called Sandes Forge’. It is possible the first name is an error for something else. Simon ‘Sim’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510 among a list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes from the Privy Council. Thomas, George and Alexander are also listed, so were possibly related. He might be the same as Simon of Whithaugh. Simon ‘Meikle Sym’ (d.1527) said to have been killed by John Johnstone of that Ilk. This act intensified the feud between the Armstrongs and the Johnstones. It is unclear which branch of the family he came from. Simon of Whithaugh (d.bef. 1536). He may be the eldest son of Johnnie of Gilnokie. In 1525 he had a ‘letter of reversion’ to George, Lord Home (presumably acting as superior) for his lands in Ewesdale. This included Mospesbee, Unthank, Fiddleton, Moss-paul and others. By 1536 he was deceased, having been executed for his crimes. His lands and goods were forfeited to the King and then given to his son and heir Andrew, together with David, called ‘the Lady’ and David’s brother Martin (who may have been his brothers also). In 1537 his ‘takkis, stedings and wodsettis’ in Ewesdale were granted to Robert, Lord Maxwell. Simon ‘Sim the Laird’ (16th C.) listed in an English letter of 1525 as one of the chiefs of the Armstrongs, along with Davie the Lady and others, who were captured by the Earl of Angus. He is also recorded in 1531/2 as ‘Sym Armstrong, callit the Laird’ when he and Clement Crozier had remission for burning Little Newton, as well as the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knycht, in cumpany with Inglismen’. He is also listed in 1535 among the Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. His name is given as ‘Symon Armstrangle, called Sym the Larde’. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Whithaugh. In 1535/6 he was further convicted of stealing 2 oxen from Craik and a horse from Howpasley, as well as having the theft of 100 cattle from Craik repeated. Other crimes stated include burning and stealing 60 cows from Howpasley, stealing sheep from ‘the King’s shepherds, furth of the lands of Braidlee in the Forest’ and assisting Alexander (‘Evil-willit Sandy’) and others while supposedly being in the King’s ward. The sentence was hanging and forfeit of all his lands and possessions. Simon (16th C.) tenant of the lands of ‘Wowlyk’ (probably the modern Woolhope) according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was listed as ‘serjendo’ (i.e. sergeant), suggesting he held an official role, perhaps as assistant to the Keeper of Hermitage. He may have been related to other Armstrongs who were tenants of farms near Copshaw. He could also be the same as Simon of Tinnisburn. Either he or another Simon was tenant of Nether Foulwood, Wedoshiels, Staneygill, Redmoss and Flatt in 1541. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as joint tenant, with Christopher, of the lands of ‘Dalferno’ in Liddesdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. Simon (16th C.) listed along with Archibald, Ringan and Jenkin in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid. Some of them were brothers, perhaps all of them. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon ‘Reid’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘rede Sym’ in 1541 when he was listed among Scotsmen who had reset English rebels. In his case he reset ‘Jenkyn Nykson’. His nickname (presumably meaning ‘red’) may distinguish him from other contemporary Simons. In 1569 he was ‘Sym Armistrang of the Wodheid callit Reid Sym’, listed among men that Archibald of Mangerton was pledge for. One of his sons was listed in 1569 among men for whom Thomas (brother of the Laird of Mangerton) was held as pledge; he is listed as ‘sone to Reid Sym’, with no forename given. Simon (16th C.) possibly a descendant of Simon of Whithaugh. He is recorded as ‘Sym’ in a bond of 1556 to present Richard Nixon. He may also be the ‘Syme Armstrang, son to Ryngand’ who is recorded in a bond of 1557 involving his brother George, as well as Hector of Harelaw and Thomas of Chingills, who may have been close relatives. Simon ‘Wanton Sim’ (16th C.) one of the men accused of treason in 1567 for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. He was summoned to appear at the market cross of Jedburgh, suggesting he was from Roxburghshire or Liddesdale. Not appearing, he was convicted of treason and sentenced to the ‘hieast punishmest destinat of the lawis of this realme’. He was listed in 1569 as ‘Sym Armistrang callit Wantoum Sym’, among fugitives from Harelaw. If he survived he may be the ‘Wanton Sym in Quhitley Syde’ listed in about the 1580s. He married 2 English women, the 1st being a daughter of Robert Foster and the 2nd being Thomas Graham’s daughter. Simon ‘Sym’ of Tinnisburn (16th C.) son of Thomas of Mangerton. In 1537/8 he was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He was presumably the Simon who was tenant of ‘Tynneswood-grene’ in 1541 and may also be the Simon who was tenant of Woolhope at the same time (however, it is possible these were different generations). His son was ‘Symmis Thome in Tynneisburne’, who was recorded in 1580 when his nephew was warded in Blackness Castle. His son Francis was convicted of theft (along with other Armstrongs, Elliots and Nixons) in 1580/1. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Sym Armistrang alsua his brother’ among men for whom Thomas ‘brother to Mangertoun’ was held as a pledge in Castle Semple. This suggests that he was not the same man as Simon of Mangerton, but there may be confusion over names and relationships. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men who Archibald of Mangerton served as pledge for. His name is given as ‘Symon Armistrang callit the Feid’. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Simon (d.c.1600) 9th Laird of Mangerton, son of Archibald. He was also called ‘Sym of Tweeden’. He was probably the ‘Sym’ listed in 1569 along with Ninian and ‘Rowy’, all sons to the Laird of Mangerton, when Christopher of Barnglies was surety for them and other Armstrongs. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had pledged, along with Lancie of Whithaugh, that they would present any of their friends and servants who ‘offendid againis the subjectis of England or Scotland’ with 6 days warning, under pain of 2000 merks; however, it was ruled that their supporters had ‘not keipit gude reule, bot hes offendit againis the subjectis of Scotland and England’. Also in 1578/9 John Carmichael had caution to enter him and Lancie of Whithaugh before the King and Privy Council. In 1581 he was allied with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Also in 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was probably the Laird of Mangerton who was accused in 1582 by Englishman Sir Simon Musgrave of burning his barns full of grains; the ‘Laird’s Jock’ and ‘Sim’s Thom’ (possibly his son) were also mentioned. Along with Lancie of Whithaugh and 2 Elliots, he was also denounced by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. He is listed as the Laird of Mangerton in the letter of 1583 from Thomas Musgrave listing the chief men of Liddesdale. In 1583 he was ‘The laerde of Moungerton’ among the men considered by the English as principal offenders in the West Marches. He was taken prisoner in 1583/4 and held at Carlisle, the comment being that ‘his taking is greatly wondered at for it was never heard that a laird of Mangerton was taken in his own house either in peace or war without the hurt or loss of man’. He was accused of being on a raid into England in 1587, along with the Laird of and Whithaugh, John of Kinmont and about 600 others, in which 15 houses were burned, 24 men taken prisoner and £900 worth of livestock and goods taken. In 1587 it was said by Lord Hunsdon that he and James Chisholme helped save Captain ‘Bellows’ from being killed in a fray, and instead had him taken prisoner. In 1590 there was a complaint against him by the tenants of ‘Längupp’ in England for the theft of livestock and goods. There is also a letter to him from Bothwell in 1589 encouraging him to hunt venison with the Laird of Whithaugh and Martin Elliot (for the King’s wedding), but to refrain from attacking the tenants of Francis Dacre while he was the King’s guest in Edinburgh. However, in 1590 Bothwell and others promised to the English Wardens to deliver him to the King. Still, in 1590/1 there was a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and other leaders to deliver him and about 50 other Armstrongs, Elliots, Croziers, Nixons, Beatties and Scotts. He is recorded as ‘Sym of Mayngertoun’ at the head of the list of Armstrongs who signed a bond with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to be responsible for any complaints by the English against the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He was accused in 1593 of being part of a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots who raided Tynedale, but the King’s Council were ‘credlebelie enformede that Mangerton was not att this attempte’. In 1597 he was still listed among demands for pledges by the English Warden, and was recorded being delivered to Lord Scrope as a prisoner in Carlisle. He is ‘Sym of Mangerton’ when listed in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands about a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who had been stealing from his lands. In 1599 he is among a group of Armstrongs and Elliots who wrote to the English Warden requesting that they place 4 of their men into custody as pledges. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Foster of Kershopefoot. His sons included: Archibald, who succeeded; ‘Hingle’ (or ‘Ungle’); Simon ‘of Runchbach’; and Lancelot, who was also recorded in 1599. He is probably also the Laird of Mangerton whose daughter married Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. His initials and those of his wife (‘SA–EF’) are recorded on an armorial stone built into the ruins of Mangerton Tower. Some genealogies have his death in 1583, but it must have been later. Simon ‘Sim’ of Puddingburn (16th C.) recorded in an English letter (written by Henry Leigh) of 1600 as a notorious riever of the Borders, who was ‘abroad with his gward of theeves, to rob the passengers to the fayre’. It seems likely this was an Armstrong, but since there is no other mention of this man, he may simply be the same as Simon of Mangerton (or a fabrication). Simon ‘Geordie’s Sim’ (16th C.) probably from Ewesdale, and possibly son of George in Arkleton. He was part of a group of Armstrongs and Littles who raided the farm of ‘Hairhoip’ in Tweeddale in 1582. He is recorded as ‘Sym Armstrong, callit Geordeis Sym’, and listed along with Quentin, son of Paton. Simon ‘Young Sim’ (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the near relatives of Simon of Mangerton. He was probably a cousin of the Laird. He lived at the Flatt and married a daughter of ‘Robin’s Rowie’ Foster. Simon of Whithaugh (d.1606/7) eldest son of Lancelot of Whithaugh. In 1569 his father was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for him, ‘Syme of the Manis’ and John ‘of Quhithauch’. In 1576 he was listed as the son and heir apparent of Lancie when several Border Lairds were surety for him ‘that he during all the days of his life sould continewe ane obeydient subject . . . and on na ways commit thift’; this pledge was deemed to have been broken by 1578/9, when his sureties were Lancie of Whithaugh, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Walter Scott of Goldielands, Sim Scott tutor of Thirlestane and Robert Elliot of Reidheugh. In 1579 he was ‘Sym Armstronge younge Lard of Whithaugh’ who along with 400 Armstrong followers are said to have killed Uswold Dodi, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8). In 1580 he was probably the son of Lancie of Whithaugh, who was involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is probably the ‘Young Lord of Whitaugh’ accused in 1582 by the English (along with the Old Laird and others) of stealing livestock and goods and killing 4 men. And additionally there was a complaint against him and 24 others for a raid on ‘Caphetton Whithouse’ in 1583. Also in 1583 he was the yonge lord his sonne’, appearing right after his father Lance on an English list of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He is probably the young Laird accused of being on a raid on the tenants of ‘Haddinbriggs and Rattenrawe’ in England in 1587, along with the Laird of Mangerton, Jock of Kinmont and about 600 others. He was listed among those accused of another raid in 1587, on the tenants of the Laird of Bellister, along with his brothers Andrew and Francis, as well as other Armstrongs and Ellots; his servant ‘Alexanders Archie’ was also listed. He is among Armstrongs accused in 1587/8 of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. He is probably also the ‘Sim Armstrang of Whithaught’ who complained in the 1580s of a raid from the English side, stealing 800 sheep from him. He is probably the ‘young Laird of Whithaugh’ accused of being on a raid on Bewcastle and Gilsland in 1588, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Laird of Chisholme, when they are said to have run into English watchmen and killed 4 of them. In 1590 he was ‘Syme Armstrong of Whithawghe’ when accused, along with Will Elliot of Gorrenberry of rieving from the Lord Warden’s tenants. He is listed among the accomplices of Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell, who tried to capture the King in 1592. He is probably the same ‘younger of Whithaugh’ who was declared a traitor in 1593 for assisting the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably ‘Sym Armestrang, younger, Larde of Cahill’ transcribed in 1595, among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. He is probably the ‘young Laird of Whithaugh’ reported by an English informer to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, along with his son (who is not named, but perhaps Lancelot). He was also referred to in the same way when there were complaints in 1596 about raids into England by him and others. In 1597 he was among Liddesdale chiefs demanded from the English Commissioners as hostages; there he was ‘Symy Armestaunds o young laid of Whittasse’. It seems that he and the other prisoners were held in York, and when they were not released after a reasonable period (according to custom), they tried to escape, when he broke his leg and they were recaptured. In 1600 there was an offer to replace him as a hostage with his son Lancelot, which was rejected; however, he and William Elliot of Larriston escaped soon afterwards. In an English letter of 1601, listing ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’ can be found the names ‘Sym Armstrong of the Rone, Archie and Sandy Armstrongs his brothers, all three sons to Sym of Whithaugh’. In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar (Commissioner for the Borders). It is unclear who, succeeded to Whithaugh after his death, but perhaps Lancelot (with Alexander of Roan as another son). Simon of Mains (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Armstrongs for whom Lancie of Whithaugh acted as surety. He is also listed in 1569 along with Simon (son of Lancie of Whithaugh) and John ‘of Quihithauch’, when Lancie of Whithaugh was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. This makes it clear that he was a different man (although probably closely related) to Simon of Whithaugh. His name appears as ‘Syme of the Manis’ in 1569. He is listed as ‘Sym of the Maynes’ by Monipennie in his c.1594 list of Border chiefs, after the Laird of Whithaugh and John of Whithaugh (presumably near relatives). He could be the origin of the ‘Sym of the Mains’ character in the ballad ‘Hobbie Noble’. Simon of Whitlawside (16th C.) leader of a branch of the Armstrongs in lower Liddesdale. His nearest family members are listed in an English letter of 1583 under the heading ‘The Armsestronges of Melyvonton’. This included: ‘Ringan’s Archie’; ‘Gorthe’, son of Ringan; Abie, son to Ringan; Will of Potterlamport; young ‘Gorthe’ of Arkle; Simon (son of Lancie of Whithaugh) and John of Whithaugh after his death, but perhaps Lancelot (with Alexander of Roan as another son). Simon of Calfield (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sym of Cafhill’ along with Willie in 1590, when they were listed among men accused of rieving from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland, one of the followers of Sir James Johnstone who was at Dryfe

Sands in 1593. He was among the 180 or so men who had a respite in 1594 for their part in the murder of Lord Maxwell. He is probably the ‘Sym of Calfhill’ mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5, but said to not be in Liddesdale. He and his brother Jock were among Ellists and Armstrongs complained about because of a raid to Whitehill in England in 1596, another on ‘Hawe-hills’ and also on 2 farms belonging to Christopher Dacre. He was listed as ‘Sym Armstrong of Caffield’ as an outlaw under the Laird of Buccleuch in an English letter of 1601, with ‘Thom Rannik his man’ also listed. ‘Symmie’ was probably his son. He was surely related to Jock of Calffield who is recorded a decade or two earlier. Sim ‘Sim of the Roan’ (16th/17th C.) son of Simon of Whithaugh and brother of Archie and Sandy. He is recorded in an English letter of 1601, listing ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’. He is listed as ‘Sym Armstrong of the Roane’, along with his brothers and several other Armstrongs and others. Sim (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sym of the Syde’ in the trial of 1601 for the murder of Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches, by a group of Armstrongs and others. ‘Lancie of the Syde’ was also mentioned, so probably his brother or son. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his brother John of the Side was also listed. He was probably also related to Christie of the Side. Sim ‘Simmie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Archibald and John. In 1601 his brother Archibald ‘Whitehead’ was recorded in an English list of ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’, with him and his other brother John also named. In 1611 Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, served as cautioner in Jedburgh for him and his brother John, both ‘called Quhytehead’. Sim (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘cal-lit Quhythauch, in Meidhoip’ in 1622 when he appeared before the Justiciary Court. He may have been related to the Armstrongs of Whitaugh. He may be the ‘Syme Armestrang, Quhiithauch’ who was accused in 1622 of stealing animals and goods on several occasions in 1619 (but was acquitted). Sim (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘callet of Tuenden’ in 1622 when he was cautioner for Robert Pringle, Bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch at the Judiciary Court. Sim (17th C.) listed as ‘Symmie Armstrong alias Caffield’ in 1642 among many ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. He is probably son of Simon of Calfield.

Sim ‘Archie’s Sim’ (17th C.) listed in 1642 among many Borderers who were wanted for theft and other crimes. He may have been a son of Archibald of Mangerton. Sim (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Quhistslyeside’, ‘sometime in Whitsdy’ and ‘in Whittyside’, this probably being Whittlawside in the lower Liddel valley. He was listed in 1642 among many Borderers who were wanted for theft and other crimes. In about 1645 he, Geordie of Kimmont, Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’ and Will and Francis of Woodhead were accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland. He was also recorded as ‘Sym Armstrong of Whittisyde’ at about the same time, when accused of leading a group that stole 80 sheep from ‘the Rukin, in Ridsdale’; they left the sheep near Kershopehead to go and find food, but when the owners managed to take them back. His house was said to be a rendezvous point for outlaws, and the location for a regular market for stolen goods. He was in prison in Selkirk in 1646 when William Scott wrote to the Earl of Buccleuch ‘God knows I lowe none off these roges bott I am ernestlie intreittit to speike for his leberttie be ane Ingliche gentellman quhom I have recewew severall kyn-desse off’. He is probably the ‘Simeon Armstrang’ who in 1646 was ordered by the King to be released, but banished from the Borders. He was probably related to the former Sim of Whitlawside. Sim (17th C.) resident at ‘Greins’ (probably Greens) in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably closely related to William, who was tenant in the same place. Sim (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as tenant of lands near Castleton, but with the name of the farm not listed. Sim (18th C.) resident of Southdean. His children included: Ann (b.1758); Bella (b.1762); Nelly (b.1765); and Thomas Andrew (b.1768), who was probably schoolmaster in Southdean.

Thomas of Mangerton (15th C.) son of Archibald, he was the 5th Laird. In 1482 he resigned the lands of Mangerton to the superior Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, in order for them to be infested in David Scott of Branxholme (although the lands appear to have still been held by the Armstrongs afterwards, so what happened here is unclear). His sons included: Alexander, who succeeded; George of ‘Ailmure’; William, ‘Iill Will’ of Chingills; and John of Whithaugh. He may have been known as ‘Bell the Cat’. Perhaps the same Thomas is recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; Alexander, Robert, Archibald, Andrew (son of Andrew) and William (‘Slitrig’) were listed after him, and may have been closely related. Thomas of Mangerton (d.c.1550) brother of Johnnie of Gilnockie, who was hung along with several other Armstrongs in 1530. He was probably the eldest son of Alexander, the former Laird. He was apparently known as ‘the Guid Laird’. In 1535 he was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for their raid on the farm at Craik, stealing cattle and goods and taking 3 farm servants prisoner. He was on the Tax Roll for Liddesdale in 1541, being tenant of Billhope and possibly also Millhouse and Mains (unless these were different Thomases). He was recorded as being ‘de Merjantoun’ in 1541 when he was tenant of the farm of Over Gubbisle along with Cuthbert (possibly his brother); he may also be the Thomas who was one of the tenants of Ralton, along with Robert and Ninian. He may also be the Thomas, ‘Sandy’s son’, who was listed among English rebels reset in Scotland in 1541; he was listed along with other Armstrongs, and reset by Hector in Tweeden. In addition he held some Liddesdale lands heritably, including Millholm, Langlands, Hawthornside, Ragarth, Sorbie and Sorbietrees. He was accused of helping the English on a Scottish raid in 1548. In 1548/9 he was surety for George and others with the Lord of Ferniehirst. He also had a bond in 1548/9, along with his elder son Archibald, to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst and a futher bond to re-enter his servants George ‘callit Gayvt’, George’s son George, Thomas Henderson, Alan Foster and Thomas Foster. In 1552/3 he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries and accept the charge of keeping the peace in Liddesdale; it is unclear if he was already deceased by this point. His sons included: Archibald, who succeeded; John of Puddington; Richard of Dryhope; Thomas; Simon of Tinnisburn; and Walter, ‘the Laird’s Wat’. Thomas (16th C.) listed as being in Greenshiels in 1535 when a large number of Armstrongs and others were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. The same crime was recorded again in 1535/6 when Simon Armstrong was again convicted of several thefts, and he was ‘alias Greneschelis’. Possibly the same man was tenant of ‘Grens’ and ‘callit the Bull’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale; ‘Greens’ is further down the Liddel, but the coincidence of the tenant around 1540 suggests the farms may have been connected. Thomas (16th C.) son of Sandy. In 1541 he was listed among English fugitives who were reset in Scotland, in his case by Hector Armstrong in Tweeden. His name is given as ‘Thomas Armstrong Sandy son’. It is unclear how he was related to other Armstrongs, e.g. Ingram and Anton who were also reset along with him. Thomas (16th C.) nephew of ‘Braid’ Christopher. He is recorded in 1541, when accused of having been on a raid with his brothers and cousins Anton, John and Alexander, when Englishman Henry Storie was killed. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Chingills (16th C.) recorded about 1548 when there was bond between him and John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter George Armstrong and others. His son Archibald is also mentioned. There is another bond of about the same time relating to Fosters. He could be the Thomas, son of ‘Will of the Cheingillis’ recorded in a bond of 1557 along with several other Armstrongs for presenting ‘Clement’s Will’ at Ferniehirst. This Thomas was also recorded as ‘of the Chyngillis’ in another bond of 1556 and ‘of the Cheynegillis’ in yet another of 1557. He was probably the Thomas ‘in Eskdaill’, brother of Andrew in ‘Gynghillis’, included among men that Andrew was surety for in 1569. He was also listed as brother of ‘Andro Armistrang of the Gynghillis’ in 1569 along with his son Willie and Andrew (his brother), when Andrew’s son Heckie was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He could be the Thomas ‘of the Gingillis’ mentioned in 1579 among Armstrongs who were in dispute with Lord Maxwell. His son Andrew was convicted of theft in 1580/1. In 1582 Lord Maxwell served as cautioner for the appearance of him and ‘Abye Armstrang of the Gyngillis’ before the Privy Council. In 1583 he was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale; he is there ‘Thome Armestronge of the Gyngles’. In 1583 he is ‘old Thome of Chengles’ when listed among the Armstrongs of the Whitlawside area; his sons ‘Abye’, Archie and Ringan are also mentioned, and separately Hector of Chingills, who must have also been related. Lord Maxwell gave caution for entering him and ‘Abye Armstrang of the Gyngillis’. He is probably the ‘Thome Armestrang of Gynghillis’ recorded (twice) in the 1585 long remission for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; this Thomas, son of Andrew, had his sons ‘Abe, Ringane, Cristie, Archie, Thome, Joke and Ade’ also listed. He is recorded as ‘old Thom Armestronge of the Gyngles’ in 1587/8 when accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584, stealing cows and horses, ‘spoiling 30 sheiles’ and ransoming 10 prisoners...

‘at the Slyme’; his son ‘younge Thom’ was also listed, as well as other sons ‘Eckie’ (presumably Hector) and ‘Alie’ (presumably Alexander). His tower in Ewesdale may be the one marked ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’ marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land; however, there is confusion between places of similar name in Liddesdale and Ewesdale. Thomas (16th C.) brother of ‘Paton’s Jamie’. He was listed among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. Thomas of Canoebie (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when his son David was held on a pledge of good behaviour by Robert Keith, Commissary of Deer. It is possible that he was a son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. If so then he would have been father of ‘Dave of Canoebie’, who is listed among Sandy’s offspring in 1583. David’s brothers (and thus his sons) were Willie and Jamie. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) son of Ninian of ‘Auchinbadrig’. In 1580/1 James Weir, younger of Blackwood, ‘Tom’ (16th C.) son of Ninian of ‘Auchinbadrig’, gave £2000 caution for him to remain in Edinburgh after being released from ward in the Tolbooth there. Thomas ‘Laird’s Tom’ (16th C.) probably son of Archibald of Mangerton. He is listed along with Simon of Mangerton in a letter from the English wardens in 1583. He was said to dwell in a place called ‘Hyghe Morgarton’ (presumably ‘High Mangerton’) and to be not married to an English woman (unlike several of his near relatives). It is likely he is the same man as ‘Thomas Armstrang brother to Mangerton’ who was held in Castle Semple in 1569, as pledge for his brother Simon, ‘Cristell’ and a son of ‘Reid Sym’. He may be the Thomas ‘callit Mangerton’ who gave a bond at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He could be the Thomas whose son John (‘sone to Thom of Mangerton’) is listed among many fugitives in 1642. Thomas ‘Hector’s Tom’ (16th C.) son of Hector of Harelaw. In 1569 he was held as a pledge in Glasgow Castle, for his brothers Hector and Willie and their father Hector of Harelaw. He was also listed as son of Hector in 1583. In 1601 he is ‘Ectors Thome the elder’ when stated in an English document to be ‘manifestly a chief councillor of his names men, &c., of Hairelawe’, responsible for robberies and murders over the previous 14 years, especially a raid in the previous Lent. Those reset by him included ‘young Ector, Willes Thome’ (probably his brother and nephew) and 4 Hendersons, who were all outlaws. Furthermore, he is said to have killed the eldest Henderson and extracted money out of the other 3. He was also accused, along with the Armstrongs of Gingles of stealing from and threatening Thomas Sandforth of Howgill for taking back his own stolen horse. Thomas (16th C.) brother of Hector of Chingills, listed among Armstrongs in an English warden’s letter of 1583. He married a daughter of George Routledge of ‘Shetbelt’. It is unclear how he was related to ‘Auld Tom of Chingills’, who was alive at the same time. He may be the ‘Thome of Glendoning’ listed in Monipennie’s roll of Borderers in the 1580s; he is listed under ‘Armstrangs of the Gygils’ along with ‘Ekke’ and Andrew Armstrong. He could be the ‘Androwes Thome, of the Gygles’ listed in 1583 as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale; he is recorded separately from Thomas of Chingills. Thomas of Rowanburn (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. He was probably a grandson of Sandy, and hence nephew of Kinmont Willie. His brother George is also listed. In 1592 he was complained about by Taylors on the English side, along with the Armstrongs of Kinmont and the Ivings called ‘Kunge’. Additionally he was named along with Will of Kimont and others accused by Roger Bulman of ‘Skailby’ of stealing his livestock and maiming him. Thomas (16th C.) listed in the comprehensive 1585 remission as being tenant in Craig (probably the one in Eskdale, north of Langholm). He was son of Alexander, possibly the one of the Chingills, listed shortly before him. He may be the Thomas of Craig who was given the wardship of Simon Elliot in Philhope in 1615. Thomas of the Wrae (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). Jock is listed immediately afterwards, so possibly a close relative. Thomas of Tinnisburn (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s when he complained about a group of Englishmen stealing 300 cattle, 6 horses and 800 sheep and goats from him. He is probably the ‘Symmis Thome in Tynneisburne’ recorded in 1580 when his nephew (with first name unknown) was warded in Blackness Castle. Thomas ‘Thomi’ (d.1601) son of ‘Sandyes Niniane’, his father was presumably Ninian and his grandfather Alexander. In 1580 he was warded with Lord Hay of Yester when ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He could be the ‘Thom Armstrang, son of Ninian Armstrong, of Auchinbadrig’ for whom caution was paid when he was released from Edinburgh Tolbooth. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several other Armstrongs, Elliots and Nixons. He is surely the same ‘sone to Sandeis Ringane’ who was convicted in 1601 of the murder of the Warden of the West Marches, Sir John Carmichael (although he is also referred to there as ‘sone to Ringanis Thom’, which is probably incorrectly given for ‘Ringan’s Thom’). Carmichael was said to be on his way home from ‘ane meitting at the fute-ball’ when he was attacked. There were around 20 men in the party, but he was judged to be the main instigator and suffered the most severe punishment. He was hanged in Edinburgh after having his hand cut off, and afterwards his body was hung in chains at the Boroughmuir gallows (this is the first known example of a criminal being hung in chains in Scotland). The nature of the dispute that led to the murder and hanging is unclear. It is said that while awaiting execution he composed the verses about Johnnie Armstrong of Gilnockie usually called ‘Armstrong’s Last Goodnight’. Thomas ‘Sim’s Tom’ (16th C.) presumably son of Simon. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh; his name was given as ‘Symmonis Thom’. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others accused of the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them; he is there ‘callit Symmys Thom’ and listed shortly after ‘Synam’ of Mangerton. In 1582 he was one of the Armstrongs (along with the Laird of Mangerton and the ‘Laird’s Jock’ accused of burning Englishman Sir Simon Musgrave’s barns full of grains. In 1583 he was ‘Symons Tome Armestronge’ among the men considered by the English as principal offenders in the West Marches. Also in 1583 he was listed among the close kin of the Laird of Mangerton; so it seems likely he was either son of Simon of Mangerton, or a cousin. He resided at Deinainholm and married a daughter of ‘Wat of the Hove End’ Storey from Eskdale. He was ‘Sym Thome Arnestrange’ in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens; this was along with ‘Reade Androwe Arnestrange of Kirkhill’, who was likely to be a close relative. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Kimmont Willie and Hector of Hillhouse, as well as Elliots, Croziers and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. Probably the same ‘Sym Thome’ was among several Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He is probably the ‘Smys Thome’ listed in 1590 along with other Armstrongs and Elliots, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. His tower is recorded as ‘Sim’s Thom’s’ on the other side of the Liddel from Mangerton on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. Thomas ‘Rowie’s Tom’ (16th C.) accused in 1587/8 among Armstrongs, including ‘old Thom Armestronge of the Gyngles’, of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. His name is recorded as ‘Rowyes Thom’ of Mangerton’, and hence he was related to Armstrongs of Mangerton, with his father presumably being Roland. He may be the Tom, son of the Laird’s Rowie recorded in the long 1585 remission for crimes of men of Dumfriesshire. Thomas of Mains (16th C.) accused in 1590 along with ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier, ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier and Ingram of stealing cattle from the Herons of Chipchase. He was also accused, with Ingram and ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier of stealing a horse from the same man on a separate occasion. His designation is given as ‘of Maynes’, which was probably Mains near Castleton. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.1606) servant of Lord Maxwell. He was convicted of being involved in the theft of a horse. Although the Border Commissioners queried his conviction (on the basis that the owner of the horse doubted his guilt), the Privy Council sentenced him to hang. Thomas ‘Boltsfoot’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1597 among Scotsmen complained about by the English Warden. He was said to have stolen ‘4 strikes and a oxe’ from the Laird of ‘Belyster’. Presumably the same ‘Thom Armstrong boutfute’ was listed among Englishmen accused of killing Scotsmen in 1596. Along with his brother Jamie ‘how neif’ and Tom Storie, they were accused of killing George Chisholme, ‘hird’ to Sir Robert Ker. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Ectors Willes Thome Scottesman’ in 1601, when his crimes were complained about by the English. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Hector, and may have been nephew of ‘Hector’s Tom’. He was accused of taking part in several raids into Gilsland and other areas. Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of Andrew of Kirkton, this probably being the lands near Sorbie. In 1606 he was listed among men declared as fugitives. In 1611 his brother Andrew acted as cautioner for him and his brothers, Jock and Lanie’, that they would leave Scotland. Thomas ‘Merchant’ (16th/17th C.) acquitted of the crime of murder in 1609, along with Andrew of Langholm, ‘Ebbie’ of ‘Kirktonehill’, James of Canonbie and John Murray

‘in the Cruikis’. His own name is recorded as ‘Thomas Airmestrang callit the Merchead’. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Archibald who had the same nickname. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘Antons Edward Tom’ in 1606/7, when he was captured by English Commissioners. A letter said ‘I was in hopes to have taken Antons Edward himself, but for want of a better, was glad to take his son Thomas’. He was also ‘callit Ewmontis Thome’ in 1611 when he was among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. His father was Edmund, who appears to have been son of Anthony. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Gingillis’ when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Stuckler’ in 1616. He may be the ‘young Thome’ listed after ‘old Thom Armestronge of the Gyngles’ recorded in 1587/8 when accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. His brother ‘Eckie’ and ‘Alie’ are also listed. It is unclear how he was related to some of the other contemporary Armstrongs of Gingills (or Chingills). Thomas ‘Warden’ (16th/17th C.) son of Margaret, who was also called ‘Warden’. Along with his his mother he was called to the Justice Court at Dumfries in 1622. He was accused of stealing an ox from Dorothy in Bowholm and stealing sheep from Rowanburn and sentenced to be hanged. He was separate from Thomas in Whithope Mill, who was also charged in 1622. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in Whithope Mill in 1622. At the Judiciary Court he was accused of stealing sheep from the lands of ‘Quhitope’ belonging to John Scott (this was probably a Whithope or Whitehope in Dumfriesshire). He was sentenced to death. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Barnglies. Along with John in Nether ‘Bagray’ he acted as cautioner for William of Binks in Sark in 1622. He was probably related to the other Armstrongs of Barnglies. He is probably the ‘Jokis Thome’ recorded in 1623 when David Beattie was found guilty of stealing 5 cows from his lands of Barnglies; his father was therefore John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of ‘Reidheuche’ (i.e. Redheuch) in 1632, on a document listing the lands within the Lordship of Liddesdale. It is unclear if he was owner or tenant of the farm. Thomas ‘Tom’ of Shielis (17th C.) recorded as ‘Tom of Scheils’ when his sons William and Eduard were on a list of ‘moststroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves on the Border) in about 1648. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Whitaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (1688/9–1769) resident of Nether Staneleighside. His children included James (1732/3–70) and William. The family are buried at Ettleton. Thomas (17th/18th C.) probably a descendant of John of Sorbie. He is recorded being in arrears for rental at Sorbie in 1695 and was still tenant there in 1735. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Riccarton Mill. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry Elliot in Riccarton. Thomas (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster in Southdean Parish, probably the son of Simon born in 1768. He was educated at Southdean, in Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. He probably started in 1825 (with the recorded start date of 1835 on the school returns being an error) and is recorded as master there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of John Wilkinson and Alison Clarke, from county Durham. Their children were: Simon (b.1804), who may have served with the army in India; John (b.1806), shepherd, who emigrated to New Zealand; William (1808–32); Richmond (1810–40), who was schoolmaster in 1837; Alice (b.1812), married Thomas Hope and emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1814), married Archibald Smith; Jane (b.1817), married Adam Smith and emigrated to Australia; Ann Rutherford (b.1819), married James Maben and farmed at Town-o’-Rule; and Sarah (b.1821), married James Douglas and lived in Melrose. Thomas (1789/90–1853) farm labourer at Applethreekhall. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1876, aged 84. Their children included: Ann (b.c.1826); Walter (b.c.1827); Margaret (b.c.1829); Helen (b.c.1831); John (b.c.1833); Janet (b.c.1835); and Betsy (1836/7–74). They are buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Thomas Henry (1862–1946) solicitor in Hawick. He was son of Robert, English Master at Madras College, St. Andrews. He attended St. Andrews University 1876–82 and then studied law in Edinburgh. He died in Hawick. W. (18th/19th C.) resident of Newlands, probably in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to Aaron and George, who were gamekeepers at Newlands. Walter ‘the Laird’s Wat’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ballad ‘Jock o the Side’. It is unclear if such a person ever existed or if he was purely fictional, since Walter was not a name preferred by the Armstrongs. However, there may have been a son of Thomas of Mangerton with this to-name. Walter (17th C.) married Isobel Smith in 1686. They were both from Robertson

Parish. Their children included (the first 2 baptised in Robertson Parish and the other 2 in Hawick Parish): Margaret (b.1687); Isobel (b.1689); Archibald (b.1703); and Jean (b.1705). In 1705 he was recorded ‘in Weensland’, with witnesses to the baptism being Walter and Walter Paisley, millers in Weensland Mill. He could be the Walter recorded at Westerhouses (in Hassendean Parish) on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (1731/2–1804) tenant farmer in Millholm. He married Christian Brydon, who died in 1779, aged 37. She was probably related to the Brydons who were weavers in Newcastleton. Walter (1732/3–1814) tenant farmer in Kershopefoot. He was surely related to the earlier Armstrongs who farmed there. He married Elizabeth Murray, who died in 1842, aged 89. Their children included: Elizabeth (1775/6–1850); David (1785/6–1850); Janet (1787/8–1860); and Margaret (1790/1–1873). Walter (1735/6–93) resident of Grainfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Veitch, who died in 1807, aged 67. They are buried along with 3 of their children in Etterton Cemetery. Their children included: John (b.1763), who is probably the mason who married Isabella Marshall; Mary (b.1765); and William (b.1768). Walter (1744/5–94) shepherd at Sorbietrees. He married Helen Glendinning, who died in 1835, aged 88. They are buried at Etterton, next to Armstrongs from Heughhead and Leaugh. Walter (1776/7–1863) merchant in Newcastleton for 62 years. He may be the Walter of Burnmouth who was appointed as trustee for the bankrupt Newcastleton merchant Peter Oliver in 1817. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a linen and woollen draper and wholesale spirit dealer. He is likely to be the ‘W. Esq. Castleton’ who subscribed for 60 copies to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was at about 3 Douglas Square in 1841, with his son Archibald listed as the main shopkeeper; Helen, who lived with him in 1841, was probably his sister. In 1851 he was a draper, spirit dealer and grocer at the same address. He was listed among grocer and spirit dealers in Newcastleton in 1852. He firstly married Agnes Murray, who died in 1815, aged 29. He secondly married Nicholas Elliot, who died in 1850, aged 75. He thirdly (in 1850) married Mary Turnbull (1817/8–84); her siblings William and Margaret helped in the shop. His children included: James (b.1816), who died in infancy; Thomas (1810/1–39), also a merchant; Archibald (1806/7–44); and Walter (1839/40–99), tenant in Twislope. The family are buried at Etterton. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langside in Cavers Parish. He was taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797, with James also there. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of Liddelbank around 1821. He sold the property in 1827. He may be the same as the merchant in Newcastleton. Walter (1800–34) mason in Castleton, son of mason John and Isabella Marshall. He is probably the mason Walter who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, with mason John subscribing right after him. He married Margaret Cowan, who died in 1862, aged 60. She was a ‘Widow & Teacher’ on North Hermitage Street in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as a mason’s widow, receiving parish relief. Walter (b.c.1805) miller at Whitaugh Mill, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He must have been related to William, who was there in 1825/6, possibly his son. He was listed as Miller there in 1841, with wife Anne and son William. In 1832 he was accused of fathering a child by Joanna Matthews, but denied it. Walter (d.1861) farmer at Stanegarthsidehall, near Newcastleton. He died at Tweedend Bridge in an accident while riding home. Walter (19th C.) droper who took over Williamson’s business in 1839, in partnership with William Kedie. Their business was at the Tower Knowe. By 1853 he had separated from Kedie, forming Wilson & Armstrong’s with George Wilson. Their business included Weensland Mill, which made tweeds and blankets. His family were living on Slitrig Crescent in 1851. He moved to London to run the business there, which lasted till the great Collie failure of 1875, which ruined him. He married Mary Graham (from Canonbie, daughter of the farmer at Holows Mill) in Hawick in 1848. They had 2 sons and 3 daughters: Sir Walter, museum director and art critic; John G.; Elizabeth, who became Mrs. Tennant-Dunlop; Diana, who became Mrs. Secker; and Mary Beatrice, who married Rowland Ponsonby Blennerhassett. His 3 daughters sat for Sir John Everett Millais in the painting ‘Hearts are Trumps’ (said to be a metaphor for sisterly competition in finding husbands). He also took on his wife’s brothers as apprentices, and they were later S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London. Walter (1839/40–99) son of Walter and Nicholas Elliot. He was tenant in Twislope and died at Phaup. He is buried at Ettleton. Sir Walter (1849–1918) born in Hawick, elder son of Walter and Mary Graham. His father was a drapery merchant with William Kedie, who moved to London, but was ruined in the ‘Collie failure’. He was educated at Harrow and Oxford University and became an art critic, writing for newspapers, publishing studies of British artists. He also translated and edited the ‘Histoire de l’art dans l’antiquité’ (1885) and edited the 2nd volume of Bryan’s ‘Dictionary of Painters and Engravers’ (1889). He became Director of the National Gallery of Ireland in 1892, holding the post until 1914. In 1899 he was knighted and became an honorary member of the Royal Hibernian Academy. He published extensive monographs on Gainsborough (1894), Reynolds (1900), Raeburn (1901, with co-authors), Turner (1902) and Lawrence (1913). In 1873 he married Jane Emily Rose, daughter of Charles Cotton Ferrard, from Berkshire. He died at his home in Westminster.

William (13th C.) recorded as ‘Armestrangh’ in 1274 when he was on an inquest at Carlisle to decide on the inheritance of Ross of Wark and another for the widow of Eustace de Baliol. Probably the same William was also listed as ‘Armestrange’ among Cumberland men in an inquisition of 1268. He may be the same as the William ‘Armestrangh de Lucre’ listed on the 1279 assize roll for Northumberland or the William listed under ‘Villata de Warneurne’ (probably the same man). He could be the deceased William ‘Armestrange’ whose son and heir Adam paid homage to Edward I and Edward ordered letters to be issued in 1295. William (15th C.) listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His place of residence was not given, but he was the first Armstrong listed.

William ‘Slitrig’ (15th C.) listed among men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He was listed as ‘vocatis slittrick’, along with 10 other Armstrongs. His nickname suggests that he was associated with the Slitrig valley in some way, perhaps a former resident. William of Chingills (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas of Mangerton and brother of Alexander. He may be the same man as ‘Ill Will of Ralton’, and hence might be the ancestor of the Ralton branch of the family. He may have been hanged in 1530 along with Johnnie of Gilnockie and other Armstrongs. It is possible that ‘Ill Will Sandy’ is really ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, i.e. his son. Another son of ‘Ill Will’ was Alexander, recorded as tenant of ‘Craglais’ in 1541. William ‘Slitrick’ (15th/16th C.) listed among many men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as ‘Wilzame Armistrang callit Slitrik’, suggesting that he lived somewhere in the Slitrig valley. He is listed right after Robert, Archibald and Andrew (Andrew’s son) Armstrong, so it is possible they were relatives. He may be the same as William, son of Alexander of Mangerton. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. He may be the same as ‘Slitrick’. William ‘Dick's Willie’ (16th C.) listed among many Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. He is named as ‘one called Dikkis Wille’, who had a servant called ‘Lang Pennman’. It seems likely he was an Armstrong (although this is not stated explicitly), and his father was probably Richard, possibly the one recorded 30 years earlier. William (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Crooked Bank according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William (16th C.) recorded along with Hector as tenant of Dykeraw on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William (16th C.) listed in 1541 as joint tenant of Nether Gubbislie, along with Robert. They were probably closely related to Thomas of Mangerton and Cathbert (probably the Laird’s brother) who were tenants at adjacent farms. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘of Tarsumhill’ and ‘of Torsomehill’ in 1579, when Christie of Barnglies asked for him to be released from ward. He had been pledge for Armstrongs and their supporters. William ‘Hector’s Willie’ (16th C.) son of Hector of Harelaw. He was listed in 1569, along with his father Hector and brother Hector, as those for whom his brother Tom was being held as pledge in Glasgow Castle. In 1583 he was listed as ‘Hectors Wille’. It is possible that he was the same man as Will of Chingills. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) son of Tom, who was brother of ‘Andro Armistrang of the Gyngillis’. In 1569 his uncle Andrew ‘of the Gyngillis’ was surety for him, as well as his father Thomas and several other Armstrongs. In 1569 he, his father and uncle Andrew were named as the men for whom ‘Hekke’ (his cousin, son of Andrew) was held as pledge in Blackness Castle. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (16th C.) brother to ‘Ade of the Harelaw’. He was listed among fugitives of Harelaw in 1569. William ‘Will’ of Potterlampart (16th C.) recorded in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Whittlawside. He is recorded as ‘Will of Powerlampert’. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Will of Powderlanpat’ on Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published around 1594, but possibly compiled earlier. He is there listed beside Archie of Westburnflat and ‘Wanton Sym’ in Whitlawside, on a list of Armstrongs in ‘Meri-eton Quarter’. William (16th C.) son of Hector of Liddesdale. In the latter part of the 16th century he was recorded at ‘Glengillis’, possibly in Ewesdale, or the same place as Chingills. He may be the same man recorded in Edinburgh Castle in 1607. William (16th C.) recorded as being in ‘Teikmie’ in the 1585 remission for the crimes of men of Dumfriesshire. His farm may have been at Tarcoom, west of Canonbie. Archie ‘in Tarkina’ was also listed, this probably being the same place. William ‘Will’ of Greena (16th C.) recorded in 1583. He had a daughter who mar-rried Hob Foster of Kershope Lees. He may be the ‘Will o Greena’ who was killed by Foster of Stangarthside; according to tradition he borrowed the famous sword of his brother (or perhaps son) Jock of the Side, but was killed by treachery. William ‘Andrew’s Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1591 among Armstrongs cited for the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’. His name is recorded as ‘William Armstronge alias ‘Andro his Will”’. It is unclear who his father Andrew was, but his brothers Ringan and Ritchie were also listed. William ‘Kinmont Willie’ (d.c.1605), from Kinmont Tower (near Canonby), was a renowned rievning leader of his day. He was said to be descended from ‘Ill Will’ and was probably son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. In 1569 he was ‘of Mortoun Tour, callit Will of Kynmonth’ when he pledged to obey the Wardens, with Lord Maxwell and other Maxwells as surety. Also in 1569 he ‘Will of Kynmonth’ whose tenants were excepted from the pledge given for the Littles in Eskdale. His brothers Archibald and Ninian are recorded in 1569. Also in 1569 he may be the ‘Will of Kynmonth’ listed along with ‘Cristie Armstrang brother’ and ‘Nini-an Armstrang’, as those to be exchanged for ‘Aby Armstrang’, who was a pledge held in St.
Andrews Castle; these men were surely closely related and may all have been brothers. His brothers Airchie and ‘Fergy’ were accused of raiding farms of Johnstone of Craigburn in 1574. In 1579 he appeared before the Privy Council related to a feud with Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Also in 1579 he and 400 Armstrong followers are said to have killed Uswold Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8). In 1583 he was among Scotsman complained about for a raid on Tynedale, when he led about 300 men, stealing 400 hed of cattle, 400 sheep and goats, 30 horses and gear worth £200, slaying 6 people, injuring 11 and taking 30 prisoners (at least according to the English Warden’s account). In 1583 Lord Scrope demanded unsuccessfully that the Laird of Johnstone (Scottish Warden) hand him over; he was said to be responsible for 600 murders and the stealing of 400 cattle, 400 sheep and 30 horses. In 1584 Lord Scrope reported that he had led a raid on ‘the Trombles within Pharnyhirstes wardenrye’, stealing 80 head of cattle and 10 horses and killing 5 or 6 Scotsmen. In 1584/5 it is reported that one of his sons and a friend were being held by Lord Johnstone as assurances for him, but when headed over to the Earl of Morton they were released. He is listed in 1585 among a huge number of men in the lands that had Lord Maxwell as surior, who had remission for their former crimes;
he is recorded there as ‘William Armestraung call-it Kynmont’. His sons ‘Johne, Geordie, Francie, Thome, Sandie, Jhonn and Ringane’ are also listed, as well as his brother ‘Serge’ and Martin MacVitie, his ‘writer’ (i.e. legal clerk, suggesting he held a position of some importance). This is probably related to having been on the expedition to Stirling against the Earl of Arran, when he and his sons ransacked the town. In 1587 a report from the English said that he met with the Scottish King ‘in his cabenett above an hour’ and was given 100 crowns for leading an attack on Haydon Bridge (although publicly the King expressed displeasure at this raid). Also in 1587 he was imprisoned, but escaped. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Sim’s Tom and Hector of Hillhouse, as well as Elliots, Crosiers and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. In 1590 he appears on the Privy Council’s list of men allowed to rent land in the ‘debateable land’. Lord Maxwell again acted as surety for his good behaviour in 1591. In 1592 Roger Bulman of ‘Skailby’ complained that he had led several Armstrongs on a raid, stealing his livestock and maiming him. In 1593 he was accused, along with William Elliot of Larriston and Mar-\ntin Elliot of Braudlie, of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. He apppears on the list of Border chiefs, published by Monpennie sometime before 1594; the heading is ‘Sandeis Barnes Armestrangs’, which probably means ‘Alexander’s bairns’. In 1594 he had an agreement with Thomas, Lord Scrope, where he assumed responsibility for 300 men. However, in 1596 he was captured by an English party (led by Thomas Salkeld) who crossed the Liddel to grab him on a Day of Truce. When complaints by Lord Buccleuch (then Keeper of Liddesdale) were ignored Buccleuch gathered a group of 80 men (probably including some English spies, as well as many Scotts, among them said to be 4 of his sons, Jock, Francie, Geordie and Sandy), and led them on a daring of him from Carlisle Castle. This was popularised in a ballad, which was first published in the ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. The raid probably heightened tensions between Scotland and England, but sealed the reputation of ‘the Bold Buccleuch’. Later in 1596 he abducted the English Captain Sir Thomas Musgrave and held him for ransom, which led him to be imprisoned by the Scottish King. In 1597 there is a record of a complaint that English Grahams had stolen from him. In 1600 he caused another international incident by buying a mare that had been stolen from England, leading to a raid by 200 English horsemen and 80 on foot, with a skirmish at Kinmont Tower. He is among Armstrongs and Irvings complained about in 1600/1 for a raid on Scotby in England. He is last recorded in 1603 when Scrope complained that he had raided the towns of High and Low Heskett in Cumberland. He had a siste who married Englishman ‘Gorth Grame’. Before 1583 he married a daughter of ‘Hotchane Graham’ and sister of ‘Hotchans Ritche’ and ‘Huchens Androwe’; his sons at that time included Jock, George and Francis. Members of his family were among Armstrongs who escaped from Carlisle Castle in 1605 (but whose names are not listed). His illegitimate son Andrew was executed in 1606. His sons Francis and Alexander are recorded in 1609, by which time he appears to have been deceased. He also had a daughter who married Thomas Carleton, constable to Lord Henry Scrope. He is said to have died of old age and is buried at Sark. It is possible that he is the ‘umquhile Young Will of Kinmont in Mortontour’ whose widow ‘Blench Irwing’ is listed in 1607, along with many Armstrongs and others charged with preventing the King’s appointees from taking possession of the Debatable Lands. William (16th C.) son of Geordie of Bigholm. He was listed in 1590 among men accused of rieving from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland; the Armstrongs of Calfhill were also listed. He was also listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and others accused of rieving from Bewcastle. William ‘Will of Rowanburn’ (d.c.1605) tried in 1605 along with ‘New-maid Ringan’ for assisting and resetting the outlaws John Murray of Staplegordon, ‘Cuddie’ of Bankhouse, Christie of Langholm, Andrew of Langholm and John Beattie of the Shiel. He was found guilty and sentenced to hanging in Edinburgh. He was probably related to the nearly contemporary ‘Sandy of Rowanburn’. the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell. He may have been William of Whisgills (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son John was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Horden’, which was probably Harden in Liddesdale. He was listed among men declared fugitives in 1605 for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He was probably related to other Armstrongs of Harden. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. He was recorded being called ‘Castel’s Willie’. William (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Twedane’ (i.e. Tweeden) in related to Ringan, Hector and Jock of Tweeden, who are recorded in 1583. In 1594/5 there was an arrangement for him to be imprisoned in Carlisle Castle as pledge for Hector of Tweeden. He could be one of the ‘three brethren of Twea, Armstrongs’, who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He could be the William of Tweeden who was cautions for John of Tweeden in Jedburgh in 1611. William of Chingills (b.c.1577). He could be one of ‘the Chingles’ who were said to be at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1607 he was in Edinburgh Castle (either as a fellow prisoner or a Keeper, it is unclear) when Lord Maxwell took his sword and that of 2 other men, so that Maxwell, his relative Robert Maxwell and Sir James Macdonald could attempt an escape. He could be the William ‘callit of Chinglis’ who was cautions for ‘Pattenis Willie’ in 1622. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Will of Ternsnihil’ on Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published around 1594. He is listed under John of Hollows, who may therefore have been his father or other close relative. It is unclear where his lands were, but possibly Tinnis Hill is meant. William ‘sone to Will of Tersunhill’ is recorded in 1574, when he was to remain in ward with John Gordon of Lochinvar. William (16th C.) son of ‘Will of Tersunhill’. He is recorded in 1574, when obliged to remain in ward with John Gordon of Lochinvar. His father was recorded as ‘Will of Ternsnihil’ on Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Francis and probably grandson of Kinmont Willie. He may be the ‘younge Will of Kynmonte’ who in 1592 was accused by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods on 2 separate occasions; his relative ‘Kynmontes Jocke’ was also listed. He was also probably the ‘Kynmontes Willie’ accused in 1592 of being part of a raid on ‘th’Holme Coltram’, along with ‘Kynmontes Jock’ and Christie of ‘Barneleish’. In 1609 he was Willie son of ‘France Armestrang, callit of Kynmont’ when he was among several men (including his father and uncle Alexander) fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestone. In 1611 he served as cautioner for Geordie Scott, servant to John in Woodhead. He was recorded as being ‘in Crystaill’ in 1616 when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. This is probably ‘Grycetail’, just south of Canonbie, near the modern Priors Lynn, and where there were later Armstrongs. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as being ‘in Nether Wrae’ when he was on the trial of Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’. He is probably related to the earlier Thomas of the Wrae. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1615 when he had a sasine for a 4-merk land of Kirkton (probably near Sorbie). He may have been father of the later William of Kirkton. William ‘the Bauld’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he acted as cautioner for his brother Matthew. He was also on the 1616 jury for ‘the Suckler’. His nickname probably meant ‘bold’ (rather than ‘bald’). He may be the ‘Willie Armstrong, callit Bauld, in Quhisgillis’ who appeared before the Justice Court in 1622 and 1623 as cautioner for John ‘callat of Tueden’, his brother. He is probably the same William ‘called Bauld’ who was cautioner for William Wigholm in 1623. William ‘Pate’s Willie’ (16th/17th C.) listed in the records of the Commissioners Court in 1623 when William ‘callit of Chinglis’ was cautioner for him. He was also on the pannel of the Judicairy Court in 1622. His name appears as ‘Willie Armstrang, callit Pattonis Willie’, suggesting that he was son of Patrick (or perhaps Paton). William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of Capligill’ in 1622 when he was accused of stealing sheep from Bells in ‘Auchinheidrigg’ and sentenced to death. His cautioner was John, ‘Capeligill’. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of Benks in Sark’ in the 1622 Judicairy Court. Thomas in Barglies and John in Nether ‘Bagray’ acted as cautioners for him.Probably the same ‘Willie Armstrong, callit Benks’ was entered in 1623, with John ‘in Capeligill’ as his cautioner; he was accused of stealing 2 oxen from the lands of ‘Weane’ pertaining to William ‘of Calfeild’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded at the Justice Court of 1623 in Jedburgh. He was ‘callit Rakkies’ and ‘callit Rakkes in Liddesdaill’, suggesting he was related to John ‘Rakass’ who was recorded in 1585, as well as Archie ‘Rakkes’ and Robert ‘Rakkes in Syde’ in 1623. William of Calfeild (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when William ‘callit Benkes’ was accused of stealing 2 oxen from him. Perhaps the same ‘Wille Armstrong son to George of Calphills’ was accused in 1590 of rieving from Gilsland. He may also be the Willie, listed in 1590 along with ‘Syme of Calphill’, among men accused of rieving from ‘Darmonststead’ in Gilsland. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘younger of Kirktoon’ in 1641. This was the Kirkton near Sorbie. This was in a complaint between the Earl of Nithsdale and Johnstone of Westerhall, where he is stated to possess the lands of ‘Arkin’, ‘Quhistscheills’ and ‘Tiffetscheills’. William of Westburnflat (17th C.) said to have been one of the last of the Border rievers, he was captured on the banks of the Hermitage for stealing cattle and taken to Selkirk for trial. On being found guilty he broke the wooden chair in which he had been sitting and invited his fellow accused to fight their way out with him. However, they said they preferred to die like good Christians, and so all were executed. This tale comes from notes by Sir Walter Scott, although there appears to be no historical basis for it. The ‘Red Reiver of Westburnflat’ also features in his novel ‘The Black Dwarf’. William ‘Christy’s Will’ (d.c.1639) son of Christopher and grandson of Johnnie of Gilnockie. He was the ‘younger of Barnglies’, also later referred to as ‘younger of Langholm’. It is said he undertook a dangerous mission to carry a message from the Earl of Traquair to Charles I in London, narrowly avoiding capture on the return journey. He eventually joined the King’s army, and settled in Fermanagh in Ireland. In 1600 he married Margaret Elliot. They had at least one son, Thomas, who continued the family line in Ireland. He is well-known through the ballad ‘Christie’s Will’ and Sir Walter Scott’s comments in ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. Although he was probably genuinely involved with the Earl of Traquair, the story of him holding a judge captive in order to help the Earl in a law-suit seems to be based on earlier unrelated events (the capture of Alexander Gibson by George Meldrum of Dunbreck). He has also been associated with William of Sark, who was probably born somewhat later. William (17th C.) recorded as 'Will in the Myne' when he was listed along with Sandy as possessors of the lands of Nether Harden in Liddesdale in 1632. William 'Will' (17th C.) listed among possessors of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632. His lands then were Leaauth, 'Poco-hoparke' and Whiteauth. William (17th C.) recorded as being 'of Wodheid' among a list of Armstrongs and others who were declared fugitives in 1642. His brother Francis was also listed. It is unclear where this Woodhead was or how they were related to other local Armstrongs. In about 1645 they were as accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlawside, Geordie of Kynmont and Old Sandy's 'Hutchlen'. William (17th C.) listed as being 'called of Cannabie' in 1642, among many Armstrongs and others who were accused of being thieves and who were to be apprehended and tried. William 'Lang Will' (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when John, 'called of Kinmonth of Sark' had a bond of presentation for him. William of Sark (1601/2–58) probably related to John 'called of Kinmonth of Sark'. He has been connected with 'Christie's Will', but was probably born later. In 1636 he complained of being wrongfully detained by the English Border Commissioners. He may be the 'William of Kynmont', brother to 'John Kynmont called Johne of Sarke', who are listed among fugitives in 1642. His widow erected a tombstone to his memory in Morton churchyard. This was presented to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, with a suspicion that it might be the tombstone of Kinmont Willie (who died half a century earlier). His son William is on a list of 'mosstroopers' (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. William (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe in 1684 (along with Thomas Storie) on a long list of men declared rebels for refusing to take 'the Test'. William (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Horse-lie' in 1684 when he was listed among those declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. This was presumably Horselee in the Slitrig valley. William (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant at 'Greins' (probably Greens) in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Simon, who was also listed there, was probably a close relative. William (17th C.) resident in Hermitage in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Sandholm in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) name of 2 men who were householders at 'Bolsholme' in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. This was possibly the same as the place known as 'Bowholm'. William (17th C.) listed at Whitlaw among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Nether Whisgills. Along with Robert Blakelaw, he was accused in 1698 of travelling with laden horses on the Sabbath. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1705. William (18th C.) one of the group of 3 men and 1 woman who were jailed in Edinburgh for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. Rev. William (1711–49) 3rd son of Robert, minister of Castleton, with his 2 older brothers both being doctors. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by Langholm Presbytery in 1732 and presented to Castleton Parish by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch later that year. In 1733 he became minister there, succeeding his father. He was recorded at 'the mance' in Castleton Parish when he paid the window tax in 1748. He was described as 'a New light or legal preacher, and one of a Club that did not favour Confessions of Faith'. He was said to be extremely popular in the Parish, so that there was trouble when the congregation were given no choice in the appointment of his successor. He died unmarried. William (1727/8–1808) schoolmaster of Hobkirk Parish, and a much respected resident of the parish in the 18th century. It is unclear where he came from, but the family names are similar for him to be William, son of Adam and Janet Harkness, born in Wilton Parish in 1728 (although there was a second William born to the same parents in 1736, which is too late). It is said that he was 'a man of most extraordinary piety, beloved and esteemed by all who knew him'. He became schoolmaster in 1751, succeeding Samuel Oliver, and filled the position for 57 years. In 1776 he witnessed a baptism for John Hume and Janet Harkness, born in Wilton Parish in 1728. William was baptised in 1705.

(b.1765), who may be the Janet who married Hawick Burgh Officer John Wilson; Helen (b.1767), who may have died young; and Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1776). His diary of 1781 records that his daughter Ann was followed by a greyhound on the way to Hawick, which she could not get rid of, but then it chased off a bull that charged at her, and stayed by her side till she reached Hawick. He is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wrae in Ewesdale in at least the period 1785–1797 according to the Horse Tax, Dog Tax and Clock Tax Rolls. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Binks. He is probably the ‘W. Armstrong’ there who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Betty Elliot and their children included: William (b.1803); Betty (b.1805); Janet (b.1807); John (b.c.1809), who married Vair Scott and emigrated to Australia; James (b.1810), who also emigrated to Victoria; Adam (b.1812); Barbara (b.1814); Nicholas Elliot (b.1816); Isabel (b.1819); and Walter (b.1821). William (1771/2–1838) farmer at Sorbietrees. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is probably father of the William who is listed as farmer there in 1841. He married Jean Armstrong, who died in 1862, aged 84. They are buried at Ettleton. William (18th/19th C.) proprietor of the Cross Keys in Hawick. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Whitaugh Mill in Liddesdale, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1832 he was accused of being father of Joanna Matthew’s child. William (1790/1–1869) stone-dyer in Newcastle on Tyne. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Telfer, who died in 1884, aged 82. Their children included James (1837/8–1913), who married Janet Johnston. William (1796/7–1891) from Middlebie, he was shepherd in various locations. In 1851 he was at Nether Steniswater in Westerkirk and in 1861 was at Wolfcleuchhead. He may also have been at Braiddliehope. He married Mary Porteous, who died in 1888, aged 81. Their children included: Elizabeth (1828/9–54); and Archibald (1839/40–94). He died at Goldielands Cottage and the family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (b.1806/7) shepherd at Saughtree Grain. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Betty and their children included Janet, Mary, Margaret and Robert. His brother Adam was also a shepherd. William (b.1811/2) born in Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Gillfoot in Castleton Parish in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Helen and Thomas. William (1813/4–51) of Sorbietrees in Liddesdale, probably son of the previous William. He married Elizabeth Hall (1828–1900) in 1840. They are listed on the 1841 census at Sorbietrees, and in 1851 there were also children William (b.1846) and Agnes (b.1848). His widow was living there in 1861. He farmed 4416 acres, employed 23 labourers, and unusually listed in his census entry are ‘Tramps seeking charity, an old Soldier & his wife and three children’. The story of his demise is peculiar. He is said to have been calling upon the minister of Walton in Cumberland, Rev. Joseph Smith on an April evening, where his former servant worked, to discuss hiring Smith’s servant girl, when the minister mistook him for an assailant and shot him dead. These events are recorded on his gravestone in Ettleton cemetery. The trial in Carlisle bizarrely resulted in acquittal for Rev. Smith, on the grounds that ‘Mr. Armstrong had no business there’, and that by making noises outside the parsonage at a late hour ‘it is precisely the same as if a burglary was committed’. The circumstances of his death were memorialised in a poem, ‘Lines Suggested by a Late Tragical Event on the Borders’, published anonymously in 1868. William (b.1834/5) from Halfmorton, he was shepherd at Kirkton in Ewesdale in 1841. His wife was Helen and they has a son William. William (19th C.) flesher in Newcastle in 1868. William (19th C.) son of John, he was descended on both sides from a family of shepherds. He became tenant farmer at Bedrule Mill. William (1867–1931) Director of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Shanghai Municipal Police between 1918 and 1927. He has become famous for a series of photographs of ordinary people that he took around Shanghai, and are prized because almost all of China’s photographic history was destroyed in the Cultural Revolution. In 1924 he purchased the ancestral family home of Whitaugh in Liddesdale, where he settled after retiring as a detective in 1927. It was sold off by his descendants in 1970 (formerly spelled ‘Airmestrang’, ‘Airmistrayngis’, ‘Airmstrang’, ‘Armestrang’, ‘Armestrang’, ‘Armestrange’, ‘Armestranges’, ‘Armestrong’, ‘Armistrang’, ‘Armstrang’, ‘Armstrong’, ‘Armstrange’, ‘Armstrangis’, ‘Armstronge’, etc.).

airny (är-ní) n. army – ‘‘the Airmy beckoned an’ he i hed twae year in the Scots Gaids’’ [IWL], ‘‘…won by yon maist unlikely young airny whae set doon off the Teviot ti avenge their fithers slain on the bloody field of Flodden’’ [IWL].

air (är, ărt) n., arch. direction, point on the compass, way, aim – ‘‘And the chiel come frae far airts’’ [??], ‘‘Now Parcy Reed, we’ve paid our debt, Ye canna weel dispute the tale.’’ The Crosiers said, and off they rade – ‘‘They rade the airt o’ Liddesdale’’ [LHTB], ‘‘…the Eeldon threesome pointeet the airt A’d comed’’ [ECS], ‘‘Blow breeze from the airts Bussing my pennon!’’ [JYH], ‘‘Guid fortune never cam’ my art’’ [DH], ‘‘…Tho’ win’ frae a’ the airts micht blaw’’ [WFC], v., arch. to direct, to discover, take a direction – ‘‘An fient trap …cood A airt oot or hear tell-o gaun up Teit’’ [ECS], ‘‘…He airtit aye for the open door To look for me, for he was his dada’s lamb’’ [FL], ‘‘I airted Sooth oot ower that cliff, The mighty oaks and pines beneath’’ [Teiot] [ECS], ‘‘…Where this hill water airts to the sea’’ [WL], adv., arch. in the direction of, -ward – ‘‘…a muckle great, big hivvys, motor-lairrie …gaun Haack airt’’ [ECS] (from Gaelic; sometimes ‘art’).

airt an pairt (ăr’-an-pàr’) n., arch. art and part, involvement through aiding and abetting, complicity – ‘‘…Geordie Turnbull in Belsches is accusit for airt and pairt of the stealing, &c, of ellevene scheip …’’ [JW], ‘‘Whan thou sawist ane reyffar, than thou becamist airt an’ pairt wi’ him’’ [HSR] (literally helping with the ‘airt’, i.e. planning and taking ‘pairt’; common in 17th century legal documents).
airth (áirth n., arch. earth (also yirth)).

aislar-bank (áislar-bawngk n., arch. a reddish-coloured cliff bearing a resemblance to ashlar-work – ‘Aislar-Bank, a reddish-coloured bank, with projecting rocks in a perpendicular form, as resembling ashler-work’ [JoJ] (see also ezlar).

aisle (Ii, I-ul) n. an enclosed and covered burial place, sometimes once attached to a church, e.g. Soutra Aisle, Whitehaugh Aisle (also formerly ile).

Aislie Moor (ás-lee-moor) n. former name for an area to the south-east of Castleton Kirndean in the upper Liddesdale valley. It may be the same place as Castleton Muir. It is said that Claverhouse pitched his camp here when he passed through Liddesdale in 1685.

Aitchison (á-chee-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as a porter in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not be was local. Alexander (b.1827/8) from Yarrow, he farmed at Wimingtonrig with his older brother George. He married Mina Turnbull. Andrew (18th/19th C.) saddler from Hawick. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794. He was based in Newcastle in 1808, when named in the will of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) as his nephew. He was probably the Andrew born to John and Agnes Oliver in Hawick in 1764. Charles (18th C.) recorded at Uthank in Ewesdale in 1792 and 1794. He was surely related to the other nearby Aitchisons. Edmund (18th C.) tenant in Mosspeeble. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry of Lodgegill. Edward (b.1756/7) farmer at Uthank in Ewesdale, he was born in Edinburgh. He was listed at Uthank in 1841, along with his wife Anne, teacher John Little and labourer Davina Lunn. ‘Miss R.’ listed at Uthank in 1821 was probably his daughter. He was still there in 1851, farming 2000 acres and employing 5 labourers. Edward (d.1858) referred to jokingly as ‘the ministrel of the Teviot and Yarrow’, he was a stocking-weaver and became an itinerant story-teller and poet. He wandered about the Borders, riding slowly on an old pony, and would tell stories of olden times as well as reciting doggerel verse of his own. Some of his compositions appear in ‘The Modern Scottish Minstrel’ (1870). John Wilson of Billholm (son of the Professor) wrote an epitaph: ‘Here in a lonely spot the bones repose Of him who murdered rhyme and slaughtered prose. Sense he defied and grammar set at nought. Yet some have read his books and even bought’. He was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Elliot (1797–1858) Hawick stocking-maker, known as a very quiet man who also wrote poetry. He was the son of the tenants of the Cross Keys Inn on the Sandbed (William and Mary Shortreed), being the 11th of 12 children. He had very little formal education and became an apprentice stocking-maker at an early age. He had to support his mother and youngest sister after his father died. He worked his entire life as a stocking-maker, except when employed for a while as a clerk, which he gave up, apparently because he felt he was not giving his employer value for money! Physically he was described as being only a little over 5 feet tall. He was talented as an artist as well as a poet. He was a quiet and unassuming character with few close friends, and shied away from any recognition for his poetic gifts, never reciting any of them in public. He was upset when some of his poems were publicised by Dr. Rogers in 1856, leading him to destroy several manuscript copies. Hence only a few survived to be published after his death, including ‘Bailie Macnab’, ‘The Approach of Winter’ and ‘A Matin’. He is buried in old Wilton cemetery, the plain headstone simply reading ‘In Memory of Elliot Aitchison, Who died 7th October, 1858, Aged 61 years’. An obituary was written by Dr. John Douglas. Euphemia (18th C.) cook at Borthwickbrae in 1785, when she was working for John Elliot. George of Linhope (19th C.) founder member of the Wisp Club, probably a son of William. He was accused of being father of Helen Elliot’s child in 1832. He is probably the Aitchison of Linhope who acted as croupier during the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed along with his brother William as joint tenant of lands of the Duke of Buccleuch’s previously tenanted by their father. George (b.1820/1) from Yarrow, he was farmer at Wimingtonrig in the 1860s. He farmed there with his younger brother Alexander. In 1861 he was listed at ‘Wimington rigg’, farming 600 acres and employing 5 people. James (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Kirton’ (presumably Kirkton) when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1687. His wife was a Douglas. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Girmwood on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1737/8–1811) resident of Castleton Parish, buried at Ettleton. His children included: Christian (1780/1–1808); and James (1794–95). He is probably the resident of Newcastleton recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Oliver. Their children included: Christian (b.1757); Edward (b.1759); John (b.1761); Walter (b.1763); Andrew (b.1764), possibly the saddler in Newcastle-then; Gilbert (b.1766); Henry (b.1768); Christian (again, b.1770); and Agnes (b.1773). He may also have been father of Margaret (who married Dr. Robert Douglas) and Robert (of the Royal Navy), who are mentioned in the 1808 will of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) as Oliver’s niece and nephew; if so, then his wife Agnes would have been Oliver’s sister. It is possible he was the John who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhousens in Wilton in 1781.

John (b.c.1800) tailor at Hassendeanbank Cottages according to the 1841 census. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter, Robert, William, Mary, John and Alexander. John (19th C.) carrier operating between Minto, Selkirk and Lilliesleaf in the 1860s. Lancelot (17th C.) resident of Newmill-on-Slitrig on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for having 2 hearths. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Unthank in Ewesdale in 1797 on the Horse Tax Rolls. She was taxed for 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. She also paid the dog and clock taxes in the same year. R. (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘Atchinson, Miss, R. Unthank’ in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. She was probably daughter of Edward. Robert ‘Rob’ (18th C.) landlord of the Mosspaul Inn in 1767 according to the autobiography of Dr. Carlyle of Inveresk (spelled ‘Achison’). He is described as having fallen from being an oppulent farmer to a struggling innkeeper because he ‘had been a Border rake or buck of the first head in his younger days, and to wit and humour, of which he had abundance, he added a sufficient portion of address and impudence’. He could be the Robert who was recorded as farmer at Mosspeeble in the period 1785–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls and was also on the 1797 Dog Tax and Clock Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1785. Robert (1750/1–1830) of the Royal Navy. Mentioned in the 1808 will of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’, as his nephew. He was thus presumably brother of saddler Andrew and of Margaret, who married Dr. Robert Douglas. He is probably the ‘Lieutenant Aitchison, R.N. Greenwich’ listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is thus likely to be the Lieut. Robert who died at Greenwich Hospital in 1830 in his 80th year. He seems likely to be the Lieut. Robert Aitchison, married to Mrs. Mary Scott, whose children born in Melrose included: Robert Scott (b.1789); William Oliver (b.1791); Mary Anne (b.1793); and Edward (b.1794). In 1798 the couple had a court case against David Kyle, involving sale of a tenement of houses in Melrose. His wife Mary Scott died at Greenwich in 1846 aged 84.

Simon (17th C.) resident of Newmill-on-Slitrig on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for having 2 hearths. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (d.1805) originally a farming employee, he moved to Hawick in 1784 when that was unsuccessful. He started the public house known as the Cross Keys Inn, at 11 Sandbed. He married Mary Shortreed (who died about 1827), sister of Robert, the Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. They had 12 children, including: Robert (b.1784); Adam Ogilvie (b.1787); James (b.1789); Margaret (b.1791); John (b.1793); and Elliot (b.1797), the local poet. William (c.1777–1836) farmer of Linhope, father of William. He is recorded as tenant at Linhope on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls; he had a saddle horse and 2 farm horses. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826 and the first Secretary. He married Mary Pott in 1794 and their children included: Isabella (b.1794); William (b.1797) of Linhope and Brieryhill; Beatrice (b.1798); Mary (b.1800); Jean (b.1802), who probably married Dr. John Douglas; George Pott (b.1805); Robert (b.1807); and Christian (b.1812). His widow and several children were living at Brieryhill in 1841. He may be the William, son of William, born in Southdean in 1780. William (1797–1873) of Linhope and Brieryhill, son of William and Mary Pott. He was born in Cavers Parish. In 1841 he was living at Linthill, while his mother and siblings resided at Brieryhill. In 1851 he was farmer of 2800 acres at Linhope, employing 7 labourers. He became involved with the Hawick Farmers Club and West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, and was first President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club from its formation in 1859 until his death. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was still at Linhope in 1868. Some letters exist (as part of the ‘Darwin Correspondence Database’) in which he describes his observations on the proportions of the sexes in lambs. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed along with his brother George as joint tenants of lands of the Duke of Buccleuch's previously held by their father. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 2800 acres, and employing 7 labourers. He proposed the toast to Sir Walter Scott at the Branxholme centenary celebrations in 1871. He married Jane Oliver (daughter of Hawick lawyer John). They had 1 son, William and 5 daughters: Jane; Mary; Christian; Isabella, who married John Usher of Gatehousecote; and Margaret Oliver. It has also been suggested that he was the father of John Scott, born to Beatrice (daughter of Henry Scott and Mina Lunn) in 1843. Somewhere there exists an oil portrait of him. William, J.P. of Brieryhill (1839–89) son of William of Linhope. He was educated in Edinburgh. After his father’s death he succeeded to Brieryhill and Calaburn in Roxburghshire and Glenkerry in Selkirkshire. He also later rented the farms of Penchrise and Linhope. He was a member of the Forest and Jedforest Clubs. In 1877 he married Mary, daughter of John Wilson of Billholm, who was eldest son of ‘Christopher North’. They had 4 sons. He was an invalid for his last few years (formerly spelled ‘Achesoun’, ‘Achison’, ‘Aitcheson’, ‘Aitchison’, ‘Atchisonne’, ‘Atchisonne’, ‘Atchison’, ‘Aitcheson’, ‘Aitchison’, etc., and until fairly recently interchangeable with ‘Aitcheson’).

Aitken (ā-th) n., arch., poet. an oath – ‘Icausit thir personis wnder wrytten, be ther gret athis …’[SB1500], ‘…in respect of the said Thomas Deans, his aithe given thereuntill, that he offered his service to him …’[BR1640], ‘O! keep your aithes, quo’ I, but swear nae mair, Nor doubt a heart that ay shall be your share’[CPM], ‘…They will trail their neebour in through Some dirty bottomless slough – It’s eenuch to warrant an aith’[FL], ‘Ance hae I made aith bie my halinniss …’[HSR], ‘I couldna say but she was right, Sae took an aith that vera night …’[WiD], ‘I’ll tak’ my aith, ye’ve hed nae tei, So’s ye could fill your wames wi’ mei …’[DH], ‘The Tetrarch turned as white as daith, But afore the coort he had taen his aith’[WL].

Aithoose Burn (ā-hoos-burn) n. stream that runs roughly east to join the headwaters of the Northwick at Craik (this is probably the ‘Ettussburne’ which is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the identity of ‘Ettusshill’ marked above it is less clear).

Aitken (ā-kin, āt-kin) n. Adam Moffat (20th C.) son of George. He was a mechanical engineer, living in Hawick. He was a long-time member of Allars Kirk and wrote (not really edited) ‘Allars of Hawick, 1810–1949: Annals of Allars Church’ in 1949. He was Treasurer and Clerk of Allars from 1929 until it closed. He married Isabella Michie Murray and Joseph Murray was their son. Andrew (19th/20th C.) shoemaker and elder of St. George’s Kirk. He held the position of Church Officer 1901–05. Bailie ?? (19th C.) mason of Hawick. Rev. Dr. David (1796–1875) minister of Minto, son of Allan. He studied at Edinburgh University and was librarian at Divinity Hall there. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1821, and after travelling in Europe he was presented to Minto Parish by Sir Gilbert Elliot, becoming minister there in 1827. He obtained a doctorate from Edinburgh University in 1843, and that same year he declined the Chair of Divinity and Ecclesiastical History. He demitted (i.e. retired) in 1864. While minister at Minto he had the Manse built for him in an italianate style. In 1836 he married Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of David Stodart of Easton, and she died without surviving children; she was... an heiress and quite wealthy. He was an acquaintance of the writer Thomas Carlyle, who visited him at the Manse in 1838. Some of his diaries are in the National Archives. He also wrote a description of Minto Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1838, with a particularly detailed report on the local geology. George (1819/20-1913) partner in the building firm of Aitken & Elliot. He lived in Douglas Road. He married Jane, daughter of James Wintrup, and she died in 1876, aged 36. They had a son John, who was a banker. He later remarried. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. George (d.1928) grandson of George, he was Burgh Foreman for almost 40 years. He was father of Adam Moffat, partner in Turnbull & Aitken, engineers. He served as Manager, Elder and Trustee of Allars Kirk. George ‘Podge’ (d.2006) Cornet in 1951, he later emigrated to Australia. He returned for his Jubilee year, despite the cancelation of festivities because of foot and mouth. He also returned to Hawick in 2006, but died on the Monday of Common Riding week. Gilbert ‘Gib o Drythropple’ (18th/19th C.) tenant of Drythropple farm in the Rule valley, as well as Todrig. He was said to be quite dangerous when drunk and to abuse his sister Meg. James (d.c.1683) tenant in Mervinslaw. His will is recorded in 1683. James ‘the Auld Duke (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His children included: Margaret (b.1707), James (b.1712); and Margaret (again, b.1718). In 1712 his nickname is given as ‘Duke Elder’. In 1715 ‘Duke Younger’ (presumably his son) is also recorded having a child baptised. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘James Aitkine, son to William Aitkine’ on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1711. His name was also on the list in 1712, when recorded as a merchant. He could be the son of William born in Hawick in 1687. James (d.1796) thatcher living on the Cross Wynd in 1841. His wife was Janet Anderson, who died in 1841, aged 81. They were buried at St. Mary’s. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. John (b.c.1807) farmer of 20 acres. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at 16 Kirkwynd with his brother Robert (listed as ‘Farmer’s Assistant’), sister Agnes Murray and nephew Robert Murray. His brother may have been ‘Hi-I-Obby’. John (19th C.) photographer in Hawick in the mid-to-late 1800s. He attended Glasgow Art School, apprenticed in Edinburgh, and settled in Hawick in 1867, becoming one of the first professional photographers in the town. His studio (or ‘Photographic Saloon’) was on the Arcade. He later moved to Glasgow and retired to Greenock. He was one of the founder members of the Hawick Billiard Club in 1877. Joseph Murray (1921-75) son of Adam Moffat, a mechanical engineer, and Isabella Michie Murray. He studied architecture at the Edinburgh College of Art and was artiﬁced with George Hobkirk in the ﬁrm of Alison & Hobkirk from 1936. He became a partner in 1951.
In 1959 he formed a partnership with Charles F.J. Turnbull, and they also opened an office in Gala. He married Evelyn Wilson Michie. Margaret ‘Meg o Todrig’ (18th/19th C.) sister of Gilbert, who, it is said, treated her badly, particularly when drunk. They farmed at Drythropple in the Rule valley and also at Todrig. She was well known in Rulewater when she was trying to get away from her brother. She is probably the `Meg o Todrig' whose parasol and 'ruskie' are in the Museum.

Margaret (1764/5–1842) from the Kirk Wynd family who were ‘Hilliesland Lairds’, with their house and onestead where the aerated water works were built, next to the Tabernacle. She married William Laidlaw, and their descendants were well known in Hawick for several generations afterwards. She was widowed in 1823. It is said that poultry were kept in their Mid Raw house and there was a pig under the bed. When the pig put its snout in the family cooking pot, she is reported to have said ‘Get out, that’s our denner for the morn’.

Mr. ?? (1836/7–1907) coachman on the Abbotrule estate in the mid-to-late 1800s.

Robert Dickson ‘Hi-I-Obby’ (1801–1878) Hawick character of the 19th century. Born in Hawick, he was apprentice with ‘John the Turk’, then left town in 1822. He was known for his ability at breaking horses, and nicknamed for the words he whispered while doing this. In Edinburgh, he lived for a while in the same house as Burke and Hare and had a hand in selling their first body. He worked as a coach-man, fought in Crimea, conned people out of money by concocting stories, and acted in a play about his own life. His best-known confidence trick was enacted in Duns in the late 1850s, where he convinced people that he had inherited a fortune from a rich uncle; he was somehow able to extract £1000 from a bank, buying jewelery, dining with the local gentry and even purchasing the estate of Reston Mains. After being found out he served time in Greenlaw Jail, and this episode formed part of the play, which was published in Jedburgh and entitled ‘Hi-I-Obby; or, Hi-wo-Bobby’. This was performed at theatres throughout the Borders. He could be the 46 year old Robert, living with his brother farmer John on the Kirkwynd in 1851. A portrait of him exists. He died in the Hawick Poorhouse and was buried in a pauper’s grave in the Wellogate Cemetery, where a cairn was erected in the 1980s – ‘Renowned for loo o’ steed, iz work turned avid hobby, Syne that time nane ca’d um owt bit nickname Hi-I-Obby’ [MB].

Robert (19th C.) Treasurer of Hawick Free Kirk 1876–81. He may have been connected with the Common Riding Races and died in 1881. William (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) ran a ‘change house’ in Hawick. In 1706 his daughter Isobel married John Hardie in an ‘irregular’ marriage. He was fined along with Hardie for holding a ‘supernumerary marriage’, although the guests included both Bailies and the Town Clerk! He married Bessie Aitchison and their children included: John (b.1680); William (b.1682); Isobell (b.1685); James; (b.1687); Agnes (b.1687); and Bessie (b.1689), who married James Richardson in 1715. Margaret, who married Andrew Turnbull in 1724, was probably also his daughter. The witnesses to the 1684 baptism were Walter Purdom and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. He seems likely to be the William listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He could be the carrier William listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; if so he must have been related to John, who was also a carrier and listed just before him. He may be the William, son of George and Marion Turnbull born in Hawick in 1641. He may be the William who Robert Cowan struck at after throwing a cup full of wine at the fair in Hawick in 1700. He may be the carrier William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1701; these was for Robert Oliver and Agnes Aitkin, who was perhaps his sister. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1687. William (b.c.1685) carrier, father-in-law of Bailie Robert Scott. He was the oldest of the 6 representative Burgessses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767. He described how he had ‘lived in Hawick all his life, and from the time of his infancy he was at the riding of the marches of the Common yearly’. He also described how the Flag was passed over house at Meikle Whitlaw, which was half built on the Common. He was objected to as a witness to give evidence in the court case, on account of being a Bailie and possessing a house in Hawick. He was probably the William, younger, recorded in 1707, when John Scott, ‘Soldier’ and his son John, younger, were fined for letting the horses out of his barn; presumably there was some kind of dispute between the 2 families. He had a daughter called Betty. It seems likely he was the son of carrier William, born in Hawick in 1682. He was probably the William, whose children baptised in Hawick included Bessie (b.1707), Janet (b.1708), Agnes (b.1710), William (b.1713) and John (b.1715). He was probably related to the later carriers called William Aitkin. William (18th/19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Crescent, around No. 3, on Wood’s 1824 map of Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) wheelwright on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (b.1814) son of George and Esther Turnbull, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a farm steward, who lived at Wester Essenside. He married Mary Hogg. Their children included: Walter Hogg (b.1844); George Ramsay (b.1846); Robert (b.1849); Mary (b.1851); Esther; Isabella H.; Thomas H.; and William. In 1851 he was at Wester Essenside with his mother-in-law Mary Glendinning and his sister-in-law Margaret Hogg. William (19th C.) of Falnash, elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. William (b.1894) son of John and Isabella Gracie, he was twin of Tommy. He drove lorries for the Army Service Corps during WWI. He married Isabella Renwick and their children were Betty, John and Nan (see also Aitkin; formerly spelled ‘Aitkin’, ‘Aitkine’, ‘Atkon’, etc.).

Aitken an Turnbull’s (ä’-kin-an-turn-buiz) n. architects office at 22 Buccleuch Street, being effectively the continuation of the Alison & Hobkirk business. J. Murray Aitken joined the practice in 1936, 4 years after Alison’s death and he would eventually form the partnership with Charles F.J. Turnbull in 1959. The firm took over the Galashiels practice of Elder & Cairns in 1962. In the 1960s the firm’s business was dominated by work for the local council in Galashiels, Melrose and Selkirk.

Aitkin (ä’-kin, ät-kin) n. Archibald (17th C.) miller of Trow Mill who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. He was taxed for 7 hearths, ‘for himself undermillers & kilns’. He was probably son of William, tenant in Trow Mill, whose will is recorded in 1684. Archibald (b.1821) son of James and Christian Scott. He was a spirit merchant of Wilton Path. He is recorded at 46 Wilton Path in 1861, at No. 41 in 1871 and at No. 13 in 1881. He presented the cornet with a bottle of brandy after the Thursday Chase during the 1880s. He married Margaret Beattie in 1849 and their children were: Elizabeth (b.1853); James (b.1857); John (b.1860), cabinet-maker; Christian (b.1862); and Agnes (b.1868). Archibald ‘Airchie’ (b.1886) son of John and Isabella Gracie, he was born in Wilton. He apparently ran away from home in about 1908, joining the Gordon Highlanders. He served in India before WWI and was a Sergeant Major when the battalion went to France. After the war he was with the ‘Black and Tans’ in Ireland, but left the army and emigrated to Canada. However, he returned to Hawick, where he worked at Pringle’s. During WWII he was second-in-command for the Home Guard in Hawick. He married Margaret Elliot and their children were Alice, Margaret, Jack, Archie and Christine. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Anne Oliver and their children included: Janet (b.1760); William (b.1761); Gilbert (b.1766); Marion (b.1769); and Helen (b.1772). The witnesses in 1766 were carriers Gilbert Oliver and William Aitkin (perhaps his father-in-law and father). He is probably the Francis who witnessed a baptism for Walter Stevenson in Hawick in 1768. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Horselee in Kirkton Parish in 1789–90. He was later farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He may have been related to Gilbert, who farmed at Adderstonelee at the same time. He may be the Francis whose son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1779. George (1779–1852) son of Robert and Janet Deans. He was a hind at Stouslie and then shepherd at Alton in Wilton Parish. He was recorded among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41, with his address being changed from Stouslie to Alton in 1840. In 1851 he was recorded as ‘Anmutant Formerly Shepherd’ at Alton. He married Esther Turnbull, who died in 1856. Their children included: Robert (b.1805); John (b.1807); Janet (b.1809); Margaret (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mary (b.1816); James (b.1819); Esther (b.1821); and George (b.1826), who moved to Galt. George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He had a daughter who died in 1819. George (1826–86) son of George and Esther Turnbull, he was born at Stouslie in Wilton Parish. He had a strong Presbyterian upbringing, and had a bible given to him when he attended Priestrig (or Stouslie) School. He trained as a stonemason and moved to Lilliesleaf, where he was an Elder and Session Clerk. In 1883 he emigrated to Canada and became heavily involved in the Central Presbyterian Church in Galt, perhaps helping to build the church. However, he was only there for about 3 years before he died. He married Betsy Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (or Maggie) Potter (b.1856); Esther Turnbull (b.1858); George
Aitkin

(b.1860); Elizabeth (b.1865); Thomas Turnbull (b.1869); and Robert Turnbull (b.1862). Gilbert (1768/9–1832) farmer at Addersoneshiel. He was recorded at Adderstonelee on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1794. In the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 he is listed as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Adderstonelee. He was tenant at Adderstonelee about the same time when Gideon Scott erected the first windmill in the area there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Jane Amos (1775/6–1857) and their children included: Francis (b.1801), Francis (b.1805), Gilbert (b.1812) and Elizabeth (b.1812) who all died young. He is buried at St. Mary’s. James (15th/16th C.) probable name of ‘James Atzin’ who was one of the witnessed to the 1500 letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. His wife was Helen Robson and their children included Robert (b.1722), James (b.1724) and John (b.1725). He appears to have been confused with James Ekron in notes written inside a book by Sir James A.H. Murray. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He was probably son of John and Mary Ker. He married Agnes Scott in Hawick in 1756. Their children included: Jean (b.1757); Mary (b.1760); Agnes (b.1762); William (b.1764); Archibald (b.1768); James (b.1770); and Isobel (b.1773). The 1757 and 1762 baptisms were witnessed by William Aitkin (probably his brother) and gardener Archibald Scott. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier, recorded along with Walter in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; his name is listed as ‘Aitkins’. James ‘Doctor Jaickets’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of 1823 and 1824. It is unclear how he was connected with other local Aitkins. It is possible he is the James ‘Aitkens’ (born out of the county) recorded as ‘Ind’ at the Flex in 1841. James (b.1786) son of Robert and Janet Henderson. He married Christian Scott in 1810 in Wilton Parish. Their children were: Betty (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); John (b.1816); Agnes (b.1818); and Archibald (b.1821), who was a grocer. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. His surety was William Langlands, suggesting that he might have been from Wilton. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in the 1641 Town Book, when he is recorded acting as an appraiser for a horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary John ‘Aitkens’. He could be the John who was married to Margaret Elliot, and whose children baptised in Hawick included Jean (b.1648) and Marion (b.1652). He could be the John whose testament is recorded in 1682. John (d.bef. 1721) described as ‘tenent in Hawick’ and already deceased in 1721 when his eldest daughter Margaret married George Oliver, shoemaker. He could be the ‘John Aitken, in Hawick’ whose will was recorded in 1682 or alternatively the carrier John Aitken. John (18th C.) Hawick resident. His wife was Mary Ker, and their children included William (b.1722), Robert (b.1724), James (b.1726) and Robert (again, b.1738). John (18th/19th C.) resident at Saughtree. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.1860) son of Archibald and Margaret Beattie, he was born in Wilton. He worked as a cabinetmaker, and was recorded as such at 15 Wilton Path in 1891. In 1882 he married Isabella Gradie and they had a large family: Margaret (or ‘Meg’, b.1881), who married twice and moved to Leeds; Elizabeth (or ‘Lizzie’, b.1882), who worked as a tweed-mender and also made quilts; Agnes (b.1883), who worked as a power-loom weaver, married Jimmy Lyon, moved to Earlston, and had a daughter Isabella Jane Lyon, who married Hendry Smith Russell; Bryce (b.1884), a wool sorter and spinner, whose daughter Isabella was a swimming champion; Archibald (or Archie, b.1886), who joined the Gordon Highlanders; John (b.1887), who worked at Wilson & Glenny’s; James (or ‘Jimmy’, b.1892), who worked in mills in Ireland and England; William (1894–1963), who drove lorries for the Army Service Corps in WWI, father of John; Thomas (or ‘Tommy’, 1894–1982), twin of William; Isabella May (b.1899), who married Hammy Aitken; and Christina Scott (‘Teenie’, b.1901), who married Johnny Duncan and lived in Galashiels. John, M.B.E. (1933–) local businessman, born in Denholm. He qualified as a Chartered Accountant in 1936 and then did National Service before joining Welch’s in 1958. He has been secretary of several local nursing home associations, Chairman of the Appletreehall Village Hall Committee, and has been President of the Callants’ Club. He has served on many bodies associated with the British Legion, the K.O.S.B. and ex-servicemen’s organisations. He received the M.B.E. in 2001 for services to the community. He lived for many years at Appletreehall. He married Elizabeth Charlotte Fraser. Robert (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. An ox, belonging to William Rennie, was stolen from his house in Minto, by Cock, son of John Turnbull in Tofts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when another ox was stolen from his house in Minto, this time belonging to William Rae. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written as ‘Aitking’. Robert (1745–bef. 1810) son of William and Marion Rae, he was a flesher in Hawick. In 1763 (at the age of 18) he married Janet Scott (aged 23). Their children were: Margaret (b.1765); Thomas (b.1767); and Betty (b.1770). In 1773 he secondly married Janet Deans, and she died in a smallpox epidemic. Their children were: William (b.1774); Isabel (b.1776); and George (b.1779), hind at Stouslie, whose descendants moved to Canada. In 1781 he thirdly married Janet Henderson (who died in 1810), and their children were: Betty (b.1782); Robert (b.1784); and James (b.1786), whose descendants also moved to Canada. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for George Deans in 1777. He is probably the deceased Robert whose daughter Betty died in Hawick in 1809. Robert Turnbull (b.1862) son of George and Betsy Turnbull, he was born in Lilliesleaf. He moved with the rest of his family to Galt in Ontario. He married Helen, daughter of John Spalding and their son Robert Bruce married Marion Grace Barrie, whose family farmed in Rulewater. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (1894–82) son of John and Isabella Gracie, he was born in Wilton Parish, twin of William. He worked in the knitwear industry all his life except for military service. He enlisted with the 1st/4th K.O.S.B. and served in Palestine during WWI. He became known in Hawick as a versatile self-taught piano player, in demand as an accompanist. He later lived at Abbeyfield Homes on Brougham Place. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was convicted of associating with William Turnbull and Mark Turnbull, during the time they were declared fugitives. Later in 1502 William Turnbull of Minto was fined for failing to enter him in court; he was recorded being ‘de mynto’. Walter (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier, listed along with James in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name was listed first (as ‘Aitkins’) suggesting he was the father or elder brother. William (17th C.) witness to contracts of borrowing money against lands in the Rule valley between Rev. William Weir, Edward Lorraine and Gilbert Eliott in 1632. He is in one transcribed as ‘William Aitkin in Trowis’, the surname presumably being an error. He must have been the tenant farmer at the Trows. Either the same or a different William ‘Aitken’ is ‘in Trow-miln’ when his will was recorded in Peebles Commissariot in 1684. He was surely related to Archibald, associated with Trow Mill shortly afterwards. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William (perhaps his son) in 1764. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Francis, who may also have been his son. It is possible he is the William Aitken, son of carrier William, baptised in Hawick in 1713. William (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Marion Rae. Their children included: James (b.1737); William (b.1739); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1744); and Robert (b.1745), flesher. He could be the gardener William who witnessed a baptism for William Turner in 1760. William (18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1763 he married Isobel (1744–1822), daughter of Alexander Donald; she later married Robert Hotson from Langholm, and had 10 more children. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1764, with witnesses William Aitkin (perhaps his father) and Alexander Donald (his father-in-law). Either he or another William was listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for carrier George Wilson. He could be the son of William born in 1739. William (b.1774) son of Robert and Janet Deans. He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Castle-ton, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same William was a carrier in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably the William of Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He lived at the Kirkwynd, around No. 16 according to the 1841 census. His wife was Agnes and their children included Robert, John, William, Elizabeth and Janet. William (b.c.1770) farmer at Muselee. He was recorded there in 1841. He married Peggy Easton and their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish, except for the last child, in Cavers Parish) included: Thomas (b.1799); Isobel (b.1801); Margaret (b.1803); Ann (b.c.1805); Gilbert (b.1807), who in 1851 was living with his cousin Agnes Murray at Williamlaw; Adam (b.1813). Perhaps the same William is recorded as farmer at Acreknowe, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 (see also Aitken; formerly written ‘Atkyn’, ‘Atkyne’, etc.).

the Albert (thu-al-bur’) n. common name for Hawick Royal Albert Football Club. It was also the name of a Hawick cricket club in the 1850s.

the Albert Brig (thu-al-bur’-brig) n. Albert Bridge, more properly called the Teviot Bridge, rebuilt in 1865 from the original in 1741. The architect in 1865 was Andrew Wilson. The name was apparently an error on the 1898 Ordnance Survey map which stuck. It is a grade C listed building – ‘...Like gumpin’ eels ablow the Albert Brig, Or ‘katie’ in the deep Cat’s Pule’ [WL].

Albert Mills (al-bur’-milz) n. former tweed mill at the corner of Albert Road and Victoria Road. It was the main factory of Wilson, Scott & Co. There were extensions designed by J.P. Alison in 1916. The land had previously been ‘Cathrae’s Haugh’, and afterwards was used for Mactaggart’s skinworks. The area was part of Hawick Royal Albert, opened with an exhibition of 1868.

Albert Place (al-bur’-pawrk) n. home of Hawick Royal Albert, opened with an exhibition game in 1965. The capacity is about 1,000. Greyhound races were also held here from about 1985–95.

Albert Road (al-bur’-rød) n. road across the Teviot Bridge, connecting Hawick with Wilton, named after Prince Albert (1819–61) around 1868.

the Albion Bar (thu-awl-bee-in-bawr) n. former public house on Albion Place.

Albion Place (awl-bee-in-plis) n. a lost street name, being originally part of the road through Wilton to Edinburgh, and previously known as Gib’s Nose or Wilton Roadhead. There was a blacksmiths there in the mid-19th century, on the corner with Wilton Crescent. The main houses were a block on the north side constructed around 1850 and demolished in 1971/2. New housing was then built and incorporated into Princes Street, of which it formed the middle section.

Alcocksteed (al-kok-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Alcocksteed’ in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 10 shillings. It is unclear where these lands were located.

Alder (awl-dur) n. Ben of the Orchard, he rode ‘Macmoffat’ to 2nd place in the 1939 Grand National.

Alderman (awl-dur-min) n. William (18th C.) footman at Minto in 1791, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Alderybar (awl-de-ree-bawr, awl-e-ree-bawr) n. former steading above Skelfhill farm, on the usual route for the Mossapaul ride-out. It is on Fouledge Sike, although an older farmstead of the same name (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map) was further south on Bar Sike. 2 members of the Stevenson family are recorded dying there in the 1780s (it is ‘Alribar’ in 1785; it is marked ‘Alerebar’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Aldery Cleuch (awl-de-ree-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, just to the west of Blackburn burn farm, which runs northwards to join the Black Burn.

Aldery Sike (awl-de-ree-sik) n. stream in the upper Liddesdale valley rising on Thorlieshope Height and running roughly north to join the Thorlieshope Burn.

Aldred (al-dred) n. (12th C.) recorded as Dean of Roxburgh within the Diocese of Glasgow from about 1130 and as witness to several church deeds until 1161/2. In around 1150 he perambulated the lands of Molle, when they were granted to Kelso Abbey.

aleideen (aw-lee-deen) adj., arch. a-leading, i.e. having complete influence over – ‘She hes um a-leadeen (= she possesses a complete influence over him; she has him on leading-strings)’ [ECS].

Alec see Elick

the Ale (thu-ál) n. another name for Ale Witter – ‘...Old Gilbert will lend me his gear and mail And the moon will light me across the Ale!’, ‘Unfashed he won owre the muirs o’ Ale, By ditch and covert, by knowe and dale ... ’[WL].

aleife (a-lif) adv., arch. to life, especially in the phrase 'Ti come aleife – to come to life' [ECS].

Alemoor (ál-moor, -mür) n. loch and surrounding area about 8 miles west of Hawick, off the road to Tushielaw (the B711). The area is still referred to as ‘Yillmer’ or ‘Alemer’ by older residents. In earlier times the loch was smaller and roughly circular, about 2 miles in circumference. Now it covers about 133 acres and was extended into a reservoir in 1958, to provide water to parts of Roxburghshire. It is also used for fishing, and supplies the Ale Water. The filter works for the reservoir were built at Robertson Moss. ‘Emme de Almere’ and ‘Rogier de Almere’ are recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296, and the family of that name flourished in the 14th and 15th centuries. However the Laird of Alemoor was killed by a band of Armstrongs and others in about 1490, and the family lost their eponymous lands to the Earl of Bothwell in 1505. Nevertheless, the modern surname of ‘Aylmer’ may be derived from that family. George Armstrong ‘of Ailmure’ is recorded in the late 1400s, making it unclear who the Laird was who was killed around 1490. In 1509 Adam Hepburn inherited the lands from his father; at that time they were valued at £10 in time of peace and were held in blench farm for the payment of one broad arrowhead at Whitsunday. In the aftermath of Flodden ‘Elmartour’ was burned along with much of the rest of the Ale valley. The Scotts of Synton occupied lands there.
in the early 1500s. However, in 1573 David Armstrong of Alemoor entered John Taylor in prison in Edinburgh. The lands were confirmed to Francis, Earl of Bothwell in 1585, perhaps just as superior, since David Armstrong appears to have been Laird of Easter Alemoor at about the same time. The lands formed part of the Barony of Hailes when inherited by Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. Hob Cowan was there in 1623. There were 14 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was owned by the Scotts of Harden in the 17th century. Among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch listed in 1653 and 1663 are ‘all and hain the landis of Ailmure, with the toure, mylnes, mulforis, tentenmis, tentendries, and service of frie tentenmis thairof’. Tax was paid on 16 hearths at ‘Wester and Easter Ailmures’ in 1694. William Beattie and Walter Scott were living there in the early 18th century. James Anderson was there in 1762. The area contained the separate farms of Wester and Easter Alemoor from at least the late 16th century; Wester Alemoor formerly stood to the north of the Loch, but was rebuilt near to the main road (so it is no longer really west of Easter Alemoor). The area was part of Selkirkshire until added to Roberton Parish in 1690. The damming of the Ale Water made the modern reservoir, which extends to the south of the B711. A flint blade was discovered there in 2003 when the water was low. Local superstition assigned a bloodthirsty supernatural being to the loch, which Leyden described as a ‘water-cow, an imaginary amphibious monster, not unlike the Siberian mammoth’! Another tradition says that a child was seized by an erne and dropped into the loch – ‘Sad is the wail that oars o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulfs unbot· the loch { ‘Sad is the wail that oars o’er Alle·mor, al-moor, al-mur, yil-mur

Alemoor (16th C.) listed as ‘Adam Elmeir’ in 1544 when he witnessed the payment from James, Abbot of Newbattle, to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. He may have been involved with Newbattle Abbey. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1502. John ‘sleicht’, also in Lilliesleaf, was surety for him; and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was also surety for his son John in 1502, who also did not appear in court. Emme (13th C.) referred to as ‘de Aylmer’ (or ‘Almere’) in the Ragman Rolls of 1296, along with ‘Rogier’. He (or she perhaps) is one of the earliest known of this family, whose name is taken from the farm and body of water in what became Robertson Parish. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘de Achilmer of that Ilk’ in a charter of 1458/9 when James II confirmed in him the lands of Alemoor in Selkirkshire, as well as Clifton and Morebattle in Roxburghshire. In payment he had to offer a broad arrowhead at the Feast of the Elevation of the Holy Cross, during royal hunts in Ettrick Forest. In 1479 he is ‘James Athilmer of that Ilk’ when he and John Turnbull (‘in the Fithe’) were ordered to pay rental money to Robert of ‘Murheid’. Also in 1479 he had the ‘grassum’ for the farms of Garlawcleuch and Blackhouse. Probably the same James had an action rasied against him in 1482 (in which he is referred to as ‘Athilmer’) by Elizabeth, Countess of Crawford, for withholding sheep and goods from ‘Dowglace craig and Eltrief’ (Craig Douglas and Alt relieve) belonging to her. In 1484 he and his son Roger leased Gilmanoscleuch. In 1485 he and his wife Elizabeth leased Garlawcleuch and Blackhouse. He is also recorded (as ‘Elmer of that Ilk’) in 1488 in a document relating to his son ‘Roger Achilmer’ and others resigning their lands on the High Street in Edinburgh, signed at Lilliesleaf. Also in 1488 he is ‘Jacobo Elemer de eodeom’ when he and his son John were assigned the lease of the Crown lands of ‘Garsleuch et Blakhous’ in the Yarrow valley, as well as Altrieve, and is the ‘dominus de Alemer’ whose lease of Sundhop (in the Yarrow valley) was given up. He may have been the Laird of Alemoor killed by Archibald Armstrong (perhaps aided by Walter Robson, farmer at Harden and ‘Joiffe Glenquhin’ recorded in 1494/5) about 1493. His wife was Elizabeth and he was probably succeeded by John, with Patrick being another son. John (15th/16th C.) son of James of that Ilk. He may be the John of that Ilk who had a payment made to him in 1471, relating to lands in Ettrick Ward. He leased Douglas Craig in 1484 and Altérieve in 1485 and 1487. Along with his father he leased the Crown lands of ‘Garlacleuch et Blakhous’ (in Yarrow), as well as Altrieve (in Ettrick) from 1488. In 1490 he assigned the farm of Altérieve on his own and was ‘Johanni Achilmer de eodem’ in 1491, when leasing Garlawcleuch and Blackhouse. He may be the Laird of Alemoor (‘domino elmer’) who served as surety for Patrick in Garlawcleuch in 1494/5. He is recorded as ‘Johannem Alemeir de eodem’ in 1499, relating to payments for Walter Scott in the Ward of Ettrick, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1499 he was reassigned the lands of ‘Garlacleuch et Blakhous’ in the Ward of Yarrow. In 1501 he was assigned the same lands along with his brother Patrick. He was also referred to as ‘John Elmer of Elmer’ in 1505 when the Earl of Bothwell obtained a precept for the lands of Alemoor, confirmed in a charter of 1511, which had previously hereditarily belonged to him. And in 1509 Pringle of Tinnis took over the rental of the farms of ‘Blackhouse and Garlawcleuch’ which he had previously held. It is unclear what relation he had to the James recorded earlier, and whether he or James was the Laird of Alemoor killed in about 1493. John (15th C.) son of John, who was tenant of Altérieve. In 1484 he took over the half lease held by Alexander Dalmahoy and this continued until at least 1486. John (15th/16th C.) son of Alexander, he was recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1502. His father was surety for him, and and fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Alexander was listed right after him and so may have been related. Patrick (15th/16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He is probably the Patrick in Garlawcleuch who was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes in 1494/5. He was specifically said to have stolen 8 ‘silver nobles’ from a man called John ‘aslowane’, Iving in Tweeddale, with the Laird of Alemoor (probably his brother) as surety. Later at the same court he ‘came in the King’s will’ for resetting Cockburns who had raided Traquair. In the Treasurer’s accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. In 1501 he and his brother were assigned the lands of ‘Garlacleuch et Blakhous’ in Yarrow. Roger (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Rogier de Almere del conte de Selghikyrk’ in the 1296 Ragman Rolls, along with ‘Emme’. His seal bears a hunting horn, along with the words ‘S’ROGERI D’ALNMER’. In 1304/5 there is a record of payment by him for the ward of Traquair; he is there ‘de Aylemer’. In 1311 Edward II listed him among the rebels whose Scottish lands had been given to Robert Hasting, but were returned to them now that they had ‘come to his peace’; he is there ‘Roger de Aymor’. He witnessed a charter of lands at Bemersyde in 1326 and another for lands in Lessuden at about the same time. The history of the family for the next 150 years is uncertain. Roger (15th C.) son of James of that Ilk. In 1484 he and his father James leased Gilmanscleuch. He is recorded in 1488 as ‘Roger de Achilmere’ when he resigned his lands on the south side of the High Street near the Castlehill in Edinburgh, these passing to Charles Murray (also written ‘Achilmir’, ‘Achilmer’, ‘Achilmere’, ‘Aichilmere’, ‘Ailmir’, ‘Alermen’, ‘Elmer’, etc.).

Alemoor Court (àl-moor-kój) n. part of Stirches, off Roxburghie Drive, built in 1975, named after the local Loch.

Alemoor Craig (àl-moor-kräg) n. hill north of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 378 m, with a rocky outcropping on the south side.

Alemoor Hill (àl-moor-hil) n. hill to the north of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 346 m. Wester Alemoor is a little further to the west and higher.

Alemoor Loch (àl-moor-loch) n. reservoir at Alemoor, extended in 1958 from the formerly much smaller loch there, submerging Shirencleuch farmstead and the former Bellendean and Wester Alemoor also being demolished to make way. It is now the principle water supply for Hawick, with the Allan and Dod supplies being used as back-ups marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Einmoore loch’.

Alemoor Toor (àl-moor-toor, -tow-ur) n. tower near Alemoor Loch, standing on the north bank of the Ale Water, near where the dam is at the end of the modern reservoir. The lands ‘cum turre’ were granted to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1511, and the tower was burned by Dacre’s men in 1514 (when listed as ‘Elmar-tour’ in a letter from Dacre). The site is marked on older Ordnance Survey maps, between Wester Alemoor and Easter Alemoor. There were still earthworks visible there in the early 20th century, however they were destroyed when a new road was Alerig (āl-rig) n. house north of Belses designed by Leslie Graham MacDougall in 1936, originally called Newhall. There is a fort and triangulation pillar on the nearby 152 m hill.

Ale Witter (āl-vi′-ur) n. Ale Water, a tributary of the Teviot, with source on Henwoodie Hill near Roberton, it flows for 24 miles (38 km), passing through Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf to join the Teviot near Ancrum. The upper section of the river experiences several falls, then passes through the Alemoor Loch, and then runs between high hills (along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’) and through the ‘Leap Linns’, before entering a broader valley near Lilliesleaf. A series of about 15 caves on its banks near Ancrum are said to have been places of refuge during rievings days. Streams which flow into the Ale include the Wilson Burn, Langhope Burn, Woll Burn and Woo Burn. The name is common for rivers elsewhere, e.g. a tributary of the Eye, running through the area once known as Coldinghamshire. Part of the valley is described in a royal charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170; this includes several lost place names, as well as mention of a highway through the region. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, specifically ‘the Watter of Ale fro Askrige to Elmartour [probably Ashkirk to Alemoor Tower] in the said Middil-marchies, wherupon was 50 70 ploughes’. Several lands in the valley belonging to Scott of Buccleuch and his friends were burned in October 1548 by the Kers and the English, as part of an ongoing feud — ‘...Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from the lakes did raving come Each wave was crested with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed’ [SWS], ‘The hill road to Roberton, Ale Water at our feet, And grey hills and blue hills that melt away and meet’ [WHO], ‘This isna me, bit just my ghost Ti tell ye how I won an’ lost The sweetest lass that ever cross’d The wimpelin’ Aill, And how I hope, at any cost, Ti find her still’ [WP] (formerly spelled ‘Aill’ etc.; the origin of the root is uncertain, but is probably pre-English and may be the same as the root for Allan Water, coming from the Celtic; it occurs from at least the late 12th century as ‘Alue’, ‘Al-nam’, etc.; it is ‘Watter of Aill’ in 1547/8, ‘Ayell wayter’ in 1548/9 and ‘Water of Eall’ in 1604; it is ‘Ail fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘ail w.’ on Adair’s map c. 1688).

Alexander (aw-leek-zawn-dur) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Alexander I (c.1078–1124) King from 1107. He was the 4th son of Malcolm Canmore and Margaret, grand-niece of Edward the Confessor. He succeeded to the crown on the death of his brother Edgar, but inherited only the parts north of the Forth and Clyde, and hence was never Hawick’s monarch. However, the Lovels probably first gained the lands of Hawick in his reign. He was succeeded by his brother David I, who had previously held only the southern lands. Alexander II (1198–1249) son of William I, the Lion, he became King in 1214. He led an army into England to support English noblemen against John, but generally relations between the 2 countries were friendly during his reign. He married Henry III’s sister Joanna in 1221 (when she was 11), and in 1237 married Mary de Coucy at Roxburgh Castle. Part of the dowry of his first wife was the lands of Jedburgh, Hassendean and Lessuden. He spent some time in Jedburgh. Nicholas de Soulis was the son of one of his illegitimate daughters. Richard Scott, one of the earliest ancestors of the Scotts of Buccleuch, first received lands in Roxburghshire in his reign. He died while sailing to compel the Lord of Argyll to side with him against the Norwegian King. He was buried at Melrose Abbey. Alexander III (1241–86) son of Alexander II, he was born at Roxburgh, and became King in 1249. His minority involved struggle between Walter Comyn, Earl of Monteith and Alan Durward, the Justiciar. He married Margaret, daughter of Henry III of England, and there was an important meeting between the 2 Kings at Kelso in 1255. He managed to wrest the Western Isles from Norway in 1266. His 3 children having died, he arranged for his great-grand-daughter Margaret (‘the Maid of Norway’) to be next in line. He also remarried (to Yolanda of Dreux) in 1285, with the wedding feast held in Jedburgh Castle. He appointed Sir Thomas de Charteris (ancestor of the Langlands family) his Lord High Chancellor in 1280. He died following a fall from his horse, this being a disaster for Scotland. Thomas the Rhymer is supposed to have predicted his death, the story of the spectre appearing at Jedburgh Castle partly inspiring Edgar Allan Poe’s ‘Masque of the Red Death’. A coin of his reign was dug up at Hislop in the 19th century.

Alexander (aw-leek-zawn-dur) n. Charles Jamieson (19th C.) of Heronhill, owner of Alexanders & Co., manufacturers of Weensland from about 1875–85. During this period
Alexander Lowe Hall

Weensland Terrace was renamed Alexander Terrace. George (1730/1–1805) resident of Bedrule Parish, who died at Doveshaugh. His wife Isobel died in 1819, aged 88. George (d.1820) from Hobkirk Parish, perhaps son of the earlier George. In 1788 he married Helen Brown, who was from Jedburgh. Their children included: George (b.1789); Betty (b.1790), who married Alexander Turnbull; James (b.1792); Isobel (b.1795); and Ebenezer (1800–64). George (1789–1871) farmer at Buchester, born in Bedrule Parish, son of George and Helen Brown. He was at Buchester in 1841. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 140 acres, employing 2 labourers. He married Elizabeth Smail (b.1788) and in 1858 secondly married Barbara Duff (b.1819) in Hawick. His children were: William (1819–1902); Janet (1824–74), who married Richard Waugh; Helen (1825–1908), who married Alfred John Scott and moved to Melbourne; Anne (1827–61); and George (b.1829), who probably died young. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Helen and Ann. George (1824–1903) son of James and Grisel Turnbull. In 1851 he was farmer of 170 acres and employing 7 people at Easter Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was still at Easter Lilliesleaf, farming 339 acres and employing 8. He married Ann Campbell Gourlay (1837–85) and their children were: Margaret Baxter (1859–60); Margaret Baxter (again, 1861–89); Grisel Turnbull (1863–1941); James (b.1865); Adam Gourlay (b.1866); Anne Campbell (1868–91), who married James McLeish; Jessie (1870–38); and George (1878–1909), who died in Buffalo, Wyoming. James (b.1792) son of George and Helen Brown, he was born in Bedrule Parish. He was farmer at Craggis in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1841 and in 1851 was a retired farmer at Easter Lilliesleaf. In 1817 he married Grisel Turnbull (1795–1867) and they had a son George (1824–1903), who farmed in Lilliesleaf. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. The gravestone of his wife, ‘Ketren Sinkler’ (presumably Catherine Sinclair), dated 1693, is in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (b.1822/3) from Tranent in East Lothian, he was Station Master at Hawick. In 1851 he was lodng on Wilton kirk Style, and listed as the Station Master. He was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Shaters (18th C.) house servant at Orchard in 1791, when he was working for William Elliot. It is unclear if his first name was an error.

Alexender Lowe Hall (aw-leek-zawn-dur-lo-hawl) n. formal name for the village hall in Newcastleton. It was named after the last minister of the church that was there.

Alexander Terrace (aw-leek-zawn-dur-te-ris) n. name given to Weensland Terrace for a time in the late 1800s after manufacturer Charles Alexander.

Algar (al-gar) n. one of 2 Chaplains (the other being William) and a Parson (Henry), probably of Hawick Kirk, who witnessed a charter in about 1183, in which Henry Lovel granted land at Branxholme to the canons of St. Andrews. This was probably the first suggestion of a church in Hawick, although it is not certain that they were attached to it. His name is listed as ‘Algaro capellano’.

Alison

Alinton (a-lin-ton) n. Peter (d.1242) cleric associated with Glasgow Diocese, referred to as ‘de Alinton’. He may have originally come from England or France, and appears to have been a Clerk by 1224 and a Master by 1235, when he was sent by Alexander II to York to appeal against the election of the Bishop of Galloway. He was appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1238, the first person to hold that separate position. He is also mentioned in 1240. He may be the same man as the vicar and chaplain of Glasgow recorded in the late 1220s.

Alisaunder (aw-li-san-dur) n. Alexander – ‘Did the deed-raap sound throwe its gampy ends, A wunder, i the nicht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-fou’ [ECS].

Alison (aw-li-sin) n. Alexander, W.S. (18th C.) lawyer in Edinburgh. He served as Deputy Receiver General of the Excise in Scotland. In 1779 he is recorded as holder of the liferent of the lands of ‘Lamblairs and Plantations’ in Minto Parish. He is still recorded as holder of the liferent in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, although incorrectly listed as Abraham. He had ‘liferent’ of the lands of Barnhills from Robert Bennet in 1780. In 1788 he was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire among the ‘Votes of Mr. Bennet’ (suggesting that he just had the lands in order to be able to vote). However, as Cashier of Excise, he was listed as disqualified from voting in Selkirkshire in 1788. His name was sometimes spelled ‘Allison’. James Pearson (1862–1932) local architect, with Alison & Hobkirk, at 17 Buccleuch Street. He was responsible for designing many of the finest buildings in Alison an Hobkirk

Hawick in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, and can safely be described as Hawick’s most prominent architect. He was born in Eskbank, son of Thomas and Margaret Pearson and brother of landscape painter Thomas. He was trained at the Edinburgh Institution, was articled to Robert Thornton Shiells in Edinburgh until 1885, moving for a couple of years to Paisley, before setting up his own architect’s practice in Hawick in 1888. He became partner with George Hobkirk from the early 1920s. His major work includes: Balcary (1889); the Drill Hall (1889); Buccleuch Bowling Club (1891); the Co-op Stables (1891); parts of Drumlanrig Square (1891); the Post Office (1892); Dumira (1892); Hawick Bowling Club (1892); the Masonic Hall (Lodge 424, 1893); Wilton South Church (1893); the Congregational Church (1893); Victoria Hotel (1893); the Central Hotel (‘Prudential’, 1894); Golf Club House (1894); the Liberal Club (1894); Station Buildings tenement, ‘Allan Watt’s’ (1894); Strathmore (1896); Ardenlea (1896); the Con. Club (1897); Salisbury Avenue villas (1897); 23 and 25 High Street (1898); Laidlaw Memorial Hall, Bonchester (1899); Teviotald Dairy (c.1899); J.E.D. Murray’s studio (43 North Bridge Street, 1898). He also designed other private residences, including installing a fireplace with an inscription describing how he had survived a gas explosion there in 1910. His wife and son pre-deceased him, but he also had 2 daughters. The practice continued for several years as Alison & Hobkirk, with J. Murray Aitken joining in 1936 and eventually becoming Aitken & Turnbull. Peter (19th/20th C.) minister at Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk from 1909 until 1925, when it joined with Ashkirk Free Kirk. William (16th C.) holder of a partitc of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter.

Allan

Alison an Hobkirk (aw-li-sin-an-hob-kirk) n. local firm of architects, responsible for many fine buildings through the work of J.P. Alison, as well as and many of the houses built by Hawick Working Men’s Building Society. The firm later became Aitken & Turnbull.

Alison Sike (aw-li-sin-ik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357, between Singdean and Saughtree. It joins Cliffhope Burn, which then runs into the Dawston Burn. There are many old sheepfolds in the area. Near where it is joined by Dorothy Sike there is a knocking stone on a narrow ledge, with the foundations of a small building nearby (it is marked ‘Allisons Grain’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is unclear who Alison and Dorothy were).

A’ill (awl) contr. I’ll, I will – ‘A’ill gie what’s for’, ‘A’ll cherish aye its name wi pride’ [IWL], ‘...Aw’ll lay a bet, you was the worst!’ [I], ‘...Ah’ll gie ye a wee bit advice’ [WAP], also sometimes used for ‘I’ll be’ – ‘A’ll away ti the shops then’.

Allan (aw-lin) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. Her surname is written ‘Alin’. Andrew (17th C.) from Headshaw. In 1623 he acted as caution (along with John Turnbull, Gilbert Elliot of Brugh, John Gowenlock and James Coutart) for Mungo Scott from Castleside; he also was cautioner a second time for Mungo Scott, along with John Campbell in Newton. His name is there spelled ‘Andro Allan’. Rev. Charles (1863–1940) from Partick, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1890. He was minister of East Bank Church from 1892 until 1899, when he moved to Finnart Church, Greenock. He was later minister at Ardclach, Nairn. He published several religious books in the early 20th century, including ‘The Beautiful Thing that has Happened to Our Boys: Messages in War Time’ (1915). He married Margaret Adam, who died in 1829, aged 65. They had a son, George Waldo, who died at Richebourg L’Avoüé in 1915, aged 20. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk, who in 1642 confessed to the Session there that he and James Cuthbertson had shared part of a quart of ale after sunset, purchased from Isobel Cranston. George (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1700 he married Isabel Watt. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker William Halliwell.

James (17th C.) resident of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish. In 1640, along with James Waugh, he was accused by the Kirk Session of ‘sowing clothes about some of their sheep’. Presumably this was a discretion on the Sabbath. James (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants listed. He also leased part of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park in 1671. He could be the James, son to Simon and Helen Elliot, who was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1644. It is possible he was the James, married to Mary Richardson (a family who were also tenants at Branxholme Town), whose son Walter was born in 1675. James (d.c.1688) tenant in Over Southfield. His will is recorded in 1688 and that of his wife Helen Glendinning in 1683. It is possible he was the same as the tenant in Branxholme Town. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Alane’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (16th C.) one of the Bailies appointed in 1528 by Sir Walter Scott to arrange the infefting of his son David in his lands. Rev. John (16th C.) recorded as minister of Bedrule in 1567. He may be the same ‘Sir John’ who was notary to a sasine of the Scotts of Branxholme in 1555. He is recorded as ‘Sir John Allan’ in 1563, along with William Kerr (described as ‘parson’) and Sir Thomas Kerr, when Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule brought an action against them to prove they had the right to the benefice of Bedrule. The ‘Sir’ suggests he was a cleric without a masters degree, and hence presumably actually the minister, while William Kerr (probably a son of Ferniehirst) held most of the titular and financial benefice. John (17th C.) recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. John (1810–93) born at Borthwick, Midlothian, son of Thomas and Agnes Tait. He was a millwright in Hawick. He married Isabella Walker, who died in 1896, aged 81. They lived at Mather’s Close and are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. However, on the 1841 census they were on Bourtree Place. Their children included Margaret, Agnes, Isabella, Thomas and Allison. Robert (17th C.) ‘cordiner’ recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Bryden. Presumably the same cordiner is listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Robert married to Bessie Murray, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670) and Isobel (b.1673). Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1721 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of workman William Ekron. He is probably the Robert whose children baptised in Hawick included Christian (b.1701), Margaret (b.1704), Elizabeth (b.1706), Janet (b.1709), Isobel (b.1711) and John (b.1714). Robert (1847/8–1908) poet from Jedburgh, not to be confused with the earlier Kilbrachan poet of the same name. Son of Jedburgh wool-merchant Richard, he attended Edinburgh University, then became tenant farmer at Macksdie and Howden, before moving to Edinburgh and also perhaps living in Dumfries. He was involved with the evangelical movement in Jedburgh. Many of his poems are about Teviotdale, with several describing places in Rulewater or Alewater, e.g. ‘The Emigrants Return to the Rule’, ‘The Flower of Rule’, ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfelee Still Remembered’. His publications include ‘Poems’ (1871), ‘Border lays, and other poems’ (1891) and ‘Poems lyrical and the Allan (ə-lin) n. Allan Water, formed where the Skelfhill and Priesthaugh Burns meet (which rise on Langtæ Hill and Cauldcleuch Head), and joining the Teviot at Newmill, after a course of about 5 miles (8 km). The Dod Burn also joins it on its way. The section between the where the Dod Burn and the Doe Cleuch join may have formed part of the boundary line of the Catrail. The stream has been used as a water supply for the town since 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The Duke of Buccleuch gave consent for the original scheme and opened the sluice at a special ceremony in 1865, at which several thousand people were present. The ruins of a peel tower, called Allanhaugh or Allanmouth stand near where it joins the Teviot. The whole area is covered with ancient earthworks, forts and burial mounds, showing that it was once more heavily populated. A bronze axe was unearthed there and donated to the Museum in 1858. Note there is another Allan Water that flows into the Tweed near Gattonside, which was an important valley linking Melrose Abbey with its daughter house to the north at Soutra – ‘By the side of Allan water There stands a Hawthorn tree, It has seen a thousand summers, and has feasted off the bee’ [TCh] (but the local one is usually pronounced ā-lin; the origin of the root is uncertain, but may be the same as in ‘Ale Witter’ is probably pre-Anglian, and could well be from the form common in Celtic hydronyms; it is ‘Alewent’ and ‘Alwent’ referred to in connection with Rulewoodfield in about the 1160s; it is ‘Ellan R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Allanhaugh (ə-lin-hau̯f n. area near the confluence of the Allan Water with the Teviot, containing a ruined peel tower, reached from Newmill via a footbridge. It is also sometimes referred to as ‘Allamouth’. It was once home of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and is probably 16th century. Only the lower vaulted storey remains (with many initials scratched into the stones from 19th century visitors). The earliest Scott of Allanhaugh was Robert, probably 2nd son of David of Buccleuch; he was granted the lands of Whitchesters in 1484/5. Robert was probably succeeded by his son Robert. A son of his, James, was was Provost of the Collegiate Church at Corstorphine and was a Lord of Session. The family is said to have given rise to the Scotstarvit and Thirlestane branches, but this is uncertain. The history of the Scotts of Allanhaugh is very hard to trace through the 16th and 17th centuries. Sir Walter Scott’s story was that the estate eventually fell to the Scotts starvit and Thirlestane. Sir Walter Scott’s story was that the estate eventually fell to 2 brothers, the younger one killing the elder one, who was then executed by Scott of Buccleuch, who took the lands back (but it is unclear there is any evidence for this). A rental roll of about 1557 lists ‘Young Robert Scot of Alanehauch’ and sons ‘Syme’ and ‘John’ of ‘the guidman of Alanehauch’, as well as Adam of ‘Alanehauche’; presumably the Laird at that time was either an

Robert (19th C.) farmer at Mackside in 1868. Thomas (b.1805/6) from Stichill, he was a blacksmith in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 11 O’Connell Street (probably opposite the modern 15 O’Connell Street). He was listed in an 1852 directory as a blacksmith and cutler. His wife was Hanna and their children included Elizabeth, Thomas, Janet, Jane and Helen. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Reidurdfgrene’ as witness to a charter of 1618 for Scott of Tushielaw. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1955/6–2010) from St. Boswells, he attended Hawick High School and took a degree in economics from Heriot-Watt University, where he captained the football team. He had several jobs, including in banking, sales, publishing, and lecturing at business schools, as well as working at the Institute of Economic Affairs. He was also a keen Hibernian supporter, St. Boswells cricket supporter, and wrote a history of Melrose Sevens. He was married 3 times and had 3 sons. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Hogg in Edinburgh in 1652. William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. His surname was written ‘Aline’. William Charles ‘Bill’ (1922–2006) Halberdier 1958–84. Leaving school to Work for Turnbulls the Dry Cleaners, in 1939 he lied about his age in order to enlist with the K.O.S.B. He saw action in Belgium and Holland, was injured in Germany, and last served in Egypt. Some of his wartime experiences are described in the book ‘With the Jocks’. After WWII, he worked as a joiner at Stobs Camp. In 1957 he was hired by the Town Council and was officially the ‘Burgh Officer’, although that was changed to ‘District Officer’ after Council Reorganisation. He was Senior Halberdier during his time, with duties including organising rooms etc., as well as reading the Proclamation and delivering the letter to the Cornet Elect. He was also Chairman of the 4th Battalion Old Comrades Association and secretary of the Hawick branch of the K.O.S.B. Association. He married Nellie Duncan and had 3 sons Andrew and Derek (formerly spelled ‘Alane’, ‘Alin’, ‘Allain’, ‘Allane’, etc.).
Allanhaugh Bank

older Robert, or William (recorded elsewhere at about the same time) or even Adam. John Scott of Allanhaugh’s lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110 in 1643. The name was also used to describe the flat land near the confluence of the Teviot and Allan Waters. The ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, in which William Henderson slew Robert Rule in 1627 is supposed to have taken place near here. The former village there was essentially an earlier version of what became Newmill. An article in the Edinburgh Magazine of 1820 recalls a story told by an elderly inhabitant about witches entertaining the Devil there (also spelled ‘Allanhauch’ etc., it is ‘Alanehauch’ in 1494, ‘alanhauch’ in 1494/5, ‘Alanhalch’ in 1500, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1517, ‘Allanehauche’ and ‘Allanhalche’ in 1524/5, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1526, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1527, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1528, ‘Al-lanelhalis’ in 1530, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1534, ‘Allane-hauch’ and ‘Alanhauch’ in 1535, ‘Allanhaucht’ in 1540, ‘Allanehauch’ in 1553/4, ‘Allanehauche’ in 1557, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1561, ‘Alanhauche’ in 1564, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1569 and 1574, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1581 and 1585 and ‘Allenhaugh’ in 1643; it is sometimes called ‘Allannmouth’ or ‘Allanmouth Tower’; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Ellenm...’).

Allanhaugh Bank (ā-, aw-lin-hawf-bawngk) n. hillside to the south of the mouth of the Allan Water, lying on the south-east side of Ringwood Hill.

Allanhaugh Mill (ā-, aw-lin-hawch-mil) n. farm along the north side of the Allan Water, just upstream from Allanmouth Tower, where there was once a mill and drying kiln. The flat piece of land there (between the road and the river) was known as the Allan Haugh. The mill was mentioned in 16th century records, and the land became part of Whitchesters farm. In a valuation of 1627 it is described as paying ‘2 bolls in stok, half boll in teynd’. Walter Riddell was probably miller there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with John Wilson being listed as a tailor in the same location. Walter Riddell, ‘Dustyfit’, was miller there in about 1710. It was still referred to as ‘Allan Haugh milne’ in the 1717 Parish records. However, in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is referred to as Raesknowe Mill. John Scott and John Graham were tenants in 1725. John Nichol was tenant in 1737 and John Scott in 1758. William ‘Lammert’ was farmer there in 1797. In 1841 the house was still ‘Allanhaughmill’, and occupied by the Hume family. The mill was marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map close to where Rampy Sike joins the Allan Water. Presumably Newmill was the ‘new’ version of this old mill (also called ‘Allanhaugh-miln’, it is ‘Alanehauchmilyll’ in 1627 and ‘Allanhaughmilne’ in 1694 and 1737).

Allanhaugh Toor (aw-, ā-lin-hawf-, -hawch-toor) n. former tower in Allanhaugh, also called ‘Allanmouth Tower’. It was once home of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and the existing structure is probably from about 1590. Only the lower vaulted storey remains (with many initials scratched into the stones from 19th century visitors), standing on the high left bank of the Allan, surrounded by a semi-circular bank and ditch. The dimensions of the structure are 7.5 m by 7.5 m, with very thick walls.

Allanmooth (ā-lin-mooth) n. Allanmooth, another name for the tower and lands at Allanhaugh (it is ‘Ellenmounth’ in 1594; it is marked ‘Ellenmout’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Ellenm...’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Allan Watt’s (aw-lin-wawts) n. Allan Watt & Son, former newsagents at the corner of Station Buildings and Commercial Road. The business was established by Allan Watt in 1880 and lasted for more than a century, being run by 3 generations of the same family.

the Allan Witter (θu-ā-lin-wi’-ur) n. full name of the Allan.

Allan Witter Reservoir (ā-lin-wi’-ur-re-survwar) n. small reservoir on the Allan Water, which was used as Hawick’s first municipal water supply in 1865. The reservoir can still be seen today, a little to the north of Lochburnfoot, by the side of the road that runs along the Allan.

allar (aw-lur, aw-ler) n., arch. the elder tree, Alnus glutinosa (also written ‘aller’; note that the elder tree is ellor).

Allars (aw-lurz) n. previously the area of town roughly where the present Allars Crescent and Allars Bank are situated, named after the alder trees that presumably once grew there. It is stated that in 1947 there were still 3 alder bushes growing near the outflow of the mill lade into the Slitrig. More or less the same area was earlier known as ‘Croft Angry’ and also referred to as ‘the Allars’ or ‘Allers’ (it is ‘Allars’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Allars Bank (aw-lurz-bawngk) n. upper part of the Cross Wynd, officially named in 1879, but with the name being in use earlier. The houses were built in 1841–64. The site of 5 and 6 Allars...
Allars Kirk

Bank was formerly the Hawick jail (shown on the 1857 Ordnance Survey map).

Allars Crescent (aw-lurz-kre-sin’) n. a street of houses in the Allars area, probably named after the alder trees that used to grow there, and being part of the area previously known as ‘Croft Angry’. The original houses dated from about 1841, and were demolished in 1963, along with a joiner’s shop and a knitwear factory, being replaced with a block of new houses intended for older residents, which was completed in 1973. An old thatched house abutting the Mill Path was demolished about 1880. The street is used for mustering the mounted supporters before each ride-out at the Common Riding. A 3-legged bronze ever found here is in the Museum, and may date from the 14th or 15th century.

Allars Gairden (aw-lurz-gar-din) n. former name for lands in the Allars area, perhaps around the modern Allars Crescent. In 1811 it was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls that ‘Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr’ were then owned by John Scott and valued at £10 19s. These same lands were recorded being owned by John Scott in the 1788 assessment of the valuation of Roxburghshire. By about 1874 the lands were owned by Adam Wilson, farmer at Midshiel.

Allars Hoose (aw-lurz-hoos) n. large house that stood on the old Wellogate Road, at the western side of Wellogate Bridge, being demolished to make way for the railway line. It was the residence of the Turnbulls.

Allars Kirk (aw-lurz-kirk) n. Allars Church, originally a branch of the Relief Church, with similar, yet not as dogmatic principles as the earlier secessionists, and later being part of the United Presbyterian Church. It began in 1810, with the purpose-built church erected in 1811 on the Cross Wynd, the land formerly being a croft with some ruined buildings. The building was relatively plain, with galleries on 3 sides, and originally a central stowe. It was significantly improved in 1873/4 and the adjacent hall built in 1889 (designed by J.P. Alison). The original Manse for the church was on Allars Crescent, with a new one being built in the Wellogate 1881/2 on land given by the Duke of Buccleuch. The church was damaged in a fire of 1896, but repaired soon afterwards. It was the first church in Hawick to install both gas and electric lighting. The church changed its name to the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Church in 1847 and officially to ‘Allars’ in the time of the Rev. Gunion. The church had interior renovations and a pipe organ fitted in 1926 (to designs by J.P. Alison). It became part of the Church of Scotland in 1929, after the union with the United Free Church. After about 3 years of controversy (including plans to merge with Orrock) and lack of a permanent minister, the church finally closed in 1949. The organ and some other furnishings went to Bridge Street Church, Musselburgh, and a major beneficiary of the assets was Hawick Eventide Homes Fund. The church itself was demolished soon afterwards, and the site became a car park used by Town Hall employees. The Hall survives and is used for storage purposes, both it and the car park being owned by the Common Good. A book ‘An old Border kirk’ (1909) was written by Rev. J. Wotherspoon for the centenary and another, ‘Allars of Hawick, 1810–1949’ was edited by Adam Moffat Aitken when it closed. Church records for 1879–1950 are in the National Archives. It was also known as the ‘Relief Kirk’ and the ‘Cross Wynd Kirk’. A roll of ministers is: David Russell 1812–19; George Corson 1820–24; Peter Brown 1825–33; Andrew Mitchell Ramsay 1833–46 Andrew Jeffrey Gunion 1846–57; Thomas Russell 1857–63; Robert Muir 1864–82; George Davidson 1883–97; James Wotherspoon 1898–1946.

Allars Manse (aw-lurz-mawns) n. manse for Allars Church. The first purpose-built house was built in 1852 and sold in 1881/2, when a new manse was constructed.

allegit (aw-le-jee’, -ji’) pp. alleged – ‘...for payment to him of £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pypis ...allegit promeist be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick ...’ [BR1652], ‘Assolizes George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethar, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, allegit taken away fra his crame in Hawick’ [BR1655].

Allen (aw-lin) n. William (19th/20th C.) second landlord of the Mosspaul Hotel after it reopened in 1900. He later moved to Langholm.

allenarly (aw-len-ar-lee) adv., arch. solely, singly, solitarily, only, exclusively (used in legal documents) – ‘...nor clame any mair of Allerlee Bog (aw-lur-lee-bög) n. small loch near Cavers House, perhaps once connected by channels to a moat, partly surrounding the old tower.

Allers see Allars

allia (aw-lee-u) n., arch. an ally, associate, also used as a plural – ‘...Walter Scott of Branxhelme, for my self, and takand the burdin on me for my kin, freyndis, allia, partie and partakeris, men, tennentis, dependaris, and seruandis quhatsumeur...’ [SB1585] (there are spelling variants).

Alliegrain (aw-lee-grän) n. shepherd’s cottage for Linhope farm, situated about half a mile up the Linhope Burn and still standing James Lun, a shepherd from there is recorded as volunteering in 1803. There were Nicholes there in 1841 (‘Elygrain’ on modern maps; also spelled ‘Allegrean’; ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for the branch of a stream).

allocat (aw-lō-ka’) v., arch. to allocate, assign, appoint – ‘...in 1683, the brethren of ye presbyterie mett and did allocat to the heritors their seats in ye body of ye church’ [PR1714], allocated – ‘...having no salary allocat to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord’s Day...’ [PR1713], ‘The said incorporatione of weivers...less allocat and appoynted Robert Jollie to keip the key of the said loft doore’ [PR1716].

allotment (ur-, a-lo’-mintz) n. a portion of land rented by an individual for cultivation. They have a definition under law, and in Hawick some are run by the council and others managed by private consortia. Their popularity grew out of Victorian self-improvement ideals. In Hawick the first allotments were in the Wellogate in 1845, located where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were later built; the land belonged to the Brieryyards estate. Another field between Dovecote Street and Croft Road was then divided, followed by a field at Wilton Glebe, another at the Malt Steep (near Mayfield now), and another north of Ladylaw Place (Langlands Road). In 1851 allotments were also laid out in the West End (in the Old Glebe, feued by Rev. MacRae) and in Loch Park, followed by allotments at Wilton Dean, then more in the West End at Dykecroft and Langbaulk, and more on the Hawick Glebe between the Wellogate and the Twirlees area. In 1860 ground was granted by the Duke of Buccleuch north of the Longbaulk road for further allotments. By 1892 there were 592 plots in Hawick, but this reduced to 360 by 1949. The modern ones at the Dean were started in 1923, but replaced by the Park View development in the 1990s. A smaller set lies to the north of the Museum. There are extensive allotments at the top of the Wellogate, off Wester Braid Road (sometimes referred to as Tanlaw). There have been subsequent plots elsewhere, e.g. off Bridge Street and Northcote Street, and in Weensland (by Weensland Mill), Stirches, Whitehaugh View and the Village (near St. Cutibert’s). Those at Twirless, the Lumback and Wilton were largely built on in the 1960s (more common in the plural form).

allowance (a-low-ins) n., arch. permission, approval, sanction – ‘...to enquire at Robert Elliot of Midleymihne, how he came to take down the baillies’ seat in the kirk, and by whose allowance’ [BR1734].

allowit (a-low-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. allowed – ‘...the two hundred merks allowit by the Earl of Queensberry and debursed be the town of Hawick...’ [BR1644].

All Was Others (awl-wawz-uth urz) n. the slogan ‘1753. All was others, All will be others’ is at 23 High Street, a comment on the transience of material possessions. The date refers to an earlier plaque, which was broken during the 1898 demolition, but preserved in the back wall, with a replica being built into the front. A passageway here was once known as ‘All Was Others Close’. Prior to 1737 the owner was Robert Scott, candlemaker, being sold in 1753 to William Nichol, a merchant, and remaining in his family until 1800. It was then bought by James Oliver (tanner, later farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot), and sold to Ebinezar Robison (whip and thong maker) in 1833, whose family gravestone remains in Wilton Old Churchyard. The house at No. 25 also has an old text. There is a similar slogan on the Text House in Denholm.

All Was Others Close (awl-wawz-uth urzklös) n. former name for a passageway at 23 High Street.

the Almichty (thu-al-mich-tee) n., arch. the Almighty – ‘...an’ whae kens but, in the mercifu’ providence o’ the Almichty, it was sent for that purpose?’ [BCM1880].
Almondslands

Almondslands (aw-mindz-lawndz) n. former name for the area later known as ‘Slaidhills’. It was included in a list of lands belonging to the Baron of Hawick, Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, in 1572 and 1594. When listed among the Baron of Hawick’s properties in 1615 it is explicitly stated to be an alternative name for Slaidhills (the origin of the name may be the Old English personal name ‘Ealhmund’, or it may be ‘Almous’, an old form of ‘Amos’; it is transcribed ‘Almonslandis’ in 1572 and 1615, ‘Almouslandis’ in 1594 and ‘Almonslands’ in about 1660).

Almonte (awl-mo-tee) n. Victorian villa-style house off the Braid Road, later called Gowanbank.

Alnwick (aw-neeck, a-nik) n. town in Northumberland on the River Aln. It is an ancient walled town and formerly an important centre of the English East March. It is the site of Alnwick Castle, home of the Percy’s, Earls of Northumberland and often Wardens of the East March. The Hotspur Tower, a gate in the former town walls, was built in 1450. The surrounding area is sometimes called the ‘Heart of Northumberland’. It was besieged in 1093 by Malcolm III of Scotland, but the Scottish force was surprised by an English army under Robert de Mowbray, Earl of Northumbria, leading to the death of the Scottish King and his son Edward. It seems likely that Borderers were part of the Scottish army. A memorial to mark the site of the battle was erected near Broomhouse Hill in 1774. William the Lion was captured in the town in 1174. The town was burned by the Scots in 1424. Like some towns on the other side of the Border, Alnwick has an annual ball game on Shrove Tuesday. Population 7,100 (2001).

a-lodd (a-lood) adv. aloud, lowdly – ‘...let thame sing aluud apon thair beds’ [HSR], ‘...I wull crye aluud, an’ he sall heare my voyce’ [HSR].

als (als) conj., arch. also, as well – ‘...and byrnyng the place of Kershop and als for fowr scor oxin and ky ...’ [SB1500], ‘...by the Towne Clerke, which wee, undersubscryveand, susteine and be thir presents susteins as als awthenticke ... ’ [BR1692].
later inherited by William Richardson Dickson. The families of labourer George Aitken, cattle-dealer John Campbell and carrier Thomas Scott all lived there in 1841, along with Margaret Graham (also spelled ‘Alton’ and ‘Altoe’; it first occurs in the early 13th century as ‘Haulton’; it is ‘Aultoun’ in 1581, ‘Auldtoun’ in 1594, ‘Alton’ in 1606, ‘Altoone’ in 1638, ‘Aldtoune’ in 1675, ‘Auldton’ in 1684, ‘Altoun’ in 1678, ‘Aitoun’ in 1686 and ‘Oldtoun’ in 1690; it is ‘Auldton’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there appears to be no direct link with ‘Alton Croft’ south of Hawick; the origin is probably Old English ‘wiel tun’, meaning ‘the farm near the source of a stream’, although there is also a possible contrast with ‘Newton’ nearby).

Alton (awl-tin) n. Elias (12th/13th C.) recorded as being ‘of Haulton’ when his son Gilbert witnessed a charter for the Hassendean family in about the 1220s. This seems likely to have been the Alton relatively near to Hassendean. Gilbert (12th/13th C.) son of Elias. He witnessed a charter given by Christina of Hassendean to Hugh, brewer of Hassendean. Roger (14th C.) witness to a charter of Altonburn for the Kers in 1357/8 and another charter for the Kers for lands in Sprouston in 1358. It is unclear where his lands were, but his name is given as ‘of Aldtoun’.

Altonburn (awl-tin-burn) n. former seat of a branch of the Kers, coinciding with the modern farm of Altonburn, between Yetholm and Hownam. In about 1354 Adam of Rule granted the lands to John of Copeland, who sold them in 1357/8 to John Ker. The Kers held the lands from this time, before their main stronghold was built at Cessford. In 1438 the lands were valued at £20 yearly, but at that time had been laid waste by war (it is ‘Haeltonburne’ in 1354, ‘Aldtonburne’ in 1357/8, ‘Awtounburne’ in 1432, ‘Aldtounburne’ in 1438, ‘Awtounburne’ in 1445 and ‘Altonburne’ in 1450).

Alton Croft (awl-tin-kroft) n. former farm, between Fenwick and Whitchesters, having a boundary with Hawick Common. The farm buildings were located to the right of the Fenwick Loan, shortly before reaching Whitchesters. In 1627 it was described as not having been previously rented to a tenant. However, it became a tenanted farm, belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1707 the valuation of the lands within Hawick Parish owned by the Scots of Buccleuch included this farm, as well as ‘Allintoun’ (probably Alton Town). It was surveyed in 1718 along with other possessions of the Scots of Buccleuch, at that time consisting of 102 acres in 4 separate parts: the largest part surrounded the farmhouse, bounded by the Common, Whitchesters and Fenwick; part to the east, bounded by Goldielands, the Common and Fenwick; part to the south, between the Common and Whitchesters; and the smallest separate part to the west, between Whitchesters and Fenwick. James Scott of AltonCrofts was listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. The will of Walter of Alton Croft is recorded in 1696 and the lands were inherited by his cousin William Wright; at that time it was described as a 5-merk land in the Barony of Whitchesters. William Bowie is listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1710. There is a record of the marches between it and Fenwick being perambulated in 1761 in order to regularise the boundary. In 1788 ‘Altoncrofts and Allintoun, otherways called Allinhaugh’ were valued together at £110 and listed among the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls they were ‘Alton Crofts and Alton Town. This suggests that there may also have been a neighbouring small-holding called Alton Town (other than the name presumably having the same origin, there is no connection with ‘Alton’ north of Hawick; also written ‘Alton Crofts’ and sometimes spelled ‘Altencrofts’, ‘Altencrofts’, ‘Aldton Crofts’, etc., it is ‘Altome Croftes’ in 1627, ‘Auldton Crofts’ in 1651, ‘Altuncrofts’ in 1696 and ‘Altoncrofts’ in 1707 and 1718; it is ‘Aldtuncrofts’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is still marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, as well as on J.P. Allison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Alton Loch (awl-tin-loch) n. small body of water near Newhouses about 2 miles north of Hawick, used for fishing and also known as Alton Pond. The lands of ‘Alton’ near there were owned by the Scots in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Alton Toon (awl-tin-toon) n. former name for a piece of land belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, probably adjacent to Alton Croft. In 1707 the valuation of the lands within Hawick Parish owned by the Scots of Buccleuch included ‘Altoncrofts and Allintoune’, whose value can be deduced to be £110. In some transcription this became ‘Mintoune’ and hence was confused with Minto in 1707. In 1788 ‘Altoncrofts and Allintoun, otherways called Allinhaugh’ was listed among the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch, and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls they were listed as ‘Alton Crofts and Alton Town’. It is therefore unclear if this was just another name for Allanhaugh, and if so why it would be combined with Alton Croft.

Altrieve (awl-treev) n. farm on the Altrieve Burn, on the road between Tushielaw Inn and the Gordon Arms, which was the last home of the Ettrick Shepherd. It was Crown property from about 1456, with John Alemoor of that Ilk having the lease in 1490 and Robert Ker in 1498. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was feued to Lord Alexander Home in 1510. John Scott in Thirlestane was tenant there in 1541, paying £50 yearly. The Scotts of Thirlestane were ‘kindly tenants’ of these lands, buying them outright from Alexander Lord Home in 1590. The tenants in 1609 were James ‘Wynlaw’, John Scott and Robert Brydon. The farm was valued at about £1100 in 1802, when part of the Buccleuch estates (also written ‘Altrive’, it was formerly ‘Eltrie’ and variants; it is ‘Eltrife’ in 1456, ‘Eltryf’ in 1457, ‘Eltryes’ in 1459, ‘Eltreif’ in 1469, 1471 and 1487, ‘Eltrifer’ in 1490, ‘Eltries’ in 1498, ‘Eltref’ in 1499, ‘Eltref’ in 1501, ‘Eltries’ in 1512 and 1541, ‘Eltrie’ and ‘Elriere’ in 1609 and ‘Elitre’ in 1663; it is ‘Eltrive’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Alwul (al-wul) n. tradename of the textile mill at 32 Commercial Road, meaning ‘All Wool’, built in 1811. The corner carries the legend ‘ALWUL Coy.’ It was 1 mile and the prize money was raised by subscriptions of ‘callants’ in America. ‘Roamin wi Ford Simpson on Hawick’s Amaireican tour . . .’ [IWL], ‘Rich Amaireican uncle wad be iz benefactor . . .’ [MB].

the Amaireican Cup (thu-aw-mär-ee-kin-küp) n. silver race trophy sent from Hawick in 1887 to exiles in the Boston area as part of their Common Riding, as thanks for the donations to Hawick’s Common Riding that they had regularly sent. The trophy belonged to Colin Rae of Waltham, Massachusetts from the 1930s, passed to Mary Craig Rae in Philadelphia and she donated it back to Hawick in 2002. It has been competed for by Primary School relay teams at the Vertish Hill Sports from 2005.

the Amaireican Stakes (thu-aw-mär-ee-kin-stäks) n. race run on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century. The length was 1 mile and the prize money was raised by subscriptions of ‘callants’ in America.

amaist (aw-nást) adv., arch. almost – ‘Thaye had amaist consuemet me upon yirth . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . . an amaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther oot ti waal an glowr at the unordnar mun-sie’ [ECS] ‘. . . is tae bei seen in the a’maist uni-versal delight which the toonsfolk evince in the festiveties’ [BW1939] (also written ‘amaist’ and ‘a’maist’; J.A.H. Murray wrote it ‘ameaste’).
Ambercat (awm-er-sō) interj. emphatic ‘I am’, I certainly am – ‘A’m er so’, it means ‘I am’ [DaS] (common conversational phrase in Hawick; see entries for each word).

Amiens (aw-mee-ong) n. town in France, site of the 1802 peace treaty between Britain and France. This was hailed as the end of hostilities, although the peace would be short-lived. On the announcement of the declaration of peace Hawick was illuminated from 7–9 p.m., with fireworks and a celebratory dinner. The 42nd Royal Highland Regiment were then ordered home and passed through Hawick on their way to Edinburgh Castle. 3 of their officers were made Honorary Burgesses on that occasion.

Amos (ā-mos) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Ada Almos’ when he witnessed a sasine in 1500, in which Walter Scott inherited his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and others. He was listed as ‘seriando’ (i.e. ‘sergeant’), meaning a minor official of some sort. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of the Laird of Chisholme at Muscle. In 1612 he had 4 sheep taken by Jock ‘the Suckler’ Scott, who was later hanged for this and other crimes. He is recorded as ‘Adame Almouse’. Daisy Eva Farrar Blenkhorn (1894–1967) born in Lilliesleaf. She was named after Daisy, the adopted daughter of John Farrar Blenkhorn of Eastfield Mills, perhaps because her mother had been a servant at Stiches. She moved to the U.S.A. when she was 20, married a Mr. Schmidt, and died in Texas. Francis (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Castleton. He appears to have been a tenant, but with the name of the farm not recorded.

Amos (ā-mos) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Ada Almos’ when he witnessed a sasine in 1500, in which Walter Scott inherited his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and others. He was listed as ‘seriando’ (i.e. ‘sergeant’), meaning a minor official of some sort. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of the Laird of Chisholme at Muscle. In 1612 he had 4 sheep taken by Jock ‘the Suckler’ Scott, who was later hanged for this and other crimes. He is recorded as ‘Adame Almouse’. Daisy Eva Farrar Blenkhorn (1894–1967) born in Lilliesleaf. She was named after Daisy, the adopted daughter of John Farrar Blenkhorn of Eastfield Mills, perhaps because her mother had been a servant at Stiches. She moved to the U.S.A. when she was 20, married a Mr. Schmidt, and died in Texas. Francis (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Castleton. He appears to have been a tenant, but with the name of the farm not recorded.
Gilbert Amos (17th/18th C.) was a miller. His mill, "Munro's Mill," was recorded as a tenant at West Mains and resident at Burnflat in 1713 when he married Bessie Cowan. Gilbert (d.1672) buried in Hobkirk, where his tombstone could still be read in the early 1900s and showed a mill 'rynd,' indicating that he was a miller. His wife was Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1670. He is surely related to the later Amoses of Hobkirk, perhaps father of Walter. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Coliforthill. He was brother of Walter, and his descendants would be farmers at Hawthornside, Stonedge, Adderstonelee and Earlside. He was tenant at Hawthornside in 1728. His children included: James (b.1701); Walter (b.1705); William (b.1709); and Isobel (b.1712). James (b.1709), baptised in Kirkton Parish, was probably also his son. Gilbert (1731–1809) son of Walter, tenant at Hawthornside. He farmed Stonedge and Adderstonelee. He is probably the Gilbert at Stonedge on the 1792–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He was tenant at ‘Harriot’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 horses. He married Margaret Smith, and she died in 1811, aged 64. Their children included: Walter (b.1778), who farmed at Broadlee; Peter (or Patrick, b.1781), who farmed Earlside; and Gilbert, who was a lawyer in Hawick. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) joiner at Blacklee in Rulewater. He was probably a son of Walter (wright there) and born in 1774. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) son of Gilbert, who farmed at Stonedge and Adderstonelee. He became a solicitor in Hawick. He is recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1815. He married a niece of Mungo Park. Their children were: Walter; Robert; John; Gilbert; Mrs. John Pringle; and Mrs. John Wingfield. The family emigrated to the Galt area of Ontario in 1841. Gilbert (b.1818) son of Walter, who was joiner at Blacklee. He became joiner at Chesters in Southdean Parish (recorded there in 1866). He lived in an old thatched cottage at Chesters. His brother Robert died at Denholm. In 1842 he married Helen Fox, and she died in 1869. Their children were: Agnes Chisholme (b.1842); Isabella Fox (1845–1903), who married Thomas Gladstone; Helen (b.1847); Walter (1851–1900); Sarah (b.1853); Mary (b.1855); Wilhelmina (b.1859). He died at about the age of 90. Gilbert (b.1828) son of Peter, farmer at Earlside. He lived at Melrose. He succeeded his brother Thomas in the tenancy of Earlside after his death in 1877. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Jean Scott and their children included James (b.1650). James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son John was baptised in 1758. James (d.1814) resident of Bonchester. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish. ‘Widow Amos’, who died in 1815 may have been his wife. James (1828–1903) son of William and Isabella Jeffery, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1854 in Kirkton Parish. He was Postmaster in Ashkirk from about 1859, serving until his death. He married Helen Scott (1835/6–1900). Members of their family emigrated to New Zealand. James William Paterson (1831–68) son of Peter, farmer at Earlside. In 1861 he was farmer at Minto Deanfoot, where he was farming 230 acres and employing 8 people. He was still there in 1868. He married Barbara Douglas. Their children (born in Minto Parish) were: Isabella Douglas (b.1864), who married James Elliot; Margaret (b.1865), who died unmarried; and Peter (b.1867), who married in New Zealand. James (20th C.) Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band in the period 1949–62, during which it won the Scottish Championship and several other honours. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Riddell on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls and at Standhill in 1794 and 1797. He is recorded as owner of 2 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (b.1806/7) born in Hawick Parish, he farmed at Whiteburn in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he is listed there as farmer of 60 acres, employing 3 people. His wife was Agnes, and their children included Walter, Elizabeth, James, John, Agnes, Jessie and Thomas. Peter (b.1781) son of Gilbert, who was farmer at Stonedge and Adderstonelee. He farmed at Earlside, and at Adderstonelee before that. He was listed as joint proprietor of Earlside along with his son Thomas on the 1835 electoral roll. His name may have been Patrick rather than Peter. He married Margaret Paterson, who died in 1864. Their children were: Jean (b.1811); Thomas (b.1812); Margaret (1814–81), who married John Scott; Helen (b.1817); George (b.1820); Agnes (b.1821); Peter (b.1824); Walter (b.1826); Gilbert (b.1828); James William Paterson (b.1831); and Alison (1835–75), who married William Paterson. Robert (b.1782) son of joiner Walter and Helen Elliot. In 1816 he married Jane, daughter of George Stevenson of Bonchester Bridge. Their children included: Walter, joiner at Dovesford; and Nellie Elliot, who lived at Dovesford. Robert (b.1812) son of Walter and Bella Chisholme, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became estate joiner to Capt. Walker near Whitehaven. He returned to be joiner at Blacklee in about 1853, just before his father died. He may also have been joiner at Denholm. His wife was Margaret (from Jedburgh) and their children were: Janet Kerr, who married her cousin Walter Amos Turnbull in 1881; Isabella, who married Robert Wilson; Mary, who married John Jipps and went to London; Helen E., who married William Laidlaw, tinsmith in Hawick; Matilda M., who married William Turner from Galashiels; Margaret, who married school-board officer James Dobson; and Bessie, who lived at ‘The Hollies’ in Denholm and supplied George Tancred with genealogical information about her family. Robert (19th C.) butcher who was Cornet in 1880. For some reason he was not Right-Hand Man the following year. Thomas (1812–77) son of Peter, farmer at Earlside. He was born and died at Earlside, which he farmed after his father. He was a member and frequent speaker at the Farmers’ Club. In 1851 he was farmer of 140 acres, employing 7 labourers (and with his mother and 3 siblings living with him). In 1861 he was farmer of 110 acres and employed 9 people. He died unmarried and the tenancy was taken on by his brother Gilbert. Thomas H. (b.1816/7) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a teacher. In 1841 he was living in Deanburnhaugh, with Margaret (‘Peggy’) Scott and her family. In 1851 and 1861 he was Schoolmaster at Ladieside in Kirkhope Parish. His wife was Susan and their children included Margaret M. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill in 1685, with his name spelled ‘Ammous’. He is the first known miller there. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for 3 hearths ‘for himself and cottar’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Amoses, perhaps son of Gilbert (d.1672) and father of Gilbert and Walter. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant at Coliforthill, along with his brother Gilbert. They may have been sons of Walter (recorded) in 1685. He married Esther Gledstains in 1706. Their children included: Walter (b.1707); William (b.1710); and Gilbert (b.1712). Walter (b.1705) son of Gilbert, farmer at Coliforthill. He became tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He married Agnes Tait, and their children were: Gilbert (b.1731); James (b.1733); Bessie; Isobel; William (b.1741); Agnes; George (b.1745); and Walter (b.1746). Walter (b.1707) eldest son of Walter, farmer at Coliforthill. He became tenant at Town o’ Rule. His wife’s name is unknown. Their children included: Adam (b.1730); William (1732–71), who lived at Grange; Walter (b.1734), wright at Forkins; John (b.1736); Isobel (b.1739); Betty (b.1741); Richard (b.1743); and James (b.1746), who farmed at Bonchester; plus possibly others who died in infancy. Walter (1734–1801) son of Walter and grandson of Walter, farmer at Coliforthill. He was a wright (or joiner) at Forkins, then at Kirknowe and lastly at Blackcleughmouth (or Blacklee). He married Helen Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 74. Their children were: Walter (b.1770); Isabel (b.1771); William (b.1773), and died young; Gilbert (b.1774); William (again, b.1776); Nelly (b.1780); Robert (b.1782); James (b.1784); and Betty (b.1786). Walter (18th C.) shoemaker, probably in Ashkirk Parish. He married Jane Elliot and their children included William (b.1791/2), who was postmaster in Ashkirk. Walter (1770–1854) eldest son of Walter, wright in Rulewater. He was a joiner at Blacklee, like his father. In 1841 he is listed at ‘Blackcleughmouth’ as a ‘Cart Wright’ and and in 1851 as a carpenter employing 4 men. He married Isabella (‘Bella’) Chisholme, and she died in 1866, aged 85; her sister was Jane, wife of Robbie Turnbull, joiner and innkeeper at Bonchester Brigend. Their children, all born in Southdean Parish, were: Walter (b.1806); James (1808–53); Mary Ann, died in infancy; Robert (b.1812); William (b.1814); Helen (b.1816), who married John Turnbull, coachman at Weens; Gilbert (b.1818); Margaret (c.1820); and John (1822–95). Walter (1778–1827) eldest son of Gilbert, farmer at Stonedge and Adderstonelee. He farmed at Broadlee. Walter (1825–88) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of William and Isabella Turnbull Jeffrey. He was a commercial traveller and wholesale cloth merchant. He married Isabella Ruickbie, who was from Innerleithen (and surely a relative of the poet, James). Their children were: Agnes (c.1848); William (b.1850); Isabella (b.1855); and Rebecca (b.1859). He died in Hawick. Walter (b.1825) probably from Ashkirk Parish, and easily confused with the contemporary commercial traveller born there (who may have been a cousin, given the similarity of forenames). He emigrated to Canada, and married Isabella Cranston. Their children were: William (b.1848); Robert (b.1848); Agnes (b.1854); Walter (b.1858); Alexander (b.1860); and Isabella (b.1862). They were living in Ontario in 1871. William (17th/18th C.) elder of Hobkirk Kirk, recorded in 1727. Perhaps the same William was witness to a deed of discharge in the area in 1709. He must have been related to brothers Gilbert and Walter. William (1709–92) son of Gilbert, farmer at Coliforthill. He married Jennet Jardin, and she died in 1809. Their children included: Betty, who died in infancy; another Betty, who died at Cleithaugh, aged 50; and Jean, who died in 1828, aged 70 William (18th C.) tenant of Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule. His children (baptised in Southean Parish) included: Margaret (b.1767); Janet (b.1773); James (b.1775); and William (b.1781). William (b.1741) son of Walter, farmer at Hawthornside. His sons included Walter and Gilbert. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Dryden and their children included Betty (b.1770). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) ploughman at Hermiston, Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Knox in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1798. Their children included William (b.1802). William (1791–67) son of shoemaker Walter and Jane Elliot. He was a shoemaker and postmaster, residing at Ashkirk Mill. He married Isabella Turnbull Jeffrey (d.1858). Their children were: Walter (b.1825); Nancy (b.1826); Janet (b.1827); and William (b.1828), who was also postmaster; and Jane (b.1830) (former spellings include ‘Almes’, ‘Almos’, ‘Amis’, ‘Amis’, ‘Ammous’ and ‘Amoss’). amovit (a-moo-vi’) pp., poet. moved, affected emotionally – ‘...an’ my bowils wer amuvet for him’ [HSR], ‘Where ance I had nane, now I reckon’d a dizzen men that ance have ken’d aboot it ...’ [JBS], ‘Ance hae I mde aith bie my haliniss ...’ [JT] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

Ancrum (ang-krum) n. village about 10 miles from Hawick, near where the Ale Water meets the Teviot. It has kept its traditional stone and stucco buildings around the triangular green, containing a 16th century Market Cross. Nearby caves are said to have been used for shelter during Border wars. The area had the status of a Barony, owned by the Diocese of Glasgow until the Reformation. It had a special status with the Bishops of Glasgow from at least the 13th century. Made a Burgh of Barony in 1490 by Bishop Robert Blackadder of Glasgow, it was burned several times, including by Dacre’s men in 1514, an raiding party from Redesdale in 1542/3 and Hertford’s men in 1545. The village was originally called Nether Ancrum, to distinguish it from Over Ancrum (north of the Ale), which never recovered from the 1545 burning. The battle of Ancrum Moor took place nearby in 1545. It was also a hot-bed of Covenanters, their minister being exiled to Holland in the 1660s, causing near riots, with offenders publicly whipped and sold as slaves. The village had a thriving local linen manufacturing enterprise until the early 19th century, with a Lint-mill Ancrum and Bleachfield on the north side of the Ale, opposite the church. Ancrum House, originally built 1558 stood nearby, being burned several times and destroyed for good in 1970. The old parish church, near the Ale Water, contains an ancient hog-backed gravestone. An ancient carved spiral from here is in the Museum. ‘Mantle Walls’ (also known as ‘Malton Walls’), immediately east of the village, may have been the site of a palace of the Bishops of Glasgow. The historic Ancrum Bridge crosses the Teviot just to the south.

Dr. William Buchan, who was influential in promoting hygiene to fight disease, was born here in 1729. The parish of Ancrum also contained Longnewton and Belses villages – ‘Dena! when sinks at noon the summer breeze, And moveless falls the shadowwork of the trees, Bright in the sun thy glossy beeches shine, And only Ancram’s groves can vie with thine’ [JL] ‘Oh let me the sun thy glossy beeches shine, And only Ancrum’s groves can vie with thine’ [JL]

Ancrum Kirk

Ancrum Kirk was built in 1632. It was destroyed in 1873 and again in 1885. It was then rebuilt in Scottish Baronial style, but totally destroyed by fire in 1873 and again in 1885. It was then rebuilt in Scottish Baronial style, but demolished about 1970. Although the house has disappeared, the extensive planted landscape survives.

Ancrum Brig (ang-krum-brig) n. old preserved road bridge across the Teviot near Ancrum, where the A698 joins the A68. This replaced an even earlier bridge, which in 1623 was the site of a shocking murder when blindman John Elliot was robbed and thrown over the side by Abie Armstrong, who was later hung for the crime. Before the Teviot Bridge was built in Hawk in 1741, travellers who were unable to ford the river had to travel all the way to Ancrum to find a bridge. The 1782 red sandstone 3-arch bridge survives, but no longer carries the main road. The main pier contains a carved Douglas heart.

Ancrum Court (ang-krum-kör) n. part of Stirches, off the top of Atkinson Road, built in 1974 and named after the village of Ancrum.

Ancrum House (ang-krum-hoos) n. former mansion built near the site of Over Ancrum and long the residence of the Scotts of Ancrum. The oldest known part was built by Robert Kerr of Ferniehirst about 1558 and much extended. It was altered about 1632. Tax was paid on 90 windows there in 1748 and 83 in 1753. It was almost totally destroyed by fire in 1873 and again in 1885. It was then rebuilt in Scottish Baronial style, but demolished about 1970. Although the house has disappeared, the extensive planted landscape survives.

Ancrum Church, a ruin dating from the 18th century, containing a carved stone from a Norman predecessor and an ancient hog-backed gravestone nearby. The earliest record of a church is 1116. The Bishop of Glasgow’s palace was located at the east end of the village, and attacked by William Wallace in 1297. The present church is from about 1890, replacing the 1762 structure. The village also had a Free Kirk. The lands of Ancrum Kirklands were once attached to the church and later became part of the estate of Elliot of Minto. The Manse was built in 1751, with later additions and Ancrum (ang-krum) n. David (17th C.) recorded in the county valuation for Ancrum Parish in 1643. It is recorded that the lands of ‘David Ancrum, &c for themselves and the remanent feuars of the seventeen lands in Nether Ancrum’ were valued at £944. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne de alncrumb’ in 1252 when he witnessed the sale of a field of Fairnington.

John (d.c.1362) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Clerk-Register 1360–62, his name appearing as ‘de Allincrum’, ‘Allingrum’, ‘Allynccrum’, etc. He was also Writer to the Privy Seal in 1362. The ‘fermes’ of Peebles were paid to him in 1362, but not accounted for because of his death; these were paid to his executors in 1364. It seems feasible that he was related to John of Ancrum who was recorded in 1252. There is a Burgess of Edinburgh with this name recorded in 1362, who could be the same man.

John (d.c.1393) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1364 and was still in that position in 1393. However, Thomas ‘de Mathane’ was Archdeacon a year later. It seems likely that he was related to the slightly earlier John. Richard (12th/13th C.) recorded as Dean of Ancrum around 1220, and as Parson of Ancum and Dean of Teviotdale around 1223. He remained in office until about 1223. The church he was associated with appears to have been used effectively as his surname. It is unknown what family he came from, but one possibility is that he was the same as Richard of Elwood, Canon of Glasgow, or Richard of Braid.

Richard (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Richard de Alnecrum’ in 1296 when he had his lands in Roxburghshire restored.
Ancrum Moor

renovations; the earlier manse had 16 windows according to the 1748 Window Tax Rolls and 17 in 1753.

Ancrum Moor (ang-krum-moor, -mewr) n. battlefield located 2 miles north of Ancrum, where in 1545 Archibald Douglas and Scott of Buccleuch, in retaliation for the burning of Melrose Abbey, Jedburgh and other Borders areas, routed a larger English army under Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun, leaving them both dead. The Scots leaders were Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, the Earl of Arran, Norman Leslie, Master of Rothes, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and Homes and Gordons from the Merse. The Scots laid in ambush in a marshy area, covering up and filling with pits the old Roman road, which was the easiest access for the English. The Scots used surprise, as well as having the setting Sun behind them and a wind blowing the gunpowder smoke towards the enemy. Some of the Borderers (perhaps including Crozier, Olivers, Halls, Turnbulls, Armstrongs and other ‘broken clans’), originally on the English side, stripped off their red crosses and crossed to join their countrymen. It is estimated that over 600 English were slain and 1,000 prisoners taken. The site is just east of the A68 at Lilliardsedge, traditionally named after the Maiden Lilliard who is said to have fought there with the Scots (although in fact the area was known as ‘Lilliard’s Cross’ from much earlier times). The Battle is also sometimes referred to as the ‘Battle of Lilliard’s Cross’ or ‘Muirhouselaw’, with the exact location being somewhat uncertain. The precise date of the Battle is also ambiguous. Another story told is of how a heron was startled on the field between the 2 armies – ‘The mountain-streams were bridg’d with English dead; Dark Ancrm’s heath was dyed with deeper red; The ravag’d abbey rang the funeral knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell’ [JL], ‘…A was stannin on bluiddy Ancrum Muir’ [ECS].

Ancrum Pairish (ang-krum-pä-reesh) n. parish around the village of Ancrum, absorbing the ancient parish of Langnewton. Bounded on the south by the Teviot, it was surrounded by the parishes of Minto, Lilliesleaf, Maxton, St. Boswell’s, Craigs, Roxburgh, Jedburgh and Bedrule. In 1643 it was valued at about £10,000.

Ancrum Spittal (ang-krum-spi-ul) n. hospital from mediæval times, situated on the outskirts of Ancrum, near Harestanes. It was burned down by Hertford’s men in 1545. However, in 1560 it was the location where a bond was signed to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers (it is ‘the Spytell’ in 1548/9 and ‘Ancoram Spittell’ in 1560).

Ancrum Wudheid (ang-krum-wud-heed) n. Ancrum Woodhead, lands near Ancrum, once a seat of the Kers. In a bond of 1547/8 between the Scotts and the Kers they had a tryst at ‘Ancrumwoodheid alias the Palisfuird’. The location is the modern farm of Woodhead, just north-west of Ancrum, and with Palacehill adjacent.

Anderson (awn-dur-, -dee-sin) n. Adam (b.1775/6) grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His property is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a vintner in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is a publican on the Howegate on the 1841 census and a stone-mason at 18 Howegate in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth, and children included Alexander, Archibald, Margaret and Isabel. Adam (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Rev. Æneas (b.1889) born in Aberdeen, he trained at Hackney Theological Academy and became minister at Bexley Heath in 1913 and then Nairn in 1918. He became minister of the Hawick E.U. Congregational Kirk in 1922, succeeding to W.J. Ainslie. His period as minister saw the church recover from debt and install the organ. He was plagued by ill health. He left for Montrose in 1927, later being minister at Nairn again and then at Newport-on-Tay. Alexander (18th/19th C.) purchaser of the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile in 1807. To make this purchase he borrowed money from Robert Turnbull in Roughlee, and to repay the debt his heirs had to sell Kirkstile to Peter Smith. In 1811 he was listed as owner of hagl of Kirknowe, valued at £39; the lands were later owned by Elliot of Wolfelee. Alexander (b.1829/30) from England, he was shepherd at Billhope in Castleton Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Michael, Robert, Alexander and William. Allan (1806–15) only son of James, who died in Edinburgh at age 8. The weeping elm tree on the lawn outside Wilton Lodge Museum was planted by his father in 1815 as a memorial. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Timbersidehill, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Andisone’. Andrew (18th C.) resident at ‘Coom’ when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762. He was probably also father of Helen (b.1755), Mary (b.1758) and Andrew (b.1760). Andrew (b.1798/9) born in Ettrick Parish, he was farmer at Woodburn. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret and sister Margaret. In 1851 he was farmer of 800 acres, employing 6 labourers. In 1862 he was visiting Thomas (perhaps his brother) in Galashiels. He is still recorded at Woodburn in 1868. Andrew (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Ekron and their children included: Agnes Ekron (b.1839); and Janet (b.1842). His wife may have been the daughter of John Ekron and Ann Johnstone born in 1796. Andrew Ballantyne (19th/20th C.), hosiery worker, who was grand-nephew of ‘Wat the Drummer’. He played drum in the Drums and Fifes for 64 years from 1882, being band leader after his uncle Andrew Ballantyne retired. He was also Church Officer at St. George’s from 1908 until about WWII. Along with his wife he was presented with gifts for 25 years service in 1933. Archibald (1804/5–89) farmer at Changehouse near Teindside. In 1828 he married Margaret Potts (1802/3–84). His grandson Edward Barton was a marine engineer. Barbara of Tushielaw (d.1790) eldest daughter of Michael. She succeeded to the family estates on the death of her uncle Patrick in 1786. Her sister Christina was wife of Gilbert Chisholme of Stiches. She was ‘Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw’ in 1785 when taxed for her lands of Tushielaw, Cornlaw and Cacrabank. She is probably the ‘Mrs. Anderson Fusalaw Hawick’ who paid tax for having a female servant in 1787 and is clearly ‘Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw in Hawick’ in 1788–91. She was owner of Hislop and Ramsaycleuch in 1788, valued at £549 4s. She is probably the ‘Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw’ recorded as owner of the farms of Hislop and Ramsaycleuchburn in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased before then). She married Dr. Alexander Kirton (or Kirkton), surgeon in Barbados. Their children were: Anne (d.1804), who married John Allen Otton and Henry Peter Simmons, and whose grand-daughter Anne Vernon Simpsons later succeeded, marrying Benjamin Thomas Gaskin and secondly Rev. Thomas Gordon Torry; and John Kirton-Anderson (1758–1816). She secondly married William Caster (who as a result was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788), and they had a daughter, Georgina. Barbara ‘Babbi the Cow’ (b.1806/7) housekeeper for Robert Scott, who kept a tenement at 43 High Street in the mid-19th century. Her first name was also written ‘Babby’. She is listed as servant there on the 1841 census. Benjamin Thomas Gaskin (1819–87) posthumous son of Benjamin Thomas Gaskin and Anne Vernona Simmons. He inherited the entailed estate of Tushielaw and Hislop through his mother, and hence took the additional surname ‘Anderson’. He was listed among the major landowners of Hawick Parish in 1839. His initials are inserted into the Land Tax Rolls in about 1874, as owner of Hislop and Ramsaycleuchburn. In 1853 he petitioned Lords of Council and Session to allow the estate to become unentailed, as a result of improvements he had made to the farms. In 1841 he married his cousin Emily Claxton Callender of the Barbados. His son of the same name (b.1842) was a Colonel in the Scottish Borderers. Charles (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in 1838, but presumably moved or died shortly afterwards. Charles (1827–86) son of Rev. James of Stoneykirk, Wig-townshire. He was a solicitor in Jedburgh. He was a Collector of Rates for Roxburghshire and in 1879 was appointed Clerk to the Lieutenancy. He was Secretary of the Jedforest Club. He married Jessie Niven, eldest daughter of Dr. Robert Ballantyne from Girvan. They had 8 children, including Robert Ballantine. He died at Glenburnhall, near Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) mentioned as ‘David Andisoun in Hawik’ along with many others in a document by the Lord Advocate, as a local person guilty of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. He did not appear and was denounced as a rebel. David (18th C.) factor to Archibald Douglas of Cavers recorded in 1773. David (b.c.1800) factor at Larriston. He was listed among heads of households in 1835 as steward at Shaws, then at Toftholm in 1836 and ‘overseer’ or steward at Larriston from 1837. He was listed there on the 1841 census, along with his wife Jane and children Helen, Margaret, Jane, James and Eliza. Probably the same David was steward at Shaws in 1835 and Toftholm in 1836. David (b.1806/7–69) native of Newcastleton, he was a stone-dyer to trade, and remembered for his poetry. His grandfather was shepherd at Redmoss. He wrote the song ‘Copshawholm Fair’, written in 1830 and first printed in 1868. His poems are collected in ‘Musings by the Burns and Braes of Liddesdale’ (1868), which also includes some other verses by Liddesdale writers. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at about 37 South Hermitage Street in Newcastleton and at about No. 44 in 1861. He married Mary Martin, who died in 1867, aged 58. Their children included: Henry (1831/3–60); William (1833/4–72), who died at Penzance; Robert; Ann; Nichol; Thomas (1845/6–1929); David; and Matthew. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. David (b.1817/8) from Ewes, he was farmer at Gorrenberry in 1851. He was recorded as farmer of 2600 acres of moorland, employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elliot and their children included James, David, Janet and Christina. Elizabeth ‘Bet’ (19th C.) sister of ‘Glaury Wat’, who lived in a hovel in the Kirk Wynd in the mid-19th century. She used to sell coal by the stone. Fenwick (19th C.) resident at Larriston. He ran in the 1 mile race at the Liddesdale Gymnastics in 1837. George (18th/19th C.) resident at Birselees in 1811 when he subscribed to Andrew Scott of Bowden’s poetry book. George (b.1818/9) born in Cavers Parish, he was shepherd at Galalaw. He is thus listed among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he is an agricultural labourer at Galalaw Braefoot and was a farm servant there in 1851. By 1861 he was living at Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Isobel and their children included Elizabeth, Michael, Isabel, Thomas, Jessie, Janet, James, George, John and William. Henry (18th/19th C.) stone-dyer in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–37. He was in Newcastleton in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Walter, Margaret and James. His mother Margaret appeared to be living with him in 1841, as well as siblings Janet, Walter and Michael. Henry (19th/20th C.) born at Lymiecleuch, son of John (shepherd at the Wisp), grandson of Henry (who worked on a Cumberland farm for Mr. Aitchison of Linhope) and great-grandson of John (who came from the Langholm area). He began as a herd at the Wisp and worked at Milsington. In 1874 he moved to Rulewater, first as a servant to the Rev. Ewen, then driving Douglas Taylor’s horses, wire-fencing, etc. He started as a carrier in 1881, particularly to and from Hawick. It is said he got lots of work from Sir Walter and Lady Elliot. He married Ellen, daughter of William Black of Lockerbie. Their children were John (who lived in Edinburgh), William (who worked as a butler at Wolfelee and then in Wales), Henry (who worked on the railway in Wales) and Tony. Hugh (19th C.) proprietor of Waterloo House in Hawick. A large stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. Hugh John (b.1843/4) son of Robert and Marjorie Michie. He married Betsy Laidlaw in 1866 and their children included Robert (b.1867) and Janet Scott (b.1868). Hugh (??–??) father of the 1898 Cornet and one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club. He was Acting Father in 1902, ran a builders firm and lived at Hazeldene. Isab (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1712 receiving money from the Hawick Parish Session ‘for teaching poor lassies’. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1716 when David Miller was fined for calling her a liar in court. J. (18th/19th C.) resident at Raesknowe. He is listed as ‘J. Anderson’ in when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. J. (??–??) born in Edinburgh, he was an apprentice at Inness-Henderson, from 1930, leaving for the London office of Braemar 4 years later and eventually becoming a director of the Edinburgh knitwear store Romans & Paterson. He spoke at the 1979 Callants’ Club dinner, his speech containing several Hawick nicknames. J. ‘Tojo’ (??–??) High School English and Arithmetic teacher of the mid-20th century. Known to be ‘belt-happy’, he was nicknamed after the Japanese military leader and Premier. James (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among ‘The poor in Hawick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School 1722–46. He married Jean Kerr of Ancrum in 1723 in Edinburgh. He also served as a Bailie in the 1720s. The General Assembly were considering sending preachers to Gaelic-speaking areas where Catholicism was believed to be spreading. He applied for such a bursary in 1723, but the local Presbytery kept him, stating he had such an Aversion to, and unfitness for performing in publick, as seem’d to them to be very inherent in his temper and constitution’! Also in 1723 he (along with the minister Charles Telfer) had a bond with the Session for ‘400 marks of ye poors money’. In 1725 and 1728 he witnessed baptisms for William Tudhope. In 1740 he was ‘Grammar Schoolmaster’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Hynd at Crumhaugh’. James (18th C.) resident at Bellendean in 1761 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. He was probably related to the James recorded at Bellendean Rig in 1841. James (18th C.) resident at Alemoor in 1762 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. This is only 7 months after the baptism of the son of James in Bellendean, suggesting that they were different men. One of them must be the James who married Helen Scott in 1757, and whose son Robert was baptised in 1758. James (18th C.) weaver at Blackcleghemouth. His daughter Isabel was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. Janet (b.1783) and James (b.1786), also baptised in Hobkirk, were probably also his children. James (1714/5–1782) tenant in Whitslade. In 1751 he married Catherine Linton (although she is transcribed from the gravestone as his sister), the marriage being recorded in Ettrick and Robertson Parishes; she died in 1780, aged 63. Children baptised in Robertson Parish who were probably his include: John (b.1753); Thomas (b.1753); James (b.1755), probably tenant in Hyndhope; Isobel (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Andrew (b.1762). Even although he was deceased by then, he could be the James recorded at Whitslade in Ashkirk Parish on the 1786–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Stobicote. He was one of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He is recorded at Stobicote on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) carpet weaver who lived on the Loan. His daughter Mary married Thomas Baptie, who was letter carrier at Bonchester. James (1750–1844) born in Perth, he worked for the East India Company, along with his brother David. He was a Persian interpreter, associated with Warren Hastings, and some of his manuscripts are in Edinburgh University Library. After retiring he purchased Wilton Lodge in 1805 from Lord Napier. His land extended as far as what became Sunnyhill, as shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He was a Lieutenant Colonel in the Roxburghshire volunteers from about 1808. He created the Avenue as an entrance to the main house around 1810. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (b.c.1790) born in Robertson Parish, he was a shepherd in Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw Floors in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He had previously lived in Innerleithen. His wife was Marion (or Mary) and their children included Janet, George, Alexander, Robert, James and Elizabeth. James (b.1796/7) born in Yarrow Parish, he was a farm worker living at Bellendean Rig in 1841. He was farmer at Easter Alemoor in 1861, when he was then listed as farmer of 900 acres. He married Margaret, daughter of John Sword and Janet Lunn. Their children included Janet (b.c.1836), Helen (b.c.1838) and Elizabeth (b.1840). He may have been the son of John, tenant of Drycleuch, born in 1795. It is possible he was related to the earlier James who lived at Bellendean. James (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–37. James (19th C.) grocer who bought 9 High Street about the 1860s, selling it to James Hogg. James (1867–1957) born in Brechin, he trained at the Independent College in Dublin and became Assistant Minister at Falkirk Evangelical Union Church in 1888. In 1894 he became minister of Emmanuel in Glasgow. He moved to Ballymena, County Antrim in 1901, Kingstown, Dublin in 1904, Albion Street, Aberdeen in 1909, Wardlaw Church, Glasgow in 1915, Albany Chapel, Edinburgh in 1917 and St. Andrew’s, North Shields in 1919. In 1923 he became minister at Newcastleton Congregational Kirk, and left in 1926 to go to Shotts. James ‘Jim’ or ‘Dimmer’ (1931–2015) Council employee who acted as Halberdier 1959–2008. His father also had the same nickname (which is apparently unrelated to being in charge of street lights!). He served with the K.O.S.B. and after the War worked for the Council’s maintenance department. He was asked by Bill Allan to be a Halberdier to replace the retiring Alec Dobbie. He thus served the Town for 50 years, which is probably the longest ever for a Burgh Officer. James ‘Jim’ or ‘Tio’ (d.2008)
Anderson

Hawick character, whose catch-phrase was ‘yo-lo’. Known for singing, especially ‘The 5-bar gate’ and ‘The Exiles Dream’ (to his own tune).

John (16th C.) became holder of the benefice of Hassendean Kirk in 1544 when it was resigned in his favour by John Duncan. He then asked for 18 months prorogation to oust George Scott, who had ‘intruded himself’. John (17th C.) tenant in Barnes in the Slitrig valley. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for ant in Barnes in the Slitrig valley. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles. John (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Oakwood, descendent of smiths to the Scotts of Harden, who had come over from the Borthwick. His grandson, also John, was blacksmith at Ettrickbridge in the 19th century, and recounted (printed in the Border Counties’ Magazine of 1880) a story about how he helped Scott of Harden escape from the dragoons, by leading them astray when they came in the dark to his smiddy. John (18th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he married Bessie Anderson (the marriage also announced in Kirkton Parish). Their children included: Jean (b.1720); Thomas (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and John (b.1728). John (18th C.) recorded being in Ashkirk Parish in 1742 when his marriage announcement to Margaret Waugh was made in Melrose Parish, with James Waugh as cautioner. John (18th C.) tenant in Newton, Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Grundston in 1770. He married Jean, daughter of George Thorneburn, smith at Ashkirk. Their children included: Jean (b.1770), who married Hawick hosier John Eckford; Michael; John (b.1773); and James (b.1780). George (b.1767), who was baptised in Wilton Parish was probably another son who died young. The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott. He may be the same as the farmer at Appletreehall, recorded as owner of 3 work horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (where his name is ‘Andison’). John (18th C.) resident at Milsingtonhaugh in 1790 and 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Comonbrae according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1745/6–1815) tenant farmer at Drycleuch. He married Helen Laidlaw, who died at Fanss in 1848, aged 83. Their children (baptised in Yarrow Parish) included: John (b.1791); William (1792–1804); James (b.1795); Janet (1799–1856), who married Thomas Scott and died at Broadlee; Robert (b.1803), who died in infancy; and William (again, 1804/5–28), who died at Fanss. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. John Kirton of Tushielaw (1758–1816) son of Barbara and Dr. Alexander Kirton. His name is also written ‘Kirkton’. He was one of the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He married Angel Price, but they had no children. He was succeeded in the lands of Tushielaw and Hislop by his great-niece Anne Verona Simmons. However, he was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 2 horses. John (1769/70–1857) smith in Ettrickbridge, descendent of blacksmiths of the Scotts of Harden for several generations. He recounted a tale (published in dialect in the Border Counties’ Magazine for 1880) of incidents involving the Laird of Harden, around the time of the ‘45’. This story came down to him from his grandfather, who had been smith at Oakwood. He probably married Helen Laidlaw and their children included: John (b.1791); William (b.1792), possibly an engineer in Shoreditch; James (b.1795); Janet (b.1799); Thomas (1801–77), who was also a blacksmith; James (b.1803). John (18th/19th C.) smith in Lant. His wife and children are buried in Bedrule kirkyard in the 1810s and 20s. John (b.1795/6) shepherd at Wrae in Ewesdale. He was there in 1851. His wife was Mary and their children included Elizabeth, who married Stephen Doobie.

John (b.1795/6) born in Hawick Parish, he was shepherd at Falnash Parkhead. He is recorded there in 1851. His wife was Agnes. He was succeeded as shepherd by his son William. John (b.c.1815) tailor of Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about Back Road. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a daughter Mary. John (b.1814/5) son of shepherd Henry, he was born in Ewes Parish. He spent his early years working near Langholm, then moved to the shepherd’s cottage at the Wisp Hill in 1841. He stayed at the Wisp until 1863. He married Betsy Scott (from Ettrick) and their children included: Mina; Henry, born at Lymiecleuch; Helen; Joanna; John; James; Betsy; and Francis. Sgt.-Maj. John (19th/20th C.) born in Hawick, he was a Boer War veteran and President of the Hawick Ex-Soldiers’ Association. His sister Agnes married Robert H. Laidlaw. He emigrated to

Anderson Hamilton, Ontario, and served with the ‘Princess Patricia’s Canadian Light Infantry’ in WWI. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1916, and lost a leg as the result of wounds. John (19th/20th C.) grand-nephew of ‘Wat the Drummer’ and brother of Andrew. He retired from playing the fife in 1947 after 62 years service with the Drum and Fife band. Joseph (19th C.) from Glasgow, he was precentor at Hawick Free Kirk 1879–83, being succeeded by Mr. Urquhart. Judith (b.1972/3) from Hawick, she has won the Hawick Golf Club Championship 17 times and the Border Women’s County Golf Championship 9 times. She has also been Manager of the Scottish Ladies’ Golf Team. Mary (d.1885) daughter of James Anderson, she inherited Wilton Lodge and the half Barony of Wilton. She was listed as ‘Miss Anderson, Wilton Lodge’ among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1858 she married widower David Pringle. Their initials ‘DMP’ were carved on the building during the 1859 alterations. Michael of Tushielaw (d.1719) purchased his lands in 1688, from Walter Scott of Tushielaw, who was his wife’s brother. It is unclear where he came from, and where he was before he moved to Tushielaw. In about 1700 he is probably the Anderson of Tushielaw who it is said had a number of small cottages pulled down, making people homeless, in order to have Ettrick Hall built. He was listed on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690 and 1704. He acted as factor for Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in the 1680s and 1690s. He contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at over £500. The In 1714 he resigned his lands of Tushielaw and Hislop to his eldest son, Michael, retaining liferent for himself. The entail mentions that he owned ‘the lands of Hislops, Easter and Wester, and Ramsaycleughburn’. His wife’s first name is not known. His children included: Michael, to whom he resigned his lands, but who predeceased him, with his son Michael succeeding; and possibly James (b.c.1693), tenant in Burncleugh, whose descendants claimed the estates in the 19th century. The existence of James, and whether he could claim a right as male-heir to this first Michael, became a central point in the court case of the 1820s and 30s. Michael of Tushielaw (d.bef. 1719) son of Michael. He is probably the ‘Michael Anderson of Rashiegrain’ listed in the 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish (separately from Michael of Tushielaw, who was presumably his father). He married Henrietta, daughter of Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. Since Porteous had no sons, his wife became heir to Hawkshaw, Carterhope and Fingland in Peeblesshire. His children included: Michael, who succeeded; John, who died in 1713, aged 28; Isobel (b.1695), who married Walter Welsh of Lochquharret in 1717 and divorced him in 1733; and Mary (b.1708). He predeceased his father, the lands going to his son Michael. Michael of Tushielaw (d.1762) son of Michael. He also owned lands in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire in 1761. In 1732 he married Janet, 4th daughter of Sir James Nasmyth, Baronet of Posso. He had 3 sons: Michael, who succeeded; John; and Patrick, who later succeeded his nephew Michael. His daughter Christian (Christina) married Gilbert Chisholme of Stirches in 1768. Michael of Tushielaw (d.1779) son of Michael. He was the 3rd in a line of Michaels (although this situation is certainly confused in some accounts). He married Isabella Colville. His children included: Michael, who succeeded, but died young, to be succeeded by his uncle Patrick; and Barbara, who succeeded on the death of her uncle Patrick, and was in turn succeeded by her only son John Kirton Anderson. Michael (18th C.) resident at ‘penmanshall’ in 1773 and 1775 when his sons John and Walter were baptised in Robertson Parish. Probably the same ‘Mitchel’ or ‘Mitchael’ was father of: Margaret (b.1770), who was likely to be the same Peggy who married Thomas Scott in Deanburnhaugh. Michael of Tushielaw (18th/19th C.) Laird in 1810, when a case was brought against him for illegally fishing in the Rankle Burn and elsewhere. This became something of a local ‘cause celebre’ at the time, and was finally ruled upon by the Sheriff, who was Sir Walter Scott. The story told was that a trout jumped out of the Rankle Burn, and was struck with a stick and killed by one of his companions; he was acquitted of all charges. It is unclear how he was related to other Andersons of Tushielaw. He is probably the Laird of Tushielaw listed as a Commissioner in Selkirkshire in 1819. Capt. Michael (d.1814) young man befriended and brought up by Gilbert Chisholme of Stirches, from whom he purchased the estate in 1810. On his death 4 years later he bequeathed Stirches back to the Chisholmes, along with Sillerbithall, Nether Croft and Greenhall. He was probably either the brother-in-law or nephew of Gilbert Chisholme, since Chisholme’s first wife was Christina, daughter of Michael of

Tushielaw. Michael (b.1757/8) farmer at Gorrenberry. He was listed there among heads of households in the Parish in 1835 and 1838. According to the 1841 census he was living at Gorrenberry with William, Michael (listed as ‘Schoolmaster’) and Thomas, who were young enough to be his grandchildren. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Michael (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Michael ‘Muckle Michael’ (18th/19th C.) Denholm man who was known as the local rhymer. He had a brother, Wull, who was well-known as a poacher. He recited one verse about the ‘bow o’ bale’ on 5th November in Denholm – ‘The Bough-a-bale ’l never fail, While burns grow trouts and gardens kail’. Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Todlaw in Cavers Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Muckle Michael’. Michael (1809/10-90) born in Denholm, he worked as a stockmaker there. From about 1830–60 he was the jailor of Hawick’s old prison (where 5 and 6 Allars Bank were built). After this was closed when the Police Act came in, he moved to 8 Wellogate Place. In 1840 in Hawick he married Margaret Henderson, daughter of carrier James, and she died in 1891, aged 72. Their children were: William, who emigrated to Brooklyn, New York; Janet, who married tinsmith Robert Russell; James; Thomas D.; Elizabeth; Margaret, who married tanner James Scott; Ellen, who married Robert Simpson, Customs Officer in Glasgow; Charlotte, who married clothier Abraham W. Kerr; and Anne, who married manufacturer Adam Darling. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Patrick (d.1786) of Hazelfope (Hislop) and Rashiegrain, heritor of Hawick Parish in the 1740s. He was 3rd son of Michael of Tushielaw, but succeeded to the Tushielaw titles after the death of his nephew, Michael. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed in 1780 as ‘of Hislop, now of Tushylaw’, on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire. He married Rachel Watt. He died with no male heirs, the estates going to his niece Barbara, leading to a legal battle in the 1830s. Peter (19th C.) from Lewisburn, England. He was listed as ‘coal grieve’ in 1841, among heads of households in Castleton Parish. Rachel (b.1788/9) born in Minto Parish, she was a shopkeeper at 40 High Street. Known for her kind nature, she was often imposed upon. A portrait of her by Charles Watson is in the Museum. She is recorded as a grocer on the 1841 to 1861 censuses, living at 44 High Street, and was unmarried. In 1861 her niece Wilhelmina Campbell was living with her. She was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Robert (16th C.) notary who wrote the letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbulls at Minto in 1595. Robert (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. Robert (1643/4–1707) tenant in ‘Cartritrige’ (i.e. Carewoodrig). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1726 he married Isobel Ritdel, who was also from Robertson. His children included: Bessie (b.1731); Helen (b.1736); John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and Robert (again, b.1741). Robert (18th C.) gardener recorded at Minto in the period 1778–88, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lorraine in 1789, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Roberton Parishes. She may be the Margaret (b.1769), daughter of John Lorraine and Ann Mitchellhill, who died in Hawick in 1794. Robert (d.1819) mason in Hawick. He was father-in-law to carrier Walter Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He was also listed as ‘Andison’, a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1816. Robert (b.c.1778) farmer at the West Port. He is recorded at about No. 5 Loan in 1841. His children included James, Margaret and William, but his wife must have already been deceased by 1841. Robert (b.1779/80) recorded as a widower at Wrae in Ewesdale in 1851. He was living with his granddaughter Ann, who was born in Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as proprietor of Abbotrule in Southdean Parish in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.1786/7) from Cavers Parish, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Crescent. He probably lived at 11 Slitrig Crescent, where his property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory and as a publican on the Crescent in the 1841 census. In 1851 he was at about 11 Slitrig Crescent, and was on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret and Robert. Robert (b.c.1795) born in Selkirk, probably son of Charles and Betty Laidlaw. He was listed as a writer and notary of the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/26 and 1837 directories, and at ‘Teviot square’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was listed as a writer in Hawick on the list of subscribers for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was also listed as agent for the Insurance Co. of Scotland in 1825/6 and again in 1837. He lived at 4 Sandbed. He was a political agent for the Conservative Party in Roxburghshire. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons investigation into ‘fictitious votes’, since he had purchased land in Selkirkshire along with George Oliver, apparently only so that they could vote there. In 1851 he was listed as ‘Procurator Admitted’, practising in Roxburgh Sheriff Court. In 1852 he was listed on Teviot Square as agent for English & Scottish Law insurance, as well as Insurance Company of Scotland. In the 1850s he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Isabella McClaine in 1839. Their children included: Charles (b.1840); John (b.1842); and Elizabeth (b.1847). Robert (b.1808) son of Robert and Marjory Michie. He was a mason living on Punch Bowl Close in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen, from Langholm. Their children included Robert, Mary, Margaret, Jemima, Janet, Hugh John and Beatrix. Robert (b.c.1820) coachman living at Northcroft in 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, William and Isabella. Robert Ballantine (b.1858) son of Charles. He was educated in Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University and was a qualified lawyer by 1875. He became a partner with his father. After his father’s death he followed in many of his appointments, e.g. as Secretary of the Jedforest Club, agent of the Royal Bank and Collector of Rates for Roxburghshire. He was also Honorary Sheriff Substitute for the county. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Changue, Ayrshire. Robert (19th/20th C.) Cornet in 1898, and Right-Hand Man the year before! He stood in (along with A. Turnbull) when that year’s Right and Left attended a funeral. He is seen in the Gaylor film clips of the Common Riding of 1899. He moved to work at Bamford Mills near Rochdale, and took over as Chairman of the Hawick Exiles’ Club there in 1904. Stephen ‘Silent Stephen’ (1847/8–1930) son of Stephen and Henrietta Telfer and brother of William. He was all his working life a warehouseman with John Laing & Sons. In later years he was active in public life, being on the Parochial Board, then the School Board and later a Councillor, Bailie and Police Judge. He was also verger of St. Cuthbert’s for nearly 60 years, and was the oldest surviving member to recall the opening of the church. His nickname came from his taciturn nature, although he was also known for his ‘pawky’ humour. He married Janet Edmondson, who died in 1928, aged 76. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. Thomas (17th/18th C.) in 1712 money was given to Bailie Martin by the Hawick Session to distribute to him ‘for teaching poor lasses’. He could be the Thomas whose children included Robert (b.1706), Archibald (b.1706), Robert (again, b.1707) and William (b.1713). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary vailelaw and their children included Mary (b.1787). Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. His wife Mary Wilson died in 1795. Thomas (18th/19th C.) lived at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, where he was probably blacksmith. He married Janet Wilson in 1793 and their children included: Isabel (b.1795); Thomas (1797–1873), blacksmith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot; Robert (b.1802); and Margaret (b.1805). He is buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (1797–1873) son of Thomas, he was blacksmith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He is recorded with his family there in 1841, along with William Pow and 2 assistants (and Thomas Scott, who was probably his father-in-law). He was still there in 1861. He married Mary Scott (from Cavers Parish) in 1828 and she died in 1885, aged 86. Their children included: Thomas (b.1828); Robert (1830–58), also a blacksmith; John (1832–67), a surgeon; Janet (1834/5–86); and William (b.1836/7). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. Thomas (b.1799) from Melsrose, son of John and Mary Cumming. He was educated ‘at a country school’ and Edinburgh University. He was teacher at Roberton School from 1833. He was recorded there in 1837 and until the 1860s. In 1841 he was living at Roberton Schoolhouse, with his servant being Elizabeth Govenlock. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1844 in Roberton Parish he married Margaret Dall, who was from North Berwick. Their children were John (b.1845), James Dall (b.1849), Agnes Robertson Dall (b.1851), Thomas (b.1853) and Andrew Margrave (b.1855). Thomas (1800/1–67) frameworker who lived at Roadhead in Wilton. He was listed on Langlands Bank in 1861. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1835, aged 35 and he secondly married Eliza Purves, who died in 1890, aged 68. Their children included: Charles (1829/30–88); Johnstone (b.1849/50); James (b.1852/3); Elizabeth (b.1854/5); Archie (1864/5–89); Robert (1869/70–88); John (1871/2–88); and 5 children who died in infancy. His family are buried at St.

Mary’s. Thomas (19th C.) son of Robert and Isabella Grieve. He was a plumber and slater in Hawick. Thomas (b.c.1810) warehousesman in Hawick, he was born in Wiltton Parish. He was listed at Roadhead among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was living at Roadhead in Wiltton and in 1851 and 1861 at 7 Walter’s Wynd. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Finisher of Lambs Wool Hosiery’. He married Margaret, daughter of John Michie, from Old Northhouse. Their children were: Isabella Cowan (1843/4–95); and Thomas (1837–1900), Sheriff-Substitute. Thomas (d.1873) son of a Sandbed blacksmith, he took over the business, and was succeeded by Peter Clark. He married Margaret, daughter of John Michie, from Old Northhouse. Their children were: Isabella Cowan (1843/4–95); and Thomas (1837–1900), Sheriff-Substitute. Thomas (d.1873) son of a Sandbed blacksmith, he took over the business, and was succeeded by Peter Clark. He married Margaret, daughter of John Michie, from Old Northhouse. Thomas Scott ‘Tom’ (19th/20th C.) Master of the Jedforest Hounds from 1892 for 11 years. He wrote the book ‘Hound and Horn in Jedforest’ (1909). W. (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Walter (17th C.) flesher listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Walter listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the same man as the later merchant. He is probably the Walter arrmied to Isobel Wilson whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1683); John (b.1685); Margaret (again, b.1686); Jean (b.1689); and Robert (b.1690). Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1718 his daughter Isobel married John Johnston, a merchant of Kelso, and in 1719 the couple were rebuked by Hawick Session for their ‘irregular marriage’ in Edinburgh. Walter (b.c.1800) shepherd and later tenant farmer in Sundhope in Castleton Parish. He was appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. His wife was Janet Forsyth and their children included Jessie, John, Agnes, Margaret, Walter, Elizabeth, Barton and Mary. Walter ‘Glaury Wat’ (b.c.1813) resident of a hovel at the Kirk Wynd in the mid-19th century. His sister ‘Bet’ used to sell coal by the stone, while he drove a scavenger’s cart. He is recorded as a carter on the Kirkwynd in 1841, living with Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Clarilee in Southdean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William of Rashiegrain (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. William (1721/2–81) died at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane Graham, who died in 1814, aged 83. Their children included daughters Peggy and Jane, who died in infancy. They are buried at Ettleton. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was listed after Michael, who was a carrier, and so was possibly related. It is possible that he is the William, aged about 76 on the 1841 census, when he was living on Mill Bank with his wife Jane and son Alexander. William (b.c.1782) from Westerkirk, he was an agricultural labourer and shepherd in Robertson Parish. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at Craikshiel. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: Betty (b.c.1820); Jane (b.1824/5); Mary (b.c.1825); Agnes (or Nancy, b.1826); Janet (b.c.1827); Williamina (b.1832); and another daughter (b.1841). William (18th/19th C.) glove maker and leather dresser on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William ‘Wull’ (18th/19th C.) known as a poacher around Denholm, he was brother of Michael the poet. He was said to be very fast, and to have a peculiar whistle that could summon the local dogs. He was described (in about 1830, reprinted in the Border Counties’ Magazine in 1881) as ‘a lang, lanky chield, just bones and muscle’, who went barefoot and was dressed in rags. One story is told about 3 local gamekeepers and their helpers, who tried to ambush him while catching hares on Ruberslaw, and thought they had him trapped near the head of the Dean, but he jumped through a hedge, losing every stitch of clothing, and ran off stark naked. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick stocking-maker, who also worked as a teacher and merchant. He moved to Newcastleton and then to Buckholmside in Galashiels. He is probably the ‘Andison, Mr W. merchant, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Mary Lang from Galashiels. Their son William was a missionary in Jamaica and Old...

businessman Thomas Anderson. It was originally run jointly by the Town Council and the Parish Council. It had 2 wards of 6 beds each, along with a dining room, a large balcony, 2 summer-houses and walks laid out in the grounds. It became empty from 1956, was thereafter used by other hospitals for temporary accommodation, and demolished in 1966. The Sanatorium and surrounding area was also known as ‘Howdenbank’; it is labelled ‘Howdenbank Sanatorium’ on the 1921 Ordnance Survey map. The hospital was operated by the South-east Regional Health Board from 1940, and dealt with fever cases (with tuberculosis treatment moved to the Fever Hospital in Burnfoot). In the 1950s a new long-stay ward was built and the hospital also dealt with problematic births; however it closed in 1956, with all former functions effectively transferring to Peel Hospital. The buildings served as a temporary maternity ward while the Haig Maternity Hospital was being renovated, and there was also a special school housed here briefly. The buildings ceased to be used in 1966 and were demolished in 1975, to be replaced by a children’s playground. The name survives in the nearby Anderson Place (also called the ‘Sanatorium’, and sometimes written ‘Sanitorium’).

Andieson (awn-dee-sin) n. former local pronunciation, and sometimes spelling, of Anderson.

Andra (an-dru) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Andrew – ‘Signs o’ simmer …flights o’ swallows …callants cuttin’ gress …and …Andra on the High Street!’ [JC].

Andrew (an-droo) n. John (16th C.) recorded in 1576 as ‘Johnne Andro’. He ‘subscribes the act of caution for Johnne Turnbull of Mynfo’ (as well as for William Turnbull in Barnhills) in bonds relating to a feud among branches of the Turnbulls. This presumably means that he signed on behalf of Turnbull of Minto and Tunbull in Barnhills. It is unclear where he was from. Rev. Peter (1858–1927) son of James from Edinburgh. He studied at Edinburgh University and was minister at Newcastleton Congregational Kirk 1882–83. He attended St. Mary’s College in St. Andrews 1884–5 and was Church of Scotland Minister at Friockheim 1888–1924. His name is given in one list as ‘J.G. Andrew’, so there may be some confusion here.

Anderson Place (awn-dur-sin-pils) n. part of Silverbuthall, built in 1968 and named after the Anderson Sanatorium that stood nearby.

Anderson Sanatorium (awn-dur-sin-saw nit-o-ree-um) n. originally a hospital for tubercular diseases, formally opened in 1911 and named after Thomas Anderson. It was built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howdenburn, north-east of Silverbuthall. The additions to the existing house, together with new ward and administration blocks were designed by Alexander Inglis and funded by the trust established by local Andrew Oliver & Son

Andrew Oliver & Son (an-droo-o-lee-vur-an-sun) n. firm of auctioneers and livestock salesmen, established in 1817, and originators of the livestock auction mart system in Britain in 1847. The firm’s business expanded dramatically after the tax on auctions was lifted in 1849. Their public sales happened originally on Slitrig Crescent, then in the Under Haugh, moving to Loch Park, then at a mart on Bourtree Place from 1862 and finally in the Weensland Road Auction Mart from 1883. 28,155 animals changed hands on a single day in 1884, and 60,000 over a 3-day sale in 1907. The Weensland Road premises could hold 100 milk cows and other animals inside, and in the pens space for 50,000 sheep and 1500 cattle. Farm produce was sold as well as stock. It was also known for its ram sales, starting in at least 1845. A new ring, called ‘No. 1’ was opened in 1921 to separate attested stock, and No. 2 ring was added in 1849. From 1952 there were also monthly sales of cars. This auction mart became one of the largest (and the oldest) in the country, finally in the Weensland Road Auction Mart from then at a mart on Bourtree Place from 1862 and then in the Under Haugh, moving to Loch Park, lic sales happened originally on Slitrig Crescent, then in the Weensland Road Auction Mart from 1883. 28,155 animals changed hands on a single day in 1884, and 60,000 over a 3-day sale in 1907. the Anglin Club (thu-awng-glin-khub) n. Hawick Angling Club, founded in 1911, with premises at 5 Sandbed, formerly the Bridge Bar. The first such club on record started in 1858, with the goal of protecting trout in the Teviot and its tributaries. It had a membership of 172, each paying 6 pence, and with William Ogilvie of Chesters as its first President. This club folded at some point, to be replaced by the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in 1881, a body formed largely of local landowners, who controlled fishing. The Hawick Angling Club was formed in October 1911 after representation had been made to the Upper Teviotdale body to form such a club, to administer licences and to help police the waters. Since then they have worked together to administer fishing permits. The Club took over the oversight of Acreknowe Reservoir and Wulliestruther Loch in the 1920s. The Club also had its own hatchery, with yearlings raised at the Allan Water Reservoir, running until the 1970s. The Club moved to their current Sandbed premises in 1969.

Angus (awng-gis) n. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick resident who was recorded making a statement to the Magistrates about a case of a scuffle in the Kirk in 1685. He could be the Andrew born to George and Margaret Thomson in Hawick in 1648. He is probably the Andrew, married to Beatrix Gledstains, whose children included Walter (b.1676) and Margaret (b.1678). Isobel (b.c.1775) recorded as being ‘independent’ at about 50 High Street on the 1841 census. She was living with Margaret, probably her daughter. Her husband must have been the ‘Mr. Angus’ whose property there was shown on Wood’s 1824 map. John (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. John (1768/9-1850) farmer in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel, daughter of James Elliot, who was tenant at Little Whitlaw; she died in 1846, aged 73. Their children included: Catherine (1808/9-90), who married farmer James Bunyan; and Margaret (1811/2-59). They are buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) butler at Midshiels in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. Oliver (1936/7-2018) local Councillor. After serving in the Air Force, he worked as a costing clerk at Lyle & Scott’s and then at Pringles for 40 years. He chaired Hawick Community Council before becoming a Scottish Borders Councillor for Wilton, chairing the housing committee. He later became Chairman of Scottish Borders Housing Association, with the boardroom at their Selkirk headquarters named after him. He was the Master of Ceremonies at the Exiles Night for 28 years (until 2015). He was also been heavily involved with the local Boys’ Brigade and Hawick Pipe Band (for which he was Drum-Major), as well as Lodge 424. He and his wife Anne celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2010. Their children are Bill and Mary. Patrick (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. Along with ex-Bailie John Binnie and glover John Hart, he was fined in 1702 for drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Michael Scott. He was a member of the Council in 1707, stated to have been absent during a meeting to discuss the fines on the 2 Bailies who had assaulted people at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was married to Margaret Scott and their children included: Marion (b.1700); James (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1704). Robert (d.1853) Church Officer of Hawick Free Kirk from the time of the Disruption until his death. The congregation erected a headstone to his memory in St. Mary’s churchyard. He may be the Robert who was a labourer living at Kirkyard in 1841 and 1851, married to Janet and with children Sibald, Jean, William, George, Jessie (or Janet), Betsy and Alison. Angus’ Close (awng-gis-klös) n. passageway of the mid-19th century, located around 48 High Street.

the Annai (þhu-aw-nil) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. Its precise location is uncertain, but the name is recorded in the mid-17th century and is clearly somewhere just to the east of Harden. It is recorded on 2 draft maps of neighbouring parishes, with 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there.

Annals of a Border Club (aw-nulz-ov-a-bor-dur-klub) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens and published in 1899, full title ‘Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’. It is nominally the history of the dining club established in 1810 for country gentlemen around Jedburgh, which includes a large fraction of the most prominent local land-owners of the 19th century. However, the bulk of the book is actually a history of each of these families, and as such is an invaluable genealogical and historical resource.

Annals of Hawick (aw-nulz-ov-hlk) n. one of the most useful resources for early Hawick history, written by James Wilson in 1850, the full title being ‘Annals of Hawick, A.D. 1214—1814. With an appendix, containing biographical sketches, and other illustrative documents’. It was compiled from Burgh records, kirk session books and court documents, and apparently stimulated others to write similar annals for other towns. ‘Memories from Burgh records, Kirk session books and court documents, and apparently stimulated others to write similar annals for other towns. ‘Memories of Hawick’ (1855) is essentially a giant addendum.

Annan (aw-nin) n. town at the head of the Annan estuary on the Solway, once an important town in the Scottish West March, now a quiet market town. It has an ancient annual Riding of the Marches festival in early July. It is supposed to be the original home of scampi. In the 19th century, before the railway, Annan was often the initial destination for Teries emigrating by ship, small boats ferrying people from Annan to Liverpool and elsewhere – ‘Through the Border ride an’ rin. Seek frae Berwick owre to Annan, Fairer maidys ye winna win, Dotards, can ye leave them stamin?’[GWe] (Gaelic for ‘quiet water’).

Annandale (aw-nin-dal) n. valley of the River Annan, stretching roughly from Moffat to the Solway. It was a major valley of the West March, held in early times by the Bruses, Lords of Annandale, and possessing a bloody history, including battles between the Johnstones and Maxwells – ‘In Eskdale and Annandale. The gentle Johnstones ride, They have been here for a thousand years, A thousand mair they’ll byde’[T].

Anne (awa) n. (1655—1714) Queen of the United Kingdom from 1702, when her brother-in-law William III died. She was daughter of James II (of England), but had supported William and Mary (her sister) during the Glorious Revolution. She married George, Prince of Denmark, failed to produce an heir, and struggled with porphyria most of her life. Her reign saw the final Union of Scotland and England and the beginnings of the 2 party system of government, as well as the time of the oldest surviving Common Riding Flag. Dr. Thomas Somerville (who was born in Hawick) wrote a history of her reign (see also Princess Anne).

Annelshope (a-nelz-hop) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just south of where the Rankle Burn joins the Ettrick. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. Annelshope Hill lies above, reaching 434 m. This is probably the farm of ‘Auldshope’ that was once a Crown property, leased to the Ranger of Ettrick Ward in the late 15th century; this was Walter Scott (son of Alexander) in 1487—92. This is probably where Adam ‘of auldinnis hop’ was in 1494/5. Thomas Cockburn was also a tenant there in 1494/5. The Ranger there was Walter Scott (probably of Buccleuch) in 1496—98. It was Crown property in 1541, occupied by Robert of Howpasey, but claimed by the Laird of Buccleuch, paying £22 yearly. It was still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1512, 1634, 1653 and 1661. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it was written ‘Angleshope’ and formed formed part of the northern boundary of West Buccleuch. It was valued at £540 in 1785. It is easily confused (given the various spellings) with Eldinhope, which was also a Crown land (the name appears to have transformed from ‘Andel’, which was a metathesised form of ‘Alden’; it was ‘Aldanhop’ in 1456, ‘Aldanishop’ in 1468, ‘Aldanyshope’ in 1477, ‘Aldishop’ in 1491, ‘auldinnis hop’, ‘auldernisshop’ and ‘auldinischop’ in 1494/5, ‘Aldanochop’ in 1497, ‘Auldshop’ in 1502, ‘Aldinshop’ in 1512, ‘Aldishope’ in 1541 and 1634, ‘Aneshope’ in 1650, ‘Aldingshop’ in 1653 and ‘Aldingshope’ in 1661; it is marked ‘Andishop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the first part may be Old English personal name ‘Aldwine’).
Annett Hill

Annett Hill (a-ni'-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south of the road near the ruins of Castleton Castle. It may have previously been called Arnot Hill.

Annettshiel Sike (a-ni'-sheel-sik) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, running to the northeast to join the Black Burn west of Newcastleton. There are remains of at least 13 small huts on terraces nearby. ‘Annotschell’ is listed in 1541 as a vacant land in the rental roll of Liddesdale.

Anffield Mills (awn-feeld-nilz) n. Barrie & Kersel tweed manufacturing factory in the early part of the 20th century on Teviot Crescent. It was based at the north end of Teviot Crescent, on the corner with Croft Road. Barrie’s moved to a new factory at Burnfoot in 1975.

Anffield Park (awn-feeld-park) n. field in Cavers, situated south of the big bend in the road after the modern Cavers Kirk, being the north (or west) side of the main avenue leading to Cavers village.

Ann Howard’s (awn-how-urdz) n. former knitwear factory, based at Hernonhill House in the 1950s and 60s.

Annie Jolly’s (aw-nee-jo-leez) n. former cottage at the Nipkowes end of the old curling pond at Hawick Moss. Nothing now remains of the cottage except for the popular name of the nearby ‘Jolly Tree’ and that of the field across the road, ‘Cottage Park’.

Annie’s Well (aw-nee-wel) n. spring on Braidhaugh farm in Rulewater, located just above the old standing there.

annuel (an-wel) n., arch. an annual rent – ‘...of all maner, cornes, cattell, and gudis, insicht, airship gudis, dettis, sowmes of money, mailis, fernes, resumes, annuellis, caines, casualetis, and vther gudis’ [SB1569].

an thing (an-thing) pron. and the rest, and so on, et cetera – ‘Watchin’ them catchin the sawmon an’ thing’ [HNe1914], ‘A’m furn missitoot oot wi wui weshin an ernin, an thing’ [ECS], ‘She’d a grund set-ooot fo oo – aa her guid cheenie an thing’ [ECS] (also an hing).

An Old Hawick Close (an-old-hlk-klos) n. painting of the early 19th century depicting a close adjacent to the old Town Hall.

Anti-Burgher (an-tee-bur-gur) n., arch. a member of the Sessession Church, which separated from the ‘Burghers’ in 1747 over the question of taking the Burgess Oath, adj., arch. relating to the Anti-Burghers (sometimes written ‘Antiburgher’).

the Anti-Burghers (thu-an-tee-bur-gurz) n. more properly known as the First Secession Church, a group who seceded from the main church following acts of the General Assembly of 1732, and then further split in 1747. They distinguished themselves from the Burghers (Second Secession) by considering it improper to take the Burgess oath, which asserted adherence to the true religion of the land. In Hawick they specifically objected to the use of the word ‘God’ in the Burgess oath. The local Anti-Burgher congregation began in 1763. Some of this congregation travelled to the church at Midholm, 9 miles distant. They tried unsuccessfully to get Richard Jerment and then Laurence Wotherspoon to be minister, but John Young was the first ordained (in 1767). They met at the Green Kirk in Myreslawgreen from 1765, and represented the first religious dissension since the secession from Rome. There was great animosity between the two secession churches in the latter part of the 18th century. However, they reunited as the United Seceders in 1820, but continued to preach in separate churches in Hawick. The church was rebuilt in 1823. The congregation moved to Orrock Church in 1874.

antrin (a-nun-dur) adj., poet. occasional, rare – ‘An’ lambskins seek the scanty bield O’ dyke an’ hedge an’ antrin tree’ [WP].

Antroch (a-nun-dur) n. former farmstead in the Jed valley, roughly opposite Edgerston Rig. It is ‘Anterhauch’ in the 1541 rental roll of Jedforest, valued at 12s 6d, with tenant David Laidlaw. It is ‘Antreahawge’ in 1590 with another tenant. They tried at the church at Midholm, 9 miles distant. They tried unsuccessfully to get Richard Jerment and then Laurence Wotherspoon to be minister, but John Young was the first ordained (in 1767). They met at the Green Kirk in Myreslawgreen from 1765, and represented the first religious dissension since the secession from Rome. However, they reunited as the United Seceders in 1820, but continued to preach in separate churches in Hawick. The church was rebuilt in 1823. The congregation moved to Orrock Church in 1874.

anunder (a-nun-dur) prep., arch. under – ‘Anunder is perhaps in under, ’quhat yr ye luikan?’ [JAHM], ‘I satt down anunder his skaddaw wi’ grit delicht ...’ [HSR], ‘...throwe thy name wull we tramp thame anunder an’ thing’ [ECS] (also an hing).

the Anvil (thu-awn-vil) n. fictional boat in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’.

The Anvil Crew (thu-awn-vil-kroo) n. song written by William Easton about a group of local personalities who play with a raft on the Teviot. It is supposed that the tune was an invention of Easton himself, perhaps adapted from some other tune from around 1870. A hornpipe-style musical arrangement was made later by Adam Grant. The song was first recorded being sung at the Callants’ Club dinner by Ex-Cornet W. Thomas Grieve in 1905 (accompanied by Adam Grant), then at a Hawick night in Edinburgh in 1906, and at the 1907 Colour Bussing by William P. Gaylor. Scocha recorded a version in 2001, with a guitar arrangement and some singsable changes to the chorus. A new brass band arrangement was composed by Alan Fernie in 2015.

the Anvil Crew (thu-awn-vil-kroo) n. annual dinner and entertainment held in Denholm on the Friday of the Common Riding since 1953. It was said to have started as an alternative for those who could not get tickets to the official Cornet’s Dinner. Each member of the organising committee is part of the ‘crew’ of the Anvil. The first Captain was John C. Goodfellow, who started the tradition of serving for the same number of years as verses in the song, i.e. 5. The annual trip to the dinner in Denholm (with the bus being referred to as the ‘boat’) includes a stop at Hornshole on the way.

apairt (u-, a-pär’) adv. apart – ‘…quhilk council and communitie, removing thameselfs apairt furth out of the said Tolbuith, and after manniest voittis, all electit and choisit the Robert Scott, callit of Goldielands, and William Scott, to be bailies …’ [BR1638], ‘The chairs a’ seemed a mile apairt From whaur the table stood …’ [WFC], ‘The little body’s kindly face wad licht And faa apairt in smile sae broad …’ [WL], ‘…apairt frae that hei didni dae verra muck!’ [IWL].

apon (a-pon) prep., poet. upon – ‘Apon ane instrument o’ ten strings, an’ apon the psaltrie, apon the herp wi’ ane solim suund’ [HSR], ‘…he luiks doun apon a’ the residenters o’ the yirth’ [HSR].

the Apostolic (thu-a-pos-to-leek) n. wooden hut at the foot of Dovecote Street and Laidlaw Terrace where the Evergreen Hall was later built, used for evangelical gatherings in the middle part of the 20th century. Also known as ‘the Pentecostal’.

apostrophe (a-pos-tro-fée) n. the use of the apostrophe in dialect contractions is debated, with some (such as this book!) preferring to omit it at the ends of present participles, since the Scots never really had the final ‘g’ int eh first place. A superfluous possessive apostrophe is sometimes used – ‘…and add an aixtrih apostrophe and talk about Burns’s suppers. They say ‘A’m gaun ti a Burns’s supper!’ [IWL].

apoteck (a-pö-thek) n., poet. the entirety of something, usually in the phrase ‘hail apoteck’ – ‘The hail apoteck did nae guid, These things Tam couldna’ thole’ [WFC] (deriving from a legal term; sometimes ‘hypothec’).

apparently (a-pä’rin’-lee) adv. apparently – ‘If ee pit thum a’ the gither it’s apparently astronomical the amount o’ methane they produce’ [We].

apperand (a-pe-rin’) adj., arch. apparent, particularly in the phrase ‘apperand air’ – ‘…fyve hundir merks for the mariage and tochir of James of Douglas, my sone and apperand are, wyth Jonet, the dochter of the said Dauid …’ [SB1470], ‘…James Gledstanis, sone and air apperand to Johanne Gledstanis of Coklaw …’ [SB1519].

Appletreehaa (aw-pul-, a-pul-tree-haw, -hawl) n. Appletreehall, a community about a mile outside Hawick to the north, developed around a yarn and hosiery factory, driven by power from the nearby burn. There was once also a blacksmith’s there. The old factory was used for a while as a sawmill, but now only a few ruins remain of the once thriving village, while new houses have been built nearby. The origin of the name and the earliest records of the lands are unclear. The land of ‘Appletregrig’ was inherited by William ‘de Chartres’ (i.e. Charteris) in 1303/4 from his mother Agnes de Vesey, who had died there; the lands were held of the regality of Sprouston for a white sparrow-hawk or 5 ‘souz’ and were worth 40 ‘souz’ yearly. It is possible this refers to Appletreeleaves near Melrose, but since the de Charteris family held the half barony of Wilton it seems likely that these lands were either the same as the later Appletreehall, or at the very least the name was transcribed from some other place at this time. This was probably the ‘Apiltrie’ that was resigned by Thomas ‘Carnoto’ (i.e. Charteris) term; sometimes ‘hypothec’.

The old factory was used for a while as a sawmill, but now only a few ruins remain of the once thriving village, while new houses have been built nearby. It is possible this refers to Appletreeleaves near Melrose, but since the de Charteris family held the half barony of Wilton it seems likely that these lands were either the same as the later Appletreehall, or at the very least the name was transcribed from some other place at this time. This was probably the ‘Apiltrie’ that was resigned by Thomas ‘Carnoto’ (i.e. Charteris) and granted to William Maxwell and his wife according to a charter of King Robert, probably around 1320. Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington paid redemption money for these lands (as well as Midshielis) in 1470, with a quarter part being separately leased by Henry Turnbull. The superior of the lands was William Livingstone of Drumry from at least 1470, with the superiority being transferred to Alexander, Lord Home in 1494, who granted them to Walter Scott of Howpasley in 1502 (excluding ‘halve a merkland’ to the north). The lands were owned by the Cunninghams in the second half of the Appletreehaa Mills

15th century, being inherited in 1482 by Elizabeth, daughter of George Cunningham of Belton; at that time was said to be ‘then waste’, but in time of peace was valued at £5 Scots. The Laird of Appletreehall was fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh in 1493, but the name of the Laird is not recorded. The superiority was confirmed to Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10 and forfeited by him in 1515 (after which he was beheaded), passing briefly to James Lundie, along with Midshiels and parts of Hassendean, and then back to the Homes. Robert Scott of Howpasley and his wife Isobel Murray had a charter of the lands (along with Midshiels) in 1536. In 1539/40 Robert Scott of Howpasly sold the lands there in ‘le mains called le cot rig’ to Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’; at that time the tenant was William Bell. In 1543 the farm and the neighbouring farm of Chamberlain Newton, owned by Robert Scott, were raided by men from Tynedale, who stole a large number of cattle, sheep and horses, as well as removing goods from the houses and taking a dozen prisoners. In 1549 Robert Scott granted his 2 husband lands there to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; the lands were at that time occupied by Hector and David Turnbull and Patrick Gordon. The land were held for 1 penny Scotts, to be paid at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. In 1562/3 Alexander Lord Home tried to have the Scotts of Howpasly removed as ‘pretended tenants’ who refused to leave and ‘occupied the lands by violence’. The land were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. It was owned by the Turnbuls of Knowe in the mid-18th century. It was part of Hassendean Parish until 1690, after which it fell within Wilton. The householders listed there in 1694 were James Rodger, William Scott, John Turnbull and Robert Riddell, with Walter Sanderson and John Scott listed among the poor. In 1693 John Ker of Cavers Carre was served heir to his uncle, Robert, Lord Jedburgh, including annual rentals of 300 merks here, pertaining to Walter Scott (junior and senior) of Chamberlain Newton. The residents recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls are John Andison, George Hunter and Thomas Elliot, with John Reid, James Scott and James Crawford being listed as ‘New Appletreehall’. In 1841 there were 15 separate households living there. Around 1935 a carved piece of sandstone was found in a garden here, believed to be a Romano-British deity, now in the National Museums of Scotland – ‘Catch the laughter-waking chords In the lilt of Clovenfords, Or the hullaby of Apple-tree-hall. Hear the slumber song of Ewes, And the mirth of Yarrow-feus Ringing over furrow, tree and wall’ [WL] (the pronunciation has become almost entirely anglicised and is never -tr-; the name is first recorded in the early 14th century and was spelled ‘Apiltrie’ and ‘Apiltrie-eriggis’, with the modern version appearing in the late 15th century; it is ‘Apiltrehall’ in 1482 and 1494, ‘appiltrie haw’ in 1502, ‘Apiltrehall’ in 1502, 1509/10, 1536 and 1539/40, ‘Apiltrehall’ in 1549, ‘Appletriehall’ in 1580/1, ‘Apiltriehall’ in 1611, ‘Apletrehall’ in 1621, ‘Apletrehall’ in 1663 and 1681, ‘Apeltrehall’ in 1682 and ‘Apeltree hall’ and ‘Apeltrie hall’ in 1694; Stobie’s map of 1770 marks ‘New Appletreehall’ at the location of Newhouses, although whether this is an error is unclear; the origin of the name is presumably literal).

Appletreehaa Mills (aw-pul-tree-haw-milz) n. Appletreehall Mills, a hosiery yarn spinning factory run by Peter Wilson & Co. around 1825. Later it was a hosiery factory operated by Peter Laidlaw and much later it was converted to a sawmill.

Appletreehaa Road (aw-pul-tree-haw-rōd) n. Appletreehall Road, the beginning of the B6359, just past Burnfoot off the A7.

Appletreehaa Toonfit (aw-pul-tree-haw-toon-fi) n. Appletreehall Townfoot, former name for part of the lands of Appletreehall. In 1788 (repeated in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) the lands were owned along with Crawhill by William Scott of Burnhead; the value was £417. It was later owned by the Watsons of Burnhead.

Appletreehaa Toonheid (aw-pul-tree-haw-toon-feed) n. Appletreehall Townhead, former name for part of the lands of Appletreehall. The trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe are recorded as owners in 1788 (and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £250. It was later owned by the Dicksons of Alton.

Appletreeleaves (aw-pul-tree-leezv) n. former farmstead just north of Galashiels. The lands were long held by the Darling family. The Scotts of Buecleuch also held lands (or perhaps superiority) there in the 1500s. The farmhouse incorporates part of the 16th century Ladhope Tower and is used as an outbuilding for Galashiels Golf.
Appotside

Club (there is no obvious connection with ‘Apple-treehall’ near Hawick, although sometimes the 2 may be confused; it is ‘Appitrelies’ in 1574).

Appoints (a-poin-tee, -ti) pp., arch. appointed – ‘...to set scaffolds upon their neighbour’s ground, and ane time appointit them be the council to build the house in’ [BR1660].

Appotside (a-pot-sid) n. one of the early estates within Hobkirk Parish, the house being at the bend in the road between Harwoodmill and Highend, on the left bank of the Harwood Burn. In 1598 it was owned by Margaret Turnbull, termed ‘Lady Appotsyde’, when Hector Turnbull of Wanchope and his associates stole most of the livestock and goods from it. The feud increased over the next few years, with 3 men being killed. Over the period 1598–1605 the entire woods were cut down as part of this same feud, this including 1000 birch trees, 500 oaks, 300 alders and 400 hazels. The lands probably passed to the Loraines of Harwood through Lady Appotside. By 1602 it was held by feu charter by James Hamilton of St. John’s Chapel (who had the wardship of the minor Hector Lorraine). In the next few decades the lands were involved in ‘wadsets’ and other deals with James Hamilton’s son Francis and son-in-law Rev. William Weir, as well as the Loraines, who finally sold the main estate of Harwood to William Elliot in 1637, reserving Appotside for himself. It was owned by Edward Lorraine in 1643, when valued at £200. It was ‘Aptiside, or Apudside’ in 1663, when valued at £200 and owned by William Elliot of Harwood. In 1654 part of the lands were still heritably owned by the Loraines, with Walter Elliot of Harwood holding the rents in return for another loan. But in 1656 the lands were sold outright, with a small part reserved for Edward Lorraine of Harwood and his wife. There was a mill on the lands in the 17th century, perhaps the same as the later Harwood Mill. Edward Lorraine was still listed as owner in about 1663, when it was valued at £300. ‘Aptiside with mill thereof’ was listed among the properties of Sir William Elliot of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. The Laird of Harwood’s tenants there were taxed for having 3 hearths in 1694. It was part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood in 1788, valued at £200. There was already no sign of the former house by the mid-19th century, but a red sandstone block, about 20 inches acros, dug up there was built into a wall of Harwood Mill. This was part of a stone cross-head, probably for a wayside cross, and was later moved to Harwood House.

Appotside Mill (a-pot-sid-mill) n. former corn mill on the lands of Appotside in the 17th century. John Jackson was miller in 1632 and William Jackson the tenant there in 1637. The miller in 1654 was Andrew Turnbull and John Elliot in 1704. It may be the same place that was later known as Harwoodmill (‘Appitsydemylne’ in 1632, ‘Apitsydemilne’ in 1637, ‘Appitsyde mylne’ in 1654 and ‘Abbottsdy Mill’ in 1657).

Appotside Moor (a-pot-sid-moor) n. former farmstead near Appotside. It is recorded as ‘Apudside Moor’ in the 1780s when William Inglis was there.

Apprehendit (aw-pree-hen-dee, -di) pp. apprehended – ‘...the Erle of Buccleugh causit rais vpoun the lettres of horning lettres of captioun, and apprehendit the said Robert Elliot’ [SB1624], ‘...and being apprehendit, and judiciallie accusit, confessit the opening of his kist with false keys ...’ [BR1641].

Apprenteece (aw-prentees) n. an apprentice – ‘A can mind ma pal saying ti mei yin day, when ei was an apprenteece plumber ...’ [DaS].

Apprise (a-priz) v., arch. to appraise, estimate the value of – ‘...the said day to be apprised ...and John Aitkin in Hawick, apprise the said meir, quhilks persones apprised hir to 20 mks ...’ [BR1644].

Apprisit (a-pri-zee, -zi) pp., arch. appraised – ‘...ane horse or meir, which war appreisit by Ritchie Hardie, wright ...’ [BR1644].

Appunctit (a-pung-tee) pp., arch. appointed – ‘...it is appunctit, aggreit and finally endit betuix honorabil men, that is to say, Waltir Scot of Branxhelm ...’ [SB1519].

apurpose  (a-pur-pis) adv., arch. on purpose.

aquawitie  (aw-kwa-wi-tee) n., arch. aqua vitae, ‘water of life’, whisky – ‘...for furnishings of certain aquawyttie and watters coft and receivit by him’ [BR1642] (several spelling variants, and probably pronunciations, exist).

Arabs  (a-rube) n., pl. name formerly used to describe people from Weensland (the origin is unknown).

Arbon  (ar-bin) n. James ‘Jim’ (1946–2015) son of ambulance-driver Richard and hand-sewer Mary, he was born at the Haig Maternity Hospital. He was educated at Hawick High School and then studied physics and mathematics at Edinburgh University. He qualified as a teacher at Moray House and then spent his whole working life as a maths teacher back in Hawick. After retiring because of ill-health in 2000 he still did private tutoring. However, he was probably best known in the town for his musical and theatrical abilities, appearing in countless operas, plays and pantomimes. He was described as ‘a big man with a big heart’.

Arbuthnott  (ar-buth-no’) n. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 2 deeds of 1619 as schoolmaster in Hobkirk Parish. William Rutherford was master there in 1618, and so he must have taken over about the time he is recorded. It is unclear how long he remained in the area.

the Arcade  ( thu-awr-kaid) n. part of the Exchange Buildings, on the south side, also known as the Exchange Arcade. It contained shops, the exit for the Marina (formerly the Palais de Danse entrance) and in its last years Bogart’s pub. It was destroyed along with the rest of the building in 1992, but the stone doorway survives.

Ardenlea  (awr-din-lee) n. house on West Stewart Place, next to Kirklands Hotel. It was designed by J.P. Alison and built in 1896 (or 1898) for T.H. Armstrong. It has 2 storeys plus an attic level and is in a Queen Anne style (unusual in Scotland) in red sandstone with polished ashlair dressings. It retains much of its original exterior and interior detailing. The house was used for a while as an annex to the hotel next door. It is a grade C listed building.

Arderymd  (awr-de-rith) n. site of a battle of probably 573, mentioned in some Old Welsh sources. It is also known as ‘Arderyth’, ‘Arfderydd’, ‘Atterith’ etc. The combatants are unclear, although Gweddoleu was defeated. His bard was Lailloken or Myrrdin, perhaps the same as Merlin of Caledonia, who went mad and hid in the forests of southern Scotland (as also alluded to in Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’). A later manuscript places the site between Liddel and Carwannok, possibly at Arthur’s Seat near Longtown in Cumbria, although Leyden suggested it was Ettrick.

are  (awr) v., arch. to till, plough – ‘To are the fields, is a phrase of common use among the peasants in the south of Scotland, and signifies to till’ [JL] (probably local form of ‘ear’, but unclear how common this was).

a’ready  (a-re-dee) adv., arch. already – ‘Galashielis has got clean ahead o’s – they’ve nae less than twal thoosan a’ready for their Memorial’ [BW].

areddies  (a-re-deez) adv., arch. already – ‘Fleis an midges an bummies war skiddlin anredies; it’s aa raateet wui thae taackets on eer shuin’ [ECS] (also written ‘aareddies’ and ‘alreadiess’).

argee-bargee  (awr-gee-bawr-gee) v. to argue, wrangle – ‘... but whae that day argee-bargee wi Burns aboot the French philosopher Voltaire’ [IWL], n. an argument, a lively dispute, usually suggesting impatience (an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’; note the hard g sound).

argie (awr-gee-min') n. an argument – ‘That he has found the pie She left him for supper-time, And winna, for godsake, try Auld arguments again’ [DH] (also written ‘argument’; cf. airgeement).

argie see arggee

argit (awr-gee', -gi') pp., adj. argued – ‘...Then argyed ‘off-side’ wi’ a Gala man, Till he tellt ye to gang Doon-bye ...’ [DH] (there are spelling variants).

Arkinholm (awr-kin-hoom) n. area now part of the town of Langholm, which is flat land near the foot of the Ewes valley. It was site of the battle of 1455 in which the Black Douglases were defeated by the forces of James II, led by George Douglas, Earl of Angus (of the Red Douglases). James, Earl of Douglas escaped to England, but one of his brothers, Archibald, was killed in the battle and another, Hugh, executed afterwards. All their property was declared forfeit, and this represented the end of the power of the Black Douglases. Included in this change was the transfer of Hawick (and much of Teviotdale) to the Scotts. The area was used for a while as a shooting range for Volunteers (also called ‘Erkinholme’; it is ‘Erkinhoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Arkle (awr-kul) n. Rev. James (1759–1823) Minister of Hawick Parish 1800–23. He was licensed by the Presbytery of St. Andrews in 1786 and was presented to Castleton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1791, becoming minister there the following year. He is recorded at Castleton on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1800 he was translated to Hawick, where he was also presented by the Duke of Buccleuch. He was Chaplain to the Roxburgh Volunteers from 1804. The Relief Church in Hawick was formed during his ministry. He was said to have been a supporter of Tom Jenkins, knowing him from when he first arrived in the district, and favouring him for the job of schoolmaster at Teviothead. In 1821 Charles Thomson became his assistant. He published two of his sermons in Kelso in 1800 and in Hawick in 1806. He also wrote a description of Castleton Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. He died unmarried.

Arkleton (ar-kul-tin) n. farm in the Ewes valley to the east of the A7 between Mosspaul and Langholm. It was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. Ninian’s Geordie Armstrong was there in 1569. Archie Armstrong ‘of Arkleton’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. It was a seat of the Armstrongs until about 1610 and in 1611 was granted to William Elliot of Falnash (with Armstrongs still holding an interest). Ebbe Armstrong, son of Ringan of Arkleton, was recorded in 1611. The 10-pound lands there were inherited in 1622 by Ninian Armstrong from his great-grandfather Ninian of Arkleton. In 1623 the farm was sold by Robert Elliot of Falnash to Adam Cunningham, then in the 1640s it was sold to Walter Scott of Harwood and Braidhaugh (followed by his son Francis), who were Chamberlains to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Walter Elliot of Arkleton recovered the lands for the Elliots in 1669 and it was valued at £700 in 1671. He probably had the tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, since a stone built into the present house shows the date 1676 and the initials ‘W.E.’ and ‘K.F.’ (for Walter Elliot and his wife Katherine Foster); additionally an old lintel was inscribed ‘WALTER ELLIOT, ALL VERTVE TOIL, ALL EARTHLY VERTVE IS BUT TOIL AND PAIN, SO ALL IS LOSS UNLES THAT CHRIST WE GAIN’. James Jardine was there in 1797. The former tower-house was demolished in the early 1800s and was said to stand to the left of the present house, by the archway to the stables. The modern farmhouse was built in 2 stages about 1860 and 1884, including a turretted tower; this may have been under the influence of architect Lewis Alexander Wallace, father-in-law of the owner William Scott-Elliot. James Jardine was farmer there in 1841 when William Elliot was shepherd. John Jardine was the farmer in 1851 and 1861. James Jackson was farmer in 1868. In 1964 the farm was sold by Walter Travers Scott-Elliot to Prof. John Higgs of Oxford. There are remains of an ancient settlement near the modern farmhouse. Arkleton Crag (or Hill) reaches a height of 521 m (1709 ft) above the farm. The Arkleton Trust was established at the farm in 1977, with the aim of promoting rural development (also spelled ‘Arkletoun’, ‘Arkilton’ and ‘Arkiltoun’ in early records, it is ‘Arkyldon’ in 1584, ‘Arkiltoun’ in 1611, ‘Arkleton’ in 1631, ‘Arkiltoun’ in 1651, ‘Erkleton’ in 1661, ‘Arkletowne’ in 1663, ‘Ercleketoun’ in 1695 and ‘Arkteloune’ in 1785; it occurs as ‘Arleton’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, ‘Erkiltoun’ and ‘Erkilton’ field on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Erkilton’ on Gordon’s map c. 1650 and ‘Arclotoun’ and ‘Artletoune’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).
Arkleton Crags (ar-kul-tin-krawgz) n. rocky hills above Arkleton farm. The summit commands a view of the whole of the Eves valley, as well as the Solway, and it is said that even the Isle of Man is visible from here.

Arkletonshields (ar-kul-tin-sheels) n. farmstead near Arkleton. There were Telfers there in 1841 and James Jackson was shepherd there in 1851. It is said that hill near there was used as a place of concealment for people of Ewesdale and was where a group were massacred when a traitor led English horsemen there (also ‘Arkleton Shiels’ and ‘Arkletonshields’).

arle (a-rul) v., arch. to engage services, pay a sum to secure employment – ‘He held out the shilling to arle the bit wench, In case it should enter her noddle to flinch’ [DA], n., poet. a token – ‘Shaw me an arle for guid that thaye whilk hate me may see it an’ be shmet ... ’ [HSR] (also erle).

arles (a-rulz) n., pl., poet. payment for services – ‘What were your arles, Tam: What did ye hain After a life’s work For a maister’s gain?’ [DH].

Armstrong see Aarmstrong

Armstrong’s Last Goodnight (awrm-strongz-lawst-good-nil) n. play by John Arden, based on the story of Johnnie Armstrong of Gilnockie. It was first performed in 1965, starring Albert Finney.

Arnot (awr-nil-hil) n. Rev. Andrew (1722/3–1803) from Milnathort, he entered the Theological Hall of the Anti-Burgher Synod in 1748 and in 1752 became the minister of the Secession church in Midlem. This was the nearest such church to Hawick, and despite the distance, was attended by several people in the district. This included the wife of James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who later left Wilton Kirk to become one of the founders of the Green Kirk in Hawick. He was one of the visiting preachers to that new congregation in the early 1760s, before Rev. John Young arrived as Hawick’s first dissenting minister. He is recorded baptising a child of Robert Smith in Wilton in 1770. James ‘Jimmy’ band leader of the Drums and Fifes in the mid-20th century. He also played the pipes.

Arnot Hill (awr-nil-hil) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 3 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Ninian Armstrong. It is surely the same location as the modern ‘Annett Hill’, a small rise on the south side of the road by the remains of Liddel Castle.

Arnott (awr-nil) n. John (1712–74) born at Schaws Mill, he was the first minister of the Denholm Cameronian Chapel, the congregation formed out of strict adherents to Covenant principles. He is buried in Denholm, his gravestone reading ‘Here rests from his labours Mr John Arnott, Preacher of the Gospel’.

Arnside (awrn-sid) n. former lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule (Parish of Hobkirk), which were part of the land dispute in the Barony in 1561 and 1562. Its location is uncertain, but it appears to have been adjacent to Langburn and to the west of Whelpinside, hence probably more like the upper Slitrig valley than the Rule valley. There is a village of the same name in southern Cumbria (written ‘Arnsye’ and also ‘Irnesyde’).

Arnton Fell (awrn-fel) n. ridge in upper Liddesdale, running roughly south-west to north-east, with a triangulation pillar at the south-west summit, height 405 m. Below the pillar there are the remains of an old boundary dyke, around the head of Paddington Sike. There are also extensive rig lines in the area. The name probably evolved from ‘Ernilton’, with ‘Ernilton b. fell’ marked in roughly the same place on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

aroon (u-, a-roond) adv., prep. around, in a circle, on every side – ‘...An’ a’ the countryside displayed Aroon’ the Border Queen’ [WFC], ‘Where heath clad hills stand guaird aroon ... ’ [IW] (also aroond).

around (u-, a-roond) adv., prep. around, round, encompassing, on all sides – ‘let’s gaun aroond the back’, ‘A henna seen her aroond here afore’, ‘... Through freen’ships formed ower land and sea Wi’ alien bonds aroond them tethered’ [JEDM], ‘They clustered aroond Hawick Moat Roond aboot the auld green Moat ... ’ [TK], ‘Aroond the toun in lichtsome lilt There’s music sweet and clear’ [WL] (also aroon).

arrayment (a-rä-min) n., poet. raiment, clothing – ‘... an’ the smel o’ thy arrayemints like the smel o’ Lebanon’ [HSR].

arreest (a-rest) v., arch. to arrest – ‘...after being convict before James Scott, one of the present baillies, of a riot, and arreisted’ [BR1727].

arreestment (a-rest-min) n., arch. the action of arresting, seizing of a debt – ‘... by the sd. John Hardie for qt. money was than to be receaved, by virtue of ane decreit and arreestment following yr upon ... ’ [BR1693].

Arres (aw-res) n. Janet (d.1835) sister of John and Robert (of Kirkton). She was probably niece of Daniel Mather, tenant at Ashybank. She married William Thomas Scott of Milsington and died in Edinburgh.
Arres-Mather (aw-res-maw-thur) n. John (19th C.) son of Jessie Mather. His uncle Daniel left him his possessions when he died in 1869, so he became tenant of Hallrule and added the surname ‘Mather’ to his own. He lived at the farm for a few years, but eventually returned to his home in northern Scotland.

arr (aw-rri) n. an arrow – ‘...he ordeens his arras agayne the persikuters’ [HSR], ‘For thime arras stik faste in me ...’ [HSR], ‘...Withoot e’en a gledge At the craik and pen-whusse O yon arra-heid o geese ...’ [DH] (there are spelling variants).

arseneek (ar-se-neck) n. arsenic – ‘The pooder was produced an proved teh be arseneek!’ [BW].

the Art Club see Hawick Art Club artistic (awr-tees-tik) adj. artistic – ‘Weel, there’s an awfu’ difference atween artistic design an’ a mill chumley, an aw’ve heard it ca’ed baith’ [BW].

Arthur Airmstrong’s (awr-thur-ärm-ströngz) n. department store in the converted St. John’s Church on Oliver Crescent. It closed in 1993 and was taken over by Almstrongs, which itself closed in 2006, with the building converted into flats.

Arthur Street (awr-thur-stree’) n. street lying between Trinity and Duke Streets, built around 1888 and named after Arthur Noble. At the corner, near the bottom of Trinity Steps was the former Trinity (or sometimes Weensland) branch of the Hawick Co-op.

ashair (a-shār) v. to assure – ‘...for wei are ashaired that whatever presents itsel' tae the human ei remains on the retina for an infinitismal fraction o' a second' [BW1938].

Ashby (ash-bee) n. Rev. William A. (19th/20th C.) from Walthamstow, he was assistant minister at Stirling Baptist Church and then minister of Hawick Baptist Church 1911–15. In 1911 a Women’s Auxiliary was formed, with his wife as President. The Bible Class reached its highest attendance of 120. For a short period he required police protection, having spoken out against a particular Protestant lecturer, against the feelings of some townsfolk, which formed a mob outside his Church. He moved to Bridgeton, Glasgow in 1915 and was at Paisley Road Church 1918–23.

Ashcroft (ash-kroft) n. Alexander (b.1808/9) from Canonbie, son of James. He was farmer at South Berryfell. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres there. He was living with his sister Ann and niece Elizabeth. James (b.c.1785) lime burner at Stobs Limery, Limekilenedge in 1841. His wife was Christy and their children included Alexander, Thomas, William and Anne.

Ashieburn (aw-shee-burn) n. farm on the south side of the Ale Water, between Belses and Ancrum. 2 Turnbull brothers from there were transported to Virginia in the 1660s as a result of a ‘tumult’ when James Scott (son of Walter in Catslack) was installed as minister, and their sister was ‘whipped through the streets of Jedburgh’. Walter Scott of Clarilaw bought the farm sometime before 1700 and his great-grandson Henry Erskine Scott sold it before he died in 1847. James Gray of Ashieburn was there in 1788. William Cochrane was there in 1797 and James Gray in the latter part of the 18th century.

Ashiestiel (aw-shee-steel) n. house next to Peel, on the south bank of the Tweed, dating from 1660, but with many later alterations. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, leased by the Kers and then the Murrays in the early 16th century. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst claimed he held the lands in feu in 1541, paying £26 13s 4d. It was owned by Russells at the end of the 18th century and Col. William of Ashiesteel paid the land tax there in 1802. Sir Walter Scott rented the property 1804–12 while Abbotsford was being built. The Ashiestiel (or Low Peel) Bridge, built in 1848, was at the time the largest single-span rubble arch bridge in the world – ‘Brave Robin o’ Singlee was cloven through the brain, An’ Kirkhope was woundit, an’ young Bailleylee. Wi’ Juden, baith Gatehope an’ Plora were slain, An’ auld Ashiesteel gat a cut on the knee’ [ES] (also written ‘Ashiesteel’; it is recorded as ‘Esschissteile’ in 1444, ‘Eschestielle’ in 1456, ‘Escheschele’ in 1457, ‘Eschistele’ in 1468, ‘Eschestiell’ in 1541, ‘Eschestill’ in 1563, ‘Eschesteil’ in 1573/4 and ‘Eschiesteile’ in 1601; it is ‘Eshysteill’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, and ‘Eshysteill’ on Adair’s 1688 map).

Ashkirk (ash-kirk) n. village 6 miles north of Hawick on the A7, also the name of the surrounding parish. Here side roads connect to the Borthwick valley (‘the Hill Road to Roberton’) and over Woll Rigg into the Ettrick valley. The earliest mention of the name is in 1116. Much of the area was owned by the Bishops of Glasgow from the 10th to 13th centuries, and the church is first recorded in 1170. Indeed it had the status of a Barony, owned by the Diocese of Glasgow until the Reformation. There is a charter of lands there to Orm of Ashkirk and his heirs, granted by William I in 1179. The perambulation of the pasture is described as being ‘from Staniford to the cross, and from the cross to the great alder-tree near the turf-ground – and thence as far as Illieslade – and thence to the small rivulet on the east side of Huntlie – and from the rivulet upwards to the rivulet of Akermere – and so upwards to the wenelachia of Richard Cumin – and so thereafter upwards to the sike which is next under Todholerig – and so from that sike which goes into the rivulet of Langhop – and thereafter as the boundary goes on the east side of Lepes between Askirke and Whiteslade into the Ahe’. It was probably the ‘Askrigie’ listed in a letter by Dacre listing places that were burned in 1514. It was once a country retreat of the Bishop, although ruins of the palace have been invisible since the 18th century. Lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Whit slade in 1643 (valued at £110 10s), as well as an additional 'six husband-lands' (valued at £133). These same lands were owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1788 and sold to Archibald Cochrane in 1795. Along with Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Kirkhouses, the teinds were valued at £80 in 1788. Alexander Scott is recorded as farmer there in 1797, when he owned 7 horses. The village was once an important coaching stop but became quieter after the railway was built. Ashkirk is also the name of the surrounding Parish, which lay partly in Roxburgshire (about 2/3) and partly in Selkirkshire until 1891. The area was ransacked in 1514 by Dacre’s men, specifically ‘the watter of Ale, from Askirge to Elmartour in the said Middilmarchies, whirupon was fifty pleughes, lyes all and every of them waist now’. The ‘Bishop’s Stone’ is a nearby marker. The University of Glasgow remained as superior of much of the lands of the Parish into the 20th century. The present church dates from 1790/1, with the interior renovated in 1893 and 1962. A school was built in the village in 1837, and it formerly had its own post office. A village hall was built in 1979. Above the village stands the transmission mast, which provides FM radio to the Borders and Northumberland { ‘Tell Ashkirk Brigand’}. A cottage of that name is located just for-

when it is ‘Ashkirk Bridgend’. J. & J. Gray were recorded there in 1868.

Ashkirk Free Kirk (ash-kirk-free-kirk) n. former Free Church set up in Ashkirk in 1844. It lasted until 1909, when the congregation merged with Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk. The ‘blotter registers’ exist in the General Register Office for Scotland. John Edmondston was the first minister there from 1843. Alexander Giles was minister 1866–97.

Ashkirk Hill (ash-kirk-hil) n. hill immediately south of Ashkirk, reaching a height of 296 m.

Ashkirk Hoose (ash-kirk-hooes) n. Ashkirk House, large house on the slope just to the west of Ashkirk village, and east of Woll estate. It is not marked on Crawford & Brooke’s 1843 map, but appears on the Ordnance Survey map of the 1850s. It was home to the Cochrane family. A. Gibson was recorded there in 1868.

Ashkirk Kirk (ash-kirk-kirk) n. church in Ashkirk, centre of the surrounding parish. The church there was recorded as early as 1170, and much of the land around the village was owned by the Bishops of Glasgow until the 13th century. There are records of the church being confirmed to Bishops of Glasgow by the Pope in 1170, 1174, 1179, 1181, 1186 and 1216. The early church was dedicated to St. Ninian, and probably stood on the same site as the current building. It was erected into a prebend of the Church of Glasgow in about 1275. In 1401 and in about 1440 it was taxed at a value of 40 shillings. In about the 1440s the canon of the church was ordered to pay the vicar 9 merks. A record of 1448 complains of the non-payment of salary for the ‘vicar of the choir’ there; the Bishop describes how the ‘fruits of the canony and prebend’ were so insignificant, as a result of which ‘divine worship remained incompletely performed’. A small amount was to be allowed for ‘the chaplain who should officiate at Ashkirk’, from out of the tithes and other income that went to the person holding the canony and vicarage. The prebendary of Ashkirk appears to have been vacant in 1502. The names of the actual preachers in the parish are not mostly recorded until after the Reformation. At that point the ‘haill parsonage’ was valued at £120. The church was rebuilt in 1790/1, designed by James Trotter. It contains oak pannelling in the pulpit and possibly also the Laird’s Pew from the old Minto Kirk (coming to Ashkirk after the old Minto Kirk was demolished in 1831). There are initials there also, ‘S/ GE’ and ‘D / (I)C’ for Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw (later Minto) and his wife Dame Jean Carre of Cavers. Another panel bears the date 1702. The aisle at the west end of the south side was added in the early 19th century. The exterior is harled, with red sandstone dressings, and it has a square bellcote. Its interior was renovated in 1893 and again in 1962 by J. Wilson Paterson, and also contains a war memorial plaque. A pictorial window was installed in 1910, to the memory of Esther, wife of John Corse Scott of Synton. The organ was built by Basil Wilson. There is a silver font, dating from 1851, and a carved communion table. There is a gallery level, reached by 2 staircases. The manse was built in 1784. The chuchyard contains some older headstones, including the enclosure of the Scotts of Synton, dated 1646, but rebuilt in 1887 for the Corse Scotts. It also contains 5 tablestones of 17th century style, as well as a headstone of a gypsy boy hanged for stealing a duck. The village also formerly contained a Free Kirk, operating from 1844 until at least 1908. Kirk Session minutes date back to 1711 and Parish registers to 1630. A Free Kirk was established in 1843, when John Edmondston walked out with much of the congregation. Records for the Free Kirk exist for the period 1844–1908. The Parish Kirk was linked with Bowden 1977–83 and linked with Selkirk and Caddonfoot from 1986. The oldest surviving communion token is a large lead oblong, with ‘A.K.’ incised, probably dating from the 17th century; another is square with ‘A.K.’ finely scratched, while a more recent one comes from 1839. A booklet about the church was written by Alasdair Allan in 1984. A roll of ministers of Ashkirk Kirk is: Richard, Vicar in 1258; William Elphinstone, Rector from 1437; Simon of Dalglas, Canon and Vicar in 1448; James Heriot, Rector from 1505; William Watson, Vicar until c.1508; Richard Bothwell, Parson and Rector 1505–1549; Simon Shortreed, Vicar until 1550; James Ker, Vicar from 1550; William Bothwell, Rector 1550–52; Adam Bothwell, Rector from 1552; John Reid, Vicar from 1552; John Muir, Rector c.1561–70; John Hamilton, from 1570; John Scott 1573–c.79; James Scott, Reader in 1575, Vicar in 1586; Thomas Cranston 1579–82; Daniel Chalmers c.1583–85/6; Robert Scott, from 1585/6; Alexander Justice 1604–11; Alexander Hogg 1611–19; Robert Cunningham, Reader in 1638; Alexander Reid 1619–c.49; Robert Cunningham 1649–62; Thomas Courtney from 1663; Archibald Inglis 1675–c.85; Robert Cunningham (again) 1679–c.85; Richard Scott 1685–89; Robert Cunningham (once again!) 1689–90; Robert Wylie 1691–92; Charles Gordon 1695–1710; Robert Lithgow
Ashkirk Loch

(1784 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. The miller in the early 18th century was Walter Scott. John Scott, Alexander Neil and Thomas Henderson are recorded there in 1797. It was owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1788, when the lands were still valued at £84. It was still recorded being owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1811 (although probably sold before that), when the ‘Six Husband Lands, and Mill of Ashkirk, and Multures’ (together with Kirkhouses and Ashkirk) were valued at £529 10s. John Douglas was the tenant in 1825. In 1841 William Hobkirk lived there, as well as Thomas Gray being farmer, James Scott toll-gate keeper and John Matheson vet and blacksmith. It was part of the property of Alexander Cochran in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. James Melrose & Sons supplied a new pump in 1886 and water wheel in 1907, plans for both being in the National Archives (it is marked on Anslie’s Ashkirk Manse (ash-kirk-mawns) n. former manse for Ashkirk Kirk, also known as Halkyn. It was built in 1784, with later additions, and there is a carved lintel that says ‘MWS 1748’ (the initials referring to Mr. Walter Stewart). Rev. Stewart paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748 (presumably for an earlier building) and for 14 windows in 1753 (probably the newer building). The associated glebe lands consisted of 14 acres in the early 19th century.

Ashkirk Mill (ash-kirk-mill) n. former corn mill in Ashkirk, situated to the south of the road through the village, on the old mill lade. It was valued at £84 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. The miller in the early 18th century was Walter Scott. John Scott, Alexander Neil and Thomas Henderson are recorded there in 1797. It was owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1788, when the lands were still valued at £84. It was still recorded being owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1811 (although probably sold before that), when the ‘Six Husband Lands, and Mill of Ashkirk, and Multures’ (together with Kirkhouses and Ashkirk) were valued at £529 10s. Ashkirk Pairish (ash-kirk-pär-reesh) n. parish centred around Ashkirk village, between Hawick and Selkirk. The village was formerly in Roxburghshire, while about 1/3 of the parish was in Selkirkshire (the former estates of Synton and Whitslade), but in 1891 it was all transferred to Selkirkshire, and a detached part of Selkirkshire included in the new parish boundaries. The parish is bounded by Selkirk, Lilliesleaf, Wilton, Roberton and Kirkhope parishes. The parish was part of the see of Glasgow until the Reformation. It is mentioned as early as 1116, and most of the lands (perhaps with the exception of North and South Synton) were confirmed to Glasgow several times in the 12th century. The rectory of Ashkirk was erected into a prebendary of Glasgow in about 1275. James IV confirmed the privileges of a free regality on the Barony of Ashkirk in 1490, held by the Bishop of Glasgow, but in 1641 Charles gave the same rights to Duke of Lennox. The bailiary of Ashkirk was gifted to Walter Ker of Cessford by the King in 1547 and in 1548 the Kers, along with English forces under Lord Grey burnt many of the houses and crops in the Ale valley. From very early times the land was held by a family called ‘Askirk’, who were vassals of the Bishop of Glasgow. Later, and for several centuries, most of the land was owned by various branches of the Scotts. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £5100 in Roxburghshire and £1600 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 the rents were valued at about £3200 in Roxburghshire and £1900 in Selkirkshire. In 1707 the value was £5181 18s 4d. The land around the parish formerly held many more extensive lakes, which were drained for agricultural improvements in the 18th and 19th centuries. The present church dates from 1791. In 1788 the feu-duty of Headsaw were still held by the ‘College of Glasgow’, this being the last vestige of the association of the Parish with Glasgow. In the New Statistical Account (written 1837) the Parish is described as having 5 masons, 2 carpenters, 2 tailors, 1 smith, 1 farrier and no public houses. Parish registers exist from 1630, but have considerable gaps.

Ashkirk Schuil (ash-kirk-skil) n. former school for Ashkirk Parish, situation downhill from the Manse. It was built in 1837, replacing an earlier parish school, and had a schoolhouse each side, for the 2 teachers employed there. There were about 45 pupils in the 1830s, when the teacher’s house consisted of 3 rooms and a kitchen. The first record of a schoolmaster is Ashtreis (awsg-triz) n. Ashtrees, farm between the Rule and Jed valleys, off the road to the north of Chesters. It long belonged to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, with Olivers holding it in fee from at least the mid-16th century. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were 'claimed by the laird thereof'; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. In 1539 George Rutherford of Hundalee had a charter of these lands, whose superiority had been forfeited by Archibald, Earl of Angus. ‘Hobe Ollyver of Eshtreis’ was recorded in 1544. The Laird of Ashtrees was one of the local leaders of a raiding expedition of about 200 Olivers and others in 1583, probably in retaliation for having cattle stolen. Adam Scott of Ashtrees paid tax on lands in Southdean Parish in 1678. James Oliver was there in 1684. Thomas was the last Oliver of Ashtrees, dying in 1739, when it passed to his daughter and son-in-law John Scott. In 1788 it was valued at £33 6s 8d, when held by Adam Scott. The Scotts held it through to the mid-19th century, and it passed to Dr. John Robson-Scott about 1858. Edward Hindmarsh (also known as ‘Hyners’) was farmer there in 1861 and 1868. There was formerly a tower house there. A set of 10 cairns are shown on the 1924 Ordnance Survey map, probably clearance heaps, but in any case now gone (it is ‘Eschetreis’ in 1538, 1539 and 1541, ‘Eshtrees’ in 1544 and ‘Ash-trees’ in 1684; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ashybank (aw-shee-, e-shee-bawngk) n. hamlet on the A698, about half-way to Denholm. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, along with much of Teviotdale. The road to Denholm used to pass to the south of here. The main farm was formerly a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate; there are deeds relating to it among the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1498, 1550 and 1671. It was sold by Sir William Douglas of Cavers to Robert Ker in Sunderlandhall and sold back in 1498 for 240 merks. In 1511 it was listed as one of the 2 ‘domain’ lands of the Barony of Cavers, and again in 1558 when its ‘liferent’ was granted to Christian Kerr, widow of the former Laird of Cavers. The ‘mains’ lands of this name (along with the Coates) were inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. 5 people were listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. The lands were liferented as part of the estate of Bonjedward by 1707, along with ‘Cray’s park’. It was the site of the first local ploughing competition, organised by the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1786. The Mather family farmed there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. George Forsyth was farmer in the 1860s, and there were Taylors there in the early 20th century. The farm was taken over by the Haddon family shortly before WWII and jointly farmed with the Halls for a while. A flat bronze axe found here in the 19th century is in the Royal Museum of Scotland (also spelled ‘Eshiebank’, ‘Ashiebank’ etc. in earlier documents; the name is probably just the Old English ‘æsc banke’, meaning ‘the bank of ash trees’; it is first recorded as ‘Eschebank’ in 1498, is ‘Eschebank’ in 1511 and 1558, and ‘Esshebanke’ in 1545, and had similar spellings until the early 17th century, with ‘Eshiebank’ written in 1687 and ‘Eshibank’ in 1698; it is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Esshybanck’, surrounded by a wooded area, and is hybanck’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland).
Ashybrae

Ashybrae (aw-shēe-brā) n., former name for a slope on the west side of the Dean Burn, opposite the Well Brae and near the Burn Haugh. Atkinson (at-kin-sin, at-kee-sin) n. David, M.B.E., J.P. (1897/8–1985) ‘Davey’ or ‘Big Davey’, a native of Glasgow, he came to Hawick in 1938 from Tweedmouth. He had been a professional football player for teams including Clyde and Dunfermline, before becoming player-manager of Berwick Rangers. He worked as transport manager for Hawick Co-op, being the first President of the Central Borders Co-operative Society, and retiring from ‘the Store’ in 1963. He was a member of Hawick Town Council, for South High Street ward, from 1944, made a Bailie from 1945, and was first elected Provost 1958–62, when James Henderson declined. His re-election as Provost in 1968 was decided on a draw of the hat! He served as Provost until 1975, being the last before reorganisation, and during 1975–77 he was referred to as ‘Ex-Provost’ at the Common Riding. He then went onto the District Council, being Vice-Convenor of Roxburgh District Council and of the Borders Regional Advisory Committee, and was also made an Honorary Sheriff Substitute. He retired from the Council in 1977 as Chairman, having worked on the Water Board, Police Board and Joint Area Fire Committee. Hawick honoured him with freedom of the town in 1970, and he received an M.B.E. in 1973. He was a member of the Legion and Liberal Clubs and an Honorary Life Member of the Callants’ Club. He resided for a long time in the house attached to the former Store Dairy on Elm Grove. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Kirton’ (presumably Kirkton) when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1687. His wife was Margaret Douglas and they also had a daughter Janet (b.1685). James (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. John (15th C.) appointed as one of the bailies to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to give sasine of Wolfelee to David Home of Wedderburn in 1479. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Atyensone’ in 1465/6 and 1483 when he was notary (‘imperial and royal’) to documents dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1468 he was described as ‘M.A., clerk, Glasgow diocese’ when he was notary for a document dealing with Harden in the Barony of Wilton. He was also notary in 1478 for a document relating to the Scotts of Branzholme and lands in Selkirk. In 1479 he was notary for a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. In 1488/9 he was notary for an agreement between the Vicar of Hascendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1492/3 he was a notary when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. In 1499 he was ‘Patrick Atzensone, M.A.’ when he was notary for Sir William Colville resigning the lands of Feu-Rule to Sir William Douglas of Cavers; he also notarised the granting of the lands to Andrew Ker in the following year. He is described as deceased in a disputed land case of 1533 referring to one of his documents. He may well have been attached to one of the local parish churches. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to ‘pay into Bayleya Mertine sex pound per piece, ... for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drummers coats att the Common rydeing in annon 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. His surname is recorded as ‘Atkinson’. Simon (15th C.) man whose progeny were bequeathed 12 lambs in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branzholme. He Gathered out of Ancient Chronicles, Histories, and Traditions of our Fathers’, a book in doggered verse, written by Walter Scot of Satchells and first published in 1688. It was reprinted in Edinburgh in 1766 and in Hawick in 1786. Another reprinting, edited by John G. Winning was published in Hawick in 1894 with extensive notes. The book consists of two parts: ‘Wats Bellenden’; and ‘Satchells’s Post’ral’. The writer was ‘Capt. Walter Scot, An old Souldier, and no Scholler, and ‘Walter Scot, An old Souldier, and no Scholler, And one that can Write nane, But just the Let ters of his Name’. It is said to have been dictated by the author to schoolboys from Hawick when he was about 75. The book was an early influence on Sir Walter Scott. It is one of the earliest known examples of local literature, as well as being a valuable family history, even if not entirely reliable.

connected with Drumlanrig Tower and an associated piece of land. William (d.bef. 1609) Minister of Mains and Strathmain in the period 1568–
72. He served as Minister for the Parishes of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton (as well as possibly Hobkirk) from about 1574 until at least 1591, possibly the end of the century (although whether he served continuously is unknown). For this he received the stipend of £12 15s sterling, plus the Kirklands. He was thus one of the first post-Reformation ministers. He preached at the same time as John Sandilands and William Fowler (and perhaps others) held the position of Parson or Rector in Hawick, and Henry Scott, who was Reader. This may have meant that these others took most of the ‘living’ but may never have set foot in the Parish. Note that following the Reformation there was a shortage of suitable preachers, and so it was common for some of the acceptable pre-Reformation ministers to be assigned to several contiguous parishes.
In 1575 he was assisted as Reader in Wilton by John Langlands, in Kirkton by George Douglas, in Hassendean by John Scott and in Cavers by William Slewman. He was mentioned as minister at Duns in 1685. In 1609 his son James was served as his heir of rent from lands in Hawick and Jedburgh (also written ‘Auchminmoutie’).

auction (awk-, owk-shin) n. an auction (note the diphthong in the former pronunciation).
the Auction Mert (thu-awk-shin-mer', -owk) n. Hawick’s former auction market, for a long time the oldest in Britain, being established in 1817 by Andrew Oliver. It was particularly known for its lamb sales in August and September. The Mart moved to its final location off the end of Bourtree Place in 1883, and closed in 1992.
The site was developed as the largest Safeway Supermarket in the Borders, built in 1993. An open market took place there on Saturdays from 1973 until the early 1990s, when it moved to the Haugh – ‘There is life there in the market When the lambs are up for sale, With the bustle and the bleating Which the auctions must entail’[WFC], ‘So they eyed oor Auction Mairt, Where fermers came wi’ horse and cairt’[IWL], the Auction Ring (thu-awk-shin-ring) n.
main building at the former Auction Mart, being an octagonal roofed structure at the southern end of the sheep pens, where the sales were conducted.

Augist (aw-, ow-gist) n. August (note the pronunciations).
auld (awld) adj. old – ‘I hae been yung, an’ nowe am auld …’ [HSR], ‘O’ auld hest thou layde the foundatione o’ the yirth …’ [HSR], ‘Aw’m Pawkie Patterson’s auld grey yaud …’ [JSB], ‘And the dearest spot on earth to me – Auld Hawick where I was born’ [GD], ‘But I like auld Hawick the best’ [TK], ‘Aw’ve yince or twice risked ma auld banes in a motor car’ [IWL], ‘There’s a fine auld toon where the Slitrig flows doon …’ [IWS].

the Auld Alliance (thu-awld-a-Il-ins) n. historical accord between Scotland and France, which was one of the world’s earliest mutual defence treaties. It was first signed in 1295, strengthened in the 14th century and continued until the Reformation. In a specific treaty of 1512 all Scottish citizens became citizens of France and vice versa. The alliance effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise in 1560. The practical consequences of the alliance over roughly 3 centuries are extremely complicated (cf. the Auld Enemy).

Auld Alton (awld-awl-tin) n. another name for Alton, a former house, once belonging to the Scotts, about 3 miles north of Hawick. The ruins, dated 1675, are still visible near Alton Loch. The form of the house was similar to that of Westgate Hall in Denholm.

Auld Badie (awld-bâ-dee) n. popular name for one of Hawick’s resident poor in the early 18th century. Payments to him are regularly entered in the Session books, and although his full name is not recorded, he is probably James Badie.

the Auld Band of Roxburgh (thu-awld-bawnd-ov-roks-hu-ru) n. bond signed by prominent men in Roxburghshire in 1551. This involved swearing loyalty to their Queen, promising never to side with the English, and to deliver up all law-breakers under their control. It was signed in Jedburgh by most of the local Lairds, including Cranstons, Douglasses, Elliots, Kers, Rutherfords, Scotts and Turnbulls. A further bond was signed in 1573, where the noblemen and landowners renewed their allegiance to the Crown.

Auld Braiddlie (awld-brå-dee) n. Old Braiddlie, farm in the Hermitage valley, situated up hill, to the north of the farm of (New) Braiddlie. The original peel tower of Martin Elliot was somewhere near here.

the Auld Brig (thu-awld-brig) n. Hawick’s only bridge for several hundred years. It was known as ‘Slitrig Brig’, or simply ‘the Brig’ when it was the only substantial bridge in the Town. Said to have been built originally around the 13th century (although more likely from around 1500), it had 2 semi-circular arches, the larger one having a steep slope on the west side, and the smaller arch having a gentler slope on the east side (with some confusing accounts of a third arch). It was intended for foot traffic only, being high and narrow and quite steep on the west side. It was traditionally said that the stone had come from Whitrope quarries, and indeed the stone of the bridge’s ribs and the ashlar of the piers were found to be consistent with stones in the Whitrope Burn. There is a record of repairs to the bridge in 1744 and of the Council petitioning an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs in 1773, after damage from the great flood. During the flood of 1767 2 men were carried off from the Brig and drowned, while another dozen were rescued with the aid of a ladder. A story was long told of how the bridge was erected by a pious lady to help people get to St. Mary’s. This story may have arisen because the main arch contained a sculptured female face under it, at the top, which was said to have been either the lady who built the bridge, or the effigy of a woman who had fallen from it; in the early 1800s the face was still distinct, but was defaced later. The bridge was described in 1839 in the New Statistical Account. It was surveyed by Smith of Darnick before its demolition, where it was described as ‘done in a very imperfect manner’. The main arch had a 26 ½ foot span, and consisted of 3 ribs of freestone with 2 layers of flat slabs on top. The smaller arch had about a 12 foot span, and the central pier of hewn stone was founded on a high part of the rock in the Slitrig. The bridge itself was about 9 feet wide, although the roadway within the parapet was only about 6 ½ feet wide. Based on it style, the bridge probably dated from around 1500, when pointed Gothic arches were in fashion (although of course that may have replaced an earlier structure). The existing Canon-gate Bridge in Jedburgh is probably quite similar in construction. Hawick’s bridge is certainly indicated on Pont’s map of c.1590. There are at least 8 known sketches or paintings of the bridge, including one from 1776, which is the earliest known image of any part of Hawick. The bridge was used to facilitate access to St. Mary’s and the rest of the western part of Hawick from the eastern side of the Slitrig. The main road once ran up the High Street, across the Auld Brig, down Silver
Auld Brig

Street and up the Howegate, this changing with the construction of Drumlanrig Brig in 1776. The Brig survived the great Slitrig flood of 1676, although the eastern arch was swept away, and 2 men were carried off from it and drowned, when trying to escape by rope to Silver Street. The Auld Brig was finally demolished in 1851 to make way for the Exchange Buildings, amid much controversy, with a boy called Duncan being the last person to cross. A poetry competition in its honour was held in that year, with a silver medal being offered by the Magistrates. Many of the entries being published in ‘Competing and other poems on the Auld Brig’, and the prize was won by Agnes Douglas; a separate broadside called ‘Auld Brig’, written by C.E.S.P., was also printed at the same time. A Roman coin found during the demolition was donated to the Museum, as well as a trowel found beneath the foundations. Individual stones from the Brig are incorporated into 34 Loan, 48 Loan and the entrance to Old Manse garden. A plaque on the corner opposite the Auld Brig o’ Doon, and now under Tower Mills. The Snuffin used to take place on the bridge, and the rough area, some of which are still visible, including one near West Buccleuch, another through Deanburn-haugh, and the Thieve’s Road near Dod farm (see also drove road).

Auld Cash (awld-kawsh) n. Old Cash, nickname for William Oliver.
Auld Castle Haa (awld-kaw-sul-haw) n. name sometimes used for Westgate Haa.
Auld Clutty (awld-klit-ee, -klu’t) n. the Devil – ‘Aw hadna sat lang when wha comes by but Auld Clutty himsel’’ [JHH] (also written ‘Chuit-tie’).

Auld Dand (awld-dawnd) n. nickname for a poor Hawick resident, who is recorded getting payments from the Kirk Session in the early 1800s. His full name is not given however.

Auld Drover Road (awld-duv-röd) n. an ancient cattle driving route passing through Hawick, of which there are still traces. It ran south along the Slitrig, parallel to the B6399, and can be seen around Limekilnedge and elsewhere. To the north there is a wood between Hassendean and Lilliesleaf still called the Droveroad Plantation. There were other drove roads too in the area, some of which are still visible, including one near West Buccleuch, another through Deanburn-haugh, and the Thieve’s Road near Dod farm (see also drove road).

Auld Dovemount (awld-duv-moun’) n. former property on part of Dovemount acquired from George Haliburton in 1810, the name ‘Old Dovemount’ appearing later in the century.

Auld Dovemount Well (awld-duv-moun’-wel) n. another name for Dovemount Well.

Auld Drumlanrig (awld-drum-lawn-reg) n. nickname used for Sir James Douglas (c.1498-1578) in later life.

Auld Dunnerum (awld-du-ne-rum, -rum) n. nickname of James Cavers (also written ‘Auld Dunnerum’ and other variants).

Auldearn see Aulderne

aulden (awl-din) adj. olden – ‘I hae taen serious thocht o’ the dayses o’ auld, the yeers o’ aulden times’ [HSR].

Auld Enemy (awld-en-mee) n. England – ‘...wan the Dooglas an the Scott wrait off a wheen auld scores an saw day-aboot wui the auld-enemy’ [ECS] (cf. the Auld Alliance).

aulder (awld-ur) adj. older – ‘hei’s threis days auld than mei’, ‘Eh, but if ye saw ma faither; hei’s awfu’ little, an’ hei’s fer auld than mei’ [JTh], ‘Here’s to auld Hawick, now grown auld than ever, Yet the auld she grows the mair and mair strang’ [JEDM], ‘And so, abune auld Davvit, We played an auld game, There in the airly stillness, Till it was time for hame’ [DH], ‘And then as A got auld The game o golf A tried’ [IWL].

Aulderne (awl-durn) n. village near Nairn that was site of a battle in 1645, part of the Civil War, in which at least 2,000 were killed in the Covenanting army by the Royalist army commanded by Montrose. The regiments of Loudon, Lothian and Lawers were attacking the Royalists up a steep bank and in the confusion were apparently attacked by their own cavalry. The Lowland companies, including the Teviotdale Regiment under Lord Lothian, suffered huge losses. Hawick men fought immediately under Douglas of Cavers for the Covenanters. Francis Gladstains, a young Lieutenant and his brother Capt. James Gladstains were slain, along with ‘other hyne sister’s sons of Sir William Douglas of Cavers, Shyrriff of Teviotdale’, as recorded in the Gladstains family bible. His victory in this battle emboldened Montrose, who travelled south, but was attacked by the Covenanters at Philiphaugh (the modern spelling is ‘Auldearn’).

auldest (awld-ist) adj. oldest – ‘The auldest was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade’ [RDW], ‘Ma auldest sister’s washed the close, The other yin’s dune the flair’ [AY].

Auld Essenside (awld-e-sin-sid) n. still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps today, this is a possible former village site, or perhaps just a farmstead. It is located by an old track between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch, just north of Girnsie Hill (clearly marked with 2 buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). Auld Falnash (awld-fawl-nash) n. nickname for Gideon Scott, Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the late 17th and early 18th centuries, who resided at Falnash.

auld-farrant (awld-faw-rin’) adj., poet. old-fashioned – ‘...Auld-farrant een wi’ a sense o’ richt Are the kindly een o’ oor ain wee Loo’ [FL], ‘...So, sume, may some auld-farrant sap Set my sangs frei, To cheat the deil O’ the saul’s desolation’ [DH].

Auld Fodderlee (awld-to-dur-lee) n. farm in the lower Rule valley, on the east side, near where Fodderlee Silke meets the Rule Water. This was once the main farm of Fodderlee (as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map). Wester Fodderlee lies to the south and Easter Fodderlee to the east (see also Fodderlee).

the Auld Fyre Station (thu-awld-fir-stä-shin) n. the former Fire Station on Commercial Road. It was built in 1913–14, with architect Alex Ingles, and had a distinctive brick tower. Used as part of the town yards since 1971, it was demolished in 2002 following a fire.

Auld Geordie (awld-jör-dee) n. former Hawick resident, known for his abilities as a hunter. He died in the mid-1800s and is immortalised in a poem by Thomas Chapman – ‘Fareweel to Geordie, nae mair shall we see him In Howgate, the Forerawm the Kirkwynd, or Looan; His dougie, puir creature, seems dowie without him, And a’ folk that kent him are wae that he’s gone.

the Auld Glebe (thu-awld-gleeb) n. area in the West End, part of which was divided into allotments in the 1840s. It was formerly part of the glebe lands of Hawick Parish Church. In 1692 ‘the old Gleb land’ of Hawick was leased by William Scott, apothecary, from the Duchess of Buccleuch. In the early 18th century the land was an area between the Loan and what became the New Road, lying to the west of Myreslawgreen. The last remaining piece, also known simply as ‘the Glebe’ was an open green next to the Westend Church at the left-hand side of the bottom of Green Terrace. It was used as a drying green and children’s play area until built up in the latter part of the 20th century.

Auld Glebe Parks (awld-gleeb-pawrks) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were part of Deanfoot. The ‘four parks or inclosures called Old-glebe parks’ are recorded in 1780.

the Auld Haa (thu-awld-haw) n. name sometimes used for Westgate Haa in Denholm.

Auld Harden (awld-har-din) n. former house on the Harden estate, located about 1 km north of the present Harden House, the area still marked as ‘Old Harden’ on the Ordnance Survey map. It was a 14th century peel tower of which nothing survives.

Auld Hawick (awld-hlk) n. name used to refer to a hypothetical ancient settlement near Hardie’s Hill, considered to be the original location for the town, as described by Robert Wilson and James Wilson. It was also said to have been the place where the townpeople hid when the town was attacked. ‘Hab o Hawick’ apparently visited the location every Sunday, perhaps to commemorate the deeds of his ancestors.

Auld Hawick, Ma Border Hame (awld-hIck-maw-bôr-dui-hûm) n. song with words and music by Ian Landles, written in a modern Hawick vernacular in 1996 and dedicated to Iain Scott. It is included in the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Ian Landles.

Auld Hawick, My Dreams (awld-hIck-mI-dreemz) n. song written at the request of two local ladies (Jean Armstrong and Jeannette Johnston) who wanted a Hawick song in the form of a duet. The words were written by Robert A. Laiddlaw, appearing in the Hawick Express in 1851. The music was written (or was simply an ‘arrangement’ in his words) by Adam L. Ingles, influenced by the German song ‘Die Lorelei’ and the Victorian duet ‘Whispering Hope’. The song is from the mid-1950s.

Auld Hawick Where I was Born (awld-hIck-whâr-aw-wax-bûrn) n. song adapted from a poem written by George Davidson. The music is similar to ‘They’re Aye a-Teasin’ me’, arranged by Adam L. Ingles. It was first sung in 1950 at the Callants’ Club Smoker by James Kennedy. Ingles also changed some of the words, and later altered the music to make it simpler, removing the ‘piano symphony’ at the end.

Auld Hill (awld-hill) n. popular name for part of the farm of Denholmhill, near the hind’s house (used in 1863 by James Murray).

Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill (awld-hob-be-ô-skelf-hIil) n. local poet or minstrel of the 18th century, who left us with a version of ‘The Braes of Branxholm’, or ‘Jane the Ranters’ bewitching of Capt. Maitland to her Daughter’, which appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It seems likely that he was Robert Scott, who was tenant farmer in Skelfhill at about this time. Another story is told (in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821) of a lamb lost from a herd that was taken to Irthing Water to graze, with the man who looked for it perhaps being tricked into eating meat from the beast; the farmer who owned the herd was said to be ‘Auld Hobby o the Skelfhill’, who may have been the same man. William Scott describes him as one of the Scotts from Skelfhill who ‘was famed for his ready wit, and a fine vein for poetry’. Apparently the Duchess of Buccleuch was fond of conversing with him when she came to Hawick for the land-setting. On one occasion he sang her a ‘catch’ about the losses of her tenants during recent stormy winters, with some of her poorest tenants passing the window at the time, on their way to try to sell peats etc., far from home; because of his efforts, she became convinced to let them off with their rent. On another occasion he travelled to Denholm Fair to buy meal for the winter, but could only purchase half a load, and was then met by the inhabitants saying that they would starve if he took it away; taking pity, he decided to sell it to the local people in small measures at cost, leading to him being scolded by his wife when he returned to Skelfhill. He also farmed Doe cleuch, and the herd there brought him a large quantity of sheep skins (corresponding to the entire flock), and asked if he would be rehired, to which Hobbie replied ‘Would you have me give you a wage, for doing nothing’. He was said to abhor formal titles, and when someone called at his door asking for ‘Mr. and Mrs. Scott’ (meaning his son and daughter-in-law) he replied extemporaneously ‘There is nought now a days, But Mr. and Mrs. Scott, and Miss Baby; ’Twas a better world when there was nought, But the goodwife an’ auld Hobby’. With this abundance of anecdotes, it seems clear that there really was a character of this name, who farmed at Skelfhill and wrote verse (also written ‘Hobby’).

Auld Howpasley (awld-how-pas-lee) n. farmhouse near the site of the former main residence of Howpasley, situated almost a kilometer up the Howpasley burn from the modern farm. The name is sometimes also used for the site of the 15th century peel tower, which stood just to the east of the steading, but of which nothing now survives. It was burned by the English in 1513. A little to the north-west are the remains of an ancient enclosure, about 15 m by 9 m in size. The track passing here is part of the former road leading over to Teviothead. In 1841 the residents recorded there include Pringles and Rodgers.

Auld Jethart (awld-jeth-ar’) n. Old Jeddart, farm off the A68, about 4 miles south of Jedburgh, supposed to have been the original location for the Burgh. It is believed that mound still known as ‘Chapel Knowe’ was the site of the chapel mentioned in a charter of 1165 being ‘in the forest glade opposite Xernwingslawe (Mervinslaw)’. It was valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 and described as 2 steadings. In 1541 half of the lands were held by Agnes Lee and the other half by Gilbert Lee; additionally William Lee was tenant in ‘Auld Jedburgh-heid’. John Waugh was tenant there in 1567. John Gotterson is listed there among the Auld Joseph (awld-jō-zef) n. nickname for a tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. His name came from the fact that his coat was patched with scraps of cloth of every colour.

the Auld Kirk (thu-awld-kirk) n. the old church of Hawick Parish, usually referring to St. Mary’s, or in the late 19th century sometimes referring to the disused older Wilton Kirk – `When rings the Auld Kirk bell we meet Upon yon gow’ny green!’ [JT].

Auld Kirker (awld-kir-kur) n., arch. someone who stuck with the established Church of Scotland after the Disruption – `A staunch Old Kirker, he and his later neighbour in Teviot Crescent, Bailie Fraser, did not leave at the Disruption …’ [JHH].

Auld Kirk Style (awld-kirk-stil) n. name on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the Kirk Stile.

Auld Kirkyard (awld-kirk-yārd) n. Old Kirkyard or Churchyard, next to St. Mary’s Church, and previously part of the church grounds. The area now used as a street was once used for burials, with the surrounding wall and iron gates only being constructed in 1811. It became known as Kirkgate in the latter part of the 19th century, the name being discarded when the western approach to the Church was removed around 1882. It was renamed St. Mary’s Place in 1946.

Auld Laidlaw (awld-lād-law) n. nickname for William Laidlaw later in life.

Auld Licht (awld-light) adj., arch. relating to a particularly conservative group of Secessionists in the Scottish Presbyterian Church. The Burghers split in 1799 into the `Auld Licht' and `New Licht' Burghers, with the Anti-Burghers making a similar split in 1806. Later in the century, when these secessionist groups started to unite again, the `Auld Licht' Burghers and Anti-Burghers largely ended up as part of the Free Church of Scotland – `This did not please the `auld licht' section of the congregation’ [JTu] (sometimes written `auld licht’).

Auld London (awld-lun-din) n. nickname of Robert Laidlaw.

Auld Mag Lamb (awld-mawg-lawm) n. nickname, presumably for someone who had a stall at markets in Hawick. She could be the same Miss Lamb who sold `rock bools’ in Needle Street. Margaret Lamb, born in Wilton, was wife of James, living at 48 High Street in the 1861 census – `Sally Machlusk, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ayon, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Auld Man Fox (awld-mawm-foks) n. nickname for a local farmer, probably in the 19th century – ‘Kate the Cuddy Wife, Tammy Lauder, Wullie Gotterson, Jockie Eye; Auld man Fox was never madder Than when the callants chased his kye’ [HI].

the Auld Manse (thu-awld-mans) n. the Old Manse associated with St. Mary’s Church, on Old Manse Lane. It dates from 1763 (or perhaps 1765) and is a 2-storey L-plan building, fronting onto an enclosed garden. It housed 7 successive Parish ministers. Alterations were carried out in 1824 and it was enlarged in about 1835. It was sold by the church to William Kedie around 1850, when the new Manse was built on Buccleuch Road. The former Manse occupied the same site prior to 1763, built in 1713 and was 54 feet long, 16 feet high, made of hewn stone, with 5 chimneys and a thatched roof. Tax was paid on 24 windows there in 1748. Before that there was an earlier Manse, which was a long, narrow, relatively low, white-washed, thatched (probably with turf) building, which may have had a brewhouse and barn at one end, and a stable and byre at the other.

Auld Manse Lane (awld-mans-lān) n. Old Manse Lane, short street near St. Mary’s Church. It was named after the church manse which was there until the middle of the 19th century, having been the parish minister’s residence from 1763–1850. It was previously called Manse Lane, and is also known by some as ‘the Rampart’. There was once a ford over the Slitrig near the foot of this street. Part was demolished in 1970 and made into a small car park. On the dog-leg in the lane there is still a corner-stone on the building, a remnant of the days of wagons. Nos. 2, 4 and 6 are grade C listed buildings (formerly ‘Manse Lane’).
the Auld Man’s Sate

The Auld Man’s Sate (thu-awld-mawnz-sä’) n. seat at the top of the Loan, offering a magnificent view of the town, and a welcome resting place for Hawick’s elder statesmen. This is where the Drums and Fifes begin to lead the Cornet and his supporters back into Town on the Saturday of the Common Riding, after their visit to the Moor – ‘No more sliding down the helter shelter. No more kissing in the Chinese shelter. No, if you’re looking for a place to meet, You’ll find me sitting on the old man’s seat’ [DF].

the Auld Man’s Steps (thu-awld-mawnz-steps) n. name sometimes used for the steps leading from the head of Twilless Terrace to the Braid Road.

the Auld Mason (thu-awld-mäisin) n. nickname for William Scott from Falnash Mill.

Auld Melrose (thu-awld-mel-röz) n. original site of ‘Mailros’ Abbey and St. Cuthbert’s Chapel, on a peninsula formed by a bend in the Tweed, to the west of Bemersyde Hill and Scott’s view. Founded in the 7th century, this was where St. Cuthbert first entered monastic life. The Chapel to St. Cuthbert was built there in the 11th century and continued in use for a couple of centuries after the abbey moved to the site of the modern Melrose. Today there are no signs of the former importance of the site, although there are many sculpted stones at Old Melrose farm.

the Auld Midraw (thu-awld-mid-raw) n. song, written as a poem by James Thomson in the 19th century, with music put to it around 2000 by Scocha – ‘Old age may sigh, though youth may laugh, As cherished idol’s fa’; Farewell, Farewell to heart and home In the auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

Auld Nancy (awld-nawn-see) n. nickname sometimes used for Agnes Hewitson, also known as ‘Nancy Whutson’ – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddly aboot, And Gleska Jamie lits a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

Auld Nick (awld-nik) n. Old Nick, the Devil – ‘...Despite o’ ilka Tory trick, That might do credit to Auld Nick’ [RDW], ‘...The donnert mortals never will learn, That kicking the pricks can only earn, A jaggy road to Auld Nick’ [FL].

Auld Nickie Ben (awld-ni-kee-ben) n., poet. Old Nick, a name apparently invented by Burns for the sake of the metre – ‘The wund gangs reesh-lin’ throwe the bents Cryin’ ‘I dinna ken ...I dinna ken ... Unless it’s Auld Nickie Ben’ [DH].

Auld Northhoose (awld-north-hoos) n. cluster of buildings on the high road between Northhouse and Priesthaugh. This was on the old route from Hawick to Teviothead and the south. It is now often on the route for the Mosspaul ride-out. Little remains of the once thriving weaving village that stood here. There were once many houses in the community, one estimate stating 15 and another claiming as many as 40. Blankets and shepherd’s plaids were woven there up until about 1800. There was a teacher appointed to teach the children there in the 18th century. A decision was taken by the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale in 1669 to build a church there for the people of the higher parts of the neighbouring parishes (although this does not appear to have happened). It seems that there was also an ancient chapel in the area. There are now no signs of the church, although the ancient burial-ground, in front of the stead ing by the burnside, has turned up several rough-hewn gravestones and it is said there were burials there up until 1792. It is said that the population thinned out after an epidemic in the early 1800s (see also Northhoose).

Auld Orchard (awld-or-churd) n. Old Orchard, the farm at the end of the Braid Road, with a distinction made between the old and new parts. The ‘new’ part is the Georgian Mansion, dating from about 1800. The ‘old’ parts are some restored early 19th-century cottages, which are harled and lime-washed. Presumably they are on the site of older buildings.

the Auld Pairish Kirk (thu-awld-pä-reesh-kirk, -paw-). Hawick Old Parish Church, located on Buccleuch Street just outside the Burgh boundary, built in 1844 as a gift of the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, because St. Mary’s had become too small to serve the growing congregation. Its first minister was Rev. John MacRae. The building was designed by William Burn and constructed by Andrew R. Michie out of local whinstone, with the adjoining Parish Halls built in 1885 in the same style (and the old Burgh boundary running between them). Henry Scott Riddell laid the foundation stone. The installation of the organ chamber and organ, along with substantial redecoration were carried out in 1893–97, to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1896 3 stained glass windows were placed in the church, designed by Ballantine & Gardiner and in memory of Gilbert Davidson and his family. The church became badly affected by dry rot and was closed in 1987, with a final service in 1989, followed by its demolition in 1992. The last minister was David L. Wright. The congregation merged with St. George’s (now Teviot Kirk), and St. Mary’s again became the Parish Church of Hawick. The adjacent Parish Halls still survive, some of the stone from the church was reused in the development of Lovel Court, and the wood from some pews was recycled for use in renovating Aikwood Tower. New housing was built there in 2001/2, named after ex-Provost Frank Scott, and incorporates the bell, which had originally hung in an italianate belfry. There is an existing communion token from the church bearing the date 1843.
Auld Plis Wud

Auld Plis Wud (awld-plis-wud) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Old Place Wood’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Auld Race Course Park (awld-rās-körspawrk) n. name for the field on Hawick Common to the east of Pilmuir farm, where races used to take place at the Common Riding. Parts of the former racecourse (a long straight with loops at each end, extending into the neighbouring fields) can still be made out.

Auld Reekie (awld-ree-kee) n. Edinburgh, or someone from Edinburgh – ‘A fine hervest monrin’ saw me take the coach frae Auld Reekie and three ‘oors or so later brought us into kenn’d landmarks’ [JEDM], ‘An’ if ye taste auld Reekie’s ale, Whan ye dislade your boxes, Nae doubt your worship winna fail To ca’ at Lucky Knox’s’ [JR], ‘The cart wheels squeaked and clattered On Auld Reekie’s cobble stanes, As through the smoggy closes They delivered flesh and bane’ [Sco].

the Auld Refrain (thu-awld-ree-frān) n. referring to the chorus of ‘Teribus’ or to the Old Song, i.e. the earlier version of ‘Teribus’, sung on the Friday morning – ‘Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT].

auld sair (awld-sār) n., arch. an old score, grudge – ‘The Border fairs, at a former period, were often the ‘Meets’ at which ‘auld sairs’ were settled’ [WaD], ‘Dinna rake up auld sairs’ [ECS].

the Auld Sang (thu-awld-sawng) n. the Old Song, written around 1800, perhaps a little earlier, by Arthur Balbirnie; it thus only pre-dates ‘Teribus’ by about 20 years. However, there was probably an even earlier version, only the chorus of which survives. It also has a different chorus, ‘Up wi’ Hawick, its rights and common, Up wi’ a’ the Border bowmen! Tiribus and Tiriodin, We are up to guard the common’; this again suggests that the tune was old, but the desire to put words to it probably came from about this time. The song consists of 13 verses. Unlike Hogg’s song, which focuses on the events at Hornshole, Balbirnie’s words describe the contemporary riding of the Common. The 8th verse, about Rodgie of the Green Kirk, must have been added later. The 2nd last verse also gives a dig at the landowners who had profited at Hawick’s expense after the Division of the Common. When consulting a map of the Common in 1900, the route of the Riding of the Marches was found to conform closely with the words of Balbirnie’s song. It is Sung annually from the steps of the Tower on the Friday morning following the Cornet’s breakfast, before the riders mount, with the Song Singer and 4 Principals taking it in turns to sing the verses. Until 1921 it was sung from an open window of a room in the Tower. In its early days it was sung from elsewhere, e.g. the Minister in 1839 writes that it was ‘sung by the cornet and his attendants from the roof of an old tenement belonging to the town, and loudly and enthusiastically joined in by the surrounding multitude’. It was filmed at least as early as 1929.

Auldshiels (awld-shelz) n. former farm in Lid-desdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 in ‘Quarterium de Ludne’. In 1632 this farm and ‘Rouraltonholme’ were possessed by John Scott. From Blaeu’s c.1654 map it appears to be east of Greenshields and north of Woolhope (it is ‘Ald-schelis’ in c.1376, ‘Aldscheillis’ in 1632 and ‘Old-shaels’ in c.1654).

Avenel (aw-vi-nel) n. Gervase (d.1219) Lord of Eskdale, son of Robert. In about 1185 there is a charter of confirmation by William the Lion of lands in Eskdale he and his father had granted to Melrose Abbey. In about 1190 he was witness to a charter for the lands at Hownam that were renewed to Melrose Abbey. At about the same time he is recorded as Constable of Roxburgh (presumably meaning he had responsibility at Roxburgh Castle). He witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey in 1208. He also witnessed a charter for King William granting the church of Roxburgh and another associated with Rutherglen. In 1214 he confirmed to Melrose Abbey grants of his father Robert for lands in Eskdale. His wife Sibilla, son and heir Gervase, and other son Robert, are also mentioned. Note that his wife and mother had the same name, but the surnames of neither of them are known. In 1215 he served as a prisoner for Scottish King in England. He was succeeded by a 3rd son, Roger and William was a 4th son. He was buried at Melrose. Robert (d.1184/5) Lord of Eskdale. He gained lands in upper and lower Eskdale from David I and was a benefactor to Melrose Abbey (giving them ‘Tumloher’ and ‘Weidkerroc’), where he died. He served as Justiciar of Lothian around 1165. He witnessed a renewal of the gift of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. He also witnessed the confirmation of the lands gifted to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1160s. He witnessed a royal charter for the lands of Whitslade around 1170, signed at Traquair. About the same time he witnessed a gift of lands at Hownam. He was witness to charters for Legerwood made by Walter Fitz Alan, in which his son Gervase is also witness. He witnessed a grant of Walter Fitz Alan (the Steward) in the period 1212–37 and a document for Alexander II on about 1235. In about 1220 he witnessed a charter for Robert de Brus. Along with many other Scots nobles he signed a pledge to keep the peace with the English around the time of his death. He had a daughter who married Henry Graham of Dalkeith, and through her the family estates and titles passed to the Grahams. He is buried at Melrose Abbey (also written ‘Avennell’).

the Avenue (thu-aw-vi-new) n. the drive leading to Wilton Lodge from the gates at the end of Victoria Road, being a tree-lined avenue along the Teviot. It was created about 1810 by James Anderson of Wilton Lodge, with the cutting of the bank supervised by James Elliot, the Wilton schoolmaster. It is clearly marked on Wood’s 1824 map. On the Saturday of the Common Riding the mounted procession rides through the gates and along the riverside, pausing near the Laurie Bridge, where the Principals stop to sing Teribus. The name is also given to a track through the woods at the top of the Nip Knowes, which horses take after the Chase.

Aye! ...'[DH], sometimes with two syllables - 'ay ... ay', or diphthongally - '...whereas for ay (= yes) the Hawick pronunciation is e-ee, i.e. the sound of e (as in pen) plus the sound of ee (as in feet), pronounced quickly, without any break'[ECS] (sometimes spelled 'aye'; note the former pronunciation, which distinguished it from aye).

ay (ā) interj. eh, an exclamation representing a sound with a variety of meanings, often paired with another word - 'Ai heather! sic a yooky waddlen; nae streiv!'[ECS] (also written 'ai'; see also who).
York and appeared as Mrs. Fanny Fullabloom in the 1910 film ‘Winning a Widow’, as well as the Mother Superior in the 1918 film ‘The Greatest Wish in the World’. She married Col. Sir Alfred Rawlinson in 1913, as his 2nd wife; he was known as a pioneering motorist and aviator, as well as a sportsman and intelligence officer. She retired from the stage in 1923 and divorced Rawlinson in 1924. The composer Hubert Bath was named in the divorce case. She did some early radio broadcasts with the BBC and worked with missionaries in India and the Far East (also written as ‘Al- wyn’).

ayoint (a-yoin’) prep., adv., arch. beyond (variant noted by E.C. Smith; cf. yoint, ayount, etc.).

Aytoun (ā-tin) n. Borders town just off the main road near Eyemouth, which once had the A1 going straight through it. The nearby red sandstone Aytoun Castle was often held by the English, burned down in 1834 and was rebuilt in 1851 as a Scots Baronial fantasy for William Mitchell Innes, Governor of the Bank of Scotland; it also has a beehive-shaped dovecote. The town was the site of the signing of a truce between James IV and the Earl of Surrey in 1497. Aytoun also has the ruins of the 12th century St. Dionysius’ Church. Population (1991) 569. ‘The History of Aytoun – A Berwickshire Village’ was published in 2018 (named after the Eye Water).

Ayton (ā-tin) n. William Edmonstone (1813–65) poet and Professor at Edinburgh University, he wrote ‘From Edinburgh After Flodden’. Much of his work, such as the ‘Firmilian’ hoax, parodied bombastic poetry styles of his day.
bacci  (baw-ka, baw-ki)  n. tobacco – ‘... And had their crack and 'baccas blaw Like ony 'ither body On Young Year's Day' [TC], ‘...I once got the job to ‘ca’ the baccas wheel’ [JT], ‘...that can prove heid didna steal his ticket, dog, baccas-pooch or his neebor's serk, gets the freedom of Liddesdale’ [DH] (also written 'bacco', etc.).

bacci-shop  (baw-ka-, -ki-, -shop)  n., arch. a tobacconist’s shop – ‘The commercial kind are pair o’ the stock-in-tred o’ maist bacca-shops...

back  (bawk)  v. to bet, place a wager with someone – ‘A’ll back ee echant that [etc.]

the Back Brae  (thu-bawk-brä)  n. former name for a road in Denholm, running along the south side of the Teviot between Denholm Mill and Denholm Bridge. It was a continuation of the street now called Denholm Mill.

the Back Braes  (thu-bawk-bräz)  n. the hillside between Moat Park and the Slitrig, southwest of the Village, and having a public footpath connecting to a footbridge. Up until about the mid-19th century there was a lane leading from the bottom of the Loan across the fields to this area – ‘Backbraes and Scars from there take up the bottom of the Loan across the fields to this area behind a building – ‘gaun an play in the back green, bit mind the weshin'.

Backbrae Fitbrig  (bawk-brä-fä'-brig)  n. name sometimes used for the footbridge at the bottom of the Back Braes, also called Lyle an Scott’s Brig.

Back Burn  (bawk-burn)  n. stream that rises near Black Rig, to the east of Buccleuch, and runs eastwards, through the small Back Loch, to join Bellendean Burn near Redfordgreen.

Back Burn  (bawk-burn)  n. small stream in Liddesdale that rises around North Birny Fell and runs southwards to join Balton Burn (it is marked on the 1817 Buccleuch survey).

the Back Dam  (thu-bawk-dawn)  n. former name sometimes used for the Slitrig Dam, i.e. the old mill lade running along the south of the Slitrig alongside Backdamgate and across the Tower Knowe to the old site of Hawick Mill (‘back’ presumably meaning relative to the High Street etc.).

Backdamgate  (bawk-dawn-gä)  n. this area was first recorded in 1757 as the way to the Back Dam from Hawick Mill, hence the name. It was cleared of a garage, shops and old houses in the 1960's and rebuilt into housing for elderly residents. The ‘Staney Brae’ is part of what was formerly referred to as Backdamgate, and essentially the same road was also referred to as the Back Vennel. This is where the horses and riders leave from at the Ride-outs, with muster spilling over into Backdamgate (often also 2 words, ‘Back Damgate’, occasionally ‘Back Damgate’ and sometimes just ‘Dam Gate’; it is ‘Dam Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map and ‘Back Damgate’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Back Loch  (bawk-loch)  n. small body of water to the south of the B711 just after Redfordgreen.
with the Back Burn running through it (it appears to be ‘Potloch’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

the back o (thu-bawk-o, -ô prep. just after – ‘I’ll meet ee it the back o six’, ‘He’d left Edinburgh the back o nine . . .’ [DH], ‘. . . alas nae longer held up the Nipknowes the back o te-time’ [IWL].

the Back o the Mill (thu-baw-kô-thu-mil) n. former popular name for the footpath leading from the foot of Dovecote Street to the Little Haugh. The name derives from the path lying between the back of Teviot Crescent Mill and the Teviot. The path has also had other names (e.g. suggestive of its use by dog walkers) but none have stuck.

the Back o the Wuds (thu-baw-kô-thu-wudz) n. former name for a house near Crawbyres, presumably named for its proximity to Whitlaw Wood. Robert Stewart was there in 1797 (marked as ‘Back of the Woods’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Back o the Yairds (thu-baw-kô-thu-yärdz) n. 19th century name for an area previously called Morlaw’s Croft, which lay to the west of Orrock Place (between the present Buccleuch Street and the Teviot) and included a path along the river to the Coble and the Spetchman’s Haugh. The name was also applied to the pool in the Teviot beside the riverside path. Wood’s 1824 map shows a dashed line around the area, including the houses at Orrock Place, and labelled ‘Mrs. Crosbie’. It may be the same place recorded as ‘the yard foots’ in 1702 (also written ‘Back-o-the-Yairds’; cf. the Yaird Back).

the Back Railway (thu-bawk-räl-wi) n. former name for a short railway track running along Mansfield Gardens. The name was in use for the area in the mid-20th century, long after the siding had been dismantled.

the back raw (thu-bawk-raw) n. the two wing forwards (nos. 6 and 7) and the no. 8 position in rugby, specifically when in the pack or scrum.

the Backraw see the Back Raw

the Back Raw (thu-bawk-raw) n. row of pended tenements that occupied the north side (i.e. right-hand side on the way up) of what is now Drumlanrig Square. A blacksmiths shop here was the location of secret labour organisation meetings in the early 1800s. There were at least a couple of pubs there from early times too, where the Stag’s Head and Holland House are now. A photograph of the Common Riding procession of 1895 shows it before part was demolished to provide an opening to the properties behind – ‘There’s auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw, Hei’s of’en shod ma clutes’ [JSB].

backside foremost (bawk-sid-fôr-môst) n. reversed, the wrong way round (this appears to be Scottish; also ‘backside foremaist’).

Back Sike (bawk-sik) n. small stream that joins Borthwickbrae Burn just north of Milsington farmouse.

Back Sike (bawk-sik) n. small stream in the high land to the west of the Liddel valley, to the east of Hartsgarth Fell and Roan Fell. It runs into the Hartsgarth Burn. A sheepfold on the south bank has a carved inscription that reads ‘1820 Robert Elliot Tenant’.

Back Sike (bawk-sik) n. another name for Gibby’s Sike.

Backstanelees (bawk-stän-leez) n. alternative name for Baxtonlees.

back up (bawk-up) v. to put more fuel on a fire, especially to keep it burning slowly until morning.

the Back Vennel (thu-bawk-vennull) n. former name for a road which ran from the ford across the Slitrig along what is now Backdamgate and the ‘Staney Brae’, in use in the 17th and early 18th centuries. It was part of the ‘King’s Common Street’ linking the Howegate with the Newcastle-ton Road. It was continued across the Crosswynd to the top of Brougham Place by a lane that was later known as ‘the Dirty Entries’. In 1737 it is described as stretching ‘from the Crosswynd head to the back dann’ when it was marched on the authority of the Bailies, laying out march-stones ‘making the entry ten feet wide at the straitest part’.

backwaird (bawk-wârd) adv., poet. backward – ‘. . . let thame be turnet bakwaird, an’ putten til confusion, that desyre my skaith’ [HSR].

backwairds (bawk-wârds) adv., poet. backwards – ‘. . . let thame be drein bakwairds, an’ putten til shme that wush me ill’ [HSR].

the Back Wynd (thu-bawk-wìnnd) n. an alternative name once used for Backdamgate??, damaged in the 1767 flood.

Bacon Jean (bà-kin-jeen) n. nickname in use in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

bad (bad, bawd) adj. ill, unwell – ‘How’s yer fither now? Hei’s fair bad’, ‘A was fair bad wi the flu’, ‘I had a pickle ower much last nicht, and, man, I’m bad this morning . . .’ [AL], ‘Oo’d say ‘bad' for ‘ill’ — ‘her man’s bad’, meanin’ he’s ill’ [IWL],
adv. badly — ‘How er ee daein’?’, ‘Och, no bad’.
bad (bad, bawd) pp., arch. bid, invited — ‘And haed the kerlynns view it weel, He wad lette them bad for (bawd-for) adv., arch. very much for, strongly in support of — ‘An oo say ‘A’d be bad for’ daein some’ in — ‘what way er ee ga’i gaun’?’, ‘A’d be bad for gaun that way’, there’s nithin bad about eet’ [IWL], ‘... aw wuz fair bad for um, so a asket um if he wuz awright, ti which he replied ‘Yes I’m fine, but James has lost an arm and a leg!’ [IHS].

bade (bâid) pp. stayed, lived, resided — ‘oo bade up a lane in Dovecote Street’, ‘Born in the Haig, Jimmy’s aye bade in Allars Crescent’ [IWL], ‘O,

Jimmy’s aye bade in Allars Crescent’ [IWL], ‘A’ commune hame, a’ commune hame, A’vè bade owre long a’vè bade owre long’ [IWL] (sometimes spelled ‘baide’ and ‘baed’;
this is the past tense of bide; cf. bidden, which is the past participle).
Baden-Powell (bâ-din-pow-ul) n. Lord
Robert Stephenson Smith (1857–1941) soldier and founder of the Scout Movement. Famed for his part in the siege of Mafaking during the Boer War and for organising the South African constabulary. He formed the Boy Scouts in 1908 and with his sister Agnes the Girl Guides in 1910.
Thereafter he devoted his life to the scouting movement, writing many books and travelling the world. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1910 during a visit when he inspected the patrols of Border towns amassed in Wilton Lodge Park. A short film clip survives of his visit to the Town.
A specially illuminated Burgess ticket and silver-mounted casket were made for the occasion.
badge (bawj) n., arch. a badge given out indicating official status as one of the poor within a parish, allowing them to beg — ‘... might meet af-aft sermon to hear ye list of ye poor read over, anent the badges to be given to the poor who are able to go through ye parish’ [PR1725]. In Hawick in 1725 there were 24 such people in the Burgh and 21 in the country part. The badge was probably pewter, bearing the name of the parish and perhaps a ‘P’, and worn on the breast.
badger-baitin (baw-jur-bâ’-in) n. a sport involving captured badgers being fought to the death with dogs, usually with bets being placed.
It is now almost universally regarded as needlessly cruel, although it was certainly practised lo-caely. Apparently on New Year’s Day in the early 19th century a badger would be released into a brock at the Loanhead, to be dragged out by dogs.
Badie (bã-dee) n. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1649 he was one of 2 men chosen as collectors of the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water. His wife was Margaret ‘Quarie’. Their son David was born in 1644. It seems likely he was father of James and also of Janet, who married William Lamb. James (17th/18th C.)
made to Janet Scott. Their children included:
David (b.1671); William (b.1673); Janet (b.1674);
James (b.1677); John (b.1681); Bessie (b.1684);
Isobel (b.1687); and Jean (b.1690). He is probable the ‘James Baudy’ recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is probably the James, weaver, who witnessed the baptism of David, son of James in 1701 (probably his son and grandson). He is recorded in 1701 when he was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to collect the ‘stent’ from ‘west the water’. This suggests he lived in the West-end. He may also be the ‘Auld Badie’ referred to in later Burgh records.
He is probably the James, resident of the westside of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is also probably the James recorded in 1704 when someone was fined for passing him counterfeit silver coins. James (17th/18th C.) probably son of James and Janet Scott, born in Hawick Parish in 1677. He married Elizabeth Simpson in Hawick in 1700, and their son David was born in 1701. Note that either he or another James was a weaver who married Mary Wright in Hawick in 1702. He may also have been father of William (b.1704), Elizabeth (b.1706), Janet (b.1710), John (b.1710) and Jean (b.1713), with no mother’s names listed. James (17th/18th C.)
weaver of Hawick Parish, possibly the same as James, who married Elizabeth Simpson. In 1702 he married Mary Wright in Hawick Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1707), and possibly David (b.1703, although with the mother’s name listed as ‘Christian Wright’). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably the son of James born in 1681. His children included: Elspeth (b.1707); and John (b.1709) (the name may be a variant of Beattie, but appears to be a distinct surname in the 17th and 18th centuries).

bag (bawg) v., arch. to bulge out, to swell or hang down like a bag.
bageet see baggit
bagger (baw-gur) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who puts the finished garments into bags.
Bagget

Bagget (baw-ge’) n. former designation for a branch of the Elliots. It occurs in a 1516 ‘respite’ in the Register of the Privy Seal for William of Larriston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale, plus others of their kin ‘of Elwald in Bagget’. ‘Bagget’ was another name for Bygate in Liddesdale.

baggie (baw-gee’) n. a large minnow – ‘that auld Champagne bottle’ll make a grand baggie-bottle’, ‘…where A cood sei sic a griff as A gien the baggies an preenheeds whan A shot ma dish inti the waeater’ [ECS], ‘…wiggling his way uphill like a baggy up a Border burn’ [BMc], ‘And aa’ve stude Lang enough here, i’ the shallows wi the baggies nibbling ma taes …’ [DH], ‘Simmer mornins off oo set Catchin baggies in a net …’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘baggy’; so-called because of large abdomen).

baggit (baw-gee’, -gi’) adj. swollen, over-full, usually referring to food – ‘A’m fair baggit’, ‘Though feelin gey baggit, hei got umsel a haggis supper …ti wash the pies doon’ [IWL], fat, corpulent – ‘Jock’s a baggit boody’ [GW] (also written ‘baageet’).

baggit (baw-gi’) n., arch. an insignificant, little person, a feeble sheep, a contemptuous term for a child.

Bagimond’s Roll (baw-ge-mondz-röl) n. taxation roll drawn up by ‘Master Boiamund’ in 1275 when sent by the Pope to impose a tax of one tenth of all church revenues throughout Scotland, for use in the Holy Land. The original does not exist, although the information has survived through copies. The insistence that the tax be levied according to the true worth of each benefice meant that the roll contains valuable historical data relating to the state of the nation. This includes a listing for benedictions ‘In Decanatu de Tevidaill: Rectoria de Haweik, Rectoria de Wiltoun, Rectoria de Minto, Rectoria de Abotrowll, Vicaria de Cassiltoun, Rectoria cum vicaria de Ed-diltoun, Rectoria de Badrowll’ of which Hawick was by far the most valuable at £16 and Wilton at £5 6s 8d. ‘Rectoria de Askirk’ and ‘Rectoria of Ankrum’ were listed separately, since they belonged more directly to the Archbishop (also spelled ‘Bagimont’ and other variants).

baillary (bą-leu-ree) n., pl. the office of a bailie – ‘…it is actit, statut, and ordainit, that no personne sall bruick the office of bailiarie longer nor the space of twa years together …’ [BR1648], ‘…there was ane vacancy and interregnum of the office of bailiary until ane new election …’ [BR1697], ‘…and from whom he allenarly deryves his power and office of Balyerie, or else to the most honourable Lords of her Majesty’s Secret Counsell …’ [BR1706] (there are spelling variants).

bailie (bā-lee) n. a magistrate, municipal officer in Scotland similar to an English Alderman. In Hawick there were formerly 2 standing Bailies, with all those who had once served referred to thereafter as ‘Bailie so-and-so’. The word is now used as an honorary title for senior councillors. Formerly the word was also used to describe the person appointed by a Baron (or superior, including the Crown) to carry out legal functions on their behalf, such as the giving of sasine (from Old French; formerly baylyea; formerly spelled ‘bailly’ etc., and still often incorrectly spelled ‘baillie’ today; see also the Bailies).

Bailie Court (bā-lee-kōr) n. the magistrates’ court in former times – ‘He’s been afore the Bailie Court, And fined for throwin’ stanes; My pouch has suffered for his sport In breakin’ window panes’ [JT] (also the Police Court).

Bailie Depute (bā-lee-de-pew) n. deputy to a town Magistrate, also meaning the official appointed by the local Laird to represent him in the town, or perhaps his deputy. The title was probably synonymous with ‘Baron Depute’. In the 17th and 18th centuries the Duke of Buccleuch’s Bailie-Depute resided in the Tower, e.g. George Scott of Boonraw held this office in 1668 and Walter Elliot in 1718. Walter Scott was recorded as ‘late Bailie Depute’ in 1743 (see also Baron Depute).

Bailie Hill (bā-lee-hill) n. the highest point to the west beyond the race course at the Mair. The enclosure there is known as ‘Bailie’s Hill’. For a few decades after the Division of the Common the reading of the Burgess Roll was moved to near here – ‘…Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamper’ [AB] (also written ‘Bailiehill’ and ‘Bailie’s Hill’).

Bailiele (bā-lee-lee) n. former farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley, roughly between Kirkhope and Ettrickbridge, on the Bailie Burn. In 1502 it was Crown property and referred to as the eastward part of Gildhouse ‘vocati Balyele’. In 1510 it was leased by Peter Turnbull. Andrew Ker of Greenhead tenanted the lands in 1541, paying £24. Gavin Elliott of Stobs held the steading in the 1570s and was sometimes referred to as ‘of Bailie o Regality (bā-lee-ō-ree-gaw-li'-ee) n., arch. officer appointed by the Baron to have jurisdiction within a town, also known as the Baron Depute. Walter Scott of Harwood held this position in 1669 for the Douglasses of Drumlanrig and shortly after 1675 the office was filled by an agent of the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1686 Walter Scott of Alton was appointed by King James. This was on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch losing her office of heritable Bailie for not taking ‘the test’; it may be that before this the person acting as Bailie was known as the ‘Baron-depute’. It is unclear whether there was ever a Regality Court held (in distinction to the earlier Baron Court). It is also unclear to what extent ‘Baron Bailie’ and ‘Baron-depute’ were synonymous with ‘Bailie of Regality’. The appointment ended in 1747, when heritable jurisdictions were abolished – ‘…if he could not refrain from drinking to excess, he would be given up to ye bailie of regalitie of this place, to censure him condignly …’ [PR1717] (see also Regal Bailie and Baron Depute).

bailierie (bāk-yu-ree) n., arch. the office or jurisdiction of a bailie – ‘…did all unanimously, una voce, act and ordain Walter Chisholme (Laird of Stirckshaws) to give over his office of baillzarie …’ [BR1660]. ‘We by thir presents binds and obleisses us and our successors in the office of baillzierie and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke successive in tyme comineg heirafter to make dew and lawfull payment to the said schoolemaster’ [HAST1902].

the Bailies (thu-bā-leez) n., pl. Hawick’s 2 Magistrates from early times until the end of the ‘Eternal Cooncil’ in 1861, the number increasing to 4 Magistrates thereafter. The earliest records of election show that the Hawick Bailies were selected by the inhabitants gathered in the church and churchyard, sometime after Michaelmas (September 29th). Thus each new Bailie started his duties roughly at the beginning of October. Hawick originally had 2 Bailies (going back to the earliest records), selected annually from among the councillors, and also known as the Senior and Junior Magistrate. Each Bailie would usually serve for 2 years, first as Junior and then as Senior Bailie. In 1648 it was decreed that no person should serve as Bailie for more than 2 years concurrently, and then should wait at least a year before being on the short-list again. Over time there were complaints about abuse of office and how the business of the Town was sometimes decided in the inn of one of the Bailies. In 1670 it was resolved by the Council that the fines collected by the Bailies were for the use of the Burgh, but in 1673 it was switched back to having the fines belong to the Bailies ‘conform to the ancient pratique of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracy within the same.’ In 1673 the Bailies were indicted, along with other Hawick residents, for the riot at the riding of the fair. In 1697 there was a dispute over who had jurisdiction in the Town after one of the offices of Bailie became vacant. In 1718 there was a complaint that someone who had been elected Bailie was ‘lying at the horn’. There were clearly disputes over the election process, with complaints in 1737 that many of the votes were from servants or minors; in 1748 the Council banned the practice of ‘peuthering’ (or canvassing), allowed it again in 1756, but once more banned it in 1765. In 1749 the Council resolved that no Bailie would henceforth be allowed to sell liquor during his time in office. In 1750 someone was elected who refused to serve. In 1771 it was resolved that only the heads of households could vote and no candidate would be admitted without the consent of the Council. In 1778 (after the Division of the Common) a large group of Burgesses objected to the way that the Bailies were elected. This legal action resulted in a declaration from the Court of Session in 1781, laying out the rules for the election of the Bailies on the 2nd Friday in October, from a ‘leet’ of 6 names drawn up the Wednesday before, with no Bailie being allowed to serve for more than 2 years consecutively. This process of election continued through the early 19th century. The election was usually held from 11 a.m. until about 3 p.m., and was followed by a celebratory dinner. The front row of the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk was reserved for the Bailies, from at least 1684 (when the ‘Steeple Loft’ was built), this custom continuing in the Old Parish...
Kirk until into the 20th. There are records of a dispute between the standing Bailies and sons of former Bailies over rights to this seating in 1708. There was also a dispute with the representative of the Patron (i.e. Scott of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain), leading to the unauthorised removal of the Bailies’ seat in 1734 and its subsequent rebuilding. In 1808 the Council resolved that the Bailie in his 2nd year of office was the Senior Bailie and should preside at Council meetings. In the days before there was a Provost, the 2 Bailies made the executive decisions in the town. They also served a judicial function, but it was not until about the 1830s that the office of Magistrate was coupled with that of Justice of the Peace. The number of bailies rose to 4 by the late 19th century, by which time they were often also J.Ps. Nowadays the title is purely honorary, and the Bailies are selected by the Provost’s Council to serve the ceremonial role at the Common Riding. However, they still wear the traditional red velvet and ermine robes; there are 4 Bailies in robes, along with the Provost and the Acting Father (as Acting Senior Magistrate). Note that in the 18th and 19th century ex-Bailies were often referred to as ‘Bailie’ in public records, making it a little unclear who was the standing Bailie (sometimes ‘late Bailie’ was used, the context usually making it clear whether or not they were alive!). Simon Routledge, who was an early Burgess of Hawick, is recorded as Bailie in a document of 1448/9; he was presumably Bailie of Hawick. In 1452 the Sasine for the Barony of Hawick was signed by ‘Roberto Scot, Thoma de Blar, prefate wille de Hawik balliuis’; hence these people first took their seats. In the new church it was also known as ‘the Bailies for the time, old Bailies, clerk, and thesaurer’, with no one allowed to sit there until these people first took their seats. In the new church it was known as ‘the Western Loft’ or ‘the Weaver’s Loft’, since the websters and merchants had also helped pay for it, and had seating rights.

bailieship (bā-lee-ship) n., arch. the office of bailie – ‘...that in caice he be guyltie of any mall adminstration ...during his bayleyship ...’[BR1706].

bailiff (bā-leef) n., arch. a bailie in a town, a baron’s representative – ‘Paid to Bilife Howison for the Bible for the Bilifes in the church ...2 8 0’[BR1734] (various spellings; bailie is more common).

Bailleul (baw-yool) n. Hawick’s twin town in France since 1973, selected because it is a border town (with Belgium) and of a similar size. Various twinning events have happened over the years, including school trips and exchanges. The Hawick Pipe Band regularly plays in the annual Bailleul Mardi Gras parade. Note there are about 10 other towns of the same name elsewhere in France. One of them, Bailleul-en-Vimeu in Picardy was the ancestral home of the Bailiols, who owned Cavers in the 13th and 14th centuries and produced 2 Scottish Kings.
Bailleul Grove (baw-yool-gröv) n. street behind Leaburn Drive. Building began in 1986 and many houses were built around 2001. This is only the second ‘Grove’ in Hawick.

Baillie (bä-lee) n. Alexander (b.1835) born in Gorebridge, he moved to Wilton. There in 1857 he married Ann, daughter of Martin Pott. Their children included: Mary; John (b.1858); Martin (b.1860); Alexander Simpson (b.1832); William (b.1864); James Little (b.1866); Agnes Simpson (b.1868); Robert (b.1869); Margaret Ann (b.1871); and David (b.1874). The first 3 children were born in Wilton and the rest in Selkirk. He worked as a joiner at Bowhill. Dame Isabella ‘Isobel’ or ‘Bella’ (1895–1983) born in Hawick at what is now No. 22 Princes Street. She was youngest child of master baker Martin Pott and Isabella Douglas. Her father had been born in Hawick, son of Alexander and Ann Pott. The family moved to Newcastle when she was 5. However, she can be seen hiding behind her mother’s skirts in an 1898 photograph of her father’s shop at what was then 8 Wilton Place. Showing early talent for singing, she won a scholarship to Manchester High School, where her family then settled. She worked as an assistant in a Manchester music shop and then in the Town Hall there. She became a singer and outstanding interpreter of oratorio, in particular Handel’s ‘Messiah’, which she performed over 1,000 times, the first time at age 15. She first appeared in London in 1921 and studied in Milan 1925–26. She was also well known for renditions of Haydn’s ‘Creation’, Mendelssohn’s ‘Elijah’, and Brahms’s ‘German Requiem’. She sung British music too, and was the first singer of Vaughan Williams’s ‘Serenade to Music’. In 1933 she was also the first British singer to perform at the Hollywood Bowl. She taught at the Royal College of Music 1955–1957 and 1961–1964, at Cornell University 1960–61 and at the Manchester School of Music from 1970. She became a Commander of the Order of the British Empire in 1951 and was made a Dame Commander in 1978. Her autobiography, ‘Never Sing Louder Than Lovely’ was published in 1982 and ends with the words ‘It has been a wonderful life and I would do it all again’. She married Henry Leonard Wrigley in 1917 and they had one daughter, Nancy. Her husband died in 1957 and afterwards she moved to London, where she died. A plaque at 13 Princes Street was unveiled in 2004. John (18th C.) postilion (i.e. coachman) at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. Martin Pott (19th/20th C.) baker in Hawick. His shop was at 8 Wilton Place (on the north side of the modern Prices Street), and called Teviotdale Bakery. It can be seen in a photograph of 1898, which includes his wife and daughter, Isobel, later famed as a singer.

Bairnsfather (bàrnz-fa-thur) n. Adam (d.c.1502) mentioned in 1493 at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh. Patrick Rodman from Rulewater had remission for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and his brother John at ‘Kelsop’. Rodman also had remission for stealing cattle from Alexander in ‘Tullus’, who may have been another brother. He is also recorded as Adam ‘Barnisfader’ in 1502 when several men had a remission for the murder of him along with Robert Brig, as well as stealing 200 sheep, 29 cows and goods from them. He was tenant at ‘Kelshope’ (possibly Kershope) with John ‘Barnisfader’. Robert Brig was also killed by the group of Olivers from Lustruther, Jedburgh and Strynds and a Waugh from Mervinslaw. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Adam. The pair are recorded in 1493 as farmers at ‘Kelshope’ whose sheep were stolen by Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He and Robert (presumably a son or brother) are also mentioned in 1502 when Robert Oliver in Strange had remission for stealing 33 cows, 200 sheep, 4 horses and other goods from them at ‘Kelsop’. He and John were also recorded in 1502 when a group of 3 Olivers and a Waugh had remission for stealing livestock and goods from them at ‘kelsop’. Thomas (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His surname is recorded as ‘Barnisfather’. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘Barnefather’ was one of the complainants against Elliot’s. Armstrongs and Nixons raiding lands across the Border (also written ‘Barnisfader’ and variants).

bake (bāk) v., arch. to knead dough or other substance by hand, to shape peats by hand and lay them out to dry – ‘These are to give advertisement to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they have liberty and privilege to bake bakes in all the Mosses . . .’ [BR1743], ‘Paid 2 men and the officers for searching Winnington Moss, for baking bakes, and breaking and throwing the same in the moss’ [BR1755], n., arch. peat that has been kneaded by hand and laid out to dry for use as fuel – ‘The said day, Marion Robison, spous to George Scott, pedder, was outlawed and amerciatt . . . for baking of Bakes in the Common mosses . . .’ [BR1694], ‘. . . the inhabitants of Hawick went out to the Black Grain of Winnington Moss, where the bakes were made, where they broke and champed the bakes and threw many of them into the hole again’ [CkL1767] (this specific meaning appears to be quite local).

baken (bā-, ba-kin) pp., arch. baked – ‘Barley scones, baken of that season’s meal, were eaten on St. Boswell’s Fair day’ [RM], ‘Howt! A’m fair staad o laif, eend on. Let’s sei a hyimm-backen scone’ [ECS] (also written ‘backen’).

bakers (bā-kurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated in 1741, and also sometimes called the ‘baxters’. Hawick bread was very popular in the middle of the 18th century, with more than 60 working bakeries at that time and Hawick carriers taking it to most of the neighbouring towns and villages.

Baker Street (bā-kur-stree’) n. lane connecting the High Street with Teviot Crescent, made when the new 75 High Street was constructed, including a baker’s shop, about 1868, replacing the former Mather’s Close. Until then there were two small shops at the top, with only a roughly 3 foot wide passageway connecting to the High Street. Named after this baker’s, originally R. Young & Sons (after Mr. Young rejected the proposal to name it Young Street). It has been a one-way street since the 1970s. The Harlequins clubrooms are at No. 6 and the No. 10 Bar is at the foot of the street.

Baker’s Corner (bā-kurz-kōr-nur) n. former name for a corner at Denholm Townhead, where there was a baker’s shop through much of the 19th and 20th centuries, now being a general store and newsagents.

bakit (bā-’ki’, -kee’) adj., pp. baked – ‘And the slow steam o’ new-bakit breid . . .’ [DH].

Balbirnie (bāwl-bir-nee) n. Arthur (b.1735) writer of ‘the Old Song’, penned sometime in the late 18th century, perhaps shortly before 1800. He came to Hawick from Dunfermline (although precisely when is unknown) and worked as a foreman dyer in the Orrock Place carpet factory; he may have been brought to Hawick by William Robertson, one of the owners, who came from Dunfermline. He was probably the Arthur, son of John ‘Balbirny’, who was born in Dairsie in Balcary

Fife and the Arthur who married Margaret Russell in St. Andrews and St. Leonard's Parish, Fife, in 1764. He had a daughter, Katherine, who married needle-maker John Rae. Since details of his death have not been found, it is possible that he returned to Dunfermline. Note that John, son of Patrick (both dyers) are recorded in Ferry-Port-on-Craig in Fife in 1782, and an Arthur is recorded in 'Halkerston of Goatmilk' near there in 1806.

Balcary (bawl-kā-ree) n. large house off Buccleuch Road, designed by J.P. Alison and built for the Laing family about in 1888/9. A studio and billiard room were added in 1891 and 1901, respectively. Patrick Laing lived there in the early 20th century. It was acquired by the Barnardo Charity in 1944 as a home for orphans, becoming a Barnardo’s holiday home from the 1950s until 1974 when it passed to a Christian Missionary group. After renovations it opened in 2016 as an 8-room hotel.

Bald (bawld) n. John (b.1811) born at Carsebridge, he worked as a commission agent in Liverpool. He first married a lady from Sweden and secondly married Miss Campbell. He had 15 children in all. He leased Wells House from 1865 for 11 years with his wife and family and was recorded there in a directory of 1868. He and his wife were involved in many local charities as well as Liberal politics. He moved to Kent, where he died in the late 1880s.

Baldhill (bald-hil) n. former shepherd’s cottage in what is now Craik Forest, near the Rankle Burn, about mid-way between Craik and West Buccleuch. Bald Hill is just to the south-east. Robert Scott (d.1807) was shepherd there ('Beldhillshie' is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Bald Hill (bald-hil) n. small hill on the north-side of the upper Borthwick valley, to the south-east of Baldhill cottage, between Crib Law and Coutlair Knowe. It reaches a height of 394 m.

Bald Hill (bald-hil) n. small hill on the south side of the Borthwick valley, between the farms of Philhope and Elilrig. It is essentially a western spur of Lodge Hill. Directly north of this hill, just south of the road, there are the remains of an enclosure, consisting of a bank and ditch, D-shaped in plan, about 60 m by 50 m, with the road destroying part of it.

Baldie see bauldie

Baldie (bawl-dee) n. Margaret (18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in the Session records of 1752 when ‘having never got a father to her child, the child now being well grown desires the Sacrament of Initiation and to take the vows upon herself’. After demonstrating sufficient biblical knowledge the child was Baptised.

bale-fire (bāl-fur) n., poet. a beacon fire – 'Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The glaring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along the wild and willow’d shore’ [SWS], ‘Old arch! oft has the clansman’s tread Rung o’er thy river’s rocky bed, When bale-fires rose, all glaring red. In midnight sky’ [WiS].

Balfour (bāl-fur) n. Alexander of Dennymyne (17th C.) son of Patrick. He was a lawyer in partnership with John of Pilrig. Around the time of the Reformation he acquired lands around Melrose Abbey and was then granted a charter of some of the Abbey’s lands by Michael, who was probably his uncle. These lands had been forfeited by James, Earl of Hepburn. He was said in 1568 to have seized the great chest of Melrose with its ‘charters and evidents’. A record of 1577 lists him as ‘heritable feuar’ of the Abbey’s lands, including the kirklands of Cavers and Hassendean, as well as Friarshaw, Cringills and others. In 1584 he gave a charter of Colmsliehill to John Hoy. He married firstly Marion Balfour of Inchrye and secondly Janet Hay. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Michael. Michael of Mountwhanney (d.1570) son of Andrew, his grandfather Michael having died at Flodden. He held the Rectory of Wilton from at least 1561–63. He was Commendator of Melrose Abbey 1564–68, taking over from James Balfour. In 1564/5 he was one of the curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, listed in a bond between the Scotts and Kerrs; his name appears there as ‘of Burlye’. In 1568 he gave a charter to William Douglas for the lands of Crook near Cavers. He married Janet, daughter of David Boswell of Balmuto and was succeeded by their son Sir Michael.

Balieff (bà-leef) n. John (b.1796/7) from England, he was listed as a master hatter and cap maker in Hawick in 1851. He lived at about 25 High Street. He was also listed as a hatter in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife Ann was born in Jamaica and they had a daughter Elizabeth.

Baliol (bā-lee-ol) n. Sir Alexander of Barnard Castle (c.1242–1278) son of Hugh of Barnard Castle and nephew of John, who was King of Scotland. He is easily confused with the man of the same name who was Lord of Cavers. He was listed as a crusader in 1270, and asked for his lands to be restored on his return in 1271/2. Also in 1271/2 he was listed as heir of his deceased brother Hugh, in his Northumberland lands. He married Eleonora (variously ‘Alianora’ etc.) de Genovra (or Geneve); she is mentioned several times in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland as ‘Alianora de Bailliolo’ or ‘Alianora, quae fuit uxor Alexandri de Bailliolo’. He died without issue.

Sir Alexander (d.c.1309) Lord of Cavers and Chamberlain of Scotland. He is often confused with another Alexander (d.1278) and there is also a possibility (given his apparent longevity) that there are two generations confused here. The most likely possibility is that he was son of Henry, who held the office of Chamberlain of Scotland, his mother being Lora (or Lauretta) de Valoines, who was co-heiress of extensive lands in England. However, it has also been suggested that he was second son of Hugh. However, he was probably the Alexander, ‘son of Lora de Bayllol’ who was given safe conduct by the English King in 1266. He first appears in Scottish records as ‘Dominus de Cavers’ in 1270. The lands may have been inherited from his father. He probably also continued to hold lands in England, although making Scotland his base; in English records he was sometimes referred to as ‘of Chileham’. He is recorded in cases involving English lands in 1271 and 1272. In 1277 he was commissioned to serve in Edward’s Welsh wars. In 1284 he was one of the Scottish Barons who bound themselves to receive Margaret ‘the Maid of Norway’ as queen if Alexander III failed to produce a son. Also in 1284 he was summoned to serve in Edward’s army. He became Chamberlain of Scotland around 1287, succeeding John Lindsay, Bishop of Glasgow. He was involved with the Treaty of Salisbury in 1289 and the Parliament at Brigham in 1290 in which Edward I recognised the independence of England. He was at Cavers in 1291 when the Rector of Ford gave him a receipt there. He continued as Chamberlain under Edward’s control until about 1294. He was Chamberlain of Scotland until at least 1296, and signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, when he is described as being from Roxburghshire. His seal is also attached to the Rolls, and consists of a ‘voided escutcheon’ with the name ‘S’ALEXANDRI DE BALLIOL’. An existing receipt (in the National Archives) from the Chamberlain of Scotland is dated at Cavers in 1291. He was probably held captive in England along with his kinsman John (who was Scottish King). He probably served on the English side against Scotland around 1298–1301 and was present in the siege of Caerlaverock in 1300. In 1301 he was involved in capturing a dozen reivers on ‘the moor of Alkirk’, along with Sir Hugh de Audeley and Sir Robert Hastings. In 1301/2 he was directed to guard Selkirk Forest and was also one of 2 men appointed by Edward I to oversee the construction of a new castle at Selkirk. In 1302/3 his lands in Kent, Hertfordshire and Roxburghshire were seized by Edward, and he gave over his son Thomas as a hostage. He was again in the English King’s service in 1304 and was summoned by Edward II in about 1307. In 1304 he sold Bennington to John de Binsted. He married Isabella de Chilham (or Chileham), widow of David de Strathbogie, Earl of Atholl, and through her obtained lands in Kent. His sons included: Alexander, his heir; ‘William Balliol le Scot’, progenitor of the Scotts of Scot’s Hall; and Thomas. It is possible that the ‘Roese de Chilham’, from Roxburghshire, who also swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 could have been a relative. Alexander of Cavers (13th/14th C.) son and heir of Sir Alexander, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. It is hard to separate father and son in the records. He may have had the lands of Cavers forfeited to the Earl of Mar. He may have married Isabel Stewart, Dowager Countess of Mar, but it is unclear when this would have been (since she had 3 other known husbands). His heir was Thomas, who was the last Bailiol Laird of Cavers. Edward (c.1283–c.1364) son of King John, recorded as being born at Cavers. He was also imprisoned when his father was captured, and was exiled to France. After many years he returned to claim the Scottish throne in 1332. After only a few months as King he was forced to flee half-clothed from nobles loyal to David II at Annan. He continued as a puppet King and gave much of southern Scotland to Edward III of England in 1334, including the castles of Berwick, Roxburgh and Jedburgh. He also surrendered all his titles to Edward III of England in 1356 in return for a pension. He died in France without an heir. Sir Henry (d.1246) son of Ingelram (or Ingram) and grandson of Bernard de Baliol. His mother (whose first name is unknown) was daughter and heiress of Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain of Scotland under William the Lion (who also held the lands of Chamberlain Newton). He married Lora (or Loretta), daughter of Philip de Valoines, Lord of Panmure, who had been Chamberlain of Scotland. After the death of his brother-in-law in 1219 he became Chamberlain (as both his wife’s father and mother’s father had been). His name appears regularly in court records in the period 1223-44, and he may have resigned as Chamberlain (perhaps retaining the title) in 1231. In 1234 he succeeded to half of his wife’s family’s lands in 6 English counties. In the 1230s he is recorded many times in English records relating to these lands. He was an executor of Joanna, Queen of Scotland. He accompanied Henry III in the Gascon war in 1241. He may have held the Barony of Cavers, although this is uncertain. His sons probably included: Guy, who died young; Sir Alexander of Cavers, also Chamberlain; and William, ‘le Scot’. His only daughter Constance married an Englishman called Fishburn. He was buried at Melrose. Sir Henry (c.1284–1332) 2nd son of John de Baliol (King of Scotland) and Isabella Plantagenet de Warrenne. He is supposed to have been born at Cavers. He swore fealty to Robert the Bruce, gaining the lands of Branxholme as a result in 1307 (except for the part already granted to Walter Comyn), with a confirming charter in about 1321. However, he did not hold the lands for long, and may never have been there, since they passed to the Earl of Strathearn before 1333. In about 1327 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire when he witnessed a charter for Roger of Alton, and he was Sheriff in 1328 when he levied money from the freeholders of Jedburgh. He was killed at the Battle of Annan, and had no heirs. Hugh (c.1189–c.1229) probably eldest son of Eustace de Baliol of Barnard Castle (near Durham). He signed the Treaty of York (to uphold peace between Alexander II and Henry III) in 1237. He may have signed this at Cavers, suggesting that either he or another family member already owned the estates there. Most likely this was his brother Sir Henry, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. He granted 26 acres of land beside ‘Heleychesters’ (probably in Temple Healey) to the monks of Hermitage Chapel, confirming the grant made by his father Eustace. He married Cecily, daughter of Aleeaune de Fontaines, and he gained the title of Lord of Bywell. These generations are uncertain, but probably his son John inherited the main titles, and his grandson John would become Scottish King. John (1250–1313) youngest son of John and Devorguilla of Galloway, and brother of Alexander and Hugh, who both died in the 1270s. His uncle Sir Henry and cousin Sir Alexander were Lairds of Cavers. He was married to Isabel Plantagenet de Warren at Cavers in 1290. On the death of Margaret in 1290 he claimed the Scottish throne (through his mother), being one of at least a dozen candidates. Edward I of England decided in favour of him, and he declared Edward his superior. For this he was nicknamed ‘Turncoat’ (or ‘Toom Tabard’, since his coat of arms was removed after he gave in to English demands). He later renounced this homage to Edward and made an alliance with France, leading to war with England. Defeated near Dunbar, he was imprisoned in the Tower of London, but later released, dying at Bailleul-en-Vimeu in France. Scotland remained without a monarch for 10 years until Robert the Bruce acceded in 1306. His son Edward would later be King. His seal bore an ‘orle’. Thomas (14th C.) probably son of Alexander. He was the last Baliol Laird of Cavers, and the last of the family mentioned in Scottish records. Details of this time are confused, but it appears that the lands were forfeited after Robert the Bruce took over, and Cavers went directly to the Earl of Mar. However, he was repossessed in the lands by Thomas, Earl of Mar (his half-brother or brother-in-law), son of Isabella, Countess of Mar. He resigned the Cavers estate to the superior, William, Earl of Douglas in 1368, including lands of ‘Yarlside, Single and Penchryse’, and he was there referred to as brother of Thomas, Earl of Mar. He probably died childless. His seal bore an ‘orle’. William ‘le Scot’ (c.1251–c.1313) brother of Sir Alexander of Cavers. He also served as Chamberlain of Scotland. His lands were restored in 1305 (also spelled ‘Bailiol’, and formerly ‘Bailloil’, ‘Baillol’, ‘Balloil’, ‘Balloyl’, ‘Balyol’, ‘Baylloyd’, ‘Bayiol’, etc.).

Baliolhag (bă-lee-ol-hawch) n. lands near Denholm that were granted to Thomas Cranston by the Earl of Mar sometime before 1375. The lands are recorded as ‘Balleolhage’, and surely related to the former owners, the Baliols of Cavers. These lands were granted along with Denholm and Denholm Dean, but the precise location is unknown. It is probably the same as ‘Balze Hag’ listed in the charter of the Douglasses of Cavers in 1511 and ‘Balzehage’ in 1558. It is ‘Balze Hag’ in 1574 when included among the lands for which their were ‘non-entry’ in a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (the 1687 may be ‘Haugh’ rather than ‘hag’; it is ‘Bulexehag’ or ‘Balyehag’ in 1511 and is transcribed ‘Bailiehaigostoks’ in 1687 and ‘Bailliehaig-Stobs’ in 1698).

the Ball (thu-bawl) n. the Common Riding Ball, held in the Town Hall, on the Friday evening of the Common Riding, following the Dinner. The dress code is formal evening wear, with ex-Cornets wearing their green coats. Reels and other dances are on the programme, with the Cornet and his Lass leading off the Grand March at 10.30 p.m. These proceedings are also watched from the balcony, the crowds for this once being as large as 500 people. At midnight the Cornet’s Lass receives the Cornet’s Sash, the men put on white gloves and the Principals, ex-Cornets and lasses dance their own special reel, the Cornet’s Reel. The dancing carries on into the small hours of the morning. It finally ends with a gathering at the Moat near dawn, with the Principals climbing the Moat to sing ‘Teribus’. It was in earliest times called the Cornet’s Dance, and then the Race Ball, being designated the Common Riding Ball by 1887. It used to take place in one of the local inns, moving to the Town Hall at the end of the 19th century, and also being held in the Exchange occasionally (e.g. 1889 and 1890). A second Ball used to be held for people who couldn’t get tickets for the main one, this taking place in the Crown Hotel, Marina, and elsewhere, and was stopped in the 1980s.

the Ballad o Kinmont Willie (thu-bawl-lid-ô-kin-mon’-wi-leel) n. Border ballad that tells the story of the rescue of William Armstrong from Carlisle Castle. This successful raid was the main reason for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being given the epithet ‘the Bold’. Details of the rescue are included in Capt. Walter Scott’s verse history of the family, these probably being related by his father, who was one of the 33 chosen men.

ballant (baw-len; baw-lent) n., poet. a ballad – ‘Sung their feats in murieland ballsants; Scotia’s boast was Hawick Callants’ [JH], ‘O’ pithy auld proverbs her mind is a mint, She sings them queer ballants that ne’er were in print’ [JT], ‘Let us sing the auld ballants that duly record How the brave-hearted Callants took buckler and sword’ [CB].

Ballantine (baw-lin-tin) n. James (1808–77) stained-glass window maker and poet from Edinburgh, bard of the Grand Masonic Lodge of Scotland, famous for the words of the song ‘Castles in the Air’ and poems such as ‘Ilka Blade o’ Grass’. He composed ‘Hawick’s welcome to Buccleuch’ for the laying of the foundation stone for the Exchange Buildings in 1865, and gave a talk to the Archaeological Society.

Ballantyne (baw-lin-tin) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Newcastleton in 1837. He may have been related to Francis, who was also a mason at the same time. He is probably the Adam, residing at Ovenshank who was rebuked along in 1832, along with his wife Janet Wilson, for ‘antenuptial fornication’. He was listed among heads of households in Castleton Parish for the first time in 1838. Alexander (19th C.) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 12 Back Row. He married Helen Ekron in 1851 (she was probably daughter of James Ekron and Margaret Thomson). Their children included: Margaret (b.1853); Elizabeth (b.1855); John (b.1857); Janet (b.1860); James Ekron (b.1864); Nelly Ekron (b.1866); Walter (b.1869); and Sarah Wemyss (b.1872). It is said that he moved to Philadelphia, where he had a jeweller’s business. Andrew (1841/2–1929) nephew of ‘Wat the Drummer’, he joined the Drums and Fifes in 1853 when he was 11 years old and played for the following 73 years! For a long time he was leader of the band, and his drum is in the Museum. At the Colour Bussing ceremonies he recievied an engraved cane and purse for 50 years’ service and a portrait after 60 years (both of which still exist), along with a further presentation in 1922. The portrait presented to him in 1912 is a large photograph of him in his uniform, carrying his drum. David (18th C.) resident at the ‘toll Bar’ in 1795 when his son John died in Hawick. It is unclear which toll this was. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Shaws in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He could be the David who married Isobel Grieve and died in 1832. He is probably the ‘Mr. Ballantine of Shaws’ who was attacked by the mob in Hawick at the election of 1837. David (19th/20th C.) resident at Shaws in the early 1900s. He was Convenor of the Liddesdale Agricultural Society and was a member of the local organising committee when the Highland Show came to Hawick in 1914. He also served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Francis (b.c.1749) from Castleton Parish. His children were born at Whithaughburn and Riccarton. He had a house built at 44 North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Robson, who died in 1827. Their children included: Elizabeth
Ballantyne

(b.1776), who married William Ingles; Christian; Francis (1779–1853), merchant in Hawick; Isabel (1781–1866), who married John Ingle, brother-in-law to her sister Elizabeth; William (1783–1863), who emigrated to New York and died in Smith Falls, Ontario; James (b.1786); and John (1789–1855), who married Mary Miller. He may be the Francis who was recorded as a Newcastle- ton mason in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Francis ‘Franky’ (1779–1853) from Castleton Parish, son of Francis and Margaret Robson. He was apprenticed to ‘Auld Cash’ the Hawick banker. He is recorded as a grocer, spirit dealer and wine merchant at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the ‘Mr. Ballantyne’ marked as owner of land off Langlands Road on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a merchant when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘ History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a ‘dealer’ as well as a grocer at ‘Slit- rig Bridge.’ It was said that the public grew to mistrust him over perceived irregularities after his employer died. This is partly because he took over much of Oliver’s business, as well as his premises. It was suspected by many in Hawick that he had profited somehow, and this was the reason why ‘Auld Cash’ was in debt when he died. It was commonly held that Oliver’s ghost haunted him in revenge, and this was even described in a poem (by David Waters) entitled ‘The Twain Friens or the Ghost of Coffer-Ha’’, in which he is implicated with his son-in-law Charles Thomson, in local vote rigging. He was also described in a second poem ‘Francisco, or the Man of Brass’ – ‘Those days when first emerged from Liddell’s bank A youth of stately mien both free and FRANK. Fraud in his heart and famine in his eye, He left his father’s house without a sigh’ [RDW]. It was said that he attended a dinner of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, some of whom had lost money from the debts of ‘Auld Cash’, leading to some trying to hang him from a rope, and others having to cut him free. In 1837 he was one of the local men mentioned in connection with the arrangement of ‘fictitious votes’; he swapped his liferent in Selkirkshire for one in Roxburghshire with John Gray. He witnessed (from his window) the ‘Tully’s Mill’ election riot of 1837, but although called to London as a witness, apparently could not (or would not) name any of the participants. On the 1841 census he is at Slitrig Bridge and at Teviot Square in 1851. He is listed at ‘Market Place’ on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Frances Brown, who died in Galway, Ireland in about 1868. Their children included: Janet (b.1804), who married Rev. Charles Thomson; and Margaret Brown (b.1810), who married George Sanderson. He died at Syn- ton Parkhead. His wife could be the ‘Mrs. Frank Ballantyne’ who made the ‘rebel’ Common Rid- ing flag of 1809. Henry (b.1812/3) born in Traquair Parish, he was a farm steward in Kirk- ton in 1861. He is probably the Henry who was farmer at Deambræ in 1868. His wife was Ann and their children included Margaret, William Robina, Jeany, Henry and Marion. Henry (19th C.) farmer at Deambræ in the 1860s. Isabel (17th C.) recorded as ‘ cottar’ at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (b.c.1810) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street on the 1841 census. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Janet, Margaret, Isabella and John. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Gowens in 1763 and their children included: Agnes (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); John (b.1770); Christian (b.1773); Thomas (b.1776); Adam (b.1779); and Robert (b.1781). Witnesses to the 1764 baptism were weaver Thomas and Walter, who were surely related to him. John (18th C.) resident at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1764 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children probably included an unnamed son (b.1766), Robert (b.1770) and Mary (b.1777). John (18th/19th C.) Haw- ick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1799–1891) son of Robert and Esther Elliot, he was born in Castleton Parish. He married Elliot (1796–1876), daughter of John Cowan and Mary Robson. Their children included: Isabel (1823–39); Mary (1826–1918); Robert (1829–75); John (b.1831); Es- ther (b.1833), who died young; Esther (1835–1908); William (b.1839); and Ninian (b.1843). He may be the John who was listed as shepherd at ‘Wheathaugh’ among male heads of households in 1835–38, then in Newcastleton. John ‘Soapy’ (1802/3–1859) minstrel and fiddler at weddings and other gathering. He was a cousin of Wat the Drummer, and played fife in the Drums and Fifes. Better known as ‘Soapy Ballantyne’, his name is sometimes given as ‘George’ (perhaps simply because he was so well-known by his nickname). The words for ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ are generally attributed to him. He also sung a song about

‘Widow Cumming’, and presumably several others as well, but unfortunately none of them survive. There were 2 possible Johns in the 1841 and 1851 census: the frameworker John (born in Selkirk), who was living on the Howegate (or the Back Raw) with his wife Agnes (or Nancy) and children George, Thomas, James and John; and the frameworker living on the Loan with his wife Margaret (who died before 1851) and children Robert, William, John, Beatrice, Margaret and Mary. He may be the John, stockmaker with William Laidlaw & Sons, who contributed to the Crimean War fund in 1855. He is known to have died at his home at 9 Kirk Wynd and was buried at St. Mary’s. Other than his musical prowess and his obscure nickname, nothing else is known about him. William Laidlaw recounted seeing him (perhaps in the 1830s) playing his fiddle from the Pant Well to the Sandbed, with 2 boys taking a collection for him. John (b.1804/5) born in Cavers Parish, he was a mason in Wilton. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Wilton Kirkstyle. He was listed as a builder on Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth, who was widow of mason Walter Reid. He may have been son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. John Grieve (b.1817/8) tenant at the Shaws near Newcastle. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 3000 acres, employing 8 people. He was listed at Shaws among the gentry in an 1852 directory. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. His wife was Helen B., and their children included Jane G., Helen, Mary and Margaret. Rev. John (1820–60) from Galashiels, son of James and Margaret Brown He was Burgher minister at College Street, Edinburgh. His brother James was a Relief Kirk minister. In 1851 he was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk (having preferred it to Coupar-Angus, and the congregation already having attempted to call 2 other ministers). He resigned only 3 years later, following a dispute over the introduction of the hymn book. He moved to Australia (with his brother), where he became minister of Emerald Hill, Melbourne and joined the Presbyterian Synod there. However, he returned to Scotland because of ill-health and died not long afterwards, being buried in the Dean Cemetery, Edinburgh. John (19th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Hawick Parish in 1854. Robert (b.1746) resident of Pinglehole in Castleton Parish. He married Esther, daughter of shepherd Ninian Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1794), who married Archibald Scott; Jean (b.1797); John (1799–1891), who married Elliot Cowan and died at Saughtree Grain; and Ninian (1801–70), who Margaret Grieve. Robert (19th C.) recorded at Shaws in Castleton Parish among the gentry listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in 1764 when, along with Walter, he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John; all 3 men were surely related. He married Mary Brown and their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Walter (b.1768); and Mary (b.1771). The witnesses in 1763 were William Brown (perhaps the town piper) and Walter Ballantyne (surely either his father or brother) and in 1768 were Walter Ballantyne and Walter Weens. Thomas (b.1823/4) from Yarrow, he was a schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at Birkwood. His wife was Margaret Dickson. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Berrybush. In 1685 he was charged, along with men of the upper Borthwick valley and elsewhere, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. It is unclear where he was from. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Dunn in 1754. Walter (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Ann Glendinning in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Gowens and their children were: Walter (b.1768). Walter (18th C.) recorded as a weaver in 1764 when he witnessed a baptism, along with Thomas, for weaver John. In the same year he is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine. He witnessed a further baptism for weaver Thomas in 1768. He also witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas (perhaps his brother) in 1763, the other witness being William Brown (possibly the town piper). It is possible he is the same man as the Town Officer and piper. Walter ‘Watt’ (18th C.) recorded as town drummer and possibly piper from at least 1751 until the 1770s, probably a relative of the other famous drummers. He may have overlapped with William Brown, and it is possible that there were 2 Town Officers who shared responsibility for piping and drumming in the latter part of the 18th century. He is probably the town piper of 1777, whose version of ‘Teribus’ exists in a manuscript form (so labelled) now in the Museum. He was probably the last of the Town Pipers. He may be the Walter who married Mary Ekron and had several children in the 1760s and 70s. The weaver, Walter, who died in 1797, may have been his son (recorded as 'son of town . . .').

Walter (d.1797) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the same man as 'Watt' the town drummer. He married Mary Ekrou (perhaps daughter of William) in Hawick in 1760 and their children were: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); Andrew; Elizabeth (b.1770); Alice; James; and Thomas (d.1776). Walter (18th/19th C.) shoemaker of the Midrow, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory.

Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son David was baptised in 1801. He may be the Walter, married to Betty Turnbull, whose daughter Betty was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1809. Walter 'Wat the Drummer' (1800–1881) famous town drummer, who joined the Drums and Fifes band in 1823 and played with them for 59 years. It was reported that he was missed in 1875, so may have been ill that year. When playing he always wore a dress coat, silk hat and black stock round his neck. He was also present at many other important events, for example the march of 1,000 Hawick workers to protest the 1831 elections in Jedburgh. He was sympathetic to Reform politics, but conservative about the Common Riding. His sister married James Richardson of 'Saut Haa'. There is a photograph of him taken the summer before his death. He could be the weaver recorded at about 31 or 33 Loan on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living with his wife Margaret and daughter, also Margaret (who married James Brown). Walter (b.1803/4) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a stocking frame work knitter in Hawick. He was living at 25 Loan in at least 1841–61. He married Helen Turnbull, who was from Wilton. His brother Alexander and brother-in-law Richard Turnbull were living with them in 1851. He could be the same man as 'Wat the Drummer'.

Rev. William Douglas (b.1831) son of James, he was born in Hawick. He became a Presbyterian minister in Toronto, Ontario. He married Joanna E. Schoolbred (spelled 'Ballantine', 'Ballentin', 'Ballingten', 'Bellingden', 'Billinread', etc. in early records; the origin for at least some of the people may be the Scott headquarters of Bellendale).

Balleny (ba-le-nee) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory.

Balliol (ba-liol) n., arch. a box, especially one carried by a tinker on his back, a knapsack, bundle (from French).

Balmer (baw-nur) n. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). George (1818/9–81) handloom weaver who lived on the Loan. In 1841 he was living in the house of Isabella Scott, in 1851 he was on the Fore Raw, with his sisters Catherine, Beatrix and Agnes and in 1861 he was at 11 Fore Raw with his sisters Catherine and Beatrix. He is probably the George who presented to the Museum in 1856 a 'gold-plated sword' found at Flodden. He is buried at St. Mary’s along with his sisters Beatrix (or Beatrice, 1815/6–1881) and Catherine (d.1884), with his sisters Agnes and Isabella (who died in the U.S.A.) also commemorated. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Scott and their children included: George (b.1808); and Robert (b.1810). William (c.1799–1892) veteran soldier who was later a bugler with the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers), and familiarly known as 'Balmer the Bugler'. He used to start the Common Riding races in the Haugh by sounding his bugle. A photograph of him exists. He may be the William who was living at Damside in the 1841 census and High Street in 1851, recorded as pensioner of the 92nd Highlanders and journeyman hand-loom weaver; if so he was (secondly) married to Janet Miller and had children Andrew, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Thomas, Mary, Isabella and Ebenezer. He lived to the age of 93 and died at 12 Baker Street – 'Wullie the Paidle, Gled Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trot, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott' [HI]. William (b.1818/9) stocking-maker, born in Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living at Highchesters, in 1851 at 11 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 at 4 Tannage Close. He married Agnes Brown in Hawick in 1838 and their children included: Agnes (b.1839); Jean (b.c.1844); Isabella (b.c.1844); Jemima (b.c.1853) David (b.1857); Elizabeth (b.1860); and Wilhelmina (b.1863). There were also 4 Brown children living with his family in 1841 (also spelled 'Balmar' and 'Balmers').

the Band of Hope (thu-bawned-ov-hop) n. temperance organisation aimed at educating working class children against the evils of drink, with choirs, trips and lantern shows. Founded in Leeds in 1847, the Hawick branch was active in the late 19th century, until at least the 1890s. They met in Allars Kirk on Saturday nights, providing concerts and lantern shows for children. There were also meetings at the Congregational Kirk once it was opened on Bourtree Place, and later at Orrock Kirk – ‘The Band o’ Hope was sure to be a draw, To Orrock weekly we wad steer; Oor mates oot at the front to speak or sing, Was worth a mint o’ gowd to hear’ [WL].

the Bandstand (thu-bawned-stawnd) n. ornamental platform designed for musical performances in Wilton Lodge Park, near the Boer War memorial. It erected in 1893, shortly after the Burgh took ownership of the Park. It was built by the Glasgow firm McDowell, Steven & Co. (the same firm that later supplied the Fountain). It was demolished in 1965, the base was turned into a paddling pool around 1970 and after only a few years became a flower bed. A new bandstand was built near the same location in 2015 in commemoration of Zandra Elliot. There was an earlier plain wooden bandstand in the Haugh in the latter part of the 19th century.

banan (bawn-dee-le-gee’) adj. bandy-legged, having legs that bow outwards at the knees.

baned (bând) adj., pp. boned – ‘ee’re no fat, ee’re juist big-baned’.

banefire (bän-fi-ur) n., arch. a bonfire. At celebration times the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ parts of town would traditionally have rival bonfires, situated on the Tower Knowe and at Myreslawgreen in the 18th century. This took place at the ‘King’s Rantin’ (i.e. 4th June) or on Midsummer Saturday (as recorded in 1716, when several people were fined by the Council for fighting). Gangs from each side of town would collect material (consisting of anything that would burn, including animal bones) for about a month beforehand, and raids on each other’s fuel supply, as well as widescale battles, would not be uncommon (as described by Robert Wilson). This was a very old tradition, said to be connected with when the town was burned (although there is no evidence for this). It was probably a continuation of the Beltane festival, which had formerly involved bonfires on May Day and only transferred to June during the reign of George III. The Magistrates tried to suppress the bonfires many times (largely due to the fights and injuries). In 1792 when someone leased some of the Burgh lands, he was barred from allowing ‘any bonefire to be burnt on saud haugh’. The bonefires ended about 1800 when one of the sites (referred to as being at ‘the Common Lone’ in 1716, presumably at Myrselawgreen) was let as a garden, although their popularity had already waned by then. The spirit of the event was continued on Guy Fawkes Night (5th November), when several different parts of the town would mount their own bonfires, with local youths gathering ‘salvage’ and raiding each other’s supplies. It is unclear when Guy Fawkes Night started to be celebrated in Hawick, but the practice of local gangs building their own bonfires continued until at least the 1970s – ‘Several parties are fined for misdemeanours, riots, and bloodshed at the annual boon-fyr, on the west side of the Water of Sliitrik . . . ’ [BR1716], ‘. . . and a’ the callants o’ Hawick toon Will make banefires o’ mei’[JSB], ‘For the annual midsummer ‘banefire’ or ‘bonfire’ in the burgh of Hawick, old bones were regularly collected and stored up, down to c.1800’[BR].

bankend (bawngk) n. former farmstead in the upper Jed valley, roughly opposite Edgerston Rig. In 1541 William Oliver was tenant of half the lands, with John Laidlaw tenant of the other half, the whole being valued at 25s. Ninian Laidlaw was there in 1572/3 and Steven Laidlaw in 1590. The tenants there in 1669 were John Oliver and William Laidlaw. Robert Oliver was there in 1694 (it is ‘the Bank’ in 1571/2; it is ‘Bank’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Banckent’ on the other side of the river).

bankend (bawngk-end) n. former farmstead in the upper Ewes valley, near Mosspeeble. The area is now marked on maps as Bankend Wood, but the house is long gone. It was occupied by Edgars in 1841.

bank-end (bawngk-end) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 2 sets of ‘Five Bankend parks’ and one more are listed, valued at £195, with the liferent held by Robert Trotter of Bush. They are probably distinct from the ‘six parks or inclosures called the Bank-head parks’ listed in a 1780 description of Deanfoot in Minto.
The lands of ‘Bank-end Parks’ are still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

former church in Sandholm, north of Newcastle.
It was built in 1808 and was the Parish Church of Castleton until 1952. It has recently been converted into a dwelling.

Bankend Plantin (bawngk-end-plawn’-in) n.
plantation in Hobkirky Parish, on the north side of the road to Harwood House, near to Tythhouse.

Banker Cash (bawng-kur-kawsh) n.
another name for Auld Cash.

Bankhead (bawngk-heed) n.
Bankhead, former name for lands, probably near Hartsongt, which James Elliott given ‘in wadsett’ by his father in 1637, paying off the ‘reversion’ in 1639. It is possible that the name is a transcription error (perhaps for ‘Blackhope’). This may be the lands where ‘Johnne Armistrang of the Bankheid’ was made by Sir Gideon Murray, he became minister there in 1607. In 1610 he was translated to North Berwick and then to Douglas in 1621 (he may have been related to the Edinburgh merchant and benefactor of the same name who lived 1570–1635).

former organisation that published rare Scottish volumes, named after George Bannatyne, the great collector of 16th century poetry. It was founded by Sir Walter Scott in Edinburgh in 1823 and dissolved in 1861, having printed 116 separate books. Volumes of local relevance include records from Kelso, Melrose and Dryburgh Abbeys, and the pre-Reformation Diocese of Glasgow, as well as works of broad Scottish interest, such as the ‘Fasti Ecclesiæ Scoticæ’. The Maitland Club was founded in Glasgow just 6 years later as the western version.

another name for the Flag – ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us …’ [JT], ‘…And gold as the curls of my little lass Watching the fluttering Banner pass’ [JYH], ‘Our gallant steeds, with impatient hoof, are waiting, each rider true, They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue’ [JEDM], ‘All hail tae the banner, unfurled tae oor view! In time-honoured manner we greet it anew’ [CB].

The Hawick flag, a gold saltire cross on a blue background with the date ‘1514’ across it, and a thin vertical line straddled by the letters ‘HC’ at the bottom – ‘Then honour to the gallant few who fought and suffered loss, Yet gave to us our banner blue Which bears the golden cross’ [JI], ‘…Rearing on high the banner o’ blue’ [JEDM], ‘Of Scott and Elliot, Hogg and Kerr, who took the Banner Blue …’ [NM].

Rev. Thomas son of Thomas of Newtyld, Forfar, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1594 and became minister of Ratho in 1606. He was then presented to Castleton Parish by the Lord Collector (Sir Gideon Murray) and Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch. Following some dispute over the promise made by Sir Gideon Murray, he became minister there in 1607. In 1610 he was translated to North Berwick and then to Douglas in 1621 (he may have been related to the Edinburgh merchant and benefactor of the same name who lived 1570–1635).

song with words by John Inglis and music by Joshua Taylor, published in 1892. It was originally called ‘The Banner of Blue’ and sung by James Haig at the 1894 Colour Bussing. Taylor wrote a complex accompaniment, which was simplified later by Adam Inglies. The song with the modern name was sung at the 1911 Colour Bussing. When first written the main line was ‘…which Bears the Crimson Cross’ this being changed to ‘Golden’ when the Flag’s colours were corrected.
Bannerman

Bannerman (baw-nur-mun) n. Dr. George Gunn (1859–1919) born in Kildonan, Sutherlandshire, son of farmer Alexander and Sarah Gunn. He qualified at Glasgow University as a doctor in 1885, practised in Glasgow for a year then came to Hawick as partner of Dr. Paterson in 1887. Dr. Robert Mair (famous as the only non-Teri Cornet) was also his assistant and later partner. He became a strong supporter of the Common Riding and was Acting Father in 1894. His wife was Mary, eldest daughter of Luke Greenwood and sister to Jessie (who married William Oliver of Thornwood). His elder daughter married Norman Laing. Eileen nee Barrie (d.2002) born in Hawick. She married Alastair. She was a long involved with local nursing and the Red Cross, for which she received the Coronation Medal, B.E.M. and M.B.E.

banni (baw-ni) n. a bannock, round flat cake baked on a griddle. These were formerly of barley meal, sometimes with some pease meal, and were a staple in Scotland through to the early part of the 19th century 'Imagin iz: A reed, low-pin, broazy face leike a bernny bannih ...' [ECS], 'Thay hev gaen (gone) wui the bannih' [ECS], also spelled 'banna', 'bannae' and 'bannih'.

Bannockburn (baw-nuk-burn) n. village in Stirlingshire, site of a famous battle of 1314 in which there was a decisive victory of the Scots over the English, effectively securing the throne for Robert the Bruce and being pivotal in Scotland gaining complete independence 13 years later. The Scottish force of around 5,000, was split into 4 Divisions, the Borderers being under the young Walter the Steward, with James Douglas (the 'Black Douglas') being the real leader. The young Edward II of England had accepted a challenge to relieve Stirling Castle by midsummer's day. His army of perhaps around 20,000 mustered at Berwick, crossed the Border at Coldstream and marched towards Stirling, to be met by Robert the Bruce's force near the ford over the Bannock Burn. After several skirmishes the armies encamped and the main battle took place on the following day. Fighting was extremely fierce, and eventually the English were forced to flee. The young Edward was chased by James Douglas's force all the way to Dunbar Castle, where he escaped by ship. The Jethart staff is said to have played a key role in Scottish tactics. There is a tradition that the men of Jedburgh carried off a captured English standard. As a reward Bruce gave baronies in Teviotdale (which had been under English control) to several of his supporters about 1306 and they were probably able to take possession of these lands after Bannockburn.

Bantel (bawn-tel) n. toy and bicycle manufacturers, which had a small factory in Hawick in the latter part of the 20th century, and retain a presence in the Hawick Cycle Centre, 45–47 North Bridge Street.

Baptie (bap-tee) n. Adam Marshall (1857–1934) born in Hawick, he emigrated to become an early pioneer in Alberta, Canada. He moved to Calgary in 1888, where he ran a butcher’s shop. He later ran a ranch and was appointed Homestead Inspector for the Cochrane Morley District. He married Susan McGrevey in 1890 and they had 5 sons and 3 daughters. Alexander (18th
Baptie

C.) tenant in Southdean. He is recorded as farmer at Old Southdean according to the 1787–90 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary (1731–89), daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southdean. If he was father of the soldier Alexander, then he was living in Roberton Parish in 1782. Alexander (b.1785) from the Southdean area. He may have been son of the farmer at Old Southdean, born in Roberton Parish in 1782. He enlisted in the King’s Dragoon Guards and was present at the Battle of Waterloo, after which he was discharged with a small pension. He then became schoolmaster at Falstone-on-Tyne, where he was called ‘Old Sandy’. In 1805 he married Agnes, daughter of blacksmith George Stevenson. Their son George (b.1823) was a blacksmith (like his mother’s side of the family). His medal from Waterloo was donated to Jedburgh Museum by his son George. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Helen Richardson in 1838 and their children included Alexander (b.1839). Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch. In 1685 he was charged, along with other men of the upper Borthwick valley, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. He was probably from the Blackcleuch near Teviothead. He may be the Archibald, married to Agnes Turnbull, whose son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1669. David (17th C.) resident of Southdean farm according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Rev. George (c.1641–88) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1661, he was licensed in 1665 by George, Bishop of Edinburgh. He was ordained at Southdean Kirk in 1670, as an Episcopalian minister. He complained to the Privy Council of being assaulted in 1676 in the churchyard of Abbotrule, resulting in letters issued for the arrest of several people. William Elliott (younger of Stobs), Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and the Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire were instructed to seize 5 women who were accused of attacking him. These were presumably locals who objected to having an Episcopalian in their Parish. He had daughters Magdalene (who married Benjamin McEwan in Edinburgh in 1709) and Elizabeth (who married David Crocket in Edinburgh in 1718). His will is recorded in Peebles Commissariot in 1688. George (b.1823) son of Alexander and Agnes Stevenson. He was a blacksmith to trade, helping his uncle Andrew Stevenson at Bonchester Bridge. He was recorded as a blacksmith’s apprentice at Bonchester Bridge in 1841. He later worked for Mr. Veitch of Inchbonny. His most prized possession was his father’s Waterloo medal. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Badbie’ and he is listed after John, who must have been related. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Southdean. He paid the Horse Tax there in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was also taxed for having 6 non-working dogs. He could be the James who married Elizabeth Riddell in Southdean Parish in 1803 and whose children included Douglas (b.1811); in 1841 Elizabeth was a midwife living at Chesters with Douglas. James (b.1816) 2nd son of Thomas. He was shepherd at Lymiecleuch in 1861. He married Cecily Buckingham in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. Their children were: Thomas (b.1841); Mary (b.1844); James (b.1846); Betty (b.1848); Katherine (b.1850); Cecily (b.1853); Robert; and Adam M. James (1846–97) son of James and Cecily Buckingham, he was born at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He worked at Abbotrule and later was gamekeeper at Softlaw, assistant gamekeeper at Wolfelee and lastly worked at Hallrule. He may have lived at Wells Lodge. In 1882 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Joseph Paterson, farm steward from the Kelso area. Their children were: Grace (b.1883); James (b.1884) gamekeeper at Hallrule; Cecily (b.1886) born in Hawick; Christina (b.1887); Robina (b.1891); Margaret (b.1892); and Joseph (b.1894). He is said to have died of a ‘chill’ contracted at Weensmoor House. James (b.1884) eldest son of James. He was gamekeeper at Hallrule. Jane (b.c.1785) dressmaker at Howlands in Wilton Parish according to the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Badbie’ in the 1526 remission for Borders men who had earlier attacked the Earl of Arran. He was probably related to James who was listed after him. John (18th C.) married Betty Hobkirk in Southdean Parish in 1776. John (b.c.1750) resident of Dearnburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as a parish pauper and agricultural labourer, aged about 90. He was living with Janet and Betty, who may have been his granddaughter and great-granddaughter a parish pauper and agricultural labourer, aged about 90. He was living with Janet and Betty, who may have been his granddaughter and great-granddaughter. He may be the John who married Elizabeth Hobkirk in Southdean in 1776, whose son (baptised in Roberton Parish) was Thomas (b.1791). John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Falnash in 1797, when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs.

John (b.c.1790) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was living at Parkhouses on the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and their children included David. John (b.c.1810) tailor at Appletreehall. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet. John (1811–90) eldest son of Thomas, he was an agricultural worker in the Rule valley and elsewhere, living at Haughhead, Swanshield, Hawthornside and other places. He was said to be a real ‘character’, who would quote large parts of the bible from memory. He is probably the John living at Haughhead in 1841, in the house of miller John Oliver, along with his wife Elizabeth and (probably) sister Ann. He married Elizabeth, sister of the Oliver who was in Hislop & Oliver of Jedburgh. Their children were: Alison (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); Mary (b.1845); and Elizabeth Oliver (b.1848). His wife died shortly after the birth of their 3rd child. He secondly married Betsy Renwick, who outlived him and died in Denholm. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Falside in 1612 when he was listed among local men accused of charging more than the allowed amount of interest; his name is omitted from the list of those found guilty. It is unclear whether this is the Falside in Southdean Parish or the one in Ettrick. Robert (b.c.1785) farmer at Chapel Muir in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was listed there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included George, Hannah, Elizabeth, John and Thomas. Robert (d.1852) 3rd son of Thomas. He worked as a labourer. In 1849 he was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He married Jessie Clark at Harwood Mill. Their children were: Maggie; Mary; Thomas; William; Bella; and Robert, who died young. He died at the Dykes. William; Bella; and Robert, who died young. Their children were: Maggie; Mary; Thomas;

1841 he was living at Thythehouse and in 1851 was at 1 Kirkstyle, listed as ‘Postrummer’. In 1811 he married Mary, daughter of James Anderson, who was a carpet weaver in Hawick. Their children were: John (b.1811); James (b.1816); Robert; Janet (1819–66), who married; Catherine (1821–50), who died unmarried at Kirkstyle, Hobkirk; Elizabeth ‘Betsy’, who was unmarried; Agnes, who married Thomas Simpson; Mary, who died in America; Isabella (b.1828), who married Alexander Bain and died in Florida; Wilhelmina (‘Mina’, 1830–96), died unmarried in Hawick; Helen (1833–56), died unmarried at Yethouse, Rulewater; and Jane (‘Jeanie’, 1836–57), also died at Yethouse, unmarried. Walter (1740/1–1833) resident of Newton in Wilton Parish. In 1780 he married Hannah Hood, and she died in 1823, aged 70. They are buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. William (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. William ‘Bill’ (1929/30–2019) joined the Saxhorn Band at the age of 11, despite having no previous musical experience. He remained a member for 74 years, playing cornet and baritone horn. He worked as a knitwear tutor at the Henderson Tech. He married Audrey and they had children David and Cameron (also formerly ‘Babtie’, ‘Babty’ and other variants).

Baptist Church Lane (bawp-tist-churh-lăn) n. more formal name for the Baptist’s Openin.

the Baptist Kirk (thu-bawp-tist-kirk) n. following the ideas of the Haldane brothers for total immersion by adults, baptist churches opened throughout Scotland in the latter part of the 18th century. In Hawick the Haldanes gave open air services at the Tower Knowe in 1798, leading to the formation of the Independent Church. One of the most ardent of the early Independents was tailor William Thorburn, who eventually led the group of Baptists that separated from that church. James Blair, formerly of Ayr, baptised the first person in Hawick in 1844, and others followed. The new Baptist congregation was officially formed in 1846, and consisted of 23 members. It began meeting as a Baptist movement in the lower flat of a house (No. 8) on Al-lars Crescent, with the support of John Turnbull, dyer. Alexander Kirkwood was the first pastor, although supplemented by others. The next pastor was Mr. William M. Anderson, who ran the church premises as a private school during the week. In 1879 a financial arrangement was made with the Hawick Home Mission to help support a pastor. The congregation moved to the Temperance Hall in 1880. Then a piece of land (previously a bowling green) was sold to the congregation on North Bridge Street at about half price by Prof. Elliot of Goldielands. The present church was built there in 1882–83, designed by Edinburgh architect David Crombie. In 1891 the hall and vestry were added and a balcony erected in about 1905. The church hall was used as a recreation room for soldiers billeted in the Town in 1915. A displayed Roll of Honour shows the names of members who served, and those who gave their lives in the Wars. A manse was built in 1919. In 1985 the remaining premises of the Hawick Home Mission were given for use as a new hall. A roll of the ministry is: Alexander Kirkwood 1846–52; (Robert Macmaster c.1852); W.M. Anderson, 1852–62; John C. Hawkins, 1862–71; J. Hewson, 1871–74; John C. Hawkins (again), 1874–80; William Seaman, 1880–96; James Hodgson, 1896–97; Joseph W. Kemp, 1898–1902; Donald McNicol, 1903–07; John Dick, 1908–10; William A. Ashby, 1911–15; William M. Robertson, 1916–19; John Moore, 1919–22; B. Poole, 1923–26.

the Baptist’s Openin (thy-bawp-tists-o-punin) n. Baptist Church Lane, beside the Baptist Church, running between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place. It follows part of the original eastern boundary of the Burgh of Hawick.

Barbauch Law (bawr-bawch-law) n. former name for a hill near Ashkirk (see also Bareback-law).

Barbersteed (bar-bur-steed) n. former land in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Barbarstede’ in a rental roll of c.1376 in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’, probably around the Hermitage Water.

Barbour (bar-bur) n. Robert (20th C.) professional Town Clerk in Hawick 1938–68, who had previously been Depute Town Clerk in Airdrie.

William (13th/14th C.) received a charter of the lands of Kirk Borthwick from Robert the Bruce in 1321, having previously been in the possession of Adam of Hoddam. This proves that there was already a chapel there at that time, but we know little else about this man. He was granted lands at Philiphaugh and Shiregreen and the mills of Selkirk in 1314 and was appointed hereditary Constable of Selkirk. He also was granted Hoscote and possibly other lands in the Borthwick valley. The grant for parts of the ‘Kirkborthewyc’ lands included a third part of the mill, and the payment was certain military service, plus a suit 3 times per year. These mill lands of Kirkborthwick were said to be in the barony of ‘Minthow’, which was presumably Minto (even if that seems confusing). His name is transcribed as either ‘Barbour’ or ‘Barbiton sor’ (which is Latin for ‘barber’).

Barclay (bawr-klee) n. Alexander ‘Eck’ Haberdier from 2009. Andrew Jeffrey Gunion (1849–1943) born in Hawick, son of George and Jane Johnstone. He spent 9 years at school in Hawick and graduated from Edinburgh University in 1870, becoming a mathematics teacher at George Watson’s College. He was one of the men who proposed the founding of the Edinburgh Mathematical Society in 1883, and was that Society’s third President. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1886. In 1892 he moved to Glasgow High School, where he became Head Mathematics Master, retiring in 1914. He later lived with his son in London, and lived to be congratulated on being F.R.S.E. for 50 years. He was also known as a keen golfer, being Captain of Wester Gailes Club. He married Janet, who was from Shotts.

Anthony (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Edinburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. He was probably son of John, writing-master in Dundee, who became Writer to the Signet in 1769 and died in 1811. George (1808–73) from Canonbie, he was a baker and publican in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is listed at about 27 High Street, by 1851 he was at Ashkirk Toll, but was at 22 Howegate in 1861. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Johnstone, who died in 1886, aged 78. Their children included: Andrew, who died in infancy; Janet (b.c.1834), who married Bailie John Richardson; Francis (b.c.1837), Edinburgh surgeon; John (b.c.1839), spirit merchant, proprietor of ‘Barclay’s’; David (b.c.1841); Margaret (b.c.1844), who married Alex Roy of Dunfermline, and Andrew Jeffrey Gunion (b.1849), teacher in Edinburgh and Glasgow. G. (19th C.) gamedealer who was Cornet in 1874. In the following year he was unable to take up his duties are Right-Hand Man. John (1837/8–1910) of Balgowrie, son of George. He was a spirit merchant who became proprietor of the Royal Bar, where the ‘Back room at Barclay’s’ was. He married Annie Henry, who died in 1935, aged 81. Their children were Lieut. John C. (of the R.A.F., killed in 1919), Lillias (became Mrs. Oliver, of Philadelphia), Margaret (married Robert Young) and Maud (married farmer Douglas Tait), as well as George, Jane Johnstone, Annie Ingram and Daisy, all of whom died young. Margaret (17th C.) local resident who was arrested in about 1678 for attending field conventicles. Hawick merchant Thomas Waugh and William Turnbull (from the Bawr-lee law) were arrested at the same time. They were condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. His sur name is written 'Barklaw' (see also Berkley).

Barclay's (bawr-kleez) n. pub at 1 Drumlanrig Square, which has had many names, including 'the Royal' and 'the Somewhere Else', with 'the Drop In' downstairs. It recently changed its name back to its old name of Barclay's, named after an early proprietor, John Barclay. It was renovated to the designs of J.P. Alison in the 1890s – 'In the back room at Barclay's The auld Stick he stands Grasping the bell rope with cold, shaking hands' [WE], '...And you epic O' auld Henry and his lost battle Atween the medicine and Barclay's yill Gan a' unrecorded but in bruckle memory' [DH].

barefit (bär-fi) adj. barefoot, barefooted – 'The next Sabbath to stand at the kirk door with one pair of scheittis about him, beirfutt and beirlegitt' [PR1702], '...Wi' a barnie baith barefit an' duddie' [JT], 'Barefit I skelpit owre the bent, The gorcock whirred an' flew ...' [ECB], '...a waailer o barefit getts; a wumman wui a bairn cairryin i the shawl 'A saw a barefit lad the day and maimory sent iz fer away' [IWL].

bar-filler (bawr-fi-lur) n. a person who puts ribs onto needles for loading onto frames in the knitwear industry. More specifically the job involves putting a skirt or cuff onto the comb-like bar, stitch for stitch, with the aid of a slack course, and transferring it onto the bearded needles of a knitting frame, so that the body and sleeve of a garment can be made. This was traditionally considered a woman's job.

Barke (bark) n. James (1905-58) writer, born at Torwoodlee. He wrote extensively about Robert Burns, including several fictionalised novels, produced an edition of his songs and poems, and is perhaps best known for the biography of Burns and Jean Armour, 'Bonnie Jean' (1959).

barkint (bawr-kin) adj., pp., arch. encrusted, caked in dirt, coated in blood or soot – 'Riven breeks an' barkint face. As black as a coal pock; Ye'll ken the creater ony place – It's our little Jock' [JT], 'A' barkened an' 'blackened wi' mony a score Was the face o' the wee sweep laddie' [JT] (cf. bairkint).

barley (bawr-lee) interj., arch. exclamation used to request respite in children's games, n. a truce, rest – '...an garrd the hyill yins devall an take a barley'[ECS] (cf. the English 'parley').

Barley Burn (bawr-lee-burn) n. small stream on the north side of the Hermitage valley, rising on the slopes of Greatmoor and Swire Knowe. It joins the Crib Burn near Brafieldhope and they become the Braidlie Burn, which flows into the Hermitage Water. It has a small waterfall.

barm (bawrm) n., arch. yeast, usually obtained from a brewery and used in former times for baking bread and brewing 'treacle ale' – 'This cursed duty gars us roair. Just barm wi' water workin', Now may we piss for evermore, An' never dry our forkin, By night or day' [JR], '...True indeed he had been shot But wi' a cork, an' what he thought His life bluid oozing warm, Wasna bluid, but only barm'[FL] (from Old English).

barmie (bawr-nie) adj., arch. yeasty – 'The smeddum o' your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi' your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses, An' tear away'[JR].

barmkin (bawrm-kin) n., arch. a defensive enclosure around a tower house – 'Lord Soulsis he sat in Hermitage castle, And Redcap was not by; And he called on a page who was witty and sage, To go to the barmkin high'[JL].

Barnes (bawrnz) n. farm in the Slitrig valley, which was taken over by Stobs military camp. It has Barnes Burn passing it and a hill-fort above it to the south-west. In 1622 the lands of Over and Nether Swinstead were among those sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gilbert Elliot of Stobs; they were described as 'commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newtoun', suggesting that Barnes was once part of Swinstead. In 1684 the tenant, John Anderson, was among the men fined for attending conventicles. 4 men were listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas Beattie was there in 1712 and Robert Cavers in 1720. The farm was valued at £193 15s 6d in 1788, when part of the estate of the Elliotts.
Barnes

...of Stobs. It was still valued at the same amount in 1813. Gilbert Corbet was farmer there in at least 1785–97, Robert Henderson in 1841, George Leitch in 1851 and William Oliver in the 1860s. The fort measures about 120 m by 55 m, and consists of a double rampart, although it has been largely obliterated by cultivation. The farmhouse is now derelict. There are other places with similar names, e.g. the seat of the Burnets near Peebles (also spelled ‘Barns’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Barnes (bawrnz) n. Ian Andrew ‘Barney’ (1948–) born in Hawick, he was a lock for Hawick R.F.C. and was capped for Scotland. He was coach of Hawick, Edinburgh Academicals and the Edinburgh University team. Mr. ?? (19th C.) gamekeeper at Wells. He shot a peregrine falcon near the Dunton in 1876. Thomas (19th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He had an unnamed child who died in 1840.

Barnes Burn (bawrnz-burn) n. stream flowing through Stobs to the Slitrig (also ‘Barns Burn’).

Barnes Cottages (bawrnz-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages located just to the south of Barnes farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Barnes Hill (bawrnz-hil) n. hill near Barnes Loch.

Barnes Loch (bawrnz-loch) n. small loch to the west of Southfield, flowing into Barnes Burn above Stobs military camp. It is also known as Stobs Loch. The area used to be known as ‘Barnes Moss’ before it was dammed.

Barnes Moss (bawrnz-mos) n. marshy area to the south of Barnes Loch and east of Dobburn Hill, and former name for the area before the stream was dammed to make the Loch and reservoirs. There was once a rifle range there, used by Stobs Military Camp. It was 500 yards long, with firing points every 100 yards, and was once reached by a section of tramway (it is still ‘Barnes Moss’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Barnes Shiel (bawrnz-sheel) n. former farmstead near Barnes. It is recorded in 1790 when James Cavers (‘Auld Dunnerum’) was there.

Barnes Viaduct (bawrnz-vl-a-dukt) n. viaduct on the Waverley Line, just before Stobs. It was completed in 1860 by the North British Railway. It has 4 arches and earth embankments.

Barney (bawr-nee) n. nickname of Ian Barnes.

Barnglies (bawrn-gleez) n. farm on the River Sark, close to the Border, west of Canonbie. It was once home of a branch of the Armstronngs (it is ‘Barnglies’ in 1552, ‘Bargielis’ in 1579 and 1585, ‘Barnegleis’ in 1605, ‘Barnegleese’ in 1606 and ‘Barneglesche’ in 1622; it is marked ‘Barnglish’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map).

Barnhill (bawrn-hil) n. area at the foot of Minto Crags, where the farm of Barnhills is now situated. It was in the Parish of Ancrum. It formerly held a tower, the home of Turnbull of Barnhill. The ruins of the former tower are buried in the woods there. The farm was burned around 1500 by Peter Turnbull in Bonchester and others, when the tenant appears to have been George Rutherford of Longnewton. ‘East Barnhill’ and ‘West Barnhill’ were burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. William Turnbull of Barnhills is recorded in the period 1578–85. The ‘10 merk lands’ there were split in 1610 between the tenants of Spittal-on-Rule and the Grange. In the 16th and 17th centuries there were separate ‘Easter’ and ‘Wester’ parts. Hector Turnbull held the lands from at least 1531, and the Turnbulls held the lands until they were part of a loan with the Bennets of Chesters, with Ragwell Bennet buying Easter Barnhills in 1613 and William Bennett buying the lands outright in 1628. Gilbert Elliott gained the Wester part in 1618. In 1678 it was owned by Sir William Bennett and valued at £800, consisting of Easter and Wester Barnhills. William Brown was tenant there in 1683. Sir William Bennet of Rutherford sold it to Dr. William Rutherford in 1703, whose 3 daughters inherited the lands in the 1730s, from whom it passed to his son-in-law Rev. Alexander Mackenzie, and in 1749 sold to Walter Stewart, minister of Ashkirk. Walter’s son Matthew inherited the lands of Wester Barnhills, which passed to his 3 sisters on his death and they sold it to Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto in 1797. The tenant in the late 1700s was Thomas Brockie, whose sons ran farms on the island of St. Helena and later farmed in Rule valley. He was recorded there in 1797, when he owned 6 horses. Andrew Rutherford was there in the 1860s (often ‘Barnhills’, the name first appears in the 16th century and is probably from the Old English ‘berern hyll’, meaning ‘hill with the barn’; it is ‘Bernehill’ in 1502, ‘Barnhillis’ in 1531, ‘Barneyhill’ in 1548/9, ‘Barnhillis’ in 1553/4, transcribed ‘Bamhills’ in 1571/2, ‘Barnhillis’ in 1562, 1576 and 1580, ‘Bernehillis’ in 1579/80, ‘Bernehillis’ in 1581, ‘the Bernehillis’ in 1584/5, ‘Bairnehillis’ in 1595, ‘Barnhills’ in 1604, ‘Bernehillis’ in 1605, ‘Bernhills’ in 1610, ‘Bernehillis’ in 1618 and ‘Barnehillis’ in 1628; it is marked on Blaueu’s 1654 map as ‘Barnhills’ and on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map correctly as ‘Barnhills’).
Barnhills Bed

Barnhills Bed (bawrin-hilz-bed) n. a rocky ledge at Minto Crags, named after the notorious river Turnbull of Barnhills. He lived at Barnhills Castle below, a peel tower near where the Barnhills farm now stands, and was said to have used the ledge as a refuge (also sometimes ‘Barnhill’s’) – ‘On Minto Crags the moonbeams glint, Where Barnhills had his bed of flint: . . . ‘Mid cliffs from whence his eagle eye For many a league his prey could spy’ [SWS].

Barnhills Toor (bawrin-hilz-toor) n. former tower at Barnhill, once inhabited by a branch of the Turnbills. It measured about 10.5 m by 7.5 m, with thick walls. The ground floor had a vaulted ceiling, 2 windows and gunloops.

Barn Knowe (bawrn-now) n. former farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It appears on the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, between Branxholm and Whitlaw, suggesting that it is fairly local. However, it is possible what is meant is the small hill of this name on the opposite side of the Ettrick from Cacrabank, near Tushielaw Tower. In 1680 Margaret Martin from there was found guilty of trying to steal some shoes from a market stall in Hawick.

Barn Pool (bawrn-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water, just to the south of where the Kershop Burn joins (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Barns see Barnes

Barns (bawrnz) n. possible name for a former farmstead on Branxholme estate, just north of the Castle, probably corresponding to the Birno Chaipelhill (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Barometer (thu-baw-ro-mee’-ur) n. barometer and thermometer, gifted to the Town by manufacturer Charles John Wilson in 1898, and fixed to the outside of the Town Hall.

baron (bawrin) n. someone holding a barony from the Crown, with certain privileges, including administration of justice, collecting of taxes from markets, appointment of clergy, etc. In Scotland there was a distinction between Lord Barons or ‘greater barons’ and ‘small’ or ‘minor barons’. Before 1587 any landowner whose lands had been erected into a barony (as opposed to being simply a Laird) could sit in Parliament and enjoy certain other privileges, while after that date they chose 2 of their number from each county as Commissioners. Their privileges were almost completely lost after 1747.

baron bailie (bawrin-bä-lee) n. official appointed by a baron to represent his interests in a barony or burgh.

the Baron (thu-baw-rin) n. nickname for James Wilson of the 18th century.

Baron Depute (bawrin-de-pew) n. official appointed to represent the interests of a Baron, essentially the same as a ‘baron bailie’ or bailie o regality’. He presided over the Court of Regality or Baron’s Court, which had extensive jurisdiction over the Barony, causing many disputes with the Magistrates of Hawick. The position ended with the abolishment of regalities in 1747. In Hawick the position was held by: George Scott of Boonraw, 1668; Walter Scott of Harwood, 1669; Thomas Rutherford, 1672; Robert Scott of Horsleyhill (probably), 1676; Gideon Scott of Falnash, 1677; Walter Scott of Alton, from 1686; William Scott, 1693; Gideon Scott of Falnash, 1700; Walter Elliot, 1718; Robert Howison, 1736; Walter Scott, 1740.

Baron o Hawick (bawrin-ó-hlk) n. holder of the title associated with the lands of the Barony of Hawick. The Baron had local legal powers, and was supposedly the protector of the town. He held a court that decided on legal and ecclesiastical matters; in Hawick this was delegated to the Baron’s agent, the Bailie (or Chamberlain) from at least the mid-17th century (‘Falnash’s court’ is in the 1722 Parish records). In earlier centuries the court would have been a serious matter, trying cases as serious as killing and major theft, and with the ability to sentence wrongdoers to death. The baron also collected rent and other fees for fairs and markets, and for the use of his weighhouse (which was in the former Town House). This right of custom was abused on several occasions, leading to riots and legal challenges to the baron’s authority. Locally the baron’s power was usurped in the 18th century, when the Scotts of Buccleuch held most of the land in the Parish, although the title of Baron had passed to the Douglases of Queensberry. The formal end of the Baron’s power came in the early 19th century. The first Baron was probably one of the Norman Lovel family in the 1120s or 30s. However, it is unclear exactly when the barony was established and who the first Baron was. The Lovels of Castle Cary and Hawick succeeded for about the next 200 years. The barony went briefly to the Murrays (starting with Maurice, Earl of Strathearn) in the 14th century and then passed to the Douglases, probably through the marriage of Sir William Douglas (3rd Earl), to Joan Murray (daughter of Maurice Murray and widow of Sir Thomas Murray). Details of the first century of Douglas control are sketchy, because of family power struggles and disputes with the Crown, as well as the minority of some of the heirs. In about 1407 the Barony was granted to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig by the 4th Earl of Douglas. Yearly payment was to be an arrow in ‘bleanch farm’ on the Feast of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. The Barony was confirmed to Douglas of Drumlanrig by James I in 1412, the charter written in the King’s own hand. After the first Douglas of Drumlanrig died in 1421 the barony was in the hands of the Earl of Douglas until being inherited by the 2nd William of Drumlanrig in 1427. There were then a series of Douglasses of Drumlanrig, one of whom granted Hawick its ‘burgh of barony’ status. Those associated with being the ‘generous donor’ are Sir William Douglas, who was the 6th Douglas of Drumlanrig and Sir James, who was the 7th. The Barony was passed to the direct descendants of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig, the Douglasses of Queensberry, who still hold the title ‘Lord of Hawick’ today. However, the direct influence of the family on the Hawick area ceased in the 17th century, and the Barony (as distinct from the title of Baron) was granted to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in 1675. An approximate list of Barons is: Ralph Lovel c.1159; Henry Lovel c.1159–c.94; Ralph Lovel c.1194–c.1207; Henry Lovel c.1207–c.18; Richard Lovel 1218–53 (possibly 2 generations); Henry Lovel c.1253–62/3; Richard Lovel 1262/3–63/4; Hugh Lovel 1264–c.90; Sir Richard Lovel c.1291–c.1307; Probably granted to both English and Scottish noblemen 1310s–30s; Sir Maurice Murray c.1342–46; Sir Thomas Murray c.1358–61; Sir Archibald Douglas, 3rd Earl of Douglas, possibly 1362–c.1400; Archibald Douglas, 4th Earl of Douglas, c.1401–c.07; Sir William Douglas, 1st of Drumlanrig, c.1407–21; Sir William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, 1427–44; William Douglas, 3rd of Drumlanrig, 1450–64; Sir William Douglas, 4th of Drumlanrig, 1464–84; James Douglas 1484–98; Sir William Douglas c.1498–1513; Sir James Douglas 1514–78; Sir James Douglas 1578–1615; Sir William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry, 1615–40; James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry, 1640–71; William Douglas, 1st Duke of Queensberry, 1671–95; James Douglas, 2nd Duke of Queensberry, 1695–1711; Charles Douglas, 3rd Duke of Queensberry, 1711–78; William Douglas, 4th Duke of Queensberry, 1778–1810; Charles Douglas of Kelhead, 6th Marquess of Queensberry, 1810–37; John Douglas, 7th Marquess of Queensberry, 1837–56; Archibald William Douglas, 8th Marquess of Queensberry, 1856–58; John Sholto Douglas, 9th Marquess of Queensberry, 1858–1900; Percy Sholto Douglas, 10th Marquess of Queensberry, 1900–20; Francis Archibald Kelhead Douglas, 11th Marquess of Queensberry, 1920–54; and David Harrington Angus Douglas, 12th Marquess of Queensberry, 1954–.

Baron o Wulton (baw-rin-ə-wul′-in) n. holder of the title associated with the Barony of Wilton, which was for all of recorded history split into two half baronies; the eastern part being similar to what we now think of as Wilton, and the western part essentially being the northern side of the Borthwick valley. The first recorded Baron was probably Sir Roger ‘de Wilton’, although the evidence that he was not connected with another Wilton is perhaps weak. But certainly we have Robert ‘de Wilton’ in the last years of the 12th century, followed by John, probably a second John, and then it appears the eponymous family failed in the male line. The Barony went briefly to Walter de Perchay, son of Joan of Wilton. Lade Jane de Vesey was recorded as owner of part of the Barony in the late 13th century, and soon afterwards Alexander III gave the Barony jointly to her and to Sir Thomas de Charteris (probably her husband). Around the same time Edward I, then in control of Teviotdale, gave the Barony to William de Charteris and Walter de Pertchay. After Bannockburn Robert the Bruce gave it jointly to Henry Wardlaw and Gilbert Maxwell (with a confirming charter in about 1321). However, a later Thomas de Charteris was Baron in the mid-14th century, and this may have been the same family as Langlands. At about the same time there is also a record of the eastern half barony and advowson of the Kirk being given to John, son of Margaret by David II, after being forfeited by William Maxwell; this could have been John Langlands, although the surname is not recorded. John Langlands was probably Baron before he died about 1363 and James Langlands is recorded from at least 1431. The history is clearer since 1451, when John Langlands was given the half barony, leading to the Langlands family being barons for about 3 centuries. The western half barony appears to have passed from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlstane in 1483. Sometime before 1502 it was granted to the Earl of Bothwell, whose grandson Patrick Hepburn, the 3rd Earl, probably forfeited it along with his other estates and titles.
the Baron's Folly

in 1538. It later passed to the Scots of Buccleuch. An approximate list of known Barons (focussing on the eastern half barony) is: Sir Ralph de Wilton; John de Wilton; Joan de Wilton; Walter de Peircelay; Lady Jane de Vesey/Sir Thomas de Charteris; ...Henry Wardlaw/Gilbert Maxwell; ...Thomas de Charteris; John Langlands; ...James Langlands; John Langlands; Robert Langlands; Roger Langlands; John Langlands; James Langlands; Robert Langlands; George Langlands; John Langlands; George Langlands; Robert Langlands; George Langlands; Robert Langlands; George Langlands; and Robert Langlands.

the Baron's Folly (tu-baw-rinz-to-lee) n. a tower-like structure on top of Down (or Dwon's) Law (202 m, 663 ft), east of the A68 shortly before Lilliard's Edge. It was built in the 1780s as a summer house and observatory by Robert Rutherfurd of Fairnington, who had received the courtesy title of Baron of the Russian Empire after their war against the Turks in 1770.

Barony o Hawick (baw-ri-nee-oh-lk) n. the Barony of Hawick, originally held by the Lovels since the 12th century, passing to the Murrays in the 14th century, then the Douglasses (probably through marriage), and to the Douglasses of Drumlanrig around 1407. An irregularity around 1412 meant that the inheritance of the Barony was not properly endorsed by the Crown (and this was not fixed until 1511). When inherited in 1427 the Barony was valued at 300 merks yearly. William, Earl of Douglas had a sasine for the Barony in 1446 (during the minority of Douglas of Drumlanrig). In 1450 it was inherited by William, son of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, and at that time was held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for payment of one arrow in Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. It was regranted to William of Drumlanrig in 1459, after being in the King's 'for certain causes', and in 1464 was inherited by the next William of Drumlanrig. In 1484 it was inherited by James, son of William of Drumlanrig; the Barony at that time was in the hands of the King and was said to be waste, but in time of peace the Baron's lands were still valued at 300 merks. The Barony was again in the King's hands when granted to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511; at that point the Baron's possessions were East and West Mains, Crumhaugh, Kirkton Mains, Flex, 'Murinese', Ramsaycleuch and Broadlee, along with other lands held ‘in tenandry’, namely Howpasley, Chisholme, Whithope, Dryden, Commside, Over Harwood, Emmetshiel, Teindside, Carlinpool, Nether Harwood, Weensland, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langheugh, Larristofts, Kirkwood, Harwoodhill, Whitchesters, Fenwick, Adderstone, Adderstoneshiel and Whames. These lands were incorporated into a Barony, for William's service to the King (although presumably this was a reincorporation), and the town of Hawick was then confirmed as having all the privileges of a burgh in barony. In 1514 the barony passed to James Douglas, who held the same 300 merks of lands and patronage of churches (for payment of an arrow at the Feast of the Assumption) and superiority of the Barony (for payment of a suit yearly at any of the 3 head courts of Roxburghshire). It was still said to be worth 300 merks in 1615, when the listed among the Baron's lands were 'Mairishauch', Shaws, Trowhaugh, Philhope, Eilrig, Teindsideburn and Slaidhills. Although the lands of the Barony passed to the Scotts in 1674/5, the title remained with the Douglasses, formally belonging to the Viscountcy of Drumlanrig and held by the Marquess of Queensberry — 'it's caed the Barony o Hawick cos Hawick's the best toon in the world, bar ony'.

Barony o Wulton (baw-ri-nee-oh-wul-in) n. the earliest Baron of Wulton on record was Lady Jane Vesey, who may have been an heiress. She possessed the (eastern) half-barony, which was regranted by King Alexander (III probably) to her and her husband, Thomas 'de Charteris'. Century. In 1303/4 the eastern half barony was confirmed to belong to William de Charteris. It was then held for the fourth part of a knight's fee, and worth 10 merks yearly. At about the same time the other half-barony went to Walter 'de Partchay' (Percy). In 1306 the half baronies were given to Henry Wardlaw and Gilbert Maxwell. The western half Barony (essentially corresponding to northern side of the Borthwick valley) was held by the Wardlaws until the late 15th century, when it passed to the Scotts. The eastern half Barony went to the Langlands family from at least 1451 and was held by them for the next 300 years. There is another, unrelated, set of Barons of Wilton, the de Grays, in Hereford. In 1586 the lands of 'Overhill, Wolton Burne and Wolton Grene, called the half baronie of Wolton' were referred to among the properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The Barony was included among lands combined into the Lordship of Hailles according to the service of heirs for Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. The Barony was listed among the properties of the Scotts in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch.
Barran

Barran (baw-rin) n. Sir John Nicholson (1872–1952) grandson of a major clothing factory owner and benefactor to the city of Leeds. His father pre-deceased his grandfather and so he became 2nd Baronet of Barran in 1905. He married Alice Margarita Parks and later Esther Frances Fisher, and their children were Sir John Leighton, Elise Margarita, Edward Nicholson and Sir David Haven. He was educated at Winchester College and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1909 he became Liberal M.P. for the Hawick Burghs, and held the seat until it was dissolved in 1918. He was one of the chief guests at the 1914 quatercentenary Common Riding. He held the positions of Parliamentary Private Secretary to the Home Secretary, Foreign Secretary, President of the Local Government Board and Postmaster-General. From 1910–16 he was Parliamentary Private Secretary to the Prime Minister. He was also a J.P. in Yorkshire.

barri (baw-ri, -re, -ra) n. a barrow – ‘...yaised ti hev races shovin’ their paint barrihs up the Loan’ [IWL], ‘Ee ken, A’d ti push somethin’ up the Loan’ [DaS] (as with other words ending ‘-ow’ in English, the last vowel sound varies).

barri beggar (baw-ri-be-gur) n., arch. a lame, imbecile, sick (or occasionally dead!) person formerly carried around between farms on a handbarrow in order to beg for money.

Barrie (baw-ree) n. Adam (1777–1825/6) son of Robert, he was born at Langraw, near Bonchester. He farmed at Stonedge and at Deanbrae. His wife was Mary. Their children were: Adam (b.1807), who probably died young; Robert (b.1808), Archibald (b.1809) and Adam (b.1812), who all farmed at Spittal Tower and died unmarried; Isobel (1816/7–1855), who died unmarried; Walter (1819–49), baker who died in London and whose son was Walter Scott, Provost of Hawick; Thomas (1821/2–1908), also a farmer near Denholm; John (1823/4–1906), farmer at Thornbank, who died at Denholm; and George Camptown. Alexander (17th C.) one of earliest known local members of this family. His daughter Isobel was born in Ashkirk Parish in 1632. Alexander Barrie (18th/19th C.) native of Hawick who taught English in Edinburgh. He was author of several school books, including ‘A Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language for the use of Schools’ (1794), ‘A Spelling and Pronouncing Catechism’ (1796), ‘An Epitome of English Grammar’ (1800), ‘The Tyro’s Guide to Wisdom and Wealth with Exercises in Spelling’ (published by George Caw in Edinburgh, 1800, with several further editions), ‘A collection of English prose and verse, for the use of schools’ (1800, and many other editions), and ‘Concise spelling book, for the use of children’ (1824). A portrait of him exists. Archibald (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Southdean Parish register in 1699. He is the earliest known family member in the Rulewater area, where they later tenanted many farms. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as cottar at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) farmer at Langraw, near Bonchester. His children included: Walter (b.1745), who probably died young; Robert (b.1747), said to be the eldest son; Walter (again), who farmed Langraw along with his older brother; Thomas (b.1752); William (b.1749), who died young; and Helen (or ‘Nellie’, b.1754), who also died young. In 1748 he was living at Weensmoor. James (b.1864) son of John and Helen Turnbull, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Hawick and was author of author of ‘Historical Sketch of the Hawick Golf Club’ (1898). He was Honorary Secretary and Treasurer of the club for many years, and also held the club record for some time. In addition he was Secretary of the Border Golfers’ Association and also involved with the Tennis Club. He married Margaret Scott Nichol (whose father and brother were Provosts) and she died in 1942. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He paid tax on 2 hearths there. John (b.1816) son of Walter and Christian Jamieson. He was farmer at Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish. He was still there in 1868. He married Helen Turnbull. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Sundhope; Archibald, from Newcastleton; Robert, Managing Director of Leven Brothers; William Turnbull, doctor in Hawick; Christina Jane, who married Rev.
Barrie

J. Panton, minister at Langholm; and James, a solicitor in Hawick. John (1847/8–1907) farmer at South Berryfell. He may have been an older son of John from Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Lillico, who died in 1926, aged 78. Their children included: Christine (d.1907); John; Walter (d.1917) killed in action at Messines; Helen, Mrs. Turnbull (d.1966); and Margaret Ann, Mrs. Hall (d.1972). Robert (1747–1809) eldest son of George, born at Weensmuir. In 1772 he married Margaret, daughter of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Howa. At that time he lived at Scleventy, but moved to Langraw on 1773. In 1786 he had a 15 year tack of Langraw with his brother Walter. In 1801 they had a lawsuit with the new purchasers, the Olivers, over upkeep on the farm. He is probably the Robert listed as tenant of ‘Stentynhaugh’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hob Kirk Parish. His children were: Nelly; George, who farmed at Howahill and died without children; Adam, who farmed at Stonedge and Deanbrae; and Walter, who farmed at Hawthornside. The Margaret Barrie who died in Hob Kirk Parish in 1815 could have been his wife. Robert (b.1808) eldest surviving son of Adam. He farmed at Spittal Tower. He was listed there in 1851 and in 1861 is recorded there as farmer of 530 acres; he lived there with his mother Mary, brothers Archibald, Adam, Thomas and John, and sister Isabella. He died unmarried. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in the 1860s. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in 1745 when Agnes Lorraine was cited by Kirkton Parish for becoming pregnant by him. He was said to have come over from ‘the water of Roull’ and to then be a married man in England. In 1748 it appears that he married Agnes Lorraine (although this seems unclear) and was rebuked for his sin. She may have been a daughter of John Lorraine and Margaret Glendinning. Thomas (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School 1788–98. He replaced George Lamb in May of 1788, according to minutes of the Kirk Session, and resigned in July 1798, when he was replaced by James Kirk. Nothing else is known about him. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Teindside on the 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the same man as the Rector of the Grammar School. Thomas of Hartsgarth (18th/19th C.) owner of the farm in the early 1800s. He was listed there as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. Thomas (1821/2–1908) son of Adam. He worked as a ploughman on the family farm at Spittal Tower. He may be the Thomas who acted as librarian in Denholm. Thomas (d.1913) contractor in Denholm. He left no heirs when he died and his business fell to the Crown. Walter (d.1819) son of George. He was tenant farmer at Langraw along with his older brother Robert. He was recorded as tenant there in 1797 (along with Thomas Hope), when he owned 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Langraw in 1797. The owner of Langraw died before the lease expired in 1801, and there was a 2 year legal battle over the costs of repairs and rent. His children were: George; Alexander, who was on the poor roll most of his life; and Betty, who married mason Robert Scott. He died at Kirknowe. Walter (b.1780) son of Robert. He was farmer at Hawthornside. In 1813 he married Christian Jameson of Ashkirk Parish, and she died in 1858, aged 66. Their children were: Robert, who died at Denholm; John, who was tenant at Hartsgarth; James, farmer at Harden; Agnes, who married William Veitch of Inchbonny; Adam, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married James Wilson, farmer at Cleuchhead and Cockburn; and Walter, farmer at Stonedge. Walter (1819–49) son of Adam, farmer at Stonedge. He was a baker, who died in London, and is buried in Brompton Cemetery. His son was Walter Scott, who became Provost of Hawick. Walter (b.1829) youngest son of Walter and Christian Jameson. He was born at Howahill. He moved to Highend farm in the Rule valley, and also tenanted Stonedge. He may be the Walter who is recorded along with Robert as tenant of Hawthornside in the 1860s. He married dressmaker Jane Hogarth. Their children were: John; Walter; Adam; Kate; Maggie and Agnes. Walter Scott (d.1912) born in Maldon, Essex, son of Walter and grandson of Adam. He was from an old Rulewater family and was educated in Bedrule. He joined the Royal Bank of Scotland in Hawick at age 15, then worked with Nixon & McKe and Wilson’s. He then began a partnership with James Scoon, forming Scoon & Barrie, tweed manufacturers, Teviotdale Mills, J.L. Hood later becoming a partner too. He abandoned manufacturing, farmed for a while in Rulewater, then founded Barrie & Kersel at Annfield Mills, around 1900. In about 1879 he and James Scoon had a double cottage built on newly feud land at Loch Park. He gave 15 years service to Hawick Co-op, being secretary and general manager until 1887. He became a Councillor in 1889, a Magistrate in 1891, was Provost 1893–96, and re-entered the Council in 1904. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being Acting Father in 1896, while he was still Provost. He carried the Flag from the Nipknowes to St. Leonard’s in at least 1991–93. His Provostship saw much discussion about the new Fever Hospital and the demolition of the Coffin-End. He was one of the founders of Wilton Bowling Club, being first Vice-President, and presented a cup to the club in 1896. In addition he was a member of the Hawick Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Society, and helped resuscitate Mossopaul Inn in 1900. He married Williamina Rae. Their children were Adam, plus 3 daughters. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Walter (1879/80–1917) son of John, farmer at Berryfell. He was nephew of Dr. William Barrie. He was tenant farmer at South Berryfell and served during the Boer War, some African pieces he collected still being in the Museum. He won 4 races over 2 days at the 1914 Common Riding on his horse ‘Exile’ (this perhaps being a record). This included winning the ‘Quater-Centenary Plate’. He was a territorial soldier, serving in the Lothian and Borders Horse (along with William Beattie). He served with the K.O.S.B. in WWI, where he was promoted to 2nd Lieutenant, and was killed at Messines (on what would have been Common Riding Thursday). He is buried at Kemmel, France. William (17th/18th C.) farmer who signed the call from Hobkirk Parish to Rev. Robert Riccalton in 1725. He may have been tenant at Hawthornside. His descendants were at Hillshaugh in 1771. William (b.1784/5) hosier of Denholm, recorded as a joint proprietor in the 1837 electoral roll. He was recorded as a stockmaker at Westside in 1851. He could be the William recorded in 1852 as librarian of the Denholm Subscription Library. He married Janet Best and their children included Helen, Ann and Isabel. Dr. William Turnbull ‘the Doctor’ (1859–1935) son of John and Helen Turnbull. He was born at Hartsgarth in Castleton and graduated from Edinburgh University in 1880. He was a ship’s surgeon for a while, but moved to Hawick in 1881, where he became assistant and then partner with Dr. McLeod and later Dr. McDonald. He lived at 18 Bridge Street. He was also Medical Officer for Teviothead Parish Council and Certifying Surgeon under the Factories Act. He was Hawick’s first ‘Free Gardener’, being Medical Officer for the Lodge for many years. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing and was Callants’ Club President in 1910. He was also involved with the Lawn Tennis Club, once Captain of the Golf Club and known for his dramatic talents. He was presented with 1,000 guineas, raised by public subscription, on the occasion of his jubilee of 1931. He may also have lived at Sundhope (also spelled ‘Barry’ in earlier documents).

Barrie an Kersel’s (baw-ree-an-ker-sulz) n. former hosiery manufacturers with main factory at Annfield Mills, on the left-hand side at the end of Croft Road. The firm was established by Walter Barrie and Robert Kersel in 1903, originally to manufacture knitted hosiery and underwear. In the 1920s they introduced cardigans and sweaters, focussing on fashion from the 1930s. In 1962 the firm changed its name to Barrie Knitwear, known locally as ‘Barrie’s’.

Barrie’s (baw-rez) n. knitwear company, formerly at Teviot Crescent, now based at Burnfoot Industrial Estate. It grew from Barrie & Kersel’s, which changed its name in 1962. In 1966 it became part of Dawson International and moved to a purpose-built factory at Burnfoot in 1975. Concentrating on high-end fashions, the firm also supplies cashmere and luxury knitwear to many prestigious couture houses and designer labels (officially secret, but said to include Chanel and Hermes). The firm was taken over by Chanel in 2012.

barrin-oot (baw-rin-oo’) n., arch. former custom at Hawick Grammar School of the boys hiding in the school at lunchtime and locking the door, so they would get a half-day off. This was generally done on the shortest day of the year until about 1868. The same tradition was also carried out in other local schools, surviving at Denholm and Roberton until the early 1900s, and in Hobkirk until the 1940s. It is also known elsewhere in Britain, being recorded at an Aberdeen Grammar school in the 16th century – ‘‘Barrin oot day’’ was still a subject of discussion, but no one seemed keen to try’ [GOW].

barrin-oot day (baw-rin-oo’-dă) n., arch. day on which pupils annually carried out the barrin-oot tradition. This was typically the shortest day of the year, i.e. about December 21st.

Barton (bar-in) n. Rev. Angus (1785/6–1861) born in Morton Parish, he was assistant in Edinburgh University Library. In early life he acted as a tutor to the young Lord John Russell. In 1822 he was presented to Castleton Parish by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry and was ordained there as minister the same year. His name is incorrectly recorded as ‘A. Burton’ in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was very conservative in his views, making sure that the families of farmers sat apart from the families of shepherds and ploughmen at Communion. He insisted on punctuality and made sure that fast-days were properly observed. He was a close friend of ‘Robbie’ and ‘Willie’ Shaw (ministers at Teviotdale, then Eswh, and at Langholm), as well as Rev. Adam Cunningham of Eskdalemuir. He gave evidence at the inquest into the riots that took place in Hawick at the election of 1837. He received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1856. He remained as minister at Castleton until his death. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. the Baths (thu-bawths) n. the Public Baths, also known as the Corporation Swimming Baths, gifted to the Town in 1912 by James Glenny, Charles John Wilson and George Murray Wilson of Wilson & Glenny Ltd. They included a swimming pool and private bathing facilities. Earlier proposals had been made for a public swimming facility, including at the Haugh around 1888. It is said that part of the reason it was built was to stop children swimming in the nearby mill lade. The design was by Alexander Inglis. A public clothes washing building (the Steam) was added in the early 1930s, and closed in 1981. The facilities were long in use as changing and washing facilities by the local junior rugby teams. The pool closed in 1982, when Teviotdale Leisure Centre opened. In 1985 the building was converted into a sports facility catering to small-bore shooting, boxing, etc.

the Battle o the Brig (thu-baw’-ul-ō-thu-brig) n. name sometimes given for a fight between 2 bands of gypsies around the Auld Brig of Hawick perhaps in the year 1772 or 1773, described by a Mr. Simpson. It was fought between the Kennedy and the Taits. The Kennedys were led by Alexander Kennedy; his wife Jean Ruthven, father-in-law Little Wull Ruthven (also known as ‘the Earl of Hell’), along with Muckle Wull Ruthven and many others, including women and children. The Taits were led by Auld Rob Tait, his wife Jean Gordon, Jacob Tait, young Rob Tait, etc. They were armed with cudgels, cutlasses and serrated pieces of metal on sticks. Jean Ruthven was wounded and the Kennedys retreated, leaving Alexander Kennedy alone on the bridge to battle the Taits. He was thrown new cudgels by on-lookers, until the melee was broken up by the arrival of the constables. Sir Walter Scott describes in 1819 a court case in which he defended a Kennedy who had killed an Irving in Jedburgh, the feud apparently going back ‘to a desperate quarrel and battle on Hawick Green’ some 40 years earlier, involving the grandfathers of both the assailant and victim; this was surely the same event.

battles (baw’-ulz) n., pl. several minor battles and skirmishes took place relatively near to Hawick, and local residents played a major role in many other engagements further afield. Most of those direct local relevance are described separately, including: Degastan 603; Alnwick 1093; Carham 1018; Halidon Hill 1333; Neville’s Cross (a.k.a. Durham) 1346; Otterburn 1388; Homil- don Hill 1402; Flodden 1513; Hornshole 1514; Skirmish Field (a.k.a. Battlinburn (baw’-lin-burn) n. Battlinburn, small stream near Westshiels farm, south of Lestruther, in the headwaters of the Jed in South dean Parish. It rises near Black Hill and runs roughly east, through Peden’s Cleuch, to join the Jed Water. Near its head is a linear earthwork, connecting it to the head of Wolfehopelee Burn. A cottage near the stream was the home of 2 aunts of James Teller of Saughtree. Commons in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A nearby cairn was supposed to be haunted by a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’), and was removed in the mid-1800s. It is said that this spirit appeared at the moment of death of one of those elderly sisters
Battlin Sike

bawbrek (baw-breik) n., arch. a kneading-board.

Bawden (baw-din) n. John James (1842–65) only son of John, from Tregohey, Cornwall, and Janet Crone, who later married John Fenwick.
He was an apprentice with John Melrose & Sons.
The story goes that during a break, the apprentice were throwing around turnips that had gathered in the dam during a spate, when one of them broke a window of the blacksmith’s shop. John Melrose interrogated the lads, and when it came to his turn he admitted he knew who had thrown the turnip, but refused to tell. Melrose dismissed him nevertheless, and he is supposed to have gone into a depression, leading to his early death in Langholm.

baxter (bawk-stur) n., arch. a baker. In Hawick the ‘baxter’ was another name for one of the 7 incorporated trades – ‘Paid at making a

‘The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, fleshers, shoemakers, and baxter’s’ [RRG].

Baxter (baw-k-stur) n. Rev. Alexander (20th C.) coming from missionary work in China, he became minister of the Congregational Kirk in 1927. His time as minister saw the church adopt its modern name from the former ‘E.U. Congregational’ title. His only son Alexander Morris-son was ordained and sent off to missionary work in China. He himself went back in 1933, acting as principal secretary for the London Missionary Society in London. Rev. David (d.1842) from Leslie in Fife, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1798 and ordained at Birnie in 1809. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by James, Duke of Roxburghe in 1816. He remained there until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Ann, daughter of James Campbeltin of Edinburgh, and she died in 1848. Their children included: Margaret Campbell, who married Rev. Adam Gourlay, who succeeded as minister of Lilliesleaf; Jemima Nicolina, who married William King, minister at Nelson, Ontario; Maria Anne, who married Alexander Fraser of Edinburgh; Harriet, who married Joseph French, a chemist in Australia; John David, who died young; and Helen Frances, who married E. Naysmith Houston, a doctor in Australia.

Baxtongill (bawk-stin-gil) _n._ former farmstead in Liddesdale, adjacent to Hillhouse. On the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it was combined with Hillhouse. However, it is unclear what part was Baxtongill, and whether there was a small stream of that name there.

Baxtonlees (bawk-stin-beez) _n._ another name for Peel in the upper headwaters of the Liddel, near the eastern border of Castleton Parish. The tower of ‘Martin Crosiers of baxtonleis’ is marked on Sandison’d c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. It was ‘Baxtounlyis’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. In 1607 it was purchased by Gilbert Elliot of Stobs from John, son of John Home of Carolsyde. John Colthart was there in 1622. A tower house is marked as ‘Baikstonleys’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, near the head of the Liddel, to the east of Myredykes. In 1645 William, son of Gilbert Elliot of Stobs, was served heir to his father in these lands. However, by 1653, 1660 and 1663 it is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, John Elliot ‘in Backstoneleys alias peel’ paid tax on land valued at £160 in Castleton Parish. By 1788 it was owned by Archibald Douglas of Douglas. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 listed ‘Backstonlees, Blackstonelees, or Peel’, when it was still valued at £160 and owned by Lord Douglas. Later in the 19th century it was owned by John Elliot-Scott (also spelled ‘Baxtonlies’, as well as ‘Backstanelees’, etc.; it is ‘Baxstanelies’ in 1622, ‘Bextanleyis’ in 1645, ‘Bastounlyis’ in 1653, ‘Baxtounleyes’ in 1657 and 1661 and ‘Baxtonelies’ in 1663).

baylyea (bål-ye) n., arch. a burgh magistrate, this older form being common up to the early 18th century – ‘...to ye baylyeas and toune counsel of Hawick ...’ [BR], ‘The quhilke day the baylyeas and Counsell of this towne and brugh being convened ...’ [BR1673], ‘...in ane egregious abusing of William Layng, present baylyea ...’ [BR1685], ‘...William Layng one of the present Baylyeas, and James Scott, littister, late baylyea there’ [BR1686]. ‘...the tuo forsaid Baylyeas of the said Brugh of Havicke and present Towne Counsell therof, late Baylyeas and Magistrats of the said towne and of the old Counsell and other inhabitants therein ...’ [BR1692] (also written ‘baillyea’, ‘bailyea’, ‘bailzie’, ‘balyea’, etc.; this contains the old Scots consonant known as the ‘liquid l’; cf. the more modern bailie).

the B.Bs. (thu-bee-beez) _n._ the Boys Brigade, founded by Sir William Smith in Scotland in 1883, now a worldwide organisation. In Hawick it began in 1893 (although something with the same name is recorded in 1888), and there were once as many as 6 companies, with 4 surviving: 1st Hawick (Wilton Parish); 2nd Hawick (St. Mary’s & Old Parish); 5th Hawick (Burnfoot Parish); and 6th Hawick (Trinity). Meeting spaces have included the Buccleuch Memorial, West Port Church, Hawick Parish Church, Wilton Church, Burnfoot Church and Trinity Church. The Denholm company was disbanded in the 1980s, but reformed in 2005. An important activity has been the annual camp. The Hawick B.Bs. were also involved in the formation of the Hawick Pipe Band. A tree in the grounds at Riddell has memorial plaques for men associated with the 46th Edinburgh Company. A local B.B. pipe band was founded in 1937.

the Beach (thu-beech) n. previous name for the Gretel bar, presumably because of its location near the river.

the Beacon Denner (thu-bee-kin-de-nur) n. annual dinner at St. Boswells inaugurated in 1805 to commemorate the False Alarm. It was started after a group left the Monteviot toll-house without paying for their drinks, when they heard of the alarm. They were asked to return 12 months later to settle up. It took place at the toll-bar for a few years, then in St. Boswells itself, lapsing after 1879 and was revived in 1932.

Beaconsfield Terrace (bee-kinz-feeld-te-ris) n. street in the West End, built in 1878 and named after Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881), who was Earl of Beaconsfield and Prime Minister at the time. Earlier the street was referred to as Westport Road, and the region immediately to the east known as Wylie’s Dub. The first houses were built by Messrs. Smith & Scott and the lower ones a little later by James Scott & Sons, builders (note the pronunciation differs from what Mr. Disraeli would have said; also spelled ‘Beecosfield’).

Beaconsfield Terrace Lane (bee-kinz-feeld-te-ris-lan) n. lane behind Beaconsfield Terrace, reached from Green Lane. It is essentially the top houses of Beaconsfield Terrace, which are reached from the back (also known as ‘Beaconsfield Lane’).

beadle (bee-dul) n. a paid officer in the Church of Scotland, acting as the minister’s assistant, a verger, church caretaker. The duties formerly involved being the bell-ringer as well as perhaps the grave-digger (see also beddal and bedrel).

bealin (bee-lin) adj. festering, painful – ‘A’ve got a bealin finger’ [JT], ‘A ken ma thoom’s bealin, ’cause it’s putt, puttn (throb, throbbing)’ [ECS], very angry (also written ‘beelin’).

Beaumont see Bowmont

beand (bee-ind) pres., part., arch. being – ‘. . . to be haldin of me or myn. aeriis, and beand ten-nandis to me and thaim of the sammyn’ [SB1470], ‘. . . he beand oblist to remove and take away the said stane dyck within the space of seven years thereafter’ [BR1640].

bear (beer) n., arch. barley, sometimes implying a course sort, commonly the six-rowed variety – ‘. . . the sewing of ane flrlof of aits, half ane flrlof of beir sewing seed, and lime . . . ’ [BR1640], ‘Trinity land in Hawick sett to Robert Scott of Horslehill for 15 bolls victual half meall half bear’ [Buc1690], ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bolis of beir from the Lady Newtoune, and ane from Gladstanes’ [BR1699], ‘You shall dispose of half their Gear, And Money get to spend by Year, Both Meal and Malt Corn and Bear, for your sweet bonny Lassie’ [AHS] (also spelled ‘beir’).

bearded needle (beer-deed-nee-dul) n. a knitting frame needle with a hooked end that closes when flexed. So when the yarn is placed under and the beard is pressed the stitch can be cast off, enabling the process to continue and thus form a chain.

beardie-loachie (beer-dee-lo-chee) n., arch. a loach, Cobitis fluviatilis barbatula – ‘A favourite pastime with many was ‘gumping’ for ‘baggies’, ‘beardie-letchies’ and trout, when the water was low’ [HAST1908], ‘. . . as wad soom a baggie, sir, or a beardie loachie’ [WNK] (there are several variants, including just ‘beardie’; cf. katie beardie and loochie).

Beardy Jack (beer-dee-jawk) n. nickname for a tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. His party pieces were to sing ‘Nelly Bly’ and ‘The Old Kentucky Home’. bear the gree (bar-thu-gree) v., poet. to carry off the prize, take the honours – ‘Mang ither toons she bears the gree . . . ’ [JT], ‘The first in arms, in art, and song, She aye has borne the gree; There’s ne’er a land like Scotland yet – For Scotland aye was free’ [JT] (a familiar phrase in beasteon (bee’s, bā’-ee-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded as ‘Ade Batesoun’ among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitchope in 1582. He must have been a supporter of the Armstrungs, who led the raid. John ‘John o the Score’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among Armstrungs and about 500 others accused of raiding the farms of the Lairds of Prendick and Ryle in Northumberland. His surname is transcribed as ‘Bateson’ and it is unclear what his surname meant. Note that there is an Armstrong of the same nickname recorded in 1590 and so there may be confusion here. William (17th C.) named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany.

Beaton (bee’in) n. James (1473–1539) 6th and youngest son of John of Balfour. He was also uncle of Cardinal David Beaton. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1493 and became Precentor of Dornoch Cathedral, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, Prior of Whithorn and Abbot of Dunfermline. He was also appointed Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, succeeding his brother David of Creich. In 1508/9 he was made Bishop of Galloway, but before being consecrated he was selected as the successor to Robert Blackadder as Archbishop of Glasgow. He was thus Archbishop in Teviotdale and following Flodden he became the country’s senior churchman and crowned the infant James V. In 1515 he became Lord Chancellor of Scotland and was an important political figure during the King’s minority. In 1522 he was transferred to the bishopric of St. Andrews. He helped convince the King to ally the nation with France rather than England, thus incurring the wrath of Henry VIII. He died at St. Andrews. His seal bore an elaborate image of St. Kentigern, with shields and the words ‘SIGILLUM JACOBI ARCHIEPISCOPI GLAS-...’ James (1517–1603) son of James of Balfour, who was a nephew of James, Archbishop of Glasgow. He was also a nephew of Cardinal David. He was educated in Paris and in 1550 was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550, although not yet being in priest’s orders. He was consecrated in 1552, becoming the last Archbishop before the Reformation. Like those before him, his jurisdiction included Teviotdale. He stood on the side of the queen-regent Mary of Guise, and opposed much that was happening in Scotland. In 1560 he left for France, taking many of the documents and treasures of the diocese with him; most of the precious objects disappeared during the French Revolution although he returned the mac to Glasgow University, but many of the documents, deposited in the Scots College there, eventually were returned to Scotland. He was appointed ambassador to France for Mary Queen of Scots, and was a close ally for the rest of her life (one of the ‘Four Marys’ was his cousin). He forfeited his bishopric in 1570 and in 1574 was among the clergy declared as outlaws by the Privy Council. Somewhat bizarrely he was restored to the archbishopric and all its benefices in 1598 ‘notwithstanding that he has never acknowleded the religion professed within the realm’. He survived to see the Union of the Crowns, and died on a day when James VII was on his way to London. He is buried in Paris. Janet (see Janet Scott. Robert (b.c.1479) younger son of John, 4th of Balfour. The family name was also spelled ‘Bethune’ and ‘Betoun’. His brother was Archbishop of St. Andrews. He was Abbot of Cupar and then Abbot of Melrose from shortly before 1510 until the early 1520s. In 1519 he assigned Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as bailie to the Abbey’s lands of Melroselands (formerly ‘Betoun’ and variants).

Beattie (bee’ee, bee-te, bā’ee) n. Adam (d.1504) hanged at Dumfries for assisting the ‘King’s Rebels, at the horn, being of Eskdale in their Thefts and treasonable deeds’. Adam
Beattie

(16th C.) listed as ‘Adame of the Burne’ in Monipennie’s list of Borderers drawn up in the 1580s. He was from somewhere in Eskdale. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Riccarton in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam of Hartsgarth (17th/18th C.) sold Hartsgarth and Langhaugh to John Oliver of Dinlabyre, probably in the early 1700s. He was probably the Adam who married a daughter of Christopher Irving, from whom he inherited Hartsgarth. Adam (18th C.) managed the farm of Hermitage for Robert Elliot in the mid-1700s. Elliot was farmer of an extensive set of farms centred on Braidlie. It is possible he was the ‘Adam Beatie of Lehaugh’ (perhaps Leaugh in Liddesdale) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Adam (1800/1–79) son of William and Isabel Glendinning. In 1851 he was a carter on South Hermitage Street in Newcastle. He married Helen Adams (1800/1–79) from Silloth) and their son Drew was a teacher and Lodge 424. In 1939 he married Peggie Sim

Arthur (17th C.) tenant at `Chorlesoip' (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hawick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The mance of Hauick’ and is recorded as ‘Beger’ (presumably meaning he was a beggar). Archibald (18th C.) tenant in Grainfoot. His son John (1751/2–77) is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Arthur (16th C.) listed as ‘Mungoes Arthure’ in the list of Borderers from the 1580s. He is listed under ‘Batisons of Cowghorlae’. He is ‘Mungois Arthour Batie’ when listed as a relief pledge for ‘Alyis Hew’ and ‘Johhne the Braid’ at a court held in Hawick and Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Workman’s Andro’ along with men from Liddesdale and Eskdale. Andrew (1787–1866) from Westerkirk, he lived at ‘Elliotfield’ (presumably Elliot’s Field on the Slitrig) in the 1820s and 30s, and some of his children were born in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. He was later tenant farmer at Watcarrick. He married Isobel Jackson (1788–1875). Their children included: Jane (1813–32), who died at Elliot’s Field; Agnes (1818–43); Helen (b.1821), born in Cavers Parish; Walter (1826–32), also died at Elliot’s Field; Margaret (b.1827), born in Hawick Parish; William (b.1833), born in Cavers Parish and later farmer at Watcarrick; and Walter (again, b.1836). Andrew (1807–65) son of John and Cilia Hall. He was a fleshers in Denholm. He rented a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning, adjacent to Robson the blacksmiths. In 1835 he married Helen Ferguson (1817–82). Their children included: John (b.1837); Thomas (b.1839); Isobel (b.1841); John (again, 1843–1912); Cecil (b.1845); Helen (b.1849); George (b.1851); and Andrew (b.1858). Andrew (20th C.) son of John Beattie, his mother being Helen, he was born at 25 Loan. He was related to the Ekrons of Hawick. He was educated at St. Cuthbert’s and the High School and apprenticed as a frameworker with Wilglen Knitwear, later moving to Lyle & Scott. He joined the 4th Battalion, K.O.S.B., and reached the rank of Regimental Sergeant Major. He was famed for his tidyness and nicknamed ‘Little Nap’ (or Wee Napoleon). He was awarded the M.B.E. and Belgian Croix de Guerre for service during the war. Along with a few other men he celebrated the Common Riding in the town of Letzingen, Germany, using a flag provided by the ladies of Pringle’s mill. He was on the Common-Riding Committee and also associated with Weens Home, the Burns Club and Lodge 424. In 1939 he married Peggie Sim from Silloth and their son Drew was a teacher at Selkirk High School. He lived at 15 Langhope Drive. He died at the age of 84. Archibald (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficiens in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The mance of Hauick’ and is recorded as ‘Beger’ (presumably meaning he was a beggar). Archibald (18th C.) tenant in Grainfoot. His son John (1751/2–77) is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Arthur (16th C.) listed as ‘Mungoes Arthure’ in the list of Borderers from the 1580s. He is listed under ‘Batisons of Cowghorlae’. He is ‘Mungois Arthour Batie’ when listed as a relief pledge for ‘Alyis Hew’ and ‘Johhne the Braid’ at a court held in Hawick in 1569. Arthur (17th C.) tenant at ‘Chorlesoip’ (probably Thorlieshope) in 1646 when he presented a bond for Adam Armstrong ‘called Rattas in Blackhoip’. This was along with John ‘in Ryn dhill’ who was probably a relative. Arthur (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gulenflatt & Greeholme’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. David (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton parish in 1739. Their children included David (b.1740). David (18th C.) tenant in Mangerton. His children William (1757/8–80) and John (who died in infancy) are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He is probably the commissioner of the people, who in 1753 requested a supply of preachers from the Associate Presbytery of Edinburgh. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Oakwood, on the estate of Hugh Scott of Harden. The Border Counties’ Magazine describes how he used to have a pet ram, who would but all visitors to his farm. It was the terror of the neighbourhood until a packman, who was chased from the farm, was forced to take his ‘ellwand’ to it, crippling one of its legs. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Edward (16th/17th C.) fined along with several others in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was referred to as ‘callit of Calsay’; it is unclear where this was, although among his accomplices were Armstrongs of Liddesdale. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in Hudhouse in 1611 when ‘Adie Rakkes’ was precaution for him at court in Jedburgh. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Steill’ in 1623 when he served as caution for Mungo ‘in Carretrig’. He was probably tenant in the Steil in Liddesdale. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale. These were Rockstead, ‘Neirland’ (probably Netherraw) and ‘Podotoun’ (probably Paddington). Francis (17th C.) recorded as tenant in an unnamed farm in Castleton Parish in 1694. This is listed between the farms of Langhaugh and Redheugh. Francis (17th C.) tenant at Peel in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Francis (19th C.) from the Hawick area. In 1835 he emigrated to Canada with his family, settling in Puslinch, Ontario. He married Ann ‘Andison’ and their children included: William (b.1819); Robert (b.1821); Mary (b.1823); Euphemia (b.1826); and Margaret (b.1828). Gavin (16th/17th) recorded as ‘callit Gavine of ye Hill’ when he was accused in 1622 of stealing a horse in 1620. However, he was acquitted. Gavin (17th C.) tenant in Overraw in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) started a hosiery factory at Denholm in partnership with Archibald Dickson in 1793. He is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a stockingmaker in Denholm. By 1815 the firm had amalgamated into Dicksons, Beattie & Laings in Hawick, which became Dicksons & Laings on his retirement. He could be the George, stockingmaker in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Pinglehole when first recorded as a head of household in 1836. By 1841 he was shepherd at Larriston. Helen (18th/19th C.) servant at the Manse in Ewes in 1788. Helen (d.1838) resident of Hawick. The registration of her death gives her nickname as ‘ Helen the Cook’. Hugh (16th C.) listed as ‘Hew Batie’ on Monipennie’s list of Borderers from about the 1580s. He is probably the ‘Hew Batie callit Alyis Hew’ who entered a pledge at a court in Hawick in 1569, along with ‘Jolinne the Braid’. This was for men of the surname of Bateson, as well as Thomson and Glendinning. His brother David was also listed as a relief pledge. He is probably the Hugh whose son ‘Andro Baty’ is recorded being released from ward before 1573 and whose son John was warded with George Maxwell of Newark in 1574. Hugh (17th C.) tenant in ‘Bridghouscleughhead’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Perhaps the same Hugh took out a lease on the farm of Greens in 1682. Isobel (17th/18th C.) servant on the Falnash estate. In 1720 Robert Welsh (who also worked on the estate there) confessed to the Hawick minister his sin of fornication with her, and went through the usual punishments. In 1724 she was threatened with excommunication if she continued to fail to appear for public rebuke; whether this was for the same or another transgression is unclear. In 1725 her daughter told the Session that her mother was helping the sick James Elliot in Bowanhill. If she was also guilty this seems to have passed unnoticed. James (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick. In 1723, along with another smith, John Scott, they were called to the session to explain their involvement with a ‘scandal’ committed in Ettrick Parish by a Janet Andison. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Fairloans in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident recorded at Southdean on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 7 horses. James (b.c.1773) son of William and Janet Anderson, he was born at Craikhope. Most of his children were also born at Craikhope. He married Margaret Oliver, from Roberton. Their children included: Helen (1790–1879), who married Robert Shannon; William (1801–27), who married Janet Lunn; Janet Anderson (b.1802), who died in infancy; James (b.1803), who probably died young; Robert (1804–37), who married Margaret Storrie; Janet (1806–80), who married

James William Rae; Andrew (1807–85), who married Mary McDougall; Margaret (1809–60), who married William Scott; James (1811–84), who married Elizabeth Elliot; and Agnes (d.1852), who married John Elliot. The family emigrated to Canada, settling in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Denholm, along with John, who was probably his brother or son (or father). In 1815 they were recorded among Denholm men accused of ‘mobbing and deforcing water bailifs’, but acquitted. James (b.1795/6) shepherd at Whitropefoot in 1851 and 1861. He married Isabella Telfer, who died in 1875, aged 77. Their children included: Barbary (1827/8–47); John (b.1834), who died in infancy; Agnes; John; and Arthur. James (b.c.1815) son of Walter. He was listed as a teacher in Newcastleton in 1841, living with his parents at about 12 North Hermitage Street. John (16th C.) listed as ‘John the Braid’ among the Beatties of the Shiel in the c.1580s list of Borderers. He lived somewhere in Eskdale. He is ‘Johnne Batie callit Johhne the Braid in 1569 when he and ‘Alyis Hew’ were pledges for Batesons, Thoms and Glindnings at a court held in Hawick. John (17th C.) tenant in Watcarrick (near Eskdalemuir). In 1675 James ‘Holme’ from Kelso was fined for accusing him of stealing 3000 plants from the ‘plant market’ in Hawick. John (17th C.) resident of Newton in Kirkton Parish. His children included John (b.1709), John (17th C.) tenant in Billhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, married to Marion Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: John (b.1672); Thomas (b.1674); George (b.1676); Bessie (b.1679); Robert (b.1681); and Marion (b.1684). The witnesses in 1676 were Henry Haliburton and Thomas Scott. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th/18th C.) elder in Castleton Parish, recorded in 1698. John (18th/19th C.) resident in Denholm, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same as the stocking-maker recorded in 1815. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (b.1786/7) originally from Bewcastle, he worked as a shepherd in Roberton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Howpasley Comb (or ‘Combe’).

He married Isobel Scott, said to be a niece of Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford; she died in 1848, aged 59. Their children included: Beatrices (b.1815); John (b.1817); James (b.1818); Adam (b.1820); Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1821); Isobel (b.1823); Andrew (b.c.1827); Janet (b.c.1829); Helen (b.c.1831), who married Walter Rutherford; and Peter (b.c.1835). His grand-daughter Isabella Govenlock also lived with his family in 1851; she died in 1854, aged 14. In 1861 he was visiting Langlee in Ladhope Parish. The family are buried in Roberton Cemetery. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, James, Andrew, Thomas and Charles. John (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. He was the first Vice-President when the Mission was formally founded in the next year. John (1852–1933) born at Craik, son of William and Elizabeth Grieve. He lived in Hawick. In 1879 he married Mary McLean, from Glencairn. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1880); Samuel (b.1884); and William (b.1887). John (1862–c.1945) from Hawick, he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Ekron. They lived in Clydebank during WWI, but returned to Hawick, living on the Loan, then on Drumlanrig Square and also at 2 Slitrig Place. Their children were: John; Elizabeth; and Andrew (1887–1973), who married Lillie Nichol Nivet. John (19th/20th C.) served as a regular soldier before WWI and was captured in the first days of the War. Along with an Englishman and 2 Russians he escaped from a German prison camp, made his way to neutral Holland and returned to Hawick in 1917. He lived on Yarrow Terrace. Rev. John MacFarlane Benny (b.1896) son of John B., a merchant from Montreal, Canada. He was educated at McGill and Edinburgh Universities and licensed to preach in 1923. He was assistant at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh and served during WWI in the Canadian Royal Artillery. He was ordained at St. Mungo’s and then translated to Wilton Kirk to be minister in 1931. He was minister of the Parish until 1959. He married Mary Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Harbiston Gray Wallace. They had a daughter Jean Elizabeth Mary (b.1936). John Armstrong ‘Jock’ (1907–77) joiner by trade he played as a forward for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1930s, becoming captain, gaining 23 Scottish caps, and going on to be President of the S.R.U. Beattie Court is named after him. Margaret (18th C.) already an old lady in 1788 when she gave evidence at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. She is said to have ‘brought forward no evidence of the slightest value’. Mary (b.c.1790) recorded as toll-keeper and spirit dealer in 1841. She was at Wilton Toll, i.e. Dovemount Toll. She also lived with her daughter Margaret. Mary (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Miss Mary, Castleton’ in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. She could be the Mary who married Robert Armstrong and lived at Myredykes. Mungo (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Carretrig’ in 1623. Francie in Steel served as caretaker for him at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was accused of stealing 35 sheep from Mugo Wood in ‘Sterkscheillhill’, but was acquitted. Nichol of the Shiel (16th C.) listed by Monipennie in the 1580s roll of Borderers. He is recorded as ‘Nicholl of the Scheill’ near Langholm. In 1569 he was listed as a relief pledge for ‘Alyis Hew’ and ‘Jo-hune the Braid’ at a court held in Hawick. Also in 1569 he was one of the Beatties (along with Nichol ‘in Carniesgill’ and John, son to ‘Wat of the Kerse’) for whom ‘Johme Batie of the yairdis’ was held as pledge in Glasgow Castle. In 1574 he was ordered to remain warded with John Maxwell of Nether Pollock. He is probably the Nichol who signed a bond in 1584 with the English Warden, along with several other Beatties from Eskdale. His sons ‘Andro and Jamie Batie’ were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Nichol of Whis-gill (16th C.) recorded in the 1584 bond of assurance as ‘Nycoll Batie of Whisgyll’. It is unclear how he was related to the other 6 Beatties whose names are also listed. Robert (1724/5–1781) resident at Craik. He married Marion Linton in 1765 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1766) and Margaret (1768–76); and Isobel (b.1771). He is buried in Borthwick Waas. Robert (b.c.1775) toll-keeper at the Note o the Gate. He was recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Margaret and daughter Isobel. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Castleton Parish, he lived at Flaschlom in Ewesdale. By 1851 and 1861 he was listed as a gamekeeper there. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, Andrew, Elizabeth, Archibald, Janet, John and William. Robert (1809/10–91) tenant farmer at Wolfcleuchhead, he was son of William and Janet Telfer, who are buried at Watcarrick. He married Jane Crozier, who died in 1886, aged 78. Their son Robert died at Ropelawshiel when he was 26. Another son William farmed at Broughton and a third, John, lived in Yarrow. He himself is buried at Ettrick. He must have been one of the last residents at Wolfcleuchhead. Robert (b.1815) from Langholm, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He is recorded as head of household in 1841. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1851 and on Doncaster Street in 1861. He was also listed on Pigot’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included James, Helen, William, Adam and John. Robert (b.1824/5) from England, he was shepherd at Pin, in southern Castleton Parish, in 1851. His wife was Jane. Robert (b.1828/9) from Stow, he was a carrier on the High Street in Hawick in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth from Castleton and they had children Jessie Scott, Mary Scott, Robert and John. He is probably the Robert listed as grocer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Roland ‘James Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) presumably son of James. In 1613 he had 7 sheep stolen from his farm at Raeburn in Eskdalemuir. In 1616 he was one of the ‘Persewaris’ for the case against Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Barnes in Kirkton Parish. His children included Robert (b.1712). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Betty Wright in 1761. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James Black in 1764. Thomas (17th/18th C.) town piper around 1700. He is recorded as ‘pyper’ on the list of contributors to the town bell fund in 1693/4. Thomas of Meikledale and Crieve (1736–1826) owner of Hartsgarth farm and farmer at Meikledale. He was taxed for having a female servant in Meikledale in 1788–90. He was at Meikledale on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. Also in 1797 he was taxed for having 5 non-working dogs and a clock. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He supplied a version of ‘Tamlane’ to Sir Walter Scott and was also said to be responsible for introducing Gilpin Horner of Todshawhill into the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. He also left a journal, which was recently transcribed by his great-great-great-grand-niece. He died in Langholm. Thomas (1826–98) son of John and Elizabeth Andison. He was a hosiery warehouseman with Walter Wilson & Sons. In later life he owned several properties in Hawick. In 1855 in Wilton Parish he married Agnes Scott (who died in 1909, aged 78). Their children included: James; 2 sons who died in infancy; John of Broadview, mill manager with Wilson & Glenny's; Robert; and Thomas, whose son, also Thomas, was cashier at Pesco's and married Jean Anderson. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas 'Tommy' (b.1839) son of Denholm butcher Andrew. He was also a butcher and also travelled to serve Rulewater from about 1855. He married the cook at Wells House. He had a son Andrew, who continued the family butcher's business in Denholm.

Thomas (1848–1929) born in Harriethead in Eskdalemuir, son of Walter and Helen Scott. In 1882/3 he moved his family from Craighill in Ettrick to Broadlee in Roberton Parish. They moved again to Ashieburn in 1903 and emigrated to Saskatchewan, Canada in 1907. Their children were: John Little 'Jack' (1871–1946), who died in Calgary; Mary Wight 'Mame' (1874–1951), who died in Nanaimo, British Columbia; Walter (1876–87); Helen Scott 'Nell' (1879–1971), died in Calgary; George Thomas Little (1882–92); William 'Bill' (1883–1969), born at Broadlee and died in Alberta; Robert Anderson 'bob' (1894–1973), born at Broadlee, died in Calgary; Nichol Aeneas McInnes (1894–1973), born at Broadlee, died in Calgary; Thomasina Little ‘Dolly’ (1896–1989), born at Broadlee, died in White Rock, British Columbia; and Hector McDonald (1900–88) born at Broadlee, died in British Columbia. Thomas 'Tom' (b.1861) sculptor and artist. He was born in Hawick, son of the pioneering local photographer William and Helen Dalglish. He drew portraits of 'Andrew the King,' among others. He became a stone mason, who was responsible for stone-work on the Buccleuch Memorial among other buildings. He moved to Edinburgh with his family to obtain more regular work, and they stayed on Haymarket Terrace. He worked on the interior of the Usher Hall. He also completed the work on the Horse Memorial in 1921, adding the Latin inscription and some words about the sculptor, his son William, who had died in the War. Walter 'Wat of the Corse' (16th C.) listed on the 1580s roll of Borderers, along with other Beatties of the Shiel near Langholm. His lands were probably Corseholm on the Wauchope Water. Walter (b.1809/10) blacksmith at Hermitage Bridgend in at least 1841–1861. His son-in-law, Andrew Easton, assisted him. His wife was Eliza and their children include Helen, Thomas, John and Mary Elliot. William (17th C.) recorded as 'Wm. Baitie in Todiscleuchsyde' when he witnessed a he heard Dr. Charters of Wilton claim that Duncan himself was a poacher, because he said that ‘Duncan had entered his preserves, and quite relieved him of not a few foul birds’. It was said that his great-grandmother was wife of one of the Covenanters who died on Airdsmoss along with Richard Cameron. William (1801–27) son of James and Margaret Oliver, he was born at Craikhope. He married Janet (1806–79), daughter of James Lunn and Elizabeth Telford; she later married Robert Nichol. Their only child was William (1827–76), who was born at Craik Fauls. William (1804/5–79) carter and road contractor in Newcastle. He may be the ‘William, junior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1841 to 1861 he was at about 11 Douglas Square. He married Helen (‘Nellie’) Beattie, who died at Dykes, Rulewater, on 1887, aged 74. Their children included: William (1829/30–74); John (1833/4–55); George, a carter; Arthur (1836/7–71); Thomas (1841/2–92); James; Mary (1844/5–89); Helen; Archibald (1848/9–80); Betty; Andrew; and John (again). He was charged as father of Betty Matthew’s child in 1832, but denied it. William (b.c.1810) born in Denholm, he was a baker there in at least the 1840s to 60s. He was based on Westside. He married Janet Davidson and their children included Cecil, Euphemia, Mary W. and John W. It was probably his mother who was the ‘Widow Beattie’ recorded as a baker there. William (1819–88) born in Hawick, son of Francis and Ann Anderson. He emigrated to Ontario along with his father in 1834. He was a farmer in North Dumfries Township. In 1844 he married Isabella Walker, who was from Oxnam, and they had 10 children. William (1827–76) born at Craik Fauls, son of William and Janet Lunn. In 1841 he was a labourer with Walter Lunn at Meadshaw. He was a shepherd, living in Borthwickhead Schoollabourer with Walter Lunn at Meadshaw. He emigrated to Ontario along with his father in 1834. He was a farmer in North Dumfries Township. In 1844 he married Isabella Walker, who was from Oxnam, and they had 10 children. William (1827–76) born at Craik Fauls, son of William and Janet Lunn. In 1841 he was a labourer with Walter Lunn at Meadshaw. He was a shepherd, living in Borthwickhead School. In 1851. He married Elizabeth (1827–96), daughter of John Grieve and Mary Glendinning. Their children included: William (1850–1929), who died in Bowden; John (1852–1933); Mary (b.1855), who died young; Janet Grieve (1857–88), who died in Oliver Crescent, Hawick; and Mary Glendinning (1862–1954), who married Thomas Storey. William (1830–91) stockingmaker and pioneering photographer in Hawick. He was father of Thomas and grandfather of the sculptor William. He took a photograph showing the landscape around Hawick in 1862 (which exists in the form of a published sketch, although the photo itself has disappeared). It is also possible that he was responsible for the 1857 Cornet’s photo (but it is unknown for certain who the photographer was). His photographic studio was at ‘Old Toll House’, 11 Back Row roughly in the period 1855–60, and may then have moved to 4 Millport. He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Dalgleish, who was from Dalgleish. Their children included: Joanna (b.c.1857); Thomas (b.1861); and William (b.1863). William (1850–1929) son of William and Elizabeth Grieve. His children were born in Roberton Parish, some at Meadshaw. In 1875 in Minto Parish he married Christina Scott Heatlie, daughter of James Heatlie and Christina Scott. Their children included: Christina Scott (1875–1901); William (b.1877), who died in the U.S.A.; James Heatlie (1878–1929); Elizabeth Grieve (1881–1973), who married Frances Elliot; Janet (1882–1974), who married Thomas Dickson; Mary (1885–1989), who married Grigor John Cameron and died in Hawick; and John Grieve (1889–1909). William (19th C.) postman who served Ewesdale from Langholm. He survived an attack by Highwaymen near the Wrae Wood, but was later accidentally shot while cleaning the pistol that he kept for his protection. William Francis (1888–1918) sculptor, born in Hawick, only son of sculptor Thomas and Annie Kate. His father moved the family to Hawick and he was educated at George Waton’s and then attended the Edinburgh College of Art, where he eventually became a member of staff. He also joined the Brunstane Rugby Club and Portobello Amateur Rowing Club. In 1910 he joined the Lothian And Border Horse volunteer regiment. He set up business for himself as a sculptor in Edinburgh. In 1913 his plaster model for the ‘Horse’ monument was selected, and his statue completed in bronze, being unveiled in 1914. At the unveiling ceremony the manufacturer Peter Scott said in his speech that he ‘was a young man with a great future before him and at no distant time would no doubt be one of Hawick’s most distinguished sons’. However, he was called up when war broke out a few months later, and frustrated at remaining inactive he obtained a commission to the Royal Horse Artillery, being posted to France. In 1917 he was transferred to the 73/5 Brigade of the Royal Field Artillery and was awarded the Military Cross for carrying wounded soldiers under shell fire. He suffered from a gas attack in 1918, taking several months to recover, rejoining his unit in September when he was promoted to Acting Major. Just 2 weeks later he was fatally wounded in action, dying only a few weeks before the end of the war. His grave is located at Tincourt Military Cemetery in France. Shortly before his death he was made a life member of the Lodge St. John No. 111. His father later inscribed a permanent reminder of his loss into the base of the Horse monument, ‘Sculptor Major William F. Beattie M.C. R.F.A., a native of Hawick, born 1886, killed in France 1918’. In France the word ‘Teribus’ was added to his gravestone. In 2018 there was a procession and commemoration on the centenary of his death, with the horse draped in poppies (formerly ‘Baity’, ‘Batie’, ‘Baty’, ‘Beatty’, ‘Beatty’, ‘Beaty’, ‘Betie’, etc.; see also Badie).

Beattie Court (bee-ee-, bee-tee-kör’) n. part of the Meadows, refurbished in 1896, and at that time named after rugby player Jock Beattie.

Beattie’s (bee-eez) n. John Beattie & Sons, funeral business operating in Hawick since 1806. It was taken over in 2009 by Edinburgh based firm William Purves Ltd.

Beattie’s Knowe (bee-eez-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just north of Saughtree. Enclosures are shown there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Beaty (bee-ee) n. R. Stuart appointed an Assistant Designer at Pringle’s of Scotland in 1950, becoming a Director in 1964. He retired in 1974 after 34 years with the company.

Beauties of the Border (bew-tee-ow-thu-bör-dur) n. book written by William Scott, schoolmaster at Burnmouth in Liddesdale and published in 1821. It was essentially a follow-up to his popular ‘Border Exploits’. It contained descriptions of the counties and districts that lay on both sides of the Border. Coming so early, it contains many anecdotes that are recorded for the first time, or not noted elsewhere at all.

beb (beb) v., arch. to drink in small quantities, sip, tipple – ‘A saw um, thereckly, bebbin an taain oot ov a bottle’ [ECS].

beck (bek) v., poet. to bow, bend – ‘...thaye hae sete thair eyne beckin’ doun til the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Thaye that dwall in the wuldirniss sall beck afore him ...’ [HSR].

Beck (bek) n. John (b.c.1770) from England, he was an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1825/6 he is recorded at the Grapes, Bucchleuch Street, and in 1837 on Silver Street. In 1837 he was innkeeper of ‘Beck’s Inn’, which was also known as the Coach and Horses. In 1841 he was living with his wife Nanny at about 4 Silver Street. John (b.c.1783) younger son of William. He was a hosiery manufacturer of the early 19th century, operating in the High Street. He was listed as a hosier in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His might be the property marked ‘Beck’ on the north side of the east end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Margaret Walker and had children William, Thomas, Margaret and Helen. Mary (b.c.1780) vintner listed at West Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was listed as ‘Independent’ at the East end in the 1841 census. Robert (19th C.) flesher who was Cornet in 1834. He was either a descendant of William the manufacturer, or son of John and Agnes Wilson. He paid £23 for rent of the Bleachfield in 1832. He married Euphemia Thomson in 1835 (and so presumably gave up being Left-Hand Man). Their children included: John (b.1836); and Walter (1838–bef. 1881). It appears that he became a civil servant, being promoted from 4th to 3rd Class Customs Clerk in London in 1858. He lived at Peckham in South London. His daughters Jessie, Agnes and Euphemia worked as telegraphists, while Robert (b.c.1841) was a Shop’s Steward. William (18th/19th C.) from Carlisle, he was apprenticed to Bailie Hardie in 1775. Afterwards he started out on his own, and by 1818 was producing 41,000 pairs of hose per year. He became one of the most popular employers in Hawick, being the only manufacturer who refused to lower wages during the dispute that led to the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822. There is a record of 1788 (with the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of him asking for funds to purchase a frame for ribbed stockings. One of his frameknitting apprentices was John Pringle, half-brother of Robert, founder of Pringle’s; the letter of indenture as an apprentice from 1794 survives. He is still recorded as a stocking manufacturer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His firm was declared bankrupt in 1821, but must have recovered. However, it collapsed in 1826, possibly related to bank failures at the time. A sale of his company’s and personal effects took place in the Subscription Rooms in late 1827 (including the sale of his share in those Rooms). Since his household possessions were also being sold off, then probably he died in 1827. An engraved cup presented to him by his employees in 1819 is in the Museum. His stocking-shop was off the back of 21 High Street, and he is marked as owner there on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1779 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’), daughter of Beck
Beck’s

Walter Wilson (known as ‘Haunless Wat’) in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1780), who died unmarried; Katharine (b.1781), who married Robert Douglas in 1800; Sarah (b.1783), who must have died young; John (b.1783), possibly a twin of Sarah; Sarah or Sally (b.1785), who married George Trotter; Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (b.1786), who married John Routledge and secondly M. Thompson; Betty, who married G. Farquhar; and Nanny (or perhaps Nancy), who married John Thorburn. He was said to be fond of good eating, and his house was a favourite eating place for friends and relations. In later life his wife was known as ‘Auld Peggy Beck’. William (b.1780) elder son of manufacturer William. He was a hosier and was Cornet in 1808. Like his father he was listed as a freeman of Carlisle in an election of 1816. He died unmarried.

Beck’s (beks) n. William Beck’s stockingshop.

The building was constructed about 1800 and marks a transition between the cottage and factory industries. The firm collapsed in 1826 following bank failures. The upper floor of the building has small regularly sized and spaced windows, each of which would have provided light for a single stocking frame. It is hidden at the back of 21 High Street, and was converted into a dwelling by Dennis Rodwell for the National Trust for Scotland in 1991 as part of the ‘Little Houses’ scheme. It is a grade C listed building.

Bedda Cleuch (be-du-klooch) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, which flows into the Black Burn just north-east of Newcastleton.

Bedda Hill (be-du-hil) n. hill in Castleton Parish, to the west of Newcastleton, between the village and Hazelyside Hill. The area just to the south is called Bedda Flow. There is a field bank running round 3 sides of the hill, containing rig lines.

beddal (be-dal) n., arch. a beadle, minor church official – ‘To John Scott, Beddal, for his shues dune again’ [PR], ‘Wr. Bedderupe (be-du-rool, be-the-rul, -de-rool) n., arch. a beadle or bellman – ‘And then he grippet the bedrel’s spade, Ane pye therewith to seeke … ’ [JTe] (see also beadle and beddal).

Bedrule (bed-rool, be-the-rool, -de-rool) n. hamlet eight miles north-east of Hawick, beyond Denholm, on the river Rule, about a mile up from the Teviot. It is also the name of the surrounding parish. The early history is very uncertain, although it seems clear that the Barony was named after an early owner called Lady Bethoc. This seems likely to have been the daughter of Donald III of Scotland, whose husband may have been Randolph. Her daughter Hextilda married Richard Comyn, and this family held the lands for several generations, from about 1160 until 1306. In that year John Comyn was branded a traitor and slain, with his lands later granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce. From sometime in the 14th century the lands were owned by the Turnbuls, possibly as vassals of Douglas. For most of the subsequent time it has been the centre of Turnbull country. However, in about 1528 part was sold by the Rutherfords to the Kers of Ferniehirst. Also in 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branhomme paid fees to the King for ‘non-entry’ of the lands and the right to arrange the marriage of the heir to the Lairdship; the Royal gift that followed included ‘the tour, mylnes and fischeingis’. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545 and perhaps again by the English in 1571. The entire estate and barony passed to the Kers of Cavers Carre around 1623. In 1788 the set of lands were owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre, valued at £1900 16s 8d, including teinds valued at £268 16s 8d. The farmer there in 1785–94 was James Goodfellow and in 1797 was William Pringle, who started a quarry and limeworks on the farm, which also supplied lime to neighbouring farms. The Barony was sold in 1801 to William Elliot of Wells and then in 1894 sold along with Wells to John Usher of Norton. In 1811 the ‘Mains and Mill of Bedrule, Fourteen Husband Lands of the Town of Bedrule unsold, bedfast (bed-fawst) adj., arch. bedridden – ‘...aw did get an awfu’ fricht that nicht, an’ aw’ll ne’er deny that aw was bedfast for some days’ [BCM1880].

bedlar (bed-lur) n., arch. a bedridden person, especially an inmate of a poor-house, also a church beadle or bellman – ‘...the old noted bedlar of Wilton, Wull Reid’ [RM].

bedrel (bed-rul) n., arch. a bedridden person (there are spelling variants).

bedrel (bed-rul) n., poet. a beadle, minor church official – ‘And then he grippet the bedrel’s spade, Ane pye therewith to seeke ...’ [JTe] (see also beadle and beddal).

Corse Cleugh and Fulton’ were valued at more than £1700. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. The present parish church was built around 1804, restored in 1876–77 and enlarged in 1914. The remains of Bedrule Castle are also near the church. The Parish Hall was built in 1922 by Sir Robert Usher, and since then has been used for a wide variety of community functions, including W.R.I. meetings, Sundays School and parties. The hamlet formerly contained the schoolhouse and smithy, as well as the Parish Kirk and a farm-house. There is also a War Memorial for the men of this Parish. The farm was run conjointly with the neighbouring lands of Fulton from at least the 19th century. Tenants were: W. Fringle, until 1826; Mr. Haliburton until 1827; Robert Brodie of Nottylees; George Simpson of Oxnam Row from 1846, and later his trustees; Thomas Aird Smith 1898–1921; A.B. Usher; and later H. Usher of Courtill. To the north of the farm are the possible remains of a settlement. William Turnbull, Bishop of Glasgow, was probably from here. A shard of an ancient beaker found in the area is the Museum of Antiquities, and 8 ints in Hawick Museum – But little harness had we there; But auld Badreule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Trumbills at his back [T] (the name appears as ‘Bethroull’ or ‘Badrowll’ in 1275, ‘Rulebethok’ in 1279, ‘Bethecrulle’ in 1324, ‘Bothroull’ in 1342, ‘Bethekroule’ in 1353/4 and 1389, ‘Bedorowll’ in 1432, ‘Bethekrowle’ in 1448, ‘Bethirrowll’ in 1455, ‘Berroul’ in 1456, ‘Betheroule’ in 1470/1, ‘Betheruill’ in 1473, ‘Betherroull’ in 1492/3, ‘bethroule’ in 1493, ‘Betheroule’ in 1494/5, ‘Betherould’ and ‘Badroull’ in 1502, ‘Badrowll’ in 1504, ‘Betheroule’ in 1516, ‘Betheroule’ in 1524/5, ‘Bedrowll’ and ‘Bedrowlle’ in 1528, ‘Betheroule’ in 1530/1, ‘Bedderoule’ in 1543, ‘Bedrowl’ in 1545, ‘Bederoule’ in 1550/1, ‘Bethieroule’, ‘Badderroull’ and ‘Betherroule’ in 1553/4, ‘Bedroull’ in 1557, ‘Bedroull’ in 1560, ‘Badroull’ and ‘Bedrowle’ in 1564, ‘Bedderroull’ in 1564/5, ‘Beddeiroule’ in 1565, ‘Betheroule’ in 1566, ‘Bederoull’ and ‘Beddeiroule’ in 1569, ‘Badroull’ in 1572/3 and 1576, ‘Bedroule’ in 1575, ‘Beddrroul’ in 1578, ‘Bedroole’ in 1580, ‘Bedrowll’ in 1581, ‘Beddeiroule’ in 1578/9, 1579/80, 1581, 1583/4 and 1584/5, ‘Bedroule’ in 1586, ‘Bedroul’ and ‘Bedroule’ in 1587, ‘Bedroule’ in 1591, the Laird himself spelled it ‘Bedderroul’ in 1602, it is ‘Bethrewle’ in 1605, ‘Badroull’ in 1607, ‘Bedroull’ in 1612, 1614 and 1618, ‘Bedderroull’ in 1617, ‘Beddrroul’ in 1619, ‘Badiereull’ in 1623, ‘Beddrareull’ in 1632, ‘Bedrourll’ in 1639, ‘Bedrewle’ in 1662, ‘Bedroul’ in 1668, ‘Bathroul’ in 1569, ‘Bedruill’ and ‘Badroull’ in 1678, ‘Beedruill’ in 1694, ‘Bedruill’ in the 17th century, ‘Bedderoull’ in 1722 and ‘Badderoull’ in 1748; it is marked as ‘Badroull’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, ‘Baddroull’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and ‘Baddroull’ on Visscher’s 1689 map; its origin is uncertain, suggestions including ‘the building by the Rule’ or ‘Bethoc’s place by the Rule’, with the latter perhaps being the more likely because of some of the earlier versions; note the former local pronunciation, noted in 1837, be-ther-uhl (is also closer to earlier spellings).

Bedrule (bed-rool) n. title of a Strathspey, written in 1884 by Betty Grant of Toronto, Ontario, in memory of her great-great-grandmother Elizabeth Turnbull Dickson who left Bedrule 150 years earlier to emigrate to Canada.

Bedrule (bed-rool) n. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Robertus de Rulebetoc’ when he was on an inquest in about the 1250s for Simon of ‘Lede’. It is unclear if he is related to the Rules or later Turnbuls.

Bedrule Brig (bed-rool-brig) n. bridge over the Rule Water to the south-west of Bedrule village. It dates from the 18th century and is a grade C listed building.

Bedrule Castle (bed-rool-kaw-sul) n. former castle in the parish and barony of Bedrule, built by the Comyns in the 13th century, later held by the Turnbuls, and destroyed by the English in 1545. The grass-covered remains can be seen on the eastern side of the Rule Water, between the churchyard and the river. From the air there are clear outlines of an oval wall, about 60 m by 40 m, with gatehouse and 3 towers, although the north-easter part has been obliterated by cultivation. The interior contains a cross-wall, as well as signs of 2 buildings. The gatehouse was reached by a road that wound up from the river on the west. The castle was visited by Edward I of England in 1298. John Turnbull of Bedrule was Laird in 1432, but the castle was probably held by his ancestors for at least a couple of generations before this. It is supposedly near the site where 200 of the Turnbull clan were brought before James IV, with halters round their necks in 1510. It is said that some stones in the Bedrule churchyard, bearing carved bull’s heads, were saved from the ruins.

Bedrule Common (bed-rool-ko-min) n. former common lands in Bedrule Parish. Parishioners had the right to pasture here. However, it was divided in 1696, with the land shared out among the main landowners, with the Rev. James Borland protesting that the minister had always had a right to use the common, but was being excluded from the division.

Bedrule Kirk (bed-rool-kirk) n. church in Bedrule, serving the surrounding Parish. It stands on high ground above the eastern bank of the Rule, with commanding views of the surrounding countryside. There must have been a chapel here since at least the 13th century. The patronage of the church was held by the Kerrs of Ferniehirst in the 16th century and passed to the Kerrs of Cavers-Carre in the 17th century; (curiously) remaining with them even after they sold the Barony in 1801. At the end of the 18th century the old church was described as being partly below ground, with only slits for windows, so that it was like ‘a family vault or damp cellar’ and in ‘a ruinous state’. The church was rebuilt on the same site in 1803/4, with further renovations carried out in 1876–77 and then extensively renovated in 1914 through the benefaction of Sir Robert Usher, with the architects being Leadbetter and Fairley. Inside hang panels bearing the arms of local families (Douglas, Elliot, Ogilvie, Oliver, Rutherford, Turnbull and Usher), and there are noteworthy stained-glass windows from 1922. There are two fragments of hog-backed gravestones inside, as well as another old stone with a carving of a robed figure and a sword. There are also many old Turnbull gravestones in the churchyard, including: a carved shield bearing the initials ‘GK HT’; and one bearing a carved mallet and the initials ‘GT HO 1618 IT MT 1638’ (which we could speculate are George Turnbull and Helen Oliver, plus John Turnbull and Margaret Turnbull). The church also contains a memorial to Bishop William Turnbull, who was born in the parish and baptised there. A memorial stone pillar was erected there after WWI. There is also a memorial plaque to Anthony Fasson, who died when retrieving the ‘Enigma machine’ and codebook from a sinking U-Boat in 1942. The manse is located to the south-west of the church and was built in 1794, replacing an earlier building on which tax was paid for 13 windows in 1753 (and which was condemned by committees in 1792 and 1793). The minister’s stipend included the vicarage teinds of the Barony of Bedrule, Ruecastle and Knowesouth. The glebe lands consisted of about 4 acres of arable land, a steep wooded bank and the riverside, as well as a strip in front of the lodge for Wells estate. The church was linked with Denholm and had a common minister from 1963; it was also linked with Minto in 1976. In 2003 the church was connected with Minto and Denholm into a wider region known as Ruberslaw, and this was extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean the following year. Free Church members in Bedrule were served by the Free Kirk in Denholm.

Bedrule Women’s Guild was one of the oldest women’s Christian organisations in Scotland, being founded in 1892 by Lady Elliott of Wells, and merging with Denholm and Minto Guilds around 1999; a stained-glass window in the Church celebrated the centenary of ‘the Guild’. Communion cups were gifted by Kerr of Newton and his wife in 1716. Communion tokens exist dating from probably before 1700; they are made of lead and round, with ‘B.K.’ incised on them, and an older ‘B’ in relief visible on some examples. A roll of the ministry is: James Newton, Rector in at least 1468–1492; John Kirkton until 1538; Sir William Todd at least 1541–57; William Kerr, Parson in at least 1562 and 1563; John Stewart c.1562; Sir John Douglas 1563/4; John Allan c.1567; John Oliver, 1569; George Johnston, minister 1575 (Reader vacant); John Turnbull, Reader 1576–78; George Turnbull, Reader 1579–80; Alexander Tait c.1585–91; William Galbraith c.1599; Joseph Tennant c.1601–c.21; David Fowls 1633–34; Henry Pearson 1635–39; Harry (Henry) Elliot 1640–c.53; vacant c.1653–58; Hugh Scott 1658–62; James Adamson 1664–89; James Borland 1690–1713; John Gilchrist 1714–46; George Dickson 1748–87; William Brown 1788–1836; Archibald Craig 1832–76; John Stevenson 1875–1923; James D. Gordon 1923–44; Thomas McGinn 1945–63; Robert Waugh 1963–74; James F. Falconer 1976–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92 (K. of Badroull’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, just north of the town).

Bedrule Mains (bed-rool-mains) n. lands in Bedrule Parish, formerly belonging to the Turnbulls of Bedrule. In 1643 it was split into two halves, each valued at £130, one half owned by William Turnbull of Bedrule and the other half by Thomas Turnbull (probably his son). Both halves were owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788.

Bedrule Mill (bed-rool-mil) n. former corn mill at Bedrule, located on the east side of the Rule Water and north-east of the modern farm of Bedrule. It is reached from the road by a bridge across the Rule. There has also been a sawmill further south and on the other side of the river. It is said that in fairly early times it was a ‘pirn mill’ making yarn, but this did not succeed, and so it reverted to a corn mill, but the farmers having become used to taking there grain elsewhere, it became vacant and was again rented by a manufacturer for making yarn before such manufacturing switched into the towns. It was owned by the Turnbulls of Bedrule until 1696 and was a separate farm until at least the mid-19th century. William of Bedrule was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £200. John Douglas was tenant there in 1674, when fined for selling meal in Hawick at 2 different prices on the same market day. William Ramsay was tenant at the end of the 17th century. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. George Scott was tenant there in 1857. About 250 m to the north-east are the remains of a roughly rectangular enclosure, measuring 50 m across. Its west side falls steeply down to the Rule Water and on its south side is an unnamed ravine. The ramparts have been much reduced by cultivation, and the original entrance on the north-east corner is no longer discernible (it is ‘Betherrool milne’ in 1674; Blaeni’s 1654 map shows one mill on each side of the Rule, perhaps identified with Bedrule Mill and Spittal Mill).

Bedrule Pairish (bed-rool-pa-ree-sh) n. Parish of Bedrule, lying near the centre of Roxburghshire, consisting of a roughly oval shape about 4 miles long from north to south. The original boundaries probably correspond to the lands held by Bethoc in the 12th and earlier centuries. It is bounded by the Rule on the west and the Teviot on the north-west. The extent of the Parish includes the Dunion, Black Law and Rubslaw. The main estates were Bedrule, Ruecastle, Knowesouth and Newton. In 1643 the lands of the Parish were valued at £3943 13s 4d. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £3800, with the land valued at about £3500 in 1678. The Parish of Abbotrule was united to Bedrule, but in 1777 it was divided between Hobkirk and Southdean. The bounding parishes were then Minto, Ancrum, Jedburgh, Hobkirk and Cavers (and Southdean before the boundaries were rearranged in the 19th century). In about 1795 there were 6 weavers, 3 tailors, 2 wrights, 2 gardeners and 2 blacksmiths; one of the blacksmiths employed several people in the manufacture of nails. The Parish had villages at Bedrule, Newton, Ruecastle and Fulton, all of which were ‘now much decayed, and the number of houses greatly diminished’ by the late 18th century. In 1837 almost the entire adult population was engaged in agriculture, with 2 stocking-makers and 1 smith; there were no tailors, shoemakers, joiners or ale-houses. The population was 297 in 1755 and 259 in about 1795. Baptismal and marriage records for the Parish start in 1690; pages going back to perhaps 1660 became unreadable, and the early birth records are fairly irregular.

Bedrule Schuil (bed-rool-skil) n. former school in Bedrule Parish, with schoolmaster’s house attached. It may have been established in the early 17th century. James Mather was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1608 and 1609. In about 1795 it is described that the schoolmaster’s salary was ‘a sorry pittance indeed’ and the ‘schoolhouse is almost a ruin’. There were 80 pupils in the 1830s. James Ker was master there in the latter part of the 18th century. James Innes was master there from 1799 until at least the 1830s and William McNeil in 1855–92. There were 43 pupils in 1866 and 39 in 1893. Records exist for the period 1873 to 1945. The former school and schoolmaster’s house has been converted into a private dwelling.

Bedrule Toon (bed-rool-toon) n. former lands in Bedrule Parish. This was ‘Town of Bedrule’ in 1643, when owned by Sir Thomas Ker and valued at £608, consisting of 16 husbandlands. ‘Fourteen husband-lands of the Town of Bedrule, at L. 18 each’ were owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788.

beds (bedz) n. name for various hopscotch-like games, more often played by girls than boys – ‘... But beds were a ploy that wad keep them gang lang’ [WL], ‘Cockerossie, off oo ran, Beds, guesses, bools and kick the can ...’ [IWL], ‘Oo yaised to play beds, hopscotch ee wad say, bit oo caaed eet beds’ [ME], the spaces chalked out as part of this game – ‘... git a piece o chalk an chalk the beds on the road an play’ [ME].

Bee (bee) n. George (1914/15–91) born and raised in North Berwick, he arrived in Hawick in 1932 as Assistant Burgh Surveyor. He served with the Royal Engineers and became Burgh Surveyor after WWII, retiring in 1975. He was involved with the Abbeyfield Society and was a Tweed Commissioner.

the Beeching Report (thu-bee-chin-ré-pör) n. report of a committee chaired by Dr. Richard Beeching in 1963, called ‘The Re-shaping of British Railways’, which led to the closure of the Waverley Line and other secondary railway lines. It has been suggested that not all the statistics used were sound and that there was some influence from the road lobby – ‘Awhi vexed ti leave Hawick when his fither lost his railwayman’s job thanks ti Dr Beeching’ [IWL].

Beechlands (beech-linz) n. house in Denholm that was formerly the Kirk Manse. It was sold by the church in the 1960s and renamed after 2 beech trees that grew in the field adjoining the property.

the Beechwud Trophy (thu-beech-wud-tró-fee) n. bowling trophy donated in 1903 by manufacturer Peter Scott in order to encourage better relations between the town’s 3 clubs. It was won for the 5th time by the Buccleuch Bowling Club in 1912, thus becoming that Club’s property outright. After that Scott donated the Norwood Trophy.

beggar (be-gur) n. informal, patronising or mildly derogative name for a man or boy – ‘Rin, ye beggar, or I’ll hae to catch ye’.

beggars (be-gurz) n., pl. paupers, collecting alms for a living, increasing as a social problem through mediaeval times. There were laws prohibiting begging except by those wearing a badge that was only given to people who were sick or otherwise genuinely unable to work. One of these ‘beggars badges’ from Cavers in 1729 is in the Museum of Scotland. Acts were passed to control begging outside ones own Parish, as well as to encourage the Parishes to provide some relief for their own poor and invalided. Begging became a major cause for public concern in the Hawick of the 18th and 19th centuries. During these centuries beggars were mainly from Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbrightshire, Galloway and Ireland. It is said that around 1820 the only full-time professional beggar in Hawick was John Brown, but there were many match-sellers and itinerant peddlars who also begged. The first plan to stop begging and provide poor relief began in 1822. By 1837 there were about 150 permanent paupers and 500 occasional paupers supported in the Parish of Hawick.

Bell (bel) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Adam (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. Adam (1730/1–1802) resident of Bedrule Parish, where he is buried. His children included: William (1764/5–1800); Janet (1772/3–1808); a son who died aged 17; Margaret; and Adam (1773/4–1831). Adam (b.1814/5) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor in Hawick. His business is listed on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his cousin, Elizabeth Phaup, at West Toll-Bar. Alexander (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was recorded as ‘called Crat Bell’, and the others named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Ninian Teviot ‘of the Hilhous’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’. It is unclear where he came from. Alexander (18th C.) servant in Falnash. In 1728 he married Helen Henderson, who was also a servant there. Alexander (19th/20th C.) partner with Robert Milligan in the firm Milligan & Bell. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded (by Pitscottie) in about the late 1530s as keeper of the King’s sheep in Ettrick Forest. There were said to be 10,000 sheep and he ‘made the king as good an account of them as if they had gone in the bounds of Fife’.

Andrew (b.1800/1) wood forester living at Wrae in Ewesdale in 1851. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret and Thomas. Charles ‘Charlie’ first Cornet after WWII. Francis ‘Frankie’, ‘Dodo’ (20th C.) diminutive West End character of the mid-to-late 1900s, always wearing a peaked flat cap and greeting people with ‘Yo-Ho ...’ and his stick held high. Famous for his comment ‘Have ye seen the Struther, it’s black wi’ swans?’.

Francis (b.c.1785) hand-loom weaver in Hawick, born outside Roxburghshire. In 1837 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Pringle and Ann Buckham. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row along with Jane. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Muirfield, in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. George (1780–1859) eldest son of William and Markie Minto, he was born in Southdean Parish. He took over farming Menslaws from his father. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still junior of Menslaws. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1837 he was noted as the only heritor of Bedrule Parish who was resident there. He married Ann, daughter of Thomas Scott (son of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe and Barbara Haliburton) and Ann Scott (daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Jean Elliot); she was thus a cousin of Sir Walter Scott the writer. Their children were: Ann Scott (1814–81); and Marky Minto (1816–38). The farm of Menslaws was sold the year after his death to Thomas Cockburn. George Hardy (b.1774) son of John and Anne Johnston, he was born in Graintney, Dumfriesshire. He was a hosier in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His wife was Mary Wilson and they had children Helen (b.1807) and Agnes (b.1810) in Hawick. He could be the ‘stockingmaker and plasterer’ who died in Hawick in 1829. George (18th/19th C.) keeper of a public house in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He could be the George listed as a 70 year old cattle drover in Lilliesleaf in 1841. George (19th C.) miller and farmer at Southdean Mill in the 1860s. Gideon William of Fortune, W.S. (1805–77) son of William, who was a farmer in Berwickshire. He purchased the estate of Woll in 1863 from Mr. Ainslie. He married Barbara Leonora Dirom and was succeeded by his son William Scott. Helen (17th/18th C.) servant of Robert Deans in Hawick. In 1725 she was admonished by the Session ‘for her unbecoming deportment in going the length of Bleckliesmont (probably Blackleemouth) in ye water Roule with Archibald Little, soldier, and was sharplie rebuked, seeing she was hired to shear in ye Landward’. Isabella ‘Tibbie’ (1793/4–1863) from Canonbie, she was housekeeper of Walter Scott, farmer at Bowanhill. Her headstone at Teviothead is curtly inscribed ‘Tibbie Bell, Wat’s housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69’.

LYS MARGIT BELL, WHO, IN PRUDENCE stone in the kirkyard there was inscribed ‘HERE DID EXCEL 1732’. Richard (1833–1909) local farmer, known for keeping a managerie. His brother-in-law was John Wilson, son of ‘Christopher North’. He lived at Billholm, having the joint tenancy of that farm and Craikhope. In 1879 he moved to Castle O’er. He was also a keen antiquarian, and the first to record excavations at Castle O’er and Over Rig. He wrote ‘My Strange Pets’ (1905), which includes descriptions of his exotic hobby, as well as local farming stories. Dr. Richard (1897–1978), M.C., born in Newcastle upon Tyne, was educated at George Heriot’s. He served with the 6th Border Regiment in WWI and was awarded the Military Cross. He returned to Edinburgh, qualifying as a doctor in 1924, settling into practice in Heydon Bridge, Northumberland. In WWII he served with the R.A.M.C. in Europe, where he met his wife Felicity. The couple had 2 daughters. He died at Heydon Bridge and is buried in Etterton Cemetery along with George Dalgleish (d.1828) and family.

Rev. Robert (1673/4–1755) son of John, minister at Smalholm, and said to have been a ‘youth of promising parts’, he graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1689 and was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1693. He was called to Cavers late that year and ordained as minister of Cavers in 1694, becoming the first minister there after the Revolution. In 1705 (or possibly 1703) he dissented over an Act of the Synod relating to Church governance (along with Alexander Orrock of Hawick and Robert Cunningham of Wilton). In 1706 he was one of the minority of ministers who protested against the Anglican Prelates sitting in the U.K. Parliament. In 1711 he performed a marriage in Hawick Parish (after the death of Alexander Orrock). In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the new candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick. In 1720, the Laird of Sharplaw wrote to the Lord Advocate regarding how to act against those few local ‘nonjurant’ ministers and their supporters, stating that ‘Mr Bell, minister of Cavers, a gentleman of great piety, prudence, and learning (who was among the first that took the oaths), had a great hand in healing the breach’. He was translated to Crailing in 1721. In 1735 he was appointed one of His Majesty’s Chaplains in Ordinary for Scotland, but deprived for political reasons in 1744. He paid the window tax at Crailing Manse in 1748. He was ‘father of the church’ (i.e. the longest ordained minister in Scotland) when he died. He married Mrs. Kennedy and they had a son, John, who became minister of Gordon, and whose son successful indigo planter and merchant in Bengal. He may have married Clara Ewen in Calcutta in 1817 and certainly married Betsy Laidlaw in Jedburgh in 1828. Their only child was Dorothea Laidlaw (b.1832). He died on passage from India. James (b.1808/9) from Minto, he was a grocer and spirit merchant on the Howegate. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jessie, Margaret and Thomas. James (b.1818/9) from Langholm, he was a police officer in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on O’Connell Street. He was also listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. His wife was Janet. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Whitchesters. His will is recorded in 1683. He is probably related to William, who was at Whitchesters in 1694, as well as the later John. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1676. John (17th C.) servant at Gorrenberry, presumably for Francis Scott of Gorrenberry. In 1684 he was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. John (17th/18th C.) servant to Adam Elliot of Arkleton. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1702. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being at Whitchesters in about 1710, according to evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He was probably related to the William recorded in Whitchesters in 1694. John (b.1824/5) woodman living at Wrae in Ewesdale in 1851. His wife was Jane (from Perthshire) and their children included Ann, Margaret, Janet and Robert. John ‘Jock’ (19th C.) local athlete who competed in Common Riding games etc. He won most of the prizes for leaping competitions in the early 1860s. John (1871–1941) born at Ladylaw Place and raised in Lothian Street, he was son of John and Cecil Messer. He became a coach-builder by trade, but better known locally as a tenor singer. He was taught by Walter Fiddes Wilson, organist in Hawick. He was precentor at Allars Kirk for 10 years from 1899, and performed widely at concerts etc. in Hawick and elsewhere. He was known for the musical lectures he gave in collaboration with Thomas Caldwell. ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’ was composed for and sung by him at the 1903–05 Colour Bussings, and he also first sung ‘Oor ain Auld Toon’ in 1903. Despite that, he left Hawick for Edinburgh in 1909, to take up a position with Scottish Motor Traction. He died in Edinburgh. Margaret (d.1732) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Her gravestone in the kirkyard there was inscribed ‘HERE MARGIT BELL, WHO, IN PRUDENCE became a clergyman as a condition of inheriting land from him. The earliest existing Cavers communion token, marked ‘CK’ (‘Cavers Kirk’) and ‘1699’ dates from his ministry. Robert (18th C.) wright in Bedrule. He married Helen Young, who died in 1772, aged 72, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (1730–1802) son of Thomas, he was born in Bedrule Parish. He was probably tenant at Menslaws before the present house was built. He is listed as ‘of Mainslaws’ in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although long deceased by then); he owned the farm, as well as ‘Two Husband Lands at the Wanuk Mill acquired from Cavers’. In 1750 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Black. Their children included: William, who farmed at Menslaws; and Elspeth, who died in infancy. He died in Jedburgh and is buried in Ancrum. Simon (19th/20th C.) station-master in Newcastleton. He attended baptisms in the Hawick area, e.g. one at Appletreehall in 1771. He moved to Glasgow in 1777. His son James succeeded Thomas Boston. He attended baptisms in the Hawick area, e.g. one at Appletreehall in 1771. He moved to Glasgow in 1777. His son James was a well-known geographer. Thomas (d.1840) dyer in Hawick, whose death in recorded in 1840. Thomas (19th C.) ran the licensed grocer’s in Newcastleton. He attended baptisms in the Hawick area, e.g. one at Appletreehall in 1771. He moved to Glasgow in 1777. His son James was a well-known geographer. Thomas (d.1840) dyer in Hawick, whose death in recorded in 1840. Thomas (19th C.) ran the licensed grocer’s in O’Connell Street, taken over by Henry Hunt. His daughter was Margaret R. Bell of 9 Teviot Crescent. Thomas ‘Tammie’ (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. Thomas M. (19th C.) owner of Liddelbank, recorded in 1879. He later lived at Minsca in Dumfriesshire. He married Mary, eldest daughter of Rev. John Black of Newcastleton. She died in Ontario in 1912. Walter (17th C.) rented a third of the farm of Raesknowe in at least the period 1690–96. He was also resident at Raesknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Walter, married to Margaret Scott, whose children born in Hawick included: Marion (b.1670); Helen (b.1673); Margaret (b.1678); and Janet (b.1682). The witnesses in 1682 were David Graham (also tenant in Raesknowe) and John Purdon. Walter (b.c.1814/5) from Dumfriesshire, he was a limeburner at Larriston in 1861 and was recorded at ‘Larriston Lodge’ in 1868. His wife was Jane and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, Ann, Jane and Janet. William (15th C.) priest of St. Andrew’s diocese who was notary for the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee for George Home of Wedderburn. He may have been associated with one of the local parishes. However, he also notarised 2 other documents for the Homes of Wedderburn in 1474. William (16th C.) tenant at ‘le cot rig’ in ‘le mains’ in Appletreehall in 1539/40. As recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book, the farm was then purchased by Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’ from Robert Scott of Howpasley. William ‘Willie Reidcloak’ (d.1628) head of the Annandale family, he was Laird of Blackethouse. Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and Robert Douglas, Provost of Lincluden, were cautioners for him in 1582. He is then stated to be ‘in Blacathous, alias Reidcloak’. He is ‘Reydcloik’ in 1590 when there was a complaint against his brothers ‘Jock’ and Thomas for rieving and a further complaint against his brother John. He was involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, supposedly the man who carried off Kinmont on his horse, still bound in fetters. The English account of the raid refers to him as ‘Willie Bell ‘redcloake’’, who took part along with 2 of his brothers. In 1596 there is a complaint that ‘Will Bell ‘read clooke’ ‘ led a raid into England, taking 200 cattle from Sark. The English Warden demanded a pledge for him in 1597. William (17th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably different from the William at Highchesters. He is probably related to the Johns recorded at Whitchesters in 1683 and in about 1710. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Rodger in Whitchesters. He may be the William Bell who was fined for ‘casting of peats and turffs in the common moss and mure, being not ane burgess’. William (17th C.) shepherd at Easter Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Broadistone. In 1729 there is a report in the Roberton Parish session books of an argument between him and Robert Stewart, servant of Francis Coltert in Woodburn. He is meant to have struck Stewart on the Sabbath, but said he only used ‘a tip with a small hors wand, being so much provoked with his ill tounge’. William (1755–1836) son of Robert and Margaret Black. He became farmer at Menslaws, perhaps purchasing the farm that his father had tenanted before him. He may be responsible for building the new house there in about 1786. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was also tenant of Rueycastle in the late 18th century. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1774 in Southdean Parish he married Markie, daughter of George Minto and Barbara Chisholme. Their children were: Barbara (b.1775), who married William Johnstone and emigrated to Canada; George (1780–1859) who farmed at Menslaws; James (1782–1843), Indian merchant; Marky (1784–1860), who died unmarried; Margaret (1786–1829), who married Alexander, son of Robert Scott, tenant at Roughheugh Mill; Euphemia (1788–1841), who married James Tait; Minto (1790–1838), who married George, son of John Grieve and Isabella Turnbull and emigrated to Quebec; Dr. William (1792–1862), who was Inspector General; Jean (b.1794), who married George Elliot; Isabella (1797–1880); and Robert (1799–1834), who worked in India with his brother and married Adolphina Rabeholm. He died in Jedburgh and is buried in Ancrum. William (18th/19th C.) local farmer. In 1795 he married Violet, daughter of Robert Scott of Orchard. Their marriage was recorded in both Crailling and Kelso Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1797). William (b.1787/8) born in Jedburgh, he was miller at Southdean Mill (or Hundalee) for many years. In 1841 he was working as a joiner at Swinnie Moorfoot. He was listed as miller at Southdean in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was farming 53 acres and employed 4 people. He and his wife were original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He married Agnes Davidson and their children included: Janet; William, who purchased Hallrule Mill; John; and George. Dr. William (1792–1862) born in Bedrule Parish, son of William and Markie Minto from Menslaws. He graduated with an M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1812, entered military service, becoming Surgeon and eventually Inspector General of Hospitals. He served in Holland, China, Mauritius, India and Canada. He wrote several medical articles. He married Zébéé Stewart, daughter of Gen. Alexander Gordon, in Montreal. Their children were Zébéé Minto, Amy Gordon, Helen Symonds Dobree, William George Gordon and Rosie Annie Stewart. He died in Jedburgh. William ‘Willie’ (1828–66) from the Menslaws family, son of Robert and Adolphina Rabeholm. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became Chief Constable at Leeds. He married Louisa Harriet Crozier and their children were Louisa Maria, William Edward and Alice Amelia. William (19th C.) mason at Wolfelee Glen in the 1860s. William ‘Willie’ (b.1831) born at Swinnie farmhouse, he was son of William (tenant of Southdean Mill) and Agnes Davidson (related to the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ family). In his youth he was known as the most powerful man in the parish. He purchased Hallrule Mill from Elliott of Stobs in 1855. He was still recorded at Hallrule Mill in 1868. From 1882 he was also joint tenant of Langraw, along with his son William. In 1852 he married Margaret, daughter of William Horsburgh, whose father farmed on the Hunthill estate. She died in 1904, aged 73. They had 7 children, 3 of whom died young, including: William (b.1856), the eldest son, who farmed at Langraw; Agnes (b.1858); Alexander Mein (b.1861), who farmed Town-o-Rule; Robert (b.1863); Ellen; and Agnes Janet (b.1865). Rev. William Napier (b.1873) born in Glasgow, son of engineer David and Helen Napier. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1905 and was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1908. He was assistant at St. Andrews Parish in Glasgow for 2 years and was in 1910 ordained as minister of Saughtree Church. He was the first full minister of the Church, which at that time was erected into a separate parish from Castleton. He demitted his charge in 1920, when he was appointed as assistant to the Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Glasgow University. William (b.1856) son of William, he farmed at Langraw. He became lame as the result of a fall. He married Agnes, daughter of William Ingles, shepherd at Priesthaugh. He had 3 children: Margaret, William (the eldest) and Thomas. William Scott (1859–1925) grandson of William Bell and Violet Scott, from the Falnash Scotts. His father Gideon William purchased Woll in 1863 from Mr. Ainslie. He succeeded to Woll from his father. He was a Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Ella Evelyn Crawford.

Bellendean Burn

these lands (along with Todrig) were gifted by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldstream Priory. Robert Scott exchanged lands at Glenkerry (on the Timawater) for Bellendean with the monks of Melrose Abbey in 1415. This is probably the ‘bellen tyne’ where Alexander Turnbull was recorded in 1494/5. George Nichol is recorded as the King’s shepherd there in 1540 when he was paid for 5 bolls of grain; probably this was among properties that Scott of Buccleuch temporarily forfeited to the Crown. Along with other Buccleuch properties it was burnt by the English in 1543. George Nichol was the tenant farmer there in 1574 and the last testament of Sir Walter of Buccleuch lists all the livestock on the farm at that time. In 1581/2 a group of Ellons and Armstrongs stole 60 ewes from there, the farm then being the property of Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was marked prominently on the map of the whole of Scotland that Robert Gordon drew for Blaeu’s 1654 atlas. James Fletcher was a tenant there in 1685. The farms of Bellendean and Bellendean shiel were part of Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Roberton Parish in 1689. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch the farm is shown (along with Henwoodie), covering 2572 acres and bounded by Borthwickbrae, Milsington, Girnwood, Meadshaw, Craik, Outersiderig, Hoscote, East Buccleuch, Whitslade and Redfordgreen. James Anderson was resident there in 1761 and Thomas Jackson in 1764. In 1785 and 1803 it was valued at £306. James Burnet was farmer there in 1797 and was joint tenant with his son Robert from about 1830. Robert Burnet was farmer there in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. The farmhouse was demolished about the time that the Alemoor Reservoir was developed in the late 1950s, and there is now little sign of previous habitation between Alemoor and Redfordgreen. The Bellendean Burn follows the B711 near here, with Bellendean Shank on the south side of the road and Bellendean Rig on the north side (former spellings include ‘Bellendeane’, etc., with ‘Bellingdene’ in about 1250, ‘Bellyneen’, ‘Bellenden’ and ‘Bellenden’ in 1415, ‘Belindene’ in 1451, ‘bellentyn’ and ‘bellentyne’ in 1494/5, transcribed ‘Balldden’ in 1540 and ‘Bellenden’ in 1503; the origin is probably Old English ‘belling demu, meaning ‘the valley with the little hill’, although the rallying cry has been suggested to be a corruption of ‘Ad Bellendum’, Latin for ‘To Battle’; ‘Bellindean’ is on the 1650 parish map, ‘Bellendenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Bellenden’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Bellenden).

Bellendean Burn (bel-en-deen-burn) n. stream that rises near Goose Loch and meets the B711 from the south near Redfordgreen, following the road for a while to meet the Ale Water.

Bellendean Rig (bel-en-deen-rig) n. ridge of high ground on the right of the B711 after Alemoor Loch, on the opposite side of Bellendean Burn from Bellendean Shank. Its peaks are Muckle Knowe and Little Knowe. A cottage near there was home to farm labourer James Anderson and his family in 1841 and ‘Road Man’ Alexander Amos and family in 1851.

Bellendean Shank (bel-en-deen-shawngk) n. hilly area to the left of the B711 just before Redfordgreen, on the opposite side of the valley from Bellendean Rig. It is now under forest. There are some enclosures on the lower parts beside the road.

Bellendean Shiels (bel-en-deen-sheelz) n. former farmstead near Bellendean, recorded in the 17th century when it was in a detached part of Selkirk, joining Roberton Parish in 1690 (recorded then as ‘Bellingdon-sheils’).

Bellenden (bel-en-den) n. former name for the original home of the Scotts of Teviotdale, near the head of the Ale Water, before they moved to Branxholme and adopted the name Buccleuch. The area may have given rise to some instances of the name ‘Ballantyne’, ‘Ballantine’ etc., since that was often spelled ‘Bellenden’ in earlier centuries. The modern name for the area is Bellendean. The ‘Bellenden Banner’ is an ancient relic of the Scotts of Buccleuch, perhaps made in 1644 for the regiment of Earl Francis; it was also unfurled at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. The area inspired the rallying cry of the Scotts – ‘Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came And warriors more than I may name: From Yarrow-cleugh to Hindhaugh-sweir, From Woodhouselee to Chester-glen, Troop’d man and horse, and bow and spear; Their gathering word was Bellenden’ [SWS] (marked ‘Bellendenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is uncertain, and it may be that the name comes from its use as a gathering place, rather than the other way around; it is probably the ‘Bellingdene’ of c.1256; see also Bellendean).

Bellenden (bel-en-den) n. Sir John of Auchinvole (d.1577) eldest son of Thomas. He served as secretary to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1547 he was appointed as a Lord of Session, as well as Director of the Chancery and Justice

Bellenden-Banner (thu-bel-en-den-baw-nur) n. name sometimes used for an ancient banner of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was probably made in 1644 for the regiment of Earl Francis Scott, when he took part in the siege of Newcastle, but may have been made for the funeral of Earl Walter a decade earlier. It was carried by Walter, son of Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford at the Carterhaugh Baa game of 1815. It was used as the subject of the poems that Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd wrote to mark the occasion – ‘Then up with the banner, let forest winds fan her, She has blazed over Ettrick eight ages and more; In sport we’ll attend her, in fest winds fan her, She has blazed over Ettrick eight ages and more; In sport we’ll attend her, in battle defend her, With heart and with hand, like our fathers before’ [SWS], ‘Then hail! memorial battle defend her, With heart and with hand, like our fathers before, May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner awe, May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner awe, May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner...’

Bell Hill (bel-hil) n. hill to the east of Selkirk. It contains the well-preserved remains of a hill-fort of the ‘ridge-top’ type. It is about 70 m by 30 m and had triple ramparts.

Bell Hill (bel-hil) n. hill to the south-west of Riccarton Junction, reaching a height of 348 m.

Bellingham (be-lin-jum, -ling) n. small town in Northumberland, once a market centre for the area and the first sizeable community in the English Middle Marches along the North Tyne valley. It featured prominently in the history of Border raids, with Auld Wat of Harden raiding it in 1597. The 12th century St. Cuthbert’s Church is famous for having a stone roof to prevent it being burned. Bellingham is now largely a tourist centre for Kielder Forest and the Pennine Way. It had a ‘Riding of the Fair’ tradition in September that died out in the early 1900s, but was revived in 2003. Population 1,200.

Bell-Irvine (bel-ir-vin) n. James Jardine (1857–1936) younger son of John of White Hill. He was a partner in the firm Jardine, Matheson & Co., and a member of the Legislative and Executive Councils of Hong Kong. He lived for a while at Minot House and later at Makerstoun. He married Eva Gertrude Percy and had children Ethel Mary and Eva Margaretta. There is a portrait of him by Samuel Henry William Llewellyn.

bellman (bel-nawn, bel-nun) n. in former times the duty of one of the Burgh Officers was to ring the morning bell at 5.30 a.m. and the evening bell at 8 p.m., as well as to announce proclamations etc. He apparently charged a lower fee than the drummer for announcements. He had charge of the ‘deid bell’, and would ring the ‘passing bell’ at St. Mary’s at funerals. Along with the town drummer, it was traditional for him to go round the town at Christmas, collecting money for ringing the bells for the year. In 1707 it was decreed that he was to provide for oil for the clock and bell-ropes from his own income. In 1817 he was paid extra for also ringing the bells at 6 a.m. and 8 p.m. Known bellmen include Jock Scott (recorded in 1612), William Scott (17th C.), Alexander Scott (early 18th C.), Alexander Young (early 18th C.), William Turnbull (early 19th C.), Michael Wintrip (mid-19th C.) and Samuel Lawrence (late 19th C.). Hawick’s last bellman was Alexander Stainton, sometime around the turn of the 20th century.

the Bellman (thu-bel-mun) n. nickname for several Burgh Officers, e.g. William Scott in the 17th century or William Turnbull in the 19th century and Alexander Stainton into the early 20th century. In earlier times this officer of the Town would be given the task of walking the streets to tell of the deaths of citizens, using... the ‘Deed Bell’. Later the Bellman would broadcast messages from the Council about meetings, changes in utilities (like water being turned off), etc.

Bellom (be-lom) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war in Hawick. He is said to have been an ensign on the ship ‘Ventura Felix NV’ (although no record of a ship of that name seems to exist), which was captured in 1811, later being detained in Hawick. He lived for several years with Ann Ekron, and they had an illegitimate daughter, Adelina. Adelina (1816/7–97) daughter of Adam and Ann Ekron. In 1837 in Hawick she married Thomas Scott, who worked at Weensland Mills. They had children Ann, Thomas, Catherine, Adam and Mary Ann. She is listed as a grocer on the Howegate in the 1851 census. Her name is also sometimes given as ‘Adeline’.

Bells (belz) n. former name for area on the Border with England, around Bell’s Burn and Bellskirk. It is mentioned in 1551 in the document making Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme the Justiciar of Liddesdale, specifically being listed as one of the places on the boundaries of Liddesdale where meetings could take place with the English Wardens.

Bell’s Burn (belz-burn) n. stream that follows part of the Border between eastern Castleton Parish and England, between Saughtree and Kielder. 2 polished stone axe-heads were found there while ploughing for forestry in 1970.

Bellshiels (bel-shielz) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, situated south of Annett Hill and east of Byreholm and Newstead. Mason William Oliver was there in 1821. There were 2 families living there in 1841 (it is ‘Bellshiels’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Bellskirk (belz-kirk) n. former church and village in the eastern part of Castleton, now situated in Northumbria to the north of Kielder village. It is recorded in a grant relating to William the Lion, and hence at that time was part of Scotland. It was used as a meeting point between deputies of the Wardens of the Middle Marches in 1590, there recorded as ‘the Belles Kyrk’. The church must have been disused from at least 1604, when Castleton Parish was reorganised. The existence of gravestones was mentioned in the 19th century, but now nothing remains, although ‘Bells Moor’ and ‘Bellburnfoot’ are still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps (also written ‘Belkirk’; it occurs on mercurator’s 1595 map of Scotland as ‘Bell kirk’).

Bellum (be-lum) n., poet. a disrespectful epithet – ‘...Wi’ what some bellums ca’ the bottle, An’ I ca’ whusky. When ’boot yer plans ye freendly tat- tle. An’ speech gets huskie’ [JoHa] (possibly used in error for ‘bellum’).

Bellview (bel-vew) n. house in Denholm on Sunnymside. It used to have stones outside it marking where the tenants had buried their horses and pets.

bellyfi (be-lee-fi) n. a bellyful – ‘A’ roon’ aboot stude the muckle black birds, Quiet and gluited wi’ bellays-fi daith’ [DH].

Belses (bel-seez) n. hamlet in Ancrum Parish, and former small station on the Waverley Line, the second one north from Hawick. The settlement is split into New Belses and Old Belses, and is about 8 miles north-east of Hawick. There was also once a toll house here. The estate was formerly quite extensive and formed a separate Barony. It was a possession of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey from early times until the Reformation, purchased as part of those lands by Adam French in 1569, when its mill was also mentioned. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. The superiors of the lands there were the Cairncrosses of Colmslie in the 16th century and Thomas Hamilton in the early 17th. John Buckham, Thomas Haswell, John Turnbull, Thomas Walker and William Waugh were all recorded there in 1502. There were Turnbuls there in the 16th–18th centuries, with George Turnbull of Belses being hanged in 1603 for a series of crimes, involving murder and theft. Andrew Scott of Aikwood inherited lands there from his father Robert on 1616. Lands there were owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century. In 1643 lands there were owned by William Kerr, Earl of Lothian, Sir Thomas Kerr (valued at £291), Walter Scott in Shielwood (£130), David Scott in Newlands (£156) and ‘Morrishall, his lands in Belses called Pinnacle’ (£766 13s 4d). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the ‘Lands and mill of Belches’ were valued at £1143 18s 4d and owned by Sir Thomas Kerr. William Wylie was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter. Andrew Turnbull was there in 1688. James Wilson was farmer there in 1797, owning 14 horses. Harry Davidson was Laird in the early 19th century. John Edmund Elliot owned New Belses in the later 19th century and it passed to the Marquess of Lothian. There was also once a corn mill there. There is an ancient earthwork in a wooded area between here and Rawflat. Once suggested to be Roman, that is unlikely, and now it has been largely destroyed by cultivation – ‘Oo grumbled if oo got on a slow train, Stoppin’ at Hassendean, Belses and Stow . . .’[AY] (it first occurs about 1470 and has been spelled ‘Belcheis’, ‘Belches’, ‘Belshire’, ‘Belshies’, ‘Belsches’, ‘Belschies’, ‘Belshies’, ‘Belshies’ and ‘Belssys’; Blaeu’s 1654 maps shows ‘Belshiest’/’Betel’ and ‘Belshiesmill’, while Stobie’s 1770 map shows ‘Bellsheas’; the origin of the name may be Old French for ‘beautiful place’, similar to the origin of nearby ‘Bewlie’).

Belses (bel-seez) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 20 shillings. They were among the lands owned by Jedburgh Abbey, but their precise location is uncertain In 1541 they still pertained to the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1632 they were listed along with Westburnflat and Whithauch as possessions of Lancie Armstrong (it is ‘Belsys’ in c.1376, ‘Belshis’ in 1541 and ‘Belsches’ in 1632).

Belses Mill (bel-seez-mill) n. former corn mill and farm just north-east of Belses. It lies on the Ale Water, near where the railway crosses the river. Patrick Rutherford was recorded there in 1494/5. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century. It was leased to John Buchan in 1632. John Turnbull in Standhill is recorded as owner in 1643, his lands valued at £200. John White was recorded there in 1683. In 1788 the ‘Lands and mill of Belsches’ in Ancrum Parish were valued at £1143 18s 4d and owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre (it is ‘Belchesmilne’ in 1683 and ‘Bellsheismilne’ in 1684; ‘Bellsheismilne’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Belstanerig (bel-stä-na-rig) n. former lands in Ewesdale, described in 1663 as the lands of Wolffhope and pendicile theyolf callit Belstanerig’ in among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Bucleuch.

belt (bel’) v. to beat with the fists – ‘Gi’e ‘im a guid beltin’’[GW], ‘to run headlong – ‘Rinnin’ owre the brae as hard as he could belt’[GW] (more common than in Standard English).

the belt (thu-bel’) n. the tawse or leather strap used in Scottish schools to punish pupils by striking on the open palm, or in earlier times on the buttocks. Still common through the 1970s, the main manufacturer ceased production in 1982 and the practice was abolished in 1987 – ‘oo got hunners o the belt frae George Barclay’, ‘A’m no feared o the belt, mei’, v. to use the tawse – ‘hei belted maist o the cless even the lassies’.

Beltane (bel-tä-na) n. ancient pagan festival on May Day, involving great bonfires to mark the beginning of summer. In Hawick they were suppressed towards the end of the 18th century due to riots between different parts of the community – ‘. . . and for my own part I would rather want coney work, till Beltin, as have the ill wishes of you poor half starved creatures . . .’[WSB], used to describe one of the term-days, probably the same as Whitsunday – ‘Item, to the thrie persons of the Forrest kirk, for thair Beltane terms last bipast . . .’[SB1574].

Beltine (bel-tîn, bel-tîn) n. an alternative form of Beltane – ‘Frae Beltine tide to Yule e’en, Through foul and fair we toil . . .’[JT].

Belvedere (bel-vee-deer) n. small wood on Cavers Mains farm, about a quarter mile south-west of the farmhouse. It is on a piece of land forming a plateau at a height of about 550 ft, offering magnificent views over Teviotdale. A cairn there was excavated in 1895 (or 1896) and contained a burial cist with a well preserved skeleton and some other artefacts; photographs are in the Museum. There is now little left of the original cairn, which may have been 20 m in diameter (also perhaps spelled ‘Belvidere’; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

belyve (bee-lîv) adv., poet. speedily, quickly, at once – ‘Thus did he live, thus did he thrive, An’ turned a wealthy laird belyve’[RDW].

bemain (bee-mân) v., poet. to bemoan – ‘He sat that night aside his friend, An’ waefully his case bemained’[RDW].

Bemersyde House (bee-mur-sid’) n. rectangular tower built around 1535, by the village of Bemersyde, near St. Boswells. Originally it was constructed there to protect the monks’ Ford (between Dryburgh and Old Melrose Abbeys). It was burned in 1545, rebuilt in 1581, and added to in 1690 with stone from Dryburgh Abbey. Further extensions followed in the 18th and 19th centuries, with a survey and alterations carried out by J.P. Alison in 1923, and reductions around 1960. It was home of the Haigs, who died out beginning of summer. In Hawick they were suppressed towards the end of the 18th century due to riots between different parts of the community – ‘. . . and for my own part I would rather want coney work, till Beltin, as have the ill wishes of you poor half starved creatures . . .’[WSB], used to describe one of the term-days, probably the same as Whitsunday – ‘Item, to the thrie persons of the Forrest kirk, for thair Beltane terms last bipast . . .’[SB1574].

Ben (ben) adv. within, to the inner part, any other than the present room, through in the other part of the house – ‘A’m ben in the bedroom, so ee’ll heh’i dae eet yersel’, ‘er ee ben there?’, ‘The auld guideman came stamplin ben, On battle he was bent . . .’ [JTe], ‘And as they rax to bring ben the unkennt bairn . . .’ [DH], n., arch. the inner room, particularly in a 2-room house – ‘A low thatched cottage consisting of a but, a ben and a far-ben’ [JAHM], ‘. . .baith in but and in ben’ [JEDM], ‘A but an’ ben, wi’ a passage atween then’ [GW], adj. inner, prep. in, within – ‘He was swer to bid them ben . . .’ [WL] (from Gaelic).

ben-a-hoose (ben-a-hoos) adv. in the inner part of the house, originally meaning the parlour or best room, but more recently just meaning further into the house – ‘A’m ben ahoose, come throwe’, ‘Our auld guidman said ben a house . . .’ [WH], adj. belonging to the parlour or inner part of the house – ‘thae the ben-a-hoose chairs, no the yins fri in here’ (sometimes also ben-the-hoose).

Benelandes (be-nee-lawdz) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Corbet.

ben-end (ben-end) n. the inner part of a house – ‘. . .a bell rang, which brought Sandy from the “ben-end”’ [JTu].

bend-leather ice (bend-le-thur-is) n., arch. ice that partly gives and wobbles when one walks over it.

the Benign Bishop (thu-bee-ni-bi-shup) n. nickname for Ken Oliver.

benison (be-ni-son) n., poet. benediction, blessing – ‘Land of mountain and the lea, Of truth and hospitality, My benison I leave with thee, Thou leal-hearted Liddesdale’ [DA].

benmaist (ben-maist) adj., poet. innermost, furthest in – ‘. . .And slinkit to the benmaist end To wat his mooth, stoure dry’ [WL].

bennels (be-nelz) n., pl., arch. reeds, stalks of Phragmites communis.

Bennet (be-ni’) n. Adam of Chesters and Grange (16th C.) perhaps the first of the family to be associated with Chesters. His parents names are unknown. He married Catherine Scott (but it is unknown which branch of the Scotts she was from). Their children included: Philip, who succeeded and married Janet Turnbull; and William, recorded in 1562 and 1564. Adam of Wester Grange (16th C.) 2nd son of Philip and younger brother of Mungo of Chesters. In a charter of 1595 he was granted the 10 merk lands of Wester Grange. He may have married another Bennet. Their children included: William of Grubet, who married Margaret Elliott of Stobs; and Janet, who married Mark Pringle of Clifton in about 1616. Alexander of Chesters (18th C.) son of Andrew, who he succeeded. His only son was Robert, but he died in 1780 (with his will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794). It seems that Chesters went to his sisters Jean, Ann and Agnes. The ‘Mrs Bennet of Chesters’ listed on the role of people in Jedburgh taxed for having female servants in the period 1785–91 was probably his wife. Andrew (c.1696–d.1758) Laird of Chesters, near Ancrum, son of Archibald. He had a grant of the lands of Chesters in 1719. He was one of the local landowners asked in 1739 to decide where to situate the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick. He married Dorothy, daughter of Alexander Collingwood in 1719; she was from ‘Litill Rill’ in Whittingham Parish, England. Their children were: Archibald (b.1720), who must have died young; Dorothy (b.1722); Barbara (b.1724), who married James Murray of Ewes, emigrated to the U.S.A. and was the great-great-great-grandmother of Franklin D. Roosevelt; Alexander (b.1727), who succeeded; Jean (b.1728); Thomas (b.1729); Ann (b.1731); and Raguel (b.1732). In 1737 he secondly married Ann, daughter of Robert Turnbull of Standhill, and they had children: Helen (b.1738), who married Archibald Douglas of Timpendean in 1765; Agnes (b.1739), who was unmarried; Isobel (b.1741), who married Archibald Hope, Convenor of Excise; John (b.1743); and Robert (1744–94). His son Alexander’s only son Robert (the obvious heir) died in 1780. Jean, Ann and Agnes may have jointly inherited the lands (there are records relating to their lands in Ancrum Parish among the papers of the Eliots of Minto in 1800 and 1801). ‘Lady Chesters’ paid the window tax at Chesters House in 1748 (suggesting he may have already been deceased) and 1753. The forename of Bennet of Chesters is left blank on the 1761 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire (presumably because the succession was not clear at that point). Archibald of Chesters (17th/18th C.) son of Robert. He was ‘younger of Chesters’ in 1696 when listed along with his father on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1682 he married Barbara, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston, and she died about 1706. He secondly married Rebecca Langlands in Hawick in 1708; she was presumably from the family of the former Lairds of Langlands. In 1708, before his marriage, he gave money to Hawick Parish, including a crown piece. In 1711 their unclaimed ‘pawnded’ money was given to the Hawick poor box. His children (mostly with his first wife) included: John, who must have died before his brother; Andrew, who succeeded and married Dorothy Collingwood and Ann Turnbull; Barbara, who married Mark, son of W. Chisholme of Parkhill, who inherited West Foderllee; and Anne, who married John Murray of Unthank. He was probably also father of Cecilia, who married John Rutherford of Capehope. He was still alive in 1713. Sir David of Grubet (18th C.) son of William. His son William was baptised in Eckford Parish in 1734. James (d.1550) priest associated with Hobkirk Parish. He was replaced by David Turnbull. James (d.bef. 1595) described as the deceased former resident of lands in Lilliesleaf when they were granted to Alexander Hogg in 1595/6. Jean (17th C.) recorded as resident at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when the General Assembly reported on ‘Professed Papists’. He was listed under ‘Merse and Tiviotdale’ and hence probably from the Bennets of Chesters. Mungo of Chesters (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Philip and Janet Turnbull. He is recorded in 1562 and 1564. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1576 he was listed along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and his son Walter, as well as William Turnbull in Barnhills, in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum. Also in 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule and Billearwell) who another group of Turnbuls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others had a bond with, not to harm each other. In 1583/4 he was on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use. He was mentioned on the list of men who were asked to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5 to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Border; his brother William is also on this list. He was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590 and on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds of about 1597. His children included: Ragwell, who succeeded; and William, mentioned in 1608 and 1612, who probably died without issue. Patrick (16th C.) servant of Adam Turnbull of Belses. In 1576/7 there was a complaint that Walter Turnbull in Firth, servant of John Turnbull of Minto, attacked him, despite there being a bond between the feuding branches of the Turnbulls. Walter Turnbull ‘band him hand and fute, and thaireftir drew his swerd, quhairwith he cruellie hurt and woundit him . . . and left him for deid’. His attacker was warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth until £1000 satisfaction was paid. Philip of Chesters (d.c.1560), probably son of Adam. He married Janet Turnbull, and they had sons: Mungo, who succeeded; Adam, progenitor of the Bennets of Grubet; James, progenitor of the Bennets of Levilands, who married Ann Ker of Yair; and William, mentioned as brother of Mungo in 1584/5, who may be the progenitor of the Swedish branch. After his death his wife married Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1562/3 she brought an action against William Bennet, who claimed to be ‘tutor’ for Mungo. He could be the Philip who along with Adam was witness to an indictment (relating to Kers and Handalee), probably from about the 1490s. Ragwell of Chesters (def.bef. 1670) son of Mungo in Chesters, his name is written ‘Ragvel’, ‘Raguel’, ‘Raynell’ and variants. He was one of 8 students who took part in the so-called ‘Royal High School Riot’ in Edinburgh and were imprisoned as a result, complaining about wrongful imprisonment in the Tolbooth. He was regranted the ‘10 merklands of Chesters and Grange’ in 1595. He is ‘in Chesters’ in a 1612 document listing men convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans; he appeared to answer the charge and presumably paid a fine and was released. In 1613 he bought Easter Barnhills from John Turnbull. In 1623 he was the ‘Raguel of Chesteris’ who purchased Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. Also in 1623 he was fined 100 merks for failing to appear before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. He was on a jury for a Liddesdale sheep-stealing case in 1624. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. William held the lands of Barnhills from 1628, and must have been either his brother or son. Also in 1628 William of the Grange complained to the Privy Council that despite a ban on wearing ‘hagbuts and pistols’, he ‘constantly rides up and down the country armed with these weapons awaiting an opportunity to take his advantage of the complainer’; Andrew in Chesters was also named, and so presumably related. He had a ‘resignation ad remanentiam’ (i.e. to the superior’s own hands) to William in 1631, and another to Thomas Turnbull in 1635. He is probably the ‘Bagnel’ (or ‘Ragnal’, transcriptions vary) of Chesters whose daughter Marian married Robert Scott of Burnhead in 1636. In 1637 Rev. William was returned as his next-of-kin, suggesting that he died by then, with no surviving heirs; however, it also is said that he was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Anna, daughter of Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1652 and was served heir to him in 1670. He may also have had a daughter Isobel, who married Adam Rutherford of Kidghengh. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included: Helen (b.1648); Bessie (b.1653); John (b.1654); and Bessie (again, b.1656). Robert of Chesters (d.aft. 1703) son of Ragwell. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1643 as owner of ‘his part of the Grange Paslet’ in Ancrum Parish. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying tax on £1460 for Chesters. In 1670 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Rawflat, ‘Ryknow’ at the eastern end of Belses, with pasturage on Belses Common and Abbotsmeadow in Belses. In 1676 he was one of the local leaders in a covenanting meeting held near Selkirk. In 1677 he was arrested for supporting a conventicle meeting held near Chesters, and after refusing to pay the fine was imprisoned on the Bass Rock. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish. In 1696 he and his son Archibald were on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1652 he married Anna, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers, the contract being signed at ‘Yearlsydie’ (i.e. Earlsdie). His children included: Archibald, who succeeded; and Christine (or Christian, 1673/4–1708), who married Walter Scott, 2nd son of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh. He was still alive in 1703. Note that he is easily confused with Robert (d.1676), minister at Kilrenny. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He married Margaret Blaikie in 1729. His children included: John (b.1731); Isabel (b.1732); and Helen (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) had a ‘decreet arbitral of excambion’ with Matthew Stewart for the lands of Barnhills in 1775. In 1780 he disposed the same lands to Alexander Allison ‘in liferent’ and Matthew Stewart ‘in fee’. He could be the Robert of Chesters listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He could be the Maj. Robert who was living at Gala House in 1791. William (16th C.) brother of Mungo of Chesters. In 1584/5 he was among Turnbulls, Douglasses and others who were charged to appear before the Privy Council. It has been suggested that he may have been progenitor of the Swedish branch of the family. William (d.bef. 1637) son of Mungo and brother of Ragwell. He is recorded in 1608 and 1612 and appears to have led a wild life, finally being charged with murder. He must have died before Rev. William (probably his cousin) was declared next-of-kin of Ragwell. Rev. William of Grubet (c.1593–1647) son of Adam and grandson of Philip of Chesters and Grange. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1614 and became minister of Ancrum in 1622. He was a member of the Commission for maintaining Church discipline in 1634. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’, probably in Hawick. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He got in trouble with the church for exercising his rights as a freeholder to vote for a commissioner to the General Assembly. In 1637 he was returned as next-of-kin to Ragwell, who was probably his full cousin. He may be the ‘Mr William Bennet, for Monsmaynes’ recorded in the valuation rolls for Eckford Parish in 1643, as well as being owner of Broomhills in Ancrum Parish and lands in Yetholm Parish. At some point he acquired the lands and barony of Grubet, on Kale Water. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Sir William, who succeeded to Grubet; Robert, Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, who married Jean Colville; and probably Elizabeth, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum. William of Barnhills (d.c.1653) probably a son of Ragwell. He held the lands of Easter Barnhills from 1613. He bought Barnhills outright (or perhaps just Easter Barhills) in 1628 and had a further charter for the lands in 1634. He cleared the loans on Barnhills with Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1629, in 1630 gave a ‘precept of warning’ against the tenants in Barnhills and Nether Ancrum and in 1631 had a ratification of his rights to the lands. There is a further deed of 1633 from William Turnbull, clearing the final transfer of the property from the Turnbulls to the Bennets. His son William inherited these lands in 1653. William Bennetholm

(17th/18th C.) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Barnhills in 1653. He had a sasine for ‘the lands of Barnhills and Dickeson’s Brae’ granted by the Duke of Lennox. He had a confirming charter in 1664 from the Archbishop of Glasgow. Sir William of Grubet (d.1707) son of Rev. William of Grubet and Margaret Elliott. He was served heir to his father in 1647, including the 10 merkland of Barnhills, as well as the Barony of Grubet and other lands. He must have succeeded when a minor, since there is a record from 1650 of Rev. Harry Elliot of Bedrule discharging a debt to Robert Pringle, his ‘tutor testamentary’. He (as well as his mother Margaret Elliot) paid tax in Morebattle Parish in 1663 and he also paid there and in Ancrum, Eckford, Morebattle and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1670. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690 and again in 1704, along with his son William. In 1703 he sold Barnhills to William Rutherford. He married Christian, daughter of Alexander Morrison of Prestonrange. Their children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Adam (d.1698); Sir John (d.1751); Jean (d.1710), who married William Nisbet of Dirleton in 1688; Christian, who married Charles, son of Alexander Stuart of Dunearn; and Elizabeth, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum. Sir William of Grubet (d.1729) son of Sir William, whom he succeeded in 1710. He was referred to as ‘Captain’ in his earlier life, being Captain of his own troop of horse. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Revolution and was appointed Captain of the eastern troop of militia in 1689. He was ‘younger of Grubbet’ when he contributed £300 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1693 (when still ‘younger of Grubbet’), serving until 1707. He was thus one of the M.Ps. in the last Scottish Parliament who voted for the Union. He was also M.P for Roxburghshire 1707–8 in the first Parliament of Great Britain. He presented the Roxburghshire petition on Darien to Parliament. He married Jean, daughter of Sir John Ker of Lochtoun, secondly married Margaret, heiress of John Scougall of Whitekirk, and thirdly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir David Hay. His children were: Helen (b.1700), baptised in Eckford Parish; Sir William (d.1730), who had no children; Sir David (d.1741), who married Jean Ker and also had no issue; Robert (d.1733); and Christina, who may have married William Nisbet of Dirleton, who would have been her cousin. The ‘cloth money for Margaret Bennet’ recorded in Ancrum in 1726 is probably for his wife’s burial. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘portioner of Ancrum’. He had a son James baptised in 1705 and an unnamed child baptised in 1709. Probably the same William is recorded giving ‘cloth money’ to Ancrum Parish (presumably for a burial). It is possible he is the same man as Sir William of Grubet. William (18th/19th C.) house servant at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver (also spelled ‘Bennat’; see also Bennett).

Bennetholm (be-ndi-hom) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, probably near the very southern tip of Roxburghshire, although the precise location is unknown. They are recorded as ‘Bennetholme’ in 1541, valued at 42 shillings and tenanted by William Forester.

Bennett (be-ni’) n. Bishop George Henry (1875–1946) born in the Antilles, he was ordained a priest in 1898. He came to Hawick from North Berwick, serving as priest at S.S. Mary and David’s 1912–18. He started an early Mass, as well as the later one, assisted by Fr. Joseph West from the Dominican Convent. He became Bishop of Aberdeen and the North Highlands in 1918. He returned for the opening of the new Halls in 1930 and in 1944 to mark the centenary of S.S. Mary and David’s Chapel. Robert Brown (1895–1949) from Edinburgh, he served as High School Rector 1945–47, coming from being head in Jedburgh. He organised the Youth Sports at the Common Riding of 1946. He left Hawick to take up the post of Director of Education for Roxburghshire, but died only 2 years later.

bensel (ben-sel) v., arch. to dash, beat – ‘The win’s blew, an’ bensellet agayne the hous, an’ it fell’ [HSR].

Benson (ben-sin) n. William (19th C.) general merchant on Douglas Square in Newcastle upon Tyne in the 1860s.

bent (ben’, bent) n., arch. coarse grass, common hair-grass, a hill covered with such grass – ‘The breeze, that trembles through the whistling bent, Sings in his placid ear of sweet content’ [JL], ‘And naething seen but heighs and howes, And bent and birns’ [JR], ‘...whus’lin’ vera cheery, aw mind, as aw gaed ower the bent in the clear munelicht’ [BCM1880], ‘Barefit I skelpit owre the bent, The gorcock whirred an’ flew ...’ [ECB], ‘Across the bents I lightly strode, And skipped o’er ilk knowe and craggie’ [JT], ‘...The nag of the reiver was well nigh spent, With a dragging hoof and his nose to the bent’ [WHO], ‘...The spring o’ bent aneth the feet, The chime o’ hill-burns ringin’ [WL].

ben-the-hoose (ben-the-hoo-se) adv. a variant of ben-a-hoose.

Bentpath (bept-pawth) n. town in the eastern part of Dumfries & Galloway, about 5 miles north-west of Langholm, birthplace of Thomas Telford and site of the first major ride-out in the Langholm Common Riding.

Bents Rig (bents-rig) n. name of an area to the north of Black Burn in Liddesdale, between Branch Cleuch and Moully Sike.

benty (ben-ee, ben-tee) v., poet. composed of coarse grass, covered with bent – ‘Oh, Liddesdale, thon land of mist, I lo’e thy benty bogs and rushes ...’ [TCh], ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’ [HSR], ‘And they wad hed hides Like benty gress ...’ [DH].

the Benty (thu-ben-tee) n. popular name for Bentpath, particularly during the festivities of the ride-out there, which is one of the major events leading up to Langholm’s Common Riding, and traditionally an all-male event.

berk (berk) n., v. bark – ‘If ee deh stop that dog berkin &’ll swabbie eet’ (also bairk).

Berkeley (berk-lee) n. Robert (d.c.1199) brother of Walter, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed a charter along with his brother for lands granted to Holyrood Abbey by William I. Also with his brother, he witnessed the grant of lands to Orm of Ashkirk in about 1170. He became Lord of Maxton, through marrying Cecily, daughter of Liulf and grand-daughter of Maccus. His daughter and heiress was probably Alicia, who married Hugo of Normanville. Sir Walter of Inverkeilor and Redcastle (c.1136–c.93) also referred to as ‘de Barclay’ and variants, and occasionally called ‘William’. His surname probably came from the village in Somerset and he was from an Anglo-Norman family. Along with his brother Robert he came to Scotland in about 1165 and entered royal service. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. He witnessed the grant of lands to Orm of Ashkirk in about 1170. He was appointed Great Chamberlain of Scotland to William the Lion in about 1171, serving until his death. He thus held important national financial responsibilities, although little is known about the details during this period. He fought with William against the English in 1173–74, being present at the siege of Carlisle in 1174. He was listed among the 20 Scottish noblemen required to find hostages in the Treaty of Falaise. He was granted several estates for ‘knight-service’, notably Inverkeilor in Angus, later the Barony of Redcastle. He was also granted Newton, which was later the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. However, it is unknown whether he actually spent time in the Hawick area. This may be the grant of ‘Neutun’ in the period 1173–82 by king William (although it has been suggested this was rather Longnewton or Newton in Perthshire, these seem less likely, since we know he held Newton near Hawick). In the period 1179–91 he witnessed a grant for lands in Hassendean, involving Paisley Priory. From a kinsman, Robert of London (probably related to ‘Eschina de Londonis’ who held lands at Hassendean) he gained lands near St. Boswells and Haltwhistle in Tynedale. He also gained the Lordship of Urr in Galloway and probably had the motte and bailey castle built there. He may have first married an heiress of Ardoyne in Aberdeenshire and secondly married Eve, daughter of Uhtred, Lord of Galloway (who also married Robert de Quincy, Justiciar of Lothian); she later granted lands in Haddingtonshire to Melrose Abbey for the souls of her two deceased husbands and her brother Roland. He had at least 3 children: John, who predeceased him; Agatha, who inherited part of his lands and married Humphrey, son of Theobald de Adeville, who changed his name to Barclay; and another daughter of unknown name who married Enguerrand (or Ingram) de Baliol, probably younger son of Eustace de Baliol. His name stops appearing as a witness to royal charters in about 1193 (also written ‘Barclay’).

bermy (ber-mee) adj., arch. barmy, raised by yeast – ‘Imagin iz: A reed, lowpin, broazy face leike a bermy bannih, sweet-begrutten an bairkent wui dirrt’ [ECS], ‘A face like a beryn banna’ [GW].

Bernicia (ber-ne-shu) n. kingdom founded by Celtic peoples in perhaps the 4th century, also known as ‘Bryneich’ and other variants, it was the southern part of the lands of the Votadini. It was centred around modern Northumberland and Durham, stretching from the Tees to the Forth and had Teviotdale at its western edge. It was taken over by the Angles, who formally founded it in the year 547. By 654 (perhaps earlier) it had been united with the southern kingdom of Deira into Northumbria. Certainly by the 7th century most of Roxburghshire was under its control. It is believed that the Catrail may be a boundary separating Bernicia from the Britons to the southwest.

berry (be-ree) n. formerly referring to the gooseberry in particular — ‘...still remember with pleasure the handful of ‘berries’ they got from her when they were bairns’ [RM].

Berrybush (be-ree-bush) n. farmstead between the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, lying on the Berrybush Burn, just off the B709. It was owned by the Crown from about 1456 until at least 1502, with Walter Scott holding the lands in 1513. William Stewart claimed tenancy of the lands in 1541, paying £12 yearly. Archibald Bap-tie was tenant in 1685 when he took ‘the Test’ in Hawick (it is ‘Berybus’ in 1541).

Berryfall (be-ree-fell) n. farm on the Newcastleton Road, about 8 miles south of Hawick, sometimes called ‘South Berryfall’ to distinguish it from North Berryfall. It is below Berryfall Hill, with the remains of an ancient fort, together with mediæval homesteads and enclosures nearby. A side road near here joins the A6088 near Hawthornside farm. John Jerdan was tenant there in 1694. John Turnbull was farmer in at least the period 1780–1797 and Alexander Ashcroft in the 1860s. The fort and homestead are on a spur overlooking the Slitrig, between the farm and the river. The fort is about 100 m by 60 m, and has a rampart that has been partly obliterated by the later homestead; both have signs of hut circles. Just to the south of the farm (to the right of the main road after the farm) are the remains of extensive earthworks, about 60 m in diameter and with ramparts. There is also a linear earthwork on the opposite side of the B6399. The top stone of a rotary quern, found there in 1872, is in the Museum; Mr. Dryden of North Berryfall farm dug up a heap of stones to find an urn (which broke into pieces) and the quern (the origin may simply be ‘berry hill’ or ‘berg fell’, i.e. ‘hil hill’, but the existence of the adjacent hill-fort sug-gests ‘the hill with the fort’, with the Old English ‘byrig’; it is ‘The Berrifell’ in 1694 and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Berryfall Hill (be-ree-fell-hil) n. hill south of Hawick, off the Newcastleton Road to the east of Berryfall farm. It reaches a height of 393 m. Its western side has smaller ridges called Hare Hill and Little Hare Hill, while its eastern flank is called Ringlets Knowe, where there is a standing stone (probably not very ancient) and the remains of a settlement.

Berryfall Lake (be-ree-fel-lak) n. former name for a headwater of Cogsmill Burn, south of Earlside farm. It flows in a roughly northerly di-rection, to meet other small streams and form Cogsmill Burn. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map and described in the Name Book (the meaning of the name is mysterious).

Berryfall Plain (be-ree-fel-plan) n. former farm near Berryfall, distinct from North Berryfall and South Berryfall. It was on the west side of the main road between Cogsmill and Berryfall, on the east side of Haits Hill. It is listed on the 1851 and 1861 censuses, when there were Scotts there (also written ‘Berryfallplain’).

Berry Moss (be-ree-moss) n. marshy area to the east of Dryden Greenhill farm. 3 flint arrow-heads, a square-shaped pounding stone and an anvil stone were found there, as described in 1927.

Berrymuir (be-ree-mewr-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Bertoli (ber-to-lee) n. Johnny Italian immi-grant, who lived in Hawick, and ran the chip shop at the foot of the Loan before WWII. He was in-terred during the War, with the local joke being that this was because he had made white puddings during the blackout. Unfortunately he died on the boat on the way to the internment camp in Canada.

Bert’s Cairn (berz-kä-ru) n. relatively mod-ern cairn on Teindside Hill, overlooking North-house. An inscribed stone bears the date 1880 and the letters ‘BERT’, along with what appear to be an hourglass and a plough (although now hard to read).

Johnny Italian immigrant, who lived

Berwick (be-reck) n. seaside town and histori-cally important port, about 43 miles north-east of Hawick. Originally one of the 4 burghs of Scot-land, it was long contested between Scotland and England, changing hands 14 times. One result of this is that it was famously at war with Russia for centuries. It has latterly been in England, al-though on the wrong side of the Tweed and its football team plays in the Scottish league. It is noted for the ancient town walls, 18th century Town Hall, ruined Berwick Castle and magni-fi-cent Royal Border railway bridge. This has 28 semi-circular arches of 61 feet 6 inches, is 2160 feet long and built 126 feet above the Tweed. It was designed by Robert Stevenson and built 1847–50. The road bridge over the Tweed there is men-tioned as early as 1199. The second bridge lasted 1498–1609. The present bridge, adjacent to the Berwick Smack (beseek) n. Arch. to beseech, be earnestly – ‘Therefore we will beseeke your lordship to take this in gude part and consider our case ...’ [CBP1597] ‘Saufe now, I besik thee, O Lord: O Lord, I besiik thee sen’ nowe prospiritie’ [HSR].

Besim (be-reek) n. A. (18th C.) man who lived near Hawick in the summers and was one of the ‘faggot voters’ who voted for the Tory candidate in the elections of 1835 and 1837. He was attacked on both occasions by disgruntled people in Hawick, in 1837 having many of his clothes torn off and being beaten for refusing to swear against voting. His wallet was said to have been stolen, but actually returned to him later, when found in the street by a boy. He was said to be personally involved in setting up the system of fictitious votes in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Caithness. John (d.1354) Archdeacon of Teviotdale, known as ‘de Berwick.

Berwick Cockles (be-reek-ko-kulz) n., pl. peppermint sweets tradionally made in Berwick, also called ‘Ross’s Berwick Cockles’. They are red and white striped, like humbugs, but with a softer texture.

Berwickshire (be-reek-shIr, be-reek-shir) n. county to the north of Roxburghshire, now part of the latterly English town of Berwick. It is sometimes synonymous with the term ‘the Merse’.

Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club (be-reek-shir-na-choo-ral-ists-khub) n. local learned society devoted to natural history and antiquities, founded in 1831, and very much a predecessor for the Hawick Archological Society. Its transactions contain many articles of relevance to Hawick and area. The club met a couple of times the Scottish Borders, paradoxically not containing the latterly English town of Berwick. It is sometimes synonymous with the term ‘the Merse’.

Beshara (be-sha-ru) n. international school at Chisholme House since 1995, which runs residential courses in ‘intensive esoteric education’, mixing eastern religion and New Age philosophy. They follow the teachings of the 14th century Spanish philosopher Muhyiddin Ibn Arabi, and have several other centres in Britain. They are also associated with ‘Beshara Design Co. Ltd’, based at 10 Bourtree Place.

beside (bee-sid) adv., arch. besides, in addition – ‘...were extracted out of ye records of ye session, and this day read over before them, beside his irregular marriage on the English side ...’ [PR1720].

besom (bi-, be-, bu-zum) n. a broom – ‘...by mending broken kettles, pots, pans, making horn spoons, besoms, &c.’ [EM1820], ‘...with a duster tied over the head of a ‘buzom’ [BB], applied to a woman who is a busybody, a lowly woman, a mishievous girl – look it that nosy besom looking out her wundi’, ‘Come back this minute, you little besom!’ [JeC], ‘Yae day she sought him up for tea, For weel the besom kent His manners were deplorable, An’ wi’ regrets he went’ [WFC], also used as a mild oath – ‘O ya besom!’ (also spelled ‘bizzim’, ‘bizzum’, ‘buzom’, etc.; J.A.H. Murray notes that the pronunciation of the 2 meanings was ‘quite distinct in southern Scotch’, with the broom being -n- and the woman being -s-).

the Besom Inn (thu-bu-zum-in) n. former inn near the bridge at Sclaterford. The name was said to be related to a sign of a broom indicating whether the excisemen were around. The building is now a private house (there is a place of the same name in Coldstream).

bespake (bee-spāk) pp., poet. spoke – ‘Then up an bespake the Lord Mangerton, What news, what news, sister Davnie, to me?’ [CPM].

Bessy Bell and Mary Gray (be-see-bel-and-mā-ree-grā) n. old song, published at least as early as 1769. It was long believed to refer to 2 young ladies who retired to Allanhaugh peel, and during a famine survived on oatmeal and a barrel of snails they had preserved with salt. However, it appears more likely that the ladies in the song lived at Lynedoch, near Perth.

Best (best) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on the Knowesouth estate. Perhaps the same Andrew was listed along with James on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, in what appears to be ‘rankyte’. Ann L. ‘Annie’ (b.1839) born at Velvet Hall in Northumberland, where her maternal grandparents were innkeepers. Her father was James Best from Hawick and her mother was Harriet Paxton. She was orphaned at an early age, and appears to have inherited her father’s carrier’s yard (at about 78 High Street), paying tax on it in 1855. In 1861 she was living with her aunt Elizabeth, wife of grocer William Brown, and listed as ‘Land Proprietor’. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Bedrule Parish. Their surname and location appear to be ‘besz’ and ‘rankyte’, respectively. James (1668/9–97) smith in Bedrule Parish. He is buried in the churchyard there along with his wife Margaret, both of them dying on the same day. He is probably the James listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in ‘Whiterige’ in 1682 when the will of his wife Janet Harkness was recorded. This could be Whitriggs in Cavers Parish, although somewhere else in Roxburghshire is possible. James (17th C.) resident at Newton (near Stobs) in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (c.1810–bef. 1843) son of innkeeper Thomas and Margaret Rae. He was a carrier in Hawick, living at ‘Wood Yard’ (i.e., about 78 High Street) in 1841. Walter Scott was also a carrier at the same address at that time. In 1837 he was listed going to Kelso and Berwick from the High Street every Tuesday. He married Harriot Paxton (from Northumberland, who had earlier had a daughter, Margaret Ann, with a Thomas Scott), who died in 1842, aged 35. Their children included: Ann (b.1839); and Thomas, who died in infancy. He died in Kelso and is buried at St. Mary’s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Wellie’ along with other tenants of the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Parish of Cavers in 1621. It is possible this was ‘Woollie’ or ‘Wells’, but neither are in Cavers. John (1745/6–1822) lived for 32 years at Hudson’s Bay. He died in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He could be the John, son of John, who was christened in Hobkirk Parish in 1747. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He is probably the John who married Agnes Walker and had children Agnes (b.1818), Mary (b.1820) and Betsy (b.1822). Margaret nee Rae (b.1789/90) born in Stichill, she married Thomas. She was a publican at the Grapes Inn, according to the 1841 census. Her husband was not present at that time, but she was not listed as a widow. She was also listed as a vintner in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in Slater’s 1852 directory, when she was at the Fleece Inn. She was a widow listed as innkeeper of the Fleece Inn in 1851. Her children were Jessie, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth, Hannah and Andrew. In 1861 she was also listed with her son-in-law James Hay and his 3 young children. Robert (1736–81) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Thomas. He was tenant farmer at ‘Heatly’ according to his gravestone in Bedrule kirkyard. His wife Isabel Scott died in 1816. Their children included: Margaret, who died aged 14; Thomas (1773/4–1805); and Robert and Helen, who died young. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Deans and they had an unnamed son baptised in 1686. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He is probably related to James and William. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith in Halrulre. In 1761 he married Isabel ‘miln’ (either Mill or Milne), who was from Cavers Parish. Children born to Thomas in Hobkirk, who are probably his included Thomas (b.1762) and Janet (b.1767). Thomas (d.bef. 1841) shepherd and innkeeper in Hawick. He was probably the Thomas born to Andrew in Roxburgh in 1778. By 1841 his wife was innkeeper at the Fleece Inn, and so he was presumably deceased. He married Margaret Rae in Crailing Parish in 1806. Their children included: James, who married Harriet Paxton, but along with 2 children, appear to have died by 1843: Jessie, who married William Inglis; Jane, who married Anthony Boiston; Margaret; Elizabeth, who firstly married James Taylor and secondly married William Brown; Hannah; and Andrew. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be related to James and Thomas, who are also listed in the same parish.

bestail (beest-ee-ul) n., arch. a collective term for livestock – ‘That they had also the sole power of regulating the pasturage of the Common, and fixing the number of bestial to be sent’ [BR1778].

The Best O’ A’ (thu-best-6-aw) n. song with words written by Kerr Hartop while a pupil at Hawick High School, and music written by teacher James Letham. It is rare among Hawick songs for being written in compound 6/8 time. It was first sung in public at ‘The Big Sing’ in 2011.

bet (be’, bet) pp. beaten – ‘oo wereni bet yit’, arch. ‘Bit Border folk are no that easy bett . . . ’ [ECS], hardened or bruised by pressure or overuse – ‘A bet fit’ [GW] (cf. bate and betten).

betaen (bee-taun) pp., poet. beaten – ‘I opinet til my beloefet: but my beloefet had betaen himsel awa . . . ’ [HSR].
betchell

betchell (be-chul) v., poet. to beat, break – 'Than did I betchell thame sma' as the stour afore the wund' [HSR].

betchellin (be-chul-in) n., arch. a beating, thrashing – 'Gee 'im a guid betchellin' '[GW].

Bethel Baptist Kirk (be-thel-bawp-tist-kirk) n. small baptist group in Hawick that previously met in the building at the top of the Trinity Steps, and now has premises in Burnfoot (above the fish and chip shop).

Betherule (be-thur-ool) n. former spelling and pronunciation of Bedrule (having an extra syllable).

Bethoc (be-thok) n. (11th/12th C.) early owner of the lands of Bedrule, which were once 'Rule-bethoc'. At the foundation of Jedburgh Abbey, she and her husband Randolph (or Ralph), son of Dunegal of Stranith (or Nithsdale), granted to the monks a 'carrucate' of land in Ruercase, which was within their Bedrule boundaries. The suggestion is that she was daughter of Fergus of Galloway and Elizabeth, daughter of Henry I of England. However, there may have been more than one lady of the same name, or the stories could be confounded. She may have been the same as ‘Bethoc’, daughter of Donald III, King of Scotland, who was named after her great-grandmother, daughter of Malcolm II. She married Uchtred (or Huctred) son of Waldeve of Tynedale; their daughter and heiress Hextilda married Richard Comyn, who was Justiciar of Lothian (and as a result of this connection John Comyn was one of the 13 claimants to the Scottish throne after the death of the Maid of Norway in 1290). She died before 1204. The Comyns certainly owned the lands of Bedrule through the 13th century, making this connection likely. Bethoc may be an early variant of Beatrix and was a common Gaelic female name.

betten (be'-in, be'-tin) pp., arch. beat, beaten (cf. the now more common baten and bet).

better (be'-ur) adv., arch. more, considerably more – 'It wants better as five meenints a theire' [ECS], 'Ee needna hurry – ee've been better as haaf-an-oor ti feenisht that woark in' [ECS], 'A was feerd A'd be ovre lang, for it was better as a quarter efter fowr be the toon's clock' [ECS], 'Thay've been beidin at Spittal for better than a month now' [ECS] (usually with either 'as' or 'than'; used when estimating time and other quantities).

Bet the Guaird (be-thur-gaird) n. nickname of Elizabeth Airmstrong.

Betty Cathrae's Well (be'-ee-kawth-raz-wel) n. popular name for a former spring pump in Victoria Road.

Betty Johnny (be'-ee-jo-nee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – 'Sally Machlusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame' [HI].

Betty Revel see Revel

Betty the Bab (be'-ee-thu-bawb) n. nickname for a Hawick resident of the 19th century. Her fire tongs are in the Museum.

Betty Whutson (be'-, bet-ee-whut-sin) n. column in the Hawick Express, presented as a letter from a woman, written in dialect. It was originated by James Edgar, with later writers being Robert Laidlaw, Bert Leishman, R.E. Scott and Ian W. Landles. Originally the column was used as a mouthpiece for discussing locally controversial topics, but it grew into a local history discussion, with each writer putting his own stamp on the idea. The origin of the name is uncertain.

betwix (bee-twiks) prep., arch. between – '...as is contenit in the endentouris made betuix ws thairapoun' [SB1470], '...and finaly endit betuix honorabil men, that is to say, Waltir Scot of Branzhelm ...' [SB1519].

betwixt an (bee-twikst-an) prep., arch. between now and ... – '...to enquire thereanent, betwixt and this day eight days, and to report betwixt and that time' [BR1734].

Bet Young see Young, Elizabeth

Bev (bev) n. informal abbreviation for the surname 'Berridge'.

Bevin Boy (be-vin-boi) n. a young man conscripted through ballot to work in the mines as part of National Service in Britain during 1943-48, following a measure introduced by Minister of Labour Ernest Bevin.

Beverley (be-vur-lee) n. Beverley Farm and School Co. Ltd., a boarding school in Bonchester Bridge that was used to house refugee children from the London Blitz, including First Minister Donald Dewar. It was based at Wolfelee House (which later burned down).

Beverley (be-vur-lee) n. William (b.1856) born at Kermenton, Aberdeenshire. He became a groom at age 14, then worked as a servant, coming to Wolfelee estate in 1879. He worked as butler for 12 years, then moved to Barnbarroch, returning to the area as Governor of Jedburgh Poorhouse in 1899. In 1886 he married Mary, only daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and they had no children.
bewver (be-vur) v., arch. to shake, tremble – ‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an bevvert i the sim-mer breeze’ [ECS], ‘The leaves bevered i’ the wund’ [ECS] (from Anglo-Saxon).

bevver (be-vee) n. any alcoholic drink, an alco-holic binge (recent introduction from the West of Scotland).

Bewcastle (bew-kaw-sul) n. town over the Bor-der into Cumberland, named from being ‘Bueth’s Castle’, and an important centre of cross-border conflict. The Castle had its ‘Captains of Bew-castle’, who were relatively independent leaders with special status. There was a nearby Roman fort (although it is over the wall into Scotland), and it is the site of the 8th century inscribed Bew-castle Cross (possibly the burial place of the Angli-an King Alcfirth) – ‘The Captain of Bewcastle hath bound him to ryde, And he’s ower to Tevi-dale to drive a prey . . . ’ [T], ‘Bewcastle brandishes high his proud scimitar, Ridley is riding his fleet-footed grey; Hedley and Howard there, Wandale and Windermere, Lock the door, Larriston, hold them at bay’ [ES].

bewest (bi-west) prep., arch. to the west of – ‘. . . it was found therein specified that ye loft be-west the church door was allocat to the Mechan-icks in ye toun as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 . . . ’ [PR1717].

Bewlie (bew-lee) n. area roughly between Belses and Lilliesleaf. A drove road used to pass along the northern side of Bewlie Moor on its way to-wards Groundistone Heights and the Borthwick valley. Lands there were held separately by differ-ent families over the centuries, there apparently being a ‘five-pound land’ and a ‘five-merk land’ that were distinct. It was owned by the Riddells from at least the mid-16th century and passed to the Scotts of Harden in the mid-18th century. The remaining parts of Bewlie and Bewlie Moor were sold by Capt. Hutton Riddell in the late 19th century. There were also Turnbulls associ-ated with the land in the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1643 Andrew Turnbull’s lands there were val-ued at £364, Sir Walter Riddell’s lands at £273 and James Riddell of Haining’s lands at £390. Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663, with Walter Riddell also owning part of the lands. Walter Riddell is recorded paying tax on land valued at £273 there in 1678, with William Turnbull paying for another part, valued at £390, and John Riddell of Muselee paying for a third part, valued at £330. William Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared a fugitive for being a Covenanter. William Dodds, James Dodds, John Wight, Thomas Wight, William Riddell, John Dodds and Andrew Lowrie were listed there in 1694. In 1695 the 5-pound land there was inherited by Agnes Riddell (wife of John Nisbet) from her brother William Riddell. Robert Wilson was owner in 1761. In 1779 the liferent of the superiority of the ‘five-pound lands, and half a cott land in the town of Lilliesleaf, commonly called the five pound land of Bewlie’ was granted to Charles Scott, younger of Woll, by Walter Scott of Harden, valued at £330. In 1788 the lands were in 3 parts, owned by William Riddell of Camieston (£465 5s, in-cluding teinds), Walter Scott of Harden (£333) and Charles Riddell of Muselee (£391 1s 2d). In at least 1787–97 Andrew Thomson was farmer there, with John Scott at Bewlie Mains. In 1797 Andrew Thomson and John Douglas were farmers there, while Robert Turnbull was at Bewliehill. In 1813 the ‘Five-pound land of Bewlie’ was valued at £273 (plus £60 in teinds) and owned by Scott of Harden, while the main lands of Bewlie were valued at £330 (plus £61 in teinds) and owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee. Alexander Drummond was there in 1868. There were separate farms of Bewlie Mains and Bewlie Moor in the 19th and early 20th centuries. A wood there was formerly known as the Droveroad Plantation. Bewlie Moss was apparently used for field conventi-cles around 1680 and was the scene of a skirmish between Covenanters and dragoons. It is said that when workmen were enclosing the farm they found a circular cairn that contained partially burned bones (the origin is probably from the Old French ‘beau lieu’, meaning ‘beautiful place’; it is recorded at least as early as 1551 and is variously spelled ‘Bewley’, ‘Bewly’, ‘Bewlye’, ‘Bewlie’ and variants in early times; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 maps as ‘Beauly’ and ‘Beduly’, although it is clearly ‘Beauly’ on Pont’s 1590s manuscript).

Bewlie Bog (bew-lee-bог) n. alternative name for Bewlie Moss. It was said to be the site of a deadly meeting between attendees at a field convention and the dragoons of Graham of Claverhouse – ‘From Bewlie bog, with slaughter red, A wanderer hither drew, And oft he stopt and turn’d his head, As by fits the night wind blew’ [SWS].

Bewlie Hill (bew-lee-hil) n. former farm near Bewlie. In 1811 the ‘Lands in Bewlie, now called Bewlie-hill’ were owned by William Riddell of Bewlie Mains

Camieston and valued at £407. In 1861 David Gourlay was there, farming 184 acres and employing 8 people. He was also listed there in 1868. It was recorded as ‘the 5 merk land of Bewlie & 2 merk land of Heidlaw’.

Bewlie Mains (bew-lee-mänz) n. former name for a farmstead near Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. John Scott was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–97.

Billerwell (bi-lur-wul, -wel) n. farm north of Hallrule, formerly one of the main estates of Hobkirk Parish, and once in the barony of Feurule. There were Turnbull Lairds there in the 16th century, e.g. Adam in 1502 and Thomas in the 1580s. It was ‘Bullerwell’ among among the Elliott of Stobs properties in the Barony of Feurule in the late 17th century. In 1779 it was valued at £279 10s 6d. It was valued along with Hallrule in the county valuation of 1788. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century and the tenants were the Thomsons in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It was then tenanted by Turnbulls, Thomsons again and then Meins in the early 20th century. In about 1975 it was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. In 1811 the farm still had the same value and was owned by Sir William Elliott of Stobs. A lodge was built there in the mid-19th century for Wells House. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The land may have given rise to the surname ‘Bullerwell’ A spindle whorl from there is in Hawick Museum and Tom Scott’s collection included a ‘stone mould for casting rings’ from there (note that in the pronunciation the stress is on the middle syllable: formerly written ‘Bullerwall’ etc.; it is ‘Bullirwell’ in 1502 and 1506, ‘Bullerwell’ in 1508, ‘Bullorwell’ in 1533, ‘Bullerwell’ in 1562 and 1593, ‘Bullirwell’ in 1576, ‘Billirwall’ in 1581, ‘Bullerwall’ in 1583 and 1605, ‘Byllerwell’ in 1612, ‘Bullerwall’ in 1619 and ‘Billerwill’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Bullerwell’, but has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map: the origin may be related to an obscure first element plus a spring, but the nearest one is on the slopes of Ruberslaw at ‘the Skouff’).

Billholm (bi-hum) n. farm and hamlet between Eskdalemuir and Bentpath. The farm there was let along with Craikhope in the 19th century. There are several ancient settlements nearby.

Billhope (bi-lup) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, about half way along the road linking the B6399 with the A7. Formerly the main farm was further up the Billhope Burn, with another farm, ‘Billhopefoot’ nearer to the Hermitage. It was listed in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 10 merks, and in a roll of 1541 with a value of 12 merks, when leased to Thomas Armstrong of ‘Meriantoun’ (i.e. Mangerton). A Laird ‘called Billop’ is recorded in 1540 among Scottish rebels who had fled to England. ‘Jame Billop’ is recorded in 1569 as a tenant of Elliot of Falnash, and may have taken his name from the place. It was possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1632. John Beattie was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 882 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Gordenberry, Twislehope, Carewoodrig and Linhope. John Currer was recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Alexander Anderson was shepherd in 1861. It was traditionally celebrated as a place that was good for game – ‘Billhope braes for bucks and raes, And Carit haughs for swine, And Terras for the good bull-trout, If he be ta’en in time’ [T] (also ‘Billhope’; the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Billa’; it is probably the ‘Bylhop’ of c.1376, ‘Billop’ in 1516 and ‘Billhope’ in 1541 and 1632; it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).
Billhope

Billhope (bi-lup) n. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame Billop’ in 1569 when he was a tenant of Gavin Elliot of Falnash. Binks (bingks) n. farm at the south end of Teviothead. The Gladstains family owned the lands in the early 16th century and there were Elliots there from the early 17th century (also called ‘the Binks’). ‘Simon Ellot of the Binks’ was involved in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’ of Stobs and was forced to sell the estate to Gilbert of Stobs about 1620. It is said that this was a ‘hand-fasting’ and the cheap sale was part of the deal if he was unsatisfied. However, Simon’s son William bought the estate back and it was held by a later Simon Elliot of Binks, who appears to have sold it to Christopher Irving, who was owner in 1678, when it was valued at £300. It passed to John Elliot of Binks by 1718 (although the details of this period may be confused). Agnes Nichol was recorded as tenant in 1694. It was ‘Binckes’ when the superiority was owned by Sir William Elliott of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. it was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. It was in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698. The last Simon Elliot of Binks sold the land again, to John Elliot of Thorlleshope, sometime before 1718. John Elliot, designated ‘of Binks’, received a charter of the lands from Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1718. It was valued at £300 in 1788 (and still recorded in about 1811), when owned by John Elliot. James Veitch is recorded as farmer there in 1797, W. Armstrong in 1821 and John Elliot in the 1860s – ‘Ye Weepin’ Gods o’ Teviot Stane, Shed a’ yer tears in mighty rain, An’ gie’s a flood ti whelm the Plain Frae Binks ti Tweed. I’ll dae the rest, consultin’ nane. Then they’ll take heed!’ [WP] (often formerly written ‘the Binks’; it dae the rest, consultin’ nane. Then they’ll take heed!) James (19th C.) trainer from Gullane, who ran horses at Hawick races for decades until 1876. In 1873 he was presented with a special medal ‘for his Long Attendance and Integrity in running his horses at the meeting’; it is believed this is unique in the history of horse-racing. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Magistrate at the end of the 17th century and also in 1701. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott. He was thrown off the Council for his violent and abusive behaviour in 1706. This was probably related to the disputes over the Common Riding of that year. He was fined for ‘breach of waird, into qlik he was in carcerrat, and ryveing of the lock of the tolbuith doore, and ryveing up the daills of the loft of the sd. tolbuith’, i.e. breaking out of jail, as well as for drunkenness and ‘his many horrid and blasphemous oaths’. Probably the same John was listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is also probably the tailor called John who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the John, married to Margaret Hogg, whose daughter Margaret was born in Hawick in 1685 and Christian in 1691 (also written ‘Bynie’).

Binning (bi-nin) n. John (15th C.) cleric who was proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1426, but does not appear to have taken up the position. His surname is spelled ‘Benyng’. John (16th C.) listed as ‘calceario’ (i.e. shoemaker) in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. It is unclear if he was local or perhaps from Peebles or Edinburgh.

Binster (bin-stur) n. local name for Buchonster – ‘... where it jooket doon thre th knowes away ayowat Bnister an Hobkirk’ [ECS], ‘The burn ’at rings throu’ Binster rins’ throu’ ma heart’ [JIR] (also written ‘Buinster’, see also Bunster; it is ‘Boonester’ in 1797).

Birchhill (birch-hil) n. former farm in the Rule valley, between Billerwell and Hallrule (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

birdi (bir-di) n. birthday – ‘Happy Birdi ti yowe, Happy Birdi ti yowe, Happy Birdi dear Haw-eek, Happy Birdi ti yowe’ (note the lack of th in the pronunciation; also spelled ‘Birdil’).

birdih see birdi

birds (burdz) n., pl. ornithologists and twitchers should be able to regularly find the following species over a year in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick (local names in brackets): Barn Owl (hootle); Blackbird (blackie); Blackcap; Black-headed Gull (pick-maw); Blue Tit; Brambling; Bullfinch; Buzzard (nicht-hawk); Carrion Crow (craw); Chaffinch (shilfie); Collared Dove; Common Sandpiper; Coot; Cormorant; Dipper (witter craw); Fieldfare; Goldcrest; Goldeneye; Goldfinch (goldie); Goosander; Great Black-backed Gull; Great Crested Grebe; Great Spotted Woodpecker; Green Woodpecker; Grey Heron; Greylag Goose; Grey Wagtail; Herring Gull; House Sparrow (sparri); Jackdaw (kae); Jay; Kestrel; Kingfisher; Lapwing (peesweep, peisweep); Little Grebe; Long-tailed Tit; Magpie (pyet); Mallard; Meadow Pipit (muir-cheeper); Mistle Thrush; Moorhen; Mute Swan; Nuthatch; Oystercatcher; Peregrine (pheessant); Pied Wagtail (witter-waggy); Pink-footed Goose; Raven; Redwing; Robin; Sand Martin; Sedge Warbler; Siskin; Skylark (laverock); Snipe (heather-bleat); Song Thrush (mavis); Sparrowhawk; Starling (stirlin); Swallow (swallii); Swift; Tawny Owl (hootle); Teal; Treecreeper; Tufted Duck; Whooper Swan; Wigeon; Woodcock; Woodpigeon (cushat); Wren (kittle); and Yellowhammer (yelli yorlin). Other species are seen more rarely, including: Cuckoo (gowk); Curlew (whaup); Great Tit (ox-ei); Kite (gled); Patridge (pairrick); Red Grouse (muir-fowl, muircock, muirhen); and Wood Warbler (tam-tit). Prof. Elliot of Goldielands suggests that starling numbers increased dramatically over the 19th century, and that the thrush population was demurred by the prisoners of the Napoleon wars. There was once a heronry at Wells.

birdsong (burd-sawng) n. birdsong – ‘A siller cadence fills her mellow voice That fa’s like bird-sang on the ear’ [WL], ‘Wild-flo’ers, blood-stock, Border lore, bird-sang, Rough logic, prejudices, courtesy...’ [DH], ‘It was a soft nicht, and bird-sang seems to travel better wi a souch o rain i the air’ [DH].

Birgham (bir-gum) n. village between Kelso and Coldstream, a centre for Scottish-English diplomacy in the 12th and 13th centuries. The 1290 Treaty of Birgham arranged the marriage of the infant Margaret of Scotland to the English Prince Edward, and her death shortly afterwards led to the Wars of Independence. The name presumably relates to an early bridge across the Tweed there, although there is no trace of its existence.

birk (birk) n., poet., arch. birch tree – ‘The hawthorn and the birk, Jean, Spread fragrance through the scene’ [RF], ‘Roses wild the braes adorn, Aged tree and twisted thorn, Sweetly scent the early morn, Amang the birks o’ Bleakburn’ [DA], ‘Among the birks o’ bonnie Wells I looked, and, lo! I saw The ornamental trees of old Before the woodman fa’’ [TCh], ‘Farewell ye hoary haunted howes O’erhung wi’ birk and sloe’ [TPr], ‘The birk, the broom, and rowan clad by June’s artistic skill’ [JI], ‘I pree my faring among the birks amun...’ [WL], ‘Beneath the birk, a patch o’ moss Had caught his gleg, appraisin’ e’en...’ [WP] (used in the name of local woods).

birken (bir-kin) adj., poet. composed of or relating to birch – ‘Again my birchen pipe I’ll blaw, And try to wake a simple strain’ [JTe], ‘They hunted high, they hunted low, By heathery hill and birken shaft’ [LHTB], ‘...till where in diminished stream it descends through the birken braes and hazel copses of Hagburn...’ [JAHM], ‘The lilac blossoms in clusters braw, And the bluebells dance in the birken shaw...’ [WL] (also written ‘birchen’).
the Birkhill (thu-birk-hil) n. former group of cottages just to the south of Bilerwell, in the Rule valley. The farms of Over and Nether Birkhill are referred to in 1562 in a dispute between Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst and Agnes Herries. George Turnbull was there in 1685. It was listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Fee-Rule in the late 17th century. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with Robert Turnbull, William Scott and Isobel Ballantyne also listed (and Thomas Henderson being 'deficient'). The Herknesses were tenants there when Bonnie Prince Charlie's men pased through the Parish in 1745. It is probably also the same place later referred to as 'Castle Knowe' (it is 'Birk hill' in 1684 and 1694 and 'Birch-hill' in about 1795).

birkie (bir-kee) n., arch., poet. a spirited man, lively fellow, animated youth – ‘Our birkie answered weel the end. An' gain'd his master for Jinglin' Tin' [WP].

Birkiebrae (bir-kee-brä) n. cottage on the road from Teviothead to Falnash. It may also have been known as Falnash Mill (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Birks (birks) n. Alvare (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His first name is also given as ‘Alvera’. He married Euphan Turnbull in 1788 and they had a son James (b.1789). George (18th C.) footman at Langlands in 1786, when he was working for Gilbert Elliot, and in 1788 for Thomas Elliot. In 1793, 1794 and 1797 he was a groomsman at Minto House, working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. George (18th/19th C.) nailer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same 76 year old pauper recorded at Allars on the 1841 census.

the Birks (thu-birks) n. name for a plantation to the east of Newton in Bedrule Parish.

Birkview (birk-vey) n. house on Main Street in Denholm, once the site of a draper’s shop. It is now part of a ‘Class C’ listed building area. It may also have been called Briarglen.

Birkwud (birk-wud) n. Birkwood, former name for former lands just to the south of Hawick. Part of them are described in a feu charter of 1433 as ‘lands of Byrkwode called the oxgang, between water of Slyttryk and lands of Qhitelaw’. It was feued by William Douglas of Drumlanrig to Simon of Routledge, who is described as ‘burgess of Hawik’. In 1477 the lands were feued by Simon to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The description is similar to the Duke’s Wood or Whitlaw Wood of later centuries. It may also be the lands transcribed as ‘Kirkwod’ in the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick.

Birkwud (birk-wud) n. Birk Wood, wooded area to the west of the Slitrig, running from Woodfoot south towards Stobs Castle. The wooded area immediately around the Castle was (and still is) called ‘Stobs Wood’. This is probably the ‘Birkwod’ belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh that he accused George Henderson in Winnington and others of cutting down part of during 1605, including 100 birches, 300 alders, 300 hazels and 400 willows. It was also ‘Birkwode’ among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliot of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. ‘Birkwode and Birkwodheid’ are listed among lands on the Stobs estate in 1657.

Birk Wud (birk-wud) n. Birk Wood, wooded area to the east of Newton in Bedrule Parish, presumably at the head of the Birkwood (it is ‘Birkwoodheid’ in 1657).

birl (bi-rul) v. to turn, spin, twirl, reel, dance briskly – ‘this time deh birl round till ee make yersel seek’, ‘...An’ mony an ell birls round the beam, Afore the whustle blaws’ [IJ], ‘...What birlin warld’s Ahint ilk pane!’ [WL], to move quickly, hurry – ‘...it was nae teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund’ [ECS], ‘Hei was on ov a laarrie comin birlin an alang leike the bars o Ayr’ [ECS], ‘Pavements for shoppin crouds, Tarmac for traffic birlin ...’ [WL], ‘Malt, saip, and soda, Sheep and Birneyknowe (bir-nee-now) n. sheepherder’s cottage in the hills behind Kirkton Hill, a few miles south-east of Hawick, with a small lake nearby (Buckstruther Moss), reached by a track just beyond Kirkton off the A6088. It was once part of the extended Cavers estate. James Greenshields was recorded as tenant there in 1684 when he was declared a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Thomas Oliver is recorded as farmer there in 1794–97, as well as William Helm in 1797. James Grieve was shepherd there in the early 19th century. The main route from Hawick to Newcastle used to pass here, between Ormiston and Forkins, until about 1830. This was also part of an old drove road (also spelled ‘Birneyknowe’; it is ‘Birnie-know’ in 1684; it is ‘Birnyknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is probably ‘birns’ meaning burned stalks of heather etc.).

Birnie (bir-nee) n. Fr. ?? (??–??) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1947–56. He was known as a quiet, unassuming man. Michael (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant at ‘Fairnylies’ in 1623 when he was entered to the Justice Court in Jedburgh, with cautioners John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ in Thorslohope and John Turner in Nether Nisbet. He was accused of stealing 30 sheep from the land of ‘Fairnylies’ belonging to Walter Scott of Todrig, Simon Nichol ‘in Fairnylies’ and their sons. He was found guilty and ordered to be hanged. He may have been from Fairnylies in Rulewater. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife, who was an Oglvie, died in 1798.

Birniecleuch see Birny Cleuch

the Birns o Chaipelhill ( thu-birnz-ō-chā-pul-hil) n. place name of obscure origin near Chapelhill farm, about 4½ miles south-west of Hawick. It was described by Ninian Elliot in 1892, who had lived near here, but the name already almost having disappeared by then. It is identified as a steep-sided spur of land running roughly NE–SW from the hillside to the flat land around the Newmill Burn (the R.C.A.H.M.S. show the site being about 250 m south-east of the 245 m peak south of Chapelhill Covert, between the Newmill Burn and the farm road that passes the Brauxholme Lochs). The top of the spur was once an Iron Age fort and later the site of a chapel. The date of the founding of this chapel is unknown, and it probably ceased to function in the late 16th century, following the Reformation. It may have been supplied by a chaplain from Hassendean and served the detached part of that Parish, which lay just across the Borthwick. The building is likely to have been of simple construction, since no ornate stonework has survived. According to the New Statistical Account it could still be traced in 1834 and the 1858 Ordnance Survey Name Book notes that the burial ground could still be seen. There are now no structural remains evident, however, its outline may still be indicated by a patch of nettles in summer. A former track led to the top, going round the north side of the spur, possibly the route up to the chapel. A little to the north, i.e. east-north-east of the summit, the ruins of a farmstead are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, probably the older site of Chapelhill farmhouse (a farmstead near there appears as ‘Barns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the site of the chapel is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Birny Brae (bir-nee-brā) n. area in Castleton Parish, south-east of the B6357 near Riccarton, along the upper part of Shielden Sike. There is a circular enclosure there, as well as rig lines, showing signs of former cultivation.
Birny Cleuch

Birny Cleuch (bir-nee-kloooch) n. former name for a small stream in the Borthwick valley, lying between Eilrig and Howpsley (hence on the southern side of the valley). In 1616 it is described how some of a gang of Scotts met at ‘Birnycleuch’ (three quarters of a mile after the foot of Eilrig Burn) after riding from Hawick under cover of darkness to slaughter the sheep at Howpsley belonging to the Laird of Drumlannirg. It is probably the same stream marked ‘Birny Sike’ on the modern Ordnance Survey maps, running roughly north to join the Borthwick near Craik village (also written ‘Birniecleuch’ and ‘Birniecleuche’ in 1616; the origin is probably from ‘birny’, i.e. covered in burned heather stems).

Birny Knowe (bir-nee-now) n. small hill above Broadhaugh, on the southern side of the Teviot valley, being essentially a ridge to the north-east of Broadhaugh Hill to the north. There is an ancient D-shaped rampart on the plateau linking this hill with Ringwood Hill. Inside the enclosure is a rectangular platform, suggesting this was a settlement of some sort (note a small hill of the same name in the Borthwick valley, and also that Birneyknowe has essentially the same name).

Birny Knowe (bir-nee-now) n. small hill between the Borthwick and Teviot valleys, just west of Braznholme Wester Loch. A linear earthwork runs from near the head of the Wood Burn to a marshy area near the Loch, a distance of about 350 m; it could be part of a boundary extending from the head of the Newmill Burn to a stream feeding into the Borthwick, and hence potentially a boundary connecting the 2 valleys (not to be confused with Birneyknowe or the hill of the same name near Broadhaugh).

Birny Sike (bir-nee-sik) n. small stream joining the south side of the Borthwick Water just to the east of Craik village.

birk (bir) n., arch. a whirring sound, like that made by a revolving wheel, a violent whirring motion, force, rush, impetus – ‘... and have heard the ‘birk’ of the winding wheel indoors ...’ [AL], ‘Oot frae a’ the roar an’ rustle O’ the factory’s birr an’ burstle’ [RH], v. to move rapidly, burstle, whirl, make a whirring noise, be in turmoil – ‘A wheen fashion bummies birrin’ about yin’s lugs’ [ECS], ‘For the gutter bluid is stirring. As it stirs but once a year. When the drums and files are birring The Slogan through the air’ [TK] (from Mediaeval English).

Birrell (bi-rul) n. Andrew (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster in Lilliesleaf, he lived at Oakbank in the village. He was also Parish Registrar. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. His only son Andrew Smith was killed at the Battle of Arras in 1917. Rev. J.A. (19th C.) assistant minister of Hawick Parish (under Dr. McRae) who left with part of the congregation in 1881, following internal dissention, and founded Wellington (later St. Margaret’s) Church.

Birrell’s (bi-rulz) n. High Street confectioners at the corner of Walter’s Wynd in the mid-20th century, part of a chain.

Birren Rig (bi-rin-rig) n. small hill to the east of Arkleton farmhouse. It contains a roughly circular enclosure. It was also known as ‘Birnriddle’.

birrit (bi-ri’) n., arch. a brat, troublesome youngster.

birs (birs) n., arch. the gadfly.

birsle (birs) n., arch., poet. bristle, anger – ‘... in sic a fear that he fand every hair on his head rise like the birses of a hurcheon’ [LHTB], ‘Wi’ yelps an’ queer uncanny whines His birsies rise, for whae can tell ...’ [WFC], ‘...Her birss was up, and she coost her plan I’ the teeth o’ her prood and heidstrong man’ [WL], v., arch. to put a bristle on, particularly in shoe-making – ‘The shuimaker birsed his lingle-end’ [GW] (from Old English; also spelled ‘birs’ and ‘birss’; the Soutars of Selkirk formerly held a ‘licking the birse’ initiation ceremony).

Birselees (birs-leez) n. farm between Belses and Longnewton, about 10 miles north-east of Hawick, in Ancrum Parish. George Anderson was there in the early 19th century (also written ‘Birseslee’ and variants; its origin is probably the Old English ‘meadow belonging to Birse’).

Birsle (birs-sul) n. former name for an area bordering on Myreslawgreen in the 18th century, owned by Robert Oliver of Burnflat, and then his son baker and Bailie James Oliver. In the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common lands and the depositions regarding privileges on the Common it is describe as belonging to both Bailie Turnbull and to Robert Oliver of Burnflat; presumably one of them in fact owned adjacent land, or the land had been split at some earlier time – ‘Black Andra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

birsled (birs-suld, sul’) pp., adj., arch. scorched, roasted – ‘...So the farmer they followed, and soon they sat down To flagons of milk and scones birselled brown’ [JCG], ‘... A plate o’ stovie tatties birstled broon, A kail pot steamin’ ower the fire’ [WL], ‘In the summer oo get birsled, Oo get drooke bei autumns rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again’ [IWL], dried up, overcooked – ‘ee’re that late yer chips er aa birselt’ (also spelled ‘birselt’, ‘birstled’ and ‘birselled’).

Bishop *(bi-shup) n. Rev. Patrick (16th C.) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1585, he became Parson at Minto in 1589 and was translated to Abbotrule in 1590 or 91. He also had responsibility for Hobkirk, Bedrule and Minto. John Bonar took over from him at Abbotrule in 1593 (spelled ‘Bischope’). Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Howeagate, recorded on Pigt’s 1825/6 directory.

Bishops *(bi-shups) n. ecclesiastical heads of the Diocese of Glasgow, which contained Teviotdale, and therefore had authority over Hawick and much of the surrounding area. The first bishops are recorded in the mid-11th century, and were appointees of the Archbishop of York. However, it was only by the late 12th century that the men carrying this title had any real involvement with Glasgow, or with Teviotdale. From 1492 the title was upgraded to Archbishop. After the Reformation there continued to be bishops within the independent Scottish Church, often in name only, with no obvious influence in the Borders, until Episcopacy was abolished in 1689. After this there were bishops within the Episcopal Church, and later in the Roman Catholic church. A roll of the bishopric is: Magsuen (or Magnus), late 1050s; John Scotus; late 1050s until c.1066; Michael c.1110; John Capellanus c.1115–47; Herbert of Selkirk 1147–64; Ingram 1164–74; Jocelin 1174–99; William Malvesin 1199–1202; Florence 1202–07; Walter Capellanus 1207–32; William de Bondington 1232/3–58; Nicholas de Moffat 1259; John de Cheam 1259–68; Nicholas de Moffat 1268–70; William Wishart 1270–71; Robert Wishart 1271–1316; Stephen de Dunideer 1316–17; John de Lindsay 1317; John de Eggescliffe 1318–23; John de Lindsay 1323–c.35; John Wishart 1336–37; William Rae 1338–67; Walter Wardlaw 1367–87; Matthew de Glendonwyn 1387–1408; William de Lauder 1408–25/6; John Cameron 1426–46; James Bruce 1447; William Turnbull 1447–54; Andrew de Durisdeer 1455–73; John Laing 1474–83; Robert Blackadder 1483–1508; James Beaton 1508–23; Gavin Dunbar 1523–47; James Hamilton 1547–48; Donald Campbell 1548; Alexander Gordon 1550–51; James Beaton 1551–70; John Porterfield 1571–72; James Boyd of Trochrig 1573–81; Robert Montgomery 1581–85; William Erskine 1585–87; James Beaton 1598–1603; John Spottiswoode 1603–15; James Law 1615–32; Patrick Lindsay 1632–38; Andrew Fairfoul 1661–64; Alexander Burnet 1664–69; Robert Leighton 1671–74; Alexander Burnet 1674–79; Arthur Rose 1679–84; Alexander Cairncross 1684–87; and John Paterson 1687–89.

the Bishop’s Stane (thu-bi-shups-stān) n. ancient boundary marker at Woll Rig, near Ashkirk, built into the base of a dry-stone dyke near the cattle-grid at the top of the Rig. It measures about 5 ft in length and 2 ft 3 in in width. It is on the old march dyke between the lands of Woll and Hartwoodmyres. The carved letters ‘G.H.’, possibly for ‘Grieve of Huntly’ are on one side (although this may be a relatively recent addition), and the wall forms part of the old march between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. It is said that it once lay on the ridge of the hill nearby. The name suggests a connection with the Bishop of Glasgow, who formerly owned most of Ashkirk Parish. A story is told about Jamie Murray seeing a ghost there on a moonlight trip from Headswood back to Ettrick; the story was written by ‘C.’ in the Border Counties Magazine of 1880, and is valuable for its early examples of local dialect.

Bishop Well (bi-shup-wel) n. spring in Ashkirk Parish, named for an association with the former Bishop’s of Glasgow, who held the lands there. It is situated about 200 m east of the church, to the south of the road leading from the A7 through the village.

bit (bi’) n. *a spot, place, small piece of ground – ‘... For we hae seen them bloom as braw in mony a ither bit’ [JoHa], ‘Yon’s aboot the snel’ [JoHa], ‘Yon’s aboot the snel’ [JoHa], ‘... bit see buit Bitchlaw (bich-law) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, presumably near Bitchlaw Moss. Walter Davidson was farmer there in 1797. It is possible that 'Bitchlaw' is the same as 'Bleak Law', which is just to the north. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map already shows no signs of a dwelling in this area.

Bitchlaw Moss (bich-law-mos) n. marshy area near White Hill, to the north-west of Adderstonelee (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, roughly between White Hill and Bleak Law.

Bithet (bi-thi') n. William [14th C.] held the benefice of Cavers Parish from 1488. He was witness to a document of Melrose Abbey relating to Hassendean in about 1488/9, where his name is given as 'williame bithet vicar of Caueris'. Probably the same 'Beythet' (the first name being missing) was recorded as Vicar of Cavers when he witnessed the granting of the Baron of Cavers to Archibald Douglas in 1464.

bits o (bitz-ö) adj., arch. mere, small, used depreciatively – ‘...ther seam was ti girn the bits o moppies skilltin aboot'[ECS], ‘...bendin' oot the bits o' kinks, and shapin' the hannel to eer fancy'[DH], ‘When we were bits o' bairins, And ring games were the thing ...'[WL] (this plural version does not occur in standard English; cf. bit).

bits o blood (bitz-ö-blud) n., pl., arch. literally specimens of good pedigree, i.e. mettlesome horses – ‘Till round the Haugh our flag is flying; And some, their 'bits o' blood' are trying' [AB].

Bitstane Burn (bit-stöan-burn) n. Bitstone Burn, stream in the Borthwick valley, rising on Easter Park Hill and flowing into the Borthwick Water just east of Robertson. It is also known as Bitstone Linn. On the eastern side of the lower part are the remains of a settlement, with a single bank, still visible on the north and east sides.

the Bittens (thu-bi-inz) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Fee-Rule, referred to as 'the Bittenis' in the 1562 document regarding the dispute over superiority of the lands. It is described as 'merchant with the Zarlesyde (probably 'Earlside') on the eist' (also written 'the Byt-tannis' in 1562.

bittie (bi'-ee, bi-tee) n., arch. a small portion, small amount of time, little bit – ‘...'ll no hew cood gar ends meet this bittie back, nih, A'se war-ran'[ECS], ‘Than A pandert up an doon a bittie, hed a bit crack wui yin an another ...'[ECS].

blab (blawb) n. a blob, bubble, drop – ‘I loved to see the rainbow bubbles soak The honeycomb like blabs o' dew ...'[WL], arch. a blister, pustule.
Blacker (blaw-bur) v., arch. to babble.

Black (blawk) adj. black in colour, dark in complexion or hair colour – ‘Wee, John Cochrane, an auld lame tall black man, with some grey hairs in his heid . . . ’[BR1700], also in suggestive uses, evil, morally reprehensible, intense, to the utmost – ‘black-affrontit’, ‘Black-burnin’ shame’[JR], evil, immoral – ‘He’s gaun a black gate’[GW], to ‘have the black dog on one’s back’ is to have a fit of depression.

Black (blawk) n. Agnes (18th C.) housekeeper for Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in Hawick. In 1765 there is an inventory of household furniture (presumably from Drumlanrig’s Tower) handed over to her, including a pair of backgammon tables and a card table in the dining room, a bed with tartan curtains in the tartan room and some linen, ‘birds eye, rose knot, dambrook, duke’s garter, shagg knot’. This was about the time when the Scotts of Buccleuch abandoned their town house in Hawick. Alexander (b.c.1814) joiner from Berwick. In 1841 he was living at ‘New Church’, i.e. on Buccleuch Road. His wife was Mary and they had a son William. By 1851 they had moved to Kelso. Andrew (18th C.) married Agnes Thomson. Their son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1778. The entry was just after a birth for Robert Pringle and Helen Thomson (who may therefore have been his wife’s sister). The witnesses were (probably, the name is hard to read) William Gedstains and James Elliot. Andrew (b.1812/3) farmer at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. He donated a stone ball to the Museum. His wife was Helen. Rev. Armstrong, D.D. (1851–1923) born in Newcastle, son of Rev. John and Mary Beattie. He was minister at Palmerston Place Church in Edinburgh 1876–92. He then moved to Birkenhead, Cheshire. In 1899 he became minister at St. Andrew’s in Toronto and Chaplain for the Highland Regiment there. Charles (18th/19th C.) recorded at Synton in 1797 when he was taxed for having ‘a Cur’. Prof. Ebenezer Charlton (1861–1927) born in Newcastle, he was the youngest of 7 children of Rev. John, minister at Castleton. He went to Edinburgh University when he was just 13, and studied there for 7 years, winning several student prizes. Among his classmates was the writer J.M. Barrie. He was one of the founders of the Edinburgh literary and philosophical society called The Symposium. He studied further in London and then spend 7 years living at Liddelbank. Travelling to North America in 1890 to give lectures, he was 2 years later appointed Lecturer at Harvard University. In 1894 he became Principal of the Language and Literature Department at the New England Conservatory of Music and in 1900 was appointed Professor of English Literature at Boston University. He received an honorary doctorate from Glasgow University in 1902. He published extensively on Shakespeare and other topics. He married Agnes Knox and they had 3 children. George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1772 he married Margaret Aitchison in Bedrule Parish. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); and George (b.1775). George of Menslaws (18th C.) owner of the mansion house at Lanton, according to valuation roll in 1788. He is probably the ‘Mr. Black’ who is said to have sold Menslaws in about 1786; however, in 1788 he is still recorded as owner of Menslaws, valued at £263 16s 3d, as well as the ‘waulk-mill’. George (1774/5–1817) cooper in Newcastleton. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery beside Sarah, daughter of Thomas Martin of Whitehaven. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible she was the same woman as Agnes, housekeeper to the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: Thomas (b.1764); and Archibald (b.1766). The witnesses in 1764 were James Paterson and Thomas ‘Baity’. James (18th C.) said to have been born near Hawick in 1749. He married Mary Turnbull (from Yarrow Parish) in Selkirk Parish in 1771. George Black, servant to William Aitchison (tenant in Hartwoodmyres) was cautioner for the groom, and John Turnbull (servant to Pringle of Torwoodlee) for the Bride; presumably George was a close relative. His children, baptised at Parkhouses in Wilton Parish, were: George (b.1774); Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1776); Margaret (‘Peggy’, b.1779); and James (b.1781), farmer at Northcroft. James, Nancy and Peggy all later emigrated to Canada. He and his wife were buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. James (18th C.) listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when he leased the farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (b.1781) son of James and Mary Turnbull, he was baptised at Parkhouses. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Wilton and then became farmer at Northcroft near Stirches. He married Margaret Liddell in 1811. The family were members of the Burgher Congregation. He is recorded at Northcroft in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Robert, George, John, Helen and Mary. His children were baptised at Lockiesedge, Silverbuthall and James to Canada. His family, along with his brother John, emigrated in 1842 and 1843; and Margaret (b. 1841). In 1842 he and his family were living at Stellhouse. They were: James (b. 1812); Robert (b. 1814); George (b. 1816), who returned for a visit to Hawick in 1884; John (b. 1820); Helen (b. 1822); and Mary (b. 1825). In 1843 he and his wife, along with their younger children and 2 of his sisters (Nancy and Peggy) emigrated to Canada, to join his sons James and John. Most of the family are buried in Ayr, Ontario, Canada.

James (b. 1783/4) miller at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. He was born in Jedburgh. In 1851 he was a widower there, with his daughter Jane. Probably the same miller was living at Trow Mill Stables in 1841. James (1810/1-59) Hawick grocer. He was recorded as an innkeeper on the Howegate in 1851. He is listed as a vintner on the Howegate in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes (who died in 1884, aged 86) and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. His son was James and a daughter was Elizabeth (wife of James Notman). James (b. 1812) eldest son of James and Margaret Liddell. He was an assistant road overseer and was living at Stellhouse in 1841. He married Janet Scott (b. 1812) from Roberton Parish. Their children included: Thomas (b. 1835); Agnes (b. 1837); James Scott (b. 1839); and Margaret (b. 1841). In 1842 he and his family, along with his brother John, emigrated to Canada. James (19th C.) President of the Hawick Phonographic Association in the 1880s. Possibly the same James, son of James, was a greengrocer at 25 High Street.

Rev. John (1801-79) born in Airdrie, probably son of John and Margaret Smellie. His father was an elder of the Parish Church of New Monkland. He went to Glasgow University when he was about 12 and entered Secession Hall in 1820. He was ordained as minister of Newcastle Burgher Kirk in 1829. He describes his first visit to the area, explaining that he could not find Liddesdale on any map, but was told to make for Langholm and then ask for directions! In the troubled years before the passing of the Reform Bill, he was threatened with prosecution for his strong Liberal political views. Controversy during his ministry led to the establishment of an Evangelical Union Kirk in Newcastleton around 1850, as well as the Free Kirk around the same time. The church and manse were renovated in 1875, while he was minister. He continued the popular Sunday School established by his predecessor. He was said to be a strong speaker, but to give overly long sermons. He was also a great lover of literature, especially poetry and Border ballads. In 1848 he married Margaret Smellie. His father was an elder of the family are buried in Ayr, Ontario, Canada.

Mary Beattie (1823-93), who came from Castleton Parish. Their children included: William (1850-70), who was lost at sea; Rev. Dr. Armstrong of Edinburgh (1851-1923); Mary (1853-1912), eldest daughter, who married Thomas M. Bell, sometimes of Liddelbank; Ann Agnes (1855-1939), who married John Christie; James Gavin (b. 1857); Rev. John Waddle (1859-1912), minister in England and Canada; and Ebenezer (1861-1927). He had strong views on education and refused to send any of his children to school, educating themselves so that they all read Greek and Latin before they were 10 years old. He died suddenly while in his 51st year as minister. Shortly before his death there was a jubilee celebration for him in which he was presented with a portrait of himself, painted by William McTaggart, R.S.A., as well as a small marble bust. He was buried at Ettleton, with a long inscription on his gravestone.

Rev. John Waddle (1859-1912) born in Newcastleton, 4th son of Rev. John. He was minister of the Presbyterian Church in England and then in Canada. He died in Boston, U.S.A.

Robert (17th C.) miller in Hassendean. In 1697 he was fined in Hawick ‘for selling insufficient humil corne meils’. Robert (d. 1899) bookseller, stationer and newsagent in Hawick. He published the ‘Hawick Newsletter’ briefly in 1846, mostly with material taken from the Galashiels-based ‘Border Watch’. In 1857 he published the ‘Hawick Times’, which only lasted for 12 issues. His premises were at 17 High Street. He made several donations to the Archeological Society’s collections.

Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. His wife was Janet Cumming and their son John was born in 1757, with witnesses Thomas Scott, Elder, and Charles Miller, weaver. William (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) owner of the farm of Menslaws. He was recorded being of ‘Mensless’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, his name there recorded as ‘Blake’. He was probably succeeded by George. William Davidson (d. 1881) studied at St. Andrews University 1840/1. He was the first minister of the Congregational Kirk in Newcastleton in 1850, but only stayed there for about a year. He was then at Montrose, Kilmarnock, Dundee, Berwick-on-Tweed, Middlesbrough, Southport, Huddersfield and Crieff. He died in Langholm.

Sir Baldred (d. bef. 1509) son of Adam. He leased the lands of Kershope in the Ettrick valley in 1488. He served as Marshal of the Royal Household. George (18th/19th C.) land surveyor who subscribed to...

Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. No location is given for him, so it is unclear where he lived. Robert (d.1508) younger brother of Patrick of Tulliallan in Fife, he studied at St. Andrew’s University and Paris, becoming a licenci ate in 1465. He became Abbot of Melrose probably about 1471, the first non-monk to hold the post, this leading to a dispute with the monks there, so that he resigned the abbacy in 1476. He was then Rector at Lasswade and in 1480 became Bishop of Aberdeen, then moved to become Bishop of Glasgow (and hence Hawick’s Bishop) in 1483. His trip to Rome to be consecrated died to cons conscedicated led to debts, which were repaid through additional ‘benevolence’ levied on subordinates in the Diocese. In 1492 he was elevated to Archbishop, the first of that title in the Glasgow Diocese; this followed disputes in Scotland over St. Andrews being elevated to an archbishopric 10 years earlier. In 1494/5 he was the Bishop of Glasgow who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh (and again in 1502, when he was meant to give suit for his lands of Lilliesleaf). He was a prominent figure during the reign of James IV, travelling extensively to Europe as emissary. He helped negotiate the marriage of James with Margaret Tudor and was a godfather of the future James V. A letter of protection to his tenants and others while he travelled to Rome in 1504 gives a useful list of people associated with the Diocese. The document refers to a respite of his tenants, factors and servants for several crimes, especially for the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey, excepting those who actually slew him with their own hands; it is unclear exactly what local or national political con–licts led to these events. He died on a pilgrimage to estates, excepting those who actu–ally slew him with their own hands; it is unclear exactly what local or national political con–licts led to these events. He died on a pilgrimage to black-avised (blawk-a-vIzd) adj., arch. black–faced, having a gloomy aspect (cf. reid-avised).

Black Andrew (blawk-awndro, -droo) n. nickname of Andrew Scott, Cornet in 1724. The nickname may also have been in use later, including the mention in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Black And–ra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell, The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

Black Andro (blawk-awn-dro) n. Black Andrew, hill in the Yarrow valley, south of Yarrowford, reaching a height of 501 m. It has Black Andrew Wood on its northern slopes, but is now marked ‘Fastheugh Hill’ on maps – ‘I see the white clouds hover Above Blackandro’s crest; I see the heath–bush cover The grey–hen’s simple nest’ [WHO].

Blackbeard (blawk-beerd) n. nickname of a dyker, mentioned in 1634 when he was paid 40 shillings to mend the wall between Branxholme Town and the field of Branxholme. In a financial account of 1638–40 the cook at Branxholme also has the same name, suggesting some connection.

black betty (blawk-ne’-ee) n., arch. another name for ginger wine or some other dark, home–made drink – ‘…and a bottle of Black Sugar Wine, or Black Betty, as we called it’ [JRa].

the Black Bull (thu-blawk-bul, -bool) n. pub at the Sandbed in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It had a ballroom, which was popular for dances. Adam Scott was the landlord in the late 1700s, then the Herriots in the early 1800s, John Hunter from at least 1825, Mary Hunter in 1837 and Walter Brodie by 1841. James Heriot was listed there in 1851 and 1852, and his wife Euphemia in 1861. For many years it was a stopping point for stage coaches passing through Hawick, and for carters leaving the town. It was located on the eastern side of the Sandbed, with a lane giving access to the Slitrig. The site was later occupied by Bailie Lawson’s jewellery shop.

the Black Bull (thu-blawk-bul, -bool) n. former inn in Lilliesleaf. In 1837 the proprietor was Andrew Laing.

the Black Bull (thu-blawk-bul, -bool) n. former public house in Newcastleton, at 45 North Hermitage Street. The proprietor in 1825 was Thomas Mitchellhill, and his children ran it until at least the 1860s.

Black Bull Lane (blawk-bul-län) n. name used in the 19th century for a lane leading from the Sandbed to the Slitrig, alongside the Black Bull Inn. It was referred to as ‘Young the Baker’s Close’ around 1900.

Black Bull Pairks (blawk-bul-pärks) n. former name for fields opposite Shankend farm, being 2 fields enclosing 28 acres. This could be the ‘Blackbell and Blackbill’ listed among lands in the
the Black Burn

the Black Burn \( (\text{thu-blawk-burn}) \) \( n. \) stream in the upper Jed valley, essentially rising on the Carter Fell. There are several other streams of the same name, e.g. one near Newcastleton. A farm there, ‘Blakburnys’ was among those disputed by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1538. It was ‘Blakburn’ in 1539 when it was among Crown farms to be let (Blaeu’s 1654 map marks ‘Black b.’ and ‘Inner Black B.’ to the east).

Black Burn \( (\text{blawk-burn}) \) \( n. \) former name for a stream that flows into the Allan Water. It is mentioned as part of the description of the boundary of Ringwood, when given to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. The precise location is unknown. However, a connection with Blackcleuch Loch seems possible.

Black Burn \( (\text{bleek-, blæk-, blawk-burn}) \) \( n. \) major stream that rises in the hills to the north-west of Newcastleton, fed by several ‘Gills’. It passes under the main road and joins the Liddel Water just north of Newcastleton. In the upper section and on the adjoining Lang Gill there are waterfalls, which are spectacular after heavy rains. There was a natural stone bridge here, of which a sketch exists; it was about 55 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 28 inches thick. It stood spectacularly at 31 feet above the water level, but collapsed in 1810. The farm of the same name was shown in a survey of 1718, with old wood trees along the banks of the burn. The watershed of this burn contains many archaeological remains, including boundary banks and ditches, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds of various ages. Fragments of a jet ring found there are in the British Museum; this could be the ‘massy gold ring’ found ‘on the side of Blakeburn’ more than 2 centuries ago, and suggested to have been from the Countess of Northumberland, who was said to have been robbed in the area in about 1570. Locally the name is pronounced ‘Bleakburn’ – ‘Looking up the rugged dell, Where the mountain ravens dwell, Wildest grandeur – Nature’s sel’ – Is seen i’ bonny Bleakburn’ [DA] (also ‘the Black Burn’).

Blackburn \( (\text{blawk-burn}) \) \( n. \) farm about a mile north-west of Newcastleton. It is first recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 6 shillings. In 1541 the tenant was Martin Armstrong and the lands were valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. The stream that passes here to join the Liddel is the Black Burn. The original farmstead was located on the south bank of the stream and is shown on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that point it was a farm of 499 acres, bounded by the Liddel Water, Copshaw Park, Millholm and Roan. It was described as having ‘pasture one half thereof is indifferent good land but the other half is sorry boggie land’. There were formerly separate farmsteads at Blackburn, Little Blackburn, Old Blackburn and Blackburnfoot. Walter Gledstains possessed the farm there in 1632. In 1694 Adam Glendinning was tenant and William Brown was also recorded there. James Ingles was farmer in 1797 and 1841 and Thomas Mason in the 1860s. Mason James Wishart was there in 1879. Further up the stream are waterfalls. The original bridge across the stream collapsed in 1810. On the opposite side of the burn from the farmhouse are the remains of a former settlement. This may be the ‘round-about’ recorded on the farm in the New Statistical Account in 1839. There are also other remains of turf-walled huts and a shepherd’s bothy there. Between the modern farm and the village there is another field system and remains of buildings, together with a kiln dug into the side of a gully. And to the south, by the Langholm road are the remains of another farmstead (the name presumably means ‘dark stream’; it is ‘Blakburne’ in c.1376, ‘Blakborne’ in 1541, ‘Blakbournes’ in 1632 and ‘Blackburne’ in 1694; the stream ‘Blaikbourne’ and the farms ‘Blaikburnsyd’ and ‘Blakdubs’ are marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and it is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Blackburn \( (\text{blawk-burn}) \) \( n. \) Jeffrey (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jaffrey Blackburne’ in a list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes from the Privy Council in 1510. It is possible that his name is related to the lands in Liddesdale. John (d.c.1500) recorded as ‘Johnne Blachburne’ in 1501 when 70 Armstrongs were ordered to appear in Selkirk to answer for his murder.

Blackburn Cottage \( (\text{blawk-burn-ko’-eaj}) \) \( n. \) former cottage on Southdean farm. This could be the ‘blak burn’ where John Scott was recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert Thomson was shepherd there in the mid-19th century.

Blackburnfit \( (\text{blawk-burn-fit}) \) \( n. \) former name for the area where the Black Burn joins the Liddel, just north of the modern Newcastleton. The 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties shows a farmhouse near the foot of the burn, on the north side. There were once 2 cottages and an inn here. Gilbert Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century and John Grieve in 1797 (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).

n. intense shame, the utmost ignominy – ‘... A meind o wunderin its folk didna think black burnin shame o its ongangeen!’ [ECS].

Blackburnsteed (blawk-burn-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably close to the Black Burn and the modern Newcastleton. In 1541 the lands were valued at 45 shillings and possessed by the tenant of Purvinen.

Blackcastle Hill (blawk-kaw-sul-hil) n. hill just to the south-east of Ashkirk, reaching a height of 277 m. At the south-west end of the summit is a section of rampart about 15 m long, and a less distinct bank along the south-east side, these being all that remains of a fort, which gave the hill its name. There is also a hill-fort on a broad rocky ridge on the northern side. There are ramparts and ditches, but the site has been much denuded by cultivation. Inside are the remains of what may be a later settlement. The north-west slope of the hill shows cultivation terraces and the north-east side shows traces of rig-and-furrow lines.

Blackchesters (blawk-ches-turz) n. former farm in Southdean Parish, roughly opposite Roughlee. It is marked on Roy’s c.1750 map to the south of Waterside. By the Shaw Burn, near Hilly Linn, there are the remains of an old tower house and settlement that is probably this same place. The tower is 11.5 m by 7 m and is attached to a longer building. There are also a couple of separate buildings, and then a little further south are 2 more farmsteads. William Common was recorded there in 1544. The 1694 Hearth Tax return lists 3 people at Blackchesters (it is ‘Blackchester’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, but has disappeared by the time of Stobie’s 1770 map; also written ‘Blackchester’).

Blackcleuch (blawk-klooej) n. area above Teviothead, along the upper Teviot valley on the Merrylaw side road. There is a farm there, as well as a small stream called the Black Cleuch and the ridge Blackcleuch Rig above. In 1627 it is etimated to pay ‘stock to 20 lb., vicarage 4 lb.; no corn’. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the first half of the 18th century and passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1758. Archibald Baptie from there was charged with being a Covenanter supporter in 1685. Robert and John Scott were recorded there in 1705. By 1707 it was valued along with Crumhaugh Hill at £266 13s 4d. Gideon Forsyth is recorded as herd at the farm in 1797. It was valued along with Crumhaugh Hill (still at £266 13s 4d) in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as part of the holdings of the Duke of Buccleuch. Shepherd William Murray and his family lived there in 1841 and 1851. Marl may have been collected from here around 1800 for soil improvement. Signs of a ‘scooped settlement’ were found on Blackcleuch Rig (marked as ‘Blackcleuch’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; also written ‘Blackleigh’, it is ‘Blackleigh’ in 1705; note the confusion with Blackcleugh in Hobkirk Parish).

Black Cleuch (blawk-klooej) n. stream that joins Lurgies Burn in the upper Rule valley. A linear earthwork reaches from near here to Brown’s Sike in the Slitrig valley.

Black Cleuch (blawk-kloeej) n. stream in the northern part of Castleton Parish. It rises on Leap Hill, to the west of Whitope, and runs south to join the Sundhope Burn.

Blackcleuch Loch (blawk-klooej-loch) n. small loch at the head of the Loch Burn, between Stobicote and Broadhaugh Hill. It is labelled ‘Blackcleuch Moss’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Blackcleugh (blawk-klooej) n. general name for the area near Blackcleughmooth.

Blackcleugh Cottage (blawk-klooej-ko’-eej) n. cottage at Blackcleugh. It was home of builder Andrew Waugh in the late 1800s.

Blackcleughmooth (blawk-klooej-mooth) n. Blackcleughmooth, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, just to the east of Forkins, consisting of just a few acres. It is near the mouth of Blackcleugh Sike and also known as ‘Blacklee’. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule and sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Weaver James Anderson was there in 1788. John Taylor was farmer here in 1797 and John Elliot recorded there in 1800 and 1807. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1811. It was once on the main route between Hawick and the Carter Bar. An inn here was once known as the ‘Changehouse’; it was built by William Kerr of Abbotrule and a stone above the door contained the letters ‘W. K. Julie ye 1715’. The hamlet to the east is now known as Cleuch Heid, and is the location of the main farm for the Wolfelee estate (also spelled ‘cleuch’; not to be confused with Blackcleuch near Teviothead).
blackcock (blawk-kok) n. male black grouse – ‘...The bee had flown from the bloom ò’ the ling, The blackcock’s head was over his wing’ [WHO].

Blackcockhaa (blawk-kok-law) n. former farmstead in the headwaters of the Ale Water, also known as Byreleeaugh.

Blackcraig (blawk-kraig) n. area between Groundstone Heights and Satchells. The area contains the craig itself, along with a plantation of the same name and a boggy area called Blackcraig Moss. There was once a farmstead here, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Blackcraig Moss is already on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

the Black Daith (thu-blawk-dïth) n. the Black Death, Bubonic Plague, or ‘the Pest’, which swept Europe in the mid-14th century. After devastating England in 1348–49, some in Scotland used the opportunity to attack, gathering at Selkirk in the Autumn of 1349 and raiding Durham. The retreating army probably brought the plague back with them, and there was a massive outbreak throughout Scotland in the Spring of 1350. At least 30% of the British population was killed, and it was the worst disaster ever to befall Britain. Further outbreaks occurred in the 1360s and 1370s and it only really died out in the 17th century. In 1363 it is said that the living of the parish ‘on account of wars and pestilences brings no fruits’. The Plague also ravaged much of Scotland in 1514 after Flodden. There were several outbreaks in Edinburgh in the early 16th century, as well as Selkirk in 1535 and Jedburgh in 1536. There is an English record of a sickness dispersed through Teviotdale and the Merse in 1597, as well as occurring in Edinburgh and Carlisle. A letter of 1602 describing lands at Fulton (in Bedrule Parish) speaks about a farm being ‘waist sen the pest tyme’, suggesting the plague may have struck there some years earlier. The special taxes raised by the Bailies of Hawick, complained of by the Baron in 1612, was partly to repay the debts contracted ‘the tyme of the visitatioun of the said toun with the plauge’. In the summer of 1636 the markets of Hawick, Melrose, Coldstream, Duns, Kelso and Selkirk were all closed because of an outbreak in the English Border towns. In 1637 there is a record of ‘scavengers at the time of the plague ... in Quhitchester’s lordship’ and also of people in Branxholme and Wilton ‘who had nothing to maintain themselves with in time of the visitation’. There was also a proclamation in 1638 given to the Sheriff of Teviotdale and others, with special powers to stop the movement of people (particularly across the Border), forcibly confine poor people and suspend markets. There were stated to be cases in Jedburgh and Crailing, and there must have been cases in the Hawick area too, although there are no specific records. There was a violent outbreak in Leith in 1645. There are records of a special watch for strangers being maintained at the ports in 1645, and the election of magistrates was held outdoors that year as a precaution. There were also laws enacted by the Council banning people from travelling too far for sheep shearing (presumably with concerns that they might bring back the Plague). A special collection for local victims in Ashkirk is recorded as recently as the summer of 1655. In 1665 there is an order in the Town Book forbidding the inhabitants to cross the Border into Northumberland ‘during the suspicion of the plague in England’. There is a local tradition that a mound near Midshielis is the remains of a cottage that was entirely covered over when it was discovered that the inhabitants has the plague. Another tradition ‘in a wild and secluded spot in Teviotdale’ (described in the Border Counties’ Magazine’) describes a shepherd’s cottage, where the plague was contracted from a purchased piece of finery, and when the shepherd went for help, the neighbours instead buried the cottage, ignoring the cries of the shepherd.

Black Dod (blawk-dïd) n. name used for the northern extension of Ruberslaw.

Black Gate (blawk-gâ’) n. name for an area at the head of a stream in western Liddesdale, just east of Watch Hill, in the headwaters of the Black Burn. Blackgate Rig is marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map (it is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

the Black Grain (thu-blawk-grân) n. alternative name for Blackgrain Moss on Hawick Common, or perhaps for the stream passing through it; this second meaning is the same as Gate Burn. Burgesses were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733. The name is used in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – ‘...and then westward by hillocks on the south side of the upper moss called the Black Grain, and thence west by hillocks to the Trowtlaw Ford’ [C&L1767].

Blackgrain (blawk-grân) n. former lands in the Yarrow valley, presumably near Blackgrain Rig on modern maps. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century. In at least the period 1480–1501 it was leased by David and then Patrick Crichton, along with Catslack. In 1539 it was inherited by James Crichton of Cranston Riddell from his father, and was then valued at £71 16s. 8d., but 40 merks in time of peace. In 1541 it was valued at £70 3s. 4d. It passed to his widow Janet Beaton, and then to her 2nd husband Sir Walter Scott. It later formed part of the estates of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The tenant in 1574 was James Shiel, as recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. It was subject of a ‘wadset’ between Walter Earl of Buccleuch and Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank in 1622. It was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties in 1718 (it is ‘Blakgrayne’ in 1460, ‘Blacgrave’ in 1471, ‘Blakgrane’ in 1489 and ‘Blakgraine’ in 1539 and 1550).

Blackgrain (blawk-grān) n. former name for lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The 1599 charter from James VI to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (referred to in a later 1693 charter) mentions ‘the free tenement of Blackgrain’ in Wilton Parish. And in 1604 Sir Walter Scott had another charter for ‘the lands called the steadings of Blackgraine and others in parish of Wilton’. However the ‘manor place of Blackgraine, within the said sherrifdom of Selkirk’ is also mentioned, so there may simply be confusion here. However, this is clearly unrelated to Blackgrain Moss by Hawick Moor. In the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs for the Scotts of Buccleuch there is a description of a tenement of Blackgrain, with the rectorage and vicarage teinds of Castleton, being combined with lands in Wilton and Teviothead, into a tenement of Blackgrain. So it seems that this might be the same as the place in Castleton Parish. It is still mentioned along with Wilton-grain, Wiltonburn, Overhill, Frosty Lee, Linhope and Phaup, along with the patronage of Wilton Kirk, among the properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663; at that time the ‘the tenement of Blackgraynes’ contained all of these lands, according to the infeftment to the deceased Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch by King James VI ‘...To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Common-side, and Milsanton-hill, And Elibridge is left all alone, Except some Town Lands in Lanton’ [CWS] (it is ‘Blackgrains’ in 1599 and ‘Blackgrayne’ and ‘Blackgraynes’ in 1663; ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for the branch of a stream, deriving from Old Norse).

Black Grain (blawk-grān) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Black Height and flows in a southerly direction behind Kirk Hill to become part of the Tinnis Burn. There are old sheepfolds and turf walls in the area. This may be the place where a ‘tenement of Blackgraine, with the personage and vicerage teinds of the parish-kirk of Edington and Cassilston’ is listed among properties inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653.

Blackgrain Moss (blawk-grān-mos) n. name for the boggy area to the east of the Caa Knowe, the southern part of Winnington Moss. The area is also marked on some maps as Lightpipe. It was formerly on Hawick Common, near the southern end, but after the Division lay just beyond the southern extent. In 1757 it was proclaimed by the Hawick Town Council that this area was not to be used for making ‘bakes’ (i.e. hand-made peat ‘logs’) and so a party led by the Bailies set out and broke up the ‘bakes’ on the Common belonging to the tenants of Hawick Shiel, Over and Nether Southfield and Longflatt – ‘...the order was that no bakes were to be made in the Black Grain of Winnington Moss’ [C&L1767].

Blackhaa (blawk-haw) n. former steading roughly between Howahill and Highend in Hobkirk Parish. The stream near there was formerly called ‘Blackhaa Burn’, running to the north-east, past Swanshiefl. Andrew Nichol was farmer there in 1758.

Blackhaa (blawk-haw) n. Blackhall, former name for lands in the Ewes valley, near Moss-paul and Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1506 and 1509/10. It is further recorded in 1535 when superiority of parts of Ewesdale were confirmed to George, Lord Home, and also listed as part of the Lordship of Ewesdale about 1610. Tom Scott in Blackhall is recorded in 1569 and 1585 and his son Thomas in 1611. Andrew Elliot from here was among men accused of raiding into England in 1590. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 654 acres, bounded by Fiddleton, Unthank, Twislehope, Burnfoot and Carewoodrig. David Scott was there in at least the period 1787–97. James Beattie and John Jackson were there in 1841, Robert Byers and John Nichol were shepherds there in 1851 and John Govenlock was farmer in 1861. There are suggestions of an archaeological enclosure just to the south, but the banks may in fact be natural (it is ‘Blakhaw’ in 1506; it is marked ‘Blakkha’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Crawford’s 1804 map just to the east of Fiddleton).
Blackhaa  (blawk-haw) n. (Blackhall) Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (1703–??) daughter of John Blackhall, who was a shoemaker in Selkirk, and Bessie Curror. She married shoemaker Robert Oliver (c.1699–1764) in Hawick in 1728. Several items bearing her name have been passed down through her Wilson descendants. She was known as a great yarn spinner and it is said that she had a seat fitted in the open roof of her house, so that she could spin the yarn with much greater length. A story is told of how, during a period of local famine, she rode to Newcastle and back in the middle of winter, carrying yarn and blankets, which she sold for peasemeal, thereby feeding her family.

Blackheid  (blawk-heed) n. nickname for John Oliver in the 16th century, as well as Archibald Elliot, John Elliot and William Elliot in the early 17th century.

Black Height  (blawk-hi) n. hill on the road to the west of Newcastleton, situated between Hazelyside Hill and Black Edge, reaching a height of 383 m.

Black Hill  (blawk-hil) n. prominent hill just south of Earlston, reaching a height of 314 m and having a hill-fort and triangulation pillar. There are many other hills of the same name.

Black Hill  (blawk-hil) n. hill in Wauchope Forest, to the east of Hyndlee. It reaches a height of 359 m. On its western slopes is an ancient settlement, about 100 m by 60 m in size, and has a ditch and outer bank. It has been partly eroded by cultivation and now by forestry plantation. There are also signs of cord rig on the hill.

Blackhouse Toor  (blawk-hoos-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined tower up the Douglas Burn from the Yarrow, near Craig Douglas farm. Once a populous area of the Ettrick Forest, the barony of Douglasburn was seat of the Douglases from the 11th century, and scene of the ‘Douglas Tragedy’ ballad, where the 7 Douglas brothers fell. The lands of ‘Garlacleuch et Blackhous’ were Crown lands from at least 1456, tenanted by James Alemoor of that Ilk in 1484, then Robert, Lord Lyle, then James Alemoor of that Ilk and his son John from 1488. John continued to lease the lands until taken over by Pringle of Tinnis in 1509. William Stewart of Traquair was tenant of the lands in 1541. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd lived at the farm here for about a decade at the end of the 18th century (spelled ‘Blakhous’ and variants; there are many other places in Scotland with the same name).

Blackhope  (blawk-höp) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, to the east of Saughtree. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh in 1612, but part of the dispute between the Elliots and the Scotts. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. Adam Armstrong, called ‘Rattas in Blackhoip’ was one of the last of the Border thieves brought before the Earl of Buccleuch in 1646. It was valued at £200 in 1678. William Davidson (merchant in Jedburgh) purchased the farm in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. William Glendinning was there in 1694. It was sold in 1786 (along with Over and Nether Larriston) by William Oliver of Dinlabyre to Col. William Elliot. However, William Oliver was still recorded as owner in the 1788 county valuation, when it was still valued at £200. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when the valued was unchanged. John Dodd and family lived there in 1841. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (it is ‘blackhoup’ in 1613, ‘Blackhoip’ in 1624 and ‘Blackhoup’ in 1637; it is marked ‘Blakhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there are several places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. between Peebles and Heriot).

blackie  (blaw-kee) n. blackbird – ‘The blackie warblin’ blithely, The lintie and the lark . . . ’ [WL], ‘The blackie’s note, the cheepin’ speugs out ‘mang the hedge . . . ’ [WFC], ‘. . . Wi sparras cheepin gleg on the rones, the cocks crain, And the blackies whusslin owre a’ the braes and gairdens!’ [DH], ‘. . . nae doot mavis and blackie sang on the top o the Jeddart gibbets i’ the auld days . . . ’ [DH], a black sheep – ‘A blackie, as I watched it grew twa horns as big’s a Kyloe coo’ [TD].

Black Jimmie’s  (blawk-ji-meiz) n. popular name for a tailor’s shop in Denholm in the late 19th century.

Black Jock  (blawk-jok) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

black keel  (blawk-keel) n., arch. plumbago, graphite – ‘Ruddle is ‘reid keel’, plumbago is ‘black keel!’ [JAHM].

the Black Laird  (thu-blawk-lär’d) n. nickname for James Ormiston.

Black Law  (blawk-law) n. hill about 10 miles east of Hawick, just south of the Dunion, and east of Bedrule, reaching 338 m and having a mast on top. There is a linear earthwork (not necessarily of great antiquity) running across the north side of the hill, which probably once joined the top of Knowesouth Burn with Greypeel Burn, hence marking a boundary extending from the Jed to the Teviot. Note that there are several other ‘Black Laws’ in the Borders and further afield.

Blacklee (blawk-lee) n. cottages south of Hobkirk, between Forkins and Cleuch Head. It was the location of a blacksmith’s in the 19th and early 20th centuries and also a saw mill in the 19th century. This is essentially the same place as Blackleighmouth and is now marked ‘Blacklee Cottages’ on the Ordnance Survey map. The hill there was called ‘Blacknowe’. The farmhouse there was near to the gate of Wolfelee and was last lived in by the Taylors (also spelled ‘Blackley’).

Blacklee Brae (blawk-lee-brä) n. former name for the road going uphill from Forkins and Blacklee Cottages to Cleuch Head. The main road from Hawick to Newcastle used to go this way before the early 1800s.

Blackleemouth (blawk-lee-mouth) n. Blackleemouth, former name for the area called ‘Blackley’ in Hobkirk Parish where there was once a blacksmiths. It is unclear if it was exactly the same place as Blackleighmouth, which was certainly nearby. William Elphinstone lived there in 1637 when it is recorded as ‘Blacklyemouth’ and he is alias ‘Steytheveyage’ (possibly a variant of Stanedge). William Shiel was ‘cottar’ there in 1694, with George Turnbull, Agnes ‘Dax’ and Margaret Paterson also residents. James Adamson was there in 1786. It incorporated part of the former farm of Unthank around the early 19th century. The smiddy was originally at Unthank, then moved to Forkins, only moving over to Blacklee around 1850. George Rutherford was joiner there in 1851. The small thatched cottage there was home to the Renwick family in the 18th and 19th century. The Pows were blacksmiths there in the latter part of the 19th century (it is ‘Blacklyemouth’ in 1637, ‘Blackleemouth’ and ‘Blacklimouth’ in 1694, ‘Blackleemouth’ in 1709, probably the place transcribed ‘Blacklesmout in ye water Roule’ in Hawick Session records of 1725 and ‘Blacklyemouth’ in 1786).

Blacklock (blawk-lok) n. John of Leaugh (1772-1837) born in Westerkirk, son of John and Janet Manderson. He was owner of Leaugh near Newcastleton, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Margaret Scott and their children were: Janet (b.1807); Walter (b.1808); Hannah (b.1812); Margaret (b.1815); and Agnes (b.1817). William (18th C.) resident of Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He married Peggy Scott in 1787 and their children included: Betty (b.1788); Peggy (b.1790); and Isabel (b.1792).

Black Ludge (blawk-luj, -loj) n. name sometimes used for the lodge house for Stobs estate, situated just to the right of the B6399, at the bend in the road nearest to Stobs House. The gate of the old estate is there.

blackmail (blawk-mail) n., arch. literally ‘black rent’, the illegal rent paid to a riever to buy protection – ‘Gae seek your succour frea Martin Elliot, For succour ye’s get nane freae me, Gae seek your succour where ye paid blackmail, For, man, ye ne’er paid money to me’ [T] (this gave rise to the modern use of the word).

Blackmoorhaugh (blawk-mewr-hawch) n. former lands in Rulewater, lying to the west of Templehall and Brewlands, and described in a bounding charter of 1567. It is described as extending to Wauchopebank (‘Blakmurhauch’ in 1567 and ‘Blakmuirhawch’ in 1604).

blackneb (blawk-neb) n., arch. a person having anti-Government political views, a closet revolutionary, particularly used as a derogatory term for a person refusing to volunteer against France in the years before and immediately after 1800. They wanted every man to be equal, and a fair division of wealth, and were essentially early socialists. The term might be applied to those with views such as Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson’s, and was usually a term of contempt. Hawick meetings of like-minded people were often held in the Subscription Rooms in the early 19th century. Opponents claimed that they had all laid a claim to the estate that would be theirs when the lands were redistributed, and that 2 of them fought over a claim on Midshiels – ‘... a party of extreme politicians known by the name of ‘blacknebs’, who ardently desired the spread of Revolutionary principles ... ’[AM].

Blaknowe (blawk-now) n. former name for the hill at Blacklee near Hobkirk. Several ancient burial urns were dug up there in the 19th century.

Black Linn (blawk-lin) n. name for an area of the Dawston Burn, not far north of the old viaduct.

the Black Palins (thu-blawk-pä-lin) n. popular name for the lane running from Bath Street to Albert place, after the black railings that were once there. The official name is ‘Blackpaling Lane’. The palings on the Wilson & Glenny’s side were removed after the 1959 fire, with a wide access road left in 1961. Iron studs were left to mark the width of the old public path, but disappeared after later development for nearby supermarkets. With the demolition of all the buildings on the north side it became a one-sided street – ‘…before hurling home their neatly folded bundles up the Black-palings on a bogy’ [BB], ‘What’s happened tae the Black Palings It could fair make ee greet’ [AY].

Blackpool (blawk-pool) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, precise location unknown. It is mentioned as part of the boundary description for the lands of Ringwood, which were granted to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. The description is fairly vague, but the suggestion is it was a pool in the Teviot, between the modern villages of Newmill and Teviothead; it is not impossible it is the same as the Horse Pool. Probably the same lands are referred to in a 1450 ‘letter of reversion’ from Walter, son of Andrew Ker of Altonburn to William Douglas of Cavers. They were at that time worth £40. There was also a charter in the same year in which Douglas of Cavers granted Blackpool to Walter Ker, who appears to have been his nephew or grandson. The lands were held for one penny, payable at Christmas if asked. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Blakbull’ in the confirming charter for the lands of Cavers in 1511. It is probably the ‘Blaikbull’ listed as part of the estate of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. It is still ‘Blackbull’ in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and transcribed ‘Blackhall’ when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698 (it is ‘Blackapol’ in the 1160s and ‘Blackpule’ in 1450).

the Black Pool (thu-blawk-pool) n. dark pool in the Tweeden Burn, to the south-east of Newcastleton.

Black Quarries (blawk-kwaw-reez) n. former quarries reached via a track off the top off Wellogate Brae, behind the Braid Road, and near Target Pond. The basaltic rock found here has been suggested to be part of the Acklington Dyke, a huge geological feature spewed out from the volcanoes around Mull about 61-55 million years ago.

Blacksidelees (blawk-sid-leez) n. former farmstead near Mangerton. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is part of the farm of Mangerton, but it is not clear which part. This could be associated with the ‘Blackstone lee’ where it is described in an English letter of 1596 that John Elliot of Copshaw had built a tower. It is also possible that it is the same as ‘Baxtonlees’ and Peel.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in the Borthwick valley which joins the Hoscoat Burn just below Girtwood Linn.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in southern Castleton Parish, which joins the Tinnis Burn. On its banks are the remains of a small township, including 5 buildings, a possible corn-drying kiln, and several enclosures.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in the upper waters of Liddesdale. It runs southwards to join the Liddel, close to the remains of Hudshouse, to the north of Dinlabyre. The woods there were formerly Black Sike Plantations.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. short stream in Liddesdale, joining the Liddel on the north side of the valley, just upstream from Dinlabyre Bridge. A plantation there was formerly known as Blackisle Plantin.

black squad (blawk-skawd) n. in a knitwear factory, those who get the dirtiest, specifically a term applied to the engineers and mechanics.

Blackstock (blawk-stok) n. Rev. Robert (1827–88) born in Kirkmichael, Dumfriesshire, son of Peter and Margaret Oughton, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He was school-master at Brydekirk, was licensed to preach by Lochmaben Presbytery in 1853 and ordained as minister at Ladhope in 1858. He was translated to Lilliesleaf in 1881. In 1866 he married Joanna (who died in 1916), daughter of Robert Hall (a Galashiels builder) and Flora Sanderson. Their children were Flora Agnes, Margaret Josephine Oughton (married Thomas Ovens of Galashiels), Joanna Hall, Christian Patricia (married John Crawford), Agnes Catherine Hall and Robert Patrick Hall (of Eskbank). He wrote ‘Sermons Against Swearing’ (1872), ‘The Principles and Advantages of a National Church’ (1879), ‘Voluntarism and Establishment’ (1879) and ‘Memorial Sermon for William Roberts of Netherby’ (1879).

black sugar-witter (blawk-shoo-gur-wi’-ur) n., arch. liquorice juice – ‘Blackshoogir-waeter = Spanish liquorice (‘black sugar’) dissolved in a bottle of water. The solution was often bartered by the children thus: – ‘Black shoogir-waeter, a paep a sook!’ [ECS] (sometimes called ‘black witter’; see also sugarallie witter).

Black Tarra (blawk-ta-ris) n. another name for Tarra Moss. The lands there were made up of the farms of Lodgegill and Cooms. There were Elliots of Black Tarras in the 17th century (it was ‘Blak terres’ in 1541).
the Black Toor (þlu-þawk-toor, -toor-ur) n.
name sometimes used for Drumlanrig’s Tower.
Black Wat (þawk-waw) n. nickname of Walter Scott, Cornet in 1765.
Blackwudhill (þawk-wud-hil) n. Blackwood Hill, hill to the east of the Ninestane Rig. On the western side, near the Roughley Burn are the remains of a settlement. This could be the ‘Blacwd’ listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale in the ‘Foresta’ section, with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence.
blade (þläd) n., arch., poet. a leaf of cabbage, lettuce, rhubarb, dock, etc., applied figuratively to a person – ‘But be ye ploughman, be ye peer, Ye are a funny blade, I swear’ [BS], ‘Lament him, ilka heartie maid, Mourn for him, every canty braid’ [JoHa], ‘The auldest was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade’ [RDW], v., arch. to strip a large-leafed plant.
blae (þlë) adj., arch., poet. dark blue, bluish-purple, discoloured through cold – ‘They pass’d the muir of berries blae, The stone cross on the lee; They reach’d the green, the bonny brae, Beneath the birchen tree’ [JL], ‘…Instead of poortith, cauld and blae, The curse o’ barleybrae, Beneath the birchen tree’ [JL], ‘…Under the hauf-shaws are a’ blaiken’t’ [GW].
blakerberry (þlë-be-ree) n., arch. fruit of the bilberry, European blueberry (Vaccinium myrtillus) – ‘Sine off we’d hie tae Minto Woods For blaeberries and slaes’ [WL], ‘…Under the hauf-blin stare O’ blaeberries; the universe Starr’d wi’ un-numbered galaxies O’ tormentitl’ [DH], ‘First of all, it was a boyhood hill, with riding cloud-shadows and blaeberries and the crying of whaups’ [DH].
Blaberberry Plantin (þlë-be-ree-plawn’-in) n. planted south of Wollrig farm. To the east there are remains of an enclosure and traces of old cultivation.
Blaeu’s map (blowz-map) n. map of Teviotdale published by Dutch cartographer in Joan Blaeu
(c.1599–1673) in 1654 as part of his ‘Theatrum Orbis Terrarum’, which was the most expensive book money could buy in the late 17th century.
Although still crude, this is probably the first useful map of the area. There are also maps of nearby regions, including Ewesdale and Liddes-dale. The Scottish maps published by Blaeu were based mainly on the manuscript maps of Timothy Pont (c.1560–c.1614), which were probably made within a few years of 1590. Thus the map refers to the places of about 60 years earlier than the publication date. Only one small draft section of Pont’s mapping of Teviotdale survives.
blaewart (þlë-wawr) n., poet. the bluebell, Campanula rotundifolia, sometimes also the bluebottle – ‘Though the roses on their cheek Turn like the blaewart flower’ [JT].
blaff (þlaff) n., arch. an explosion – ‘The gun goad off wi’ a blaff’ [GW].
blaiken (þlë-kin) adj., arch. bleached, made pale, turned yellow by the Sun – ‘Grass maun be blaiken’ ere it can be hay’ [JoHa], turned back to its normal colour (of skin) after a sore, withered
by frost – ‘The tatae shaws are a’ blaiken’t’ [GW].
Blaikie (þlë-kee) n. Francis of Hermiston (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from or how long he owned these local lands. Robert Moffat was also an owner of part of Hermiston at the same time. George (1785/6–1849) saddler at 3 Tower Knowe. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a saddler and harness maker on the High Street. In 1837 he was listed on the Tower Knowe. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1861, aged 74. Their sons were: Robert, who spent many years in Newcastle; William,
also a saddler; George, coal merchant; Thomas, corn dealer; and John, who emigrated to Australia. They also had one daughter, Jessie, who married William Inglis. His widow Isabella was listed as ‘Annuitant’ in 1851. Bailie George (1820/1–97) 3rd son of saddler George. He was a Town Councillor and Bailie of the 1800s. He learned his father’s saddlery trade, then became a tin-smith and ironmonger. His premises were at 2 Tower Knowe (later Turnbull the grocer’s), then 46 and finally 67 High Street (which he sold to the Co-op, to become their drapery store).
In 1851 he was living on Backdamer and in 1861 was at 2 Tower Knowe, employing 5 people, with his wife also keeping a ‘Temperance Coffee house’. He was recorded as an ironmonger and a tin-plate worker at Market Place in Slater’s 1852 directory, and ‘George Blaikie & Son’ was listed as a saddler there. In 1869 he commenced as a coal agent, along with his son George, suc-ceding to the business of his son-in-law George Jobson. This grew to become the most extensive coal dealers in town, Messrs. George Blaikie & Co. Although said to be of a quiet disposition, he served as Town Councillor for 12 years, including several years as a Magistrate. He was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish Kirk who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He became the first Treasurer of the new church, also serving as Session Clerk 1861–66 and again 1874–89. He was superintendent of the Sunday School at Hawick Parish Kirk, carrying on this task at Hawick Free Kirk after the Disruption, and continuing until 1889 (about 60 years in total). On his retirement from church activity he was presented with his portrait, which still exists. In 1843 he married Margaret Briggs Dryden, who came from Ewesdale and died in 1891, aged 73. Their children were: Jane Dryden (or ‘Jeanie’, b.1844), who married George Jobson; George (b.1846), also a coal merchant; John Wallace (b.1851), an ironmonger; and Alexander Brown (b.1856). George (1846–86) son of coal merchant George. He was a partner with his father, but pre-deceased him. He lived at Bridge House. He married Isabella Ward, who died in 1922, aged 72. Their daughter Margaret married Charles William Scott. George H. (d.1938) grandson of coal merchant George, he wrote the poem ‘Our Borderland’, dedicated to the Callants’ Club. He held several offices in St. George’s Kirk. Hector (18th C.) ferryman before the opening of the Teviot Bridge in 1741, taking passengers across the Coble when it was not fordable. He lived at the foot of what was known as Blaikie’s Brae. Probably the same Hector (although possibly his son) was listed in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, valued at £9. He was also recorded at Roadside on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was still listed as owner of ‘Part of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), with the same lands later owned by David Hall.

Hector (b.c.1780) labourer in Wilton Parish, surely descended from the earlier Hector who gave his name to Blaikie’s Brae. He is recorded at Roadhead among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and at Howdenburn in 1840. He is a ‘Road man’ at Howdenburn on the 1841 census. He married Margaret Leggat in Wilton in 1824. Their children included Robert (b.1822). Henry (16th/17th C.) notary public who wrote the bonds in 1599 (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘Bleak’ in 1687 when he had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Elspeth Scott and the witnesses were Walter Scott of Goldielands and William Scott, apothecary, who may have been close relatives of his wife. His son Walter was born in 1692. He could be the James ‘Bleakie’ recorded as a gardener (possibly at Burnfoot, although this is unclear) on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. James (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Falnash. He married Margaret Henderson. Their son Robert was born in 1726. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Langlands. He paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish in 1789. He is probably the ‘James Blake in Wilton’ who paid the tax in 1791 and who was also listed at Pathhead in Wilton as ‘James Blaky’. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: Peter (b.1760); James (b.1762); Patrick (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Hector (b.1767); Robert (b.1770); Janet (b.1771); Robert (again, b.1773); Janet (again, b.1775); and Agnes (b.1777). The witnesses in 1770 was Charles and Walter Scott. Perhaps the same James was recorded as a stocking-maker at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish; but his name does not appear in the 1840 list. Robert, stocking-maker at Roadside in 1840, may have been his son. John (16th C.) witness to a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as ‘Johanne Blaikie’.

John Wallace (1851–99) son of George and Margaret Dryden. He was an ironmonger in Hawick. He married Isabella Leyden Scott, who died in 1912. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be related to the Robert (1720/1–81) who is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, along with his wife Janet Scott, and daughter Elizabeth. Robert (18th C.) house servant recorded at Midshiel in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. He was probably related to Samuel, who was also a servant with Douglas. Samuel (18th C.) postillion at Midshiel in 1778, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. He is probably the same man recorded as Samuel ‘Sibbald’ in 1779, making it unclear which surname is correct. Thomas (d.bef. 1816) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Hardie in 1772 and their children included Isabel (b.1773). The death of his widow Agnes was recorded in 1816. Thomas (b.1825/6) corn dealer in Hawick, he was son of saddler George and Isabella Scott. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is recorded as a corn dealer on ‘Market pl’. In 1851 he was at ‘Marketplace’ with his mother, brother Robert and sister Jessie. In 1861 he was living with his mother and sister Janet at 3 Tower Knowe. William (17th C.) recorded as cottar at Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Bluick’.
William (1816/7–59) son of saddler George and brother of coal merchant George. He was a saddler himself in Hawick. He was one of the first deacons of Hawick Free Kirk, from 1844. He married Margaret Veitch, who died in Manchester in 1897, aged 80. Their children included William Veitch and George Veitch. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (also formerly included William Veitch and George Veitch. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (also formerly ‘Blaky’, ‘Bleakie’ etc.; cf. Blake).

Blaikie’s (bla-keez) n. saddlery shop at the Tower Knowe, which also had a hostelry in the cellar.

Blaikie’s Acre (bla-keez-ä-kur) n. former name for lands in the East Mains of Hawick, i.e. possibly around Weensland. This is referred to as ‘acram terre vocatam Blakatis ayker’ in a 1557 charter for the Trinitylands. The lands were owned by Trinity Collegiate Church and leased to William Scott. In 1565/6 there was another lease to William Scott and his son Robert, the lands being there described as ‘Blacatis-aker, in lie Eist-manis’. It may be the same place referred to as ‘Ralphs aicker’ in 1692 (it is possible this is ‘Blake’s Acre’ or something else, since the origin of the name is unknown).

Blaikie’s Brae (bla-keez-brä) n. name used since the 18th century for the road from the Coble pool up to Sunnyhill, now called Roadhead. Also used for the road along Sunnyhill to the Dean.
Until about 1815 it was part of the main road to the Borthwick. Named after Hector Blaikie, who stayed there, and was the Coble ferryman at the bottom.

Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel (bla-keez-tem-pu-rins-hō-tel) n. late 19th century, where
??.

blain (blän) n., arch. a scar or blemish, mark left by a sore.

Blain (blän) n. James Alexander Hutchison (1815–98) born on the day of Waterloo at May-bole in Ayrshire, he came to Hawick to teach in 1846 and became Headmaster of Wilton Public School. He wrote some poetry and referred to his house as ‘Blainville’. His wife was Mary W., and their children included William C., Margaret and Martha H. He was buried in Wilton Churchyard, although when the road was widened his daughters moved his headstone to the garden at Blainville (also written ‘Blane’).

blair see blare

Blair (blaɪər) n. Hugh of that Ilk (d.bef. 1357) probably son of Roger, he held the lands of Blair in Ayrshire. According to ‘Robertson’s Index’, during the reign of David II he had a charter ‘of the forfaultrie of Eustace Lorane in generall’. This probably included the lands of Harwood in Roxburghshire, which his son had confirmed to him a little later. Lorraine probably forfeited the lands for supporting the English side, but the family regained them at some point within the next century. James of that Ilk (d.1375) son of Hugh. He is recorded in 1374 when he gained the lands that had been forfeited by Eustace Lorraine and had previously been granted to his father.
This certainly included Coshogle in Dumfriesshire (according to a charter of 1374), but also ‘Heroud’ (i.e. Harwood in Rulewater) and other lands in Roxburghshire and Ayrshire. He was probably succeeded by a son who was also James. James of that Ilk (14th C.) son of James and probably brother of Sir John, progenitor of the Blairs of Adamton. In 1375 he had a charter for the lands of Coshogle in Dumfriesshire and Harwood in Roxburghshire, which had been granted to his father after being forfeited by Eustace Lorraine.
However, the Lorraines probably recovered their lands of Harwood soon after (and certainly before the mid-15th century), and hence it is unclear if he ever had much local influence. He was succeded by a son who seems to have been called both David and Hugh. James (15th/16th C.)
clerk of Glasgow Diocese who notarised a sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus in 1499.
Possibly the same ‘notar publik’ was among the witnesses for the 1500 letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers and wrote the instrument of sasine in 1500 for Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme etc. He may be the same as the James of Glasgow Diocese who was clerk
d for sasines of Synton in 1508 and 1513 and wit-tness to Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. In 1507/8 he was the notary for the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’, drawn up between Murray of Falahill and Scott of Whitchesters. In 1508 he was notary for the sasine giving Adam Hepburn the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands. In 1511/2 he was notary for the sasine for the Barony of Hawick. He may be the same as the as the man with lands in Hawick who is mentioned in the 1530s.
James (16th C.) named in the Charter of 1537
as having 1 ‘particate’ on the north side and half a ‘particate’ on the south side of Hawick. He had some special status, since some other Burgesses were tenants of his. His heirs were to pay one penny Scots in ‘blench farm’ at the feast of Pentecost and to provide a lamp of burning oil before the parish church of Hawick at high mass and vespers, on all holy days, for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, the founders of the lamp. He was probably the clerk of Glasgow Diocese on a Feu-Rule sasine of 1531 (for the Lorraines of Harwood) and who was notary in a Jedburgh document of 1533 relating to Longnewton. It is possible that he was descended from the Blairs of that Ilk of Perthshire. Rev. James (1797–1859) preacher from the Baptist Union born near Dunfermline. He preached at Saltcoats and Kilwinning, Ayr, Dunfermline and elsewhere. On his Borders preaching tour of 1844 he arrived in Hawick on Friday June 7th, and remarked that ‘a heavy rain, and the tumultuous excitement of the people with a yearly amusement called the Common Riding, prevented the possibility of any good being done, as multitudes were in a state of beastly intoxication’; however, he preached many times in the following week. He visited Hawick in 1844, when he baptised George Niven and again in 1845 when 5 people were baptised, the baptisms taking place in the mill dam in Slitrig Crescent. These events helped inspire the local Baptist congregation. Thomas (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1472 when Sir Edward Bonkle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church (Edinburgh) brought an action against him for withholding the 5 merks of ‘mails’ owed to him for the lands ‘perteyning to the Kirk of Sowtrie’ (Soutra, i.e. the ‘Trinitylands’). He is described as ‘dwelling in Hawick’ in 1471. Probably the same Thomas is deceased in 1484 when John Waugh sold a ‘tenement’ to Robert, son of David Scott of Branxholme, which is described as being in the south part of Hawick, north of his own lands. Probably the same ‘Thomam de Blar’ was on the 1450 ‘retour’ for William Douglas inheriting his father’s Barony of Hawick. And in 1452 he was ‘Thoma de Blar, prefate wille de Hawik balliis’ when he witnessed the sasine for the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas; he was thus an early Bailie of Hawick. In 1455 he was ‘Thomas de Blar’ when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, and in 1456 he was listed as a Burgess on a related document. He was probably related to the James who is listed in the 1537 charter. Rev. Thomas (c.1651–1736) minister of Coldstream, where he was translated from Tynninghame in 1686. He was deprived in 1689 for being an Episcopalian. He was afterwards responsible for more ‘irregular’ baptisms and marriages than any other clergyman in the Borders. This included a marriage between John Young and Margaret Clerk mentioned in the Hawick Burgh Records in 1706 and the marriage of James Scott (surgeon in Hawick) and Margaret Scott (sister of the Laird of Burnhead) in 1724. He himself married Christian Elliott, youngest daughter of the Laird of Stobs, and she died in 1729. Their son David is recorded holding a bursary of theology from Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1692 and 1693. He was appointed to Cornhill and Branxton in 1728. Captain Ord composed this epitaph: ‘Here lies the Reverend Thomas Blair, A man of worth and merit, Who preached for fifty years and more, According to the Spirit. He preached off book to shun offence, And, what is still more rare, He never spoke one word of sense – So preached Tammie Blair’. Walter (15th C.) nominated as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when William Croyser was deprived in 1441. However, he never possessed the office, and was in litigation with Patrick Hume, in whose favour he resigned in 1446. William (15th C.) priest of the Glasgow Diocese who wrote the charter in 1452 for William Douglas of Drumlanrig resigning the Barony of Hawick into the hands of the King. He was also notary for an instrument of 1468 involving the Scotts of Bucleuch and the lands of Lempitlaw. It is possible that he was related to the Blairs recorded in Hawick in the 15th and 16th centuries. He may instead have been the William who moved from Linton to ‘Carrall’ about 1469. William, M.D. (19th C.) graduating M.D. from Glasgow University in 1863, he was a doctor in Denholm in the 1860s, also serving the neighbouring parishes.

blait (blā) v., arch. to bleat, make a noise like a lamb – ‘Blait, to cry like a sheep. The Scottish peasantry likewise use blea, and blair [JL] (also blare and bleh).

Blake (blāk) n. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to George, who also subscribed. He also subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’, along with Miss Isabella (perhaps his daughter). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to Archibald. James (17th C.) shepherd at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written ‘Bleack’ and he was surely related to Robert, shepherd at Todshawhill. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1789. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick, ‘Blak’, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1799/1800) farm worker, born in Hawick Parish. In 1841 he was living at Borthwickbrae Cottages, in 1851 was a ploughman living in Denholm and in 1861 was in Ancrum Parish. He married Helen Miller and their children included Margaret, Andrew, Isabel, Jane, Helen, Alexandrina and James. John (b.1812/3–84) from Eskdalemuir, he was a farm worker and later farm steward in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Chisholme Lodge. He also lived at Milsting Shankfoot and was listed as a labourer at Deanburnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a farm steward at Gilliestongues in Jedburgh Parish. He married Elizabeth Smith, from Hobkirk Parish, who died in 1883, aged 75. Their children included: William (1835–55); Peter (b.1837), who died in infancy; Peter Smith (b.1838), who died aged 10; Helen (b.1840); Jane (1843–59); Mary (b.1845); Walter Scott (b.1848), died young; and Mark (b.1852), died in infancy. They also adopted Margaret Smith (b.1852/3). He died at Cogsmill and the family are buried in Roberton Cemetery. Robert (17th C.) shepherd at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Bleack’ and he was surely related to James, herd at Castleside. Robert ‘Deef Robbie’ (18th/19th C.) son of shoemaker Thomas (who died in 1816). He could be the Robert (b.1775), son of Thomas and Helen Anderson. Thomas (d.1816) shoemaker in Hawick. He was father of ‘Deef Robbie’, as recorded in the Hawick death register. He could be the Thomas, married to Helen Anderson, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1775. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as ‘Blaik’. He is probably the Thomas, aged about 75, who is a farmer recorded on the Back Row in 1841, along with wife Elizabeth. Thomas (1812–81) son of Robert, who lived at Drumlanrig Place and farmed fields up the Loan, and Margaret Moffat. He married Janet Little, who died in 1891, aged 73. Their children were Margaret, Jane and another Margaret, who all died young, plus Helen, Betty and George (long manager of the Co-op grocery branch). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Walter (c.1795–bef. 1851) thatcher in Wilton. He is recorded at Appletreehall among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and at Sunnybank in 1840 and 1841. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Archibald (b.1822); William (b.c.1825); Alexander Nivison (b.1827); Walter (b.1831/2); Elizabeth (b.c.1834); Margaret (b.c.1838); and Robert (b.1839/40). His children were born in Roberton, Cavers and Wilton Parishes. In 1851 his widow and 3 sons were living at ‘Burn row No. 11’ in Wilton Dean. William see William Black. William (18th/19th C.) listed along with Robert Hardy and John Hardie as a carrier in Hawick, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is given as ‘Blaik’, and so it is possible this is ‘Blakie’ William (b.c.1765) shoemaker of the Midrow, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His name occurs as ‘Bleak’. In 1841 he was a shoemaker living on his own on the Back Row (probably around the modern 10 Drumlanrig Place). He was possibly related to Thomas, who lived a few doors away William (b.1810/1) born in Roberton Parish, he was shepherd at Alton in Wilton in 1851 and recorded there as farmer in 1868. His wife was Mary and their children included William, John, Walter, Agnes and Thomas (see also Blakie and Black, with which it is formerly easy to confuse).

Blake-bell (bläk-bél) n. another name for Blakebillend.

Blakebillend (bläk-bil-end) n. ridge overlooking the Slitrig near Shankend, containing one of the largest ancient fortified homesteads in the Slitrig valley. The site can be approached using an old military track from the viaduct. The ridge is north-east of Burnt Craig and has a roughly triangular earthwork enclosing an area of more than 3 acres, containing 5 hut circles. Part of the ramparts have been erased by cultivation and the interior was used as a mortar site during military training at Stobs Camp. A ‘beehive quern’ found there is in the Museum. There are linear earthworks extending to the north-west, south and south-west. On the north-west side there are signs of cord rig. There is also a cairn just to the south-west, where a flagpole was erected in the 20th century. On the south-west slope there are 5 water-filled hollows, probably firing positions for large calibre guns, as well as a few buildings associated with the target range. The lands are easily confused with the nearby Blackpool, probably listed as ‘Blakbull’ (along with others in southern Cavers Parish) in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. Both ‘Blackpool’ and ‘Blackbill’ are listed (along with Caveling) among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott of Stobs in 1592, showing that they were different places.

_Blakeden_ (bläk-deu) _n._ former place name in the upper Ale valley, recorded in the charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170. It may have been between Whitslade and Alemoor, and is referred to as the ‘ortum de Blakeden’ (i.e. the ‘rise’ or ‘rising’). It is unclear where this may be, but the Bleakhill Burn would be one possibility (pronunciation is also uncertain).

_Blakelaw_ (bläk-law) _n._ Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Nether Whisgills. Along with William Armstrong, he was accused in 1698 of travelling resident of Nether Whisgills. Along with William Armstrong, he was accused in 1698 of travelling with laden horses on the Sabbath (also written ‘Blaklaw’).

the Bloody Bush (thu-blu-dee-bush) n. name of a former path over Larriston Fells from Liddesdale into Northumberland, roughly mid-way between Newcastleton and Kielder. It is now marked by a pillar on the Scotland/England Border (delineated there by the edge of Kielder Forest) beside what is now a bike and hiking trail, but was once a more major route over the Border.
The road was upgraded by Sir John Swinburne around 1830 and used to transport coal northwards. The name is said to refer to a former skirmish at the site, traditionally the slaughter of a party of Northumbrians who were resting in a thicket on their way home after a foray into Liddesdale. However, the stone was probably erected at the time of the toll road. There is also the remains of a former toll-house nearby.

worn locally by most men around the middle of the 18th century, and gradually going out of fashdon thereafter. The hat was considered to have special properties to ward off the in fluence of fairies and other malevolent spirits—‘This, in forter times, in Teviotdale at least, was used as a charm, especially for warding off the evil in fluence of the fairies’ [JoJ], ‘An unchristened child was considered as in the most imminent danger, should the mother, while on the straw, neglect the precaution of having the blue bonnet worn by her husband constantly beside her. When a cow happened to be seized with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies), she was said to be elf-shot, and it was reckoned as much as her life was worth not to ‘dad her wi’ the blue bonnet’. ‘It’s no wordic a dad of a bonnet,’ was a common phrase when expressing contempt, or alluding to anything not worth the trouble of repairing’ [EM1820].

blue cloth (bluo-kloth) n. crude form of cloth woven during the developing days of Borders industry, e.g. in Galashiels in the early 19th century. It was also said that the first kind of woollen cloth made in Hawick for the external market was a coarse blue cloth, which was sent to Leeds to be finished. ‘Blue bonnets’, presumably made of such cloth, were once generally worn by men in Teviotdale, the practice ceasing in the latter part of the 18th century.

In 1970 he became the first person to sail round the world single-handedly ‘the wrong way’ in the 59 foot ketch ‘British Steel’. Subsequently he has been involved in competing in and then organising many other yacht races. For these achievements he received the B.E.M. and the C.B.E. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1971, as well as having Chay Blyth Place named after him, and in 1997 was knighted for services to sailing. He has written or co-written several books about his adventures, including ‘Fighting Chance’ (1967), ‘Innocent Aboard’ (1970), ‘Impossible Voyage’ (1971), ‘Theirs is the Glory’ (1974), and ‘Challenge: the official story of the British Steel Challenge’ (1993). He reads ‘The Hill Road to Robertson’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Esther Faa ‘Ettie’ (d.1883) born between 1801 and 1804, second child of Charles, she was the last of the ‘royal’ Faa gypsy family. She lived a travelling life until crowned the Gypsy Queen, succeeding her uncle William Faa. Afterwards she lived in a small cottage in Kirk Yetholm. She visited Hawick about 1866, loaning her crown, royal robe, sword and slippers for temporary show. She married John Rutherford (‘Jethart Jock’) and they had 12 children, including Charles Faa Blyth who returned to Kirk Yetholm to claim the gypsy crown – ‘From hamlet to hamlet the sad tidings sped All over the Border that Esther was dead; In her ‘Castle’ at Kelso stern death laid her down, And took from her Highness both sceptre and crown’ [TCh]. Francis (b.c.1780) farmer up the Loan. He is recorded at about No. 47 on the 1841 census, living with his wife Mary. Andrew, who lived in an adjacent house, could have been his son. James (d.c.1690) smith at Cauldmill. His will is recorded in 1690. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (b.1801) from Kirkton Parish, son of John and Janet Scott. He was farmer at Borthwickshiels from at least 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1200 acres there, and employed 8 labourers. By 1861 his widow was at Ettrickhill farm. His wife was Helen and their children included William (b.c.1825), James (b.c.1829), Margaret (b.c.1831), Walter (b.c.1833), John (b.c.1835), Thomas (b.c.1838), Elizabeth (b.c.1839), Robert (b.c.1844); and Jane S.P. (b.c.1849). Janet (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (b.c.1790) from England, she was a grocer on Silver Street. She was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was there, along with Helen, probably her daughter. John (17th C.) tenant in Cauldmill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was blacksmith at Cauldmill. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the John, married to Bessie Brown, whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1671) and Margaret (b.1673). John (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Laidlaw in Wilton in 1719. Their children included Andrew (b.1723), Thomas (b.1725) and Helen (b.1728). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1796 he married Janet Bowie, from Hobkirk Parish. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scott in 1795/6, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Margaret (b.1796): Isobel (b.1798); James (b.1801), farmer at Borthwickshields; Thomas (b.1801), probably twin of James; Andrew (b.1803); Janet (b.1805); John (b.1809); and Betty (b.1811). Dr. John (1815–92) son of William and Janet Walker, he was born in Hawick Parish. He is mentioned in the New Statistical Survey in 1839 in relation to information about the Town, and so had presumably already been there for a few years. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a physician and a druggist at ‘Slitterick bridge’. In the 1841 census he is recorded as a physician in the same house as Walter Graham, and so he was presumably Dr. Graham’s assistant. He became a Chemistry Professor at the Royal Agricultural College in 1847 and at Queen’s College, Cork, in 1849. He converted to to the dubious practice of homeopathy, becoming Physician at the Dublin Homeopathic Dispensay and edited works of Justus von Liebig. He married Christina Dods Crooks in Paisley in 1845. Their children were Marion Helen, William Frances, Janetta Harriet, Peter Howard, John Graham, Christina Rosa and James Gibson Craig, all born in Dublin. He was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1863. A portrait exists of him. Thomas (18th C.) along with Thomas Reid he rented Appletreehall, Knowetownhead and part of Clarilaw from Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1763. In 1771 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Andrew Hunter and in 1772 another baptism for William Douglas at Clarilaw. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Irvine, from Wilton. Thomas (b.1775) son of Thomas and Isabel Reid. He was from the family that was long associated with Cavers estate. It is said that as a boy John Leyden used to spend his holidays with him at Whitriggs. In 1861 he was living with his wife Ann at `Whitriggs Cottars House’ and was a former farmer. He is probably the Thomas who was tenant of East Middle on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Thomas (b.1792) born in Wilton Parish, son of Walter and Betty Scott. He was farmer at Nether Tofts and at Whitriggs. He was farmer at Nether Tofts in 1841. In 1851 he farmed 550 acres at Whitriggs and employed 7 labourers, and in 1861 was employing 8 labourers. In later life he lived with his sister Agnes Little and nephew William. He is surely related to the Thomas who was previously farmer at Whitriggs. Thomas (19th C.) great-grandson of Thomas, who was friend to John Leyden. He became tenant farmer of Wolfelee in the late 1800s. He died quite young and his widow ran the farm and remarried to Hawick wood merchant Mr. Robson. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Tofts, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (17th C.) resident of Muckle Cote who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (18th C.) probably hostler in the Tower Inn, whose child died in 1798. He may be the William whose marriage in Wilton is recorded in 1792. William (b.1824/5) born in Eskdalemuir, he was a shepherd, and then took over the farm of Whitriggs from his uncle Thomas. He was farmer there in the 1860s, and also a registered voter in Cavers Parish. He may also be the William who was farmer at Effledge in 1868 (also formerly written ‘Bleeth’, ‘Blith’, ‘Blyhe’ and ‘Blythe’). blythe (blith) adj. happy, merry, blithe – ‘Auld and young sae blythe and gay’[DH], ‘But yin blythe Easter morning I bo’ed to see his stane ...

the Board o Trustees (thu-börd-ö-tru-steez) n. The Board of Trustees for the Encouragement of Manufactures was an organisation set up to encourage Scottish industrial policies, established in 1727. It was also known as the Board of Trustees for Fisheries, Manufactures and Improvements in Scotland. Originally the organisation particularly focused on the linen trade, and in fact its exertions there led to the forming of the British Linen Company and later the British Linen Bank. It was very influential locally in the 18th and early 19th centuries, for example, giving out many grants to help new firms. Within about a year of being founded, the Board had set up 10 wool-sorting stations around Scotland, including one in Hawick, the Board paying salary for wool inspectors, who were responsible for scouring, combing etc. In 1734 it helped support the spinning school that had been set up in Hawick. In the next few decades it gave out several grants to help set up the carpet manufacturers in Hawick, and later it helped provide frames and other items for the fledgling hosiery industry. Until about 1843 the Board gave out many grants for equipment and ‘premiums’ for demonstrating quality of manufacture, many of the Hawick companies of the time benefiting.

the Boer War (thu-bör-wawr) n. war of 1899–1902 between Britain and the descendants of Dutch settlers in South Africa. The rationale for the war was debated at the time and it had a lasting aftermath in the region. Many local men were involved, including Col. John James Scott Chisholme, who died in the first few weeks. A flagpole was erected in the middle of Wilton Lodge Park in June 1902 to mark the declaration of peace in South Africa. It remained there for many years. A memorial statue was built in 1903 in the Park.

the Boer War Memorial (thu-bör-wawr-me-mö-ree-ul) n. memorial in Wilton Lodge Park to local men lost in the South African War, unveiled in 1903 by Lord Roberts, then Commander-in-chief of the British Army. The unveiling ceremony was a huge occasion, with 20 carriages transporting the officials and guests, and a crowd of several thousand, along with 300 Regular and Volunteer troops on parade. Part of the occasion was filmed. Subscriptions for the monument were raised from all over the Borders. It was also referred to as ‘the Patriotic Memorial’. It was designed by John Nicholl Scott & Alexander Lorne Campbell, architects of Edinburgh (who also designed the Library), in collaboration with sculptor William Birnie Rhind, A.R.S.A. (and probably not his brother Sir Thomas Duncan Rhind), and consists of a 12 foot high pedestal topped with a figure of a soldier grasping his rifle in readiness, with a machine gun by his feet (and is said to be the first statue anywhere in Britain to depict such a weapon). It is constructed out of Northumberland freestone. A tablet contains the names of 23 local men who fell in South Africa. The cannons that originally flanked the monument were removed for scrap metal in 1940. The statue was broken in a gale in 1974 and repaired. There was a centenary ceremony there in 2003 – ‘Seventy eer’s a lang time to stand guard, Wonderin what it was for ...And only the pipes can say, in lament, How it’s aye the young lost deid we honour: Never a war’ [DH].

bog-bluter (bög-bloo'-ur) n., arch. the bittern (also mossbluiter; once relatively common, this bird has long been absent from the Hawick area).

bogey (bō-gee) n. a child’s homemade cart – ‘... before hurling home their neatly folded bundles up the Black-palings on a bogey’[BB], ‘... and deliverin milk on a bogey afore schule ...’ [WL], a small two-wheeled vehicle, buggy – ‘An fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarie, caager’s cairt or hurlie cood A airt oot or hear tell-o’ [ECS]; once relatively common, this word (also spelled ‘bogie’ and ‘boaggie’; ‘cartie’ and other words are more common elsewhere in Scotland).

Bogfit (bōg-fi) n. Bogfoot, cottage in the Ewes valley, near Brieryshaw. There were Welshes there in 1841.

Boghaa (bog-, bö-haw) n. Boghall, area just south of Groundistone farm, including Boghall Moss. The farm lands there were transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid on 1 hearth there in 1694. The farmstead is shown clearly within Easter Grundistone in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch; there it is referred to as ‘a piece of land called Boghall containing near 5 Acres which doth not belong to her grace’. Walter Scott of Boghall is recorded in 1757. In the period 1811–18 the daughters of James Scott of Boghall exchanged parts of the lands for those of Boonraw with the Duke of Buccleuch. Scott Glendinning was farmer there in 1841 and 1851 and still recorded there in 1868. There is also a separate Boghall near Castleton, and several further afield in Scotland (‘Boighall’ in the early 1800s).
Boghaa (bóg-haw) n. Boghall, farmstead in Castleton Parish, on the Boghall Burn, which runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water near Dinlabyre. Near the head of one branch there is a ruined farmhouse marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Peter Robson was there in 1835.

Boghaa Burn (bóg-haw-burn) n. Boghall Burn, stream in Liddesdale, rising on the slopes of Hurklewinters Knowe and running roughly north-west, passing Boghall farmstead to join the Liddel Water at Dinlabyre.

Boghaa Moss (bóg-, bóg-haw-nos) n. Boghall Moss, marshy area to the south of Groundstone farm and west of the former farmstead of Boghall.

bogie see bogey

bogle (bò-gul) n. a spectre, goblin, bugbear, phantom, bogeyman – ‘deh gaun doon that lane, it’s where the boggles bide’, ‘…about supernatural appearances, or what are vulgarly styled bogles …’[EM1820], ‘An’ he, like Tam o’ Shanter, Aboot him glanced wi’ care Lest bogles caught him unaware’[FL] (also boogle).

boggle (bò-gul-boo) n., arch. a hobgoblin, terrifying ghost – ‘If a young swankie wi’ his joe, In some dark nook play’d boggle-boo …’[CPM], ‘Will ye never close yer een? There’s the bogle boo! Ye dinna’ care a single preen – Ye weë croodlin’ doo’[JT] (also ‘bogle-bo’).

Boglehole Haugh (bò-gul-hóil-hawch) n. former name for a haugh in Rulewater, lying above ‘Commonside Park, shown on a map of 1772 (the name is presumably because a hobgoblin was supposed to inhabit a hole there).

boglerad (bò-gul-radowd) adj., arch. afraid of goblins and ghosts – ‘The master being less ‘bogle-rad’ than his servants …seized the wizard …’[EM1820].

bogley (bög-lee) adj., arch. boggy (note that the Scottish National Dictionary give the example of Smith’s ‘boaggly’ for this word, but this is probably incorrect).

boglie (bög-lee) adj. spooky, haunted, eerie – ‘…although the great body of the people laughed at the boglie stories that had frightened their forefathers …’[RM], ‘…a long by a boggly, gloomin planteen, where the whusselin wund gaed soachin throwe’[ECS] (also boogly).

Boglebarns (bög-lee-barnz, boog-lee-barnz) n. house that stood on the site of 26–28 Weensland Road, once the only house between the Easter Toll and Weensland (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map). Later it was named Brammelhall and demolished in 1902. In the early days of the Common Riding there used to be a horse-back procession out to here before the Friday morning Chase, said to commemorate the march to Hornshole (as the Chase commemorates the return). In the earliest times the Cornet would collect the Flag from the house of the Senior Bailie and then proceed out to Boglebarns at a canter along with the unmarried men, while the married men left for the Moor. In later times the Cornet and supporters would go out, the Councillors etc. waiting at the end of Union Street on their way round Wilton. The tradition lapsed in the mid-19th century, being revived in 1887, and discontinued again after 1904, since the Boglebarns had been demolished. It was briefly revived again 1934–36, however. The existence of this tradition supports the idea that the 1514 skirmish took place on the southern side of the Teviot (so in a sense it was at ‘the Trows’ rather than ‘Hornshole’). The main route to Denholm used to pass through the location of Eskdaill Terrace (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) and rejoin near here (possibly named from its spookily isolated position, with the ‘barns’ perhaps associated with the nearby kiln; it is ‘Booglie Barns’ on the 1841 census).

the Bogs (tlu-bògz) n. former name for an area perhaps to the west of the present Clearburn and Kingside Loch, but south of Buccleuch (it is marked ‘the Boggs’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘The Bogs’ on Moll’s map of 1745).

Bogue (bög) n. Mary (b.c.1780) listed as ‘Independent’ in the 1841 census, when she was at about 51 High Street, living in the same house as grocer John Stenhouse. She was probably a widow of the man connected with draper’s Bogue & Henderson listed on Buccleuch Street in 1837. William (1829/30–99) baker in Hawick. He married Euphemia Mathieson, who died in 1914, aged 68. Their children included: Louisa Mathieson (1870–1); and Margaret Hope (1852/3–1916). They are buried in the Wellogate (see also Boag).

Bog Well (bög-well) n. former name for a spring north-west of Kirkton Hill, near the boundary between Cavers and Kirkton Parishes.

Boig (boig) n. former name for a merkland of land in Cavers Parish that was part of the kirklands of Cavers. It was among the lands inherited by Archibald Douglas from his brother William in 1698. It is unclear where this was located, or whether it is transcribed correctly.
boiled (boild) pp., adj., arch. having an extremely tired-looking face – ‘One whose face is bleared or ‘heavy’-looking (e.g., as a result of insufficient or of unrefreshing sleep) is said to be boiled i the face, boiled-leike, or boiled-lookin’ [ECS].

boillin (boi-lin) n. a quantity required for a single boiled meal (of soup, potatoes etc.) – ‘most farms allowed each employee to take ‘a boiling’ for their own home’ [GM].

boil the pot (boi-ul-thu-po’t) v., arch. to make soup – ‘When mother was making broth she said she was ‘boiling the pot’’ [JTu].

Boistoon (boi-stin) n. Anthony (1816/7–1861) from England, he was son of John of Kirkley West Gate. He worked as a carrier between Newcastle and Hawick. In the 1851 census he was staying at the Fleece Inn, and in 1852 he is listed leaving Hawick for Newcastle every Tuesday from the Fleece. He later took over what had been known as ‘Mrs. Inglis’ (she was Jessie, the widow of William Inglis, and sister of his wife Jane) and changed its name to the Half-Moon Inn. He is listed there (64 High Street) in 1861. He married Jane, daughter of Thomas Best and Margaret Rae. His widow was recorded as innkeeper of the Half-Moon Hotel in 1868. He is buried at Ponteland in Northumberland.

Bolbeck (bol-bek) n. Hugh (d.c.1262) 2nd son of Walter and Sybil, he succeeded after the death of his brother Walter. He gave his permission for 2 charters in which his brother granted lands and a hermitage at ‘Merchinlee’ to 2 monks of Kelso Abbey, Roger and William; this would give its name to the Hermitage Water as well as the Castle. During his life the monks at the hermitage asked to be placed under the direct protection of the Pope. He is probablly the Hugh who witnessed a charter in 1211/2, relating to the Scottish King’s lands in Northumberland. He was appointed to an assize in Newcastle in 1228/9. In 1236 he was appointed Governor of Bamburgh Castle, and is recorded many times in English documents over the next 25 years. His daughters and heirs Philippa, Margery, Alicia and Matilda are mentioned in 1262/3 in a document relating to his lands. He may be the Hugh whose heir Cecilia is mentioned in 1287. Walter (11th/12th C.) from a Northumbrian family. He witnessed 2 charters of King David and founded Blanchland Abbey in Northumberland. His is recorded as ‘Gu laterio in Bolebec’ when he witnessed a founding charter for Selkirk Abbey in about 1120. Walter (c.1140–c.86) second son and heir of Hugh.

Boisle (böl) n., arch. an opening through the wall of a house having a wooden shutter, a recess – ‘It was a quaint old building, full of holes, boles and

The family came from the North of England and may have had some local involvement; note that the ‘Hawick’ in Northumbria was in their Lordship. He was probably the Walter who is recorded (sometime before 1206) in the annals of Kelso Abbey setting up a monastic cell at ‘Merchingburn’, dedicated to St. Mary, for prayers to be said for the souls of him and his wife ‘Sibilla’. This is suggested to have led to the renaming of the stream as Hermitage Water, and hence the naming of the castle there, built perhaps in the 1240s. He married Sybil de Vesey (probably related to the later Barons of Wilton) and they had at least one daughter, Isabel. His sons Walter and Hugh are also mentioned in related charters. Walter (d.c.1204) son of Walter and brother of Hugh. In 2 charters he granted ‘the hermitage called Mecheleia’ to William and Roger, monks of Kelso, some time before 1206. These were regrantings of the lands granted to Kelso Abbey by his father, the hermitage being what would become Hermitage Chapel. It was granted with the permission of his brother and heir Hugh, and one of the witnesses was his mother ‘Sibilla’. He was succeeded by his younger brother Hugh (also written ‘Bolbec’, ‘Bolebech’ and ‘Bolebea’).

Bolburg (bol-burg) n. former name for lands that were near Westcoterig and Southdearnrig. It is recorded along with them in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540, when Richard Henderson was the King’s shepherd there. It is possible that this is a mis-transcription for another farm.

Bold (böld) n. Alexander (19th C.) boot and shoemaker in Lilliesleaf listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His widow and children were living in Galashiels in 1851.

the Bold Buccleuch (thu-böld-bu-kloo) n. popular name for Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch, due in particular to his rescue of Kinmont Willie from Carlisle jail in 1596 – ‘My hands are tied, but my tongue is free, And whae will dare this deed avow? Or answer by the Border law? Or answer by the baudl Buccleuch?’ [T], ‘…They were all knights of mettle true, Kinsmen to the bold Buccleuch’ [SW], ‘…And high on the western rampart flew The Border flag of the Bold Buccleuch’ [WHO], ‘Of Scott and Elliot, Hogg and Kerr, who took the Banner Blue, Of them and many more besides, who followed Bold Buccleuch’ [NM], ‘…Set the rustling robbers bustling From the Bold Buccleuch’ [WL].
boll (böl) n., arch. unit of measure for dry goods, equivalent to four Winchester bushels (or firlots) for wheat or beans, six bushels for oats, barley or potatoes, or two bushels for salt! It was formerly used as a unit to value land, or to pay workers. The ‘Linlithgow boll’ was the standard unit for Scotland and was equivalent to 4 firlots. However, the Roxburghshire boll for oats and barley was 5 firlots and was apparently 1.0645 times bigger than the Linlithgow measure — ‘Item, sawin vpoun the Kirkland of Hawik, threttene bollis aittis . . .’[SB1574], ‘Chaplehill sett to James Home for 18 bolls halfe beare halfe meall and 18 keans’[Buc1690], ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bollis of beir from the Lady Newtoune, and ane from Gladstanes’[BR1699], ‘. . .The officer gott a boll of meall and fourty shills yearly . . .’[GT], ‘. . .Walter Hyslop had for maintenance of his household 3½ bolls of oat-meal 23 peaks of bear-meal, a boll and a half of bear, and half a boll of peas’[JaT].

Bollinesburn (bo-linz-burn) n. former name for a stream on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley. It is described as part of the boundaries of Ringwood, when it was granted to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear where this was, but Northhouse Burn is an obvious possibility, or there could be a connection with Bowanhill.

Bonaparte (bō-na-pawr’) n. Prince Louis-Lucien (1813–1891), nephew of Napoleon, he was a French Senator, and also a great linguistic scholar. Henry Scott Riddell wrote a version of St. Matthew’s Gospel in Lowland Scots for him.

Napoleon (1769–1821) Corsican who rose from obscurity to become Emperor of France. He was finally defeated at Waterloo, which is commemorated by the Penielheugh monument. Some of the officers captured during the Napoleonic wars were prisoners of war in Hawick 1812–14. The ship that took him to St. Helena had among its crew John Robson, from Denholm. While he was exiled on St. Helena the British warships there were commanded by Sir Pultney Malcolm from Eskdale. And later the Governor of the island was Gen. Alexander Walker from Bowland, near Galashiels. After his death the Honourable East India Company’s farms on St. Helena were run by George and David Brockie, sons of a Barnhills farmer. They apparently used the former Emperor’s bedroom as a cattle-stall. When David returned to the Rule valley he brought with him a walking stick made from a tree that grew near the Emperor’s bedroom and a wash-stand made from the bedroom door itself. His writing desk from St. Helena was later purchased by Hawick Provost Robert Fraser Watson, and used to be at Hassendeanburn. The ‘False Alarm’ happened in 1804 during a time of concern over invasion by Napoleon’s forces. Bet Young wrote several poems to commemorate his defeat. It is said that the grand-daughter of Robert Paterson (‘Old Mortality’) married a brother of Napoleon’s. The Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III, is credited with making cashmere fashionable in the courts of Europe. Napoleon’s pen case and blotter are on display in Abbotsford. Sir Walter Scott wrote a 9 volume ‘Life of Napoleon’ (1827) — ‘Scarcely a cot could Cheviot claim That knew not dread Napoleon’s name, Scarce farm or stell or shearing-stance But echoed with some jibe at France’[WHO].

Bonar (bō-nur) n. Rev. John (16th C.) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1582 he became minister at Abbotrule in 1593 (although it is unclear if Patrick Bishop also still held some of the local benefices). However, he also had charge of Bedrule, Cavers, Hawick, Hobkirk, Minto and Wilton at about the same time. He was probably assisted in the various parishes by Readers, many of whom would have been trained as priests before the Reformation. In 1594 he was translated to Hassendean, but additionally had Cavers, Southdean and Kirkton in his charge, as well as perhaps Abbotrule and the ones he had care of previously. At the same time he may have held the benefice of North Ronaldsay. He was translated to Girtton later that year or the next year. He was then translated to Gelston in 1597, when he also held Kelton. John (b.c.1780) carrier in Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living there with his wife Ann and daughter Betty. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed leaving from the Grapes in Hawick to go to Jedburgh every Wednesday. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694 (also written ‘Bonar’ and ‘Bonnar’).

Bonchester (bon-ches-tur, bin-stur) n. Bonchester Bridge, village about 7 miles south-east of Hawick, centred around the bridge over the Rule Water. It is usually the site of the first ride-out of the Common Riding each year. The modern farmhouse of this name is just above the bridge, to the east. The original location may be higher up at the head of Rob’s Cleuch. The farm was in the old parish of Abbotrule and was once rented from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The lands were formerly split into Nether and Upper (or Over) Bonchester, recorded from the end of the 15th century. The original location of Over Bonchester could be the remains of a farmstead near the head of Rob’s Cleuch. There were Turnbulls at Bonchester from at least the late 15th century. David Turnbull and Walter Turnbull were recorded as tenants there in 1493, Mark and Robert Turnbull in 1494/5 and Robert Turnbull in 1501. About 1502 Peter Turnbull from there was involved in the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick. William and David Turnbull were also recorded there in 1502. It was burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and a tower there was burned by the English in 1545. William Turnbull was tenant in 1581. In 1643 Adam Turnbull, ‘Clerk’, was a tenant there, holding lands valued at £25, while Thomas Turnbull of Bonchester’s lands were valued at £30. A farm to the east of here is marked ‘Bonnechesterr’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map. The superiority of both farms were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Turnbull was tenant in 1694. William Laidlaw was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The farm of Nether Bonchester was held by a branch of the Scott family from 1632 until the mid-1700s, when it was sold by Thomas Scott to William Oliver of Dinalbrey. After that there were significant improvements, with the bridge being constructed to carry the new road from Hawick to Newcastle. The Over and Nether farms were among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The cottages at Bridgeend were built around 1800, to join the Horse and Hounds, which has been a coaching inn here since 1701. A stone pillar was erected in memory of locals who fell in WWI. There has long been a joiner’s shop there. Along the lower part of Hob’s Burn are the remains of an ancient earthwork. Since about the 1820s the village has been on the main route between Hawick and the English north-east, where the Rule Water is crossed. Before that time there was little development on the east side of the Rule, since the main road crossed further south near Forkins. It is only in relatively recent times that this has been used as the general name for the area. This may have been encouraged by the postmark of ‘Bonchester’ used in the area because of the location of the post office there (rather than ‘Hobkirk’). A macehead-type ancient hammer found near there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (the origin is probably the Old English ‘bun ceaster’, meaning ‘reedy fortification’, presumably because of the rushy areas on the slopes of Bonchester Hill, with its Iron Age fort, however a p-Celtic derivation is also possible, like with ‘Bincaster’ in County Durham; it is ‘bonechester’ in 1493 and 1494/5, ‘Buncester’ in 1501, ‘Bonecister’ and ‘bonchester’ in 1502, ‘Bovencheste’ in 1543, ‘Buncestir’ in 1566, ‘Bonechester’ in 1618, ‘Boonchester’ in 1684, ‘Bonchester’ in Hawick records of 1699 and ‘Boonster’ in 1797).

Bonchester Brig (bon-ches-tur-, bin-stur-brig)n. Bonchester Bridge, the full name for Bonchester, or ‘Binster’, as it is sometimes called. The bridge itself was constructed in the early years of the 19th century as part of the new toll road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It was built at the instigation of William Oliver of Dinalbrey, Sheriff of Roxburghshire. Before it was built the road from Hawick to Newcastle used to cross the Rule Water near Forkins.

Bonchester Cheese (bon-ches-tur-cheez) n. a soft, mould-ripened, unpasteurised cow’s milk cheese, with a rich creamy flavour and Brie-type texture. It was made from 1980 until 1999 by John Curtis at Bonchester, and won many awards, including British Cheese Awards bronze medal, and Champion Cheese at the Royal Highland Show. Another variety, ‘Teviotdale Bonchester’ was also made.

Bonchester Close (bon-ches-tur-kläss) n. street in Chislehurst, in the south-eastern outskirts of London. It borders on the former estate of Camden Park, which was once the residence of the Emperor Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte after the Franco-Prussian War, and is now the Chislehurst Golf Club. It is named after the large house there, which was purchased (new) by businessman Robert Laidlaw in about 1898 and called ‘Bonchester’ after his birthplace. The house was sold by Laidlaw in 1909 and later lived in by the parents of Malcolm Campbell, the land-speed record holder.

Bonchester Haughhead (bon-ches-tur-, bin-stur-hawgh-head) n. Bonchester Haughhead, house near Bonchester Bridge, also known as the Nursery Hoose.
Bonchester Hill

Bonchester Hill (bon-ches-tur-, bin-stur-hil) n. hill overlooking Bonchester Bridge, reaching a height of 1,030 ft (314 m). The rocks it is formed from are mainly igneous. It is fairly steep on the west (Rule Water) and east (Fodderlee Burn) sides, shallower to the north and south. It is said that in about 1814 a deal fell through by Clerghorn of Weens to purchase land on the slope from Kerr of Abbotrule, leading Ker to have all the trees on the slope cut down to spoil the view from Weens. Robbie Burns walked to the summit on his Border tour in 1787, noting ‘we traverse the country to the top of Bonchester, the scene of an old encampment’. The summit contains the ramparts of an Iron Age hill-fort, as well as later structures, with excavations in 1906 and 1950 showing signs of occupation over a wide range of periods. The original fort consists of a stone wall around the summit (about 105 m by 85 m), with 8 circular huts inside, as well as banks and ditches outside. There are 16 additional hut circles between the fort and the defences, as well as other defences and 4 more huts, probably later. The fort may date from the 1st century, and appears to have been unoccupied during Roman times. There is a separate complex of earthworks on a northern spur of the hill, consisting of an oval structure (about 50 m across) and a larger roughly rectangular structure, with extensive defensive ditches; this complex has been partly obliterated by cultivation and quarrying, and although it has not been excavated, it is suggested to be no more recent than the 11th century. A little further to the west, in a wooded area at the head of Rob’s Cleuch, are the remains of a farmstead, also quite mutilated, but consisting of 6 small buildings; it is possible that this is ‘Ower Bonchester’ or ‘Bonchesterside’. On the north-west slopes are the remains of an ancient enclosure. Artefacts, including a ring-headed pin, brooch and bead, have been found on the hill. Note that there is a Bonchester Hill Street in Las Vegas, Nevada – ‘While Bonchester in humble glory Uplifts its summits green and fair, Whose ancient camp reveals the story How British warriors one were there’ [FMC] (farms at ‘Bunchester law’ and ‘Hill’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, on the eastern side).

Bonchesterside (bon-ches-tur-, bin-stur-sid) n. former farm a little to the north of the modern Bonchester Bridge. It is possible that it corresponds with Upper Bonchester. Adam Rutherford was tenant there in 1684 when he was listed among men declared fugitives for not conforming to Episcopalianism (marked ‘Boonchesterside’ on Pont’s c.1590 sketch and ‘Bunchesterside’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but absent from Stobie’s 1770 map).

Bonchester Toonheid (bon-ches-tur-, bin-stur-toon-heed) n. Bonchester Townhead, former holding near Bonchester. Adam Turnbull ‘in Bonchester townhead’ is recorded in 1618. This is probably the ‘...head’, in Abbotrule Parish, where in 1643 Adam Turnbull held lands valued at £25, David and (presumably a separate) Adam Turnbull held lands valued at £30 and William Turnbull held lands valued at £44.

Bone bon-sin adj., arch. brazenly bold – ‘She’s a boncin’ bizzim – aye gaun maisterin’ aboot’ [GW] bondage (bon-deej) n., arch. serfdom, service due from a tenant to a superior, particularly the obligation of a farm-worker to provide a female out-worker when the farmer requires help.

bondager (bon-dee-jur) n., arch. a worker pressed into service through serfdom, particularly a female worker provided through an arrangement between a cottager and the main farmer – ‘...and the hinds are bound to supply workers in the field when wanted, who are called bondagers’ [RDA], ‘I was a dyke-back gett: A bondager’s wean, Wi’ never ocht but the bothy-cat To ca my ain’ [DH].

Bone (bön) n. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas.

Bonello (bo-ne-lo) n. Samuel (19th C.) native of Nottingham, he was well known in Hawick from the 1840s until he left in 1862. A stockmaker to trade, his eccentric habits included breeding cageless canaries in his house and preparing herbal nostrums. He was a boarder on the Crescent on the 1841 census and later lived in Underdamside, Upperdamside and Wilton Dean. He was a teetotaller and sometimes engaged in open-air preaching. When over the age of 70 he once walked from Nottingham and back to attend the Common Riding – ‘All you teetotalers rise and sing The praises of your teetotal king, Who quenched his thirst at the mountain spring, The great Sam Bonella’ [JTu] (possibly also spelled ‘Bonella’).

Bonjedward (bon-jed-wurd) n. village near the confluence of the Jed with the Teviot. It was also formerly the site of a house and estate that was long a seat of a branch of the Douglas family. The lands were granted to Sir James Douglas in the ‘Emerald Charter’ of 1324. They were forfeited by Roger Pringle around the 1340s, and Bonjedward Hoose

Bonjedward Hoose (b.c.1780) carrier, operating between Hawick and Jedburgh, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was recorded operating between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living in Jedburgh.

Bonjedward (bon-jed-wurd-hoos) n. Georgian house near the confluence of the Jed and Teviot. It was built in the latter part of the 18th century, replacing an earlier tower. It was remodelled in the 19th century and used as a dower house by the Marquess of Lothian. It is built of cream-coloured sandstone rubble, with polished dressings. The house also has a lodge, walled garden and stable yard. Former versions of the house were the home of the Douglases of Bonjedward. The estate later passed to the Rutherfords, the Jordans and the Marquis of Lothian. In 1800 the estate consisted of several neighbouring farms, as well as farms in Eckford Parish.

Bonmar (bô-nur) n. John (b.c.1780) carrier, operating between Hawick and Jedburgh, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was recorded operating between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living in Jedburgh.

Bonnet (bo-ni) n. a thick woven cap worn predominantly by older men – ‘Whisht! I hear his doggie barkin’, – Yon’s his bonnet on the hill’ [JT], ‘The weet seeped throwe oor bonnets And lashed oor smertin’ cheeks’ [WL] (see also bunnet and blue bonnet).

bonnetie  (bo-ni'-ee) n., arch. leapfrog played by boys piling their bonnets on the back of the stooper, whose place was taken by any leaper who dislodged a bonnet.

bonnie  (bo-nee) adj. pretty, attractive, beautiful, appealing, pleasant to look at – ‘that’s a bonnie new hat’, ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe . . .’ [AD], ‘And as for Peggy Duncan, She is a bonnie lass’ [JSB], ‘Bonnie for situatione, an’ the joy o’ a’ the yirth, is Muunt Zion . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . .for it is pleasint, an’ prayse is bonnie’ [HSR], ‘. . .Oh bonnie toon on Teviot’s side!’ [JLH], ‘Hey the bonnie, how the bonnie, Hey the bonnie mortcloth’ [TP], ‘. . .Here’s to Hawick’s bonnie lasses!’ [GWe], ‘The Dean’s still fine to look upon, The Slitrig’s bonnie whiles . . .’ [WFC], ‘. . .Comes cheerily hame to his ain bonnie Jean’ [WL], ‘. . .there is also a sound which lies midway between that [o] and oo, a characteristic sound heard occasionally in the local pronunciation of bonnie, mony, etc.’ [ECS], ‘Bonnie troots a-plenty Hae frizzled in my pan . . .’ [DH], also used in an ironic sense, goodly, considerable – ‘ee’ve made a bonnie mess o that hev’n’t ee?’, ‘that’ll cost a bonnie penny’, ‘Od, we’re a bonny set! a bonny mess o that hev’n’t ee?’, ‘that’s a bonnie view o’ the Border?’ [DH].

bonniest  (bo-nee-ist) adj. prettiest, most attractive – ‘. . .ti sei’d owre again, bonnier as ever, at the skrich o day!’ [ECS], ‘A bonnie penny = A goodly sum of money; A bonnie wheen = A goodly few’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘bonny’; note the former slightly diphthongal first vowel).

The Bonnie Banner Blue  (thu-bo-nee-haw-nur-bloo) n. song written in 2005 by Alan Brydon, with arrangements by Iain Scott and Ian Seeley. It was first sung by Iain Scott at the Mosstroopers’ Dinner of 2005 and is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Iain Scott. It soon became popular, and is sung regularly at Common Riding events. The words appear in the 2009 re-edition of the Hawick song book.

Bonnie Johnnie  (bon-nee-jo-nee) n. nickname for John Scott in the early 17th century.

The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme  (thu-bo-nee-laws-o-brank-sum) n. ballad first published in a broadsheet about 1701, a version was later included in Allan Ramsay’s play ‘The Gentle Shepherd’ (1725) and published in William Thomson’s ‘Orpheus Caledonia’ (1733). It is also known as ‘The Braes o Branxholme’, under which title a different version appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), which is stated to be ‘from an old M.S. entitled ‘Jane the Ranter’s bewitching of Capt. Maitland to her daughter’ by Old Hobby (or Robert) in Skelfhill’. The ‘lass’ was a daughter of ‘Jean the Ranter’, keeper of an ale-house at Scatterpenny; she was said to be washing clothes in the Teviot when noticed by the passing Capt. Maitland, who later married her. If the story was based on fact, then the man involved may have been Robert Maitland, who commanded a troop against the Covenanters. Maitland’s daughter (and hence also the Bonnie Lass’ daughter) Elizabeth married Robert Grierson of Lag, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been suggested that the ‘Poetical Museum’ version is more authentic; it consists of 14 8-line stanzas, while Ramsay’s published version contains only 5 8-line stanzas. The version of about 1701 may contain the first mention of Hawick in a poem (if it pre-dates Robert Cunningham’s ‘Ode to Hawick’) – ‘As I came in by Tiviot side and by the braes of Branksome, There met I with a pretty Lass, that was both neat and handsome . . . Then unto Hawick did we gang, And of the Way we thought not Long, Of us composed was the Song, My pretty bonny Lassie’ [AH].

Bonnie Prince Chairlie  (bo-nee-prins-char-lee) n. common name given in Scotland to Charles Edward Stewart or Stuart.

bonnier  (bo-nee-ur) adj. prettier, more attractive – ‘. . .ti sei’d owre again, bonnier as ever, at the skrich o day!’ [ECS], ‘The Braes o Branxholme’ or Stuart.

bannily  (bo-ni-le) adv. prettily, pleasantly, attractively – ‘And, oh! it bloomed sae bannily . . .’ [JI], ‘. . .And silver snatched from Slitig when the sun blinks bannily’ [JYH].
Bonnington (bo-nin-ing) n. former seat of a branch of the Scotts. The lands are those near Peebles, although associations of some Scotts with similarly named lands near Kilmoarnock and in East Lothian (just to the south of North Berwick) are also possible. The family were related to the Scotts of Aikwood, and they are mentioned in many more local records in the 16th and 17th centuries. The family first obtained these lands in 1552 when Janet Wylie and Marion Wylie each sold their halves of ‘Bonnytoun called Bonnytoun Wylie’ to Robert Scott ‘in Aikwode’ and Adam Scott his son. Robert held the lands ‘of the Queen for service of ward’. They passed from Adam to his son Simon, and then briefly to Simon’s brother John in 1624. The lands were inherited by William Burnet of Barns, grandson of ‘Sym’ Scott of Bonnington in 1627. The last of this line was Charles, who was a Commissioner of Supply for Edinburgh in 1678. However, Scott of Satchells says the Laird of Carnwath Mill was their representative in about 1688. A separate branch of the Scotts of Bonnington (in Lothian) was started by James, son of Lawrence of Harperrig and Clerkington, who provided Chamberlains to Scott of Buccleuch. The last of this branch was Gilbert Scott. Since the family Christian names are similar in the 17th century, it is easy to confuse the 2 separate families (also spelled ‘Bonmitoun’ etc.; it is ‘Bonnytoun’ and ‘Bonnytoun’ in 1552, ‘Bonytoun’ in 1557, ‘Bonytoun’ in 1562, 1572, 1581, 1591 and 1607, ‘Bonyngtoun’ in 1564, ‘Bonyntoun’ in 1590 and 1593, ‘Bonitoun’ in 1594, ‘Bonningtoun’ in 1602, ‘Bonytoun’ in 1617, ‘Bonningtoun’ in 1642 and ‘Bonningtoun’ in 1651; there are several places of the same name, e.g. in Edinburgh, which was a Lairdship of another branch of the Scotts).

Bonsor (bon-sur) n. James Brian ‘Brian’ (1926–2011) music educator, born in Hawick, son of manufacturer Tom. He joined a solicitor’s firm, then served in WWII on minesweepers with the Royal Navy. Afterwards he trained at Moray House (gaining the L.R.A.M. in 1947), and qualified as a music teacher at Trinity College London in 1957. However, studies for the B. Mus. were interrupted by the sudden death of his father. He taught at Hawick High School for 17 years, becoming Music Advisor for the Borders’ Region, before retiring in 1983. He published a large number of arrangements for recorder, the 15 volume ‘Enjoy the Recorder’ being particularly popular. He also wrote an opera, Shades of Night, as well as publishing compositions for piano, voice and junior ensemble. He received the M.B.E. in 2002 for services to teaching music, especially the recorder. He married Mary Hargreaves in 1966, and they had 1 son and 1 daughter. A commemorative CD entitled ‘Bravo Bonsor’ was released by the Society of Recorder Players in 2012. James Clement (1826–97) from the Leicester district, son of Richard and Mary. He had to leave the area after being involved in some industrial difficulties, making his way to Liverpool, working his passage to Annan and then apparently walking to Hawick, where he entered the hosiery trade. He was the first person in the town to work a power rotary frame. In 1851 he is listed as a frame-worker living on the Backdamgate. In 1847 in Leicester he married Sarah Woodward (1830–89), and the family returned to Leicester for a while (being there on the 1861 census), but later settled permanently in Hawick. Their children were: Harriet (1847–49); Clement (1850–6); James (1852–1926) of Thorterdykes; Mary Ann (1855–1931), who may also have been called Margaret; John (1857–1913), wool buyer of Peebles; Sarah (1859–1939), who married John Boyd; Ada (b.1862), who died in infancy; Clement (again, 1865–1937), commercial traveller of Whitley Bay; and Thomas William (1867–1946), hairdresser. He died at 16 North Bridge Street. James, J.P. (1852–1926) son of James Clement and father of James Clement. He was a hosiery manufacturer and involved with early technical education in Hawick. In 1901 he was living with his family at 56 Loan, also known as Croft Cottage. By 1904 he had moved into Thorter Villa, the house that became Thorterdykes. As an employer, he was said to be the first to organise an outing for his workers, taking them to St. Mary’s Loch in a charabanc. He also changed the starting time of work of the children in his factory from 6 a.m. to 8 a.m. In 1882 in Edinburgh he married Margaret McAdam Dickson (1855–1918) and their children were: James Clement (1883–1963); John Dickson (1885–1973); Margaret Fergusson Dickson (1888–1951); Sarah Woodward (1890–1939); and Thomas (‘Tom’, 1894–1959). James Clement, J.P., (b.1884) son of James. He was a Councillor and President of the Callants’ Club in 1933. He was a manufacturer and also involved in technical education. He was Treasurer for St. George’s Kirk 1925–35 and Session Clerk from 1935 and wrote the booklet ‘St. George’s Church and Its Associations’ (1938). He also wrote articles on local churchyards for the Archaeological Society Transactions and was President of that Society. He also served as Honorary Sheriff-Substitute. He married Jessie Kerr Deans in 1910. They lived at Ellabank. John Dickson (b.1885) son of James and Margaret McAdam Dickson, he was a hosiery manufacturer. He was Cornet in 1912 and Acting Father in both 1920 and 1928. In 1972 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Common Riding Committee for 52 years of service. He married Annie Mary Wilson in 1916.

Thomas ‘Tom’ (1894–1959) son of James and Margaret Dickson. He also worked in the family manufacturing business. In 1918 he married Ann Tait Burnet (1893–1963) and their children were: Mary Paterson (1918–2001); and James Brian (1926–2011), populariser of the recorder with the aid of his ‘friends’) and eventually had He managed to spend it all within about a year end of the 1700s, a small fortune in those days. Thomas Elliot (1810–39), 4th daughter of Thomas Elliot in Kinkie and Helen Scott, from the Scotts of Peel. Their only surviving child was Thomas Elliot (perhaps the same as Boag and Bogue).

boogle (boo-gul) v. to lurk, mess about, fumble – ‘what’re ee booglin aboot it?’, ‘The paraffin lamp in the close Tae stop booglin’ aboot at night’ [AY].

Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch (book-ov-samz-inl-o-lind-skoch) n. book by Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. It was published in 1857, with the texts being taken from the authorized (‘King James’) version. Only 250 copies were printed, at the instigation of Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte, who also printed Riddell’s earlier translation of St. Matthew and later translation of the Song of Solomon. The language is an idiosyncratic mixture of genuine dialect words, borrowings from older Scottish works and what can only be described as oddly spelled English. Despite not being anything like an authentic local version of these texts, the work still contains a huge number of examples of pieces of vernacular from the Hawick area.

booksome (book-sum) adj., arch. bulky – ‘...the muckle Caierter – booksome an blewe-leike wui the ferness o’d – raise fer owre on ma lef’ [ECS].

boolin (boo-lin) n. bowling, the game of bowls. Bowling was introduced in Hawick in the early 19th century and from about 1820 there was a green where Peter Scott’s would later be built. Hawick Bowling Club was founded in 1854, the oldest in the Borders, originally playing on Allars Crescent and then where the Baptist Church was later built. This green can be seen in a photograph from the 1860s. They moved to Buccleuch Street in 1874. Buccleuch Bowling Club was founded in 1872 to encourage the game among the working classes. Wilton Bowling club was established in 1895. Note that a form of the game was played by gentlemen in the 18th century, with evidence, for example, that there were bowling greens laid out at Wells House around 1730 – ‘The sun is shinin’ day and night And there’s boolin greens laid out at Wells House around 1730 { `The evidence, for example, that there were bowling greens laid out at Wells House around 1730 ...\[WL, \ldots{}` \[AY\].}

boundary (boon-da-ree, boond-ree) n. a boundary – ‘...inside the boonderies o’ oor ancient burgh’ [BW1979], ‘...was yin o the last ti milk kye within the toon boondary’ [IWL], ‘...But niver was thae ride again, the boond’ry o’ thaeer land’ [MB].

Boonraw (boon-raw) n. district about 3 miles north of Hawick, around the farms of the same name. A document from 1481 mentioning sale of land at ‘Bundray’ is probably an old spelling. It was then in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and sold for 300 merks by James Newton of Dalcove to Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw. The associated instrument of sasine is in 1487. By 1504/5 the ‘6 merkland of old extent’ was sold by David Hopppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlenas to Robert Scott of Stiches. It was owned by Walter Scott of Synton in the early 16th century. The land was then owned by a branch of the Scotts through the 17th and early 18th centuries. Their motto was ‘Reparabit Cornua Phoebe’ and their arms had 2 mullets on a crescent. The arms were given by deed in 1700 to Scott of Harden, as heir. In 1610 it was described as a ‘6 merk land’ when inherited by George Scott from his father Walter of Synton. In 1643 it was valued along with Stouslie (‘but disjoined’) at £67 3s 4d, along with Stouslie. The ‘Lyfrenter of Boonraw’ (perhaps the former owner, or his widow) was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Stouslie. The last Scott of Boonraw, Archibald was ready to sell in 1714, and there was a plan proposed by the Hawick Kirk Session to the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain to purchase the lands as an investment for the ‘Orrock Bequest’. But this appears not to have happened and it eventually became part of the Buccleuch estates (its purchase described in a letter by the Duchess of Buccleuch around 1720). In 1718 it was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, at that time consisting of an irregularly shaped farm of 418 acres, bounded by Newton, Galalaw, Stiches, Stouslie, Tandlaw, Drinkstone and Groundistone; the 2 farmhouses are clearly shown on the map. It was farmed by the Ormiston family for several decades, as well as another branch of the Scotts. James Scott, farmer there, was involved with the establishment of the first Secession church in Hawick in the 1760s. Ormstons were tenants through most of the 18th century, perhaps longer. In 1797 the farmers recorded there were Robert Ormiston, Walter Ormiston and Walter Scott. In 1788 (and still recorded this was in 1811) it was valued at £223 16s 8d, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It is now split into the houses at East and West Boonraw (several variants exist, including 'Boonrow', 'Bourrow' and 'Bournraw'; it is first noted in 1481 and 1487 as 'Bundray' and 'Bundraw', it is 'Bondraw' in 1504/5, 'Boyndraw' in 1505, 'Bundraw' in 1528/9, 'Bondraw' in 1610, 'bonrow' in 1638, 'Bourrow' in 1643, 'Bonrow' and 'bundraw' in 1678, 'Bournraw' in 1686, 'Bonrow' in 1718 and 'Bonnra' in about 1720; the modern spelling appeared by 1692; the origin is possibly 'good reaping or ploughing land' in Old English or 'the bondsman's house' or 'bondsman's corner' from Old Norse 'bondi vra', which might then imply a feudal relationship with Drinkstone.

Boonraw Burn (boon-raw-burn) n. stream that flows through the Boonraw area and then the Burnfoot housing scheme to join the Teviot opposite Haughhead. Burnfoot is named for being the end of this streams course.

Boonraw Floors (boon-raw-florz) n. former cottage near Boonraw. Stockmaker William Brown and shepherd James Anderson lived there in 1841 and 1851. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as 'Boonrawfloor', on the east side of the road between Stiches Mains and the 'Power Road Ends'.

Boonraw Road (boon-raw-röd) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1956, and named after the Boonraw Burn and district.

the Boonraws (thu-boonrawz) n., pl. the farms of West and East Boonraw, just north of Hawick.

boorder (boor-dur) n., poet. a border – 'An' he brought thame til the boordir o' his sanctuarie ...' [HSR].

the Boosie (thu-boozie) n. popular name for a thick plantation of fir trees just to the south-west of Newcastleton, also called Boozie Plantin – 'The joy of youth I felt yeestre'en Down on yon bonny flowery green; And aye I turned my wishfu' e'en On the Bank aboon the Boosie' [DA].

Boosmill (booz-mil) n. former farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, on the Ale Water roughly opposite Hermiston, now marked as 'Bowismiln' on the Ordnance Survey map. It was once part of the possessions of the Riddells of that Ilk, e.g. being inherited by Sir Walter from his father in 1636 and being described as 'lie Maynes de Bouismilne' when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669. John Shiel and his brother were tenants there in 1684 when they were declared fugitives for being Covenanters. John Shiel was there in 1694. Simon Laidlaw was farmer there in at least 1789–94. Andrew Elliot was farmer there in 1861, when it consisted of 186 acres – 'And memory loves to linger long By bonny Bossenmhill Haugh, Where merrily the river glides Past clumps of stately saugh' [FL] (the origin is probably from Old English for 'the mill belonging to Bowes' and first appears in 1596; it is 'Buismylne' in 1636, 'Buismill' in 1684 and 'Boosmilne' in 1694; it is 'Bewes Mill' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Booz mill’ on Stobie’s map of 1770).

Boosmill Hill (booz-mil-hil) n. hill just to the west of Bowismiln farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. This is probably the 'Beuse Mill Moss' referred to by James Murray in 1863. It reaches a height of 215 m and has the remains of a hill-fort.

Boots (boots) n. chemist's and general store at 76 High Street, built on the former location of the Pavilion Cinema. At one time it also ran a library (never pronounced bits).

the Boozie Burn (thu-boozie-burn) n. stream running through the Weensland area, passing under the main road to join the mill lade and thence the Teviot – 'The Bousy Burnie heard this pledge of perfect love' ' [WP] (from Old English for 'covered with bushes'; there are spelling variants).

Boozieburn Rifle Range (boo-zee-burn-rí-ful-ráinj) n. shooting practice range set up around 1870 by the Hawick Volunteers near the head of the Boozie Burn. This led to the area being known as ‘the Targets’.

Boozie Plantin (boo-zee-plawn'-in) n. wood on the west side of Newcastleton, across the former railway line from the village, also called the Boosie (cf. bouzy).

bord (börd) n., poet. a border, especially the hem of clothing – ‘...that gaed doun til the bords o' his garmints' [HSR].
Border

Border (bör-dur) n. a boundary between geographical regions, locally relating to the Scotland/England border, adj. relating to the Borders, near to the Scotland/England Border, particularly on the Scottish side — ‘Ah, Tam! Gie me a Border burn . . . ’ [JBS], ‘Keeps aye croonin’ owre an auld Border song’ [JEDM], ‘The language o pure Border Scots, ye can tell, is a source o great pride an Ah speak it mase’. It’s maybe no ‘pure’ as Ah’ve felt ye at length Tho variety gies its vigour and strength’ [WaE], ‘They are famed in Border story, They are full of Border life, And a grandeur and a glory, Begot of Border strife’ [JCG].

the Border (thu-bör-dur) n. the boundary between Scotland and England, area around this frontier — ‘. . . As ony stream that fit may for o’er Frae Johnny Groat’s unto the Border’ [AD], ‘Let Callants love, with honest pride, Their toon upon the Border’ [JLH], ‘Mang ither toons she bears the gree, The Queen o’ a’ the Border’ [JT], ‘. . . And she left it to the Border in a soft grey mist’ [WHO].

the Border Abbeys Way (thu-bör-dur-aw-beez-wa) n. public footpath, linking the 4 Border abbeys, covering 68 miles (109 km). The Border ballad (bör-dur-baw-lid) n. term used to denote a particular kind of traditional song, originating in the Borders, and often concerning raids or other conflicts. The precise definition of the term is unclear, and there is debate about which of the song should be considered as ‘true’ Border ballads. They probably originated in the 15th and 16th centuries, although they most likely evolved in the retelling. Several people collected the ballads in the 18th and 19th centuries, gathering verses from oral tradition, but often editing them before publication. Famous collectors include Sir Walter Scott, John Leyden, James (‘Ettrick Shepherd’) Hogg, Andrew Lang, Francis James Child and Arthur Quiller-Couch. Some had their first publication in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, printed in Hawick in 1784. The original authors are unknown, although tradition states that many were penned by the boy who was accidentally taken to Harden during a raid, and raised there. Examples of the more locally-based Border ballads (many of which are known in several variants, often with different titles) include: The Battle of Otterburn; The Braes of Yarrow; The Chevy Chase; Dick o’ the Cow; The Douglas Tragedy; The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow; Hobbie Noble; Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead; Jock o’ the Side; Johnie Armstrong; Kinmont Willie; The Outlaw Murray; The Raid of the Redeswire; Tam Lin; and Thomas the Rhymer.

the Border Bards’ Association (thu-bör-dur-bawrdz-aw-sö-see-ää-shin) n. organisation of local poets, formed in January 1878 in a meeting at Murray’s Temperance Hotel in Hawick. Members included Hawick’s Robert Hunter, James Sisson, Cecile McNiel Thomson and Elizabeth M. Sinclair. John Inglis was the last surviving member.

the Border Beacon (thu-bör-dur-bee-kin) n. the Scottish Border Beacon Lodge, a local temperance society of the late 19th century. Part of the Good Templar movement, it was one of the last of the lodges to survive, existing into the early 20th century.

the Border Beacon (thu-bör-dur-bee-kin) n. early, but short-lived periodical, based in the Scottish Borders. It was edited by James Dodds, printed by George Greig, Kelso, began in late 1835 and ran to just 5 issues. William Scott of Hawick was among the contributor.

the Border Bowmen (thu-bör-dur-bö-min) n. gentlemen’s club that existed in the Borders in the early part of the 19th century, along the lines of the Forest and Jedforest Clubs. The club jackets had buttons with ‘B.B.’ marked on them.

the Border Burghs (thu-bör-dur-bu-ruz) n. another name for the parliamentary constituency known as the Hawick Burghs, which existed from 1868 until 1918. This name was in general use, and probably arose to assuage the feelings of the townspeople of Selkirk and Galashiels.

the Border Club (thu-bör-dur-klub) n. social and non-political club in Hawick, established in 1890, using rooms in the Exchange Buildings until 1973. The club then moved to Jed Murray’s former studio at 43 North Bridge Street, which had been designed by J.P. Alison and constructed in 1899–1900. Wives of club members bared all for a 2005 charity calendar.

Border Collie (bör-dur-ko-lee) n. a breed of dog, developed in the Border country, having a wavy black coat with white markings, and often used for herding sheep — ‘Though man may often curse and doubt you, not a herd could herd without you, faithful honest beast’ [TD].

the Border Commission (thu-bör-dur-kom-i-shin) n. commission set up by James VI in March 1605 to bring order to the Borders. It consisted of 5 English and 5 Scottish commissioners, with garrisons in Scotland and England led by Sir William Cranston and Henry Leigh, respectively. These forces carried out a ruthless process of suppressing local rieving activity by execution and banishment. Probably hundreds were hanged over the next few years, and there was also a forced emigration of families to Northern Ireland. Many once prominent families on both sides of the Border were suppressed during this period, e.g. Armstrongs, Beatties, Bells, Carruthers, Croziers, Ellots, Irvines, Johnstons, Kerrs, Maxwell and Moffats.

The Border Counties Association (\textit{thu-b"or-dur-koon'-eez-aw-soo-see-a-shin}) \textit{n.} also known as the ‘Edinburgh Border Counties Association’, this was an organisation of mainly expatriot Borderers based in Edinburgh. It was set up in 1865, largely through the efforts of Thomas Usher (who was secretary for more than 30 years), to model the Galloway Association. Their major purpose initially was to distribute book prizes to Border schools, particularly in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. They were involved in celebrating events and preserving Borders history, including erecting monuments (such as at Trimontium) and purchasing property (such as Thomas the Rhymer’s tower and the Leyden family cottage in Denholm). Other events included several centenary celebrations of famous Borderers and a Handicrafts’ Exhibition in Hawick in 1887.

The Border Counties Line (\textit{thu-b"or-dur-koon'-eez-lin}) \textit{n.} former railway line in the English North-east, eventually connecting with the Scottish Borders via the Hexam to Riccarton junction route. Construction began at the Hexham end in 1854, and it was absorbed into the North British Railway in 1860. It was extended to Riccarton in 1862, where it connected with the Border Union Railway’s Waverley Line. The line consisted of a single track Passenger service ended in 1954, and the section from Bellingham to Newcastel continuing to operate until 1963. Part of the line is under the Kielder Water.

The Border Counties’ Magazine (\textit{thu-b"or-dur-kown-teez-maw-gu-zeen}) \textit{n.} magazine with a brief run, published in Galashiels and with the tag line ‘A popular monthly magazine of the history, bibliography, poetry, folk-lore, etc. of the Border districts’. Th editor was Thomas Lister. It was only published in 1880 and 1881, lasting for about 18 months.

Borderer (\textit{b"or-dur-ur}) \textit{n.} someone who lives in or comes from near the Scotland/England border, particularly on the Scottish side.

The Borderers (\textit{thu-b"or-du-rurz}) \textit{n.} television drama set in the Scottish Borders in the 16th century and broadcast by BBC Scotland in 1969 and 1970. It starred Iain Cuthbertson as ‘Sir Walter Ker of Cessford’ and Michael Gambon as ‘Gavin Ker of Slitrig’. There were 2 seasons, each of 13 50-minute episodes. The show was created by Bill Craig, and freely mixed fact with fantasy. All but 8 shows (all from the first season) may have been lost.

Border Forest Park (\textit{b"or-dur-fo-ris-pawrk}) \textit{n.} cross-Border park formed from the combination of Kielder and Wauchope Forests, with visitor centre in the old Kielder Castle.

The Borderers and Handicrafts’ Exhibition in Hawick and Selkirk (\textit{thu-b"or-dur-hur-i'-eej}) \textit{n.} television production company based in Carlisle, which made video histories of Border clans, as well as releasing the Scocha CD and video.

The Border Horse Racing Association (\textit{thu-b"or-dur-hors-rasin-aw-soo-see-a-shin}) \textit{n.} body set up to run local ‘fapping’ meetings. It began in January 1972, with founding members Donald Fairgrieve (Gala), Charles McCrerie and Murray Richardson. Their first race meeting was in the middle of July at Hawick Moor, the first race being won by a Horse called Moby Dick, owned by Andy Morgan and ridden by Murray Richardson. Many Border towns broke away from the B.H.R.A. in 1987 and so the Hawick Horse Racing Association was formed.

The Border Hunt (\textit{thu-b"or-du-run}) \textit{n.} small fox-hunting group, formed in 1869 and covering parts of Northumberland and Roxburghshire, with the Hunt Master based at Otterburn.

Border Kinematograph (\textit{b"or-dur-ki-ne-ma-t"ograf}) \textit{n.} film company set up by David Gaylor in Hawick about 1899 and operating across local towns until about 1906. Gaylor’s partner was local manufacturer Sime. There are 2 newsreels in the Scottish Screen Archive, each containing a set of captures of parts of local Common Ridings (Hawick and Selkirk) and other festivities and events. Gaylor set up a 12 foot screen and showed them at the Shows during the Common Riding, in the Exchange Hall, Selkirk, Jedburgh and nearby villages. Films may have continued to be shown until about 1917, although the last local clips appear to be from 1903. The films were shot on 35 mm stock, and were developed (by the foot) by Gaumont; hence they were expensive, but of very high quality for their day. The surviving clips represent some of the earliest moving images made in Scotland.

Borderland (bör-dur-land) n. poetic name for the Borders, or more specifically its countryside – ‘Dear borderland, I only know You have a spell that binds me so’[IJ], ‘The Borderland, the Borderland, My first love and my last’[JEDM], ‘My Borderland, my Borderland, The sweetest spot I know’[DJ], ‘Then join with me the dear refrain With willing heart and hand, And we will sing another strain To our dear Border Land’[JT], ‘There are landscapes much richer and warmer which the suns of the tropics nursed, but what can compare to the Spring in the air when the buds of the Borderland burst’[TD], ‘My ain Borderland, My ain Borderland, Oh, weel do I like My ain Borderland’[JCG], ‘Borderland, with pride I pledge thee, in thy matchless beauty dressed, When I cross that other border – this will be my last request, Lay me where the song of Teviot croons of joy and peace and rest’[GHB], ‘This haugh, this dale, yea all this glorious land, Is home to me, God’s given, guarded home, My Borderland’[WL], ‘... The Queen o’ a’ the Borderland, Auld Hawick, ma Border hame’[IW], ‘... And we ride over our Borderland and we ride, and we ride and we ride’[IW], ‘This is our Borderland These are the hills we call our own Here are the hearts that beat as one Where we are home Here in our Borderland’[AIB].

Border Laws (bör-dur-lawz) n., pl. a set of specific rules drawn up to try to keep peace on the Border, describing the jurisdiction of the Wardens of the Marches, etc. The earliest such laws date from 1248 and were called the ‘Leges Marchiarum’. The laws were re-drafted several times over the next 350 years.

the Border Line (thu-bör-dur-lin) n. imaginary line separating Scotland and England, about 60 miles (100 km) as the crow flies, but running to about 110 miles (180 km) long. It is roughly south-west to north-east in direction, from Solway to Berwick, but with many odd twists. The Border is mainly unmarked, but consists essentially of the Tweed, the Cheviot watershed and the Solway. It was only formally established in 1215 and has changed very little since – ‘Our men will ride, abin the moss The strong and ancient borderline to cross, Invading force our men will spurn As the moon is glintin’ off the burn’[AIB].

the Border Reivers (thu-bör-dur-ree-vurz) n. professional rugby union side, set up in 2002 and lasting until the end of the season in early 2007. The team had started as ‘Borders Rugby’ in 2001, amalgamated briefly with Edinburgh as the ‘Edinburgh Reivers’ in the 2001–02 season. They were folded by the Scottish Rugby Union due to lack of financial support, despite attracting much

The Border Magazine (thu-bör-dur-maw-gu-zeen) n. name of several former magazines. The first was published in Berwick in 1831 and 1832. The second illustrated magazine was published in Edinburgh in 1863 and 1864. Finally there was a more recent and longer running magazine published in Edinburgh and Glasgow from 1896 until 1939. It was ‘an illustrated monthly devoted to Border Biography, History, Literature, and Folklore’, covering both sides of the Border. Additionally the ‘Dumfries, Galloway, and Border Magazine’ was published in 1843.

Border Motor Transport Company (bör-dur-mo'-ur-trans-spör'-kum-pi-ne) n. local bus company, bought out by the S.M.T. about 1930.

Border pipes (bör-dur-pips) n. also called Lowland pipes, they were played over a wide area on both sides of the Border, with the peak in their popularity being the 17th and 18th centuries. Hawick’s former town piper probably played these. They differ from the more familiar Highland pipes by being bellows-driven, having 3 drones on a common stock, and being quieter.

The Border Queen (thu-bör-dur-kween) n. song written by James Thomson, with music by John Rutherford, published around 1880. The poem does not appear in the original 1870 version of Thomson’s ‘Doric Lays and Lyrics’, but is in the 1884 revised version. It was first sung at the 1887 Colour Bussing by Scott Irvine, and has been sung at every one since. The tune was published at least by 1892, and the suggestion is that Rutherford wrote it before he emigrated to Australia in 1884. The words, which had earlier been tried with different tunes, poke fun at other Border towns, particularly Galashiels. It has also been referred to as ‘Queen o’ a’ the Borders’. Adam Ingles made a minor alteration to the tune in the 1957. It is also a mainstay of the Saxhorn Band, using the 1935 arrangement by George Guy, which is closer to Rutherford’s authentic version.

the Border Reivers (thu-bör-dur-ree-vurz) n. professional rugby union side, set up in 2002 and lasting until the end of the season in early 2007. The team had started as ‘Borders Rugby’ in 2001, amalgamated briefly with Edinburgh as the ‘Edinburgh Reivers’ in the 2001–02 season. They were folded by the Scottish Rugby Union due to lack of financial support, despite attracting much larger crowds than the Glasgow side. They played their home matches at Netherdale in Galashiels, and their strips were white with red and black trim and black shorts and stockings. The strip was reminiscent of that of the ‘South’ side that last played in the 1990s. Scocha recorded a theme song for the team in 2002.

the Border Rifles (ˈbɔːr-dər-rɪ-fəlz) n. the Borders Rifle Association, former volunteer unit, forerunner of the Territorial Army. They were founded in 1861 as the 1st Administrative Battalion, Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers, becoming the Border Rifles in 1868. In 1881 they were linked with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, but transferred to the King’s Own Scottish Borderers in 1887, becoming the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. in 1908. The local companies were ‘D’ and ‘E’ and had their headquarters at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent. The ‘Borders Rifle Association’ also refers to a separate body, existing to support the volunteer corps and rifle shooting generally, and that administered an annual competition at Melrose.

the Borders (ˈbɔːr-dərz) n. area of southern Scotland, below the central lowlands, and stretching across the country from coast to coast. It is also sometimes meant to include the neighbouring counties of England. After the Union of the Crowns, during the time of James VI (I of England), the use of the name was prohibited, with the term ‘Middle Shires’ to be preferred. However, despite the official ban the name has continued to be used – ‘Oor hearts sigh for hame, and nae music’s sae sweet As the soft lowland tongue o’ the Borders’ [WS], ‘When I die, bury me low Where I can hear the bonnie Tweed flow A fairer place I never did know Than the rolling hills o’ the Borders’ [MM].

The Borders (ˈbɔːr-bər-dərz) n. CD single released by the band Scocha in 2002 as a theme for the (short-lived) Borders rugby team. The chorus is particularly good. The CD features 3 versions of the song, including the dance re-mix by Kirk Turnbull.

Borders College (ˈbɔːr-dərz-kə-lɛʃ) n. local further education institution. In 1984 several further education centres in the Borders Region were amalgamated into the Borders Colleges of Further Education, which became the Borders College. Headquarters are in Galashiels with other locations in Hawick, Newtown St. Boswells, Duns and Peebles. The Hawick branch at the Henderson Building on Commercial Road was closed in and a new smaller building constructed below the old Cottage Hospital in 2009.

Borders Exploration Group (ˈbɔːr-dərz-eks-plə-rə-shən-group) n. non-profit organisation founded in 1981. It is run by adult volunteers and arranges expeditions for young people, the trips often involving environmental or local community-based projects. Expeditions have been organised every 2 years to: Lesotho 1993; Ecuador 1995; Kenya 1997; Mongolia 1999; India 2001; Peru 2003; and Vietnam 2005. They built the ‘Nan Lyle Academy’ in a small village in Kenya. There have also been shorter European and U.K.-based trips, as well as local training and fund-raising events. It was set up by Roger Heming, Allan McGee and others.

Borders Family History Society (ˈbɔːr-dərz-fə-mu-lee-his-tə-rə-sə) n. organisation with the aim of encouraging the study of genealogy in the Scottish Borders. Founded in 1985, it publishes a magazine for members, provides records through its web-site, and has collated local monumental inscriptions, poor law records and other information.

Borders Forest Trust (ˈbɔːr-dərz-fər-stə-trəst) n. charitable organisation set up in 1996 to manage some of the Borders woodland areas.

Borders General Hospital (ˈbɔːr-dərz-je-nur-əl-həs-pəl) n. built in 1988 on the Huntlyburn estate just outside Melrose to replace Peel Hospital as the region’s main hospital. It is also the biggest building in the Scottish Borders (usually referred to as ‘the B.G.H.’).

Borders Health Board (ˈbɔːr-dərz-helθbərd) n. formed in 1975 as part of a new system of local government health boards, responsible for all medical and nursing services in the region. Their offices were in the Prudential Building until 1984, then at Springbank Clinic, before moving to the Health Centre in 1989.

the Borderside (ˈbɔːr-bər-dərs-dəid) n. general term applied to the lands around the Border – ‘There is no men of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviothead to Tyne’ [WHO], ‘Far away from forge and mill, Arm in arm with wood and hill, Lie the clachans of the Borderside’ [WL].

Borders Music Festival (ˈbɔːr-dərz-mjuːzɪk-ˈfɛst-ər-vəl) n. music festival involving school children in the latter part of the 20th century.

Borders Region (ˈbɔːr-dərz-ri-ˈdʒiŋ) n. former local government administrative area in southeastern Scotland, east of Dumfries & Galloway, south of Lothian Region, and with an administrative centre in Newton St. Boswells.
the Border Standard (thu-bőr-dur-standard) n. newspaper launched by W. Morrison & Co. of Hawick in the early 1880s for circulation in the Langholm area. It was transferred to that area, but lasted only a few years, although there was a Gala newspaper of the same name later.

Border Television (bőr-dur-te-lee-vi-shin) n. local television station, which opened on 1st September 1961, being part of the Independent (i.e. commercial) TV network, interestingly serving both Cumbria and the south of Scotland (and later the Isle of Man). It provides local news and other programming, with headquarters in Carlisle, and Hawick’s transmitter being near Selkirk.

The Border Tour (thu-bőr-dur-toor) n. travel book published in 1826 ‘By A Tourist’, later identified as Kelso man John Mason. It was one of the earliest guide books to the Border country, and included a description of Hawick and district in this period.

the Border Union Railway (thu-bőr-dur-yoon-yin-räl-wi) n. line from Hawick to Carlisle, owned by the North British Railway, opened in 1862, and together with the Edinburgh and Hawick Railway, becoming known as the Waverley Route. Debate over whether to go via Langholm or Newcastleton was heated and protracted, and although there were many advantages in the Dumfriesshire option, the Liddesdale plan eventually succeeded. The sod-turning ceremony in 1859 was a great cause for celebration in Hawick, with banners around the Town and a procession out to Lynnwood, including the Cornet in full uniform. The first sod was turned by Mrs. Hodgson, wife of the North British Railway Chairman. This was followed by a banquet of about 1,000 people in a marquee on the Under Haugh.

Borland (bőr-lINF) n. Rev. James (1644/5–1713) graduating from Glasgow University in 1670, he became Schoolmaster and Session Clerk at Mauchline in 1673, quitting about 1680. He then officiated at Galashields for a while. He became minister of Bedrule in 1690 and remained until his death. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1692. It appears that he preached in Hassendean Kirk in 1693. He married Marianne (or Mary Ann) Stevenson, who died in 1713 aged 66. Their daughter Margaret married Benjamin Haistie. He and his wife left £100 to the poor of Bedrule Parish. He is associated with a tale told of how a child at Minto Cragfoot was switched with a changeling by the fairy folk (recounted in the 1820 Edinburgh Magazine and later in the 1914 ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’), administering boiled fox-glove to the infant to reverse the spell!; however, he was not the first post-Reformation minister, as claimed in the story. The story is said to have been told to the author by a friend, whose great-grandmother was niece of the minister. His tombstone in Bedrule kirkyard has a long Latin inscription, describing him as ‘a man of straight mind, open and generous by nature; distinguished in scholarly learning, as a young man he sought the way of truth through varied fortune; he continued steadfast amid the hostility of those pursuing him’. This suggests that he had been opposed by Episcopalians in the Parish (also written ‘Bourland’).

Born in the Borders (bør-in thu-bőr-durz) n. visitor centre adjacent to the Scottish Borders Brewery at Lanton Mill, off the A698. The brewery started in 2011, with the visitor centre opening in 2014.

borrel (bo-rul) n., arch. a hand tool for boring holes – ‘Borrel, a borer, or wimble; in common use; hence borrel-brace, a species of carpenter’s wimble-shaft’ [JL] (also written ‘boral’ and ‘borel’).

borrel-trei (bo-rul-tri) n., arch. the handle of a wimble (noted by J. Jamieson).

borrowed days (boröd-düz) n., pl., arch. the 3 last days of March – ‘But when the borrowed days were gane, The three silly hogs came hirplin hame’ [JL].

Borrowman (bo-rö-mun) n. George (c.1815–45) draper on the Tower Knowe according to the 1841 census. He married Grace (1815–97), daughter of manufacturer William Laidlaw. Their youngest daughter Jessie Laidlaw married James Black. Their other children included James and William.

Bortha (bor-thu) n. poetic name for the Borthwick Witter – ‘Where Bortha hoarse, that loads the meads with sand, Rolls her red tide to Teviot’s western strand, Through slaty hills whose sides are shag’d with thorn, Where springs, in scattered tufts, the dark-green corn’ [JL].

Borthaugh (bor-tuf) n. farm and house just over Martin’s Bridge on the Roberton road, about 2 miles outside Hawick. The area was also once a small thriving hamlet, including a mill, smithy, joiner’s shop and several houses, located on the haugh a little above the present cottages. It may also be the place referred to as ‘Branxholmie Woodfoot’. It is recorded as a home of Scotts in the early 16th century. There was a dispute in 1528 after George Scott died, since he confessed that he had not had dispensation to marry his cousin, and so inheritance should go to Walter, eldest son by his second wife. A panel of other local Scotts decided in favour of John, the eldest son of his first wife, since he had never been declared to be illegitimate. The lands then passed from John Scott of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk. In a charter of 1531/2 Roger Langlands gives the lands to Alan Mossman, Burgess of Edinburgh, along with the attached mill, but within a few months it was sold on to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In late 1548 it was among the farms of Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers. The tenant in 1549 was Robert Scott, when it was among lands that were raided and burned by a group of Kers and Englishmen under Patrick, Lord Grey. In 1574 the farm ‘and mills thereof’ were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, valued at £10 ‘in time of peace’ and ‘held in chief’ of James Langlands of Wilton in blanch, for payment of a penny Scots, if asked. Scott of Satchells writes it as ‘Bortoheugh’ and says that Scott of Todshawhaugh derived from this family. There were 28 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. In 1690 the farm was rented to Robert and Patrick Hume, James Scott and James Ogilvie, and these men plus Robert Scott in 1691 and 1692. Robert Scott ‘Scrivener’ (presumably a lawyer), James Ogilvie, Robert Hume and James Scott were renting the farm in 1694, and also in 1696 and 1698, with widow Margaret Scott replacing her husband James. The Hearth Tax rolls list 12 separate households there in 1694. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 409 acres, bounded by Wiltonburn, Brieryhill, Overhall, the River Teviot, Todshawhaugh and Easter Highchesters. The small piece of land in the fork between the Teviot and Borthwick was also part of the farm at this time and it was also stated that ‘there is very little meadow in this farm and the water hath done some damage by altering its cours’. William Riddell was there in 1707. In 1718 the main farmhouse was next to the mill, with the modern farmhouse being built further to the east at a later date. John Sibbald was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Dr. Walter Graham lived there in the 1850s and George Oliver was farmer in the 1860s. It is run as a Christian retreat and also a guest house, called (confusingly) Whitchester Christian Guest House and Retreat. The road to the Borthwick via Borthaugh was built in 1826, at the same time as Martin’s Bridge. The slopes immediately north of the farmhouse are the possible site of a fort or other earthwork. A stone axe found here and reported in 1888 is in the Museum – ‘The mistress of Borthugh cam’ ben, Aye blinking sae couthy and canny; But some said she had in her han’ A kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’[ES] (many older spelling variants exits, e.g. ‘Borthauche’, with the first perhaps being ‘Borthauch’ in 1526 and 1527, it is then ‘Bourthagh’ in 1526/7, ‘Borthauch’ in 1527, ‘Borthaucht’ in 1528, ‘Burthauch’ in 1530, ‘Borthauch’ in 1531/2, ‘Borthauch’ in 1549 and 1574 and ‘Borthwach’ in 1690; it appears on 1650 parish maps as ‘Borthauch’ and ‘borthawche’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Borthauhch’ and is ‘Burthagh’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin has been suggested as Old English ‘fort meadow’, but seems likely to simply be ‘the flat land by the Borthwick’).
Borthaugh Cottages

Borthaugh Cottages (bor-tuf-ko’-ee-jeex) n. cottages near Borthaugh farm. There were 9 separate households living there in 1841. They were listed as ‘Borthaugh Hind’s Cottages’ in 1861.

Borthaugh Fitbrig (bor-tuf-fi’-brig) n. proper name for what was popularly known as the Joogly Brig and its modern replacement.

Borthaugh Hill (bor-tuf-hill) n. hill about 2 miles from Hawick, just north of the Roberton road, height 270m. It marked the boundary between Wilton and Roberton Parishes. At the top is a hill-fort, about 120m by 60m in size, and formed of 3 stony ramparts, much mutilated by ploughing. A polished stone axe was found near here (reported by J. Hardy in 1886), and is still in the Museum.

Borthaugh Hoose see Borthaugh

Borthaugh Mill (bor-tuf-mill) n. corn mill attached to Borthaugh, mentioned in a charter of 1531/2. The mill lade is clearly marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The mill was situated quite far to the west of the modern farmhouse. The tenant there in the late 18th century was George Tait.

Borthaugh Road (bor-tuf-ro’d) n. private housing development built in 1970 and named after Borthaugh Hill and Borthaugh House.

Borthaugh Wudfit (bor-tuf-wud-fi’) n. Borthaugh Woodfoot, house beyond Borthaugh, also referred to as Branxholme Woodfoot. There was once a blacksmith’s here, run by 3 generations of the Pow family (perhaps taking over from the Humes, who were blacksmiths at Borthaugh at the end of the 17th century). The tenant recorded there in 1797 was Richard Thomson. On the spur of land near there between the Teviot and Borthwick there is an ancient circular earthwork, about 60 m in diameter, but almost obliterated by ploughing (it may be the place marked ‘Woodhed’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Borthwick (thu-bor-theek) n. usual name for the Borthwick Water and its valley. The area used to be more heavily populated than it is today, with many more small farms. The name is first recorded in the reign of William I, mentioned as one of the boundaries of the lands of Melrose Abbey. Lands there were later granted to the Barbour family, the Scotts and then the Borthwicks (who took their name from the area) by the early 15th century. In 1410 the lands of ‘Borthwick and Thoft Cotys’ were assigned by Robert Scott into the hands of the Duke of Albany and granted to Sir William of Borthwick (although whether the Borthwicks held these lands earlier is unclear). The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as ‘the watter of Borthuik inside the same Marche, beyng in lienth 8 myles, that is to say from Borthwyke mouthe to Craikcrosse, wherupon was 200 pleughes’. It also appears from records that it was still fairly forested up until the early 16th century, being essentially an offshoot of Ettrick Forest; there were several cases of proprietors being fined for cutting down trees there. Craik, Howpasley and the rest of the upper Borthwick have always been remote, and are now at the entrance to Craik Forest. The lands were once a separate barony, still referred to as such as late as 1555/6. It gave its name to the family that held the barony in the 15th and early 16th centuries. Much of the valley was populated by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century. The Chisholmes of Chisholme were also once a prominent family there. A list of ‘communicants’ in the valley in 1650 exists, essentially forming a census of the adults of the area at that time. Until the mid-18th century there was a route from Langholm to Selkirk that crossed from Teviotdale via Falnash to Howpasley, and then via Deanburnhaugh, Milsington, Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, Howcleuch and Harden, then behind Drinkstone Hill to Groundistone Height. However, the road along the valley was not properly developed until the early 19th century, and not until Martin’s Brig was built (1826) did the main route to the valley go round the south of Borthaugh Hill. The area had two small ancient chapels, one at Kirk-Borthwick (near Borthwickbrae), with its churchyard at Borthwick. There was probably an early connection with the lands in the Borthwick valley, possibly through the Borthwick family. The name first appears in 1502/3 and it was split into Easter and Wester portions soon after. The Cockburn family owned the lands for a couple of centuries. The castle remains were demolished by quarrying in about 1779, following emergency archaeological excavations. A cairn now marks the spot, and plays a role in the Duns Riding of the Marches ceremony.

Borthwick (bor-theek) n. Alan (14th C.) recorded along with Robert in 1362 as ‘dominus Roberto et Alani de Borthwyk’, when they acted as security for a loan to the Bishop of St.
Borthwick Borthwick

Andrews. He was thus a cleric of St. Andrews. His relationship to other Borthwicks is unknown. Alexander Hay (1775/6–1837) son of William. He succeeded his grandfather as farmer at Sorbie, when only 16. He was farmer at Sorbie in 1797 according to the Horse Tax, Dog Tax and Clock Tax Rolls. He later moved to Hopsrig, but also held the tenancy of the farms of Langshawburn, Mosspeeble and Lodgell. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Thomas Chalmers. Their children included: Isabella, eldest daughter (1808–1827); Elizabeth (b.1809); William (b.1811); Thomas Chalmers (b.1813), who continued to farm at Hopsrig and Langshawburn; Walter (1815–25), 3rd son; Alexander Hay (b.1817), who farmed at Mosspeeble; Agnes Jane Helen (b.1820); and John James Malcolm (b.1822), who farmed at Tarong in Queensland, but returned to Scotland. Alexander (1798/9–1877) miller of Newmill on Teviot, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1836 he was listed as joint proprietor with Robert Hardie, farmer at Sorbie. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Newmill, living with his mother Jane, brother Thomas and younger family members Jessie and James. In 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 60 acres there, with his brother as miller and sister Helen as housekeeper. In 1861 he was farmer of 50 acres, employing 1 man, and was unmarried, living with his sister Helen and brother Thomas. It seems likely he was son of Thomas and Jane Little. Alexander Hay (b.1817) son of Alexander Hay; he was farmer at Mosspeeble. He was recorded there in 1841, 1851 (when he was a ‘Pastoral Farmer’ with 4 labourers) and 1861 (when he was farmer of 4000 acres, employing 3 shepherds and with 5 farm servants). He married Jane Murray in Westerkirk in 1856 (although this date is confusing). Their children included: William (b.1849), who emigrated to Australia; Alexander Hay (b.1857); and Janet (b.1859). Alexander (b.1836) son of Andrew, he was a tweed manufacturer in the partnership Borthwick & Blenkhorn from the mid-1870s until about 1880, and in Borthwick & Ingram in the 1880s. He was Treasurer for St. George’s Kirk 1895–1914. Alexander Hay (b.1857) son of Alexander Hay and Jane Murray. He emigrated to Victoria, Australia along with his brother William. Their uncle Jojn James Malcolm had gone to Australia earlier. He married, but had only 1 child, a daughter, Agnes (who died young). Andrew (1802/3–86) grocer and spirit dealer who lived on the High Street (No. 4, near the Tower Hotel) and later at 6 Allars Crescent. He is listed as a ‘victual dealer’ on the High Street in 1837 and as a corn dealer on Backdamgate in 1852. In 1851 he was living on Backdamgate. He married Agnes Oliver, who died in 1884, aged 77. Their children included Andrew Thomas (who died young), Andrew, Thomas (tweed merchant), Elizabeth Purdom (who married architect John Guthrie), Thomas and Alexander. They are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Probably the same Andrew was one of the first deacons of St. George’s Kirk, from 1844, also being Treasurer for the church for about 30 years. Christopher (b.1808/9) born in Hawick, he was recorded as teacher of mathematics at the Hawick Grammar School in 1837. In 1851 he was schoolmaster in Middlebie, Dumfriesshire. His wife was Bella and their children included Jessie, Alexander John and Thomas William. David (16th C.) Procurator (i.e. lawyer) acting for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in several cases in the 1540s, especially against the Kers. He is recorded as ‘Maister Dauid Borthuik’ as a procurator in the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. He is probably David of Locchill, who became Lord Advocate of Scotland in 1573. George (d.c.1446) Archdeacon of Glasgow from 1414 until about 1446. His precise relationship to the Lairds of Borthwick is unclear. Grizel née Scott (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter ‘Wicked Wat’ Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. Her mother was Janet Beaton. She married William, 7th Lord Borthwick, and is said to have had an unhappy marriage. In 1569 she was served heir to the superiority of her father’s lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall, as well as the alternate patronage of the Church of Wilton. She accused her husband of associating with Elspeth Preston. In 1579/80 she brought an action against her sister Margaret for the crimes of ‘Incest and Adulterie’ with her husband. She in turn was accused of the same crimes with Walter Scott of Tushielaw (possibly husband of another sister, or other close relative); however, ‘the assyse was desert’ (i.e. the trial was abandoned). She brought an action against her husband Lord Borthwick in 1582/3 for desertion and cruelty. These events point to some sisterly rivalry perhaps, but also foreshadow a later feud when Grizel of Thirlestane eloped with a later Walter of Tushielaw in 1616, with that Walter being killed by a group of Scotts (perhaps the inspiration for the Braes of Yarrow). She secondly (before 1593) married Walter, son of John...
Borthwick

Cairncross of Colmslie. Her son Walter Cairncross was declared a rebel in about 1610. Her seal of 1576 bears the inscription ‘GRISSILIDIS SCOT’ and has 2 stars and a crescent on a ‘bend’. She was said to have been an early practitioner of the italic form of handwriting. James (1570–99) 7th Lord Borthwick. In 1573 he was served heir to his brother William, Master of Borthwick, in the Baronry of Borthwick, including lands in the counties of Selkirk, Edinburgh, Peebles, Lanark, Aberdeen and Berwick. He was probably a minor at this time, and it may be that he did not succeed until his father died in 1582. He married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, Lord Yester and was succeeded by his oldest surviving son, John. James (18th C.) listed as ‘Johann de Borthwic’ in 1497 when he had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Crookston. Sir John of Cineray (d. bef. 1570) known as an evangelical Protestant reformer, he was tried after he had already fled to England in 1540. He is likely to have been a descendant of the Lords of Borthwick, but the exact relationship is unclear. He married Margaret, daughter of the 4th (or 5th) William, Lord Borthwick. In 1538 he and his wife Margaret had a charter of the lands of Borthwicbrae, granted by his father-in-law. His children with Margaret included William, who was called to the succession of the Borthwick estates in 1570. In Geneva in 1556 he secondly married Jane Bonespoir and had at least one more child, Jane. John 5th Lord (1520–66) son of William, the 4th Lord. He was probably the last head of his family to own lands in the Borthwick valley. In 1551 he was recorded as superior of the lands of Hoscote when they were inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, and in the ‘precept of sains’ for these lands in 1555/6. He was a Privy Counsellor and is recorded many times in association with council business in the 1540s to 60s. He also fought at Ancrum Moor. He was involved in the struggle for the Regency, being a supporter of James, Earl of Arran, and was for a while imprisoned in Dalkeith Castle, his wife luring Patrick, Earl of Bothwell as a prisoner at Borthwick Castle in retaliation. In 1547 he was to be excommunicated by William Langlands, a clerk from St. Andrews Diocese, but the priest was given rough treatment by the mob, urged on by the ‘Abbot of Unreason’; he was thrown in the mill dam and made to eat the letters of excommunication, after they had been soaked in wine! He was Keeper of Liddesdale in 1560. He was one of the few Lords who dissented when the Confessions of Faith were read before Parliament in 1560. He married Isobel, daughter of David Lindsay, Earl of Crawford. His children included: William, who became the 6th Lord; Mariotta, who married Andrew Hoppringle of Galashiels; Isobel, who married Thomas Davidson and secondly William Hart; and Margaret, who married Patrick Hepburn, Parson of Kinoir. John 8th Lord (d.1623) son of James, he succeeded his father in about 1602 and had a charter for the main family lands in Midlothian in 1610. However, it was not until 1621 that he was served heir to his father’s lands in Selkirkshire, namely ‘the lands of Borthuik, alias Borthwickbre’ with pertinents commonly called Slack and Westside of Howcleuch, united within the Barony of Borthwick. He married Lilias, daughter of Mark Ker, Earl of Lothian and was succeeded by his son John. John (d.1698) tenant in ‘Newtoun upon Teviot water’. His will is recorded in 1698. He is probably related to Thomas who was in Newton a little earlier. John James Malcolm (b.1822) born at Hopsprig near Eskdalemuir, son of Alexander Hay. He was descended from farmers at Howpasley. He emigrated to Australia in about 1845. In about 1850 he created the Tarong Station (covering 260 square miles), which was near Nanango, which had been farmed by fellow Borderer William Elliot Oliver. Together the two areas formed the region known as South Burnett in southern Queensland. He spent 12 years in Australia, but then returned to Scotland. He farmed at Billholm and probably elsewhere. In 1859 he married Isabella Bell. His eldest daughter Janet married William Johnstone, W.S. His nephews Alexander Hay and William settled in Victoria. Nicholas (d.bef. 1491) witnessed a ‘letter of assignation’ for Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd in Edinburgh in 1451, where he is designated ‘Nicholas of Borthwik’. In 1466 he had a Crown Charter of the lands of ‘Balsalps and Gordounehal’ in Fife, along with his wife Ellen of Crichton. He was succeeded by his son John. Robert (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1361. He is also recorded along with Alan in 1362 as ‘dominus Roberto et Alani de Borthwyk’, when they acted as security for a loan to the Bishop of St. Andrews; he was probably a cleric of that diocese. Also in the Exchequer Rolls for 1362 he collected the contribution from the Deanery of Haddington. His relationship to the contemporary Thomas is unknown. Thomas (d.bef. 1368) father of William ‘de Borthwic’, who appeared in court regarding the lands of Middle- ton. Sometime in the period 1357–67 he obtained a charter of the lands of Ligertwood (near Lauder) from John of Gordon, Lord of that Ilk. He was probably also associated with lands in Borthwick Water, which were certainly associated with his son. Thomas (15th C.) Prior of Luffness. In 1464 he wrote a letter of confraternal for George Rutherford and his wife Ellen. He was witness to a sasine of 1473 where he is recorded as ‘Friar Thomas Borthwik, prior of Luffnokis’. It seems likely that he was a younger son of the Borthwicks, possibly of William, the 1st Lord. Thomas (d.c.1686) tenant in Newton (probably the one on Teviot). His will was recorded in 1686. He is probably related to John, who was at Newton a little later. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Haw- wick Parish in 1676. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of William, who farmed at Raeshaw (near Heriot) and later Howpasley. He farmed at Howpasley with his brother William. It was said that the Covenanting martyr Andrew Hislop spent the night in their house in 1685 before being hunted down and shot by Claverhouse’s men. His name was among those local men accused of being a Covenanter. Thomas (1707/8–93) younger son of William and Janet Scott. He farmed at Shaws in Ettrick Parish from 1732, and remained there until 1783. In 1760 he also started farming Langshawburn. He moved to Sorbie in Ewesdale, where he died. He married Jean Elliot, from Borthwickbrae; she was daughter of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and she was also the niece of his brother William, who had also married an Elliot of Borthwickbrae. Their eldest son was William (1749/50–92), who pre-deceased him. He was succeeded as farmer at Sorbie by his grand- son Alexander Hay. Thomas (1759–1816) son of Alexander, miller at Milntown, Langholm, and Margaret Anderson. He was farmer and miller at Newmill. He was recorded there in both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls. He married Jean Little (1772–1849). Their children were probably: Alexander(c.1799–1877), farmer at Newmill; Helen (b.c.1801), housekeeper for her brothers at Newmill; Margaret (c.1802–77), who married Dickson Scott; Christopher: Jane (b.c.1810); Is- abella (b.1811); and Thomas (b.c.1814), miller at Newmill. Thomas (b.1813/4) corn miller at Newmill. He was younger brother of Alexander, who was the main farmer there. He was still unmarried in 1861. Thomas (1843/4–77) son of Andrew, he was a tweed merchant. Walter (18th/19th C.) postmaster in Newcastleton. In 1841 his wife Janet Elliot was listed as ‘Wife of Walter Borthwick Post to Langholm’, living around 29 Montagu Street. His children included Helen, Thomas, Jesse and Walter. Sir William of Borthwick (bef. 1368–c.1417) son of Thomas, first of his family to be styled ‘of Borthwick’. In 1368, while still a minor, he appeared in court in a dispute with Thomas of Hay over lands at Mid- dleton. In 1378 he was in possession of the lands of ‘Catkune’ near Edinburgh. He witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. He was Scottish Ambassador to England 1398–1413. In 1401 he witnessed a charter at Dunbar for John ‘de Suynoun’. In 1410 he was already ‘of Borthwick’ when he was granted the lands of ‘Borthwic’ and ‘Thoftcotys’ (possibly Hoscote) in Selkirkshire by the Regent Albany on the resignation of these lands by Robert Scott. He was thus one of the first of his family to have an association with any place called ‘Borthwick’, the name that they subsequently transferred to Midlothian. It is possible that the family was previously called either Scott or Barbour, given that these were the former owners of the lands in the Borthwick valley. However, probably the same Sir William was witness to a charter of the Countess of Mar in 1389 when he was already ‘of Borthwick’, so the charter of 1410 may have been a confirmation. In 1405 he was one of the hostages for Archibald, Earl of Douglas, who was captured at the Battle of Shrewsbury. He also witnessed the charter of the lands and Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Hawick in about 1406. And he witnessed other charters and notorial instruments in 1410 and 1411. In 1410 and 1415 he received expenses at the Days of March. He was ‘of Katkone’ when witnessing charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. Around 1413 he witnessed a document for David Home of Wedderburn. In 1415 he was among a group of supporters of the Earl of Douglas who refused to pay customs to the King. He witnessed a charter for James Dundas in 1416, along with his son William. In 1417 he (along with his son and heir William) witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. His children included: Janet, who married Adam Hepburn of Hailes, and was thus the ancestor of the Earls of Bothwell; Sir William, who succeeded; George, who became Archdeacon of Glasgow; and John, also a priest. Note that there may be 2 generations mixed together here. Another daughter of his (or perhaps of his son William) married Sir John Oliphant of Aberdalgy. Sir William of Borthwick (c.1384–bef. 1439) son of Sir William. He was probably the second of his family to be ‘of Borthwick’, although it is possible there is one extra William in there. In 1412 he broke arrest and shipped his goods without paying customs. He is probably the William, son and heir of Sir William, who witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1417, other witnesses being his father and Robert ‘of Borthwike’. He was Captain of Edinburgh Castle in 1420. He was a hostage for James I in 1421, was a Commissioner to negotiate for the King’s release in 1423 and was again a substitute hostage for James I in the period 1424–27. He witnessed several charters granted by James I around the 1420s. He was Knighted in 1424/5. In 1411 he married Beatrice, daughter of Henry Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, and may also later have married a daughter of Thomas Hay of Locherworth. His children included: Sir William, who became 1st Lord Borthwick; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas, 1st Lord of Dalkeith and later 1st Earl of Morton, and secondly married Sir George Crichton, Earl of Caithness; and probably Margaret, who married Sir William Abernethy of Saltoun, owner of Teindside and Harwood, and then William Douglas, younger of Dalkeith (who would have been her sister’s step-son, thus requiring papal dispensation). Sir William Hay (possibly his father-in-law or brother-in-law) sold him the estate of Locherworth when he moved to Yester, and in 1430 the King granted permission for a tower to be built there; this was the original Borthwick Castle, a version of which still stands there to this day. Thus the family moved their centre to Midlothian, although they would retain lands in the Borthwick valley for several generations. William 1st Lord Borthwick (c.1412–c.83) son of Sir William and Beatrice Sinclair. He was Knighted in 1430 and became Lord Borthwick in 1452. In 1450 he had a ‘composition of resignation’ in the Exchequer Rolls. He witnessed a charter for James II in 1450/1. In 1458/9 he gained the lands of Glenegelt in Berwickshire. He was Ambassador to England in 1459 and 1461. In 1463 he was among the witnesses in Edinburgh to the charter erecting Branxholme into a Barony. He served as a justiciar ‘on south half of Forth’ in 1463/5, and in that capacity was mentioned in the sasine of that year for William of Douglasses getting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. Also in 1463/5 he was on the ‘retour of service’ for Archibald Douglas to inherit his father’s Barony of Cavers and Sherifffship of Roxburgh. In 1473/4 he had remission for two of his sons, for unspecified crimes. He married an unknown woman in 1426/7 and secondly married Mariota Hoppringle about 1458. His children included: Sir William, who became 2nd Lord; James, who lived at Glengelt; Sir Thomas, who lived at Collilaw and married Helen Rutherford; Alexander, who lived at Adislaw; John, who was 1st of Crookston; Margaret, who married Sir John Maxwell of Calderwood; and Agnes, who married Sir Archibald Dundas of that Ilk. William 2nd Lord (d.c.1484) son of William the 1st Lord, he appears not to have lived long as Lord himself (although these generations are confused). He is recorded as son and heir apparent of the 1st Lord when they witnessed a charter in 1468. He served as Ambassador to England in the 1470s. He was probably the Lord Borthwick who was witness to the confirmation of the transfer of the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlestane in 1483. He may have been the Lord William who was an auditor in the Exchequer Rolls of 1483. He may have married a Hoppringle of that Ilk, but again, this could be confused with his father. His children included: Sir William, who became 3rd Lord; Catherine, who married William Cunningham, 4th Earl of Glencarn, and whose son Alexander held the Barony of Hassendeans; Mary, who married James Hoppringle of Galashiels, who must have been a cousin; Alexander, who married Margaret Lawson, lived at Neuthent, died in 1513 and was father of William, 1st Laird of Soltray (i.e. Soutra); Agnes, who married Sir David Kennedy, 1st Earl of Cessillis, who died at Flodden; Adam; and Margaret, who married Sir Oliver Sinclair of Roslin. Some of these children may have been in the next generation. William 3rd Lord (d.1503) son of the 2nd Lord, although these generations are very confused, and even the numbering of the Lords is uncertain. He is recorded in a charter of 1483/4 as son of the late William. He held the office of Lord Auditor, Master of the Household and Privy Councilor, as well as being Conservator for at least 2 treaties with England. In 1488 he was one of the witnesses to the charter whereby James III regranted the regality of Cavers to William Douglas of Cavers. As Clerk of Accounts of the Royal Household, his name appears several times in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1490s. He would have been the superior of the lands of Hosvoke when they were resigned to him in 1493/4 and then conferred on the Homes. He was probably owner of the lands later called Borthwickbrae. In 1494/5 it is recorded that sheep were stolen from his farm of Lugate (near Stow). His wife’s name is unknown. His children included William, who became 4th Lord; and Gavin of Fenton, who was illegitimate and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenton of that Ilk. However, it is hard to separate his own children from his father’s children. William (d.1513) said to have been 3rd Lord Borthwick. He is on a list of men who were slain at Flodden. He had a sasine in 1503 for his lands of Borthwick near Edinburgh (and Herrit, Middleton, etc.), as well as Borthwick in Teviotdale. He was ‘Willelmo domino Borthuik’ when he witnessed a document relating to the Scotts of Whames and Muirhouse in 1505/6 and the William, Lord ‘Borthuik’ who had remission for theft and mutilation in 1506. He is said to have married Maryota de Hope Pringle and been succeeded by his eldest son William. William 4th Lord (d.1543) son of the 3rd Lord. However, it is possible there was another Lord William who died at Flodden, so even the numbering of the Lords is uncertain; there were about 8 generations all called William! He was a guardian of the infant James V after Flodden and was involved with securing a treaty with England in 1517. He was superior of the lands of Hosvoke according to a charter of 1522. In 1535 the King revoked several earlier charters relating to the lands held by the Homes, and so Hosvoke (or perhaps its superiority) passed from him to George, Lord Home. Also in 1535 his servant, John Mark, had a horse violently taken from him, part of the rievings for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was found not guilty. In 1538 James V confirmed the lands of Locherworth (where Borthwick Castle was built) to him, as well as the lands of Borthwick in Selkirkshire. He was a great lover of falconry. He probably married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, Lord of Yester. His children included: Thomas (possibly also known as Arthur), who married Mariot (or Majory), daughter of George, Lord Seton, but who died before his father; John, who married Isobel Lindsay and became 5th Lord; Catherine, who married Sir James Crichton of Frendraught; Janet, who married Alexander Lauder of Hatton; and Margaret, who married Sir John Borthwick of Cineray. William 6th Lord (d.1582) son of John, the 5th Lord (also sometimes referred to as the 7th Lord). He may have been the first head of the family to have no direct connection with the area which was the origin of their name, the Borthwick valley. He was superior of lands in Peeblesshire and was a great supporter of Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 (along with Scott of Branxholme, Langlands of that Ilk and Scott of Thirlestane) he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. In 1573 he was surety for several Borderers and in signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, although he alleged that she was involved in an intrigue (with Walter Scott of Tushielaw) in 1579/80, while she brought a complaint of desertion and cruelty against him in 1581, including claims of ‘stryking and dinging of her to the effusion of her blude in greit quantitie . . . being than greit with chyld’. He was also accused of an intrigue with his wife’s sister Margaret as well as Elspeth Preston. His children included: William, who pre-deceased his father; James, who became 7th Lord and married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, Lord Yester; William; John; and Alexander. He died in Edinburgh from ‘the Borthwick Brae

French disease', i.e. syphilis. William (17th C.) said to have been a descendant of Lord Borthwick, he was tenant farmer at Raeshaw near Heriot. He fought a duel that resulted in the death of James Pringle, after which he hid out in Eskdale. After it seemed like he was safe from prosecution he became tenant at Howpasley. He died there, leaving sons William and Thomas, who continued on the farm. William (d.c.1684) tenant in Trow Mill. His will is recorded in 1684 William (17th C.) son of William. With his brother Thomas he farmed at Howpasley. It appears that the brothers were Covenanters supporters, and had their farm taken away in about 1685. They moved to Glendinning, where he became tenant. In 1701 he married Janet, sister of David Scott of Merryleaw. They had sons: William, who farmed at Glendinning; Thomas, who farmed at Shaws on Ettrick Water; and probably Walter, who lived at Enzieholm. William (18th C.) son of William and Janet Scott. He farmed at Glendinning until 1753, when he sold his stock of sheep by public auction. He then purchased the small farm of Cassock, where he retired a ruined man at the age of 60. He may have later moved to Irvine and worked as a customs inspector. He married Margaret Elliot, who was from Borthwickbrae. They had 3 daughters and 2 sons, including Lieut.-Col. William, who was at the Siege of Gibraltar. William (1749/50–92) eldest son of Thomas, who farmed at Shaws and Langshawburn, and Jean Elliot, from Borthwickbrae. He is probably the William recorded at Sorbie on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–90. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of Alexander Hay, portioner of Inveresk (her mother being Janet Smith). His eldest son Alexander Hay inherited the farms of Sorbie and Langshawburn. He died a year before his father Thomas (who is recorded at Sorbie in 1792). His widow is probably the Mrs. Borthwick, who was at Enzieholm.

Borthwick Brae see Borthwickbrae

Borthwickbrae (bor-theek-brä) n. mansion and estate just west of Roberton. This may have been essentially the site of the estate in the Borthwick valley that was mentioned in the early 13th century and later passed through the hands of Barbours, Scotts and Borthwicks into the 16th century. The ancient chapel of Kirkborthwick was located nearby. In 1538 it was granted to the protestant reformer Sir John Borthwick of Cineray and his wife Margaret, daughter of William, Lord Borthwick. It was still a property of Lord Borthwick when inherited by John (8th Lord), from his father James, and was still considered as part of the main family Barony of Borthwick in Midlothian, and had pertinents of ‘Slak et Westsye de Howcleuch’. It was later owned by the Scotts, with the deceased William Scott of Borthwickbrae being recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1678, when his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £960. It was the owned by the Elliots (or Eliotts), the first Laird being William from 1698. The 4th Laird became Eliott-Lockhart, and the family produced M.Ps. for Selkirkshire. The main house is Georgian, built mostly around 1800 on the site of an earlier building. It is 3 stories, harled, and with Palladian windows on the wings. In 1887 the estate passed to Scott-Noble of Glebe Mills, with a new extension on the south side (and a new lodge) erected soon afterwards, designed by J.P. Alison. The Lairdship was formerly very important in the area, commanding a ‘seating’ in Roberton Kirk of 10½ feet (2nd in size after Buccleuch) according to a list of 1701. This area was formerly called Kirk-Borthwick and was the site of the former parish church. There were 21 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was where Sir Arthur Forbes’ force stopped with their prisoner, Andrew Kerr of Chatto, before the pursuing English Commonwealth force caught up with them at Philip in 1653. Up until 1689/90, when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish. Thomas Common was living there in 1761 and 1763. John Clerk and John Henderson were listed there in the 1770s. In 1785 John Elliot paid the land tax on about £950 for the Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch, with Thomas Scott of Stonedge (Elliott’s father in law) holding about half of it in liferent. Also in 1785 Elliot paid the portion of ‘the feu duty formerly payable to Lord Borthwick’. John Scott was tenant there.
Borthwickbrae Burn

in the 1790s. The estate once extended to 4,345 acres, including Borthwickbrae, Greenbank, West Alemoor and Burnfoot, which were all in Selkirkshire. In 1802 William Elliot paid the Land Tax of £950 for Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch. There was a post office here in the early part of the 20th century. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (so-called presumably for the steepness of the ‘High Road’ which passes there; it is ‘Borthuikbrae’ in 1573 and 1589, ‘Borthwickebrae’ in 1621, ‘Borthwickebra’ in 1644 and ‘Borthickbrae’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Borthickbrae’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and has its modern form on Adair’s c. 1688 map).

Borthwickbrae Burn (bor-theek-brä-burn) n. stream that rises near Whaupshaw and runs to the east to join the north side of the Borthwick Water near Borthwickbrae. On its south side, fairly near Milsington, there is an area where rig and furrow cultivation can be seen in aerial photographs.

Borthwickbrae Burnfit (bor-theek-brä-burn-fit) n. farm, houses and former community where the Borthwickbrae Burn meets the Borthwick, and where ‘the High Road’ joins ‘the Low Road’. It has also been known as ‘Borthwickburnfit’ and is called simply ‘Burnfoot’ by residents of the Borthwick valley (but there are too many other places of the same name!). John Stoddart was there in 1764, John Stoddart, John Coltart and Alexander Heatlie in 1772 and John Coltart in 1775. James Murray and Walter Laidlaw were farmers there in 1797. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 18th to early 20th centuries, at the end of the row of cottages. William Cotherd (who lived to the age of 102) was smith there in the early 18th century and Thomas Anderson in 1841. It was run by the Pow family from the mid-1800s and was a popular meeting place for the local youth. The estate was farmed by the Scott-Nobles through much of the 20th century. A neolithic axe head was found there, donated by Frak Scott in 1966, and is now in the National Museum (it is ‘Borthwickburn Foot’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Borthwickbrae Cottages (bor-theek-brä-ko’-ee-jeez) n. row of cottages past Roberton, popularly known as the Cement Cottages.

Borthwickbrae Heights (bor-theek-brä-hiits) n. popular name for the high ground roughly between Greenbank and Alemoor.

Borthwickbrae Parkheid (bor-theek-brä-pawrk-heed) n. former name for a farmstead above Borthwickbrae. John Ballantine was there in 1764 and Gideon Scott in 1772. Gideon Scott and Thomas Rae were there in 1774, when it is ‘B. Brae parkhead’.

Borthwickburnfit (bor-theek-burn-fit) n. another name for Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

Borthwick Castle (borwik-kaw-sul) n. 15th century double tower near Gorebridge in Midlothian, known for its extremely thick walls. It was built by Sir William Borthwick in 1430, on the site of an earlier tower that had been owned by the Hays. The former name for the area was Locherworth, with the new name coming from the family, which in turn derives from the Borthwick Water area. Mary Queen of Scots and the Earl of Bothwell were besieged there in 1567, both managing to escape. Cromwell’s army attacked it with cannon in 1650 and it was soon after abandoned. Restored in the period 1890–1914, it was used during WWII to store national treasures and converted into a hotel in 1973.

Borthwick Chaipel (bor-theek-chî-pul) n. name used by locals into the early 20th century for Borthwick Waas Cemetery (presumably referring to the ancient church).

Borthwick Court (bor-theek-kör’) n. housing developed by Eildon Housing for elderly residents, built off Borthwick Road in the 1990s.

Borthwickhaugh (bor-theek-hawch) n. former name for an area in the Borthwick valley, whose precise location is unclear. In 1711 Wilton Parish appointed someone to act as teacher to the local children there.

Borthwick Hill (bor-theek-hil) n. former name for a hill between Branholme and Hawick, perhaps referring to Branholmepark Hill or Borthaugh Hill. It was stated in the time of James I that it was one of the places in Scotland where gold could be found, and Col. Borthwick (Director of Mines in the late 17th century) reported that copper was found on its northern side.

Borthwick Kirk (bor-theek-kirk) n. another name for Kirk Borthwick.

Borthwick Mains (bor-theek-mänz) n. farm 6.5 km west of Hawick, by the left-hand side of the road shortly before Roberton. It was also known as ‘Borthwickshiel Mains’ and was probably part of the desmesne lands of the Baron of Borthwick. It was a 5-pound land when inherited by Walter Ker of Littldean, from his father Andrew Ker of Hirsel in 1575; it was then described as desmesne lands of Borthwickshiel, called ‘Mains’, with another adjacent 5-pound land on the east side also inherited by Ker at the same time. There were
Borthwick Road

30 ‘communicants’ recorded at the farm in 1650. The farm was part of the Harden estate in the 17th century and was in Hassendean Parish before Roberton Parish was formed in the late 17th century. It also appears to have formally been part of the Barony of Maxton when that was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. James Laidlaw was there in 1743 and James Hume and Walter Turnbull in 1762. Thomas Elliot was farmer there in 1797. In the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was listed as ‘Mains of Borthwickshiels’, with Charles Scott of H owe-cleuch as owner and the valuation being £146 4s 9d (£168 in 1811, perhaps including the teinds). Another Thomas Elliot farmed there in the 1860s.

In the latter half of the 20th century it became the local post office. It was once the part of the demesne lands of the Barony of Borthwick. Here stands a mysterious stone, bearing a carving of a salmon-like fish, which was once in the Teviot at Commonside. It was believed once to be a Pictish salmon-like fish, which was once in the Teviot at Commonside. It was believed once to be a Pictish stone, but it may in fact have served to mark fishing rights in the 6th or 7th centuries; it is 1.5 m high and roughly square in section (often formerly called simply ‘the Mains’ or ‘Maines’ and sometimes ‘Borthwickshiels Mains’; it was ‘Borthulk-mains’ in 1586, ‘lie Maynes de Borthwicksheills’ in 1670 and ‘Mainse’ in 1762; it is ‘The Maines’ on a parish map of 1650 and is marked ‘Mains’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was presumably once the home farm for Borthwickshiels; there is another Borthwick Mains in Midlothian).

the Borthwicks (thu-bor-theeks, borth-wiks) n. family that possibly originally came from Hungary and were granted lands in the valley of the Borthwick Water in the late 11th century. In the 14th century they acquired more lucrative lands elsewhere, moving their seat to Catcune, and building Borthwick Castle near Gorebridge about 1430, when the first Lord Borthwick was created. By this time they had no local presence, but were of great influence in Midlothian and elsewhere.

Borthwickshiels (bor-theek-sheelz) n. farm estate and former hamlet just north of Roberton. Before Roberton Parish was created it was contained within Hassendean. The estate was once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, and as such was forfeited by Sir Laurence of Abernethy in the reign of Robert II (about 1375), passing to Sir William de Lindsay. In the reign of James IV it appears to have been connected with an official of the Court. In the early 15th century the northern part of the estate was possessed by Sir Laurence Abernethy, then passed (probably through marriage) to Sir William Douglas of Strathbrock. About 1425 Douglas granted the (half) lands to George Crichton of Cairns, who sold them to the Kers. In 1433/4 there are ‘letters of obligation’ by Stephen Crichton of the Cairns and James of Parkle of Linlithgow promising that they would compensate Andrew Ker of Altonburn if the heirs of Sir William Douglas of Hawthornenden tried to claim the lands. In 1444 all the lands were granted by George Crichton to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. However, the lands of ‘Hardenwod’, contained in the estate were still held in tenandry by Henry Wood, Chaplain (possibly of Kirk Borthwick or of Hassendean); in 1445 he leased his tenandry for 19 years to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. By 1502 they were owned by the Kers of Dophinston. In that year 3 brothers from Liddesdale called Armstrong were tried for burning it and stealing 300 sheep, 60 oxen and cows, 20 horses and other goods. In 1526 part of it was destroyed as part of the raids led by the Earl of Angus to weed out thieves on the Border. And in 1543 it was burned by the English during the ‘Rough Wooing’, with 6 prisoners, 60 cows, and 10 horses taken. In the 17th century it was owned by the Scotts of Harden. Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras paid the land tax for £600 there in 1678 (when it was listed under Hassendean Parish). It was later owned by a branch of the Elliots and then the Potts of Todrig. There were 22 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. Robert Elliot was tenant here, as well as in Bewlie. His son (later Laird of Borthwickbrae) was probably the William who paid tax on 4 hearths here in 1694, with other residents being John Reid and James Noble. There were lands there, formally in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, which were inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1694. Adam Scott paid tax for 16 windows there in 1748. Walter Scott was living there in 1762 and David Scott in 1763 and 1764. Alexander Pott was recorded as owner in 1789–97, with William Graham also a tenant there. Alexander and Robert ‘Potts, Esqrs’ were listed as owners in 1788, when it was valued at £600. Alexander Pott was still listed as owner in 1811. By about 1874 George Pott of Todrig was recorded as owner. The present main house probably dates from the 18th century,

Borthwick Water (bor-theek-waw-tur) n. poem by William Landles, set to music by Adie Ingles. The poem was first published in 1935 in the Edinburgh Evening News and then the Hawick Express, and appeared later in Landles collection ‘The Turn O’ The Year’. The precise date when the tune was written is unknown. It is recorded being sung in duet by Alison Seeley and Etta McKean at a 1514 concert in 1987. The tune was published in 2001, from Ingles’ manuscript, with a piano arrangement by Ian Seeley.

Borthwick Witter (bor-theek-wi'-ur) n. Borthwick Water, a tributary of the Teviot, which has its source near Craik and flows 16 miles (26 km) to near Martin’s Bridge. It is formed from the Craikhope, Howpasley and Aithouse Burns, which rise near the Roxburghshire/Dumfriesshire boundary – ‘Borthwick Water, fairest daughter Of the moorland dew’ [WL], ‘We view these hills with greatest pride, Which rise up from Borthwickside, Long may we gaze and peace abide, In Borthwick Water’[JRE], ‘Have you followed Borthwick Water, thro’ the heather to the glen . . .’ [GHB] (the origin of the name is probably ‘old farmstead’ in Old English; it is ‘aquam de Borythywyk’ in 1420; it is ‘Borthick sheals’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Borthikshou’, on Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘Borthicksheils’, and on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650 as ‘Borthick sheells’, although wrongly placed to the east of Hawick).

Borthwickshiels Loch (bor-theek-sheelz-loch) n. small body of water to the west of Borthwickshiels itself, hidden from the road by trees.

Borthwickshiels Mains see Borthwick Mains

Borthwickslack (bor-theek-slawk) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Borthickslaak’, between Borthwickbrae and Howcleuch, possibly where Greenbank is now. It is also marked ‘Slacke’ on a draft map of the neighbouring parishes.

Borthwick Waas (bor-theek-waz) n. Borthwick Walls, ancient cemetery on the left-hand side of the road in the Borthwick valley, a couple of miles beyond Roberton. Nothing now remains of the associated chapel of Kirk Borthwick, which was probably on the other side of the road. The area around there was referred to as ‘Borthwick Chaipel’ as recently as the early 20th century. The churchyard originally covered a larger area than what is currently enclosed. It was cleared up and shrubbery planted at the expense of Robert Noble and members of the Grieve family about 1895. A book ‘An historical record of Borthwick Wa’as burial ground’ was written in 1987 by Kathleen W. Stewart – ‘The Grieves, the Potts and the Craws a’ lie thegither in Borthwick Wa’s’[T], or alternative version ‘All the Potts and the Craws Lie within Borthwick Wa’s’[T], ‘By Borthwick Wa’s and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch . . .’[WHO].

Borthwick Witter (bor-theek-wi'-ur) n. Borthwick Water, a tributary of the Teviot, which has its source near Craik and flows 16 miles (26 km) to near Martin’s Bridge. It is formed from the Craikhope, Howpasley and Aithouse Burns, which rise near the Roxburghshire/Dumfriesshire boundary – ‘Borthwick Water, fairest daughter Of the moorland dew’ [WL], ‘We view these hills with greatest pride, Which rise up from Borthwickside, Long may we gaze and peace abide, In Borthwick Water’[JRE], ‘Have you followed Borthwick Water, thro’ the heather to the glen . . .’ [GHB] (the origin of the name is probably ‘old farmstead’ in Old English; it is ‘aquam de Borythywyk’ in 1420; it is ‘Borthick fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Bosells (boz-ulz) n. local name for St. Boswells. The original settlement, adjacent to Newton St. Boswells, is an old village with a tree-lined village green, probably Scotland’s largest at about 40 acres. It is also the name of the surrounding Parish and was formerly known as Lessuden. It was also a station on the Waverley Line. The village is known for its large livestock fair and for holding the Buccleuch Hunt. It contains Lessuden House (the family house of the Scots of Raeburn), the 1908 Scots baronial Braeheads House, and Dryburgh Abbey is nearby. It marks the beginning of Elliot Cowan Smith’s ‘Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’ – ‘As we gaed oot frae Bosells Tae climm the Bowden brae …’ [WL] (the name derives from a medieval chapel dedicated to St. Boisel, recorded at least as early as 1551).

Bosells Fair (boz-ulz-fair) n. St. Boswells Fair was an important gathering of the country’s gypsies on the village green on St. Boswells Day, July 18th, when they traded horses and other wares. It attracted people from all over the Borders and remains an important event for travelling people. It was the scene of the ‘Great Riot’ in 1849, when a young shepherd was killed by a railway navvy.

Boston (bo-stin) n. Hugh (16th/17th C.) notary public. He was responsible for the ‘bond of manrent’ signed in Hawick in 1595, between the Beatties and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name is given as ‘Hugo Bowstoun’. He was also a notary (along with Henry Blakie) for the bonds written at Branxholme between Sir Walter Scott and the Armstrongs and Elliots. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax on £78 for Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. His surname is given as ‘Boustonn’. ‘Boston’s half of Kirk-know’ is still recorded in the 1788 county valuation, with part owned by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and the rest by William Turnbull of Langraw. Rev. Thomas (1676–1732) preacher and theologian, born in Duns, he became minister at Ettrick. His writings, including ‘Human Nature in its Fourfold State’ (1721) were very influential in their day. He married Katherine Brown. Their youngest son Thomas went to Hawick Grammar School. His ‘View of the Covenant of Grace’ was printed in Hawick in 1788. Thomas (1713–67) son of the more famous preacher. He was born at Ettrick and sent to Hawick Grammar School for a while. He became minister at Oxnam, but left after disputes over whether he should be the next minister in Jedburgh. These arguments over patronage led to his involvement in establishing the Relief Kirk, with its first congregation in Jedburgh. In 1738 he married Elizabeth, son of Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. Their son Michael also became minister of a Relief congregation, and 3 of their 4 daughters married Relief ministers. He was buried at Jedburgh Abbey. A letter of his was donated to the Museum in 1863.

Boston (bos-tin) n. largest city in Massachusetts. Many locals emigrated to this area in the 19th century. Hawick exiles had their own Common Riding in the suburb of West Roxbury in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

the Boston Plate (thu-bos-tin-pla’) n. former race run at the Friday of the Common Riding from the late 19th century. It was one of the ‘Cornet’s Races’, restricted to horses and riders who had followed the Cornet.

Boswell (boz-wel) n. G. (18th/19th C.) artist in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Janet (b.c.1750) listed as a 90 year old pauper in Newcastleton in 1841, living at about 40 North Hermitage Street. ‘She could be the ‘J. Boswell, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. She was surely related to ‘Mr. G.’, who also subscribed. John (1720/1–75) recorded as ‘husband to Jean Kyle in Heughhead’ on his gravestone in Ettleton Cemetery. His daughter Isabel is also buried there.

Bothwell see Earl o Bothwell

Bothwell (both-, both-wel) n. Adam (c.1529–93) younger son of Sir Francis, who was Provost of Edinburgh. He was also uncle of the mathematician John Napier. He was educated at St. Andrews and in France. In 1552 he succeeded his brother William as Rector of Ashkirk, which was a valuable benefice at that time. He was appointed as Bishop of Orkney in 1559, but met with severe resistance from former Catholics there. He also suffered other set-backs, including capture by the English and a shipwreck (where he saved his life by leaping into the lifeboat in full armour). He became an extraordinary Lord of Session in 1564. He was the minister who married Mary, Queen of Scots, to the Earl of Bothwell and he was at the coronation of James VI. He was chastised for not attending to his diocese in Orkney. In Edinburgh he had 2 residences, the ‘commendator’s house’ by Holyrood Palaca and a house by Byres’ Close. He was also known to possess an impressive library. It is unclear how long he kept the benefice of the Rectory of Ashkirk. He married Margaret, daughter of John Murray of Touchadam and his children included: John, 1st Lord of Holyroodhouse; Francis of Over and Nether Stewarton; Jean; James; George; William; Adam; and Helenor. Richard (d.1548/9) 2nd son of Richard, Provost of Edinburgh and Elizabeth Somervile. His elder brother Francis was a Lord of Session and maternal grand-father to Napier of Merchiston. He is listed as studying in Paris in 1500 and became Prebendar of the Diocese of Glasgow. He is recorded as Rector of Ashkirk in records of the Diocese of Glasgow from 1505; however, it seems unlikely that he actually officiated in the Kirk at Ashkirk. He was Parson of Ashkirk in 1507 when witness to a document at Holyrood in 1507 and Prebend of Ashkirk in 1510 when he was witness to a Glasgow charter. He was also Vicar of Peebles and Prebendary of the College Church of Corstorphine at the same time. He gave administrative service during the reign of James IV. He also acted as Directory of Chancery for James V and was the first of the Ordinary Lords when the College of Justice was formed in 1532. He also held the degree of Doctor of Civil and Canon Laws and was Provost of ‘Kirk-o’-Field’ (i.e. St. Mary in the Fields) Collegiate Church. In 1534 and 1535 he was one of the commissioners for continuign the parliament, being chosen as one of the Lords of Articles in 1535. He was relieved of his duties because he was ‘gre-itle troubled be infirmate and seiknes’ in 1539. Also in 1539 he gave money (raised from the house of David Wilson in Glasgow) to establish an anniversary to be celebrated 3 days after the feast of All-Souls. His name occurs regularly as a witness in the period 1525–48. His death is recorded on the 1st of January 1448/9, but he appears still to be Rector of Ashkirk in a 1550 record. William (d.1552) son of Sir Francis and Janet Richardson. He appears to have succeeded his uncle Richard as Rector of Ashkirk. He is probably the ‘Rector de Askirk’ who was among clerics and noblemen who ruled on a case before the Privy Council in Edinburgh in 1550. His death is recorded in 1552, when he was ‘Mr. Will. Bothwell, rector’.

Bothwell College (both-wel-ko-leej) n. the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in North Lanarkshire, founded by Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1398. Like the other Collegiate Churches of Scotland it was founded by a wealthy landowner, partly for the salvation of their families. They operated almost like miniature cathedrals, run by a Provost and with a number of ‘prebendaries’, each having his own benefice, with their appointments often being in the hands of the founder’s family. Thus Hawick became a ‘prebend’ of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in 1447/8 (or perhaps 1443, confirmed in 1447/8), at the instigation of William Earl of Douglas (who was presumably the superior of the Hawick Baron of the day, Sir William Douglas, 2nd Baron of Drumlanrig). The Prebendaries of Hawick were to pay 6 merks of the ecclesiastical income to 2 ‘boy-clerks, to serve perpetually in the choir of the said church of Bothwele’. This connection lasted until the Reformation, although ‘the kirk of Hawick and prebendaries of the colleged kirk thairof’ are still mentioned among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. One of the early Provosts was Thomas Barry, who celebrated the Battle of Otterburn in Latin verse. Of the original building only the choir remains from pre-Reformation, and is now incorporated into Bothwell Parish Church.

Bothwell Court (both-wel-kör) n. part of Mayfield, built in 1971, and named after the Earl of Bothwell who Mary Queen of Scots visited in Hermitage Castle.

the Bothwells (thu-both-welz) n. the Hepburn family, as Earls of Bothwell were important locally, as well as throughout Scotland, particularly in the 16th century. They took their name from the barony of Bothwell (in Lanarkshire, south-east of Glasgow); Hawick Church was a canony and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell from 1447 until the Reformation. The Earls of Bothwell had the right of patronage at Hawick as recorded in charters of 1488, 1498, 1511, 1581 and 1585. They also had the alternate right of patronage of Wilton after they purchased part of that barony in 1494. They held lands in Liddesdale, including Hermitage Castle for 100 years from 1492. Mary Queen of Scots visited James, the 4th Earl in Hermitage in 1566 and married him in 1567. The 5th and last Earl of Bothwell was Francis Stewart.

bothy (bo-thee) n. a cabin, cottage, formerly applied to a building provided on a farm to house unmarried workers, now applied to a hut providing shelter for hill-walkers – ‘...In his bothy, Auld Time keeps open hoose, like a’ guid men’ [DH], ‘Thinks the haunfin up in the bothy ‘But it’s snug here!’’ [WL], ‘The Yowes seemed settled – naethin’ bleatin’’. the Bough-a-bale see the bow a bale

Bouglas (boog-lis) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) butcher of Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the Henry who married Isabel Purdie in Cavers Parish in 1825. William (b.c.1790) butcher in Denholm, recorded on the 1841 census and Pigot’s 1837 directory. He appears to have married Margaret Waddell in 1833 and their children included: Margaret (b.1834); Helen (‘Nelly’, b.1836); Wilhelmina (‘Mina’, b.1838); and Agnes (‘Nanny’, b.1840). He died before 1851, when his wife was a widow on Kirkside.

Bourtree Place
The street marks the beginning of the route to Denholm, Jedburgh and Kelso (it is ‘Bower Tree Place’ in the 1851 census).
Bourtree (bör-treez) n. area that formed the eastern boundary of the town, according to the 1537 charter – ‘Between the lands commonly called Bourtrees in the east . . . ’ Named after the bountree or bourtree, which is an Old Scots word for the elder, a species often planted to mark boundaries. A photograph exists showing the last such tree, standing on the north side of Bourtree Place in the late 19th century. There are said to have been similar trees at the western and southern town limits, but if they existed they were already gone by the mid-19th century.
Bourtree Terrace (bör-tree-te-ris) n. small street off Bourtree Place, named in 1896 and previously being part of Bourtree Place.
Bourtree Well (bör-tree-wel) n. former public water source behind the Congregational Church, also known as ‘the Steading Pump’.
bour trei (boor-tri) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra, often used as a boundary marker, and traditionally said to ward off evil – ‘I once heard a woman say, that having struck a bough of bower tree above her door, she heard the witches and fairies ‘greetting’ at her door . . . ’[EM1820], ‘Then with the boortree wand, she gave his beardy chaftis a stroke, – And oure the bed aneath her sprung, A lang lean toothless brocke!’[JTe] (also written ‘bourtree’ and ‘boortree’; cf. Bourtrees; the origin is suggested to be a corruption of ‘bountree’, from its use to mark boundaries, or from ‘bower tree’ from the ability of its branches to be bent into an arbour, but James Murray suggests that the meaning comes from the ease of extracting the pith from its branches to make ‘bores’, i.e. pipes or play-guns).

Boust (bowst) v., poet. to boast, triumph – ‘O my God, I trust in thee: letna me be shremet: letna mine enimies boust thamsels ower me’ [HSR], ‘ . . . an’ a’ the wurkers o’ inequitie boust thame-sels’ [HSR].
Bouston (bow-stin) n. Hugh (16th/17th C.) notary for the instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. These were given by William Scott ‘in Hawik’, and so he was almost certainly a 1354. Little else is known about him. However, it is possible he was simply the same man as John ‘de Boulton’ who was Chancellor and Chamberlain of Berwick in 1354. He was also presented to the Church of Cavers (in Glasgow Diocese) by Edward III in 1368.

Bourtree Bank (bör-tree-bawngk) n. houses up a pend off Bourtree Place, built in 1861.

the Bourtree Bush (thu-bör-tree-bush) n. popular name for the last tree on Bourtree Place, surviving until the latter part of the 19th century.

Bourtree Hose Seminary (bör-tree-hoose-min-u-ree) n. ??.

Bourtree Place (bör-tree-plis) n. street at the east-end of the old town boundaries, the right fork of the High Street at the horse. So-called because of the bountrees, or elders, which grew there, the street was named around 1842. Historically this area marked the eastern edge of the Burgh. It contains several shops and businesses, as well as the Congregational Church and Conservative Club. A railway bridge, with adjacent public toilets, crossed the street until demolished in the mid 1970s, to make way for Mart Street.

Bourtree (bör-treez) n. area that formed the eastern boundary of the town, according to the 1537 charter – ‘Between the lands commonly called Bourtrees in the east . . . ’ Named after the bountree or bourtree, which is an Old Scots word for the elder, a species often planted to mark boundaries. Bouston (bow-stin) n. Hugh (16th/17th C.) notary for the instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. These were given by William Scott ‘in Hawik’, and so he was almost certainly a lawyer in Hawick at that time. He is also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1604 (also ‘Boustoun’; possibly the same name as Boston).
bow-a-bale

bout (‘boo’) n., arch. mood, whim, fancy – ‘…thae thocht hlep iz ti cast ma dowth, thole-muiddy boot’ [ECS] (also written ‘boot’).

bout (‘boo’) n., arch. a hank of thread, also called a ‘gang’, being the distance once up and down during warping.

bouzy (‘boo-zee’) adj., arce. bushy, branchy, covered with bushes – ‘A bouzy burn; a boozy bush’ [GW], ‘Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drucken bride …’ [DH] (there are spelling variants).

Bovina (‘bo-vi-nu’) n. town in Delaware County, New York State. It was a common arrival point for Hawick people who emigrated to the United States in the 19th century. It is said that the nearby hills (part of the Northern Catskills) may have reminded early settlers of Scotland. Once much more populous, the town today has a population of about 700 people. It was founded in 1820 from the amalgamation of parts of 3 other towns. The name comes from the Latin word for cattle, with the area known for its dairy products. Local families with a connection to this area include Coulter, Jardine, Kedzie, Ormiston, Scott and Thorburn.

bow (‘bō’) v., arch. to walk crookedly, assume a bent shape – ‘But yin blythe Easter morning I bo’ed to see his stane …’ [DH].

bow-a-bale (‘bow-a-bāl’) n. a huge bonfire lit annually after the November fair on Denholm Green until about 1840 – ‘An immense bonfire of faggots and boughs, formerly (until c.1840) kindled annually in November on the village green of Denholm in Roxburghshire, was called the Bule or Bowabale’ [JAHM] (see the bow o bale).

Bowanhill (‘bo-in-hil’) n. farmhouse on the right-hand side of the main A7 at Teviothead, previously also known as ‘the Knowe’ or ‘Henderson’s Knowe’, the hill itself being on the other side of the road. The farmhouse and out-buildings were formerly situated near the crest of the hill (a few trees later marking the site). More recent buildings were constructed by the side of the road. This area is where the side road to Falnash and Hislop crosses the Teviot; before the mid-18th century this road was an alternative route to Hawick, crossing to the Borthwick valley via Lairhope and Old Howpsley. It was formerly part of the lands of Ringwoodfield, owned by Melrose Abbey. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718: at that point it covered 686 acres and was bounded by Colterscleuch, Southdeanrig, Binks, Rig, the River Teviot and Commonside. Simon Scott of ‘Fernilli’ and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented it along with ‘Grangia alias Stanyetoun’ in about 1557; it was valued at £5 at that time. It was recorded as still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Archibald Elliot and James Pott are recorded there in 1694, along with herd James Telford. Archibald Elliot is recorded as the tenant there in 1722, renting from the Duke of Bucleuch, then halved with James Elliot the following year. In 1744 Archibald re-leased his half, with Isobel Scott (William Goodfellow’s widow) leasing the other half. There was once a blacksmith’s here, now converted into a museum and craft centre. It seems that the original Bowanhill farm was actually up on the hill, with ‘Bowanhill Roadside’ by the road. In 1797 the farmer at Bowanhill itself was Archibald Elliot, with ‘Roadside’ being farmed by William Gladstones, Thomas Hogg and William Miller. J. Ingles was there in 1821. William Smith was a mason living at ‘Bowanhillbridge’ in 1851. Walter Scott was there in the 1860s (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘bogan hyll’ meaning ‘rounded or bow-shaped hill’, cf. Bowhill; it is probably the ‘Bowenhill’ listed in 1500, is ‘Bowandhillen’ in 1557, ‘Bowandhill in 1564, is recorded with the modern name at least as early as 1609, ‘Buenhill’ in 1634, ‘Buanhill’ in 1653, is transcribed ‘Bowmanhill’ from a 1723 document and is ‘Boanhill’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaue’s 1654 map as ‘Bowanhill’, but not obviously in the right place; on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map it is high on the hill to the east of the main road, with the modern Bowanhill being labelled Henderson’s Knowe).

bowat (‘bow-i’) n., arch. a small lantern – ‘Caution burgiers required to light themselves in the darkness by carrying ‘bowats’ or lanthorns in their hands’ [JJV], ‘Wi their nets and their leis- ters, their bowats and gegs, They seldom if ever get rest for their legs’ [UB].

the Bowat (‘thu-bow-i’) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

bowater (‘bow-wi-ur’) n., arch. person who fishes using a bowat – ‘Yer netters and bowater, they are the boys For drinkin’, fechtin’ and makin’ a noise’ [UB].
Bowatsyde

Bowatsyde (bow-i'-sid) n. former small holding on the Abbotrule estate. It is probably related to the area known as ‘Bowset’, which is referred to in the English report of the Sclaterford skirmish in 1513. It was part of the lands purchased from Jedburgh Abbey by Adam French in 1569 and part of the Lordship of Jedburgh inherited in 1587 by Alexander, Lord Home. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. The lands were later incorporated into the farm of Ruletownhead (it is ‘Bowatsyde’ in 1567, ‘Bowatside’ in 1587, ‘Bowatsyde’ in 1588 and transcribed ‘Bonnatsyde’ in 1680).

Bowden (bow-din) n. village lying between Selkirk and St. Boswells. The market cross, restored as a War Memorial, sits in the main street. Bowden people served as models for Thomas Scott’s painting ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’. Poets Andrew Scott and Thomas Aird were from here, as well as Hawick’s James Thomson. It is also the name of the surrounding parish, through which the Bowden Burn runs on its way to meet the Tweed. The church, originally dating from 1128, but rebuilt in the 17th–18th centuries and restored in 1909, includes the ‘laird’s loft’ bearing the arms of the Kers of Roxburgh and a Norman arch (possibly a remnant of the earlier building) over a pew with memorials to the Kers of Cavers Carre. ‘Bowden Kirk 1128–1978’ (1978 and 1994) was written by J.S.M. Macdonald – ‘And memory, roaring o’er the deep, In lonely hours will turn Back to the cloven Eildon’s steep And banks o’ Bowden Burn’ [JT], ‘Tillieloot, Tillieloot, Tillieloot o’ Bowden! Our cat’s.kittled in Archie’s wig; Tillieloot, Tillieloot, Tillieloot o’ Bowden, Three o’ them naked, and three o’ them clad!’ [T] (the origin is possibly ‘village dedicated to St. Bathan’ or more likely the Old English ‘bothl denu’, meaning ‘valley with a building’; it first appears in about 1120 as ‘Bothendenam’, then occurs as many variants, such as ‘Boulden’, ‘Bothelden’, ‘Bouldene’, ‘Bowden’, ‘Bowenden’ and ‘Bowdein’ until the end of the 17th century).

Bowden (bow-din) n. Walter (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhomme in 1574. His name is given as ‘Wattie Bouden’, and ‘Walter Bouden yhoungar’ is also named. They probably served as factors or similar. ‘litill Wattie of Bouden’ was provided for in the will of Sir Walter Scott, although precisely what he received is unclear from the description ‘he levis that to be done to him at the sicht of freindis’.

Bowden Moor (bow-din-moor) n. hilly moorland area north-west of Bowden, on the slopes of the Eildons, through which the B6359 runs, reaching a height of 814 ft.

Bowden Road (bow-din-roed) n. part of Sturchies, at the top of Atkinson Road, built in 1974, named after the village of Bowden.

bowdie (bow-dee) adj. bandy, bow-legged – ‘His bowdie legs raced owre the ground In breekis gey frayed an’ old . . . ’[WFC] (also ‘bowdy’).

bowdie-leggit (bow-dee-leg-ee’, -i’) adj. having bandy legs, bow-legged.

bowdy see bowdie

bowe (bow) n., arch. a boll, pod of flax, unit of dry measure (cf. boill; this was once pronounced with a longer -oo diphthong).

bowell (bow-ul) n. a bowl (note the diphthong).

bowel-hive gress (bow-ul-huv-gres) n., arch. the field lady’s mantle, parsley breakstone, Alchemilla arvensis, once believed to cure inflammation of the bowel (known as ‘bowel-hive’).

Bower (bow-ur) n. James (b.1794/5) from Melrose, he was a worker on the farm of Burnhead. He is recorded among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41, being a ‘hind’ in 1835 and ‘servant’ later. By 1861 he had moved from Burnhead Cottages to Lees. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and Agnes. John (14th/15th C.) forfeited the lands of Wauchophead that were granted by Robert III in 1404 to John Turnbull. His name was written ‘Bour’. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for gardener James Scott in Hawick Parish in 1768. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Katherine Scott in Robertson Parish in 1789.

Bowerhope (bow-ur-hop, boor-up) n. farm on the south side of St. Mary’s Loch. It was among lands in Ettrick Forest owned by the Crown from about 1456 until the early 16th century. Sheep and goods were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. The Laird of Cessford was tenant there in 1541, paying £20 yearly. It was inherited by Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane from his son Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621 and still held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1667 (it is spelled ‘Bourhop’ in 1456 and 1502, ‘Bourhope’ in 1541 and ‘Bourhoip’ in 1621).

Bowering (bow-ur-ring) n. Mary (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when her will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. She could have been a servant of Lord Minto, perhaps associated with Robert Raper, whose will was also recorded later in 1815.

Bower Rig (bow-ur-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, just on the left (south) of the B6357 road before reaching Dinlabyre. It is possible that nearby was the farm of ‘bour’, which was tenanted by James Elliot on the 1694 Hearth Tax records, ‘wt an kilne’.

Bowes (böz) n. Sir George (1517–56) posthumous son of Sir Ralph of Dalden, Streatlam. He was involved in Border wars from an early age and was an important leader during the ‘Rough Wooing’. He served as Governor of Berwick. He accompanied Lord Hertford on his raid on Edinburgh and other towns in 1544. He married Muriel, daughter of Lord Evers, but had no male heirs. Sir Richard (c.1497–1558) born at Streatlam Castle, County Durham. He became Warden of the English Middle and Eastern Marches in 1540, probably serving until his death. He wrote an account of the state of the East and Middle Marches in 1542. In the same year he was laying waste the Borders and involved in the battle at Haddon Rig, resulting in his capture. He also took part in Hertford’s ravaging of the Borders in 1545. He led the burning of Newark Castle in 1547, with the support of Walter Ker of Cessford and Mark Ker. A relative of his (niece perhaps) Margery Bowes married Sir Ralph Eure, who was the next Warden of the English Middle Marches (there is some confusion over whether he was Richard or Robert).

Bowhill (bō-hil) n. the main seat of the Duke of Buccleuch, set in a 46,000 acre estate, about 3 miles west of Selkirk. The lands were forfeited by Douglases in the 15th century, and were Crown property around 1500, being assigned to the Murrays. It is recorded in 1502 that William Dryden from Slitrig Walter stole a dozen sheep from there. Michael Scott of Aikwood and Thomas Murray were each tenants in half the lands there in 1541, together paying £26 yearly. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and valued at about £400 in 1678. In 1690 it passed to the Murrays, then to James Veitch, before the Scotts reacquired it in 1747. The present house was built in 1812 to designs of William Atkinson, William Burn and David Bryce, and enlarged later that century. Much of the stone came from Denholmhill Quarry. The estate was extensively landscaped by Thomas Gilpin, including the artificial loch and a considerable amount of tree planting. Queen Victoria was a frequent visitor in the 19th century. It was used as a military hospital in WWI and was also occupied by the army in WWII. It is open to the public in the summer and has an adventure playground. As well as a large collection of paintings, artefacts relating to Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd are also on display. The grounds contain an adventure playground, as well as what is probably the oldest ash tree in Scotland – ‘Cu’ up young Hob, of Gilminsleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Hartwood, and Middlesteed, and Hainen’s valiant Will’ [WSB] (the name derives from Old English for ‘curved hill’; it was ‘Bouhill’ in 1694).

bowf (bowf) n., poet. a bark, cough, loud exclamation – ‘But she juist heezed her coats And cried Bowff, Ye toornie auld man!’ [DH].

Bowholm (baw-, bō-hōm) n. former house belonging to a branch of the Elliots. Its probable location was pointed out by locals as ‘Baholm’, recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858. The location is in a wooded area just to the east of Shaws farm on the north side of the Roughley Buru in Liddesdale (as marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map). Note that it is distinct from the relatively nearby Byreholm. ‘Hob of Bowholmes’ is recorded in about the 1580s. Will Elliot, brother of Dandie of ‘Bowholmes’ was recorded in 1611. Archie Elliot ‘of Bowholme’ is mentioned in Circuit Court records in 1623. It may be the ‘Bolsholme’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where 2 men named William Armstrong were listed. It was included along with Over Closs, Byreholme, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 (it is ‘Bowholme’ in 1718).

bowie (bow-ee) n., arch. a hard, shallow dish, a round wooden vessel for potatoes etc. – ‘But a great bowie on the table, An’ ilka ane supped what he was able’ [JR] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong).

Bowie (bow-ee) n. Adam (15th C.) received 6 shillings and 8 pence in the will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Ade Bowy’. Rev. Adam McE. minister of Southdean and Hobkirk 1988–96. He was the first minister of the united parishes, and also had links with Cavers and Kirkton. Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) laundry maid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. Mrs. Agnes (19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Howlands, along with Mrs. Elizabeth Graham, in the mid-1800s. She may have been the wife of blacksmith James. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Parkhill. The will of his wife Margaret Scott is recorded in 1682. Andrew (1802/3–76) son of William, he was blacksmith and veterinary surgeon on the Fore Row. He became a Burgess in 1842. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a blacksmith on ‘Front Row’. In 1861 he was described as ‘Horse shoer, West Port’. The public water supply near there was named ‘Bowie’s Well’ after him. He had several children with Helen Tait (from Eilrig in Robertson Parish), although they never appear to have married. His sons include: James, also a farrier in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1827). Andrew (1827–88) son of Andrew and Helen Tait, he was born at Eilrig. In 1852 in Robertson he married Margaret Byers (1829–98). Their children included: James Tait (b.1852); Janet (b.1853); Helen (b.1855); John (b.1856); Henry (b.1858), who married Elizabeth Cochrane; Gilbert (b.1860); George (b.1862); Helen (b.1864); Maggie (b.1866); Andrew (b.1868); and John (b.1871), who married Annie Burns. He died at 8 Gladstone Street. Andrew (d.1947) son of James and Mary Best, he was a blacksmith and farrier on Havelock Street. He married Lily Fraser Douglas, who was from Appletreethall. They had 3 children, including James Tait (1928–2005) and Henry. When he died this ended what is said to have been centuries of local blacksmiths of the name ‘Boa’. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Andrew L. ‘Andra’ (20th C.) frame-worker at Pesco’s and rugby player for Hawick R.F.C. He served with the Royal Marines in WWI and joined the Greens in 1919, playing for 13 seasons, including being Captain in 1924/5. He was also a great Sevens player, having 54 medals. He was long a member of Committees at Hawick R.F.C. and served on the South of Scotland Selection Committee. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the first residents of the cottages at Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. His son Thomas was also mason at Bonchester Bridge. His daughter Margaret married James Deans and was mother of Rulewater historian Walter Deans. He possessed an old sword that was said to have been used by his grandfather at the Battle of Killiecrankie, and later passed to his descendant James Small. Henry (1858–93) son of Andrew and Margaret Byers. In 1879 he married Elizabeth Cochrane in Hawick, and she died in 1924, aged 70. Their children were: Andrew Tait (b.1879), who emigrated to Geelong, Victoria, Australia; David (1882–96); Maggie (b.1884); Henry (b.c.1886); and James Tait (b.1889), who married Barbara Hogg and lived in Hawick. James (c.1822–70) blacksmith on the Fore Row in the mid-1800s, located by the gate to the Poorhouse. He was a younger son of blacksmith William, and brother of blacksmith Andrew. In 1860 he married Agnes, daughter of baker James Oliver; they appear not to have had any children. He died by committing suicide in a police cell. He was succeeded as blacksmith by James Kedie. His widow was still alive in 1881, living at 1 Drumlanrig Square. James (19th C.) farrier in Hawick, son of Andrew. He lived at Gladstone Street. He married Mary Best. Their son Andrew was a blacksmith in Hawick. Janet (b.1829/30) eldest daughter of Thomas, who lived at Bonchester Bridge. In the 1840s she became postmistress for the Rule valley, with her sister Margaret assisting. She was listed in 1849 as a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1851 she is recorded as ‘Side Post Mistress’. In 1857 she married Alfred Bibby Davis, who was in the Royal Engineers, and gave up the post office. John (17th C.) joint tenant along with Thomas Miller in Timberside mill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having ‘an kiln between thm’ and his surname is listed as ‘Bue’. He could be the John ‘Bo’ married to Helen ‘Kaidyie’ (i.e. Kedzie) whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1681. John (18th C.) blacksmith in Cavers Parish. He married Christina Watson. One of their children was William, who was blacksmith on the Fore Row in Hawick. John (18th C.) tenant in Glebe in Southdean Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised there in 1776. John (c.1800–41) eldest son of William, who was blacksmith on the Fore Raw. He may also have been a blacksmith, like his father. In 1841 his wife is listed as ‘Bell Scott’ on the Mid Raw and the family surname given as ‘Boa’. By 1851 his wife was a widow at about 13 Loan. He married Isabella, daughter of John Scott and Isabella Turnbull; she died in 1876, aged 76. Their children included: Isabella (c.1826–97), who married William Turnbull and secondly John Ogilvie; William (c.1828–88), who died unmarried; Walter (c.1834–75), also a blacksmith, who married Jane Anderson; Margaret (b.c.1836), who married Robert Balmer; Elizabeth (c.1838–86), who appears to have lived with Richard Whellans; and Joan, who married George Edmonson. Margaret (b.1832/3–1905) daughter of mason Thomas. She helped her sister Janet run the post office at Bonchester Bridge. In 1855 she married James Smail in Hobkirik; he was a banker from Jedburgh who wrote under the pseudonym ‘Matthew Gotterson’. Their children were: Jessie Scott Boa Smail (b.1857); George Rutherford Smail (b.1859); Thomas Scott Smail (b.1863); Merlin Mill Smail (b.1863); Elliot Rutherford Smail (b.1865); James Reid Smail (b.1869); Johanna Crosby Smail (b.1870); and Maggie May Sterling Smail (b.1873). She died just 9 months after her husband. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Thomas (c.1783–1849) mason in Hobkirk Parish, residing at Bonchester Bridgend. He was son of Gilbert and his sister Margaret was mother of local historian Walter, who was his apprentice. In 1841 he was living at Bonchester Bridge with his wife and 2 daughters. He was said to be one of only 2 residents of Bridgend who stayed in their houses during the flood of 1846. He probably married Jessie Scott of Cavers Parish in 1828. His widow Janet (possibly the same as ‘Jessie’) was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk; she was living at ‘3 Bonchester Bridge’ in 1851. His children were: Janet (b.1828/9), who became postmistress in Bonchester in the 1840s; and Margaret (b.1832/3) who assisted her sister, and later married James Smail from Jedburgh. Walter (18th C.) blacksmith at Cavers in the 1750s. He had a child who ‘drowned in a bouie’ in 1752. Walter (b.1834/5) blacksmith, who lived at 50 Loan in 1861. He married Janet Anderson and their children included Jane and John. He also had a stepsister George Bell. William (17th C.) listed at Alton Croft among ‘The poor in Hauick Paroich’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (1772–1859) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Christina Watson. He was blacksmith at the West Port. It is said that the family were hereditary smiths to the Douglas of Cavers, and it was a ‘Boa’ who shoed the horses that went to Otterburn. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at the top of the Fore Row (around the modern 17 Drumlanrig Square). In 1799 he married Margaret Hogg, who came from Sanquar, Dumfriesshire; she died in 1854, aged 80. Their children were: John (b.c.1800), who married Isabella Scott; Andrew (b.c.1802), also a smith; Margaret (c.1805–64), who married William Kennedy; William (b.c.1811), who married Mary Renelson; Euphemia (b.c.1820), who married Robert Murray; and James (c.1822–70), another smith, who married Agnes Oliver. He was said to be 89 years old when he died, which is either an error, or he was christened a few years after he was born. He is buried at St. Mary’s. William (b.c.1810) younger son of blacksmith William. He was also a blacksmith in Hawick, located on the Mid Raw in 1841 (when his surname is given as ‘Boe’). He married Mary Renelson (or Ronaldson) in 1835. Their children included: Richard; William, who died young; Euphemia; and Andrew, who also died young (formerly often written ‘Bo’, ‘Boa’, ‘Boe’ and variants).

Bowie’s Well (bow-cee-wel) n. former public water supply at the foot of the Loan, near West Port. It was once one of the main public wells in the town centre, and named after Andrew Bowie, the Smith at West Port the early 19th century.

bowk (bowk) v. to retch, gag, vomit, spew up – ‘Ei says ei’s leike ti bowk. A dinna wunder at eet; ei ett till ei was leike ti burst’ [ECS], ‘...afore the self-proclaimed sei-fishin expert was bowkin owre the side’ [IWL], to belch, to emit smoke – ‘...whan A keek oot ov a slaistert woark-place wundih on ti bowkin lums’ [ECS], n. a retch, incidence of vomiting – ‘An’ syne he gaed a fearu’ bowk, An’ bang’d them a’ for spuein’ Clear drink that day’ [JoHa].

Bowknowe (bow-now) n. former farmstead south-east of Synton. George Scott was tenant there in 1635. Its location is marked today by the plantation called Bowknowe Strip (it appears incorrectly as ‘Howknow’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Bowland (bow-lind) n. former station on the Waverley Line north of Gala, near the Bowshank Tunnel. There were Pringles there from at least the late 15th century. The castellated house there was built in the early 19th century.

Bownmaker (bö-ma-kur) n. John (15th C.) cleric who claimed some of the rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale around 1424, against William Croyser. He lost the battle in 1428, and was probably never actually Archdeacon. He may have been related to the near contemporary Walter, of the same surname, who was Abbot of Inchcolm and historian.

Bowmont Burn (bö-mon’-burn) n. also known as the Bowmont Water, a stream that runs from near Windy Gyle on the Border, past Yetholm and on into Northumberland. The first substantial bridge was built in the 1830s between Kirk Yetholm and Town Yetholm. The area had a reputation for being a favourite haunt of fairies (noted for example by Sir Walter Scott), with stones of certain shapes found there being called ‘fairy cups and dishes’ – ‘That day I left the Bowmontside My heart beat sad within me; Each ferny glen and rugged peak I grieved to leave behind me’ [TCh], ‘The floods are down in Bowmont Burn, the moss is fetlock-deep ...’ [WHO], ‘And my heart a shrine has sought her That will last life’s little day – At the foot of Bowmont Water, Bowmont Water – far away’ [WHO] (also sometimes spelled ‘Beaumont’).

the bow o bale (thu-bow-ō-bāl) n. annual bonfire that used to take place on Denholm Green, until the mid-19th century, when the Green was finally enclosed. This was possibly a ceremony left over from the days of Beltane bonfires, but took place on 5th November, the time of the winter fair in Denholm, and the eve of the fair in Jedburgh. A verse recited by ‘Muckle Michael’ had the following couplet: ‘The Bowe-a-bale ‘ll never fail, While burns grow trouts and gardens kail’ [JAHM] (also written ‘Bough-a-bale’ and ‘bow-a-bale’; it means literally a pile of boughs).

Bowset (bow-, bō-se’) n. former name of an area in Abbotrule (probably associated with Bowshot Hill and the stream at its foot) where Lord Dacre and his men were pursued by the Sheriff of Teviotdale and a force of about 1200 men in late 1513. It has also been suggested that ‘Bowset’ referred to the Bowmont Water, but that seems less likely. A solitary ash tree there marked the site of ‘Old Bowset’, a farm that is recorded as ‘Bossithill’ in 1643 when James and Helen Turnbull were proprietors. It was ‘Bowtysyd’ among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. It was ‘Bosathill’ in 1694 when shepherd James Riddell was ‘deficient’ in paying the Hearth Tax there. It was still ‘Bossithill’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls when owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule; it was listed along with parts of Ruletownhead and Burnkinford, which were partly in Southdean Parish and partly in Hobkirk, which had previously been owned by George Elliot, with a total value of about £224. The site of the skirmish is also known as ‘Scaterford’, on the road over the Fodderlee Burn, and a memorial was erected there around 1900. The farm of ‘Bowatsyde’ is probably the same place, being a small holding that was later incorporated into Ruletownhead.

Bowshank Tunnel (bow-shangk-tu-nil?) n. tunnel on the Waverley Line north of Galashiels, the only major tunnel between Hawick and Edinburgh, 249 yards long.

Bowshot (bow-, bō-se’) n. former farmstead on the side road between Ruletownhead and Easter Fodderlee. There is still a cottage with that name on the Ordnance Survey map, beside Bowshot Wood. Slightly further up the hill there is another building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. This is the area also known as ‘Bowsett’.

Bowshot Hill (bow-, bō-se’) n. small hill in the former Abbotrule Parish, east of Fodderlee and just west of Faw Hill. It reaches a height of 297 m. The summit contains the possible remains of a fort, now levelled by cultivation, but still visible as a shallow semi-circular depression. A solitary ash tree on the hill marked the site of the old farmstead of ‘Old Bowset’. The nearby farm was still known as ‘Bossithill’ in the 19th century.

bowster (bow-stur) v., arch. to bolster.

bowl (bowt) pp. bought – ‘Aw felt like the felleh that bowt the pub an kept it tae izsel’ [MB] (cf. the older boucht and bocht).

box (bok-sin) n. boxing, once a popular spectator sport at local fairs, with a booth set up at the Haugh during the Common Riding in the 19th century.

box-master (boks-maws-tur) n., arch. a treasurer, especially of a trade guild.

Boyd (boid) n. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (c.1930– ) newspaper columnist who used the pseudonym Minerva, author of ‘The way we were, sketches of a Hawick childhood’ (1982). James (15th/16th C.) witness in 1510/1 to a letter of acquittance by George Scott of Whames and Borthaugh, written in Edinburgh. James of Trochrig (d.1581) elected as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1573, he served until his death. However, it is unclear whether he played any ecclesiastical role in the Borders. His eldest son Robert was Principal of both Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. His seal showed an elaborately presented St. Kentigern, with the words ‘SIGILLUM JACOBI BOYD ARCHIEPISCOPI GLAS’. James (17th C.) appointed in 1686, along with John Tudhope, as ‘marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour annent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joined to John Hardie, William Purdone, and William Paysley, who were former marchers. He is probably the ‘baxter’ whose widow Beatrix Turnbull is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may also be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eisst the water’ in 1694 (although probably drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier), when he paid tax on 2 hearths. His children with Beatrix Turnbull included: Walter (b.1673); William (b.1675); Thomas (b.1677); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); William (again, b.1683); James (b.1686).

James (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Scott. Their children included: Janet (b.1653); Margaret and Christian (b.1670); James (b.1688). There is a big enough spread in ages that there is probably an error here. James (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Helen ‘Bo’ (or Bowie). Their children included Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Walter (perhaps his father) and shoemaker Walter Scott. James Fleming (18th C.) Governor of the Hawick Poorhouse in the early 20th century. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick ‘flesher’. In 1711 he was fined, along with Robert Cowan, of being found in an alehouse on the Sabbath. John of Flex (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was probably nephew of Bailie Robert, who sold Flex in 1768. Bailie Robert (18th C.) baxter (i.e. baker) of Hawick who was a Magistrate in the 1740s. He owned 11 High Street, which he sold to Walter Wilson (‘Haunless Wat’). He witnessed a baptism in 1737 for wright James Whinthrop and another in 1743 (when he was ‘late Bailie’) for writer James Weir. He was also involved with the bond for the Teviot Bridge in 1740. He may be the same Robert, recorded as an innkeeper in Hawick in 1745 (for the celebration of the birth of Lord Whitchester). He paid tax for 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He purchased the Flex in 1751, and in the 1750s was involved in a petition to the Commissioners of Supply for a reassessment of the ‘cess’ between his lands and those of Whitlaw owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Session as trustees for Francis Ruecastle’s estate. In 1753 there is a record of march stones being set out at the burnside to mark the boundary between the Flex and the Common. He is probably the Bailie who witnessed a baptism for blacksmith John Ker in 1758. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. In 1768 his nephew, John, tenant in Mertoun Parish, sold his lands there. He may be the Robert who married Betty Boyd in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for skinner John Currier. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1771); and William (b.1775). Walter (17th/18th C.) ‘baxter’ in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism for carrier James in 1705, who may have been his son. William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. 2 unnamed children of his died in 1808. Rev. William (19th C.) minister at Milnathort and Forrest Hill, London. In 1875 he obtained the degree of LL.D. from Greenville College, U.S.A. He was the first preacher in 1889 at the ‘Ern Kirk’, which was the start of the United Presbyterian congregation in Wilton, which would become Wilton South.

Boyes (boi) n. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Boys’ when he was still owed some fee in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Brawnow. Braid Crossroads (brä-d-kros-rödz) n. name sometimes used for the junction at the top of Wellogate Brae, with Braid Road to the left, the Cross Road to the right, and the ‘Well o the Gate’ ahead.

Braid Haack (braid-hIk) n. subtitled ‘A trea-tise on the vernacular speech of Hawick’, an extensive glossary of Hawick words, together with a description of pronunciation and grammar, written by Elliot Cowan Smith. It was published in the Archaeological Society Transactions in 1927, several years after Smith’s death. It represents the first thorough study of the specific dialect of Hawick, building on Sir James Murray’s earlier and more general work ‘Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland’, and being used heavily (while in manuscript form) in George Watson’s ‘Roxburghshire Word Book’. It begins with the apology: ‘It is with hesitation that one who has been long resident furth of the land of his birth would venture to profess himself a judge of the continuing purity or the growing adulteration of the vernacular speech of his native district’. But the article demonstrates how serious a student of the local vernacular Smith was, despite his relative youth.

He says that ‘Braid Haack constitutes a potent and prolific part of the upper Teviotdale vernacular, which itself is one of the purest and richest branches of the vernacular of Scotland’. His habit of collecting words and meanings peculiar to Hawick was encouraged by the articles and lists that appeared in the local press in preparation for George Watson’s dictionary. He includes an attempt to use spelling to indicate pronunciation, since ‘the representation of the Scottish vernacular is marred by the tendency to Anglicize its spelling’.

Braidhaugh (brä-d-hawf) n. Broadhaugh, farm on the left of the A7 just past Newmill. There were Dalgleishes there in the early 16th century. William Dalgleish was recorded there in 1502 and 1508. ‘Ade Dalglesch in Braidhauch’ and 2 other family members received remission for associating with rebel Turnbulls in 1507. And Thomas Dalgleish ‘in Braidhauch’ was recorded for stealing horses in 1510, as well as resetting other Dalgleishes. The Laird of Branxholme’s servant ‘Hob Dalgleis’ was killed there around the 1570s by a group of Scotts from Allanhaugh. Tenants in 1620 were Thomas Lader and Thomas Aitchison. This was the home of Walter Scott, a Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch in the 1630s and 40s. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. About that time the the land tax value was £684 for ‘Braidhauch or the present tenent of falsnasch’. The Hearth Tax records of 1694 list Gideon Scott, James Nichol, herd James Murray and Robert Scott. It was surveyed in 1718, when it consisted of 674 acres and was bounded by the Allan Water, Stobicote, Northhouse and the River Teviot; woods of mainly ash trees were also marked. The Ogilvie’s were tenants in the 18th and early 19th centuries, with Robert Ogilvie recorded there on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls, and Wiliam Ogilvie the farmer on the 1851 census. James Hobkirk is recorded as farmer there in 1868. Some flints found there are in the Museum collection. There is a cairn and possible settlement revealed by aerial photography on the hill to the north-east, as well as signs of several settlements around Broadhaugh Hill to the south-east. It seems reasonable to suppose that this is the same place as ‘Ryngwoodchat’ (probably ‘Ringwoodhaugh’), which was a property of the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch. Certainly the lands were still listed as part of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose among Buccleuch possessions in 1634. There may have been a tower near the present farmhouse (the name appears as ‘braidhalch’ in 1502, ‘Braidhauch’ in 1507, ‘Braidhaucht’ in 1585, ‘Braidhauch’ in about 1599, ‘Braidhaughe’ in 1620, ‘Broadhauche’ in 1637 and 1652, ‘Braidlaugh’ and ‘Braidhauch’ in 1634, ‘Braidhaucht’ in 1640, ‘Braid Hauch’ in 1646 and ‘Braidhauch’ in 1651, 1661 and 1663; it is ‘Braidhauch’ on Baedua’s 1654 map and is already anglicised on Stobie’s map of 1770; the origin is clearly from the Old English ‘broad flat land by the river’).

Braidhaugh (braid-hawch, -hawft) n. Broadhaugh, farm near where the ‘Note o the Gate’ road branches off the A6088 just past Bonchester. It was formerly part of the Barony of Abbotrule and was enlarged with part of the comonnty of Mackside. It was apparently once known as ‘Spain’, the name being given as a joke by the Elliots of Wolflee. There were Turnbullah here in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Turnbulla was recorded there in 1611. In 1622 James, son of William Turnbulla in Broadhaugh, was accused of stealing cattle from Earlside; in 1627 William and his son James promised to atone for causing a disturbance at Abbottle Kirk. It was valued at £80 on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. John Douglass was tenant in the 18th century. In the 1707 valuation it was included in the estate of William Kerr of Abbottle. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and still in 1811), valued at £128 6s 8d. Tenants in the 19th century included John Telfer, Thomas Grierson, Thomas Storrie, Charles Renwick, and then John Waldie into the 20th century. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbottle to William Elliot of Wolflee in 1751. The old farmhouse was demolished in the early years of the 19th century (with the stone used for dykes) and could still be seen a century ago on the left side of the road; the newer farmhouse was built at the upper end of the haugh, about a quarter of a mile further up. It contains a piece of land called ‘Thornton’ and also the ‘Foull Well’ – ‘What errand hath brought thee to Braidhaugh Brow, And where is that thou Wat Harden now?’ [WHO] (it is ‘Braidhaugh’ in 1611; marked ‘Braidhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Braidhaugh Cottages (braid-hawft-ko’-ee-jeex) n. cottages at Broadhaugh in the Rule valley.

Braidhaugh Hill (braid-hawft-hil) n. Broadhaugh Hill, hill south of Broadhaugh farm, making a ridge between the Teviot and Allan valleys. It reaches a height of 279 m and has signs of an ancient settlement on its western side (as well as another on Birny Knowe just to the north-east). This measures about 150ft by 115ft, being composed of a low bank and ditch and with perhaps a couple of hut platforms inside.

Braidhaugh Park (braid-hawft-pawrk) n. name used for a field near the farm of Broadhaugh in the Rule valley, near where the old farmhouse stood.

Braidlie Burn (braid-lee-burn) n. stream on the north side of the Hermitage valley, formed from the Crib Burn and Barley Burn and joining the Hermitage Water between Braidlie and Braidie (bra-dee) n. Marjorie (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when she was owed half a year’s fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere.

braidit (bra-dee’, -di’) pp. braided – ‘Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair’ [DH].

Braidlie (braid-lee) n. farm near where the burn of the same name meets the Hermitage Water. William ‘de Bradeleye’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, may have been an early owner. It is listed as a 5-pound land on a c.1376 rental list among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1428/9 the lands were given by William, Earl of Angus, to Archibald Douglas of Cavers and granted by a later Earl of Angus to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later. ‘Andree Elwald et alii’ were the tenants in 1541, when the lands were valued at 8 merks. In the mid-16th century Martin Elliot of Braidlie was the leader of that clan. Around that time there was a feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch, which lasted several years. This led to an area around Branxholme being burned and pillaged in 1565, probably including Hawick, i.e. ‘the Brodies’ who are recorded in a letter of the time burning Hawick were probably none other than the Elliots of Braidlie. The original peal tower was near Old Braidlie, while the newer farmhouse (sometimes called ‘New Braidlie’) lies closer to the Hermitage Water. John Robison was tenant there in 1694. Andrew Kyle was farmer there in 1797, Arthur Kyle in the 1830s and 40s, David Kyle in 1851 and James Graham in 1868 (also spelled ‘Braidley’, ‘Braidliee’, ‘Braisley’, ‘Braidily’ etc.; the name probably derives simply from the Old English ‘braid leah’, meaning ‘broad clearing’; it is ‘Bradle’ around 1376, ‘Bradele’ in 1428/9 and 1470, ‘Bradelye’ in 1472, then is recorded in 1511 and many times in the 16th century as ‘Braidley’ etc.; it is ‘Braidlie’ in 1694 and ‘Broadle’ in 1797; it appears on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Braidlies’ and is ‘Broadlee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Brand (brawnd) n. James (1843–1908) born in Culross, he trained at the Church of Scotland Normal College in Glasgow and came to Hawick in 1866 as assistant to James C. Mudie. This was for the private school that ran at the former Subscription Rooms (now the Halls for the Catholic chapel). He left to form his own school after a clash of personalities, being based first in the Baptist Chapel in Allars Crescent, then at 10 Union Street and later expanding into property at the other end of Union Street. This was called Teviot Grove Academy, but familiarly known as ‘Brand’s School’. It is said that he provided such strong competition that Mudie was forced to leave Hawick. The school took boarders, some of them from other parts of the country. The school ran as a private institution until 1895 when taken over by the School Board, with Brand becoming Rector of the senior part of the Buccleuch School, which ran technical and art classes in the Buccleuch Memorial. He was also a private music teacher, as well as being Session Clerk for Hawick Parish. He retired in 1906. He married J.E.D. Murray’s older sister Isabella A. (1849–97). Their children were James (a nurseryman in Vancouver), Murray (paymaster at Woolwich Arsenal), Ira (who married a Sheldon), Alice (who married another Sheldon), May (who became a teacher) and Jessie.

Brand’s Schuil (brawnsid) n. private school at 10 Union Street in the latter part of the 19th century, run by James Brand, and also known as the Teviot Grove Academy. It was the continuation of the Academy previously located at the Subscription Rooms. In 1895 the premises were taken over by the School Board for use as part of the secondary school.

Branksome (brawngk-sum) n. estate centred on Branksome Castle, which was owned by the Lovels, the Balfours, the Murrays and the Inglises before passing to the Scotts. In 1420 (and confirmed at Cavers Kirk in 1431), in the reign of James I, half of the lands were exchanged between the Scotts and the Inglises for Mudiestone in Lanarkshire. It is said that this followed Sir Thomas Inglis complaining of incursions by the English, and that after the trade Sir William Scott remarked that ‘the cattle of Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale’ (but in fact the trade was between the fathers of these two gentlemen). The half lands are described as being ‘from the river of Branchselme to the water of Borythwyk, and as the water of Teveot runs’ (although this description seems obscure), including the lands of ‘Steyll’, ‘Lonnehull’, ‘Holstruther’ and ‘Meyrle’ (all of which are lost names). In 1446, in the reign of James II, the other half was granted to Sir Walter Scott and his son Sir David to be held in ‘blench’ of the Crown, for the payment of a red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The land has been owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch since then. It originally lay within the Barony of Hawick, but was erected into a separate Barony in 1463. The Barony was created to include all the major lands of Sir Walter Scott at that time, i.e. Lanton, Lepeithlaw, Eilrig, Eckford and Whitchesters, as well as Branholme itself. Payment was to be one red rose ‘as blench farm’ at the feast of John the Baptist. The feudal superior of the new Barony was Scott of Branholme and Buccleuch, while the neighbouring Barons of Hawick were the Douglases of Drumlanrig; for some period around then it may also have been considered to be part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1484/5 there is reference to the ‘three head courts’ of the barony (but it is unclear how these legal functions were divided). When the lands were inherited by Walter Scott from his grandfather David in 1492 they were described as being then waste, and valued at 24 merks yearly in times of peace. In court cases of 1493 and 1494/5 the ‘Elliots of Branxholme’ are mentioned. The Scotts of Buccleuch moved their main seat there in the last years of the 15th century. The farm was burned (but probably not the tower) and raided around 1510 by John Dalgleish and English thieves, including ‘Black John’ Routledge. An English raiding party burned the tower, farm and neighbouring farms in 1533/4 (as reported by Clifford). The tower and farm was again burned in 1544, when the English took 600 cows, 600 sheep, 200 goats and 30 prisoners, as well as killing 8 men. It was described as a ‘24 merk land’ in 1553/4, when inherited by Walter Scott, from his grandfather, Sir Walter; the mansion and mill are also mentioned. Along with Whitcheister it was valued at £44 in 1574. ‘Branxhelme, Eister and Wester, with fortalice, maner place, and wodis therof’ are mentioned in 1586. Pont’s map of the 1590s shows an enclosure around the estate, including much of the present Branxholme Park, and some of Branxholme Braes, with much of it being wooded. It was re-erected as a Barony in 1599, when the ‘reddendo’ to the superior was one red rose. The name is also used for the hamlet near there, previously having many more houses, and sometimes being referred to as ‘Branxholme Town’. By 1634 the Barony included the lands of Branxholme itself, as well as Eckford, Buccleuch, Lanton, Whitcheister, Lempslaw, Rankleburn, Eilrig and Kirkurd. Adam Ogilvie and William Hope were there in 1684. The Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 lists the householders there as John Elliot, Andrew Ogilvie, James Ogilvie and Jean Scott, as well as James Anderson and Walter Scott listed among ‘the poor’. The tenant farmer through much of the 18th and 19th centuries was the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, whose official residence this was from about 1767. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the tenants were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Graham. In 1678 the Barony (along with the free teinds of Hawick Parish) were valued at about £4700, and still had the same value in 1811. It was stated in 1838 that the largest tree in Hawick Parish was an ash situated near the Castle. A stone disc with a hole through it, from here, is in the Museum. The area was used as a setting for one of Allan Ramsay’s songs ‘The Bonnie Lass of Branksome’ – ‘As I cam’ in by Teviotside And by the braes of Branksome, There first I saw my booming bride. Young, smiling, sweet, and handsome’, ‘Do the phantom horsemen gather at the foot o’ Branxholm Brac? Does the minstrel from the Castle sing again his stirring lays?’ [GHB], ‘Yet, there it stands in black and white, That Henry Lovel, Branxholme’s lord, Two ozen gang of land did gift, According to his promised word’ [JCG], ‘Neath yon hill’s shade in a flowery glade, Stands Branxholme’s massive tower, Where of old the Knight in armour bright, Arrayed him for the field of flight And left his lady’s bower’ [JI] (almost interchangeably spelled ‘Branxholm’; the name first appears in 1183 as the Latinised ‘Branchuella’ and about 30 years later as ‘Brancheshelm’, then around 1315 as ‘Branxishelme’, with the substitution of ‘holm’ soon after; it is ‘Brancheshelm’ in 1420, ‘Branxhelme’ about 1430, ‘Brankishelm’ in 1435, ‘Brangishelm’ and ‘Brankishame’ in 1446, ‘Brankishelme’ in 1447, ‘Branxhelm’ in 1456, ‘Branckyshelm’ in 1461, ‘Branxelme’ on 1463, ‘Branxhame’ in 1475/6, 1478, 1500, 1501 and 1502, ‘Branxhaim’ in 1479, ‘Branckishame’ in 1481, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1482, ‘Branxelme’ in 1484, ‘Branxeme’ in 1492, ‘Branxame’ in 1492 and 1493, ‘Branxame’ in 1494/5, ‘Brankschayme’ in 1500, ‘branxhame’ in 1502, ‘Branxham’ in 1510, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1500, 1523 and 1526, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1517 and 1524, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1525, ‘Branxelme’ in 1527, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1528, ‘Branxhelme’ and ‘Branxhelme’ in 1529, ‘Branxelm’ in 1530/1, ‘Branckhelm’ in 1539, ‘Branxishelme’ in 1540 and 1564, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1543 and 1550, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1550, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1569 and 1580, ‘Brankishelme’ in 1574, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1585, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1633 and ‘Branxelme’ in 1740; it is already ‘Branxhelme’ in 1549; it appears on Mercator’s 1595 map as ‘Brank lam’; Blaen’s 1654 map shows ‘Branxholme Cast,’ in a wooded area and ‘Branxhame L’ above; the origin is probably ‘Branoc’s shelter’ or perhaps ‘Branoc’s land by the stream’, with ‘Branoc’ being an Old Welsh personal name). Branxholme Braes a n. farm on the right hand side of the road a little beyond Branxholme, formerly part of the Branxholme estate. In 1621 it was granted by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his uncle, Gavin Elliot of Brugh. In 1631 Gavin’s widow sold the lands to William Elliott, younger of Stobs. It was farmed by Grieves in the 19th century. ‘Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill’ wrote the poem ‘the Braes of Branxholm’ – ‘Come ye, lads, by Branxholme Braes, Whaur Teviot, gentle river, Glides among the
Branxholme Brig

Branxholme Brig (brank-sum-brig) n. bridge over the Teviot near Branxholme, by the junction with the road to Haysike, and also known as Michie’s Bridge and sometimes Goldielands Bridge. It was probably built as part of the new turnpike road around 1762 and was repaired in 1820 by Smith of Darnick. A footbridge near Branxholme was swept away in a flood.

Branxholme Brigend (brank-sum-brig-end) n. Branxholme Brigend, farm and scattered houses near Branxholme Bridge, at the road junction between the A7 and the Haysike road. The Michie family were here for many generations. A side road also leaves the A7 near here to reach the Borthwick valley near Milsington. This is probably the same place as ‘Goldielands Bridge End’, where Hugh Michie was recorded in 1797.

Branxholme Castle (brank-sum-kaw-sul) n. castle 3 miles south-west of Hawick, hereditary seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch since the middle of the 15th century. It may have been originally built by the Lovels, who certainly owned the land from the 12th century. It passed to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, then to the Earl of Strathearn around 1333 and soon after to the Inglis family. It passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420, and soon became the principal residence of the Scotts. Hawick Kirk then became the burial place of the family for several generations. The residence was strengthened and extended by Sir David Scott in the late 15th century. The Scotts must have expanded the Castle in the 15th century, since by 1463 the documents of the Scotts were made at ‘the capitale messuagium’ (i.e. principle dwelling house) of Branxholme, and no longer at Ranklebury. The tower was for centuries the centre of power in Upper Teviotdale, and is presently one of the homes of the 9th Duke of Buccleuch. However, the family stopped using it much after they purchased Dalkeith, and for a while it became the residence of the Duke’s Chamberlain. The house used to be bigger, with the original tower burned in 1532 by the Earl of Northumberland, probably burned again in 1544 by Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun’s men, and blown up in 1570 by the Earl of Sussex’ force. A corner tower remains of the original, and most of the rest dates from rebuilding carried out by Sir Walter Scott and his wife Margaret Douglas 1571–1576. A plaque over the doorway (moved from its original location on the north of the courtyard) reads ‘IN VARLD IS NOCHT NATURE HES VROUCHT YAT SAL LEST AY THAIRFORE SERVE GOD KEIP VELL YE ROD THEY FAME SAL NOCHT DECAY SCHIR WALTER SCOT OF BRANXHOLME KNYCHT, MARGARET DOUGLAS 1571’, as well as another with the arms of Scott and Douglas marking the work they undertook, the inscriptions reading ‘S(I)R W. SCOT UMQ(UHI)L(E) OF BRANXHEIM KNYT SO(N)E OF S(I)R WILLIAM SCOT OF KIRKURD KNYT BEGANE YE VORK OF YIS HAL VPON YE 24 OF MARCHE 1571 ZIER QUHA DEPAIRTEDIT AT GOD’S PLESOUR YE 17 OF APRIL 1574’ and ‘DAME MARGRET DOUGLAS HIS SPOUS COMPLEITTIT THE FORSAID VORK (IN) OCTOBER 1576’. The main building is 3-storeyed and Z-shaped, with 2 towers, the stronger and probably older one called ‘Nebie’. A tower of the walled castle courtyard is known as ‘Tentyfoot’, and tradition says that there were once 4 towers in all. In 1694 tax was paid on 5 hearths at the main house here. Charles Scott paid tax for 40 windows there in 1748 (when it was called ‘Branksholm house’). Additions were made to the north side and to both ends from 1790. Alterations by William Burn from around 1836 included blocking up the arched doorway. It can be seen in 2 sketches from around 1800 and 1808, before the Victorian improvements. It is a grade A listed building. The tower is well known as the main location for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Nine-and-twenty knights of fame Hung their shields in Branksome-Hall, Nine-and-twenty squires of name Brought them their steeds to bower from stall’ [SWS], ‘O’er Branxholm tower, ere the morning hour, When the lift is like lead so blue, The smoke shall roll white on the weary night, And the flame shine dimly through’ [JL], ‘The morning star with flickering light Looks down on Branxholme’s ancient tower’ [RHL].

Branxholme Common (brank-sum-ko-min) n. former name for farmland near Branxholme. In 1802 it was leased to James Hume along with Chapelhill.

Branxholme Cross?? (brank-sum-kros) n. ??.

Branxholme Easter Loch (brank-sum-ees-tur-loch) n. the eastern of the two Branxholme Lochs, on the slopes of Chapel Hill, west of Branxholme. It is sometimes called just ‘Branxholme Loch’ or ‘Easter Loch’, to distinguish it from Chisholme or Wester Loch. It was formerly used as a site for collecting marl for improving soil in the fields of the farms attached to Branxholme.
Branxholme Gate

The whole loch was drained, and only restored once the marl was exhausted, around 1850. A small cottage to the south-east is called Loch Cottage. Thomas Laidlaw and family were there in 1841. The plantation to the south is Loch Rig and the one to the north is Loch Strip (it is marked just ‘Branxholme L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Branxholme Gate (brank-sum-gá) n. former name for a cottage near Branxholme, probably at Branxholme Lodge. James Robson was shepherd there in 1851.

Branxholme Hall (brank-sum-hal, -law) n. romantic name for Branxholme Castle – ‘Gar seek your succour at Branksome Ha’, For succour ye’se get nane frae me! Gae seek your succour where ye paid black mail, For, man! ye ne’er paid money to me’ [T], ‘If any one should say to me That Branxholme Hall held many a ghost I would reply with levity That those who thought so sure were lost’ [JCG].

Branxholme Knowe (brank-sum-now) n. cottage between Baranxholme Park and Branxholme Castle, recently available as a holiday unit.

Branxholme Loch (brank-sum-loch) n. actually Branxholme Easter and Wester Lochs, located about 4 miles south-west of Hawick and a mile apart. They are reached along a road, with several gates, which leads from the Teviot to the Borthwick via Chapelhill. The lochs flow into the Newmill Burn. There is also a cottage by the Easter Loch, tenanted by the Douglas family in the 19th century. The name is often just applied to the Easter Loch, with the Wester one sometimes called ‘Chisholme Loch’. A record of 1796 states that a lease was arranged (with neighbouring tenant farmers) for ‘Branxholmlock on account of clearing the Marle therein of Water’. In 1841 the cottage at ‘Wester Branxholm Loch’ was occupied by Douglastes.

Branxholme Mains (brank-sum-mánz) n. former name for the ‘home farm’ at Branxholme. It is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as ‘Manis of Branxholme’, and the amount of grain grown there is noted. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, the farm consisting of 467 acres, bounded by Branxholme Park, the River Teviot, Branxholmetown, Todshawhill and Todshawhagh; the map shows some lines of planted trees, which are described as ‘some timber trees as Ash and Sycomer and abundance of young thriving wood’. In 1627 it was described as paying about 32 bolls of grain. In 1671 it was leased, along with Branxholme Park, to James Scott, as well as John Scot, James Allan and perhaps others. In at least the period 1672–77 it was leased to Walter Scott of Harwood. In 1691 it was leased (‘without the Park of Branxholme’) to William Scott of Burnhead and others and in 1696 to Andrew and James Ogilvie and John Scott. In 1735 ‘that part lately inclosed by a stone dyke’ was leased to Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and the rest to William Ogilvie (it is ‘Branxholme Maynis’ in 1627, ‘Branxholme Maynes’ in 1671 and ‘Branxholmemaines’ in 1735).

Branxholme Muir (brank-sum-mewr) n. land near Branxholme, consisting of the higher ground to the north. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, at that point consisting of 671 acres of high moorland, bounded by Whithope, Todshawhill, Branxholmetown, Chapelhill, Reggs, Harwood, Vales, Hott, Outer Slaidhill and Easter and Wester Parkhill. In 1671 it was leased to William Scott, having previously been leased by James Chisholme. In 1672 the east end was leased to James and Andrew Chisholme and the west end to William Scott of Hartwoodmyres. In 1677 the east end was leased by Andrew and James Chisholme and the west end by James Scott. In 1691 and 1696 the east end was leased by Andrew and Walter Chisholme and in 1691 the west end was leased to James Scott. In 1735 the east end was leased to William and Walter Chisholme and the west end to William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was the subject of a dispute between Sir James Stewart and John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in the period 1743–60 and in 1763–64 between Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and the heirs of Chisholme of Parkhill (it is ‘Branxholme Moore’ in 1718).

Branxholme Park (brank-sum-pawrk, -pärk) n. farm on the right-hand side of the road just before Branxholme Castle, long a tenanted farm of the Branxholme estate. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 215 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, a small part of Goldielands, the River Teviot, Branxholme Mains and Todshawhagh. At that time it was stated that the farmland was ‘much incombered with young thriving wood as Ash Burch and Willow’; the plan shows trees along the south, east and north sides of the farm. It was home to the Grieve family for several generations, the first lease being signed in 1691 by Walter Grieve. The land is first referred to in 1649 as a ‘park’, the suggestion being that it was used as a deer park for the Branxholme estate. In 1694 the householders there were Walter Grieve, John Telfer and Robert Scott. Walter Grieve paid tax for 12 windows there in 1748. James Grieve was tenant there in 1797, and was recorded having 11 work horses on the farm (it was ‘Branksholm park’ in 1748).

Branxholmepark Hill (brank-sum-pawrk-hil) n. hill to the north of Branxholme, reaching a height of 250 m and having a triangulation pillar.

Branxholme Pot (brank-sum-po’) n. old brass vessel belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch, presumably once from Branxholme. It is recorded at Dalkeith in the 1661 inventory of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch as ‘Item, ane great pot of brase called Branxholme Pot, much worn, having a hole in the bottome’.

Branxholme River (brank-sum-ri-vur) n. stream near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter of half of the lands of Branxholme. Since the Teviot and Borthwick are also referred to, then this must be the name for either the stream which runs through Branxholme Glen (also known as Bloody Burn) or perhaps Newmill Burn.

the Branxholme Stakes (thu-brank-sum-stäks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, replaced by the Medway Cup in 1927.

Branxholme Toon (brank-sum-toon) n. former name for the village around Branxholme, or more specifically for the farm of Branxholmtown. This was located about half a mile west of the castle itself, or coming from Hawick, the farm was on the right-hand side of the road, just before Newmill. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 252 acres, bounded by Branxholme Mains, the River Teviot, Castlehill, Chapelhill, Branxholme Muir and Todshawhill. The modern farm of Branxholme Braes encompasses the lower land that was once part of this farm. The tenant farmer there in 1574 was John Martin, when the inventory of livestock was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Steven Scott was tenant there in 1611. Another John Martin was there in 1623. In 1627 it was described as paying ‘32 bolls in stok and teynd; estimat to pay 16 in stok, 4 in parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. in teynd’ in an average year. There were Scoons recorded there from at least 1671–1735. In 1671 it as leased by Margaret Murray, John Richardson (younger and elder), William Hope, Partick Scoon, James Allan and James Martin. In 1677 the tenants were Patrick and Robert Scoon, William Hope, James Richardson and Margaret Murray. In 1690 the farm was leased to Janet Wilson, John and Patrick Scoon, James Craw and Robert Richardson (with Richardson being replaced by William Nixon in 1691 and then Andrew Wilson in 1692). In 1698 Andrew Wilson’s widow took over his part. The cluster of houses is clearly shown on the 1718 survey, in the same location as ‘Branxholmtown’ marked on today’s Ordnance Survey map. There were also Craws, Nichols and Scotts there in the early 18th century. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the householders listed there were Walter Wilson, James ‘Crinklaw’, Patrick Scoon, John Scoon, Andrew Laidlaw, James Craw and Walter Scott, as well as Robert Richardson being listed among ‘the poor’. James and Walter Craw, Margaret Riddell and Scotts were there in 1708. In 1725 the tenants were James Craw, Robert and Walter Scoon, John Wilson and Walter Craw. In 1735 the tenants were James Craw, Robert and Walter Scoon and John Wilson. In the 1740s the tenants included James Craw, John Craw’s widow and John Wilson. Charles Scott was tenant in 1748. The settlement at ‘Branxholmtown’ was significantly bigger in the 17th and 18th centuries than it became later. It even had its own teacher around the 18th century. By the mid-19th century it was already reduced to 8 or 9 houses. It was once the home for the retainers of Scott of Branxholme. The road from the head of the Borthwick valley into Hawick used to pass by here (also written ‘Branxholmtown’, ‘Branxholmtoun’, ‘Branxholmotoune’ and variants).

Branxholme Waltz (brank-sum-walts) n. only piece of pure piano music composed by Adam Grant. He wrote this in about 1880, dedicating it to the Duchess of Buccleuch and it was published in 1882.

Branxholme Wester Loch (brank-sum-wes-tur-loch) n. the western of the two lochs in the hills above Branxholme, and the source of the Newmill Burn. It was also formerly known as Chisholme Loch. The ‘Wester Loch House’ listed in 1774 must have been a cottage near here. Widow Isabella Douglas and several children were here in 1841 and 1851 (it appears to be labelled ‘Chishamra L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while the Easter Loch is marked simply ‘Branxholme L.’).

Branxholm Terrace (brank-sum-te-ris) n. original name for the lower houses in Dalkeith place, the name deriving from the Barony of Branxholme. The name was discarded in 1882.

the Brethren Fellowship (thu-breth-rin-fe-li-ship) n. evangelical group meeting in Slitrig Hall, Old Manse Lane, with their local origin dating back to the 1870s. They are also referred to as ‘Plymouth Brethren’ or ‘Christian Brethren’. Their practices include full body baptism (some previously carried out in the nearby mill lade!) and Communion. They held popular ‘lantern shows’ in the mid-20th century. Another group known as ‘the Brethren’ met in Oliver Place in the late 19th century. There was also a ‘House of Brethren’ on the north side of Eastgate in Denholm at the end of the 19th century, with mill workers travelling from Hawick to worship there. The ‘Needed Truth’ (so-called from their monthly magazine) separated from the ‘Open’ Brethren in 1888.

brew (broo) v., arch. to dye a coat or similar article (used jocularly).

Brewbuss (broo-bus) n. former farmstead, probably in the upper Jed valley near Roughlee. It is recorded in 1669 as ‘Brewbuse’ when the tenant was William Laidlaw. Probably the same place was ‘Breiburc’ in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, valued at 20 shillings. It was part of the five steadings of ‘Fawsyd, Roucheis et Brerebuse’ with past rentals claimed by William Douglas in 1538 and 1539 (it is ‘Breiburc’ in 1538 and ‘Breirbusk’ in 1539; it is unclear where exactly this was or what the name means, although ‘Briar bush’ seems possible, given the earlier spellings).

the Brewer’s Plate (thu-broo-urz-pla) n. race at the Common Riding in at least 1856. It may be the same as the race called the ‘Innkeeper’s Purse’ in other years.

the Brewery (thu-broo-ur-ee) n. Hawick had a brewery in Slitrig Crescent, between the present Nos. 16 and 19, which closed in 1879. It is shown in a painting of Hawick by J.B. Pringle in about 1850. John George King was brewer there in the mid-19th century, with Robert Winter taking over from him. Part (No. 18) was converted into a church hall for St. Cuthbert’s, while Nos. 17 and 19 are private houses. The lower ground floor ceilings and higher upper floor ceilings are remnants of its use as a brewery, and part of a hoist can still be seen above one of the upper windows. There was also a brewery down Walter’s Wynd marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Brewery Haugh (broo-ur-ee-hawch) n. area between the main road and the Slitrig, where St. Mary’s Church Hall and parts of St. Cuthbert’s were built. It was named after the nearby brewery, and was possibly once used as a pasture for their horses. The area was also sometimes known as ‘Chalmers’ Haugh (after the mid-19th century brewery owner) and ‘St. Cuthbert’s Haugh’. There were once fairs held there, and the area was used for drilling by the Dumfries Militia during the Crimean War (see also Whusky Hooses).

Breweryhooses (broo-ur-ee-hoo-seez) n. breweries, a name sometimes used for Whusky Hooses. The existence of a ‘stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge’ (recorded in 1738) may explain the confounding of the names. ‘Brewery’ is marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Brewhoose (broo-hoos) n. (Brewhouse) James (16th C.) tenant at ‘Glenpyot’, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. This could be the lands of Glenpyet in Yarrow.

Brewlands (broo-lindz) n. former name for lands that were part of the Harwood estate, and probably adjacent to Templehall. In a feu charter of 1567 they (along with Templehall) are recorded passing by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull, having been resigned by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. These lands were confirmed to his nieces in 1604, when Templehall and Brewlands are described as being west of Wauchope and north of the Rule Water (it is ‘Brewlandis’ in 1604).

Brewlands (broo-lindz) n. former name for part of Raperlaw. They are ‘Brewlandis in Rapperlaw’ in 1569 (when among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French) and the ‘Brewlands of Raperlaw’ in a listing of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670.

Brewster (broo-stur) n. Sir David (1781–1868) born in Jedburgh, son of the rector of the Grammar School there. It is said that he had an early infatuation for Mary Somerville, who also lived in Jedburgh, and learned to make a telescope with James Veitch of Inchbonny. He went to Edinburgh University at the age of 12 to study theology, but eventually became a physicist (amongst other things). He invented the kalesidoscope and a precursor of the Fresnel lens, improved the stereoscope and discovered the law of angle of polarization of light (known as the ‘Brewster Angle’). He wrote biographies of several eminent scientists, as well as many other books, including one discussing life on other planets. He also experimented with early photography, published over 2,000 papers and became one of the foremost scientists of his day. Additionally he edited the 18 volume ‘Edinburgh Encyclopaedia’ (writing many of the science articles himself), which was very influential at the time. Locally known as ‘of Allerley’, he was a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in the 1860s. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He was made a Burgess of Jedburgh in 1864. An early photographic portrait of him exists and a portrait was gifted to Jedburgh by his daughter.

In 1510/1 the lands were granted by James IV to Master John Murray of Blackbarony, after they were forfeited by Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. There were Douglasses there around the time of the Hornshole incident and through the 16th century. It was burned along with much of the rest of Teviotdale by Hertford’s men in 1545 (probably the closest place the raiding party came to Hawick). Robert Douglas inherited lands from his father John Douglas of Brieryyards in 1606. John Scott was recorded as tenant there in 1611, and Scotts held the lands through the 17th century. It is among loands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas, Earl of Haddington in 1634. In 1637 William Scott of Chamberlain Newton inherited these lands (along with Braidlees) from his uncle John Scott of Briery Yards; at that time they were valued at 100 shillings, and included a mill. In 1643 and 1663 the lands were valued at £260 and owned by John Scott. In 1678 it was combined with Hornshole (in Hassendean Parish) and valued at £360. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. Lands here were still listed as being part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1680 (a vestige of a connection with Melrose Abbey). The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until assigned to Wilton in 1690. The estate formerly owned land in the town, near where Croft Road and Lothian Street were built. It was purchased by William Ogilvie in 1705. Tax was paid on 4 hearths there in 1694, when William Scott was probably Laird; other residents recorded there at that time were Adam Morton, John Goodfellow and Thomas Henderson. David Ogilvie paid the tax on 12 windows there in 1748. Robert Oliver was recorded as a resident there in 1770. In 1783 the lands passed to the Turnbulls of Fenwick through marriage, and this family sold them at the end of the 19th century. It was later home of historian David Dundas Scott, Provost Robert Fraser Watson and Thomas Lindsay Watson. Lindsay Watson had the old house demolished and a new house built using some of the same stones (also spelled ‘Brierieyards’, ‘Brieryyards’, ‘Brierieyards’ and ‘Briery-yards’; it is ‘Breyzyardis’ in 1456, ‘Breryyards’ in 1492, ‘Breryardis’ in 1510/1, ‘Brerezardis’ in 1517, ‘Bryeryards’ and ‘Breare Yrdes’ in 1545, ‘Brieryards’ in 1588, ‘Breeryayrd’ in 1603, ‘Brariezairdis’ in 1606, ‘Briereyairdis’ in 1611, ‘Breiryairdis’ in about 1621, ‘Brireizardis’ in 1633, ‘Brieryairdis’ in 1634, ‘Bririzairdis’ in 1637, transcribed as ‘Brieriayrdis’ in 1638, ‘Briericairdis’ in 1640, ‘Bridieyairdis’ in 1643, ‘Breidieyairdis’ in 1646, ‘Breiryairdis’ in 1648 and ‘Breiryairdis’ in 1649, ‘Breirie yards’ in 1663, ‘Brierieyairds’ and ‘Brieryairds’ in 1670, ‘Bridieyeryds’ in 1678 and ‘bririeyairdis’ in 1683; it is marked ‘Bririyairds’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Brieryards’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

brig (brig) n. a bridge – ‘To spent in Michael Stevenson’s, with the magistrates, at petitioning the mending of the auld brig, damaged by the flood …’ [BR1773], ‘Auld Brig shake hands, I maist can greet To see ye harried sae complete’ [WNK], ‘…Hawick Wattie’s brocht another Spring. Oo saw’im hesmel ayont the brig’ [WP], a gap between two things, particularly stacks of peet – ‘…to take no more ground to spread peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight els, and to leave sufficient briggs …’ [BR1743] (from Old English).

Brig (brig) n. Robert (d.c.1500) killed along with Adam ‘Barnifsader’ at ‘Kelshope’ (probably Kershope) by a group of Olivers and others from Strynds and nearby, who had remission for their crimes in 1502. In a second entry in 1502 they were named as Robert Oliver in Lustruther, Robert, son’s brother of David Oliver, James Oliver and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw. James (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran.

Brigend (brig-end) n. another name for Ashkirk Brigend.

Brigend (brig-end) n. Bridgend, former name for the houses, including the public house at Boscourter Bridge. It is stated that there was an inn there from 1701. The tenant of the farm there was George Stevenson in 1797. A new house and joiner’s shop were built by James Chisholme of Hobsburn in the early years of the 19th century. However, it was soon changed into a public house, with the joiner, Robert Turnbull, talking over as proprietor. This was around 1820, when the new toll road was opened. The Turnbull family also ran a grocer’s shop there, which, from 1835, was used as the first post office in the Rule valley. The rest of the row of cottages was built a little while after the pub (now the Horse and Hounds) by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Other early residents were mason Gilbert Boa, road contractor William Laidlaw and blacksmith George Stevenson (also written ‘Briggend’, it is ‘B. Bridgend’ in 1797).
Brigend

Brigend Hoose  (brig-end-hoose) n.  name sometimes used for Bridge Hoose.

Briggend  (brig-end) n.  Bridge-end, former settlement near Darnick which had a rudimentary bridge consisting of planks across 3 piers, for a long time it must have been the only bridges across the Tweed between Peebles and Berwick. It probably did not survive Hertford's army in 1545, and although the settlement is marked on Pont's 1609 map, there is no bridge there. It is explicitly mentioned in 1629 as being already ruined and was romanticised by Sir Walter Scott in 'the Monastery'. For some time afterwards there was a ferry across the Tweed at this location until the bridge was built at Darnick in 1750, and then replaced shortly afterwards.

Briggs  (brigz) n.  (Bridges, Briggs) Adam (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the Adam, son of Adam and Agnes Ridell, born in Hawick in 1648. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, who who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for gardener George Lamb in 1760. John (16th/17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was a witness, along with another weaver, Walter (presumably a relative), for a sasine of 1610. John (17th C.) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably related to the earlier weaver called John. John (17th C.) flesher recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1683 he was fined for insulting William Paisley and Michael Turnbull, 'calling of them two drunken elders'. He may be the John whose children born in Hawick included: Marion (b.1703); Andrew (b.1706); and John (b.1710). John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Lamb in 1781. Probably the same John married Isobel Scott in 1767 and their children included Isobel (b.1769). Bailie John (1810/1–87) Magistrate of the mid-1800s, of whom a portrait exists. He was a tailor by trade and was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. There were people of the same name at Mabonlaw in the mid-17th century. He was recorded at about 1 High Street in 1841 and on the Howegate in 1851 (when he employed 3 men). He was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Wilhelmina, sister of Provost John Nichol, and she died in 1865, aged 52. He later moved to Glasgow. Col. John (1825–93) 2nd son of Col. J.F. of Strathairly, he distinguished himself in India, retiring on full pay as Lieutenant Colonel. He was tenant at Linthill for a few years and then at Bonjedward. He was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt, but became permanently lame after his horse fell on him. He married a daughter of A. Lamont of Knockdow and secondly Louisa, daughter of Capt. Briggs. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire and a member of the Jedforest Club. He wrote ‘Heathen and Holy Lands’ (1859). In later life he lived in Hampshire, where he died. Michael (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, with surname sometimes ‘Bridge’ or ‘Bridges’. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being at a late night drunken brawl, although he stated he ‘was the Ridder who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan’. He is probably the Michael who witnessed baptisms for James Jolly, Andrew Jerdon and William Gardener (along with Adam Jerdan) in 1705. His wife was Helen Allan and they had a son John, born in Hawick in 1719. It is probably that he was the Michael, son to flesher Thomas, who was listed among the young men who were fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706. Patrick (17th C.) Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1693 he gave evidence before the Magistrates when John Hardie was accused of assaulting Steven Greenshields in St. Mary’s Kirk. He is probably the Patrick listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Patrick, married to Bessie Anderson, whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1678); William (b.1681); Patrick (b.1684); and Mungo (b.1687). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Grizzell Bridges and their children included John (b.1637) and Janet (b.1639). Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 when he was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick. He is listed separately from Thomas the the weaver. He could be the ‘flesher’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the man listed on the rental records for the farm of Branxholme Town in 1690, where he was ‘in Hawick’ and a cautioner, perhaps for Robert Richardson. Thomas (17th C.) weaver listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was charged with collecting money ‘westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’, suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He must have been older than the Thomas born in 1680, but could have been the father. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Wigholm, whose children born in Hawick included: an unnamed son (b.1672); William (b.1673); Margaret (b.1676); Isobel (b.1678); and Thomas (b.1680). He was presumably the flesher Thomas whose son Michael was among those fined for their part in the disturbances at the 1706 Common Riding. Thomas (17th C.) referred to as ‘younger, weaver’ in 1682 when he was fined for ‘abstracting and resetting of lime from the church style building’ (i.e. stealing cement from a building at the Kirk Style) having been seen by Bailie Laing. He is listed as ‘younger, weaver’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas (b.1680) probably son of Thomas and Margaret Wigholm. He married Jean Cook in 1707. It may be that there are 2 generations of Thomases confused with each other here Walter (16th/17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1610 he was witness to a sasine in Hawick, along with John and others. Walter (b.1815/6) listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a shoemaker on the High Street. In the 1851 census he was a shoemaker at around 7 Tower Knowe. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a shoemaker on the High Street. His wife was Betsy. William (d.c.1684) weaver in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1684. He is probably the William who was on the Council in 1668 and also the weaver called William who was elected to the Council in late 1648. Probably his relatives (and perhaps he himself) were the 3 people named ‘Bridges’ who were imprisoned in the Tower by the Bailie of Regality in 1668, for ‘ryving of others hares’, with the Bailies of Hawick requesting their release; they appealed to the Supreme Court for the fine imposed on them (note that this was sometimes formerly written ‘Bridge’, ‘Bridgs’ and ‘Bridges’).

Brighoose (brig-hoos) n. Brighouse or Bridgehouse, former place name for an area on the opposite side of the Liddel valley from Dinlabyre. Brighoose Burn runs south under the old railway line, past Cleuch Head and Steele Road to join the Liddel Water near Dinlabyre. There were formerly 2 fortified houses here, marked on Pont’s 1608 map as ‘Brighouse’ and ‘Brighouscleyhead’. There were Nixons at the first in the early 1500s and the second was occupied by Croziers. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 16 shillings and the tenants were Alexander Nixon and 2 William Nixons. William Nixon, his son William, together with George, Ringan and Dandy Nixon, are also recorded there in 1544. Rowie Nixon was in Brighouscleyhead’ in 1622, and William Elliot was also a tenant there. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. William Nichol and William Johnstone were at ‘Bridghouse’ in 1694 and Hugh Beattie was tenant in ‘Bridghouscleyhead’. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads; it was there written as ‘Robssland alias Brighouse’. Patrick Oliver died there in 1779 and Robert Oliver was farmer there in 1797. Labourer William Hardie lived there in 1835. The site of the first house is indicated beside the Bridgehouse Burn on an 1816 estate map of Liddesdale and on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map, while the second has been suggested to have been at Cleuch Head, but there is no obvious sign of anything of great antiquity there (it is ‘the Brighous’ in 1516, ‘Brihows’ and ‘Brigehows’ in 1544, ‘Brighous’ in 1667, ‘Brighhouse’ in 1691 and ‘Bridgehouse’ in 1797; ‘Brihous’ and ‘Brihouscleyhead’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Brihous’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Brighoose Burn (brig-hoos-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near the Steele and running southwards to join the Liddel near Dinlabyre.

Brighoose Plantin (brig-hoos-plawn-in) n. plantation along the Brighouse Burn in Liddesdale, to the north-west of Dinlabyre.

the Bright Eyed Daughters (thu-bri’-Id-dow’-urz) n. organisation set up in 2008 with the aim of helping to educate the schoolchildren and townspeople of Hawick about the Common Riding. They support the Mosstroopers’ gymkhana, organise an annual dinner, and arranged for upgraded landscaping for the Hornshole Monument in 2014.

Bright Street (bri’-stree’) n. street in the West End, very steep at its upper end. It was built around 1880 and named after reformer John Bright (1811-89); Bright was brought up a Quaker and attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire, where some of Hawick’s Wilson family also were sent at about the same time. The entrance to the Convent (later St. Margaret’s Home) is about half-way up the street.
Hawick’s first bridge was the ‘Auld Brig’ across the Slitrig, built possibly as early as the 13th century (but more likely around 1500), and demolished in 1851. A document of 1507/8 refers to a tower in Hawick, owned by the Scots of Whitchesters that was mysteriously described as ‘between the bridges’, suggesting that there was another bridge in the town at that time. A sasine of 1622 refers to ‘the king’s highway which leads between the bridges’. In 1701 there is a record of Burgh debts ‘for repairing of the two bridges’, but what the other bridge was is unknown (although it is possible it is simply the main bridge over the Slitrig lade). There were certainly various bridges across the mill lades, these ‘damm brigs’ being mentioned as early as 1704. In the early 18th century there is a record of payment towards construction of a bridge at the ‘Hackman’s Dubb’, the location of which is also unknown. In 1715 it is recorded that a man and horse were hired to carry sand to repair the ‘bridges’ (making it clear that there was more than one). A Session record of 1721 refers to both ‘ye Bridge’ and ‘ye Meekle bridge’, but it is unclear if they refer to 2 separate bridges. The first bridge over the Teviot was built in 1741 at the Sandbed, and rebuilt in 1865. The bridge at Hornshole, the next down the Teviot, was completed in 1774, and the North Brig in 1832. In 1802 the Council decided not to build 2 new bridges across the Slitrig on account of lack of funds. Other nearby road bridges across the Teviot include Martin’s Brig (1826), Braxholm Bridge, the bridge at Broadhaugh, Teindside Bridge, the bridge towards Falnash, and the bridge to the Merrylaw road. There is also a suspension footbridge near Braxholm Castle and other footbridges near Commonside, across both the Teviot and the Allan Water near Newmill, across the Borthwick near Roberton and at the Snoot, and several small ones in the upper Teviot beyond Teviothead. The Waverley Bridge was added near the North Brig in 2000. Footbridges within Hawick include Victoria Brig (1851), the Lawson Brig (1886), Mansfield Brig (1888), Langlands Brig (1894), the Laurie Brig (1924), the James Thomson Brig (2005), all across the Teviot, the Slitrig footbridge to the Back Braes path, and later the ‘Joogly Brig’ across the Borthwick. A more practical bridge (than the Auld Brig) across the Slitrig, called the Slitrig Bridge (later renamed Drumlaunrig Bridge) was completed in 1777. Tower Mill was built over the Slitrig in 1852, with the adjacent Kirkstile bridge replacing the Auld Brig. The Exchange Buildings were also built over the Slitrig in 1865. Slitrig Crescent Bridge was built in 1864 (once the site of a former footbridge called the ‘Wyre Brig’), the bridge to Lynnwood House around 1860, Crawbyres Brig came later and Hummelknowes Brig was built in 1869. The footbridge behind Lyle & Scott’s was built for workers in the West-end in about 1957. Other Slitrig bridges include those at Whitlawhaugh, Colislinn, Wudfit Brig, and at Stobs Castle. There are also many small footbridges across the streams in the vicinity of Hawick, as well as across the mill lades within the town. Local railway bridges were the Slitrig Viaduct (‘Six-Arch Brig’), the Mill Peth Brig, the Loch Park Road Brig, the Bourtree Place Brig and the Station Viaduct, while road bridges across the railway included the Wellogate Brig and the Melgund Brig. In the late 18th century there were only 2 bridges in the entire Parish of Bedrule. Denholm had a chain suspension bridge from 1827, replaced by the Teviot Bridge completed in 1865. Many of these bridges have of course been repaired, extended or replaced entirely.

Brig Sike (brig-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising around Ewe Knowes and running south to become part of Ryedale Burn.

brik (brik) v. to break – ‘hei minds o brikkin the odd wund’, ‘sticks an stanes’ll brik yer banes, but names’ll never hurt ee’, ‘Let us brik thair ban’s asinder …’ [HSR], ‘Brik thair teeth, O God, in thair mooth …’ [HSR], ‘…o’ her gaun tae the well for witter, yince ower often whereby she may fa’ an brick a leg o airm …’ [JEDM], n. a break, breach – ‘there was a brik in up it the bank, when somebody threw a brick in’, ‘the brik o frost’ is a thaw’ (also spelled ‘brick’).

Brik Neck (brik-nek) n. Break Neck, sloping area to the south-west of Whitfield and Calaburn farms.

brint (brin’) n., poet. cash, money – ‘As for my- sel’, I’d be content, Wi’ but a cannie share o’ brint’ [JoHa].

brintle (brin’ul) n., poet. cash, money – ‘Their oh’s, an’ ah’s, and pridfu’ selfish canting – Joost gie them brintle, they’ll the lave do wanting.’ [JoHa].

Brisbane (briz-bin) n. James (1792–1862) from Dumfries, he was a hairdresser in Hawick. In 1810 he enlisted in the 91st Regiment of Foot and served in the Peninsular War and at Waterloo. He served for over 6 years, and was discharged for poor eyesight and being undersized (he stood just 5 feet 1 inch tall). He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a hairdresser on the High Street and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He is recorded at 2 Silver Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861, also being listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1811 he married Christian Hislop, just before being deployed in the army, and she lived with her family in Hawick; she died in 1823 at the age of 28. Their children were: William (1811–90), who emigrated to Andes, New York; Margaret (1818–1901); James (b.1820), who studied medicine at Glasgow University; and Robert (1823–97), who emigrated with his brother. In about 1834 he secondly married Mary Elder and their children included: Isabella (1834–52); and James (1835–1901). He is buried at St. Mary’s.

Sir Thomas Makdougall (1773–1860) born near Largs, he had a strong connection with the Kelso area, marrying Anna Maria McDougall (or ‘Makdougall’), heiress of Makerstoun, and advancing that family name to his own. He was educated in Mathematics and Astronomy at the University of Edinburgh, and joined the army in 1789. He had a distinguished military career, becoming Major-General and was also Governor of New South Wales 1821–25, establishing a constitution for the colony, and building the first astronomical observatory in Australia, at Parramatta. The Brisbane river and the city on its banks were named after him. He returned to Scotland in 1825, taking up the life of a country gentleman. He was President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1832 (succeeding Sir Walter Scott) and collected honorary degrees and other recognition for his scientific work. He built an astronomical and magnetic observatory at Makerstoun, and was the first President of the Tweedside Physical and Antiquarian Society, which set up a museum in Kelso in 1898. There is a sundial to his memory in the village of Makerstoun.

The British Chronicle (thu-bri’-eesh-kro-nee-kul) n. first newspaper established in the Scottish Borders. It was founded by James Palmer in Kelso in 1783. It was also known as the Kelso Chronicle and the Union Gazette.

British Linen Bank see British Linen Co.

British Linen Co. (bri’-eesh-li-nin-ko) n. British Linen Company, the former name of the British Linen Bank. It was the first bank to establish a branch in Hawick, in 1783. This was under the management of Bailie Thomas Turnbull at 29 High Street. It later moved to 18 High Street where it remained until the middle of the 19th century, with Gilbert Davidson the agent for a long time. In Wood’s 1824 map the bankers listed are ‘Messrs. Dickson & Davidson’, and it appears to be the main bank in town. A new building was constructed for the bank at 7 High Street (previously the ‘Ruecastle Tenement’) in 1862, designed by David Cousins, the company’s official architect. The building is unusual for its first floor balcony. The bank was founded in Scotland in 1746, was taken over by Barclays in 1919 and acquired by the Bank of Scotland in 1969. The Hawick branch has been a Bank of Scotland since 1971.

the British Lions (thu-bri’-eesh-li-inz) n. touring rugby team, formed in 1888 (but not named until 1924), and with players selected from among the 4 home nations.

the British Public Hoose (thu-bri’-eesh-pub-leek-hooz) n. hostelry with luncheon rooms on Wilton Path in the latter part of the 19th century.

Britton (bri’in) n. Lilias wife of Rev. Stanley, she became the first female President of the Archaeological Society in 2001.
briz (briz) v., poet. to bruise, press, squeeze, rub together – ‘I mind o’ hard frosts and clear munelicht, O’ brizzin numb neives on my breaks’ [WL], n., arch. a bruise, contusion – ‘Nocht ailed ma cluits a’ brizzin numb neives on my breeks’ [ECS] (also written ‘brizz’).

broad (bröd) adj. strikingly regional – ‘hei speaks broad Hawick’ (cf. the older braid).

Broad (bröd) n. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Horselee in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. Michael is listed before him and so surely related. Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Horselee in the Slitrig valley, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

Broad Law (bröd-law) n. highest hill in the Borders, reaching 2,756 feet (840 m) at its broad summit east of Tweedsmuir.

Broadlee (bröd-, bråd-lee) n. farm across the Borthwick from Deanburnhaugh, with nearby earthworks. It was contained in Hawick Parish until the Parish of Robertson was formed in 1689/90. In 1479 the lands were held by Robert Turnbull of Broadlee, and it then extended to a ‘five merk land of old extent’. Either the same or a later Robert Turnbull is recorded there in 1498. This is probably the ‘Braidlie’ recorded as part of the property of the Baron in the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home purchased the lands in 1512/3 from Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1535 the King revoked several charters relating to lands of Alexander, Lord Home (who was beheaded in 1516), including the lands here, being granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to the deceased Gavin Jardine. However, in 1523/4 sasine was given to George Lord Home and in 1551 it was confirmed as one of the lands inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as superior, held ‘brench for a red rose on 24th June’. In 1535 this is probably the ‘Braidlee in the Forest’ where a group of Armstrongs stole sheep from John Hope and John Hall, the King’s shepherds; these same 2 men were recorded being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. In 1572 and 1594 it was included in the list of lands belonging to the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. It was sold to Martin Elliot of Prickinghaugh and Braidlie in about 1606, the 4000 merks being paid to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1607. In 1615 it was listed among the Baron’s lands, and also had the ‘pendicles’ of Philhope and Eilrig attached to it; this connection further confuses the Braidle that was seat of the Elliots in Hermitage (who also once owned Philhope), with this farm on the Borthwick. The mill there is also mentioned in 1615 among the Baron’s properties. In a 1627 valuation was ‘es- timat to 50 lb. in stok, 10 lb. in teynd’. In 1643 the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Woll and Castleside) at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Hep. In the mid-17th century it was separately formed out of ‘Wester Broadley’, ‘Mid Broadly’ and ‘Easter Broadley’. There were 14 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, when it was also labelled ‘The thrie braidlies’. In 1650 the reversion with the Elliots was exercised by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry, and it passed out of the hands of the Elliots. However, it was still recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when John Elliot (brother to Elliot of Falnash) paid tax on £216. William Elliot of Philhope paid the land tax on £216 there in 1678. It was part of the estates of Chisholme of Stiches and there were Chisholmes of Broadlee around 1700. The Hearth tax rolls for Hawick Parish record ‘Braidlie not Listed yet paid yr’, but the tenant’s name is not given. Thomas Stavert was living there in 1762. Thomas Davidson in 1772 and Thomas Graham in 1794. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Philhope at £216. Thomas Jackson and his family were there in 1841. There is an extensive set of ancient earthworks to the north-east of the farmhouse, roughly oval in shape, about 50 m by 53 m in size, and consisting of an inner and outer bank (it is ‘Bradlee’ in 1479 and was formerly ‘Braidle’, ‘Braidlea’, ‘Braidlee’, ‘Braidley’, ‘Braid Ley’, ‘Braidleyis’, ‘Braidlie’, ‘Braidlies’, ‘Broadlies’, ‘Broadly’, etc., and later ‘Broadlea’; it is ‘Braidlies’ on a 1650 parish map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map records ‘W. Braidly’ and ‘P. Braidly’, although this may be an error for ‘E.’; the name may derived from ‘Braidlie’ on the Hermitage Water, through the Elliots of Braidlie, who acquired the nearby Philhope in the mid-16th century).

Broadlee (bröd-lee) n. former farm in Askirk Parish, near Broadlee Hill. It was once part of the Whitslade estate, with Scotts there at early times. It was owned by Cochrane of Ashkirk in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Alexander and John Scott ‘in braidee’ are recorded in 1493 and in 1494/5, separately John and John son of Alexander Scott; this was probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. ‘Mar. Scott, for Braidlies’ was listed in the 1643 county valuation, with the lands valued at £160. Probably the same ‘Goodwife of braidlie’ paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. The men listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls are William Grieve, Andrew Scott and John Scott. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson and valued at £160; the teinds of the lands (along with Castleside) were £62. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was valued (along with Salenside and Castleside) at £519 (it is ‘Braidley’ in 1609, ‘Braudlie’ in 1694 and ‘Braidlies’ in 1788; it is marked ‘Braidlie’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, ‘Braidly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Bradlee’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Broadlee Burn (brōd-lee-burn) n. small stream which runs roughly north past the farm of Broadlee to join the Muselee Burn.

Broadlee Burnfit (brōd-lee-burn-fi’) n. former farmstead near Broadlee in the Borthwick valley. It may be the same as the modern farm of Broadlee. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1771.

Broadlee Dean (brōd-lee-deen) n. name for the wooded area of the Muselee Burn between the farms of Muselee and Broadlee.

Broadlee Hill (brōd-lee-hil) n. hill to the west of Ashkirk, reaching a height of 265 m and containing a hill-fort. The fort lies to the south-west of the summit, and is oval in shape, about 90 m by 60 m in size. The ditch on the north-west side is particularly impressive. There are also some small enclosures at the north-eastern and south-eastern ends. Just south of the farm are the remains of a possible farmstead. On the south-eastern slopes and also to the north-west and east are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Broadlee Loch (brōd-lee-loch) n. small lake in the hills between Deanburnhaugh and North-house, above Broadlee farm, and with the Catrail passing nearby. It was drained in the 19th century to provide ‘marl’, and was then known as the ‘Marl Loch’. However, it was later restored to a lake, and used (along with the nearby Philhope Loch) to boost the water level for Hawick’s water-powered mills. The old road from the head of the Borthwick to Hawick used to pass near here.

Broadlee Moss (brōd-lee-mos) n. high area between Broadlee Loch and Philhope farm. The hills there reach a height of 297 m.

Broadleeshiel (brōd-lee-shiel) n. former farmstead near the farm of Broadlee in the Borthwick valley. It was ‘Broadleeshiel’ in 1762, when Robert Scott was living there.

brock (brok) n. the badger, Meles taxus –'The stinkan brockke wi’ his lang lank lyske, Shotte up his gruntle to see’ [JTe].

Brockie (bro-kee) n. David (b.1796/7) son of Thomas and brother of George. In 1825 he joined Thomas on the island of St. Helena, as clerk for the East India Comany’s farms there. When he returned to the Rule valley in 1833 he brought with him a walking stick made from a tree that grew near the former Emeror Napoleon’s bedroom and a wash-stand made from the bedroom door. In 1861 he was at Minto Kains, farming 1,000 acres and employing 11 people. His wife was Jessie and their children included: Catherine; and Thomas, who was farmer at Hawthornside.

George (19th C.) son of Thomas. About 1823 he was chosen by the Governor of St. Helena (Gen. Alexander Walker, of Bowland near Galashiel) as superintendent of the East India Company’s farms on the island, not many years after Napoleon’s death. He hired his brother David as his clerk. They converted Longwood, the former Emperor’s house for agricultural use, with cattle in his bedroom and goats in the saloon. They remained until 1833 when the company’s charter expired. On his return he married Catherine, only daughter of Robert Symington, farmer at Edstoun, near Peebles. This was against the wishes of her parents, and was apparently an elopement. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant at Barnhills in the late 1700s, moving to Prieston (in Bowden) in his last years before retirement. He is recorded there in the 1789-97 Horse Tax Rolls for having a saddle horse. He also owned 6 farm horses in 1797. He married Mary Nisbet and they lost a daughter in 1800 years before retirement. He is recorded there in the 1789-97 Horse Tax Rolls for having a saddle horse. He also owned 6 farm horses in 1797. He married Mary Nisbet and they lost a daughter in 1800.

Thomas (b.1796/7) son of Thomas. In 1833 he brought with him a walking stick made from a tree that grew near the former Emeror Napoleon’s bedroom and a wash-stand made from the bedroom door. In 1861 he was at Minto Kains, farming 1,000 acres and employing 11 people. His wife was Jessie and their children included: Catherine; and Thomas, who was farmer at Hawthornside.

Brodie (bro-dee) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) born in Selkirk, he was son of Walter, publican at the Black Bull in the Sandbed. He was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed at Ladylaw Place. In 1861 he was on Albion Place (probably the north side). He married Mary Govenlock in Wilton in 1848 and their children included Walter, George, Elizabeth, Helen, Catherine, Andrew and Jane. Andrew (1856-1928) son of Alexander and Mary Govenlock, he was a knitter manufacturer in Hawick. His company was known as A. Brodie & Co., with its ‘Kumfy’ brand, which was taken over by Innes, Henderson in the 1920s. He married Barbara (1853-1928) daughter of farmer James Cairns. They had a son Alexander *(b.1881). Rev. B. principal teacher of the Wilton Lodge Academy 1892-98, and the West End Academy before that, running the schools along with his wife. James (b.1781/2) from Westruther, he was farmer at Deanfoot in Minto Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1851 he was farming 225 acres and employing 10 labourers. His children included James *(b.1807), Mary *(b.1809), Giles *(b.1809), Stuart (b.1820) and Agnes *(b.1823). James A. (19th/20th C.) foreman printer with the Hawick News, he was well known as a promoter of the Temperance movement and the Friendly Societies in the town. He acted as Session Clerk for St. George’s Kirk 1924-35 as well as helping run the Sunday School there. Michael (19th C.) local architect who designed the Buccleuch Hotel in 1882 and the frontage of the main Hawick Co-op Store in 1885. He practised in at least the 1860s to 80s. He also designed the Old Parish Church Halls about 1883, as well as the South U.P. Church in Langholm. He was still alive in 1901. Peter (b.1811/12) born in Selkirkshire, he was a mason in the Dean. He was living at the Bronze Age

13 Burn Row in 1841 and 1851, which was just called Wilton Dean in 1861. His wife was Annie and their children included Janet, Helen, Agnes, Jean, Margaret, Walter, Elizabeth, Annie, Betsy and William. Robert (19th C.) from Nottylees, near Kelso. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule, taking over from Mr. Haliburton in 1827 (shortly after William Pringle) and remaining until about 1846. He did not carry on the limeworks started by Mr. Pringle. Walter (1786–1849) born at Sunderland near Selkirk, son of Peter and Mary Murray. He was innkeeper at the Black Bull on the Sandbed. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Helen and children Jane, Alexander (innkeeper in Innerleithen) and Helen. He married Helen Brydon (1787–1873). Their son Alexander became a grocer in Wilton. Their daughter Margaret (d.1842) appears to have had an illegitimate son (Robert Brodie Wilson) with cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. The family are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Upper Keith in East Lothian. In 1793 he purchased Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. He combined them into a farm he called Chesterhill, although the purchase was never completed (either because he could not come up with all the money or because of haggling over the sale), and he eventually had to give up his Rulewater ambitions. Nevertheless he is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 9 horses. He is probably the William of Gatehousecote recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He had a son, John.

the Brodies (thu-brō-deez) n. name recorded for a group who burned Hawick in 1565, stated in a letter from the Earl of Bedford to Sir W. Cecil. It is uncertain who they were (there are no obviously relevant local occurrences of the name ‘Brody’ in those times). The most likely is that what was meant was ‘the Braidees’, i.e. the followers of Elliot of Braidlie, who was feuding with the Scotts of Brauxholme around then. This raid may have been what led to the ambush of the Scotts at Ewes Doors.

the Bromyleaks (thu-brō-mee-leeks) n. former name for an area between the main B6399 and Hermitage Castle.

the Bronze Age (thu-bronz-āj) n. period between the Stone and Iron Ages, characterised by the use of bronze tools and weapons, lasting in Britain from around 2300 B.C.E. until about 750 B.C.E. There is plenty of evidence of occupation in this period in the Tweed and Teviot valleys and their tributaries, including cairns, stone circles, burial cists, standing stones, axe heads, bronze pins and ornaments, pottery and beads. 3 bronze shields found near Yetholm were one of the most impressive Borders discoveries, and a mirror was found near there in 2004. The Hawick Museum has a flanged axe from the Middle Bronze Age, as well as other artefacts from a similar period. There are 9 Bronze Age burial cairns situated around Smasha and Whitfield Hills, a few miles west of Hawick, each being about 30 feet in diameter and only 2 or 3 feet high.

broo (broo) n., arch. brow – ‘...And mither’s got nae broos to kiss, For none o’ them were greetin’ On Young Year’s Day’ [TCh] ‘The croon o’ contentment is light on her broo’ [WAP], ‘His lang drawn face an’ furrowed broo Support his waefu’ manner ...’ [WP] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

the broo (thu-buo) n. the dole, unemployment benefit, or the office where people sign on for the dole.

broo-band (broo-hawnd) n., arch. a brow-band – ‘It was interesting to see the more elderly of the women ... in many cases wearing the ‘broo-band’ ...’ [V&M].

brook (brook) v., arch. to possess, have the use of – ‘...and considering what large room and share they brook and possess of ye said kirk, they earnestly desired that the school might be built in anie other convenient place’ [PR1714].

the Broom (thu-broom) n. farm on the Teviot near Ancrum. It was purchased in the 1790s by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters and William Brown was tenant there in 1797 – ‘...And that day he’d been a’ the way doon at the Broom’ [UB].

Broombaucks (broom-bawks) n. former farmstead to the west of Hass, near the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes. The stream there is Broombaucks Burn. There are signs of stock enclosures, rig lines and an ancient farmstead there.

Broom Cavers (broom-kā-vurz) n. former farm near Caverton in Eckford Parish. It is unconnected with Cavers Parish, even although there were Douglases there in the 17th century.

Broomhaa (broom-haw) n. Broomhall, former farmstead just north of Greensidehall, identified with the more modern Broomiebrae and Broomicknowe (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Broomhill (broom-hil) n. farmstead to the south-west of the modern Flex and directly south of the old Flex house. There is now no sign of the former farmhouse, although its location is still Broomieknowe (broo-mee-klo) n. farm on the left off Stirches Road, shortly after Raeson Park. It was built for manufacturer Francis E. Wilson in about 1880 and is now divided into flats.

Broomhills (broo-milz) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, just east of Chesters. Rev. William Bennet owned the lands in 1643, valued at £800. There were 2 hearths recorded there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas Mein farmed there around the 1860s (also called ‘Broomhill’, it is written ‘broonhills’ in 1694; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Broomholm (broo-mum) n. farm about 2 miles south of Langholm, which was held by the Maxwells and farmed by the Armstrongs in the 16th century. John Byres and Mrs. V. Pattersin were there in 1821. There is a nearby Roman fort, covering about 4 1/4 acres and occupied roughly from the years 85–100 (it is ‘Brunholme’ in 1585 and ‘Bromholme’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Broomiebrae (broo-mee-brä) n. former farmstead near Greensidehall, once part of the estates of the Scotts of Whitehaugh. The farmers there in 1792 were Robert Scoon, Andrew and James Waugh, James Black and Robert Renwick. Robert Scoon was there in 1812. It was later the name of a villa-style residence reached off Stiches Road (also called ‘the Broomiebraes’; probably the same as ‘Broomhall’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Broomiebraes Spring (broo-mee-bräz-spring) n. former water supply in Wilton, near Broomiebrae, but its precise location uncertain – ‘O, few folk mind now o’ the Broomiebrae Well, O, few folk mind now o’ the Broomiebrae Well; Yet in my young days mony a story we’d tell As we a’ sat around the Broomiebrae Well’. [JCG].

Broomieknowe (broo-mee-now) n. lands owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from the 16th century, possibly the same as the farm of this name between Langholm and Canonbie. It is recorded as ‘Brunecknow’ in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574.

Broomieknowe (broo-mee-now) n. house off Greensidehall Road, just west of the former U.P. Manse. It was for a while the residence of Provost Mitchell, then purchased by Sir Thomas Henderson and rented for the use of the minister of St. George’s before being gifted to the church as its new Manse in 1925. This is also the name of a house in Denholm, once a blacksmith’s.

Broomielaw (broo-mee-law) n. ?? – ‘Westward Ho! We’re bound for Canada Where the mighty mountains rise; Ships await us at the Broomielaw To take us to our prize’ [JEDM].
Headhous’ who was sentenced to the stocks in 1683; this was for insulting the Bailies in court after breaking out of prison and running ‘up and down the town . . . more like ane mad and distracted man than a reasonable person, who had solemnly made and given his burgess oath’. His son Adam was born in 1707. Other children may have included: an unnamed daughter (b.1690); Bessie (b.1697); Nicholas (b.1700); Benjamin (b.1702); Agnes (b.1703); Blench (b.1706); and John (b.1711). He could be the Adam, son of Adam and Malie Renwick, born in Hawick in 1652. Adam ‘Yedie’ (c.1790–1853) born in Hawick, son of Tom and Beatrix (or ‘Beattie’) Kyle. His father was a Burgess, and was said to disapprove of his interest in drawing, so that he would hide away by the Teviot at the Sandbed, drawing on slates, and painting using crushed up stones. He apprenticed as a shoemaker, but was more interested in painting and fishing. He never received any instruction in art, but was completely self-taught. He gave up shoe-making, after encouragement by the assistant minister, Charles Thomson. He was said to have a great ability to tell funny stories, but detested getting up early in the morning, and a tale is recounted of how he scared his father one early morning by setting up a sheep’s head with a theatrical costume. In another story, an example of his aversion to whisky as a young man, he was asked to return to Town from the Loanhead, to procure a bottle of whisky for his friends on a hot day, but instead came back with a load of treacle toffee, which they proceeded to put down his shirt in revenge. He painted several portraits of local worthies in the early 1800s; the ‘Brown Gallery’ in the Museum is composed of portraits of Wullie Gotterson, Robbie Davidson, Wull Shush, Wull the Cutler (twice), Robert Rutherford, and an unnamed girl. There are also paintings (somewhere) of Wullie Bullock, Nannie Cumming and John Brown. Although relatively crude, these are amongst the earliest likenesses of inhabitants of Hawick. There are also miniatures of Mr. & Mrs. Turnbull of Allars, Isabell and Margaret Elliot of the Cross Wsnd, and Miss Grieve of Howden, Selkirk. Additionally he painted ‘Leistering on the Teviot’ and ‘Scene in the house of James Ruickbie the poet’, which are also in the Museum (while ‘At Hornshole’ and ‘Scene in the Sandgate of Newcastle’ are additionally referred to as being donated to the Museum in 1863, but their present whereabouts are unknown). At the age of 30 he became paralysed in his right side, and retaught himself to use his left hand. He subsequently left Hawick, living in Alnwick for a while, where he married Eleanor Longstaff and had a second family. He later moved to Newcastle to become a portrait painter; he is described as a portrait painter from Scotland living in All Saints, Newcastle according to the 1841 census. However, he also seems to have been referred to as ‘Ralph’ in the 1851 census, suggesting he may have changed his name (or used that as his artist’s name, or else it was simply a mistake). He married Agnes Scott in Hawick, and she was born in Ashkirk Parish around 1782. Their children included: Thomas (b.c.1810), who married Jane Guthrie and was a shoemaker; William (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Ferguson and was also a shoemaker; and James S. (b.c.1822). Their children William and Beatrix died as infants in 1815 and 1816. His wife Agnes appears to be living alone in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and although she was listed as a widow, it may be that they divorced (and he abandoned his young family). In Alnwick in 1832 he married Eleanor, daughter of William Longstaff and Eleanor Forster; his 2nd wife died in about 1843. They had 4 children together (2 before they were married): Adam; Charles; James; and Agnes (b.1837). Little is known about his later life, although W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) says that he remained cheerful through ill-health and poor circumstances, and that the phrase ‘as lichtsome as Yedie Broon’ became popular in Hawick. He died in Newcastle in the 1853 cholera outbreak and was buried in a mass grave in St. Anne’s Churchyard there. Alexander (18th C.) employed as manufacturer in Hawick, relating to the spinning school and early industry supported by Douglas, Elliott, Chisholme and other local gentry. He was overseer for the company from about 1739, but was forced to resign in 1742 due to concern over performance of his duties. Alexander (18th C.) Session Clerk of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1751. Alexander (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Esq. Orchard’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His portrait, by William Irving of Longtown, was exhibited in Carlisle in 1824. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Browns. Alexander Laing ‘Sandy’ (b.1851) manufacturer of Galashiels who was brother of Andrew Haddon’s mother. He was born in Selkirk, son of William and Marjory Donaldson Laing. He was Liberal M.P. for the Border Burghs 1886–92. He beat G.O. Trevelyan in the 1886 election with the narrow margin of 30 votes, the election being fought largely on the Home Rule Bill, with Trevelyan then a Unionist and Brown a Liberal. He was defeated by Thomas Shaw in 1892. He married Esther Brown, daughter of the minister of Crossmichael, Kirkcudbrightshire. Andrew (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Gledstains. Andrew (1672/3-1750) resident of Castleton Parish. He and his wife Betsie Turnbull are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Andrew (17th C.) shepherd at Whittlaw in 1740. He married Agnes Scott and their children son Andrew (b.1740) was baptised in Hawick. He is probably the Andrew who married Agnes Scott in Minto Parish in 1733. Other children who may have been his, with the mother’s name not given, are: Bessie (b.1734), baptised in Hobkirk; William (b.1737) in Hobkirk; Isabel (b.1738) in Jedburgh; Marion (b.1739) in Cavers; Helen (b.1744) in Crailing; Christian (b.1745) in Minto; George (b.1747) in Jedburgh; Adam (b.1748) in Minto; and Andrew (b.1750) in Jedburgh. The witnesses in 1740 were shoemaker William Wright and Robert Scott, servant to Rev. William Somerville. Archibald (b.c.1810) from Ancrum, he was farmer at Craggs in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer on 70 acres, employing 1 labourer. He was still recorded there in 1868. Carl (19th/10th C.) writer of the poem ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is probably the same as ‘Karl’. Charles (b.c.1800) foreman at Nixon’s Mill. He was living by the factory in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Thomas and Charles. Clement (19th C.) born at Bankhousestone in Midlothian. He was a boarder at Yarrow School, along with his brother Tom. He was from the Tower Inn in Hawick, and so presumably son of innkeeper Billy. He became long guard on the mail coach from Edinburgh to Langholm and was later an innkeeper in Langholm. In 1851 he was keeper of the Crown Inn in Langholm. His wife Agnes was from Wilton Parish. David ‘Gallopin Davie’ (1800-69) eldest son of Peter of Rawflatt and Margaret Elliot. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1823 and farmed at Houndlee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. About 1846 he moved to Wales to work as an estate agent and died there. He married Miss Bedford from Ireland, then later Margaret Shortreede, and also married a third time. David ‘Dave’ first Cornet from Stirches, being selected in 1979. He worked with Lyle & Scotts, then helped train racehorses with Alistair Whillans, before becoming a builder’s labourer in Edinburgh. He married his Lass, Margaret McLeod. George (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule, mentioned in the 1562 Feu-Rule Baronial land dispute. He is probably an ancestor of the later Browns at Hallrule. George (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. George (18th C.) contracted by Sir Gilbert Elliott (on behalf of local gentlemen interested in manufacturing in the Hawick district) in 1736 to use some looms for manufacturing coarse, tarred wool. He appears to have been replaced by Alexander Brown by 1739. George (18th/19th C.) son of William, landlord of the Tower Hotel. He was Cornet in 1811. George (19th C.) apparently a native of Jedburgh who became Cornet in 1854. He took over the grocery business at 9 High Street from Robert Thomson, and was thereafter referred to as ‘Cornet Broon’. George (1815-86) son of James and Lizzie Hope, he was born at the Carterhaugh Toll Bar. At age 15 he ran away to Canada, returning 11 years later with a French-Canadian wife (Margaret Egan, 1825-1901) and starting a long series of jobs. He first became toll-keeper of the Tweed Toll (between Gala and Selkirk), moving to Whillan Toll (between Gala and Stow) after a year, then to Belses, Deanbrae, Hawick Wester Toll, Deanbrae and Wester Toll again. While the railway was being built he drove a cart to Whitrope for James Turnbull (grocer) and later for John Young (baker). After that he ran a green-grocer’s shop at 43 High Street, where he also kept cows. He later moved to the Crown Close, where he still kept cows, and sold fresh herring in season. His children were Mary Ann (who died young), James (controller of Greenock Post Office), John (who became an engineer), George (a wool-sorter of Slitrig Bank) and Mary (who married William Davidson, Provost of Haddington). Hector (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed in the same place. Hector (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and may be related to the man of the same name in Minto Parish. Isobella (b.1811/2) originally from Selkirk, she is listed as grocer in Denholm from 1837 until at least the 1860s. She probably lived on Sunnyside, and was living alone in 1851. James (15th/16th C.) appointed as attorney to Sir William Douglas to represent him at the giving of sasine for the Barony of Hawick in 1511/2. His name is recorded as ‘Jacobo Browne’ and the ceremony took place at the Mote. He is probably the same ‘Jacobo’ who was witness to the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1514. James (16th C.) mentioned in one of Hawick’s first existing sasine of 1558. It is stated there that he owned the lands to the north of those being transferred, suggesting perhaps around the modern Buccleuch Street. He may have been related to Thomas, who held lands according to the 1537 Charter. James (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire. His lands in Hawick were valued at £L. He may have been related to Robert, who was also a landowner in Hawick at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at ‘mynholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1703 he was fined for being found drunk in the house (i.e. pub) of Robert Brown after 10 o’clock. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Janet Fletcher in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Andrew (b.1766); William (again, b.1768); James (b.1769); Walter (b.1772); and Betty (b.1776). The last 4 children were baptised in Yetholm. Jean (17th C.) recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1479, but perhaps he was the same John who was nominated as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1479, but not confirmed. John (15th C.) witness to a document of 1484/5 giving lands in Mangerton to Walter Scott of Braxholme and also witness to a document relating to Whitchesters. He could be the same man as ‘Johannes Browne’ who was among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for the capture of John Douglas of Balvery. He may be related to Adam who was also... listed there. John (17th C.) recorded as Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in the 1660s. John (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 for miller James Scott. John (18th C.) recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer’s book of 1767 when he was paid ‘for going post to Edinburgh with a letter’. It is unclear what his occupation was, but presumably it included traveling. John (18th/19th C.) carrier of Denholm, listed along with Alex Hogg, in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. They went from Denholm to Edinburgh every Monday fortnight. John (b.c.1790) carter on the Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen, and their children included Beattie, Ann, Helen, Thomas, Janet, Mary and Agnes. He could be the same man as the Denholm carrier. John (c.1782–c.1840) Hawick man who became a well-known beggar. It was said that he started begging from an early age and by the mid-1820s was the only professional beggar in Hawick. He supposedly enlisted in the army and deserted many times, after spending the cash inducements; although he usually got away, he was also flogged several times after being caught. He spoke a combination of Yorkshire and Scottish dialects, and spent time in towns on both sides of the Border. He also had a dog called ‘Hawick’. He was sometimes a seller of ‘spunks’, and pretended to be many things during his life in order to extort money. He faked being deaf and often had his jaw tied up with flannel and wore an old hat and handc kerchief on his head. There is a story (recounted by W.N. Kennedy) of how, after a long absence, he reappeared in Hawick about 1820, disguised as a preacher, but was soon recognised by the residents. He was said to have been a stout, large boned man in his prime. In 1816 his mother Christian Scott died in Hawick, with her being recorded as ‘mother to John Brown the Deserter’. He may be the John born to John Brown and Christian Scott in Ashkirk in 1770. A painting of him by Adam Brown is in the Museum. He may be the ‘Packman’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1840. John (18th/19th C.) publician in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (1806/7–40) father of William of Alloa. He married Janet Sprot, who died in 1849, aged 47. They also had a daughter, Janet, who died in 1848, aged 19. He is buried in St. Mary’s kirkyard along with his wife and daughter. He may be the ‘Packman’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1840. John (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Elizabeth Ekron in 1835. John (b.1832) from Haddington, where he was helped in his education by Dr. John Cook, minister there. He was assistant teacher at Haddington for a while and then attended the Normal School, being admitted to Educational Institute of Scotland in 1847. In 1854 he was appointed as schoolmaster in Newcastle, and a few years later a new, larger school was built. He also served as Librarian, Registrar, Collector of Rates, Inspector of Poor and Heritors’ and Session Clerk for Castleton Parish. He was also Superintendent of the Parish Church Sunday School from 1855 until 1903. He retired in 1900, after 51 years as a teacher and 46 in Castleton Parish; there was a celebratory dinner for him in Newcastle. In 1903 he retired from his additional posts as Inspector, Clerk and Collector; the first entry in the death Register after he retired was his own. His wife was Jane Amos, and their children included Anna Jane and Janet Young. John Brotchie (19th C.) from Edinburgh, he moved to Hawick to be a tailor. He was given the nickname ‘Topper Broon’ on account of the top-hats he would wear. In 1886 he married Elizabeth Gracie. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1887), who married a Swinton; Elizabeth Alice (b.1888); Isabella (b.1890), who died young; John (b.1893), who was injured during WWI; Ada (b.1897); Freddy (1903–92); and Isa (1905–88), who married Robert Spowart. John (19th/20th C.) son of George and Mary Egan. He was an apprentice with John Melrose & Sons, and became second engineer on the Cunard ship ‘Umbria’. In Liverpool he was nicknamed ‘Little Brown’, to distinguish him from another John Brown of Hawick. John (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who worked in Liverpool and was known as ‘Big Brown’ to distinguish him from the other Hawick John. He was also sometimes nicknamed ‘Caliper’ on account of his bandy-legs. John ‘Foosty Broon’ or ‘Jocky Foost’ (20th C.) shopkeeper of a general store at the foot of Wellington Street in the mid-20th century. The shop was well known for stocking everything, including very old sweets, etc. The shop window also contained hand-written epithets, such as ‘the end of the world is at hand’. In later life he suffered from mental illness, being often seen on the streets talking to inanimate objects. Karl (19th/20th C.) pseudonym of Charles Stewart. Keith wrote the article ‘Double modals in Hawick Scots’ in ‘Dialects of English’ (1991) edited by P. Trudgill & J.K. Chambers. Lyle (d.1598) servant of Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood.
He was killed during attacks on the Lorraine estates by members of the Turnbull Clan, brought about through quarrels with Lady Margaret, herself a Turnbull. His farm was burned and had 30 cows, 60 sheep and 5 horses stolen from it, according to the trial of 1606. His name is recorded as ‘Lyll Broun’. Margaret nee Moffat (1762/3–1855) daughter of James, who farmed at Craik and Garwald, was born at Eskdalemuir. She was a resident of about 17 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and 1851. She was widow of Rev. Dr. William, and must have come to Hawick after his death in 1838. She is listed as ‘Ind.’ and ‘Anmutant’, and in and 1852 directory was listed among the local gentry. She lived on Buccleuch Street with her daughter, Janet. Rev. Marina D., minister at St. Mary’s in Hawick from 2010. Mary (18th C.) cook and housemaid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was listed as ‘Margrat’ in 1791 and still cook at Minto. Matthew (b.1799/1800) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a farmer who lived at Weensland Cottage. He is recorded there in 1841, along with Thomas and Christy (his parents) and Isabel (his sister). In 1851 he was at Newton in Wilton Parish, with his mother and sister. By 1861 he was a carter at 8 Bridge Street (possibly being equivalent to 4 Dovecote Street). Capt. Percy George, C.B.E. of Weens (1874–1954), born in Edinburgh, son of a Naval Commander. He served in the Royal Navy, becoming Lieutenant in 1896 and Commander in 1908. He served on several ships during WWI, and was in command of H.M.S. Champagne when the ship was lost to a submarine attack in 1917 with the loss of over 50 lives. The Court Martial concluded that he had remained with his vessel until it sank from under him and he was awarded the C.B.E. for his action. He retired with the rank of Captain in 1919. He married Mary Hutchins (c.1874–1935). He was living at Weens from at least 1936 and served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Peter (d.1822) farmer at Rawflatt and later at Newton in Bedrule Parish. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club. He is recorded at ‘Newton etc.’ on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned no fewer than 15 horses. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779; he was referred to at that time as ‘in Minto’. He is described in the Old Statistical Account as a tenant farmer who had ‘in the course of a few years, shewn how much may be done by improvement in this parish’. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1799 he married Margaret (b.1774), daughter of Robert Elliot of Harwood and Elizabeth Pringle. Their children were: David, who worked as an estate agent and died in South Wales; Robert, who died young; Peter, who also died young; Elizabeth Pringle, who married Jedburgh surgeon Gavin Hillson; Jane, who married James Pott of Potburn; Eleanor, unmarried, buried at Ancrum; and Margaret (b.1817), who married Robert Pringle from Bairnkine. He died suddenly when visiting Edgerston. Rev. Peter (d.1871) from Hutchesontown in Glasgow. He became minister of Allars Church in 1825, and was called to Wishawtown in 1831 (although may not have left until 1833). In 1863 he moved to Victoria, Australia, becoming minister of Hawthorne and was appointed Professor of Exegetical Theology at Melbourne for his last 5 years. He wrote a history of the parish of Cambusnethan and was for several years the editor of ‘The Christian Journal’. A sketch of him exists. Richard (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to a c.1376 rental roll. The list includes ‘Locus Ricardi Broun’, valued at 12 shillings. Richard (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Reullspittell’ (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule) in 1610 when he received part of the lands of Barnhills and ‘in Reullspittell’ in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging more than the allowed rate of interest on loans. He failed to appear in Edinburgh to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel by the Privy Council. Richard (d.1930) from Broxburn, he came to Hawick Free Kirk (St. George’s) as precentor in 1892, serving in that capacity until he retired in 1920. His daughter Susan (later Mrs. Whitelaw) later filled the position of church organist. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569 when listed among those for whom Sir Walter acted as cautioner in Hawick, before the Warden. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he and 2 others had to make public repentance for playing at ‘nineholes’ (i.e. nine men’s morris) on Sunday. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £4. He may have been related to James, who was also a landowner in Hawick at the same time. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto.
Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) Junior Bailie in 1706 who carried the Flag back through the town at the Common Riding, after the Senior Bailie, Robert Hardie, had carried it out. This is because the Cornet-elect refused to carry it, perhaps from its dishevelled state. Also in 1706 he was Magistrate when ex-Bailie John Binnie was fined for his behaviour. His name was also spelled ‘Browne’. In 1707 he and the other Bailie, Robert Ruecastle, were fined by the Council for assaulting others during the Common Riding. Such censure by the Council of their own Magistrates is surely unprecedented, and although the incident is not described in detail, it presumably had something to do with the disturbances at the Common Riding the year before. In 1710 he was given custody of the Charter Chest, which contained the new Flag. He was an ex-Bailie on the Council when the bond was granted (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the merchant on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell fund in 1711. He is also probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism in 1702. He may be the merchant who is recorded in 1703 when weaver John Brown was fined for being drunk in his house after 10 o’clock; he presumably kept a public house.

Robert (d. bef. 1799) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1772. He married Agnes Scott in Hawick in 1755, and their children were: unnamed (b.1756); Walter (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1766); Robert (b.1768); and Nelly (b.1772). The 1772 baptism was recorded in Wilton Parish and performed by Rev. John Young of the Green Kirk. His wife Agnes Scott died in 1799, by which time he was already deceased. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Magdalen (or ‘Mady’) Inglis and their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Adam (b.1787); Hannah (b.1789); William (b.1790), spirit-dealer in Deanburnhaugh; and David (b.1792). He is probably the 80-year old Robert living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Robert (b.1804/5) from Langholm, he was a farm worker in Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841 and 1851. In 1861 his widow was living at Harden. He married Mary Lockie and their children included: Elizabeth (b.c.1834); Janet (b.1836); Henrietta (b.1838); William (b.c.1840); Robert (b.1842); Margaret (b.c.1844); James (b.1846); George (b.1849); Mary (b.1852); and Jane (b.1855). His first few children were baptised in Ettrick Parish. Robert (b.1824/5) from Cavers Parish, he was a grocer and tailor in Lilbiesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and they had children Jessie, Robert and Margaret. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Muselee in the 1860s. He could be the Robert (d.1901) commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Robert Laidlaw ‘Magenta Robbie’ or ‘Magenta Robert’ (d.1906) native of Hawick, who worked as a stockingmaker, but spent his last 25 years as a peddler, selling odds and ends from his ‘tin carpet bag’. One story tells of his nickname coming from the colour he decorated his stockingmaker’s lamp during the 1863 royal wedding celebrations, but a perhaps more likely alternative is that it derives from his mother’s referring to him as ‘Ma gentle Robbie’. He had a woe-begotten expression and an aversion to soap and water, and was known as a harmless, simple-minded soul. There are several amusing stories told about him, e.g. that when he had a child born, and his friend first asked if it was a boy, and when that guess was wrong, said that it must be a gilr then, Robbie said ‘Here, wha has tel’t ye?’ He is said to have written on the census that ‘widower, as his wife was living in America’ and on another occasion written his age as ‘50 and 8’, the number thus being recorded as ‘508’. Appearing in his night-clothes at the entrance to his close and was told by a passing policeman that it was 5.30 a.m., to which he said ‘I’ll need to awa back an’ rise’. He was a regular attendant of the West Port Kirk, where he would dress in a white tie and kid gloves. He applied for the post of Inspector of the Poor, claiming that he knew more about them than anyone else. He was immortalised in poems by Robert Murray and William Peffers. He was buried in the pauper’s section of the Wellowgate, where a cairn was erected in the 1880s. Samuel ‘Sam’ (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of those who helped introduce cricket to the Town. He is probably the spirit dealer at about 17 Howegate, listed on the 1841 census; he was living with Sarah, probably his wife. Thomas (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. In 1493 he was described being ‘in Minto’ when, along with George Davidson in Raperlaw, he had remission for stealing livestock, as well as for associating with the former Duke of Albany and for stealing sheep along with James Elliot before his earlier remission; his surety was Walter Scott of Whitchester. Possibly the same ‘Thomas Brun’ was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Tillilee and Cauldcleuch in 1497/8. He may be the Thomas in Cavers who, along with Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead, was surety for George Turnbull in Weens in 1502. Thomas (16th C.) owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Thomas (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Hob, who was also listed. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1650 when Walter Scott was fined for striking ‘his dure, in the night, and desiring him to cum out fo his hanger’. It is not known which Walter Scott this might have been, and what the nature of the argument was. He could be the Thomas married to Helen Deans (whose daughter Margaret was born in 1648) or the Thomas married to Helen Swan (whose daughter Helen was born in 1652). Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a court case of 1673. William Scott was accused of striking his brother Robert Scott, apparently because he (Thomas) had called William a ‘yal-langer’, ‘the provocation being ‘given’ be Robert Dickson, shoemaker, and the said Thomas Broun being contumacious’. Thomas (17th C.) servitor to John Willkie in Hassendean. In 1684 he was named as a fugitive for being a Covenenater. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Presumably the Thomas listed as owner of a hearth at Craigend (in the same Parish) was a different man; the will of Thomas ‘in Minto Craigend’ is recorded in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) blacksmith at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas ‘Tom’ (d.1823) shoemaker, probably on the High Street. He was appointed as a Burgess of Hawick in 1782. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owning a work horse. He married Beatrix Kyle in 1773 and their children included: William (b.1774); James (b.1775); John (b.1777); Janet (b.1780); Helen (b.1782), who could be the shoebinder living on the Howgate in 1841; Agnes (b.1785); Margaret (b.1787); Adam (b.c.1790), who was a shoemaker and portrait painter; and Walter (b.1793). The death of a grandchild of his is recorded in 1805. Thomas (1794/5–1870) fleshers on the Cross Wynd. He is listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the Cross Wynd with his wife Agnes (or Nancy) and children Beatrix, Thomas and William. In 1851 and 1861 he was a butcher at 10 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Laidlaw and their children included: Beatrix Kyle (b.1831); Thomas (b.1834); Margaret (1837–40); and William Laidlaw (b.1840). His wedding celebrations took place in the Fleece Inn, and it is said that (along with his best man) he broke with protocol in inviting the minister’s wife to join them for dancing in the ballroom. Based on the naming of his children, it seems likely he was a late child of shoemaker Thomas and Beatrix Kyle (and therefore that he was a brother of the painter Yedie). Thomas (b.1810/1) boot and shoemaker in Hawick, son of the painter Yedie, with his mother being Agnes Scott. He may be the Thomas who was listed (along with Archibald, presumably a close relative) in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Jane Guthrie in 1835. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street, living with his wife Jane and daughter Margaret. In 1851 they were listed at 3 High Street (although this may be a different numbering scheme). By 1861 he was listed as a shoe salesman (and widower) at 76 High Street. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) resident of the Howgate, remembered in a poem by Thomas Chapman – ‘The winds round the mountains of Teviotdale sigh, And down in the woodlands the cushats come near the eyrie, For Tammas o’ Howgate that’s now frae us plain, And warm tears are streamin’ frae mony an eye, For Tammas o’ Howgate that’s now frae us gane’ [TCh]. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1813/4) born in Stow, he was farmer at Rueltownhead. He was a keen horseman, huntsman and shooter. Once, returning from Hawick in a hurry, he went over the parapet at Hallrule Brig, and although unhurt, his friend John Usher marked the letters ‘T.B.’ into the stone to mark the event. He is recorded as Judge at the Common-Riding Races in 1861.
In the 1861 census he was farmer of 430 acres, employing 9 people. He was recorded at Rulfetownhead in a directory of 1868. Never a successful farmer, he spent his last years selling farm merchandise. He married Ellen Kerr and their children included Thomas, Mary J.P., Robert Kerr and William. Thomas (d.1890) teacher in Ancrum and then in Hawick. He worked at the Science and Technology School, being assistant to Mr. Pitcairn in the teaching of senior classes. He was replaced by Mr. A.S. Williams in the 1880s. He also wrote some poetry, as well as a biography of Leyden. He published ‘St. Mary’s Loch, A Poem’ and ‘The Battle of Ancrum Moor’ in Hawick in 1889. He could be the Thomas of whom John Guthrie painted a portrait. He died at Bonjedward. Thomas (b.c.1823–1911) born in Hawick, son of Charles and Margaret Ferguson. He moved to Dumfries with his father and brother to help set up a hosery firm and became a foreman carder. In 1857 he married Jane Emma Burns, who was a daughter of Robert, eldest son of the poet Robert Burns. In about 1870 he moved with his family to Canada, where his elder daughter Isaballa Ferguson became ill and died. He worked at McCrae’s Woollen Mill in Guelph. Several years later (before 1880) they returned to Scotland and in 1903 moved into Burns old house in Dumfries, acting as caretaker for the museum there (with Andrew Carnegie supplying them with £60 per year). His surviving daughter, Jean Armour Burns (1864–1937), was said to bear a strong resemblance to her famous ancestor, and was the last legitimate descendant of the Bard. Walter (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to George, who was also listed there. Walter (d.1930) from Lilliesleaf, was ordained as 1st minister of Galashiels South U.P. Church in 1877. The new church there was opened in 1880. He turned down the chance to move to Glasgow and then Edinburgh, but in 1886 he went to the new congregation at Braids, Edinburgh. He retired in 1919 and there was a celebration of his jubilee in 1929. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Bennet and their children included: Bessie (b.1640): William (b.1643): and Margaret (b.1649). William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot and their son James was born in 1687. Andrew was a witness and hence presumably related. They also had an unnamed child born in 1689. He was listed as a weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. William (d.c.1683) tenant in Barnhills. His will is recorded in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1683. William (d.c.1684) tenant in Minto Mill, whose testament is recorded in 1684. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He could he the William in Menslaws whose wife was Margaret ‘Roughheath’, her will being recorded in 1687; her surname may be a variant of Routledge. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th C.) resident at Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records William (18th C.) Town Piper in Hawick. He was recorded as piper in 1745 and also 1756–57. However, it may be that he overlapped with Walter Ballantine, and that the pair shared responsibilities for piping, drumming and other duties of the Burgh Officers. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism, along with Walter Ballantyne, for Thomas Ballantyne in 1763. He married Mary Allan and they had daughters Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker John Scott and carrier John Scott, William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1774 he married Jane Hardie and their children included: Christian (b.1775); and William (b.1777). William (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was in possession of the lands of Kameside Park. William (18th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1781. His brother Peter died in 1809. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Allie and their son Henry was baptised in Hawick in 1801. The witnesses were baker John Wilson and printer Robert Armstrong. William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. His son Robert died in 1798. William (d.bef. 1809) heckler in Hawick. He married Helen White in Hawick Parish in 1785 and she died in 1809. He may have been witness for a baptism for Robert Renwick in 1781. William (18th/19th C.) shoemaker of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Rev. William (d.1836) minister of Bedrule, from Greenlees. He was usher at an academy in France and another near London, became teacher at George Watson’s Hospital in Edinburgh and was licensed to preach in 1782. He then became tutor for the family of Sir John Stewart of Allanbank. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in 1787 and became minister there the following year. He remained Bedrule’s Minister until his death, serving for 48 years. He wrote a lengthy and detailed description of the Parish for Old Statistical Account. In it he gives lengthy footnotes in which (among other things) he berates local landowners from being absent from the church where they hold land, and as a result neglecting their responsibilities to support the fabric of the church, the school and the poor. He paid the Horse Tax at Bedrule Manse in the period 1789–97. Archibald Craig was appointed as his assistant and successor in 1832. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He paid the land tax at Lanton Moor in 1813. In 1813 (at Kirkton Manse) he married Janet, eldest daughter of Archibald Henderson of Mackside, and she died in 1839. Their children were: Janet (b.1814); Alison Cockburn (b.1816); Robert Rutherford (b.1818); and Archibald Henderson (b.1820). He is described as having great literary talents. He was also apparently an obstinate man who became involved in many lawsuits. He published ‘The Pronouncing Testament’ (1796), as well as a description of the Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account.

William ‘Billy’ (d.1839) landlord of the Tower Inn in the first half of the 19th century. He was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was known as somewhat of an irascible character. He is said to have owned the first ‘gig’ (i.e. two wheeled carriage) in Hawick. He was also one of the founding members of the Wisp Club. His children must have included Clement and Tom, who boarded at the school in Yarrow, and George, who was Cornet in 1811. His son William junior died in 1817. He is probably also the ‘Mr Wilson Tower inn’ whose illegitimate child with Isabel Miller died in 1810. He is probably the ‘Mr Brown, Tower Inn, Hawick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is buried in St. Mary’s churchyard, and there is a portrait of him in the Museum (by an unknown artist). There seems to be some uncertainty about whether he died in 1839 or 1842. He is probably the ‘W Brown, Hawick’ whose portrait was painted by William Irving. His wife is recorded dying in 1821; she is said to have taken the young Tom Jenkins under her wing, when his sponsor James Swanson died. Rev. Dr. William (1764–1835) son of Peeblesshire stonemason William, whose 2nd wife was an aunt of Thomas Carlyle. He was licensed to preach by Stirling Presbytery in 1791, he became minister of Eskdalemuir in 1792. He received a doctorate from Aberdeen in 1816. In 1797 he married Margaret, daughter of James, farmer at Craik and Garwald; after his death she lived in Hawick, and died in 1855. Their children were: James (1798–1820), Lieutenant in the 10th Native Infantry in Madras; Robert (b.1803); Margaret (b.1804); John (1805–23), who died while a student at Edinburgh University; Janet (b.1808); and Alison (b.1811). His publications include ‘Antiquities of the Jews’ (2 volumes, 1820), and accounts of the Parish of Eskdalemuir for the statistical accounts. He left a manuscript register of events in his parish, covering the years 1793–1809. This includes much of interest to the folklorist, including an account of the appearance of the mysterious creature Gilpin Horner at Towdshawhill (not the one near Hawick), which inspired Sir Walter Scott, and a description of the ‘Gonial Blast’. William (b.1790) born in Roberton Parish, son of Robert and Magdalene Inglis, he lived at Deamburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded there as an innkeeper and spirit dealer and in 1851 as a meal dealer. He married Barbara Neil and their children included: Isobel (b.1815); Magdalene (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); Alexander (b.1822); Margaret (b.1824); Adam (b.1825); Mary (b.1830); and Barbara (b.1833). William ‘Will’ (18th/19th C.) butler at Wolfelee House. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was ordained as one of the first two elders there in 1850. He is probably the William, formerly in the service of Elliot of Wolfelee, who died at Causewayfoot, Wolfelee in 1861, ‘at and advanced age’.

William (b.1807/8) from England, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Grocer (Master)’ at 4 Mid Row. He married Elizabeth Best, widow of James Taylor. William Wells (c.1814–84) fugitive slave from Kentucky who became a leading speaker for the abolition of slavery, as well as a writer, being usually credited with writing the first novel by an African American. As part of his European tour he visited Hawick in 1850, collecting many anti-slavery signatures, as described briefly in his 1855 book ‘Sketches of Places and People Abroad’. William (b.1820/1) son of Yedie and Agnes Scott. He worked as a shoemaker, which had been his father’s initial trade. In 1861 he was listed as a ‘Boot Closer’ living at 52 Loan with his family, as well as his brother James. He married Isabella Ferguson and their children included Christina and Agnes. William, J.P. (1837–1908), Hawick native, son of John and Janet Sprot. He was a draper’s apprentice with Richard Rutherford, but moved to Alloa in 1856. There he became a draper, then in 1877 switched to being an auctioneer and valuator. He was an active member of Alloa Parish Church and a staunch Conservative in politics. He was also a regular contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s and a frequent donor of artefacts to the Museum. He lived at Salisbury House, Forth Street in Alloa, where he died. He bequeathed money (£1,500) to his native town, which was used to build the Brown Fountain, near to where he was born. He also left money to support the Common Riding, Cottage Hospital and St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1899 he erected a gravestone for his father, mother and sister in St. Mary’s kirkyard. Rev. William (1865–1940) son of builder Andrew, he was born in Montrose. He attended St. Andrews University 1883–90, was licensed by Brechin Presbytery and was ordained as minister of St. John’s Kirk in Hawick in 1894. However, he was but transferred to Campsie in 1902 and then went to Dunbar in 1918 (formerly spelled ‘Browne’, ‘Broun’ and ‘Broune’).

Broon-dean-laws (broon-deen-lawz) n. hill in Jedburgh Parish, reaching a height of 1358 ft (the origin is probably Old English ‘bruna dun’, meaning ‘the brown hill’; it is first recorded as ‘Browne’, ‘Broun’ and ‘Broune’).

the Broon Fountain (thu-broon-fown’-in) n. the Brown Fountain, in the middle of Drumlanrig Square, part of an ornamental garden on the site of the Auld Mid Raw. Money for the fountain was bequeathed by William Brown, who had moved to Alloa (and hence the stonework incorporates the arms of both Hawick and Alloa). The design was by J.P. Alison, and consists of an ornamental fountain incorporating a clock. It was built in 1910–12 by John Marshall & Sons, with the granite carving by Mackay & Morren from Aberdeen. Iron ornamentation on top of the corner columns has since been removed. It is a grade B listed building.

the Broon Gallery (thu-broon-gaw-lu-ree) n. name sometimes used (coined perhaps by W.N. Kennedy) for the Museum’s collection of paintings of local personalities painted by Adam Brown. The paintings include those of John Brown, Wullie Bullock, Nannie Cumming, Wull the Cutler, Robbie Davidson, Wullie Gotterson and Wull Slush. They were presented to the Archaeological Society by various people in 1863. Other paintings include a scence at Hornshole, another in the house of James Ruickbie, a portrait of a girl, a scene of ‘leistering’ in the Teviot and a view of the Sandgate of Newcastle.

Broonlie (broon-lee) n. (Brownlie) Rev. Charles (b.1865–1904) born in Glasgow, son of engineer John and Agnes Dyer. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1893. He was ordained at Laurieston Chapel, Falkirk in 1896 and became minister of St. Margaret’s in Hawick in 1898. He married Mary Jackson (who died in 1904) Rev. Robert (c.1589–1645) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1610, he was presented to Kirkton in 1619 and became minister there in 1620. However, the settlement appears not to have gone smoothly, since Walter McGill (minister of Cavers) was inhibited ‘to mak ony molestation or hindrance in the premises directlie or indirectly’. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1638. Also in 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’, probably in Hawick. He was murdered by members of Montrose’s army a day or two after the Battle of Philiphaugh, ‘being living at home in his awin hous in a most sober manner’. He married Margaret Lumsden, and she and his fatherless children petitioned Parliament several times for support in the following years. One of his daughters married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts.

the Broon Man o the Muirs (thu-broon-mawn-ô-thu-newrzw) n., arch. fantastical creature that inhabits the moors, said to be malicious and clad in brown – ‘Brown dwarf, that o’er the muirland strays, They name to Keeldar tell!’ – The Brown Man of the Muirs, who stays Beneath the heather-bell’ [JL].

Broonmoor (broon-moor) n. Broonmoor, farm in southern Selkirkshire, situated between Hartwoodburn and Middlestead, on the road off west of the A7 towards Ettrick just before Selkirk. The high ground to the south, between here and Headshaw Loch is known as Brown Moor Heights, and reaches 308 m.

Broonrig (broon-rig) n. Brownrig, former house in Liddesdale, on the east bank of the Hermitage Water, just south of Shaws (marked as ‘Brounrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

broon sauce (broon-saws) n. a sauce popular in fish and chip shops in Scotland, something like a mixture of ‘H.P.’ sauce and vinegar.

Broon’s Hill (broonz-hill) n. Brown’s Hill, hill in the upper Slitrig valley, on the east of the B6399 between Shankend and Langburndhies, with Brown’s Sike to the north. On the north side of the hill is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary marker connecting Brown’s Sike to Black Cleuch. This is probably the ‘Brownishall’ listed among lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1607.
Broon Sike (broad-sik) n. former name for a stream and lands in Hobkirk Parish, lying somewhere between Birkhill and Hallrule. It is mentioned in the Baronial dispute of 1562 as ‘Bromsike’. It is possible that this refers to ‘Brown’s Sike’ in the upper Slitrig valley, just over the hill from other places mentioned in that document.

Broonsteed (broad-steed) n. Brownstead, former house in Liddesdale, just to the north of Park. In 1541 it was valued at 14 shillings and tenanted by Robert Elliot (it is ‘Brooneston’ in 1541 and marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Brounstead’).

brosy (bro-zee) adj., arch. porridge-fed, stout, fat and limp, puffy – ‘Imagin iz: A reed, lowpin, broazy face leike a bermy bannih fat and limp, puffy’ [ECS] (also written ‘broazy’ and variants).

brotten (bro’t-in) pp. brought – ‘it was brotten ower fri Amairica’.

brouch (browch) n., arch. a ring around the Moon (also bruch).

broucht (browcht) pp., arch. brought – ‘...and because nane claimit the said meir, the said Adam Gowanlock broucht the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick ...’ [BR1641], ‘...for thay ar confumdat an’ broucht untiill shaeame that soucht my skaith’ [HSR], ‘He broucht thame owt o’ mirkniss an’ the skaddaw o’ deeth ...’ [HSR], ‘...A gowden hairst to my humble sawin’, Broucht hame in eternitie’ [WL] (also spelled ‘browcht’; cf. brocht, along with browt and brung).

brough (browch) n., arch. a burgh – ‘...within ye said toune and brough of Hawicke ...’ [BR] (cf. brugh).

Brougham (brum) n. Lord Henry Peter (1778–1868) born in Edinburgh, he helped found the Edinburgh Review, then moved to London where he entered Parliament, becoming a Liberal leader. He fought against the slave trade, and for religious equality, as well as introducing educational and legal reforms, particularly as Lord Chancellor (1830–34). Specifically, he was the champion of the Reform Bill, which vastly increased the number of people eligible to vote. He visited Hawick in 1834, being made an Honorary Burgess, and later Brougham Place was named after him.

Brougham Place (bro-, brow-chum-plis) n. street running uphill at the north end of the High Street, with buildings constructed around 1837, and named after Lord Brougham. Earlier it was known as the Minister’s Entry and sometimes Milligan’s Path, but more popularly in recent times as the Cafe Brae. The row of houses was built entirely on the south side, with Trinity Church and the former St. Mary’s Infant School on the north side. The Drums and Fifes march here on the Thursday night, near the position of the former Easter Toll, and stop for the traditionally refreshing of rum and milk. The bridge over the railway at the top of the street gives access to the Terraces, but was closed to traffic in 2013 (note the local pronunciation differs from Lord Brougham’s).

Bruce

Born in Bhangalpore, India, he was educated in Dunfermline.

James Semple (1870/1–1950) born in Bhangalpore, India, was educated in London and worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China, working abroad and eventually becoming the London manager. He bought the Chisholme estate in 1927 and retired there 3 years later. He served as President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, and the Hawick branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He was also responsible for handing over the land at the Snoot to the Youth Hostel Association. James (1908–92) born in Hawick, son of a railway signalman.

Bruce

Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hassendenbank, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 12 horses. He married Janet McLean and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Byrness in 1813.

George (d.1795) son of Robert, a landowner from Clackmannanshire, he was Rector of Kilmany and Archdeacon of Dunkeld. He became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1441 and then was translated as Bishop of Glasgow (and hence Hawick’s bishop) in 1447. However, he must have held the office for only a few months before he died, his successor being William Turnbull. He is buried in Dunfermline.

James Semple (1870/1–1950) born in Bhangalpore, India, was educated in London and worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China, working abroad and eventually becoming the London manager. He bought the Chisholme estate in 1927 and retired there 3 years later. He was also responsible for handing over the land at the Snoot to the Youth Hostel Association. James (1908–92) born in Hawick, son of a railway signalman.

He was educated at Hawick High School, was an apprentice gardener at Alnwick Castle, and then went to Howick Hall, Northumberland. He became an expert horticulturist, whose fame spread. During WWII he gave advice on food production at military camps and elsewhere. He became President of the Royal Caledonian Horticultural Society, and was awarded the M.B.E. He later became Head of the College of Agriculture teaching section, based in Edinburgh and later Penicuik. He and his wife Amy retired to Craster in Northumberland. He had a reputation as a great teacher and speaker at W.R.I. meetings. He also presented the BBC radio series ‘The Scottish Garden’, chaired ‘Gardener’s Forum’, and contributed to other programmes.

John ‘Nixon’s John’ (19th C.) resident of Hawick, perhaps who worked for Nixon’s mill. His mother is recorded dying in 1840. He is probably the same as the John living on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, with his wife Agnes and son William.

Peter (19th C.) shepherd at Swinnie for about 30 years. He married Mary Whillans. His children included: Thomas, who emigrated to near Canterbury, New Zealand and called his house ‘Inchbonny’; Joan, who married William Haig and died in Galashiels; Robert, who farmed at Fodderlee; Helen, who was housekeeper for Daniel Mather at Hallrule and married David Scott, mason and parish registrar; Peter, who was ploughman at Hallrule and then joint tenant at West Fodderlee with his brother Robert; and Mary, who married James Sinton.

Robert see Robert, King of Scotland. Sir Robert (d.1332) illegitimate son of King Robert I, ‘the Bruce’. In 1322 he was given the Lordship of Liddesdale (following the fall of William de Soulis) and probably held it until his death. He died at the Battle of Dupplin Moor. Robert (b.1843) son of Peter, he was born at Swinnie. At age 3 he was rescued from a well by his sister. He started working on the farm of Mr. Davidson at age 9. He worked as shepherd at other farms in the area, then in...

Brugh (‘bruf, bruch, browgh’) n. another name for Burgh Hill and surrounding area near Dodburn. The lands here were formerly a seat of a branch of the Elliots, who were once very well represented in and around Hawick. It was probably a 2-storey bastle house of the 16th century, the ruins of which were used to build dykes in the 1760s when the farm was joined with Priestsbaugh; in 1809 Robert Scott of Skelfhill remembered it as ‘a mucke ha’ house’. It was said to have been on the south shoulder of Brugh Hill (as confirmed in the survey map of 1718), although there is nothing now to suggest that a house was located there. The land was leased by Scott of Braunholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 for 19 years, along with other lands, except for the ‘chaplainry of St. Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm’ (possibly the old chapel at Northhouse). The King’s shepherd there, George Henderson was recorded being paid in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540. ‘Young Robert Scott of Alanehauch’ paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey in 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. It is recorded as tenanted by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1560 and was owned by Gavin Elliot in 1595. In 1597 it was described as part of Ringwoodfield. It became part of the Buccleuch estates in 1632 and was described as part of the extensive lands of Ringwoodfield in 1634, 1653, 1660 and 1661 and still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1663 and 1693. James Glendinning was tenant there in 1684 when he was declared a fugitive for attending field conventicles. ‘Margrat Scott in Brugh’ was listed as resident of Doecleuch on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. The Elliots of Brugh could not have lived here for very long, but the title ‘of Brugh’ continued to be used long after. The farm was surveyed in 1718 and a plan exists. At that time it consisted of 375 acres and was bounded by Dodburn, Peelbrae, Skelfhill, Doecleuch and Stobicote (also referred to as ‘the Brugh’; it is ‘the Burghe’ in 1500, ‘lie Burghi’ in 1540, ‘The Burgh’ in 1557, ‘Brughe’ in 1621, ‘Burghie’ in 1623, ‘Burgh’ in 1693, ‘Browgh’ about 1705, ‘Brough’ in 1710 and ‘Brrough’ in bruize (brüz) v., arch. to scorch, burn – ‘...whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd an rizzert’ [ECS].

Brumingam Jack (bru-ning-gum-jawk) n. nickname for a tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century, said to be ‘the most notorious of the fraternity’. He would go around cleaning clocks for people, sometimes taking it apart and not proceeding until a bottle was produced. He would also help with agricultural jobs and he was a great story-teller. One popular story was of how he was asleep in a cemetery and scared off some body-snatchers, who left behind their horse and cart, which he was then able to sell.

Brunrig (brum-rig) n. Thomas (16th C.) listed as a cook in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not he was local. His surname may be a variant of Brownrig.

Brumstane (brum-stän) n., arch. brimstone – ‘...wi a guff a wat strae and neeps and a glisk o brumstane ...’ [DH] (cf. brunstane).

Brunemore (broon-mör) n. recorded as ‘super Dod’, i.e. on the Dod Burn, when it was used as part of the description of the boundaries of Ringwood in the 1160s. The precise location, or identification with any other place is unknown. However, a connection with the lands of Brugh seems not unreasonable (the origin could be the personal name ‘Brun’ or ‘brown’, plus ‘moor’).

brunstane (brum-stän) n., arch. brimstone – ‘And the brunstane leme came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail’ [JTe], ‘Oh, had I Hitler by the neck, My vengeance on his life I’d wreck.’

Brunfield (brun'-field) n. stream in the headwaters of theRalton Burn in Liddesdale. It rises near North Birny Fell and flows roughly south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Brydon *(brö-din) n. Adam (d.c.1687) tenant in Dodburn. His will is recorded in 1687. Adam ‘Aedie o Aberlosk’ (1766–1841) son of William, tenant farmer at Aberlosk in Eskdalemuir. He made significant improvements to the farm and later became joint tenant of Locherben farm (in Closeburn Parish) with James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He is described in ‘The Shepherd’s Calendar’ in Hogg’s ‘Winter Evening Tales’. He had a reputation as a hard drinker. He is also infamous for writing to King George IV to complain that he had walked 30 miles to pay his taxes, but had been unable to get the official to take the money, and hence he was enclosing the sum of £27; he requested that the receipt be sent care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick, suggesting some location connection, and he ended with ‘P.S. This way of taxing farmers will never do’. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1799. Their children were William, Janet, Adam, Elizabeth, Margaret, David, James and Robert. Adam (b.1814/5) shepherd at Haughhead just outside Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Muirfield and moved to Haughhead before 1851. His wife was Janet or Jessie and their children included Margaret, Euphemia, Jessie, Mary and James. His children were also born in Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf parishes. Agnes (18th C.) lady’s maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Alan Gilbert (1961 – ) born in Hawick, he has worked in the textile industry, and written several technical articles and a book on card clothing. He trained at the Scottish College of Textiles and was later visiting professor at Leeds University. Known locally as a musician and singer, he wrote the words and music for the popular song ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ in 2005, and has written many others, including ‘Old Jock’, ‘A Man O’ Mony Pairts’, ‘Return From Hornshole’ and ‘One Call of a King’. He published a novel ‘The Keeper of Teviotdale’ in 2005, and co-wrote ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Ian Landles. He was a member of the band ‘Scocha’ for several years, writing many songs, and playing a wide variety of instruments on their recordings. He also co-wrote the musical play ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ with Ian Landles in 2007. Alexander (1775/6–1856) weaver in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was living on South Hermitage Street and receiving parish relief. He married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1866, aged 82. Their children included: Mary (1810/1–61); Margaret (1818/9–1900); William (1822/3–41); and Helen (1828/9–99). They are buried in Ettleton. George (b.c.1810) joiner at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Eliza and James. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. James (17th C.) merchant Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in a sasine of 1671, along with his unnamed spouse, resigning a tenement in Hawick. This may be the same tenement that passed to Robert Oliver in 1713. Perhaps the same James is recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the James recorded in 1683 when clothing belonged to him, being bleached at the side of the Teviot, was ruined by a group of men throwing stones; they were fined £100 Scots for the damages. He is probably the merchant James whose widow Agnes Riddell is recorded in 1693/4 on the subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Hardie and Robert Cowan. James (1816–83) son of Alexander (1777–1856) and Elizabeth Scott (1784–1866), he was born in Castleton Parish. He was listed as a weaver in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–37. In 1838–41 he was at Brox. He was also Church Officer in Castleton. He moved to Wilton Dean before the time of the 1841 census. In the 1851 census he is recorded at Dean Fore Row No. 6 and was on Dean Road in 1861. He married Esther Laidlaw (b.1821) in Hawick and their children included: Alexander (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); Elizabeth (b.1843); William (b.1847); John (b.1850); Mary (b.1853), who married Peter Scott, founder of Pesco’s; and James (b.1855). James (b.1816/7) tailor in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at Haughhead Cottage, and employing 3 people. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Walter, Isabella, Helen, Agnes and James. James (1824/5–90) Hawick grocer. Originally from Ashkirk, he trained as a grocer with John Stenhouse on the High Street, and then worked for John Goodfellow on Buccleuch Street, as well as in Dukelbeit. He set up his own business at the Station Buildings, which was a successful grocer’s for about 40 years. He was a keen abstainer and churchman. He also farmed at Dimpleknowe and Satchells. He married twice, secondly to a daughter of John Murray from Hobkirk Parish. He is buried at Ashkirk. His shop can be seen in a photograph taken around the 1880s. Dr. James (1834–1905) born in Hownam Parish, son of William and Anne Dalgleish. He lived at Whitslade and went to Roberston School, then St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities. He spent 2 years as demonstrator at Surgeon’s Hall and resident at the Royal Infirmary. He came to Hawick as a doctor in 1858. His practice was based at 4 Sandbed. He was a member of the first School Board (where he was almost a lone voice supporting science education), President of the Archeological Society and published poetry anonymously in the local press. He was also police surgeon. In 1873 he published a description of archaeological remains around Hawick for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell and edited ‘The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell’ (1871), also writing a memoir as the preface. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. His house was at 2 Slitrig Crescent. He was known for always giving a shilling to tramps who would sing ‘Scotland Yet’. He married Mary Middleton (b.1840), who was English. Their children were: William (b.1860), who also became a doctor; Annie (b.1863); an unnamed child (b.1865); James (b.1866); Mary Middleton (1868–1910), married Dr. David Murray, who became his partner about 1901; Janet R. (b.1871); and Walter (b.c.1882), who was a tweed merchant and married Daisy Blenkhorn. He is seen in his ‘gig’ on the High Street in a photo taken shortly before his death. John (16th C.) local notary. He was notary for documents of the Scotts of Harden in 1553 and 1576 (although this date may be an error). He was ‘Schir Johne Bryden, notar publict’ in 1568/9 when he witnessed the bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. He may be the same man (or close relative of) the John ‘Brydin’ who was a notary in the ‘Selkirk Protocol Books’ in the period 1530–37. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Todshawhill. His son William was born in 1748 and daughter Helen in 1751. Robert (d.1876) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was steward at Highchesters farm. He was recorded there in 1851, 1861 and 1868. His firstly married Isabella, daughter of Robert Scoon, farmer... at Todshawhill. He secondly married Jane McMorran who died at Union Street in 1871, aged 40. His children included: Margaret; and Walter, who died aged 20. He died at New Woll, Ashkirk. Their is a stone for his family in Borthwick Waas. Robert (1938/9–2018) ‘Rob’ son of Bill, he was Cornet in 1964 and Captain for Hawick R.F.C. As a rugby player he was a member of the ‘Magnificent Seven’ who won 10 consecutive Sevens tournaments in 1966/7. He served for 2 years with the K.O.S.B. and worked for the family joinery business on Drumlanrig Square. He was Jubilee Cornet in the Quincentenary year, 2014. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Braiden merchant in Hawick’ on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitive for religious non-conformity. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Mary Park as owner of 2 horses at Hoscoteshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (b.1788/9) born in Ashkirk, he was a mason at Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Agnes, James, Mary, Janet, Elizabeth, Jane and Thomas. By 1861 his widow and several children were living on Havelock Street. Thomas L. (19th/20th C.) baker of 16 High Street. He had taken over the business that was originally his uncle’s, George Paterson, at 53 (or 55) High Street. His daughter Maisie married Charles Oliver of Bucklands. Walter (15th/16th C.) Town Clerk of Selkirk, who some suggest was the only survivor of Selkirk’s 80 volunteers who went to Flodden. This story is somewhat contradictory to the ‘Fletcher’ version. Walter (b.c.1770) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he was at Stiches. He was then shepherd at Midshiel in 1840 and on the 1841 census was at Littledean. His wife was Helen Grieve, and their children included Walter and Margaret. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter and Helen Grieve, he was shepherd at Burnfoot. He is recorded there among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was living at Burnfoot Mill and in a similar location in 1851. He married Elizabet Pringle, who was from Southdean. Their children included: Isabella (b.1840); Helen (b.1842); and Walter (b.1846). Walter (1882–1962) son of Dr. James, he became a tweed merchant with Innes, Chambers & Co., becoming for a while director of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. He married Daisy Eva Farrar Blenkhorn in 1910, divorced her in 1922 and remarried Mary Hamilton. He became a farmer and photographer, becoming a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He lived at Ladylands, Selkirk and is buried in the Wellogate. He may be the Walter who wrote a piece of Hawick-set fiction for the Border Magazine in 1904. William (15th/16th C.) notary to a charter of 1510/11 by David Scott of Hassendean. He is recorded there as ‘William Bryding’. It seems unlikely he was the same man as the notary of 45 years later, but may well have been his father. He may be the Vicar of Selkirk who is recorded in 1528 as a witness to an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and James Murray of Falahill. William (16th C.) notary in 1556 for a document relating to the land of Nether Harden passing from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He was probably a local man, given the names of the witnesses. Perhaps the same William was notary for a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Brauxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. William (18th C.) resident at Craik. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1762), Marion (b.1764), Thomas (b.1767), Walter (b.1769) and Adam (b.1771). William (1740/1–1818) weaver in Newcastle. His children included Janet (1774/5–1804). They are buried at Ettleton. William (19th/20th C.) Hawick Doctor. He gave an address at the 1891 Colour Bussing. William ‘Bill’ (20th C.) Cornet in 1935 who was Left-Hand Man twice, repeating his duties in the first post-war Common Riding of 1946. He worked for the family business of joiners and undertakers and was also nicknamed ‘Bunny’. He married his Lass, Jean Butler and their son Rob was Cornet in 1964 (formerly spelled ‘Bridone’, ‘Bryden’, ‘Brydene’, ‘Bryding’, etc.).

Brydon’s (bri-dinz) n. James Brydon & Sons, grocer’s shop at 8 High Street, established in 1852 and in existence into the mid-20th century. James Brydon also had a grocer’s shop at Station Buildings for over 40 years. The name was later used for the joiners, furniture removers and undertakers business at 12 Drumlanrig Square.

Bryson (bri-sin, bri-sin) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th C.) one of the Halberdiers in the early 19th century, overlapping with Caleb Rutherford and ‘Tufty’ Wilson. He accompanied Rutherford and Wilson in 1824, for the last ‘drumming out of town’ to take place in Hawick. He may be the ‘A. Bryson, constable’ recorded being paid by the Town Treasurer in 1794 for ‘pressing baggage-carts for soldiers’. John (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick. In 1755 he was paid for ‘11 thrawe for thatching the schoolhouse’. He may be the John, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1712. He may be the John, married to Helen Murray, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1741); Agnes (b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and John (b.1760). Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. Walter (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. He was recorded in 1725 asking the Session for relief to help ‘to pay the quarter wage for one of his twins laste brought forth’. He is probably the Walter born to William and Agnes Smith in Hawick in 1680. He married Janet Wilson in 1708, and one of the twins was called Walter. William (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. He is probably the William, married to Janet Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included Janet (b.1686) and William (b.1689).

Brythonic (bri-tho-neek) n. a group of Celtic languages, including Welsh, Breton and Cornish, and also referred to as ‘p-Celtic’, to distinguish it from the ‘q-Celtic’ or Goidelic group, which includes Irish Gaelic, Scots Gaelic and Manx. The ancient Northumbrian language once spoken throughout the Borders was part of this subdivision, and bore great similarity with modern Welsh. Some remains in local place names probably include Caerlenrig, Minto, Penchrise and several other hills and rivers.

the B6359 (thu-bee-siks-thri-hv-nin) n. road beginning as Appletreehall Road and going through Hassendean and on to Lilliesleaf and Melrose.

the B6399 (thu-bee-siks-thri-nin-nin) n. road beginning as Liddesdale Road, continuing along the Slitrig valley to Newcastleton.

the B711 (thu-bee-see-vin-yin-yin) n. beginning at ‘Mertin’s Brig’, it is the road leading to Roberton and the Borthwick valley, which continues via Greenbank Toll to reach the upper Ettrick valley at Tushielaw Inn. It was constructed in 1826 with the toll-house at Greenbank also dating from that time.

bubble (bu-bul) v. to cry, snivel, weep – ‘she hed a wee bit bubble ti hersel’, ‘hei bubbled and gret like a bairn’.

bubbly (bub-lee) adj., arch. having a snotty nose – ‘A bubbly nose an’ dirty face, This youth o’ Liddesdale did grace’ [RDW].

bubbly-jock (bu-bu-lee-jok) n. a turkey, particularly when served for dinner on special occasions such as Christmas or New Year – ‘He asked me if I had ever seen a turkey mesmerised . . . upon which he made a dive at a promising young ‘bubbly jock’ . . . ’ [RB], ‘Birsselt an scowdert, leike a bubbly-jock duine weel in ov an oven’ [ECS].

Buccleuch (bu-kloo, ba-kloo) n. hamlet on the B711, about 15 miles west of Hawick, being the original seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and now split into the farms of West and East Buccleuch, on opposite sides of Rankle Burn. The original ‘castle’ (more likely a fortified house) was close to East Buccleuch, the foundations being uncovered when the modern farmhouse was built in the early 19th century. Sometime around 1490 (shortly before the death of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch) the manor house there was ruined by Simon Routledge and his son Matthew (who appear to have been tenants at the Trows), when they stole a large amount of livestock and food. It seems the house was never rebuilt, and the family seat of the Scotts moved to Branxholme.

However, the name survived in the main title of the Scott family, and they continued to own the lands there. Andrew Dickson was recorded there in 1494/5. In 1517 the lands were described as being in ‘waste’, but valued at £20 in times of peace. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540, there is a record of payment for 20 bolls of grain from 4 pastures in Buccleuch. The tenant farmers in 1574 were Simon and William Nichol. In 1653, along with Rankilburne, the farm was recorded with a value of £20. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The ‘Buck Cleuch’ lies on the Clear Burn, just to the east. The traditional origin of the name (first written down by Capt. Walter Scott) involves an early ancestor seizing a buck with his bare hands while hunting with the King; unfortunately this seems too similar to other fanciful stories from separate families. In 1694 the farms of ‘East and Wester Buckcleuches’ are listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with 10 hearths between them. The 2 farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, bounded by Bellenden, Henwoodie, Whitslade, Craik, Wolflcleuchhead, Langshawburn, Dalglish, Broadmeadows, lands held by Scott of Harden, Annelshope and Deloraine. (the origin is probably English for ‘an opening in a height’, but could be ‘buck’s ravine’ too, if one insists on romance; it was once spelled interchangeably as ‘Buckleugh’; it is ‘Buckle’ and ‘Bukluch’ in 1431, 1446 and 1449, ‘the Buckluche’ in 1436, ‘Bukluche’ in 1443, ‘Bukclouch’ in 1448, ‘Bukcluch’ and ‘Bukcluth’ in Buccleuch

Buccleuch (bu-kloo, ba-kloo) n. name used to refer to the Chief of the Scotts, i.e. Scott of Brannxholme and Buccleuch. The exact title of the head was Laird, Lord, Earl and finally Duke — ‘...And how full many a tale he knew Of the old warriors of Buccleuch’ [SWS] (see the Duke o Buccleuch).

the Buccleuch Airms (thu-bu-kloo-ärmsz) n. former Newcastleton inn, located at 47/48 North Hermitage Street. It existed from at least the 1830s to the 1860s. Thomas Pott was inn-keeper there in 1837 and James Telfer (or Telford) in 1852.

Buccleuch Boolin Club (bu-kloo-boo-lin-khub, bō-lin-khub) n. lawn bowling organisation, formed in 1872 to encourage the game among the working men. Its greens and clubrooms lie immediately west of those of the Hawick Bowling Club. The Clubhouse was built around 1891 to designs of J.P. Alison.

Buccleuch Burn (bu-kloo-boo-burn) n. another name for the Clear Burn, joining the Rankie Burn at Buccleuch just after the ‘Buck Cleugh’ itself. Until recently it was possible to trace an old mill lade from the burn.

Buccleuch Estates (bu-kloo-e-stätts) n. corporate organisation which manages the estates of the Buccleuch family. Buccleuch Estates Limited is part of the Buccleuch Group, Chaired by the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, with the Earl of Dalkeith as Managing Director. The modern estates are split into the Boughton, Bowhill (including Brannxholme), Dalkeith, Langholm (including parts of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale) and Queensberry parts.

Buccleuch Grammar Schuil (bu-kloo-graw-mur-skil) n. name used for Hawick High School after it moved to Buccleuch Street (about 1860), having previously been called the Grammar School. The name was changed to Buccleuch Higher Grade School in 1908 and Hawick High School in 1915.

the Buccleuch Handicap (thu-bu-kloo-hawn-dee-kap) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least the 1880s. Its length was 1 1/2 miles.

Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil (bu-kloo-hI-ur-gräd-skil) n. name adopted by the secondary part of the Buccleuch School following major rebuilding 1906–08. It would be renamed ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915.

the Buccleuch Hotel (thu-bu-kloo-hô-tel) n. hotel at 1 Trinity Street, formerly having its address as Weensland Road. It was designed by local architect Michael Brodie and built in 1882, funded by auctioneer, James Oliver. It was run as a temperance hotel by Mr. & Mrs. Reid in the latter part of the 19th century, and used for several Common Riding dinners etc.

the Buccleuch Hunt (thu-bu-kloo-bun’) n. largest local fox-hunting group, formed in 1826, and based at St. Boswells. The National Archives have records for 1827–60.

Buccleuch Kirk (bu-kloo-kirk) n. name sometimes given to the Old Parish Church in Buccleuch Street. It was built 1844 as a gift of the Duke of Buccleuch, with the foundation stone laid by Henry Scott Riddell, and demolished around 1990.

Buccleuch Kirk (bu-kloo-kirk) n. alternative name for Rankilburn Chaipel.

the Buccleuch Memorial (thu-bu-kloo-mu-mo-rec-nil) n. officially ‘The Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute’, it was built after subscriptions were raised to build a suitable memorial following the death of Walter Francis, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was opened by the 6th Duke and Duchess in 1887, and gifted to the Town as an adult educational institution. It was built at the corner of Duke Street and Bridge Street in an italianate style, designed by John Guthrie and with sculpted stone-work by Thomas Beattie. The main entrance was surmounted by the figure of a stag. The interior had a large lobby, with a small room on the right side and several smaller...

rooms to the left, with 2 larger rooms farther in. The top floor had a gallery extending round 3 sides with 3 dome windows in the roof, the largest having an 11 foot diameter. The level underneath was entered from Duke Street. The upper floor housed the Museum until 1910, while the rest was used by the South Kensington Science and Art Classes. The interior and interior Museum room can be seen in photographs of about 1890. When the Archaeological Society moved out the Town Council took over full control and the building was known as the Buccleuch Memorial Technical Institute. It was then used extensively for textiles training courses. The building was also used by the Boys Brigade and various bands etc. The Vertish Hill Sports procession used to leave from there. It was gifted to Roxburgh Education committee by the town in 1951 and continued to be used for evening classes and the like, but by 1963 had become too hard to upkeep. It was demolished in 1969 and replaced in 1971 with the splendid new Tax and Social Security building. The old Buccleuch coat of arms has been built into a wall of the Scott Gallery, and another piece of stonework, including the Hawick coat of arms, was preserved in a gable of Drumlanrig Hospital, and then moved to the bottom of the ‘Hunder Steps’ – ‘His thoughts went back ower fifty years And in eis mind ei saw them still Where was the Buccleuch Memorial Wher eid spent happy days at the schuil?’ [AY].

Buccleuch Mill (bu-kloo-mil) n. former corn mill at Buccleuch, presumably serving the former Barony and Parish there. There are still traces of the walls in the shape of a small mound about 8 m by 4 m. It is said that no corn ever grew near there – ‘Had heather-bells been corn of the best, The Buccleuch mill would have had a noble grist’ [CWS].

Buccleuch Mills (bu-kloo-milz) n. knitwear factory on Green Lane, formerly Elliots, Bonsor’s and Sybil Gentleman’s, and more recently Glenhowe. It was built in 1862 as the stocking shop for William Elliot & Son. part having small windows for handframe knitting. It is 3 storeys high, each floor having 14 windows on a side, with each window formerly being for an individual hand-frame worker. The western part was added later in the 19th century and its wider windows match the machine-based methods of later production. The mill ceased operating in 1999.

the Buccleuch Muniments (thu-bu-kloo-mew-nee-mints) n. formal name for the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, particularly used by William Fraser in his 2 volume summary of the documents. This archive is an invaluable source of local information, since it preserves many documents relating to the area around Hawick from centuries when few other papers survive. The muniments were contained in charter chests kept at Branhxholme and then moved to Dalkeith, but moved for protection to the Bass Rock in 1651 and Edinburgh Castle in 1666. They were held at Wemyss Castle during the minority of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. They were then stored for safe-keeping in a new stone building on Parliament Close, but caught in the great fire in Edinburgh in 1700; they were rescued by the Earl of Melville, who badly burned his hand and arm in the process. The index is available through the National Archives of Scotland.

Buccleuch Nurseries (bu-kloo-nur-ser-eez) n. former commercial plant nursery on Lynnwood Road/Slitrig Crescent, now the site for the Stonefield housing estate. It was run by John Forbes on land rented from the Duke of Buccleuch, running from 1879 (after Forbes moved from his present location at Havelock Nurseries). The nurseries went through various changes and finally closed in 1968. They grew a wide range of plants for sale, including hot houses etc. (in greenhouses), and supplied customers from all over Britain. It was for a while the largest grower of Penstemons in the world, offering 550 varieties in 1900. It was also known for its antirrhinums, delphiniums, gaillardias, pansies and phloxes. It was renamed the Royal Nurseries for several years in the early 20th century, and often known locally as Forbes’ Nurseries. Prominent from the railway, the nurseries were also open to visitors, and there were sales on the premises, although most of the business was in supplying distant customers. Some species from the nursery colonised nearby pieces of ground, explaining the presence of some odd plants in that area, even today.

Buccleuch Park (bu-kloo-pawrk) n. cricket field behind a high unsightly wall between the High School and the Volunteer. It has been the headquarters of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club since 1860. Hawick Rugby Football Club originally played their games there 1873–85. A rugby match there in 1879 may have been the first sporting event to be played under floodlights in Scotland.

the Buccleuch Pipers (thu-bu-kloo-pi-purz) n. name used around 1900 for the pipe band in Hawick, probably the ex-Servicemen’s Band.

Buccleuch Road (bu-kloo-rôd) n. name given in 1905 to the part of the New Road that lies within the town boundaries and is the continuation of Buccleuch Street.

Buccleuch Schuil (bu-kloo-skil) n. new school buildings on Buccleuch Street, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch to replace those of the Grammar School on Orrock Place. The Duke of Buccleuch gave the land and offered to pay for the erection of the new school and schoolmaster’s house in 1859, and it was built by 1860. The school was enlarged in 1875 and a new infant department added. It was further enlarged in 1884 and remodelled in 1906–08, being renamed Buccleuch Higher Grade School. For several years, starting in 1895 the Secondary School was run from Teviot Grove on Union Street. The school finally became ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915. Originally there was also a primary school there. A new infant building was added in 1875, enlarged in 1876 and in 1886, and ran until the 1940s. A large fraction of the early building was destroyed in the fire of 1925. The school started a tradition of singing the Common Riding song on the Thursday in 1872, which led to the Cornet’s visits to the schools that day. William Pitcairn was Headmaster in the late 1800s and early 1900s and William Forsyth was acting Headmaster 1906–08 – ‘Oh! where are a’ the laddies noo? We were a merry crew That day we marched in rank and file Tae oor new schule – Buccleuch’ [WLü] (also known as ‘Buccleuch Public School’).

the Buccleuch Star (thu-bu-kloo-stawr) n. former semi-junior rugby team. It was run by Pesco’s, and existed for only a couple of years before WWII.

Buccleuch Street (bu-kloo-stree’) n. street that begins the New Road towards the south and was named in 1815 after the local Ducal family of Buccleuch. The first building there may have been what now forms the central portion and offices of Pesco’s, built shortly after 1816 for a firm of local solicitors. No. 2 is also an early building, once housing the Burns Inn. The terraced block of Nos. 8–20 were built around 1820, constructed of whinstone with sandstone dressings and painted tabbed margins. They also involve some elegant details (e.g. the fanlight at No. 10 and the former Grapes Close at No. 16). Across the street stands the Chapel of Saints Mary and David and the adjoining hall, formerly the Subscription Rooms and the Commercial Inn. Further down the street was the Old Parish Church, as well as the High School. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 22 are grade C listed.

Buccleuch Terrace (bu-kloo-te-ris) n. street in the West End, off Beaconsfield Terrace, with houses built around 1903. It includes St. Margaret’s Primary School.

the Buccleuch Vaults (thu-bu-kloo-vawltz) n. burial chamber of the Scotts of Buccleuch at St. Mary’s Church for about two centuries. The last burial there was that of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, and the vault was sealed up after the church was rebuilt in 1763. The site is said to have been attached to the choir, perhaps beneath the eastern stair leading to the Duke’s Loft. Rev. Somerville in 1738 writes ‘I only find their bodies in lead coffins, having sheets of lead with names and arms fixed to the heads of their coffins’. Its position was described in 1863 by a family (unnamed) with an adjacent burial place, who stated they had had an arch built at the east end of the south wall when the south wall was moved 6 feet in 1763. James Wilson stated that this was because the ‘south front-wall’ of the new church in 1763 was found to interfere with the burial vault of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and that this ‘Duke’s Arch’ formed in the wall was still visible in the 1850s.

Buccleuch Works (bu-kloo-wurks) n. name sometimes used for the hosiery manufacturing premises of James Bonsor & Co., on Buccleuch Street, also known as Buccleuch Mills.

Buchan (bu-kin) n. alternative spelling of Buchleuch, common until the early 19th century.

most famous world-wide for his novel ‘The Thirty-Nine Steps’ (1914), he is locally better known for poems such as ‘The South Countrie’. He was later M.P. for the Scottish Universities and Governor-General of Canada. He became Baron Tweedsmuir in 1935. The John Buchan Centre is located at Broughton near Biggar, which was where his grandfather preached, his parents first met, and was the family childhood holiday home.

bucket (bu-ki) n., arch., poet. an animal enclosure, sheep fold, particularly used for gathering ewes for milking – ‘Yestreen I saw them when we milk’d the ewes, He drawe them to the bught out o’er the knows’ [CPM], ‘The yowes they lap out owre the buchtie, And skippit up and downe’ [JTe], ‘...except the remains of its tower, which are still standing, and sometimes used by the tenant as a bught for his sheep’ [RWB], ‘...For the sun is shining on bught and bower And I’ll find thee a mother in Kirkhope Tower’ [WHO], v. to enclose animals, particularly to gather ewes for milking – ‘Weel, it was the custom to milk yowes i’ thae days, and my father was buchtin’ the Brockalaw yowes ... ’ [LHTB] (also written ‘bught’); the word occurs in some place names, e.g. Bught Knowe, Bught Shank and Bught Sike; also boucht; from Dutch).

Buck Cleuch (buk-clooch) n. deep ravine of the Clear Burn, just off the B711 east of the farms of Buccleuch. This is where traditionally a young Scott seized a buck with his bare hands and presented it to the King. There was once a mill on the burn, with traces of the mill lade still visible. The cleuch is about 100 feet down at its deepest part. A small crook at the steepest part, ‘about halfway between the East house and the Mill dam ford’ (according to the Ordnance Survey Name Book) is said to have been the specific location where the buck was slain (in fact the name probably has a different etymology, and was used synonymously with ‘Rankelburn’ when referring to the lands of the Scotts).

bucket (bu-ki) n. bin, pail, especially wastepaper bin or garbage bin – ‘it’s your turn ti pit the buckets oot’, ‘if ye deh behave, A’ll pit aa yur toys in the bucket’, ‘...she said her faimly wad juist pit it in the bucket and she wanted it ti come back ti Hawick’ [IWL].

Buckham (bu-kum) n. Adam (d.c.1683) tenant in West Lees, probably the one in Hob Kirk Parish. His will is recorded in 1683 and that of his wife (although his surname is transcribed there as ‘Benholme’ for ‘Buckholme’) in 1681. Adam (17th C.) tenant somewhere close to Bonchester, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Abbotrule Parish. Adam (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Mervinslaw according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. George (d.c.1686) tenant in Hallrule. His testament is recorded in both 1684 and 1686. George (18th C.) coachman listed at Wells in 1791, when he was working for Gilbert Elliott. Probably the same George was gardener at Weens in 1792 (for William Oliver of Dinlabyre). George (d.1820) yarn merchant of the early 19th century, running the company George Buckham & Co. Ltd. The firm continued until his death. He may have originally come from Manchester. The Museum has ledgers from 1818–20. Either he or perhaps his son subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the George who married Margaret Goodfellow (1792–1834). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Howison (or ‘Jean Huison’) in 1754 and their children included: William (b.1761); Janet (b.1761); Isabel (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1767); and Ann (b.1771). The witnesses in 1764 were mason William Howison and shoemaker William Elliot. James (d.1831) labourer who owned 12 Back Row. His sisters were probably Isobel (who died in 1829) and Ann (who died in 1820, wife of Robert Pringle). He either gave or sold his property to the Pringle family. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, to the east of Robert Pringle’s. James (18th/19th C.) cooper of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. Thomas Haswell was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (17th C.) owner of Belses Mill, as recorded in 1643. His lands there were valued at £200 and listed in Ancrum Parish. John (1691/2–1764) tenant in Bedrule. He married Mary Oliver, who died in 1757, aged 63. Their children included: Isobel, John and Robert, who died young; Isobel (1730/1–57); and probably John, late tenant in Bedrule. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He could have been the tenant of Bedrule at the time a story of the fairy folk was told; the farmer’s wife gave her only bit of barley to a fairy, and later had it replaced by a quantity that kept her and the reapers in bread throughout the harvest. John of Overtonbush (1726/7–79) tenant in Bedrule. He was probably son of the earlier John. He married Agnes Dunlop, who died in 1814, aged 75. Their children included: Mary, James and Agnes, who all died young; Isabella, who died aged 17; and William (d.1799) who died off the coast of Africa. His family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John ‘Jock’ (19th C.) local ‘toper’ of the mid-1900s, mentioned in William Easton’s ‘The Anvil Crew’ and ‘Run Them In’. It is unclear how he was related to other Buckham’s. His memory was revived in J.C. Goodfellow’s burlesque poem ‘The Voyage of the Great Eastern’ – ‘...And Captain Menty walked the deck, While Buckham marn’d the wheel’ [WE], ‘Jock Buckham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags...’ [WE], ‘...For Captain Fraser walked the deck And Buckham turned the wheel’ [JCG]. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Town o’ Rule in 1694. He may be the same man as Robert of West Lees. Robert of West Lees (18th C.) heiror of Hobkir Parish in the early 1700s. He was recorded as Laird there in 1738 (when his servant William Turnbull’s child was baptised) and in 1745. He may be the Robert who married Margaret Hutton in Hobkir Parish in 1732. His daughter Janet married Robert Scott in 1756. William (17th C.) recorded at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was listed for 4 hearths, suggesting he was the main tenant on the farm at that time (also written ‘Buckam’, ‘Buckholm’, ‘Buckholme’ and ‘Buckolm’).

Buckholm (bu-kum) n. village just north of Galashiels, with the nearby ruined Buckholm Tower dating from 1582. The tower overlooks the valley towards Torwoodlee and was the location for the last ‘laying’ of an evil spirit by an ordained Church of Scotland minister (the origin is probably Old English ‘bucca helm’, meaning ‘the buck’s shelter’; it is first recorded as ‘Buchelmi’ about 1200).

Bumma Rae (bu-nu-rä) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the 19th century, perhaps referring to a perceived boastful quality – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’[HI].

bummer (bu-nur) n. a boaster, an overseer, manager – ‘hei was the heid bummer in the mill’ (it is unclear if this comes from ‘bum’ meaning to hum, or the word for boasting, or perhaps both).

bummie (bu-née) n. a bumblebee, bee – ‘hei kept bummies for a time’, ‘Fleis an midges an bummies war skiddlin in an bizzin about ma lugs’[ECS], ‘...And biirdly bummies pub-crawled in the clover’[DH], to ‘pit bummies in somebody’s heid’ is to give someone an idea or a bee in their bonnet (also sometimes bumbbee).

bunn (bun) pp., arch. bound (also band and bun)

bunnet (bu-nt) n. a bonnet, particularly a flat-topped cap worn by older men. In the 18th century ordinary men’s would have been of blue worsted, with the employers sometimes wearing black, but since the 19th century a checked pattern has been the norm – ‘hei never went anywhere without his bunnet’, ‘Get away wi’ ye or I’l fling yer bunnet in the glaur, and there it’s’[JEDM].

Bunster (bu-stur) n. local name for Bonchester, as recorded by Walter Deans in the 1880s. The variant Binster is more common today.

bunter (bu-tur) n., arch. a disreputable woman – ‘There are still many old bunters going about the country pretending to be skilled in fortune-telling and divination...’[EM1820].
buntie (bun-tee) adj., poet. probably referring to a style of jacket with a tail – ‘He cam’ to Hawick without a groat, In Denholm-blue short, buntie coat’ [RDW].

buntifully (bun-ti-fu-lee) adv., poet. bountifully – ‘...the righteous sall be roun’ aboot me; for thou sallt deel buntifullie wi’ me’ [HSR].

Bunyan (bun-yen) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1741); Janet (again, b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); and John (b.1747). His surname is given as ‘Bonzie’ and ‘Bunyan’. The witnesses in 1743 were dyer Robert Pringle and Pringle’s servant George Campbell. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young. In 1760 he was listed as ‘Church officer’ when he witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott, another for Robert Scott, and others for merchant John Hardie and for William Nichol (when he was again ‘officer’). He is probably the ‘Alex. Bunzie’ recorded in the description of the flood of 1767, when 2 houses to the west of his were swept away, this being somewhere near Towerdykeside. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for William Burnet and in 1768 another for fellow gardener Charles Turnbull. George (1839–75) son of James. He was a Hawick barber like his father. In 1856 he donated to the Archiological Society an old gun found at Hermitage, as well as stuffed animals. He donated further items in the 1860s. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Cote. He was listed along with John on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was recorded as owner of 7 farm horses. His surname is listed as ‘Bunzie’. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Effledge in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (1795/6–1832) eldest surviving son of Thomas, farmer at Cavers Mains. He took over as farmer of Cavers Mains from his father and then later was tenant at Stiches Mains. He paid the Horse Tax at Westcote in 1797. In 1820 he married Catherine Angus, probably daughter of agricultural labourer John at Broomhill. Their children were: Thomas, who died aged 21; John (b.1828) who was a clerk; Jemima Catherine (1828–1920), twin of John, who died at Wellogate Manse, home of her 2nd cousin Rev. Ainslie; Isabella, who married her cousin Thomas Bunyan, who was a warden at the Tower of London; and Margaret Elizabeth (1833–1902). His widow and 3 children were living at Broomhill in 1842, with John Angus, and at about 50 High Street in 1851; most of the family lived in Hawick later. His wife died in 1890, aged 81. They are buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. James (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh, he was a barber in Hawick. In 1841 he was recorded at 29 High Street and was listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary, who died before 1851. Their children included James, Mary, Ann, Isaac, George, Jane and Andrew. He could be the James who was an early member of the Archiological Society, and of whom a portrait exists, dying at Stirches Mains in 1889. John (17th C.) married Agnes Melrose ‘At Minto’ in 1693, as recorded in the records of Melrose Kirk. James (17th/19th C.) farmer at Spittal. He is recorded as ‘Bunzie’ when he was listed as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John listed along with James at West Cote on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1828–1915) born in Cavers Parish, son of James and Catherine Angus. He trained as a Solicitor’s Writing Clerk, and then worked for the Commercial Bank. He donated items to the Museum in 1857 and became a member of the Archiological Society in 1862. He could be the Mr. Bunyan who visited Kelso Museum in 1857 and immediately suggested that the Hawick Archiological Society obtain a room, shelves and display cases (which suggestion was unanimously accepted). He later moved to a bank in Liverpool. He shared lodging with another bank employee who was found guilty of embezzlement. During the trial the judge remarked how surprising it was that he could have lived and worked with this man but known nothing about it; this unjust criticism apparently preyed on his mind, causing him to have to give up working altogether. Robert (18th C.) probably name for farmer at Ashybank in Cavers Parish. He is recorded on the 1878 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Bonie’ and in 1878 as ‘Burru’, his name being hard to transcribe. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mason who was one of the tradesmen selected in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of Hawick Manse. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside. In 1762 he was witness for the baptism of twins of Adam Hutton. He was recorded as farmer at Teindside in the period 1785–97, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was taxed for having 2 work horses. Thomas (1753–1823) tenant farmer of Spittal-on-Rule and later Cavers Mains and Templehall. He was recorded at Spittal on the 1794 Horse Tax rolls. He was an early member of the Relief Kirk.

in Jedburgh, becoming one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was a Trustee and Bondholder, presiding over the Session, and generally being regarded as the founding father of the church. In 1787 he married Betty (b.1767), only surviving daughter of James Veitch and Betty Murray (thus connecting all 3 of the families that farmed Spittal-on-Rule). Their children were: John (b.1788), who died young; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1791), who married Thomas Rutherford, farmer at Ancrum Craig; Jane (b.1793), who died young; James (b.1795), who succeeded his father at Cavers Mains; Thomas (b.1801); and Jane, again (b.1805), who was a teacher.

Thomas (b.1801) younger son of Thomas and Betty Veitch. He was tenant farmer at High Tofts. He married Margaret Telfer in 1823. Their eldest son was Thomas, who became Chief Warder at the Tower of London and married his cousin Isabella Bunyan. Thomas (19th C.) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at High Tofts. He was Sergeant-Major with the 79th Highlanders, serving in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He was later Yeoman Warder at the Tower of London, for 14 years and Chief Warder for 16 years. He had a son, James, who was a banker in London (formerly spelled ‘Bonze’, ‘Bonzie’, ‘Buinya’, ‘Bunion’, ‘Bunnion’, ‘Bunyeon’, ‘Bunzie’, etc.).

Bunyan’s Close (bun-yinz-klös) n. passage-way off the High Street, recorded in the 1860s, but of uncertain location. It was possibly near 50 High Street where the Bunyan family kept a library.

burd (burd) n. bird (occasional spelling to emphasize the pronunciation).

burdie (bur-dee) n. a little bird, affectionate term for a bird.

burding (bur-ding) n., arch. a burden – ‘…for our selfis, and takand the burding vpoun ws for our haill surname of Batyis cumit of the hous of Cowchquhairglen …’ [SB1595].

Burge (burj) n. Richard ‘Dick’ (19th/20th C.) British Lightweight Boxing Champion and owner of Blackfriars Ring. He was one of the more famous boxers to appear in exhibition matches at Hawick Common Riding in the latter part of the 19th century.

burgess (bur-jis) n. a freeman of a town – ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s heir that is to be admitted burgess and freeman within this Bruch, sal only pay the wyne to the Bailles, with pertinents’ [BR1640], ‘The quhilke day, John Gledstaines of Hillisland, and John Scott, smith, wer admittit and creat Burgesses and gave their Bargess Oaths’ [BR1692], adj. relating to burgesses – ‘…and the money payd out of the burgess money by Bayleya Ruecastell at the pryces aftermentionat …’ [BR1707] (see also Burgesses).

Burgess (bur-jis) n. Robert (19th C.) man who gave evidence at the investigation into the election riots in Hawick in 1837.

Burgesses (bur-ji-seez) n., pl. freemen of Hawick. They had the right to graze cows and take turfs from the Common, and a vote among the Burgesses selected the two magistrates. Admission as a Burgess involved a sum of money (for a long time 40 shillings Scots), with first sons automatically allowed to become Burgesses, while second and later sons, and sons-in-law had to pay a higher fee (£4 £8 Scots). Being made a Burgess was also sometimes an inducement, e.g. in 1694 when 2 men who had been selected from Hawick to serve in the militia were admitted for free. Only Burgesses could trade within the town, and for a long time only the sons of Burgesses could be Cornet. They essentially constituted the town’s middle class. A dispute between many Burgesses followed the 1777 Division of the Common, with a decision by the Court of Session clarifying the rights of the Burgesses to elect the Bailies and other Officers. In 1781 it was decreed that no one from the countryside would be admitted as a Burgess unless they came to reside in the Town. Before 1855 the Magistrates and Council elected a number of Burgesses to assist the Junior Bailie in riding the marches, and they also had to carry out posts at the Watch-knowe. The first Burgess on record is Simon Routledge in 1433, suggesting that Hawick was already a Burgh then; there are similar records of 1447 and 1454. In the sasine of 1452 for the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, Thomas Blair is described as a Bailie of Hawick, and then occurs this list of 4 names: ‘Johanne Walch, Roberto Falconar, Thoma de Lutherdale, Roberto Wchiltre, burgensibus’. 4 Burgesses listed on a document relating to Whitchesters (made at St. Mary’s) are Simon Routledge, John Waugh, Thomas Blair and Thomas Lidderdale. Robert Cessford is recorded as a Burgess in 1490. A list of those who contributed to the new kirk bell in 1693/4 is likely to be essentially a list of burgesses at that time; it contains 180 names (with the ordering of the names being according to who gave the most.

money, hence many of the east-end merchants are near the beginning and west-end weavers come later). 60 Burgesses voted in the election of the Bailies in 1702. In 1715 there were 82 Burgesses, Bailies and Councillors who took an oath to the new King. In 1769 144 Burgesses and owners of particulates signed the statement made regarding the Town’s legal position on the Common, and there were said to be about 200 Burgesses in 1770. However, another estimate puts the number at as many as 407 Burgesses in 1770 and 437 recorded a little later. There were 211 in 1803, when a large number of eligible men were admitted (including sons above the age of 16) just before electing the Town Clerk. However, there were only 144 in 1860 just before they were made obsolete – ‘They met in the Kirkyard and loaining. Old burgesses loyal and true’ [RSC], ‘So much to sing, dear town, in the long years, Do you remember, in your old grey heart, The burgess-men who smiled at craven fears And on the field of Flodden played their part’ [JYH].

Burgess Oath (bur-jis-ðið) n. oath of fidelity taken on admittance as a Burgess, recorded in the Town Book of 1681, and unchanged since then. The words are ‘I promise and swear I shall be a true and faithful Burgess of the Burgh of Hawick. That I shall defend the liberties thereof in all time coming with my body, goods, and gear; be obedient to the Magistrates and their successors in office; that I shall give the Bailies and Council of the Burgh the best advice I can when they ask it of me. I shall conceal that which they impart to me. I shall colour no man’s goods under colour of me. That I shall take on admittance as a Burgess, recorded in the Town Book of 1681, and unchanged since then.

the Burgess Roll (thu-bur-jis-ról) n. list of Burgesses read by the Town Clerk for generations at the Ca’ Knowe during the Common Riding. The penalty for non-attendance at the reading was £10 Scots. The roll was traditionally read at 12 noon. After the Division the Roll was read at Bailie’s Hill for a while, but was eventually discontinued – ‘And voice calls to voice by the spirit mound Where the Burgess-Dead keep trysting-ground, And the Roll to the winds is given’ [JYH].

burgess silver (bur-jis-sil-vur) n., arch. the money taken in by a burg as fees from burgesses – ‘On balancing the Treasurer’s accounts for his ‘intromissions with the Burges Silver’, he is found to have on hand £83 Scots’ [JW1656].

burgess ticket (bur-jis-ti-ki’) n. the document affirming the status of a burgess, also given to honorary burgesses.

burgh (bu-ru) n. a town with a charter, granted by the monarch or by a noble, allowing the townspeople certain privileges, such as the right to hold a market (cf. ‘borough’ in England). They were abolished during local government reorganisation in 1975.

the Burgh (thu-bu-ru) n. term used to refer to Hawick, particularly in the period when it had its own Town Council. Hawick achieved its ‘burgh of barony’ status when granted its first burghal charter, probably by Douglas of Drumlanrig sometime in the 15th century, with a restatement of its status in 1511 and a regranting of its charter in 1537. The date of the first charter is unknown, but must be before the first record of a burgess in 1433. The confirming charter of the Barony of Hawick granted to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1407 includes ‘also the burgh of Hawick, as freely as the granter or any of his predecessors had enjoyed’, suggesting that it was not a burgh of barony at that time. Because of wording in the 1537 Charter, the legal status of the Town was assumed to be the same as that of a Royal Burgh (specifically the right of the Bailies to accepted resignations of land and grant infeftments, independent of the Baron), except for not having its own member of Parliament. However, this status was questioned at various times, e.g. 2 advocates were consulted in 1667 regarding the tenure of the Burgh. In 1770 the number of houses belonging to Burgesses was 206, valued at more than £31,000.

The assessment for the poor rates in 1814 was £3717. In a case of 1807 it was established that the Burgh was independent of the Baron.

Burgh Assessor (bu-ru-aw-so-sur) n. former official of the Town Council who annually prepared the property valuation rolls, based upon which the Town’s rates were levied. This position would have existed from the 1860s until 1975. Andrew Scott held this post for a while in the late 19th century.

Burgh Brae (bu-ru-brá) n. former name for a road off Princes Street, also called Farthing Row.

Burgh Chamberlain (bu-ru-cham-bur-lin) n. formerly the Town official in charge of receiving rents etc., another title for town treasurer.

Burgher (bu-gur) n., arch. a Burgess – ‘...intimation being made to all the Burghers, and none objecting, Mungo Armstrong, town herd, was continued in that office for the ensuing year’ [BR1724].

Burgher (bu-gur) n., arch. a member of the Secession Church that believed one should take the Burgess Oath, and separated from the ‘Anti-Burghers’ in 1747, adj., arch. relating to the Burghers.

the Burghers (thu-bur-gurz) n., pl. group who seceded from the church after 1747 in opposition to the patronage system, but were a little more liberal-minded than the Anti-Burghers, considering it proper to take the Burgess oath, which asserted ‘the true religion professed within the realm’. They are sometimes referred to as the ‘dissenting seceders’, or the Second Secession Church. In Hawick the church probably grew out of a splinter group of the Anti-Burghers at the Green Kirk in about 1770, with adherents originally attending meetings in Selkirk. The East Bank (or East End) Burgher congregation was founded in 1773 and the East End Meeting House was built at what is now Trinity Gardens in 1780. There was great animosity between the two secessionist churches in the latter part of the 18th century, but they reunited in 1820. However in Hawick they continued to preach in separate churches (although the congregations would attend the other when a minister was away). The names ‘Burgher’ and ‘Anti-Burgher’ continued to be used for the 2 congregations for many decades afterwards, being synonymous with ‘East-End’ and ‘West-End’. There was also a Burgher congregation in Lilliesleaf.

Burgh Hill (bu-ru-hil) n. hill rising to 314 m (1,003 ft) near Dod farm, site of a stone circle, as well as a hill-fort with a large standing stone in its interior, other earthworks on the eastern side by the road and an extensive settlement on its southern slopes by the Allan Water. The fort is situated on the south-west summit; it measures about 100 m by 30 m, and has 2 massive stone ramparts, with quarries and ditches. The standing stone does not appear to be related to the hill-fort, although it is inside it. A smaller settlement occupies the north-east half of the hill-fort’s interior, containing a hut-circle and 2 other possible hut platforms. The stone circle is located on a shelf near the summit, and is egg-shaped. It has about 25 stones, with 13 still standing, in a ring measuring 16.5 × 13.4 m. One stone stood at least 1.5 m tall. The settlement to the east lies on the opposite side of the road from Doburn Filter Cottage, straddling an unnamed sike. It extends about 140 m by 110 m and is a complex collection of enclosures, banks, ditches and mounds. Excavations in the early 1980s turned up numerous objects showing occupation from Iron Age to the post-medieval period, and foundations were found for several round-houses, with multiple rebuilding phases. The settlement complex to the south lies on the east bank of the Allan Water, and covers about 120 m by 105 m, defined by 2 banks and a ditch, best preserved on the north-west side. An oval enclosure inside suggests multiple phases of occupation, but it is hard to make out details because of agricultural development, erosion from the river and the now marshy ground. A drainage ditch cut in 1985 resulted in an archaeological excavation (note the area is also known as ‘Brugh’ and pronounced bruf).

the Burgh Members’ Plate (thu-bu-ruem-burz-pla’) n. race ran on the Friday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

burgh o barony (bu-ru-o-baw-ri-nee) n. a burgh that was granted its charter by a nobleman rather than the crown (cf. Royal Burgh) – Hawick achieved this status at least by 15th June 1511, probably early in the 15th century.

Burgh Officer (bu-ru-o-fee-sur) n. in former times an employee of the Town, responsible for delivering official messages, as well as assisting the Sheriff Officer in maintaining law and order. It appears to have long been traditional that there are 2 such men. They would sometimes act as Sheriff Officers themselves, assisting in Jedburgh and being the equivalent of the local police force. Duties sometimes also included being drummer, bellman or lamplighter, and the title is often synonymous with ‘Halberdier’. They would announce deaths, as well as other events, such as the killing of a bullock. Formerly they had blue-grey coats with mulberry trim and brass buttons, replaced later with the familiar brown and yellow (for reasons that are unknown, with James Wilson in 1858 berating whoever was responsible for losing the traditional colours). Now this is an honorary position during the Common Riding. One of them delivers the official letter to the Cornet-Elect each year, receives a new shilling (the actual allowance given in the early 19th century) in return and transmits the acknowledgement back to the Provost’s Council. In earlier times they also had official duties to perform for the Kirk Session, e.g. assisting during Communion days. It also seems that in early times each of the 2 Officers was assigned to a specific Bailie. There are records of Burgh Officers going back to the early 17th century. In 1702 the ‘town’s officer, piper, and drummer’ were each allowed £6 Scots

for new coats, showing that at this time they were separate positions. In order to save money (because of the debt from Teviot Brig) in 1747 the Council agree that the officers should only have ‘coarse home-made cloth coats, and coarse hats’, costing no more than 3 half-crowns and 14 pence, respectively. In 1753 the 2 officers were allowed an annual salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. In 1806 the Officers were prohibited from being present at the Council meetings. The post of Burgh Officer (for one of the 2 Halberdiers) remained officially within the Council until 1996, with the last 3 men being Robert Naylor, Bill Allan and George Milligan (see also Halberdiers).

the Burgh of Hawick (thu-bu-ru-or-hIk) n. name given to one of the aircraft in the British Caledonian fleet in 1971. It was a BAC 1–11 type 201 AC, registration G—ASJH. It was later operated in the U.S.A., broken up at Southend, used to film an aircraft crash, and the hulk possibly now resides at St. Leonard’s, Bournemouth.

Burgh Records (bu-ru-re-kördz) n. official records of the Town. The earliest existing Town Book begins on 1st October 1638 and is called ‘The Court Book of the Towne & Burghe of Hawick’. It was carried on by 4 successive Town Clerks until 5th October 1681, with many other books coming later. Additionally there were books of Town expenditures kept by the Burgh Treasurer. Although the early records are scanty, the entries are full of historical colour, and become more comprehensive as time progresses. The records from before 1638 were probably lost through the incursions of ‘Englishmen and thieves’. These books are still stored in the Town Hall. Excerpts from the books make up a large part of James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) and are also included in his ‘Memories of Hawick’ (1858), as well as in a series of early articles by David McBurnie Watson in the Archaeological Society Transactions and in Craig & Laing’s ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898).

the Burgh Seal (thu-bu-ru-seel) n. the official seal of Hawick, being the precursor of the town Coat of Arms. The design was carried out by John Sanderson, lapidary of Edinburgh, in 1817, in consultation with John Oliver, Town Clerk. It is composed of an open bible, with 1514 flag on the left and crowned heart on the right, with a lighted lamp over all on a black background. This was originally surrounded by a garland bearing the words ‘Sigillum Burgi de Hawick’ (Burgh Seal of Hawick), and surmounted by a castellated crest. Larger and smaller versions were made, both engraved onto pieces of jasper from Roberts’ Linn. Several later variations were used, until the design was formally entered in the Public Register of Arms and Bearings in 1929. Note that a printing error in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (copied in the Marquis of Bute’s 1850 catalogue of seals) attributed part of Queen Mary’s seal to Hawick’s; this was corrected by Craig & Laing. In 1957 a scroll with the slogan ‘Tyr-ibus Ye Tyr Ye Odin’ was added. After Reorganisation Hawick lost its Burgh status and in 1977 the crest was changed to a coronet depicting leaves and pine cones, appropriate for use by a Community Council.

Burgh Surveyor (bu-ru-sur-vä-ur) n. position under the old Town Council, being a person with engineering qualifications in charge of roads, sewage, etc. The last such official was George Bee. In earlier times there was someone appointed to be surveyor of weights and measures at the markets, the first such appointment being in 1774.

the Burgh Yaird (thu-bu-ru-yärd) n. workshops and storage yards of various council departments, situated between the western end of Commercial Road and the river. The first of the buildings was erected in 1885.

buriet (bi-rec’) pp. buried – ‘I dinnae want buriet in Wulton, boys, For although it’s faisable near, I’d never ken o’ a meenit’s peace When I heard them roar and cheer’ [DH].

burler (bur-lur) n. occupation in the tweed industry, similar to a specker in knitwear, a person who removes small imperfections in a garment. ‘Burling irons’ are essentially large tweezers.

burleyman (bur-lee-man) n., arch. official of a town charged with enforcing the laws, another name for a Burgh officer or specially appointed Burgess. The word was formerly used in Hawick to refer to a number of Burgess who were selected by the Magistrates to ride the marches, and is still used in Selkirk’s Common Riding – ‘John Hardie, maltman, and John Tudhope, wright, two ordinary sworne burleymen of the said town and brughe’ [BR1688], ‘May 4. Spent in Mr Weir’s, in establishing 6 burlemen for the town, ..0 1 6’ [BR1747], ‘The Marches shall be rode as usual, and the Burleymen to be appointed and to dine as usual’ [BR1809]. ‘Burley-men and halberdiers, and ‘Drums i’ the Wallgate Pipes i the air ..’ [DH] (from ‘burgh law-man’).

the Burleymen (thu-bur-lee-min) n., pl., arch. 12 men formerly appointed by the Council to accompany the Bailies in riding the marches. After the Division of the Common in 1777 the appointment became a courtesy one. From the end of the 18th century they rode the marches with only the Junior Bailie, accompanied by the Burgh Officers and 4 men carrying the ‘flaughter spades’. They were last appointed in 1854, and after 1856 attendance of the Burleymen and Magistrates at the riding of the marches was discontinued.

Burlington Hoose (bur-lin-tin-hoos) n. name sometimes used for 25 North Bridge Street, formerly G. Allen Robinson’s photographic studio. It was later the location of photographer William Scott Andison Ingles and then Redmayne the tailor.

burn (burn) n. a stream, brook – ‘Ah, Tam! Gi’e me a Border burn . . .’[JBS], ‘Gie me the bonny broomy knowe, The burn that roond it rins, Wi’ splash and spurt and peaceful purl, And mony outs and ins’[JEDM], ‘. . .bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an haa’[ECS], ‘. . .The Rhine, the Thames, the Amazon; of these all children learn But, how many know the magic of a lively Border burn?’[TD], ‘Oh, ee’re juist ma little troot i the burn’[DH], ‘. . .when the licht never fades beyond the under-water twilicht o a clear-rinnin burn’[DH] (from Old English).

Burn (burn) n. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Synton in 1786, when she was working for Charles Riddell. Elspeth (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She is probably the ‘Elizabeth Burne, widow of Wm. Burnfield, chirurgeon’ listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4; it is unclear who her husband might have been, but his surname was probably ‘Bruntfield’. James (16th/17th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592, 1619 and 1622 (although it is possible this was his son). He is probably also the Bailie of Hawick (along with Robert Scott of ‘Auldtown’) who was involved with the years long dispute with Douglas of Drulmania over a bond of 1601. Bailie James’ younger (17th C.) probably the son of the above. He was on the ‘leet’ for the election of the Bailies in 1638 and was also mentioned the following year when he was one of 2 Hawick men who gathered money for the soldiers in the town. He was also probably the Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He was Bailie in 1640/1, along with James Scott. In 1641 (while he was Bailie) he was put in the stocks for attacking Margaret Ross, ‘Nurse’ and cutting her forehead, apparently because he believed her to be a witch! He accused her of being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was probably the same James who was Bailie in 1648/9. He is probably the James who was a Bailie in the 1650s and 60s and who was a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the ‘Burn’ (no forename given) who was Magistrate in 1675 when he was among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon (however, this could be the next generation). He may be the James who married Marion Scott, and whose children born in Hawick included Margaret (b.1643), Bessie (b.1644), Isobel (b.1647), Walter (b.1649), Marion (b.1650) and Marion (again, b.1652). It is possible he is also the James, married to Christian Scott, whose children included Margaret (b.1637) and Elspeth (b.1639). James (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. In 1705 he and fellow glover William Bruntfield were witnesses for another glover, Alexander Hislop. He may be the same man as the Bailie. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) recorded being Bailie several times in the 1710s and 1720s, specifically in 1713 and 1720. He was probably father of the next James. He was probably the ‘Burne’ who was Bailie at the 1709 Common Riding and was Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was probably the ‘Bilife Burne’ recorded in 1723 when he was asked by the Council to ‘take instruments against Stobes’ (probably for encroachments on the Common). He may have been the only surviving son of Robert and Marion Burn, who inherited the lands of Croft Angry in 1728 and sold them to Walter Scott (of the Crumhaugh branch). He may be the same Bailie Burn who, in 1716, was rebuked for being at a late night drunken brawl at the house of Thomas Huggan, the rebuke being particularly sharp because he was both a Magistrate and an Elder! In 1728 he gave a tenement and other lands in Hawick to Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch, in ‘liferent’. He was probably the James (possibly a glover) who witnessed a baptism in 1704 for James Falside. He married Christian Gledstains in Hawick in 1700. Their children included: Robert (b.1701); Francis (b.1703); James (b.1706); John (b.1717); Walter (b.1721); and James (again, b.1723). Marie (b.1705), Beatrix men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged their behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as `mekle Johne Burn in Branxholm', so he was presumably a tenant at Branxholme who was large in some way. Marion (b.1652) daughter of James and Marion Scott. She married Robert in 1678. Their son Alexander was born in Hawick in 1680 and Robert in 1685. In 1728 the lands of Croft Angry were re-granted to her only surviving son, James. She could be the Marion who payed for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick `eist the water' in 1694 and the `Maryn Burne, widow' listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Martin (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. He was recorded as `Martyne Burne in Swenesteidis', which is probably Swinstead. Mungo (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may have served as factor or similar. Nichol (17th C.) said to have been one of the last of the wandering minstrels of the Borders. In `The Roxburghe Ballads', reprinting broadsheets of the 1600s, published in 1847, the ballad called `Leader Haughs and Yarrow' is attributed to `Burne the Violer'. His name is usually written `Nicol Burne', although there is no documentary evidence of who he was and when exactly he lived. It is possible that his name is confounded with the Scottish theologian of the 16th century. It is said that in his old age he found shelter with the Scotts of Thirlestane (or perhaps the Maitlands of the other Thirlestane). Thomas (16th C.) owner of 1 1/2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Walter (d.bef. 1793) gardener in Hawick. His daughter Elizabeth married John Nourse in Edinburgh in 1793, and his daughter Janet married David Jackson there in 1794. He may be the Walter recorded in 1770 when `Mr Gladstains' was paid `for toul at Walter Burns' port'. He may have been the Walter, son of James, who was born in Hawick in 1721. Possibly he was the Walter who married Janet Kerr in Wilton in 1752 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Mary (b.1757), James (b.1759), Janet (b.1761) and Elizabeth (b.1763).

William (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when a group of men, led by John Sinclair, came in the King's will for attempting to steal a trove of coins found at Minto Kirk. Although his name is listed, it is crossed out. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among `ye poor'. Rev. William (1744/5–1826) also referred to as `Burns', he was born in Northumberland, although the details are unknown. It is said that his parents carried him out to the fields for safety and rocked him there in his cradle while the Highlanders came past in 1745. He graduated in Arts and qualified as a minister of the Episcopalian Church. In his early days he had the support of Henry Percy, Duke of Northumberland. He was for a while minister of a Church of England congregation and was later made minister of Pottergate Presbyterian Church, Alnwick in 1769. He was presented to Minto Parish (as successor to Thomas Somerville) by Sir Gilbert Elliot in late 1773, was admitted there the following year, and remained for the rest of his life. A new manse was built for him in 1773. He became a Burgess of Jedburgh in 1778. He obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1786. He paid the horse tax in Minto Parish in 1785–88. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's `History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Margaret Oggle in 1771, and she died in 1836. Their children were: Anne Lockhart (b.1772); George Percy (b.1773), who died in Dominica; Margaret (b.1775); Isabella (b.1776), who married William Leyden from Denholm; Anna Maria (b.1778), who married Archibald Elliot and lived in Jedburgh; John, who died young; John (again, b.1781); and Robert (b.1783). He wrote a description of Minto Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account, but nothing else survives that he wrote while at Minto. He was said to be 6 feet 5 inches tall and broad-shouldered, and never missed a sermon through ill-health until 2 weeks before his death. He was buried in Minto Churchyard (formerly written ‘Burse’; see also Burns).

burnbrae (burn-brā) n. slope down which a stream flows – ‘The hames that sent the reek ascent The burn-brae heughs aboon’ [HSR].

Burnbrae (burn-brā) n. former farm between the Rule and Jed valleys, lying to the west of Ashtrees (marked ‘Burnbrae’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, with ‘Burnkinfoord’ marked just to the south-east).

Burne see Burn

Burnet (bur-ne’) n. Alexander (1615–84) son of a minister in Lauder, he became chaplain to John Stewart, 1st Earl of Traquair. He fled to England after the National Covenant, then to Europe, returning to Scotland after the Restoration. He became Bishop of Aberdeen in 1663 and Archbishop of Glasgow in the following year. As supreme ecclesiastical, he held superiority over local lands. In 1664 he gave a charter of confirmation to William Bennet for the lands of Barnhills. He had a hard-line policy against non-conformity and was forced to resign as Archbishop in 1669. He moved again to England, but was reappointed to the Glasgow archbishopric in 1674. He is probably the ‘Bishop of glaskow’ who paid tax on land valued at £18 in Ashkirk Parish in 1678. He left again in 1678 to become Archbishop of St. Andrews, where he was buried. Rev. Alexander (b.1653) son of Edinburgh advovate Robert and Katherine Pearson, he was ordained minister of Crossmichael in about 1672. He was presented to Kirkton in late 1683, installed as minister in early 1684, but was translated to the Second Charge of the Canongate in 1685. He became minister of the first charge at Canongate 2 years later, but was deprived in 1689 for refusing to relinquish Episcopacy. He married Elizabeth Kirk, who died in 1696 and is buried in Greyfriars Kirkyard. Alexander (1791–1876) born at Crosslee in Selkirkshire, son of Andrew and Isabel Nichol, he was a shepherd at Penchrise. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he was living with his daughters Helen and Jane. In 1861 there were 8 railway labourers also staying at the farm. He firstly married Elizabeth Cranston, who died in 1841. Their children included: Andrew (b.c.1815); Helen (b.c.1817); Jane (b.c.1827); Samuel S. (b.c.1839); and Elyspeth (b.c.1841). He secondly married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) Scott and their children included Margaret (b.c.1850), William (b.c.1852), James (b.c.1855) and Betsy (b.c.1858). He died at Galt in Ontario, Canada. Andrew (b.1829/30) born in Traquir, he was a local shepherd. In 1851 he was a shepherd living in the home of Walter Scott, farmer at Wiltonburn, with his future wife Helen Johnstone being a kitchen-maid there. He was shepherd at Teinsidebrae in 1861, and probably at Adderstonelee afterwards. In 1901 he was a retired shepherd living at Adderstone Cottage. In 1851 in Wilton Parish he married Helen Johnstone, who was from Cavers Parish. Their children included: Andrew: John (b.1857), who was a shepherd at Newton near Stobs; Robert Mitchell (b.1859); James (b.1862); Helen (b.1864); Mary (b.1867); Thomas (b.1870); and Thomas (again, b.1872). His wife was probably one of the ‘5 Johnstone sisters’ whose 1910 photograph is in the Museum. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Wheat hop’ in 1701, when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Shiel (probably the minister of Roberton). His name appears to be ‘Burnit’ and he was probably tenant in Whithope in the Borthwick valley. James (d.1833) recorded as owner of a horse at Bellendean in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the horse tax there in the same year. He was joint tenant of Bellendean along with his son Robert from the 1820s until his death. James (19th C.) listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He must have been related to Robert, who was also listed. James ‘Jim’ (b.1856) son of shoemaker William. Like his younger brothers William and Robert, he played rugby for Hawick. He died in Wyoming. James (19th/20th C.) lived at Langsyde in Hawick. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. John (15th C.) resident of Tushielaw, recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was allowed to compe for pillaging Montbenger with the Scots of Ewesdale, and resetting the ‘traitor of Leven’ and stealing sheep from William Hall in Tushielaw. His surety was Adam Scott of Annelshope. John (b.1857) born in Wilton Parish, son of Andrew and Helen Johnstone. In 1901 he was shepherd at Newton near Stobs. He appears to have married Euphemia McLean and their children included: Andrew (b.1881); Samuel (b.c.1884); Helen (b.c.1885); John (b.c.1888); and James (1891–1916), killed in action in France. He probably then married Jessie, daughter of blacksmith Robbie Davidson and had at least one other child, Jessie (b.1900), whose early stories about her family were transcribed. Mr. ?? (19th C.) tenant farmer at Pilmuir in the mid-to-late 1800s, when it was the location for the 'Curds and Whey' at the Common Riding. Robert (b.1790) shoe and boot-maker of the Howegate, son of William and Wilhelmina Ogilvie. Thomas, also a shoemaker, was thus his brother. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is at about 1 Howegate in 1841 and 1851, along with William, his nephew. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate, along with William. In 1861 he is recorded as a farmer, unmarried, living with his nephew William. Robert (b.c.1805) son of James, he was farmer at Bellendean like his father before him. He was there in 1841, in 1851 was listed as farmer of 1716 acres, employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was farming 1000 acres and employing 3 labourers. He married Janet (or ‘Jessy’ Paterson) in 1830. Their children included James (b.1831), Margaret (b.1832), Francis (b.1834), Isabella (b.1836), Helen (b.1836), Robert (b.1840), Ann (b.1842) and George (b.1846). Robert (b.1860) son of William and Joan Smith. He was a prominent rugby forward. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from about 1882 and was Captain in 1887. He represented Britain in the side that toured Australia and New Zealand (for about 6 months!) for the first time in 1888. The team apparently also played some ‘Australian Rules’ games to help cover their costs. He later settled in Australia. Thomas (b.1784) son of William and Wilhelmina Ogilvie. He was a shoemaker on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Alison Storie. In 1841 he was on the Kirk Wynd, along with wife Alison and children William (who also became a shoemaker), Alexander, Mina and Mary. Robert, who was also a shoemaker on the Howegate, was probably his brother. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1822. William (d.1795) saddler in Hawick, whose death is registered. William (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the William, married to Janet Hardie, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Isabel (b.1766); and John (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were mason Andrew Turnbull and Alexander Bunyan. William (b.1823/4) shoemaker on the Howegate, cousin of William who was shoemaker at the Kirkwynd. He is recorded with his shoemaker uncle Robert on the Howegate in 1841 and 1851. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate, along with Robert. He also farmed at Pilmuir. James Haining states that his shop was at 5 Howegate. However, in 1861 he was at 18 Howegate with wife Joan and children Margaret R., Jane, James and Robert. He married Helen Joan, daughter of blacksmith James Smith. Their children included: Margaret Kennedy (b.1852); Jane Gardiner (b.1854); Jessie Oliver (b.1856), who probably died young; James ‘Jim’ (b.1858), who died in Wyoming; Robert (b.1860), rugby forward, who settled in Australia; William Hewitson (b.1862), rugby back, who moved to Lauder; Alexander Smith (b.1864); and John Smith (b.1868). His sons Jim, Robert and William were known as rugby players in Hawick. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. William (1828–1916) son of Thomas and Alison Storie. He was a shoemaker, last surviving member of the ‘eternal’ council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgesses. He was cousin of another William, who was shoemaker on the Howegate. His premises at the top of the Kirkwynd (No. 2) were formerly where the Episcopalion meeting house had been in the 18th century. He was later at 30 Drumlanrig Square. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Ann, Alison and Mina. Note that he is easy to confuse with the other shoemaker William (probably his cousin). One of them donated at least one coin to the Museum. William Hewitson ‘Billy’ (b.1862) son of William and Joan Smith. He played as a half-back for Hawick R.F.C. in the late 19th century. He also represented Britain on their 1888 Australia tour, along with his brother Robert and ‘Lal’ Laing. He later kept the Temperance Hotel in Lauder (also written ‘Burnett’).

the Burnets (thu-bur-netz) n. well-known shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries. Their shop was on the Howegate. They regularly attended Border fairs and markets. William was about the last of the line.

Burnfit (burn-fi) n. Burnfoot, area in the northeast part of Hawick, which was a former farm, developed as a housing estate after the War. The land there has a long history, being traceable back to the 15th century. The farm of Burnfoot, and part of Burnhead, was purchased in 1947, increasing the area of the Town by about 50%. It now houses around 1300 families, or about a quarter of the town's population, being the largest municipal housing undertaking in the Scottish Borders, but also one of the most deprived areas. The estate contains a primary school and community centre, a cluster of shops, two churches and also an industrial estate at its eastern extremity.
Burnfoot is its own ward for local council elections, and also has a separate Community Council. The former farm of Burnfoot, was named for being situated close to the foot of the Boonraw burn. In the late 1400s the Scott Lairds were referred to as ‘of Nether Newhall’, this being the earlier name for the area (‘Over Newhall’ being Burnhead). The first record of the lands being granted to the Scotts is in 1484, when they were part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear when the farm there was established, and who owned it in earlier times. Adam Scott owned the lands in 1643 when they were valued at £312. They also had the same value in 1663 and 1678. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690, when they transferred to Wilton, and they were still contained within the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. Adam Scott of Burnfoot and Gavin Plummer sold the land to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. The 2 halves of Burnfoot were each valued at £156 in 1788 and 1811. There were Turnbulls there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Note that there is an entirely unrelated Burnfoot farm in the Ale valley (sometimes called Burnfoot-on-Ale to distinguish it), another out along the Borthwick (also known as Borthwickbrae Burnfoot), a former one nearer to Roberton (also known as Roberton Burnfoot), and one more north of Langholm, as well as many Burnfoots elsewhere. Our local one was sometimes formerly referred to as ‘Burnfoot on Teviot’ to distinguish it – ‘...As dowie I gang for the Burnfit bus’ [DH], ‘By Burnfoot, yes, Burnfoot, for that’s where I belong It’s where I live ... and where I’ll die, it’s why I sing this song It has no history of its own, no tales of yesteryear ... But half the folk in Hawick live there, so kindly lend an ear ... ‘[NM] (the origin of the name is simply the foot of the stream; it is ‘Burnfute’ in 1550, 1561, 1585 and 1609, ‘Burnfute’ in 1551, ‘Birnfutt’ in 1553/4, ‘Burnfitt’ in 1643 and ‘Burnfoot’ in 1663; it is marked ‘Burnfoot’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with another ‘Burnfoote’ marked near to Hassendean, which is probably an error).

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. Burnfoot, farm on the south side of the Ale valley, just where the Woo Burn joins. It was a seat of the Scotts of Burnfoot in the late 16th century and through the 17th. Walter Scott of Burnfoot was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £400. Robert Scott of Burnfoot paid tax on the same value in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. In 1694 the Laird paid tax for 3 hearths there and there were also 3 other tenants listed. In the 18th century it was owned by the Laings, Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch. Adam Armstrong was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (and still recorded this way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when valued at £400. In the 1830s it was the property of Allan Elliott Lockhart of Borthwickbrae. Adam Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. It is occasionally referred to as ‘Burnfoot on Ale’ to distinguish it from other Burnfoots, e.g. the part of Hawick only about 4 miles away – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (probably the ‘Burnefute’ of 1557 and ‘Burnfitt’ in 1638; it is marked ‘Burnfoote’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and a mill is also marked there).

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. see Hassendean Burnfit.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. name in use locally for Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. Burnfoot, farm in the Ewes valley, just east of Fiddletton Toll, on the back road to Hermitage. This was probably site of the tower of ‘Archie of Whitehaughe’ (probably an Armstrong), recorded in 1590. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 1105 acres, bounded by Blackhall, Eweslees, Linhope and Carewoodrig. Mrs. Little was there in 1797. Alexander Pott was there in 1841.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. farm in Eskdale. The estate was given to Rev. Robert Malcolm to supplement the meagre stipend when he became minister at Ewes Kirk. The cottage was extended by his son George to accommodate his family of 17! Most of the present house dates from the 1850s to 1880s. It was the home of the ‘4 Knights of Eskdale’, sons of George. The house later fell on rough times, with Mary Palmer Douglas (nee Malcolm) being owner until her death in 1949 and the Palmer Douglas’s selling it in 1962. It has since been renovated and changed hands several times.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, near the foot of the Tinnis Burn. In 1541 it is listed as ‘Burnfute’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was valued at 2 merks and tenanted by Simon Forester. It is probably the ‘burnfoot’ in Castleton Parish listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694, with Archibald ‘Arckstrong’ as tenant, and Francis Elliot as another householder there (it is ‘Tinnisburnfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. former name for a farmstead near the foot of the Larriston Burn in Castleton Parish. This is probably the ‘Burnfit, in dominio de Liddisdaill’ that in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth (it is ‘Burnfoot’ in 1691 and it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Burnfit Carnival (burn-fi’-kar-ni-vul) n. annual festivities organised in the Burnfoot housing estate since 1969. It was started by the Burnfoot Residents Association, and later run by the Community Council. The festival includes a procession, headed by a Carnival Cornet and Carnival Queen. The main area used now is the site of the former primary school buildings.

Burnfit Cottage (burn-fi’-ko’-eej) n. former cottage near the farm of Burnfoot the Ewes valley. James Scott and family were there in 1841.

Burnfit Cottages (burn-fi’-ko’-ee-jeez) n. small group of houses built in 1967 on the site of former railway cottages at the eastern extremity of Burnfoot, near where the road to Hornshole crosses the Boonraw Burn.

Burnfit Cutting (burn-fi’-ku’-in) n. cutting through the rock near Burnfoot, to allow the A7 to pass to the west of the Hillend Plantation. This is one of the best places in the vicinity of Hawick to see the folding of the underlying Silurian strata.

Burnfit Haugh (burn-fi’-hawch) n. flat area down Mansfield, further down than the area formerly referred to as ‘Mansfield Park’, it was largely developed for sewage and gas works in the latter part of the 19th century. Part of the land was purchased by the Burgh from Wilton Church in the late 1870s and the rest owned by the Duke of Buccleuch until about 1750 was James Scott, also miller at Crawhill and later miller at Hawick Mill. In 1748 the Duke of Buccleuch arranged for the exchange of a part of his ‘Trinity lands’ with a piece of Mansfield that he wanted for carrying water to his mill, presumably referring to a mill lade. Thomas Deans was tenant of the mill and mill lands in the early 18th century. The Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there from the 1720s until about 1750 was James Scott, also miller at Crawhill and later miller at Hawick Mill. In 1770 the Duke of Buccleuch arranged for the exchange of a part of his ‘Trinity lands’ with a piece of Mansfield that he wanted for carrying water to his mill, presumably referring to a mill lade. Thomas Deans was tenant of the mill and mill lands in the mid-18th century. Robert Liddell was living there in 1770. Farm workers Alexander Tait and Walter Bryden lived there in 1841. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with the mill lade and sluices indicated.

Burnfit Mill Haugh (burn-fi’-mil-hawch) n. former name for a meadow near Burnfoot Mill, essentially the same area as Burnfit Haugh.

Burnfit Road (burn-fi’-röd) n. Burnfoot Road, once a country lane leading towards Minto, it was realigned and houses built in 1949–58, forming one of the main roads of the Burnfoot housing scheme.

Burnfit Roadhouse (burn-fi’-röd-hoo) n. public house on Burnfoot Road, often known simply as ‘the Roadhouse’. It opened in 1958 and became a central hub for social activity in the community. It was closed for several years, but reopened in 2015 as Burnfoot Community Hub.

Burnfit Schuil (burn-fi’-skil) n. Burnfoot Primary School on Kenilworth Avenue, built 1952, and serving the neighbouring area. It was refurbished extensively in 1995. Recently it was renamed the Burnfoot New Community, and incorporates a community centre. Records for the period 1951–75 are in the National Archives.

Burnfitshiel (burn-fi’-sheel) n. Burnfootshiel, former farmstead just to the north-east of Shielswood Loch and south of Burnfoot-on-Ale.

Burnflat (burn-flaw) n. area around the meadow adjacent to the Smaile Burn, overlapping with Haggishaa, although perhaps a little further south. The name is specifically used to refer to the former group of houses along a lane reached from the northern end of the Golf Course, which was famous as the birthplace of ‘Old Mortality’; the houses consisted of a single row of low cottages. The piece of land so named was originally bounded by the Common, the Slitrig and the Smaile Burn. It was feued by Simon of Routledge (Hawick’s first known Burgess) in 1433 and sold to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448/9; it was said to extend as far as the Smaile Burn. The area marked the eastern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, and there is a historical sketch of it by Tom Scott in 1898. In 1627 it was ‘estimat to pay 4 bolls in stok, 1 in teynd’. It was described as a ‘one merk land’ in 1653 when granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill. At least some of it appears to have been part of Rev. Patrick Cunningham’s lands in the 1678 county valuation; by 1788 George Oliver is recorded as owner of that part at Burnflat valued at £40. Walter Paterson asked the Bailies and Council to mark the boundary between his lands there and the Common in 1713, and 17 stones were then set out. It was said to have been sold by William Paterson in 1753. Part of the land there was gained by Robert Oliver after the Division of the Common. George Oliver held the lands according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when they were valued at £40; John Oliver of Borthaugh held the lands in about 1874. Until the early 20th century the houses there were separated from those at the top of the Loan by about quarter of a mile of fields. These houses were incorporated into the Burgh boundaries in 1861, and the cottages can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (and others later). They fell into a dilapidated condition, some were demolished about 1939, the Paterson cottage being preserved, but also demolished following a fire in 1991. More recently there has been housing development to the west of Burnat Brae, lying to the north of Burnflat Drive, developed in the 1990s, when the Drive and Lane were also added.

Burnflat Brae (burn-flat’-brä) n. road running through the Burnflat area, being the continuation of Rosebank Road. The first house was built in 1856, with others following in 1865. The street was previously known as ‘Haggishaa Brae’, with the newer name adopted in 1868, although the former name is still used interchangeably. Further houses were built in the 1990s, when the Drive and Lane were also added.

Burnflat Drive (burn-flaw’-driv) n. small development of houses to the west of Burnflat Brae, built in the 1990s.

Burnflat Lane (burn-flaw’-län) n. short street of housing off Burnflat Brae, lying to the north of Burnflat Drive, developed in the 1990s.

Burnfoot (burn-foo’) n. house and farm about 4 miles up the Esk from Langholm, home of the Malcolms, including the famous Maj. Gen. Sir John Malcolm (1769–1833) for whom there is a memorial obelisk on Whita Hill. There are several other farms or settlements with the same name round Scotland.

debra (foo’dre) n. specific part of Burnflat where Hawick Common began, being next to the roadway at the bottom of the Verteish. This must have once been where the road to the Common crossed the Smaile Burn. The 1514 Club erected a cairn to mark the site in 1987, this being the boundary of the Common lying closest to the Town. The cairn was built from granite sets formerly used in the High Street – ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troulelawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734] (formerly written ‘Burnfoord’).

burngate (burn-gät’) n., arch. a small water-course – ‘To our right and left on either side of the hill, are two lovely burngates, down which rushes the mossy water ...’ [BM1904], ‘Great indeed have been the changes in this burngate’ [JB].

Burngrains (burn-gräinz) n. steading on the Meikledale Burn, just above the farm of Meikledale, to the west of the A7 in Dumfriesshire. It was described as a 5-merk land in 1550, when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It was a home of a branch of the Ellists around 1600. It is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 1375 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Bush, lands owned by Sir William Johnstone, Stennieswater and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. It was occupied in 1841. Just to the north-east are the remains of a settlement on a terrace (it is ‘Burngranes’ in 1550, ‘Burnnegrease’ and ‘Burgranes’ in 1608 and ‘Burnnegrynes’ in 1663; it is marked on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Burngrove (burn-grow) n. area in Wilton that had previously been called ‘Crawhill’ and later became Bucklands. It was also referred to as Burngrove Park. John Turnbull was shepherd there in 1851. It is part of what was formerly known as Burnfoot or Nether Newhall. It is also the name of a house in Wilton Dean.

Burnham (burn-ham) n. Thomas (13th/14th C.) Sheriff of Lincolnshire. In 1292 he was appointed by Edward I as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. However, Alexander de Sinton is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirk (and probably also Keeper of the Forest) in 1293. He was also Constable of Jedburgh Castle according to a document in the period 1295–8 and was mentioned in a court case of the English army at Berwick in 1296. His name is usually written ‘de Burnham’.

Burnhead (burn-heed) n. Burnhead farm and surrounding area, comprising the land just north of Burnfoot, and deriving its name from the Boonraw Burn. A 16th century 3-storey peel tower is incorporated into the north-eastern end of the house. The first-floor barrel-vaulted rooms and second storey walls remain, with evidence of a parapet-walk on the northern gable; the original tower had one more level, and the roof is entirely modern. It measures about 9.5 m by 7 m. A large cupboard in the room on the upper floor was known as ‘the laird’s bedroom’. The construction was similar to that of Goldielands. The farm was for centuries in the hands of a branch of the Scotts, descended from James of Kirkurd, who was second son of Sir Walter, the 6th Laird of Buccleuch. The lands were formerly called ‘Over Newhall’ and were granted to James by the superior of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton in 1484. Walter Scott ‘in le newhalburnhed’ was recorded in 1502. It is sometimes stated that an early owner was ‘Hobbie Elliot’, but this is confusion with the place of the same name in Liddesdale. The lands were valued at £156 in 1643 and in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (and listed under Hassendean Parish). William Scott of Clarilaw was owner in 1678, when the value was the same. The lands appear to have been possessed by the Scotts of Burnfoot until 1692 when it became a separate Lairdship. The lands were in Hassendean Parish until they became part of Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid for 3 hearths for ‘Burnhead his hous’ in 1694, with the other householders (probably tenants) there at the time being Robert Scott and William Scott. Part of the area was also farmed by the Minister of Wilton. The farm was still valued at £156 in 1788, when owned by William Scott (who is also recorded there in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). The lands passed from the Scotts of Burnhead through the female line to the Watsons in 1815. The mottos of the Scotts of Burnhead are ‘In recto decus’ and ‘Nemo sibi nascitur’. Thomas Usher and William Young are recorded as farmers there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Adam Young was farmer there in 1841 and 1851 and William Scott in 1868. A painting exists showing what the tower looked like around the early 19th century. The farmhouse was added to the tower in 1858 – ‘When oo’ passed Burnheid and ower the Knowe by Galalaw me heart began tae loup, loup, loup and I could faun hae grutten’ [JEDM] (a place of this name is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also Pont’s 1590s manuscript, but close to Standhill, which may have been an error; there are many places of the same name in Dumfriesshire and elsewhere).

Burnheid (burn-heed) n. former lands of the Elliots, probably in Liddesdale and not the place of the same name near Hawick. It is unclear which Burn is referred to in the name, but it seems that the family of that designation were intimately related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. In 1581 Jock’s Willie Elliot was released from ward for the ‘gang of Bernheidis’, with Hob Elliot (brother of Gavin’s Jock of Ramsiegill) remaining as pledge for the ‘haill gang of the Burnheidis’. In a letter of 1583 written by the English warden the branch called ‘the Borneheedes’ is listed as Jock of Ramsiegill, ‘Curst Hobbe’, Adam ‘Condis’, Archie of the Hill, Jock of the Hill and Jock ‘Halfe loges’. The earliest known Laird was ‘Hobbie Elliot’, who was accused of engaging in a foray in 1584, with ‘Branche’ of the Burnhead, complaining of a raid on his lands by the English perhaps a few years later. He was ‘Robin Elliott the laird of Borneheades’ in 1589 and may be the same man as ‘Ill Hob’, who was a son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. ‘Gawins Jok’ was listed (along with Burnmooth (burn-mooth n. lands in the south part of Castleton Parish, to the west of Kershopefoot, formerly split into Upper and Nether Burnmouth. It is now marked on maps as the farm of Under Burnmouth. Note the confusion with the other Burnmouth further north in the same Parish, near Saughtree. In 1541 it was valued at 20 shillings, with tenants James and Henry Henrison. In 1634 the 20-shilling lands of ‘Burnemouth’ were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. John Armstrong was there in the mid-1700s. This is probably the Burnmouth where John Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797 and the ‘Nether Burnmouth’ where Adam Armstrong farmer at the same time. William Scott, mason and author of ‘Border Exploits’ lived at the schoolhouse there, and it was the birthplace of his son Andrew, Professor of Oriental Languages at Aberdeen University in 1800. Thomas Waugh was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. John Murray was farmer in 1861. There was a small school there, by the main road, which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 lists the ‘Lands of Burnmouth, standing in name of William Oliver of Dinlabyre & forming part of Greena’, being owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £101 14s (it is ‘Baermouth’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Nether Burnmouth’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

‘Ade Cowlais’) under that heading in Monipen- nie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. (it is ‘Burn- heedes’ in 1590).

Burnheid Road (burn-heed-rōd n. Burnhead Road, the furthest part of Burnfoot, with houses built 1953–60, and named after the adjacent farm.

Burnheid Sike (burn-heed-sik n. Burnhead Sike, small stream to the south-east of Wolfelee Hill, which runs roughly south to join the Wolfelee Burn. Near the head of the stream there was a ditch that ran north-east towards the head of the Spar Sike, being crossed by part of the Wheel Causeway. It was probably a land boundary, but has been destroyed by forestry planting. There are also sheepfolds and enclosures in the area.

Burnheid Toor (burn-heed-toor n. Burnhead Tower, small 16th century fortified house, incorporated within the modern farmhouse at Burnhead. In lay-out and construction it is similar to Goldielands Tower. It is a grade B listed building.

Burnhouse (burn-hooos n. Burnhouse, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in c.1376 as ‘Burne-house’, with a value of 3 shillings and 4 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Bunehoues’ (and separately ‘Burnhous’ along with ‘Gilschaw’), and vacant at that time.

burnie (bur-nee n., poet. a small stream – ‘Deep in the glen, a burnie winds its way, Where saughgs and osiers mirk the face o’ day’ [CPM], ‘I wan-der’d down the burnie side, Until my feet were wet wi’ dew’ [JTe], ‘...And its burnies rinnin’ free Is the fairest spot o’ a’’ [TK], ‘...The soond o’ the wee burnie’s wimple’ [WS], ‘How oft I walk where Burnies rin, where darting trouts jouk out and in’ [JCa], ‘There’s the little burnie sighin’ By the cosie bracken bed ...’ [JT].

Burnkinford (burn-kin-fōrd n. former farmstead in Abbotrule Parish, also known as Bairnkine. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, close to the modern Ruletownhead. It was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls along with parts of Ruletownhead and ‘Bossiithill’, owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and split between Southdean and Hobkirk Parish; the lands had previously been owned by George Elliot, with a total value of about £224.

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. farm just south of Saughtree (not to be confused with the other farm of the same name, which lies much further south in Castleton Parish). This may be the farm where ‘Will Elliot of the Burnmouthis’ resided in 1563/4, when he was accused of crimes against an Englishman. 5 sheep of John Nixon’s were stolen from there about 1624. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632. It is probably the Burnmouth where Robert Young lived in 1694 and where James Hall lived in 1699. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it appears to be combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Harden and Howden. The farmhouse seems to be in the same place as the modern one and the combined farm covered 881 acres, bounded by Thorliveshope, Larriston, Riccarton, Pinglehole and Saughtree, with a small part on the north side of the Liddell. George Elliot was there in 1748. It is probably the Burnmouth where John Elliot paid tax for 13 windows in 1748. John Elliot was farmer there in 1851 and 1861 and there were 8 huts nearby housing railway workers at that time. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ford instead of the current bridge over the Liddell, as well as stepping stones. There was once a tower there according to Pont and Blaeu (marked ‘Bournemouln’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Upper Burnmouth on Stobie’s 1770 map; it was ‘BurnemOUTH’ in 1624 and 1662).

Burnmouth (burn-mooth) n. lands in the south part of Burnmooth
Burnmooth

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. Burnmouth, a village south of Eyemouth, partly at the foot of the cliffs. Two treaties were signed here between Scotland and England in 1384 and 1497.

Burnmooth Schuil (burn-mooth-skil) n. small school at Under Burnmouth, south of Newcastleton in the 19th century. It served pupils in the southern part of Castlepish Parish. It opened in 1805. In the 1830s there were about 20 pupils. William Scott was teacher there from 1810, and still recorded in 1837 and 1841. James Lewis was there in 1851 and John Hardie in the 1860s.

Burn-Murdoch (burn-mur-doch) n. Rev. Aidan Michael (b.1935) son of Dr. Hector and Katharine Mary Bruce. He attended Trinity College, Cambridge and Ridley Hall and became an Episcopalian Priest in Durham, then Tutor at Ridley Hall and lecturer at Bishop’s College, Cutcutta. He was Rector of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk in Hawick 1970–77, moving afterwards to Swansea. He retired in 1997, but had post-retirement posts in Jedburgh and Eyemouth. He married Susan Henderson and their children were Rachel Margaret, Alastair Michael and Colin John. He later married Aleksandra Grazyna G orna and Sarah Cheriyan.

Burn Park (burn-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the left of the road after the entrance to the racecourse.

Burn Raw (burn-raw) n. former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. These were the houses on the low road alongside the burn, close to the green. The name is recorded in 1841 and 1851, but disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Burnrig (burn-rig) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Burnriger’ in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda

Burns (burns) n. Alexander (b.1778/9–1862) originally from Howman Parish he was an agricultural labourer and shepherd in Lilliesleaf, Wilton and Cavers Parishes. In 1841 he was at Shankendshiels and in 1851 and 1861 was living on Sunnyside. In 1803 in Bedrule he married Agnes (or Nancy) Jeffrey, who was from Stichill; she died in 1867, aged 83. Their children included: John (b.1806), who lived near Ancrum and then in Wilton; James (b.1811); William (b.1813), tailor in Hawick; Thomas (b.1815); Alexander (b.1820); Robert (b.1824); and George (b.1826). Alexander ‘Sandy’, ‘the Skipper’ (19th/20th C.) worker in Pesco’s and rugby player for Hawick R.F.C. He became an apprentice frame-worker in 1899 and was later a Shop Foreman, serving at Pesco’s for more than 50 years. He was a half-back for the Greens and was Captain in the 1907/8 and 1908/9 seasons, leading the team that year’s Scottish Championship to a grand total of 305 points for to only 44 against. He had to give up rugby due to a shoulder injury, but was on the committee for many years. Alexander (20th C.) owner of the Royal Bar at the top of the Howe-gate. Andrew (b.1850) son of George and Jane Mein, he was born in Selkirk, but grew up in Hawick, where his father ran the Railway Hotel. He worked as a woolsorter and was Cornet in 1869, following his half-brother John Ferguson in 1861.

there in 1851. He subsequently moved to Hawick, becoming proprietor of the Railway Hotel in Wilton. In 1861 he is recorded there with his wife Jane, and children Betsy, Andrew (who was Cornet in 1869), Agnes and Helen. Later in the 1860s he was proprietor of the Victoria Hotel and was listed at the Crown Hotel in Hawick in 1868. His widow Jane was hotel-keeper at the Crown in 1871. He was step-father of John Mein Ferguson, who was Cornet in 1861. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living on Main Street with his wife Janet and sons James and George. John (b.1806–89) son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Broom Moor near Ancrum. In 1851 he was a woollen factory nightwatchman on Upper Damside and in 1861 was a Master Gardener at the same address. He married Janet Rae and their children included: Christian; Agnes (b.1836), who married Thomas Rutherford; Margaret (b.1839); and Alexander (b.1841). In 1866 he secondly married his cousin Betsy, daughter of George Swanston. Robert ‘Rabbie’ (1759–1796) poet from Ayrshire, son of a tenant farmer, he became the most famous poet in Scotland, writing often in a Scots dialect. He never visited Hawick, but on his Borders tour of 1787 he came as close as Wauchope and Wells, walking up to the summit of Bonchester Hill and to Wolfelee Hill. Other local connections are: Burns’ brother Gilbert declined an invitation to a celebratory dinner in 1820 (the letter is in the Museum, written to Bailie Robert Armstrong); Adam Armstrong from Hobkirk (and dux at Hawick Grammar School) married Isabella Lindsay from Jedburgh, who is written about in Burns’ journal; Thomas Brown, born in Hawick around 1823 married Burns granddaughter Jane Emma, and for a while was caretaker at Burns House in Dumfries; Gavin Turnbull, also a poet and friend of Burns, was born in Hawick in 1764; the lines ‘Your pin wad help ti mend a mill In time o’ need’ is said to have been inspired by the mythical story of the giant haggis served at Haggishaa; Burns mentions Teviotdale in one poem (‘Epistle To J. Lapraik’); Burns Road in Burnfoot was named after the poet in 1953; Francis George Scott set many of his poems to music; and James Thomson wrote ‘The Star o’ Robbie Burns’ in 1879. There were celebrations around Scotland to mark his 100th anniversary, with Hawick being no exception. Businesses closed at 2 p.m., with the main dinner being in the Tower Hotel (intended for 80, but more tickets having to be sold), with the ‘immortal memory’ being given by Henry Scott Riddell. There was also a dinner at the Commercial Inn for 400 people, and smaller gatherings at the Crown, the Plough, the Ewe and Lamb, the Half-Moon Hotel and the Railway Hotel. In Denholm about 140 people gathered in the Old Swan Inn, in Lilliesleaf 220 people gathered in the school, and in Newcastleton there were soirees in the Grapes Hotel and the Commercial Inn – ‘Let kings and courtiers rise and fa’, This world has mony turns, But brightly beams aboon them a’, The star o’ Robbie Burns’ [JT], ‘The frailty of mankind he kent, baith cottar and the laird, So render thanks for Rabbie Burns, and for the works he dared’ [WFC], ‘They’ll hae oor puddens oot by turns, We’ll get oor paiks! A’ owre-the-heid o’ Rabbie Burns, Yon king o’ raiks!’ [DH]. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who was known as a singer and acted as a judge at the Common Riding Races. Rev. Stewart (1855–1935) born in Dundee, son of bank manager William and Marjory Gray. He was educated in Dundee and at St. Andrews University and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1878. He was assistant at Portmoak and at Lady Yester’s in Edinburgh and was ordained as minister at St. Mary’s in March 1880. Only a few months later he had to deal with the church being closed for more than a year following the fire of November 1880. He organised a bazaar to raise funds for a manse in 1884. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He demitted his charge in 1925. He married Elizabeth Carruthers Murray, daughter of teacher William, and she died in 1934, aged 71. Their children were Janet Murray Dow (or ‘Jenny’, a nurse in Edinburgh) and Marjory Gray (who died young). William (1813–73) born in Wilton Parish, son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey. He was a tailor on the High Street. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Tait’s Close, near 29 High Street and in Slater’s 1852 directory he was on the Punchbowl Close (either next door, or perhaps the same address is meant). In 1851 he was employing 5 men and by 1861 he was at 30 High Street. He married Agnes Crawford (from Ashkirk) in 1836 and she died in 1891, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (b.1837), who married Thomas Robson; Alexander (b.1838); James (b.1841); Helen (b.1845), who married John Mackenzie; Catherine Bunyan (1846–1919); John (b.1849), who married Catherine Blackwood Cooper; Margaret (b.1851), who married Alexander Glen; William (b.1853);

Thomas (b.1855), who married Jane Bruce; Walter (b.1857), who married Isabella Hendry Drummond; Robert (b.1860), who married Margaret Clark Ker; George (b.1863), who died in infancy; and Georgina Jeffrey (b.1865). William (b.1819/20) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf. He is recorded there in 1852. In 1861 he was a blacksmith, probably on Main Street in Lilliesleaf (recorded as ‘Burn’). His wife was Frances and their children included James, Sarah Hall, Jessie Davidson, Andrew Hall and George (also written ‘Burnes’).

the Burns Club (thu-burnz-klub) n. a social organisation devoted to the preservation of the memory of Robert Burns, the Hawick club being founded in 1878. This followed a more informal club that lasted a few years from 1862, and even earlier dinners in the Tower Inn on Burns night, which had started in 1815 (and had addresses usually delivered by Robert Wilson). The club moved location regularly through the rest of the 19th century, and was teetotal for a while! It first had its own premises in the Howegate in 1895, then purchased property at 12 Teviot Crescent in 1899, becoming a member of the Scottish Burns Federation in 1914, moving into the present purpose-built premises in 1928, with women admitted in 1958. The building on Albert Road was designed by George Scott and built by J. Marshall & Co. It was constructed on part of a lane leading to the river and also on the site of a public toilet. Pringle Hall was added in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, treasurer for 37 years, and the Hunter Lounge was named after Tom Hunter who was Secretary for 19 years. A bust of Burns (by Alex Pinnie) was recently placed above the front door. The club has effectively replaced a Labour Party club in town through much of its history. A centenary booklet, ‘A Hundred Years are Gane’, was written by R.E. Scott (1978).

burnside (burn-sid) n. the banks of a stream – ‘...and it appeared to be offendit, for it left the house and gaed away down the burn side’ [LHTB], ‘By moor and moss and river, To the swish of swathed grass, And burnside reeds aquiver, The dead mosstroopers pass’ [RSC].

Burnside (burn-sid) n. former name for lands around Hassendean or Chamberlain Newton, for which Alexander Lord Home was superior in 1562/3 when he tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. A mill there is also mentioned. It may be associated with Burnfoot or Burnhead.

Burnside Moss (burn-sid-mos) n. area in Liddesdale, to the south of the foot of Hartsgarth Burn.

crpub the Burnt Troot

the Burns Inn (thu-burnz-in) n. former hostelry at 2 Buccleuch Street, run by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson in the first half of the 19th century. The building dates from the early 1800s, was later the house and shop belonging to James Elliot, and was restored in 1992. It forms the end block of Buccleuch Street. The pub sign showed a half-length portrait of the Bard with the motto ‘The muse found me, as the prophetic bard Elijah found Elisha, at the plough, and cast her inspiring mantle over me’.

Burns Night (burnz-nì) n. the evening of the anniversary of Burns birth, 25th January, when Burns Suppers are often held. The first such event in Hawick was in 1815 in the Tower Inn, and this group held an annual event for several years. There were entertainments in the main hall of the Commercial Inn for Burns centenary in 1859, as well as many celebrations elsewhere (e.g. in the barn at Weens, apparently without alcohol!). The celebrations have been a regular annual event in Hawick since at least the formation of the Burns Club in 1878. Nowadays many of the Town’s social organisations hold their own event, so that the calendar at the end of January can be very full.

Burns Plantin (burnz-plawn-in) n. former plantation (now deep within the forest) in Southdean Parish, located on the north side of the Black Burn, south-east of Charlie’s Knowe. There is an oval earthwork there, surrounded by a ruined wall of earth and stone. It may be an Iron Age settlement.

Burns Road (burnz-röd) n. part of Burnfoot, connecting Burnfoot Road with Queen’s Drive, built in 1953 and named after Robert Burns.

Burns Supper (burnz-su-par) n. feast held on or near Burns Night, traditionally consisting of haggis, recitations of Burns poems, oat-cakes and whisky, often following a formal schedule.

Burnt Craigs (burn-krägz) n. hilly area on the north-east slopes of the Pike, lying south-east of Penchrise and about 6 miles south of Hawick. A plantation lying between Penchrise Pen and the Pike is known as Burnt Craig Wood (also sometimes ‘Brunt Craig’).

Burntroads (burn-rödz, bur-in-rödz) n. former name for an area around Liddesdale Road and extending beyond the old railway line to the south-east (origin suggestive of a track through a burnt moor).

the Burnt Troot (thu-burn-troo’) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.
burrow rudes (bu-roo-roodz) n., arch. cultivated land pertaining to a burgh – ‘Item, tua lands in Burrow rudes, estimat to pay 8 bolls in stok, 2 bolls teynd’ [PR1627].

Burt (bur’) n. Rev. David W.G. minister of St. Mary’s and Old Parish Kirks 1996–98. He also took over responsibility for Cavers and Kirkton.

burthen (bur-then) n., arch., poet. a burden – ‘And the Session taking to their consideration that Mr Purdum their Clerk being an old man and not likelie to be long a burthen to them’ [PR1724], ‘Each chaunts by turns the song his soul approves, Or bears the burthen to the maid he loves’ [JL].

Burton (bur’in) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Howpasley, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. The Elizabeth listed as ‘Ind.’ in 1841 may be his widow. Robert H. (1885–1950) local athlete who competed in the 800 m at the 1912 Stockholm Olympics. He was probably born in Hawick (although some sources suggest Aberdeen). He lived for a while at Tweedmouth, working as a timber merchant’s clerk, before moving back to Hawick, where he joined the Teviotdale Harriers. He represented Scotland in half-mile races 6 times in the period 1908–12, won the Scottish half-mile championship 3 times and was Border quarter-mile champion for 4 successive years. He was said to have been one of the first British athletes to have experimented with the use of oxygen during training. He qualified for the 1912 Olympics in a trial held at Celtic Park. However, he disappointingly came last in his heat in Stockholm, and did not compete again at the national level. He was a Lieutenant in the Postal Service during WWI. He died in Berwick. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Lustruther on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) butcher at West Port, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Burnwinyett (bur-win-yet) n. former name for lands in Jedforst. The precise location is uncertain, but it appears on a rental roll of 1541 between Waterside and Wadeshill. Part of the farm, valued at 22s was tenanted by William and George Waugh and another part, ‘valued at 6s 6d was tenanted by Edward Waugh (it is ‘Burwynyet’ and ‘Burwinyet in 1541).

bush (bus’h) n. a bush – ‘And hear the blackbird’s cheery whistle Frae ilka bush’ [RH] (note the pronunciation with u rather than oo; cf. buss).

Bush (bus’h) n. former farm east of Bonchester hill. ‘Patte Ollyver of the Bushe’ is recorded in 1544. Probably the same place is referred to as Bushhouse in the Feu-Rule lands dispute of 1562 (probably ‘Bushous’ in 1562; it is marked as ‘Buss’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and located just north of Ashtrees on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Bush (bus’h) n. farm in Ewesdale, near where the Meikledale Burn meets the Ewes Water, between Meikledale and Arkleton. It was formerly known as ‘Park’ and then after about 1600 as ‘Park o Buss’ or ‘Buss’, with the anglicised form appearing later. The tower of ‘Runion of ye buss’ is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. ‘Arche Scott’ was recorded there in 1569, as well as Ninian Armstrong. ‘Anse Scott of the Busse’ (perhaps the same man) is listed by Monipennie in about 1594 and Walter Scott, ‘called Watt of the Bus’ was declared a fugitive in 1642. It was ‘Park alias Buss’ in 1670 when the superiority was inherited John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 338 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Arkleton, Kirkton and Burngrains. 3 separate houses are shown in 1718. George Henderson was there in 1794–97. Charles Scott from Hawick was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. John Jackson was farmer in the 1860s (also the ‘Bush’, it is ‘Buss’ in 1569 and ‘Buse’ in 1663; it is marked as ‘Buss’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Byers (bli-urz) n. Andrew (b.1807/8) from Ancrum Parish, he was a shoemaker recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was at about 23 Loan in 1841, on the Back Row in 1851 and at 5 Tannage Close in 1861. He married Janet Cunningham and they had daughters Janet and Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’). Helen (1824/5–1912) wife of Thomas Murray, who was a brother of Andrew, John and William, who were teachers in Hawick. She must have been related to her mother-in-law, who was also Helen Byers. After her husband Thomas died in 1862 (aged only 37) she supported the family by making boys’ suits. It is said that many townsman received their first suits from her. She was known as a staunch Evangelical Union member and a woman of forceful character. She lived in Lothian Street. Her children included William, George, Mary, John (who became an accountant) and 2 who died in infancy. John (1879–1968) writer of the song ‘The Cornet and his Men’. Born in Newcastleton, his family moved to the upper Teviot and he attended Teviothead school. He was sometimes known as The Bard of Liddesdale. He started writing poetry at 17, publishing regularly in the Hawick News, Southern Reoprter, Border Magazine, etc., often under the alias ‘Bluebell’. He married Esther Scott from Liddesdale, and moved to Canada in 1913, where he wrote for the Montreal Family Herald and Weekly Star, but returned in 1920. He published a book of poetry ‘Hamely Border Musings’ in 1931, another ‘The Liddesdale Drow’ in Hawick in the 1940s and a book ‘Liddesdale: historical and descriptive’ in 1952. Robert (b.1781/2) born in Canobie, he was shepherd at Blackhall in Ewesdale in 1851. His wife was Helen (also sometimes ‘Byres’ and ‘Byars’).

Bygate (bli-ga, ba-gi) n. former name for a farm and area on the east side of the Hermitage valley, north of Leanhagh. It is now sometimes marked as ‘Backgate’ on maps. The family of ‘Elwald in Bagget’ is mentioned among a list of Liddesdale Elliots in 1516. In 1541 it was valued at 18 shillings and the tenant was James Elliot. Hab Elliot possessed the lands in 1632. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1677. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1694, with John Young also listed as resident there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 154 acres, bounded by Cleuchhead, a common (on the south) and the Hermitage Water; the farmhouse is shown near the south boundary of the farm. John Elliot ‘in Baggot’ was the eldest son of William in Park, born around 1731. The farm was given to John Elliot by the Duke of Buccleuch when he took the lands of Copshaw Park to build Newcastleton. Probably the same John Elliot was farmer there and elsewhere according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Bygatewood was an old farmstead between Bygate and the Steele. There is an earthen-banked field system between Bygate Sike and the Steele Road (it is probably the ‘Bagget’ recorded in 1516, ‘Baggart’ in 1541, ‘Baggat’ in 1632, ‘Baggett’ in 1694 and ‘Baggot’ in the mid-18th century; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘Bygate’

Byreleckuch (bIr-klooch) n. former name for lands in the headwaters of the Tarras Water, north of Lodgellgill and east of Arkleton. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it is explained that the Laird of these lands owned the farm of Briereshaw. Also the farm of ‘Byreleckuch-water’ was combined with Mosspeeble at that time and a farmhouse was shown, perhaps near the modern Lodgellgill farm (it is ‘Byreleckuch’ in 1718).

Byreholm (bIr-hōm) n. farm on the B6357 just west of old Castleton. In 1541 it was valued at 26 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by Hector Armstrong. James Glendinning was there in 1623. In 1632 it was possessed by Walter Scott. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1673 and a Pringle in 1677. In 1694 John Robison was tenant and James Elliot also resident there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 102 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Whitehaugh, Castleton Glebe and the Liddel Water; the farmhouse was in about the same place as the modern one. The map is at a bigger scale than others because there were small pieces of land intermixed with it belonging to Cocklilak farm and to the Laird of Whitehaugh. Note that it is also listed along with Bowholm in the separate survey of Over Closs (although this may be an error, it does demonstrate that it was distinct from Bowholm). ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’ lived there in the years around 1800. Thomas Oliver was there in 1821 and Thomas Niven was carter there in 1835 (it is ‘Byrholm’ in 1541 and 1632, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Brychoom’ and ‘Byerholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Bowholm).

caa in (kaw-in) v. to drive in, propel, ram – ‘Hei’s ootbye caa-in a wheen stucceens’ [ECS].

the Caa Knowe (thu-kaw-now) n. place where the Burgess Roll was traditionally read after the perambulation of the marches, being the extremity of the Common, at a site also known as the Hero’s Grave. This was formerly the location of an ancient cairn, which was broken up for stones in 1811, and apparently a burial cist was found. Some flints and a bronze spearhead were also found nearby in the late 19th century. The implication of this connection between this important location on the Common and an ancient burial mound is that the site was locally significant for many centuries. And although there is no explicit evidence of continuous use, there is also no indication of when the site was adopted for the muster of the Burgesses. The reading of this roll became officially unnecessary after the division of 1777, and was specifically impossible at that site, since ownership had been transferred to the Duke of Buccleuch. The ceremony was nevertheless still carried out, although moved to near the top of Bailie’s Hill, and for many decades the original site was known as the ‘Auld Caa Knowe’. The Callants’ Club erected a cairn to mark the spot in 1911, and the site and access path were given to the town by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1937. The plaque reads ‘1537 – Ca’ Knowe – 1937. On this spot, from the granting of the Charter by Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1537 until the division of the Common in 1777, the Burgess Roll was called at the Annual March Riding. The cairn was erected by the Hawick Callant Club 1911. The ground was gifted to the Town of Hawick by His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch – October 1937’. It remains an important symbolic location on the Friday of the Common Riding, although the riders only come as close as the extremity of the modern Common, a little to the north, for the Sod Cutting ceremony – ‘...and that all Burgesses attend the Baillies to-morrow at the Call Know, and at ye Cross on foot or horseback, under the penalty of ten pounds Scots’ [BR1743], ‘...at the Common-Riding all the Burgesses of Hawick were called over by name from a Roll at the Callknow, and if any of them were absent the Magistrates might have fined them ...’ [C&L1767], ‘At the Ca-knowe we halt a little; Slack our girths, and ease the crippled’ [AB] (often written ‘Ca’ Knowe’, or ‘Ca’-knowe’, and meaning simply the ‘call hill’; it could be ‘the great Know’ along the south side of which the old boundary of the Common was described to run in 1767).

caal (kawl) n., arch. a pall of smoke – ‘...an, ferrer up the waeter yet plain ti ma aiger lookeen, hang another caal, leike a bruch roond a muin’ [ECS].

caa on (kaw-ön) v., arch. to drive a nail into a body (this was entered into the Oxford English Dictionary by Murray).

caa ower (kaw-ow-ur) v. to tip over, topple, spill – ‘whae caaed over the flooer pot?’, ‘...gettin hersel ca’d owre yince when a ruck came owre the touch line’ [IWL] (also in the Oxford English Dictionary).

caas’t (kawst) contr. calls it – ‘...threepin tae dae some evil deed (as hei ca’st) ere the night’s oot ...’ [JEDM] (cf. dis’t, is’t, was’t, etc.).

caaa-throwe (kaw-throw) v., arch. a quick wash – ‘A gaed the colour’t things a ca’-throw’ [GW].

cabbitch (kaw-bich, kaw-beech) n., arch. cabbage – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, ... cabitch plants, purtares, leeks, cabitch seed ... ’ [DMW] (note the ch rather than j sound).

caber (kä-bur) n., arch. long, slender tree-trunk, beam, rafter – ‘...and though it gaird the divots stour off the house riggins and every caber dunner ... ’ [EM1820] (from Gaelic).

Cabourne (ka-boorn) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war based in Hawick. His fore-name does not appear to be recorded. He had a daughter, Isabella, with Jane Paterson, who was a sister of Robert ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. She married David S. Park, toy merchant and grocer in Hawick (and her name was sometimes recorded as ‘Caborne’). On his daughter’s death certificate his occupation is listed as ‘butler’, suggesting perhaps that he remained in the Town after the other French prisoners left (also written ‘Cabourn’).

cacky (kaw-kee) adj., imp. dirty, relating to excrement.
cacky-aggie

cacky-aggie (kaw-kee-aw-gee) n., imp., ins. an effeminate man, homosexual.

Cacra (kaw-kra) n. area around the confluence of the Rankle Burn with the Ettrick Water, below Cacra Hill, which reaches 471 m. The farms of Cacrabank and Cacraside are there. The area was once part of the parish of Rankilburn – ‘A Buck did come that was so run, Hard by the Cacracross, He mean’d to be at Rankilburn. Finding himself at loss’ [CWS] (‘Kacralaw Hill’ and ‘Cacrabanck’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Cacrabank (kaw-kra-bawngk) n. farm near where the Rankle Burn meets the Ettrick Water, just west of Cacra Hill. The lands there were held by the Crown from at least 1456. Sir David Scott held the lease here as his fee for being Ranger of Ettrick Ward, from at least 1471. In 1484 William Scott held a ‘stead’ at ‘Cacrabank’ as ranger of the Ettrick district of Ettrick Forest and the fee from this farm was still being assigned to the Ranger (then Walter Scott of Howpasley) in 1497. William Scott and his mother were tenants in 1541, paying £18 yearly. In the early 17th century it was held by the Scotts of Tushielaw. By the 19th century it was part of the Buccleuch estates (it is recorded as ‘Causcrusbank’ in 1456, ‘Calfcrubank’ in 1468 and 1469, ‘Calcrufbank’ in 1471, ‘Caulfrufbank’ in 1473, ‘Culcrufbank’ in 1476, ‘Calfcrufbank’ in 1480, ‘Cacrabank’ in 1488, ‘Calfcrufbank’ in 1492, ‘Cacrabank’ in 1497, ‘Caulfrufbank’ in 1502, ‘Cacrabank’ in 1513, ‘Cacrabank’ in 1541 and ‘Cancrobank’ in 1633).

Caddroun Pots (thu-kaw-drin-pots) n. a series of cavities in the rocks of the Caddroun Burn, which joins the Liddel Water about 2 miles north of Saughtree.

cadge (kaj) v. to try to get something for nothing, beg, mooch – ‘...onybody fund cadgin was teh bei geinower-pence ... an then putten oot o the toon’ [BW1961], ‘...unless hei could cadge a hurl on the scaffie cairt’ [IWL] (from Middle English).

cadger (ka-jur) n. someone who is always cadging, a sponger, beggar, disagreeable person – ‘hei’s jist a cadger that yin’, an itinerant peddler, arch. a packman, carrier – ‘...Like gentlemen ye must not seem, But look like corn caugers gawn ae road. With my fa ding, &c.;: : : must not seem, But look like corn caugers gawn ae road. With my fa ding, &c.;: : :’ [CPM], ‘...in respect of John Scott, Borthaugh, and James Scott, cadger, their declaration ... ’ [BR1642], ‘Lang syne ye saw the cadger’s horse, Come trot-tin’ doon the road’ [JRE], ‘An fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarrie, caager’s caairt or hurlie cood A airt oot’ [ECS], ‘The cadger whoa’d his powny cairt Forrenst the ‘Pig and Sty’’ [WL] (also written ‘cauger’).

Cadger Ford (ka-jur-förd) n. former ford over the Harden Burn in Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Cadger’s Hole (ka-jurz-höl) n. area on the south side of the Ale valley, along Esdale Sike, just to the west of the Hill Road to Roberton.

the Cadger’s Well (thu-ka-jurz-wel) n. former water source in Wilton, located near the ‘Stell Hoose’ which was at the bottom of Wilton Hill. The area had been drained in 1826. The well was started in the dry summer of 1842 and to join the Liddel Water. To the south-west of the railway culvert are the remains of an old settlement, consisting of 2 separate enclosures containing several hut circles; this could be the former farm of ‘Hellcaudronburn’. This old name suggests that the gorge was once the ‘Hell Cauldron’, i.e. with having an association with the Devil. An old hollow way runs north-west for about 250 m from this settlement, crossing the railway; it was once suggested it was part of the Catrail. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is ‘Helcaudron burne’ in c.1590 and marked ‘Hellcadrenn b.’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).
used until the early 20th century. The name derived from James Hislop, a ‘cadger’ (or carrier) who lived there.

Cadger’s Well (ka-jurz-wel) n. area in the upper Ale valley, cut through by the Esdale Sike and joining the Ale Water close to Whitslade.

the Cadora (tlu-ka-dö-ru) n. extensive cafe on the south side of the High Street in the mid-20th century, run by Guido Taddel. Popular with young people in the weekend afternoons and early evenings, it has latterly been a bingo parlour.

caed see caaed

Caerby Hill (kär-bee-hil) n. hill to the south of Newcastleton, just to the east of Sorbietrees and adjacent to Blinkbonny Height. It reaches a height of 268 m and is marked ‘Carby Hill’ on modern maps. It is quite detached from other hills, and on a clear day its summit commands views of Cumberland and the Solway. It is crowned with remains of an ancient settlement inside an oval stone wall about 250 feet across, with signs of at least 6 circular hut foundations. It may have been a pre-Roman fort with a later settlement. There is also a meandering linear earthwork around the hill, possibly marking a boundary (like the Catrail), which may be the ‘fossa Galwalensium’ mentioned in a 14th century charter relating to nearby lands. There is also a field system, with clearance cairns around Couper Cleuch to the south (also written ‘Carby Hill’; ‘Carboch’ is marked as a hill on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and it is ‘Kerbie Hill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Carbe Hill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Caerlawverock Castle (kar-la-ve-rok-kaw-sul) n. castle at the mouth of the River Nith, south of Dumfries, seat of the Maxwells, who were often Wardens of the Western March.

Caerlenrig (kar-len-rig) n. former settlement that lay about half a mile to the west (i.e. up river) of the present Teviothead. This was the common general name for the area until about the time the Parish of Teviothead was established in 1850, and was centred on the old chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig (which lay inside the present Teviothead churchyard). Here is where Johnnie Armstrong and 40 of his men were hanged and buried in 1530 by the boy King James V. A memorial opposite the church was erected in 1897, and an older memorial stone marks the nearby grave-site. The village was raided by Dacre’s men in late 1513 and again in 1514, when it is described as ‘the two Townys of Caerlangriggs, with the demaynes of the same, wherupon was 40 pleughes’. The £5 lands of ‘Carlingriggrig’ was among purchases by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. In 1641 the 5-pound ‘Chaplands de Carlangrig’ was inherited by James, 1st Earl of Annandale from his father John, 2nd Earl of Annandale. From at least the mid-17th century the area was owned by the Elliots. Gavin Elliot paid the land tax on £600 there in 1678 (at that time it included Merrylaw, which was disjoined sometime before 1788). It was listed as ‘Carlanercirigg’ among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott of Stobs in 1692 (when it was still a 5-pound land). There was a chapel there from at least 1719, with regular services happening from 1721, but this was by a supply preacher for many years. The name continued to be used for the ‘Chapel of Ease’ where Sunday services were held in the early 19th century, while the area was still part of Hawick Parish. The name is now used mainly for the farm that lies on the ridge. It was also sometimes referred to as ‘Rig’ or ‘Rigg’; this was the name in 1748 when tax was paid on 11 windows by Andrew Oliver and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when George Pott was the owner. It was valued at about £366 13s 4d in 1788. It later became part of the Buccleuch estates. It is said that when the foundations were dug for the farm (in about 1790), some urns were unearthed and coins were found, claimed to be Roman, but probably of later date. Also near here in 1856 a Roman coin was found, an aureus of Vespasian, as well as a perforated stone disk, now in the Museum – ‘With hempen cordis grit and lang They hangit braw Johnie Armstrong, And thretty-six o’ his company At Carlenrig were hung fu’ hie’ [T] (there are many spellings including ‘Callendrück’, ‘Carlanrickig’, ‘Carlangridge’, ‘Carlenridge’, ‘Carlenridge’, ‘Carlenrie’, ‘Carlenrig’, ‘Carlenrick’, etc.; the name is recorded as ‘Carlanrig’ in 1508, is ‘Carlangryg’ in 1509, ‘Carlanerik’ in 1511, ‘Carlangrig’ in 1554, ‘Carlenrig’ in 1558, ‘Carlenrickig’ in 1678, ‘Carlenrickridge’ in 1699, ‘Carlenridge’ in 1694 and ‘Carlenrickrig’ in 1788; it is marked ‘Carlangryk’ and ‘Carlangrig’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps; it may derive from the Celtic ‘caer’, meaning fort, plus the Old English ‘long’ and the Scots ‘rig’ or Old Norse ‘hrygg’ for a ridge, this being suggested since the long ridge here is quite a striking geographical feature; an alternative origin is Old Welsh ‘cair’, meaning an enclosure, plus the Old Welsh ‘lanere’, meaning a piece of cleared land).

Caerlen Rig (kar-len-rig) n. long ridge to the south-west of Teviothead village, giving its name to the former settlement of Caerlenrig. A rod runs along the eastern side of the ridge, connecting Teviothead with Merrylaw and Teviot Stone. It is flanked by the Teviot River and the Limlecule Burn. At the north-eastern point of the ridge are signs of an old hill-fort, while near its south-western end is an enclosure, about 200ft square, cut through by the road.

Caerlenrig Kirk (kar-len-rig-kirk) n. chapel at Caerlenrig, near what is now called Teviothead at the confluence of the Teviot with the Frostle Burn. The oldest chapel was dedicated to St. Mary and lay within the present churchyard. A lintel from this building stands in the minister’s glebe. This building was certainly pre-Reformation, and possibly 15th century. The ‘chaplainry of Carlangryg’ was listed in the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509 (and confirmed as ‘Carlanerik’ in 1511). A ‘Chapel of Ease’ was erected near there (on the Thornyhaugh by Falnum) for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes in 1715 and rebuilt in 1799 (or perhaps 1789) on the other side of the stream. This building subsequently became the schoolhouse. Communions there were carried out alternately by the ministers of Hawick and Cavers, who would also celebrate marriages and baptisms there. The present church was built in 1855/6 and is situated just a little west of the original chapel. There has long been a burial ground there, but how long back it goes is uncertain.

Caerlenrig Manse (kar-len-rig-mans) n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used on the 1841 census. It was a manse for Caerlenrig Kirk, built largely at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch around the 1830s.

Caerlenrig Schuil (kar-len-rig-skil) n. former school in Caerlenrig, which eventually became Teviothead Primary School. It was built and initially supported by the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge in 1755, with their support withdrawn about 1767. It seems to have survived the period until 1803 when it became formally a second parish school of Cavers. It became the school of its own parish in 1850. Arthur Elliot was the first master 1755–57.

Caesar (see-zur) n. one of a series of Roman Emperors who once ruled over a large part of Europe, including Hawick. A worn sestertius coin of Marcus Caesar, dating from 155–6 was found by S. Scott in his garden in MacLagan Drive about 1965.

the Cafe (thu-kaw-fee) n. name often for the small building serving refreshments in Wilton Lodge Park. It was erected in the 1930s, originally as a bowling pavilion. Later it was the sales kiosk for the putting green and trampolines, as well as serving as a small cafe. Closed in 2014 it was rebuilt in 2015.

Cairncross

Alexander (1637–1701) from the family of Cownall, he was a dyer in the Canongate in Edinburgh, later becoming parson of Dumfries. He was appointed Bishop of Brechin in 1684 and within a few months was promoted to Archbishop of Glasgow. However, disputes with the Lord Chancellor over penal laws against Catholics led to his removal in 1687. However, following the Revolution he was back in favour and became Bishop of Raphoe in Ireland in 1693, remaining until his death. George (b.1886) son of Robert and Ann Waldie. In 1907 he married Hannah Murray. Their children were: Robert (b.1908); George Gunn (b.1909), hosiery director; John (b.1909) twin of George; Hannah (b.1911), married Thomas Gray, Callcutta; Thomas (b.1917); James (b.1913); William Lumsden (b.1921), worked for the Foreign Office.

James married a second time. Oliver Reid in Glasgow in 1919. He may also have William (1890–1946), who married Wilhelmina married William Hunter in Hawick in 1908; and several children who lived in Hawick; and David (b.1880), born in Hawick, a gardener, who moved to Carlisle; James (1882–1943), who married Jane Holywell Milligan in Hawick in 1913; George Henry (1884–1939), who married Janet Edmondson in Hawick in 1907; Janet Elliot (b.1888), who married William Hunter in Hawick in 1908; and William (1890–1946), who married Wilhelmina Oliver Reid in Glasgow in 1919. He may also have married a second time. James ‘Jimmy’ (1910–61) born in Hawick, son of Thomas. He had a tailor’s business in Hawick. He played draughts as a youth and won the Hawick Chess Club Championship within 12 months of learning the game. He became known as a chess player, particularly in ‘correspondence chess’, sharing 1st place in the 1946/7 British Correspondence Chess Championship. During WWII he served as an Air Gunner in the R.A.F. In 1947 he moved to Lesmahagow, working for Skelton and Sons nylon factory, where he has been brought to train locals on the knitting machines. He returned to Hawick in 1958, working for the Post Office. James Dobson (1919/20–42) only son of Robert and Elizabeth from Hawick. He was a member of 3rd Hawick Boys’ Brigade, winning the King’s Medal as Staff Sergeant. He served with the Royal Engineers in WWII. He was one of a group of 34 men who volunteered for a commando raid (Operation Freshman) on the German heavy-water plant at Vermork, Norway (portrayed in the 1965 film ‘The Heroes of Telemark’). This was planned to sabotage the production of atomic bombs, but proved to be disastrous, with all the commandos and aircrew ending up dead, and the site being subsequently reinforced. Corp. Cairncross was on one of the 2 gliders that crashed; on his 9 men survived and he was one of 4 men who were seriously injured, subsequently being treated by locals, before becoming prisoners of war. At Lagårdsvæien jail they were given lethal injections before being tortured by the Gestapo and then strangled or shot. The 4 bodies were sunk at depth off Kvitsøy Island and have never been recovered. He is remembered at the Brookwood Memorial, as well as on a rose bowl that was in the West Port Kirk, and on his parents’ grave stone in the Wellogate Cemetery. Some of those responsible for his death were tried for war crimes in Oslo in 1945. He had 3 sisters who lived in Hawick: Jean; Mrs. Mary Bell; and Mrs. Anne McConnell. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is probably the same as John in Colmslie, who tenanted lands held by Melrose Abbey and was brother of Robert, Bishop of Ross. In 1551 he and his son William signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He married Helen Abernethy and was succeeded by his son William. John (1807–69) Hawick man who was a machine cleaner. He had a brother George, and another brother of unknown name. He married Jane Hall, who died in 1892. Their children were: Robert (b.1843), warehouseman; Sarah (b.c.1844); John (1853–1917); and Jane (b.c.1856). John (1875–1917) eldest son of James, who started the aerated waters business in Hawick. He was born in Langholm. In 1901 in Wilton he married Agnes Beck Thomson; she was daughter of Adam and Agnes Thomson. He worked for a while in the furnishing department of Hawick Co-op. He emigrated to New Zealand, where he was a motorman and carpenter. He served in the 3rd Battalion of the 3rd New Zealand Rifle Brigade. He was killed in action and is buried in Berks Cemetery Extension in Belgium. His wife Agnes returned to Scotland and died in Portobello in 1922. Nichol (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Colmslie. In 1613 he leased the lands of ‘Mylenrigir’ and ‘Park’ in Belses. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as tenant in Melroslands. He had remission for ‘communicating with the traitors of Leven’. It is unclear where his farm may have been located. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in 1494/5 as tenant in ‘le sovart croft de melros’, which could have been a piece of land associated with the Hospital of the Holy Trinity at Soutra. Robert (16th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He is recorded as ‘Robert Carnecorce’. It is possible that he was the same man as Robert of Colmslie. Robert of Colmslie (d.1574) brother of Walter, who owned lands in Wilton Parish. In 1603 his son Walter was served heir to these lands.

of his brother, and he was described as deceased by then. He was succeeded by his son William. Robert (b.c.1760) bookseller in the High Street, recorded in the 1820s. In 1841 he was a bookseller on O’Connell Street, living with Helen, hislop and James, who were probably his children or grandchildren. Robert (1843–90) son of John and Jane Hall, he was a hosier warehouseman. He married Ann Waldie in 1868, and she died in 1923. Their children were: John (d.1916), who lived for a while in India; Robert, father of James Dobson; George (b.1886); James Dobson (1890–1908); Jane Hall; Isabella; Alice Hay; and 3 other daughters. Thomas (1878–1930) son of James, the Hawick lemonade maker, he was born in Langholm. His children were: John (1909–68) who brought up his nephew Irving; Guidion Jamieson (1912–43) killed in action, and buried in Egypt; Thomas (1914–44), also died during WWII, married Sarah E.W. Scott and had a son Irving; George, who had a daughter: James, tailor and known as a chess player; William, worked as a hall porter at the Tower Hotel; and Mary Ray (b.1920). Walter (d.c.1603) owner of the farms of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall, with alternating rights of patronage in the Kirk of Wilton. In 1603 his nephew Walter (son of his brother Robert of Colmslie) was served as his heir in these lands. He is probably the Walter recorded in 1590 as cautioner for the delivery of certain Armstrongs and Elliots, and in 1592 as surety for John Scott of Foulshiels. It is possible he was the Walter in ‘Lugat’ (in Stow Parish) who served as a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in 1590/1. He is probably the Walter, brother of the late Robert of Colmslie who was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford (because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branxholme’s sister Janet) in 1576/7. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Colmslie and hence brother of William of Colmslie. In 1603 he was served heir to the lands in Wilton owned by his uncle Walter. These were explicitly Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall, with rights to the church. However, since these lands were resigned to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1604, it may be that he sold them almost immediately. William of Colmslie (16th C.) probably son of John. He may have been the family member who was first granted Colmslie. In 1515 he was alread ‘of Colmslie’ when he had a tack relating to lands in Ross. He was granted the temporality of the Bishopric of Ross in 1538. In 1544 he had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme over lands at Colmslie, Langlgee and Housebyre. He was granted lands in Housebyres, Melrose in 1547. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He married Marion Pringle. They had 7 sons and 2 daughters: Robert, who succeeded; James of Allanshaws; Nichol of Calfhill; John, who was a clerk; George; Charles; Walter; Elizabeth; and Margaret. He also had a natural son, ‘Meikle Hob’. William of Colmslie (1558–c.1626) son of Robert, whom he succeeded in 1574. The lands of Wilton Green and Wilton Burn were confirmed to him in 1586, but appear to have passed to other family members and were resigned to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1604. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir Walter, 9th Laird of Buccleuch. His eldest son was James and he was succeeded by his grandson William (presumably son of James) in 1626. His 3rd son was Nichol, who was a Burgess of Edinburgh (also written ‘Cairne corse’, ‘Carnors’, ‘Carnecorse’, ‘Carnecroce’, ‘Kerncross’, etc.).

Cairncross’s (kärn-kro-seez) n. Cairncross Lemonade Works, manufacturer of Cairncross Aerated Waters in the late 19th century. It was run by James Cairncross, who came from Langholm.

Cairns (kärnz) n. Francis ‘Frank’ (18th C.) local character who was well known at the Common Riding for annually walking in front of the Town Clerk, spade in hand, cutting divots as far as the top of the Upper Haugh, and then throwing stones into the river to mark the boundary there. It is possible he was the same as the beadle of Hawick Kirk, or his father. Francis (d. bef. 1829) weaver in Hawick. He married Isabel Middlemas in 1773 and their children included: Euphan (b.1774); and James (b.1777). In 1768 he was witness to a baptism for fellow weaver John Smith. The death of his son James, also a weaver, is recorded in 1829. Francis (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1815 he was appointed ‘Kirk Officer and Sexton’ (i.e. ‘beadle’), succeeded the deceased Rob ‘the Naig’ Tinlin. He could have been the Francis, son of Francis and Isabel Middlemas, born in Hawick in 1783. He is probably the Frank who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Francis ‘Frank’ (19th C.) head at Hawick Muir in the mid-1800s. George (d.bef. 1721) wright of Minto. His son Adam married Elizabeth Hamilton in Edinburgh in 1721. It seems likely that another son was George, who succeeded him as wright. George (d.bef. 1760) wright of Minto parish, recorded in 1760 when his daughter Isobel married Thomas...
Dobson, shoemaker of Selkirk. He was probably son of the previous Minto wright, also George, and was probably the same George who married Bettie Boa in Minto in 1724. George (b.c.1786/7) farmer at Greenbraeheads, probably son of John, who was farmer there earlier. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his sister Betty and George, probably his son. In 1851 he was farmer there of 21 acres. Isabel (b.c.1810) recorded as a school mistress on the Fore Raw in 1841. She was living with Francis and Janet, who were probably her children. James (b.c.1765) farmer at Hawick Moor, who may also have acted as Town Herd. He is listed as joint tenant of ‘Hawick-muir’ in 1834 and along with his son James as joint proprietors on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was listed there as ‘independent’, with his sons James and William as farmers. He married Beatrix Turnbull (b.1767) and their children included: Betty (b.1806), baptised in Cavers; James; William; Robert; Janet, who married Denholm stocking-maker William Robertson; and Beatrix. He may be the son of John, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1764. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker living at Sautha in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1840, but not in 1841. He was presumably related to the other Cairnses in that area. James (19th C.) one of 5 men tried for rioting during the 1837 elections in Hawick. He was found guilty and imprisoned for 18 months, the longest sentence given. James (1803/4–87) son of James, he took over as farmer at Hawick Moor. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 420 acres, including 40 arable acres, employing 2 labourers. By 1861 he was the town Herd, probably taking over after the death of Andrew Ormiston in 1853. He remained unmarried. James (1777–1829) weaver in Hawick, son of Francis. He could be the James, married to Jane Nichol, whose daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1800, or the James who married Isobel Walker in Wilton Parish in 1810. Jessie T. (b.1789/90) toll-keeper at Deanbrae Toll in 1861. She lived there with her daughter Agnes and grand-children. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Thorburn and their children included: Janet (b.1785), who married Andrew Dryden; John (b.1793); Elizabeth (b.1798); Annie (b.1806). John (18th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ in 1790 when he married Isabel Fairbairn in Melrose. Robert Grierson acted as cautioner. John (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. George, who was farmer there in 1841, was probably his son. John (18th/19th C.) weaver at Roadhead in Wilton. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 and 1841 he was listed as a warehouseman in Hawick, but still attending Wilton Kirk. John (b.c.1796/7) from Kirkton Parish, he was a farm worker in Teviothead. In 1841 he was a labourer at Teindside Bridge. By 1861 he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead. His wife was Agnes, from Ashkirk. Their children included William, Helen, Alexander, Thomas, Agnes and Joanna. John (b.c.1805) coachman at Hassendeanburn. In 1841 he was living at Lurden Cottages with his wife Margaret and children Ann, Mary, James and Andrew. John (b.c.1810) grocer and spirit dealer at the West Port. He was recorded there in 1841, probably at No. 5 Loan. In 1851 he was a gardener on Bourtree Place. His wife was Isobel and they had children Janet, Elizabeth and Francis. Robert (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) married Isobel Scott in Cavers in 1743. Their children included: Margaret (b.1750); and probably Thomas, who lived in Wilton. Robert (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer living at about 9 North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1841. He could be the ‘Robert Cairns, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (b.1822/3) shopkeeper on the Back Row according to Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a ‘Jobbing Gardener & Greig Grocer’ at 8 Mid Row. His wife was Margaret and their children included Janet, William, Isabella, Robert, James and Margaret. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton, probably son of Robert and Isobel Scott. He married Mary Williamson (or ‘Willison’) in 1778 and their children included: Betty (b.1779), who may have had a child with James Swanson in 1797; Robert (b.1780); William (b.1782); Thomas (b.1784); Isobel (b.1785); James (b.1788); Margaret (b.1793); and Mary (b.1800). Unnamed sons born to Thomas in Wilton (with no mother’s name given) in 1779 and 1780 were probably also his. He could be the same Thomas as the farmer at the Dean. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Wilton dean’, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear precisely where he farmed. He may also be the weaver at the Dean who had sisters Janet (who married Andrew Dryden) and Margaret (who married James Kerr). Thomas (b.c.1785) hosier worker in Wilton Dean. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was hosier and elder of

there is about 195 ft by 140 ft and has a double bank. It has been partly destroyed by quarrying, some of the stone being used for sheepfolds there. It is fairly close to the Catrail, to the south, at Hawkhaes Linn there is an earthwork, and to the east is the remains of a farmstead.

cairriage (kā-reej) n. a carriage – ‘Ai heather! sic a yooky waddean; nae streiv! Set thum up wui ther cairreege an perr!’ [ECS], means or cost of conveyance – ‘Picters are like buiks when they are sent tae an auction sale – ’ee dinna get muckle ayond the cost o’ the cairriage’ [BW1938], ‘At Chirnside she was juist like a’body else i the cairriage …’ [DH], arch. behaviour, conduct – ‘… and with many intollerable, injurious, and oppressious words, speeches, and carriages, publickly abusing the then present Bayleyas …’ [BR1706] (also written ‘cairridge’ and ‘cairreege’).

Cairriage Hill (kā-reej-hil) n. former name for a hill near Peelbraehope, perhaps the same as what is now marked on maps as ‘the Pike’ (it is described as part of the Cattrail’s route in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’).

cairrie see cairry
cairrier (kā-ree-ur) n., arch. a carrier, conveyer, transporter of goods, usually by pack-horse or cart. They were the lorry-drivers of a past age. Carts only started to appear locally about 1840 and Hawick became a centre of the carrying trade in the 18th and early 19th centuries, particularly after the opening of the toll-road connecting Carlisle with Edinburgh. Before the opening of the railway Hawick had 30 different carriers operating, and there were about 80 in Roxburghshire as a whole. The occupation could also be dangerous, with one carrier robbed at gun-point and tied to a tree near Branxholme in 1808 – ‘An' plied wi’ his cairrier cairt’[?] (also cairter).

cairrit (kā-ree', -ri') pp., adj. carried – ‘… And then, i’ the hush as they cairrit him off, A whisper cam’ frae Dye’ [DH], ‘… ee putt the hammer heid throwe the haunles an then ee cairrit eet like that ti yur job’ [Da], elated, carried away, enraptured – ‘A was fair cairreeft!’ [ECS] (also spelled other ways).

cairry (kā-ree) v. to carry – ‘they cairried on singin inti the wee sna oors’, ‘And then a hush as they cairried um off’, ‘The big tin trunk ablow the bed That can cairry aw creation …’ [AY], ‘… And the feck o’ the trock they took away, Ye wadna hae cairried hame’ [WL], ‘… when the train cairrin the Scottish Olympic team stopped on its way sooth ti London’ [IWL], arch. to carry oneself, behave – ‘…and was told that he should not reside in ye town or parish if he carried not inoffensivelie'[PR1717], ‘...and they both promised to carry christianlie in time coming'[PR1721], sometimes used with the subject and object switched – ‘...a wumman wui a bairn cairryin i the shawl’[ECS], to elate, elevate the spirit, n. a carry, lift – ‘go’an gie’s a cairry hame wi the messages’, ‘...for fear it was ma haimaist chance o a cairrie ti Haaick’[ECS] (also spelled ‘cairrie’).

cairry on (kä-ree-oo) v. to carry on, misbehave, fuss – ‘only mair cairryin on an A’ll cancel Christmas’, ‘For sleekit dealin’ and cairryin’ on, There never yet was a man like you’[WL], n. a carry on, fuss, to-do.

cairry oot (kä-ree-oo) n., v. carry out, take-away food or drink – ‘let’s git a cairry oot afore the bar closes’.

cairt (kär’t) n. a cart – ‘Oor aa gaun ti Denum On Sandy Fussy’s cairt’[T], ‘The cadger who’d his powny cairt Fornenst the ‘Pig and Sty’’[WL], v. to cart – ‘Armstrong raised his fit and sent um flyin oot inti the street onti the top o a heap o dung that was lyin at the close mooth ti be cairted away’[IWL]. It is stated in 1839 that some of the older pairishioners of Hawick could remember a time when there was only one cart in the whole Parish, and that was the one owned by the Minister.

Cairtann Burn (kär-tin-burn) n. stream marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, meeting the Teviot from the south near Commonside and having the farms of ‘West cotrigg’, ‘Sudarig’ and ‘Stony-helme’ along it. It may correspond with the Cromrig Burn.

cairter (kär’-ur, kär-tur) n. a carter – ‘My Geordie was then a braw, spanky lad, And his calling was that of a cairter’[GF] (also cairrier).

Cairter (kär-tur) n. (Carter) Walter Gordon (1889–1936) born in Ontario, Canada, he was son of Jack and Jennie Fife. He was educated at Queen’s University, Kingston, Ontario and left for Scotland to complete his education as a Presbyterian minister. He was ordained in 1920 as minister of St. John’s Kirk in Hawick. In 1929 he was translated to Carluke. He married Agnes Mildred James and had a daughter, Esther Muriel Fife.

cairtridge (kär’-reej) n. a cartridge (see also cartrich).
Calderwood

Calderwood (kawld-wurk) n. Rev. Walter Maefarlane (1908–2004) son of Robert Sibbald, minister at Cambuslang. He was minister at St. Mary’s Kirk 1933–53. He served as pastor for the prisoners of war in Wilton Camp. He was later minister at the Foreman Church in Leven, serving there until 1973. He had a daughter Sybil.

Caldron Hole (kawld-rin-hol) n. hilly area near Dryden Fell, above the headwaters of the Back Burn, north of Teviothead. There is a linear earthwork there, running west for about 500 m from here to a small ravine at the head of the Philhope Burn.

Caldwell (kawld-wel) n. James (1880–1956) Hawick man who emigrated to Wanganui in New Zealand, where he collected his poetry in ‘A Wheen Thoughts’ (1933). He was for a while a mill foreman in Galashiels. He married Agnes Burns Ferguson and they had a son William. Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at West Lees on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to Thomas, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert. They were each taxed for a hearth. Thomas (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1854–1915) born in Galashiels of Irish descent, son of William and Sarah McQuaid. His father was a cloth broker and the family moved to Hawick when he was young, living at 6 Kirk Wynd. He was writer of the words for ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’ and ‘Oor ain Auld Toon’ around 1900. He originally trained as a pupil teacher at Drumlanrig School, but had to work in the mills after his father’s death. He worked for a while as a stationer, and became known as an orator and Liberal supporter. He was involved in the East Bank Literary Society and was heavily involved in the local Irish Home Rule debate in 1886. In 1893 he moved to Edinburgh as a political organiser in the staff of the Scottish Liberal Association. He was a founder member of the Callants’ Club as well as the Hawick Liberal Club, and was an avid member of the Edinburgh Borderers’ Union. He was Right Worshipful Master of Lodge St. James B.U.R.A. 424 around 1890. He was particularly known for the musical lectures he gave in collaboration with tenor John Bell. He organised the erection of the James Thomson memorial, and unveiled it in the Wellogate Cemetery in 1899. He is himself buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. He was probably father of Thomas Brydon (b.1878) and James (b.1880) William (b.c.1810) from Ireland, he was a ‘broker in clothes’ at 6 Kirk Wynd in 1861. He moved to Hawick from Galashiels. He married Sarah McQuaid and their children included John, Sarah, Margaret, Isabell, Mary, William, Thomas and Samuel (also written ‘Caldwel’, ‘Caldwells’, ‘Coldwell’ and ‘Coldwells’).

Caldwell’s (kawld-welz) n. A. & A. Caldwell, toy and sweet shop in Innerleithen, which sells ice cream using a unique family recipe – ‘The Borders are blessed wi ice cream o a sorts, Pelosis, Lombards and Taddeis and Fortes. Guid though they a ir, ti mei it would seem Theres no yin fit ti compare wi Caldwells ice cream’ [IWL].

Caldwell Sike (kawld-wel-sik) n. stream that rises on Saughtree Fell and runs roughly to the south-east to join the Dawston Burn between Dawstonburn Viaduct and Black Linn.

Caleb (kā-leb) n. nickname for Caleb Rutherford, this perhaps not being his actual Christian name.

calendar (kaw-len-dur) n. someone who operates rollers used to press and finish cloth (also written ‘callanderer’ and variants; there are several instances of this occupation in Hawick in the 1841 to 1861 censuses).

Calfield (kawld-feld) n. farm just to the west of Langholm. It was home to a branch of the Armstrongs in the 16th century and Scotts in the 18th century. The name may formerly have been written ‘Calfhill’.

Calfshaw (kawld-shaw) n. area to the north-west of Falnash in upper Teviotdale. The Calfshaw Burn is there, with Calfshaw Headto the north-west, reaching a height of 403 m and having a triangulation pillar. This may be where the lands were of Adam Turnbull ‘de Calfshaw’, who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. It is ‘Calfshawis’ in 1464 when Simon Dalgleish had a sasine for these lands, as well as those of Falnash. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and Langhaugh. Note there is also a place with the same name above Fairnilee in the Tweed valley, south-west of Galashiels.

Calfshaw Burn (kawld-shaw-burn) n. stream that rises on Calfshaw Head and flows roughly south-east, past Falnash, to join the Falnash Burn and hence the Tewiot.

Calfshaw Heid (kawld-shaw-heed) n. hill between the upper Tewiot and Borthwick valleys, to the north of Lairhope. It reaches a height of 403 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. The slopes to its north-west are also referred to as Philhope Fell and Crib Head is the hill to the south-west.

calker (kaw-kur) n., arch. a dram of spirits, bumer – ‘There we'll get a guid cauld calker, Frae a man that is nae Quaker’ [AB]. Note that the practice of public distribution of drink to the riders is recorded at least as early as 1725 when the Minister tried to suppress it! (origin uncertain).

Callaghan’s (kaw-lu-lunz) n. Callaghan’s Irish Bar at 20–22 High Street, run by Brian Callaghan.

callant (kaw-len’, -lun’, lin’) n. a young man, youth – ‘...May each Teri be a callant in his heart for evermore’[TC], ‘And a’ the callants o’ Hawick Loan ...’[JSB], ‘They met the boasting English here: Though they were Callants then ...’[JEDM], ‘Long may it run, long may each callant’s heart Throb through the years until that festal time ...’[JCG], ‘...the wainches jumpin the tow, an the callants daein kittle’s’ [ECS], ‘Where can any joy surpass The callants doon at Mansfield’ [RMc], ‘Hawick callants’ ever true Ever noble, ever brave, ‘Hawick callants’ never knew What it was to be a slave’[JAHB], ‘A Cornet, symbolic o mony a lang-lost callant In fremmit fields ...’[DH], ‘A guid place for wild strawberries yon, when I was a callant’[DH], ‘And the stories tell of the English who fell At the hands of the callants from home’[IWS], boyhood, state of being a ‘callant’ – ‘The far off Hawick o’ callant days ...’[JEDM], ‘O callants! Toom are your braggin’ speeches When eident woman your hert beseeches’[WL], ‘Then A went as a young callant wi ma fither and ma uncle Andra ti the Archæological Society’s meetins ...’[WL] (Dutch origin, related to the modern Dutch ‘klant’, meaning ‘customer’; often capitalised when referring to Hawick’s youth collectively).

The Callant (thu-kaw-lin’) n. poem written by ‘Matthew Gotterson’ and published in the Scotsman and HawickAdvertiser in 1889, originally entitled ‘The Hawick Callant’. The pseudonym is one used by Jedburgh-born James Small, and so it is presumed that these verses are also his. It is composed of 5 verses, discussing Hawick specifically, and hence it is unclear why Small would have written it, leaving open the possibility that someone else used his pseudonym (or if Small did write it, there must have been a specific reason for him to do so, since he had no obvious direct connections with the Town). The third verse on its own (the one least focussed on Hawick) is traditionally sung at the Callants’ Club annual dinner, with music arranged by Adam L. Ingles in the mid 1970s. It is included on the CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006), sung by Bert Armstrong. The words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2011 Hawick Songs book.

callants’ baa (kaw-lintz-baw) n., arch. the handball game once played in Hawick on the Saturday preceeding the main ‘men’s baa’.

the Callants’ Club (thu-kaw-lintz-klub) n. formed in 1904, after a circular letter was sent out at the end of 1903 by 10 local men: Martin Dechan; Tom Ker; Adam Laing; A.H. Drummond; J.E.D. Murray; T.D. Darling; Walter Scott; William N. Graham; Hugh Anderson; and James Edgar. This was partly in concern over the possible effects of the new Stobs army camp on the traditions of the town. The first meeting was held in the Buccleuch Hotel. The aims are explicitly ‘the cultivation of local sentiment; the preservation of the ancient customs and institutions of the town of Hawick, and of its history and traditions; the fostering of local art and literature; the commemoration of important local incidents, and the perpetuation of the memories of worthy townsmen’. The membership is limited to 200 ordinary members (originally 100), plus honorary members. The President is elected annually, the first being Tom Ker. The annual dinner, held every year since 1906, except for the war years, features a prominent Scotsman as main guest (and artefacts from Gallipoli are displayed). They also organise a congratulatory Smoker for the Cornet, the first one being in 1904, and always have a meeting after the Colour Bussing. One of their first public acts was to raise money for the Provost’s Chain in 1906, which they have followed with a series of fund-raising causes. The Club has long organised a wreath-laying at the Horse to commemorate the local men who fell at Gallipoli on 12th July 1915. They annually award a shield to the shop-front with the best Common Riding window display. The club celebrated its centenary in 2004 with a series of events (and a female Provost being invited to the annual dinner for the first time). A history of the Club’s first 50 years was published in 1954 and the Centenary volume in 2004 – ‘...Scotia’s boast was Hawick Callants’ [JH].

Callant’s Song (kaw-lintz-sawng) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written in 1994 for Ronnie Nichol, and first performed at the 1514 Club Dinner that year by Elliot Goldie. This was the first local song written by Seeley, and was based on an exercise he developed for the music examination at the High School, using his own words. Seeley himself notes the resemblance to the style of Thomas F. Dunhill. It is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Elliot Goldie.

caller (kaw-lur) adj., arch. fresh, cool, refreshing – ‘The sun is up, the morning fresh and fair, ‘And halesome it’s to smuff the cauler air’ [CPM], ‘The cauler breeze frae the fells, Will lead the dogs to the quarry true’ [LHTB], ‘...the forest air was caller an clear’ [ECS], ‘And caller-clear rins Te’i’ot, where Kind Providence sae wisely placed it’ [DH], ‘And there’s mony a less pleasant and mair fashions way o’ spendin’ a caller wunter efternune ...’ [DH], ‘I’ll rax me doun my nibbie stick And seek the caller air’ [WL], ‘How oft our braw lads and lasses hae gane In the saft caller shades in the gloaming’ [RF], ‘The water that cam’ frae’d was caller and clear ...’ [JCG] (from the Middle English ‘calver’).

calligo (caw-li-gö) n., arch. calico, a kind of printed cotton – ‘...qu was yn prohibit ...any forraigne cloaths, stuffs, hats, caps, stockings, gloves, calligoes, buttoons ...’ [BR1702].

callit (caw-lee’ -li’) pp., arch. called – ‘...viz. William Scott at the Croce, Robert Scott, callit of Goldielands, present bailles’ [BR1638] (cf. the modern caaed).

calm (kawm) n., arch. another name for heddles, the small cords through which the warp is passed in weaving, or the set of these – ‘To find a calm to suit the reed, when there is not the same number of threads in each split ...’ [BCM1881].

calsay (cawl-see) n., arch. causeway, paved road – ‘Item, that ilk man keippe the calsay before his awin dure and heritage, under the pane of 40 shillings, bye the payment for keeping thereof’ [BR1640] (see also causa and causey).

Calvert (kal-ver’) n. Andrew (b.c.1795) toll-keeper at Whitrope Bar in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth Bell.

cam (kam) v., arch., poet. came – ‘And cam and swabbed mei’ [JSB], ‘...Till they cam fra hill and show’ [JEDM], ‘The heat wasnae cannie as A cam ti the main road’ [ECS], ‘But they cam’ and condemned it and gurred mei fit’ [DH], ‘But Aa cam’ back later on, mind ye, and got the nibbie!’ [DH], ‘She cam’ tae my door when the frost and the snow ...’ [DJ], ‘...Gaed hauntin’ Herod, and truith to tell, He cam by a scummersome end himsel’’ [WL] (also written ‘kam’; used as the past tense, while ‘comed’ was the past participle).

Cambustoun (kan-bus-tin) n. former name for lands listed as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608. It is unclear where these lands were, or whether there is simply a transcription error.

 Camehill (käm-hil) n. former name for part of the lands of ‘Langhassendean’ in Hassendean Parish. Langhassendean was given to Neil Cunningham by his father William in 1457, except for this part.

 Camerrell (ka-nu-rel) n. John (16th C.) tenant of the farms of Simon Elliot in Dods Burn, listed in a bond of security signed at Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern transliteration of his name would be.

Cameron (ka-nu-rin) n. Rev. Alexander ‘Alex’ (d.1911) minister at the Roberton Free Kirk (‘the Snoot Kirk’). He collapsed and died during evening service and is buried at Borthwick Waas. His grave can be seen in an old postcard. Alexander Durand ‘Sandy’ (?–?) history teacher at the High School who wrote many educational books on Scottish history in the 1970s and 80s. Donald fictional character in ‘The Gutterblades’, described as ‘A sailor belonging to the Western Highlands’. Evan (1845/6–71) graduating M.B. from Glasgow University in 1869 and M.D. in 1871, he went to Denholm as a doctor. However, he died the same year, at the age of 25.

John (d.1446) of unknown origin, he was Provost of Lincluden and official of St. Andrews, later becoming a Canon of Glasgow, secretary to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Wigtown (later 5th Earl of Douglas) and Rector of Cambuslang. In 1424 he became secretary to King James I, then Keeper of the Privy Seal. He was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1425, as successor to William Lauder. However, the Pope claimed the right to select his own appointee, and so he wasn’t consecrated as Bishop until 1427. He was thus Hawick’s Bishop, remaining until his death. He was a close advisor of the King, including involvement in some unpopular policies involving limiting ecclesiastical liberty, and was accused of improper conduct by the Pope. A strong opponent at this time was William Crosier, the Pope’s candidate for Archdeacon of Teviotdale. He served as ambassador to England in 1429, 1430 and 1431. He travelled to the Continent in 1433 and was involved in negotiations to reconcile the Scottish Crown with the Papacy, remaining there for about 3 years, including a period of banishment. He returned to Cameronian

Scotland after the assassination of James I and was Chancellor for the young James II. He then became embroiled in Douglas politics, and was accused of plotting against the King. Although he kept his bishopric, his power was severely reduced. He died at Glasgow Castle. Patrick (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. His surname is recorded as ‘Camroun’. Richard (c.1648–80) born near Leuchars in Fife, his family moved to Falkland, where he became schoolmaster, having been educated for that from an early age. There he became acquainted with some field preachers, and later moved to Edinburgh. In 1675 he was appointed as chaplain and tutor for Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He supposedly accompanied Lady Scott to Roberton Kirk, but refused to enter to hear an ‘indulged’ preacher, and next day left to join the Covenanters. In fact he was probably dismissed from Harden, but the next year became chaplain to Lady Douglas of Cavers. In 1678, at the house of Henry Hall at Haugh-head, he was licensed to preach by 4 non-conformist ministers. He became one of the most prominent Covenanter leaders, inciting people in the Scottish south-west to openly oppose the government. He fled to Holland for a while, and on his return led a small band of followers who openly renounced their allegiance to the King. He was hunted down at Airds Moss and killed, his head and hands being put on public display in Edinburgh. Many of his followers were later given an amnesty and formed the Cameronian Regiment. His radical style of religion was called Cameronianism, and many churches professing to this branch of worship sprang up, including one in Denholm. Dr. William ‘Bill’ (??– ) from a Highland family, educated in Glasgow and Edinburgh, he came to Hawick in 1958 as a partner with Dr. Milne, serving as a G.P. for 30 years, and being awarded the M.B.E. in 1987.

Cameronian (ka-me-ro-nee-in) n. term sometimes used synonymously with ‘Covenanter’, more precisely a follower of the Rev. Richard Cameron, who was a prominent Covenanter who denounced Charles II, and was killed at the battle of Aird Moss (and who was chaplain and tutor at Harden). His followers were also called ‘Reformed’ or ‘Free Presbyterians’, and later the terms ‘Dissenters’ and ‘Independents’ were also used.

the Cameronian Chaipel (thu-kam-r-o-nee-in-chā-pul, -chā-pul) n. chapel in Denholm used by a local congregation of strict Covenanters, who refused to join the Presbyterian Church. There must have been a meeting place from around 1690, but the purpose-built chapel was erected in about 1740, behind the Poplar Neuk on the Small Green. It had seating for 230 and 3 pulpits, with the preacher’s house adjoining the chapel. The site was given by the Laird and the Douglas family worshipped there until the late 19th century. The first permanent minister was John Arnott (d.1774), followed by James Duncan (1774–1830). After he died the building was used by the Denholm Congregational Church. It became known as the ‘Independent Chapel’ and by the end of the 19th century as the Meeting House or the Mission Hall. By the 1920s services were held alternately here and at the Free Kirk. But after the reunion of the United Free Church with the Established Church in 1929 the old Cameronian Kirk was closed. The building was used for a while as a blacksmith’s, before being demolished after WWII. The adjoining manse still stands and was renamed Elmbank (often just referred to locally as ‘the Chaipel’).

Camieston (kaw-nee-stin) n. hamlet about a mile south of Newton St. Boswells (the origin is simply ‘Cameis’ town’, since it is recorded belonging to the Chames or Cameis family in the late 12th and early 13th centuries).

cammel (caw-nel) v., arch. to argue, dispute – ‘... the skirts an the dirls, the raameen an the raackeen an the cammelleen, the daads an the dunts an the srauchen an the skreeveen’ [ECS], ‘A strooshie o’ foak cammellin’ an’ fechtin’ amang yin another’ [GW].

Campbell (kam-bul) n. Archibald (c.1507–58) 4th Earl of Argyll, son of Colin, the 3rd Earl. He was Justice General of Scotland, a title that was hereditary at that time. In 1535 he presided over a Justiciary Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (18th C.) Excise Officer. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Baxter William Elliot in 1763. Capt. Archibald (18th/19th C.) of the 42nd Highland Regiment (i.e. the Black Watch). He was made an Honorary Burgess, along with 2 fellow officers, when they passed through Hawick shortly after the Treaty of Amiens in 1802. Archibald ‘Archie’ (1824–1904) born in Hawick, he later moved to Glasgow. In 1848 he helped create a cricket club in the Kinning Park area, which became the Clydesdale Cricket Club, now the city’s oldest surviving sporting organisation, with their orginal ground being sold to Glasgow.
Rangers Football Club. He also helped found Clydesdale Football Club in 1872 and was first President of the Scottish Football Association. Capt. ?? (18th/19th C.) recruiting officer for the 91st regiment in Hawick, who became involved in the 1809 disputed Common Riding on the ‘royalist’ side. He refused to let his servant David Lawrie act as fifer for the ‘rebel’ Cornet’s party. As the party of the ‘royalist’ Cornet rode up the Loan he was pelted with ‘a reeking bucketful, neither of milk nor butter, from Jennie Mitchelhill’s byre’ and was the object of the ‘cleistering’ of the mob, causing him to retreat to the Tower Hotel.

Campbell was a common name in this regiment, and so it is difficult to guess his first name. He is probably the Captain Campbell whose child’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1822. Donald (d.1562) son of Archibald, 2nd Earl of Argyll and Elizabeth Stewart. He was trained at St. Andrews and by 1525 was appointed Abbot of Coupar (although not without dispute). He was later Senator of the College of Justice and a member of the Privy Council. In 1548 he was nominated as Archbishop of Glasgow, with more dispute, and he was never consecrated. He also sought the bishopric of Brechin, but appears never to have succeeded there either. He became a Protestant, and is said to have left 5 illegitimate sons.

George (18th C.) servant to dyer Robert Pringle in Hawick. He (along with his master) witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Bunyan in 1743.

Rev. James ‘Jin’ (b.1954/5) born in Falkirk, in 1995 he became minister of Selkirk, linked with Ashkirk. In 2010 he left for Ceres, Kemback and Springfield in Fife. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Jon Cambell in Newtoune’ in 1623 when, along with Andrew Allan in Headshaw, he acted as cautioner for Mungo Scott in Castleisle. It is unclear which Newton this was. John (18th C.) worked as private tutor in Edinburgh. He became assistant preacher to Rev. Simon Haliburton at Ashkirk, perhaps in the 1780s; he was described as being ‘an old preacher’ with very different habits than those of his very formal and sober employer. John (b.c.1805) cattle-dealer at Alton. He was listed there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. On the 1841 census his wife was Elizabeth and they had a son John. John (1817–70) baker of 10 High Street, taking over from Robert Grierson. He married Wilhelmina Michie (who died in 1880) and their children were Neil (died young), John (Cornet in 1877), William (died in Australia), Robert, Neil, Beatrice, Isabella and Walter. John (1858–81) son of baker John and Wilhelmina Michie. He was elected Cornet in 1877 at a public meeting, after the Council had refused to make any appointment following a street accident the previous year. He died only 4 years later and is commemorated in a poem by Thomas Chapman. John (1872–c.1950) from Walkerburn, he was a baritone singer. In 1933 he recorded 4 Hawick songs in Edinburgh, with Philip Kiddie on the piano. These may be the earliest recordings of ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’, ‘Up wi’ the Banner’, ‘I Like Auld Hawick’ and ‘The Border Queen’. Neil (18th/19th C.) proprietor of the Plough on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Rev. Reginald minister of Castleton Parish from 1979. Robert (17th/18th C.) lawyer who leased the lands of Robertson from Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1705. Rev. Robert (19th C.) ordained in 1846, he was the first incumbent of the Episcopal Church in Hawick, 1847–54. He had been master of St. John’s School in Jedburgh and was transferred to Hawick a year after the Episcopalian mission was first set up. Services took place in the Grammar School, Inglis’ Ball-room (i.e. the Half-Moon Hotel) and then the new Episcopalian Church School. He also taught a school on the High Street (probably the one on Half Moon Yard) 1846–53, being assisted by R. Robertson. In 1851, along with Mr. Dickerman (the Duke of Buccleuch’s chaplain), he started a mission in Selkirk, which became the Church of St. John’s the Evangelist there. In the 1852 directory he was listed as master at the Episcopal School on Damside. He left Hawick for Glen Almond or perhaps St. Ninian’s in Perth and was later at St. Andrews, Aberdeen. A photograph of him exists. Robert (b.1822/3) born in Cavers Parish, he was a cattle dealer living at Stintyknowe in 1851. In 1861 he was at Whitehaugh farming 200 acres and employing 3 people. His brother David, a mason, was living with him. In 1868 the pair of brothers were farmers at Greensidehall. He married Alice (or Alison) Govenlock and their children included John. Thomas (1777–1844) poet, born in Glasgow, where he was educated, he spent some time in Edinburgh where his contemporaries included Sir Walter Scott and Dr. John Leyden. He lived most of his life in London and was a much recited sentimentalist of Victorian times, e.g. ‘The Pleasures of Hope’. He spent the night in Hawick at the inn owned by local poet James Ruickbie after they had met by accident near Colterscleuch. A story is also told of how he drafted the first sketch of ‘Lochiel’ while visiting Minto. Rev.
the Camp Burn

William (1727–1804) son of William, a surveyor with H.M. Customs in Kirkcaldy (there is some confusion over whether he was born in 1727 or 1737). He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by the Prebytery there in 1758 and in 1759 ordained as minister of the Low Meeting in Berwick. He came to Lilliesleaf in 1760, where he was presented by John, Duke of Roxburgh, and he stayed until his death. He was a large man with a very loud voice, known as ‘Roarin Willie’, but said to be one of the most popular ministers in the district. In 1788 he is recorded owning part of Midlem in Bowden Parish. By that time he had also acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish (probably from Riddell of Newhouse), valued at £285 13s 4d; he also held other lands acquired from Riddell of Newhouse (valued at about £28) and teinds valued at £0. He also purchased lands in Lilliesleaf from Alexander Chatto. The oldest known Lilliesleaf communion token is from his incumbency, bearing the date 1796. He is recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls, in 1797 having 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He is also recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 as having acquired land in Lilliesleaf Parish from Riddell of Newhouse, with a value of £28 2s 9½p (probably Friarshaw, perhaps in sterling). In 1759 he married Margaret, only daughter of Alexander Home, the minister of Stichill, and she died in 1813. Their children were: Agnes (who married William Scott, writer, in Edinburgh in 1779); William (who became a legal apprentice in Edinburgh in 1777, but died 4 years later); Alexander; Edward, who died in the East Indies; Jean (who married Thomas Tod); Robert, a Captain in the Royal Navy; Margaret, who married William Farquharson, a doctor in Edinburgh; David; Elizabeth; George (who died young); Marion or ‘Mannie’, who married Robert Gillan, the minister of Hawick in Edinburgh in 1778; John, who became minister at Selkirk, although members of the Lilliesleaf congregation had petitioned the Duke of Roxburgh to appoint him as his father’s successor; Jessie, who died young; and William Scott. He wrote a description of Lilliesleaf Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. His descendants presented a new pulpit to Lilliesleaf Kirk. William (b.c.1814) from outside Roxburghshire, he was listed as a ‘type founder’ on the Howegate in 1841, living with Ann, probably his wife. He presumably made printer’s type for one of the early publishers in Hawick. Rev. William Francis ‘Frank’ minister at Crailing & Eckford, linked with Lilliesleaf, from 1999.

Campknowes

the Camp Burn ( thu-kawmp-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the south-east, between Deanburnhaugh and Philhope, about a mile or so after Broadlee farm. There is a picturesque waterfall by he road. About 150m up the stream, on the right hand side are a series of earthworks, apparently once known as ‘Africa’. The suggestion that this was once a Roman (or British) camp presumably gave rise to the name of the stream. In fact it appears to be a fortified homestead of early medieval date, covering almost an acre, overlain with several later buildings, whose foundations can still be made out. 3 other sets of building foundations can be found on the opposite bank. A rough stone ball found near here is in Hawick Museum.

Camping Hole (kawm-piín-hól) n. popular name for a field at Spittal-on-Rule. The name is probably related to the large stones that were said to have been unearthed there from time to time.

Campioncroft ( kawm-pee-in-kraft) n. former name for lands that lay within the East Mains of Hawick. Adam Cessford occupied these lands in 1557, when they are ‘Campiouncroft’ in a charter relating to Trinity Collegiate Church. In 1565/6 the lands were still occupied by Adam Cessford, but tenanted by William Scott, and said to lie in the lands of East Mains (it is unclear where exactly the lands were, or the origin of the name, although it seems likely it derives from Old Scots ‘campioun’, a champion, perhaps associated with a reaping competition).

the Camp Knowes ( thu-kawmp-nowz) n. former popular name for a series of hills to the west of Ashkirk that contain hill-forts. Also the former name of an area near the head of the Ewes, where James V and his men encamped in 1530 before their murderous meeting with Johnnie Armstrong and his followers.

Campkowne Plantin ( kawmp-now-plawn'-in) n. plantation on the former Synton estate, east of Ashikirk, and south of Synton Mains farm. Just to the east of the plantation, on the northern slopes of Blackcastle Hill, are the remains of a hill-fort.

Campknowes ( kawmp-nows) n. farmstead in the Ewes valley, located about 200m south-west of Fiddleton. Road-maker William Johnstone and his family were living there in 1841 and 1851. The name probably derives from earthworks that were formerly there; this had already been obliterated by the plough in 1875, although it is said that an old battle-axe and stone coffin had been found nearby. A cist was also discovered some time before 1912 (perhaps the same one), containing human remains, flints and arrow-heads.

Camp Plantin (kawnp-plawn’-in) n. plantation adjacent to Alton Pond, just north of Newhouses farm. It is named after the earthwork at its southern corner.

camshauchelt (kam-shaw-chel’) pp., poet. crooked, distorted – ‘As for sis as turn agley til thair camshauchelet wavies, the Lord sall leede thame furth wi’ the workers o’ inequity’ [HSR].

can (kin, kawn) v. can (note the usual pronunciation) – ‘what can ee dae aboot yer kin?’.

Canada (ka-nu-du) n. large, thinly populated country in North America. Many Borderers emigrated there, particularly in the early-to-mid 19th century. A focal place for emigrated was the area of Galt (now part of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo) in Ontario. In the 1808 death register there is recorded ‘Mr Stanley Canadian’s Child’ and 11 days later ‘Miss Lindoe – a Canadian’; what these Canadians were doing in Hawick (and why they died) is not known. Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau’s mother was an Elliot, who can trace her roots back to Robert Elliot, whose father was at ‘Hargleughhead’ when he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish; this could be Harecleuchhead near the original southern boundary of Hawick Common. The regions of Vancover, Galt and Toronto have all held their own version of Hawick Common Riding.

the Canadian Stakes (thu-ka-nə-dee-in-stāks) n. race run on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century with prize money raised by subscriptions of exiles in Canada.

Candelles (kawn-delz) n. former name for lands, probably near Falnash. It was recorded in a 1464 sasine of Simon Dalgleish for ‘Fallinesch, Candelles, Calfshaws, et tribus husbandis in Mynto’. It thus seems likely that it was near to Falnash and the adjacent Calfshaw, but the location is now lost (the spelling an pronunciation are uncertain).

Candlemas (kan-dul-mis) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, falling on 2nd February, commemorating the purification of the Virgin Mary. In former times candles were blessed on this day. It was also sometimes called ‘Bleeze-money day’ in local schools, and in the 18th century was celebrated with cock fighting.

Candy Jean (kawn-dee-jeen) n. Hawick character of the mid-19th century, perhaps a seller of confectionary – ‘Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi’ his coat o’ skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean’ [HI].

Canondail (ka-nin-bec) n. smal town in Dumfries & Galloway, about 2 miles from the Border, on the River Esk and the A7. The Cross Keys was a 17th century coaching inn. The priory from which it gets its name was founded by David I in the 12th century and destroyed in 1542. The town, as well as ‘the grund wher the clois-ter, housis, bigingis, and yairdis of Cannabie wer situate, and ar now demolished’ were listed in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It is also the name of the surrounding parish, which was joined with Roxburghshire in 1672, but must have been returned soon after. It is said that when the English Wardens claimed the area as English the residents objected, declaring they had always been Scottish. In the 16th and 17th centuries the area was a stronghold of the Armstrongs Population (1991) 390 (it is ‘Canoby’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561, is ‘Cannaby’ in 1578 and ‘Cannabie’ in 1580).

Canongate (kaw-nin-ga) n. street in Denholm, being the continuation of Sunnyside and Leyden Roads. The name possibly relates to the monks of Melrose who owned lands there in the 14th century. It was well-known as the location of Mrs. Mack’s shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and all the houses there were thatched until about 1900 (also sometimes ‘the Canongate’).

Canongate Brig (kaw-nin-ga-brig) n. ancient stone bridge in Jedburgh, built in the 16th century, and probably quite similar to Hawick’s former Auld Brig.

cape (kāp) v., arch. to cover with a cope – ‘Pd in, part for caping the cloke lynx [clock chain], 3 0 0’ [BR1733].

Capellanus (ka-pe-la-nus) n. Henry (13th C.) recorded as ‘Henry de Chapeley’ in Roxburghshire when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bire a 6-leafed figure and the name ‘S'HENRICI CAPELLANI’. It is unclear where he came from in Roxburghshire. John (d.1147) Tironensian cleric, possibly of Norman origin, who was chaplain of King David I. He became Bishop of Glasgow and established Glasgow Cathedral. It seems likely he had some involvement in the establishment of the Tironensian monastery at Selkirk in 1113, and certainly is mentioned in the charter. He was the first Bishop of Glasgow who is known to have had local influence. He had a serious dispute over authority with the Archbishop of York, even travelling to Rome at one point. Around 1136 he gave up being Bishop, but returned a year or 2 later. He was buried in Jedburgh Abbey, whose foundation he presided over. Walter (d.1232) chaplain to William the Lion, he became Bishop of Glasgow after the resignation of Florence in 1207. He thus has authority over the Hawick area. He was one of 4 Scottish Bishops to visit Rome in 1215 and returned in 1218 to seek absolution from te excommunication placed on the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He had the church of Ashkirk confirmed to him in 1216 by Pope Honorius III. He was later investigated for obtaining the bishopric by bribery and for nepotism and maintaining an immoral household, but the case appears to have been dropped. He may also be referred to as being `of St. Albans’. His seal bore the figure of a bishop standing on a crescent, with one hand raised and the othe holding a crozier, and with the words ‘SIGILL. WALTERI DEI GRA. GLASGUENSIS EPI.’ (the name simply meant ‘chaplain’, and hence may never have been a surname).

Capelrig see Cappitrig

capfi (cawp-fi) n., arch. a capful, quarter of a peck, a standard measure for dry goods – ‘… was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennworth of tobacco’ [SM1816].

the Capon Trei (thu-kā-pon-tri) n. ancient oak tree located off the A68 just south of Jedburgh. It is supposed to be one of the last oaks of the original Jed Forest. Its trunk has a circumference of about 10 m, but has split and decayed, and the tree limbs are supported on props. It was much damaged in a storm of 1882. It is visited during the Jedburgh Common Riding (the name may be a corruption of the ‘Capuchin Order’ of monks).

Cappercleugh (kaw-pur-klooch) n. settlement at the junction of the Yarrow and Meggat valleys, at the north-west corner of St. Mary’s Loch (also written ‘Cappercleuch’).

Cappitrig (kaw-pee-rig) n. lands in Hassendean Parish, referred to in a charter of about 1537 when the eastern half of the Mains was returned from David Scott ‘in Clarelaw’ to William Scott of Hassendean. The lands were bounded on the east by the Grinding Burn and on the west by ‘Our Lady Land’ and lay close to Hassendean Tower. In 1538 2 letters of reversion relating to these lands were stolen from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendean in Edinburgh by Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. A (presumably related) dispute in 1540 was between William Scott and Thomas Turnbull (farmer at Rawflat) over a ‘wadset’ for ‘Nether Copit Rig’ and the lands of ‘Easter Mains called Coppit Rig’. In 1556 there was a sasine for the lands of Hassendeanbank and ‘Capelrig’ to Sir Walter Ker of Cessford and his wife Isabel. In 1604 the lands of ‘Easter and Wester Cappitrig’ were given to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, probably to pay off the debt of Robert Scott of Hassendean. The lands of ‘Easter and Wester Copetrig with pertinents’, in the Barony of Hassendean, are still listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. By 1684 the superiority was held by the Earl of Roxburgh, continuing in 1696 (it is ‘Capitrig’ in 1537, ‘Coppitrig’ in 1538, Coppit Rig’ in 1540, ‘Cappitrig’ in 1604 and ‘Copetrig’ in 1663).

Cappuck (kaw-puk) n. farm a few miles east of Jedburgh, site of a small Roman fort, occupied in the 1st and 2nd centuries, where pottery fragments and 3 inscribed stones were excavated. The fort is situated on on Dere Street. There were Riddells here in the 19th century (the origin of the name is uncertain, with the first element perhaps meaning ‘chief’ and the second being from the Old English ‘huc’, meaning a point of land; the name is first recorded in 1602).

Captain (cap-tin) n. nickname for Thomas Turnbull recorded in the early 1680s.

Captain Menty (kap-tin-men-tee) n. fictional character in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘And Captain Menty walk’d the deck, While Buckham mann’d the wheel [WE].

caption (kap-shin) n., arch. legal apprehension, an arrest warrant – ‘...the Erle of Buccleughe causit rais vpon the letters of horneing lettres of captioun, and apprehendit the said Robert El-lot’ [SB1624].

Carborne (kar-born) n. John listed in 1544 as ‘Clemyt Crossers man’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. It is unclear where they lived, or which Clement this was, although lands near the Slitrig are likely, and it is possible it was Clem Crozier of Stobs. It is also unclear if this surname has a modern equivalent.

Carby Hill see Caerby Hill
carefi (kär-fi) adj. careful – ‘be carefi what ee wush for, ee might juist git eet’.
careni (kär-nil) contr. care not, don’t care – ‘But I fear ye carena for me, Willie, But I fear ye carena for me’ [JTe], ‘But I carena to gang back to leven, My hert wad be but wae To miss the hert that made for me The bield below the brae’ [FL], ‘The Newcastlw reivers sweer They carena for Harden’s lord ... ’ [TK], ‘’Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belang them’ [JT] (also written ‘carena’ etc.).

Carewud Rig (kär-wud-rig) n. spur of land in the upper Hermitage valley, being a northern projection of Geordie’s Hill, between the farms of Carewoodrig and Billhope on the road from Fiddleton to Hermitage. There are the remains of a rectangular enclosure there and on the north bank of the Carewoodrig Burn there is a ‘burnt mound’.

Carewudrig (kär-wud-, kā-ru’-rig) n. Carewoodrig, farm on the road from Fiddleton to the Hermitage valley. It is probably the place marked ‘Kerriot rigg’ in the headwaters of the Ewes valley on Blaeu’s 1654 map. Mungo Beattie was there in 1623. John Hall was shepherd there in the late 18th century. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1797 and John Nichol was tenant in 1841. By 1851 it was the home of shepherd John Telfer and John’s son John was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Carretrig’ in 1623, ‘Carrittrigg’ in 1718, ‘Kerritrig’ in 1797; ‘Carrottrigg’ in 1841 and 1851 and ‘Carwoodridge’ in 1861 and 1907; the earlier forms probably represent the local pronunciation).

Carewudrig Burn (kär-wud-rig-burn) n. stream that follows the road between the Hermitage valley and Fiddleton, running into the Ewes Water near Burnfoot farm.

Carewudrig Hope (kär-wud-rig-hōp) n. area in the upper part of the Hermitage valley, north of the farm of Carewoodrig and south of Tudhope Hill. Near where the Carewoodrighope Burn joins Craigy Cleuch there are 4 enclosures, and a little to the south-east is an area of rig and furrow. Where Ashy Sike joins the burn there is a small building platform and nearby the remains of an old quarry.

Carey (kā-ree) n. Henry Lord Hunsdon (c.1524–96) son of Mary Boleyn, cousin of Elizabeth I, and possibly the illegitimate son of Henry VIII. He was Governor of Berwick and Warden of the English East Marches, later Lord Chamberlain. He served as Warden of the English East March 1568–96, being Lord Warden General from 1589. His men and those led by Lord Sussex, laid waste to the countryside around Hawick in April 1570, causing the inhabitants to burn the town themselves to avoid helping the enemy. In contrast he was also patron of the Globe Theatre in Shakespeare’s time. Sir John (d.1617) 2nd son of Henry, Lord Hunsdon. He was Marshal of Berwick and Deputy Warden, becoming Warden of the East Marches in his own right in 1601. He succeeded his brother George as 3rd Lord Hunsdon in 1603. Sir Robert (c.1561–1639) son of Henry, Lord Hunsdon. He became deputy Warden of the English West March in 1593 and of the East March in 1595, becoming Warden in 1596. From 1598–1603 he was Warden of the Middle March, being known for keeping order and strictly enforcing the law. He was involved in a major incident with the Armstrongs at Tarras Moss in 1601. Later he supposedly rode 300 miles in 2 days to tell King James that Elizabeth was dead. He wrote some memoirs, which contain fascinating details of life on the Border in those times, and many of his exploits have been fictionalised by P.F. Chisholm (also written ‘Cary’).

caruffle (ka-fu-ful, kuir-fu-ful) n. disorder, shambles, confused situation, state of agitation – ‘hei’s in a right carfuffle’, v. to ruffle, discom- pose, to become ruffled or perturbed – ‘...his lang black goun hang straucht to his cutes ne’er i’ the least curfufled’ [EM1820].
gargi (kawr-grī, kawr-ge) n. cargo (also spelled ‘cargih’).

Cerglass (kar-glis) n. former lands in Liddesdale, first recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Carglas’, with a value of 24 shillings. It was ‘Carglais’ in 1541 when described as being leased to Alexander Armstrong (son of ‘Ill Will’) and valued at 24 shillings. The location is uncertain, but probably close to Mangerton.

Carham (kaw-rum) n. Northumbrian village on the Tweed. It was the site of a battle between the Danes and the English in 833, and nearby there was also the battle in 1018 between the Scots and Strathclyde armies, under Malcolm II, and the Northumbrians under Uchtred. The resulting defeat of the English led to the Borderline being set at the Tweed, and the Lothian and Borders areas being included in Scotland. The nearby Redden Burn has marked some of the Borderline since 1222, and its crossing was a regular meeting point for Wardens of the East Marches. The village is now also the end of the Tweed Raft Race.

cark (kark) n., arch. worry, anxiety — ‘The toum life’s a stuffy life Hedged roon wi’ cark and care’ [WL].

Carkettle (kawr-ke’-ul) n. John of Marcle (16th C.) convicted in 1570 of failing to join a gathering of the royal army that had been ordered at Hawick in October of that year (spelled ‘Carketti’).

carl (kawr-ruil) v., arch. to serve a bitch with a dog — ‘If she could get hersel’ but carl’d’ [JR].

carle (kaw-ruil, kâ-ruil) n., poet. an old man, fellow, churl — ‘The crabbit carle wadna speak, His swelling wrathie did pufe . . .’ [JTe], ‘ ’Twas cauldrife death that gruesome carle, that closed her een sae blue’ [WE], ‘Wi’ banker Cash, a daintie carl, Wha was owre guid for sic a warl’ [RDW], ‘Oh, death, thou art an unco carl, What ailed thee at puir Davie?’ [TCh], ‘Auld carl Time has laid his paw Fu’ heavy on your pow’ [JT], ‘The carl rade tae Aberdeen, To buy white breid But lang or he cam back again The carline she was deid’ [DH], ‘ . . . Hae thocht o’ yon auld cadger carle And keep your wits about ye’ [WL] (also written ‘carl’).

Carlenrig see Caerlenrig

Carlies (kawr-ruilz) n. Richard (17th C.) recorded at ‘Rule’ in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. His surname may be a transcription error.

carlin (kawr-lin) n., poet. an old woman — ‘ . . . tumblit heels owre head and startled up auld liart carlins’ [EM1820], ‘An if ye meet wi’ Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg, Though baith the deil an’ Merlin Ye meet that day’ [JR], ‘The carl rade tae Aberdeen, To buy white breid But lang or he cam back again The carline she was deid’ [DH] (also written ‘carline’; the word occurs in place names, such as Carlin Hole, Carlinpool and Carlin Tooth).

Carlin Hole (kawr-lin-hööl) n. area in the upper part of Hope Sike in the Slitrig valley, lying just on the left-hand side of the B6399 after Berryfell farm. It is possible this is the ‘Carlinghool’ listed among lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1607. It is probably also the ‘Carlinghoil’ listed as part of the lands of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from his half sisters in about 1608.

Carlinpool (kawr-lin-pool) n. location mentioned in a charter of 1494, along with Teindside, Harwood and Slaidhills, when they passed from John Abernethy to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. The tenant in 1502 was David Turnbull. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. However, in 1559 and 1572 they were included among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron. In 1585 the lands were confirmed to Francis, Earl of Bothwell (along with Harwood, Teindside and Slaidhills). In 1594 its name appears on a list of lands belonging to Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick and it was still listed in 1615. The same lands passed to the Scots of Buccleuch before 1634 and are listed in the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs for the Scots of Buccleuch and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The precise location is uncertain (it is ‘Carlingpule’ in 1494, 1502, 1585 and 1594, ‘Carlynpule’ in 1511, ‘Carlingpule’, ‘Calynepule’ and ‘Carlyngpule’ in 1572’, ‘Carlingpule’ in 1615 and 1634, ‘Carlingpoole’ in the 17th century, ‘Carrlingpoole’ in 1653, ‘Carlingpools’ in 1663 and ‘Carlingpools’ in 1693; a connection with the nearby ‘Horse Pool’ or more distant ‘Caerlenrig’ are possible).

Carlin Tooth (kawr-lin-tooth) n. peak in the Cheviots, to the east of the Note o the Gate, in the southern part of Southdean Parish. It reaches a height of 551 (1,801 ft) and is essentially where the Jed Water rises (the name is presumably ‘hag’s tooth’ as it sounds).

Carlintooth Rig (kawr-lin-tooth-rig) n. hill on the south side of the upper Hermitage valley, between Ewe Hill and Wetherhorn Hill. It reaches above 400 m.

Carlisle (kar-lil) n. city in Cumbria, on the River Eden, approximately 42 miles south of Hawick along the A7. It was a Roman stronghold at the end of Hadrian’s wall, and has been consistently English since annexed by William Rufus in 1092. It was the county town of Cumberland, with its cathedral built in the 11th to 15th centuries, and its castle facing Scotland. The Tythe Barn, beside St. Cuthbert’s Church was built around 1500 and was recently restored. The Guildhall Museum is contained in a house dating from 1407, while the 17th century Tullie House is also now a museum. The Citadel is the twin-towered southern entrance to the city, replacing earlier gates in the 19th century and partly designed by Thomas Telford. Carlisle Great Fair was established in 1353, takes place in August, and has evolved over the centuries. Stage coaches ran south there from Hawick after the opening of the toll road about 1770, and a regular service between Carlisle and Edinburgh started in 1807 after the repeal of the toll acts. It formed one end of the Waverley Line, linking Hawick with the west of England, and now is the starting off point for journeys down the M6. It is also headquarters for Border TV – ‘Then on we helde for Carlisle town, And at Staneshaw-bank the Eden we cross’d: The water was great and meikle of spait, But the nevir a horse nor man we lost’ [T], ‘Bless all railway junctions In their northward functions. Bless the cheery man in blue Who shouts the sequence loud and true Ending with Carlisle’ [DH] (note the pronunciation usually stresses the first syllable; traditionally Terries talk about going ‘up’ to Carlisle, presumably because of the railway).

Carlisle Castle (kar-il-kaw-sul) n. mediaeval fortress in the city of Carlisle, where it commanded the English side of the western Border. The original wooden construction was built around 1093, with the first stone construction in the 12th century, and construction continuing for several centuries. The castle fell to David I’s forces in 1135 and to Alexander II in 1216, with Robert the Bruce being Governor there at the end of the 13th century. It was the residence of the English Warden of the Western Marches in the 14th to 16th centuries. Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned here in 1568, as were Jacobite supporters in 1746. Locally the castle became well known because of the rescue of Kinmont Willie by ‘the Bold Buccleuch’ and a large party of Scots, Armstrongs and others in 1596. The Border Regiment Museum is also housed here – ‘And when we left the Staneshaw-bank, The wind began full loud to blaw; But ‘twas wind and weet, and fire and sleet, When we came beneath the castle wa’’ [T].

Carlyle (kar-il) n. Rev. Alexander (c.1721–1803) eminent divine of his generation, from Prestonpans, who became minister at Inveresk. Among his classmates in Edinburgh was Sir Gilbert Elliot (later of Minto). He was involved with the Scottish literati, and had a hand in promoting John Home’s play ‘the Tragedy of Douglas’. He was also an acquaintance of Hawick’s minister James Laurie, writing about him in less than glowing terms in his autobiography. In 1767 he penned verses for the birthday of the Duke of Buccleuch. He also visited Hawick a week after the flood of 1767. David (18th/19th C.) clogger at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Thomas (1795–1881) Scottish writer and philosopher. Born in Ecclefechan in Dumfriesshire. He had a strong Calvinist upbringing, but had a crisis of faith while studying for the ministry at Edinburgh University. He taught mathematics and began writing essays and fiction, especially while living at Craigenputtock. He later moved to London. His maternal aunt Isabella (‘Tibbie’) married Hugh McKinnon, a stocking-maker in Hawick; she died in 1842. He visited Minto in 1838, and describes getting a coach from Hawick (also spelled ‘Carlisle’).

Carmichael (kar-mi-kul) n. George (d.c.1484) treasurer of Glasgow Diocese, he was elected to the office of bishop in 1483 after the death of John Laing. However, he was never consecrated, since Pope Sixtus IV wanted to appoint the next bishop himself, which he did for Robert Blackadder. He may have died on the way to appeal the Pope’s decision. Sir Hugh (d.bef. 1627) son and successor to Sir John. He is probably the Hugh, ‘junior of that Ilk’ who was deputy Keeper in 1590. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William Elliot of Falnash in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was ambassador to Denmark and became a Privy Councillor. He also became Warden of the West Marches about 1602, it is said to avenge his father’s murder. He married Abigail, daughter of William Baillie of Lamington. His children included Sir John, Margaret, Anna and Jean. James R. (b.1824/5) from Berwick, he was a solicitor in Hawick. He was briefly in partnership with George Potts (who died in 1851), the firm of Potts & Carmichael being listed as writers and notaries on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was the first agent of the Royal Bank of Scotland in town, up until the late 1860s (with Walter Haddon taking over), with premises at 14 High Street. He served as Procurator-Fiscal for the Justices of the Peace in Hawick in the 1860s. He was also Hawick District Secretary for the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was an early player of tennis in Hawick. In 1852 he married Jane, daughter of Charles Scott, farmer at Milsington.
Their children included James R., Thomas and Euphemia R. John of that Ilk (d.1584/5) son of William, he succeeded his grandfather, William of that Ilk. He was one of the witnesses to the testament of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme in 1574. He appears to have been Keeper of Liddesdale in 1579. In 1580 there was a ‘commission’ given to him as Keeper ‘for the punishment of disobedient personis within the bounds of Liddisdaill and Tyndaill bewest the Streit’, with the ‘fencibles’ of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire ordered to meet him in Hawick on 15th December. In 1580/1 the position of Keeper and Warden of the Middle Marches was given to William Ker, younger of Cessford. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh, 6th Lord Somerville. He secondly married Elizabeth Seton. His children included Sir John (who succeeded), Archibald and Mary. Sir John (d.1600) son of John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Somerville. He was Warden of the Scottish West and Middle Marches and took part in the Raid of the Redeswire. He was apparently a favourite of the Regent Morton, explaining his appointment to the Wardenship over the usual Border leaders. He also acted as Keeper of Liddesdale, as recorded in 1579/80. In 1581 he was still ‘younger of that Ilk’ among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. After the Redeswire skirmish he was sent to York to placate Queen Elizabeth, but released soon afterwards. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was reappointed Warden of the Marches in 1598. He was killed by a group of Armstrongs at Raesknowes near Lochmaben, apparently on his way home from a football match. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas of Pittendreich. Their children included Sir Hugh (who succeeded, and was also Warden of the West Marches), Mary, Abigail, Elizabeth and James (who died in a duel) – ‘Carmichael was our Warden then, He caus’d the country to convene …’ [CPM]. Thomas (19th C.) Captain Commandant of the local Border Rifles in the late 1880s.

Carmure (kar-nuwr) n. James (17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1631. He was also ‘M.A.’, and so may have been a minister later or earlier.

Carnarvon Street (kar-nar-vin-stree’) n. street in Wilton, built in 1879. It originally had eight cottages and a larger 2-storey building. It was named after statesman and essayist Henry Howard Molyneux Herbert, Earl of Carnarvon (1831–90), who was colonial secretary when Canada was granted confederation, as well as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Originally named Maxwell Street until 1882, it has always had an industrial component, including Buccleuch Printers for example.

Carnegie (kar-nä-gee) n. Andrew (1835–1919) born in Dunfermline, he moved with his family to the U.S.A. at age 8, started working at 13, and eventually became a multi-millionaire in the steel industry. He gave away most of his wealth to public works, particularly involving education, and including Hawick Public Library. He was made an Honorary Burgess upon the Library opening in 1904, stating ‘I declare this library open and free to the people, and this I do in the firm faith that to generation after generation it must prove an ever-increasing harvest and blessed fountain from which only healing waters shall flow for the good of the people of Hawick’. The Museum renovations in 1959 were also helped by the Carnegie Trust.

the Carnegie Public Library (tha-kar-nä-gee-pub-leek-II-bru-ree) n. another name for the Library.

Carolshiels (ka-ru-shelz) n. former name for Corrie’s Shiel.

Carpet Close (kawr-pi’-klös) n. passageway running from Orrock Place through to a path leading over what was formerly Morlaw’s Croft (also known as the ‘Back o the Yairds’) to the Coble. It still exists, but with no public access. Before the New Road was built in 1815, a favourite walk used to be through Carpet Close to the Coble Pool and the Spetch (named after the adjacent carpet manufacturers).

carpet (kawr-pits) n. carpet manufacturing begun in Hawick in 1752 and was once the main industry in town. Its fame soon spread, and orders came in from far afield. Hawick carpets were noted for their quality. Several manufacturers existed in the late 18th century, also making other heavy woollen articles, such as table covers, rugs and articles used by saddlers. The main factory, however, was in Orrock Place, started by William Robertson. It operated from 1752–1806 and gave its name to Carpet Close. By about 1776 the firm was operating 14 carpet-making looms. A partnership for the development of the local carpet industry was started in 1759 by John Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Elliot of Ormiston, Thomas Turnbull of Minto
(and Burnfoot) and William Robertson of Dumfermline, with the latter acting as manager. The original stock was £400, and this had risen in value by a factor of 10 by 1777. These gentlemen can be regarded as the founding fathers of Hawick’s knitwear industry. The partnership was renewed in 1779 between John Elliot, William Robertson and Thomas Turnbull (second son of the previous partner). The trade fell off after the death of 2 of the main partners and when war and banking restrictions raised the price of wool. However, the business was partially replaced with blanket manufacturing and Turnbull’s was carried on from the dyeing department of the old Hawick Carpet Company. The last carpet made in Hawick was in 1844. Some artefacts of carpet manufacturing are preserved in the Museum — ‘... and the carpet in the white bedroom, which was woven at Hawick ... the former days were better than now, in so far as pertained to the durability of the fabrics turned out by the looms’ [RJR].

Carr (kawr) n. Tom (1912–77) born at Alldendale, Northumberland, he became a colliery blacksmith. After the War he worked in Newcastle, but then sustained a back injury, which required a change of occupation. His wife sent some of his drawings to a publisher that she met by chance while he was in hospital, and he received a commission to illustrate a book on hunting. He later moved to Dean Cottage in Southdean Parish and became well known as an artist, particularly for hunting scenes in a range of media.

Carre (ker) n. surname spelling variant used by some of the Lairds of Cavers Carre; see Ker.

Carr-Ellison (kawr-e-lees-in) n. John Ralph Stockley (b.1867) 2nd son of Capt. Ralph of Hedgely Hall, near Alnwick. He farmed at Wauchope for 5 years and then at Greenriver (i.e. Hobson) for about the same period. He inspired the formation of the Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. In 1900 he married Alice Ursula, daughter of Frederick A. Lang of Toorak in 1900. He was a very keen rider with the Jedforest Hunt, serving as Whip 1897–1903. However, he left the area soon after this.

the Carriage Hill (thu-kair-ej-hill) n. name used for the Pike, which is crossed by the Catrail. The name was used by Alexander Gordon in the 18th century, William Scott in describing the route of the Catrail and in the New Statistical Account of 1839.

Carrie (kaw-rec) n. George (b.c.1795) born in Earlston, he was a millwright in Lilliesleaf. His sons William and Thomas also worked there as millwrights, while George became a joiner in Melrose (this name may be the same as ‘Currie’).

carrier see cairrier

carrot (kaw-ri’) n. carrot (note the pronunciation).

carritch (kaw-rich) n., arch. the catechism, a book containing basic Christian principles in question and answer form, once the foundation of education — ‘He’s never out o’ some mischief, He’ll no’ gang to the schule, He tore his carritch leaf frae leaf To mak’ a dragon’s tail’ [JT].

Carritrig see Carewudrig

Carruthers (kaw-ru-thurz) n. Archibald (15th C.) bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Archibaldo Carutheris’. Henry (b.1816) 3rd son of William and Agnes Davidson. He was shepherd for most of his life, but later became tenant farmer at Netherhall, near Wilton Lodge, where he died. James (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Earl of Annandale. In 1673 he leased part of the farm of Todshawhill. Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Betty Wilson and their children included: Betty (b.1760); and William (b.1764). Martin (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: William (b.1776); and John (b.1778). Robert (16th C.) servant to Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton. He is listed in 1535 as ‘Robert Caruthers’ among a list of men denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and goods from Craik. In 1535/6 he is listed as a servant of Simon Armstrong when Simon was re-convicted of the same crime. Robert (b.1811) son of William and Agnes Davidson, born at Limekilnsyke. He was shepherd at Upper Langhouse in North Tyne, Singdean and Hindhope. He developed ill-health when relatively young and died at Langburnshiel. Thomas (18th/19th C.) coachman who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear where he lived. Thomas (1820–96) youngest son of William and Agnes Davidson, he was born at Limekilnsyke. He was a shepherd at Langburnshiel, being for many years the managing shepherd for Langburnshiel and Wauchope for Daniel Mather. He was recorded at Langburnshiel in 1868. He also spent 17 years as manager at Hyndlee. He then moved to Athole Cottage, Kirktoun. From about 1848 he was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational Kirk. In 1863 he reported finding peculiar lines of stones, which were examined by members of the Hawick Archaeological Society.
In 1848 at Wolfelee Glen he married Margaret, daughter of dyker John Dalgleish, and she died at Athole Cottage, Kirkton in 1892, aged 66. They had 5 sons and 2 daughters, including: William, shepherd at Phaup; John, farmer at Barrow in Coquetdale, who married Christine Thomson; Jane; Thomas, farmer at Dodd, then in Northumberland; and Robert, who moved to Deadwater and married Kitty Dagg. Thomas (b.1857) son of Thomas and Margaret Dalgleish. He started his working life as shepherd at Cleuchhead in Rulewater. He then became tenant farmer at Dod (owned by Mr. Pott) and later Featherwood, Rochester, Northumberland. He married Elizabeth Colcleuch Usher at Weensmoor in about 1880; she was eldest daughter of Thomas Usher of Eildon. Their children included Thomas Usher. He gave an account of his family tree to Tancred of Eildon. Their children included William, who was born in Bowden Parish, and whose descendants lived at Langburnshiel in Rulewater. He died at Langburnshiel. William (b.1780) son of William and Margaret Cochrane, he was born in Bowden. It is said that he went to college, but decided to pursue the calling of a shepherd and moved to Langburnshiel in Rulewater. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Davidson and Catherine Williamson. Their children were: William; Robert, also a shepherd; Catherine, who married shepherd John Wilson; Henry, shepherd at Netherhall; Thomas, who died in infancy; Thomas, who was also a shepherd; and Margaret, who married John Halliday, possibly the ‘Rustic Bard’. He lived until at least age 70. William (b.1809) eldest son of William and Agnes Davidson. He was older brother of Thomas, who was head shepherd on the Wauchope estate. He worked as a labourer and was living with his brother on the 1861 census. He is probably the W. Carruthers who donated several items to Hawick Museum in 1861, including 2 stone rings dug up at Robert’s Linn, some fossils and part of a stone quern. William (b.c.1850) eldest son of Thomas and Margaret Dalgleish. He became a shepherd at Phaup, Teviothead. He married Jane Routledge of Plashetss. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter.

Carswell (karz-wel) n. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Kareswell’, he could be related to the Kerrs, or alternatively connected with the lands of Cresswell in Hassendean Parish. He married Isabel, Countess of Mar, widow of Donald, 12th Earl of Mar, and also widow of Geoffrey Mowbray. In 1347 he and his wife were granted by Edward III the Sheriffldom of Roxburghshire and Keepership of Roxburgh Castle. In 1348 he received lands which had belonged to his deceased wife, until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. He was still Sheriff of Teviotdale in about 1356. He also held the Barony of Robertson (not the local village) and Lordship of Kenback.

the Carter (thu-kawr’-ur) n. popular name for the Carter Bar – ‘...Nature’s Wardens of the Marches – The Cairter, Catcleuch Shin, Peel Fell, Penchrise Pen, Skelfhili Pen, an the lave’ [ECS], ‘The rough road runs by the Carter ...’ [WL], ‘The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side’ [WHO]. ‘Here on the crest of the Carter, Far though her children may roam, Scotland with arms wide open. Welcomes her wanderers home’ [WL] (also ‘the Cairter’).

the Carter Bar (thu-kawr’-ur-bawr) n. hill of 418 m (1371 ft) near the Border crossing point of the A68. An upright boulder, erected in 1982 and taken from Craighouse Quarry, marks the Scotland/England Border there. The viewpoint by the roadside gives a stunning panorama across the southern counties of Scotland. In 1834 the minister of Southdean wrote that ‘there is perhaps no entrance to Scotland more picturesque than the one of which we now speak ... no doubt greatly enhanced by the uninteresting country which must be traversed before entering into Scotland’. It was near here that the ‘Raid of Redeswire’ took place in 1575, and a footpath leads from the main road to the Redeswire Stone, which marks the site. In the 18th century the area was operated as a trading post for buying and selling coal. The road to here from Hawick used to pass up the Wellogate, past Orniston, Birneyknowe, the Forkins, Blackcleugh and Chesters until the 1820s, when the modern route of the A6088 was constructed. There was a toll here in the early 19th century, which was the only public house in Southdean Parish – ‘Driving through Northumberland and o’er the Carter Bar Rest a while beside the border stone Gaze on Scotland’s Eden, these hills and valleys are The ones I love, the best I’ve ever known’ [KS] (also ‘the Cairter Bar’).

the Carter Burn (thu-kawr’-ur-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish. It rises to the north of Carter Fell and the Border and runs roughly north-west to join the Jed Water. There are several old sheepfolds and enclosures along its length, and a farmstead near where Martinlee Sike enters. Old red sandstone outcroppings in this area were used for building stone.

Carter Fell (kawr'-ur-fel) n. mountainous ridge lying along the Scotland/England Border, reaching a height of 556 m (1,824 ft), with the northern peak rising to 579 m (1,899 ft) – ‘From Carter Fell and Cheviot to lone St. Mary’s Lake They failed not at the summons, who knew the black mistake’ [RSC]. ‘The road that runs by Kale and Jed across the Carter Fell’ [WHO].

Carterhaugh (kær-, kawr', kawr-tur-haw, -hawf, -hawel) n. flat area about half a mile long, where the Yarrow and Ettrick meet, below Bowhill and adjacent to Philiphaugh. In 1502 William Turnbull, in Branxholme, had remission for being involved in stealing cattle, horses and goods from the Murrays there. In 1541 it was listed among the lands ‘that war assignit for the keeping of the hous of Newwerk and now ar occupit be the tennentis’. The Scotts of Buccleuch long owned the lands, as recorded e.g. in 1653, 1663 and when they were surveyed in 1718. It was the scene of the famous poem ‘Tamlane’ and for many years the site for various rustic sports – ‘O I forbid you, maidens a’, That wear gowd on your hair, To come or gae by Carterhaugh, For young Tam Lin is there’ [T].

The Carterhaugh Baa (thu-kawr'-, kær'-ur-hawf-baw) n. famous football game of Monday 4th December 1815, between those from Selkirk, led by Sir Walter Scott (Sheriff of the county) and men from the rural half of the shire, led by the Earl of Home, with the Ettrick Shepherd as lieutenant. Contingents from other towns, including Hawick joined the Soutars, and adopted fir twigs as their emblem, while country folk from Ettrick, Tweeddale and beyond joined the shepherds of Yarrow, and donned a sprig of heather. The organisation was by Bailie Clarkson and Robert Henderson, and the reasons for holding the contest were obscure even at the time. There is a suggestion that it arose out of an after-dinner conversation at Bowhill, perhaps to recreate the ancient feudal spirit. The game itself was started by the Duke of Buccleuch, with upwards of 2,000 names entered on the lists of players! The Buccleuch banner was unfurled there, probably the first time ‘in the field’ for 2 centuries (and perhaps being a new ‘A Bellendaine’ pennant made for the occasion). The ‘hails’ were about a mile apart, with that of the Sutors being the Ettrick. The Hawick contingent of about 100, led by Rob ‘General’ Reid, walked over to take part, stopping at Selkirk for refreshments. They supposedly hailed the first ball for the Soutars team, although one account says it was hailed by Robert Hall, a Selkirk mason, with much help from the Hawick men. The shepherds hailed the second, aided by Gala switching sides, the ball being pushed through the crowd by brute force. The event had flare-ups of violence, with some stone-throwing and many duckings in the river. A third game was avoided, probably to stop fighting breaking out. The event was celebrated in a poem by James Hogg (set to music by Scocha in 2004), as well as others by Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, all of whom were in attendance. Henry Scott Riddell was also there, and provided notes that Robert Murray used to describe the events in 1863. James Ruickbie also wrote a celebratory poem. A handball and a Yarrow flag-staff (later given to the Museum) were returned to Hawick as trophies, but their whereabouts are no longer known. A commemorative recreation was staged in 2015, with a special ball being made for the occasion, thrown up by the current Duke of Buccleuch, whose pennant was again on display – ‘We met our opponents (their badge was the heather), Assembled in thousands on Carterhaugh Plain’ [JH], ‘Then hail! memorial of the brave, the Liegeman’s pride, the Border’s awe! May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner field than Carterhaugh!’ [ES], ‘Then strip lads, and to it, though sharp be the weather. And if, by mischance, you should happen to fall, There are worse things in life than a tumble on heather, And life is itself but a game of football’ [SWS].

Carterhouse (kawr', kær'-ur-hoos) n. Carterhouse, farm in Southdean Parish, situated on the right of the A6088 shortly before coming to the A68. A quern of mediaval type was found while digging there, as described in 1994.

Cartlidge (kar'-leej) n. Joseph B. (b.1834) born in Edinburgh, he became a photographer and worked in Hawick in the period 1866–67. He may have been managing the studio for William Walker. He had previously worked for the Edinburgh Photogrpahic Company, which had also employed John Aitken.

cartoosh (kawr-toosh) n., arch. a short jacket formerly worn by women (hence the nickname ‘Sibbie Cartoosh’; also cottoush).

cartrich (kawr'-rich, kawr-treech) n. a cartridge (note the ch rather than j and cf. cartridge).

carvey (kar-vee) n., arch. a caraway seed, especially used as a decoration in confectionary –
...gingerbread men and horses, adorned with carvey eyes and acoutrements’ [WNK].

case (käis) n., arch. condition – ‘...to keipe and maintain the common toune knock in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient case and condition for knocking and chopping hourly ...’ [BR1706].

Case (käis) n. nickname for John Turnbull tenant of Nether Bonchester.

cashie (kaw-shée) adj., arch. flabby, flacid (said of food) – ‘A cashie turnip; cashie mutton’ [JAHM], of inferior quality (said of goods), unprincipled (of a person) – ‘A cashie fellow’ [JAHM], delicate, unable to bear fatigue (of sheep).

cashie (kaw-shée) n. forward, cheeky, talkative (noted by J. Jamieson who says ‘This, I suspect, is originally the same with ‘Calshie’”).

Cashie (kaw-shée) n. nickname in the 19th century (presumably different from ‘Auld Cash’ and reeling to cashie) – ‘Wullie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie’s near at hand; There’s Kelso Will and Wat the Sweep, And Wullie Goundlands leadin’ the Band’ [HI].

cashmere (kawsh-meer) n. a garment knitted with wool from the Asiatic goat, having extremely fine fibres (mean diameter < 18.5 μm), and representing the luxury end of the knitwear industry.

Cashmere is Scottish (kawsh-meer-iz-skO‘-eesh) n. promotional film made in 1973 by Martin Kane Production, lasting 17 minutes. Directed by Abel Goodman and narrated by Bryden Murdock, it describes the connection between cashmere and Scotland, showing various Scottish scenes, and with some garments modelled by Joanna Lunley. The knitwear was supplied by Pringle of Scotland, Ballantyne of Peebles, Braemar, Barrie, Glenmac and J. & D. McGeorge.

cass (kaws) n., arch. a set of 4 cherry stones used in the game of ‘papes’ – ‘Note: a caddle o paips, a cass of paips = a set of four ‘paips’ ’ [ECS].

Cass (kaws) n. Mark of Cockpen (17th C.) from Northumberland. In 1658 he purchased the lands of Templehall in Hobkirk Parish from William Ker, Earl of Lothian.

cassa (ka-su) n., arch. pavement, causeway (see also causa and causey).

cassay see causey

cassayer see causeyer

cassen (kaw-sen) pp., poet. cast – ‘Why art thou casen doun, o’ my saul?’ [HSR], ‘But thou hest casen aff, an’ putten us til shame ...’ [HSR] (also written ‘casen’; compare casten).

cast (kawst) v., arch. to cast, reappear, to swarm (of bees), to dig, especially to cut pieces of peat or sods and cast them up with a spade – ‘...to the thorpter dikes to cast divots, and he went to the Myreslawgreen, and did cast there contrar the proclamation made against casting there’ [BR1666], ‘...did cast peats in the Common Mosses and turff and diviot on the Common Muir of Hawick ...’ [C&L1767], ‘Deed aye, for I myself’ hae seen Folk casting peats in Myreslawgreen’ [WNK], (said of coloured cloth) to fade, to consider, assess, plan – ‘...and the bailies, appoint stent-masters, to cast on the sum laid on the town of Hawick as unfrie traders, by the act of the Committee of Parliament’ [BR1699] (see also cast oot, cast up, etc.).

casten (kawsh-tan) pp., arch. cast – ‘A party is fined for away taking six gang of divatts off the common of Hawick, which were casten for the use of the common kill’ [BR1680], ‘...the crose and the Tolbuith stair to be amended, and the Tolbuith to be casten with lime’ [BR1737], ‘But thou hest casten aff an’ abborret, thou hest been verra angrie wi’ thine anaintet’ [HSR] (also written ‘castin’; see also cast up).

castie (kaws-tee) n., arch. the stem of a cabbage (also castie).

Castle (kaw-sul) n. Andrew, pseudonymous column in the Hawick News, generally stirring up controversy.

the Castle (thu-kaw-sul) n. popular name for several buildings around Hawick, usually being the tallest in the area. There was a ‘Castle’ near the top end of what is now Drumlanrig Square. It has also been a name for the high house on Morrison Place overlooking the bowling clubs, as well as houses on Lothian Street and the former large tenement building up the Dean.

Castle Cary (kaw-sul-kâ-ree) n. town in Somerset, formerly the main seat of the Lovel family. It lies a few miles north-west of Wincanton and almost directly between Bristol and Weymouth. Little is known of the town until Norman times, when it was allocated to Walter de Douai, who probably built the first ‘motte and bailey’. After his death it passed to Ascelin Gouel de Percival, then (at least according to some accounts) to his sons Robert and William, who probably built the first stone keep about 1130. It passed to William’s son Ralph, who changed the family name to Lovel. Note, however, that these early generations are very uncertain. The castle was about 78 feet square, and may have been similar to the original Tower built by the Lovels in Hawick. Nothing survives of the castle itself except for significant earthworks, the stone having been reused for local building. This tradition continued with the ‘Castle Rise’ development obliterating part of the earthworks around 2000. These remains are reached from the town centre along a footpath known as ‘Paddock Drain’, and includes the ‘motte’ on which the castle was built. The ‘Horse Pond’ and the ‘Park Pond’ are both remnants of the ancient castle moat (note, an actual ‘moat’, not a ‘motte’!). Park Pond is the source of the River Cary, the spring there, ‘Lady’s Spring’, being once considered holy and dedicated to the Virgin Mary (perhaps with a connection to the later dedication of St. Mary’s in Hawick). Other notable buildings in the town are the Round House and the Market House. The founder of the MacMillan Cancer Foundation was born here. Like Hawick, the town’s former market day was Thursday. And Castle Cary’s dominant local industry was also textiles, starting with wool, then flax, and also horsehair (it now has the only horsehair product manufacturers in the U.K.). Other (mainly coincidental) similarities with Hawick include: a train station (which survived the Beeching Report); seats to enjoy the view from the hill above the town; a High Street, as well as a Victoria Road and an area called ‘the Sandbanks’; a public area known simply as ‘the Park’; and a merger with the neighbouring town, Ansford in this case. Population approximately 2,700 (there is another place of the same name near Cumbernauld).

the Castle-End (thu-kaw-sul-end) n. another name for ‘the Castle’, which was somewhere near the top end of ‘the Raws’ or the bottom of the Loan.

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former name for a farm on the north side of the Teviot above Newmill, perhaps associated with what is now called ‘Whitcastle Hill’. The name thus seems likely to have been connected with earlier fortifications on the hills above, rather than having anything to do with the nearby Branxholme Castle. Robert Turnbull from there was charged in 1494/5 with stealing sheep. In 1627 the farm is described as paying 16 bolls in ‘stock and teynd’. Alexander Paterson was tenant in 1671, Robert Thomson in 1690, William Nixon in 1692, William Gray in 1694, Walter Scott in 1696 and Walter Wilson in 1698. Archibald Riddell and William Gray were listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, with James ‘Bleck’ as shepherd. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 77 acres, bounded by Branxholme Town farm, the River Teviot, Newmill Burn (with Harwood farm on the other side), How Meadow farm and Chapelhill farm. There was a farmhouse marked near the middle of the land. The farm may once have been more extensive, perhaps including How Meadow and other higher parts, extending towards Whitcastle Hill (it is marked ‘Castel hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; also written ‘the Castlehill’, it is ‘le castel hil de branxame’ in 1494/5, Castlehill’ in 1627 and ‘Castalhill’ in 1694).

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former home of a branch of the Scotts, near Ashkirk, presumably adjacent to Castleside. Scott of Satchells lists ‘Scot of Castlehill’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (this probably relating to sometime around 1600), and possibly related to the Scotts of Northhouse. George Scott ‘callit of Deeringstoun’ had sheep stolen from ‘his lands of Castell-hill’ in 1613 (however, it is possible this was the lands near Branxholme).

Castlehill (kaw-sul-hil) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. In the 1541 rental roll of Jedforest it was tenanted by John and Robert Waugh, paying 22s yearly. The precise location is unclear, but it was listed between Wattie’s Spinnels and Lethem (it is ‘Castellhill’ in 1541).

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. small hill in the Borthwick valley, lying on the north side of the water, just to the south of Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, and south-west of Borthwick Waas cemetery. It is a tree-covered knoll, reaching a height of 176m, and has been suggested to have been the original location of the castle of the Borthwick family. It was also associated with the name ‘Africa’ (although not known as such locally, and that is also attached to the archaeological remains at the Camp Burn), and had been claimed to be the remains of a motte and bailey. Now too much obliterated by cultivation, it is impossible to attach a date, or to guess as to the original extent of the earthworks.

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. hill in a bend of the Ale Water, just to the north of Ancrum village. A fort occupies the flat top of the hill, to which it presumably gave its name. It may be an enclosed settlement dating from the Dark Ages.
Castle Hill

Castle Hill (kaw-sul-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, being essentially the south-west projection of Swarf Hill, about 2 miles east of Newcastleton.

Castle Knowe (kaw-sul-now) n. name for a small rise just to the north-east of Cavers House, with another called Court Knowe nearby. It was said to have contained a ruin, visible in the mid-18th century, possibly being a watch-tower.

Castle Knowe (kaw-sul-now) n. hill just to the south of Billerwell, in the Rule valley. Probably the same place was also formerly called ‘the Birkhill’.

Castle Law (kaw-sul-law) n. hill just to the south-east of Hummelknowes farm, reaching a height of 700 ft. The hill-fort there probably measured 75 m by 45 m, but has been partly obliterated by quarrying, although extensive ramparts are still visible. It surely had some association with the nearby fort on Kaim Law.

Castle Lodge (kaw-sul-loj) n. name sometimes used by locals for Stobs Lodge.

Castle O’er (kaw-sul-ō-ur, -ow-ur) n. hamlet about 9 miles north-west of Langholm, which gives its name to the surrounding forest. It is named after the nearby extensive Iron Age hill-fort, the earlier name being Overbie or ‘Yethyre’. The Deil’s Jingle (linear earthwork) and King Shaw’s Grave (ancient cist) are also nearby.

Castle Park (kaw-sul-pawrk) n. name for a field on the south (or east) side of the main avenue leading to Cavers.

Castleside (kaw-sul-sid) n. farm just to the south-west of Ashkirk, opposite Salenside. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. The lands were valued at £160 in 1643 and owned by Francis Scott; also in 1643 the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Woll and Broadlee) at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. It was valued at £160 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1694 there were 3 tenants listed there. The teinds were valued (along with Broadlee) at £62. James Fairbairn was farmer there in at least 1789–97. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson and valued at £160. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was valued (along with Salenside and Broadlee) at £519. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. G. Murray was farmer in 1868. There were formerly two ancient encampments there, but one was obliterated by ploughing in the early 19th century (it is ‘Castlesyd’ in 1607, ‘Castelsyde’ in 1609, ‘Castsell-syd’ in 1623, ‘Castellsyde’ in 1638, ‘Castillside’ in 1663 and ‘Castalside’ in 1694; it is marked on Baleu’s 1654 map as ‘Castelsyd’ and is also on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Castleside Hill (kaw-sul-sid-hil) n. hill to the west of Ashkirk and just north of Essenside Loch. The summit contains the remains of a hill-fort or prehistoric settlement, measuring about 66 m by 60 m, with an entrance on the north-east side. It contains several circular hut platforms, which have been cut into the sides of 3 natural rocky spines. Traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation are all round the summit. There are also remains of a rectangular building on the south-west side. An ‘ancient mill’ found near the ‘square camp’ on the summit was presented to the Archeological Society in 1856.

Castle Sike (kaw-sul-sik) n. stream that rises on Hermitage Hill and roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water. It effectively forms the eastern side of the defences of Hermitage Castle and has been partly diverted as a result. Further up the stream are the remains of a farmstead.

Castlesteed (kaw-sul-steed) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as vacant in the 1541 rental roll. The location is uncertain, but presumably near the site of either Liddel Castle or Hermitage Castle (it is ‘Castelsteid’ in 1541).

Castleton (kaw-sul’in) n. mediæval village around Liddel Castle on the Liddel Water, about 2 1/2 miles north-east of Newcastleton. In the 12th century it consisted of an earth and timber Norman Castle (home of the de Soulis family, and sometimes called Liddell Castle), the church of St. Martin and several houses around a village green. The land was granted to Jedburgh Abbey some time before 1165 and was part of the Barony of Liddesdale, collecting the signatures that survived as the Ragman Rolls. The ‘Villa cum toll’ is listed in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 12 merks, and ‘Molendium’, i.e. the mill worth 58 merks. The village was once fairly substantial and gave its name to the surrounding parish. The church was demolished at the beginning of the 19th century, and another built a mile further down the valley in 1808, with alterations in 1885. Walter Scott paid tax on 2 hearths there in 1694. John and George Murray and Thomas Oliver were farmers there in 1797. It is said that the village was abandoned in the late 18th century when Newcastleton was built, but that the turf-covered ruins of houses were still visible in the early 20th century. The original burial ground is still in use and the new church has a hearse house attached. Little else of the village or castle survives except earthworks, and a stone stump that was the base of the former market cross. It is still possible to see a hallowed-out road on the northeast side of the graveyard and leading down to the river. There is also an area of rig lines to the west (occasionally written 'Castletown') it was formerly 'Castleton' etc.; there are several other Castletons and Castletowns in Britain; the name derives simply from the Old English 'castel tun' and first appears as 'Casteltoun' in 1220 and 'Cassiltoun' in 1275, ‘Cassiltoun’ in 1586, 1653 and 1633 and ‘Cassiltoun’ in 1662 and 1663, ‘Casteltoun’ in 1661 and ‘Cassiltone’ in 1663; it is ‘Castleton’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and it is still ‘Casteltoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but appears on Coronelli’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Castletoun’).

Castleton clogs (kaw-sul’-in-kłoğız) n. clogs from Castleton, used as an epithet by people from neighbouring areas. It was said that visitors to upper Liddesdale would be asked where they were from, and after replying ‘Castleton’, the following question would be ‘then where are your clogs?’.

Castleton Croft (kaw-sul’-in-kroft) n. former name for lands near Castleton in Liddesdale. It is recorded in 1541 as ‘Cassiltoun croftis’, with no tenant at that time.

Castleton Cross (kaw-sul’-in-kros) n. ancient village cross of Castleton. It is about a 2 1/2 feet high base, 28 inches square, with a more recent concrete shaft inserted, and lies in an area of rough pasture to the south of the road opposite the site of the Castle.

Castleton Kirk (kaw-sul’-in-kirk) n. church of Castleton Parish. It existed from about the middle of the 12th century, was dedicated to St. Martin and before the Reformation belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. Rights due to ‘the chaplain residing at the church of Liddel and the prior residing there’ are described in a document of Glasgow Diocese in 1220 (although the names of these people are not given). The ‘vacariis de Castelton’ is also recorded in 1324. In 1604 it was united with the Kirks of Ettleton, Wheel-kirk and Bellskirk. There were also once chapels at Hermitage and Dinlabyre. After the Reformation the patronage of the Church passed from Jedburgh Abbey to the Earl of Home, then to Sir John Ker of Jedburgh then the Earl of Bothwell and by forfeiture to Scott of Buccleuch by 1632. In 1649 part of Cromwell’s army stayed a few nights there and they ‘brak down and burnt the communion tables and the seats of the kirk; and at their removing, carried away the minister’s books, to the value of 1000 merks, and above, and also the books of the session, with which they lighted their tobacco-pipes, the baptism, marriage, and examination rolls, from October, 1612, to September, 1648, all which were lost and destroyed’. They also took the church bell, leaving it at Stanwick in Cumberland. The original church was in Castleton itself, in the middle of the graveyard, and was demolished in the early years of the 19th century, although some stones from it may have been built into the new churchyard wall (one of which used to clearly read 1621). The former Manse lay ‘on the summit of a stupendous rocky precipice impending over the Liddal’. Both the original Kirk and Manse are shown on a 1718 survey of the farm of Byreholm (for the Buccleuch estates); the church is beside the place marked ‘Cemy’ on the modern Ordnance Survey map and the Manse between there and the river, with the Glebe lands stretching along the riverside. The new church was built at the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters in 1808. It was rebuilt in Newcastleton village in 1885, with a stone of date 1808 built into the back wall. It is still there, on Montagu Street in Newcastleton, sometimes called ‘Newcastleton Kirk’. The Manse was at 23 Langholm Street. Another small church was built at Saughtree in 1872. Newcastleton also contained a Secession Church (built 1801–04, later part of the United Presbyterian Church), a Congregational Church (built 1850) and a Free Church (built in 1853). The history of the various churches in the parish is a complicated one. In 1950 the Castleton building closed and the former St. John’s became parish church. In 1976 there was a union into Castleton and Saughtree Parish, and from 1993 it was called Liddesdale Parish Church. Recently the church merged into the charge of Canonbie United, Newcastleton and Saughtree. The Olivers of Dinlabyre donated 4 sacramental cups to the Kirk in 1748. A roll of the ministry is: William Cotes, from 1535; Archibald Elliot, recorded in 1557; James Oliver, from 1559; Martin Elliot 1574; (vacant in 1575); Richard Thomson 1604–c.1606; Thomas Bannatyne 1607–10; Walter Scott 1612–49; Andrew Pringle 1650–89; Robert Armstrong 1693–1732; William Armstrong 1733–49; Simon Haliburton 1751–63; Robert Rutherford 1763–90; Thomas Martin 1791; James Arkle 1792–1800; David Scott 1801–22; Angus Barton 1822–61; James Noble 1861–83; William Vassie 1883–1917; John Morrison McLuckie 1918–26; Harold Andrew Cockburn 1927–31; Alan McDonald Craig
Castleton Manse

Castleton Manse (kaw-sul’-in-mawnns) n. manse for Castleton Parish at 23 Langholm Street in Newcastle. The former Manse was probably near to the older church, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters; in 1694 tax was paid on 3 hearths there and in 1748 it was taxed for 18 windows. In 1821 William Scott describes how the ruins of the old Manse and garden could still be seen on a precipice overlooking the Liddel. In 1839 the glebe was described as consisting of between 20 and 25 acres.

Castleton Moor (kaw-sul’-in-moor) n. Castleton Muir, area of moorland to the south of the former settlement at Castleton. Lands there were recorded as ‘Cassaltoun Moore’ in 1541, with a value of 5 merks. A long cist was discovered there, marked in its original position on Blaeu’s 1654 map.

Castleton Parish (kaw-sul’-in-pi-ree-she) n. parish centred on the former village of the same name, containing Newcastle, and being the southernmost parish in Roxburghshire. It was bounded by England, Dumfriesshire and parts of Teviothead, Hobkirk and Southdean. It is almost synonymous with ‘Liddesdale’, the Liddel Water running through it roughly from east to south. It was also the largest parish in the south of Scotland, and approximately 1/5th of the area of Roxburghshire. In 1600 the Parish was stated to have been ‘waste’ for many years. The Parish was reorganised in 1604, the latter containing the areas that had been served by Ettelton Kirk, Wheel Kirk and Bellskirk. It then became the largest parish in southern Scotland. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £15,500. Originally part of the Presbytery of Langholm, in 1743 it became part of the Presbytery of Langholm and Synod of Dumfries, even although it lay politically within the County of Roxburghshire. There are Parish records from 1749. A Secession Church was established in the parish in the 1750s and a branch of the Free Church in the 1840s; at one point there were 6 places of worship in the district. Hiring days were formerly 2nd Friday of April for men and Fridays before the 17th of May and 8th of November for women. There was also once a lamb fair on the Friday before the 2nd Wednesday of September and other livestock fairs on the Thursday before the 2nd Tuesday in October and the 3rd Friday in November (it should not be confused with parishes of the same name in Derbyshire and Dorset).

Castleton Schuil (kaw-sul’-in-skil) n. school in Castleton Parish. The old building is adjacent to the former Parish Kirk, just by the conjunction of the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. On its north gable there is a stone inscribed with the date 1621 and bearing a shield. There were about 100 pupils there in the 1830s. Richard Fraiter was hired in 1707. William Scott was schoolmaster up until his death in 1761. Mr. Forsyth was master in the early 1800s. William Telford was teacher at Castleton in 1837.

Castleweary (kaw-sul-wee-ree) n. farm and former hamlet south of Teviothead and just beyond Binks, where the Phaup Burn joins the Frostlie Burn. John Scott, roadman, lived here for 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. For a while it was the place used for changing horses on the stage-coach. There may once have been a tower-house there (mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839), but there are now no traces of it – ‘...But when near Castleweary the poor horse broke down, So they called on the farmer, a man of renown’ [JCG].

the Castle Well (thu-kaw-sul-wel) n. old name for a spring near the road at Ormiston, the name being in use until the early 20th century. It was situated immediately north of the site of the castle, separated from it by the driveway to the modern farmhouse (presumably related to Cocklaw Castle; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, north-east of the house).

cast oot (kawst-oo) v. to fall out, disagree, quarrel – ‘she cast oot wi her mother’. Castrum (ka-strum) n. local name for Coldstream.

cast up (kawst-up) v., arch. to befall, appear, gather for a storm – ‘Thae derk cluds ir castin up for rain’ [ECS], to reappear, turn up again – ‘Hei’ll cast up again leike a bad hapney’ [ECS], ‘Hei aye casts up at mael-teime’ [ECS], to taunt, bring up something reproachful, ‘throw in one’s teeth’ – ‘...after all three brethren, especially Michael, first had casten up his good dame to him, and called him witches-gate ...’ [BR1678], ‘She’s aye castin up auld sairs’ [ECS].

casuality (kas-wal-i-tee) n., arch. a casual charge or payment, specific payment from a tenant – ‘...of all maner, cornes, cattell, and gudis, insicht, airship gudis, dettis, sowmes of money, mails, fernes, resumes, annuellis, caines, casulateis, and vther gudis' [SB1569], ‘...since thair is ane laurge toune which has no common gudes at this tyme, nor casualties wherebrie they may sustene a scholaemaister ...’ [PR1627], ‘...to be payd out of the first ready money that can be had out of the burgess money or other towne casualties’ [BR1698].

the Cat (thu-kat, thu-ka') n. fictional pirate boat in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘...here was the Cat wi’ her sails all set Awaiting for her prey [WE].

cat’t (kawt) pp., poet. called – ‘Let nae me be shæmet, Lord, for I lae ca’t apon thee ...’ [HSR], ‘...an apon the kingdooms that haena ca’t apon name’ [HSR] (cf. the more common caaed).

cat an bat (kaw’-an-baw’) n., arch. the game of tipcat, where a small piece of wood is hit into the air with a bat – ‘They caunna play at cat and bat. And a' their girrs are hid the noo’ [WFC].

Cat an clay (kaw’-an-kla) n., arch. method of building construction in which wickerwork was plastered with clay – ‘In the hamlet of Deanburnhaugh sixty years ago there were twenty-one chimneys, constructed on what is known as the ‘cat and clay’ principle; that is, a wisp of straw mixed with clay, was laid upon a super-structure of wood fastened to the wall, each side about three feet long, the centre piece being about 3½ feet, and on that was laid the pieces of straw and clay, tier upon tier, gradually narrowing until the top was reached’ [HAST1909].

catch a plack (kawch-a-plawk) v., arch. to make money – ‘If by it he can steal a groat Or catch a plack’ [JR] (also ‘catch the plack’).

caught (kawchd) pp. caught – ‘A caught threi troots’, ‘...she tried teh escape bit was caught an put on trial’ [BW] (used interchangeably with the English ‘caught’).

Catcleuch (kaw’-klooche) n. area around the Carter Bar. Catcleugh Shin (544 m, 1,742 ft) is a hill in the Cheviots, just south of where the A6088 meets the A68. Catcleugh Reservoir in further down the A68, about 3 miles into England. The Byrness church has a plaque commemorating the 63 people who died during its construction 1891–1904 (also spelled ‘Catcleugh’; ‘Catcleuch’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Cat Cleuch (kaw’-klooche) n. small stream which rises on Catcleugh Shin and runs roughly northwards, crossing the A6088, to become part of Shaw Burn (the name may be related to the wild cat).

Cat Cleuch (kaw’-klooche) n. small stream in the upper Hermitage valley. It rises on Catcleuch Brae and flows southwards to join the Hermitage Water between Gorrenberry and Twislehope.

cate (kä) v., arch. to be in heat, desire a mate, especially of female cats – ‘The cat’s a-cattin’ [GW].

the Catechism (thu-kaw-te-ki-zum) n. a book giving a summary of Christian doctrine in question and answer form. Until the late 19th century every member of a congregation was expected to know this by heart, and it formed the basis of Sunday School education. Before the mid-1800s the minister would annually visit and catechise each member of the congregation. The ‘Longer Catechism’ was approved by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1648; it consisted of 196 questions. The ‘Shorter Catechism’ was also adopted in 1648; it consisted of 107 questions and was intended for ‘Catechising Such as Are of Weaker Capacity’. This was almost always the form used, and was locally referred to as the ‘carritch’.

Cat Gair (kaw’-gar) n. area at the head of Cat Sike in the upper Borthwick valley, now deep within Craik Forest. It lies to the north-west of Wolfecleuchhead. Catgair Edge is marked on modern maps, being the north side of Ewelair Hill.

Cathels (kaw-thulz) n. Rev. Dr. David (1853–1925) born at Arbroath, he was son of Hohn and Katherine Boath. He was educated in Dundee and at Edinburgh University and licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1881. He assisted Dr. McRae in Hawick for a year, then became minister of Kirkton from 1882. However, he moved back Hawick as minister in 1892. In 1913–14 he visited and confirmed the Church of Ichang on the Yangtze in China. He was appointed Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1924. In late 1924 he unveiled the memorial to Rev. Johnman in St. George’s Kirk, and gave a eulogy on his former colleague. He was also involved in the Vertish Hill Sports and other local activities. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1925, along with Earl Haig, but died that same year. His published sermons are ‘Ourselves and Our Times, a Guild Sermon’ (published in Hawick, 1887), ‘Christian Manhood’ (Hawick, 1889), ‘Landmarks: a Common-Riding Sermon’ (Hawick, 1895), ‘Honour the king: a sermon preached in Hawick Parish Church’ (Hawick, 1897), ‘The Reformation and John Knox’ (Hawick, 1905) and his Moderator’s address for 1924, ‘The Permanent and the Transitory’. He married Mildred Margaret (who died in 1901), daughter of Peter Gardner and later Margaret Agnes (who died in 1940), daughter of John Hewat of Edinburgh. His children were: Katherine Stuart, who married Capt. Harold Mansfield; Mildred Margaret Lindsay, M.B., C.M.; John Howard Crawford, Jane Gardner, who married James Johnstone, M.B.; and Louis Patrick (b.1939), Rector of St. Peter’s, Peterhouse. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery – ‘Then upon the Sabbath day Ti the Pairish Kirk oo made oor way Reverend Cathels, grim and dour, Sermons went on owre an hoor’ [IWL].

Catheugh (kawt-hewch) n. name for a place in the eastern part of Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map on the south side of the Tweedent Burn, just to the west of Tweedenside. James Henderson is recorded there in 1611, when Robert Scott, Bailie of Hawick, was cautioner for him at court in Jedburgh. John Armstrong was also recorded there in 1611. It is probably the place mentioned in about 1645 when two robbers were surprised by Elliot of Park and Henderson of Catheugh, and were ‘challenged at Catheugh and Cringlefold, until they came to Carshope, from whence they stole threescore sheep’. ‘Lancie Armstrong, called of Catheugh’ was recorded as a robber of farms and livestock in about 1645. The place was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax records when James Armstrong was tenant. It was listed as part of the farm of Sorbietrees on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (it was ‘Catheuch’ in 1611).

Catheugh (kawt-hewch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, lying between the main road and the river near Hutlerburn. These were among the Ettrick Forest lands owned by the Crown from about 1456 (it is ‘Catkermach’ in 1456).

Cathide Sike (kawt-hid-sik) n. small stream that joins Muckle Swine Cleuch, which joins the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.

Catholicism (kath-li-si-zum) n. branch of Christianity, with ecclesiastical centre in Rome, often referred to as ‘Roman Catholicism’ by Protestants and Episcopalians. Historically the split between Catholics and Protestants was wrapped up in national and royal politics and culminated with the Reformation of 1560, when the Scottish Parliament refuted the authority of the Pope and made celebration of Mass illegal. However, the suppression of the Catholic religion was less bloody than in England, Catholic Priests were allowed to keep ⅓ of their income and monasteries were allowed to retain some property. It is worth remembering that before the middle of the 16th century, all Terries would have been Roman Catholics (and this includes the first few decades of Cornets!). However, the Catholic church did not grow again in Hawick until the early 19th century, largely because of an influx of Irish workers. A group of about 200 were ‘discovered’ in 1837 by William Wallace, the private chaplain of Traquair. They had been making do with hiring a private hall (possibly the Subscription Rooms) and with visiting a priest in either Traquair or Edinburgh. After this period an Edinburgh priest, Stephen Keenan, visited every 3 months, while Wallace struggled to raise money for a chapel in Hawick. who then endeavoured to raise funds to provide a chapel. Most of them were Irish immigrants or of fairly recent Irish descent. They had been making do with hiring a private hall (possibly the Subscription Rooms) and with visiting the priest at Traquair or in Edinburgh. Stephen Keenan from Edinburgh thereafter visited every 3 months. In 1840 William Wallace said of Hawick: ‘the seeds of animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth’. Unlike in the major Scottish cities, Terries can be proud of their lack of sectarianism. When S.S. Mary & David’s was built on Bucleuch Street in 1844 it was the first Roman Catholic Chapel in the Borders. Hawick also saw the arrival of 2 sets of nuns, the Dominican Sisters, associated with the Convent at Myreslawgreen and St. Margaret’s Home, and the Augustinian Sisters, associated with St. Andrew’s Convent and Nursing Home at Stirches House. Both sets of nuns have now departed.

Cathrae (kath-rae, -ree) n. Andrew (1835–64) son of slate merchant William. He was born in Wilton and trained as a writer’s clerk. He moved to Australia by 1853, where he set up the firm of merchants Mark & Cathrae, based in Melbourne. He later moved to India, where he ran the Wilton Tea Factory in Hindustan; there is a still a ‘Wilton Tea Estate’ School near there. He was deceased by 1870 when Laing & Irvine sued his family members to recover a debt for goods sent to his firm in Melbourne in the 1850s. Jenny ‘Jenny Trantlicks’, ‘Jenny Trankletts’, ‘Jenny Ern-yetts’ or ‘Jenny Airen-yetts’ (19th C.) of unknown birthplace, she was once a familiar street figure. She had one leg shorter than the other and walked with a stick. She was known to be very pug-nacious and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. For a while she lived at Southfield, where an iron gate was erected to stop her continually burning the wooden gate for firewood, hence the cry ‘Ern Yetts! Ern Yetts!’ used to torment her. She died in Mill Port and is buried in the Auld Kirkyard. It is possible she was the Janet born in 1809 to Thomas Cathrae and Agnes Armstrong. John (1807–bef. 42) son of slate merchant Thomas, he was a Hawick stockingmaker. His son James was transported to Australia in 1844 after several problems with the law, and still has living descendents there today. Thomas (1774–1825) son of Martin and Margaret Fairbairn. He became a slate merchant who had a yard on Cathrae’s Haugh, adjoining the Upper Haugh, and owned other land along the edge of the Common Haugh. On Wood’s 1824 map he is owner of a field on the north side of the modern Victoria Road and another to the west of Wilton Mills off the modern Commercial Road. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory he is listed as a slater on Damside. He married Agnes Armstrong in 1802, and their children were: John (b.1803); William (b.1805); John (again. b.1807); Janet (b.1809), who married miller John Fiddes; Margaret (b.1812); Thomas (b.1815), who worked as a miller and grocer; and Agnes (b.1817), who was a seamstress. His wife Agnes (age 60) was living on Damside at the 1841 census, along with Thomas and Agnes. Thomas (b.1815) son of Thomas and Agnes Armstrong. In 1851 he was a journeyman miller with his brother-in-law John Fiddes at Roughheugh. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Licensed Hawker for Groceries’ on Wilton Path. Thomas (b.1831) son of William, he worked as a commercial traveller (probably as a coal merchant) before becoming a local newspaper editor. He had the house Rillmount built on West Stewart Place. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Newspaper Editor’ at 61 High Street. He was editor of the ‘Hawick Advertiser’ 1857–74 and had several apprentices who went on to bigger things. He was probably the Thomas who was Clerk to the Course at the Common Riding in the 1850s. He was Secretary of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce from the 1860s until at least the 1880s. In 1870 he and his sister Agnes Isabella were sued by Laing & Irvine to recover money for goods sold to his deceased brother Andrew. He was also known for having literary talents and wrote ‘History of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club’ as well as compiling the early discussions of that Club, which were later published in 1909. Additionally he published a booklet for the centenary celebrations held for Sir Walter Scott at Bruneholme in 1871. He is probably the Thomas who married Jessie Haig in 1853; their children included Martin and William (who died in infancy). He died in Newcastle. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Martin (b.1804) and Adam (b.1805). His widow could be the Elizabeth living on the Crescent in 1841, along with her daughter Isabella. William (1805–1862) son of Thomas and Agnes Armstrong. He succeeded his father Thomas as a slate merchant in Wilton and was also a bank teller at the British Linen Bank. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, with the address changed from ‘Back Damside’ to ‘Wilton Grove’. He is listed as a slate merchant in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He built the house called Wilton Grove in the early 19th century. He was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk and also acted as the first Clerk of the Deacon’s Court of that church. He could be the William who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1830 and their children included: Thomas (b.1831); Margaret (b.1832); Andrew (b.1834); William (b.1836); John Hislop (b.1838); Agnes (b.1839); Jessie Turnbull (b.1845); Walter (b.1846); and Agnes Isabella (b.c.1848). They were at Wilton Grove in 1841 and 1851 and his wife was dead by the 1851 census (also ‘Cathrie’).

Cathrae’s Haugh (kath-rūz-hawch, hawf) n. land that adjoined the Upper Haugh, so-called because Cathrae’s slate-yard was once there. It was later developed as Albert Mills and later as Mactaggart’s skinworks.

Catlee (kaw-’lee) n. former steading, near Wauchope, on the Catlee Burn. A Turnbull from there (first name illegible) was accused of being a riever in 1530. In 1540 among Scottish rebels listed as being in England we find ‘Pait Trumbill called Cattle elder, Pait Trumbill called Cattle younger, Jame Trumbill, young Pait’s brother’ and other Turnbulls. George Turnbull was there in 1567. It is probably the ‘Catlie’ listed among the Liddesdale possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632. It was once part of the estate of Wauchope, and was part of the set of lands sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs in 1659. In 1677 it was described as a
the Catlee Burn

‘pertinent’ of Wauchope. It was part of the estate of Wolfelee when purchased by William Elliot in 1730. In 1788 (and continued in 1811), it was listed (along with Catleeshaw) among lands owned by Cornelius Elliot, valued at £233 6s 8d (possibly related to the wild cat; it was ‘Catlie’ in 1530, ‘Catle’ in 1540, ‘Catly’ in 1541, ‘Catlie’ in 1567, ‘Catley’ in 1677 and ‘Catly’ in 1788; note that it is easy to confuse with ‘Catliehill’ on the Hermitage Water).

the Catlee Burn (thu-kaw-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near the ‘Note o the Gate’, formed by the Hyndlee and other streams, passing Hyndlee and Wolfelee to become part of the Rule Water at Forkins. On the west bank of the stream, in the trees near Hell’s Hole, are a fairly extensive group of cultivation terraces, now partly destroyed by forestry plantation (also written ‘Catley Burn’ or ‘Catleyburn’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Catleeshaw (kaw-lee-shaw) n. former remote steadying adjacent to the lands of Catlee in upper Rulewater. In 1677 it is described along with Catlee as a ‘pertinent’ of Wauchope, contiguous with the lands of Woolee. It was listed along with Catlee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (recorded in 1659 and 1730 along with ‘Catlee’, it is ‘Cattleyschaw’ in 1677 and ‘Catlyshaw’ in 1788).

Catley see Catlee

Catlie see Gatliehill

Catlockhill (kaw-lok-hil) n. former name for lands that were later called Branxholme Brae. This is probably the ‘Catslak’ mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, when the tenant was Roland Wilson. It is probably the ‘Catslockhill’ mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’. The name was apparently still known to Mr. Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park in the early 19th century (according to a marginal note in his 1802 copy of ‘The Minstresly of the Border’) – ‘And when he cam’ to the Catslack hill He shouted loud, and cried weel his, Till out and spak’ him William’s Wat, O wha’s this brings the fray to me?’ [T] (written ‘Catlockhill’ by Grieve; it should not be confused with Catslack).

Catraeth (ka-trath) n. battle of the late 6th century, commemorated in the epic poem ‘the Gododdin’, which has been called the oldest Scottish poem (although it was written in ancient Welsh). The battle was between a band of Britons from near Edinburgh who set out to meet the invading Saxons. It was once speculated to have taken place at Hawick Moor, but is more likely to have been at Catterick in North Yorkshire (also ‘Caltraeth’ etc.).

the Catrail (thu-kaw-trail) n. an earthenwork ditch, which passes near the sources of the Borthwick, Allan, Slitrig and Teviot Waters. Its most easterly part ends near Robert’s Linn bridge (actually at the Flosh Burn) beside the Hawick to Newcastleton Road, and it runs intermittently for about 12 miles to Hoscoteshiel, near Girkwood farm on the Borthwick. It was first described by Alexander Gordon in his ‘Itinerarium’. Earlier Ordnance Survey maps (supported by the writings of Gordon, John Russell, Alexander Jeffrey and Francis Lynn) marked it extending to near Torwoodlee (west of Galashiels), via Stanhope Law etc., and also beyond Robert’s Linn into Liddesdale, but these extensions were not supported by subsequent investigations and excavations (and in several cases old roads and minor ditches were mistaken for parts of the structure). James Small spent many days trying to trace its path, and wrote about it for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1880. The exact course of the feature between Girnwood and Robert’s Linn is also uncertain, but it seems clear that the line of the earthwork is continued in places by streams. There are many other ancient ditches in the area, and some uncertainty about precisely which features may be part of the Catrail; some are probably of the same period, but with uncertain relationship. The ditch is around 9 ft wide, with a low bank on each side, but the width and height vary considerably (and today few parts can be discerned that are more than 6 ft wide and 1/2 m wide). Local legend suggested that it was created by the Devil, who lived at Hellmoor, with his mother as housekeeper; he killed her in a rage when he found his porridge not to be ready and dragged her around, making the ditch, and threw her into the Devil’s Cauldron on Stonedge farm. It was also formerly associated with the Picts, hence sometimes called the ‘Pict’s Work Dyke’, and was considered to be a defensive barrier. However, clearer heads have prevailed, and it now seems likely to have been merely a boundary ditch (as first pointed out by W.N. Kennedy in 1858). It (and perhaps related ditches) was surveyed by Francis Lynn in 1898 and in the 1980s part within the Stanishope forest was excavated. Other linear earthworks in the area mark the boundaries between farms, but the extent of the Catrail means it must have marked a more significant boundary. It probably dates to the time of land disputes between Northumbrians or Bernicians (to the northeast) and the native Britons of the hillier regions.

to the south-west – ‘The next ane was ane careless scemp, Moss-muddled head and tail; Ye might trowed him the ghaist o’ a’ gurly Pict Wha had shueughd i’ the grit Catrail’ [T] (parts are marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Catrall’; the origin of the name is obscure, but the first syllable could be from the old Celtic ‘cad’, meaning ‘battle’ and the ending perhaps being the Celtic ‘eil, which is associated with fences).

Catrail Edge (kaw-’räl-ej) n. area just to the west of the Pike, near where a piece of the Catrail is visible. The ‘edge’ is now along the side of the forest.

cats-an-kitlins (katz-an-kit-linz) n., pl., arch. catkins, flowers of the hazel or willow.

Cat’s Cleuch (katz’-klooch) n. small stream that rises near Shiel Knowe to the west of Saughtree. It runs roughly south-west to join Fawhope-knowe Sike. It also gave its name to Catscleuch Culvert on the railway line.

Catshawhill (ka’-shaw-hil) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, south of Firth. It is probably the lands in Raperlaw owned by David Davidson in 1643. John Douglas was owner in 1678, when the lands were valued at £195. John Douglas was still there in 1694 and another John Douglas was owner in 1761. It was bought by Thomas Turnbull (who worked in the Hawick carpet trade) in the mid-18th century, but sold after a few years for a large profit. William Smail was owner in 1788 and Thomas Smail was owner in 1797 and still recorded there in 1811 (it is ‘Catchahill’ in 1694 and ‘Catshawhill’ in 1761).

Catslack (ka’-slawk) n. tower and farm by the Catslack Burn, in the Yarrow valley, about 15 miles from Hawick. It was once owned by the Crown and stocked with the King’s sheep, it was leased to the Crichtons of Cranston-Riddell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. In 1494/5 3 men called Mark from Tinnis had remission for the murder of John Tennant there. In 1539 the lands ‘with the tower and fortalice thereof’ were inherited by James Crichton of Cranston Riddell from his father. At that time they were valued at £71 16s. 8d., but 40 merks in time of peace. In 1541 it was valued at £70 3s. 4d. There was a discharge in 1542 for rentals of these lands (and others) associated with Janet Beaton (who had married Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme), widow of the older James Crichton. In 1550 it was among lands leased to Janet Beaton by her son James Crichton for 19 years. In this tower Lady Elizabeth, the widow of an earlier Sir Walter of Buccleuch, was burned to death in 1547 by a band of English, supported by the Kerrs. John Scott was tenant there when he was in dispute with William Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1563, and in 1574/5 Elliot was forced to vacate the lands. In 1581 Robert Crichton of Sanquhar had a charter for these lands, along with Montbenger and others. William Scott ‘in Lies’ was also called ‘of Catslacknowe’ by Scott of Satchells (sometime around 1600) when listed among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch; he was said to be descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. The lands were still mentioned when James Scott (son of Walter ‘in Catslak’) was minister of Kirkton in the early 17th century, although they were still recorded as part of the Buccleuch properties in 1634, 1653, 1663 and 1693. William Scott of Catslack held lands in Hassendean Parish in 1643, valued at £52. Walter Scott of Catslack paid tax on lands with the same value in 1663 and John Scott of Catslack in 1678. ‘Catslackknow’ and ‘Catslackburne’ are on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties. By 1788 the lands that had been in Hassendean and held by the Scotts of Catslack were also known as ‘Millmae’, ‘Mewmaw’ or ‘Lees’ and owned by Scott of Burnhead. In 1785 and 1802 they were valued at about £330 and £880, respectively. Walter Forsyth was there in 1821. 2 brothers, Charles and Walter Scott were farmers there into the mid-19th century, both living into their 90s. Note that the place of a similar name mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’, may be ‘Catlochill’ near Branxholme (it is ‘Catslak’ in 1456, ‘Katslak’ in 1459, ‘Cattisslak’ in 1488, ‘catslak’ in 1494/5, ‘Catslak’ in 1501 and 1510, ‘Cattsilak’ in 1539, ‘Catslak’ in 1541, 1542 and 1550, ‘Catsilak’ in 1663 and ‘Catsluch’ in 1678).

the Cat’s Pool (thu-kawts-pool, -pil) n. deep pool below the Cauld, on the south side (the other side formerly being the ‘Ladies’ Pool’). The name came from its supposed use for drowning unwanted cats in weighted sacks. It was notorious as the site of accidental drownings, but has been largely filled in – ‘...Like gumpin’ eels ablow the Albert Brig, Or ‘katies’ in the deep Cat’s Pule’ [WL] (also written ‘Pule’).

Cattanach (kaw-te-nach) n. Rev. David Lynedoch (b.1882) son of Peter Lorrimer and Jane Bladworth Hardie, he was born in Edinburgh. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1904, was licensed in 1911, then was assistant catter-batter

at Park Parish in Glasgow before becoming minister of Golspie in 1913. During WWI he served as a gunner in the Royal Field Artillery. He was translated to Hobkirk in 1922 and remained as minister there until 1953. He was Chaplain of the Scots Memorial Church in Jerusalem 1923–24. He married Dorothy Agnes Leechman in 1914. Their daughter Isobel Mary Lorimer died in 1929.

catter-batter (kaw-ur-baw-ur) n., arch. a quarrel, commotion – ‘The lauchs dee’d doon and the bawdy clatter, There cam a hush owre the catter-batter’ [WL], v., arch. to wrangle – ‘Dinna begin o catter-battereen about poleeteeks here!’ [ECS].

cattle stent (kaw-ul-sten’) n., arch. fee paid for cattle grazing on the Common – ‘Cattle stent’ . . . the ‘grass-mail’ (rent) paid by burgers when their cattle depasture on the burgh muir [of Hawick] . . . ’ [BR].

the Cattle Tryst (thu-kaw-ul-trist) n. name sometimes used for the cattle fair held on the 3rd Tuesday in October near Thorterdykes, when drovers would stop with their cattle on the way to southern markets. This was started in 1785 at the suggestion of the Hawick Farmers’ Club. Although it was never hugely successful, it ran for a few decades (it is a little unclear whether or not this was separate from the horse fair) – ‘There is a weekly marker and 4 fairs, besides a tryst, established, within these few years, for black cattle, &c. in October, between Falkirk tryst and Newcastle fair, which promises to succeed’ [RRG].

Catto (kaw-tô) n. Alexander Gordon (19th C.) schoolmaster at Hassendean around 1850.

cauf (kawf) n. a calf (also ‘caaf’).

cauf (kawf) n., arch. chaff – ‘. . . over the ‘Cauf Roads’ – i.e., the top of the hill, having been the place for winnowing corn’ [RJR], ‘The ungordlie arna sae: but ar like the caff, whilk the wund dræives awa’ [HSR] (also written ‘caff’ and other variants).

cauf-grund (kawf-grund) n., arch. one’s place of birth – ‘An the road swaipeet doon afore iz. Ay! doon ti ma caaw-grund o Teviotdale’ [ECS].

cauky (kaw-kee) adj., arch. chalky, made of chalk, covered with chalk dust – ‘A cauky bool’ [GW] (also ‘caukie’).

cauld (kawld) adj. cold – ‘. . . get it agane to me, or else I will try it with my cauld sword’ [BR1642], ‘The dew is damp, and the wind is cauld, My child, it is not good for cauld calker’ [AB], ‘Now stiff and cauld beneath the clay . . . ’ [JCG], ‘Yet we may weil be friends at heart; Though friendship’s name is cauld . . . ’ [JT], ‘His heid was white. His heid was bald. His face was pale as if ’twas cauld’ [TD], ‘But cauld are the airds that are roond my dear, An’ wi’ cauld, cauld kisses his lips are worn’ [FGS], n. the cold, a viral infection often leading to a runny nose and sore throat – ‘A’m de-in o the cauld’, ‘. . . oo get the caul’ [WFC] (sometimes poetically written ‘caull’ and also ‘cauld’).

cauld (kawld) n. a weir or dam on a river, particularly one used to divert water into a mill lade controlled by a sluice. Hawick had at least 6 of them at one time: the Coble Cauld, Laidlaw’s Cauld, Wilton Mills Cauld, Weensland Cauld, Lynnwood Cauld and Slitrig Cauld – ‘. . . The waves wi’ water-rack were borne, And caulds and causeways up were torn’ [AD], ‘Jookin’ here a sturdy brig or there a cauld’ [JEDM], ‘Over the caulds or across the weirs foaming, Soiling the hems of your skirts as you run . . . ’ [WL], v., arch. to lay stones along the bank of a river to try to stop flooding – ‘. . . and the stones were handy for caulding the river’ [RJR].

the Cauld (thu-kawld) n. popular name for the Coble Cauld – ‘You’ll hear me roar or softly sigh, And sing my Border lullaby, For such is life – I am the Cauld!’ [WFC], ‘It’s nocht like what it used to be I doot I’ getting auld, There’s no a sowl to be seen now Doon at the caul’d’ [DH].

Cauldcleuch (kawl-kloo, kawld-kloo) n. Cauldcleuch Head is 1,996 feet (619 m) high, and is the highest peak within Roxburghshire (the only higher places are on the boundary with England). It is situated 10 miles south-west of Hawick and is an imposing backdrop to many local views in that direction. It is the source of the ‘Cauld Cleuch’, which runs into the Priesthaugh Burn, which in turn feeds into the Allan Water. The lands there were given to the monks of Melrose by William, 1st Earl of Douglas in about 1358;
Cauldcleuch

the part granted was listed as ‘caldcluch infe-riori’, suggesting that there was also a ‘greater Cauldcleuch’. They were inherited (along with Tillielee) by Robert, grandson of Robert Elliot in 1497/8, and at that point were held of the Laird of Cavers. They formed part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield, along with Priesthaugh, Sto-bicote, etc., as recorded in a document of 1500 and other later charters. The lands were listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. Along with Southdeanrig, the lands were rented from Melrose Abbey by Scott of Synton and Elliot of Thorleshire in 1557; at that time it was valued at £3 6s 4d. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship and Regality of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1663 and 1690. They were still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands may have given rise to a surname, recorded around 1600 { ‘An a merk on the shooder o’ Cauldcleuch To show where the cloudberrys growe ..’[DH] (also sometimes ‘Caldecleuch’; ‘Caldecleuchheued’ is recorded in an English document listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots in 1255; it is ‘Caldcluch’ in 1497/8, ‘Cauldcluch’ in 1500, ‘Caldcleuch’ in 1557 and 1640, ‘Cawcleuch’ in 1653, ‘Caldcleuche’ in 1660, ‘Caldcleuch’ in 1663 and ‘Caldecleugh’ in 1687 and 1698; the name of the cleuch is presumably because it is a cold and wind-swept location).

Cauldcleuch (kawld-klooech) n. James (17th
C.) tenant in Braidwoodshiel in 1658 and por-tioner in Blainslie in the early 1660s. He is mentioned in records of the Regality of Melrose.
Thomas, who is also listed in some of the same records was his brother. John (d.1612) minister
