perliss trä a' n., arch. to perlustrate, to survey a whole area by travelling through it, to inspect carefully, to take a complete survey of an area { ‘The sd. day Bailie Scott, Walter Wilson, and the two John Jamieson; also written ‘perl’t'; cf. pairlt).}

pertinents (per-ti-nents) n., pl., arch. adjuncts, accessories, additional things that are relevant, particularly things connected with conveyed lands – ‘...the lands of the sayde Hepe, with all frutis, asymentis and pertinents to the sayd landis off the Hepe belangand...’ [SB1431], ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s heir that is to be admitted burgess and freeman within this Bruch, sal only pay the wyne to the Baillies, with pertinents’ [BR1640], ‘Item, that whosovere sal mari ane freeman’s dochter sal pay for their freedom £4 money, with the wyne and pertinents’ [BR1640], outhouses and other buildings pertaining to a piece of property – ‘...the said Francis Scott, his tenement of houses, high and laigh, back and fore, with the yeard and pertinents lying within the town and burgh of Hawick’ [BR] (common legal term until the 18th century, rarely used in the singular).

pertyaise (per-yäz) v., arch. to peruse – ‘...Aw’ve jaist been pertyaisin an auld local almenak o’ seeventeen an ineymeth...’ [BW1966].

Pesco's (pes-köz) n. Peter Scott's, founded in 1878, with its main factory on Buccleuch Street, originally the partnership Adamson & Scott, between Peter Scott and his uncle Peter Adamson. The company started in part of Peter Laidlaw's old factory at Wilton Grove, was based in the Tabernacle from 1881–93, and moved to Buccleuch Street in 1893, acquiring the former premises of the Commercial Bank. Scott split from Adamson in 1884, when the firm's title was changed to Peter Scott & Co. The now familiar factory on Buccleuch Street was built in stages and largely completed by 1913, with the classical-style block to the west added in 1923 (designed by J.P. Alison). Behind the front section there are several other buildings, including knitting sheds and a boiler house. The factory retains its octagonal chimney (the only one in the Borders with its original top cornice). There was also another mill on Wilton Path (adjacent to the entrance to the 'hunder steps', specialising in sports coats) and one on Commercial Road (specialising in hosiery, opened in 1916) in the early 20th century. They were the first firm to guarantee against shrinkage of underwear at the turn of the 20th century. The Hawick factory was devoted to production for the troops during WWI, and supplied the ill-fated Shackleton expedition of 1914. In 1914 it was described as the biggest firm of its kind in Scotland, employing 800 people. Later it moved from hosiery into knittedwear and sportswear. The Commercial Road buildings were used as a billet in 1939 and in 1945 the canteen was opened in the main factory. The Wilton Path factory closed in 1954. A nursery for employees ran until 1958. 16–18 Howegate was sold in 1956. A factory was built in Kelso in 1961 and another at Chirnside in 1974 (sold in 1981). The Queen and Prince Philip visit during the company’s centenary year in 1978. The ‘Peter Scott’ signature is the main company logo, along with the deer image. The official trademark was ‘Pesco’ from 1931 until relatively recently, and that has always been the popular name in Hawick. The firm went into arbitration in 2010, but was temporarily saved by English firm Gloverall. In 2016 the factory ceased production for good. The ‘Pesco Quotation Book’ (1916) was sold to raise money for the war effort, and after WWI ‘A Souvenir of Peace’ was published. The company has given several notable gifts to the town, including an early motor ambulance and fire-fighting equipment.

Peter Scott’s (pee’-ur-skots) n. Peter Scott & Co., better known as Pesco’s, which was its official trademark until relatively recently.

peth (peth) n., arch. a path, a steep road – ‘...an’ whatsoever passes throwe the peths o’ the seis’ [HSR], ‘Haud up my gaeings in thy peths, that my fitsteps skyliden’ [HSR] (the usual local meaning has no implication of being a narrow footpath, as in the English word).

the Peth (thu-peth) n. Wilton Path, the road leading up the hill, continuing on from Albert Road as part of the old road to Edinburgh. It was also known as ‘Roughheugh Path’ until the late 19th century. It was once very built-up, with a row of houses at the top known as the ‘Petherhead’, and a factory block next to the entrance to the ‘hunder steps’. In the mid-20th century it contained a chip shop, the Store bakers, a wine shop and ‘Foosty Broon’s’. Houses, shops and a knitwear factory were demolished in 1972/73, leaving essentially no houses on the street itself. The Manse for St. George’s Church is at the top on the left.

pether (pe-thur) n., arch. a peddlar, packman, travelling merchant – ‘Assoilizes George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pether, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, al-legit taken awa fra his crame in Hawick’ [BR1655], ‘There’s pethers and potters, and gingerread stan’s, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans ...’ [DA] (also written ‘pether’ and ‘pethir’; cf. pedder).

the Pether (thu-pe-thur) n. nickname for anyone who worked as a packman or peddlar, particularly in the 18th century, e.g. William Scott from Deanburnhaugh.

Pether Hill (pe-thur-hil) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century, presumably a pedlar called Hill – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trot, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

the Pether’s Yett (thu-pe-thurz-yv) n. former name for a gate which gave entry to ‘the Pedlar’s Field’, a field in which corn grew in the summer, being the first of the open fields on the land north of what is now Princes Street, where Ladylaw Place was built in the 1840s (from ‘the Pedlar’s Gate’).

Pethheid (peth-heed) n. Pathhead, a former name for the area at the top of Wilton Path, particularly the row of houses that stood on the north side of what became Princes Street (near where the Balmoral Bar is located), as marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map. This block of houses is already marked on the 1810 sketch of Wilton. In 1841 the name appears also to have been used to the houses to the west, on Langlands Road. Note that the place gave its name to 'Path Head School', near Winnipeg, Manitoba (also sometimes 'Pathhead').

Pethheid (peth-heed) n. name for the farm at the end of the steep part of the road through Deanburnhaugh.

pett (pet, pe') n., arch. a sheepskin with the wool removed (noted by J. Jamieson; see also pellet).

petted lip (pe'-eed-, pe'-ee'-, pe-teed-lip) n. a bottom lip stuck out in a sulk, particularly by a child – 'she put on a right petted lip when she heard she couldn't go', 'deh trip ower yer petted lip', 'ee could hing monkeys off that petted lip' (cf. pettit).

Pettie (pe-tee) n. Rev. Robert Douglas. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1917, but stayed for only a year before moving to Creish.

pettie-point (pe-tee-poin') n., arch. a type of stitch, perhaps similar to what was used in tapestry work – 'Pettie-point, A particular sort of sewing stitch, Roxb.' [JoJ].

Pettigrew (pe'-ee-groo) n. John, M.B.E. (b.1882) born in Wellington Street, he became Joint Managing Director of Peter Scott's. He was a member of the Angling Club and the Masons, and also wrote some works on the woollen trade. He married Esther Scott (b.1874), who was niece of Walter Scott, co-founder of Lyle & Scott's. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed a sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as 'domino Roberto Pettigrew', suggesting he was associated with a church. It is unclear if he was local, like most people in the will.

pettit (pe'-ee', pe-tee') adj. petulant, peevish (also written 'petteet'; noted by E.C. Smith; see also petted lip).

petit-taes (pe-tee'-t=az) n., pl., arch. the feet of pigs (noted by J. Jamieson).

peuchle (peu-chul) v., arch. to work ineffectively – 'That peuchlin' body never wuns off the bit' [GW], to cough feebly, splutter wheezily (in [HNe1954]), n., arch. a short cough (also written 'peughe').

peuther (pew-thur) v., arch. to canvass for votes – '...that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies' Leet without any objection' [BR1756], '...it for ever should be a stated rule, that no man should thereafter pewther for the Magistracy' [BR1763] (also written 'pewther' and 'pothurer'; see also powder).

pewder (pew-duur) n., adj., arch. pewter – 'The puder plate qch contained ye water for baptizing of Children was barred for a Chappin stoup' [PR1711] (also written 'puder', etc.).

pew (pewl, pil) v., arch. to work feebly, struggle faintly – '...To haul again the inept implements That mauled the body of exhausted earth For yet another puling puny harvest' [DH], to stifle a cough, to drizzle – 'It's pewlin' an' rainin'' [GW], to fall feebly or softly in small lumps (said of snow) – 'Pewl, Pewl, Peughle on. Used to denote the falling of snow in small particles, without continuation, during a severe frost, Teviotd.' [JoJ], 'Snaws join the squal, wi' pu'lin', pirlin', An' drifts' [JoHa], 'It's pewlin' on' [GW], n., arch. a thin curl of smoke, wisp – 'A pewl o reek fuffelt abuin the gleed, an swurlt an yillet away in a pirlin braith o wund' [ECS] (also written 'pule'; cf. peuchle).

peysle (pi-sul) n., arch. a small farmyard tool – 'Peysle, Peyzle, Any small tool used by a rustic, Roxb.' [JoJ] (see also pyssle).

peyzart (pi-zar') adj., arch. parsimonious, stingy, n. a miser, niggard (noted by J. Jamieson).

Phantasy (fawn-tu-see) n. dog boarding kennels and associated property situated just after Hawthornside on the way to Banchester.

Phaup (fawp) n. former standing on the Phaup Burn above Castleweary, east of the A7. The Read Roads pass near here and the Mosspaul ride-out route usually comes near here also. It was listed along with Linhope and Frostylee as a 20-shilling land among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into 'the tenement of Blackgraine'. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiority was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch proerpties, at that point covering 654 acres and bounded by Skelfhill, Linhope, Binks, Southdealrig and Northhouse. William Grieve was shepherd there in 1797. The place name has many spellings and can also be confused with an area of the same name near the head of the Ettrick. This could be the ‘Fallhope’ which was owned by the Glendinnings of that Ick from at least 1325. One of these 2 places probably gave rise to the somewhat rare surname Phaup, with ‘Adam de Fawhope’ being recorded as a juror in 1304, ‘Archibald Fawp’ being Chaplain at Linlithgow in the early 16th century and several people of the name recorded in the Melrose area in the 17th century (spelled ‘Phawhope’, ‘Fawhope’ and other variants; the origin might be from the Old English ‘fah hop’, meaning ‘variegated valley’; it occurs at least as early as 1604 as ‘Fawhop’, is ‘Falhope’ in 1553 and 1600, ‘Fawhope’ in 1661, ‘Fahope’ in 1663, ‘Phallhope’ in 1687 and 1698 and ‘Phaip’ in 1694; it is ‘Faehope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey maps; there are other places of similar name elsewhere, e.g. at the head of the Kale).

Phaup (fawp) n. area near the head of the Ettrick Water, also written ‘Phawhope’. Nether and Over Phaup are separate farmsteads, the latter being a ‘bothy’ on the Southern Upland Way. Earlier the lands were split into Easter and Wester ‘Fawlishope’. These were the lands of Sir John Turnbull ‘of Falshope’, whose daughter married George Scott of Synton about the early 15th century. Sir Thomas Turnbull held lands here in the latter part of the 15th century. They were Crown lands, assigned to John, son of Thomas Turnbull in 1483–87, then George Home of Ayton in 1488 and his son John in 1490, and then with John’s consent assigned to John Turnbull. In 1494/5 the farm is mentioned as a place that was pillaged for sheep and in turn the residents there were charged with rieving. In 1501 they were half let to Ralph Ker and the other half to the wife of Sir Thomas Turnbull and Ralph Ker still held half the lease in 1502. This is probably where William and George Scott are recorded in 1526. In 1541 half the lands were occupied by Andrew Ker of Greenhead and the other half by William Stewart. Will Scott of Midghope paid rental for these lands to Melrose Abbey in 1557 and Robert Scott of Tushielaw in about 1620. It is said that the farm was without a tenant or any stock for 20 years after the terrible winter storm of 1674. Francis Scott ‘of fhauhope’ paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. James Scott ‘of Phaupe’ is recorded in records of Melrose in 1682. Will Laidlaw ‘of Phawhope’ gave the version of ‘Auld Maitland’ published in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’. The Ballantynes were Lairds in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is easily confused with the farm between Castleweary and Mossapaul of the same name, as well as Faulshope further down the Ettrick near Aikwood (spelled ‘Phawhope’ and variants; ‘Fauhopscchele et Fauhopgranys’ are recorded in 1456; it is ‘Faulishope’ in 1468, ‘Fawlishope’ in 1471, ‘Faulishop’ in 1478 and 1488, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1487, ‘Faulishope’ in 1490, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1494, ‘Faulishop’ and ‘Fawlishop’ in 1501, ‘Fawlishope’ in 1526, ‘Faulishope’ in 1541, ‘Fawlishop’ in 1589 and ‘Fauhoip’ in 1620; ‘Faup’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Phaup (fawp) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Fauhope’ when he was on a jury in 1304 to decide on the privileges of Robert the Bruce (when he was still just Earl of Carrick). The jurors were all from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire and hence it seems likely his lands were one of the local places of that name. Andrew (17th C.) notary in Melrose. He is recorded in many documents relating to the Regality of Melrose in the 1650s and 60s. His name presumably derives from the lands in Roxburghshire or Selkirkshire. Andrew (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was written ‘Faup’. Elizabeth (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her name is written ‘Faup’. She could be the ‘Bessie Phaup’, married to William Wright, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1685. Elizabeth (b.1815/6) from Gordon in Berwickshire, she was a toll-keeper in Hawick. In 1851 she was a widow, living at West-Toll Bar (on Buccleuch Road), with he children James, Isabel T. and William T., her nephew James Brown and her cousin Adam Bell. William (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Langtoun’ (probably Lanton). His will is recorded in 1688 and that of his wife Margaret Mather in 1686 (also written ‘Phawp’).

Phaup Burn (fawp-burn) n. stream that joins the Frostlie Burn, roughly from the east, near Castleweary. The farmstead of Phaup is along its banks (marked ‘Faup B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Phawhope see Phaup

Phesant (fee-zin’) n. a pheasant – ‘... There isna a walk mair pleasan now oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o’ ee a pheasant’ [AY], ‘The feel o mushrooms; broilin a gumpit troot; Phesane ploys in black wuds, wi gameys near’ [DH].

Phenzhopehaugh (fee-nup-hawf, -hawch) n. isolated farmstead situated about 2 km up the Rankle Burn from the farms of Buccleuch. This was probably the site of the original manor for the Barony of Rankilburn. Phenzhopehaugh Burn meets the Rankle Burn from the west there, and above to the south-west is Phenzhopehaugh Hill, which reaches 382 m. There is a motte on an area of level ground to the north of the confluence; it is about 40 m by 25 m and about 2.5 m high, surrounded by a ditch, which has a causeway across it on the south-west side. This may have been the first residence of the Scotts of Rankilburn (with Sir Richard Scott of Rankilburn, who swore fealty to Edward II in 1296, probably holding these lands), before they moved their headquarters to Buccleuch. About 60 m south of the motte is a large circular enclosure, probably much more recent in age (it is not marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; the stream is ‘Fin-hopelake’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map and incorrectly a lake is labelled ‘Find-hopelake’ near there on Mitchell’s 1851 map).

The Philadelphia Stakes (θu-fi-lu-del-fee-a-stāks) n. race run as part of the Cornet’s Races on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the later 19th century. The prize-money was presumably raised by exiles from the Philadelphia area.

Philhope (fi-hop) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, and the name for the area around it, particularly the flat region by the river, which has long been a popular picnic spot. John Hope and John Hall were recorded as the King’s shepherd’s here and in Broadlee, being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. There were Elliots there from at least the 16th century, Martin Elliot of Braidlie having a charter of 1591, at which time it lay within the Barony of Hawick and was annexed to Selkirkshire. This was afterwards to go to his son Simon and was ratified by Act of Parliament in 1592. In the early 1600s Simon’s only child Grizel inherited and married John, son of Robert Elliot of Falnash. The lands were listed (along with Eilrig) as a ‘pendicle’ of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were estimated to pay ‘200 merks, vicarage 20 lb.’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. In 1631 John Turnbull of Howden was served as heir to his father Mark’s lands there. However, the main farm was in the hands of the Crown for 37 years, until granted to Robert Elliot of Falnash in 1628; Robert’s son John would marry the heiress, Grizell Elliot. It remained with the Elliots through most of the 17th century. Adam Elliot of Philhope was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Archibald Elliot, Maly Nichol, Helen Elliot, Maly Elliot, Elizabeth Hislop, Maly Scott, Janet ‘Cheislye’, Grisel Pearson, John Hamilton, William Glen, Robert Scott and William Baptie. It was owned by William Elliot of Philhope in 1678 when valued at £216. William and Robert Chisholme (of Stichels) purchased it in 1684. In 1694 tax was paid on 6 hearths for ‘Phillip & milne’. Thos also listed there were William Elliot (probably the Laird), John Renwick, Robert Chisholme, Robert Riddell and Adam ‘Junct’. Robert Veitch was living there in at least 1715–17 and Walter Haliburton in 1721. William Pringle was living there in 1737, Thomas Graham in 1762 and John Cavers in 1774. The teinds were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and the stock was valued at £400, with the land tax paid by William Chisholme of Chisholme. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Broadlee at £216. It became part of the Buccleuch estates around the early 19th century and in the latter part of the 19th century was purchased by Richardson-Dickson. The farmer recorded there on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls was Robert Nichol. James Turnbull was tenant in 1799. In 1811 William Chisholme paid the land tax on £400 there, while the teinds were valued at £60 in 1802 and held by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Nichol was farmer there in 1841. John Nichol was there in the 1860s. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90, and in earlier times was part of Selkirkshire. An area roughly opposite Meadshaw was the site of a skirmish in December 1653, between (Scottish) Royalist forces and (English) Commonwealth forces. About 80–100 mean under Sir Arthur Forbes, and with Maj. Irvine as second-in-command, had captured Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto. Coming down from the north, they stopped at Borthwickbrae, and intended to head over towards Eskdalemuir. An English force, part of Twisleton’s Regiment under Capt. Hart, were in pursuit. The Scots were easy to follow in the snow and made a stand at Philhope, where 4 Royalists were slain and 16 taken prisoner, with only 1 Englishman slain and 17 wounded. The prisoner Kerr was freed, but wounded through the thigh by an English trooper. The English concentrated on rounding up the horses, allowing most of the Scots to escape, including Forbes. This was probably the last battle to take place near Hawick. There are remains of some enclosures near the...

farm, age uncertain (also formerly spelled ‘Philip’ and variants; it is ‘Filop’ in 1540, ‘Philip’ in 1592, ‘Phillip’ in 1627 and 1631, ‘Filip’ in 1643, ‘Phillip’ in 1646, ‘Philip’ in 1649, ‘Philip’ in 1651, ‘Philip’ in 1678 and 1686, ‘Philop’ in 1715 and 1717 and ‘Philip’ in 1785, 1788 and 1797; it is ‘Philop’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Phillip’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Philip’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is possibly Old English ‘ful hop’, meaning ‘the dirty valley’).

Philhope Brig (fi-lup-brig) n. bridge across the Borthwick near Philhope farm, leading to the former farm of Outerside. This site has often in recent times been chosen for Common Riding Ride-outs. The haugh there has been a favourite place for Hawick folk to come for picnics. The area was popularized in the Scocha song ‘Dusty Road frae Philhope Brig ti Hame’, released in 2017 with an accompanying video.

Philhope Burn (fi-lup-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the south-east near Philhope farm.

Philhope Loch (fi-lup-loch) n. man-made loch in the headwaters of the Philhope Burn. On the Roughhope Burn (rather than the Philhope Burn), the name was attached to it much later. Construction was constructed in 1844 following a drought which brought Hawick’s woollen mills to a standstill. The work was arranged by the 3 main manufacturers at the time, William Wilson & Sons, William Watson & Sons and Dicksons & Laings. Construction was completed by 1846 on the dam here, as well as at the nearby Broadlea Loch. It is said that the sluice gate used to be opened in order to raise to Borthwick and then the Teviot, to help with the water-powered mills in Hawick. There was a suggestion around 1880 of using the Loch as a water supply for Hawick, but the decision was taken to develop the Allan Water works instead. Eventually the reservoir ceased to be used for its original purpose, and for a while it was used for fishing. When the embankment began to leak in the 1970s it was drained and abandoned.

Philhope Mill (fi-lup-mil) n. former farmstead near Philhope, presumably by the side of the Borthwick. It was part of Hawick Parish until 1690 (also written ‘Philip Mill’; it is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Philhopeshiel (fi-lup-sheel) n. former steading on the Philhopeshiel Burn, about half-way between Eildrig and Lairhope. John Laidlaw and William Pringle were there in 1726; John Welch in 1727, James Armstrong in 1732, Thomas Graham in 1743, John Jackson in 1763, Robert Scott in 1765, John Graham in 1774, William Nichol in 1781 and Adam Pringle and Andrew Geddes in 1789. It was still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but has now disappeared, although there is still an adjacent sheepfold (it is ‘Philopshiel’ in 1726 and 1732, ‘Philopshieils’ in 1727 and ‘Philipsheil’ in 1774).

Philhopeshiel Burn (fi-lup-sheel-burn) n. stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Rashy Hill, and runs in a roughly northerly direction to join the Eildrig Burn and hence the Borthwick Water.

Philip (fi-lip) n. Andrew (1782–1822) son of William and Mary Scott. He was a mason, like his father. He owned property on Slitrig Crescent, around No. 5, marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His surname was listed as ‘Phillips’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the Andrew ‘Philips’ who married Henrietta Nichol, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Isabel (b.1810); Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812); George (b.1815); William (again, b.1816); and Margaret (b.1817). He died in Hawick. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: William (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1748); Janet (b.1750); Jane (b.1753); John (b.1755); Isabel (b.1759); and Robert (b.1760). Perhaps the same George was previously married to Janet Lockie and had a son Patrick baptised in Ashkirk in 1744. William (d.bef. 1822) mason in Hawick. He was probably son of George and Janet Walker, born in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Mary Scott, who was probably daughter of ‘Black Andrew’. They had children: Alice (b.1770); George (b.1772); Walter (b.1776); Janet (b.1779); Andrew (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); Andrew (again, b.1782), also a mason; William (b.1785); Peter (b.1792); and Peter (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1777 were merchant Andrew Scott and Andrew Turnbull and in 1792 were Dr. William Scott and plasterer William Sibbald. His unnamed child died in 1798 (also written ‘Phillip’).

Philiphaugh (fi-lip-hawf, -hawch) n. riverside plain just west of Selkirk, now the location for the town’s rugby and cricket fields. It was the site of the Battle of 1645 which ended the Earl of Montrose’s attempts to secure political control of Scotland, thereby ensuring the defeat of Charles I’s cause. Montrose’s men were surprised under cover of fog by the superior Covenant forces under David Leslie, to which the locals were sympathetic at the time; troops from Teviotdale must surely have fought in Leslie’s army. Montrose fled, but most of his troops and the 300 accompanying women and children were massacred by Covenanting zealots. Lands there were granted to William Turnbull in 1313 and there were still Turnbulls there until the early 16th century. However, the surrounding estate belonged to the Murrays from the 15th century. It was valued at almost £4000 in 1678. A Jacobean mansion stood here, remodelled in the 1870s and demolished to make way for a 1964 house. The Covenanters’ Monument is a stone pyramid on the grounds. A song about the battle was recorded by Scocha in 2004 – ‘On Philiphaugh the fray began, At Harehead wood it ended: The Scots out o’er the Graemes they ran; Sae merrily they bended!’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘pianih’ and ‘pianae’).

Philip’s Jok (fl-ips-yok) n. nickname of Johnnie Scott in the 16th century (written ‘Philips’ in the court documents).

Philogar (fl-lo-gur) n. hill and former lands in the Hownam Parish. The lands were connected with the Douglases of Cavers in the 16th and 17th centuries.

the Pickin (thu-pi-kin) n. official selection of the new Cornet, taking place on the Wednesday night after the first Tuesday in May (since Town Council meetings always used to be on Tuesdays). The ceremony used to take place on the Tuesday night immediately after the Council meeting to elect the Cornet, but at some point was shifted to the following night. The Provost’s Council, with recommendation of the two previous standard bearers, choose a young man to be the new Cornet. The Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, carries the official letter to the Cornet-Elect’s house, setting off at 7 p.m. When the band walk north they play ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and when they turn to the south they play ‘Rumblin Brig’, then they play ‘Teribus’ as the letter is handed over. In the house are gathered the Cornet’s family and friends. The new Cornet goes outside to greet the crowd and there is a strive. The Halberdier is then given the acknowledgement and rewarded with a new shilling. The Officer and band return to the Town Hall, where ‘Teribus’ is again played as the reply is handed in. There is meanwhile a procession on foot by the Cornet’s party through the older parts of town, specifically visiting the site of the Toll farthest from the Cornet’s house, and ending at the Town Hall, with a short sing-song. After the Procession there is the congratulatory Smoker and the Lasses Association dinner. Formerly the parade would have stopped at the houses of the Ministers, the Senior Bailie and several inns. The new Cornet’s Tie is only revealed in a shop window after the Pickin. The practice of the Drums and Fifes escorting the Burgh Officer on Picking Night stopped for many years, but was revived in 1887.
the Pick Inn

the Pick Inn (thu-pik-in) n. former hostelry at the Mid Row in the mid-19th century.

the Picmaw Moss (thu-pik-maw-mos) n. boggy area near Kirkton Hill, formerly known as Buckstruther, and being essentially the same as the area now also called Adderstonelee Moss (also spelled 'Pickmaw').

the Picts (thu-pikts) n., pl. people of northern Scotland, of uncertain origin, who remained unconquered by the Romans. The chronicler Gildas says that in the 5th century they penetrated southwards as far as Hadrian's wall. If so, they may have had some influence on the Hawick area, and may have spoken a Brythonic ('p-Celtic') language, in common with early Teries. However, there is no evidence to support connections that were once believed to exist with the Bernwicks or Catrail and the Mote. In 685 the Bernician (including the Hawick area) King Egfrith was defeated at 'Nech tansmere' in Fife when attacking into Pictland. Exactly who the Picts were is unclear, but by about 900 they had disappeared as a separate people and become part of the 'Scots'. It was said by Boece that they made a liquor from heather flowers, the process being lost with them. Leyden tells of a version of this story popular in Teviotdale, with the last Pictish warrior refusing to divulge the secret - '...And frequent wake the wild inspired lay, On Teviot's hills, beneath the Pictish sway' [JL] (probably from the Latin for 'painted').

the Picts-work Ditch see the Pict's Work Dyke

the Pict’s Work Dyke (thu-pikts-wurk-dik) n. an older popular name for the Catrail (also 'the Picts-work Ditch' and similar).

pictur (pik-tur) n. a picture - 'go'an hing that pictur up for is', '...That pictier's deed, and this is leevin' [JBS], 'A mairch eend ti the 'Gazette' Office, an bocht a wheen pictier-postcairds' [ECS], '...bye auld Hornshole, - a pictier o gray an green ...' [WL], '...in an effort tae pictier tae theirel's the toon in the hollow o' the hills' [BW1939] (also spelled 'pictier').

pictur-hoose (pik-tur-hoos) n. a picture-house, cinema, especially the 'Kings', 'Piv' or 'Wee Then' in the hey-day of the cinema in Hawick - 'The attendances at the pictur-hooses hev proved that ...' [BW1939].

the pictures (thu-pik-turz) n., the pictures, cinema – ‘oo aye went ti the pictures on Seturdi mornins’, ‘Skinny Malinky long legs, umbrella feet. Went to the pictures and couldn’ find a seat’, ‘Maist folk ken when the word ‘picters’ is mentioned that it refers tae the cinema’ [BW1938].

the Pictur Theatre (thu-pik-thee-a-tur) n. full name for the former cinema on Croft Road, more popularly known as the Wee Thea.

piddle (p-dul) v., arch. to walk with quick short steps (noted by J. Jamieson).

pie (pl) n. a pie, almost exclusively referring to a meat pie, often with minced mutton – ‘Ee got pies and tei at the muckle tent And eer chin was covered with leather’ [AOC].

piece (pees) n. a sandwich, often plural, and usually referring to something eaten as part of a packed lunch – ‘mind an bring pieces for yer denner’, ‘Mother, gie’s a peece, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘How we used to set off in the morning with a “piece” in our pocket’ [BM1905], ‘Ma, if ma tei’s no ready, Goan gie is a jelly piece’ [AY], ‘Noo busy wi’ a jelly piece, The schule forgot, he stole oot-bye . . .’ [WFC], ‘A herbour for auld mittlins O’ lang-forgotten pieces . . .’ [DH].

piecer (pee-sur) n., arch. someone (often a child) formerly employed in the spinning industry to gather and reattach broken threads or specifically to join the ‘cardings’ by feeding them onto the ‘creeping cloth’ of the ‘slubbing’ frame. They usually joined the ‘rovings’ at the back of the ‘billey frame’, and the required repeated action would often make their fingers bleed. More recently the term meant someone who made their pay by piece work rather than by the hour – ‘. . . unconscious of his identity, he remarked to the foreman: ‘That’s the kind of piecer to keep’’ [JHH], ‘. . . as her son Rob and I were piecers together’ [JTU].

piecin machine (pee-sin-mu-sheen) n. a machine that replaced the work of ‘piecers’ and the ‘slubbing billy’, joining together the pieces coming off the carding machines. It was introduced in Hawick by Melrose’s about 1844, and probably invented by James Melrose.

Piehill (pI-hil) n. former name for a farm, perhaps in Cavers Parish. John Douglas, tenant in Cavers, but called ‘of Piehill’ is recorded in a ‘letter of reduction’ of 1630, brought by William Ben-net. Alexander Chisholme of Piehill is referred to in a ‘respite’ for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell in 1593 (but this could have been an error for ‘Parkhill’).

Pie Oliver (pl-o-lee-vur) n. nickname for members of a particular branch of the Oliver family. This could be the same as the ‘Pies Oliver’ recorded in the ‘Hawick Immortals’ poem – ‘Wullie the Paidle, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI].

piggie-bank (pi-gee-bawnegk) n. an earthenware vessel in which coins are saved – ‘The boy admitted entering a house in Beaconsfield Terrace in March and stealing 13s from a piggie-bank’ [HEx1965] (cf. pig)

Pigot’s (pi-gits) n. J. Pigot & Co., publishing company that produced useful directories in the early 19th century. The 1826/7 ‘New Commercial Directory of Scotland’ (compiled about a year earlier) and 1837 ‘National Commercial Directory of Scotland’ are particularly useful for tracking down people, businesses etc. in Hawick and neighbouring areas before the censuses began. These directories were continued by Slater’s Royal National Commercial Directory, which came out with local content in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893.

pike (pi-k) n., arch. a pick, spike, prong – ‘. . . Till a reid hette pyke the master gatte, And gave his loone a prodde’ [JTe] (also written ‘pyke’).

pike (pi-k) n., arch. a peaked stack of hay, erected temporarily in a field, a haystack, a sharp pointed hill v., arch. to make a haystack (from Medieval English; essentially the same word is used locally in the names of some peaked hills).

the Pike (thu-pik) n. hill about 10 km due south of Hawick, between Penchrise and the Maidens. It reaches 463 m. The Catrail crosses near the summit. Alexander Gordon refers to it as ‘Carriage Hill’ (the same name is used for a feature on the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley and for a hill on the south side of the Tima valley).

the Pike (θu-pík) n. hill that is essentially the western side of Pike Fell in the Slitrig valley (note the confusion with the hill a couple of miles to the west).

Pike Fell (pi-kfel) n. hill on the eastern side of the upper Slitrig valley, near Shankend. It reaches a height of 400 m and has a triangulation pillar. Its south-eastern spur is called simply ‘The Pike’.

Pike Fell (pi-kfel) n. hill on the border of Roxburghshire and Dumfrieshire, at the head of the Routine Burn, and hence effectively the start of the Hermitage valley. It reaches a height of 499 m.

Pike Hill (pi-k-hiel) n. hill between the upper Borthwick and Teviot valleys, east of Howpasley Hope, reaching a height of 419 m.

Pikensteed (pi-kin-steed) n. possible name for former lands in Liddesdale, transcribed as ‘Pikensteid’ on the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 14 shillings, and with no tenant. The location is uncertain. It is possible that it is the same as ‘Piperstede’ recorded in c.1376.

piker (pi-kur) n., arch. a person who makes haystacks.

Pike Sike (p=ik-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Thorlieshope Height and running roughly north-west to the Thorlieshope Burn.

Pikethaw Hill (pi-k-thaw-hil) n. high hill on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfrieshire, just to the south of the pass at Ewes Doors. It reaches a height of 564 m and has a substantial cairn on its summit. It is essentially where the Lymiecleuch Burn rises. It has been suggested that a volcanic dyke stretches from here to Skelfhill Pen (also written ‘Pikethowe’, it appears as ‘Pikethon’ in a Transactions article of 1875).

the pillar (θu-pí-lur) n., arch. raised platform in a church on which penitents had to appear at prescribed times, equivalent in function to the repentance stool. In St. Mary’s this was probably located along the same wall as the pulpit, surrounded by a rail and reached by a small ladder. The one in Wilton also required a ladder – ‘...they had to appear on a small raised platform, sometimes termed ‘the pillar’, and at other times ‘the stool of repentance’, which occupied a conspicuous place in the church’ [JJV].

Pilmuir (pi-l-mur) n. farm near Wulliestruther and Hawick Moor, also known as the Muir Farm. It is part of the Commonfeud to the farmer, being set up as a 250 acre farm and leased to John Wilson in 1787, with rent going to the Common Good. Part of the farm was used for Common Riding races before 1854. George Hart was farm steward there in 1861 and James Stein recorded as farmer there in 1868. ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilmuir’ was painted by J.E.D. Murray in 1889. The riding of the marches at Pilmuir resumed as part of the Thursday morning events from 1900, with the entire Common being encircled in the ride. It was also the location of the partaking of Curds and Cream (and hence ‘the Hut’) at the Chases in the years 1882 and 1901–11. A piece of worked flint found there is in the Museum (the origin is possibly from Old Welsh for ‘bog or pond’ plus ‘muir’ or Old English ‘peel’ for a stockade, thus meaning an enclosed moor).

Pilmuir Rig (pi-l-mur-rig) n. hill above Pilmuir farm, also used as the name of the small farm to the south of the main farm of Pilmuir. This farm was first let to Thomas Scott in 1778, after the Division of the Common. The name is also applied to the surrounding part of Hawick Common. On maps it specifically applies to the high ground to the south-east of Pilmuir farm. The area was used for the morning race meetings of the Common Riding from 1822–53 – ‘...And round Pilmuir-rig we’ll canter, Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamper’ [AB], ‘Pilmuir Rig and Everha’, Sawmill and Stircles Mains; Drinkstone, Tandlaw and Boonraw Wi’ a’ their burns and lanes’ [WL].

the Pilmuir Stakes (θu-pil-mur-staks) n. race during the Common Riding, at one time for the Cornet’s Father and his supporters. It was started at least as early as the 1880s.

Pilmuir Syke (pi-l-mur-sik) n. former ditch near the Flex, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It is not clear exactly where it was, even based on the 1767 description of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison. James Wilson describes it as lying at the head of Flex inclosures.

Pilstown (pils-town) n. said to have been the commander of some English persecuting regiment that passed through Hawick in 1716; however, it is unclear who he was. The Council charged the Burgesses to help transport their baggage to Lauder, and townspeople were also meant to provide billets for the soldiers. Some citizens of Hawick refused to provide for the men or to help carry their baggage, being then fined or imprisoned – ‘A party is fined for disobeying the bailies anent the quartering and billets given for the said Pilstown’s Regiment last week’ [JW], ‘Or wi’ the

pingle (pīng-ul) n., arch. a small pan – ' . . . twa-three eggs . . . We were boiling in the pingle' [HSR].

pingle (pīng-ul) v., arch. to toil, struggle, work in a trifling way or work industriously and with difficulty – ' . . . many an industrious housewife was able, by hard 'pingling' to augment a husband's scanty wage' [JTu], 'Ti pingle = to labour with assiduity (cf. Wilson's 'Tales') : to strive; work hard (cf. Ransay's). Often applied to the toiling of a seamstress, pinglin an sheww-in' [ECS], applied specifically to snow whirling about, as if struggling to reach the ground, to tingle – 'Far better had I em'd an' miss'd. I only hurt my pinglin' fist . . .' [WP].

Pinglehole (pīng-ul-höl) n. former farm just south of Saughtree off the B6357 by the Liddel Water, now being just a couple of cottages. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 339 acres, bounded by Saughtree, Burnmouth, Riccarton and 'Leys'. It also shared a small strip of common land with Saughtree and the farmhouse was in roughly the location of the modern cottages. William Elliot was there in 1694. Pinglehole Sike joins the Liddel Water near there. Robert Armstrong was shepherd there in 1797. There were Hislops and Grieves there in 1841 (shown on Pont's 1809 map as a tower-house, 'Pingillholls', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Pingilholls', on de Wit's c. 1680 map as 'Pingilhols' and is 'Pingleholes' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is probably the place marked 'Hole' on Stobie's 1770 map; it was 'Pingleholls' in 1662, 'Pingellhols' in 1694 and appears to be 'Pringlehole' in 1797; the origin may be either 'enclosure in the hollow' or 'valley of toil').

Pinglehole Sike (pīng-ul-höl-sik) n. stream in upper Liddlesdale, rising on Shiel Knowe and running roughly southwards to join the Liddel Water downstream from Saughttree.

pinglin aboot (pīng-lin) adj., arch. swirling about (of snow), but not quite lying on the ground (see pingle).

Pinker Cleuch (pīng-kur-klooch) n. small stream that passes the farm of Sunnyside and joins the Kirkton Burn (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

pinkie (pīng-kee) n. little finger – 'A stayed ma pinkie on that hamme', any small thing (from Dutch; also spelled 'pinky').

Pinkie (pīng-kee) n. battle site by the Esk near Musselburgh, also called Pinkie Cleugh. Here in 1547 the Scots under Hamilton Earl of Arran, were defeated by the English under Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset (who had been the Earl of Hertford). Somerset had come to seize the infant Mary, who was instead spirited away to France. The huge losses of the Scots led to this day being known as 'Black Sunday'. It was the last engagement of the two national armies. Many local men must have been involved, and the dead included George Home, Laird of Wolfelee. Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch led part of the Scots force, while the Kers switched sides and supported the English (it is written as 'Pynkyne Feild' in 1547/8).

Pinnacle (pi-nu-kul) n. farm on the south bank of the Ale Water, just east of Belses, in Ancrum Parish. It is part of a charter, along with Broomlands, given by Robert Scott of Howpsley to Hector Turnbull in 1550. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century. In 1643 these lands in Ancrum Parish are recorded as ‘Morriishall, his lands in Belses called Pinnacle’, valued at £766 13s 4d; however, it is unclear what ‘Morriishall’ refers to. It was owned by George Wauchope in 1678 and valued at £500. A small part seemed to have also been included among the lands of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1678, valued at £42. In 1788 part of it was listed among the properties of William Scott of Burnhead and valued at £42, while the main part was valued at £500 and owned by William Sibbald. John Park was there in 1797, Roderick McKenzie in 1852 and William Thomas in 1868. There is a square-shaped dovecote there (it is ‘Pinnakill’ in 1852, ‘Pinacle’ and ‘Peickhill’ in 1678, ‘Penickle’ in 1684 and ‘Penickhill’ in 1788; this is probably the ‘Penickle’ on Pont’s 1590s manuscript and ‘Pendickill’ marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Pinnacle (pi-nu-kul) n. former name for lands near Clarilaw, to the north of Hawick. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describe it as ‘Pennick-hill or Pinnacle’, partly owned (along with Wester Clarilaw) by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead. It may be the same place as Pinnacle near Belses.

pinner (pi-nur) n., arch. a woman’s close-fitting cap with 2 long flaps – ‘[A person is convicted of stealing] ane laced pinner from the spouse of Richard Myles, piriwigg maker’ [BR1697].

pipe-an-dottle (pип-an-dп-tul) n., arch. a large ripe acorn still on its stalk – ‘But for borrowed beauty oot o’ a bottle – I wadna gie ye a pipey dottle!’ [WL] (also written ‘pipey dottle’ etc.).

Pinkie Burn

pipe-an-kivver (pип-an-ki-vur) n., arch. an acorn still in its case, a variant of pipe-an-dottle.

Pipe Hill (пип-hil) n. hill above Pipewellheugh, the steep banking off Buccleuch Road on the way out of Hawick.

Pipeloch (pип-loch) n. fanciful name for the source of the Pipewell spring – ‘It minds me of those youthful days When we went hand in hand, To sport upon the Pipeloch braes, A blythsome little band’ [VW], ‘And a’ my heart’s thirst slocken in the Pipeloch clear and cool’ [JYH].

piper (пип-pur) n. a person who plays the pipes, usually meaning the bagpipes, although possibly other instruments. In 1627, 2 of those were listed by the Bailies of Hawick as ‘idle and masterless’ men fit for military service were named as ‘pypers’, John Tait and John Laing. In 1632 the Lord of Buccleuch made a payment ‘to three English pypers at Branxholm’. In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Baron of Regality only use the Town’s own drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’. William Turnbull was elected as Town Piper in 1674 ‘and directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. James Turnbull (d.1686) was piper to Abbotrule Parish. The ‘town’s officer, piper, and drummer’ were each allowed money for new coats in 1702, suggesting that at this time the piper was a separate position. William Turnbull was recorded as a piper in Hawick in 1702 and 1706. In 1704 it is recorded that funds were needed for ‘pypers shoes’. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town’s officer, piper, and drummer’ were each allowed money for new coats in 1702, suggesting that at this time the piper was a separate position. William Turnbull was recorded as a piper in Hawick in 1702 and 1706. In 1704 it is recorded that funds were needed for ‘pypers shoes’. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not give an allowance to the piper, but ‘what people shall give him out of their own pockets’ (see also Toon Piper).

Piper Burn (пип-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising in Harden Moss and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel approximately opposite Powisholm farm.

piper-faced (пип-pirseд) adj., arch. pale-faced (from the former belief that playing pipes was harmful for the lungs).

Piper’s Knowe (пип-z-now) n. north-eastern spur of Greenbank Hill in the Borthwick valley.

Pipersteed (пип-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘ Piperstede’ in a rental roll of c.1376, and valued at 4 shillings. It was part of the area known as ‘Ludne’, which made up part of the western side of the Liddel valley, so it was probably situated somewhere to the north-west of the present-day Newcastleton (it is possibly the same as ‘Piknesteid’ recorded in 1541).

the pipes (thu-pips) n. the bagpipes or Border pipes. In Hawick it seems that the traditional instrument was the bagpipes in the 18th century, with the Town Piper being hired until about the turn of the 19th century, when he was effectively replaced with fifers. However, it is uncertain if there were fifers earlier than this, and it is also unclear when the town started to have a piper – ‘she raised ti play just the chanter, bit now she’s moved on ti the pipes’ (see also Toon Piper).

pipe-staple (pip-staw-pul) n., arch. a clay pipe stem, pipe shank – ‘I’ll go to such a place, though it should rain auld wives and pipe-stapples’ [JoJ]. ‘We got dirty bletters at the Killin’-hoose and blew them up wi’ pipe-stapples for fitbas’ [HAST1958], hence any small thing (also pipe-stopplie and pipe-stoppitl or ‘peip-stopplet’; J. Jamieson notes that ‘stapplick’ was a synonym in Roxburghshire, see stopple).

the Pipe Well (thu-pip-wel) n. spring at Pipewellheugh, fitted with an iron pipe and trough, which supplied water for travellers along the New Road.

Pipewellheugh (pi-pul,-pip-wel,hewh) n. steep wooded bank on the other side of the main road from Langlands Bridge, in the middle of which a stream supplied the Pipe Well. The name has also been used to describe the area around the well. Before the main highway was directed that way in 1815, it presumably just had a smaller-scale track. A dry-stone wall was built along the New Road there in the late 19th century, using stones from the Mid Row. The wall was entirely rebuilt in the mid-1990s. A strong garlic smell in the area is due to the abundance of Ramsons Allium ursinum, i.e., wild garlic. There were also lands in Jedburgh called by the same name in the 17th century. From a verse written around the time of the disputed 1809 Common Riding it seems clear that a senior member of the Town Council lived near here at that time – ‘Trace the source of all your troubles Where the Pipe’lheugh fountain bubbles; There a groggy club are lolling, While the Sabbath bells are tolling’ [JH]. ‘It is exceedingly abundant in woods and shady banks such as Pipe-well-heugh’ [JAHM].

Pipleheugh (pi-pul,-hewh) n. shortened form of Pipewellheugh, also being a name used in the 19th century to refer to a piece of land west of Balcary, and somewhat distant from Pipewellheugh. More confusingly its name was later changed to Pipewellhaugh, and now corresponds roughly to Langheugh Road.

Pipleheughfit (pi-pul-hew-fi’) n. name used for the foot of the Pipewellhaugh area. It is referred to in a boundary dispute of the 1780s, between Elliot of Langlands and Scott of Buccleuch.

the Pipleheugh Well (thu-pi-pul-hew-wel) n. iron trough on the south side of Buccleuch Road near Langlands Bridge. Once a source of drinking water for horses or cattle entering the town from the south. A series of land slips in the 1980s resulted in the demise of the spring which fed the trough. The supporting wall along the roadside was rebuilt in the 1990s.

Pippleheugh (pi-pul-hew) n. sometimes version of Pipewellheugh, referring to the well.

Pirie (pee-ree) n. Miss ran a seminary in Backdamgate for reading, writing and sewing, in the early 19th century, recorded in Pigot’s 1825 directory. William (15th/16th C.) witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskines lands at Synton. He may have been local like several of the other witnesses.

Pirnie (pir-nie) n. Alexander ‘Alex’ (1825-79) local stone-mason. He was born in Edinburgh, son of stone mason Alexander and Agnes. Apprentice to his father in Kikliston, he then moved back to Edinburgh, where he worked for the architects firm Peddie & Kinneear in Edinburgh, and pirnie-cap

for James Harkness, builders in Hawick in 1859. His workmanship can be seen at 4 Tower Knowe in the ornamental cornices on what was the Commercial Bank and at the former Royal Bank of Scotland at 12 High Street. He also carved the bust of Burns that is at the Burns Club, as well as a head of Garibaldi and the lions on the Monteach Mausoleum. By 1861 he is living in Wilton, where he appears to have stayed for the rest of his life. He died intestate, and was then described as a ‘stone-hewer’. He married Isabella Dawson, and had at least 2 children, Janet and Alex. He is buried in Wellowate Cemetery.

The singing of the Common Riding song on the Thursday before the festival was started in his time. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. There is a photograph of him outside the school with a group of pupils. He married Eliza, daughter of Adam Laing, and grand-daughter of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’.

pitch an toss (pich-an-tos) n. a gambling game played by tossing coins and shouting ‘heads’ or ‘tails’. It has long been a pastime of a sector of the local men, e.g. there was often a gambling ring in the Upper Haugh on summer evenings, Saturday afternoons and Common Riding mornings in the 19th century. A note at the end of ‘Hawick Immortals’ describes how the ‘pitch’ part was usually dispensed with, since the focus was on gambling, with one man tossing up 5 pennies and the others betting on the result.

Pit-derk (pi’-derk) adj., arch. pitch dark (see pit).

the Playin Fields (thu-plä-in-feeldz) n. name sometimes given to the part of the Park on the south side of the river, off Buccleuch Road, used for playing various sports. Roughly the same area has also been known as Corseflat and the Gardener’s Haughs. It was at one time a nursery, then known as Wester Flatflat, and then was allotments. A petition of 1859 asked the Duke of Buccleuch to keep this trip of land for recreational use. It was gifted to the town in 1931 by later Duke, after he had passed through Hawick during the Vertish Hill children’s procession. It was hence also known as ‘the Buccleuch Playing Fields’, is about 5 acres, and effectively forms an addition to the Park. An all-weather sports ground was built there in 2005, adjacent to the Volunteer pitch, and also referred to as Volunteer Park.

the Playlaw (thu-plä-law) n. name for the area around the Mid Raw (now Drumlanrig Square), in use in the 16th{18th} centuries – ‘Bailie Graham and Thomas Bridges [were ordered to collect] westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’ [PR1717] (origin possibly a form of ‘plea-law’ indicating a judicial use in the past; also spelled ‘Plawlaw’, ‘Play-la’ and other variants).

Pleaknowe (plee-now’) n. farmstead before Shankend on the Newcastleton Road, with the hill itself containing the remains of forts and settlements. It was once part of the farm of Langburnshiels. John Armstrong was shepherd there in the 1840s to 60s. It could be the ‘Placknowe’ near Hawick where W. Scott was recorded in a directory of 1868 (the etymology is possibly related to a quarrel).

pleasit (plee-see’, -si’) pp., arch. pleased – ‘Be pleeset, O Lord, til delifer me . . . ’ [HSR].
pled (pled) pp. past tense and participle of ‘plead’, used particularly in legal contexts—‘hei pled guilty ti causin a public misuse’, ‘If only I could, juist yince’, he pled Wi every ‘heid-yin’ nigh …’ [DH] (‘pleaded’ is more common in England).

pledge (plej) n., arch. a person standing as security for another, a hostage—‘…Philpe Turnbull, as pleis and souerte for Stewyn Twrnbull, his brother …’ [SB1500] (arbitrarily plural in older local documents).

the pledges (thin-ple-jeez) n., arch. a game popular with youths up until the latter part of the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson). It involved 2 teams of roughly 12–20 a-side, and was played on open ground with a line drawn and with coats, hats etc. acting as the ‘pledges’, placed 20 or 30 yards from the line. The object of the game was to capture the ‘pledges’ of the opposing team without being caught. Captures occurred through either being touched in ‘enemy territory’ or dragged over the line. Such players then became ‘prisoners’ who could be freed by being touched by a member of their own team. The game often started with a mock taunt such as ‘Set your foot on Scotch ground, ye English, if ye dare’! The teams often formed themselves into 2 lines, with the stronger boys in front and the faster ones behind. Wilson’s description sounds astonishingly like rugby, which would only be played in Hawick from 1872 – ‘…to enjoy on the Haugh …a game at the pledges’, which sport was greatly in vogue among youths in those days …’ [RM].

pleasant (plee-zin’, plee-zint) adj., arch. pleasant—‘…the plerrg herp wi the psaltrrie’ [HSR], ‘…for it is pleesint, an’ praysie is bonne’ [HSR] ‘…oth o sic bonne bits ti pit bye an huirrd in eis posie o pleezant maimeries’ [ECS], ‘Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair pleasant …’ [AY], ‘Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleasant …’ [DH].

Plummer (plu-mur) n. Andrew of Middletstead (17th/18th C.) farmer in Selkirkshire. In 1678 he paid the land tax on part of Lindean in Selkirk Parish, as well as lands in Midlem (in Bowden Parish). Also in 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 for Selkirkshire and in 1690 for Selkirkshire along with William, probably a son. In 1711 he was one of the founders of the ‘Honest Country Club’. His son Gavin became a Burgess of Edinburgh, and his grandson Andrew became one of the first Professors of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1726, while a later Andrew of Middletstead was another enthusiast of the Border ballad whose death allowed Sir Walter Scott to become Sheriff-depute of Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his son William, who married Jane, daughter of William Kerr of Sunderland Hall. Andrew of Middletstead (1748–99) Sheriff of Selkirkshire, preceding Sir Walter Scott in this office. He was also known as an antiquarian. He owned Sunderland and Sunderlandhall as well as Middletstead. He paid the land tax in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Selkirkshire. He had 4 horses according to the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane, sister of Gavin Elliot of Midlem. Their children were: William,

Poachin (pö-chin) n. the act of taking fish or game illegally. This has a long history locally. ‘Kinly Stick’ (George Hunter) and ‘Heather Jock’ (John Mitchell) were well-known local poachers in the mid-19th century. A large gang of poachers operated in the Borthwick valley in the early 19th century, with a reputation for even roasting whole sheep on their days-long forays; the local lairds and authorities formed a ‘posse’ which rounded up 20 of these men in 1832. The appointment of a constable in Hawick in about 1832 led to a domination of the practice. Views on the legality of taking salmon from local rivers have historically differed between various segments of the population. Skills with the ‘cleek’ and ‘gig’ have been carefully passed on for generations in some families.

Pock (pok) n., arch., poet. a sack, poke, bag, wallet – ‘And straight they went to the ty-thing pocke, ’Twas heapit to the heade...’ [JTe].

The Poetical Museum (thu-po-ki’her-kew-leez) n. nickname for Danny Shannon.

The Poetical Museum (thu-pö-e’ee-kul-mew-zee-un) n. book published in Hawick in 1784 by George Caw, with full title ‘The Poetical Museum, Containing Songs and Poems on almost every subject, Mostly from Periodical Publications’. It was the first significant publication from Hawick. It contains a miscellany of pieces, including the first appearance in print of some of the Border ballads (‘Dick o the Cow’, ‘Jock o the Side’ and ‘Hobbie Noble’), as well as other ballads that had already appeared elsewhere (‘Child Maurice’, ‘Adam o’ Gordon’, ‘The Battle of Red-swire’, ‘Johnie Armstrong’, ‘Hardyknuite’ and ‘The Wee Wee Man’). There is a piece of verse from Thomas Telford, and a few poems that appear to be genuinely of local production, such as ‘The Braes of Branczhoml’ and ‘Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitslade’. There are also many anonymous poems that may be by local writers. However, most of the selections are pastoral verse, such as by Ramsay, and other well known writers of the day included Fergusson, Smollet and Thomson. Several variants appear to have been...

published, including some substituting the poem ‘Modern Chastity’ for ‘Acrostic by a young girl in Hawick’. The subscription list is also interesting, since out of 158 names listed (including 9 women), most are from Hawick and district, and so it gives insight into the supporters of literature and local traditions in the 1780s.

poffle (po-ful) n., arch. a small farm, croft (noted by J. Jamieson; it survives in Roxburghshire in the placename ‘Maxpoffle’).

poin’d (point, pind) v. to impound, seize, distraint, explicitly a term in Scots Law relating to the seizure of a debtor’s property for sale – ‘Mr Patrick Cunningham is fined for reproachfull language against the bailies, in saying that in spite of them, and they were hanged, they should not poin’d him upon their decreet . . .’[BR1676], ‘. . .onlawed in ane deforcement of yr. officer when he come to poin’d for his fyne . . .’[BR1693], ‘. . .otherwise the cattle so found will be poin’d for trespass toties quoties’[BR1777] (also spelled ‘poynd’).

Polesman (pöz-mum) n. nickname for Walter Scott. Hawick Burgess in the mid-17th century.

the Police Act (thu-po-lees-awk’t) n. usually referring to the Police and Improvement Act of 1861, which revised Hawick’s Town Council, did away with the Burgesses, and altered the boundaries of Hawick to include Wilton. It is also sometimes known as the Burgh Improvement Act. This was a Special Act brought to Parliament, following the general Police of Towns (Scotland) Act of 1850 and an 1857 Act of Parliament ordering all remaining Burgh and County areas in Scotland to establish proper police forces, as well as elected councils responsible for paving, lighting, cleansing, etc. The Police force itself was set up following a separate Act of 1846. The bounds of the Town for the purposes of policing were stated in about 1850 to be within 1000 yards of the Cross (see also the polis).

the Police Court (thu-po-lees-kör’) n. former term for the Magistrate’s court held in Hawick – ‘It is the Police Court To which I say ye should resort. There go and mark each separate case, There go and watch the Bailie’s face . . .’[JCG] (also Bailie Court).

the Police Station (thu-po-lees-stā-shin) n. the station was originally situated in the old Town House, with the Burgh police force occupying a space below the Council Chambers. It later moved to the Cross Wynd, and was then into the new Town Hall building. This had 4 cells and an exercise yard. The separate station for the county police force was once on the Mill Path, built (or perhaps renovated) in the 1890s to designs by J.P. Alison. A new Station was built in 1964 at Wilton Hill, the Roxburgh, Berwick and Selkirkshire force being amalgamated into the Lothian and Borders Police in 1976. The Police Station in Denholm was formerly located on the south side of Eastgate, and there was also once a station at ‘the Coppes’ outside Robertson (see also the polis).

the Policeman’s Brae (thu-po-lees-nunz-brä) n. old name still sometimes used for the Cross Wynd, from the Police Station that was there until about 1964.

policy (po-lee-see) n. an improvement or development of a town, park of an estate, ornamental ground – ‘Bye the policies o Ancrum Hoose . . .’[ECS], ‘Sent for by Col. Vassall desiring me to find out if possible who did the damage to Pol-acy Dyke’[RG].

the polis (thu-po-lees, pō-lees) n. police, referring to the police force, or one or more policemen or policewomen – ‘if ee deh stop that racket A’ll get the polis on ee’, ‘At the Polis Coort on Monday They will stand before the bar . . .’[WE], ‘The Polis brings his previous bell. He’s now like any rock . . .’[WP], ‘. . .They never cared a resh for bailies, polis, or kirk-bell' [DH]. A properly organised force took a long time to organise, with each Burgh left to make its own arrangements. In 1805 the Privy Council recommended that Roxburghshire should have a force of 39 men, but the county force was not established until much later. The Town Council resolved to improve the system of policing in 1806 (probably meaning that they employed a constable for the first time). In the early 19th century the Hawick Burgh force consisted only of the Sheriff Officer (or constable), plus the 2 Burgh Officers, and this for a population of about 7,000. A proper town force was established in 1846. A constable’s baton from the 19th century is in the Museum. There were also rural police stations, the one in Newcastleton being at 15 Douglas Square (see also the Police Station).

the Porch Door (thu-por-ch-dor) n. former name for the 3rd of the entrances to the pre-1763 version of St. Mary’s Kirk, this one being through the tower – ‘John Glendinen att ye Porch door’ [PR1718].

porritch (po-rich, po-reech) n. porridge – ‘Ee’ll no sup thae guid porreetch? My haith! ee’re owre saucy’ [ECS], ‘The hameily porridge Chief o’ Scotia’s food That folk avoided Whenever they could’ [DH] (note the ch sound rather than j; also written ‘porreeth’ and variants; see also parritch).

Porritch Jock (po-rich-jok) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Dan Nary and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cut and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andrà Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI] (possibly related to Tammy Porritch).

port (pöö’) n., arch. a town gateway or portal, such as the 4 main examples in Hawick, the North Port, East Port, Sooth Port and West Port (see the Ports).

port (pöö’) v., arch. to throw a curling stone between two others, to aim between two things generally – ‘But then here was the twae fresh hands, an’ he was just portin’ right atween them’ [BCM1881].

Porteous (por-shis) n. Agnes (17th C.) cot-tar at Appletreethall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her forename is written ‘Agneus’. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. His lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £10. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the Andrew listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was reported to the Session in 1725 when he required assistance ‘in regard of his numerous years and want of sight’. It was said that his elder son George was in a good financial position to support him, while his other son was not. His wife was Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1680), baptised in Roberton Parish; Thomas (b.1684); George (b.1688), who married Janet Harkness; and probably Helen (b.1693). His sons were probably the Hawick carriers of the early 18th century. The witnesses in 1680 were George and William Scott, who were probably related to his wife. The 1688 witnesses were Thomas Bridges and Michael Turnbull. Andrew (d.1794) flesher in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for tobacconist William Sadler. Probably the same man is recorded with surname ‘Pertos’ in 1751 when he paid the Hawick Town Council for renting the ‘leach [probably ‘low’] prison’ (perhaps for the purposes of selling meat, but this is unclear). He died in Hawick Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) butcher in Hawick. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as owner of part of Weensland, which had been purchased from Robert Scott. Francis (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (d.1684) tenant in Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1684. George (b.1688) son of Andrew and Helen Scott, he was a carrier in Hawick. He was probably brother of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick at the same time. In 1716 he married Janet, daughter of William Harkness. Their children included: Mary (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Ann (b.1727); Bessie (b.1725); and James (b.1732). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Andrew and William Ogilvie and the 1727 one by Bailie Martin and Francis Ruecastle. Isobel (17th/18th C.) wife of William Taylor. She was recorded in the Hawick Session records of 1721 being rebuked for her drunken behaviour in the Kirk. James (d.c.1681) tenant in ‘Minto-hill’ when his will was recorded in 1681. Perhaps the same James was owner of a piece of land in Lanton, according to the 1678 valuation roll. James (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule according Porteous Croft

Porteous Croft (pör-shis-kroft) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1643 it was rated at £78. In 1788 it was part of the lands owned by William Riddell of Camieston, later passing to William Currie of Linthill.

Porteous’ Well (pör-shi-seez-wel) n. former public water supply above the Mid Row, also known as ‘Michie’s Well’.

porter (pör-ur) n., arch. a part of the weave, consisting of 20 spaces through which the warp threads are passed, the number of these per unit length determining the density of the weave – ‘In order to find the number of slips to warp any length of web, multiply the number of porters in width by the ells in length, and divide by 72’ [BCM1881].

porter (pör-ur) n., arch. someone in charge of a gate, particularly applied in former times to the resident of Ewes Doors, perhaps a soubriquet for the keeper of a changehouse at the pass there, with Ninian the Porter recorded as tenant of Ewes Doors in 1567 – ‘Item, to the porter of Ewisdyer for the rest of a price of ane horse, xij £ x s.’ [SB1574].

from about 1863. He was later Chief Constable for the county, based in Jedburgh.

Portyfield (pör'-ee) n., arch. short form for Portobello, once a popular seaside resort for Hawick folk to visit by train, with its promenade pier, artificial wave pool and other attractions – ‘Aw wis juist a lad at Wulton skull Juist a wee bit fella When ma mother broke the news ‘Oor gaun tae Portabella’’ [AY].

poss (pos) v., arch. to press, squeeze down, pound clothes in a tub – ‘They were weel-possed wi Carbolic saip, and weel syndit And hung-oot for a caller blaw ...’ [DH].

possess (po-zes) v., arch. to enter into legal possession of, to take possession of – ‘...and as he posset himself in the landis trewlie discret, su as he posset himself in the saidis landis quhilkins he falslie vitiatit in the foirsaid chairtour ...’ [SB1624].

posset pig (po-si’-pig) n., arch. a large earthenware vessel used for posset (a spiced drink made of hot milk curdled with ale or wine) – ‘...baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit ...’ [DMW1681].

post (pōst) n., arch. a courier, message carrier, person employed by a town (or other body) to carry letters and packages – ‘Given to William Broum Post in Hawick two ...for a session book ...& 4 shill Scots, for Carridge’ [WIl1706].

the Post (thu-pōst) n., arch. name used in the late 18th century for the local carrier assigned the duty of collecting (from Edinburgh) and distributing the mail.

postcaird (pōst-kārd) n. a postcard – ‘A maircht eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen pieter-postcairds’ [ECS], ‘A expecket a letter, bit an hei wrait iz was a bare postcaird’ [ECS], ‘Whae reads a’ the cotton-gress postcairds there, Sae fer frae the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].

postmaister (pōs-mās-tur) n. postmaster, someone in charge of a post office. In 1747 Andrew Turnbull is recorded as ‘Town Post’, although it is unclear what responsibilities he had. Hawick’s first actual postmaster was John Elliot, a tanner, who gave his services freely in 1767. He was followed by Mr. Turnbull, the schoolmaster, appointed by the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was found unsuitable. Then Elliot was re-appointed against his will! He stated that he was often away from home as one excuse, but was told that he was the only suitable person and so the public would just have to wait if he was away. James Inglis (schoolmaster and later Town Clerk) was postmaster in 1772, and at some later point the office was taken by Miss Inglis (probably James’ sister), who must have been one of the country’s first post-mistresses. Robert Armstrong took over in 1809 and held the position till his death in 1852. The position was then held by Francis Deans, George Deans, James Orr, H. Little and James M. Sampson, taking us up to the early 20th century – ‘But . . . whae’s postmaister on Post Office Knowe, Sae fer frae the haunts o’ men?’ [DH].

the Post Office (thu-pööst-o-fees) n. Hawick General Post Office was for a century on North Bridge Street, at the corner of Croft Road. It was built in 1892 on ground that had been J.E.D. Murray’s studio, and allotments before that. The architect was J.P. Alison, and the foundation stone was ceremonially laid by Mrs. Oliver (her husband having owned the land). A 2-storey addition was also designed by Alison in 1904. It was much altered over the years, with the sorting office moving to St. George’s Lane in 1972 and the Post Office vacating the premises entirely in 1993. The building later contained ‘Stampers’ bar and an Indian restaurant, and then the Con Club. Meanwhile the main Post Office moved to Safeway, which itself closed in 2004, leaving the Sandbed branch as the main one in the town. The earliest mention of local mail is from about 1760 when letters would come once a month from Jedburgh and be laid out in an open stall for collection. In 1766 the Council records show them paying a man explicitly to take a letter to Edinburgh. The origin of the organised mail service lies with Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, who (in 1767) started an experimental post thrice a week to and from Berwick and Edinburgh, with John Elliot the first part-time postmaster (note that Walter Scott of Harden had also pushed for twice weekly service from Edinburgh to Peebles, Selkirk and Hawick in the 1750s). A post office was established shortly afterwards through the efforts of the Duke of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain Robert Scott. James Inglis was recorded as post-master in 1772 when he and Bailie Hardie were paid by the Council ‘for post letters, &c’; postage from Edinburgh at that time appears to have been 2d. Before the establishment of a post office the letters were exposed at a stall on market days, or on the flat tombstones of the kirkyard after Sunday services. The route from London was to Edinburgh via Coldstream, and then via Dunbar and Berwick, and then by pony to Kelso and on to Hawick. There was a theft of mail bags near Kelso in 1800. Miss Inglis (Joanna) was postmistress until 1809, when Robert Armstrong took over. The first mail-coach (on the Carlisle-Hawick-Edinburgh route) started in 1807, so that not all mail had to come from Berwick and Kelso. The situation changed utterly with the coming of the penny post in 1840. The location marked on Wood’s 1824 map was the corner of Silver Street and the Howegate. The Post Office moved from the foot of the Howegate to the High Street in about 1860 and then to North Bridge Street in 1892. By the late 19th century there were also receiving stations on Wilton Path and Dowemount. Several sub-post offices later existed throughout the town, including at 7 Sandbed, Dowemount Place, Wilton Dean and Burnfoot, and at Safeway (closed 2004). Now only the Burnfoot and Sandbed branches survive – ‘But they’ve ta’en our Post Office away, That hez been there for mony a day, They didni care what Hawick folk felt, Doon the river oo’ve been sett’ [IW].

Post Office Knowe (pööst-o-fees-noo) n. hill on the Border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, just to the north of Craik Cross Hill. The name is mysterious – ‘Whae named yon hill-top ‘Post Office Knowe’, Fer frae the haunts o’ men, Ootbye Craik Cross abune Borthwick-heid? I’d fairly like tae ken’ [DH].

the Postrel (thu-pos-trul) n. name sometimes given to the doggerel verse ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells and first published in 1688.

post-seek (pööst-seek) a., arch. bedridden – ‘Post-sick, Expl. ‘bedrid’, Roxb. Often used; but whether the meaning be the same with that of the phrase, Postit with sickness, is doubtful’ [JoJ].

pot barley (po’-bawr-lee) n., arch. barley that has been milled to remove the husks, for use in soups etc. – ‘...sending him to Sandy Neil’s for washing soda and pot barley’ [JT].

Potburn (po’-burn) n. former farm adjacent to the Southern Upland Way, between Ettrick Pen and Pot Law. It was purchased by James Pott, W.S., in 1831. He was son of Gideon Pott of Dod (also written ‘Pottburn’).

pitch (poch) v., arch. to trample soft ground into mud – ‘...when the Magistrates and other persons at the Common-Riding potched the ground he had plowed’ [C&L1767].

pot-hole (po’-höl) n., arch. a deep hole or pool in a river.

pot-shakins (po’-shā-kinz) n. pot scrapings, the last to come out, last of a litter – ‘The pot-shakins o a big West End famaily Jock came efter his threi brothers and six sisters’ [IW].

the Pot Syke (thu-po’-sink) n. small stream in the upper part of the farm of Milsgington. It flows roughly southwards to join the Dean Burn. There is a local tradition that there may be buried treasure there, and hence a suggestion that this may have been where the bronze Roman leg was found in 1820 (also written ‘Pot Sike’; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Pott (po’, pot) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Dickson and their children included Bessie (b.1645). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included John (b.1669). Probably the same Adam, with wife Janet Riddell, was father of Janet (b.1679). Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in Kirkton Parish where he was married in 1714 (with no wife’s name given). Probably the same Adam married Helen ‘Kinarie’ in Kirkton Parish in 1717. His children baptised there included Adam (b.1717).

It seems that he was separate from his contemporary who farmed at Wolfelee and Shankend. Adam of Hoscote (1690/1-1770) probably eldest son of George. He was tenant farmer at Wolfelee around 1715, moving to Shankend by about 1730. He purchased the lands of Hoscote from the Homes in about 1723, starting his family’s association with that estate. He seems likely to be the Adam of ‘Outterside’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and was of Hoscott’ listed along with his son George among the Commissioners of Selkirkshire. He married Betty Elliot (1686/7-1752). His children included: George (1712-70), who succeeded; a daughter (1716/7-1774) who is only marked on the gravestone as ‘Mrs. Elliot’; Elizabeth (d.1783), who married Thomas Stavert, tenant at Coliforthill; William (b.1725); Jean (1727-77), who married Walter Grieve, farmer at Airdswood, and whose son John Grieve co-inherited Hoscote with George Stavert; William (again, 1728/9-75); and Janet (1730/1-57). The marriages of his daughters Elizabeth and Jean were at the same time in 1744 in Robertson Parish. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Learmonth in Robertson Parish in 1754 (and recorded as ‘Helen Learmond’ in Kirkton Parish). Their children included James (b.1765) and Adam (b.1768). He is probably also the father of John (b.1757), baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the Adam who witnessed a baptism for John Pott and Margaret Shiel in Wilton in 1747. Alexander of Borthwickshiels (d.1796), probably related to the Potts of Todrig, he was a surgeon in the West Indies. In 1788 he and Robert (possibly his son) are recorded as owners of Borthwickshiels, valued at £600. They were also recorded in 1788 as owners of land valued at £156, which had earlier been owned by William Scott of Galalaw (and was presumably Galalaw itself). His connection with Galalaw suggests that he was related to George of Todrig (possibly his father), who had married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw earlier in the 18th century. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for Robertson Parish in 1789-92. Although he died one year earlier, he is still recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Borthwickshiels in 1797. He was still listed as owner of Borthwickshiels on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (with George of Todrig listed as owner later in the 19th century). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1796, when he was recorded as a bachelor of Robertson, Selkirkshire. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1793/4-1859) younger son of Gideon of Dod, born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Burnfoot in the Ewes valley. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was at Burnfoot in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 2600 acres, employing 10 people. In 1823 he married Appalina Hogarth (who was born in 1796 in Channelkirk). Their children included: Mary; Elizabeth; Apalina Christina Hogarth, who married Robert Laidlaw Turnbull, one of the Turnbuls of Merrylaw; and probably Gideon (d.1913), who emigrated to Queensland. Andrew (17th C.) weaver living at ‘Todscleughside’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Andrew (1759/60-1844) son of Robert and Margaret. He was a resident of Castleton Parish and is probably the shepherd at Tweedenhead recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He married Betty Armstrong (1758/9-1820) and they had a son Robert (1801-75). The family are buried in Castleton. Arthur David Ripley (1862-1901) eldest son of Gen. David of Todrig and Borthwickshiels. He served with the K.O.S.B., being appointed Lieutenant in 1886 and Captain in 1894. He volunteered for active service along with his battalion in 1900 and was Staff Officer to the Commandant of Schweizer Reneke. He died of an abscess of the liver and is buried at Kimberley, South Africa. A memorial stone was erected in Roberton Cemetery. Gen. David of Todrig (1812-81) son of George and Katherine Reid and younger brother of George. He served in India during a rebellion in 1833 and during the Sutlej campaign, where he commanded the 47th Bengal Native Infantry. He received commendation for his command in Pegu Burnah in...
1854 and for commanding the 47th Regiment during the rebellion in China in 1858–59. He became a General in 1877 and was awarded the Companion of the Bath. He owned the lands of Whitslade and Borthwickshiels, among other local holdings. He married Mary Anne, daughter of Col. Ripley, and she died in 1870. Their children were: Capt. Arthur David Ripley, who died in the Boer War in 1901; Emily Louisa, who married Capt. Sydenham J. Lambert; Anne Sophia, who married Lieut. Reginald C. Hadrow; Lucy Ada; Eliza Davidson; and Constantine (d.1875). In 1876 he secondly married Anna Frances, daughter of A. Boyle from Dublin, and she died in 1878. They had a son, Henry Percy, as well as daughters He himself died at Borthwickshiels. Edward Helme (1880–1968) son of Col. William of Knowesouth, he achieved the rank of Lt. Col. He married Louise Medora Hermione Vannock and had a daughter, Hermione. George (1650/1–1720) perhaps the oldest local Pott with known connections to the Todrig and Hoscote family. He has one of the earliest tombstones in Borthwick Waas, which appears to say that he was ‘of Whilhill brae’ (probably Whitehillbrae on the Dod Burn). He is said to have married an Elliot and had 14 children, probably including: Adam (1690/1–1770) of Hoscote; possibly John of Caerlenrig (1692/3–1772), but this could have been his nephew; Robert (c.1696–1771); George of Todrig (1699/1700–81); and James of Dod (1701/2–65). He was therefore the progenitor of the Potts of Caerlenrig, Dod, Hoscote and Todrig. He is surely the same man as the tenant in Whitehillbrae and Newton, whose children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mungo (b.1708); John (b.1708); Janet (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1712). The name of his wife is not recorded. George of Todrig (1699/1700–81) son of George who died in 1720. He is recorded in 1762 when Christian, widow of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, was involved with him in a court case to recover money owed to her husband. He was listed along with his son George among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw about 1754 (although possibly the George and Elizabeth Scott who were married in Roberton Parish in 1738); she died in 1755, aged 42. He purchased the lands of Caerlenrig from Robert Elliott of Caerlenrig and secondly married Robert’s daughter Margaret (however, this could be confusion with other Potts). Altogether he had 2 daughters and 6 sons. His eldest son George (1739/40–81) succeeded to Todrig, while his son John (by his first marriage) succeeded to Caerlenrig (but again this could be confusion with other family branches). It is also possible that Alexander of Borthwickshiels was another son. He is probably the George of Todrig recorded as liferenter of lands in Headshaw in about 1788 (although deceased by then). George of Hoscote (1712–c.80) son of Adam of Hoscote. He inherited the Hoscote estate on the death of his father (perhaps in 1770). He was a witness to the will of Robert Grieve in Deanburnhaugh. He was ‘younger of Hoscatt’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He died unmarried, probably around 1780, and bequeathed the estate to his nephews George Stavert (son of his sister Elizabeth) and John Grieve (son of his sister Jean). In 1783 there was a sasine in favour of his sisters, the only surviving children of Adam: Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Stavert in Coliforthill; and Jean, wife of Walter Grieve in Airwood. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Adam (b.1743), Betty (b.1750) and George (b.1775). He is probably related to George of Whitehillbrae, who had children baptised in Kirkton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Mary (b.1768); and Betty (b.1770). He may be the same man as the George whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish at about the same time. George (18th C.) married Betty Stavert in Roberton Parish in 1766. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Tait in 1782. George of Todrig (1739/40–81) son of George and Elizabeth Scott of Galalaw. He was listed as ‘younger of Todrige’ among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. He was still ‘younger’ in 1779 when Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto gave him liferent of much of Headshaw; this was part of Elliot’s plan to stack the Roxburghshire voters’ roll with his supporters. He is recorded paying the land tax on Todrig in 1785 and 1802 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He was also recorded as owner of the lands in Firth in 1788. Note that he is easily confused with his contemporary George of ‘Rig’ (meaning Caerlenrig). In 1778 he married Barbara, daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth and Dorothea Chisholme; she later married Thomas Knox, was mother of the poet William Knox and died in 1821, aged 68. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) were: George (b.1779), who probably died young; George (b.1780), who succeeded; and Barbara (b.1782), who married Charles Erskine of Shielfield. The family gravestone at Borthwick Waas states that he died in 1781, just a month or so after his father; he was certainly deceased in 1806 when his daughter Barbara got married. The Mary who married William Aitchison (who later owned Brieryhill) may also have been his daughter. He may have been the same as the heir of Borthwickshiels who was killed by a fall from his horse near Howdenburn. George of Caerlenrig (1722/3–1815) son of John of Caerlenrig and Mary Scott. He was the ‘Pott of Ridge’ (no forename given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was George ‘of Ridge’ when listed along with John (probably his father) witnessing a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falnash in 1764. He owned the farm of Caerlenrig in 1788, valued at £366. He is recorded being ‘of Ridge’ on the 1785–86 Horse Tax Rolls for Cavers Parish, listed along with his son in 1787 and then alone again in 1788–92. He is ‘George Pott Esqr. Rigg’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also ‘Esqr. Rigg’ in 1797 when he was taxed for having a dog. He may be the George ‘of Clanduchrig’ (perhaps intended to be Caerlenrig) listed in 1788 among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. He was listed as owner of Caerlenrig in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Note that he is easy to confuse with his contemporary George of Todrig. According to the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery he married three times: firstly Isabella Currie (1753/4–72), who had the same name as his stepmother, and hence was a niece of his step-mother; secondly Jane Little (1736/7–1775); and thirdly Margaret Elliot (1737/8–1821). He was succeeded; and Barbara (b.1810), who married James Erskine of Shielfield, probably her cousin; Eliza Davidson (1815–64); George (b.1811), Major in the Bengal Army; David (b.1812), General in the Bengal Army; and Stephen (b.1813), with the Bengal Engineers. His adult daughters Jane, Barbara and Eliza were living at Borthwickshiels House in 1841. He died at Borthwickshiels and is buried in Robertson Cemetery. George of Dod (1790–1862) born at Penchrise, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott. He was the 3rd Pott Laird of Dod. He was educated at Jedburgh, Yarrow and Edinburgh University (probably the George recorded in medicine there in 1809). He was Lieutenant in the Roxburghshire Militia from about 1811 and became a Captain of the Roxburgh yeomanry cavalry in 1817. He went through a protracted legal battle with Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs (also junior captain in his regiment) over the deal their fathers had made over the lease of Penchrise. He eventually lost the case in the House of Lords. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. About 1828 he rented Crawhill farm (now Bucklands) and lived there until he bought Knowesouth (from William Oliver Rutherford) in 1838. He was listed as resident of Crawhill in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was ‘Proprietor’ at Knowesouth and in 1851 was ‘Landed Proprietor, Justice of the Peace’ at Knowesouth, farming 112 acres and employing 5 labourers. He also ran the farm of Ruecastle. About 1854 he sold the farm of Riskenhope (by St. Mary’s Loch) to John Scott, W.S. From cousins at Skelfhill he obtained an old copper pot, 19 1/2 inches deep, said by tradition to be the cauldron in which Lord Soulis was boiled at the Nine Stane Rig! He gifted this relic to the Duke of Buccleuch. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He often told the story about meeting an old man, James Bunyan, herding his cow, and on asking him who was the worst farmer in the county was told ‘Weel, sir I think it is just yersel’. Along with
Mr. Selby (factor to the Earl of Minto) he had the idea to build a bridge and roads to connect Haddo to Denholm (this being later implemented). In 1823 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of William Elliot, architect; she died in Edinburgh in 1864, aged 64. Their children were: Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (b.c.1826); Esther (b.1829); Thomasina (b.1830), who married lawyer James Oliver; Gideon (1823/4–1905), who farmed at Knowesouth; William (b.1833), officer in the 89th Regiment; Janet (d.1912); and Ann. He died at Knowesouth and the family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. George, J.P. of Todrig and Borthwickshields (1811–77) son of George and Katherine Reid, and brother of Gen. David. He served with the Bengal Army, reaching at least the rank of Major (and was listed as Colonel on his memorial stone). He was recorded as ‘George Pott, Esq. of Borthwickshiels’ among landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He gave the land for the new Kirk at Roberton in 1862. In 1840 he married Julia, youngest daughter of Rev. Robert-Sparke Hutchings and she died in 1872. Their children included: George (1843–46); Constantine; George (again, 1847–54); Katherine (1850–55); and Robert Constantine (1851–75), his only surviving son, who was a Lieutenant in the 76th Regiment. He is buried at Roberton, along with other members of his family. George (18th/9th C.) name of 2 men listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. One was at Wilton Lodge and the other at Crawhill. Neither of them are listed by 1840. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1852 he married Jane Bell. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1855 he married Isabella Foster. George (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Murray and their children included George (b.1859), Jane (b.1866), William (b.1867), William (again, b.1868) and James (b.1870). George (1842–98) younger son of James of Potburn and Jane Brown, and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. He succeeded his brother to the lands of Potburn and for some years lived at Lintalee. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1870. He moved to 55 Albany Street Edinburgh, and died. He married and had a family, probably being succeeded by James Gideon. George (19th/20th C.) brother of James Gideon. He succeeded to Potburn, but lived in New Zealand. Gideon of Dod (1757–1812) son of James and Jean Scott. He was a successful tenant sheep-farmer at Penchrishe, apparently being let the farm by Sir William Elliott of Stobs at a reduced rate because he had lent some money towards the building of Stobs Castle. He was brother of Isabella (who married Thomas Usher of Courtihill). A document of 1784 shows him clearing the debts of William Elliott (son of Capt. Robert) before he succeeded to Harwood. He also bought the farm of Riskenhope (formerly part of Rodono) from Hay of Duns Castle. He was granted a 77 year lease of Penchrishe and Langside in 1794 (this being challenged when the son of the granter brought a court case against his son George). He is probably the Pott of Penchrishe who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded at Penchrishe on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1797, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He paid the land tax at Dod in 1811. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Pott of Todrig, and she died at ‘Warebank’ (probably Weirbank in Melrose) in 1840, aged 84. Their children included: James (1784–85), eldest son; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1785–1855), eldest daughter, who died at ‘Warebank’; Jean (1787–88); George (b.1790), who farmed Penchrishe; James (again, b.1792), who became a lawyer; Alexander, who farmed at Burnfoot on Ewes; another daughter; and Thomasina (‘Tomy’, 1797–1866), youngest daughter, who also died at Warebank. He is buried along with other family members at Borthwick Waas. Gideon of Dod and Knowesouth (1823/4–1905) eldest son of George and Jane Elliot, born at Penchrishe. He was educated at Canonbie, the Grainge School in Sunderland and Edinburgh University. He acquired parts of Ruecastle from Thomas Rutherford and William Oliver Rutherford of Edgerston. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He also acted as collector of county rates in 1848 and for several years afterwards (still being so recorded in 1866). He turned down an offer to be agent of the British Linen Company in Jedburgh. Along with Edward Heron Maxwell he implemented the building of a bridge and road (by public subscription) to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He also arranged a collection to give a gift to the Duke of Buccleuch for appreciation of locally keeping fox hounds at his own expense (this being 2 candelabra). He entered the new volunteer cavalry as a private and later became a Lieutenant. He was an expert shot, winning the officers’ challenge.
cup of the Border battalion outright after 3 victories in a row, and placing well in several national competitions. He was a successful sheep-farmer and took pupils at Knowesouth for agricultural training. He was recorded at Knowesouth in a directory of 1868 and paid the land tax there in 1874. His sister Thomasina married James Oliver, lawyer of Mayfield House. He married Janet Hunter (also known as Janet Lean Hunter Hunter, 1826/7–1912), from Crawford, Lanarkshire, who died in Jedburgh. Their children included: Gideon (1862–1904), an engineer, who predeceased him, dying in Glasgow; Grace Murray (b.1863); William (b.1865), the only surviving son; and Agnes ('Nancy', b.1871). In 1891 his younger daughter Agnes married William Edward Oliver-Rutherford, and at the same time his elder daughter Grace Jane married Isaac Fenton Bayley (of Halls, Dunbar). Henry Percy (19th/20th C.) son of Gen. David of Todrig. He served in the military, being with the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers and in 1904 became a Lieutenant with the 5th Light Infantry, advancing to Captain in 1908 and temporary Major in 1915. His daughter Ruth Barbara (1910–61) married Ernest Keatting and is buried in Roberton Cemetery. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as owner of Caverton when he was fined for failing to appear at the Justice-aire. He later presented Nicholas Brown to give suit for his lands in Caverton. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Walter (b.1696), Marion (b.1705), Jane (b.1707) and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son John was baptised in 1716. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1721. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1721), with witnesses George Bell and William Turnbull. Probably the same James, also at Borthaugh, married to 'Agnes' Scott was father of Agnes (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were 'G.B.' and William Turnbull. James (18th C.) farmer who, along with 2 brothers, rented much of Harwood from William Elliot about 1730. He may have been the son of William born in Cavers Parish in 1702 or could have been the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1738), Thomas (b.1741), Elizabeth (b.1744) and unnamed children in 1744 and 1750. It is possible he is the same as James of Dod. James of Dod (1701/2–65) farmer at Penchrise and Langside. He was one of 14 children and possibly youngest son of George (who died in 1720). He married Jean, daughter of Gideon Scott of Woll, and she died in 1767, aged 48. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isabella, who married Thomas Usher of Courthill; George (b.1744), their eldest son, who died aged 4; Elizabeth (1756/7–83), 3rd daughter; and Gideon (1757–1802), 2nd son, who succeeded to Dod and farmed at Penchrise. He may be the James who had unnamed sons baptised in Cavers Parish in 1744, 1750 and 1757. He died at Penchrise and was buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1751. He is probably related to the James who was at Borthaugh a generation earlier. In 1744 he married Bessie Palmer, the marriage proclaimed in Roberton and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1746), William (b.1748) and Isabel (b.1751). Probably the same James was father of Ann (b.1755), who was baptised in Roberton (and may be the Ann who married shoemaker George Shied). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert Smith and James Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in that parish in 1753. Perhaps the same James is recorded marrying another Agnes Scott in 1767 (that marriage also being recorded in Hawick). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included Betty (b.1762). It is possible he is the same man as James of Dod. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Nichol and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: Janet (b.1761); Agnes (b.1761), who married Robert Young; and James (b.1764). James of Potburn (1792–1852) from the Penchrise family, son of Gideon and Elizabeth Pott, he was born in Cavers Parish. He trained as a lawyer, becoming W.S. in 1818. He was one of the trustees for the late Adam Stavert of Hoscote in 1828, along with one of the Georges. He bought the lands of Potburn, Selkirkshire in 1831. In 1838 he was listed as a writer in Edinburgh when he witnessed a document in Hawick (relating to the Dicksons). He married Jane, 2nd daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat in 1839. His children included James Gideon and George. James (b.1839/40) son of Martin. He married Agnes Lamb in 1860 and their children (baptised in Hawick or Wilton) included Mary (b.1860), Martin (b.1863), Walter (b.1865), Jane (b.1867), Martin (again, b.1867), Margaret (b.1869), and William (b.1874). In 1861 he was living with his father at Upper Hope Park. James Gideon of Potburn (1840–65) eldest son of James of Potburn and brother of George. He was born in Edinburgh. In 1859 he obtained a commission as Cornet in the 11th Hussars. He was described as a ‘delicate, handsome-looking man’, but of poor health. He had to retire from the army and died at the age of 25. His brother George succeeded to Potburn. James Gideon (d.1915) from the local family, probably son of George of Potburn. He died in Salonika on active service with the Lothian and Borders Light Horse. His brother George succeeded. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Wilson and their children included William (b.1639). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Huggan and their children included Bessie (b.1646). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Johnston and their children included William (b.1655). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son William was baptised in 1674. Perhaps the same John was father of Agnes (b.1692). John (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of ‘Dobburne in Kirkton Parioch’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Poott’. Perhaps the same John in Winningtonrig had a child John baptised in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Miller in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and his children included Margaret (b.1713) and Isobell (b.1716). John (18th C.) resident of Hob Kirk Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1726); and James (18th C.) tailor who lived in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1754. He married Margaret Pott, and so the couples may have been related. John (17th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included George (b.1722), Robert (b.1725) and Margaret (b.1726). He may be the John who got married in Kirkton Parish in 1721 (wife’s name not given). John (1692/3–1772) succeeded to the lands of Caerlenrig from his father George (however, it is also possible he was a nephew of George). He and George ‘of Ridge’ (probably his son) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Falnash in 1764. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls ‘in Rigg’ in 1789. John (18th C.) mason from Hawick, who carried out much of the repair work after the 1767 flood, rebuilding the small arch of the Auld Brig and the wall of the Manse. He died a few years later, following an accident that occurred on the completion of the Hornshole Bridge. He was maternal grandfather of Alexander and Robert Michie, and hence probably father of Betty, who married Alexander Michie in Hawick Parish in 1797. His son John died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hob Kirk Parish. His son John was baptised in 1754. John (18th C.) erected possibly the first stocking-shop in Hawick, in the back of the house adjoining Oliver Place (sold to the Oliver's around 1875 and demolished). His father owned the property and the house at the front, bearing the date 1769. He is probably the John whose wife Peggy Turnbull died in 1795, the couple being married (declared in Wilton and Hawick Parishes) in 1786. He is probably also the stockmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784).

John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mabel Nichol and their children included Robert (b.1792), Mabel (b.1794), James (b.1796), John (b.1798), Betty (b.1800) and Jean (b.1802). John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Robson. Their children included Helen (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Elliot (b.1811). John of Rigg (1765/6–1830) son of George and Isabella Currie, he held the lands of Caerlenrig. He is probably the ‘& Son of Rigg’ recorded along with George on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Mr Pott, junior, Caerlenrig’ on the subscription list for John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the John ‘Potts’, ‘Esq. Caerlenrig’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Christian Aitchison and is buried in Borthwick Waas (with no other family members listed). It is possible he was the Robert ‘ Potts’ who is listed as joint possessor (with William Elliot) of the farm of Turn in 1779. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Cavers in Kirkton Parish in 1755. Their children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Andrew (b.1762), William (b.1765) and Walter (b.1765). Robert (b.1756), baptised in Castleton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he was the Robert who owned Demainholm (along with Matthew Little) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Scott, and their children included Jane (b.1760) and John (b.1761). Robert (18th C.) house and stable boy at Burnhead in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott. He could be the Robert who married Margaret ‘Robison’ in Hawick Parish in 1787. Capt. Robert of Galalaw (d.1803) recorded in Robertson Parish on the Land Tax Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1802. Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1788 along with Alexander, as joint owner of land valued at £156, which was presumably Galalaw, as well as Borthwickshiels, valued at £600. He was also recorded as owner of Galalaw on the county valuation and on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although already deceased by then). It seems likely that he was son of Alexander of Borthwickshiels and grandson of George of Todrig. He died at Borthwickshiels. Robert (d.1816) recorded as ‘old Tailor and Packman Midraw’ when his death was registered in Hawick. He could be the pedlar Robert who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. Robert (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded as a carter of Castleton.
among male heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. He was an agricultural labourer and carter on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living on North Hermitage Street. He was listed as a farmer in 1861. He married Mary Armstrong (b.1811), who was from Canonbie. Their children included: Betty (b.1832); Margaret (b.1833), who married David Oliver; Andrew (b.1836); John (b.1838); Christopher (b.1840); Jane (b.1842); William (b.1845); Walter (b.1847), who moved to Glasgow; James (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852); and Robert (b.1855). The couple were rebuked for ‘antenuptial Fornication’ in 1832. The 1841 record says ‘to America and dead’, but that must be an error. Col. Stephen (1813–85) son of George. He served with the Royal Bengal Engineers and retired in 1862 with the honorary rank of Major General. There is a pink granite memorial to him in Roberton Cemetery. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. Along with William Telfer (also in Howpasley) and several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1699) and Margaret (b.1708). Thomas (1723–1829) son of William, he was farmer at Toftholm in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses, and on the Dog Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 dogs. He married in 1763, but his wife’s name is unrecorded. He was probably father of Mary, who married Adam Robson, and perhaps John who married Betty Robson. He probably also had a son Thomas who was ‘Mr. T. jun.’ in 1821. Thomas (b.c.1779) inn-keeper of the Buccleuch Arms in Newcastleon, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is listed as a carter among heads of households in Newcastleon in 1835–37 and then as an innkeeper. He was surely related to Robert, who was a carter at about the same time. In 1841 he was at about 48 North Hermitage Street, with his wife Betty and children Helen and Betty. He married Elizabeth Hogg and their children included: Helen (b.1806); Anne (b.1808); Helen (again, b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); William (b.1812); and Robert (b.1814). He could be the ‘Mr. T. jun. Toftholm’ listed in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821; he was presumably son of the older Thomas. Thomas (19th C.) married Anne Scott in Cavers Parish in 1828. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Mary Young and their children included James (b.1799). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included Helen (b.1655). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married ‘Issobell Hewstone’ in 1685 and their children included John (b.1687). The witnesses were Robert Scott and Robert Ormiston (probably farmer at Boonraw). William (18th C.) resident of Todshawhill. His children included John (b.1702). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers and Hawick Parishes. He was living at Langside in 1702 and at Slaidhills in 1704. He married Janet Buckham in 1699 and their children included James (b.1702) and Anna (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were John Foster and William Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Isabel Brydon in 1709. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. Possibly the same William was father of Thomas (b.1724), John (b.1727), George (b.1738), John (again, b.1740) and Margaret (b.1743). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Hislop in 1734. William (18th C.) tenant at Hoscote, recorded in a court case of 1754 with John Armstrong, tenant of Fingland, Dumfriesshire. William (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabella Mather and their children included: Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and an unnamed son (b.1829). William (19th C.) married Ann Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1842. His children included Agnes (b.1842), baptised in Ashkirk Parish. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Currie in 1859 and their children included Margaret (b.1858) and Mary (b.1863). William (b.1834) 2nd son of George of Dod. He was an officer in the 89th Regiment. He married a daughter of Thomas Helme of Surrey. Col. William (20th C.) probably son of Gideon. He served with the 27th Inskilling Fusiliers. He lived at Knowesouth. His son was Lt.-Col. Edward Helme (formerly sometimes ‘Pot’; see also Potts, with which it was sometimes synonymous).

potted meat (po-eed-mee’-, ee’-) n. dish made from boiled meat and bones, which sets into a jelly when cooled – ‘We aa killed pigs about that time an made the potted meat. An you got the potted meat potted heid’ [TH] (also spelled ‘pottit’ etc.).

Potterlamport (po-tur-lam-pör’) n. name of a former tower, recorded on Sandison’s c.1590 map, roughly near where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel. It was recorded in a rental list in the charters of the Douglastos of Morton in about 1376, being worth 34 shillings. It could be the ‘Porter-landes’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. It was listed in 1632 among the Liddesdale lands of Sandy Armstrong. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1694. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it is shown as a farm of 550 acres, bounded by Nether Harden, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Hillhouse. It also shared a common of 37 acres with the farm of Hillhouse and another of 24 acres with the Laird of Whithaugh’s tenant. It could potentially be the same place as Puddinburn, or else was merely a smaller house nearby. A small stream on the east side of the Liddel Water, between Castleton and Whithaugh is called Pouterlampert Sike and a farmstead is marked there on the 1862–3 Ordnance Survey map. A section of bike trail in the area has also been named ‘Pouter Lampert’ (it is ‘Pouterlampert’ in about 1376, ‘Powterlampert’ in 1583, ‘Porterlampet’ in 1632, ‘Polterlampert’ in 1694 and ‘Porterlempet’ and ‘Porterlampit’ in 1718; the origin could be Celtic ‘polter’ meaning an upland stream, ‘lann’ meaning open land and ‘pert’, meaning ‘bush’).

pottinger (po-ting-ur) n., arch. a porringer, large bowl-shaped utensil, usually for soups etc., an apothecary, druggist — ‘Given to the Pottingar, 12s’ [PR].

pottit meat see potted meat

Pott Loch (po-loc’h) n. body of water marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map to the south of Clearburn Loch, and perhaps confused with what is now called Kingside Loch. ‘Pot Loch’, which is little more than a pond, sits to the west of Shaw’s Upper Loch, between the Ale and Ettrick valleys.

Potts (pots) n. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included Elliot (b.1872). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lillieleaf. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1732. Andrew Petrie (b.1822) born in Eckford Parish, son of William Hunter and grandson of Thomas. He was a stationer in Edinburgh. George (1793–1851) born in Oxnam Parish, son of Thomas and Andrea Petrie. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is also recorded as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and also writer in Hawick in the 1828 Edinburgh Almanack. He lived on Buccleuch Street, and was also listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He served as solicitor with the Sheriff Court in Hawick. presser (pre-sur) n. a term in the hosiery trade for part of a machine which closes the barbs of the needles so that the loops of yarn can pass over them.

Presto’s (pres-töz) n. supermarket built on the site of the former Mactaggart’s skinworks at the corner of Albert Road and Victoria Road in 1977. It was the first large supermarket to be opened in Preston

Hawick, a part of the Allied Suppliers business and was converted to a Safeway in the late 1980s – ‘Throwe time incomers came, Like Fazal Din and Gusto, And then ow’re at the Haugh, There came a bit ca’ed Presto’ [IWL].

Preston (pres-tin) n. Rev. David (b.1875) born at Caldercruix in Lanarkshire, son of George and Janet Shanks. He graduated from Glasgow University and was licensed by Hamilton Presbytery in 1899. He became assistant minister at Greyfriars, Dumfries and then was ordained at Elses in 1901. In 1903 he married Ella Margaret, daughter of James Mckillop from Stirlingshire. Their children included: Douglas George (b.1904); Jessie Eleanor Doris (b.1907); and Kathleen Angus (b.1910). Dr. ?? (16th C.) listed as ‘Doctour Prestoun’, when he was the first man listed as witnes to the final ‘latterwill’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. This was witnessed in Hawick, so he may have been a local man. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included Margaret (b.1795).

John (15th C.) Parson in Hawick in 1481, ‘John Prestoun of Hawyc . . . bachelor in decrees and perpetual vicar of Dunlop’. Nothing else seems to be known about him. John (b.1814/5) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Wester Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 198 acres and employing 5 labourers. He was a widower by then, living with his mother Ann and son Robert. Rev. Thomas minister at Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1889–1992. Rev. William (17th C.) possible minister at Hassendean in 1638 when the National Convenant was signed in Hawick. The name was apparently hard to transcribe, and the minister at that time was Alexander Forrest, so this may be an error.

pretensic (pree-ten-seek) adj., poet. pretentious – ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Shirkin’ at sic a din . . . ’ [DH].

Pretoria Day (pre-tō-ree-a-dā) n. commemoration of the taking of Pretoria from the Boers on 5th June 1900. That day coincided with the Tuesday of the Common Riding, and there was a huge parade in the evening in Hawick.

Prickinghaugh (pri-kin-hawch) n. former fortified house in Liddesdale, on the opposite side of the Liddel from Larriston. It may have once been home of Martin Elliot of Braidlie, and is mentioned in a version of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’. Martin Elliot (probably grandson of Martin of Braidlie) was recorded there in 1590. In 1632 it was listed among the possessions of Hab Henderson. It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. A later name used for it was ‘Breaken Tower’. It was said to have been demolished in 1792 to provide building material for a wall (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Pickinghaw’, on Mercator’s 1595 map as ‘Packing haug’ and on Coronelli’s 1689 map as ‘Prikingham’; it is ‘Prickenhauch’ in 1613, ‘Prickinhauche’ in 1632 and ‘Prinkingshauch’ in 1655).

pridefi (prid-fi) adj., arch. proud, priedful – ‘But dinna be pridefu’, but grateful ‘To ken ye’ve been keepit frae wrang’ [FL], ‘. . . whan A’m seek-staaed o the . . . pridifi bhlistereen that a body offen hes ti thole’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘priedfu’).

priest (preest) n., arch. an urge to defecate without effect – ‘A great priest, a strong but ineffec- tual inclination to go to stool, a tenesmus, Roxb.; in other counties a ‘prais’’ [JoJ].

Priestcroon (preest-croon) n. Priestcrown, former name for Greenbraehhead. The origin of the name is obscure, although James Wilson has suggested a link with the chapel dedicated to St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley – ‘. . . While Greenbraehead (in older times Priestcroon) To meet Crowbyres send the signal down’ [WNK] (e.g. on Stobie’s 1770 map and the 1897 Ordnance Survey map).

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. farm in the upper Allan valley, at the southernmost point of the loop in the road from Southfield through to Northhouse. There was once a school here, and a ford was long an alternative to the bridge across the Allan Water nearby. This was the location for the charter signed by James V giving Armstrong’s lands to Maxwell after the hanging of Johnnie Armstrong at Caerlenrig (although it is possible this was another place of the same name, the proximity to Caerlenrig and the King’s recorded itinerary makes this likely). The lands here were formerly part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield and in 1501 Robert Elliot of Redheugh inherited them from his grandfather, with Melrose Abbey holding the superiority. ‘Gret Johnnie Elliot’ was there in about 1510. Robert Elliot of Redheugh rented the lands from Melrose Abbey around 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. In 1569 it was part of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill, with the tenant then being ‘Jokke Elliot’. In 1574 the tenants ‘Law’s Jock’ Elliot, Alexander ‘Mill’ Elliot and ‘Law’s Tom’ Elliot were among men who Robert Elliot of Redheugh had been ordered by the Privy Council to remove from his lands. Simon Wilson is recorded there in 1623. It was recorded as still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Thomas Lauder, as well as shepherds James Grieve and William Grieve were recorded there in 1694. It is described in the 1718 survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1864 acres and was bounded by Peilbrae, Dod, Peelbraehope, Braidlie, Langside and Skelfhill. Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill leased it from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. Gideon Scott was farmer there in the latter part of the 18th century. Walter Scott was farmer there in 1785–97 and there were Scotts there in 1821 and around 1860. There were also Hardies in the mid-19th century. A spring that lay to the south was once supposed to have healing powers (according to a Presbytery record of 1614). There has been a suggestion that there was once a chapel here (marked in a field to the north of the farm on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), but there is no evidence for this. Between the farmhouse and Priesthaugh Cottages is an earthwork, on the east side of the burn, measuring about 70 m by 45 m, but washed away on the western side. A cache of gold coins was found on the farm in the late 1700s, later in the possession of Mr. Elliot of Redheugh, and a few years before that a box containing about 120 silver coins were found on the farm. The stuffed 2-headed lamb in the Museum was from here. In nearby remote glens there are several plantations, called Scar Plantation, Pyat Sike Plantation, Brae Plantation, Garden Plantation, Heather Wood and Craw Wood. There have been Ride-outs to this farm – ‘...Until I turn’d at Priesthaugh Scrogg, And shot their horses in the bog’ [SWS] (the origin is likely to be simply the Old English ‘preost halh’, meaning ‘the priest’s haugh’, although there is no obvious connection with church lands; the name first appears in 1500 as ‘Prysthauch’, is ‘Preisthauch’e in 1530, ‘Preisthsauche’ in 1533, ‘Preisthsauch’ in 1557, 1564, 1569, 1621, 1623, 1660, 1663 and 1693, ‘Preisthsauche’ in 1634, ‘Preisthauch’ in 1661 and ‘Preisthauch’ in 1694; it is ‘Preisthauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map as well as de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland).)

Priesthaugh (prees-tuf) n. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill who is listed in a bond of 1569 signed in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘Arche Preisthauch’, and ‘Jok’ is also listed. The tenant of Priesthaugh (‘Jokke Elliot’) is separately listed, but presumably the surname derived from that farm in earlier generations. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as a tenant of the lands of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill in 1569, along with Archibald, who was surely a close relative. His name is given as ‘Jok Preisthauch’.

Priesthaugh Burn (prees-tuf-burn) n. stream that meets the Skelfhill Burn near Priesthaugh farm, to form the Allan Water. The boggy region at the head of the burn is the Queen’s Mire.

Priesthaugh Cottages (prees-tuf-ko’eez) n. cottages just south of Priesthaugh farm.

Priesthaugh-hill (prees-tuf-hil) n. steading where the Cauld Cleuch meets the main part of the Priesthaugh Burn, far to the south of Priesthaugh farm. It may be the same as Priesthaughshiel, which is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Priesthaughshiel (prees-tuf-sheel) n. former steading in the upper part of the Priesthaugh Burn, possibly the same as Priesthaugh-hill. Shepherd William Scott died here in the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1794. There were still Scotts there in the early part of the 19th century (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Priesthaugh Swire (prees-tuf-swIr) n. flat land at the head of the Priesthaugh Burn, probably similar to the Queen’s Mire – ‘Ride by the gate at Priesthaughswire, And warn the Currors o’ the Lee; As ye cum down the Hermitage Slack, Warn doughty Willie o’ Gorrinberry’ [T].

Priesthaugh Well (prees-tuf-wel) n. spring near Priesthaugh farm. It probably lay to the south of the present farmhouse, but its exact position cannot now be ascertained because the 2 springs on the western side of Gray Coat have been piped to provide water to Priesthaugh farm and Priesthaugh Cottages. It was said that this well possessed healing properties and a 1614 record of Jedburgh Presbytery said that people went there for relief 'by charm of priest and miracle'. The name is surely connected with the ridge to the south of Priesthaugh, which is called 'Holywell Rig'.

Priesthill (preest-hil) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, to the east of Newcastleton and further up the Whithaugh Burn from Whithaugh. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map near the feature labelled ‘Priesthill Know’ on modern maps. James Riddell was there in 1777.

Priest Hill (preest-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, north-east of Newcastleton, on the southern side of the valley. It reaches a height of 205 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. On the northeast slopes is an ancient earthwork consisting of an enclosure about 240 ft by 170 ft, with a double bank and significant ditch. It is similar to the structure on nearby Kirk Hill.

Priesthill Burn (preest-hil-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that rises on the northern slopes of Stell Knowe, running roughly westwards to become part of Whithaugh Burn.

Priesthill Knowe (preest-hil-burn) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just to the east of Little Whithaugh, to the east of Newcastleton.

Prieston (preest-ton) n. farm just north of Midlem in Bowden Parish, the land having once been the property of Kelso Abbey. In 1678 the South part was owned by William Douglas and the North part by Robert Kerr. It later became property of the Scotts of Harden, sold in about 1912 (the origin of the name is the Old English ‘preest tun’, meaning ‘priest’s farm’; it first occurs as ‘Prestowne’ in 1567 and ‘Prestone’ in 1586).

Priestrig (preest-rig) n. farmstead between Stouslie and Stintyknowe. This land was apparently set aside for the use of the minister of Wilton after Wilton Common was divided in 1764. John Scott was living there in 1790. The farmstead was also sometimes known as Wilton Common (e.g. in the 1861 census). Thomas Scott was farmer there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. The outlying parish school situated at Stouslie was also sometimes known as ‘Priestrig Schuil’ – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’[DJG] (sometimes spelled ‘Priestrigg’ or ‘Priest Rigg’; the ‘rig’ presumably refers to a strip of ploughland).

the Priest’s Grave (thu-preests-grav) n. popular name for an extremely old gravestone in Cavers Auld Kirkyard. It was peculiar for being arranged in a direction perpendicular to the others, had a flat top, and contained the date (believed to be spurious) 1517 in the bottom corner. It lay near the east gate, but it is unclear whether it still survives. Several stories were attached to it (as recounted by Sir James Murray), e.g. a connection with the Knights Templar, or someone who wanted to be first out of the churchyard at the resurrection.

prieve (preev) n., arch. to prove, make a trial of – ‘Dinna prieve your practiks on me’[JoJ].

prig (prig) v., poet. to haggle, bargain – ‘An’ after prigging doon its price, A bargain forthwith made; Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’[FL]. prignickitie (prig-ni-tee) adj., arch. fastidious (noted by J. Jamieson).

primp (primp) v. to act haughtily or conceitedly – ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din . . . ’[DH], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun . . . ’[DH], n., arch. a haughty or conceited woman.

primp-ma-dye (primp-mu-dyl) n., arch. a haughty and affected woman (in [HNe1954]).

Primrose (prim-roz) n. Gilbert (c.1535–1616) prominent Scottish surgeon. He was Serjeant-Surgeon to King James VI and was Deacon of the Incorporation of Surgeons and Barbers of Edinburgh. His brass mortar (engraved ‘GILBERT PRIMROS CHIRURGIEN 1569’) was found in a field near Hawick and held by the Hawick Museum until presented to Lord Rosebury (a direct descendent) in about 1899. The original is in the National Museum of Scotland, with a replica at Surgeon’s Hall. Rev. James B. minister at Kirkton 1951–1955 and Robertson 1955–60. He ran a missionary in India for over 30 years.

Primrose Cottages (prim-roz-ko’ee-jeez) n. two isolated cottages, formerly for railway workers, to the west of the Waverley Line shortly after Stobs. The plantation just to the north is Primrose Wood.

Primside (prim-sid) n. farm between Morebattle and Yetholm, in Morebattle Parish. There is an adjacent loch (also called Yetholm Loch) and hill of the same name. The lands are also known as ‘Primside Loch’. They were owned by a branch of the Rule family until passed to the Kers around 1430, with the final charter of 1439 granting Andrew Ker of Altonburn the 4 parts signed by the co-heiresses of the late Andrew Rule. Ralph Ker of ‘Prymsyloche’ was involved with an indenture for lands in the Barony of Synton in 1510. Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Ruie from Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1563. It was among farms burned by the English in 1542 (the origin is probably from the p-Celtic ‘pren wyn’, meaning ‘white wood’ and the Old English ‘set’ for house; it is first recorded as ‘Prenwensete’ around 1200; it is ‘Promset’ in 1391, ‘Promside’ in 1429/30, ‘Prymside’ in 1526, ‘Primsidlouch’ in 1552, ‘Primsyldlouch’ in 1560 and ‘Prymsydloch’ in 1564/5).

primsie (prim-zee) adj., poet. precise, diminutive of prim – ‘Wi’ dimpl’t rosy cheek, sae primsie, yet sae free’ [WFC].

the Prince (thu-prins) n. nickname for George Robson from Denholm.

Prince Leopold (prins-lee-u-pold) n. of the Belgians (1790–1865), full name His Royal Highness George Frederick, Prince of Saxe-Coburg. He visited Britain in 1815 and the following year married Charlotte, daughter of George IV, was created Duke of Kendal and made a General in the British Army. He became King of Belgium in 1831, and also was made an Honorary Burgess as he passed through Hawick in 1819, his carriage being pulled through town by several Teries, and Bet Young composing a commemorative poem – ‘His Royal Highness landed here On the seventeenth of September; Our flags displayed, the bells did ring, As thousands will remember’ [BY].

prince’s feathers (prin-seez-fe-th urz) n., pl., arch. the common self-heal, Prunella vulgaris.

the Prince’s Knowe (thu-prins-seez-now) n. former name for a rising piece of ground near Bonchester Hill, where Prince Charlie is said to have encamped when his force marched through the area.

Princess Anne (prin-ses-awn) n. (1950– ) the Princess Royal, as President of the British Knitting and Clothing Export Council she has visited Hawick several times. She was at Glebe Mills in 1988. In 1993 she officially opened the major modernisations carried out at the High School.

Princess Christian (prin-ses-kris-tvyn) n. (1846–1923) Helena, third daughter of Queen Victoria, who married Prince Christian of Schleswig Holstein Sonderburg Augustenburg in 1866. She came to Hawick to open the Hummelknowes Bridge in 1869.

Princess Christian’s Brig (prin-ses-kris-tvynz-brig) n. name once used for the Hummelknowes Bridge over the Slitrig.

Princes Street (prin-ses-stree’, -seez-) n. main street through Wilton. Originally it referred only to the row of houses on the south side of the eastern end, which was built in 1871. The street was significantly altered and renumbered in the early 1970s, with the incorporation of Wilton Place, Albion Place, Ladylaw Place and part of Wilton Crescent – ‘Somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairty in the gairdins at Princes St.’ [JCo] (named after members of the Royal family).

the Principals (thu-prin-si-pulz) n. the main participants during the Common Riding, usually referring to the Cornet and Right- and Left-Hand Men, with sometimes also the Acting Father included. The first known photograph of the Principals was taken in 1857. The stabling of their horses was first undertaken by the Council in 1929. More recently stables have been provided at the top of the Mill Path. Latterly the term has been used to include the main female principals.

Pringle (pring-ul) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Mary Hislop and their unnamed son was baptised in Robertson in 1780. He was at Howpasley in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Perhaps the same Adam secondly married Margaret Henderson in Robertson in 1789 and was recorded at Philhopeshiel in that year. This couple’s children included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), Andrew (b.1793), Jeany (b.1795), Elizabeth (b.1797), Robert (b.1799), Margaret (b.1801) and Isabel (b.1805). He could be the Adam, son of William, baptised in Robertson in 1759. Adam (b.c.1800) shepherd at Howpasley. He was recorded at Old Howpasley in 1841 and 1851 and was at Over Dalgleish in 1861. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Janet B. (b.1828/9); Elizabeth (b.1830, or ‘Betty’), who married John Nicholson; Robert (b.1833); Adam Scott (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); William (b.1838); Helen (b.1840); John (b.1843); Thomas (b.1844); and Gideon (b.1846). Adam (1818–84) toll-keeper at the Townfoot Toll-bar in Newcastle on the Tyne in 1861. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Shankfoot, and he also worked as a labourer. In 1844 he married Mary, daughter of Newcastle joiner John Cavers. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th C.) son of Robert of Smallholm. He served as a squire of the Douglases, along with his brother George, e.g. the pair witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas.
Pringle

in 1433/4. Along with George he was on an assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425. In 1456 he was on the panel made by George Douglas, Earl of Angus, which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn, who had been accused of assisting the English. He may be the Alexander ‘Pringill’ who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468. Alexander of Torsonce (d.bef. 1530) early member of the family from the lands near Stow. In 1526 he was ‘Alexander Hoppringill, in Torsonse’ when he was cited for involvement in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’ and the death of Ker of Cessford. His sons John, James, George and Adam and his ‘sister-son’ James are also mentioned, along with George Chisholme of that Ilk and 8 others, who were probably all on the side of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It seems that he was not convicted of any wrongdoing. He could be the Alexander ‘Hoppringill’ who served as attorney for the Homes of Wedderburn in sasines of 1506 and 1510. Alexander of Whytbank (1632/3–89) only lawful son of James of Whytbank. He was served heir to his father in 1667. He and his wife were supporters of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner for raising money for Cromwell in Scotland in 1655 and became a J.P. for the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk. In 1662 he was still ‘younger’ when he was fined £3,000 and given a pardon by the King. In 1683 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He married Anna, daughter of James of Torwoodlee, and she died in 1680. He secondly married Anne, sister of James Murray of Philiphaugh; after his death she married Robert Rutherford of Bowland. He had no children, and succession went to John, grandson of his uncle George of Balmungo. Alexander of Whytbank (1701–73) only son of John. In 1744 he was granted the teinds of lands in Stow (including Hoppringle) following the abolition of Episcopacy. However, he was forced to sell Yair. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. In 1739 he married Susanna, daughter of Sir John Rutherford of that Ilk and Edgerston. His children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, who succeeded his brother; Patrick, surgeon with the East India Company; William, who was in the navy; Elizabeth, Eleanor, Susanna and Cairncross-Mary, who all died unmarried; Christian, who married Robert Pasley; Joanna, who married Alexander Hay; and Charlotte, who married Thomas Payne. Alexander of Whytbank (1747–1827) born at Yair, 2nd son of Alexander and Susanna Rutherford of Edgerston. He entered the service of the East India Company in 1766, but retired before 1790, having succeeded his brother John and making his fortune. He paid the land tax for Whytbank and other lands in 1785. He bought back the Yair estate from the Duke of Buccleuch and built a new mansion there. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage and horses in the 1780s and 90s, for having dogs in 1797, and for having a female servant in 1788, 2 in 1789, 1 in 1790 and 3 in 1791, as well as a male servant in 1788, 2 in 1790, 3 in 1791–94 and 4 in 1797. He was Captain of the Selkirkshire Yeomanry Cavalry (volunteers) for several years until they were disbanded in 1802 and was also Vice-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He was apparently visiting the Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire (Lord Napier) at Wilton Lodge on the day of the False Alarm, the 2 riding off together to Selkirk after the butler coolly announced ‘My lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon’s blazing’. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he was recorded paying tax at ‘Whitebank, Bashawmill and Thornhole’, as well as Yair and Mill. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1812 he became Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He and his son Alexander were listed as Commissioners of Selkirkshire in 1819. He was listed as proprietor of Yair in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1789 he married Mary, daughter of Sir Alexander Dick of Prestonfield. Their children were: Alexander (b.1791), who succeeded and was a friend of Sir Walter Scott; John Alexander (b.1792), lawyer with the Bengal Civil Service, whose poetic contributions were printed privately as ‘Remains of John Alexander Pringle, Esq.’ (1841); William Alexander (b.1793), also with the Bengal Civil Service; Mary Agnes (b.1794), unmarried; Susanna (b.1795), who married R.S. Moncrieff, younger of Fossaway; Jane (b.1797), unmarried; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married C.M. Christie of Durie; and Charlotte (b.1799); Margaret Janet (b.1801), who married barrister William Elmsley; Robert Keith (b.1802), with the East India Company; and David (b.1806), also with the Bengal Civil Service, who later purchased Wilton Lodge. He and his sons were well known to Sir Walter Scott, and are referred to in the introduction to Canto II of ‘Marmion’. Alexander ‘Sandy’ of Whytbank (1791–1857), Pringle

J.P., eldest son of Alexander of Whytbank. He was present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Vice-Lieutant for Selkirkshire and also Lord of the Treasury for Scotland. He was a Conservative in politics. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1830–32 and 1835–46, being defeated by Pringle of Clifton in 1832. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1835. He attended the 1839 banquet held at Braxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him and Scott of Gala to the field of Waterloo not long after the battle. He married his cousin, Agnes Joanna, 2nd daughter of Sir William Dick of Prestonfield. He had one son, Alexander (b.1837), who succeeded to Whytbank and Yair. Rev. Alexander David (1828–1908) only son of David of Wilton Lodge. He was minister at Blakeney, Gloucestershire. He married Mary Louisa, daughter of Rev. Charles Mackenzie. Their children were: Charles David; Henry Arthur; John Archibald; Fanny Christina; Henrietta Louisa; Isabella Margaret; Amy Cecilia; and Katherine Helen. Alexander of Whytbank (1837–1898) only son of Alexander. In 1870 he married his cousin Mary-Aruthnot, daughter of Robert Keith Pringle. He had no children, and the estates of Whytbank and Yair went to his widow’s brother William, who sold Yair. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1876–1962) Burns Club Treasurer for 37 years. He also held all other offices at the club and the Pringle Hall was named in his honour. Andrew ‘Dand’ of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1585/6) son of John, he was 8th Laird of Smailholm. In 1566 he had a grant of the lands of Galashiels and Mossilee. He signed the General Band against thieves in 1571. In 1574 he was on the returns for Walter Scott of Braxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1575 he was the first of the Hoppringles listed to appear to answer the feud with the Elliots. In 1582 he was on a list of 37 Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. And in 1583/4 he was ‘Andro Hopringle of Gallowsheillis’ when summoned to appear before the Council with other Border Lairds. He married Mariota, daughter of John, 5th Lord Borthwick. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Robert of Howlatstown; and Isabella, who married George Pringle of Blindlee. There is a life-size effigy of him over his tomb at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow married Robert Pringle, tutor of Blindlee and thirdly married John Home.

Rev. Andrew (1616/7–89) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1635, he was ‘on the exercise’ (i.e. assistant) at Kirkcaldy in 1639, became Chaplain to the Earl of Angus, and may also have been an assistant in the Presbytery of Selkirk. He became minister at Kirkton in 1646. There was some dispute with the parishioners though, since the heritors had to be order to pay him his teinds soon afterwards. Then in 1649 he was presented to Castleton, being admitted there the following year. In 1662 he witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood. He was one of the few conformist local ministers who were not ousted in the early 1660s. He married Janet Scott in 1648. Their children included Jean, who married John Buchanan of that Ilk, and Elizabeth, who married Colin Campbell of Carwhin. Andrew (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Haining’. In 1685 he married Janet, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston and sister of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. In 1711 he was one of the founder members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ along with John of Haining, who was probably his brother. He is probably the Andrew who was Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Ettrick Forest parishes 1715–17. He may also be the Andrew to whom Andrew Riddell sold the Haining in 1701. Andrew Lord Alemoor (d.1776) son of John of the Haining. He became an advocate in 1740, 10 years later becoming Sheriff of Wigtownshire and then Selkirkshire. He became Senator of the College of Justice, Solicitor-General for Scotland and Judge of the Court of Session. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was raised to the bench as Lord Alemoor, since he had acquired that property. His lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £466 18s 4d. He died at his home of Hawkhill near Edinburgh. Unmarried, his lands went to his brother John of Haining. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard (in Cavers Parish), recorded as owner of 5 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Additionally he was taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He could be the Andrew whose daughter Margaret Ann was baptised in Cavers in 1798 (and may have married Alexander Gow). Angelique Lucille (1846–1920) born in Hawick, daughter of Thomas Kedie and Lucille Kennedy. At age 17 she went to India as a hostess to her uncle, who was governor of Calcutta. She also apparently crossed the Sahara desert by camel. She was a nurse at St. Thomas’s, London, starting in 1868, moving to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary... in 1872 (where she became Matron) and returning to St. Thomas's in 1887 as Matron. However, she resigned in 1890, when she converted to Catholicism. Afterwards she travelled the world advising on nursing issue. She was the founder of the Training School for Nurses at the Royal Infirmary, and sometimes credited with establishing the modern method of hospital nursing. She was a personal friend and devotee of Florence Nightingale, who called her ‘Pearl’ and ‘Little Sister’. Her letters are in the British Museum. There is a memorial brass tablet in the chapel of the Royal Infirmary. Ann (18th/19th C.) grocer and draper on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She could be the same shopkeeper listed at West Port on the 1841 census, probably married to Robert and with daughter Margaret. Archibald of Whytbank (17th/18th C.) became a Burgess of Hawick in 1724, presumably this being Honorary. This may be an error for Alexander. David of Smailholm and Pilmuir (d.1480) son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Robert in the 1470s. However, he is recorded as being of Smailholm or of Pilmuir several times through the 1440s, 50s and 60s. Along with his brothers George and Alexander he accompanied William, Earl of Douglas to the Papal Jubilee in Rome in 1450. In 1457 he attached his seal to an indenture by George, Earl of Angus, appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest, since Ker did not have a seal of his own. He served as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed in the 1460s. In 1464/5 he was one of the witnesses to the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1468 he had a charter for the lands of Pilmuir. In 1471 he was a witness at Borthwickshiels of the infeftment of Walter, son and heir of Andrew Ker of Cessford. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. He may be the David ‘junior’ who in 1478 had his fine remitted for killing deer at his wedding. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Dishington of Ardross. In their old house in Galashiels there was said to be this inscription – ‘Elsbeth Dishington Bullded me. In syne lye not: The things thou canst not get, Desyre not’. His children included: James, who succeeded; Adam of St. John’s Chapel; and Thomas of Wrangholm (recorded as a witness in about the 1490s). David of Tinnis (d.1512) natural son of James of Smailholm, and brother of David of Smailholm, being sometimes called ‘senior’ in distinction. He was tenant of the lands of Tinnis or Tynnes in the Yarrow valley. He was Ranger of the Ward and later made Receiver of the whole Forest. He was witness in 1484/5 to a sasine for lands at Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme; James Pringle was also a witness, along with several other local men. He leased the lands of Torwoodlee and Toftness in 1486, along with his wife Mariota. He may be the David who is recorded along with William on a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491. He may be the same ‘David Hoppringill in Tynnes’ who was one of the ‘Sheriffs of Roxburgh in that part’ in a charter of 1494 for lands in Hassendean and the same ‘in le Tynnes’ who was one of 4 men who held lands in Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stiches in 1504/5. In 1494/5 he served as surety for men called Mark from Tinnis. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as Coroner for Tweeddale at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk; he was fined for not producing Archibald Omiston. He was recorded several times around 1500 in the Exchequer Rolls in regard to lands in Yarrow and as ranger of the Ward of Tweed. In 1502 he leased the lands of Galashiels, Blinldeer and Mossilee. Also in 1502 he was fined at the Justice-aire for failing to Richard Davidson in Primside. In 1508 ‘David Hoppringill in Tenneis’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, and is probably the same David who witnessed the associated sasine. He was re-assigned Tinnis in 1509. In 1509 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor, witnessed charters for Colville of Ochiltree and was mentioned in a charter for William, son of James of Smailholm. And in 1510 David ‘of Tynnes’ is recorded having 5 horses stolen from him by Thomas Dalgleish in Braithaugh. He also had oxen stolen from him at ‘Bochill’ (possibly ‘Bowhill’). In 1512 he gave his consent to a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest being granted to the Commendator of Kelso. He may have married Mariota Murray of Philiphaugh. David of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1535) eldest son of James and brother of William of Torwoodlee. He was sometimes called ‘junior’, to distinguish him from David of Tinnis. In 1507–10 he leased the crown lands of Galashiels, Mossilee and Blinldeer. In 1510 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick Forest as well as for rentals in Lauderdale. Also in 1510 he was among Pringles and others convicted of cutting down part of Ettrick Forest. He lost brothers, a son and a brother-in-law at Flodden.
In 1519 he was among the large group of Borderers who rode against the Earl of Arran and in 1526 in the group that tried to free the boy King from the Douglases near Melrose (at Pringle’s Bridge). He signed a bond in 1525 to support the Earl of Angus as Warden of the Marches. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of return for Gordon of Stichill, along with James and George. He is probably the David who witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey in 1534. Through marriage he gained Woodhouse in Peeblesshire and Whytbank and Redhead in Selkirkshire. He was married twice, his first wife being Marion and his second Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Lundie. His children were: David, who died at Flodden; John, who succeeded; James of Woodhouse and Whytbank; William; and Janet, who married George Brown of Coalston. In 1541 his widow Margaret Clinie and son James claimed tenancy of Reidhead farm in Tweeddale. David of Smalholm (d.1513) eldest son of David of Galashiels and Smalholm. His brothers included John of Galashiels and James of Whytbank. He was killed at Flodden. David (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme. He was probably a factor or chamberlain or held some similar position. David of Torquihan (19th C.) owner of lands on Gala Water that had traditionally belonged to the Pringles. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee for about 17 years in the later 1800s. One of his children was Col. Hall-Grant (b.1876). Maj. David of Carriber (1790–1876) eldest son of John of Carriber and Mary Walker. He was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He served with the 7th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry and retired with the rank of Major in 1835. He was probably the Maj. Potts who was at Hawick in 1837 for the election (at which there was so much trouble from the crowd). He had one brother who died in India, and another who was Robert, farmer at Bairnkine, Southdean. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1830. He left Carriber to his nephew, John. David (1806–89) of Wilton Lodge, which he inherited through marrying James Anderson’s daughter, Mary. He was son of Alexander of Whytbank and Mary Dick, and younger brother of Alexander of Yair. He was born at Yair, youngest of 11 children, and educated in Selkirk and then in England, at Durham Grammar School and Haileyburgh College. He trained as a lawyer and in 1824 started service with the East India Company, surviving the fire on his ship ‘The Kent’, on which about 100 people perished. He worked as a magistrate in several locations. Returning to Britain for 3 years in 1839, he stayed at Friarshaugh near Melrose. He was then judge at Purneah and left India for the last time in 1851 with a pension and the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Bengal Infantry. He settled in Hawick after marrying the heiress of Wilton Lodge estate. He was responsible for the extensive remodelling of Wilton Lodge in 1859, including the monogrammed letters ‘DMP’ and biblical quotations; he was quite religious, being filled, it is said, with ‘the love of country, the love of letters, the love of God’. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was recorded at Wilton Lodge in a directory of 1868. A keen horseman, he can be seen on horseback at the stables of Wilton Lodge in a photo, probably in the 1880s. He became known locally as a philanthropist. He was Chairman or Governor of at least three Hawick savings banks, including Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Co., Ltd. (1864–89), Hawick Savings Bank (1865–89) and Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd. (1876–89). He was also Chairman of Wilton Parochial Board and of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as being on the county Prison Board. He was a Vice-President of the local division of the Evangelical Alliance. After his death the Town purchased Wilton Lodge from his trustees, and the present house is much as it was when he lived there. In 1827 he married Frances, daughter of Alexander Tod of Alderston, and she died in 1856 at Pau. In 1858 he secondly married Mary, heiress of James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. His children were: Rev. Alexander David; Amy Elizabeth, who married Rev. H.C. Ripley; and Frances Jane, who married James Christie and secondly Theobold von Fischer. His boot jack is in the Museum. David (b.1839) younger son of James Hall and Jane Hogarth. He farmed at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included: Hall G.; Frances E. and Dorothy M. Douglas see John Douglas Francis (18th C.) Sheriff-Depute for Roxburghshire. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. George (d.c.1459) son of Robert of Pilmuir and Smalholm. In 1427 he was part of the inquest for William being served heir to his father Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick; there he is ‘Jeorgeum de Hoppryngile’. Along with his brother Alexander he was a squire for the Earl of Douglas. He is recorded as ‘George Hoppringill’, attorney to Archibald, Earl of Douglas (or possibly Alexander Murray, since the transcription is ambiguous) in 1428/9. The document was the ‘instrument of sasine’ for the Barony of Hawick being served to William, son of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he is probably the George ‘Hoppringile’ who was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. He witnessed (along with his brother Alexander) a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. In 1437 he was one of 2 ‘procursators’ for Alexander of Weens when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the Baron of Hawick. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindside and Harwood. His name appears several times in connection with the Douglases through to the 1450s. He was the first Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He is probably the George of ‘Hoppringill’ who was on the panel in 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English to burn lands around Jedburgh. Either he or an earlier George was ‘scutiferus’ in a document for Melrose Abbey in 1415. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484 at the Mote. His name is recorded as ‘Georgio de Pryngyle’. It is unclear which branch of the family he belonged to. Possibly the same ‘Georgio Pringyll’ witnessed another document for the Douglases of Drumlanrig in 1501, relating to the lands of Lairs. George of Torwoodlee (1505–68) son of William, the first Laird, who was killed at Flodden. In 1526 he was among the large number of Borderers pardoned for their march (along with the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) against the Earl of Arran. In 1541 he was tenant of Caddonlee in Tweed, as well as claiming Torwoodlee. He is probably the ‘George Hoppringle’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1548 he was ‘found surety’ for the crime of helping ‘our ancient enemies of England’. He was implicated in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch in Edinburgh in 1552, accused of providing 2 horses to aid the escape of the Laird of Cessford. He was himself murdered by Elliots and others, perhaps led by Martin Elliot of Braidlie. In 1564 he was ‘Guidman of Torwoodle’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He is recorded in 1607 as ‘George Hoppringill of Torwoordlie’ at the trial for his murder. The action was brought by his grandsons George, James and David, against John Elliot of Copshaw; it is unclear why there was such a lengthy delay, but in 1570 a ‘day of law’ to decide the matter ended in a fight with many injuries and the Privy Council summoned representatives of the Pringles and Elliots in 1575 to settle the feud. The other men named, ‘Martin’s Hob’ and ‘the Laird’s Jock’, were presumably already dead by the time of the 1607 trial. The claim was that he was killed in a raid on Torwoodlee by about 300 men ‘of the hailling Clannis of the Airmestrangis, Ellotes, Batiesones, Grahames and remanent Clannis’, who grabbed him out of his bed and took him to ‘Skaldeneiso’ where they killed him, after ransacking his estate. He married Margaret Crichton of Craunston Ridell and had 10 children, including William, who succeeded. George of Torwoodlee (d.1637) 4th Laird, son of William. In 1607 he and his brothers James and David brought an action against John Elliot of Copshaw and others for the murder of his grandfather. He inherited a quarter of the lands of Clifton in 1610. He was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. He was an M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1617 and 1621 and became Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1624. He is recorded in records of the Regality of Melrose in the 1620s. He married Margaret, daughter of James Pringle of Whytbank and secondly married Elizabeth Richardson of Smeaton. He was succeeded by his son James, who was also M.P. George of Torwoodlee (d.1689) 6th Laird, son of James. In 1654 he had sasine of lands in Liliesleef. In 1662 he was fined and pardoned by the King. He was an active Royalist and resister of Episcopalianism. He owned lands in Maxton Parish in 1678. He helped the Earl of Argyll escape from Scotland in 1681; the Earl was accompanied from Edinburgh to Torwoodlee by Rev. John Scott, minister of Hawick. He then lived in concealment and in 1684 fled to Holland to escape capture (along with Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth), whereupon his 16 year old son was imprisoned and threatened with torture unless he divulged who had given the warning to him. He was involved in a disastrous uprising in 1685, but again managed to flee. His estates were then confiscated, but they were restored at the Revolution. He was made M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1689, but died a few months later (probably before receiving full reward for his efforts in the previous decade). In 1654 he married Janet Brodie of Lethen. His children were: James, who succeeded; Janet; Anna, who married

Pringle

Alexander Don of Rutherford; Sophia, who married her cousin James Pringle of Greenknowe; and Jean. George Turnbull (b.1810) youngest son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a gardener (and perhaps butler with a local family), but later became a licensed grocer at 12 Back Row (later Francis Henderson’s). In the 1834 electoral roll he was listed along with his brothers Robert and James, as joint proprietors in a house. He was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Wallace, from St. Boswells. Their children (baptised in Minto Parish) included: Robert (b.1836); Hannah Dickson (b.1837); Annabella Buckham (b.1839); Euphemia (b.1841); and George (b.1843). One of his daughters carried on his business, until she married Thomas Charters, after which the business was taken over by John Henderson. George (b.1829/30) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ekron. George (1843/4–81) son of Hawick merchant George Turnbull. He was apprenticed to a Selkirk engineer and in 1866 left to work for an oil merchant’s in Bradford. Later setting up business with a Mr. Cunningham, he settled in Manchester in 1874. However, he died after contracting diphtheria from one of his children, at the age of 37. He wrote some poetry and was a friend of J.C. Goodfellow, who wrote a verse on his death. His wife was Lydia Mary, who died in Middlesborough in 1930, aged 85. He was buried in the Wellogate. James (d.1495) eldest son of David of Pilmuir and Smailholm. Like his father he acted as Ranger of the Ward of Tweed. He held this office from at least 1447, with the lease of ‘Redehede’ and Blindlee as his fee. He was on the panel in 1484 where James Douglas was served heir to his father in the Barony of Hawick. He was also the first listed witness to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Walter Scott of Braxholme and the lands of Mangerton. In 1488 he had a 19 year lease from the King for the lands of Blindlee, Galashiels and Mosslee. In 1493 George Turnbull of Bedrule, David Waugh from Bedrule and weaver William White had remission for stealing cattle from his farm at Pilmuir. He is probably the James of Smailholm who acted as surety for Patrick Gledstains in Hummelknowes in 1494/5. David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing from his farm of Pilmuir in 1494/5. He married Elisabeth (also known as Isobel), daughter of Patrick Murray of Philiphaugh. His children were: David, who succeeded; William, 1st Laird of Torwoodlee, who died at Flodden; Alexander, 1st laird of Trinlyknowe, who also died at Flodden; John, 1st Laird of Blindlee, also died at Flodden; Isabella, who married David Home of Wedderburn, who died at Flodden; and an illegitimate son David of Tynnes. James of Tinnis (d.1546) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He was probably the James who was among the men pardoned in 1527 for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is probably also the James who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme in 1528. In 1529 King James V granted him (and his wife, Sibilla Carmichael) the lands of Tynnis. In 1530 he was recorded as a witness in Selkirk to proceedings taken against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1541 he was recorded holding the lands of ‘Tynnes’ in feu, as well as being tenant in ‘Dricheuchschele’ in Ettrick. He was captured at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542, and not released for 3 years. In 1546 he was part of the bond of peace signed between the Scotts, Turnbulls, Cranstons, Kers, etc. He was succeeded by his son James, and also had a daughter, Margaret. James of Woodhouse and Whytbank (d.1563) son of David and Margaret. Lundie. He succeeded to Whytbank in 1510, and the family’s Peeblesshire estates on the death of his father. He is said to have accompanied James V to Solway Moss in 1542 and was taken prisoner, but this may have been a different James (of Buckham). He married Margaret Ker of Linton; she later married Sir David Home of Wedderburn, died in 1580 and was buried at Melrose Abbey. Their children were: Robert, who predeceased him; James, who succeeded to Whytbank; George, tenant of Netherton; Alexander; William; John; David, possibly the ‘pothecar’ who witnessed a discharge in 1580; Marion, who married George of Blindlee and secondly married William Home of Bassendean. James of Whytbank (d.c.1625) son of James and Margaret Kerr. He was a strong Royalist supporter, as a result of which he lost his Peeblesshire estates. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1574 he was on the returns for Walter Scott of Braxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He could also be the ‘James Hoppringill’ listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter, being owed ‘for his fie’. In 1575 he was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He was one of the Border Lairds summoned in 1583/4... to give assurances for keeping peace on the Border and in 1591 was one of the Lairds who had to promise to serve the Wardens and pursue the Earl of Bothwell. He was on the 1601 jury following the Kerr and Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. He married Marion, daughter of Andrew Murray of Blackbarony and secondly Juliane, daughter of Sir David Home of Wedderburn. His children included: James, who predeceased him (c.1616), but whose son James succeeded; Robert, who was probably the ‘Robert Hoppringle, son to the gudeman of Quhytebank’ who was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth for being part of the ‘Royal High School Riot’ of 1595; and Margaret, who married John Pringle of that Ilk. His son James succeeded to his lands of ‘Reidheid’ in 1607. Sir James of Galashiels (d.1635) son of James, who was the only son of Andrew Hoppringle of Smailholm and Galashiels (although some accounts have only one James). During his minority his ‘tutors’ were Walter Riddell of that Ilk and his son Andrew, Robert Pringle of Langshaw and John Pringle of Buckholm. He was imprisoned following firing of pistols in a feud with George of Blindlee in 1598. He became a Commissioner for Peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. He had a charter of ‘Sellarhauche’ from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1621 and 1630 and became Sheriff-Principal in 1622. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. He may have married a daughter of Kerr of Linton (possibly William). His children were: David, who married Margaret, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, and died before him; James, who married Jean, daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet; John, last of Smailholm, who died without issue; George, Sheriff-Depute of Selkirkshire, who also died before his father; Jean, who became heir and married Hugh Scott of Deuchar, son of ‘Auld Wat’, and who thereby became the first Scott of Gala; Isobel, who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and 2 other daughters who married ministers. James of Whytbank (1599/4–1667) son of James and Christian, daughter of William Lundin of that Ilk. He succeeded his grandfather in 1622, his father having already died. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1628–33 and was a Commissioner of Defence for the county in 1643 and Commissioner of War in 1648. He was appointed a Commissioner of Supply in 1661 and a Justice of the peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was known as a great loyalist and was fined by Parliament in 1646. He added Yair to the family estates and also became the male representative of the Pringles of Galashiels and Smailholm (on the extinction of the male line of Pringle of Gala). He married Sophia Schoneir, who was a maid of honour to Anne of Denmark. His only son was Alexander, and he also had an illegitimate son, William. James of Torwoodlee (d.1657) son of George. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1641 and 1645 and was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1646. In 1654 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Corslie within Ettrick Forest and ‘Cockslandis’ in the village of Liliesleaf. In 1620 he married Jean, daughter of Sir Richard Cockburn of Clerkington. In 1628 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir Lewis Craig of Riccarton. His son George was also an M.P. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. James of Torwoodlee (1665–1735) son of George. He was imprisoned in 1684 and threatened with torture if he did not tell them who helped his father flee to Holland. In 1689 after the Revolution he was made an officer in the cavalry corps of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. His father died in 1689, in 1690 all of the family estates were restored to him and in 1694 he was served heir to hi father. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1693–1702. He contributed the large sum of £1300 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1714 he was appointed Captain of a company of cavalry raised to organise defence against the forces of ‘the Pretender’. In 1690 he married Isabel, eldest daughter of Sir John Hall of Dunglas. His children were: George, who succeeded, but died unmarried; John, who died at sea; James of Bowland, who was a principal Clerk of Session, and whose son James succeeded his uncle; Katherine, who married Sir Robert Pringle of Stichill; Janet; Sophia, who married Adam Fairmont of Greenhill; Marion, who married John S. Ker of Littlelean; Isabel; Margaret; and Ann. Sir James of Stichill (1726–1809) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Pringle. He was ‘junior’ when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1761–79 and succeeded as Baronet in 1779. In 1780 he was added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire. He was Commander of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and selkirkshire in 1788, but it was said that ‘it is likely he will be averse to vote, as he will not like the oath’. He was taxed for owning carriages and horses, and for having several male and female servants in the 1780s and 1790s. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Norman MacLeod of that Ilk. His children included: Mary, who married George Baillie of Jerviswood; Robert, who married his cousin and pre-deceased his father; Eliza, who married Archibald Tod of Drygrange; Sir John, who also married a cousin, and succeeded to Stichill; and Sir Norman, who succeeded his brother. James of Bowland and Torwoodlee (1758/9–1840) only son of James and grandson of James of Torwoodlee, who was M.P. for Selkirkshire. He was educated in Cambridge and Leyden, and studied for the bar, but never practised. He succeeded to his uncle’s lands of Torwoodlee, sold his father’s lands of Bowland and also acquired Buckholm and Williamlaw from other Pringles. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as being ‘rich’ and probably siding with Rutherford of Edgerston in the election. He owned Buckham, Williamlaw and Ladhopemuir. He was also listed as a voter in Selkirkshire and brother-in-law of the Sheriff of Selkirkshire, Andrew Plummer. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire from at least 1802. He was additionally listed along with his son (James junior) as Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He paid tax for having male and female servants in the period 1785–97, for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98 and for horses and dogs in 1797. He raised the Selkirkshire Corps of Border Yeomanry in 1797 and was their Captain at the time of the False Alarm in 1804. He was also present at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was Convener of Selkirkshire for more than 50 years. In 1782 he married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of Charles Tod of Drygrange. Their children were: James, Vice-Admiral and successor; Charles, who died young; George, who married Ann Stewart; Alexander, who was lost in a wreck; and Frances, only daughter, who died in Edinburgh. James of Torwoodlee (1783–1859) son of James. He joined the Navy in 1797 and retired as a Rear-Admiral in 1846. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He became Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1820 and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He succeeded his father in 1840 and also succeeded to his brother’s lands of Trinlyknowe. He was succeeded by his son Commander James Thomas. His other children were: Capt. Charles; George; Elizabeth Mason; Frances; Mary; and Jane. James (b.1796) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was cousin to the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, and had a brother who was also Robert. He was a stockmaker and warehouseman in Hawick. In 1841 the family were living at ‘Greenwind foot’, in 1851 at 12 O’Connell Street (probably the modern No. 4) and in 1861 at 7 O’Connell Street. He married Beatrix Scott, who was from Deanburnhaugh, daughter of old Peggy Anderson; she was said to be ‘great for simples (herbs)’. Their children included: Margaret, who must have died young; Helen (b.1836); Elizabeth Miller (b.1838), who married mill furnisher George Scott; Robert (b.1839); Isabella (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); John (b.1845); and Margaret (again, b.1848). James Hall (1801–74) born in Hawick Parish. He was tenant farmer at Hyndlee, recorded in the 1860s. He was also recorded as farmer at Cleithaug in 1868. He married Jane Mary Hogarth (1803–50). Their children were: George Hogarth (1830–72), a surgeon in Sydney, Australia, who died at sea; Andrew; David, who farmed at Cleithaug; Mary Miller; Margaret Preston; and Elizabeth Jane. James Thomas of Torwoodlee (1832–1902) son of Vice-Adm. James. He retired from the Royal Navy with the rank of Commander. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He also founded Torwoodlee Golf Club. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1862 he married Annie Parminter, only daughter of Col. James Lewis Black, who was wounded at Waterloo. He was succeeded by James-Lewis. Janet (b.c.1790) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street. She was at about No. 39 on the 1841 census, living with her sons Thomas and Robert. She is probably Janet Kedie, who married John, who was proprietor of a public house on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was located at about 7 High Street in 1841. She could be the Janet who was an unmarried seamstress at about 25 High Street in 1851. J.B. see John Balfour Jean (18th/19th C.) member of the local family, perhaps a daughter of the Robert recorded in the family bible. Before 1798 she owned the bottom part of 8 Fore Row (now 22 Drumlanrig Square). John of that Ilk andTorsonce (d.c.1555) son of Alexander of that Ilk. He may be the ‘Jok a Pringill’ accused by the English in 1543 of leading raids, along with the Laird of Mow. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, including Goldielands and elsewhere. His children included: Thomas, who succeeded; Michael; James ‘in the Bow’; Archibald of Torquhan; Elizabeth, Priess of Coldstream; and Margaret, who married Clement Mauchan of Pilton, Crandam.

John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.c.1566) son of David. He succeeded his father about 1535, his older brother David having died at Flodden. He may be the John ‘in Reidheid’ (essentially the same as Whytbank) who was one of the large number of Borderers listed along with Walter Scott of Branxholme for rising up against the Earl of Arran, for which they had remission in 1526; his brother Robert was also listed, along with 7 other Pringles. In 1541 he was recorded occupying the lands of ‘Galloschelis’. He was among the men accused in 1549 of helping the Kers and English attack the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; the other Pringles on the list were John of Torsance and Robert of Overcleuch. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Galloschelis’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Gordon of Stichell and Lochinvar; after his death she remarried to John Hoppringle of Wrangholm. His children were: Andrew, who succeeded; David of Bardarroch; James; Isabella, who married William Gordon of Crauchlaw; Margaret, who married Andrew Rutherford of Hundalee; and other daughters who married Andrew Haliburton of Branxholme, a Borthwick and an Inglis.

John of Galashiels and Smailholm (d.1650) 3rd son of Sir James. He was the last in the male line of the Pringles of Smailholm, being served heir to his father’s lands in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of ‘Smailholm-craigs’. In 1645 the lands of Smailholm were granted to Sir William Scott of Branxholme and Sir Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, who succeeded his brother, and was President of the Royal Society. His wife died in 1739 and is buried at Stichill. John of Whytbank (1678–1702) son of John, minister of Fogo, and grandson of George of Balmungo. In 1699 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24. John of Haining (1673/4–1754) 2nd son of Andrew of Clifton and Violet Rutherford. He became an advocate in 1698 and purchased the Haining in 1702. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1698. In 1699 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, and she died in 1770, aged 89, outliving him by 68 years. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Margaret, who died young; and Joanna, who died unmarried. He died at Yair, aged just 24. John of Haining (1673/4–1754) 2nd son of Andrew of Clifton and Violet Rutherford. He became an advocate in 1698 and purchased the Haining in 1702. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire, i.e. an M.P. in the last Scottish Parliament. He then served that county as M.P. until 1729. In 1711 he was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’. He was a Keeper of the Signet for Scotland in 1711. He became Lord of Session in 1729, taking the title Lord Haining. He married Ann, eldest daughter of Sir James Murray of Philphaugh. He had 3 daughters and 3 sons: Andrew, who became Lord Alemoor; John, who inherited the Haining; and Robert, who became a doctor. He may have been father of Jean, who married Thomas, 5th son of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. John (17th/18th C.) wright who became a Hawick Burgess in 1704. He was described as ‘in the Haugh of the Galawater’. He was probably the same wright who was selected by the minister and heritors in 1713 to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. And also the John who was one of the men who valued Andrew Rodger’s house for the Kirk Session in the early 1700s. In 1721 his servant Robert Robison married Isobel Rae in Branxholmstown. Also in 1721 he was witness for baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and ‘Tenent in Hawick’ David Wilson. Either he or his son was paid in 1732 for fixing the hands of St. Mary’s clock. In 1704 he married Janet Thomson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1707), who married tobacconist James Scott; Janet (b.1709), who must have died young; John (1709), gardener; William (b.1711); Walter (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); George (b.1718); Janet (again, 1721); Mary, who married William Scott of Langholm; Betty, 2nd wife of baker John Kedie; and Jean The witnesses in 1709 were wright Walter Hardie and carrier David Minto and in 1717 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and shoemaker John Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Francis (b.1751); Margaret (b.1754); Janet (b.1759); William (b.1761); Mary (b.1763); George (b.1766); and James (b.1768). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Adam Dryden. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Laidlaw from Hawick Parish. John (18th C.) resident at HowPasley when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1761 and 1763. Probably the same John was resident at Gair in 1775 when another child was baptised. He was probably father of John (b.1761), Mary (b.1763), Margaret (b.1769), Agnes (b.1775) and an unnamed daughter (b.1778). He may be the John who married Margaret Laidlaw in Roberton in 1762. John of Haining and Clifton (d.1792) 2nd son of John of Haining. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1765–84. He was a merchant in Madeira and succeeded to Haining on the death of his brother Lord Alemoor and to Clifton on the death of his cousin Robert Pringle. He was listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. Sometime before 1779 he had freedoms to lands in Bewlie and in the Barony of Harden from Walter Scott of Harden. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants from 1778, increasing to 5 or 6 in 1787–92, and 3 or 4 female servants in 1785–91. He paid the land tax at Easter Alemoor in 1785. He was also taxed for owning a carriage and up to 6 horses in the period 1785–92. He was listed as owner of North Synton (including Birkwood) in 1788 (and still recorded this way in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £600. He also owned Clifton and other lands in Morebattle Parish and most of the lands in Linton Parish. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his grand-nephew Mark. John of Whytbank (1744–90) eldest son of Alexander. He is said to have been a Lieutenant in the 36th Regiment of Foot and served on the staff of Gen. Murray in Canada, where he died. Actually he was a Lieutenant in the 84th Regiment, serving under Gen. Haldimand as Governor of Canada. He served through until the termination of the American War in 1783. He was succeeded by his brother Alexander around 1790. John (c.1770–c.1810) local fiddler and composer of music. James Wilson (writing in 1858) suggests that he was grandson and pupil of John Howison, while W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) says he was half-brother of Howison. He became a more accomplished violin player than his older relative, whose abilities were famed throughout the Border. He was selected by Lord Minto to lead his band when he was Governor General of India (which must have been in the period 1807–14), and died in Calcutta, probably unmarried. He also collected and published some local reels, strathspeys and jigs in the early 1800s, some of which he wrote himself. These are collected in 2 volumes, and include parts suitable for violin with piano accompaniment. Those published in 1801 are dedicated to ‘Miss Elliot’ (presumably of Minto) and the second volume (probably 1802) dedicated to Lady Scott of Ancrum and available from his lodgings at 16 Rose Street, Edinburgh. He probably lived in the capital as a dancing master. Tunes attributed to him include ‘Lady Ann Hope’, ‘The Miller of Drone’ and ‘Miss Walker’s Strathspey’. There are well over 100 tunes in these 2 volumes, including ‘Fertish Hill’, ‘Hawick Lasses, a Reel’, ‘Hawick, a Strathspey’, ‘Ruberslaw’, ‘Minto House’, several named after members of the Minto Elliots or local Scotts, ‘The Ettrick Shepherd’, ‘Betty Howison’s Favourite’, ‘Teviot Banks’, ‘Wilton Lodge, a Strathspey’ and the nursery air ‘Dance to your Daddy, my bonny Babby’. He may be the same John ‘musician in Hawick’ who was selected by ballot in 1799 to serve on the local Militia, but was declared unfit to serve. John (d.1805) tailor in Hawick. He was son of Thomas, who was a carter. He could be the John, son of Thomas and Betty Douglas born in Hawick in 1773. John of Carriber (d.1836) from Midlothian. About 1810 he arranged the tenancy of Bairnkine farm in Southdean parish. When he died the lease of the farm passed to his younger son Robert Baillie. He married Mary Walker, and their children were: Maj. David; Robert Baillie; another son, who died in India; Mary, who married Lieut. David Sheriff; Isabella, who married Dr. James Richmond, brother of the minister of Southdean; and 3 daughters who never married, Agnes, Janet and Ellen. John (b.1778) son of Walter and half-brother of Robert. He was the first member of the family known to be involved with the hosiery trade, being apprenticed to William Beck in 1794. He later became a merchant. He was recorded as a hosier in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He may be the same John recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as proprietor of a public house in the Sandbed. He may also be the grocer and spirit dealer listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may also be the meal dealer also listed on the High Street in 1837. He firstly married an Oliver and secondly Janet (d.1843), daughter of Thomas Keddie. They had 6 children, including: Elizabeth (b.1820); Thomas Keddie (b.1822); Walter Oliver (b.1824); and Robert (b.1827). He is probably the John, married to Mary Oliver, whose son Walter Oliver was born in Hawick in 1813. He is also probably the hosier John whose twin’s deaths are recorded in Hawick in 1816. John (1795/6–1843) shepherd at Milsington. In 1841 he was living at Milsingtonshiel. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children (mostly baptised in Ettrick Parish) included William (b.c.1825); James (who died in 1841, aged 14); Francis (b.1829); Adam (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); Jean (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Mary. His wife died at Broadlee in 1866, aged 74. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John Balfour (1815–85) Dumfries man who travelled around painting portraits, signing them ‘J.B. Pringle’. He probably married Grace Ballantrae in Edinburgh in 1846. His wife was Grace Haswell when their son John Haswell (b.1848) and daughter Julia Mary (b.1853) were born in Hawick. He was the painter of ‘Hawick from Wilton Lodge 1850’, now in the Museum, painted from around the Violet Woods. He also painted a view of the Auld Brig from near the foot of the Mill Port in 1847, as well as a view of Hawick and Wilton from the Mote in about the same year. He later gained some fame as a painter of maritime portraits. John (b.1825/6) grocer at about 6 Doncaster Street in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He is listed as a shepherd there in 1861. His wife was Grace and their children included daughter Eliot and son Robert. John Douglas (1877–1939) born in Hawick, son of manufacturer Walter Pringle and Mary Douglas. He joined the family firm at an early age, becoming a partner in 1897 (along with his half-brother Robert). He retired from Pringle’s in 1918 (or 1919), moving to the south of England for his health. He married Muriel Martin in 1907 and their children were Elizabeth Douglas (who married Dr. F.Y. Henderson of London and John Martin Douglas (who married Celia Carroll and became a successful journalist). John Martin Douglas (1912–99) son of John Douglas and Muriel Martin, he was born in Hawick. He graduated from Lincoln College, Oxford in 1934 and started a career in journalism. He was sub-editor of the Guardian, served in WWII with the K.O.S.B., was Director of Foreign Affairs at the Times (1948–52), then became editor of the Sydney Morning Herald (1952–57), Deputy Editor of the Observer (1957–62), Editor of the Canberra Times (1964–65) and editor of the Sydney Morning Herald again (1965–70). He wrote the controversial bestselling book ‘Australian Accent’ (1958), as well as ‘Australian Painting Today’ (1963) and ‘On Second Thoughts’ (1971). He married Celia Carroll in 1936 and she died in 1997. Margaret Graham ‘Peggy’ nee Irvine (1908–2008) born in Carlisle and raised near Langholm. She married master butcher Robert and they had 4 children: Gladys; Margaret; Jean; and Robert. Long connected with the Hawick Common Riding, she was Acting-Mother in 1947, and had a son and grandson who were Cornet. She lived to see her telegram from the Queen and had 27 great-grandchildren. Mark of Fairnilee and Clifton (1753/4–1812) son of John of Crichton and Anne, eldest daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee. He paid the Land Tax for Fairnilee and Rink in 1785. He succeeded to Haining and Clifton on the death of his grand-uncle John in 1792 and paid the carriage and horse taxes in the years 1794 and 1797, and the dog tax in 1797, as well as being taxed for 4–6 male servants in Selkirk Parish 1793–97. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1786–1802. He was also listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was appointed Chamberlain of Ettrick Forest for life. In 1802 he paid the land tax on Easter Alemoor, as well as Haining, Hartwoodburn and Howden. He was ‘of Clifton’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when already deceased). In 1795 he married Anne Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Chalmers. Among his children were: Robert, M.P. for Selkirkshire; John, also M.P., and last Pringle of Haining; and Margaret Violet, who married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone. His wife may be the ‘Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Pringle or Pattison’ who paid the land tax on Adderstone and North Synton in about 1874. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1812. Mistress (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She may be the widow of some local Pringle. Paul Henry (1922-84) born in Hawick of Presbyterian parents, he approached Father Gordon Gray just before WWII, and was accepted into the Roman Catholic church while a prisoner of war in Italy. He returned to Hawick after the War, worked on the railways and entered Nunraw as a monk in 1954. Robert of Hoppringle (13th C.) earliest known ancestor of this family. He is recorded as a witness to a Soutra charter in the reign of Alexander III, probably around 1270. His name was written ‘de Hoppryngil’. Another man, ‘Elys de Obrinkel’ signed the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and could easily have been his son. Robert of Whitson and Pilmuir (d.1424) one of the earliest local Pringles. He acted as armour-bearer for James, Earl of Douglas at Otterburn in 1388. He then served the next 2 Earls of Douglas and was killed at the Battle of Verneuil in France. In 1408 he had a charter of Pilmuir in Lauderdale. About the same time he was also probably granted the lands of Smalholm and had a tower built there at Sandyknowe. About 1413 he witnessed a charter for the Homes of Wedderburn. He is probably the ‘Robt of hopppringyll’ who witnessed an indenture for Melrose Abbey in 1418. He may be the Robert ‘de Pringil’ who witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. His children included: Robert, who succeeded; George, Squire of Douglas; Alexander, also Squire of Douglas; and David, who succeeded his brother Robert. Robert of Smalholm and Pilmuir (dbef. 1480) son of Robert. He is probably responsible for the bridge across the Teviot near Melrose (described by Sir Walter Scott in ‘The Monastery’) with the inscription ‘I, Robert Pringill of Pilmore steed, Gave a hundred nobles of goud sae reid, To big my brigg upon the Tweed’. He appears to have succeeded his brother George as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed from about 1460, and was succeeded in that post by William Douglas de Cluny of Traquair in 1470. In 1459 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Wrangham’ and Smalholm. He witnessed an instrument in 1474 (for the Homes of Wedderburn), but was succeeded by his brother David shortly afterwards. Robert (16th/17th C.) Bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 Simon Armstrong, called of Tweeden, appeared at the Justiciary Court as caution for him. It is unclear what his crimes were or how he was related to other Pringles. Robert of Stichill (b.c.1581–1649) descendant of William of Whittton and son of George of Craigleith. He was 2nd son of George of Newhall and was progenitor of the Stichill branch and Laird of Bartingbush. He trained as a lawyer, becoming Writer to the Signet. He acquire Stichell in 1628. He was Commissioner of War for Roxburghshire and Berwickshire. He also served as Clerk to Gideon Murray of Elibank and Chamberlain to the Earl of Buccleuch (for the Debateable Land in the 1630s). A letter exists from him to Earl Walter Scott, describing the flight and capture of several Armstrongs. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissi- oner for Roxburghshire in 1638, serving as effectively one of the Roxburghshire M.Ps. until 1641. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He could have been the servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank who had a bond in 1619 with Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’. He purchased Stichill in 1628, and also bought Dinlabyre, Larriston and Howden in Liddesdale in 1632, as well as Templehall in Berwickshire. He was recorded as possessor of the lands of Larriston, Howden and Stripshielden in the early 17th century. His lands in Castleton Parish (probably part of Dinlabyre) were valued at £60 in 1643 (but the same lands were owned by Scott of Buc- cleuch by 1678). He was also recorded as owner of lands in Stichill Parish in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire, still in 1649. He married Katherine Hamilton, who came from the Silverton family. Their children included: John, who married Margaret, illegitimate daughter of the 1st Earl of Buccleuch, but predeceased his father; Walter of Greenknowe; an unnamed daugh- ter, who married a Ker of Graden; Anna, who married Sir James Home of Eccles; and Christina, who married Hugh Wallace of Craigie. He was succeeded by John’s son Sir Robert. Sir Robert of Stichill (17th C.) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1651. He is listed ow- ing money to the deceased Countess of Buccleuch in 1661. He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and as one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1681, thus serving as M.P. for the county. He was also on the Commission of Sup- ply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1683. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Hope, Lord Craighall. They had 19 children, including: Sir John, 2nd Baronet; Sir Walter, Lord Newhall; Robert Pringle, Secretary-at-War; and Thomas, W.S., Clerk of the Privy Council and Deputy-Keeper of the Signet, father of Lord Edgfield. Robert (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuooll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Caverton in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Sanderson, tenant in Fahnash. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Baldy and their children included Betty (b.1737). Robert (18th C.) possibly half-brother of Thomas. He is also recorded in the ancient Hawick family bible. He may be the Robert who married Janet Porteous, and whose children born in Hawick included Thomas (b.1743), Helen (b.1746) and Ann (b.1756). He could be the dyer in Hawick who witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Bunyan in 1743, along with his servant (showing that he was a man of means) George Campbell. Robert (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included John (b.1745) and John (again, b.1747). He witnessed a baptism in Hawick for carrier Walter Scott in 1745, with Scott reciprocating on the same day. Robert (d.1793) served as Captain of the Royal Engineers and Lieutenant Colonel in the Army. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of John Pringle of Clifton’ among the voters of Roxburghshire (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He supervised the construction of new defences around St. John’s, Newfoundland in the 1770s and instigated the Newfoundland Volunteers in about 1778 and the Newfoundland Regiment in 1780. He returned to Europe in 1783 and was chief engineer at Gibraltar 1785–88. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in 1792 and died in Grenada. He married Miss Bahnevis. His will is in the National Archives. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included John (b.1778). In 1778 he is described as a Superintendent of Excise and the witnesses were Robert Pringle (perhaps his father) and writer William Wilson. He could be the ‘Mr. Pringle’ who was schoolmaster at the east-end of the Kirkyard and also master of excise in Hawick. Robert (1750/1–1820) possibly son of Robert (recorded in the family bible). He was a nursery gardener in Hawick, probably with Dickson’s. He married Ann Buckham (1771–1820) and their children were: William (b.1794), framesmith; James (b.1796), stockingmaker; Jean (or Jane, b.1799), married Francis Bell; Robert (b.1801), framework knitter, who married Elizabeth Foyer; and George Turnbull (b.1810), gardener and then licensed grocer at 12 Back Row. In the 1843 electoral roll his sons George T., Robert and James were listed as joint proprietors of the house he had left them. This is marked ‘Ro. Pringle’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was a shepherd at Bellendean in 1788 and was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. He married Janet Burnet in Roberton in 1788 and their children included: William (b.1788); Margaret (b.1790); James (b.1793); John (b.1795); Jane (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); and an unnamed son (b.1801). He is probably the Robert, son of William, born in 1765. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Lunn and their children included John (b.1803), Elizabeth (b.1805) and James (b.1807). Robert (d.bef. 1809) resident of Hawick. He was already deceased in 1809 when the death of his son Thomas is recorded. His nickname appears to be ‘old Washman’, but it is unclear what this meant. Robert of Clifton (d.1842) younger son of Mark. He served in the 7th Hussars. He succeeded his brother John to the Clifton titles in 1831 after John died in a carriage accident when returning from Headshaw Loch. He resided as the Haining (in Selkirk), where he died 11 years later, and was the last Pringle of Clifton. His lands included North Synton in Ashkirk Parish. He was also listed among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He was a Liberal in politics and reputedly well-liked in the local community. He defeated Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in the Selkirkshire election of 1832, by 9 votes. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1832–34 and was defeated again by Pringle of Whytbank in the 1835 election. Since he died unmarried, his distant cousin Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood succeeded to the Clifton estates, while Haining passed to his sister Margaret Violet, who had married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and Midshiel. Robert (1795–1859) founder of the manufacturers, born in Hawick, son of Walter. He joined Dicksons & Laings in 1810 as an apprentice stockingmaker. He entered into a partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson in 1815, which later separated, his part eventually becoming Pringle’s of Scotland. The firm was based at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent 1815–19. In 1819 he carried on the business on his own in new premises on the Cross Wynd, where the company remained for about 50 years. It was listed as a manufacturer of hose there in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. It was known as Robert Pringle & Son for many years, later becoming Pringle of Scotland and being run by the family until his grandson Robert retired in 1940. He was said to be a man of strong individuality and great energy in developing his business. He was on the old Town Council, as well as being a Police Commissioner and on the Parochial Board. He was a member of Hawick Kirk Session and was a Liberal in politics. He was living at 61 High Street in 1841 and had moved to Bridge Street by 1851, when he is listed as employer of 82 men and 8 women. In 1823 he married Charlotte Paterson, and she died in 1873, aged 69. They had 11 children including Walter, who carried on the business. Their other children were: Charlotte (b.1824), who became Mrs. Dykes; Walter (b.1826); Ann (b.1827), who married Peter Williamson; William (b.1829), who became a grocer; Catherine Elizabeth `Kate' (b.1831), who married Mr. Hoy; Beatrice (b.1833), who became Mrs. Peters; Margaret (‘Etta', b.1834), who married Dr. Robert Munro; Robert (b.1836), who became a doctor; Jessie (b.1839); Henry Turnbull (b.1840); Ann; and Esther Scott (b.1844). A portrait exists of him with his wife. He died at 18 Buccleuch Street and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (b.1801) son of Robert and Ann Buckham. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and by 1861 was listed at No. 13. He married Elizabeth Foyer and their children included: Anne, who married a Gad and then a Kerr; Elizabeth; James; Robert; and George. Robert Bailie (1806–78) son of John and Mary Walker, he was born at Cranston, Midlothian. He was farmer at Bainkine in Southdean Parish. His brother was Maj. David of Carriber. In 1838 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of Peter Brown of Rawflat; she died in 1886. Their children included: Margaret; John, farmer at Nisbet, who succeeded to his uncle’s lands at Carriber; Robert Brown: David; Mary; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Southdean kirkyard. Robert (1837–1903) son of manufacturer Robert, he became a doctor. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1862–1953) grandson of manufacturer Robert and son of Walter. In 1878 he became an apprentice in the firm his grandfather had founded. He had the villa Woodnorton (originally Craigmore) built for him in Sunnyhill. By 1885 he was a partner, and after the death of his father in 1895 he ran the family knitwear business until he retired in 1940. In 1887 he married Edith Villiers Price (1866–1944), daughter of Joseph, a successful railway engineer (although also said to have been a soap and candlemaker from Clapham Common), and younger sister of Mrs. Patrick Anderson Laing of Balcary. Their children were Francis Mary Edith (who married James Chrystal Muir, son of a Glasgow minister) and Walter Gerald (who died in WWI). He lived at Wood Norton and died aged 91. Robert butcher in Hawick, son of Robert, who was Acting Father in 1947. He was Cornet in 1965, with his Lass being Catherine Peden (later Johnson). He married Anna Dickey (whose brother Norman was Cornet in 1961) and their son Robert was Cornet in 1994. He was Acting Father in 1989 and Jubilee Cornet in 2015. Robert ‘Robbie’ son of Robert, he was Cornet in 1994 (with his father being Cornet in 1965). He married his Lass, Lorna Zwoneberg. His Picking Night unusually took place at Cavers. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had a horse and 4 cows stolen from him at Smailholm by the Olivers of Strange. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Pringles associated with Smailholm. Thomas of Torsonce and that Ilk (d.1566) son of John of Hoppringle. In 1564/5 he was named (along with David Spottiswood of that Ilk) as one of the cautioners of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in his feud with James Ormiston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by James. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as factor to the Crumhaugh estate in 1716. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1716 when his servant John Henderson had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear who he was or where he lived. He could be the Thomas in Cavers who witnessed a baptism for ‘Wester’ James Grieve in Commonside in 1705. Thomas (b.1720s) perhaps the earliest known Pringle of the knitwear family, he was grandfather of Robert and father of Walter, merchant in Hawick. It is unclear who his own parents were. He lived in the Sandbed area and was possibly a merchant. He was the owner of the family bible that was washed away in the great flood of 1767, but recovered near Kelso. He is believed to have died in a snowstorm. He may have had a half-brother Robert. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for gardener John Turnbull in 1766. His son Walter was born in 1748. Adm. Thomas (d.1804) of the Royal Navy. Son of Walter, who was a prosperous West Indian plantation owner, and grandson of Thomas, W.S. of the Stichill branch. He served during the American War of Independence, as well as in the Napoleonic Wars. He purchased the lands of Weens in 1796 from Robert Nutter Campbell and they were sold by his trustees (to Thomas Cleghorn) after his death. He was listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax in 1797 and was listed on the Carriage Tax Rolls at Weens in 1797/8. He also paid tax there in 1797 for having 4 male servants, when he was ‘Colonel Pringle’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His son John, a tailor, died in 1805. He may be the Thomas who married Betty Douglas in 1767, and whose children included: Robert (b.1770); James (b.1771); John (b.1773); Robert (again, b.1775); Walter (b.1777); Janet (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1781). He is probably the ‘Newcastle carrier’ who was already deceased when his son Robert died in 1809. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 3 work horses. Thomas (b.c.1790) dyer in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1841 he was listed as a ‘Dyer J. Wool’ on Dovemount. His wife was Beatrice and their children included Beatrice, William, Thomas, Peter and Janet. Thomas (1789–1834) poet and abolitionist, known as ‘the father of South African poetry’. Son of Teviotdale farmer Robert, he was born in Linton Parish about 4 miles south of Kelso, with his mother being Beatrice Scott from Langholm. He was crippled in infancy and suffered from lameness all his life. He was educated at Edinburgh University. He published his first poetry collection in 1817, with poems such as ‘The Scenes of Teviotdale’ popular locally. He was also the first editor of the ‘Edinburgh Monthly Magazine’, which would become Blackwood’s Magazine. He also edited ‘The Liberal Star’ and ‘Constable’s Monthly Magazine’ and worked at Register House. He befriended Sir Walter Scott, who helped him secure free passage in a resettlement programme to South Africa. In 1820 he emigrated to Grahamstown, moving to Cape Town, where he founded a school and a newspaper, but was forced to leave in 1826 because of his fight against slavery and his promotion of free speech. His sister Jessie married Hawick man William Ainslie, and he visited family in Hawick several times, after one occasion writing the poem ‘The Emigrant’s Farewell’. The Museum has (or at least had) an original letter of his. Back in London, he worked for the Committee of the Anti-Slavery Society for his last 7 years. He encouraged former slave Mary Prince to write her autobiography. He published ‘African Sketches’ and books of verse, such as ‘Ephemerides’. He died from tuberculosis at the age of 45. He was buried in Bunhill Fields, but in 1970 his remains were re-interred in South Africa. Thomas Kedie (b.1822) son of merchant John and Ann Kedie. He was listed as a grocer on Market Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1844 he married Lucille Kennedy, sister of William Norman Kennedy and half-sister of bookseller J.D. Kennedy. Their children were: Angélique Lucille (b.1846), who became a nurse; Janet Kedie (b.1848); Elizabeth Hamer (b.1850); John Douglas (b.1852); James Robert (b.1854); Douglas; Jessie, who married James Lindsay; Maggie; and Robert. Walter (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the Roughheugh Waulk Mill in the early 1700s. In 1713 the Bailies heard a case of assault brought against his servant John Kerr. He is referred to in the Hawick Session records of 1723 as ‘Walker, Roughheugh’, when he was employer of William Hood, and paid his fine for adultery. Given the name, occupation and location, it is not inconceivable that he was an ancestor of the manufacturing Pringles. He is probably the Walter, who married Helen ‘Ourd’, and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Elspeth (b.1714); William (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); and Henry (b.1720). Walter (b.1748) son of Thomas and father of manufacturer Robert. He was a merchant in the Sandbed. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the tailor who was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller in 1781. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. In 1773 he married Betty Heiton (or Hutton), who came from an old Darnick family. Their wedding proclamation is recorded in Melrose, with Andrew Riddell as cautioner. They had 7 children, including: Betty (b.1775); Robert (b.1776), who must have died young; John (b.1778), a merchant; Robert (1780–82); James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); and Walter (b.1787). In 1793 he secondly married Anny Scott (related to the Brieryyards Scotts) and had at least 5 more children: Beatrice (b.1794), who died in infancy; Robert (b.1795), who founded Pringle of Scotland; Jennie or Janet (1797–1858); Andrew (b.1799); and James. Walter (1826–1895) eldest son of Robert. He began as an apprentice in his father’s Cross Wynd factory in 1842, and when he was finished in 1846, the firm was renamed ‘Robert Pringle & Son’. He eventually ran the family hosiery business, further developing it after the death of his father, the founder. In the 1850s he developed the ‘intarsia’ of producing Argyle-style sock patterns. In 1868 he moved the main premises to Walter’s Wynd. He was a Town Councillor for many years and also served as a Magistrate. In politics he was a staunch Liberal. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He gifted communion silverware to the Parish Church. In 1860 he married Mary Sutton and she died in 1870, aged 35. They had 3 children: John Clement, who died in infancy; Robert, who succeeded to the family business; and Mary Charlotte (b.1864), who married William Charles Johnston. He later married Mary, daughter of Dr. John Douglas, and she died in 1915, aged 72. The children by his second marriage were: Jane Aitchison, who married T.J. Finlay; Catherine Ann (‘Cathy’), who married George Crosfield Glenny; and John Douglas, who married Marie Anne Martin, and became a partner in the family firm. He lived at Langlands in Sunnyhill, which he had built for him, starting a trend for other manufacturers to build villas nearby. In about 1874 he was recording owning part of the ‘particulate lands’ of Hawick, which had earlier been owned by William Scott ‘at Flex’. He is said to not have been of very strong constitution. Along with several other members of the family, he is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Walter Gerald (1893–1917) only son of Robert Pringle, the last member of the family to run the famous knitwear company. He started his apprenticeship in 1910, and was being groomed to eventually take over the firm before war broke out. Before WWI he was Captain of the Hawick Motor Cycling Club. He became 2nd Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. and was killed at Passchendaele. There is a plaque to his memory in Wilton Church. William (15th C.) probably son of David. He was Constable of Cessford Castle and appointed the 1st Range of the Ward of Tweed. He could have been the ‘Wil Pringill’ who was on the 1464/5 panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was Constable of Cessford Castle when he witnessed a sasine for Cessford in 1467. He is probably the William who witnessed a document between Henry Wardlaw and the Kers of Cessford in 1468 and another for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk in 1468. It seems likely he is the William mentioned in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He was probably succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the William who was recorded along with David on a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491. Also in 1491 he was ‘Wil Hopringill de Cesfurd’ when he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. William (d.1513) younger son of James of Smalholm. His mother was Isabella Muray of Falahill. He had a tack for Caddonlee in 1488 and another along with his son George for Torwoodlee in 1509. In 1509 he also held one quarter of Clifton. He was a witness to the sasine of Queen Margaret of England for lands in Ettrick Forest. He had sons: George, who succeeded; and David, whose son George was a tutor of Torwoodlee in 1581. He was killed at Flodden. William (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear where he was from, although he is listed along with men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. His name is recorded as ‘Ville Hopprigill’. William of Torwoodlee (d.1581) son of George. In 1571 he subscribed to the General Band to rise against Kerr of Ferniehirst and the thieves of Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1575 he was directed to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He married Agnes (or Alison), daughter of James Heriot of Trabrown in 1571 and was succeeded by his son George. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Mary Hutchison, the marriage being proclaimed in Robertson, but taking place at Eskdalemuir. He is probably the William who was at Howpasley in 1721 and 1723, Phillopeshiel in 1726 and Philhope in 1732 and 1737. His children included: Jean (b.1721); Helen (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); an unnamed child (b.1728); William (b.1730); an unnamed son (b.1732); John (b.1734); and Janet (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1761, 1765 and 1767. He may have been brother to John, who was also living at Howpasley. He is probably the William who married Jean Robson in Robertson in 1758. His children probably included Adam (b.1759), William (b.1761), Robert (b.1765) and John (b.1767). William (d.1811) tenant farmer at Hislop. He had 2 sons by his first marriage, Adam and Robert. His second wife was Elizabeth Wilson. After his death, there was a court
the Pringle Bible

The inscription: ‘Who ought this book if ye would knowe I will show you by letters 2, the first is T, the 2 is P in all men’s sight, and if you chance should to read amiss look underneath you and see the word “Pringle”.

The book was later returned to the family. It bears the inscription: ‘Who ought this book if ye would knowe I will show you by letters 2, the first is T, the 2 is P in all men’s sight, and if you chance should to read amiss look underneath and there it is – Thomas Pringle’.

the Pringle Hall (thu-pring-ul-ba) n. extension added to the Burns Club in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, club treasurer for 37 years.

Pringle’s (pring-ulz) n. Pringle of Scotland, founded as a hosiery firm by Robert Pringle in 1815, in partnership with John Waldie and Peter Wilson, at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent. Pringle went on his own from 1819, moving to the Cross Wynd (opposite Allars Kirk) and manufacturing underwear from 1827, with the introduction of the ‘broad frame’. The name was changed to ‘Robert Pringle & Son’, when Walter completed his apprenticeship in 1846. The ‘Intarsia’ method of producing Argyle-patterned socks was introduced in the 1850s. The firm purchased John Nixon & Sons mill on Walter’s Wynd in 1868 (or 1869), renaming it ‘Rodono’. Robert Pringle (grandson of the founder) was made a partner in 1885. The company then started to focus on retail as well as wholesale. The firm first made spun silk underwear (and in colour) in 1892, and introduced seamless gore for ladies underwear in 1895. About 1905 it became one of the first firms to introduce knitted outerwear. Douglas Pringle joined his brother Robert as a partner in 1897, and J. Boyd Sime became another partner in 1906. The knitted coat department was started in 1910. Herbert Benyon Johnstone joined in 1919. In 1922 it became incorporated as a private company, Robert Pringle & Son Ltd. Pure silk stockings (‘Prinseta’) were started in 1927. Sime resigned in 1929, with John Turnbull becoming Managing Director. ‘Rodono splash-proof’ silk stockings and ‘Slimfit’ underwear were being made from 1931. Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart became joint Directors in 1932 and became Managing Directors following Turnbull’s resignation a year later. In 1933 cashmere was added, and designer Otto Weisz joined in 1934, becoming a Director in 1937. He was responsible for the name ‘twinset’ and for making the style the company’s own from the mid-1940s. A.G. Chaston was also made a Director in 1934 and George Mitchell in 1937. The lion rampant first appeared on garment labels in 1934. In 1940 the ladies’ blouse department started in Hawick, ‘Pringle Johnston Imports’ was formed to handle the U.S. market, and Robert Pringle retired that same year. The firm manufactured utility underwear for the forces in WWII, and stopped making underwear in 1965. A 5 year lease was taken on Weensland Mill in 1946 and the Kelso factory opened, with the Berwick factory following 2 years later. The blouse department closed in 1950, but the Burnfoot factory opened and Rodono Mill was extended 3 times in the 1950s. Automatic rob transfer was introduced in 1955, with intarsia and men’s outerwear starting about the same time. It received the Royal Warrant from the Queen Mother in 1948, was appointed to the Queen in 1956 and received the Queen’s Award to Industry for Export Achievement in 1965 (further awards followed in 1970, 1979 and 1983). The name was changed to ‘Pringle of Scotland Ltd.’ in 1958 and became a public company in 1960. The underwear department finally closed in 1961. The company purchased Glebe Mills in 1962 and started making men’s knitwear there a year later. They sponsored a professional golf tournament in 1964 and signed a deal with golfer Nick Faldo in 1981 (ending in 2001), with the Fuldo Collection of leisurewear launch in 1989. The company was acquired by Dawson International in 1967 for £5.8 million. There were further extensions to Rodono and Glebe Mills in 1968 and new factories were opened in Earlston, Cumbernauld and Livingston. In 1970 Alan Smith of Dawson succeeded Wullie Mactaggart as Chairman. Rodono was closed in 1976 and demolished in 1980/1, but a new factory was opened in Arbroath in 1985. Princess Anne visited Glebe Mills in 1988 and a Gold Award for Outstanding Export Achievement was awarded in 1993. However, the stores were converted into franchises in 1995, and the workforce was substantially reduced 1997–98. It was and purchased by the Fang Brothers in 2000, with Kim Winser as the new C.E.O., and the Diffusion line being introduced. Princess Anne opened a flagship shop on Bond Street in 2002. Women’s fashions were shown in London in 2002 and mens’s fashions in Milan in 2003. Terese meanwhile complained that the company had lost its focus. Records relating to the firm, covering the period 1922–76 are listed on the National Register of Archives and a book ‘Pringle of Scotland and the Hawick Knitwear Story’ (2006) was written by Hugh Barty-King – ‘Hei’s a Pringle-ite since hei left schill an plenty o support hei’ll get frae the mill’ [GM].

The Pringle’s Story

n. 1948 film, being a documentary about Pringle’s.

Pringle’s Temperance Hotel

n. one of the last temperance hotels in Hawick, situated on Union Street in the early 20th century. This may be the same as the house on the corner at 32 North Bridge Street, later Gladstone’s factory.

Pringle Street

n. lost street name, originally given to the west part of Wellington Road, built around 1877 and named after David Pringle, but discarded in 1892.

v., arch., poet. to prickle, tingle, have goosebumps – ‘An’ mony bats flew silent roon’ My prinklin’ heid’ [WP], adj. a tingling sensation, prickles (usually plural).

Printer’s Close

n. close off Silver Street, near the foot of the Howegate. It is unclear who the printer was.

the Printer’s Well

n. former public water supply at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. It was originally on the opposite side of the street beside John Waldy’s House, and hence also sometimes known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. It was part of the town’s water supply, and tended to be used when the wells further up went dry (also written as ‘Printers’’).

pp. printed (note the double glottal stop).

n., arch. an appraisal, assigning of a value – ‘... that passit upon the prising of the said lands’ [SB1500].

prisoners o war

n., pl. prisoners of various wars have been a common sight in and around Hawick. During the Napoleonic wars, 1812–14, about 120 French, German and Polish officers were sent to Hawick and allowed to move about freely with certain restrictions (the privates were largely kept in Penicuik, and there were also officers in Selkirk). William Nixon acted as paymaster for them and their headquarters was at Slitrig Bank, but they were boarded in private houses throughout Hawick. There was also a base across the river on Slitrig Crescent, in what was once the Red Cross building. Several officers stayed in the old house at 44 High Street, as seen in a painting of the time. They were allowed to walk within 1 mile of the Tower Knowe in any direction, and met every morning at the Spetch for roll call. Some of them (including M. Prefort) painted local landscapes, which still exist, and some created other items that are now in the Museum, such as a carved ivory guillotine, a carved snuff-box and a home-made pair of men’s body stays. In late 1813 Francois Senebien wrote (in French) to the Duke of Buccleuch, asking for help in beeing freed on compassionate and health grounds. In any case, all of these prisoners were released in June 1814 after the allied troops took Paris, with the men boarding ship at Leith. It is said that the presence of all the well-dressed French officers changed the sense of fashion in the Town. One of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson’s sisters married a prisoner (traditionally said to be a Bonaparte!), while another sister (Jane) had a child to one, named Cabourne. Additionally, Ann Ekron lived with an ensign called Adam Bellom, having a daughter Adelina, and Lieut. Frederick Diener had a son Frederick William Diener with Hawick woman Willhelmina Paisley. A century later there were as many as 6,000 German prisoners of war based at Stobs in WWI, living in 200 wooden huts below Winnington Rig farm. They were mainly civilian detainees in the first few months of the War, and it became purely a military camp at the end. Prisoners included the crews of the battleships ‘Gneisenau’, ‘Leipzig’, ‘Torpedo’ and ‘Blücher’. Conditions in the camp seem to have been among the best in Britain. Prisoners worked on local farms and built a sewage works for the Camp. The last prisoners were released in early 1919. The Museum has a model ship and a ship in a bottle from this period, and also copies of the newspaper produced by the Germans, ‘Stobsbiade’. 45 prisoners were buried in the Camp cemetery, with their remains transferred to Cannock Chase Cemetery in 1962. During WWII there were a small number of Polish and German prisoners located at Stobs. There were about 30 prisoners there towards the end of the War, staying until January 1947, although with minimum security in the last months. German and Italian prisoners were also located in Nissen huts where the Police Station and Katharine Elliot Centre were later built.

the Probs Club (θu-prò-bis-klub) n. local club for retired professional businessmen, which meets every second Thursday morning for a talk and refreshments. Local clubs are connected with the international Probus organisation (founded 1966), but run autonomously, while being supported by the local Rotary club. The Hawick Club was formed in 1976.

the Procession (θu-pro-se-shin) n. any of the parades associated with the Common Riding, particularly the parade of bands, officials and horses along the High Street on the Friday morning. At the end of the 19th century the route was from the Tower to the Sandbed, then up Wilton Path, Princes Street, Bridge Street, Union Street, then a pause while the Cornet and followers went to the Bogliebarns, after which it proceeded along the High Street and up the Howegate and Loan to the Chase. The Procession is preceded by the walk from the Town Hall after the Cornet has picked up the Flag, with the other Principals, Provost, Bailies and guests walking in procession to the Tower for the singing of the Auld Sang. The Procession includes cars (carriages in former times) containing Councillors and Committee Members, plus the Cornet and mounted supporters and the bands. The modern event starts at 8.45 a.m., with the Halberdiers leading the Provost’s motorcade, with the Lasses’ car in the rear. Then comes the Drums and Fifes leading the Cornet and Principals (who emerge from the Tower pend), with the mounted supporters falling in behind, in the order of ex-Cornets, then ex-Acting Fathers, then visiting principals, then the rest. The route goes via the Sandbed, up Wilton Path, along Princes Street to Dovemount, then back along Bridge Street. At the Horse the Saxhorn Band join, and lead the Procession up the Loan.

the Proclamation (θu-pro-kla-mā-shin) n. the official announcement made on the Thursday by the Burgh Officer charging the Burgesses to ride the marches. Once this would have been made at the Mercart Cross, and later from the ‘Oyes door’ in the old Town House, but now it is done from the Town Hall Balcony immediately after the Colour Bussing. The Saxhorn Band provide the fanfare for the Big Power and the Halberdier appearing outside the Town Hall, this being the first time the townsfolk have seen the bussed Flag. The text of the announcement is: ‘These are to give advertisements to all burgesses within the Burgh and Town of Hawick, and burgesses outwith the same, that the Provost, Bailies and Council are to ride the marches of the Commony of Hawick upon Friday the ... day of June instant as hath ever been usual. Therefore warning all the said burgesses to attend that day in their best apparel to the end aforesaid’. The text is essentially unchanged since being recorded in 1733. Afterwards the Cornet waves the Flag and it is left on display. The Lasses and Maids of Honour then usually appear from the balconies and the bands and halberdiers lead the Cornet and his followers in the Cornet’s Walk. A second Proclamation is made at the Mill Path on the Friday afternoon, stating that the marches have been duly ridden: ‘For as much as the Provost, Bailies and Council of the burgh of Hawick, with the burgesses of the said burgh, have this day ridden the marches of the Commony of Hawick, as has been in use yearly since time immemorial, without interruption or molestation of any sort; therefore, if any nobleman, gentleman, or others, having lands lying contiguous or adjacent to the said Commony, shall find themselves leized or prejudiced in any sort by this day’s marching, they are hereby required to state their objections thereto to the Provost, Bailies and Council of the said burgh within forty days from this date otherwise they shall be held to have acquiesced in the said marching’. The Proclamations were properly incorporated into the Common Riding ceremonies in 1900. In the early 2000s they were replaced with versions using the Hawick vernacular. Before the Division of the Common a proclamation was made at the Mercat Cross on Common Riding Friday, stating which parts of the Common were to be used for cutting turf etc. in the coming year.

Proctor (prok-tur) n. Rev. James (1826–60) probably born at Dalkeith. He started as an apprentice tailor, then switched to carpentry. He also became a strong advocate for Teetotallism, joining the British League of Junior Abstainers. He attended Edinburgh University and became a missionary under Rev. William Reid of Edinburgh. His health prevented him from completing the arduous course with the United Presbyterians, so he entered the Congregational Church. He was inducted to Hawick Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in 1857, but resigned the following year due to ill-health (and perhaps partly because of disputes among the congregation about remaining out of the Congregational Union, with which he had been involved). He became minister at Hamilton Congregational Church, but again his health cut this appointment short. He married Janet Chisholm and they had 1 child, but she died giving birth to a second. He wrote ‘A Crack about the Drink; or, a Poetical Dialogue between a Total Abstainer and a Moderate Drinker’ (1949). He also wrote poetry and hymns.

provost (proo-vist) n. Scottish version of mayor, being chief magistrate, chairman of the town council and civic head (from Old English).

the Provost (thu-pro-vist) n. Hawick’s first Provost was George Wilson in 1861 after the council was reconstituted following the Police and Improvement Act of that year. The normal term of office is 3 years. After Reorganisation in 1975, it was decided to continue to appoint a local Councillor to perform the ceremonial role. The title used was Ex-Provost, while the old Provost (Atkinson) continued, then the new incumbent was named Honorary Provost. The duties of the current Honorary Provost include chairing the Provost’s Council, acting as civic head during the Common Riding, selecting the Common Riding Chief Guest and representing Hawick as civic head at Common Ridings and similar ceremonies in neighbouring towns. The following is the full list: George Wilson 1861–68; George Hardie Fraser 1868–71; John Nichol 1871–74; Edward Wilson 1874–75; Robert Ewen 1875–78; Robert Fraser Watson 1878–87; Robert Milligan 1887–90; George Hogg 1890–93; Walter Scott Barrie 1893–96; Robert Mitchell 1896–1902; John Melrose 1902–19; George Heron Wilson 1919–22; James Renwick 1922–28; William Scott Nichol 1928–31; David Fraser 1931–38; J.A.C. Landles 1938–40; Thomas McLagan 1940–45; George Fraser 1945–58; David Atkinson 1958–62; James Henderson 1962–68; David Atkinson 1968–78; Frank T. Scott 1978–82; Jake Irvine 1982–88; Myra Turnbull 1988–92; Tom Hogg 1992–96; John R. Scott 1996–2002; John Robertson 2002–03; Zandra Elliot 2003–05; Kenny McCartney 2005–07; Zandra Elliot 2007–10; Ron Smith 2011–13; Stuart Marshall 2013–17; Watson McAteer 2017– – ‘Here’s to our Provost, that gallant auld Teri, Nane better than he likes to hear the auld sang’ [JEDM] (see also Honorary Provost).

the Provost’s Breakfast (thu-pro-vists-breik-fist) n. ceremonial breakfast taking place traditionally in the Town Hall on the Friday morning of the Common Riding, and including the Magistrates, Councillors and other invited guests. The event was inaugurated by Provost Watson in 1885 at his home at Wilton Bank, and held in the Council Chambers from 1888. Unlike most other events, speeches are prohibited. The Cornet and his guests breakfast separately, formerly in the Tower Inn.

the Provost’s Chain (thu-pro-vists-chan) n. chain of office of the Hawick Provost, first worn by Provost Melrose in 1906 along with the ceremonial robe. It was purchased through public subscription, initiated by the Callants’ Club. The design is in the ‘renaissance’ style, in 15 carat gold, weighing about 30 ounces. It consists of 30 parts linked together, 14 of which are shields for the names of Provosts, 8 are thistles with the motto ‘Nemo me impune lacesset’ and the last 8 are circular wreaths of oak leaves bearing an ornamental ‘H’ and mural coronets with the sword and scales of justice. The monogram of the Provost forms the back link of the collar, while the badge of the Callant’s Club in enamel forms the front link. The badge that hangs from the chain measures 4½ by 3 inches and is an enamel version of the Burgh Arms. The design and manufacture were by Brock & Son, goldsmiths of Edinburgh. The Chain was in regular use until 1974, when it disappeared during the Common Riding Ball. Worth an estimated £7,000 at the time, its disappearance was a great mystery. The Callants’ Club presented a replacement chain in 1979. However, the original was sent anonymously to the Provost in 2002.

the Provost’s Council (thu-pro-vists-koonsul) n. Hawick Honorary Provost’s Council, a group consisting of a number of local councillors with specific duties during the Common Riding. This body officially invite a young man to be Cornet each year, and its main objective is to fulfil Hawick’s civic functions and ceremonies. It was formerly a sub-committee of the Town Council, but after Reorganisation became an honorary body, consisting of the regional (8 members) and community councillors (4 members) from the Hawick wards, who elect the Honorary Provost and 4 Honorary Bailies from among themselves.

the Provost’s Lamp (thu-pro-vists-lawmp) n. an ornamental lamp which used to be mounted outside the Provost’s house during his term of office, and at one time would be alight as a sign that he was at home. The first Provost who had the lamp was Robert Fraser Watson in 1882. Since Reorganisation it has been kept inside the Town Hall. Flags were also flown outside the Provost’s house since at least 1888.

the Provost’s Room (thu-pro-vists-room) n. an upstairs chamber in the Town Hall, formerly

the Provost’s Tent (thu-pro-vists-ten’t) n. refreshment tent in the centre of the racecourse at the Mair, where the Provost and councillors entertain their guests, a tradition started by Provost Renwick in the 1920s.

Prowett (prow-i) n. William (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick. He who was involved in 1830 with an improvement whereby old frames could be made wider for producing shirts and undergarments rather than just hosiery. He was listed as a framesmith on O’Connell Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on O’Connell Street (labelled ‘Prowat’s backhouse’) with his wife Mary and children Mary, John and Ann. By 1851 his wife was a widow, listed as a lodging house keeper. William (b.1821/2) born in Traqueer, Kirkcudbright, he was son of William and continued his father’s framesmith business. In 1851 he was at 2 O’Connell Street (perhaps the modern No. 11). His wife was Sarah Anne and their children included Mary Jane, William Henry and John Dodd.

prowsie (prow-see) adj., arch. particular in dress or in work (also ‘prossie’; noted by J. Jamieson).

the Pru (thu-proo) n. popular short form for the Prudential Life Assurance Company, in Hawick referring to the building by the ‘coffin end’ at the Horse. Although the insurance company moved out in the 1970s, the balcony still contains the word ‘Prudential’ carved in stone.

the P.S.A. (thu-pee-es-ā) n. organisation formed locally in 1910 to provide activities for the male youth of Hawick. The idea started in the Midlands of England in 1875, to provide non-denominational Sunday afternoon meetings to encourage young men away from public houses, the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ brotherhood. A P.S.A. club started in Hawick in the 1890s, but that floundered and it was more firmly established in 1910. This was partly instigated by Hawick’s Rev. William Ainslie, making inquiries about the Birmingham-based movement. Originally the Hawick club had a connection with the Congregational Kirk, but soon became an autonomous organisation. The club organised indoor games and other activities for young men. In particular it has a ‘semi-junior’ rugby team, for 16 to 18 year olds, founded in 1919 by D. Paterson, D. Stavert and Bailie A.J. Hislop. This makes them the oldest semi-junior rugby team in Scotland. The male voice choir was formed in 1932, with first conductor being William Elliot and first accompanist Robert Little. The clubrooms were on Teviot Crescent, providing indoor games facilities for boys from the age of 12. It was run by volunteers, basically providing a boys ‘youth club’, before local authorities thought about such things. The clubrooms had 7 billiard tables, carpet bowls and table tennis. The club also had a cricket team, a drama group and an orchestra at one time, and held an annual New Year’s bowling tournament. When the clubrooms closed in 1961 the building was acquired by Barrie’s knitwear and later demolished to make way for a supermarket. The rugby team and choir survive to this day (the choir being the only remaining P.S.A. choir in Britain). They were the first local junior rugby team to have their own pitch, acquiring some waste ground at Burnfoot in 1958, and building facilities there in 1960. The team is nicknamed ‘the Peeskees’, and plays in navy blue shirts with a gold hoop and navy socks with gold tops. Highlights include winning the Scottish Youth Championship in 1986/87 and again in 2003/04. In 2016 the rugby team effectively merged with the Wanderers, with the teams training together and swapping roles as ‘A’ and ‘B’ teams in alternating years. Minute books and team photographs exist from 1919, and a booklet ‘Memories of a Great Club’ was printed for the 75th anniversary in 1994.

the P.S.A. Choir (thu-pee-es-ā-kwIr) n. male-voice choir associated with the ‘Pleasant Sunday Afternoon’ club. The choir was set up in 1932. The first conductor was William Elliot and the first accompanist was Robert Little (both men being organists in the Congregational Kirk). Later conductors included Bert Hutchinson, Albert Budge, Eric Whitehead, W.R. Smith, Jeff Panes, John Leishman, Basil Deane, Ian Seeley, Susan Booth, Isaac MacRae and Ann Witherington. Accompanists have included Robert Little, Adam Ingles, A. Whitelaw, Agnes Young, Peggy Hunter, Nan Ellis, Brian Bonsor, Betty Scott, George Duthie and Linden Warburton. The choir has performed over the years with the Hawick Drama Club, Hawick Orchestral Society and the Saxhorn Band. During the war they performed concerts to raise money for the Red Cross. They have sung with many special guests, including Dame Isobel Baillie. They hold an annual dinner in November.

Puffin Billy (pu-fin-bi-lee) n. nickname given to the first locomotive that was brought to Liddesdale in advance of the opening of the railway. It was said to be as big as a traction engine and with a 6-foot high chimney. It was an enormous struggle to bring it from Carlisle by road, with many mishaps along the way, including the death of the man in charge of the operation, Bill Smith, when it fell on top of him. It was brought to a location near Saughtree School where it was used as a sawmill for the railway works, and then taken by means of a temporary rail line from near the junction of the Caldron Burn and the Liddel to the 1st locomotive that was brought to Liddesdale, to join the Border Counties Railway, where it was used in the construction project.

Purcell (\textit{pur-sel}) \textit{n.} Isobel (17th C.) recorded in 1643 being in Rule. Her lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £15. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1707 for weaver James Jolly, in 1708 for Andrew Richardson and Isobel Purcel (who was probably related to him) and in 1711 for weaver David Reid. He could be the James born in 1678 to John and Catherining Scott. He was on the short-list for candidates to be Cornet in 1712 and was Cornet in 1713. In 1713 he was described as a wright who was one of the tradesmen chosen by the minister and heritors of Hawick to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell in 1720. He may be the same James who was born in 1678 to John and Catherine Scott. He gave a house to James Richardson, son of his nephew George, who gave evidence regarding the Common in 1767. John (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a wright among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Catherine Scott, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670), Elspeth (b.1672) and James (b.1678). Patrick recorded in 1567, along with Hector Turnbull ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as other Turnbuls and Oliviers from the same place. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to answer charges of raiding into England. His name is given as ‘Part Pursell’ (spelled ‘Pursel’, ‘Purseil’ and ‘Pursil’).

Purdie (\textit{pur-dee}) \textit{n.} Richard (1805–70) originally from England, he was baker in Hawick who was an elder in the Relief Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead and working as a weaver. But by 1851 he was a baker at No. 3 Loan. He was listed as a baker on the Loan in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of weaver Walter Scott, and sister of William Scott, who became a successful businessman in New York. They appear to have had no surviving children. William (18th C.) resident at Todshaw. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1763), Walter (b.1765) and Mary (b.1767).

Purdom (pur-dum) n. Alexander (d.c.1788) son of Bailie Walter. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Meiron (or Marion) Scott of Boghall in 1725; her father was Richard Scott. Their children included: Christian (b.1726); Walter (b.1728); Richard (b.1731); probably the merchant in Hawick; John (b.1734); Margaret; and William (b.1741). Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Alexander, son of William, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 and who was elected cornet in 1797. He is recorded as Bailie in 1824. He is probably the son of shoemaker William who was born in 1771. He was recorded as a shoemaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same man was the shoemaker who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the ‘A. Purdom’ who owned property at about 48 High Street (and next to Robert’s property at 46) on Wood’s 1824 map. On of his children was buried in 1829. Alexander (19th C.) son of joiner Richard, he married Margaret (or Marion) Hunter in Hawick in 1850 and they emigrated to Canada. Their sons Thomas and Alexander established a legal firm of Purdom & Purdom in London, Ontario, and they had 2 other sons, Richard and John. Archibald (1762/3–1849) mason in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (as ‘Purdon’, which must be an error). He was recorded as a head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. In the 1841 census he was living in the village with his children Isobel (or Isobel, 1804/5–83) and Gideon. He married Margaret Miller, who died in 1820, aged 44. His son Gideon erected a memorial to him and his wife in Ettleton Cemetery. Arthur (1819/20–63) son of Robert, labourer in Castleton. He was a Sergeant in the 9th Lancers, serving in the Punjab and through the Indian Mutiny. He retired in the position of Quartermaster-sergeant. In 1861 he was living with his parents at Longhaugh Cottage and listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. Charles McLaren, J.P. (1864–1928) son of Thomas. He became a joint agent of the National Bank of Scotland. Chrystal (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Cristale Purdoun’ along with ‘John Purdoun’ in a ‘respite’ of 1516 to William Elliott of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots, together with a large number of other men bound to them. David (15th C.) land-owner in the Liddesdale area, who held the lands of ‘Dalman’, ‘Bluntwood’ and ‘the Crouke’. In 1476 these lands were granted to Robert Elliott of Redheugh. He may have been ancestor of the local Purdoms. Findlay (19th/20th C.) son of Thomas. He farmed at Tushielaw and at Borthaugh. He died in Vancouver. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbeehirst, along with Jamie, as well as 2 Waughs. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. Henry Lemen ‘Harry’ (b.1879) son of Town Clerk Robert. He attended classes at St. Andrews University in 1896/7. He became a traveller with William Watson & Sons. He served with the K.O.S.B. during WWI. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbeehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Waughs. His name was given as ‘Jamy Purdome’. He may have been related to the Hawick Purdoms. James (17th C.) proprietor of Milsington recorded in the 1650 list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley. He may have been married to Margaret Nichol and had sons Robert (b.1640) and James (b.1643). The baptism in 1640 was witnessed by Robert Scoon and Adam Laidlaw. In 1652 there is an account with the Buccleuch papers of the losses and damages he had sustained ‘by the English army since Martimmas 1650’; this was probably Cromwell’s army. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Purdoun’ in a ‘respite’ in the Register of the Privy Seal given to Robert of Larristons and a large number of his kin and associates. ‘Cristale Purdoun’ is also listed. John (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving livestock eating someone’s grain. He may well have been the father or grandfather of the schoolmaster. John (1642/3–c.1725) schoolmaster in Hawick in the latter part of the 17th century and early 18th. He took over in 1669, following Mr. Chisholme, who briefly held the position after Walter Martin; he was thus perhaps the third of Hawick's schoolmasters. He remained in the position for 54 years and finally retired in 1723 at the age of 80. For most of this time he taught in St. Mary's Kirk itself, with the graveyard as the school playground. He also served as reader in the kirk, as well as Session Clerk (writing the entries in the parish records in a beautiful hand). He was already referred to as 'Mr' in 1673, 1675, 1676 and 1680 when he witnessed baptisms for James Newbie, John Elliot of Brugh, William Moscrop and William Laing. He was apparently injured during the siege of Drumlanrig Tower by the Covenanting army in 1679. He witnessed a baptism for George Young and Janet Purdom (perhaps his sister) in 1680. He was ‘Mr John Purdom’ in 1682 when he witnessed a couple of baptisms (one along with Walter). In 1694 he was listed as ‘Mr John Purdine’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly in 1700. It is possible that he had an influence (in the pro-Covenanter direction) on the young Robert Paterson ('Old Mortality'). For about the last 12 years he taught in the Parish School at the same time as the Grammar School existed, although he had a diminished salary, and complained that he was ‘deprived both of learning humanity (i.e. Latin) and of ye ordinary salariie (having no salariie allocat to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord’s day, forenoon and afternoon, and being clerk to ye session)’. A further complaint was that even apart from the Grammar School, there were others teaching privately in the Town; this came to a head in 1713, when he had the Session proclaim that no one else ‘should in ye future teach farther than ye Psalm-Book’. There were regular entries in the Session Records of small payments to him for teaching poor children. In 1722 he was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’. He is probably the person referred to as ‘Jo Purdom’ in the 1723 Session records. In 1724 he was allowed £6 Scots for the rent of a house for the rest of his life (which proved not to be very long); the entry’s tone suggests that he was still serving as Session Clerk at that time. It may be that the last entry in the 1711–25 book marks the end of his time. He is likely the John (recorded in the baptismal register as ‘Mr’, suggesting a position of importance in the Town) who married Margaret Scott and had children: Walter (b.1678); Janet (b.1680); Margaret (b.1680); James (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1687). The 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter (probably the Bailie), suggesting he was a brother or other close relative. He appears to have married a second time, with children (to ‘Mr’ John, making it clear this was him) including Walter (b.1700), Marion (b.1705) and Anna (b.1709), with no mother named. The witnesses in 1700 were ‘late Bailie’ William Laing and James Falsyde and in 1709 were Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and Walter Elliot, Bailie Depute of the Regality of Hawick. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Little and their children included John (b.1760). John (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside along with William (possibly his brother). He was listed as manufacturer at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 (but not listed in 1840). The manufacturing business lasted until about 1837. He was listed along with William as a joint proprietor on the 1837 electoral roll. He may be the John who was married to Joan (or Jean) Douglas and had children Elizabeth, Euphemia, William, John, Agnes, Mary and Joan in the period 1816–32; Joan lived with her children at Damside in 1841. John (b.1821/2) son of John and Joan Douglas. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on Wilton Path, helped by his mother and his sister Euphemia. He was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. He is listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861, probably near the south end of the east side. In 1857 he donated to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox, found in Wulliestruther Moss. John Ritchie, O.B.E., J.P. (1862–1935) 4th son of Thomas, he was Depute Town Clerk in 1888, joint Town Clerk with his brother Robert from 1912, and then on his own 1924–36. He was honorary recruiting officer in WWI, Secretary of the War Memorial Committee, as well a Chairman of the War Pensions Committee, for which service he received the O.B.E. in 1920. He was also Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. In his younger days he was a keen member of the Volunteers and interested in sports, particularly golf and hiking. He married Annie Hume Turnbull (1865–1916), daughter of dyer Alexander Turnbull and Janet Armstrong Hume. Their only son was Capt. Thomas Laurence. Richard (b.1731) merchant in Hawick, son of Alexander and Marion Scott. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1761); Alexander (b.1762); Marion (b.1764); John (b.1766); Margaret (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1768); Marion (again, b.1772); Thomas (b.1773); Marion (again, b.1774); and Richard (b.1775). The witnesses in 1764 were John Scott (presumably related to his wife) and William (probably his brother). He was deceased in 1805 when the deaths of his daughters Marion and Agnes are recorded. Richard (1776–1841) joiner of Kirkstile. He was son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was listed on Silver Street in Slater’s 1837 directory. In 1841 his address was given as ‘Kirk Sytlefoot’. His wife was Isobella Elliot (c.1790–1845). His children were: Richard, joiner and lay preacher; John, shoemaker; Alexander, who emigrated to Canada; Jane; and Agnes. One of his children was buried in Hawick in 1829.

Richard (1817/8–77) joiner on Kirkstyle, like his father. He was also known as a lay preacher. He was listed as a joiner on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was an early member of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, who gave many teetotalism speeches around the area. He played an active part in the local Good Templar movement in the mid-19th century. He was one of the first Deacons in the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848, was one of the first Trustees and the 2nd Secretary and 2nd Treasurer, and was the leading elder in the 1860s. He married Margaret Elliot in 1848 and their children included: Isabella, who married George Winstrup; Richard; Elizabeth; and Mary. Some of his correspondence and diaries are in the Borders Archive.

Robert (d.c.1686) tenant at ‘Car-tarburnfoot’ when his will was recorded in 1686.

Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Grieve and their children were: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1674). Bailie Robert (1777–1862) son of Walter and Agnes Oliver, he was a farmer and resident at 46 High Street. He appears to have been selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia in 1799. He was Cornet in 1803, and later became a Magistrate. His father and paternal grandfather had both been Bailie Walter, inn-keepers in Hawick and ‘Hilliesland Lairds’, keeping cows in fields up past the Wellogate and selling milk in the town (and a pond beyond Hilliesland was popularly called ‘Purdom’s Pond’ until fairly recent times). When Cornet, he was said to have been thrown from his horse near Hagishaa and taken into a house there to recover. As a result the route out to the Moor was changed to go along the now familiar Nipknowed road. He was the last of the family to hold the orchards and lands near the foot of what became Croft Road. He is shown on Wood’s 1824 map as owner of fields and trees around Mart Street and North Bridge Street, as well as the property at 46 High Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a High Street farmer in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1851 he was listed as a retired farmer. In 1817 in Hobkirk Parish he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith and Mary Scott (‘the Flower of Rankleburn’). Their children included: Walter, farmer; Thomas, Town Clerk; Mary, who married Robert Scott, farmer of Kinninghall and later Falnash; Agnes; Alexander; Robert; and several children who did not long survive. A daughter of his died in Hawick in 1840. A portrait of him exists. At the time of his death was the oldest living Cornet, Burgess and Magistrate. Robert (1792–1861) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was at Bygate in 1841 and Longhaugh in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes (1792–1880), daughter of William Beattie; she died at Hillside, Hawick. Their children included: Robert, who died in infancy; John (b.1817); Arthur (1818/9–63), who was Quartermaster-sergeant in the 9th Lancers; Laidlaw; William (1821/2–99), who died at St. Leonard’s Cottage; Isabella (1823/4–36); Robert (again, b.1831); Agnes (b.1834), who married William Laidlaw; and perhaps a second Isabella. The family are mostly buried in Etttleton Kirkyard. Robert (1846–1924) eldest son of Thomas, he attended Wilton School and went on to become a local solicitor and banker. He was Depute Town Clerk in 1868 and served as Town Clerk 1886–1924. He turned down the chance of carrying the Flag at the Nipknowes in 1891, stating that he felt the official connection between the Town Clerk and the Common Riding had ceased about 50 years earlier. He gave a speech at the first public Colour-Bussing concert of 1894, thus being a predecessor of the Chief Guest. He was instrumental in founding the Golf Club in 1877, placing the notice asking for interested parties to meet in his office. He was the first Secretary and Treasurer of the club and also became Club Captain. In addition he was Secretary of the School of Art and of the Cottage Hospital. He was the main trustee for the estate of James Farrar Blenkhorn. In 1873 he married Helen Emma ‘Nellie’ Leman, daughter of a doctor in Ballarat, Victoria (and she died in 1924). Their children were: Thomas (b.c.1874), who moved to New Zealand; Henry Leman (b.1879), who was a traveller with William Watson & Sons; Robert Leman (1884/5–1917), also known as ‘Robin’, who died in WWI; Angus, who worked as a tea planter; Emma Mabel, who married Capt. Walter Francis Cochrane, Gala manufacturer, was mother of the epepidemiologist Archibald (‘Archie’) Leman Cochrane, and secondly married John Locke, Royal Navy engineer; and Elizabeth Neish, who married Rear-Adm. G. Pirie Thomson. He lived at Westwood, which was built for him about 1880. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. Robert Leman ‘Robin’ (1883/4–1917) son of Robert. He served in WWI with the 11th Battalion Royal Scots and was killed at Kemmel Hill. He is buried at Faubourg d’Amiens Cemetery, Arras. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Purdoun in Brumesheilbrig’. He was listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. Thomas (17th C.) ‘litster’ who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the Thomas listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Margaret Bell and their son Walter was born in 1689, with another John (with no mother given) born in 1693. Thomas (1820–86) 2nd son of Robert, he was an accountant and agent for the National Bank of Scotland, and head of a legal business. He was a Councillor from 1854. He served as the last Junior Magistrate of Hawick in 1861 on the old ‘eternal’ council, and was heavily involved in putting the ‘Police Act’ into operation. He was elected to the new council for South High Street Ward that same year and became Senior Magistrate. He was then Town Clerk from 1862 (succeeding from James Wilson) until his death in 1886. He was an Assessor for the county of Roxburghshire. He also acted as secretary for the Border Union Railway committee in their contest with the Caledonian Company for the Hawick to Carlisle line. He was known as a powerful public speaker and was also an occasional lay preacher. He served as one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational Kirk, from 1848. In 1845 he married Elizabeth Wilson Neish (daughter of a Dundee manufacturer), and she died in 1859, aged 38. Their children included: Robert, of Westwood, who succeeded as Town Clerk; Hannah (or Anna) Maria, who died in 1887; William Neish, who died aged 23; Thomas Edie; and Mary Smith, who married Algernon Fulden of Worksp. He secondly married Hannah (1827–98), daughter of Peter Findlay and brother of John Ritchie Findlay, proprietor of the Scotsman newspaper. Their children were: John Ritchie, also Town Clerk; Charles McLaren, banker; Walter Alexander, electrical engineer of Australia, who married his cousin Mary Smith Purdom; Edward, who died young; Findlay, farmer of Borthaugh, who died in Vancouver; Elizabeth Findlay, who married Dr. George Wade of Melrose and moved to Tasmania; and Arthur Muirhouse, who died in infancy. He died at Croydon and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall, painted by Frank Watson Wood. Thomas Edie (1853–1942) 3rd son of Town Clerk Thomas. He became a doctor and died in Croydon. His children were Robert Ramsden, Ethel Mary, Lillian Frances, William Percy, Elizabeth Winnifred, Arthur, Constance Hannah, Harold Neish, Elsie, Reginals, Gwendoline Mary and Irene Margaret. Capt. Thomas Laurence (1892–1927) only son of Town Clerk John Ritchie. He was a squadron leader in the Royal Air Force during WWI and was awarded the Military Cross for having ‘shown the most exceptional gallantry and daring in engaging enemy aircraft’. His only daughter Dorothy Hume married Percival Charles Edward Wilkinson of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Walter (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Marr. Their children included: John (b.1648); William (b.1651); and Thomas (b.1654). He may be the Walter who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could also be the Walter who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1708) recorded as Magistrate in 1668, 1674 and probably later. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. In 1674 he was Bailie when William Hall drew his sword at him and threatened to shoot him. Also in 1674 someone was fined for disobedience to the Magistrates for not giving him his horse to ride to Jedburgh to deal with the Town’s affairs. He was probably the ‘Baylyea Purdome’ (and likely an ex-Bailie at that point) recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was ‘late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/94. In 1694 he is listed as ‘Bailie Purdum’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He had lands at the eastern end of the town boundaries. This land had formerly belonged to the Laird of Horsleyhill and was on the eastern boundary of what became Dickson’s nursery-ground (i.e. just west of Oliver Place). He could have been the Walter who was married to Christian Tait and had children: Margaret (b.1671); Walter (b.1673); William (b.1674); Robert (b.1676); Bessie (b.1677); Jane (b.1679); and William (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Scott and Alexander Hislop. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Hardie in 1676. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for John Blake and Andrew Jardine in 1673 and William Taylor and William Swan in 1680. He could also be the Walter who witnessed the baptism of one of schoolmaster John’s children in 1687 (suggesting they were brothers perhaps), another couple in 1682 (one along with John) and one in 1688 (for merchant John Scott).

Bailie Walter R. (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was an inn-keeper in Hawick and also held the orchards and lands at the eastern end of Town. He may have been the Walter born to Walter and Christian Tait in 1673. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Robert Tinlin and Christian Purdom (perhaps his sister). In 1708 he was fined for causing a disturbance in St. Mary’s by insisting on sitting in his father’s former seat, although the Council had resolved that the right to sit there was held by the current Bailies; along with Robert Scott (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in the jail. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, herd in Commonside. He was also a Bailie himself, mentioned in the period 1722 to 1737. In 1715 he was given custody of one of the keys to the Charter Chest (and so was presumably on the Council). In 1717 he was already an elder, recorded as one of the people to collect money from the East part of the Town. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and also in that year was appointed to try to collect money for a new Kirk clock. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. In 1722 he was a senior elder involved in appointing the new minister. And in 1722 he was elected as Session Treasurer. In 1727 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of William Ekron and in 1728 witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Scott. He may be the Mr. Purdom of Hawick who married Margaret, 4th daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. His children included: Walter, who probably died unmarried; and Alexander, who married Meiron Scott of Boghall in 1725. He may also have been the Walter listed as a ‘Dragoon’ in 1700 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses carrier Henry Paterson, Henry Orrock and flesher Robert Smitj. Additionally children, who could be his, include Janet (b.1704) and James (b.1719), born in Hawick with no mother’s name given. In 1728 he was ‘late Bailie’ and husband of Janet Scott, when their daughter Jean was baptised; the witnesses were William Oliver and Alexander ‘…’ (possibly Purdom, i.e. his son). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobel Scott in 1716 and their son William was born in 1724. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Walter (b.1724). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1722 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott. Their children included Jean (b.1728). Bailie Walter (1728–1807) eldest son of Alexander. He was a Bailie several times in the period 1780–1800. In 1764, along with Robert Oliver (probably his father-in-law), he was witness for a baptism for Walter Wilson and Catherine Oliver (his sister-in-law). He is probably the ‘Bailie Purdom’ recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, listed right after shoemaker William. He may be the Walter listed among local men who contributed generously to the war effort (with France) around 1799. In 1763 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was sister of ‘Haunless Watt’s wife, and niece of ‘Auld Cash’ (this probably being the father of the more familiar ‘Auld Cash’). Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1763); Marion (b.1765); Alexander (b.1767); Robert (b.1770), who died young; Richard (b.1773), joiner; Elizabeth (again, b.1774), who married Andrew Oliver; Robert (b.1777), farmer; and Walter (b.1779), tobacconist. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation. Walter (18th C.) known as ‘The Muckle Laird’. In 1758 he married Robina (or ‘Rabini’) Scott, who was related to the local family of millers. Their children included: Janet (b.1759); Walter (b.1760); James (b.1761); Thomas (b.1763); James (again, b.1765); Robert (b.1765, twin of James); Margaret (b.1767); Jane (b.1769); and Elizabeth (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were miller James Scott (possibly his wife’s father) and merchant Thomas Willkie (whose wife was a Purdom). It is possible that he was the son of Walter and Janet Elliot born in Hawick in 1724. He may be the carrier of tht name who witnessed a baptism for Richard Scott in 1757, with the other witness being Walter Scott of Boghall. Walter (b.1779) younger son of Bailie Walter and Agnes Oliver. He was a tobacconist at 1 High Street and also became a Bailie himself. He is listed as a tobacconist on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living at 46 High Street in 1841 (with his brother Robert’s family). He died unmarried. Walter (b.1818) eldest son of Robert. He was a farmer at Easter Wooden, Eckford. In 1844 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter John Grieve; she died in 1847. In 1850 he secondly married Isabella Turnbull (b.1830) from Jedburgh. Their children were: Robert (b.1852), spectacle-maker of Sutton Coldfield; James; Agnes; Mary Smith, who married her cousin Walter Alexander; Walter; and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1860). One of his daughters became Mrs. Dunn. Walter (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston. He was one of the first Trustees of St. George’s Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jean Stewart and their children included: Janet (b.1653); and John (b.1655). He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for William Ruecastle in 1671. He could be the William who was charged in 1685 (perhaps another for Andrew Cook. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Stewart (perhaps related to his wife) and another for a Mr. Reid. William (c.1746–1818) shoemaker recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the son of Alexander baptised in Hawick in 1741. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), 1746–1818, daughter of Alexander Donald. Their children included: Agnes (b.1769); Alexander (b.1771); James (b.1774); Walter (b.1776); Marion (b.1779); and Betty (b.1782). He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for merchant Richard (probably his brother) in 1764. William (18th/19th C.) hosier at Wilton Damside, along with John. Their business lasted until about 1837, when it was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the elector called Purdom who was said to have died in consequence of the injuries he received when attacked at the 1835 election in Hawick. William (1821/2–99) son of Robert, who was a labourer in Castleton Parish. He married Kitty Elliot (1819–99) and they had a daughter, Mary Murray. He, his wife and daughter Mary all died at St. Leonard’s Cottage and are marked on a gravestone in Ettleton Kirkyard (formerly spelled ‘Purdem’, ‘Purdim’, ‘Purdome’, ‘Purdholm’, ‘Purholme’ and other variants).

Purdom’s (pur-dumz) n. Thomas Purdom & Sons, estate agents at 10 Oliver Place, with family ties to the Purdom Town Clerks.

Purdom’s Pond (pur-dumz-pönd) n. popular name for a small body of water beyond Hillsieland, called after the Purdom family who once farmed fields there. The name was still in use in the mid-20th century.

purse (purs) n., arch. a small bag containing money, used by men as well as women – ‘Helen Turnbull deponed upon her great oath, that she never saw the purs in his hand . . .’ [BR1642] (also written ‘purs’).

pursewit (pur-sew-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. pursued – ‘Assoilzies Thomas Deans fra the claim persewit be Adam Scott, smith, against him . . .’ [BR1640], ‘Assoilzies George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethar . . .’ [BR1655] (also spelled ‘persewit’ and variants).

Pursy (pur-see) n. nickname of an early office-bearer of Allars Kirk, so-called for his fondness for flaunting his newly obtained wealth.

purtati (pur-ta’-i) n., arch. potato – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, . . . pees, beens, smal beens, lintseed, cabitch plants, purtates ...’ (an early pronunciation, cf. tatti).

Purves (pur-vis) n. James (1798/9–1878) cabinet-maker of Hawick, born in Dalkeith. He was listed as a joiner on the Mid Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Cunningham, who died in 1875, aged 79. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan (which could be the same location). His children included Eliza (who married William Elliot), Margaret, Jemima, James and Marion. Johnstone (19th C.) shopkeeper on the Front Row, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as witness to the bond of assurance for the Turnbulls in 1595. He is referred to as ‘Rauff Purces in Minto’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Helen married William, son of carrier John Gledstains.

William (16th C.) apothecary mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. William ‘Blind Wullie’ (1752–1832) son of John and Margaret, he was born in Newcastle and was blind from birth. He became known as an itinerant singer and fiddler, his favourite song being ‘Buy Broom Busoms’, which he claimed to have written (but probably just adapted). His characteristic cry of thanks was ‘God blish the king – God blish the King; never sheed him – never sheed him; poor shoul – poor shoul!’ Although based in Newcastle he travelled widely, and was a regular visitor at the Fleece Inn in Hawick. He presented the landlord there, George Hunter, with a snuff box ‘in deep appreciation of his friendship’.

William ‘Billy’ (1784–1853) from Auchendinny in Midlothian, he grew up in Newcastle and was once the most famous clown and showman in the Borders. He regularly toured around the south of Scotland and north of England, putting on all kinds of shows, including conjouring, ventriloquism, freak-shows, small circuses and plays. He acted, sang local ballads, played the bagpipes, danced and told jokes. In Hawick he stayed at the Fleece Inn, where he performed in the ballroom for 3 nights and moved into the larger Town Hall for another 3 nights; the landlord of the Fleece Inn, George Hunter, waived his bill, and Purves purchased a silver-mounted snuff-box for him. On another occasion he performed in a theatre in Hawick where Albert Mills was later built. He was buried in Hartlepool. Dr. William Brown (1799–1852) from Edinburgh, he married Margaret (1798–1855), daughter of John Laidlaw, who was from Weens. He contracted a disease related to his work, which killed both him and his wife. Their children were: John, who died young; Alexander, W.S., who was a lawyer in Edinburgh and purchased an estate in Peebleshire; and Dr. William Laidlaw (1842–1917), who was an ear surgeon and golfing pioneer. After his death, his 2 sons were raised by their maiden aunts Jane and Euphemia Laidlaw. William (1814/5–1902) born in Melrose, he was a whip-maker on the High Street. He was listed among heads of households of Wiltom Kirk in 1835, when he was at Darnside; by 1840 he was listed living in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841 (perhaps near No. 5), and around 12–14 in 1851, when he was employing 4 men. In 1861 he was at 1 High Street, listed as a whipmaker, grocer and fruiterer. He was described as ‘of a simple, happy disposition naturally’. He is said to have given up most of his activities to pursue a spiritual calling, including singing religious songs. He married Christian Douglas, who died in 1875, aged 62. Their children included Isabella Scott, who married James Gowans and an unnamed son who died in 1840 (also ‘Purvis’).

Purvinen (pur-vi-nin) n. former name for lands in southern Liddesdale, perhaps where Heugh Head is marked on modern maps, on the south side of the Tinnis Burn. In the rental roll of 1541 it is ‘Purvenen’, when leased, along with Whisgills and ‘Vtnomound’, to Bartholomew and Ninian Armstrong. In 1634 the 40-shilling lands of ‘Purvenen’ were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. In 1642 John of Gervald (2nd son of Sir William of Cavers) was granted lands of Burnmouthe, ‘Greina’ (Greena) and ‘Purvinen’ in Liddesdale ‘in fee’, with his father having the ‘liferent’. John Forester of Stanegarthside inherited the lands of ‘Greina, Purvinen and Burnemouthe’ from his uncle Nicholas in 1693 (it is ‘Perueen’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; the origin or meaning of the name are obscure).

pusin (pu-zin) v. to poison – ‘it’s no gaun ti pusin ee’, ‘Thair pusen is like the pusen o’ ane serpint ...’ [HSR], ‘Weel, Aw coold gie ee puzzened fangs leike serpents ...’ [BW1961], n. poison – ‘... heisent a packet o puszen teh Mary whae mixed eet wi her faither’s denner!’ [BW] (also spelled Puslinch Lake (poos-linch-lak) n. lake near the township of Puslinch, between Cambridge and Guelph in Ontario, Canada. It was the location for the first Guelph/Galt area celebration of Hawick Common Riding. This was organised by Thomas Scott (Cornet in 1887, after his return to Hawick) and other exiles in the area in 1883. William Armstrong, tweed Merchant from Bridge Street was the first Cornet, with Thomas Scott the first general secretary. The event became an annual one, but it is unclear how long it lasted.

pyated (pl-i'-eed) adj., arch. piebald, parti-coloured.

Pyat Knowe (pl-i'-now) n. hill to the southeast of Dod, with the Pyatknowe Sike rising on it. A shelf on the north side contains the remains of a fairly well-defined settlement, about 75 m by 45 m. The interior contains 2 courts, as well as 2 circular depressions, although these are probably quarry pits. There is also a second probable settlement nearer to the summit, this being oval in shape, about 65 m by 40 m, with an entrance at the west side. The Catrail crosses to the south of the hill, connecting to Barry Sike.

Pyatknowe Sike (pl-i'-now-sik) n. small stream that joins the Dod Burn near the Pyat Sike Plantation, south-east of the farmstead of Dod. There are several linear earthworks in the area, crossing part of White Hill to the northeast. Although it has been suggested that some of these may be connected with the Catrail, or with the nearby fort and settlement, there is no evidence for these claims. The fort lies to the north of where the Sike meets the Dod Burn. It measures about 60 m by 45 m and is almost entirely covered by a later settlement. To the south of the Sike, on Pyat Knowe are the remains of 2 more settlements.

the Pyat's Nest (thun-pl-its-nest) n. former name for Pyat Knowe, the hill south-west of彭克利斯彭, crossed by the Catrail, and containing the remains of a settlement (it is the Pyot's Nest’ in 1880).

quaisteen (kwäs-teen) n., arch. a question, v. to question, used elliptically, in particular ‘quaisteen how’ means ‘it’s a question how’ and ‘quaisteen if’ means ‘it is a question if’ – ‘Quaisteen if hei can finnd the road i sic waather’ … ‘Quaisteen how hei’ll can finnd the road i sic waather’ … ‘Aye, quaisteen!’ [ECS] (cf. quaestion).

Quakers (kwä-kurz) n. religious group, more properly known as the Society of Friends, which reached its peak of membership in the late 17th century. It was influential in Britain in the 18th and 19th centuries through the adherence of many manufacturing families. In Hawick interest began when William Wilson visited a meeting in Glasgow in August 1797, leading to his membership in 1802, followed by many in the Wilson and Watson families. There were also significant visits by prominent Friends, such as prison reformer Elizabeth Fry, with at least 20 Public Meetings being held in Hawick. The group met in William Wilson’s house from 1802 until a Meeting house was built on Buccleuch Street from 1821, with the first Meeting there in 1823. This was a plain building (a sketch of which exists), set back from the street, to the west of the Roman Catholic Chapel. Its location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, and it is listed among places of worship in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1839 the meeting house was described as being attended by only 2 families. The building ceased to be used for this purpose in 1844, after which it was used as a temporary hospital for the 1849 cholera epidemic and as James Murray’s ‘Hawick Academy’. It was demolished in 1866. In an ecclesiastical survey of Scotland in 1815 there were only 5 meeting places in the country, Glasgow, Hawick, Edinburgh, Aberdeen and Kinmuck — ‘...Frae a man that is nae Quaker’ [AB].

Quaker’s Close (kwâ-kurz-klôs) n. mid-19th century popular name for the close at 13 High Street, once the residence of manufacturer William Wilson, who was a Quaker. Also known as Wilson’s Close, it was a private passageway that extended much of the way down to the river.

qualify (kwâ-li-fl) v., arch. to authenticate, establish by evidence, testify — ‘Walter Scott, shoemaker, counsellor, was degraded as such, ...after being convict ... of a riot. and arrested, and allows the bailies their charges, and to go down to Jedburgh and qualify’ [BR1727].

quallie see qualy

qualy (kwa-lee) n., arch. entrance examination given to pupils at the end of Primary School in Scotland up until the 1960s (also spelled ‘quallie’ etc.).

quarrel (kwa-ral) v., arch. to dispute, challenge, complain, rebuke — ‘...and whereas ye sd Mr John of his own lenity, ...never quarrelled several persons in ye toun to educat children further than ye sd book ...’ [PR1713]. ‘William Gladstanes came and quarrelled him for the badness of the shoes’ [BR] (this form omits the usual English ‘with’).

Quarrelhaa (kwa-ral-haw) n. name for 2 former cottages on the edge of the Harwood-on-Teviot lands, near the stream separating the farm from Chapelhill. They had already disappeared by the mid-19th century, although tailor John Elliot and family is still recorded there in 1841 and 1851. It is said that they were built to check on encroachments of livestock between the farms, and hence the name (although there is also a disused quarry nearby).

Quarry Rig (kwa-ree-rig) n. ridge just to the south of the upper part of the Ale Water, being the north-east spur of Deep Slack. A linear earthwork here extended for about 400 m, joining the head of the Hosocate Burn with the Ale Water. Although suggested (by Lynn) to be part of the Catrail, it is probably of more recent and less significant origin. It has now been obliterated by forestry.

quarter (kwar-ur) n., arch. fourth part of a unit of volume or weight — ‘For five quarters of cheese £3, 16s.’ [BR1638], ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEx1921], fourth part of land, perhaps referring locally to a quarter of a ‘particate’ — ‘...one Walter Paterson, laird of Burnflat, and tenent of a quarter land in Hawick ...’ [C&L1767].

quarter days (kwar-ur-daz) n. four days formerly regarded as ending a quarter of the year. This was when rents and other payments became due. In Scotland they were traditionally Candlemas, Whitsunday, Lammas and Martinmas.

quarter-maister (kwar-ur-mas-tur) n. a quarter-master, an official in an incorporated trade, responsible for collecting dues and looking after business affairs. In Hawick this was specifically the name given to the 2 representatives of the 5 (later 7) incorporated trades. They were added to the Town Council in 1739 and remained on it until the council was reorganised in 1861. In 1749 the Council decreed that they should be elected annually before Michaelmas. In 1781 it was formalised that they should be elected on the day before (i.e. Thursday) the election of the Bailies in October. They were also known as ‘deacons of trade’ or just ‘deacons’ — ‘The quarter-masters of the weaver trade complain upon two of their craft, that, ...appealed against a fine, for disobedience to the trade, of four groats to the bailies, and eight pence to the quarter-masters ...’ [JW1676]. ‘Complaines John Swan and Robert Tinline the two quartermasters of the trade of weavers within the toun for themselves and in name and behalf of the corporation thereof’ [PR1716].

Quartersides (kwar-ur-siz) n. former name for a small piece of land in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 it was valued at £50, along with Ryechester, when owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. It was recorded in the county valuation of 1788 being owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee and in the quarter wage (kwar′-ur-wāj) n., arch. wages or allowance for a quarter year – ‘Walter Bryson addressed the Session desiring that supplie may be given to him for helping to pay the quarter wage for one of his twins latele brought forth …’. [PR1725].

Quartus (kwawr-tis, kwawr′-is) n. pen-name of William Landle for his weekly notes of a religious flavour published in the Hawick News in the 1970s and 80s. They were collected into three books, ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992).

Queen (kwēn) n., arch. school-girl who gave the master the largest sum of money on Candlemas Day, gaining certain privileges. The custom was said to have been abolished in about 1887.

Queen Caroline (kwēn-kaw-ru-lin) n. Caroline Amelia of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, wife of King George IV. The marriage was not happy, and their relationships were a great scandal of the time, the couple being separated for 25 years. In 1820, with the death of George III, she was effectively put on trial, claiming her right to be Queen, against the wishes of the new King. There was great commotion in Hawick, as elsewhere, with the Liberals supporting the Queen and the Tories favouring the King. A message of support was sent by the town to the Queen, which was apparently the first she had received. Supporters illuminated their windows the night the trial result was announced, and some non-supporters had their windows smashed.

Queen Mary see Mary Queen o Scots

Queen Mary’s Burn (kwēn-mā-reez-burn) n. stream joining the Hermitage Water west of the Castle, presumably named by an association with Mary Queen of Scots visit to Hermitage.

Queen Mary’s Well (kwēn-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on Hawthronside farm, where it is traditionally claimed that Mary Queen of Scots stopped to drink on her ride between Jedburgh and Hermitage Castle. The location is the second field from the farmhouse on the right-hand side of the road when going from Hawick to Boscobel. The field was also known as ‘Queen Mary’s Field’. The spring was widely used in the mid-19th century, and still existed in the early part of the 20th century, although the effects of drainage had moved its location somewhat (also known as ‘Mary’s Well’).

Queen o’ Fairies’ Hole (kwēn-ō-fāi-reez-hōl) n. natural hole in the hillside in Liddesdale, on the south-west of Hunter’s Hill, to the east of Castleton.
The Queen o' the Auld Scottish Border

The Queen o' the Auld Scottish Border (kweenz-bu-ree) n. title in the peerage of Scotland, associated with descendants of the Douglases of Drumlanrig, derived from a hill in Closeburn Parish, Dumfriesshire. It is unusual because the Dukedom (created in 1684 and inherited by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1810) is now separate from the Marquisesate (created in 1682). Subsidiary titles held by the Marquess of Queensberry include Earl of Queensberry (created 1633), Viscount Drumlanrig (1628) and Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers (also 1628).

Queensberry Place (kweenz-bu-ree-plis) n. original street name for the upper houses in Waverley Terrace, named after the Dukedom of Buccleuch and Queensberry, but discarded in 1882.

Queen's Drive (kweenz-driv) n. long U-shaped road, part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the visit by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in 1947. It was apparently originally to be called 'Elizabeth Drive'.

the Queen’s Mire (thu-kweenz-mir) n. a boggy area between the Priesthaugh and Braehead Burns, so called because of Mary Queen of Scots 40 mile ride via there from Jedburgh to Hermitage to visit Bothwell. For many generations afterwards people could point out the spot where her horse was said to have become stuck. She is also supposed to have lost her pocket watch on the ride, this being found about 250 years later by a shepherd. Based on Blaeu's map of 1654 (itself based on decades earlier manuscripts) it may have formerly been called ‘Mosspatrick’.

queer (kweer) adj., arch. entertaining, amusing, humorous – '…They get some queer story frae Eppy M’Gee'[JT], very great, considerable, particularly in the phrase ‘queer lot’ – ‘There must bei a queer lot o’ money in th’ world yet – notwithstandin’ short time an’ bad trade’[HEx1921].

queer (kweer) n., arch. choir, the part of a church east of the nave, particularly referring to part of a pre-Reformation building. The gallery in St. Mary's had this name, this being the area with bench seating, some of which was rented annually to the highest bidder – ‘Accompt of the money requisite for helping and pointing the kirk and queer of Hawick'[PR1713], ‘…had possessed the place near to John Elliot’s seat in the queer …'[PR1715], ‘For avoiding confusion, the communicants are to go out att the Queer door'[PR1718] (also spelled ‘queir’, ‘quire’, etc.; in the pre-1763 Hawick Kirk this part was separated by the chancel arch).

the Queer Door (thu-kweer-dör) n. former name for the entrance to the pre-1763 St. Mary’s Kirk, which went through the chancel or ‘queer’ – ‘The toun officers to wait upon ye Queer door during ye Service’[PR1718].

Quicken (kwik-in) n. former name for lands probably to the south of Whames. It is described as ‘quikenne’ in about the 1190s as part of the boundary of the lands granted by Richard Lovel to the canons of St. Andrews. It was near the ‘langesideburne’ and the lands of ‘farmop’ and ‘cheisteris’.

Quicksands’ Park (kwik-saind-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1780 it was listed (as ‘Quicksands’) as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park, and as ‘Quicksands park’ among lands whose livery had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot in 1779. It was listed in 1779 as ‘Quicksand Park’ (and still in 1811) with a value of £18 13s 2d.

Quin (kwin) n. Roger (1850–1925) Border poet and wanderer, described as ‘the homeless poet’. 2201
His grandfather was described as a travelling tinker from Ireland, who married an aunt of Esther Fna-Blyths, Queen of the Gypsies. It is said that as a boy he was allowed to hold the skull of Robert Burns when he was reintered along with his eldest son. He wrote 'Borderland and Other Poems' (1910, 1933) and 'Midnight in Yarrow and Other Poems' (1918). A plaque near Galashiels reads 'Here Roger Quin author of the Borderland gazed on Scotland's Eden', and there is a street in that town named after him.

Quinn (kwin) n. Edward 'Eddie' (1898–1982) well-known local accordion player, born in Berwickshire, he worked as a farm labourer at Carterhaugh for much of his life and retired to Eckford. He made two 78 r.p.m. recordings, released in 1929 and 1930. 'Quinn's Band' was popular at dance venues throughout the Borders in the 1930s and 1940s. Quinn quutten

The Quoitin Club ( thu-kwoi-in-klub) n. the Buccleuch Quoiting Club, a sporting organisation, with the game consisting of metal hoops or horseshoes being thrown at a metal stake. It was popular in the late 19th century, with pitches on Buccleuch Street, adjacent to the Buccleuch Bowling Club green. The club fell apart around WWII through lack of support, and the pitches were converted into the Henderson Garden. There was also another Club in the Mansfield area for a while, and in addition the game was played in Denholm.

The Quoitin Haugh ( thu-kwoi-in-hawf) n. popular name for the grassy banks of the Teviot between the Teviot Bridge and old suspension bridge in Denholm. Quoits were played here during the latter part of the 19th century until WWI. The field was also used for other sporting events, and also for church services in the summer. At the Denhom Ride-out the horses are usually held there.

Quoits (kwoits) n., pl. game in which curved iron projectile are thrown at a stake in the ground in order to try to encircle it, also known as 'horseshoes'. The game was popular in Hawick from the late 19th century until the 1930s, with a pitch on Buccleuch Street. There was also another Club in the Mansfield area for a while, and in addition the game was played in Denholm.

Quot (kwot) n., arch. the portion of a dead person's estate payable for confirmation of the testament – 'To be deudit in thir paceis the deidis pairt is, xxiij £ iiijs. Quharof the quot is, xxiiij £ vs.' [SB1574].

The Quoins ( thu-kwunz) n. variant pronunciation for the Quins. Quot (kwu') v. to quit, leave, pp. quitted, quit, left (sometimes written 'quwut': cf. the alternative past tense quut and the past participle forms quitten and quuten).

the Rabble Meetin ( thu-raw-bul-mee-tin) n. name used to refer to the public meeting of 1887 which elected the new Common Riding Ceremonial Committee.

the Race Ball ( räs-bal) n. former name for the Ball, used until the 1880s, with the earlier name being the ‘Cornet’s Dance’.

the Race Committee ( thu-räs-ko-mi’-ee) n. Committee responsible for organising the Common Riding race meetings, formed probably in the early 19th century, and originally having more influence than the Ceremonial Committee (which was only formally established in 1887). In 1865 they took over from the Cornet the task of collecting race funds, which in 1883 was replaced by an entrance charge for the Muir. The Provost usually served as the President, with the Secretary also being Clerk of the Course. In 1908 it became a sub-committee of the main Common Riding Committee.

Race Course Park ( räs-körs-pawrk) n. name for a field to the north of St. Leonard’s Park racecourse, between the enclosures known as ‘Bailie’s Hill’ and ‘Nipkowes Field’.

the Racerigg ( thu-räs-rig) n. former name, used in the 18th century, for part of the Common. The precise location is unknown, but it may have been where races were once held near Pilnurig. It was stated in 1767 that it marked the southern end of the region of the Common where the Town Herd would typically use for the Hawick livestock (also written ‘Racerig’).

the Races ( thu-rä-seez) n. a race meeting has long been associated with the Common Riding, now being an intrinsic part of the Friday and Saturday festivities. The first explicit record of the races is in 1723, but they were probably happening much earlier. There were prizes from early times, some provided by the Town, e.g. in 1723 a ‘saddle exposed to be run for in May last’ is described, in 1725 the Council gave £2 ‘for this year’s plate’ and in 1727 ‘the cup for the race’ is recorded. Early races may have been held at the Deidhaugh, but the first known location was at the Vertish, ending in 1819. For the next two years they were on a field behind the Vertish Hill, then moved to Pilnurig Rig in 1822 and remained there until 1853. These were the Friday morning races, which had no accompanying family entertainments. In the early 19th century they started at 11 a.m., with the crowds returning to Hawick for dinner (early in those days), before the afternoon races at the Haugh, which started at 5 p.m. They took place, along with the afternoon races and games, on the Common Haugh itself in 1854. The afternoon’s events at the Haugh started with a 3-lap race by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. Sports and other amusements also used to continue on the Haugh on the Saturday. Both the Upper and Under Haughs were used, with movable fences between them. In 1854 the Haugh was used for the last time (in the afternoon only), and the new race-course at St. Leonard’s used for the first time (in the morning only). From 1855 all the races have been held at St. Leonard’s, with Saturday races started in 1868. In 1856 there was a steeplechase for the first time. There were also foot races held at the Moor until 1863. In the latter part of the 19th century the Saturday was considered to be ‘ladies day’ (after the Ascot tradition), with the women of the town dressing up in their finery. Until 1865 most of the funds for the races and the games were collected by the Cornet and the Right-Hand man. Thereafter official collectors were appointed, with admission to the Moor introduced in 1883, and racecards first issued in 1889. The Races were last held under Jockey Club rules in 1876, and with the disbanding of the British Racing Club in 1895, the Races were then held under local rules. The Races were first filmed in 1900.

rack (rawk) n., arch. a stretch, a shallow wide ford, especially where the person crossing has to take a slanting course – ‘They led him thro’ the Liddel-rack, And also thro’ the Carlisle sands’ [T]. ‘Rack. A very shallow ford, of considerable breadth, Teviotdale’ [JoJ], a cart-wheel rut, capacity for expansion, elasticity, v., arch. to wrench, sprain, overstrain – ‘...the skirls an the dirls, the raameen an the raackeen an the cam-meldeen, the daads an the dunts an the skraucheen an the skreeveen’ [ECS], ‘A’ve gaen a racket masul wui raxin owre fer owre’ [ECS], to stretch – ‘He’ll shew the curse that Job invokit’.

Rackesse (ra-kes) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Adame Rakkis in Thorlieshope’ in 1611 when he was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He may have been related to the Armstrongs nicknamed ‘Rakkes’ (and spelling variants) at about the same time.

George ‘Geordie of the Hillhouse’ (17th C.) thief from Liddesdale who is recorded in the 17th century. In about 1645 he, along with Lancie Armstrong of Catheigh and others, stole about 80 cows and oxen from England, and on the way back to Liddesdale returned the few animals belonging to a poor English minister, after he agreed to take snuff with them. It is unclear if his surname is a mis-transcription of a more familiar name.

Robert ‘Hobbie’ (17th C.), recorded in 1633 as ‘Hobby Rackes’. His shepherd Archie Armstrong ‘called Hollas, who duelltt in the Mearburnheid’ was captured for having a stolen cow in his possession (it is unclear if this corresponds to a more familiar surname).

rackit (raw-kee’, -ki’) pp., adj., arch. wrenched, sprained, twisted – ‘Or ease their bosoms rackit sair. Wi’ disappointment ill to bear’ [RDW], ‘A’ve gaen an rackeet masul wui raxin owre fer owre’ [ECS].

rad (rawd) adj., arch. afraid, apprehensive – ‘Tse raad he’ll toorfel’ (said at Newcastleton, c.1860) [GW], ‘...E’en let him pop, I’m little raad I founder, Though Excommunication grace the ban’ [JoHa], ‘In lith an limb we’re soon’ an’ hale, Sae troth we’re little ra’d o’ smoorin’’ [JoHa] (also written ‘raad’).

Rad (rawd) n., arch. popular term for a Radical in the early-to-mid 19th century – ‘One of the ‘Rads’ told the writer that once a tail came off in his hands ... ’ [RM].

Radcliffe (rawd-klif) n. Sir Cuthbert of Dilston (d.1545) son of Sir Edward. He was Sheriff of Cumberland, like his father. He also served as Deputy Warden of the English Middle Marches 1540–3 and Captain of Berwick 1544–5. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Haddon Rig in 1542. He was described as ‘a wise man well learned and well minded to justice but no adventurer to the field’. He married Margaret, daughter of Lord Clifford and was succeeded by his son Sir George. Sir John (c.1480–1527) from Crosthwaite in Cumbria. He was an English commander of part of the force that raided the Borders under Lord Dacre in 1513. His detachment of 500 men burned ‘the town of Dyker’, which was probably Dykeraw in Southdean Parish, explicitly ‘thei layed corne and straw to the dore and burnt it both rofe and flore and so smoked them out’. They then burned Southdean and Lustruther towns, taking prisoners and goods.

Thomas 3rd Earl of Sussex (c.1525–1583) also Viscount Fitzwalter and Lord of Egremont and Burnell. He was Lord Deputy of Ireland and became Lord Chamberlain under Elizabeth. His mother was Elizabeth Howard, sister of the Surrey who fought at Flodden. He was President of the ‘Council in the North’ 1568–72, suppressing a revolt of northern English earls. He then led part of the English force that invaded across the Border in 1570, along with Lord Hunsdon. They were responsible for the razing of many towns and buildings, including Hawick on April 18th and Braxholme the following day, this requiring gunpowder. Apparently (according to Stowe’s Chronicle) the Hawick people unhatched their houses, burned it in the streets and fled, leaving nothing for the English army. There is a tradition (recounted by Robert Wilson) that the townspeople attacked enemy patrols into the night, but there is no evidence to support this. His force also destroyed the Kerr strongholds of Ferniehirst and Crosthwaite in Cumbria. He was an English commander of part of the force that raided the Borders under Lord Dacre in 1513. His detachment of 500 men burned ‘the town of Dyker’, which was probably Dykeraw in Southdean Parish, explicitly ‘thei layed corne and straw to the dore and burnt it both rofe and flore and so smoked them out’. They then burned Southdean and Lustruther towns, taking prisoners and goods.

radio (rä-dee-ō) n. a new-fangled invention whereby sounds carried by modulated electromagnetic waves can be transmitted over a wide area and received in people’s homes. It arrived properly in Hawick in the 1930s, and Reid’s Relay helped Teries improve their reception. The 1934 Colour Bussing was broadcast by the BBC, and selected items from the 1937 Common Riding were also recorded and broadcast later. Local radio programming arrived in the 1980s.

Radio Borders (rä-dee-ō-bör-durz) n. local independent radio station, operating out of Tweedbank, set up in 1989.

Radio Tweed (rä-dee-ō-tweed) n. part of BBC radio Scotland, with a small amount of local programming at certain times of day. It began operating in 1983.

radness (rawd-nis) n., arch. fear, apprehension – ‘An’ he saith until them, Why are ye fu’ o’ radniss, O ye o’ little faith?’ [HSR].

Radolphus (raw-dol-fis) n. (11th/12th C.) first Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk, established about 1113. He resigned in 1117 and returned to Tiron in France. (13th C.) Rector of Hawick church who witnessed a charter of Laurence Avenel in the period 1260-68 (may be spelled ‘Rodolphus’ or written ‘Radolph’; the modern version is ‘Ralph’).

rae (rā) n., poet. a roe deer – ‘My beloefet is like ane rae or ane yung hart ...’ [HSR].

Rae (rä) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is recorded as ‘Ree’. Agnes (d.1795) recorded as a midwife in the Hawick register of deaths. She could also be the person recorded when ‘Agness Rea’s Mother’ died in 1781. Andrew (16th C.) rented part of Standhill to John Turnbull of Knowe in 1659. This name is possibly an error for ‘Ker’. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servitor to Harwood’ when his daughter Jean was baptised in Hobbirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who might be his included ‘Nanse’ (b.1741), Thomas (b.1744) and Helen (b.1746). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) carter at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Hector (c.1683–1639) received his degree from Edinburgh University in 1603 and became minister at Nisbet in 1608. He was translated to Hownam in 1609 and signed the National Covenant in 1638, probably in Hawick. Hugh (14th C.) cleric connected with Cavers Parish in 1387 (and written ‘Raa’). In 1389 Henry Wardlaw was given the vicarage of Cavers, void after he obtained the church of Stractaven. He was also referred to as subdean of Glasgow. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Braxholm, signed in Edinburgh in 1500. His name was recorded as ‘Jacobo Raa’. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Braxholm, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Jacobo Raa seruo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Bessie (b.1716); Maddie (b.1719); James (b.1721); and Helen (b.1725). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); and James (b.1777), baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He could be the James, son of Walter and Margaret Garner, baptised in Hawick in 1743. It is also possible that his children (with no mother’s name given): Robert (b.1768), baptised in Cavers; Elizabeth (b.1769), baptised in Bedrule; John (b.1771), baptised in Bedrule; Jean (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1774), baptised in Bedrule; and Jean (again, b.1779), baptised in Cavers. The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Walter Rae (perhaps his father). James (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Redhungh. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the James, son of William and Rachel Scott who was born in Hawick in 1764. His son William (a stockmaking) died in 1838. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Crozier in 1790 and their children included: Janet (b.1790); Rachel (b.1795); Margaret (b.1797); John (b.1800); and William (b.1802). The witnesses in 1790 were shoemaker Robert Oliver, junior, and William Park. James (20th C.) plumber in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1923. This year is often referred to as the ‘Plumber’s Year' because of the torrential rain, which blew away the shelter at St. Leonard’s. Janet ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ (d.1758) elderly wife of the owner of the Salt Hall, who cut her throat in the eastern attic of the Salt Hall in 1758 (or perhaps 68), causing uproar when she was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. With the minister away, the authorities allowed the burial there, against some popular feeling. On the following morning the coffin fell upon her husband when he opened the Saut Haa door. The coffin was reburied, but appeared again the next day. It was then temporarily buried at the most northerly point of Wilton Common, until the minister returned and insisted on burial back in the churchyard. Her final burial place was in the area reserved for unchristened babies in the churchyard. There is a similar story about Tibbie Tamson in Selkirk. Jean (1731/2–1838) resident of Deloraine, who reached the age of 106. During ‘the forty-five’ she helped at Brunxholme to hide cattle and household goods from the Highlanders.

She was a great-great-grandmother, and there were 5 generations alive at once. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their son Walter was baptised in 1654. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as ‘creepie in ye toun’ in a baptismal record. He was also described in 1723 as ‘creepie in this toun’ when money was given for a coffin for his child. He married Helen ‘Furgrie’ and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1708); Helen (b.1711); and Jean (b.1714). The witnesses in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and James Falsyde and in 1714 were ‘customer’ Andrew Scott and ‘officer’ Alexander Young.

John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1780. His children included Anna (b.1776) and William (b.1780). He was surely related to Thomas, who lived in the same place. John ‘Jock’ (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. A story is told of Rev. Charters of Wilton finding him up his fruit tree – ‘What are you doing there, John?’ ‘Naething ava’, sir’. ‘Strange man, John, all that trouble for nothing’ [BP]. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (b.c.1780) carver in Hawick. He was at the Kirkwynd in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children William, James, Douglas, John, Walter and Isabell. He probably lived at 6 Kirk Wynd. Walter, a shoemaker who lived next door, was probably his brother. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a poulterer on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same John is a ‘salt and egg dealer’ at the Kirkgate in 1837. John (b.1803/4) born in Cavers Parish, he was a stocking needle maker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the Howgate in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived on the Kirkwynd in 1841, with his wife Catherine, on the Mid Raw in 1851 and was boarding on O’Connell Street in 1861. His wife was daughter of Arthur Balbirnie, writer of ‘The Auld Sang’. He had a daughter who died in 1838. John (b.1805/6) carpenter and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He was on the Crescent in 1841, in the Village in 1851 and on Drumanlag Place in 1861. He married Elizabeth Miller in Wilton in 1832 and their children included Thomas, John, Mary N., William N. and Walter. John (19th C.) listed in Slaters’ 1852 directory as an earthenware dealer on the High Street. There is a separate listing for a High Street greengrocer of the same name. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (19th C.) one of 5 men tried for rioting and assault at the 1837 election in Hawick. He was found guilty and ‘put to the horn’. John (b.1825/6) wool spinner in Hawick, born in Wilton. In 1861 he was living at 11 Back Row. He married Elizabeth Ann Ekron in 1847 and their children included: John (b.c.1847); Margaret (b.c.1848); Jemima (b.c.1854); Mary (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); James (b.1860); and Janet (b.1865). John (1897/8-1975) born in Hawick, he was Cornet in 1923 and later lived at Towerburn. He married his Cornet’s Lass Isabella ‘Bella’ Neish Elder (who died in 1989, aged 87). John ‘Jock’ (20th C.) pipe major of the Scout Band in the years 1960–62. He once had the honour of being Solo Piper at the Edinburgh Tattoo. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Mr. ?? (18th C.) owner of a large tract of land stretching between where Havelock Street and Dowcote Street now are. The land was ultimately divided, part becoming Dovemount, and being the site of the well that supplied much of Wilton for more than a century. Robert (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1790) gardener at Dovemount. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John and Isabella. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1639). Thomas (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Rae

Slaidhills. His son Alexander was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1707. He could be the Thomas whose daughter Margaret married James, son of Walter Scott in Hawick in 1717. Thomas (18th C.) resident at Milingtonshiel in the 1760s and 1770s when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Thomas at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1774 when his son Thomas was baptised. It seems likely that these were all his children (baptised in Roberton Parish, with no mother’s name given): John (b.1762); Margaret (b.1763); James (b.1765); Betty (b.1767); Jean (b.1771); and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1780 for James Knox. He married Janet Murray in 1775 and their children included Thomas (b.1775) and James (b.1779). Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Mary Scott in 1775 and their children included: Andrew (b.1778); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1778 were Joseph Goven and Mungo Armstrong. Thomas (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785, when his name is recorded as ‘Rhea’. He also paid in 1787 and 1791. He was a carter in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who married Janet Gledstains in Hawick in 1799. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Aitchison in Hawick Parish in 1797. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Scott in 1792. Thomas (18th/19th C.) charged with sheep-stealing from Phaup in 1818. He was caught because of selling the skins in Hawick and jailed in Jedburgh. He was probably hanged. Thomas Ian (1926–89) educated partly at Hawick High School, he studied history at St. Andrews University and eventually became keeper of manuscripts at the National Library of Scotland. He wrote ‘The Administration of the Scottish Frontier 1513–1603’ (1966), ‘Scotland at the time of Shakespeare’ (1965), edited ‘The union of 1707 its impact on Scotland’ (1974), co-edited ‘The Burgh Court book of Selkirk, 1503–45’ (1960). He also wrote several other articles, including some for the Transactions and was a member of the Archeological Society. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Harvey and their children included: Robert (b.1689). Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Margaret Gardner and their children included James (b.1740), William (b.1741), James (again, b.1743), an unnamed child (b.1745), George (b.1758) and Agnes (b.1762). The 1743 baptism was witnessed by shoemaker John Scott and merchant William Riddell, and the 1758 one by shoemaker George Gardner and William Veitch. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick. He was fined and imprisoned in Dumfries in 1760 for attacking Leonard Fleming, an excise officer. When his sentence was done he was to be set on the pillory at Dumfries with a label on his breast reading ‘I stand here for having been guilty of committing a most atrocious battery upon the person of an excise-officer when in the exercise of his duty’. He could be the same man as the Hawick tailor. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Whitfield in 1772. He married Ann Walker in Ashkirk in 1770 and their children included: Gilbert (b.1770), baptised in Ashkirk; William (b.1773), baptised in Wilton; James (b.1775), baptised in Selkirk; Adam (b.1777), baptised in Selkirk; Anne (b.1780), baptised in Selkirk; John (b.1786), baptised in Yarrow; and Jane (b.1789), baptised in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1772 were Walter Scott and James Robson. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. Walter (b.c.1785) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd. In 1841 he is recorded at about No. 6 and in 1851 is on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Mary and children included Thomas, Robert, Andrew and Margaret. He was surely related to John, the carter who lived next door. Walter town street sweeper, who came 2nd in the 2004 Citizen of the Year vote and joint 3rd in 2005. William (d.1367) Precentor of the Diocese of Glasgow, he was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1338, following the death of John Wishart. He was consecrated in 1339 and remained Bishop until his death. He thus had authority over Teviotdale. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow belonging to him stolen from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His name is given as ‘Willehmo raix’; however, it is possible he is the same man recorded as William ‘rany’ in 1493. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stoddart and their children included John (b.1648) William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1703. William (17th/18th C.) carrier of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Hasswell in 1707 and their children included: James (b.1707); Marion (b.1708); William (b.1711); John (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Walter (b.1716); William (b.1719); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1711 were Francis Gledstains and smith John Scott and in 1713 were merchants Robert Robson and William Craig.

William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jane (b.1757), Marion (b.1759) and James (b.1764). William (19th C.) married Mary Ann Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1826. Their children born in Roxburghshire were: Jean (b.1831); Janet (b.1832); and John (b.1834). In 1835 they emigrated to the Montreal area, following the Dryden family a year earlier. They then moved to North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. 7 other children were born in Canada. William (b.1812/3) painter on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 48 High Street, with his wife Mary. They had a daughter Isabella S. The death of his aunt Agnes Rae is recorded in Hawick in 1838. William (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was shepherd at Ruecastle in 1851. His wife was Helen (from Oxnam) and their children included Isabella, Jane, George, Walter and John (formerly spelled ‘Ray’, ‘Re’, ‘Rea’, etc.).

Raeburnfit (rā-burn-äft) n. site of a small Roman fort in Dumfries & Galloway, where the Rae Burn joins the White Esk, a few miles north of Eskdalemuir. It marks the end of the Roman road from the upper Borthwick valley via Craik Cross. There may have been an extension of this road over Groundistone Height to Harelaw and towards Newstead.

Raegill Bogs (rā-gil-bogz) n., pl. marshy area to the south of Hermitage Castle, just by Toftsholm Site. There is an example of a ‘burnt mound’ there, as well as the remains of 4 shieling-huts and an area of enclosed rig.

Rae-knowe (rā-now) n. rising ground on which the farmhouse of Nether Bonchester stood, near the present-day Bonchester farmhouse.

Raesknowe (rās-know) n. farm on the Allan Water, behind Newmill, on the opposite (east) side of the Allan Water from Allanhaugh tower. It was a home of the Scotts in the 16th century, and afterwards a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. In a 1627 valuation it is described as paying ‘presentlie in stok and teynd 26 bolls; estimat in stok to 14, and 3 in parsonage, 4 lbs. in vicarage’. David Scott of Raesknowe, related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, is listed as one of the ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’ by Scott of Satchells. It is shown in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 231 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Newbigging, the Allan Water and the Teviot, and with Reasknowe Mill being a separate farm at its south end. The former small tower there was already in ruins by 1663. In the period 1690–96 the farm was jointly leased by Walter Bell, John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1698 it was leased by John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1694 the householders listed there were Walter Bell, David Graham, John Armstrong and George Wilson (shepherd). Robert Gledstains was also recorded there in 1700. John Armstrong was still there in 1706. Robert Graham was there in 1708 and John Graham was tenant there in about 1710. In the 18th century the area was a small thriving hamlet, which had a schoolmaster appointed in 1723 to teach the poor children of the neighbourhood. Archibald Douglas was farmer there in 1797. A bronze jug was dug up there around 1835, having 3 feet, a handle and a spout, probably mediaeval (also called ‘Raeknowes’; it is ‘Raisknowis’ in an undated 16th century document, ‘Raisknew’ in 1627, ‘Raesknow’ in 1640, ‘Raeknow’ in 1641, ‘Raeknowes’ in 1690, ‘Raeknow’ in 1692, ‘Reasknew’ in 1694, ‘Rae Knoll’ in 1704, ‘Raes-knowes’ in 1717, ‘Raesknowes’ in 1718, ‘Roseknew’ in 1797 and ‘Raes Knowe’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Reesknow’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but incorrectly placed in the middle of Hawick Moor; the name may related to roe deer).

Raesknowe Mill (rās-now-mill) n. former corn mill on the Allan Water, north of the farm of Raesknowe, an alternative name for Allanhaugh Mill. It is shown in 1718 as a separate farm to Raesknowe, consisting of 14 acres on the haugh opposite to where the Rampy Sike meets the Allan, with the mill itself at the east side, near where the foot of the North Burn. The mill lade appears on the map, starting near Lochburnfoot and running along the east side of the Allan, to join again after the mill (it is Raesknowes milne in 1718).

Raeson Park (rā-sin-pawrk) n. street off the right of Stirches Road, built in 1928 and named after builders John Rae & Son, Victoria Road.

Raff (rawf) n. Rev. Eric Maitland Kirk (1892–1927) son of William Watson of Melbourne and Victoria Black, and grandson of William of Woodlee, Forres. He was educated in Melbourne, graduating in 1915 and being ordained there the following year. He was then at Efate Island, New Hebrides Mission until 1923 and came to Scotland the following year, becoming assistant at St. Michael’s, Dumfries and then was appointed to Rosyth. He became minister at St. Mary’s in March 1926, but died at Bournemouth only a year later. He married Ruth, daughter of John Baird.

raffle (raw-ful) n., arch. a lottery, in the 19th century specifically an event organised to raise money for people in ill-health or who were emigrating etc., prizes being won by dice throws.

ragabuss (raw-ga-bash) n., arch. a ragamuffin, good-for-nothing – ‘He was nothing but a liar and a reprobate, and a Jacobite villain and knave, and... a ragabast [sic]’ [Ash1712], adj. very poor, destitute – ‘Rag-a-buss, A designation given to those who are very poor, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘rag-a-buss’, ‘ragabash’, etc.).

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bus) n. nickname of an itinerant around the early years of the 19th century. He engaged Wull Slush in a steepchase on foot at the Common Riding one year (when held at the Vertish), the race degenerating into a fight.

Ragarth (ra-garth) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located on the Kershope burn and attached to the estates of Mangerton. They are recorded as being worth 7 shillings and 6 pence in a rental list c.1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1541 ‘Ragarth, Sorbe, Sorbetrees’ was part of the property of the Laird of Meriantoun, valued at 10 merks, and separately ‘half of Regarthe’ was also listed, with a value of 5 merks. It is ‘Raeigirth’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, on the north side of the Kershope Burn, east of Kershope (it is possible it is related to Raegill Knowes, close to Kershope Bridge).

Ragarthshaw (ra-garth-shaw) n. former farm in Liddesdale, in the ‘Quartermer de Ludne’ according to a c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 6 shillings. It was presumably near the main farm of Ragarth (recorded as ‘Ragartshaw’).

raggit (raw-gi’, -gee’) adj. ragged – ‘A raggit cout a race has won, And sae might little Jock’ [JT].

the Raggit Schuil (thu-raw-gi’-skil, -gee’-skil) n. former name for Drumlanrig School applied by those from elsewhere in the town. The name was also used for the Mission School of Allars Kirk, which was on Allars Crescent in the 1870s, with Mr. Robert Grieve sometimes acting as teacher.

raggle (raw-gul) n. a groove cut in wood or stone to enable another piece to fit into it.

the Ragman Rolls (thu-rawg-min-rölz) n., pl. list of names of those Scots swearing allegiance to Edward I of England. The smaller roll was signed at Norham in 1291, and the larger one at Berwick in 1295, after Edward was victorious at the Battle of Dunbar. There were more than 1,500 names of Scottish landowners, clergy and Burgess, making this a valuable historical record. The attachment of seals also gives a unique insight into the heraldry of the time. The communities of Jedburgh and Roxburgh were among burghs that paid homage. The roll includes the following local men, (a sub-set of those described as ‘of Roxburgh County’ unless otherwise stated): Adam, Parson of Soulndone (presumably ‘Soudon’); Emme de Almure (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Rogier de Almure (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Alisaundre de Bailliol (or ‘Bailliol’ or ‘Bailiol’ of Cavers); William de Bradel-eye (possibly Braidlie on Hermitage); Thomas de Chartres; William de Chartres; John de Chesolm (from Berwickshire); Richard de Cheselehm; John Comyn de Badenach (senior and junior, Barons of Bedrule); Johan de Convevthe (Parson of Ancrum); James de Crak (in Selkirkshire, possibly Craik); Simon de Cresseueneille (possibly Cresswell in Hesseaside Parish); Robert de Dene (Parson of Wilton); Gwy de Denum (Denholm); Randulf de Derum (possibly an error for ‘Denum’); Johan de Ethereston (possible Adderstone); William de Fansyde (possibly in Southdean Parish); Richard de Flex; Herbert de Gledestan (of Lanarkshire, direct ancestor of the local family); Adam de Gourlay; Robert Grundi de Neuton (who possibly gave his name to Grundistone); Aleyen Gurnay (possibly ‘Gourlay’); Johan de Harden; Robert de Hawyk (or ‘Hauewyk’); Adam de Hep (probably ‘Heap’, but perhaps ‘Hepburn’); Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston (probably ‘Hermiston’ near Lilliesleaf); Adam de Hodolm (of Dumfriesshire, probably the same man); Agneys Louel (Parson of the Church of Cavers); William de Bradel-eye (possibly ‘Bailiol’ or ‘Bailiol’ of Cavers); Thomas de Rillewod (possibly ‘Rulewood’); Robert fiz Rauf (Parson of the Church of St. Cuthbert of Ewesdale); William de Rotherford (Parson of ‘Lillesclyue’, i.e. Lilliesleaf); Adam de Rukel; William de Rucastel; Adam de Rukel (probably ‘Ricketon’ but also could be Riccarton); Adam de Rykeldon (probably the same man); Sir Hugo Rydel (probably related to the Riddells of that Ilk); Richard Le Scot de Murthox-toum (later of Rankleburn); William Scot; Sire Johan de Seint Michel; Johan de Seint Michel (sepaately); Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe (possibly Mervinslaw); Sir Nicholaus de Soules; Thomas de Soules; John de Stonesleghe (probably Stonedge); Marie de Synton; Ingram de Toftes (possibly near Kirkton); Robert de Toftes; William de Toftes; Robert Waugh (or 'Walgh' or 'Walugh') de Hep (probably Heap); Richard de Witton (Parson of Hawick); and possibly others who are harder to identify with the Hawick area (the origin of the name may be from the ribbons attached to some of the seals).

raiconcile (rā-kon-sil) v. to reconcile.

raid (rād) n., arch. a foray on horseback, mounted attack – ‘Now Liddesdale has ridden a raid, But I wat they had better staid at hame
. . . ’ [CPM], ‘But yet for a his cracking crouse, He rew’d the raid of the Red-Swire’ [CPM] (note that this word was revived by Sir Walter Scott and became standard English for a sudden attack in general).

the Raid o the Redeswire (thu-rād-ō-thu-reed-swir, reedz-wifr) n. sometimes referred to as the last battle between Scotland and England, taking place near the Carter Bar in 1575. The event was apparently an accidental skirmish, taking place at a Warden Court, held at the Carter Fell, when hostilities suddenly broke out between the two sides. Sir John Carmichael led the Scots who beat Sir John Forster’s men, with the timely arrival of the Jedburgh contingent with their cry ‘Jethart’s here’, turning the battle. The Hawick men there were led by Little Gladstain ‘good at need’, with the ‘Laird’s Wat’ of Goldielands also present, along with many Elliots, Armstrongs, etc. Sir John Heron, one of the English leaders, was slain, and the Warden taken prisoner.
It is said that 5 Scotsmen and 6 Englishmen were killed. The battle site, near the Carter Bar, is commemorated by the Redeswire Stone
as the last battle between Scotland and England, being distributed by the shepherd (said of sheep).

raigular (rā-gew-lur) adj. regular – ‘hei was Ralph’s Acre (rawlfs-ā-kur) n. lands adjacent to Trinitylands, mentioned in the rental returns for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. This could be the same place referred to as ‘Blakie’s Acre’ in the 16th century.

Ralphtree Grain (rawlf-tree-grān) n. small stream in Liddesdale which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows into Todhunter Grain and then the Tinnis Burn. An old sheepfold shows that shepherds worked in even as remote a place.

Ralston (rawl-stin) n. John (19th C.) resident of Riccarton Station in 1868.

Raltounside (rawl-stin) n. former lands in Liddesdale, to the south-west of Redheugh. Modern maps show the farm of Raltounside on the Ralton Burn. Ingram Armstrong is recorded there in 1535, along with Robert and Archibald Armstrong. In 1541 they were valued at 3 pounds and 7 shillings, with tenants Robert, Ninian and Ralton Burn

Thomas Armstrong. Ingram Armstrong there is recorded in a 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire and related areas, along with John alias Ralton. This is probably the ‘Rouraltonholme’ possessed by John Scott in 1632 and also the ‘Ra-tounholme’ listed among the lands of Kerr of Ancrum on the same document. Rig lines have been seen to the north-west of Raltoside, and there is also an old boundary bank there (it is ‘Raltoum’ in 1535, ‘Raltoun’ in 1541 and ‘Raltoum’ and ‘Rel- toum’ in 1585).

Ralton Burn (rawl-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Roan Fell and Millstone Edge, on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire and gather’s several other streams before passing Raltoside farm, joining the Ryedale Burn and running into the Liddel Water between Sandholm and Newcastleton. The area has the remains of several farmsteads, as well as boundary banks, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds. Near the head of the westernmost feeder stream are a couple of shepherd’s cairns (it is marked on the 1718 Bucleuch survey).

Raltoside (rawl-tin-sid) n. cottage on the Ralton Burn to the north of Newcastleton.

Rampart Place (rawlm-pur-plis) n. name used for Old Manse Lane in use in the mid 1800s.

ramper-eel (rawlm-pur-eel) n., arch. any large eel, particularly the lamprey.

Ramplisgill see Ramsiegill

Rampy Sike (rawlm-pee-si) n. small stream that runs roughly north-east to joint the Allan Water near Allanhaugh Bank. There is a small, roughly oval-shaped enclosure there, of indistinct enough form that it is hard to guess its age. On the haugh opposite where the sike joins the Allan Water was formerly the site of Raesknowe Mill.

ram-race (ram-räs) n., arch. a short burst of speed, like a ram uses in charging, a headlong rush – ‘He took a ram-race and smashed open the door’ [HAST1868], an impetuous progression, anything done at unreasonable speed – ‘Howt! Thay sang that chorus fer owre quick. Thay made a perfect raam-race o’ d’ [ECS], ‘It was a Day’s Dander A wanteet, an no a raam-race duist’ [ECS], ‘The band [=choir] made a perfec’ ram-race o’ the chorus’ [GW].

Ramsay (rawlm-zee) n. Sir Alexander of Dalhousie (d.c.1342). He fought at Borough Muir, was involved with the capture of Leuchars castle and relieved the siege of Dunbar Castle. He harassed the English in the Borders, often with a relatively small force, and was made Warden of the East March in 1340. He was known as a paragon of chivalry, being a champion on the Ramsay

Ramsay Ramsay was named after him in 1933. His direct descendant, Ramsay Road in Hawick

Rev. Andrew Mitchell (1809–69) from Tollcross in Glasgow, he became the 4th minister of the Relief (Allars) Church in 1833. He was the first President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, leading to some dispute over the use of Allars Kirk for meetings. He also allowed his church to be used for Revival meetings, against the wishes of many in his congregation. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed on the Crescent. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street. He resigned in 1846, and left Hawick, with a large crowd seeing him off at the Tower Knowe. He moved to Australia to become Minister of Collins Street Church in Melbourne. In about 1850, along with 3 others, he formed the United Presbyterian Church of Victoria. He married Isabella Milne and their son Robert was a politician and lawyer in Australia. An early photograph of him exists.

Sir George of Dalhousie (d.c.1629) son of James of Cockpen, he was 2nd Lord Ramsay of Melrose. He gained the lands and title in 1618 from his relative John, Viscount Haddington and Lord Ramsay of Barns. He is recorded in 1613 collecting the vicarage teinds from Thomas of Turnbull of Knowe. This suggests that he already had patronage of Hassendean Kirk at that time. He became Earl of Holderness and sold the lands of Melrose to Sir Thomas Hamilton. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas, and was succeeded by his son William, who became Earl of Dalhousie. James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1806 when his marriage to Barbara Morton announced in Melrose Parish. John (c.1580–1618) Viscount of Haddington, Earl of Holderness. He was son Robert of Wyliecleuch. In 1609 he was granted the lands and income from Melrose Abbey, becoming Lord Melrose. This included the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean. The grant was at least partly because of the help he had given the King in the Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600. In 1618 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his relative Sir George of Dalhousie.

John (18th C.) Hawick resident who was among the many men listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (18th C.) surveyor of coals, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1755. He was probably not from Hawick, but it is unclear where he was from or what his connection with Hawick was. In 1757 there is a record of 5 shillings ‘Spent with Mr Ramsay the coalman (coal-viewer)’, this being related to ‘the petition for the coals’ that the Town Clerk had sent. It is unclear exactly what this was about, but he is also recorded being paid 10 shillings and 5 pence in the same year. John M. (b.1885) uncle of Jessie MacDonald, he grew up in Denholm, served in WWI, was a postman for the Stobs area and lived at Orchard Terrace in later life. He wrote an account of Denholm in the years around 1900 for the Transactions. Robert (1842–82) son of Rev. Andrew Mitchell, who was minister of Allars Kirk. He was born in Hawick, but the family emigrated to Australia when he was about 5 (one of his siblings dying on the voyage). He studied law at Melbourne University, became a solicitor and became involved in politics as secretary for a committee trying to abolish state funding of religion. He served as a member of the legislative assembly of Victoria from 1870, being heavily involved in education and the separation of church and state. He was also partially responsible for the police actions that led to the capture of the Ned Kelly gang. He married Isabella Catherine, daughter of Robert Urquhart. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was buried in Melbourne general cemetery. William (d.c.1695) tenant in Bedrule Mill. He married Margaret Turnbull. In 1695 he and his wife left 500 merks for the poor of the Barony of Bedrule, with the family of Cavers Carre as trustees. He is probably the William recorded in Bedrule Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William ‘Wull Shush’ (d.c.1830) known as a vagrant and drunkard. Although not born in Hawick, he travelled around upper Teviotdale for the period roughly 1790–1830. He was said to have been from either Carluke in Clydesdale or brought up at Heriot’s Hospital in Edinburgh. Not known for his beauty, he was described as being ‘as unprepossessing in his looks as it is possible to conceive, and his raiment was in classic keeping with his countenance’. He claimed to have a sister who was far uglier than himself. He had a squint, with one eyelid almost covering his eye, and a lower lip that drooped noticeably. He also lost the use of his legs through frostbite, and afterwards went about on a donkey. A story is told of how he once stood in for the driver of the cart between Edinburgh and Hawick, but was so drunk from stopping at every inn that by the time he reached Dovemount he mistook the gable of Wilton Kirk for another possible watering hole. He spent much of his time in the Black Bull, or sleeping it off in Hawick Mill. One year, when the Common Riding races were at the Vertish, he came across another beggar, called Ragabuss, and the pair race for tuppence in a steeplechase on foot, which degenerated into a fight. He once insulted Blind Wullie Craw (as recounted by William Norman Kennedy), who immediately threw off the lines ‘O! Hush, hush, Wull Slush, Wull Slush, The Ostler o’ Black Bull, As lazy a loon as what’s i’ the toon, And his head’s like a weel picked skull’. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, and an article by William Norman Kennedy in the first Archaeological Society Transactions. William (b.1802/3) born in Sprouston Parish. In 1851 he was a proprietor of 94 acres at Calaburn in Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth (who married brickmaker William Taylor) and Christian. William (b.1851) born at Armadale, West Lothian, he was the last preacher at the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, which closed in the 1920s. He also served as an elder in the United Free Church there. He was ‘colporteur’ for the Religious Tract Society as well as School Attendance Officer. He married Christian Wilson in 1872. Their children were Peter (who married Helen Stoddart in Hawick), Christina, George Wilson, James, Jane, John, William and Jessie (who married Thomas Ramage in Hawick).

Ramsaycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead above Merrylaw, reached by the side road from Teviothead, and lying just north of Rashieigrain and the source of the Teviot. The areas of Ramsaygrain West and Ramsaygrain East lie to either side. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick the lands were listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’. The lands were included in the list of property of the Baron of Hawick (Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1572 and 1594. Douglas of Drumlanrig has a ‘horning’ in 1607 against William Scott of Gledstains to remove from these and other lands, followed by a further action in 1610 for Scott and James Gledstains of that Ilk owing him taxes. Robert Grieve was tenant in 1609. Half of the lands there were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. John Bell was recorded ‘in Ramsiecleughburn’ in 1678. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. James Anderson was there in 1699 and William Anderson in 1704. By 1707 it was valued along with Hislop at £549 4s. The lands were owned by Michael Anderson of Tushielaw and Hislop in the early 18th century. Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw was owner in 1788. John Armstrong is recorded as farmer at ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ in 1797. William Riddell (brother of Henry Scott Riddell) was tenant there in the mid-19th century. In 1811 the lands of ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ were valued along with Hislop at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersons of Tushielaw. This area was part of the western extremity of Hawick Parish until Teviothead was formed in 1850. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building at Ramsaycleuchburn (the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘hrams cloh’, meaning ‘the ravine of the wild garlic’, although the terrain does not seem very suitable; it is easily confused with Ramsaycleuch in the Ettrick valley; it appears in 1511 as ‘Ramsy Clewis’ and ‘Ramsyclewch’, ‘Ramsiclewis’ in 1514, ‘Ramsay Clewes’ in 1572, ‘Ramsay Clewis’ in 1594, ‘Ramsay clewch’ and ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1609, ‘Ramsiclewch’ in 1610, ‘Ramsaycyclewis’ in 1615, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1621, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1674, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1675, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1695, ‘Ramsaiclythghburn’ in 1704 and ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ recorded in 1714; it is marked ‘Rapshycleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ramsey Road (rawm-zee-röd) n. street behind Moat Park, built in 1933 and extended in 1969. The housing overlooking the ‘Scer’ is sometimes known as the ‘Haggis Haa’ scheme. Named after Sir Alexander Ramsay (since it is beside the old highway where he made his last fateful journey).

Ramsaycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, near the village of Ettrick. It was formerly owned by the Scotts of Thirlstane. John Scott of Thirlstane had a ‘tack’ from Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1535 and Robert Scott of ‘Schastaine’ in 1557. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlstane had a charter in about 1620, and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. A ‘pendicle’ called ‘Timahauchis’ is also mentioned at that time. Adam Scott was there in the 1780s and George Grieve in the 1860s (it probably has the same origin as Ramsaycleuch, with which it is easily confused; it is ‘Ramscelewis’ in 1535, ‘Ramsecleouch’ in 1557, ‘Ramsecleuch’ in 1564, ‘Ramsaycleuch’ in 1568, ‘Ramscelewies’ in 1573, ‘Ramspiecleuch’ in 1577, ‘Ramsiecleuch’ in about 1622 and ‘Ramsieclewis’ in 1641; ‘Rampshycleuch’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

(rawm-shä-kul) adj., arch. ramshackle, v. to search diligently (cf. ramshackle).

Ramsiegill (rawm-zee-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but it was in the hills somewhere to the west of Riccarton. It is listed as ‘Rampysgill’ in about 1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section called ‘Ermyndoue’, and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. ‘William Elwald in Ramsigill’ is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1510 and on a rental roll of 1541. ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsiegill’ is among men the King ordered to be apprehended in 1532. Robert in Ramsiegill and ‘Old’ Robert of Ramsiegill are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. ‘Gavin o Ramsiegill’ was one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick by the Regent Moray in 1567. ‘Gavin’s Jock’ from there was recorded in 1574 and 1582/3. ‘Il Rob of Ramsigill’ was convicted for theft in 1580/1. Jock Elliot of Ramsiegill is listed in 1583 as one of the Elliots of Burnhead. Hob and Rowie Elliot ‘of Ramsegill’ signed a bond for the behaviour of all the Elliots of Ramsiegill in 1584, along with Archie of the Hill and Will’s Hob. And a number of Elliots from there were named in a bond of 1587. Hob and Gavin separately accused the English of raids on their lands there in the 1580s. The man who hanged himself when imprisoned in Hawick steeple in 1612 may also have been from this family branch (it is marked ‘Rampsygill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the hills to the east of Roughley Burn, between ‘Ernitlon’ and ‘Lires’; it is ‘Ramsigill’ in 1510, ‘Ramsiegill’ in 1541, ‘Rampsegyll’ and ‘Ramsygell’ in 1563, ‘Ramseygill’ in 1569, ‘Ramsigill’ in 1580/1, ‘Rampsygill’ in 1581 and ‘Ramsgill’ in 1583; the origin may be similar to that of ‘Ramsaycleuch’, i.e. related to the Old English for ‘wild garlic’; there is also a ‘Ramsgill’ in North Yorkshire).

Ramstam (rawm-stawm) adj., arch., poet. haphazard, rash, heedless, unceremonious – ‘Hei’d little need be hen-heretit that hid ti beer the ramstam onfaa . . . ’[ECS], ‘My strength was renewed, but the haugh was plewed, And I made but a ramstam rin . . . ’[WaD], ‘He wasna blate, he was rale ram-stam, He’d swallowed a wee thing mair than a dram’[WL], n., poet. haphazardness, chaos – ‘And roun and roun the world may spin Wi’ its ram-stam and steer . . . ’[WL].

Ramstougar (rawm-stoo-gar) adj., arch. rough (in various senses), coarse (of cloth), characterising a particularly masculine woman, vulgar, heedless, harebrained, rowdy, quarrelsome (all of these meanings noted by J. Jamieson).

Rand (rawnd) n., arch. a narrow strip, a streak of a different colour in cloth, a streak of discoloration in anything imperfectly cleaned or dried (noted by J. Jamieson).

Randan (rawn-dan) n., arch. spree, particularly in the phrase ‘on the randan’, meaning being involved in a wild celebration (noted by E.C. Smith).

Randie see randy

Randit (ran-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. streaked, striped, dyed a variegated colour – ‘Randit, illwision claes’[GW], ‘Randit tweeds, bread, butter’[GW], ‘Ma froak hesna dyed weel at aa; it’s awfullies randeet’[ECS], ‘That wumman’s claes is no haa seindeet; they’re hinging oot i the gairdien aa randeet’[ECS], ‘My strength was renewed, but the haugh was plewed, And I made but a ramstam rin . . . ’[ECS], ‘He wasna blate, he was rale ram-stam, He’d swallowed a wee thing mair than a dram’[WL].

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. (d.c.1185) husband of Bethoc, who was probably daughter of Donald III. He was Lord of Strathnith or Nithsdale. However, his story sometimes seems mixed up with others. His name is also translated as Ralph. His wife may have been a daughter of Fergus, Earl of Galloway and Princess Joan of England. Not long after the founding of Jedburgh Abbey they granted a carrucate of land (60 acres) in Rucastle to Jedburgh Abbey, confirmed by William the Lion. Through his wife he gained the barony of Bedrule. He was probably son of Dunegal of Stranith, or Nithsdale, and brother of Duvenald (or Donald), Duncan and Gillespie (or Gillepatric). Bedrule also soon passed into the hands of the Comyns, suggesting that the Bethoc was the daughter of Donald III, whose daughter Randolph

Hextilda married Richard Comyn. His descendants took the surname Randolph.

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. Thomas (13th C.) Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded as witness to a document for Kelso Abbey in 1266. He was probably a descendant of Randolph, Lord of Stranith. He was Chamberlain of Scotland 1269–78. He married Isabel Bruce, who was probably sister of King Robert the Bruce. His son Sir Thomas became 1st Earl of Moray.

randy (rawn-dee) adj., arch., poet. wild, disorderly, disreputable, aggressively rude – ‘...strictly discharging all her Majesty’s leidges within ye shyre to resett Gipsies, Vagabonds, Randie beggars, and idle persons ...’ [PR171], ‘Now randie Tibbie takes the road, Wi a’ her neebour wretches’ [JoHa], ‘Can’ ye straight alang the toon, Or doon the randy raw? Ha’e ye seen wretches’ [JoHa], ‘Cam’ ye straight alang the toon, Wi’ a’ her neebour: ...’ [WL], n., arch. a scolding woman, a miscievous girl (also written ‘randie’).

range (rænj) v., arch. to search, probe, rummage – ‘A’ll mebbies find oot if A range the kist’ [ECS], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staed’ [ECS], ‘A’ve ranged a’ the drawers, an’ cannna find it’ [GW], to agitate water, especially to scare fish from hiding places, to poke the ashes from between the bars of a grate so that the air can circulate – ‘Taik the poker an range the bars o the feier’ [ECS].

Rankilburn (rawn-gkul-burn) n. older spelling for the valley of the Rankle Burn, also known as Buccleuch. The precise boundaries of the lands are not known, but certainly larger than the lands later known as Buccleuch. This was once a separate parish, which was merged with Yarrow in 1621, but then disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick in 1650. It appears that in 1236 the lands belonged to Nigel de Heris, the King’s forester. The land probably passed to the Scotts some time shortly after 1249, perhaps as part of the appointment as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. Sir Richard Scott was the first known Laird of Rankilburn in the late 13th century. The first residence was probably on the motte at Phenzhopehaugh, later moving to ‘Buccleuch Castle’. There was also a chapel on the Rankle Burn, the cemetery of which was the final resting place for many early generations of the Scotts of Buccleuch. When the lands were inherited in 1492 they were said to be then waste, but normally valued at £20. They were still listed separately from Buccleuch in the family lands inherited in 1517 and 1553/4 and the lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. – ‘Of Ettrick’s-hue he took a view, Than to the left hand did turn, Where he did see that Forrest hie, Which then was called Rankelburn’ [CWS] (it is ‘Rankilburne’ in 1415, 1463, 1484 and about 1580, ‘Ranckylburne’ in 1415 and 1491/2, ‘Rankilburn’ in 1491/2, ‘Rankilburn’ and ‘Rankylburne’ in 1517 and ‘Rankilburne’ in 1528, 1574 and 1634; it is marked ‘Rankilburn’ and ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps and mis-transcribed as ‘Kankisburn’ on Moll’s 1745 map).

Rankilburn Chaipel (rawn-gkul-burn-chæpul) n. former chapel near the old seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn. It was also known as ‘Buccleuch Kirk’. The chapel was situated at the confluence of the Rankle Burn and the Kirk Burn, about 5 miles up from the Ettrick, with Kirk Hill and Priest Sike to the east. When it was established is unclear, but possibly around the 13th century when the motte was established at Rankilburn (later called Phenzhopehaugh); it was certainly already in existence by 1415, since in that year the tithes for Bellendean were transferred to it (when the Scotts of Rankilburn swapped Bellendean for the lands of Glenkerry with the monks of Melrose Abbey). It is marked ‘Rankilburn K.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and ‘Ruins of Buccleugh Kirk’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; today there is a semi-circular sheepfold enclosing much of the site, which is in the forest. The walls of the former chapel can still just be made out, these being modest in size, about 12 m by 8 m, 2 sides being partly marked by the sheepfold walls and by earthen banks. Another bank may mark the wall of the kirkyard. There are 2 other rectangular enclosures just to the west of the sheepfold, presumably the remains of other buildings (or these have also been suggested to be the walls of the church itself). Scott of Satchells says that 9 Lairds of Buccleuch were buried there, perhaps starting after David and ending with the permanent move to Branxholme. There is a tradition that the last Scott burial was within 3 yards of the east door of the church. It is stated that the chapel was already ruined by 1566. There was a legend of a blue marble font (in which generations of Scotts had been baptised) being buried among the ruins, but no such relic has been found. Satchells says that around 1585 a young Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Robert Scott of Thirlestane found ancient tombstones buried there, bearing the arms of Buccleuch, along with some other sculpted stones. In 1801 the site was visited by a party including Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, but they found nothing of any significance. William Scott (from Burnmouth) stated in 1821 that ‘frequently human bones are washed away by the encroaching of the stream’. There was an excavation around 1877, but little was discovered. The rector in 1453 was James Spottiswood, and the reader in 1491/2 was John Scott. David Scott of Buccleuch left money for the church when he died in 1491/2. Following the ruin of their nearby manor, the Scots abandoned the area for their new seat at Branxholme, and the church probably fell into disuse at that time. In 1574 John Scott, minister of Ashkirk had oversight there. After the Reformation the parish was united with Yarrow and then Ettrick and was not considered large enough to require a reader (it was ‘ecclesiae de Rankilburn’ in 1453 and ‘Rankilburn’ in a Church of Scotland document of 1586).

Rankilburn Pairish (rawng-kul-burn-päreesh) n. former small parish, sometimes referred to as Buccleuch, consisting of the land between the Rankle Burn and the Timna Water. Its establishment is unclear, but it certainly existed before 1415. In the early 17th century it was united with Yarrow, but in 1650 it was annexed instead to Ettrick. At that point it consisted essentially of the lands of Deephope, Mount Common, Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Annelshope, East Buccleuch, West Buccleuch, Tushielaw, Cacrabank and Crosslee.

Rankin (rawng-kin) n. James (19th C.) police offer at Forkins in the 1860s. Rev. Lisa-Jane minister of Wilton. —bf Robert (19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. ‘Robert Rankin & Co.’ was listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. William (19th/20th C.) blacksmith at Bedrule. William Davidson. George Davidson had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him there before 1502. The rector in 1491/2 was John Scott. David Scott of Buccleuch left money for the church when he died in 1491/2. Following the ruin of their nearby manor, the Scots abandoned the area for their new seat at Branxholme, and the church probably fell into disuse at that time. In 1574 John Scott, minister of Ashkirk had oversight there. After the Reformation the parish was united with Yarrow and then Ettrick and was not considered large enough to require a reader (it was ‘ecclesiae de Rankilburn’ in 1453 and ‘Rankilburn’ in a Church of Scotland document of 1586).

Raperlaw

Buccleuch area, and was the original family seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn or Buccleuch. There is a ballad called ‘The Maid of the Rankle Burn’ (it is marked ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Rancikill B.’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Rankgle Burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Rankilburn).

rannel-trei (ra-nul-tri) n., arch. a beam, or branch-striped tree, forming the roof-tree of a house – ‘And oure the auld man’s rigging back She laid her rannel-tree shanke’ [JT].

ranshackle (ran-shaw-kul) v., poet. to ransack, search thoroughly – ‘I’ll ranshekled the hale house till I find it’ [JoJ] ‘And when they cam to the fair Dodhead, Right hastily they clam the peel; They loosed the kye out, ane and a’, And ranshackleck the house right weel’ [T] (also written ‘ranshekkel’; cf. rsheakickle).

rant (rawn’) v., arch. to romp, roister, indulge in boisterous fun, sing or play a lively tune – ‘The rантин’ songs, the lebeerlal drams …’ [RM].

Ranks Meadowhole (rangks-me-di-hol) n. former name for a pool which would sometimes form in the meadow to the South of ‘the Birns’ of Chapelhill.

rap (rawp) v., arch. to fall rapidly (said of tearsdrops) – ‘…Our tears come rapping down in spates, Since thou art gone’ [CPM].

rap (rawp) v. to knock on a door (more common than ‘knock’; cf. chap: noted by E.C. Smith).

rape (răp) adv., poet. quickly, rapidly – ‘Then rude and rape a bairnie scream’d’ [JR].

Raper (ră-pur) n. Robert (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when his will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. Given that the name is otherwise unknown, this may be a transcription error, but otherwise he may have been a servant of Lord Minto.

Raperlaw (ră-pur-law) n. farm roughly between Minto and Lilliesleaf villages. The lands there were a possession of Jedburgh Abbey from its founding in the 12th century until the Reformation. Humphrey of Raperlaw is recorded as a witness in about 1201. Reginald of Durham, in his collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, recounts a tale of a woman from here, crippled from birth, who was cured after spending the night at Cuthbert’s chapel on the Slitrig (probably at Cogsmill). Matthew Lamb was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5, as well as George and James Davidson. George Davidson had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him there before 1502. The ‘lands and toum of Rapperlaw’ were part of the lands sold to Adam French in 1567 and still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Hob Turnbull was there in 1579. The lands there were inherited by William Middlemas of Chapel from his father, also William, in 1622; it appears that at that time it was part of the Barony of Raperlaw. The farm was leased by Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning to Turnbulls and Davidsons in 1632. William Wood was tenant there in 1634. In the 1643 county valuation, the owners of lands recorded there were James Middlemas of Raperlaw (valued at £416), Walter Turnbull (valued at £100 10s), Adam Turnbull (valued at £104), Andrew Davidson (valued at £65), William Turnbull (valued at £104) and David Davidson (valued at £195). Lands there (or perhaps the superiority) were owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the later 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Walter Scott of Alton owned lands there valued at £416 in 1678, as well as James Middlemas (£134 18s 6d), Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (£104), Andrew Davidson (£65), Robert Elliot in ‘Wyliespeel’ (£104) and John Douglas (£195). Some of these parts were later known as Greenhouse and Catshawhill. Thomas Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter, along with George Young, a servant to George Gray, who was also a tenant there. James Runciman was blacksmith there in 1694, with other householders at that time being William Chisholme, Walter Middlemas, James Middlemas, John Gray, John Riddell, John Robson and James Scott (and John Turnbull among the ‘deficients’). It may have been sold by the Scotts of Alton to the Horsburghs of that Ilk about 1710. ‘Scott of Alton’s Lands in Raperlaw’ are referred to in 1788 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £416 and listed under Lord Minto (the origin is probably Old English ‘rapera hlaw’, meaning ‘rope-maker’s hill’; it first appears as ‘Raperlaw’ in about 1150, then ‘Raperslaw’ or ‘Rapeslawe’ in about the 1170s, ‘Raperell’ and ‘Rapereslawe’ in about 1200, and has its modern spelling from 1315; it is transcribed as ‘Raparlaw’ in 1502, ‘Ryperlawe’ in 1548/9, ‘Raperlaw’ in 1622, ‘Reaperhall’ and ‘Reperlaw’ in 1670, ‘reper law’ and ‘Reaperlaw’ in 1684, ‘Repertslaw’ in 1684 and ‘Roperlaw’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Reperlaw’).

Raperlaw (rā-pur-law) n. Humphrey (12th/13th C.) listed in the period 1200–02 as witness to the grant of lands near Maxton to Melrose Abbey. His name is listed as ‘Umfr’ de Raprerell’. Also in about 1200 he was granted lands at Coldingham, when he is listed ‘Vnfrido de Raprerelaw’.

rappit (ra-pee’, -pi’) pp. rapped, knocked struck – ‘I rappit lang, then rappit strang, But answer I gat name [WaD].

rap up (rawp-up) v., arch. to rouse by knocking, knock up – ‘But Wull pled for them to rap up Geordie Oliver, of the Wester Toll Bar . . . ’ [RM].

ra-ra-rae (r-ra-ra) n., arch. gout weed, Åegopodium Podagraria, a tall plant with tiny white flowers, formerly used by children in Hawick to adorn themselves with on the eve of the Hiring Fair, marching and chanting ‘Ra-ra-rae, the nicht afore the Fair! The drum’s i’ the Walligate, the pipes’ i’ the air. Silk an saiteen, Goold an’ naiteen; Tig! – for the morn’s the Fair Day!’ [GW].

rave (rāz) pp. did rise, rose – ‘hei rave in time ti hear the Drums an Fifies stertin’, ‘He raise, and rax’d him whar he Studde And bade him match him wi his marrows . . . ’ [CPM], ‘Then up they raise, with ghastrous look, And to their steedis they flew . . . ’ [JTc], ‘Wi’ that he raise, (the clock struck twelve.) And rax’d a box frae aff the shelfe’ [RDW], ‘I rase up til opin til my beloefet . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . the muckle Cairter – booksome an blewe-leike wui the ferness o’d – raise fer owre ma left’ [ECS], ‘For a’ the craws rase up at yince In a cawin’ cloud o’ joy’ [DH], ‘Twa had rase high in the warld’s een, But ane was puir: They cracked o’ wisdom whaur they sat Sae couthie there’ [WL] (also written ‘raise’; this is the past tense of ryse, while the past participle is ‘risen’, as in English).

rash (rawsh) v., arch. to rush, act with great haste – ‘To rashe through a darg’, to perform a day’s work hastily [JL], ‘Behald he smat the muckle Cairter { booksome with ghastrous look, And to their steedis they flew . . . ’ [GT], ‘Wi’ that he raise, (the clock struck twelve.) And rax’d a box frae aff the shelfe’ [RDW], ‘I rase up til opin til my beloefet . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . the muckle Cairter – booksome an blewe-leike wui the ferness o’d – raise fer owre ma left’ [ECS], ‘For a’ the craws rase up at yince In a cawin’ cloud o’ joy’ [DH], ‘Twa had rase high in the warld’s een, But ane was puir: They cracked o’ wisdom whaur they sat Sae couthie there’ [WL] (also written ‘raise’; this is the past tense of ryse, while the past participle is ‘risen’, as in English).

rashie (raw-shē) adj., arch. full of rushes (also written ‘rashy’; it occurs in place names, e.g. Rashiegrain and Rashy Hill).
Rashiegrain

Rashiegrain (raw-shee-grān) n. farmstead near the head of the Teviot, beyond Merrylaw. The lands there formed part of the estate of the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Wormscheulch and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb.’ It could be the ‘Rashegrain’ listed among lands around Teviothead that were part of the Barony of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. John Scott was there in 1702. By 1707 it was valued along with Commonbrae at £261 19s 4d. Thomas Little was tenant there in 1740. An unspecified matter of discipline occurring there came to the Hawick Session’s notice in 1752. William Anderson was owner in 1761. The farm was purchased in 1771 by Bailie Thomas Turnbull, along with other neighbouring properties. In 1788 it was owned by William Turnbull. In 1811 it was still valued (with Commonbrae) at about £262. The Hope family were living there in 1841. ‘Rashiegrain Height’ is an area south of there, by Pikethaw Hill, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (spelled ‘Rashy-grain’ etc. in older records, it is ‘Raschiegrain’ in 1674, ‘Raschegrain’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Rascheglen’ in 1695 and ‘Rashlie’ in 1698; ‘rashie’ means covered in rushes and ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for a branch of a stream).

Rashie Grain (raw-shee-grān) n. small stream in Craik Forest, rising between Craik Cross Hill and Craik Moor and joining Northope Burn.

Rashie Park (raw-shee-pawrk) n. former name for a field somewhere between Stobs and Cogsmill (mentioned in Robert Grieve’s diary in 1863).

Rashy Hill (raw-shee-hil) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, to the east of Old Howpasley, between Laird’s Hill and Pike Hill, reaching a height of 372 m.

Rashy Sike (raw-shee-sik) n. small stream in the upper headwaters of the Liddel, lying just to the west of Myredykes.

rasp (rawsp) n. raspberry – ‘I’ll pu’ the rasps wi’ thee nae mair, My faithfu’ love, my only dearie’ [JS], ‘...Where first I pou’d the rasp and slae. On the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘...Blossom oot in rasps and slaes’ [WL] (note this abbreviation is much less common outside Scotland).

rassle (raw-sul) v. to wrestle – ‘Doon in the depth o’ the auld gray castle, Shut in alane wi’ his thoughts to wrestle ... ’ [WL] (also spelled ‘wrasse’ and ‘wrastle’).

rat (rawt) n., arch. a rut, v., arch. to make a rut, scratch deeply – ‘Here, ma little man, dinna stand on ony o the chears or ee’ll ratt thum wui eer buits’ [ECS], n. a scratch – ‘There’s a ratt on the room table aaredies’ [ECS] (also written ‘raat’ and ‘ratt’; cf. ratch and rati).

ratch (rawch) v., arch. to scratch, to damage (furniture etc.) by rough usage, to injure (a person) by rough usage, n. a scratch (cf. rat).

ratchett (rawcht) adj., pp., arch. scratched, damaged by rough usage, ravaged, despoiled and bare (of a house), ragged, worn (of a person or clothes) – ‘Thus the jaw is said to be ratch’d when injured by the pulling of a tooth, Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘This monument’s geetin gey sair ratchett – they soodna let thum skart names on’t. Puir wretch; eis weerin awfih ratchett shuin: gie um thir yins. Rathie

Rathie (raw-thee) n. George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included: William (b.1759); Agnes (b.1761); and Walter (b.1765). George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Betty Riddell and their children included: Adam (b.1768); James (b.1771); Robert (b.1773); and Betty (b.1776). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Betty (b.1796); and Andrew (b.1800). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Isobel Oliver and their children included: Isobel (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1772). Janet (b.1767), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his daughter. James (d.bef. 1811) farmer at Kaimend, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as tenant at ‘Combend’ in 1801 and also in 1811 when his brother Robert died. He married Isabel Hermiston and their children included: William (b.1777); and James (b.1781). It seems likely he was a son of William from Lilliesleaf Parish. James (1781–1863) son of James. He was a farm labourer at Honeyburn and also lived at Hummelknowes. He married Helen, daughter of shepherd Walter Baptie and Hanna Hogg. Their children included: James (b.1808); Walter (b.1811); Hannah (b.1813), who married Alexander Waldie; William (b.1815), who married Mary Moscrop in Kelso; Robert (b.1817), who was a stable-keeper in Kelso; and Isabella (b.1823), who married William Mill in Hawick. He died in Kelso. James (1808–87) son of James. His children were born at Hassendeanburn, then Wilton, and finally Victoria (Australia). He married Barbara Andison in 1843 in Denholm. Their children were: Esther (b.1844), who married James Douglas Turnbull; Helen (b.1847), who married Henry Campbell from Ayrshire; Hannah Wilhelmina (b.1849); Adam James (b.1856); and Bella (b.1859). He died in Australia. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Winthrope and their children included: Janet (b.1771); William (b.1773); George (b.1779); and George (again, b.1784). He could be the Robert, son of William, born in Lilliesleaf in 1740. Robert (d.1811) brother of James, farmer at Kaimend. He could be the same as the Robert of Lilliesleaf Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1738); Robert (b.1740); an unnamed son (b.1742); and Agnes (b.1746). William (1777–1851) elder son of James. He was a farmer, born in Cavers Parish, who moved to the Jedburgh area. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Wilson, baker in Hawick. Their children were: James (b.1803), who lived near Duns; Walter (b.1805), tenant farmer at Thickside; Margaret (b.1807), who married Thomas Waddell; Isabella (b.1811); Janet (b.1814); and William (b.1816), a shepherd near Duns. He died at Thickside, Jedburgh. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection (also written ‘Rathy’).

rationin (raw-shi-nin) n. a system for sharing out limited supplies of food and other goods, especially during war-time. This happened during and after both World Wars, with queueing becoming a part of everyday life in Hawick.

ratit (ra-tee’) pp., arch. scratched — ‘Ma skull sklate’s aa raateet wui this skartin skeelie’ [ECS].

rattan (raw-tin) n., arch. a rat — ‘Her bonnet’s a bamboozl’d, As flat as ony rattan trap’ [JoHa], ‘...and he was as completely trapped as a rattan could be’ [BCM1881] (also spelled ‘ratten’, etc.).

rattan’s rest (raw-tin-rest) n., arch. complete restlessness, bustle, state of constant movement, wakefulness caused by continual disturbance — ‘It’s duist rattan’s rest i this hoose, anywae, wui yeh mael efter another; A’m aye makin meat an answerin the door’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ll get ratten’s rest this nicht; they’re haudin Jock’s foy up the stair abuin oo – he’is gaun away ti Australleiel i Sett-day’ [ECS] (also written ‘ratten’s rest’).

Rattlin Roarin Willie (raw’-lin-rō-rin-wil-lee) n. song popularised by Burns, which is supposedly local, being about events that happened to William Henderson of Priesthaugh in 1627. Willie, a local ballad-maker and brawler, slew ‘Robert Rule’ somewhere near Allanhaugh. Burns heavily edited it and added a third stanza in praise of his friend William Dunbar, which has disguised its origin. But Sir Walter Scott added 4 further verses about Willie’s capture by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and ‘young Falnash’ (probably Archibald Elliot). The Presbytery records show that William Elliot was wanted for the murder of William Henderson in 1627, surely the basis for the song. The tune also has various versions, existing as the air of the song, as well as for both the pipes and the fiddle. Whether the origin was with Willie himself or someone else is unknown — ‘Rob Roole he handled rude And Willie left Newmill’s banks Red-wat wi’ Robin’s blude’ [T].

rauchle (raw-kul) adj., poet. bold, impetuous — ‘...He’ll find her [Britain] yet the same in war — A rauchle, ready-haundit kimmer’ [JoHa], ‘Rauchle gulls daily re-anoint Enthroned King Edward ...’ [DH] (also written ‘raucle’).

raucht (rowcht) pp., arch. reached (particularly the past tense of reach: also written ‘raught’).

Raufson (rowf-son) n. John (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Aerton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Terra Johannis Raufson’ is listed there with a value of 16 shillings.

rave (rāv) pp., arch. tore, rived — ‘...and for having fallen upon the said Baille and rugged and rave the hair off his head’ [BR1694], ‘...How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH] (also written ‘raive’: this is the past tense of rive, which can also be ‘rived’: cf. the past participles reen and ‘riven’ as in English).

Ravenburn (rä-vin-burn) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Hyndlee, situated to the east of the Note o’ the Gate, now deep within Wauchope Forest. It appears to be ‘Reavinburne’ in 1694, when there was a hearth listed there, among the farms of the Laird of Harwood. The shepherd there in the mid-1800s was Walter Cavers. The stream there is the Raven or...

Ravenswud Junction (rā-vinz-wud-jungk-shin) n. Ravenswood Junction, a junction of the Waverley Line with the Berwickshire Railway, between Newtown St. Boswells and Melrose, near the Leaderfoot Viaduct. The line connected Hawick with Greenlaw, Duns and Chirnside and ran from 1856 until part was washed away in a flood in 1948. The name came from the nearby house, built in the 1820s on the estate formerly known as Old Melrose.

Raw (raw) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jake Rawe Martyn Crossers servaunte’ in 1544, when he was among a large number of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is possible that the Martin Crozier was the one who resided at Earlside, but it is possible another Martin is meant. Thomas (19th C.) merchant and commission agent in Hawick. His estate was sequestered in 1885. He was a member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880.

Rawflat (raw-fla’) n. farm between Old Belses and Bloomfield in the southern part of Ancrum Parish. In 1502 Bartholomew Turnbull was tenant and Thomas Turnbull in 1540. Walter Turnbull was Laird there when ordered to vacate the lands in 1581. However, later in 1581 he was murdered by a band of other Turnbulls, and then his wife ‘and hir puir bairnes’ were harassed by Turnbulls firing their weapons at the farm. ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ was a tenant in 1601 and Walter Turnbull was ‘younger of Rafflat’ in 1603. It is also recorded in a criminal case relating to 1612, when it was owned by the Davisons and farmed by William Rutherford. The lands were sold by Walter Turnbull to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623, and at that point were still in the Barony of Belses. Some time after that they were included in Ancrum Parish. It was inherited by Robert Bennet from his father Ragwell in 1670. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the later 17th century. John Wilkie, younger, was there in 1685. They were given to Rev. Joseph Leck of Yetholm in 1739 and passed from John Edmund Elliot to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1788 the lands were valued at £500 and owned by ‘Miss Ainslie’. It may once have been referred to as ‘Milton’ (it is ‘Rowflat’ in 1502, ‘Rawflat’ in 1538, ‘Raflat’ in 1603, ‘Raflett’ in 1612 and 1632 and transcribed ‘Reuflat’ in 1678 and ‘Ranflat’ in 1684; this is probably the fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Raflett’, although a little too far south).

There was one on Denholm Main Street in the late 19th century.
the Read Roads (thu-reed-rōdz) n. name sometimes given to the former road passing from upper Teviotdale into Ewesdale. The road is mentioned in a travel account of 1629. It was the principal road from Carlisle to Hawick before about 1765 when the turnpike was opened. All traffic would have been on foot or horseback. Many miles of the old hollowed out tracks can be seen on the hillsides around Linhope and Mosspaul.
A good stretch is visible looking back from Lin-hope as the track stretches over part of Lightning Hill towards Phaup, close to the route that the Mosspaul Ride-out usually takes. There is also a suggestion that it may have partly followed the course of a road built by the Romans, connect-

the Rechabite Tent (thu-re-ka-hi'-ten) n. group preaching abstinence from alcoholic drinks, founded in Salford in 1835, and also acting as a Friendly Society. The Hawick branch (or ‘tent’) was active in the latter part of the 19th century (and they didn’t really have a tent!). It formed possibly after the abstinence orator J.B. Gough visited the town for the second time in 1854. It fell into obeyeance for a time, but was revived and continued into the 20th century.

rector (rek-tur) n. a cleric in charge of a parish, a high-school Headmaster.

the Rector (thu-rek-tur) n. Headmaster of Hawick High School, see the Pesh.

Rectors (rek-turz) n., pl. Headmasters of Hawick High School. The term was also used in its clerical in Hawick before the Reformation, and also for the incumbent of St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church. The educational term is synonymous with (but perhaps more respectful than) ‘The Pesh’. In Hawick the title was first used in the Grammar School, and then in the ‘United Schools’ when it merged with the Parish School, and thereafter in the Buccleuch School and High School. A full list is: James Innes 1710–18; Robert Chisholme 1718–21; James Anderson 1722–46; William Dyce 1746–73; George Lamb 1773–88; Thomas Barrie 1788–98; James Kirk 1798–1818; James Murray 1818–53; Anthony Dodds 1853–90; William Pitcairn 1890–95; James Brand 1895–1906; William Lyndsay Thompson 1908–1919; A.M. redd (red) n., arch. a green weed growing on or from the bottom of a (usually stagnant) pool (the vowel is a long e).

Reddadenn (re-da-den) n. former place name, possibly a fortified house, located on the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. It could be the ‘Roddens’ recorded on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. It corresponds to the modern Reddington, although it is unclear where the house might have been (marked ‘Reddaden’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, and ‘Reddadenn’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

reddiest (re-dee-ist) adj., arch. most prepared, most immediate, most to hand – ‘...and mak penny of his rediest gudis, to the awaile of the said sown of thu hunder merkis ...’ [SB1500] (said of goods, crops, etc.; there are spelling variants).

Redeswire (reed-swIr) n. marshy area at the head of the Rede, being formerly a pass through the Cheviots, near to the Carter Bar – ‘...and when they reach’d the Redeswire high, Soft beam’d the rising sun; Bit formless shadows seem’d to fly Along the muir-land dun’ [JL], ‘...All the magical names were on my map – Eildon, Carterhaugh, Caerlenrig, Redswire ...’ [DH] (see the Raid o the Redeswire and Reid Swire).

Redford (red-furd) n. former name for an area near the modern Redfordgreen. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, mentioned many times in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1448, and consisting of 3 steadings. In 1459 they were let to David Scott. In 1480 they were granted to the Laird of Cranston. In 1486 the 3 steadings were leased again to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch, ‘without grassum on account of their waste condition’. It was leased by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1499 it was occupied by Robert Scott in 1499, when let to Patrick Home (the King’s Comptroller), on the refusal of Robert Scott. It was still Crown property in 1502 and in 1510 the 3 steadings of ‘Hyndhop, Driechuscheil, et Redfurdegrene’ were feued to Alexander, Lord Home (it is ‘Redefurde’ in 1459 and 1480, ‘Redfurde’ and ‘Reidfurde’ in 1490, ‘Reidefurde’ in 1492, ‘Redefurde’ in 1499 and ‘Redefurde’ in 1502).

Redford (red-furd) n. Alan (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains. Andrew (18th/19th C.) father of Andrew, farmer at Hermiston. He was probably the Andrew recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and earlier owned by James (probably his father). He is probably the resident of Lilliesleaf listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He married Isobel Stewart and their children included: James (b.1768); Andrew (b.1778). He may be the Andrew whose son James was baptised in 1763. Andrew (b.1778) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of Andrew and Isabel Stuart. He was tenant farmer for John G. Stewart of Hermiston. He is probably the Andrew who is recorded owning part of Davidson’s lands of Greenhouse in 1811, with his heirs being listed in 1874. He was at Hermiston in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 450 acres at Hermiston, employing 8 labourers. His wife was Isobella Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1805), who probably died young; John (b.1806/7); James (b.1809), farmer; Charles (b.1813), also died young; Andrew (again, b.1815); George (b.1817); Charles (again, b.1822); Jessie (b.1826/7), who married Walter Govenlock; Margaret; and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In the 1851 census he and his wife were recorded at the Maxwellleugh Tollbar House. He married Janet Grieve and their children included: James (b.1830), also a tailor; and William (b.c.1832), a draper. His widow was in Kelso in 1861, visiting her sister Jane Weatherstone. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) received receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Francis (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. In 1690 in Ashkirk Parish he witnessed baptisms for William Scott and for John Murray and Margaret Redford. He is probably the Francis who married Bessie ‘Allion’ in 1699 and whose son William (b.1699) was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. He may also be the Francis who earlier married Isobel Chisholme in 1688 and whose children included Jean (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk, with witnesses William Scott and John (surely a relative). George (b.1817) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Isabella Scott. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1861 and was unmarried. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1637) and Bessie (b.1638). His name is listed as ‘Reifurd’ and ‘Readfurt’. James (17th C.) married Bessie Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. Perhaps Margaret (b.1646) was his daughter. James (17th C.) married Margaret Dodds in Robertson Parish in 1686. His wife was from Bedrule Parish. Their son William was born in 1688. In 1686 (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Robertson Parish. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written ‘Reedfoord’. It is possible he is the same as James, tenant in Headshaw. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Headshaw in 1703. He married Catherine Minto and their children included: John (b.1703), baptised in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident at Hasse-deanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with his name written ‘Ridfoord’. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son James was baptised in 1743. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Walker and their children included Margaret (b.1760). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Stewart and their children included Patrick (b.1759). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Jean Waugh and their son James was baptised in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as former owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and later owned by Andrew (probably his son). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William was baptised in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 the family were living on Damhead and he was an agricultural labourer. They emigrated to Canada in 1842. He married Margaret Wilson in 1820 and most of their children were baptised in Lilliesleaf: James (b.1821), who became a Canadian M.P.; Andrew (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Elspeth (b.1830); and William (b.1833). He is probably the James, married to Margaret Neil, whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1818. James (b.1809) farmer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and probably a descendant of the earlier James. In 1851 he was living on Main Street, farming 100 acres and employing 4 people and was still there in 1861. His wife was Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Lauder of Earlston. Their children were Helen (b.1853) and Andrew (b.1855). James (1821–1908) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of James and Margaret Wilson. In the 1841 census he was living in Wilton Damhead and working as a ‘Writer’s Cl.’, presumably in the office of one of the Hawick lawyers of the time. He emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings in 1842. In 1851 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Gouray. He worked as a teacher, lumber merchant, manufacturer, land speculator and banker. He was involved in local affairs in Perth, Stratford and Downie and became M.P. for North Perth 1867–72. He moved to Austin, Texas in 1876, where he died. James (b.1830) tailor in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew. He took over the business from his father, on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Janet Haldane from Ancrum. Their children included Helen (b.1852), Janet (or Jessie, b.1854), Andrew (b.1856), Elizabeth (b.1860), Euphemia (b.1862), James (b.1864), William (b.1866), Jane (b.1869) and John (b.1871). Janet (16th C.) recorded on the list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (16th C.) rented an acre of land called 'Coit acre' and another rig of land from William Middlemas, farmer at Friarshaw in 1563 for 11 years. He could be the same John who was granted a half husbandland of land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. John (17th C.) married 'Heilling Jonkesone' in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. His wife’s name may have been Helen Jenkins or Johnson. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Ashkirk Parish, written up in the 1718 Presbytery records for a dispute with Adam Scott (tenant of Woll). He accused Scott of insulting remarks directed to the elders, while he himself was accused of drunkenness and disparaging remarks made towards Scott. In 1724 he was sent to the synod with money for 'helping to Build Meeting Houses at Babingtoun and Brandon In Ingland'. He is recording collecting money for the Parish in 1727. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1689. Presumably the same John married Agnes Veitch in 1693 and had children: Francis (b.1699); Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); and an unnamed son (b.1714). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Francis (b.1739); Janet (b.1744); Agnes (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751).

Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Mark in 1655 and their children included Janet (b.1656), Thomas (b.1658) and Isabel (b.1661). Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Walker and their children included Bessie (b.1654). Robert (d.bef. 1494) recorded in a case at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Nicholas and John, sons of Matthew Turnbull in Hassendean, had remission for his murder. It is not recorded where he was from. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, in 1483, relating to lands in Hassendean. William (16th/17th C.) witness in 1607 to a sasine whereby John Scott gained possession of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. His surname is recorded as ‘Reidford’. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel ‘How’ ‘Houie’ or ‘Hoy’ in 1652. Their children included James (b.1657) and John (b.1661). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Dunlop and their children included Robert (b.1661). William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hassendeanbank when his will was recorded in 1688. His name is written as ‘Reidfoord’. He could be the William ‘Reedfoord’ recorded as a witness to baptisms in Roberton in 1680 (although crossed out) and 1681. In 1686 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for John Hope in Roberton Parish. William (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He probably lived near Hassendean Parish. He could be the same as the tenant of Hassendeanbank. William (17th C.) married Bessie ‘Vogan’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1688). He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at Essenside in 1702. He married Helen Gray and their children included: James (b.1702); Elizabeth and Margaret (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); John (b.1713); Magdalen (b.1714); and Elizabeth (again, b.1717). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Margaret Redford and Robert Gray, respectively, who had children a little later in Ashkirk Parish. He may be the William who, along with John, collected money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (b.1699) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of Francis. He married Janet Tait in 1726. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1724 as a collector of money for the Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands valued at £10 that had much earlier belonged to Alexander Hood. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 it is recorded that William Riddell of Camieston owned ‘William Redford’s Lands in Lilliesleaf, formerly Hood’s Lands’, which had been acquired by Edgar Hunter. William (b.1831/2) son of tailor Andrew and brother of James. He worked as a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He married Helen Robson and their children included Andrew and Jane (also written ‘Readfurt’, ‘Reedfoord’, ‘Redfoord’, ‘Reidfoord’, ‘Reidford’, ‘Reidforde’, ‘Reidfuird’, ‘Reidfurd’, ‘Reidfurde’, ‘Ridfoord’, ‘Riedford’, etc.).

Redfordgreen (red-furd-green) n. area off the B711 between Alemoor and Buccleuch. The farms of East and West Redfordgreen are here, and it was also once the site of a country school. The farms formerly belonged to the Parish of Yetholm. The area was once owned by the Crown and split into the 3 steadings of Redford, feu'd by Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 it was ‘occupyit be the kingis gudis’, paying rental of £15 13s 4d. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1711–24, John Anderson and Robert Inglis in 1723 and Walter Park in 1734. The teinds were valued at £28 13s 4d in 1785 and 1802. It was valued, along with Dryleuchishiel at £169 6s 8d in 1785 when held by James Lauder of Caroside and in 1802 when held by Capt. Venner. Henry Thomas Rutherford was owner in the early 19th century and David Scott was tenant at about that time. The term ‘the forty thieves of Redfordgreen’ was used around the 1830s to refer to ‘faggot’ (i.e. artificial) voters after it was purchased by the Buccleuch estates – ‘By Borthwick Wa’s and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch . . . ’ [WHO], ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikimm, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Liliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (it is ‘Redefurdegrene’ in 1510, ‘Reidfurdgrene’ in 1541, ‘Reidfurdgrene’ in 1621, ‘Reidfurdgrein’ in 1633, ‘Readfurd-grein’ in 1655, ‘Redfurgreen’ in 1541, ‘Reidfurdgrene’ in 1621, ‘Reidfuirdgrein’ in 1693, ‘Reidfordgreen’ in 1711, ‘Riedfouri dredgreen’ in 1723 and ‘Reidfourdgrean’ in 1724; it is marked liesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL]).

Redfordgreen Schuil (red-furd-green-skil)
n. former country school on the moors at Redfordgreen. The building was in Selkirkshire, but also served some of the remote parts of Roberton Parish. The school operated from 1885–1955. A grassy mound is still visible in the field, and a small cairn was placed there in recent years. A book ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) was written by Kathleen W. Stewart. The Borders Archive holds the school admission book for 1885–1935 and log books for 1885–1955.

Redpath (red-, reed-path) n. village between St. Boswells and Earlston, still having its planned form around a single south-facing main street.

Redpath (red-, reed-path, -peth) n. Adam (1776–1823) hedger at Weens estate. He started there in 1805. He had a sister Margaret. He married Jane Cook, who died in 1841, aged 67 (who was said to be insane in later life). Their children included: William (b.c.1804), forester at Weens; John (b.c.1805), who lived for a while at Bonchester Bridgend; Betty (b.1809), spend most of her life as a servant at Weens; George (b.1811); Helen (b.1813), married Robert Smith and lived at the Sclenty, Blacklee and Denholm; Adam (b.1817), who died in infancy; and Margaret, a housemaid at Weens, who married a Yorkshireman and moved to Aldborough. He died at Sclenty Hall. After his early death his 2 sons William and John together took over his job for a while, with William eventually taking over himself. Many of the family are buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Adam (b.1838) son of William and Mary Smith. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. Later he was in Noble’s factory in Hawick. Anne, R.S.A., O.B.E. (1895–1965) born in Galashiels, 2nd daughter of Thomas Brown, a textile designer, and Agnes Milne. Her family moved to Hawick when she was 6 years old, after her father was offered the job of head of design at Glebe Mills. She attended Hawick High School in the period 1901–13 and then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art (concurrently with teacher training at Moray House). Graduating in 1918, she won a scholarship to visit Europe. She returned to France in 1920 with her husband (an architect who worked with the Imperial War Graves Commission), and they lived there until 1934. Her first exhibition was in 1921, and she also decorated family furniture with flow- ers and birds, which would later feature in her still life paintings. In 1934 her husband’s millionaire employer lost his fortune and the family returned to Britain, she and her sons to Hawick and her husband to a job in London. She lived at 52 Orchard Terrace and on Beaconsfield Terrace. She was also President of Hawick Art Club. In this period she painted many landscapes around Hawick, and exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy. She became best known for her vividly colourful still lifes, replete with familiar household objects, often in disconcerting combinations, with ‘The Indian Rug’ and ‘Still Life with Orange Chair’ perhaps best exemplifying her unique style. She soon became one of Scotland’s best known artists. She was President of the Scottish Society of Women Artists 1944–47 and in 1952 was the first female painter to be elected to the Royal Scottish Academy. Further trips to the continent inspired a change in style and she produced distinctive Mediterranean landscapes. She became an O.B.E. in 1955 and was also granted an honorary degree from Edinburgh University. In public she was known for her extravagant hats and designer clothes. Her self-portraits are in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum. She later moved to Edinburgh. She suffered several heart attacks in later life, but continued to develop her artistic output, her last phase focusing on paintings of church interiors in Lisbon and Venice. In 1929

she married James Beattie Michie at Teviothead Kirk. She died following a fall at her home, 7 London Street, Edinburgh and was cremated. Books on her include ‘Anne Redpath 1895–1965, her life and work’ (1996) by Patrick Bourne, ‘Anne Redpath’ (1974) by George Bruce and ‘Anne Redpath, 1895–1965’ (1996) by Philip Long. David (b.1814/5) from Eccles, he was farm steward at Galalaw in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Janet, George and Robert. James L., O.B.E., served as President of the Callants’ Club in 1981, ??.

John (b.c.1805) son of Adam and younger brother of William. He worked as a labourer in the Bonchester Bridge area, living for a while at Bridgend. He was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. Margaret (b.c.1785) sister of hedger Adam. In 1841 she was living at Scletncy Hall and listed as ‘independent’. Also there were Jane (perhaps her mother) and the younger Elizabeth and Margaret.

Neil (d.1988) from Hawick, he served in the Gordon Highlanders during WWI and was one of the last surviving holders of the 14–15 Star. He later became a strong pacifist and leading member of the local Labour Party. However, during WWII he served as a Lieutenant in the Home Guard. He worked as a foreman at Braemar. An enthusiastic supporter of athletics, he became Secretary of the Scottish Games Association. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire.

Robert (19th C.) land steward of Bonchester Bridge who was an elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. William (18th C.) married Agnes Hobkirck in Bedrule Parish in 1771. William (c.1805–86) born in Earlston, son of hedger Adam, he was forester at Weens. When his father died young in 1823, he and his brother John took over the job on one man’s wages, but after a couple of years he took over entirely. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed as a hedger at Weens, and in 1861 was a forester there.

He continued to work for the Cleghorns and Tancreds of Weens for his whole working life. He was made an Elder of the Kirk in 1838. He was said to have a dour temper and not to be liked by everyone. He spent some time in an asylum, later living with his daughter Mary in Denholm. He married Mary Smith, who died in 1869, aged 57; her brother was William Smith who married Mary Laydlaw from Weensmoor. Their children included: Ann (b.1833), who worked for a while as laundry maid at Weens, later living in Denholm, died unmarried; Jane (1835–74); Adam (b.1838), servant at Weens and worked for Noble’s in Hawick; Mary, in service at Weens, married Mr. Dodds; Thomas, gardener at Blennerhasset, Aspatria; and Elizabeth (b.1846), moved to Yorkshire. He died in Denholm at the age of 82 and is buried in Hobkirck Kirkyard. William (??–??)

the Reel (thu-reel) n. another name for the Bull Reel, particularly as danced by the Cornet, Principals and ex-Cornets shortly before midnight during the Ball. It is not danced by the other participants, who just watch the proceedings. It is started with the Cornet presenting his sash for his Lass to wear, and the men putting on white gloves. The Principles start the Reel, with the ex-Cornets joining in order of their year of office. The dance is also repeated in front of the Tower on the return from the Moat after dawn, but this time only by the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men. It is also danced in front of the Tower after the Handing-Back on the Saturday. Before 1855, when there were Races held at the Haugh, the Cornet and his followers would dance the Reel at the Haugh after the Dinner on the Friday, and this was repeated after the Dinner was resurrected in 1886. They would dance in the middle of the gymnastic track and this would signal the start of the Games. The Reel was first danced at the Ball (by the ex-Cornets) only in 1891. The origin of the Reel is uncertain.

the Reformation (\texttt{thu-re-for-m\textasciitilde{a}-sh{	extascii acute}{	extasciitilde{a}}-sh{	extascii grave}{	extacute{e}}}) \textit{n.} name usually given to a movement of religious reform that swept across Europe in the late 16th century, leading to the Church of Rome being replaced with the Protestant Church. One of the major reasons was a perceived abuse of clerical power, but mixed up with power struggles among the nobility. Lutheran doctrines from the continent led to early martyrs, with Archbishop David Beaton consequently killed by rebels in 1545. John Knox, with his Calvinist ideals became leader from 1555, and the Church was completely reformed by an Act of 1560, although not fully established as the true and only Kirk of Christ within this realm until 1567. St. Mary’s, like other churches, must then have been transformed into a much plainer and more severe church, suitable for Presbyterian worship. After the Reformation there was a shortage of suitable ministers, so there was an arrangement whereby several parishes were combined under one minister, assisted by a number of readers (most of whom had been pre-Reformation Roman Catholic priests). It is thus hard to distinguish who acted as preacher for the local parishes at the end of the 16th century. The use of the terms ‘pastor’, ‘reader’ and ‘vicar’ in that period, as well as ‘minister’, add to the ambiguities.

the Reform Bill (\texttt{thu-ree-f{"a}rm-bi{	extascii acute}{	extacute{e}}}) \textit{n.} parliamentary bill introduced by Prime Minister Earl Grey in April 1831, being possibly the first voluntary scheme of government reform. After much political wrangling it finally passed in June 1832 and became the Reform Act. In 1812 the entire county of Roxburghshire had only 143 voters (up from 105 in 1788), of which a mere 2 or 3 were in Hawick. Hawick people were much involved in the political discussion, with several pro-Reform resolutions being made at public meetings, some of which were passed on to Parliament or the King. were rung, the Flag was displayed from the Town Hall, and the flags of the trades and societies hung along the High Street. The crowd was estimated at 10–12,000, and the parade itself, starting at 1 p.m., consisted of over 1200 people in 16 separate sections, accompanied by 3 bands. This included the local landed (Whig) gentry, the Cornet, Magistrates and Council, Tradesmen’s guilds and Freemasons. The parade ended at the Sandbed, where the participants were met by smartly-dressed women and girls bearing flowers. 1,146 people then dined in the open air on the Upper Haugh, catered by 8 of the Town’s hotels. The Chief Magistrate was in the Chair, and other guests included Capt. George Elliot, Sir William F. Elliot, James Elliot of Wolfelee and George Cleghorn of Weens. There were also speeches by Robert Wilson and Rev. James Henderson. There was then a further march back to the Tower Knowe, and celebrations continued in various inns. As a result of the Bill the County had 1316 voters, and Hawick itself had 300 voters added to its electoral roll. However, a Commons Select Committee investigated abuses of the Bill through ‘fictitious voters’ being added, specifically joint proprietors of property arranged between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. At the election of 1835 there was a procession of voters and supporters from Hobkirk, Kirkton and Cavers marching into Hawick, accompanied by bands and banners. When it became clear that Lord Scott (the Tory candidate) was going to win, the crowds became quite unruly and the Riot Act was read, with a troop of the Scots Greys being called. The Reform Act of 1868 gave the vote to all male householders, and at that time the Ha-

Regal Bailie (ree-gul-bā-lee) n. also called a Bailie of Regality, title sometimes used for the representative of the Lord whose lands included a burgh, with certain administrative and legal powers in that burgh, including collection of rents, taxes at fairs, etc. The Douglasses of Drumlanrig appointed a local man to hold this position up until they relinquished the Barony in about 1670. In Hawick this was for a long time the Chamberlain of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The office was held by the Duchess of Buccleuch until she failed to take the test legislated by Parliament for Charles II. So in 1686 the office was granted to Walter Scott of Alton. Hawick’s Regal Bailie remained a powerful local figure until the abolishing of regularities by Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act of 1747 – ‘Gedeon Scott of Falnash, regal bailie to the Duchess of Buccleuch...’ [BR1699] (see also Bailie o Regality and Baron Depute).

regality (ree-ga-l’i-ce) n. an administrative and legal area, typically larger than a barony, and usually given by the Crown. The jurisdiction of a regality superceded that of the Sheriff of the County. The Lord of the Regality had a distinct court, with its own clerk and officers, overseen by a Bailie of Regality. There were formerly 7 such jurisdictions in Roxburghshire, namely Glasgow (the former lands of that Bishopric), Hawick, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddesdale, Melrose and Sprouston. Hawick was formerly referred to as a Regality, presumably because it was administered as the equivalent of a Royal Burgh, even although it is unclear whether it was created as such by the Crown. The first such mention appears to be in 1358 (although since this is along with Sprouston, and it may be that only Sprouston was a regality at that time, with Hawick being just a ‘free barony’) is unclear if they were both distinct regalities). Hawick was reerected into a free barony and regality in 1686, since it has fallen to the Crown after the death of the Duke of Monmouth; this new charter granted the barony and regality to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. It ceased to be a regality when heritable jurisdictions were abolished by Parliament in 1747, with the Duke of Buccleuch being compensated £400 as a result – ‘Annent the egregious and insolent abuse committ by Walter Rowcastell upon William Scott, regall baylyea of the regality of Hawicke … ’ [BR1693].

Reggs (regz) n. former name for a farm in the hills above Newmill. It is described in the survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, where it is also listed as ‘Riggs’. At that time it extended to 84 acres, was bounded by Castlehill, How Meadow and Branholme Muir and contained no farmhouse. It probably corresponded to the place marked ‘Waes’ just below Chapelhill on Blaeu’s 1654 map (the origin of the name is uncertain, but perhaps just ‘rigs’).

Reginald (re-ji-nul) n. of Durham or Coldingham (d.c.1190) mediaeval hagiographer, who gave one of the first mentions of Hawick in his account of the miracles of St. Cuthbert, written in the 1160s and 1170s. Reginald’s work is partly a recounting of stories told by Aelfric (or Aelred) of Rievaulx, a monk from Durham who travelled around the 1040s; but other parts of Reginald’s book are contemporary (he was certainly alive in the 1150s), and hence the date of the local tales is hard to pin down. In fact the last 6 chapters cover stories relevant to Teviotdale, the chapel in the Slitrig, Dolphimus (Rector of Cavers), etc. The story with the most specific Hawick connection concerns Seigiva and Rosfritha, said to be from Hawick (and thus, probably the first known residents) who witness the mysterious appearance of a candle at a chapel dedicated to St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley (identified with a site at Cogsmill). He also wrote histories of St. Godric (with whom he spent time personally), St. Oswald (King of Northumbria), and possibly St. Ebba.

Region (ree-jin) n. one of nine units into which Scottish local government was split following Reorganisation in 1974. Each region was divided into separate ‘districts’, Hawick being in the Borders Region until further reorganisation in 1995.

Regional Council (ree-ji-nul-koon-sul) n. the higher level of local council between May 1975 and April 1996, Hawick’s council being that of the Borders Region with headquarters in Newtown St. Boswells. Regional councils were responsible for education, social services, roads and transport. Both District and Regional Councils were replaced by unitary authorities in 1996, Hawick lying within the jurisdiction of the Scottish Borders Council.

the Registrar’s (thu-re-je-strawrz) n. Registrar’s office, where civil weddings took place. From 1974–97 it was located at 12 High Street, which is now a grade B listed building. Latterly the office has been within the Town Hall. The first Registrar in Hawick was schoolmaster Anthony Dodds 1854–87, following the Registration Act of 1854. James Shiel was appointed as the first Registrar of Wilton about the same time. Both of these men would operate out of their own homes, on Allars Crescent and Laing Terrace, respectively.

registrat (re-jis-trat) pp., arch. registered – ‘… and consentis that thir presentis be insert and registrat in the bukis of Counsale … ’ [SB1599], ‘… be insert and registrat in the Books of Council and Session … ’ [BR1672].

regrat (ree-grat) n., arch. regret – ‘… so farre sympathisez with yow … as to afford yow, att least, some regrate’ [SB1670].

regrait (ree-gra-tin) n., arch. to regret – ‘Being acertenit be my servand of the slaughter of zour frind, quhilk I regrait from my verry hart … ’ [SB1584].

regratin (ree-gra-tin) n., arch. the act of reselling, buying a commodity in order to profit from reselling it – ‘Various persons are finit `for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and foresellers’ [JW1699].

reid (reed) adj. red – ‘hei hed a right reid nose on um’ , ‘The sun was reid as a furnace mouthe, As he sank on the Ettricke hyll; And gloamyne gatherit from the easte, The dowye world to fill’ [JTe], ‘For in the han’ o’ the Lord ther is ane cup, an’ the wine is reid … ’ [HSR], ‘The reid hairst moon climbs steep and slow a far September sky … ’ [JYH], ‘… till the brae-face was triasselt an’ the gress ran reed wu bluid’ [ECS], ‘Hei girm at the reid, an’ grat at the blue … ’ [DH], ‘Frea reid to creamy-white … Daft berries for daft days … ’ [DH], ‘The reid rose dwines and her petals lie … ’ [WL], ‘… To catch a glimpse yont the grey reek O’ the distant ruifs o’ reid’ [WL] (also spelled ‘reed’)

she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Rev. Alan minister of the combined Parish of Newcastleton and Canobie from 1989. In 2008 he moved to Kinross. Rev. Alexander (d.1640s) became minister of Ashkirk in 1619. He donated £11 merks towards the building of Glasgow University Library in 1636. His is probably the name transcribed ‘M. Reid, Ashkirk’ (probably ‘Mr.’ is meant) on the ‘Confessions’ of Faith, signed in Hawick in 1638. Robert Cuthbertson signed beside him as Reader, suggesting he had an assistant at that time. He married Janet Shaw and their children included John and William (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648). He was present during the admission of Harry Elliot as minister of Bedrule in 1640. He witnessed a baptism for Rev. Robert Cunningham of Hawick at Hassendean Knowe, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the lawyer who paid the horse tax in Jedbury in the 1780s. David (17th/18th C.) farmer at Hassendean Knowe, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the lawyer who paid the horse tax in Jedbury in the 1780s. Rev. Edward Thomas Scott (1871–1938) Rector of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk 1903–1910. He came from a well-known Glasgow family, with 3 of his brothers being Deputy Lieutenants of that city. He had previously been assistant at St. Paul’s and then St. Mary’s Cathedral, both in Edinburgh. For most of his incumbency in Hawick he was assisted by Rev. A.L. Ross. His time as Rector was marked by acclaimed Evensong services, which attracted people from other local churches. There were several improvements to the church during his time, including chairs to replace the pews, and his gift of an oak chancel screen. He also became Chaplain to Episcopalians at Stobs Camp. He left to become Rector of St. Bride’s in Glasgow, later becoming Dean and Bishop of that Diocese and later Bishop of St. Andrews. George (d.1923) local businessman. He was Secretary of the Hawick Baptist Kirk for 10 years and Sunday School Superintendent for 6 years. Gordon (1943— ) born in Hawick, educated at Hawick and Galashiels, then at Edinburgh and Oxford Universities, continuing to train as an Episcopalian minister. He became Curate of St. Salvador’s Church in Edinburgh in 1967, then served as Chaplain of Salisbury Theological College and Rector of St. Michael’s & All Saints Church, Edinburgh from 1972. He also served as a member of Lothian Regional Council and Convenor of Lothian & Borders Police Board. He was Provost of Inverness Cathedral 1984–87 and joined the Diocese of Gibraltar in Europe (the Church of England Diocese that covers continental Europe) in 1988. He lived in Gibraltar and Milan, and looked after chaplaincies all over Italy and Malta. He then became Rector of St. Clement’s in Philadelphia. Esther (d.1888) worked at Wester Nurseries from the age of 8, but then took over as servant to Peter Wilson’s family from Jean Rennick about 1830. The pair completed a continuous service of 106 years. She can be seen in a portrait with the family. J. (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as an ‘eating house keeper’ on the Cross Wynd. James (17th C.) resident at Horseсхем in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Penchrise. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (18th C.) tenant at the Flex in 1743. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Andrew (b.1743); and Janet (b.1744). The witnesses in 1743 were William Scott, also tenant at the Flex, and James Hume in Whittlaw. James (b.c.1790) miller at Newmill on Slitrig. He was there in 1841. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Agnes, William, John, George, Walter, Elizabeth, Margaret, James and Gilbert. He is probably the James, son of William in Acreknowe, baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1788. James S. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Penchrise. His brother John farmed at Barnes, which he took over after his brother’s death. He won several sheep prizes around the 1910s. Jessie Crawford describes him as ‘dour as ditchwater and as hard as nails’. John (16th C.) presented as Rector of Ashkirk in 1552. Nothing else appears to be known about him. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569.
Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Jak Reid’ and he was probably related to ‘Pait’, who was also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Adderstonelee on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written ‘Rid’. John (17th C.) resident at Hawthornside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was surely related to Thomas, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwickshiel in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Thomas (b.1701); Helen (b.1703); John (b.1704); James (b.1706); and Thomas (again, b.1706). John (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Raesknowe. He married Isobel Beatie (or ‘Betic’), who was a schoolmistress. In 1721 the Hawick Session requested that he produce a testimonial from his previous parish, since his wife had asked for money for teaching poor children. In 1723 he was described as ‘a well aged man, capable to teach at ye said toun’, when the session agreed to encourage him to teach the poor children in Raesknowe. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1742 he was at ‘Harden . . .’ when his son Charles was baptised. He is probably the John who married Margaret Donaldson in Robertson in 1740. Margaret (b.1741), baptised in Robertson, was likely also his child. John (18th/19th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was written ‘Read’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘New Appletreehall’, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 4 horses. He could be the John Reid, who was bankrupt by 1817 when there was a court case over an 1802 bill he had with John Allan, involving Adam Orniston, and John and Thomas (his brother-in-law) Ainslie. Rev. John (19th C.) minister recorded at Castleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. It is unclear which church he may have been minister of, but it is possible he was one of the supply ministers for the Congregational Kirk. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Barnes near Stobs. He remained a bachelor. When in Hawick he stabled his horse at the Tower Hotel; on day he ignored the advice of the hostlers to take a carriage home and mounted his horse while quite drunk, which subsequently reared and he died in the pend. After his death the farm was taken over by his brother James S. John (19th/20th C.) butcher on the High Street. His brother James died in the South African War in 1901. Katherine (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded as priest at Hassendean Kirk in 1539. He may have been the actual minister there at that time, with Sir John Duncan and Sir George Scott squabbling over the main benefice. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Reid’ and probably related to ‘Jak’, who was also listed. R. (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. R.E. (19th/20th C.) President of the ‘Tonto Hawick Common Riding in at least 1926 and 1927. He was presumably originally from the Hawick area. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Langholm, he was rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session in 1709 for having an irregular marriage. Robert (1734/5–1822) labourer at Boghall. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) recorded as house servant and groom at Stirches in 1788, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Perhaps the same Robert was a servant at Silverbethall, who married Christian Anderson and had children John (b.1810) and Richard (b.1812) baptised in Wilton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) served as overseer for collecting marl from Groundstone and Blackcleuch for the Buccleuch estates, in the period 1799–1807. He may be the same Robert recorded as farmer at Chesters (Southdean) in 1797. Robert ‘Rob’ (b.1791) son of William and Jean, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a stockingmaker who lived at Roadhead and was known as ‘General Reid’ of Roadhead. He led the Hawick contingent to the Carterhaugh Baa game of 1815, gaining his nickname there. The death of his dog Flora inspired one of the few surviving poems of James Hogg; apparently he had the family bible bound in the dog’s hide after she died. He is listed as a stocking-maker at Roadhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is recorded at Roadhead in 1841, 1851 (by which time he was a widower) and 1861 (when he is listed as ‘Wool Frame Work Knitter’). He married Esther Cairns in Wilton in 1818. Their children included William, George, Thomas, Alexander and Jane. He is probably the stockingmaker whose child’s death is recorded in 1838. Stan (20th C.) organiser of dances in the Drill Hall, popular on Saturday nights in the 1930s – ‘Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a tanner And a pass oot on the back o’ eer hand’ [AY]. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Turnbull is recorded in 1682. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hawthornside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Hawick Parishes. In 1733 he was recorded at ‘Eal…’ (either Eilrig or Alemoor). In 1746 he was at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). He married Agnes Borthwick in Roberton in 1733 and their children included: Mary (b.1733), baptised in Roberton; Janet (b.1738), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1746), also baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1746 were Francis and Thomas Elliot at Harwood. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ormiston. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Thomas (b.1731); James (b.1733); Bessie (b.1733); Janet (b.1734); and Thomas (b.1737). He is surely related to Walter, who was at Ormiston at the same time. Thomas (18th C.) along with Thomas Blyth he rented Appletreehall, Knowetownhead and part of Clarilaw from Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1763. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and several other baptisms in Wilton Parish in 1769 and 1770 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). Thomas (19th C.) tenant of St. Leonards farm in the late 19th century, when the ordering of the Curds and Cream became a more formal event. It was probably his wife who was painted with Betsy the cow by J.E.D. Murray in 1889 { `And hearken ye, hearken ye, friend Tam Reid, Speakin’ loud’s a wee thing risky; Some like when here, A drap o’ good cheer, So dinna forget the whisky!’ [JEDM]. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ormiston, where his is recorded in 1735 and 1737. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Thomas (b.1731); John (b.1735); Agnes (b.1737); Isabel (b.1739); and Agnes (again, b.1742). He is surely related to Thomas, who was at Ormiston at the same time. Walter (dbef. 1808) roadman in Hawick. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in 1808. Walter (b.c.1805) mason in Wilton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at Kirkstyle (probably the north side of Princes Street, near Dickson Street). He married Elizabeth Ballantyne and their children included John, Walter B., Elizabeth, Robert and Robert Ann. In 1851 his widow was ‘proprietor of houses’ at the same address. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Redde servaunte to John Crosse’, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. Many of the relevant Croziers were connected with the Slitrig valley at that time. It is possible his name was ‘Reddy’ or some other variant. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1757, 1763 and 1773 and 1775. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Margaret (b.1755), Isobel (b.1757), Agnes (b.1759), John (b.1761), Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1773) and an unnamed daughter (b.1775). William (18th C.) recorded at Acreknowe in 1788 when his son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish and in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. He is probably the William who married ‘Angus’ Cavers in Kirkton in 1787. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Dodburn, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Dodburn in 1797. William ‘Wull’ (c.1769-1846) sexton and beadle at Wilton for about 50 years and great-grandfather of James Turnbull. In 1835 he was Church Officer at Dovemount, and in 1840 and 1841 was at Roadside. In the 1841 census he was listed at Gibsnose, with his wife Jane. He was one of the people chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton. One of his responsibilities was ringing the church bell, and he is said to have complained about how infrequently he got to ring the bell, just before his own funeral. He was known as a great wit, and was unkindly rumoured to be in league with grave-robbers – ‘Wull Reid, hei lifts th’ deid; Collins does the same; Jimmie Riddle is a sweep And resurrection man’ [T]. His wife was Jane and their children included Janet (b.1795), who married their neighbour Thomas Dryden. William (b.1803/4) mason in Wilton. He was listed at Damside in 1840, with the address changed to Roadside, where he was in 1841. In 1851 he was a journeyman mason on Wilton Kirkstyle. His wife was Mary and their children included Helen, William, John, Jane and Walter. Rev. William (b.1823/4) from Forfar, he was a ‘probationer’ of the Free Church in Newcastleaton in 1851. Since that church was only established in 1850, he was probably the first person to minister to the new congregation. He is recorded giving a temperance talk in Newcastleaton in 1852, and in a directory of that year is incorrectly listed as ‘John’. William J.S. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘Drumlanrig and the Charter’ for the 1938 Transactions (formerly written ‘Red’, etc.).

Reid Acre Brae (reed-ā-kur-brā) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

the Reid Book (thu-reed-book) n. name sometimes given to the handbook-sized set of words for the most popular Hawick songs, published in 1957 along with ‘The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection’. Carried around and dog-eared over 3 decades it was replaced by the ‘Blue Book’ in 1978 and then the ‘Green Book’ in 2001.

reid-cap (reed-kawp) n., arch. a cruel, mischievous spirit with long teeth, said to inhabit old towers – ‘Redcap’ is a popular appellation of that class of spirits which haunts old castles. Every ruined tower in the south of Scotland is supposed to have an inhabitant of this species’ [JL] (cf. Robin Redcap).

Reidcleuch Edge (reed-klooch-ej) n. Reidcleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is Red Sike.

reid-coat (reed-kō’) n., arch. the scarlet ladybird. Local children used to pick it up and throw it in the air singing ‘reed-coat, reed-coat, fly away, An’ make the morn a sunny day!’ [GW].

reid-hand (reed-hawnd) adj., arch. a legal term from the 15th and 16th centuries, meaning caught in the act of a crime, used throughout Scotland. This led to the present use of the phrase ‘caught red-handed’, which was adapted into English, especially after being popularised in Sir Walter Scott’s novels.

reid-keel (reed-keel) n., arch. ruddle, red pigment – ‘Ruddle is ‘reid keel’, plumbago is ‘black keel’’ [JAHM].

Reidheugh (reed-, red-hewch) n. Redheugh, ancient seat of the Elliot family, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. Scott of Satchells suggests that the Elliots received Redheugh from Robert the Bruce in about 1320. The name first occurs in a rental roll of Liddesdale in about 1376 (worth 15 shillings, ‘per forinccem serucium reddendo x s’). An Elliot of Redheugh is referred to around 1400. There is also a story, apparently from a manuscript of the Blackadder family, of an Elliot of Redheugh called ‘Chiefian of the South’, who was killed in battle along with his 3 sons, but had a daughter Mary who married Cuthbert Blackadder of that Ilk and had a son who was alive in 1447. However, the first definitive record of this being the family seat is when ‘Robert elwald of ye Redheuch’ is mentioned in 1476. A precept for the lands is recorded in 1489, although the date of the original charter is unknown. Robert, the 17th chief lived mainly at the new Larriston house, so Redheugh became less prominent. That Robert failed to have a male heir and the lands went to his daughter Margaret, who married a son of Elliott of Stobs, whose descendants were the Elliots of Larriston. Thomas Armstrong is recorded as possessor of the lands in 1632. The farm itself was valued at £96 11s in 1678, when disjoined from the former estate of Elliot of Larriston. Robert of Larriston went bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, but they were repurchased by William Elliot (descendant of the Falnash branch) in about 1730 for his 2nd son, Robert. Around this time the present house and barn were built, with the north and east sides of the farmhouse perhaps incorporating earlier walls. The farm was still valued at £96 11s in the 1788 county valuation and 1811 Land Tax Rolls. The farm suffered greatly in the flood of 1846. Robert’s grandson Robert died in 1915 and in 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold the farm to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Thomas Scott sold it to Sir Gilbert Elliott, 10th Baronet of Stobs in 1946. The farm has been modernised, with a small loch created by damming the Rede Burn. A clan museum is also situated there. The precise location of the original tower is uncertain, with locals pointing out one site in the 19th century (recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858) to the south near the railway viaduct, another just to the east of there, where there are some foundations and a third to the west of the farmhouse, where there is an enclosure where a plaque has been placed marking this as the ‘Site of Redheugh Tower’ (although there is no real evidence for this). On the opposite side of the Hermitage Water there is another site claimed to be home of ‘Jock of the Park’. And north-west of the farmhouse there is an area of rig lines and field systems (also spelled ‘Redheuch’) and sometimes erroneously ‘Redhaugh’; the origin of the name is probably just ‘red height’, i.e. the height above the Rede Burn: it is ‘Redheugh’ about 1376 and is recorded regularly from at least 1476; it was ‘Redhuch’ in 1489, ‘redheuch’ in 1502, ‘Redheucht’ in 1508, ‘Redheuche’ in 1510 and 1515/6, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1526, ‘the Redhwich’ in the Reid Lion (thu-reed-il-in) n. the Red Lion Inn, at the Sandbed in the early 19th century, with proprietor Robert Scott. Also a nickname in use for someone in the early 19th century.

Reidmoss (reed-mos) n. Redmoss, farmstead in Liddesdale, just north of Whisgills, on the Tinnis Burn. It was at one time part of the farm of Flatt. It is probably the ‘Redmoss’ listed in about 1376 (in the charters of Douglas of Morton) as a 12-shilling land. In 1541 it was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and valued at 30 pence. Other lands of the same name are also listed in 1541 as being vacant. It is stated (in a note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784) that the former farm of Puddingburn was on its lands. Thomas Wilson possessed these lands, along with Over and Nether Whisgills, in 1632. It is described in 1718 in a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, when along with Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead and Side it consisted of 2390 acres. William Anderson died there in 1781. Thomas Telfer was shepherd there in 1797. There were Turnbulls there in the mid-19th century and Adam Scott was farmer in 1868. David Anderson wrote a song about the old tree his grandfather had planted there. There are remains of other buildings on the Tinnis Burn to the north-west, as well as old rig lines and boundary banks in the area (it is ‘Reidmoss’ and ‘Ridmos’ in 1541 and ‘Ridmos’ in 1632; it marked ‘Redmoss’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

reid-ribbon (reed-ri-bin) adj., arch. bloodshot (of the eyes), having heavily inflamed eye-lids – ‘Reed-ribbon-een = bloodshot eyes, especially when the lids are inflamed’ [ECS].

Reidsmuir Plantin (reedz-mewr-plawn’-in) n. Reidsmuir Plantation, small wood between Tythehouse and Harwood, on the south side of the Harwood Burn.

Reid’s Relay (reedz-ree-lä) n. radio and television cable company, which helped provide Teries with decent signals in the middle of the 20th century. This included some council houses that were refused permission to erect aerials in the 1960s. In the 1930s the firm of George Reid Radio received the BBC signal on a 75 ft aerial, off Croft Road, behind their North Bridge Street premises, and relayed the signal around town by means of cables. The sets to receive the signals required no electrical power, and gave much better reception than a radio set. When TV arrived in the 1950s Reid’s installed a TV receiving mast above the Wellogate, and most Hawick households rented their sets and cable connections from Reid’s, although another local firm (Lawrence’s) competed. The end for the company came with the erection of new masts at Ashkirk, and the booster on the Miller’s Knowes.

Reid Swire (reed-swir) n. former name for the hill on the Border, essentially synonymous with the Carter Bar. This is where the River Rede rises, and was the location of the fray of 1575 – ‘On July seventh, the truth to say, At the Red-Swire the tryst was set: Our Wardens they met’ [WHO]. Whether he represents a real person is unclear – ‘Then Red Rowan has hente him up, The starkest man in Teviotdale – ‘Abide, abide now, Red Rowan, Till of my Lord Scroope I take farewell’, [T]. ‘But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth’ [WHO].

the Relief Chaipel (thu-ree-leef-ch a-pul) n. the Relief Chapel, an early name for Allars Kirk. It was called the Relief Kirk from 1844.

the Relief Kirk (thu-ree-leef-kirk) n. another name for Allars Kirk. The Relief movement, the third Secession from the Church of Scotland, was founded by Thomas Gillespie of Carnock in 1752, with patronage being the main cause of dissent. The cause was boosted by Thomas Boston joining with a large congregation from Jedburgh in 1757. A branch of the Relief Kirk was founded in Hawick in 1810, largely because of the lack of space in the existing town churches. It met for a few months in a tent on the Common Haugh, then in the Tabernacle and the Town Hall, before the new church was built on the Cross Wynd in 1811. The Church Officers originally me in a room in the Fleece Inn (which was run by one of the founders). The church was original referred to as the Relief Chapel, changed to Relief Church in 1844. It merged with the Secession Church to form the United Presbyterian Church in 1847 and with the Free Church in 1900. Allars Kirk in Hawick closed in 1948.

Relton (rel-tin) n. John (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Since the name is otherwise unknown, it is possible this is a transcription error. Probably the same man was also agent for William Welch, a carrier who operated between Hawick and Edinburgh.

Rennaldburn (re-uld-burn) n. former lands to the east of Eskdalemuir. It was once a seat of a branch of the Scotts. The later farmhouse there is said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice – ‘Warn Davenport, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee’ [WSB] (spelled variously ‘Renaldburn’, ‘Renalburn’, etc.; there are lands with a similar name in Jedburgh Parish).

Rennie (re-nee) n. John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880 and Treasurer of the Chapel Building Fund. He was still Treasurer in the 1890s. William (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmno rany’. An ox was stolen from him, from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. He could be the same man recorded as 1494/5 as ‘raix’ for what seems like the same crime.

Rennison (re-nil-sin) n. Richard (b.1803/4) born in Bedrule Parish. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, either as Liddesdale carrier or candlemaker (the other surely being his father). In 1851 he was a ‘Pensioner’ on the Back Row. In 1851 he was ‘Chelsea Pensioner; Blind’ and a lodger on O’Connel Street. In 1826 he married Isobel Annison. His wife was Isabel, and his children included Margaret, Isabel, Richard, Barbara, Elspeth and William. Richard (b.1763/4) listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. 2 men of the same name were recorded, one a Liddesdale carrier, the other a candlemaker; they were surely father and son. In 1841 he was a pauper living with blacksmith William Bowie on the Mid Row (also ‘Ronaldson’ and variants).

the Renny Watson Trophy (thu-re-neewat-sin-tró-fee) n. trophy competed for annually at Hawick Golf Club, named after Sir William Renny Watson.

Renouf (re-noof) n. Frederick Manse (b.1849/50–1915) born in the Channel Islands, he came to Hawick to be a servant at Wilton Lodge in the household of David Pringle. He was later proprietor of the Washington Hotel. He had a dispute with his brethren in the Hawick Home Mission, over his involvement in the liquor trade. However, he was President of the organisation in renommit

1904. His last address was given as Royal Bank House, Hawick. He married Agnes Hanining or Robison in Newington, Midlothian, and she died in Hawick in 1911.

renommit (re-nô-nil) pp., poët. renowned, famous – ‘Ane a man was renommet akordin’ as he had liftet up exes apon the thick thries [HSR], ‘An’ sleyet renommet kings: for his merce induurs forever’ [HSR].

Renwick (re-neek) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) draper and stocking manufacturer on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Allan (19th C.) hosier manufacturer of the early 1800s, operating on the High Street. Andrew (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Benjamin ‘Benjie’ (b.1800) son of James, he was born at Appotside. He was a mole-catcher in Hobkirk Parish and apparently very popular in the district. He helped with shooting parties, and was also said to be a poacher. Charles (b.c.1802) son of Francis and Mary Jerdon and probably grandson of Francis and Margaret Rae. He may have been related to the Renwicks of Blacklemouth. He lived in Hobkirk Parish and married Margaret Hislop. Their children were Mary (who married Alexander Davie), Isabella (married Adam Rutherford) and Robert (married Isabella Scott).

David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wiltonick. He was living at Lees in 1725. He is probably the Renwick who witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, resident of Borthaugh, in 1729. He married Jean Turnbull in 1719 and their children included John (b.1720), Helen (b.1723), Thomas (b.1725) and Adam (b.1728). The witnesses in 1725 were Adam Scott and John Renwick. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Bonchester, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He could be the Francis whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1778.

George (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who kept an inn (or ‘ane change’). In 1702 he was fined for selling ale Henry Hardie on Sunday. He was probably the George, resident of the west-side of Hawick, who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the same man as the flesher who is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the George, married to Margaret Wright, whose children included: Robert (b.1670); Margaret (b.1674); Janet (b.1676); and Isobel (b.1678). He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for Robert Wright in 1671. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living on the Sandbed in 1697 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Renwick (who was probably related) and James Shortreed.

Gideon (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He is probably the Gideon, son of William and Margaret Boyd, who married Katherine Miller in 1771, and whose children included: Jane (b.1771); Janet (b.1775); William (b.1778); Gideon (b.1781); and Cathering (b.c.1785), who married William Richardson and emigrated to Canada. His daughter Janet married John Gibson, and was murdered by him in 1813. Gilbert (15th C.) listed as ‘Gilbert Ranwyk’ in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. His progeny were bequeathed 20 shillings. He could be the Gilbert listed as a rebel in 1502, along with Thomas Grahamslaw and Humphrey, rebels involved in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Humphrey (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wmfrao de Ranwyk’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Robert is listed after him, so presumably his son or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Isabella (b.1826/7) from Inveresk, was a milliner and dressmaker in Hawick. She was listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was at about 7 Buccleuch Street with her younger sister Elizabeth. James (16th/17th C.) tenant in Galalaw in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James (1700/1–89) tenant farmer in Mangerton. He married Elizabeth Bell, who died in 1786, aged 88. Their daughter Betty (1742/3–1829) married teacher Robert Dickson. James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He married Mary Renwick and their children included: Robert (b.1790); and James (b.1792). The witnesses in 1790 were weaver Robert Renwick and James mossman. James (18th/19th C.) mole-catcher who lived at Howashiels. His children William (b.1789) and Janet (b.1792) both died young, but he moved to Appotside where another William (b.1794) and Janet (b.1796, mother of tailor James Grieve) were born, as well as Benjamin (b.1800, also a mole-catcher). He is probably the James living at Midburn in 1790 when his son George was baptised. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick in the early 1800s. James (1843–1910) born in Roberton, son of William and Jane Nichol. He was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He conducted business in Dumfries for a while, returning to Hawick in 1888 to found James Renwick & Co., Ltd, hosiery manufacturers of Commercial Road. He may also have had Mansfield Mills built (or extended) on Mansfield Road. He was associated with the temperance movement and East Bank Church. In 1869 he married Jeanie Laing (1843–1927), who was grand-daughter of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He had 4 surviving sons, 2 of whom (James and Robert Hogg) continued in the hosiery business. His 7 sons were: William (1870–c.82); Adam (1872–c.84); James (b.1874), who died in infancy; James (b.1875), who followed him into hosiery manufacturing; Robert Hogg (1877–1949), also a hosiery manufacturer; George; and William (b.1833). He died at Wilton Hill. James (b.1875) son of James and Jane Laing. He was a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He was educated in Dumfries and at Teviot Grove, then worked in the family hosiery firm, becoming a partner. He represented Teviot Ward on the Town Council for 22 years from 1906, was elected Magistrate and was Provost 1922–28. His Provostship saw the High Street paved with setts, completion of the expansion of the sewage works, and the building of Moat Crescent and Renwick Terrace, the latter being named after him. He was also Chairman of the committee that built the first council houses at Oliver Park. A keen Common Riding supporter, his son James junior was Cornet while he was Provost, and he started the tradition of the Provost’s Tent. He opened ‘the Hut’ in the year that his son was Cornet. He was Chairman of the Unionist Association for many years, as well as a Callants’ Club President and was an elder of the East Bank Church. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop on 1909 and was one of the first 2 scoutmasters in Hawick. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. He married Miss Lefevre of Canterbury in 1902. They lived at Fernbank on Wilton Hill. James (20th C.) son of Provost James. He worked for the family knitwear business and moved to London to represent the firm there. His son Geoffrey was a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, who was murdered by a fellow soldier while serving in Germany. James ‘Jim’ (1953– ) Hawick rugby player, at Centre, a born West-Enders. He played rugby for the P.S.A. and the Harlequins. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 17, and for Scotland at 19, where he went on to gain 52 caps. He was also represented the British Lions. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2018. Janet (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Ormiston in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Currer. Jean (d.c.1834) servant with Peter Wilson’s family for 52 years, staying until her mistress died. She is seen in a portrait with the family in about 1830, along with her successor Esther Reid. John (17th C.) recorded in 1650 as ‘John Renneck’ when he was tenant of Todshawhill along with ‘Pail’ Murray. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1650 and their children included Agnes (b.1650). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1651). John (1645/6–96) buried in Teviothead cemetery. His is one of the earliest legible stones. The reverse of the stone records another John. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Culbertson and their children included Robert (b.1670), Bessie (b.1672), Helen (b.1674) and Margaret (b.1677). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included James (b.1674), John (b.1681) and Helen (b.1684). Elspeth (b.1676) and James (b.1679) may also be his children. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Hastie and their children included Robert (b.1670), Bessie (b.1672), Helen (b.1674) and Margaret (b.1677). John (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean area of Roberton Parish. He was living at Horsleyhill in 1688. He married Janet Little and their children included: John (b.1681); Bessie (b.1685); and Margaret (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were John Noble and Robert Turnbull. David (b.1684), baptised in Roberton, may also be his child. Probably the same John was listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Wilson. John (17th C.) resident at ‘Chisholme and Widburne’ in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Both ‘John Renick elder and younger’ are listed, and jointly paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. John (d.1715) smith in Roberton. He is buried in the cemetery there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Jean (b.1703). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: John (b.1706); and Thomas (b.1708). John (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. In 1706 he is recorded being ‘a workman sometimes in Chisholm’, suggesting he may be the same man as the younger John recorded in Wilton in 1694. He married Jean ‘Lazon’ and their children included Margaret (b.1706). The witnesses in 1706 were John Armstrong in Raesknowe and Bailie George Martin. Margaret (b.1712), baptised in Robert Parish, could also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Miller, who was also from Roberton. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1730); William (b.1736); and John (b.1739). Robert (b.1727), baptised in Kirkton, could also be his child. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hardie and their children included Henry (b.1729). John (18th C.) one of the earliest known of the Hobkirk Renwicks. His children included Robert (b.1726). He could be the John in Mackside whose wife Bessie Miller is recorded dying in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. Other children baptised in Hobkirk who could be his included John (b.1728), Margaret (b.1735), Francis (b.1736), Robert (b.1740) and Helen (b.1740). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. Renwick

Salvation Army, being bandmaster there for 37 years. He also played in the Saxhorn Band and in the band of the Royal Tank Corps during his National Service. He was also a member of the Rotary Club, achieving a ‘Paul Harris Fellowship’, the highest honour given to Rotarians. He married Margaret in 1956 and they had a daughter, Linda. Joseph (b.c.1807) fuller in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, being a fuller at Damside in 1835, and a cloth dresser at Dovemount in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a daughter, also Elizabeth. Margaret (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Hassendeanbank. Margaret D. (b.1828/9) daughter of William and Janet. She was born in Jedburgh and lived in Minto. There she ran a school around the 1860s, separate from the Parish school, and probably for girls. Martin (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Martino Ranwik’. Matthew (18th/19th C.) lived at Bonchester and Drythropple. He married secondly Helen Robson. They had twins John and Mary and also a son George, both sons becoming dykers. Michael (18th C.) another early Renwick of Hobkirk. He lived at Kirknowe and later at Howahill and Unthank. His children included John (baptised in 1753), Margaret (b.1757) and Robert (b.1771). He was probably related to Andrew, who live at Howahill and then Stonedge, and had children Helen and Thomas. Miss ?? (19th C.) daughter of Thomas. She took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge, probably in the 1860s. The letter carrier appointed was James Watson. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries they were both relieved of their positions. Moses (1771–1851) son of Robert. He was a thatcher by trade. He married Violet Temple and they had a dozen children: Robert, shepherd at Dryhope; James, emigrated to America; John, who married Janet Henderson and emigrated later in life; Jessie, married blacksmith Robert Scott; Betty, married Lanton blacksmith Thomas Anderson; Helen (or Nelly), married Andrew Kerr, Jedburgh mason; Mary, married Robert Flick; Violet, married William Redshaw from Kalewater; Isabel, Margaret and Cecily, all of whom emigrated; and Charlotte, who married Robert Rutherford. Richard (c.1769–1839) son of Robert. He became a thatcher like his brother Moses. He was Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk. He married Janet Parker from Northumberland, and they lived at Mosshouses. Their children were: Robert, who died in Rulewater aged 73; George, who lived in Edinburgh; Thomas, who married Margaret Telfer; Mabel, who married Robert Henderson and emigrated to Canada; and Betty, who married John Baptie and later in life lived in Denholm. Richard (1850–1915) born at Town-o’Rule, only son of Thomas and grandson of Richard. He was a foreman surface-man on the railway. He lived at Hassendean and in Denholm, and was heavily involved in the Kirk there. He married Margaret Turnbull, also from Rulewater, and she died in 1922, aged 71. Their children were William, gardener at Holyrood; Richard, who worked for the North British Railway; Thomas, also worked for the railway; John, a joiner in Winnipeg, Canada; James, in the Hawick Post Office; Robert, an engineer; Peter, who worked in Denholm; George; Lizzie; Jessie, who married John Phillips; and Maggie. He was killed while on duty near Hassendean Station during a snowstorm, and there is a memorial stone to his memory in Denholm cemetery. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto de Ranwyk’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Humphrey ‘de Ranwyk’ is also listed before him, so presumably his father or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at ‘Hill’, which must have been somewhere in Rulewater. His wife ‘Marjory Sorry’ (1701/2–62) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’. In 1712 he and George (also a flesher) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Hardie. In 1720 (along with George, also a flesher) he witnessed a baptism for fellow flesher John Little and in 1721, along with flesher George he witnessed a baptism for William Wright and Christian Renwick (who was surely related to him). He could be the Robert, son of George, born in Hawick in 1670. His children baptised in Hawick included George (b.1700) and William (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John Scott, merchant William Scott and cooper John Turnbull. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724, 1728, 1733 and 1736. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Lizabeth’) Little, probably in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife’s name given).
Their children included: Robert (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1724); William (b.1726); Elizabeth (b.1728); Robert (again, b.1733); and Thomas (b.1736). The witnesses in 1724 were George and William Renwick (who were surely related), in 1728 were William Wright and John Simpson, in 1733 were James Gardener and William Wright and in 1736 were John and James Gardener. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1753 and 1757. His children included: Helen (b.1753); and Margaret (b.1757). Robert (b.1740) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John, claimed to be a descendant of James, one of the last Covenanters. He lived in a cottage at Blackleemouth in Hob Kirk Parish. He may have married Janet Parker. His sons were Richard and Moses and he also had at least 1 daughter. Robert (18th C.) travelling merchant of Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1789 when his daughter Mary married James Rannie. He was probably married to Elizabeth ‘Roger’, and their children were: Elizabeth (b.1760); Margaret (b.1761); Mary (b.1768); Margaret (again, b.1770); Jane (b.1772); and Agnes (b.1774). ‘Lizzie’ Roger died in Hawick in 1808, with her husband Robert Renwick described as ‘Pigman’ (or maybe ‘Pegman’). He witnessed a baptism for weaver William Rodger (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1764. He may also have been the merchant Robert who married Elizabeth Scott and had children Helen (b.1777) and Robert (b.1781). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Hawick in 1793. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1790 and 1792 he witnessed baptisms for James Renwick and Mary Renwick (one of whom he was surely related to). Reorganisation (ree-oor-gi-I-z-a-shin) n. name usually given to the major shake-up of local government in 1974, following the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1973. This abolished town and county councils, replacing them with ‘districts’ and ‘regions’. It was sometimes jokingly referred to as ‘Disorganisation’. This system in turn was overhauled in 1995/6 in favour of a single-tier system, which lumped Hawick governance in with other Border towns in the Scottish Borders Council.

repentance (re-pen'-ins) n., arch. the act of penitence, public atonement for transgressions before a congregation. For centuries, until into the 1800s public atonement was a major part of community life in Hawick. Infringements liable to this punishment included adultery, ‘irregular’ marriages and other crimes. In the early 1700s the penitent would stand at the Kirk door in sackcloth for an hour before the third bell was rung, then after the congregation and minister had entered, they would be led into the Kirk to the ‘stool of repentance’ or ‘pillar’, standing bare-headed through the sermon and thereafter berated publicly. Sometimes the Session required this process to be repeated for many Sundays in a row – ‘...and was ordered to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days ...'[PR1715].

Resurrectionist (rez-zu-rek-shin-ist) n., arch. a grave-robber or body-snatcher, particularly in the early 19th century. There was a scare throughout Scotland in the 1820s, following the celebrated cases of Burke and Hare and others. Two Berwickshire doctors were arrested in 1820. In Hawick an association of householders was formed for watching the cemeteries. Small houses were built at the entrances of both Hawick and Wilton churchyards, with 3 men on watch each night, patrolling every 15 minutes. No graves in the town were desecrated, although there were plenty of rumours and practical jokes.

the Return (thu-ree-turn) n. ‘the Return from Hornshole’, a statue unveiled at the south end of the High Street in 2014, as part of the ‘Big Return’ celebrations. It was sculpted by Ruairi McIver of Beltane Studios, taking 18 months to complete, using about a ton of bronze and was paid for by the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. It consists of a group of 5 figures: a youth carrying the Flag; an elderly woman and man; and 2 children. The seniors were modelled on Hawick’s Helen Ford and Jimmy McEwan, the youth on the rider of Beattie’s Horse monument, and the children on children in Peebles.
Return from Hornshole see Return to Hawick Return from Hornshole (ree-turn-from-hörnz-höl) n. song written by Alan Brydon. It was first performed at the 1514 Club’s ‘Hawick Sings’ concert in 2011 by his daughter Cheryl. Ian Seeley provided a piano accompaniment, which is somewhat complicated and even he describes as ‘a specialist, or art, song’.
Return to Hawick (ree-turn-too-hIk) n. painting by Tom Scott, full title ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’, completed in 1898. It is also sometimes referred to as ‘Return from Hornshole’. The painting was commissioned by the Town and 260 high quality lithographic copies were made, along with other copies later. The original is in the Museum, held by the Hawick Common Good Fund. It was formally presented at the 1898 Colour Bussing by Thomas Shaw M.P. People from Bowden acted as models, with Mr. Cockburn of Kippilaw carrying the flag. Other identified people are Harry Puttilo as the old man with the pack, Madge Dalgleish as the fair-haired girl beside the youth, ‘Pa’ Hume as the bearded man and Bettie Jamieson as the pretty maid in the rear.
Reuben Watts (roo-bin-wats) n. pseudonym used by Daniel Marriot – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grin’[HI] (also sometimes written ‘Watt’).

Revel (re-vul) n. Elizabeth ‘Bet’ (19th C.) maker of sweets, including ‘rock boolls’, living at the eastern end of the north side of the High Street in the latter part of the 19th century. She may have been the Eliza born in 1837, daughter of Archibald, or one of several other possibilities (the family lived in both Hawick and Wilton) – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wat-tie Moudie, Jock Gray and a’; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’[HI]. Francis (b.1779/80) from England, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. He lived at about 77 High Street in 1841 and 1851, along with his wife Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’). They had a son Hendry and a grand-daughter Eliza. Their son Francis died in Hawick in 1840. Francis (1843/4–81) probably a cousin of ‘Bet’. He married Sarah Ann Campbell, who died in 1916, aged 74. Their children were Archibald, Agnes and Francis (who died in infancy). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (b.1807/8) from Jedburgh. He was a tailor at about 62 High Street according to the 1841 census and at No. 23 in 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Francis, William, Mary, Jane, Betsy and John Dacker (also written ‘Revell’).
revellin (re-ve-lin) n., arch. an occasion of making merry, instance during which people revel – ‘Whereas there have been formerlie several enormities, debates and revellings committed at ye ridinge of ye marches of ye Common belonging to this town … ’ [PR1725].
revin (re-vin) n., arch. a ravenous eater.
the Revolution (thu-re-vo-loo-shin) n. religious and political change in Britain in 1688 and 1689, leading to the removal of James II, a Catholic, and his replacement by William I (of Orange) and his wife Mary II, both Protestants.
It is sometimes known as ‘the Glorious Revolution’ or ‘the Bloodless Revolution’. It also led to the throwing out of the episcopal system and the setting up of the Reformed, Established, Presbyterian Church of Scotland in 1690. As a result of these changes there was a dearth of Presbyterian ministers, which left Hawick Parish vacant for about 2 years, while Wilton, Cavers and Hobkirk were vacant for 5 years. Formerly Episcopalian ministers who refused to ‘pray for William and Mary’ were denied their livings. In the 33 parishes in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Selkirk and Kelso, only 3 ministers (at Kirkton, Abbotrule and Ancrum) obeyed the order, the others being ejected. This included John Langlands of Wilton, Thomas Somerville of Cavers and John Liddle of Hobkirk. The Scottish Episcopalian Church took a long time to re-establish itself. These events also affected Scottish history for the next several decades, with Stuart sympathisers, Jacobites, staging uprisings in the Highlands.

rewaird (ree-wärld) n., arch. a reward – ‘...an in keepin’ o’ thame ther is grit rewaird’[HSR], ‘...Trewlie ther is an rewaird for the richous’[HSR], v. to reward – ‘...happie wull he be that rewairds ye as ye hae serfet us’[HSR]. ‘The Lord rewairdet me akordin’ til my richteouniss ...’[HSR].

rib tops (rib-tops) n., pl., arch. ribbed part at the top of a sock or other item of hosiery (noted by E.C. Smith).

Riccaltoun (ri-kul-tin) n. farm high up on the Oxnam Water. This is probably the place referred to in a charter to the Riddells of that Ilk in the mid-12th century. 2 men from here (Adam ‘de Rukelton’ and Adam ‘de Rykeldon’, possibly the same name twice) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The farm belonged to Lord Jedburgh in the 17th century and the Marquis of Lothian in the 18th century (not to be confused with ‘Riccarton’, although the origin of the name may be similar, here probably being ‘Ricela’s hill’ from the Old English personal name plus ‘tun’ for ‘hill’; the name is first recorded as ‘Richeldoun’ in 1150).

Riccalton see Riccarton

Riccarton (ri-kar-tin, -kar-tin) n. town around the station on the Waverley Line, about half way to Newcastle, being a junction with the line linking to Hexham. Before the railway it had no settlement, but it developed into a small village with as many as 120 residents. The main housing consisted of 2 terraces of housing and 4 semi-detached cottages. It had its own school and a branch of the Hawick Co-op. The farm of the same name is about 1 1/2 miles down the Riccarton Burn on the main road, and has the remains of the old peel tower located further up the burn. The tower measures about 13 m by 9 m, now partly covered with a sheepfold, and with 2 rectangular platforms to the north, which were probably other buildings. A stone disc, probably found near here, is in Hawick Museum. The present farm was formerly marked as ‘Nether Riccartoun’, with ‘Over Riccartoun’ at the ruined tower (but still about a mile from the railway village). The lands here are recorded as being worth 7 shillings in a rental list of about 1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 they were valued at 40 shillings and tenanted by Elliots and Croizers. Will Crozier was there in 1590. Adam Beattie was tenant in 1694. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, covering 852 acres, bounded by Pinglehole, the Liddel Water, Taylorcleuchhead, Roughlee and Laws. The farmhouse at that time is shown fairly close the modern farm buildings. James Wardlaw was there in 1748 and Ninian Elliot in 1778. The Grieves of Branxholme Park farmed there in the late 18th century and in 1800 it was leased to surgeon Charles Maxwell (son-in-law of Jardine of Thorlshope). After that Jardines were the tenants. Walter Jackson was there in 1821 and Charles Jardine in at least the 1850s and 60s. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. The Riccarton-Hexham line closed in 1956, and the village was abandoned after the Waverley Line closed in 1969. Very little remains to suggest the former size of the community. Synonymous with ‘the middle of nowhere’, no road served the area until 1963 when a forest track was opened. A book ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ was written by Kit Milligan in 1994. Graptolites and other fossils have been found in the rocks of the area – ‘Now Riccarton, to some folk, is just a godless plot o railway lines, a limbo for locomotives, clapit doon without regard for the comfort o man nor beast on the top o a bare hill’ [DH] (there are other Riccartons near Kilmarnock, Linlithgow and Hamilton and a Riccalton in Oxnam Parish; the name probably derives from Old English ‘Richard’s farm’, with perhaps a Scandinavian influence on the personal name; it first appears in 1296 as ‘Ricardestoun’, is ‘Ricarden’ around 1376, ‘Ricardtoun’ in 1541, ‘Rikkirtoun’ in 1611 ‘Rickerton’ in 1694, 1797 and 1821, and ‘Rickertown’ in 1778; Blaeu’s 1654 atlas shows ‘N. Riccarton’ and ‘O. Riccarton’, the latter probably being the location of the peel tower, while ‘Rickerton’ and ‘Rickertone’ appears on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and ‘Rickertown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).
the Spirit and Tendency of on Theron and Aspasio …’ (published anonymously, 1762), ‘Dissertation on the Conduct of the Sanhedrim, and Advice offered by Gamaliel’ (1769) and his collected works, which were published in 3 volumes in 1771/2. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Palacehill, and she died in 1764. Their children included: Jean (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1731), who married William Armstrong, schoolmaster in Hobkirk (and was mother of Hawwick’s postmaster Robert Armstrong and Maj.
Gen. Adam Armstrong); John, who succeeded as minister of the Parish; Anne; Helen, who married James Murray, minister of Hallstone in Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Irvine, schoolmaster in Wilton. Some biographical notes on him were written by Rev. Thomas Somerville of Jedburgh. He was described as having ‘a large fund of originality rather than a highly cultivated understanding’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Rykylton’ in 1454 when he attached his seal to a bond for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also the last listed member of the ‘retour of service’ to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibale Douglas in 1464/5; his name is given there as ‘Thomas of Riklintoune’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘Riklyntone of that ilk’ (also written ‘Riccalton’, ‘Riccarton’, ‘Rick-letoun’ and variants).

Riccarton Burn (ri-kar’-in-klooch) n. stream that rises near Riccarton Junction and flows southwards to join the Liddel Water near Riccarton farm.

Riccarton Cleuch (ri-kar’-in-klooch) n. former name for lands near Riccarton. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale they are valued at 40 shillings, with Croziers as tenants. ‘Richardton-cleucht’ was the nickname of Andrew (‘Dandy’) Crozier, who was one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1586 it was referred to as a ‘fourtie shilling land’ when partly occupied by Simon Elliot and released to the Elliots by Francis, Earl of Bothwell (it is ‘Ricardtoun Cleuche’ in 1541 and ‘Riccarton Cleucht’ in 1586).

Riccarton Cottages (ri-kar’-in-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages near the farm of Riccarton in Liddesdale.
They are situated on the east side of the B6357.
Road contractor Adam Moor and his family lived there in 1861.

Riccarton Schuil (ri-kar’-in-skil) n. former school in Riccarton Junction. It closed in 1963, the same year as the Beeching Report. The remain ing children travelled by train to Newcastle-ton or Hawick. The school and schoolmaster’s

Riccartonfit (ri-kar’-in-fi’) n. Riccartonfoot, former farm in the Riccarton area. In 1624 Adam Usher and his son Will were convicted of stealing sheep from there, among other crimes; the tenants were Archie Henderson and John Robison.
It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1670 (it is ‘Rickartounfoote’ in 1655 and ‘Rickartonfoot’ in 1670).

Riccarton Hope (ri-kar’-in-höp) n. small stream that runs roughly eastwards to the south of Bell Hill to join the Riccarton Burn.

Riccarton Junction (ri-kar’-in-jungk-shin) n. station on the Waverley Line (Border Union Railway) at the junction with the Hexham line (Border Counties Railway), also known as Riccar-ton, although that name had formerly applied to the peel tower and farm more than a mile further down the Riccarton Burn. The station building (now demolished) included the Cooperative store and village pub. As well as the station there were also 2 signal-boxes (also demolished), an engine shed, turntable and several nearby foot-bridges, as well as major culverts along the line. It was opened in 1862 as simply ‘Riccarton Station’, with the ‘Junction’ being added by the North British Railway in 1905. It closed in 1969. Only the remains of the platforms and footings of the stationmaster’s house survive.

Riccartonlee (ri-kar’-in-lee) n. former name for lands near Riccarton, recorded in 1541 as ‘Ri-cardtounlie’, with a value of 5 shillings, and at that time vacant.

Riccarton Mill (ri-kar’-in-mill) n. farmstead on the Liddel Water, to the east of the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. There was presumably once a corn mill there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1797 and his son James was listed there on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (incorrectly as ‘Bickerton Mill’). Another James Armstrong was there in 1852. It was said that at least one person had drowned in the mill lade. It was a public house up until around the 1870s. It is the spot to which Dandy Dinmont directs Harry Bertram in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’ – ‘But ye can come ower the night as far as Riccar-ton, where there is a public; or if ye like to stop at Jockey Grieve’s at the Heuch’ [SWS] (it is ‘Rickartownmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Rickartonton’ or Hawick. The school and schoolmaster’s

house survive at the south-east corner of the village. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1878–1962.

Riccarton Sike (ri-kar’-in-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, south of Saughtree. It rises on Yarrow Knowe and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water. Note that it is on the south side of the valley, while Riccarton itself is on the north.

Riccarton Toll (ri-kar’-in-tol) n. former toll house on the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. Christian Armstrong was toll-keeper there in 1851. It is marked ‘Riccarton Bar’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house still exists.

rice (riis) n., arch. a branch, stick – ‘He travelled with two long sticks – ‘rices’ they were called’[RM], twigs collectively, brushwood – ‘The calculation of the stake and rice stands thus: Rice at 1s. per cart, 3d. per rood; stakes, eight to the rood, 6d. . . .’[RJE], ‘. . . a cart filled with the small branches of the ash-tree, with the leaves on, – ‘ash rice’, as he described the material to me’[RB] (also spelled ‘rise’ or ‘ryce’, and sometimes plural).

Richard see Richard Hassendean

Richard (ri-churd) n. Dean of Eskdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, listed as a witness 1195/6. He is the only named person who held this office. However, his surname is unknown.

Richard (ri-churd) n. recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk and chaplain to the Bishop of Glasgow in 1258 when he witnessed a charter. He is recorded as ‘Ricardo vicario de ecclesia de Askirke’. Richard Plantagenet (1452–85) he was the 4th surviving son of Richard, 3rd Duke of York and Cecily Neville. He had a withered arm and crooked spine, hence his nickname ‘Crookback’. He was Duke of Gloucester and King of England 1483–85, his role in the ‘Princes in the Tower’ incident being a matter of debate. From 1470–83 he was Warden of the English West March, and in 1482 led an invasion into Scotland that took Berwick and Edinburgh. He was the last King of the House of York, and well known as the subject of a Shakespeare play.

Richardson

(r-i-churd-sin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) baker in Hawick. He married Isobel Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1699 and their children included: Christian (b.1709); James (b.1711); Adam (b.1716); and Adam (again, b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Bailie George Martin and flesher James Halliday. Adam (18th C.) recorded in the Town Treasurer’s book in 1775 for the ‘libel’ against him ‘for going by the Court with the bailies, before and after the court, 2s. – of which he paid 16d.’; it is unclear which court this was or what the trial was about. The same amount is also recorded in 1756 for the same purpose. He could be the Adam who married Elizabeth Scott in Hawick in 1755 and whose children included Elizabeth (b.1756), Joan (b.1759) and Isobel (b.1761). Adam (18th/19th C.) draper at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Isobel Purcell and their children included: George (b.1703); Bessie (b.1706); Catharine (b.1708); and James (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Michael Briggs and Jasper Richardson (surely a relative) and in 1708 were wright James Purcell (probably related to his wife), and weavers Jasper and John (who were surely related to him). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His got married in 1722 (with no wife’s name recorded). Andrew (c.1790–1869) born in Roxburghshire, son of farmer James and Isabel Scott. He served with the Dunfries Militia, and was at Edinburgh Castle in 1814 when he married Margaret Pollock. He was later a stockingmaker, needlemaker and woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. He may be the Andrew who was listed among people who recovered from cholera in 1832. He was living on Green Wynd in 1841. His children included: James (1816–74), who married Janet Kyle; Andrew (b.1824), married Mary Paterson; John (1826–95), china merchant, married Harriot Miller; David (b.1830); Alexander (1833–72), married Christina Burns; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); and George (b.1841). Andrew (1799–1876) said to be from Edinburgh. He was painter of ‘Hawick’ from about 1835, which was engraved as the frontispiece to Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (by J. Bower). It is a view from Easter Martin’s Hill, to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farmhouse and is also known as ‘Hawick from Crumhaughhill’. It was presented to the Museum by W.E. Wilson. Probably the same Andrew was also active in the England and in the New York area, painting landscapes and coastal views, such as ‘View from Froster Hill, Gloucestershire’, ‘The Bergen Homestead’ and ‘View near Bridgeport, Connecticut’. Andrew (19th C.) foreman at Robert Ewen’s hosiery factory on the Mill Path, recorded in 1866. Bruce Cornet in 2000, hence sometimes referred to as the Millennium Cornet.
Richardson

He also marked the boundaries again the following year, when the full-scale Common Riding was cancelled because of foot and mouth. Catherine nee Scott (1777—1853) daughter of Capt. James, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. She went to India to stay with her uncle Lord Harris, and there married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson of the East India Company Marine. She returned to Scotland after the death of her husband and lived at Forge, near Canonbie. She was locally known as a writer, and was a friend of the Carlyles. She wrote Adonia: A Desultory Story (1801) and Poems (1828). Frazer (19th C.) acted as Halberdier in the latter part of the 19th century, for many years along with Thomas Cook. There is an early photograph of him with his halberd. In 1875 it is reported that he appeared in the ‘much disputed new suit!’ (also spelled ‘Fraser’). Gavin Gala man who wrote ‘For King and Country and the Scottish Borderers’ (1897), an account of the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, and ‘After Gallipoli’ (1992), an account of their activities in the rest of WWI. He has been a regular speaker at the Archaeological Society. George ‘the Blue Laird’ (b.1705/6) of the West End. He is probably the George, Burgess and ‘Indweller in Hawick’ who gave evidence at the court case in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. He was at that time stated to be a widower and staying in part of a house rent free from his son James, given by his uncle James Purcell. He lived in Hawick all his life, except when he was in service as a boy and ‘has been at the Common-Riding of Hawick every year since he could ride a horse’. His daughter Christian died in 1803, by which time he was already deceased. James, who was also called ‘the Blue Laird’ was perhaps his son. He may be the George, son of Andrew, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the carrier George who married Betty Shiel and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1734); John (b.1741); James (b.1743); and James (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were late Bailie Walter Graham and servant John Nichol. George (b.c.1785) recorded as ‘independent’ on the 1841 census. His land behind the Back Row is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was perhaps son of James and grandson of George (both of whom were called ‘the Blue Laird’). George (1793—1871) son of William and Margaret Laing, he was born in Minto or Yarrow Parish. He is recorded as an agricultural labourer at Wester Parkhill in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 he was at Deanburnhaugh with his son-in-law. Minto Parish and lived at Hummelknowe Mill when young and later at Parkhill. He married Elizabeth Burton, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1824, aged 30. Their children included: Margaret (1816/7—1894), who married roadman William Robson and died at 13 Dukers Place; William (1817/8—1825); and Helen (1820/1—42). In 1825 (recorded in Wilton and Robertson Parishes) he secondly married Elizabeth Henry, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1846, aged 64. He died at Deanburnhaugh and was buried at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Henry (b.1801) son of James, who was Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott, from the Milsington Scotts. He was a farmer, living at 37 Loan, recorded as farmer of 15 acres in 1861. He rented several fields from the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Beatrice (or Beatrice) Miller, and their children included: William, who emigrated to Australia in the 1850s; Margaret; Henry (b.1830), who also emigrated to Australia; Robert, who also went to Australia; James (b.1836/7), who was Cornet in 1862; and Walter. James (17th C.) farmer at Brauxholme Town. He is recorded holding part of the lease there in 1675 and 1677; in 1677 he was renting along with his mother (whose name is not given). He is surely related to the John senior and John younger, who were tenants in 1671 (perhaps his father and brother). He could be the James, married to Catherine Turnbull (or Rule) whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1671. James (17th C.) resident at Howcleuch in Robertson Parish. He is recorded there in 1683 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He was ‘weadua’, i.e. widower, so his wife must have died in childbirth. The witnesses were James and Robert Nichol. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1712 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He is probably the James who married Bessie, daughter of William Aitkin in 1715 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish include: Bessie (b.1716); Agnes (b.1717); Mary (b.1719); Isobel (b.1721), who probably married merchant James Ekron; Helen (b.1723); Patrick (b.1726); and Elizabeth (b.1731). His daughter is probably the Isobel who married merchant James Ekron. He is probably the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for cooper Alexander Weens in 1713 and recorded as ‘tenant’ when he witnessed another baptism for Alexander Weens in 1721. James (b.c.1753) son of William, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He had a brother John and sister Elizabeth, who married William Wilson. He was Cornet in 1777 and known as ‘Auld Jamie’ in later life. He waved the Flag over the new bridge when it was opened in his year as Cornet. Along with William (either his father or brother), he ran the firm of wool merchants and manufacturers based at ‘Whisky Hooses’. The firm manufactured carpets for a while, and also dealt in salt, tar and whisky; it went into bankruptcy around 1812-21. In 1796 he witnessed the birth of a daughter of merchant George Gray and Mary Potts. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1791–97 when he paid the Horse Tax. In 1796 he was recorded as ‘Wool Staper’ (i.e. trader in wool). He contributed, with William, to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He first married a Brydon, but they had no issue. Secondly, in Robertson Parish in 1790, he married Jane (b.1762), daughter of William Scott, tenant of Milsington. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: William (b.1791); John; Walter (b.1792), stocking-maker; Betty (b.1794), who probably died young; James (b.1796), of Salthall; Isabella, who married baker Walter Wilson; Henry (b.1801), farmer on the Loan; Thomas (b.1806), carrier and coal agent; and James’ (again, b.1808). The witnesses in 1792 were William and Walter Richardson (probably his father and brother) and in 1796 were William (presumably his father) and hosier William Wilson. He could be the James of Walter’s Wynd whose wife died in 1822, aged 59. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendeanbank. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James ‘the Blue Laird’ (d.1824) probably son of George, who also had the same nickname. He was probably a minor landowner, like the ‘Hilliesland Lairds’. He is probably the James, son of George, who received a house (with a yard behind it) from George’s uncle James Purcell. This is probably the land belonging to George marked behind the Back Row on Wood’s 1824 map, adjacent to George Richardson’s land (who may have been his son). He married Elizabeth (‘Lizzy’) Nimmo (or ‘Nimo’) and she died in 1782. Their children included Helen (b.1768). He may be the James whose son George died in 1776 and whose unnamed child died in 1795. James (b.1767) farmer in Hawick, son of John and Isobel Scott. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1787 and she died in 1818. Their children included Andrew (b.c.1791), who was also a farmer. James ‘Lang Jaymie’ or ‘Jaymie o Sautha’ (b.1796) presumably a tall individual, who lived with his family at Salt Hall. He was son of James, Cornet in 1777, and a nephew of Elizabeth Richardson, who married manufacturer William Wilson. He worked as a warehouseman in a wool factory. He is recorded at Salt Hall in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Helen Ballantyne, sister of ‘Wat the Drummer’. Their children included: James; Jane; Margaret; Isabella, who married John Edgar; Helen; Walter; John; William; Thomas; and Elizabeth. James (b.1800/1–32) from Hawick, brother of spinner John. He served with the 78 Regiment, the Ross-shire Buffs from the age of 17. He died in Colombo, Sri Lanka. James (b.1808/9) from Smallholm, he was a shuttlemaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Slitrig Crescent and employing 2 men. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is described as a cooper and shuttle-maker on the ‘Front row’, as well as being listed as a ‘turner’. His wife was Isabella (from England) and their children included Betsy, Peter, Thomas, Isabella, Helen, David and Margaret. James (b.1813/4) grocer and tea-dealer at 73 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Andrew, James, George, Margaret, Francis, Janet and William. James (b.1836/7) son of farmer Henry, he was a stone mason, and also farmed fields up the Loan, succeeding his father. He was Cornet in 1862. He can be seen in what is the second earliest known Common Riding photograph, standing with a group of his supporters, with a top hat and full beard. He had daughters Wilhelmina B. and Beatrice Miller. James (b.1851) son of Walter and Mary Murray. He worked as a wool-sorter and served as beadle for Hawick Parish Church. He had a son Robert, who married Ethel, adopted daughter of postmaster James Orr. James M. ‘Jimmy the Printer’ (d.2001) founder of Richardson & Son printer’s business in Dovemount Place. He coined the phrase ‘a day oot o Hawick’s a fortnight wasted’. Jamie son of Murray and grandson of Jimmy. He was Cornet in 2009. Jasper (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1706 and 1708 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew (surely a relative). In 1709 he and John (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine. In 1706 he married Margaret Briggs (probably from the weaving family) and their children included: Bessie

(b.1707); Thomas (b.1709); Michael (b.1710); George (b.1713); Frederick (b.1713); and John (b.1715). The witnesses in 1709 were Michael Briggs and merchant Francis Elliot. Janet (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. John (16th C.) saddler mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574, when he was still owed money from the Laird of Buccleuch. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. John (17th C.) ‘maltman’ who was listed as a Chamberlain for the Scots of Buccleuch in the period 1628–33, responsible for part of the rents of Branholme and Wilton. In the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is ‘John Ritchiesone, maltman to my Lord Bukeleuch’ and owed the Earl some rental money. John (17th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who served as Town Clerk in 1638, and probably for a few years before. He is recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1637. He is recorded as ‘John Ritchhartsonne, clark’ in one of the first entries in the earliest existing Town Book in 1638. He is also there listed as a notary, along with Gilbert Watt, on the short-list for next Town Clerk (with Watt being selected). He was listed as ‘notar publick’ at the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He was ‘notar’ when elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the same as ‘John Ritchisone, officiar and clerk in the defunctes baroune courtes’ who was owed his yearly fee in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. John (17th C.) listed as ‘John Ritchiesone elder’ in 1671, when, along with his son John, he leased part of the farm of Branholme Town. It seems likely that James, who was farming at Branholme Town in 1675 and 1677, was another son. It is possible he was the John, married to Helen Routledge, whose daughter Bessie was born in Hawick Parish in 1654. He is probably the John who in 1673 witnessed (along with Patrick Scoon) a baptism for James Martin (who could have been his son-in-law). John (17th C.) son of John, he was listed as ‘younger’ in 1671 when he was tenant of part of Branholme Town. He is probably the John who was married to Bessie Hope, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Bessie (b.1670) and John (b.1673). The Hopes were also tenants at Branholme Town. John (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Cavers Parish in 1703. John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Bell in Bedrule Parish in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for Andrew (who was surely related to him) and for weaver David Reid and in 1709 for merchant Walter Bryson. He is probably the John who along with Jasper (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism for weavers Andrew Jardine in 1709. John (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1721. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Waddel and their children included John (b.1723). John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick who married Isobel Scott. Their children included: William (b.1762), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1769); and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1764 were James Scott and James Glendinning. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in Hawick in 1766. His wife died in Hawick in 1790. John (b.1756) son of William of the Whisky Houses mill. His brother James was Cornet in 1777 and his sister Elizabeth married manufacturer William Wilson. He is described in a Wilson history as ‘John Richardson, father of John the elder’. He may be the Hawick resident John recorded as John (1788/9–1874) spinner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row. He married Esther Robson, who died in 1830, aged 44. Their children included: William (1808/9–71), tailor and clothier; who died at Blackburn, Lancashire; Isabella (1814/5–54), who died at Doon in Canada; Andrew (b.c.1815); John (b.1817), who died in infancy; John (again, c.1821–88); Esther (b.c.1826); Agnes (1825/6–1906); and Robert (1828–77). His family are buried at St. Mary’s. John (1799–1869) son of Walter, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. His owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. mother was Christian Gledstains, daughter of the Town Clerk. He was a hosiery worker who lived at Ladylaw Cottage in Wilton in 1851. By 1861 he was at Wellington Street. He married Helen Anderson (who died in 1871, aged 70) and their children included: Walter (b.1824), hosiery warehouseman; James (b.1825); William (b.1827), hosiery manager; John (b.1829), who probably died young; George Wilson (b.1830), wool merchant; Elizabeth (b.1833); and Archibald (b.1837). He was cousin of James, who lived at the nearby Salt Hall at the same time. John (19th C.) inn-keeper of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square in Newcastleton. He was listed as proprietor in 1852, but must have been absent for the 1851 census, when his wife was inn-keeper. He married Elizabeth, from Bewcastle. Their children included Margaret, Diana, Jane, John and

Helen. John (1826–95) son of Andrew and Margaret Pollock. He was a china merchant in Hawick. He had a house built on the Kirkwynd in about 1879. His shop, ‘Richardson’s China Warehouse’ was at No. 8 Kirkwynd and can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (with his wife standing outside). In 1851 he was a woollen slubber living on the Loan and in 1861 was at 12 Back Row. He married Harriet Miller (1827–1910) in 1848. They had at least 12 children, including: Andrew; Robert (b.1855); Catherine; Elizabeth; Andrew (again, b.1860); Harriet (b.1862); Margaret (b.1862); Margaret (again, b.1865); and Joan (b.1867). John (1819/20–88) mill manager of William Laidlaw & Sons. He worked as a spinner, and then farmed at Newmill-on-Slitrig. He married Betsy, sister of James Elliot of Flex. His sons James and John farmed at Hummelknowes. Bailie John, J.P. (d.1918) heavily involved in religious and temperance matters in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of George Barclay. Their children were George (who died in infancy), James (headmaster of Preston Street School in Edinburgh), Janet (who married James Edgar) and Mary. John (1859–1892) son of Robert, he took over from his father as partner in Noble & Richardson in 1877, then became partner in Messrs. Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. in Galashiels in 1880, originally operating at Abbots Mill in Galashiels and opening Eastfield Mills in Hawick in 1883. His partner John Farrar Blenkhorn was married to his sister, while their first manager was his cousin George Hunter. He was also Lieutenant in the local Border Rifles (volunteers). He married Lizzie Maxwell (daughter of the proprietor of the Maxwell Hotel in Gala), and none of their children survived to adulthood. The family lived at 19 Buccleuch Street (Welch’s). Suffering from ill health, he travelled to warmer climates (Australia, New Zealand and South Africa) for his last 4 years, dying of influenza at Berbeto, Transvaal. Margaret (18th/19th C.) dressmaker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Murray local printer of Dovemount Place. He was one of the founders of the Border Horse Racing Association in 1972 and a keen ‘flapping’ rider and organiser. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as ‘guid broder’ (i.e. brother-in-law) of Hector Turnbull in Belses. The pair, along with Hector’s son Dund, were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton. They were denounced as rebels. Presumably he was married to a sister of Hector Turnbull, tenant in Belses. Bailie Patrick (d.bef. 1707) Hawick Magistrate recorded in 1694 and 1703. He owned a tenement to the south of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He was ‘present balyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). In 1694 it is recorded that he settled his account ‘for all that he has paid for the town’s use, for great bell, little bell, steeple, and tolbuith, and all other things, being £38 : 19 : 6 Scots’. He is probably the ‘Patrick Ritchison’ who is listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he and Robert Hardie petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the ‘freedom of trade’ tax. He witnessed baptisms for weaver David Miller in 1700, for Bailie George Martin in 1702, for flesher John Tudhope in 1702, for Burgh Officer Alexander Scott, for merchant William Dickson, for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for ‘Walter Scott herd’ in 1704 and for Bailie George Martin and for Anthony Haig in 1706. He also witnessed several baptisms in 1705, and could be the Patrick who witnessed a baptism in 1687. His wife was Bessie Turnbull. His son John (born in 1688) became a printer’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1706. He is referred to as deceased in 1707 when expenses incurred earlier, during his Bailieship, were discussed by the Council. Richard (16th C.) recorded as ‘master Richard Richartsoun’ in 1530 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott and Janet Ker. His name appears just before the Vicar of Hawick. Richard (b.1809/10) from Kelso, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Jane and their children included William, Isabella, Mary and George. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Annandale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. He received some of the benefits of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale from 1552. However, this overlapped with John Hepburn, so it is unclear who was really in the office. He resigned in 1565. He was also referred to as Dean of Teviotdale in 1552. Robert (17th C.) leased one fifth of the farm of Branhholme Town in 1690, with Thomas Briggs as cautions. He was listed at Branxholme Town among ‘The poor in Hawick Parish’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (1828–1877) son of John and Esther Rob-son (whose memorial stone can still be seen at St. Mary’s). He became a clerk with Andrew Oliver, auctioneer’s, and was also assistant to Robert Armstrong in the Post Office. He then became head cashier with a firm in London (Scott, Bell & Co.), moved to Liverpool for a few years (working for Leech, Harrison Forwood), and was then sent abroad for business. In 1870, after about a year in India, he returned to Hawick because of failing health. He then went into partnership with Robert Noble, forming Richardson, Noble and Co., at Stonefield Mills, moving to Glebe Mills in 1873. The partnership was suggested by his brother-in-law John Hunter; they met for the second time in Hunter’s house, trying to conclude their business agreement quickly because both had another engagement that night, only to discover that they were both being admitted as members of Masonic Lodge 111. However, he died after only a few years in business in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of William Lawrie and half sister of William Fredrick Diener. He secondly married Jessica, daughter of Andrew Irvine of the Savings Bank. His children were: Minnie, who married John Farrar Blenkhorn; John, partner in Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co.; Ettie Isabella; William Fredrick; and Margaret Lawrie. The family were living at Wilton Hill when he died at only 48. He is buried in the Wellogate. Thomas (b.1806) younger son of James, who was Cornet in 1777. He was a carrier and coal agent in Hawick. He was listed as a ‘Carrier’s Porter’ on the Mid Raw in the 1841 census. He may be the grocer on the Howegate listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a carter at 14 Howegate in 1861. He later stayed at Fiddle Inn (7 Loan). He married Agnes Park and their children included: James (b.1834); William (b.1836); John (b.1839), farmer at Newmill-on-Slitrig; and Agnes (b.1842), who became Mrs. Oliver of the Railway Hotel in Jedburgh, and later Mrs. Lamb of the Waverley Hotel in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Mu-seum’ in 1784. It is possible he was the same man as the manufacturer, who would only have been about 18 when the book was published. Walter (1766–c.1808) son of William and Isabel Henderson. He was also manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He is probably the Walter recorded in Hawick as owner of 2 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the manufacturer who paid the horse tax in the same year. In 1794 he married Christian, daughter of Town Clerk John Gladstains, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Ann (b.1794); Isabel (b.1796); William (b.1797), who went to London and became a merchant in Glasgow; John (1799–1869); James (b.1801), a hatter in Liverpool; and Elizabeth (b.1802). The witnesses in 1794 were William (his father) and Walter Laid-law. After his death, in 1815, the mill was sold to Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. Walter (1824–88) son of John, he was a hosiery warehouseman. He lived at Waverley Cottages. In 1847 he firstly married Mary Murray, and their children were: John (b.1848), father of James of the Salvation Army; James (b.1851), wool-sorter and beadle at Hawick Parish Church; Mary (b.1855); Walter (b.1857); and Walter (b.1859). He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Henderson, dairy-man. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Howcleuch in 1734 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Anderson and their children included George (b.1738) and William (b.1740). Adam (b.1736) was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1740 were flesher William Renwick and Thomas Waugh. William (18th C.) wool merchant and manufacturer at Whisky Houses, said to he Hawick’s first woollen manufacturer. His brother James was his partner, as well as being Cornet. In 1878 he was granted land and a waterfall at the top of Slitrig Crescent by the Duke of Buccleuch. He then had the Whisky House Mill built for him in 1788 for the manufacture of cloth. This factory represented one of the important early steps in Hawick’s tweed industry. He made a kind of blue cloth, and travelled to Leeds to learn the techniques for finishing his cloth. He later manufactured ‘duffle’ for women’s pet-ticoats, as well as carpets. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He witnessed a baptism for his son Walter in 1794. He is probably the William listed as ‘Merchant’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 5 work horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He witnessed a baptism for his son James in 1796 (when recorded as ‘Wool Stapler’ (i.e. a trader in wool). He may be the member of Hawick Curling Club listed in 1812. He is sometimes confused with his son Wal-ter. In 1752 he married Isabel Henderson (from the farming family at 53 High Street, probably daughter of Robert), and she died in 1778. Their children were: James (b.c.1753), who was Cornet in 1777; John (b.1756); Peter Patrick (b.1759), who had no issue; Elizabeth (b.1761), who probably died young; Walter (b.1766), who took over as manufacturer at Whisky Houses; Betty (1772–1815), the eldest surviving daughter, who married manufacturer William Wilson; Robert (1776–1811); and William (d.1808), merchant in Hawick. The witnesses in 1766 were James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law) and Robert Young. William (d.1808) Hawick merchant, son of manufacturer William. He married Isabella (1771–1807), daughter of James Dickson of Alton. Their son William inherited Alton after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, and took the additional name of Dickson. He may be the Richardson whose property is marked around 51 and 55 High Street. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whithope in 1808. He married Margaret Laing and their children included: Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (1774/5–1840) resident of Hummelknowe Mill. In Minto Parish in 1793 he married Margaret Laing and she died in 1831, aged 65. In 1833 he emigrated to Canada, where died. A commemorative stone was erected in Borthwick Waas Cemetery by their son Robert of Oxford County, Canada West. Their children included: George (b.1793); John (b.1795); Alexander (b.1797); Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hill Place Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. William (1797–1877) son of Walter and Christian Gledstains, he was born in Hawick. He is said to have gone to London, but became a merchant in Glasgow, variously listed in the census reports as a ’Drysalter’, ‘General Merchant’, ‘Wine Merchant’ and ‘Iron Merchant’. He may be the William Richardson, Jun. who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Eliza Muirhead in 1823 and had children Walter, George, Jane, William and Christina Gladstone. William (b.c.1805) from the Morebattle area, he was a joiner in Hawick. He was living on the Round Close in 1841 and at 4 Backdamgate by 1851. He was listed as a joiner and a wheelwright on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed as a joiner and cartwright, employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Kelso. Their children included Euphemia, James (also a joiner), Elizabeth, Margaret and Euphemia (again). William (1827–90) Son of John. He was hosiery manager at Walter Wilson & Sons on Allars Crescent. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer Robison (whip and thong maker), and she died in 1905, aged 79. They had a son, John (who died in South Africa) and a daughter, Elizabeth (who died in infancy). His grave in Wellogate Cemetery is marked with an obilisk (formerly spelled ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richard’, ‘Richartsonne’, ‘Richartsonne’, ‘Richiesone’, ‘Ritchardsone’, ‘Ritchartsonne’, ‘Ritchieson’ and ‘Ritchiesone’).

Richardtoncleucht (ri-churd-tin-kloocht) n. nickname of Andrew (‘Dandy’) Crozier, one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tobooth. His name presumably came from Riccarton Cleuch in Liddesdale, or perhaps Richard’s Cleuch near Overton Bush in the Jed valley (see Riccarton Cleuch).

Richmond (rich-mind) n. James (1834–1923) son of Rev. John, he was born in Southdean. He studied at St. Andrews University 1849–51. In 1851 he emigrated to Australia, becoming a leading sheep breeder in New South Wales. He died in Kincairney, Perthshire. Rev. John (1784–1854) son of Rev. Dr. James of Irvine. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1804, was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1809 and was ordained as minister of Southdean in 1810 (being presented by Archibald, Lord Douglas, for whose family he had been tutor). In 1847 he retired to St. Andrews because of poor health and died in Edinburgh. He married Catherine Mitchell (who died in 1887, aged 89) in 1825. Their children were: Isabella Georgine; Margaret Cunningham; James, who became a sheep-farmer near Dunblane and in Australia; John, died young; George Mitchell, army Lieutenant in India, killed in action near Peshawar; and Catherine, died an infant. He published ‘Ode to the Memory of Thomson, in the Temple of the Muses at Dryburgh Abbey’ (1818), ‘A Sermon on Regular Attendance on Divine Worship, in Connexion with the Spirit of the Times’ (1820). He also wrote a description of Southdean Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1834 and he left many poems in manuscript form. Sir Thomas (d.1317) English leader from Yorkshire. He took part in the siege of Carlaverock Castle in 1300. In 1317 he led a part of the English force under the Earl of Arundel, which totalled perhaps 10,000 men. Sir James Douglas organised an ambush near Lintalee, with escape was prevented by twisting together the branches of young birch trees. He himself was killed, it is said by Douglas. William (b.1828/9) from Mauchline in Ayrshire. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with Thomas Masterton. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as ‘Richmond & Masterton’ in Slater’s 1852 directory (also written ‘Richmont’).

richtify (richt-tec-fl) v., arch. to correct, set right.

Rickerby (ri-kur-bee) n. Jane (b.1825/6) from Langholm, she was a dressmaker on the Howegate in 1851. She lived with her sister Mary Ann, who was a milliner. They were listed in Slater’s 1852 directory.

rickety-rackety-roo (ri-ki’ee-ra-ki’ee-roo) adv., arch. unsteady on the feet, particularly said of furniture.

rickle (ri-kul) n., arch. a pile, loose heap (of stones or peats), loose collection of things in general, v. to heap, form into a stack – ‘When are ye gaun to rickle your peats?’ [JoJ], poet. to rattle bones – ‘… Ricklin’ an’ rattlin’, cauld an’ ‘dry Wi’ cricklin’ riot’ [WP], ‘The Mune is but a rickle o’ stane – I maun gang oot, I maun gang oot, Her wunds they niddar till the bane …’ [DH].

rickle o banes (ri-kul-o-bánz) n. someone who is unhealthily thin, an emaciated person, a skeleton (the word ‘rickle’ mostly survives in this phrase).

rickly (ri-ku-lee) adj., arch. rickety, unsteady, delapidated, badly constructed.

ricmatic (rik-mu-teek) n., arch. group of people or things, sum total, entirety, caboodle – ‘But the bonniest lass o’ the hale ricmatic Is the lassie that works in the mill’ [WAP] (corruption of ‘arithmetic’: note the stress on the first syllable).

riddance (ri-dins) n., arch. intervention in a quarrel – ‘… but when he heard ane crying murther he straight way went up to make riddance and to allay tumult’ [PR1716].

Riddell (ri-dul) n. hamlet about 8 miles north of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, on the Ale Water, off the B6400. The surrounding area is the old estate of Riddell, formerly a barony, which is now well wooded, and contains the ruins of the main mansion (incorporating the older peel tower) as well as a more modern tower, built nearby on the site of a mediavial motte and bailey. It was the home of the Riddells of Riddell from probably the reign of David I (the mid-12th century, when it was referred to as ‘Wester-Lilliesleaf’) until they were effectively ruined following the death of Sir John in 1819, and it was sold to the Sprots in 1823. The short version of the story of the loss of the family home is that in the late 18th century Sir John changed the course of the river in order to improve the view, and became bankrupt in the process. In the early 13th century part of the ‘demesne’ lands were stated to be below ‘Harekamb’. The farm was burned in a raid by Turnbulls in about 1502, in which perhaps 480 sheep were stolen, along with 2 cows and goods, and a horse killed. The main lands were referred to as ‘Riddell Mains’ in 1643 and valued at £910, part of an estate of £1654. By 1678 the estate’s value was £1765. Tax was paid on 11 hearths on the estate in 1694, with John Winthrope, William Archibald and Alexander Kennedy being recorded there. Riddell House was an extensive mansion, destroyed by fire in 1943, although the remains can still be seen. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventions. There are 2 lodge houses for the estate, called ‘East Lodge’ and ‘West Lodge’. The estate also contains stables, a deer larder, two 18th century bridges and other old buildings. There was formerly a chapel on the estate. The mausoleum of the Sprot family lies within woodlands on the estate. The current farmhouse was built by Mark Sprot in 1826 as an estate office and extended in 1898; it contains a Sprot armorial panel, as well as some stones in the garden from the earlier mansion. A ridge about 700 m east of the present farm contains a roughly oval fort. A stone cist was unearthed near Willowbog Plantation on the estate around 1920 and reconstructed in the kitchen garden, although it has now disappeared. Court rolls for the barony court for 1698–1712 are in the National Archives (the origin is probably Old English ‘rydde dl’, meaning ‘valley cleared of trees’, the name being transplanted by the ‘de Rydale’ family, who held extensive lands in England; it is ‘Redoll’ in 1435, ‘Redale’ in 1436/7, ‘Reddail’ in 1479/80 and ‘Riddale’ in 1502 and 1534; it appears on Frederik de Wit’s map of c. 1680 and is labelled ‘Riddell or W. Lilsly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Riddell (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddle) Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Ridal’ in an English document of 1279 involving an inquest into lands in Ireland. Adam (16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He was part of an inquest into ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533 (in which his nephew George also took part). Adam (18th C.) resident of R伯顿 Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1781. He married Isobel Learmonth in Roberton in 1774. His children included Jane (b.1776) and Nelly (b.1781). Adam (b.1782) born in Kirkton Parish, son of George, he was a joiner at Overhall Cottages in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed there at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Robert, Janet, Georgina and Jessy, as well as an adopted daughter Isabella Aitchison. Agnes (17th C.) widow of Hawick merchant James Brydon, who is listed on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. She is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She may have been a shopkeeper of some sort on the High Street. Her children with James Brydon included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). Agnes (d bef. 1741) daughter of Henry and brother of William, portoner in Bewlie. She inherited the lands of Bewlie from her brother in 1695, specifically the 5-pound land of Bewlie and half of one of the cottage-lands in Lilliesleaf. She is described as ‘portioner’ of Bewley in 1699. She married John Nisbet, W.S. of Nisbetfield and their daughter Agnes married Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden). Christian and Jean Riddell (and their husbands) are recorded as her heirs in 1741. Agnes (b.1810/1) wife of Lilliesleaf joiner William. She was listed as a midwife in the 1851 census. She was a widow living at about 61 High Street, with her children Janet, Rachel and James. She may be the dressmaker of the same name listed on the Howegate in Slater’s 1852 directory. Alan (13th C.) recorded in about 1240 as witness to a charter for lands of Prendergast, among the documents of Coldingham Priory. He witnessed another gift of land in Coldingham in the period 1248–60. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Alexander (17th C.) miller at Newmill (on Teviot) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. He may be the Alexander, married to Isobel Little, whose daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1672. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1698 as ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Andrew (16th C.) witness to a sasine in 1559 for land in Wiltoun. This was attached to a sasine with Robert Riddell mentioned, so it is likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Possibly the same man is described as ‘Andrew Riddill of that ilk’ when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Rule Water in 1568. Andrew of that Ilk (1549/50–1632) son of Walter, with his mother probably being Agnes Ramsay. In 1581 he witnessed a bond of caution for Eliots, when he was listed as son and heir of Walter of that Ilk. In the 1580s he was a ‘tutor’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm, to whom he was related through his paternal grandmother. He also served as caution...
William of Muselee, who started that branch of whom there is a marriage contract in 1600 with cousin. He was succeeded by his son Sir John (for of Galashiels, who was either his first or second married to accept a baronetcy. He married a Pringle referred to as Baron of Riddell, and apparently rein about 1627). He is recorded in a bond of 1600 for lands in Lilliesleaf and also in 1600 was on the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was also named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. In 1610 he was recorded along with other Riddells, swearing not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. His cautioner was James, merchant in Edinburgh, who was probably a relative. He himself acted as cautioner cautioner for his son John in the same case. In 1611 he was commended by King James VI for his industry as convenor of the Justices of Roxburghshire. In about 1620 he had a charter for half the lands of ‘Cringillis’ from the Commendator of Melrose, and another charter for Allanshaws, ‘Woplaw’ and the west part of ‘Langlie’ from James Cairncross of Colmeslie. In 1620 he acted as bailie for Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, in a charter he granted to Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands; at the same time his daughter Jean was contracted in marriage to Walter, son of Sir Walter of Goldielands. He was probably the Laird of Riddell who represented Roxburghshire in the convention of 1617 and in Parliament in 1621. In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing 4 cows and an ox from his lands, and sheep from his lands of Whitton. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. Also in 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire, his son John also being listed there as ‘f iar’. He purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from William, son of Martin Elliot and Agnes Lorraine (as confirmed in a service to Walter of that Ilk in 1702). He was referred to as Baron of Riddell, and apparently refused to accept a baronetcy. He married a Pringle of Galashields, who was either his first or second cousin. He was succeeded by his son Sir John (for whom there is a marriage contract in 1600 with the daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston). He later married Violet, daughter of William Douglas of Pumpherton. His other children were: William of Muselee, who started that branch of the family in the Borthwick valley; James of Maybole (possible ancestor of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell); Walter (or perhaps Robert) of Hartside; Andrew of Haining, who inherited that estate; Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Edgerston and/or Archibald Porteous, minister of Oxnam; Isabel, who married Robert Kerr, brother of Thomas of Cavers Carre; and Jean (1600–60), who remained unmarried, and is buried at Jedburgh Abbey. Other daughters may have married Walter Scott of Goldielands (although this may be an error for the marriage contract between his daughter Jean and Scott of Goldielands, which perhaps was never fulfilled) and John Baillie (ancestor of the Bailies of Mellertain). In 1642 his widow Violet Douglas complained to the Privy Council about an attack on her tenants at Hartside. He is buried in the family aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard (where until fairly recently the inscription was quite legible), alongside his 2nd wife Violet. Andrew of Haining (1605/6–41) son of Andrew of that Ilk and his 2nd wife Violet Douglas. He was served heir to his father in 1636. He was said to be a ‘favourite son’ of his father. Along with his father and mother, he has one of the earliest legible panels in the Riddell aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. The initials ‘I.S.’ accompany his, probably those of his wife, who was Jean Stewart of Traquair (after his death his widow married Sir William Douglas of Kel-head). He was probably the ‘Andro Riddell’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1638 he was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk-shire. He was appointed Commissioner to Par-lament (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire (or ‘the forest’) 1639–41. He married Agnes of Fawside. His daughter Violet was the 3rd wife of Sir Robert Dalzell of Glenae. He was succeeded by his son John of Haining. He is buried in the Riddell Aisle at Lilliesleaf, with the inscription ‘whose life was short and good’. Andrew (17th C.) described as ‘now indweller in Over Quoitn’ in 1652 when he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was probably related to the Riddells of Riddell and Whitton. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid for the ‘fewary of Lilslie’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear how he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. It is possible he was the Andrew who died in 1701 and whose headstone is in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); and Robert (b.1671). Andrew (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Little-Cavers’ among men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed right after John, to whom he was presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Walter Miller in 1690. He could be the Andrew who married Bessie Dodds and had children in Ashkirk, including: Marion (b.1687); John (b.1690); Thomas (b.1693); and Andrew (b.1699). The witnesses in 1690 were John (probably a relative) and Thomas Kedie (who was also at Dryden). Andrew (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. Andrew (d.c.1698) recorded being ‘of Newhous’ in 1698 in a list of wills registered with the Commissariat of Peebles. This was probably the Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the Andrew, who was resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew of Haining (17th/18th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1696, this including 2 cottage-lands at Lilliesleaf Mill as well as the Haining and other lands in Selkirkshire. In 1701 he (or perhaps his sister Madgalene) sold Haining to Andrew Pringle of Clifton. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Goldielands. In 1702 he was recorded as ‘Subtenant in Goldielands’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant in Alton Croft. He also witnessed baptisms in 1704 for Robert Stoddart (tenant in the Flex) and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for Walter Wilson, for William Douglas of Bonjedward and for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1706 for William Scott in Branholme and for Robert Rutherford, in 1708 for William Gledstains, for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger and for Dand Gray in Whittalw, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Walter Scott in Goldielands and in 1713 for John Elliot, tenant in Goldielands. He was also recorded at Goldielands when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Henderson in 1706, blacksmith George Scott in 1707, Walter Scot in Crumhaugh, Thomas Turnbull (herd in Southfield) in 1708 and William Scott (tenant in Whitchester), for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and merchant William Black in 1711. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711 and in 1718. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1738. Andrew (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1796/7) from Selkirk, he was farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in 1851 farming 450 acres, employing 10 labourers and in 1861, as farmer of 400 acres, employing 9 men. He was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Agnes, John (who took over the farm), Jane, George and Janet. Rev. Archibald (1635–1708) 3rd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell, and brother of Sir John, 3rd Baronet. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and became minister at Kippen by about 1670. However, these were turbulent times and he came to be persecuted as a preacher of field conventicles. In 1677 he was one of 5 ministers who preached for 3 days in a field at East Nisbet for 3000 people. He was said to have taken part in conventicles locally and like his brother William, he was imprisoned for his Covenanting principles. In 1680 he was captured by Col. Henry Ker of Graden, a prominent Jacobite, while returning from Moffat Well. He was imprisoned in Jedburgh, after his watch, sword and money were taken from him. He was then taken to Edinburgh Tolbooth, and examined 3 separate times, although nothing could be found to connect him with the Battle of Bothwell Brig. Nevertheless, he refused to take the oath, and so after 9 months was moved to the Bass Rock, spending 3 years there. In 1681 he was allowed to visit his dying mother at Riddell House and was only finally released on condition of sailing to the plantations in America, his wife dying on the journey. He served as minister at Woodbridge in New Jersey (for fellows slaves) for about 3 years, returning to Scotland after the Revolution. However, the ship he was on, bound for Scotland, was seized by the French, and he was held prisoner (along with his 6 year old son) in deplorable conditions in a French dungeon for 2½ years before being exchanged for 2 Catholic priests. He was then minister of Wemyss, Kirkcaldy and Trinity College (Edinburgh). His first wife was Helen, daughter of Rev. Henry Aitkenhead of North Berwick and his 2nd wife was Jean Ker. His children included: Capt. Walter (d.1738), who retook his ship ‘the Phoebe’ from the French, acquired the Barony of Granton and was probably the son who was captive in France with his father; Dr. John Riddell Riddell

(d.1740), an Edinburgh physician; Janet, who married James, son of Sir James Dundas; and Sarah, who married Rev. John Currie of Oldhamstocks. His sister Alison, married Gabriel Semple, who was another well known field preacher. He was buried at Old Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Nichol and their children included James (b.1684). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthaugh. His daughter Isobel was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1704, with witnesses Walter Scott in Drinkstone and William Henderson. He is probably either the Archibald who married Katherine Kirkstone and William Henderson. He is probably either brother or nephew of Gervase. In 1159 he witnessed a charter of confirmation granted to the monks of Kelso by Malcolm IV. There was also an agreement between him and Uchtred, priest of Lilliesleaf, confirmed by Pope Alexander III in about 1160. In about 1208 Robert of Barnoldby confirmed his grant of Whiton (in Hownam Parish) to Melrose Abbey; these lands were granted for his soul, as well as those of Patrick and his son Walter. He married either Ascernia de Stonegrave or Elean, daughter of Robert de Morville (or perhaps both). His name is written ‘Askitill’, ‘Ansietil’, ‘Anskeitill’, ‘Ansketin’, ‘Ocietel’, etc. The next generation appears to be confused, with different charters stating that Patrick and William were both sons. It seems likely that his children included Walter, William, Patrick, Eda and Maud. Another son may have been Ralph, but this is less clear. He may also have had a daughter who married ‘Henricus de Haga’, one of the early Haigs of Bemersyde. Borthwick (b.1800/1) 2nd son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott, he was born in Teviotdale. He was farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish. He was a player of the bagpipes, and known as ‘Riddell the Piper’. He was said to be the best player of the small pipes in the Borders. He played at the wedding of a son of the Duke of Buccleuch and when a daughter of the Earl of Minto married Lord John Russell. There is a record of him being at a celebration (for the return of a Teri from America) in the Fleece Inn in the late 1840s at which he sang ‘Clean pease strae’. He published at least one poem and there is a tune called ‘Borthwick Riddell’s Hornpipe’. He was at Dryden in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 60 arable acres and 300 acres of hill land. He was already a widower by 1851. Maj. Charles of Muselee (1759–1849) eldest surviving son of Patrick and Margaret Balfour. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1870. He is probably the ‘Charles Riddle in Sinton a Batchelor’ who was taxed for having a female servant in 1786 and ‘Charles Riddal in Sinton’ taxed for both male and female servants in 1787–93; he thus must have lived at Synton for a while. He was also at Synton on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of Muselee in 1788 (when it was in Robertson Parish, valued at £100), as well as part of Bewlie (valued at £330), lands that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf (valued at £106 13s 4d), Ryecaster and Quartersides (purchased from Hunter of Linthill, valued at £50) and teinds in Lilliesleaf (valued at £95 1s 2d). He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and was then described as being ‘Once in Buccleugh’s Fencibles. A brother a Writer. Moderate estate. A Batchelor’. In 1793 he received some lands in Dryburgh from Henry Erskine of Sheffield. He was Major (or perhaps Colonel) in the local militia. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and was listed as owner of Muselee on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Sometime before 1813 he sold some lands in Lilliesleaf Parish (including Ryecaster Quartersides) to Sir...
John Buchanan Riddell of that Ilk, but still held onto the main lands of Bewlie there. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, dealing with rents in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Peeblesshire and Eskdale, in the period 1808–36; he was then replaced by William Ogilvie. During some of that period he lived at Branxholme, and was present at the banquet held in the Duke of Buccleuch’s honour in 1839. He was a member of the Forest Club. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823 and in 1825 subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In 1830 he chaired the meeting of the freeholders of Roxburghshire at which Henry Francis Scott, younger of Harden was re-elected as M.P. He was listed among the landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He lived to be about 90 (although there is some uncertainty over his birth date) and died unmarried. Muselee was inherited by his niece. Francis (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was living at Crook in 1737. He married Martha Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1733 and their children included: Agnes (b.1734), baptised in Kirkton; William (b.1737), baptised in Cavers; Helen (b.1741), also baptised in Cavers; and Margaret (b.1744), baptised in Hawick. He could be the son of William baptised in Hawick in 1710. Francis ‘Frank’ (b.1724) born in Hawick, and said to be descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He worked as a gardener. The details of his family were recorded in a bible belonging to the Fairgrieve family in Bridgeton, Maine. In 1746 he married Annie Neal. Their children included: John (b.1758), who was a gardener and sexton; and Walter (b.1760), who moved to Carlisle. He may be the same man as Francis in Ashkirk Parish. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded at Whitslade in 1753 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. Probably the same Francis married Janet Miller and had children, baptised in Ashkirk, including Helen (b.1755). Walter (b.1749), Janet (b.1751) and William (b.1753), baptised in Roberton, were probably also his children. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) had a charter giving a pasture in Primside to Kelso Abbey during the reign of William I, probably between 1185 and 1204. He also witnessed a charter to Melrose Abbey by Anselm de Mow in the period 1170–90. He was probably related to other Riddells, and appears to have been from Roxburghshire. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Geoffreys, although a direct connection with the Lilliesleaf branch seems likely. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) probably descended from Hugh, Lord of Blaye in England, with his mother also being an English Riddell. He appears to have united the lands of Wittering and Cranston. Through his wife Hawissa, daughter of William Peverel, he gained further lands in Essex. He was succeeded by another Geoffrey (or Galfridus). Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) referred to as ‘Gaufred de Riddell’, he was a younger son of Sir Patrick. He received some of his father’s lands during the reign of Alexander II. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) son and heir of John, with his mother being ‘Hauwsisa’, according to a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire. His wife was ‘Mabilia’ who has sasine of the lands of ‘Belyn’ and ‘Olerun’. He may be the same as one of the other Geoffreys. Geoffrey (d.1261) head of the main line of Riddells in England, son of Geoffrey. He held the Lordships of Wittering and Blaye, as well as Cranston in Scotland. He is recorded in connection to the peace settlements between England and France. He is recorded in a document at Dunwich in 1258. He was succeeded by his son Geoffrey. Geoffrey (d.1288) eldest son of Galfridus and head of the main English family branch. He is mentioned with reference to the conflicts between England and France, and probably still had connections with Scotland. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His sons probably included Geoffrey, Sir Hugh and Sir Nicholas. Geoffrey (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus, whom he succeeded in 1288 to the Barony of Blaye in England. He also possessed Wittering, as well as Cranston in Scotland, and probably other lands. He is listed as ‘Galfridus Ridel’ in a 1297 mandate to restore lands to Scotsmen who had sworn fealty to King Edward. He had a daughter, Alicia, but the family estates went to his brother Sir Hugh. Geoffrey of Riddell (d.c.1325) possibly son of Sir William and brother of William, whom he succeeded as 8th of that Ilk, although these generations are uncertain. He was also known as ‘Galfridus’, a family name that connects him with his Norman ancestors. He was probably succeeded by his son Sir William, while Sir Robert and Richard may also have been his sons. He may have had a daughter who married John Ainslie of Dophinston. He may be the same ‘Geoffry Ridel’ recorded in 1297 when his lands in both England and Scotland were restored by Edward I because he was in that King’s service abroad; in 1298 the same man was recorded as valet of Simon Fraser, when they were both with Edward in Flanders. He made gifts to Kelso and Melrose Abbeys during the reign of Alexander III. Sir Geoffrey (d.1346) son of Sir Hugh, head of the main English line. He was Baron of Montclare and Lord of Wittering and Cranston. He fought against Robert the Bruce, Sir Hugh, head of the main English line. He was Alexander III.

George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 receiving the Clerkship of Lilliesleaf Kirk from the Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding the deceased Thomas Riddell. Note that the Clerk at that time was like the assistant priest.
He was listed as a scholar and was no doubt a younger son of the Laird of Riddell. In 1522 he was succeeded by John, son of John Riddell of that Ilk. George of that Ilk (16th C.) son of John, he was succeeded by Walter, who was either his son or his nephew. It may be that he was just acting as Laird during the minority of his nephew, but this is unclear. He was part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533 when he was heir apparent to his father. He may have been the George who was ‘Bailie in that part’, along with William, according to a document of 1535 relating to Harden (into which family at least one of his aunts had married). It is possible he pre-deceased his father, but in any case the next in succession was Walter. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Janet Phaup in 1679 and their son William was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were James Shiel and James Sanderson.
He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for William Todshaw in 1686. George (d.c.1688) tenant in Lustruther when his will was recorded in 1688. George (18th C.) recorded at Newton in Kirkton Parish when his daughter Peggy was baptised in 1787. He was surely related to John, who was farmer there at the same time. George (d.be. 1809) resident of Howhill. His son Robert (a wright) died in Hawick parish in 1809. He may be the George who married Margaret Hobkirk in Hobkirk Parish in 1769. George William ne Hutton (1807–71) son of George Hutton of Carlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford. He was a banker of Newmarket-on-Trent and Magistrate for Notts, Carlton-on-Trent. In 1835 he married Mary, who was heiress of Muselee, being daughter of Walter and niece of Maj. Charles.
He assumed the additional surname of ‘Riddell’ in order to inherit the lands through his wife.
These lands included Whitfield in Wilton Parish.
After Mary died, he secondly married Hannah-Elizabeth, widow of J.O. Lambert, and theirdly married Janetta-Gonville Bromhead, Baroness.
He was succeeded by his son, also George William, and had another son, Edward Mitford. The surname in these couple of generations is often hyphenated as ‘Hutton-Riddell’. Capt. George William Hutton (1836–1915) son of George William Hutton, who had married Mary Riddell, the niece and heiress of Charles of Muselee. He thus inherited the Muselee lands and may later have lived there. He was educated at Rugby and was a Captain in the 16th Lancers. He sold the Dryburgh estate, as well as Bewtie and Bewlie Moor. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of Todshaw and Muselee in Robertson Parish, as well as Whitfield in Wilton Parish. In 1877 he married Evelyn Mary Craven, daughter of the Earl of Craven.
Their children included Capt. George Hutton and William Hutton, who was an artist. His name is sometimes hyphenated ‘Hutton-Riddell’. Gervase (11th/12th C.) one of the earliest Scottish family members, likely moving north along with other supporters of King David I. His name was recorded as ‘Gervasius’ or ‘Geraisus’. He was probably son of Philip, and surely from the Norman ‘de Rydale’ family who held lands in England. He witnessed a charter of David I in 1116.
He was made High Sheriff of Roxburgh about the same time, the earliest known in that office. He is recorded as Sheriff in a charter of 1138/9 and witnessed several other charters for King David in the early 1140s. He may have married Christian de Soulis, who was a donor to Jedburgh Abbey, giving a third part of the village of ‘Hernwinges-lawe’ (possibly Mervinslaw). He and his brother Radulf (or Ralph) gave the church of Abbotrule to Jedburgh Abbey (although it is also suggested that this was Abbotsley in Huntingdonshire). A son Hugh is said to have been the progenitor of the Riddles of Cranston Riddell (although the origin of that branch is a matter of debate). His son (or possibly brother) Walter was granted a charther of the lands of Lilliesleaf. He may have had other children, including ‘Jordanus’ and Adeliza (who married Henry ‘de Haga’, 3rd Laird of Bemersyde). He died at Jedburgh Abbey, probably following the custom in those days of the rich and Riddell

secular bestowing gifts on ecclesiastical institutions in return for atonement. It is also suggested that he may have been unrelated to Walter ‘de Riddale’, and was instead ancestor of the Riddells of Cranston Riddell, who did not use the ‘de’ prefix in their name. Henry ‘Harry’ (d.bef. 1670) eldest son of Walter. He was ‘portioner’ of Bewlie from 1663. He witnessed a contract for lands in Hobkirk Parish along (for Lorraine of Appotside) with his father in 1654 and others in 1656 and 1659. He also witnessed the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. The Archbishop of Glasgow ratified his lands at Bewlie in 1665 and in the same year there was an agreement between his tenants James Wright, Walter and George Davidson with the tenant of John Riddell of Muselee over boundaries between them. He married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1562. His children were William, Marion and Agnes (whose ‘tutor’ was Walter Riddell, younger of Riccalton). In 1686 Agnes married John Nisbet, lawyer in Edinburgh. Rev. Henry Scott (1789–1862) son of Henry, merchant in Glasgow. He was a contemporary of the author of ‘Scotland Yet’ and so sometimes confused with him. He originally trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to James Thomson and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1811. He resigned his Commission in 1825 and retrained as a minister, being licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1829, ordained at Longformacus in 1830 and translated to Duns in 1843. In 1818 he married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Gilchrist of Edinburgh. In 1831 he secondly married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of John Home of Stirkoke in Caithness. Rev. Henry Scott (1798–1870) minister and song-writer. He was born at Sorbie in Ewesdale (there is some confusion over the year of his birth), his parents Robert Riddell and Agnes Scott, being from Teviotdale. His father was a shepherd, who moved from Sorbie to Langshawburn in Eskdalemuir (when he was a child), later moving to Capplefoot (Hoddam Parish) then Deloraine in Selkirkshire. He had brothers who later lived at Dryeden, near Selkirk, and Brookside in East Lothian (this elder brother moving to Ramsaycleuchburn). He was educated in short stints at Davington, Roberton and Newmill and heard James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’ singing in his house when he was a child. At about age 15 he became shepherd at Deloraine, 2 years later moving to Todrig, where he got to know William Knox. After his father died, when he was 18, he resolved to study for the ministry, and so attended Biggar School and later Edinburgh University (and St. Andrews for a year), eventually being licensed by Biggar Presbytery in 1830. It was at Biggar that he became to be known as a poet, publishing ‘The Crook and Plaid’, and several articles for ‘The Clydesdale Magazine’. Before finishing with university he published ‘The Songs of the Ark’, which represents his longest poetic work on a single theme. He moved to live with his brother at Ramsaycleuchburn (near Teviothead) in 1831. After the local minister died, he was appointed as preacher at Caerlenrig Chapel of Ease (i.e. Teviothead Church) in 1832 (or perhaps 1833). He stayed at the Flex in his early years, walking 9 miles to church, and writing several songs there, including ‘The Hames of Our Ain Folk’. The Duke of Buccleuch later built him a cottage at Teviothead, where he remained for the rest of his life (and where he died). He was listed at Caerlenrig in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1839 he helped with the description of Cavers Parish, written by Rev. Strachan for the New Statistical Account. In 1841 he suffered what would now be called a nervous breakdown, and spent more than 3 years in the Crichton Royal Institution at Dumfries (he was missing for the 1841 census). He then returned to Teviothead, but did not resume his full ministerial duties, with other preachers taking over some of his duties until the first minister of the newly created Teviothead Parish was appointed in 1850. In 1844 he published a doctoral volume, and in 1847 he published a volume of collected verse, as well as an extensive essay on the Ettrick Shepherd (with a later article for the Archaeological Transactions. Many of his poems, written at Teviothead, were first published in the Hawick Advertiser. In later years he became involved with the Border Counties Association, became interested in local archaeological excavations and wrote about Cavers Parish for the Sinclair’s ‘Statistical Account of Scotland’. He took part in several events in Hawick, including the Burns Centenary, laying the foundation stone of the Old Parish Church, giving lectures, and awarding the prizes for the Auld Brig poetry competition. He was also Bard for the St. John’s Masonic Lodge of Hawick, and his masonic brethren visit Teviothead annually to remember him. He was presented with a harp (inspired by the lines of ‘Scotland Yet’) by Baille Paterson in 1859 (and this is now in the Museum). William Scott also presented Mrs. Riddell with an oil painting of her husband (perhaps the portrait by John A. Horsburgh, which is in the Museum). Another portrait (by Lancelot Watson in 1889) hangs in the Museum, which also has his home-made compass and caliper set, as well as his shepherd’s crook. He was still recorded at Teviothead Cottage in a directory of 1868. His attempts at biblical translation into Lowland Scots (printed privately for Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte) were an early philological influence on James Murray. He was writer of the works for ‘Scotland Yet’, probably Scotland’s most popular song of the latter half of the 19th century, and considered by many as the national anthem of its day (and recorded by Scocha in 2004). His publications include ‘Stanzas on the Death of Lord Byron’ (1825), ‘Songs of the Ark; with other poems’ (1832), ‘The Christian Politician; or the Right Way of Thinking’ (1844), ‘Poems, Songs and Miscellaneous Pieces’ (1847), ‘St. Matthew translated into Lowland Scotch’ (1856), ‘Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch’ (1857), ‘The Song of Solomon in Lowland Scotch’ (1858), ‘The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell’ (2 volumes, 1871) and ‘Scotland Yet and Other Verses’ (1898). His translations of biblical passages into ‘Lowland Scotch’ are interesting for the wealth of dialect words that they contain; however, with little precedent to build on, the translations are a strange mixture of genuine Borders vernacular, words taken from earlier Scots works and oddly spelled English. In all, he composed over 200 songs, with manuscripts unpublished at his death including ‘Malcolm of Wharden’, ‘Melvina of Eller’ and ‘The Dutiful Daughter’, this last being a play in 5 acts. In addition he published an article on ‘Store-Farming in the South of Scotland’ and another on ‘Footrot in Sheep’. In 1833 he married Eliza (1796–1875), daughter of William Clark, merchant in Biggar. Their children were: Walter Francis Montagu Douglas (1834–77), obviously named after his patron, who worked for the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank; William Brown Clark (1836–56), who was a poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20; and Robert H. (c.1840–87), who was a sheep-farmer in Australia; His own death came fairly suddenly, his last letter being an apology for being unable to attend the meeting of the Border Counties Association held in Hawick 2 days before he died. A 50 ft (15 m) high conical memorial cairn on the slopes of Dryden Fell above Teviothead is visible from the A7, erected in 1874, repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999. A plaque was placed at Sorbie by the Callants’ Club in 1928. He died at Dryden Cottage, which also has a commemorative plaque – ‘Henry Riddell is a name Puir auld Hawick micht fairly claim, ‘Scotland Yet’, a nation’s pride Was inspired by scenes that bide ’Mang the hills o’ Teviotside, Rich auld Hawick’ [TK]. ‘A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale, The wimpling waters seem to mourn the Bard of Teviotdale’ [JT]. Hugh (12th/13th C.) possibly the 2nd son of Sir Auskittel and brother of Walter. He is recorded as ‘Hug Ridel’ during the reign of William I, when he was witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow, regarding lands in Ashkirk Parish. He was ‘Hugone Ridel’ when he witnessed another charter of William I and one for the church of ‘inchtethor’. He was probably the Hugh who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King William, after he was captured at Alnwick in 1174. He donated the church of Cranston to Kelso Abbey in about 1190, and is stated by some accounts to be the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston-Riddell. Probably the same ‘Hugone ridal’ witnessed an earlier charter in the reign of King Malcolm and one from about 1151 for the Church of Brinkburne. Hugh of Wittering (d.bef. 1233) owner of lands in Northamptonshire. He is recorded receiving sasine of ‘Witteringa’ in 1188. His widow Sibilla was involved in land claims in 1233 and 1254. His son and heir was probably Richard, who was recorded being ‘in the power of the King of Scotland’ in 1233. He could be the ‘Hugh Ridel’ who witnessed a document (around 1206–14) for Earl David (later King of Scotland), regarding lands gifted to a church in London. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in 1236 when William Avenel made a claim against him for fees from lands in ‘Midentun’. It is unclear where this was, or how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is listed as ‘Dominus Hugo Rydel, miles’. He is probably the 2nd son of Geoffrey, who succeeded to the estates of the main branch of the English Riddells on the death of his brother, also Geoffrey. He also held the lands of Cranston in Scotland. It appears that for staying too long in Scotland, King Edward II took away his lands of Wittering and gave them to his son Geoffrey. However, he had other lands in Northumberland, obtained from his kinsman Sir William. He is probably the ‘Master Hugo de Rydale’ who is recorded in a Northumberland document of 1270. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Huwe Rydel’ in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. From Edinburgh, his entry is separate from ‘Dominus Hugo’. But he could be the same man as the entry for ‘Hughe Rydel, tenant le Roi, du Comte de Edeneburgh’. His seal consists of ‘a pile in base and a chief’ with the name ‘S HVGONIS RYEDEL’. Hugh (13th/14th C.) holder of the manor of ‘Wytering’ (i.e. Wittering) in Northamptonshire. He granted it to his son and heir Geoffrey in 1296, but was dispossessed in 1296 as a supported of John Baliol, when he was ‘in Scotland’. He could be the Hugh who was recorded in Berwick in 1296. In 1315 he was ‘Rydel, sometime lord of Wytering’ when his grant to his son was confirmed by Edward II. He is surely the same as one of the Hugh who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was probably the Hugh son of Richard recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. He may have been grandson of the Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in document relating to ‘Wyterine’ in Northamptonshire in 1233 and 1254. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Hugh de Rydal’ when he was involved in a raid on a house in Berwick in 1296. Probably the same Hugh was recorded in 1310/1 when his wife Mary Comyn asked for support for her and her family at Berwick. Sir Hugh (d.1363) son of Geoffrey, from whom he inherited the family lands of Montclare, Wittering and others in Northamptonshire. He petitioned to recover the Scottish lands of Cranston lost by his father. He died without issue, whereupon his lands were inherited by Sir Nicholas, whose grandfather Sir Nicholas was his grandfather’s brother. After that the representative of this main family line was Sir John, who did briefly recover Cranston, but must have sold or list it shortly afterwards. At this point the senior branch of the family in Scotland became the Riddells of that Ilk, based in Lilliesleaf. Isobel (17th C.) daughter of James, portioner of Lilliesleaf and wife of Adam Haig in Belses. In 1656 she was served heir to her father in his 16-shilling land within Lilliesleaf. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. James of that Ilk (d.c.1510) probably grandson of Quentin or perhaps Mungo, or perhaps son of Mungo and grandson of Quentin. He also had a brother, Thomas. His ancestry can be traced back to ‘Geraisus de Rydale’, who married Christiana de Soulis in the early 12th century; but from this point on the genealogy is much more secure. He was one of the first of the family to be referred to as ‘of that Ilk’, although the lands near Lilliesleaf were in the family for many previous generations. In 1471 he inherited the lands of ‘Quhittounis’ (i.e. ‘Whitton’ near Moreoverbattle) and ‘Westerlilliesclef’ (i.e. Wester Lilliesleaf). He is probably the ‘James Riddale’ who was witness to a Cranston sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6 and the ‘James Riddale’ who witnessed the ‘return’ for the Kers and the lands of Bothwickshiel in 1471. In 1477/8 he made an arrangement with John Waugh, over the lands of ‘Unerquhitone’, clearing debts with William Pringle; James kept Under Whitton, while John received lease of a ‘husbandland’ of land in ‘Esterleleselef’. In 1478/9 Margaret Murray resigned her lands of ‘Unirquhitone’ to him. And in 1478 he is referred to as ‘of that Ilk’ when he leased ‘Plewolande’ in ‘Ovirquyttoun’ to John Davidson in return for borrowing money. He also witnessed a charter to David, son of David Scott of Buccleuch for lands in Selkirk in 1478. In 1479 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Cessford. In 1483 he is recorded as ‘Riddale of Qhultowne’ when witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. An instrument of resignation of 1485 is recorded for the lands of ‘Unerquhitone’ with the Davidsions. He also witnessed a sasine in 1487 for the lands of Boonraw. In 1489, along with Walter Ker of Cessford, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He was recorded as Laird of Riddell and Whitton in 1493 and in that same year was the Laird fined for non-presence at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh, with Gilbert ‘Hoigsone’ acting as his suitor. In 1494 he was ‘Jacobum Riddale de Qhultown’ on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Lindsay. His children were: John, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1585), who married Walter Scott of Synton or perhaps Walter of Harden; and Christian, who also appears to have married Walter Scott of Harden. It also seems that there was a slightly earlier marriage between a widow of Riddell (said to have been a Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably Elizabeth) and a Scott of Harden; these marriages between Riddells and Scotts of Harden could be conflated. James of Maybole (17th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of that Ilk. It is unclear if his lands were at Maybole in Dumfriesshire or somewhere else. It has been suggested that he might have been ancestor of Robert, father of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. James (d.bef. 1656) portioner of Lilliesleaf. In 1656 his daughter and heir Isobel, wife of Adam Haig in Belses, inherited his 16-shilling land within Lilliesleaf. James (17th C.) probably son of Walter, portioner of Bowlie, who resided at Appotside in the Rule valley. He was witness to discharges of Hobkirke teinds in 1659 and in 1660, when he was described as ‘of Harrit’ (presumably ‘Harwood’). In another document he signed as ‘son lawfull to Elispethe Haistie in Harwood’. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th C.) shepherd at ‘Bosathill’ (i.e. Bowset Hill) in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was ‘deficient’ in paying the tax, and his entry reads ‘to Ingland’. James (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 his wife Bessie Scott was leasing a third of the farm of Wiltonburn; she may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. In 1734 there is a record of the funeral of Bessie, who may have been his daughter (or wife). James (17th C.) recorded near Larriston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was recorded having a kiln. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn when he got married in 1718 (with no wife’s name listed). James (18th C.) wright at Branxholme Park. He was there according to a Robertan baptism in 1737. In 1740 he was at ‘Park’ when he witnessed a Hawick baptism for William Brown and Helen Riddell (who may have been related to him). His children included Walter (b.1737), baptised in Roberton. His unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1740, with witnesses herd James Armstrong and John Brown. It is possible that he was the James who married Isobel Dryden in Roberton in 1732. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1727 and 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1734. In 1726 he married Isobel Williamson, who was from Stow. His children, baptised in Roberton, probably included some of (with the rest likely being children of the wright at Branxholme Park): Thomas (b.1727); William (b.1729); Robert (b.1731); Helen (b.1733); Nellie (b.1734), although this baptismal entry appears to be crossed out; Margaret (b.1734); James (b.1735). James (18th C.) recorded at Menslaws in 1746 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Laidlaw. The witnesses were mason Andrew Wilson and merchant Francis Gledstains. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Elliot and was at Priesthill in 1777 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Col. James (d.1804) son of Sir Walter. He served in the army in Holland. He was entered onto the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780, when listed as a Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1788 he was listed with the same rank and ‘In the service of Holland’ among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir John Scott of Ancrum (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was later factor of the Riddell estates. He could be the James who is recorded owning half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Liddlesdale. It is said that the family lived on the banks of the Liddel for many generations, and were related to the other Roxburghshire branches. His children were: James (b.1781), who emigrated to Canada; Henry; William; and Thomas. If the birthdate of the elder son is confused, then he could be the James who married Janet Elliot and whose children James (b.1791) and Henry (b.1794) are recorded in Castleton. Sir James Buchanan (1765–84) 8th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his brother Sir Walter. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, but drowned while swimming in the River Brunswick at age 19 after being Baronet for only a few months. He was succeeded by his brother Sir John Buchanan. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Leaheads in Wilton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. James (b.1781) son of Liddlesdale shepherd James. If his birth date was really 1791, then he could be the son of James and Janet Elliot recorded in Castleton Parish. He joined the army and lived in Berwickshire. He married Isabella, daughter of George Hogg (and army officer) and Margaret Van Buren (from Hackensack, New Jersey). He was living at Ednam in 1835 when he emigrated to Canada with his family. His children included: James Van Buren, who died young; George Hogg, who also died young; and Dr. Alexander Dow (b.1824), who became a doctor in Compton, Quebec. James Scott (1780/1–1835) resident of Castleton Parish. He died at Larriston Rigg and was buried in Castle- ton. His children Isabella (1809/10–37) and John (d.1837) died of smallpox on board the Cornubria on the coast of New Brunswick. James (b.1807/8–bef. 61) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer at Lochburnfoot in 1851. He married Jane (or Jean, b.1809), daughter of Castleton shepherd James Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Eliza (1833–81), who married Andrew Stark; Christian (b.1835); William (b.1839); Mary (b.1842); James (b.1845), who married Jessie Scott; and Jane (b.1855). His wife was a widow living at Calaburn in 1861. James (b.1836) son of John Lamb and Agnes Riddell, he was born at Timpendean. He was a grocer, butcher and farmer in the Morebattle area and later moved to Newcastleton. In 1867 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Cavers, carter in Newcastleton. Their children were Adam, Violet Turnbull, Agnes Isabella, Elizabeth Jane, Margaret and Robina Cavers. James (b.1845) son of James and Jean Elliot, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was a ploughman in Lilliesleaf and later a carter in Edinburgh. In Cavers Parish in 1866 he married Jessie (1844–99), daughter of James Scott and Agnes Bell. Their children were Agnes Giles (b.1867), James (b.1869), Jane (b.1871), Robert (b.1874), Janet (b.1874, Elizabeth (b.1880) and William (b.1886). Janet (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Jean (b.1655) eldest daughter of Walter of Minto. She married Sir Robert Laurie, 1st Baronet of Maxwelton. They had 3 sons and 4 daughters, one of whom, Annie, was famed for her beauty. William Douglas of Fingland composed the verses ‘Annie Laurie’ in her honour in about 1700 (but failed to woo her, since she married Ferguson of Craigdarroch). John (d.bef. 1235) recorded in a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire, involving his wife’s dower lands in ‘Hadirk’. His wife was ‘Hawysia’ and his son and heir was Geoffrey. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem de Ridel’ in the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. This was regarding a piece of land in Denton on the Tyne, which had also belonged to his father John. ‘Ela, uxor Johannis de Rydale’ is also recorded separately, and so either his wife or wife of another John. In the same records ‘Walterus de Chendal’ is accused of striking his servant, who was also called ‘Johannem de Ridial’. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother ‘Hawysia de Newenham’ and her lands in ‘Rodewood’. John of Ayton (13th C.) recorded as witness to several charters involving the lands of Renton and Ayton in Berwickshire in about 1280. It is unclear how he was related to other early Riddells. John (15th C.) resident of lands in Lauder, recorded in 2 charters of 1501. John of that Ilk (d.1542) son of James. In 1502 he was ‘junior of that Ilk’ when listed along with Douglasses and others from the Jedburgh area as people guilty of attacking Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. In 1503 he had sasine for the lands of Whiton and Wester Liliesleaf. In 1507/8 he was a witness to the document for Scott of Whitchester relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the ‘Larde of Riddale’ who was on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was a witness in 1529 to the indenture to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Elizabeth Murray. He granted part of the land at Lilliesleaf to Patrick Earl Bothwell in 1534. In 1535 he was witness to a charter of George, Lord Hume, confirming the lands of Harden to William Scott of Harden, and was also witness to Simon Scott of Fenwick resigning Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden in 1540. He was possibly succeeded by his son George or his grandson Walter, but these generations are confused. A document of 1533 lists George as his heir apparent, while in 1551 the lands of Bewlie went to William, brother of his heir Walter; it is unclear whether he was already deceased at this time, and whether Walter was his nephew or grandson. Other possible sons were John and George. He may be the Riddell of that Ilk who married Elizabeth Ker of Fairmilee (who later married William Scott of Harden and Todrig). John (16th C.) son of John of that Ilk. In 1522 he succeeded George Riddell (probably his uncle or other near relative) as Clerk of Lilliesleaf Parish. This means he was acting as assistant Priest, or at least held a small benefice for this position. Sir John 1st Baronet of Riddell (d.1636) eldest son of Andrew of that Ilk. In 1602 his father resigned lands in Lilliesleaf to him. In 1611 he was cautioner for Robert Davidson in ‘Fallois’ and for Andrew Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1610 he and his father had a bond not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. In 1616 he had an inhibition from the Lords of Council regarding lands in Hownam. He was a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was still ‘appeirand of yat ilk’, and was voted as ‘chancellor’ of the assize. In 1623–24 he was involved in a court case over teinds for the lands of Over Whiton. In 1624 he was foreman of a jury in Edinburgh for a Liddesdale cattle-stealing case. In 1628 he was ‘apparent of that Ilk’ when charged to be part of a local Commission to hold courts. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628, with his lands erected into a barony and regality of New Riddell (comprising 16,000 acres on the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). Also in 1628 he was one of the major landowners of Roxburghshire who conveyed to elect M.P.s., his name recorded as ‘Jhone Riddell fear of that Ilk’, his father still being the Laird of Riddell. These proceedings were quite protracted, and he even refused to serve when selected. In 1600 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston and Blackbarony; the husbands of her sisters included the Earl of Ancrum, Patrick Murray of Phglliphaugh and Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Capt. John, an officer in the army in Holland; Sir William, who became Governor of Desborough or Doessburgh in Holland; Thomas; and Ann, who married Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir James Anstruther, widow of James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose Abbey; they had one daughter, who married David Barelay of Colernie. One of his daughters may have married John Scott of Gorrenberry. John of Muselee (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s, also holding the lands of Bewlie. He was son of William and Bessie Ainslie and grandson of Andrew of that Ilk, and was served heir to his father in 1653. He was recorded paying £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663; he may also be the John who paid tax on £52 in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Cringles. In 1665 his tenant John Dodds made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over the boundaries between them. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. Also in 1678 he paid the land tax on Muselee in Hawick Parish and on part of Bewlie (formerly owned by the Turnbulps) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He appears to have married Elizabeth Haliburton in 1639 and only a few years later married Grezil, daughter of Rev. P. Schew. His children included William (who probably died young) and Patrick (who succeeded). He also had 3 daughters. John (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. He may be the same John in Headshaw Mill who was also listed among ‘ye poor’. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John 3rd Baronet of Riddell (d.1700) son of Sir Walter. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Bluebeard’ because he had 4 wives. He was served heir to his father (and grandfather Sir John) in 1669, including several lands in Lilliesleaf Parish and elsewhere. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Morebattle and Hownam Parishes, as well as tax on land valued at £1765 in Lilliesleaf Parish (having sold Riddell Mill, but purchased lands from the feuars of Lilliesleaf). In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was apparently a zealous Covenanter, being imprisoned (in the Tolbooth of Haddington) for his principles, and probably also for supporting his brother, Rev. Archibald. In 1684 he was fined the most of any Roxburghshire heritor, the huge sum of £52,000. However, he received a remission from the King in 1687. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was also appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. an M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1690 and served until his death. He married Agnes, daughter of Gideon Scott of Highcheston and Harden in 1659. She received lands in Whitton ‘in liferent’ from his father in 1659. She must not have survived long, since in 1661 he secondly married Helen, daughter of Sir Alexander Morrison of Preston Grange; they had a son and a daughter together. He thirdly Margaret Swinton of that Ilk, with whom he had another son and daughter. And lastly the widow of Watt of Rosehill, formerly Miss Hepburn (this only about a year before his death). His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Christian, who married Henry, eldest son of Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean; William (d.1700), who died without children; and Margaret. He may also have had a daughter Helen, who married Robert Kerr of Cavers Carre, and another son, Alexander. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Mervinslaw among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) listed ‘eisit the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682, and another for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell (who was probably related to him). He could be the John who married Anna Agnes Dickson, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1679), Robert (b.1681), Helen (b.1684) and Walter (b.1686). John of Haining (d.bef. 1696) son of Andrew of Haining and grandson of the first Riddell (of Riddell) to hold the Haining estate. He was served heir to his father in 1643. He was recorded in the county valuation in 1643, his part of Bewlie being valued at £390. He was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663 and Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire in 1665. He is probably the Laird of Haining recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, along with his mother, when they paid tax on £390 in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Sheriff Principal and also Provost of Selkirk. In 1671 he made an agreement for setting up a stud of horses for the King’s use. He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1685 and 1690. His grand-daughter Magdalene married David Erskine of Dun and sold the estate to the Pringles. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, who was served as his heir in 1696. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for three hearths, since he was ‘wt tuo kilns’. This suggests he was a miller or some other kind of tradesman. He was probably related to Walter, who was at Whithope Mill in at least 1714–29. John of Muselee (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Patrick and Maria Elliot. He is recorded in a document of 1710 involving the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1707 he and John Nisbet were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1706 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Walter Riddell from Lilliesleaf, who was tenant farmer at North Synton. Their children were: Patrick (b.1707), who succeeded; Walter (b.1709); Andrew; William (b.1713), who moved to Berwick, where he became a successful merchant; Barbara (b.1715); John (b.1717); Alexander (b.1719), baptised at North Synton; James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Thomas (b.1724), who was also a merchant in Berwick; and an unnamed daughter. He is probably the John ‘of Mewslee’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Minto Mill, probably related to the local Lairds. He is recorded in 1710 when his son Patrick became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Salenside in 1710 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1710. Perhaps the same James was at Borthaugh in 1712 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Anna (b.1701), baptised in Roberton, may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a servant in Commonside in 1708. He married Janet Young and their children included: Robert (b.1708); an unnamed child (b.1719); Walter (b.1722); Janet (b.1726). The witnesses in 1708 were James Grieve and Walter Purdom in Commonside. John (17th/18th C.) recorded living in Branzholmie Town in 1713. He married Janet Turnbull and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Robert Thomson and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) miller, probably at Newmill. In 1724 he was witness to a Hawick Parish baptism there. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 and Harden in 1733. His children included Agnes (b.1731), Henry (b.1733) and Margaret (b.1736). John (18th C.) tenant in Whithope Mill. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. He was surely related to Walter, who was there in the 1710s and Walter who was there in the 1770s. John (d.bef. 1747) eldest son of Sir Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He was an advocate and said to be highly accomplished. He died before his father, so that his younger brother (also Sir Walter) succeeded to Riddell. Sir John (d.1768) 6th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding from his father Walter, his elder brother Walter having died first. He was a merchant in Curacao, returning on his father Walter’s death. He was ‘of that Ilk junior’ in 1761 when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1762 he married Jane Buchanan, daughter and heiress of James Buchanan from Sundon, Bedfordshire; he granted her a bond of provision for lands in Riddell in 1768, and she died in 1798. She must have been he Lady Riddell who was recorded in 1794 paying the tax for having 4 male servants at Riddell. In 1772 he succeeded to the Buchanan estates on the death of his wife’s brother. He died at Hamstead in Middlesex, after being Baronet for only about 3 years, leaving a young family. His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Sir James Buchanan, who succeeded his brother; and Sir John Buchanan, born posthumously, who also succeeded to Riddell. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1768. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife was Jean Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); Janet (b.1755); William (b.1757); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. John (18th C.) farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–89. His daughter Maragret was born in 1786 and son John in 1787. John (b.1758) son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He was a gardener and also sexton (but it is not clear for which church). In 1780 he married Peggy Parris and they had 12 children: Ann (b.1784), who died young; Isabella (b.1786), who also died young; Janet (b.1788), who married Michael Dryden; Francis (b.1792), who married Euphemia Scott, drove a mail coach for about 19 years, and died in Northumberland; Isabella (b.1795), died young; James (b.1797), who married Janet Rae and worked as a coachman; Adam (b.1798), who married Martha Leatherhead and moved to Edinburgh; John (b.1801), who was killed in a threshing mill at the age of 19; Jean (b.1804), who married John Watson from Selkirk; Katharine (b.1806), who married weaver John Fairgrees and emigrated to Bridgeton, Maine; John (again, b.1809), who worked as a coachman and married Barbara Hall; Mary (b.1810), who died young. Sir John Buchanan (1768–1819) 9th Baronet of Riddell, youngest son of John the 6th Baronet, being born posthumously. He succeeded from his 2 elder brothers. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Riddell estate, as well as Cringles and Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish and Whiton in Hownam Parish. He was said to be a man of elegant, but stiff manners, and who was a benefactor of the working classes. He was known as a keen agriculturalist with ambitious ideas, some of which led to the ruin rather than improvement of the Riddell estate. Both he and Lady Riddell (presumably his mother) were listed in the Carriage Tax Roll of 1792/3 and 1797/8 and paid tax for male servants and horses in 1794 and 1797. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of no fewer than 39 farm horses, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses (with Lady Riddell listed separately in 1794, with 4 carriage horses). He also paid tax for having 9 non-working dogs at Riddell in 1797. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He was M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1812–19 and also stood as a candidate for Selkirkshire. He was Colonel of the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia, based at Kelso. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He still owned the lands of Over Whiton and others in Hownam Parish according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811; he also owned the lands of Bank, Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, Hoglair-burn and parts of other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. In 1805 he married Frances, daughter of Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, and she died in 1868, aged 90. Their children were: Francis Jane (b.1806), born in Edinburgh; Harriet (b.1808), born at Riddell House; Walter Buchanan (1810–92), who succeeded; Rev. John Charles Buchanan (1814–79), Rector of Harriestham in Kent, whose son John Walter succeeded later; Frances Jane; Emily (d.1881), who married John Adams; Charlotte Mary (d.1869); Gen. Charles James (b.1817), who served with the Royal Artillery; and Henry Philip (b.1819), who was born posthumously, like his father, worked with the Indian Service, and was awarded the Star of India. John (1766–1840) 5th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was involved with the founding of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He farmed at Timpedean, later moved to Grahamslaw and then became collector of taxes. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811; he was listed as ‘J. Riddell, Esq. Timpedean. He died unmarried in Jedburgh. John (c.1780–1851) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Wauchope. He spent 37 years as shepherd at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish) and then rented the farm of Berryhall next to Abbotsford. In 1841 he was at Clarilaw with his wife and daughter Betty. His wife was Margaret Turnbull (1777–1862) from Hawick, and they must have married when he was quite young (although not in 1791, as sometimes suggested). Their children included: Walter (1800–81), who married Margaret Baxter, and was a farm labourer in Bowden and later at Philiphaugh; Margaret (1802–94), who married stone mason Walter Ballantine of St. Boswells; James (1804–92), who succeeded later; Frances Jane; Emily (d.1881), who married Andrew Scott and died in Hawick; and Turnbull (c.1823–91), who married Helen Clarkson. Many member of the family are buried at Bowden. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Whillans in Cavers Parish in 1789. John (b.1790/1) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eastfield in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 180 acres and employing 2 labourers. His wife was Agnes and their children included Archibald, Isabella, John and Thomas. John (d.1843) joiner in Lilliesleaf, eldest son of William. He married Betsy Turnbull. His children included: William (b.1816), who was also a joiner; Jean (b.1819); and Mary, who had a baby the same day that her father died. Rev. John Charles Buchanan (b.1814) 2nd son of Sir John Buchanan, 9th Baronet. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge and was a Fellow of All Souls' College. He became Rector of Harrietsham in Kent and was Honorary Canon of Canterbury. He was heir presumptive to the Barony, since his elder brother Walter Buchanan had no children. He had 8 children of his own, and his son John Walter succeeded. John (b.1832/3) son of Andrew. He took over as tenant farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in the 1860s, and was also a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. John (19th C.) farmer at Peel in Liddesdale in 1868. John (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, in Cavers Parish, in the 1860s. Sir John Walter Buchanan (1849–1924) 11th Baronet of Riddell, son of Rev. John Charles, he succeeded his uncle, Sir Walter. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became a barrister. He served as High Sheriff of Northumberland. In 1874 he married Sarah Isabel, youngest daughter of Robert Wharton. He was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan, who married Rachel Beatrice Lyttelton. Sir John Charles Buchanan (1934–2010) 13th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father when only 5 months old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, being 2nd Lieutenant in the King's Royal Rifle Corps and then qualifying as a chartered accountant. He served as Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales and Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland. He was also on many other boards and committees and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1969 he married Sarah, daughter of Baron Richardson of Duntisbourne and they had 3 sons, including Walter John Buchanan, who succeeded. Sir Jordan (12th C.) probably a son of Sir Auskittel. Although he appears to be directly descended from the Riddles of Riddell, it is unclear how he was related to other Riddles in the north of England. He was most likely named after Jordanus de Fleming, who could have been his uncle. He witnessed a grant to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1160, and another grant of lands in Berwickshire and Roxburghshire to Walter, son of Alan the Steward in 1161/2. He witnessed a confirmation of donations to Dunfermline Abbey in about 1166 and another charter of lands in the Lothians and Fife at about the same time. He was also witness in 1173/4 for lands in Angus. Probably the same man was Sheriff in Northumberland, with estates at Tilmouth in Durham. His wife's name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Walter. Margaret (d.c.1631) sister of William of Greatlaws. She married Andrew Duncanson, minister at St. Boswell's. In 1630 she was served heir to her brother's lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish, but died soon afterwards. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded in connection with money Sir Gilbert Elliott gave to the Hawick Kirk Session for keeping her in Wilton, suggesting she was supposed to be resident in Hawick Parish. Another record refers to her as 'being mad'. Mary (17th/18th C.) also known as Margaret, she married John Scoon, who farmed at Branzholme Town. In 1705 she was renting part of Branzholme Town, with her cautioner being Walter (probably her brother or other close relative). She was still renting part in 1708 and is recorded along with her son (whose name is not given), leasing part of the farm of Branzholme Town in 1711 and 1712. By 1714 she was renting part of the farm with Robert Scoon, making it clear that this was her son. The pair were in arrears until at least 1718 and in 1719 she was replaced as tenant by Walter Scoon. Mary (1809–52) only daughter of Walter, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Muselee. Her mother was a daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. In 1835 she married George William Hutton, who was a banker at Newark (son of George Hutton of Chorltonon-Trent and Frances Mitford of Mitford Castle). Their son was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell, who succeeded to the Muselee estates on the death of her uncle Charles in about 1849. They had another son, Edward Mitford Hutton Riddell. Matthew (13th C.) recorded as 'Matheo Rydel' when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Ayton. This was sometime in the period 1247–60. A Matthew from the previous century was Abbot of Peterburgh. Michael (14th C.) witness to a charter of Adam de Roule for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354. He is recorded as 'Michaele de Rydale', and was probably part of the Riddles of that Ilk. Mungo (d.1471) recorded as 'Mungo de Redale' in 1436/7, when Richard 'de Lyliscleane' resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to him as his superior. In 1435 he is 'Mungo de Redoll' when he gained lands in the Regality of Sprouston from 'Marioun Wedale', widow of John; he held his court at ‘Wester Lillieslead’ (i.e. ‘Wester Lilliesleaf’). He may have been succeeded by his grandson (or son) James. However, his relationship with the nearby contemporary Quentin is unclear. One possibility is that he was Quentin’s son (and therefore James’ father), and that they were both referred to as ‘of Riddell’ for several years; another possibility is that they were brothers, and shared the lands of Riddell and Whittington in some way. If he was James’ father, then he also had a son called Thomas, who was James’ brother. Mungo (16th C.) described as ‘Sir Mungo Riddele, chaplain’ when he was witness to a document in 1556 relating to the lands of Nether Harden. Given that all the other witnesses were fairly local it is reasonable to assume he was attached to one of the nearby churches, say Wilton or Ashkirk. His name occurs after that of Walter of that ilk, who may therefore have been his father or brother. Sir Patrick of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 4th Laird, son of Ausketil (although some sources suggest he was son of Walter). He made donations to Melrose Abbey, including lands at Lilliesleaf and Whittington. In 1208/9 he confirmed the granting of lands to Whittington to Melrose Abbey, which had originally been granted by Auskittel (probably his father). In 1454 James II confirmed his grant of lands in Whittington to Melrose Abbey, his name being given as ‘Patricius de Ridale’ and the land being ‘ywittuna’. He married Christiana de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’) of Alnwick, one of whose relatives (possibly her father) married Margaret, an illegitimate daughter of William the Lion. He was succeeded by his son Walter. It is sometimes claimed that another son was William, who married Matilda Corbet, but he actually seems to have been a brother. Another son may have been Gaufred. His seal bore a lion ‘passant’, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIGILLUM PATRICII DE RIDALA’. Patrick of Riddell (15th C.) recorded in 1438 when he was on the ‘reto of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. It is unclear how he might be related to other Riddells of that ilk, particularly Mungo and Quentin, who were Lairds at about the same time. Patrick of Muselee (d.1698) son of John of Muselee and Grizel Schew, he was probably the 3rd Riddell of Muselee. He was the 2nd son, but succeeded to Muselee and Bewlie, since his older brother William had died first. He leased Roberton from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 9 years. He was on the Commission of Supply for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the ‘muslie Elder’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1681 in Roberton Parish he married Maria (or Mary) Elliot; she was from Beechwood, daughter of Thomas of Bewlie and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and hence related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1682); John (b.1683); Margaret (b.1684); Thomas (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas and William Elliot (perhaps his father-in-law and brother-in-law) and in 1686 were William Elliot and Robert Scott. He was succeeded by his son John, while his grandson William was ancestor of the Riddells of Berwick. In 1697 a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, and he himself was buried there in 1698. Patrick of Muselee (1707–72) son of John of Muselee. He was probably the Patrick ‘of Newsle’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Patrick who paid the window tax on Headshaw in 1748 and on ‘Adzhall’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1753. In 1752 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows. Their children included: John (b.1754), who died young; Charles (b.1756), also died young; Walter (1758–1809), who was a lawyer; William (b.1759); Charles (b.1759), who succeeded; Thomas (1761–1849), with the East India Company; John (1766–1840), who farmed at Timpendean; and one daughter. It is unclear if he was born in 1707 or 1709. Peter (13th C.) recorded as valet of Sir Henry de Pinkney in a 1298 roll of war horses used on Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He is recorded as ‘Peter de Ridale’. Possibly the same ‘Petrum de Rydale’ is recorded along with his brothers Thomas and Robert in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. Philip (11th/12th C.) possibly ancestor of the local Riddells. He was probably son of Galfridus (otherwise known as Geoffrey), who accompanied William the Conqueror, gaining large English estates. He was probably brother of Hugh, who gained extensive lands in Northamptonshire, as well as Cranston in Midlothian. It is likely he was father of Gervasius, who received lands in Roxburghshire from David I. Other sons were probably Walter, Auskittel and Ralph. Philip (13th C.) Burgess of Berwick. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital, which is undated, but probably shortly before 1270. He was recorded as a merchant in Berwick in 1276 and burgess there in 1277, 1281 and 1283. He was Mayor of Berwick in 1291, as recorded in one of the Ragman Rolls. It is unclear whether he was the family chief at the time, but he is referred to as ‘Philippe de Redale’. He was also recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1292, and in 1293 had a letter of safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as well as his lands in England, to the hospital Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Whitsome safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as well as his lands in England, to the hospital Chirnside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Whitsome.

Philippum de Rydale’ on the 1276 assize roll of on a jury in Berwick in 1302 and may be the of a grant to the hospital there. He was also a younger son of Geoffrey of Riddell, and hence brother of Sir William and Sir Robert. However, precisely how he was related to earlier and later Riddels of that Ilk is unknown. There is no record of a wife or family. He witnessed 2 charters to Ker of Altonburn in 1357/8 and 1358. Note that an earlier Richard was recorded about the 1230s, associated with Preston in East Lothian. Robert (13th C.) witness in about 1250, along with William, for a charter of Lempitlaw to Soutra Hospital. His name is recorded as ‘Roberto Redale’. Also in 1254/5 he was recorded in a charter for the lands of Mow and in about the 1250s witnessed a gift of lands in Berwick. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Cumberland in 1271/2. Perhaps the same Robert was witness in 1279–86 to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. The phrase ‘Curia de Sprowys-ton’ comes after his name, although it is unclear if he was the ‘curate’ of Sprouston, or some unnamed person. He was probably brother or son of William. Sir Robert of Riddell (14th C.) probably related to the nearly contemporary Richard of Riddell, but the succession in these generations is very uncertain. It is possible that he was a younger son of Geoffrey, succeeding after his brother Sir William. However, it may be that he was never Laird himself. He witnessed a charter of lands in Mow granted to Kelso Abbey. He also acted as a cautioner of the Laird of Mowe who was a hostage in England. Robert (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, in 1559 he was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden. He may have been son of Walter and Mariotta Pringle (although these generations are not clear). He was Bailie of the Barony of Wilton. He may also be the Robert who received part of his father’s lands at Minto. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Newbigging when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newbigging this was. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably tenant in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, with James Davidson (probably also Newbigging) as the other witness. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. He could be the Robert who married Janet Sander- son and whose children included: Janet (b.1684); and Robert (b.1686). Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Haw- wick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Phillhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. Robert (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Newmill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) and at Allanhaugh Mill in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Tuhope in Raesknowe. It is possible that the same Robert was miller at Falnash in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart, smith at Falnash. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1716, 1718 and 1722. He is probably the Robert who married Bessie Sinton in Roberton in 1707. His children probably included Christian (b.1708), John (b.1709), Isobel (b.1716), Agnes (b.1718), Walter (b.1720) Robert (b.1722) and James (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1717, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Kirk- ton Parishes. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He was recorded living at the Sandbed in 1718 and 1736. He married Marg- aret Oliver in 1718, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their chil- dren included: Andrew (b.1719); Bettie (b.1720); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1733); and John (b.1736). The witnesses in 1720 were James Pur- cell and Robert Roger and in 1736 were William Riddell (surely a relative) and Thomas ‘Gillas’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at East Burnfoot in 1721 and 1729. He married Isobel Riddell (probably in 1718, al- though no wife’s name is recorded) and their children included: Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); John (b.1723); Walter (b.1729); and George and William (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were an- other Robert Riddell and Alexander Moore, and in 1729 were George Stewart and James Scott. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for George Stewart in Groundstone. He was probably related to Wal- ter, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Whitehaugh Mill. He took out a one year lease on Highchesters Mill in 1743. He may be related to the Robert who was later at Todshawhillshiel. Rev. Robert (c.1710– 60) 6th and youngest son of Sir Walter, the 4th Baronet of Riddell and Mary Watt of Rosehill. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1732, was presented to Lilliesleaf by Robert, Duke of Roxburghie in 1737 and ordained that year. He remained as minister there until his death. In 1748 he paid the window tax for ‘the mance’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is said that he was some- times interrupted in his sermons by his father, who was very fastidious about points of scripture. In 1755 he married a distant cousin of the Granton Riddells, Esther, daughter of Dr. John Riddell (and she died in 1803). They had no children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Miller and their chil- dren included Janet (b.1758). Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1786 and Todshawhillshiel in 1788 and 1790. His children included William (b.1786), John (b.1788) and James (b.1790). Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirknowe in 1790 when his son Robert was bap- tised in Hobkirk Parish. His other children proba- bly included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), William (again, b.1794), John (again, b.1796), Adam (b.1798), William (again, b.1798), Betty (b.1800), George (b.1802), Janet (b.1804), an unnamed son (b.1806), Betty (again, b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). Robert (d.1809) wright, son of George, who lived at Howahill. He is proba- bly related to the Robert in Hobkirk Kirknowe recorded about the same time. He have been the Robert, son of George born in Hobkirk Parish in 1771. He married Mary Gledstains in Ha- wick in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, as well as the death of his son James in 1808 and his wife Mary Gledstains in 1810. Robert (18th/19th C.) said to have been a native of Teviotdale, he was father of Rev. Henry Scott. He was described as ‘a man of strong though uneducated mind’. He was shepherd for a long time at Langshawburn, where he was visited by Walter Scott, Pulteney Malcolm and James Hogg. He was shepherd at Sorbie (in Ewesdale) when his famous son was born. While there it is said that he planted some saplings on a hillside above Wrae, saying that he wished to live long enough for his coffin to be made from the wood of the mature trees. He then moved to Cappel- foot, on the Water of Milk. While there he hired a teacher to instruct his children. Later he returned to the Ettrick to work for Scott of Deloraine, who he had been with in his younger days. He married Agnes Scott, who was also from Teviotdale. They had 6 sons and a daughter: William; Borthwick, who farmed at Dryden, Ashkirk, and was known as a piper; Henry Scott, minister at Teviothead and song-writer; Robert (1800–67), who emigrated to America and died in Rockton, Canada; Alexander Hay, who farmed in Cumberland; Walter (d.1834), who died unmarried; and Mary, who married a Jones. Robert (1800–67) born in Teviotdale, he was 4th son of shepherd Robert and brother of Rev. Henry Scott. He farmed in Cumberland for a while and then emigrated to America. He married Margaret Johnston in 1819 and they had 10 children, including Nancy, Euphemia, Benjamin, Thomas, Robert, Ann and Walter. He died in Rockton, Ontario. Robert (b.1839/40) son of farm labourer Walter, and descended from Hobkirk shepherds. He apprenticed as a blacksmith with Thomas Kedzie in Selkirk, but also worked in Hawick. He then worked in Edinburgh, Stirling and Glasgow before emigrating to America in 1864. He spent time in Michigan, Canada and Minnesota, returned to Scotland and then went back to Canada in 1870. In 1872 he started his own wrought-iron fencing business in Chatham, Ontario. He married a Miss Tocher and had 5 children. Rev. Simon (1677–1743) probably descended from a branch of the Riddells of that Ilk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1695, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1699 and ordained at Tynron Church in 1701. In 1715 he marched to Stirling with some of his parishioners in defence of the King and the Protestant cause and in 1740 he was one of the 15 ministers who dissented against the resolution to depose the 8 Seceeding ministers. He married Annie Riddell, who was heiress of the lands of Newhouse near Lilliesleaf. Their only son Walter married Annie Riddell, heiress of Glenriddell. Steven (16th C.) recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569. He was listed along with James Langlands as heralds in Roxburghshire, ‘Ane of the Wardane Officiaris to be maid Messinger’. It seems likely he was from the Riddells of that Ilk. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as brother of Geoffrey in the period 1165–1204. He witnessed his brother’s charter for 2 oxgangs of lands in Primside. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Rydell’ in the 1330s when he was witness to a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh and preserved in the chartulary of Dryburgh. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Riddells. He could be the Thomas who forfeited the lands of ‘Fynlawys’ in the Barony of Oxnam, which were granted to William Stewart of Jedward during the reign of Robert II. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of James of that Ilk. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany during the time of revolt, as well as for stealing sheep. His surety was his brother, the Laird of Riddell. Thomas (d.c.1514) listed as deceased in 1514, when he was succeeded in the position of Clek of Lilliesleaf by George Riddell. He was probably a member of the family of Riddell of that Ilk, holding the benefice of assistant priest in the Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chisholme in 1710. His children included: Isobel (b.1705); and twins Robert and Alexander (b.1710). Thomas (1696–1750) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. The lands of Camieston near Newtown St. Boswells were acquired for him and he became the first Riddell Laird there. It is possible that he was the ‘Mr. Riddell of Camieston’ who purchased the Kirkland of Bewlie from the Duke of Roxburgh. He may be the Thomas who paid the window tax at ‘Ferningtoun’ in Roxburgh Parish in 1748. In 1740 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of daughter of Rev. William Hunter, minister of Lilliesleaf. His children were: Walter (b.1742), who died young; Margaret (1744–71), who died unmarried; Eleanor (1745–1815), also unmarried; William (b.1746), who succeeded to Camieston and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; Thomas (1748–56); and Robert (1750–93), who served with the East India Company and perished on the ‘Duchess of Athole’, being in temporary command when fire broke out, and refusing to abandon his ship. Capt. Thomas (18th C.) son of Walter of that Ilk. He was with the Honorable East India Company, being Captain of the Adm. Pocock 1762–71. Thomas (1761–1802) 4th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He joined the East India Company, rose to the rank of Major and died in India. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Jane Govenlock, who was from Hawick Parish. Thomas of Camieston (1777–1826) eldest son of William of Camieston. He qualified as Writer to the Signet in 1805, but never followed this profession. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father) when still younger of Camieston. In 1805 he married Jane, daughter of William Ferrier, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Gen. William (1805–75); Walter of Cavers Carre (1807–74); John Carre (1809–80), who emigrated to Australia, where he was a member of the Parliament of Victoria; Capt. Thomas (1810–54) of the Bengal Infantry; Lillias Wallace (b.1812), married Ross Watt and emigrated to Victoria; Robert (1813–39), who died in India; Elizabeth Carre (1816–44), who died unmarried; Georgina Vereker (b.1818), who married Malcolm McNeil Rind; and Jane Ann (d.1859), who married Elijah Imprey. Thomas (d.1843) 2nd son of Lilliesleaf joiner William. He was a Thatcher. He married Rachel Stirling and their children included William (b.1803), who was a joiner. Thomas (1815–62) born in Lilliesleaf, son of Isabella, with the father’s name unknown. He emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working in the mills. He married Sarah S. Henderson and their children were James, Walter and David. He drowned after falling overboard from a steamer between Fall River and New York.

Thomas (b.1818/9) stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1861 he was listed on Main Street. In the 1860s he is in a trade directory as a stocking-maker, suggesting he ran his own business. He married Janet Dow and their children included Thomas, John, Robert S., James and George. Walter (d.1150s) described as ‘de Riddale, of Whitunes’ when he received a charter of half of ‘Eschetho’ (i.e. ‘Eschetho’, probably the same as Lintobank) and ‘Lillisclive’ (Lilliesleaf) from David I sometime in the period 1124–53. This is recorded in a ‘transumpt’ of 1506 (i.e. a legal copy of the frail document was made in Jedburgh at that time). He may thus have been the first Baron of Riddell and Whitton. He was probably a close relative of Gervase, who witnessed some charters along with him; he may have been brother of Gervase (or perhaps his son), and hence a son of Philip. He is further recorded as ‘Waltero de ridalis’ and similar in several surviving charters he witnessed in the reign of David for St. Andrews Priory and other religious houses. A Bull from Pope Adrian IV in 1156 confirms his brother and heir Auskittel in several lands. This suggests he died without any sons. However, he is known to have married Ethriade de Percy, sister of the Lord of Oxenham. Walter of Riddell (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Auskittel. A Bull of Pope Alexander III sometime before 1181) confirms him in the lands of ‘Lilliescleve’, half of ‘Laungutun’, ‘Witun’ and ‘Brahebi’ (Brawby in Yorkshire), which his father and forebears held of the church of Hexham. He married Guynoldu, daughter of the Earl Gospatric. They had at least 2 sons: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; and Ralph, said to have been progenitor of the Northumberland branch of Riddells. Walter (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Jordan, perhaps the first generation of the Riddells of the Newcastle area. He succeeded his father in the lands of Tilmouth in Durham and the Lordship of Whickham. He was Sheriff of Northumberland and was succeeded by Sir William. Walter of Riddell (13th C.) 5th Laird, son of Sir Patrick and Margaret de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’). He confirmed his father’s donations to Melrose Abbey, and gave other benefactions to both Melrose and Kelso. The gift to Melrose Abbey was part of Lilliesleaf and made some time before 1253; this charter also mentions land he had previously granted to Alexander, brother of Henry of Ashkirk. He married a daughter of Hugh de Gifford. He had 2 sons, Sir William (who succeeded) and Patrick. His seal bore an eagle with wings elevated, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIG[I].LL. WA[LTERI DE RI][DA][LE’’. Walter (16th C.) younger of Riddell, son of John. He died before his father, and the title was inherited by his son Walter. However, these generations are confused, and it is also possible that his brother George inherited, or was at least the effective Laird during the minority of his son Walter. His wife’s name is said to have been Jane. Walter of that Ilk (d.c.1580) probably son of Walter, he succeeded to the Lairdship from his grandfather John. George, who also appears to have been acting as Laird before him, was either his father or uncle. He may the ‘lard of Ryddell’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He was witness to a charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden in 1556 and is also mentioned in 1559 when his brother Robert was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden (although it is possible this is 1550). In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1563 he was ‘wadsed’ lands at ‘Hungrie Hills’ and near the Kirk of Lilliesleaf by William Middlemas. He is probably the ‘Lard of Riddel’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He served as surety for the Elliots in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He was on an assize in 1577. In 1543 he married Mariotta (or Marion), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. He was probably succeeded by another Walter, and also had sons Robert and William (who witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, by which time his son was Laird). His seal bore a chevron between 3 ears of rye and the words ‘S’ VALTERI RIDDDEL’, while his wife’s had 3 shells on a ‘bend sinister’ and the words ‘S’ MARION HOPPRINGIL’. Walter of that Ilk (d.bef. 1592) son of Walter. He was probably the Walter of that Ilk listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. However, these generations of Walters are quite confused. He married Agnes, daughter of George Ramsay of Dalhousie, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He probably also had 2 daughters, one of whom married Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre and Nether Howden. His wife may have been the Lady Riddell whose conduct was singled out when the Presbyterians complained to the King about continuing supporters of Catholicism. He and his son Andrew were ‘tutors’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. His son Andrew and brother William both witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, while he was Laird. In 1595/6 (suggesting he was alive then, but perhaps just confirming an earlier grant) there is a charter for the Barony of Lilliesleaf in which he is granted thr 3½ husbandlands of Lilliesleaf, called ‘West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris’ and 6 husbandlands and 2 cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf, with Lilliesleaf Mill; his son Andrew and brother William are also listed. Walter (d.bef. 1642) referred to in 1600 as ‘fear of that Ilke’, along with his wife Agnes, when they received the lands of Bewlie. He was probably son of the Laird of Riddell, or else descended from the earlier Riddells who had farmed at Bewlie. He is probably the Walter referred to in 1642 when his son William gave Bewlie to his brother Walter. Walter of Woodhouse (16th/17th C.) member of the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. He was voted as Chancellor of the panel. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Sir Walter 2nd Baronet of Riddell (d.c.1669) son of Sir John. He was knighted by Charles I during his father’s lifetime. In 1632 there is a discharge to him from Violet Douglas, widow of Andrew of that Ilk and their 1st and 2nd sons Andrew of Haining and Robert of Hartside. He was served heir to his father in 1636; this included Lintobank, Boosmill, Easter Clerklands, Greatlaws and West Lilliesleaf (called ‘Murieknow’), as well as Over and Nether Whitton. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1628–1633, and he also represented Roxburghshire 1646–47 and 1650. In 1640 he had a contract with Walter Scott of Burnside concerning Chapel and other lands in Lilliesleaf. He was a supporter of the Covenant. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1643 his estate of Riddell (consisting of Mains of Riddell, Bank, Clerklands, Riddell Mill and Lilliesleaf Mill), valued at £1654; he was also owner of part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish (valued at £273), as well as of Whitton in Morebattle Parish (valued at £1600). In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he probably the ‘W. Riddell’ among local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £6,600 (the second largest amount in Roxburghshire). He is recorded in a charter of 1659 involving his daughter-in-law Agnes Scott and lands in Whitton. He paid tax for his rentals in Hownam (£3382) and Lilliesleaf (£1629) in about 1663. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of William Rigg of Aithernie in Fife, said to be a very pious woman and niece of Katherine Rigg, ‘the Good Lady Cavers’; this may have been in 1630. Their children were: Sir John, who succeeded; William of Friarshaw, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell; Archibald, Covenanting preacher, who married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton; Thomas, who may have married Agnes Scott and died childless; Andrew; Agnes, who married James Scott, brother of Sir William of Harden in 1659; Sarah, who married Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton in 1656; and Alison, who married Rev. Gabriel Semple of Jedburgh (once a preacher of field conventicles). Note there are conflicting accounts of his children, particularly the daughters. His son Sir John was served as his heir in 1669. His wife’s will is recorded at the Commissariot of Peebles in 1682. Walter of Belses (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to the Riddells of Riddell and of Minto. He may have been the same Walter who was given the lands of Belses by his brother William (son of Walter) in 1642; if so he was described as ‘in Longhauche’. He was also possibly the ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. He may be the same Walter as the ‘portioner of Lilliesleaf’ who in 1643 held ‘20 sounds’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26. He was also involved in a ‘wandset’ over lands at Fernieles and Templehall (in the Rule valley) with William Earl of Lothian in 1649; Sir Walter of that Ilk is also mentioned, and so was clearly distinct. He extended the loan to the Earl in 1652, when he was described as ‘now indweller in Appotsyde’. In the 1652 marriage contract of Margaret Riddell and Robert Elliot, he is described as uncle of Margaret and brother of William, deceased portioner of Bewlie. He also witnessed a contract of ‘wandset’ for the Lorraines of Appotside in 1654, also signed by his eldest son ‘Harie’ (i.e. Henry), as well as further contracts in 1656. He was mentioned in discharges of 1655 for uplifting the teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse and in further discharges of 1657 and 1658; he acted as ‘baillie in that part’ for Elliot of Harwood and was tenant at Appotside. In 1656 he witnessed the ratification of William Elliot of Harwood in his Rulewater lands and another sasine relating to Harwood was witnessed by his sons Henry and Walter. His sons William and Henry witnessed separate documents 1659, and all 3 sons witnessed a document relating to Appotside in 1656. He is probably also the Walter who rented land from John Turnbull of Firth in 1645. He may be the Walter recorded as porter in 1678 when he ownedlands in Bewlie and also for the ‘heritors’ of Raperlaw, amounting to £273, as well as Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £407 15s); however, that seems more likely to be the next generation. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Langhauche’ and ‘baillie in that part to the said William Elliot’ when he was witness in 1637 for Elliot of the Binks purchasing Harwood. The Langhaugh may have been the one in Lilliesleaf or in Hobkirk (probably the latter). In one of the 1637 documents he is transcribed as ‘Liddell’. He also witnessed other agreements relating to vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1638 and 1648, and a discharge to him and others for the teinds in 1649. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire.

Walter of Minto (c.1620–c.84) writer (i.e. solicitor) in Edinburgh. He was probably 2nd son of William of Newhouse and grandson of William of Muselee (although these generations are confused). He purchased part of the Minto estate from John Turnbull of Minto in 1676 (confirmed in 1681). He leased the lands of ‘Kaines and the Hills’ to William Mather of Lanton in 1683. Also in 1683 has a disposition for Minto to his son-in-law Thomas Rutherford. There was a dispute among his children over the inheritance, but eventually Minto passed to Walter Scott, Earl of Yaray in 1687 and not long afterwards sold to the Elliots. He married Catharine Nisbet in 1652 in Edinburgh, and secondly married Isabel Riddell. His children were: James (d.1687), who died young; Jean, who married Robert Laurie in Edinburgh, and was the mother of the Annie Laurie who inspired the song; Susanna, who married Thomas, brother of John Rutherford of Edgerston; Catharine, who probably died young; Grizel (b bef. 1687), who was to have succeeded if she married a Riddell; John, who may also have died young; Elizabeth, who married James Dallas in Edinburgh; and Agnes. His daughters cleared all their interests in Minto in the 1690s. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1686 he married Margaret Ker in Wilton. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray and Alison Riddell (probably a relative) in 1688. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of John ‘in Beirhope’. He is probably the Walter, ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. He was ‘portioner’ of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, with land valued at £273. He (or a descendant) received part of the lands of Bewlie in 1687. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scon and their children included: Robert (b.1674); an unnamed child (b.1677); another unnamed child (b.1679); Bessie (b.1681); and Helen (b.1684). Walter of Newhouse (17th C.). In 1689 he was named among the officers of the local Militia, charged with defending the kingdom. He is probably the same Laird of Newhouse who (along with Turnbull of Sharplaw) was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanters soldiers in 1679 (commanded by Turnbull of Standhill perhaps). He is probably the Walter of Newhouse who married Christian Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1684. He was ‘Walter ridell of Neuhous’ in 1694 when he paid tax on 4 hearths in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear if he is the same man as Walter (b.c.1620) of Newhouse.
who appears to have died in the 1680s. His daughter may have been Annie, who married Rev. Simon. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter ‘Dusty Fit’ (18th C.) miller of Allanhaugh Mill in the years around 1700. He may have been related to the later tenant at Southdean Mill. He was listed at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was taxed for 3 hearths because he was ‘wt tuo kilns’, suggesting that he was the miller there at that time. Probably the same Walter rented part of the farm of Raesknoewe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1690-98. He was at Allanhaugh Mill in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He may be the Walter who acted as cautioner for Margaret in 1705, when she leased part of Bransholme Town farm. He is probably the miller at Allanhaugh Mill called ‘Dustyfit’ who was there around 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1708 he and James Paterson were ‘undermillers’ when they witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott wright at Millport. He is probably the ‘undermiller in Hawick’ when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Elliot, ‘tacksman of ye mill’ and James Paterson, ‘undermiller in ye sd town’. In 1711 he was still undermiller in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Aitkin, other undermiller at Hawick (with miller Walter Elliot as the other witness). His children included Anna (b.1700), with baptismal witnesses Henry Orrock and William Riddell (who was surely related). William, who was tenant at Allanhaugh Mill and became a Burgess in 1729, was probably his son. Margaret, who married John Scoon, may have been a daughter of his (since his name appears as a witness to one of their children’s baptisms). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. It is possible that 2 different millers are compounded here. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Margaret, who was also listed there. Walter of Newhouse (d.1742) apprenticed to John Wilkie, he became Writer to the Signet in 1742. He married Jean Pringle. It is unclear how he was related to the other Riddells of Newhouse. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the same Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He was married to Marion Liddell. Their children included Jean (b.1699), William (b.1702) and Walter (b.1709). The witnesses in both 1699 and 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant John Forman and in 1709 were baker John Whillans and Henry Orrock. Walter of Friarshaw (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Walter (17th/18th C.) from the Lilliesleaf branch of the family. He was tenant farmer at North Synton. In 1706 his eldest daughter Margaret married John of Muselee. Sir Walter of that Ilk (d.1747) 4th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father Sir John in 1700. In 1695 he would have been the ‘younger’ of Riddell who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also ‘younger of that Ilk’ in 1695 when he contributed £400 to the Darien Company. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1700 he was recorded in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. In 1706 he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest; this presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. In 1727–28 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington in a land dispute. In 1692 he married Margaret, daughter of Watt of Rosehill; she was a daughter of his step-mother. His children were: John, an advocate who pre-deceased him; Sir Walter, who did succeed; Thomas of Camieston, whose son William married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; William, who moved to Bermuda; Robert, minister of Lilliesleaf; Ann (or perhaps Jane or Elenor), who married John Carre of Cavers; Sarah, who married John Forest; and Christian, who died young. He is said to have been very pious and somewhat eccentric, for example on occasion interrupting his son Robert’s sermons, saying ‘Robert, that won’t do!’, and he refused to stop people coming onto his land, saying ‘The Earth is the Lord’s!’ James may have been another son, who moved to Ireland, was knighted, and wrote his name ‘Riddall’. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope Mill in at least the period 1714–29. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1714); Marion (b.1717); Anna (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Walter (again, b.1729). He is easy to confuse with another Walter, who lived at Mabonlaw at the same time; he is probably the one who married Helen Scott in Roberton in 1712. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw. His daughter Marion was baptised at the end of 1717 in Roberton Parish; this was 9 months after another Marion was baptised, daughter of Walter in Whithope Mill (so it is fairly clear that this was a different man). He could be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert and Andrew. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, who may have been his, included: Margaret (b.1712); Walter (b.1720); and Walter (again, b.1725). He is probably the Walter who married Margaret Simpson in Roberton in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthaugh in 1723 and 1724. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorrain in Borthaugh. In 1719 he married Mary Storie. Their children included: Robert and William (b.1720); twins Gideon and Andrew (b.1723); Walter (b.1724); Isobel (b.1727); Margaret (b.1729); and Robert (again, b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were George Bell and Tom (or similar) Turnbull, in 1724 were Walter and John Scott and in 1729 were James Scott and Robert Cowan. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at East Burnfoot in 1725. He is probably the William who in 1735 witnessed a baptism for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Margaret Waugh in 1724 and their children included Robert (b.1725), Janet (b.1727), James (b.1730) and Bessie (b.1732). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He was probably related to Robert, who was at East Burnfoot at the same time. The funeral of Janet in Burnfoot Mill was recorded in 1750 and may have been his daughter. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Hornshole in 1737. He married Margaret Riddell and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737, with witnesses Robert Scott and John Sinton. Sir Walter of that Ilk (1695–1765) 5th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, and was father of Gen. Henry James Riddell, Commander of the forces in Scotland; and Andrew. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Alton in 1738. In 1737 he married Agnes Wilson and their children included: John (b.1738); and Janet (b.1740). The witnesses in 1738 were Andrew . . . and John Kersel. Walter of Newhouse and Glenriddell (d.1788) son of Rev. Simon. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Annie, daughter and heiress of Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, a very distant cousin. He thereby became Laird of Glenriddell in Dumfriesshire. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He may be the Riddell of Newhouse who sold lands in Lilliesleaf Parish to Rev. William Campbell. His children were: Robert, who succeeded, was a great friend of Robert Burns, married Miss Kennedy, and died without children; Walter, who succeeded after his brother and married Maria Woodley, daughter of the Governor of St. Kitts, Leeward Islands; Sophia; and Alexander. Walter (18th C.) resident at Whithope Mill in 1767 and 1774 when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included Walter (b.1767) and Jean (b.1774). He is surely related to the earlier Walter and John in Whithope Mill. Walter of Friar’s Glen (1758–1809) 3rd surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. He married Christian, eldest daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. Their children were: Patrick, who died unmarried; and Mary (b.1809), who married George Hutton, and whose son Capt. Hutton Riddell inherited Muselee. He died the same year as his second child. Walter (b.1760) 2nd son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He married Janet Hamilton and moved to Carlisle. Their children were: James (b.1784), who had 3 daughters, including Jennie, who married John Hislop; Frank (b.1786), who was a store clerk in Leith and died unmarried; Willie (b.1789), who settled in Carlisle; Isabella (b.1791); Margaret (b.1793); and Walter, who was born in Hawick, was training for the ministry, but died young. Sir Walter Buchanan (c.1764–84) 7th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father John, who died when he was quite young. Said to be of delicate health, he died just about when he reached majority. He was succeeded by his brother Sir James. Walter (18th C.) recorded as ‘of Muselee’ in a marriage bond of 1769 for his daughter Agnes with John, son of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He may have been a younger son of John of Muselee. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope for about 50 years. He was shepherd there according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His son John was shepherd at Clarilaw. He could be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother’s name given) included: Robert (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1783); John (b.1784); William (b.1788); and James (b.1796). Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Southdean Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Walter (b.c.1785) 3rd son of William, he was a joiner in Lilliesleaf like his father. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living with Elizabeth, probably his daughter. His sons included: William, who married Margaret Lambert and emigrated to Philadelphia; and Walter, who also emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (1798–1863) son of Hawick shoemaker William and Jean Goodfellow. He worked as a spinner in Wilton. In 1835 he was listed at Dovemount amount heads of households in Wilton Kirk, and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as living in Hawick. On the 1841 census he was on O’Connell Street and in 1851 was on Lady-law Place. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Andrew, Thomas, Jean, Janet and John. Walter (1800–81) eldest son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer near Hawick and then at Philiphaugh. In 1841 he was living at Eastfield in Bowden, in 1851 at Philiphaugh Cottages and in 1861 at Old Broadmeadows. He married Margaret Baxter and their children included John, Mary, James, Margaret, Robert and Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. Walter see Walter Riddell Carre. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (1834–77) eldest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He worked with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. He married Agnes, daughter of David Arnot, minister of St. Giles. He was obviously named after his father’s patron. He died in Edinburgh. Sir Walter Buchanan (1810–92) eldest son of Sir John Buchanan, who died when he was young. He was born at Riddell House, and educated at Eton and Oxford. Although he became the 10th Baronet in 1819, the family sold the Riddell estate in 1823. However, he did succeed to the smaller estate of Hepple in Northumberland. He was called to the bar at Lincoln’s Inn in 1834. He was Magistrate and Chief Steward in Northumberland, as well as serving as an M.P. He gave a lot of help to Rev. G.T. Ridlon, in his compilation of a family history, published in 1884. He married Alicia Ann, youngest daughter of William Ripley in 1850, but they had no children. He was succeeded by his nephew Sir John Walter Buchanan, son of Rev. John Charles. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan (1879–1934) son of John Walter Buchanan, he was 12th Baronet of Riddell. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became Principal of Hertford College there. He was also Chairman of the University Grants Committee. In 1919 he married Rachel, daughter of Cahares Lyttelton, 8th Viscount Cobham. They had 8 children, and he was succeeded by Sir John, who was an infant at the time. Sir Walter John Buchanan (1974– ) 14th Baronet of Riddell, son of Sir John Charles Buchanan. He has been Managing Director of the companies Cluff Geothermal Limited and Lilliesleaf Limited. William (12th C.) witness to documents for ‘Morgrundus’ Count of Mar, relating to St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘Willelmo de ridal’. This was probably around the 1170s. He may be the younger son of Galfridus/Geoffrey who was Lord of Farringdon in Northamptonshire and Primside and Glengarnock in Scotland, who served in the court of William I and died in 1214. William (12th/13th C.) son of Ausketill and brother of Patrick. In some genealogies he is stated to be a son of Patrick, but this appears to be incorrect. He married Matilda Corbet, to whom he granted several pieces of land in dowry. He received part of the lands of Whitton, although he had no heirs, so all these lands reverted to the head of the family later. His wife is recorded yielding up lands to her Lord, Patrick of Riddell in the early 1200s; her son seems to have been Alexander Seton, and so presumably she secondly married a Seton. He may be the same as the son of Ausketill (recorded as Walter) who had a papal letter of protection in about 1170. This mentions that the same family still held lands at Brawby in Yorkshire. Sir William of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 6th Laird, son of Walter and grandson of Patrick. He is said to have been knighted at a young age by Alexander II. He married Isabella, daughter of William, Parson of Hownam. In the early years of the 13th century his wife Isabella gave a piece of land in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This charter mentions several family members, proving 4 successive descents. However, the heir of Sir William is uncertain, as are the next few generations. He may have been succeeded by another William. He is probably the ‘domino Willemo de Redale’ who witnessed a charter of lands in Lempitlaw to Soutra around 1250; ‘domino Roberto Redale’ was also listed, so presumably his son or brother. William (13th C.) listed among the jurors at Corbridge in Northumberland in 1256 as ‘Willemsus de Ridale’. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the same as the ‘Willelmo Redale’ who witnessed a charter for the lands of Lempitlaw in about 1250. Sir William (13th C.) listed in the period 1279–86 when he was witness to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. He also witnessed the previous grant of the same lands by John de Vescy and its confirmation. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. William (13th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rydale’, a Burgess of Inverkeithing. There are 3 other entries for men of the same surname, all called Hugh. Sir William (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1301 when there was an arrangement to swap him (as an English supporter of Edward I) for 2 Scottish prisoners. In 1305 there was a warrant of Edward I to pay him for assisting Robert Hastings at Roxburgh Castle. And in 1306 there was a letter asking for his protection (as well as others) from the Chancellor of England, since he was helping keep down Edward’s enemies in Scotland. He may be the same man as Sir William of Tillmouth and Twizel (son of Walter), who was appointed Sheriff of Northumberland in 1314 and was one of the custodians of Norham Castle; his children included William (who succeeded) and Hugh. William (d.1328) son of Sir William of Tillmouth, who held lands in the Durham area. He was Constable of Norham Castle and High Sheriff of Northumberland, and played a role in the managing of the Marches for King Edward II. Part of his lands was held by his brother Hugh, whose descendants were later Sheriffs and Mayors of Newcastle. His lands were eventually inherited by his 3 daughters, Isabel, Constantine and Joan. This branch of family usually spelt their name ‘Ridell’. William (13th/14th C.) possibly son of William and hence 7th Riddell of that Ilk. However, this period in the genealogy is difficult to follow, and there may well be additional generations, since some accounts suggest impossibly long lifespans. He probably died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Geoffrey. Sir William (14th C.) possibly eldest son of Geoffrey and brother of Sir Robert and Richard. However, these generations are quite confused. He may have been knighted by David II and died in the reign of Robert II. He was probably father of Quentin or Mungo (or both). William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Ridile’ in 1498/9 when he witnessed a charter in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same ‘Willelmi Riddale’ had an escheat in Lanark recorded in 1501. William (16th C.) described in a sasine of 1535 (relating to Harden) as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with George. He was probably a son of the Laird of Riddell (although which one is unclear). William (16th C.) probably a younger son of John of that Ilk. He is described in a document of 1551 receiving the lands of Bewlie from John of that Ilk and his heir Walter, who was his brother. William of Bewlie (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, and probably son of the previous Walter. However, it seems hard to separate different Williams and Walters around this time. He may be the same William ‘in Lilslie’ who was involved in an action with William Middlemas in 1589. He witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1595/6 he was brother of Walter of that Ilk when he had confirmed to him the ‘5 pound lands of Bewlie and the half cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf’. William (16th C.) probably the name of William ‘Rydlie’ who was accused in 1590 of rieving crimes along with Martin’s AITCHIE Elliot and Hob of Bowholm Elliot. He may also be the ‘William Rydlie of Hawcuppe’ accused of rieving in 1590, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Nixons, Shielis and others; it is unclear where ‘Hawcuppe’ may have been. William (d.c.1630) recorded being granted the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of the deceased George and his lands were ‘6 husband-lands’. He may have been son of George of that Ilk who is recorded several decades earlier. His sister Margaret, wife of Rev. Andrew Duncanson, was served heir to his lands in 1630. William of MUSELEE (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of that Ilk, with his mother being a Pringle. He received the lands of Newhouse (in Lilliesleaf) as his inheritance. He also had a charter of MUSELEE in 1618. He married Bessie AINSLIE. Their sons may have been John of Muselee and William of Newhouse (although these generations are confused). Helen, a direct descendant, married William Crawford, minister of Wilton, in 1716. William (d.bef. 1652) son of Walter. He is probably the William ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he gave the lands of Bewlie to his brother Walter. He married Helen Scott. In 1652 there is a marriage contract of his eldest daughter Margaret with Robert, 2nd son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. William of Newhouse (17th C.) probably younger son of William of Muses. His 2nd son was Walter, who purchased the Minto estate. William of Bewlie (d.c.1695) son and heir of Henry. He was confirmed in the lands of Bewlie in 1669 and in 1670 gave part of the lands to his mother, Janet Scott. His sister Agnes succeeded to his lands in 1695 and married John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He is probably the resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John, 1st Baronet of Riddell and brother of Walter, 2nd Baronet. He was knighted by Charles I and served in the army in the Netherlands, being appointed Governor of ‘Desborough’ (probably Doesburgh). He married Wendelina de Bercham (or perhaps Buchan) in 1654. He had sons Walter and William, who moved to New Jersey, and other sons, Richard and John Frederick. His daughter Anne Catherine married Nicholas, son of Francis Bowyer and became heiress to her brother John Frederick (in 1677) and sister Margaret. William of Friarsshaw (d.c.1693) 2nd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell. He acquired the lands of Friarsshaw in Dumfriesshire and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell. He was an advocate, perhaps being the William, writer in Edinburgh, who was deputed by others to subscribe to the Darien Company in 1696. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope. Their son Walter was the first of the Riddells of Glenriddell (formerly Gilmerston) in Dumfriesshire. Walter was served as his heir in 1693. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Wilton and Hwick Parishes. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included: Thomas (b.1694) and William (b.1697), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1706), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1697 were William Scott and John Turnbull and in 1706 were John Scott ‘whitegates’ and John Scott ‘younger Soger’. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of George. He may have been the William, son of George and Janet Phaup who was baptised in Roberton in 1681. He was living at Appletreehall in 1722. He witnessed a baptism for John Thomson (in Drinkstone) in 1722. He married Isobel Morrison in 1707 and their children included: Janet (b.1716); William (b.1717); John (b.1720); and Mary (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were John Thomson and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) living at Borthaugh in 1707 according to the Roberton Parish records. His wife Isobel had acted as midwife for the wife of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were smith Robert Miller and Thomas Scott in Brieryhill. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Agnes Nichol in 1704. Their children included: Margaret (b.1705); John (b.1708); Agnes (b.1717); William (b.1719); and Helen (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were gardiners James Dunn and James Falsyde. Walter (b.1700), John (b.1706), Francis (b.1710), Janet (b.1712), Andrew (b.1713), Janet (b.1715), Robert (b.1715) and Janet (b.1717), baptised in Hawick Parish, could also be his children (although there may be 2 families here). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Armstrong in 1704. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he married Margaret, daughter of David Minto and their children included: David (b.1714); Margaret (b.1719); and an unnamed son (b.1721). William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Greenshiels in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott). In 1717 he was abused in the street by ‘Jafra the Piper’. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was probably son or brother of Walter, ‘Dustyfit’. In 1729 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick and referred to as ‘late in Allanhaughmilne’. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1700. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for tailor Walter Rae and another in 1745 for wright James Roger. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752); this was along with Charles Tudhope, who also witnessed the same baptism in 1745. William (18th C.) resident of Woodfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Elliot and their son James was baptised in 1759. The witnesses were Patrick Scott and George Hart. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1766 when his son John was baptised. He may be the William who married Mary Thomson in Roberton in 1753. His children were probably Robert (b.1753) and John (b.1766). William (d.1788) described in ‘Dodsley’s Annual Register’ as dying at Selkirk at the incredible age of 116. He was said to have been a smuggler in his early life.

and a great lover of brandy. He was also meant to have been a heavy drinker, who went through binges lasting several days. He married 3 times, the last being when he was 95. It is unclear how he was related to other local Riddells. William (18th C.) 4th son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He emigrated to the West Indies, settling in Bermuda, where he was a merchant. He married Dinah Darrel and their children included John, Margaret, Robert, William, Sarah and Elizabeth. One of his descendants wrote a medical thesis. It is thought that this branch died out after only another couple of generations. William, W.S. of Camieston (1746–1829) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded since his older brother had died young. He was educated in Edinburgh and trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Thomas Cockburn and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1770. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was listed in 1788 as owner of 5 acres in ‘Annay’ in Melrose and Camieston in Lessuden Parish, as well as £390 of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He acquired the farm of Union Hall (also known as Linthill) in Lilliesleaf Parish, from his mother’s family, the Hunters; however, in 1822 he sold it to William Currie, along with lands in Chapel, ‘Mr. Scott’s Acres in Lilliesleaf’ and Porteous Croft’ (according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He also sold parts of Bewlie, which were later owned by Thomas A. Riddell Carre. He was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire in 1788 and was further listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1776 he married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Thomas (1778–1826), who succeeded; John (1779–1814), who served with the East India Company and died on the way home; Jane (1781–1849), who died unmarried; Adm. Robert (1782–1860), a decorated naval officer, who succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre and took the additional surname ‘Carre’; Elizabeth (1785–1846), also unmarried; and Margaret (1787–1843), also died unmarried. William (18th C.) wright of Hawick, recorded in 1792 when his daughter Isobel married William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick. He was said to be the same as the William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick in 1794 when his daughter Isobel married David Simpson in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) joiner in Lilliesleaf. He was said to be a descendant of the Riddells of Riddell. He married Margaret Hervey and their children were: John, who was a joiner; Thomas, a thatcher; Walter, who married Batsy Young; Mary, who married Glasgow merchant Thomas Cochran; and Margaret, who married tailor James Walker. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Hermitage, born in Roxburghshire, and said to be a direct descendant of the Riddells of that ilk. He married Catherine Brydon and they had 9 children: William (b.1801), who married Jessie Watson and emigrated to Canada; John; James; Thomas, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada and married twice; Janet; Wilhelmina; Mary, also moved to Canada; Anne, emigrated to Canada and married Hugh Smith; married Robert Craig and emigrated to Canada. William (d.1827) shoemaker of Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier William. He married Jean Goodfellow in 1796, and she died in 1838. Their children included wool-spinner William (1798–1863). William (1789–1867) eldest son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott. He was shepherd at Bellendean at the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when he played for the Yarrow side, being known as one of the best runners in the district; he would have hailed a ball had he not been pursued by a farmer on horseback. He and Henry Scott farmed together at Ramsaycleuch. He married Elizabeth Milne (1799/1800–53) in 1831. His wife is recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1841 with 5 children. He was still recorded in a directory of 1868 as farmer at Ramsaycleuchburn. Their children (all of who were born at Ramsaycleuchburn except the first) included: Margaret (b.1831); Robert Borthwick (1833–62), who died unmarried; William Milne (1835–1913), who farmed at Ramsaycleuchburn after his father and died at Bucklands Cottage; James Scott (b.1837), who moved to Cumberland; Jessie (b.1839), who married William Easton; Agnes Scott (b.1842), who married Thomas Irving of Langholm, and secondly married James Lunn, also from Langholm; and Eliza (1844–52). Most of the family are buried at Teviothead. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (18th/19th C.) sheriff officer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first (and perhaps only) time in 1838. Maj.-Gen. William of Camieston (1805–75) eldest son of Thomas of Camieston and descendant of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. His brother was Walter of Cavers Carre. He entered the East India Company’s military service in 1823, joining the 2nd Battalion of the 30th Native Infantry, rising through the ranks until achieving command of the regiment. He commanded the 30th Regiment of European Infantry during the Indian Mutiny, and was involved in many other important campaigns. He received several medals and retired from service in 1861, returning to live at Camieston. Afterwards he played an active role in the activities of the 3rd Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteer Corps. He was also Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. His father Thomas had married a sister of Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill; after Col. Hunter’s death his father succeeded to the estate of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, but it was sold before he succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Capt. John Wilkie, and she died in 1905, aged 85. They had 9 children, and he was succeeded by his only surviving son, William. He was buried at Bowden. William (1801–83) son of William and Catherine Brydon, he was born at Hermitage. He married Jessie, daughter of John and Euphemia Watson, from Oxnam Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1831 and was a farmer in Beverley, Ontario. His children were William, John, Euphemia and James. William (b.1803) son of Thomas and Rachel Stirling. He was a joiner in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a wright. He married Agnes Deans in 1832 and their children included: Thomas, a carpenter who emigrated to America; James, also a carpenter; Janet; Walter, a baker; and Rachel. He was deceased by 1851, when his wife and 3 children were living in Hawick. William (b.1816) carpenter in Lilliesleaf, son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull and grandson of joiner William. In 1841 he was a journeyman, living with Elizabeth, who was probably his mother. In 1851 he is listed on the south side of Main Street. He married Esther Thomson in 1843 and their children were: Jane (b.1844), who married James Hogg; John (b.1846); Betsy (b.1849); Andrew (b.1852); George (b.1854); Walter (b.1856); and Ellen (b.1858). William Brown Clark (1835–56) youngest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He was born at the Flex. He attended John Watson’s Institution in Edinburgh, and then went to the University there. He was described as a student and poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20. His poem ‘The Lament to Wallace’ appeared in some collections of Scottish verse (formerly spelled ‘Reddale’, ‘Reddell’, ‘Reiddal’, ‘Ridale’, ‘Riddale’, ‘Riddell’, ‘Riddele’, ‘Ridel’, ‘Rydal’, ‘Rydale’, ‘Ryddell’, ‘Rydel’, ‘Rydell’, ‘Ryedale’, etc.).
Riddell Chaipel

Tait of the Kelso Chronicle. In 1830 he married Elizabeth Riddell MacLauchlan, only surviving child of Lieut.-Col. Lauchlan MacLauchlan. He secondly married Mary Falconer, daughter of William Currie of Linthill. His son Capt. Thomas Alexander succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate. He was buried at Bowden.

Riddell Chaipel (ri-dul-chä-pul) n. former chapel said to have stood on the lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, later called Riddell. The location was supposed to be near the old ash tree not far from the gate leading from the Easter Lodge to the mansion house, a little south of the site of the old tower. The field in which the ruins were located was known as ‘Chapel Park’. There is a report of 2 stone coffins being unearthed from the foundations around 1850, one containing a pot with ashes and pieces of armour, and the other containing bones of gigantic size.

Riddell Hoose (ri-dul-hooz) n. former mansion house on the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish. It replaced an earlier house, which in turn replaced the castle, which probably dates to Norman times. The original tower-house was probably constructed around the 14th century, enlarged in the 16th century and again in the 17th, making a long southerly front of 2 storeys. A third Storey was added in the 18th century, along with a north-west wing, with a north-east wing added in the 19th century. Tax was paid on 47 windows there in 1748. It was largely destroyed by fire in 1943, although it exists in photographs and drawings (see also Riddell Toor).

Riddell Mains (ri-dul-mänz) n. former name for the main lands in Lilliesleaf Parish held by the Riddells of that Ilk. In 1643 it was valued at £910, being the bulk of the property of the Laird at that time. It was still listed in the same way in 1788, when owned by Sir John Riddell. It was probably equivalent to what was later just called ‘Riddell’.

Riddell Mill (ri-dul-mil) n. former corn mill on the Riddell estate, on the opposite side of the main farm. It was water powered and fed by a small lade that is now covered. The mill building survives, although all fittings have been removed and it is now in use as a barn. Situated in a bend in the Ale Water, at the foot of Dunstane Height, it was formerly also known as Dunstane Mill. In 1643 the ‘Town Mill and Mill thereof’ was valued at £247, among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk. However, it was sold before 1678, with value of £167. Thomas Lawrie was there in 1785. It was recorded as ‘Lands of Townmill, and mill thereof’ as part of the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788. John Haldane was miller there in 1841, James Haldane in the 1850s and Alexander Lauder in the 1860s. The name was also used for a water-powered saw-mill, built on the Riddell estate in the early 19th century.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddellsteed, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Riddale the Riddells (thu-ri-dulz) n. family of Riddell of that Ilk, who gained lands at Riddell, in Lilliesleaf parish around the middle of the 12th century and were granted a baronetcy in 1628. About 1823 the estate was sold to the Sprots. For several centuries the family were buried at Lilliesleaf. The family has a Norman origin and received the lands of Ryedale in Yorkshire, being given the designation ‘de Ridel’ for several generations. Tradition (encouraged by Sir Walter Scott) told of stone coffins at Riddell bearing the dates 797 and 937. However, there is no reason to believe that the family’s origins can be traced back quite so far. The early history of the family is confused by the contemporary use of the same name by different men, with early Christian names including William, Geoffrey (or Galfridus) and Hugh. The history is further complicated by the family’s habit of calling their lands after themselves (rather than the other way around), and it seems clear that the Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish was not the original family home. The name occurs in England at the time of William the Conqueror, when lands were granted in Northumbria, following the Battle of Hastings. Another branch of the family appears to have remained on the continent, settling in Italy in the 11th century. Meanwhile the English family moved to Scotland along with David I, Ger- vase being the first Scotsman. The lands they were granted near Lilliesleaf appear to have been named after their former designation. The arms of Riddell of that Ilk shows 3 ears of corn (or rye) and a red chevron. The family motto is ‘I hope to share’ and the crest shows a greyhound – ‘To ancient Riddel’s fair domain, Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from lakes did raving come; Each wave was creased with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed [SWS] (formerly spelled ‘Ridel’, etc., and interchangeable with ‘Riddle’).

Riddleshiel (ri-dul-sheel) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Clerklands. The woods to the north are called Riddleshiel Plantation, and a small lake to the west is Riddleshiel Moss.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddellstead, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Riddale
Riddell Toor

Steid’ on the 1541 rental roll. It is there said to be hereditary property of the Laird of Glendinning, held of the Lord of Liddesdale.

Riddell Toor  (ri-dul-toor, -tow-ur) n. former peel tower on the Riddell estate. The name is also used for the more modern tower built nearby, referred to as the General’s Toor. The first fortified house on these lands was probably built shortly after the Riddell family acquired the lands in the 12th century. But the existing structure is probably from the 14th century, and was only revealed after the mansion burned down in 1943. The surviving walls are in the south-west corner. There is also evidence of 16th century stonework. The tower was probably converted into a mansion house in the 17th century, making a long southern front of 2 storeys, with a 3rd floor added in the 18th century, along with further wings in the 18th and 19th centuries. The ruins are now among mature woodland to the north-east of the main farmhouse.

riddler  (ri-dur) n., arch. someone who acts to separate combatants – ‘…and that he was the Rider who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan’ [PR1716].

Riddington  (ri-din-tin) n. Anthony (1911–98) from Countesthorpe, Leicestershire. He was a professional cricketer, who played for Hawick & Wilton in the 1930s.

Riddle  (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddell) George John (1830–1920) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was a tailor and clothier and cousin of John, also a tailor in Hawick. His sister Helen married John Graham of ‘Graham’s Hotel’. He married Margaret, daughter of William Clark and Jane Murray, and she died in 1921, aged 91; she was a cousin of the father of Sir James A.H. Murray. The couple celebrated their golden wedding in 1900, when they had 5 sons, 2 daughters and 19 grandchildren, and they lived to see their 70th wedding anniversary. Their children were: John, fishmonger, who married Helen Elliot; William, joiner in Birkenhead, who married Jean Roberts; Andrew C., engineer on the Aberdeen steamships, who emigrated to Australia and married Georgina Johnstone; James, stockmaker, who married Mary Elliot; Thomas, a tailor, who married Margaret Dalgleish; George, Co-op store manager in Newcastleon-Tyne; Jane, who married hosiery manager Robert Hamilton; Robert, bank clerk in South Africa; Anne, hosiery worker; George J., Secretary of the Universities Club, Edinburgh, who married Lily Mackenzie; Isabel, ‘Bella’; William, chemist, who married Hilda Evans; Elliott, with the Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto; Jean, who married accountant Percy Howard of Langholm; and Alexander Westwater, a chemist. Helen ‘Ellen’ (b.c.1813) born in Hawick, daughter of tailor Walter. She was proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 24 High Street, who also kept boarders. She started by selling 2d mutton pies at weekends, the business being carried on by her niece (of the same name) as a confectioner’s, and later by other family members. It was popularly known as ‘Ellen Riddle’s’ for about a century. She is recorded as a High Street grocer on the 1851 census, living with her brothers Francis and Walter, and nieces Helen and Isabella. Probably the same Helen is recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory as an earthenware and glass dealer on the High Street, as well as a grocer. In 1861 she was recorded as a ‘wool framework trimmer’ at 24 High Street, living with her niece Ellen and 3 boarders. Helen (b.1845/6–1914) daughter of tailor John and Margaret Armstrong. She was niece of the earlier Helen, from whom she took over the grocer’s and pie shop at 24 High Street. Already in 1851 she was living with her aunt Helen (and uncles Francis and Walter), as well as her younger sister Isabella, at 24 High Street (a few houses along from her parents and siblings). She was still living with her aunt in 1861 and in 1871 she was ‘Pie-Baker’ and head of household, living with her sister Mary Ann and brother Frank. James Haining describes her in the 1930s as maker of ‘celebrated pies still remembered’. In the latter part of the 19th century the back of the shop was also used as a meeting place for debating societies and other groups. J. (18th/19th C.) clogger in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver in Hawick. The death of his infant daughter is recorded in 1822. John (b.1800) born in Selkirk, probably son of William and Agnes Hutton. It is said that the family came from Carterhaugh in Yarrow. He was a tailor in Hawick at 12 Howegate. He is listed as a tailor on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Howegate in 1837. He is also listed as a Howegate tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory, with his son John listed as a tailor on the High Street.
He was still on the Howlegate on the 1861 census, and was listed as a tailor and grocer. He married Isabella Richardson. Their children included: John (b.1819), also a tailor; William (b.1821); James (b.1822); Isabella (b.1824), who married wool merchant James Melrose; Thomas (b.1826); Agnes (b.1828); George John (b.1830); Helen (b.1831); and Catherine (b.1839), who married wool-spinner Walter Scott. John (b.1811/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor on Walter’s Wynd in the 1851 census. He was thus one of 3 contemporary Hawick tailor’s with the same name! His wife was Ellen and their children included Isabella and John. John (b.1819) son of Haweigate tailor John, he was a tailor on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 28 High Street, a master tailor employing 3 men; in 1861 he was listed as a tailor and clothier at 24 High Street. He married Margaret (perhaps also called ‘Mary’) Armstrong in 1843; she was sister of ironmonger John Armstrong and died in 1888, aged 66. Their children included: Helen (b.c.1846), who grew up with her aunt Helen and took over the pie-making business; Isabella (b.c.1848); Walter (b.c.1850); Mary Ann (b.c.1853), who married William C. Simpson and continued pie-making; Francis (b.1855); Margaret (1857–96), who married joiner George Gall; Lancelot Armstrong (b.1859); Agnes (b.1862); and John Armstrong (b.1865). John (b.c.1820) shoemaker at 8 Howlegate. His wife was Maria, and their children included: Thomas; Frederick; and Cecilia. He could be the John who donated a model of Hermitage Castle to the Museum in 1863. John Turnbull (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-1800s, nicknamed ‘Tip-madaisy’. Mary Ann (1852/3–1931) daughter of tailor John. She married William C. Simpson. She continued the confectionary side of the business run by her sister and aunt (both called Ellen Riddle) at 24 High Street. Walter (1789–1849) son of William, he was born in Selkirk. He became a tailor of Hawick and was a trustee of the Relief Kirk. He is listed as a tailor on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may have been related to John, who was also a Hawick tailor at about the same time. In 1841 he is listed at about 23 High Street. He married Isobel Kedzie, whose family came from Slaidhills, and she died in 1838, aged 51. Their children were: Helen, who was a grocer (of pie fame); William (b.1822/3), a tailor, who emigrated to London, Ontario; Francis, joiner; Walter, blacksmith; and Isabel. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Tait and their children included: John (b.1728); and John (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1728 appear to be John Scott and John Paterson. William (b.1822/3) son of tailor Walter. He married Wilson Stuart in Hawick in 1846. He emigrated to Canada, and settled in London, Ontario. William (19th/20th C.) joiner, with business where the Burgh yard was later located. He was a Councillor and J.P. and was for a long time Session Clerk and elder of Allars Kirk. He was probably descended from tailor Walter.

ride (rid) v., arch. to fix boundaries, especially by perambulation, pp., arch. be ridden – ‘The said day the Baylyeas and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June ...’ [BR1705], ‘...did appoynt and ordaine the Common to ryd upon Fryday come eight days, being the twenty-sixth of May instant and current’ [BR1710] (also written ‘ryd’ and ‘ryde’, the word was used to describe the circuit of the itinerant High Court of the Judiciary in the 15th century, and was used in the context of boundary marking in Selkirk in the early 16th century; from Middle English; note the confusion with the word ‘ride’ meaning to go on horseback, which may have been confounded with this word in references to the ‘common riding’; note that the past participle use transposes the usual object into a subject, cf. belang).

ride (rid) v., arch. to ford a river on horseback, be fordable – ‘But when the land-sergeant the water saw, It winna ride my lads, quo’ he ...’ [CPM].

ride oot see Ride-oot

Ride-oot (rid-oo’) n. Ride-out, an organised visit to one of a number of local villages or farms on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the weeks between the Picking of the Cornet and the start of the Common Riding. They are essentially practices for the big weekend, and are not part of the official Common Riding, being organised by the Cornet. The first Ride-out seems to have been held in 1891 (with Andrew Haddon as Cornet and J.E.D. Murray as Right-Hand Man) and was an outing to Lilliesleaf by 5 consecutive Cornets, followed 2 weeks later by another ride-out via Braxholme, Northhouse, Skelfhill and Priesthaugh to St. Leonard’s. The first Ride-out to Mosspaul was in 1901, James Sutherland’s year. The Tuesday Ride-outs were originally held so that shop-workers and others could attend on half-day closing, with the mill-workers being able to attend

on Saturdays. Women have been officially allowed on most Ride-outs since 1997. They extend over either 5 or 6 weeks, depending on when the Picking is. The venues are chosen each year by the Cornet (with advice from the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father). The first Ride-out has been to Bonchester since about the last war. The premier event is the ride to Mosspaull, which is 2 weeks before the Common Riding. After the last Saturday Ride-out, the Principals stop off at Hornshole. There are sometimes special one-off rides because of the place of residence of the new Cornet. Locations have included Bonchester, Cavers, Cogsmill, Denholm, Ettrickbridge, Harden House, Hermitage, Lilliesleaf, Mosspaull, Newmill, Philhope Bridge, Robertson, Skelfhill, Southfield, Teindside, Teviotdale Lodge, Teviothead, West Bucleuch and Wolfelee. Each ride-out starts with a muster in Allars Crescent, leaving from Backdamgate. The Right-Hand Man acts as front marshal and the Left-Hand Man as back marshal. There are usually lots of cars packed with picnics which go to meet the riders at the appointed location. There is usually a sing-song in the village hall or similar, and before leaving the ‘Big Fower’ sing 5 verses of ‘Teribus’ while mounted. On returning to town, the Principals dismount at the Backdamgate and usually carry children on their shoulders round to the steps of the Tower where there is a strive and more song singing. A junior ride-out (for primary school pupils) was started in 2010 – ‘oo yaise the sorta ‘no the ful shillin’ kinda general English ... ’twae horses short o a rideoot’, that wud be a Hawicin yin’ [WLL] (the usual plural is ‘Rides-oots’, although ‘Rides-oot’ might be more correct English).

ride the fair (ˈrɪd-θə-fair) v., arch. to open a fair by riding in procession. Magistrates from Jedburgh rode the market at the Winter Fair in the early 18th century and had to be rescued from the crowd by the Hawick Magistrates! Similarly the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to ride the fair one year and had to be rescued from the Bailies, with some resulting injuries – ‘[The Burgh Magistrates proceeded to] ryde the fair’ [BR1672] (also ridin the fair; note that this meaning of ‘ride’ always referred to being on horseback, unlike in common riding).

ridin (ˈrɪd-dɪn) n. the Riding of the Marches, or Common Riding, the annual marking of a town’s boundaries, traditionally on horseback – The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being acquisit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoune ... ’ [BR1645] (note that the original meaning may have had nothing to do with horses, see ride).

the Ridin o the Mairches (ˈθu-ri-din-ə-thu-mər-choez) n. the central part of Hawick Common Riding, performed by the Cornet and his followers on the Friday of Common Riding week. The riders mount at St. Leonard’s (after the Chase) and proceed to the furthest point of the Common, via Wullestruther and Acreknowe (the Cornet passes along the Hawick side, the others free to choose), for the ceremonial ‘Cutting of the Sod’. The cavalcade proceeds to the Moor for the Races, then rides via Crumhaughhill to Myrselawgreen. The Principals next perform the Dipping of the Flag at the Coble Pool. Afterwards the whole party goes to the Millpath for the proclamation that the marches have been ridden and the Song-singing. Before the Division of the Common in 1777 the entire Common boundary would be marched, and many marker turfs or stones positioned, as well as neighbouring sheep and cattle driven off. Sometimes this would be done on foot over the few days before the ceremonial riding. The ceremony is believed to have taken place since at least the 16th century, but could be even older. The Council used to appoint 12 Burleymen to assist the Bailies in riding the marches, the appointment being a courtesy one after the Division, and the last appointments being made in 1854. Footmen as well as horsemen are recorded as part of the procession in 1725. The practice of riding armed with pistols was officially discontinued in 1784. In the years 1900–04 and 1921 it was switched to the Thursday morning and in 1910–13 it was moved to the Saturday. J.E.D. Murray carried it on himself during WWI and Chap Landles led the unofficial rides during WWII, while in 2001 there was an organised walk round the marches in November (see also the Common Ridin).

ridin the mairches (ˈrɪ-di-θə-mər-choez) n. ceremonial marking of the boundaries of a town Common. Scottish towns with this tradition include, Annan, Dalkeith, Lanark, Linlithgow, Rutherglen (discontinued in the 19th century) and Sanquhar, as well as the towns of the Borders.

Ridley (ˈrɪd-lee) n. John (b.1794/5) civil engineer from England. He was living at Thorledishope in 1861, but probably only there temporarily.
Nicholas ‘Nick’ (1929–1993) Baron of Liddesdale, born in Northumberland, he was educated at Eton and Oxford University. He became an M.P. in 1959, held several appointments under Edward Heath and then became a great supporter of Margaret Thatcher. He was Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (in the years before the Falklands War), Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Secretary of State for Transport (authoring the Ridley Report on how the Conservatives would deal with the Unions), Secretary of State for the Environment (where he popularised the phrase ‘NIMBY’, but reduced public funding for environmental protection) and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (which he was forced to resign after likening Helmut Kohl to Adolf Hitler). He was also responsible for introducing the ‘Poll Tax’. In 1992 he was created a life peer, choosing the title ‘Baron Ridley of Liddesdale’, despite objections from Scottish politicians. His puppet image on ‘Spitting Image’ always had a cigarette in its mouth, and he died of lung cancer shortly after being elevated to the Lords.

Rieve (reev) v., arch. to plunder, rob, raid, rustle – ‘God send the land deliverance Fraw e’ry reaving, riding Scot: We’ll sune hae neither cow nor ewe, We’ll sune hae neither staig nor stot’ [LHTB], ‘…On their rieving raids through the glens and glades’ [TK] (also written ‘reive’ and ‘reeve’).

Right-Haund Man (ri-haund-mawn) n. Right-Hand Man during the Common Riding, being the previous year’s Cornet. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet, and provides assistance to the new Cornet. He rides with the Cornet during many of the ceremonial events, wearing the same green coat etc. He acts as front marshal during the Ride-outs. Occasionally someone has served twice as Right-Hand Man, such as William Stoddart in 1875, and W. Lockie Thorburn after WWII. Mr. Lunn stood in as Left-Hand man in 1875, even although he had not previously been Cornet, and Robert Anderson stood in as Right-Hand Man in 1897, the year before he was Cornet! It is unclear at what point the positions of Right- and Left-Hand Man became ‘official’ during the Common Riding. ‘The Cornet and his two men’ are referred to in 1809, there is a photographic portrait of the 1857 Cornet and his 2 supporters, and a painting of 1846 showing the ‘Big Threi’ crossing the Teviot.

Ringwood

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. parish and market town in Hampshire, with the same name as lands to the south of Hawick. Ringwood is recorded as early as the 10th century, with a grant by King Edgar to the Church of Abingdon. Just before the Norman Conquest it was held by Tostig, who was Earl of Northumbria, and brother of King Harold. Given Tostig’s connection to Northumbria, and the fact that he held extensive lands elsewhere, there is a possibility that the Teviotdale Ringwood was named after the English one by either him or some other common landowner. The origin of the name is suggested to be ‘rima wuda’, meaning ‘border wood’.

Ringwudfield (ring-wud-field) n. Ringwoodfield, area on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley, formerly in Cavers Parish. It was long a property of Melrose Abbey, described as lying upon the ‘Alwent (Allan) and Teviot’ and given to the monks by Oswulf during the reign of Malcolm IV (mid-12th century). The boundaries of the lands are briefly described, but most of the names are now unfamiliar – ‘Blachapol’, ‘Bollinesburn’, ‘Crbmbrche’, ‘Penanno’, ‘Brunemore’ and ‘Blackaburne’. The grant was remade by Philip de Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland just a few years later. It was confirmed by Uchtred, son of Oswulf (and his son Uchtred) in about 1166. In about 1358 the specific lands of Penangushope and Caldcleuch, within this barony, were granted to Melrose Abbey. There were further confirmations in the reigns of Alexander II and David II. It is recorded as ‘Ringwood’ in 1360 when Sir William, Earl of Douglas, charged Sir William of Gledstains, his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, to defend the Abbot and Convent of Melrose as lords of the lands there. The Abbey presumably held the lands throughout the 15th century, and David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were made bailies in 1484. In a document of 1500 it is referred to as ‘the lordship of Ryngwodfield’. It contained (at least) the lands and steadings of ‘Rynghwodchat, Stobycot, the Burghe, Prysthaugh, Cauldeuch, Standhmol, Penangushop, Sowdlinryg and the Bowenyl’ (now mostly familiar places), which were leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500. His son, Sir Walter, was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, in 1519 and reappointed in 1524. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Rodono); it seems likely that this was because Scott of Buccleuch had temporarily forfeited the lands to the Crown. In 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £52 6d; in addition the King’s shepherds were paid for various amounts of grain in the lands of ‘Northous, Stobbe-tait, et Cokburn’, ‘lie Burgh’ and ‘Vestcotrig et Southcothrig et Bolburg’ (with transcription errors). The ‘lands of Ringwoodfield and the office of bailiery of Melroseland’ are recorded in the Scott retour of 1553/4; the lands were then valued at £52 Scots. In 1558 the Prior of Melrose complained about Walter Scott of Branxholme possessing the lands ‘in Ryngwodfield’ and the bailiary of other lands of the Abbey. In about 1564 the lands were valued at £3 6s 8d, and included Brugh, Stobcote, Ringwoodhaugh, Bowanhill, Grange, Priesthaugh, Penangushope, ‘Wositerie’ [probably Westcotterig], Northhouse, Southdeanrig and Caldcleuch; Sir Walter Scott inherited them from his grandfather at this time. Sir Walter Scott (the ‘Bold Buccleuch’) inherited the lands from his father in 1574. In 1621 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose, when it is listed as Caldcleuch, Northhouse, ‘Crawshope’, Stobcote, Brugh, Southdeanrig, ‘Colburn’, Westcotterig, ‘Rowanhill’ [probably Bowanhill], Priesthaugh and Penangushope’. In 1660 the lands are recorded being put in ‘wadset’ to pay the fine imposed by Cromwell on Scott of Buccleuch; it was still technically in the Lordship of Melrose and consisted of Caldcleuch, Priesthaugh, Northhouse, ‘Coliburne’, Stobcote, Doecleuch, Southdeanrig, Brugh, Fairnyside, Peelbrae, Penangushope, Langlechside, Phaup, Linhope and Frostyke. In the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch it appears to no longer be a Lordship, but it heads a list of farms that were mostly formerly contained within it and now referred to as lying within the Lordship of Melrose, namely ‘Ringwoodfield, Caldcleuch, Northous, Thirlestane, Braidhauch, Crowishope, Stobit-coat-burgh, Suddinrig, Coatburne, Westcotrig, Bowanhill, Priesthaugh, and Pannangoishope’; essentially the same list occurs in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch. It is recorded again in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693 (transcribed ‘Kingwoodfield’); it is then within the Lordship of Melrose. The name does not occur after the 17th century, but is crudely the same as ‘Teviotdalehead’, as used by the Buccleuch estates. It seems... likely that if there was a tower house it was on the land of ‘Ryngwodchat’, which may be an error for ‘Ringwoodhaugh’. This probably corresponded with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken ‘Ringwoode fell’ for the farms of Berryfell, and ‘Ringwood Hatt’ for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is ‘ringwude’ in the 1160s, ‘Ringwile’ in about 1170, ‘Ryngwodfelde’ in c.1358, ‘Rengwude’ and ‘Rengwodfeld’ in c.1360s, ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1484, ‘Ryn-gwodfield’ in 1500, ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1519, ‘Ryn-gwodfield’ and ‘Ringwodfeld’ in 1524, ‘Rigwodfeld’ in 1538, ‘Rigwodfeld’ and ‘Rinhwodfeld’ in 1553/4, ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1557, ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1564, ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1574, ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1634 and ‘Ringwodfield’ in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwoodhaugh (ring-wud-hawch) n. Ringwoodhaugh, probable name for a standing near Ringwood Hill, recorded as ‘Ryngwodchat’ in 1500. In 1557 it was ‘Ringwodchat’ when Adam Scott of Allanhaugh paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is ‘Ringwoodhaugh’. It may correspond to the modern farm of Broadhaugh.

Ringwud Hill (ring-wud-hil)n. Ringwud Hill, hill which lies directly south of Newmill and above Broadhaugh farm, reaching a height of 247 m. Its name is surely connected with the ancient lands of ‘Ringwood’ or ‘Ringwoodfield’ in upper Teviotdale, once owned by Melrose Abbey.

rin-im-ower (rin-im-ow-ur) n., arch. a children’s game resembling ‘King’s Covenanter’, involving trying to capture opponents as they cross a street, with the captive replacing the captor (noted by J. Jamieson; elsewhere called ‘Willie Wastle’, ‘Tom Tiddler’s Ground’, etc.).

Rink Ferm (ringk-ferm) n. Rink farm, near the confluence of the Tweed and the Ettrick. It is the site of a pre-historic settlement, sometimes called ‘Rink Camp’. This was also where the Hawick Farmers’ Club instigated an annual sheep market in October 1779, which became one of the biggest in the South of Scotland. The land here belonged to the Laird of Edgerston. is ‘Rispy-Law’. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is described as ‘A farm than no man doth know ye murches of’ (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Rispilaw’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rispylaw’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Rispelaw’; probably from ‘rispie’, meaning ‘long, coarse grass’).

Ritchie (ri-chee) n. Rev. John (1669/90–1744) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1697, he was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1701 and became minister of Minto Parish in 1703. He remained as minister until his death, although he had 2 separate assistants in the 1740s. He was one of the men appointed to examine Hawick’s new candidate for Schoolmaster in 1718, and preached of the men appointed to examine Hawick’s new candidate for Schoolmaster in 1718, and preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Barbara Ainslie (daughter of Rev. James and cousin of Rev. Walter), who died in 1715, aged 45 (also written ‘Richie’).

rither (ri-thur) adv. rather – ‘where wud ee rither gaun yer holidays, Spittal or Whitley Bay?’; ‘what’s gaun on, or rither, what’s no gaun on?’; ‘There’s naewhere A wad rither be …’ [IWL], other – ‘rither is Hawick, where wud ee like ti bide?’ (cf. the locally less common raither).

Ritson (ri-sin) n. William (1811–95) born in County Durham to a Methodist family, he became a railway contractor and was one of the main men behind the construction of the Border Union Railway. He is particularly remembered for being in charge of the construction of the Shankend Viaduct and Whitrope Tunnel. He lived at Woodley Field near Hexham.

ritter (ri-tur) n., arch. a kind of spade for cutting turfs as a guide for ploughing, etc. (see rit).

rive (riv) v., arch. to tear, tug firmly, pull asunder – ‘Agnes Scott is convicted of … thrusting her hand in his mouth and ryveing out of his cheiks’ [BR1695], ‘…and ryveing of the locke of the tolbuith doore, and ryveing up the daills of the loft of the sd. tolbuith …’ [BR1706], ‘…Then frightful shrieks the welkin rive – As I, with rapture, wake alive’ [JJ], ‘The gurly wind wi’ raggin’ thuds Was like to rive my claes in tatters’ [JT], ‘…Mirk memories rive and smert’ [WL], ‘…As callants and candidates rive divots free opposite banks And daub them dourly at yin another …!’ [DH] (formerly spelled ‘ryve’ and sometimes ‘reive’; the past tense can be ‘rived’ or rave, while the past participle forms are reen and ‘riven’).

Riversdale Mills (ri-vurz-dāl-nilz) n. 19th century hosiery factory on Mansfield Square, between Eastfield Mills and the railway. It was constructed around 1888 for William Kedie & Co., which was then essentially an offshoot of Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. It was sold to Innes, Chambers & Co. around 1909. It was later the main site for Lockie’s, and more recently Monk Cotton (also sometimes erroneously referred to as ‘Riverside Mills’, perhaps because of similarly named mills in Selkirk and Jedburgh).

Riverside (ri-vur-sūd) n. street in Denholm, off the Minto Road, also called ‘Riverside Drive’, with construction beginning in the 1930s and being completed after WWII. The land here was originally the North Crofts, given by Douglas of Cavers in 1862 for allotments.

Riverside Caravan Park (ri-vur-sūd-ka-ru-vawn-pawrk, -ku-ra-) n. caravan park between Hawick and Denholm, adjacent to Hornshole, established in the 1960s and much expanded in recent years. There is a footbridge across the Teviot near there (note the older pronunciation of ‘caravan’ with accent on the 2nd syllable).

Riverside Drive (ri-vur-sūd-drīv) n. street in Denholm, on the west side of the village, between Sunnyside and the river.

Riverside Mills see Riverside Mills

Riverside Tweeds (ri-vur-sūd-nilz) n. Riverside Tweeds (Hawick) Ltd., a small textiles company, which ran 1968–80, with records in the National Archive.

River Teviot see the Teviot road (röd) v., arch. to run along in front of the gun-dogs and hunters instead of taking flight, to follow game running in this way (noted by J. Jamieson).

road-end (röd-end) n., arch. place where a smaller road meets a main road, neighbourhood, locality, vicinity of one’s home – ‘... an aamaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther-oot ti waal an glower at the unordinar munsie’ [ECS], ‘There was Jock, wui Robbie an Yid, an kens whae forby, stamin at the road-end’ [ECS] (synonymous with gate end).

Road End (röd-end) n. former place name near Newcastleton, possible the same as Steeleroadend. William Elliot was recorded there in a directory of 1868.

Roadheid (röd-heed) n. Roadhead, road leading up from the Cauld, previously known as ‘Blaikie’s Brae’. The name was formerly applied to the top of that road, e.g. to the houses at Norwood that are above Roadhead, and on some old maps (e.g. the 1859 and 1890 Ordnance Survey maps) is marked at Langlands Road. Hence there is some confusion about whether the name applies to the whole of that road, or just the top part. It was adopted as a street name around 1890. There was once a draw well (possibly Hawick’s only one) situated there. The road is shown in a photograph dating from about 1885. William Dalgleish is recorded there in 1791 (the name derives from being at the head of what was previously described as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’).

Roadheid Brae (röd-heed-brā) n. Roadhead Brae, another name for Roadheid.

Roadheid Cottage (röd-heed-kō’-cej) n. former small cottage at Roadhead, which bore the date 1765 on a door lintel and survived until at least the late 19th century.

the Roadhouse (tu-thū-röd-hooos) n. popular name for one of a number of pubs, in recent times referring to Burnfoot Roadhouse or to Thorterdykes.

road-injin (röd-in-jin) n., arch. a steam engine used on the road – ‘A duist hyt jairgin things, an that senseless road-injin fair garrd mei girrl!’ [ECS].

Roadside (röd-sīd) n. place name used in Wilton in the 19th century, apparently referring to part of the modern Princes Street, perhaps corresponding to Ladylaw Road. It may at some times have been used as an alternative name for Roadhead; however, in the 1790s both names were used at the same time and hence they were different. Walter Scott and William Nichol were recorded there in 1791 and Hector Blaikie in 1797.

the Road Trustees (tu-thū-röd-trus-teez) n., pl. body set up following the Turnpike Acts of the late 18th century. They were responsible for raising money through tolls and spending it to improve roads, bridges etc. (as well as to pay off any subscribers). This led to a huge improvement in the quality of local roads. The also contributed to the construction of many new local bridges from the 1770s onwards.

Roan (rūn) n. farm to the west of the confluence of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, on the Ryedale Burn. There was formerly a tower here, possibly on a mound in front of the modern farmhouse. The tower still existed in the early 18th century, although there is now no sign of it. ‘Sym Armstrong of the Rone’ is recorded in 1601. James Scott of Bowhill is recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, paying tax for 3 hearths. William Mitchelson, Patrick Nichol and James Turnbull were also recorded there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 2695 acres, bounded by the Liddel Water, Blackburn, Tarras and Foulshields. It was at that time the farm was combined with Woolock and the main farmhouse was in the same place as the modern one. John Laing paid tax on 25 windows there in 1748. James Grieve was farmer here in at least 1788-97 and Robert Elliot was shepherd in 1797. Thomas Thomson was there in 1821. A different Robert Elliot was farmer there in the first half of the 19th century and James Douglas was tenant in the 1860s. It could be the ‘Ran...’ recorded in that area on a rental roll of c.1376 – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Searit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also ‘the Roan’; marked ‘Renn’ on Blaue’s c.1654 map and is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Roan Fell (rūn-fēl) n. high ground near the head of the Hermitage Water, between Millstone Edge and Hartsgarth Fell. It lies on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and reaches a height of 568 m – ‘See! they have gained the Roanfell’s heathery crest, Not in a line, but hound to hound abreast’ [HNv] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).
roar (rōr) v. to cry loudly, bawl – ‘hei wasni juist greetin when they got bate, hei was roarin’, ‘But she ...roared and grat, an’ grab ma arms’ [HAST1868], ‘What’s she roarin and greetin at?’ [ECS], ‘When they sortit the muddle oot at last, The lassies grat and roared ...’ [DH].

the roarin game (thu-rō-rin-gān) n. soubriquet for curling, played on various ponds around Hawick from the earliest years of the 19th century and dying out in the early 20th.

Roarin Willie (rō-rin-wi-lee) n. nickname for William Campbell.

roast (rōst) n., poet. a roost, particularly in the phrase ‘rule the roast’ – ‘...as this House of Representatives must evidently continue to ‘rule the roast’’ [RW].

Roast (rōst) n., arch. rust – ‘Layna up for yourselves thesauers upon yirth, where maethe an’ rusto deth corrup’ [HSR], v., arch. to rust.

Rob (rob) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Robert.

Robb (rōb, rob) n. William Cuthbert (20th C.) High School English teacher (nicknamed ‘Pongo Robb’), author of several educational books in the 1930s to 50s. He also wrote the ‘Touchstone’ column in the Hawick Express, years??.

Robbie Barrell (ro-bee-baw-rul) n. nickname for Robert Scott, one of the many of the same name in the mid-1800s.

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dī) n. nickname for a supporter of Hawick Rugby Football Club – ‘And though players come and players go, Wi my last braith I’ll prophesy – They may fade away, when they’ve had their day, But there’ll aye be a Rob- bie Dye!’ [DH] (the name is recorded at least as early as the 1950s, and based on some early supporter, although popularised in the mythic poem by Davod Hill).

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dī) n. poem by David Hill, first published in the Hawick Express in 1957 under the pseudonym ‘HAB’. It is included on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006), recited by Bert Armstrong.

the Robbie Dyes (thu-ro-bee-dīz) n. nickname for Hawick R.F.C., derived from the popular name of an early fanatical supporter of the Club.

Robbie Hunter’s Well (ro-bee-hun’-urz-wel) n. popular name for a former public pump well, situated against the side of a house at the foot of the Back Raw.

Robbie’s (ro-beez) n. modern bar and diner at 8 High Street, run by Robbie Watt. In 2004 it became the Tower Inn.

Robbie Scare a Hair (ro-bee-skār-a-hār) n. nickname for auctioneer Robert Scott (presumably because of his lack of hair).

Robbie Scott (ro-bee-skā) n. name occurring in a version of a song by Jock Gray, probably from the early 19th century – ‘And the laddie he’s but young, And the laddie he’s but young, And Robbie Scott ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [DJG] (note that in another version the name is ‘Rob Rodger’, so this may be simply an error).

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-thu-kaw) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI] (also written ‘Speedie’; possibly related to the Spalding family, cf. Chairlie Speedy).

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-thu-kaw) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI] (also written ‘Speedie’; possibly related to the Spalding family, cf. Chairlie Speedy).

Robert (ro-bur) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Robert I (1274–1329) known as Robert the Bruce, he was great-grandson of David I, he was King of Scotland 1306–1329. He refused to meet the English on even ground, and achieved immortal fame for leading the 1314 defeat of the English at Bannockburn, which made Scotland a sovereign nation. He granted part of Branxholme to Walter Comyn and the rest to Henry Baliol in 1307, and split the Barony of Wilton between Gilbert Maxwell and Henry Wardlaw at about the same time. He also granted part of Kirkborthwick to William Barbour, and moved it from Roxburghshire to Selkirkshire. He visited Jedburgh at least once late in his life, granting a charter there in 1329. His heart was supposedly returned from the Crusades by Sir James Douglas and reputedly buried under the chancel’s east window at Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him – ‘...Repeats the tles of old heroic times, While Bruce and Wallace consencrate the rhymes’ [JL].

Robert II (1316–90) called ‘the Steward’, he was the only son of Walter, the 5th High Steward of Scotland and Marjorie daughter of Robert I. He played a strong role in the government of Scotland.
under his younger uncle David II, being Regent along with John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. He was one of the Scots leaders at Halidon Hill, and escaped from the Battle of Neville’s Cross. Imprisoned for rebellion against David, he eventually succeeded to the throne in 1371 after David’s death. Confusion over the legality of his marriage with Elizabeth Mure later led to disputes among his descendants. Robert III (c.1340–1406) King from 1390. He was the son of Robert II by his mistress Elizabeth Mure, later legitimised by marriage. He was disabled by being kicked by a horse. Born John, he changed his name on assuming the throne. The kingdom was effectively ruled by his brother Robert, Earl of Fife and later Duke of Albany. He married Annabella Drummond. His son David, Duke of Rothesay became lieutenant of the kingdom, but died mysteriously at Falkland Palace in 1402. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, James I.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (12th C.) son of Guy, he witnessed a document as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1147. This was confirmation of a gift to Coldingham Priory that Gospatrick, brother of Dolphin, had given to Edrom and Nisbet; his name is given as ‘Roberto filio Widonis’. The same Robert also witnessed other documents relating to lands in Scotland, the last being in about 1170. This included renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the period 1165–68 and a papal document referring to his gift to Newbattle Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear if he was part of some well known family.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (10th/11th C.) carpenter of Hassendean, who witnessed a charter in about the 1220s. He is recorded as ‘Roberto carpentario’.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (13th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Robert filz Rauf persone del Eglise de Seint Cuthbert de Ewytesdale’. He was thus presumably son of Ralph and served as Parson of the Nether Kirk of Ewes.

Robert Hill (ro-bur’-hil) n. hill shown being near the source of the Slitrig and Rule Waters on Gordon’s map c. 1650, between the ‘Maidens papes Hills’ and ‘Wriggs Hill’ (probably Wigg Knowe). It is unclear which hill this would be, since there is no similar modern name of any significant nearby hills. Perhaps Wyndburgh Hill (the highest in the area) is meant, or its southern ridge, being composed of Outer Knowe Head, Crow Knowe and Kihl Knowe, suggesting a connection with ‘Robert’s Linn’ below. This is probably the ‘Robertis hill’ mentioned in the 1562 document describing disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule; this was adajcent to the lands of Windburgh Hope. It may be the ‘Roberthill’ that was among lands sold in 1607 by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It is also probably the place mentioned by Scott of Satchells in relationship to the Scots of Thirlestane – ‘John’s son, Robert, was a warden in his time, The fight of Robert’s hill he did gain; He for his king and country did maintain the truth; He married Scot, daughter to the laird of Buccleugh’.[CWS].

Robert of Heap (ro-bur’-ō-heep) n. holder of the lands of Heap (or ‘Hepe’) before about 1431, as mentioned in a grant transferring the lands from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

Roberton (ro-bur’-in) n. village about 6 miles west of Hawick along the Borthwick, centre for the surrounding parish. As a place name it has existed since at least the 14th century. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott in the 14th century (as recorded in 1410), and it is possible they were named after him. Sir William Gledstains acquired the lands in the last years of the 14th century and the Gledstains of that Ilk retained the lands through the 15th century. John Scott of ‘Weltoun’ and ‘Valis’ acquired the lands in 1502 and later in the 16th century there was a celebrated faster called John Scott who came from the area (and possibly the same family). James Scott, last of Roberton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1627. There were 9 ‘communitants’ recorded living there in 1650, namely John Hume, Margaret Walker, Patrick Hume, Robert Hume, Walter Telfer, Margaret Wilson, Malie Brown and Bessie Scott. The Parish was formed in 1689 out of parts of the surrounding parishes and after much dispute. In 1694 there were 7 hearths recorded there. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Hychester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. Robert Scott was recorded as a resident in 1743. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hosocate were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Adam Scott of Galalaw (in 1785) and Robert Pott of Galalaw (in 1802) paid the Land Tax of £100. The present church, built in 1863/4, replaces a 17th century building, which stood behind the present Manse. This church was built in a time of religious and political upheaval in Scotland, before the new parish of Roberton.

was created. The church is built on what appears to be a former settlement, which may have been the ‘Robert’s Town’ from which the village takes its name. The farm there was part of the detached section of Hassendean Parish until 1690. The present village contains the Forman Hall, designed by J.P. Alison about 1922, and used for community events, as well as a stone pillar War Memorial. The police station there closed in 1931, but the small primary school remains. ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton’ was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and ‘Roberton: the making of a parish’ by George O. Wood in 1992 – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the name first appears in a charter of Robert III, probably in the late 1390s, it is ‘Robertistoun’ in 1430 and is usually spelled ‘Robertoun’ or ‘Roberton’ until the late 17th century, with Scott of Satchell’s writing ‘Robert-toun’ in 1688, ‘Robertoun’ in 1710 and ‘Robertown’ still recorded in 1743; it is marked ‘Roberston’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Robertoun’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map, as well as Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin is simply ‘Robert’s farm’, possibly referring to Robert Scott, mentioned in 1410 as a former owner).

Roberton (ro-bur’-in) n. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooperator in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Roberton’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigirig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Jamie local character of unknown age whose portrait is in the Museum.

Roberton Cleuchfit (ro-bur’-in-klooch-fi’) n. former piece of land near Roberton. It is possibly the same as ‘Roberton Burnfit’ or could be the land on which the house known as ‘Cleuchfoot’ was built. It is described (perhaps in the 17th century) as a ‘pendicle of Robertoun’, once owned by Walter Scott of Woll and then by Alexander Scott of Galalaw.

Roberton Free Kirk (ro-bur’-in-free-kirk) n. original official name for the Snoot Kirk.

Roberton Glebefit (ro-bur’-in-gleebe-fi’) n. name for houses in Roberton at the foot of the Glebe road. Margaret Laidlaw was a grocer there in 1841, and Thomas Murray and family were also living there.

Roberton Kirk (ro-bur’-in-kirk) n. church in Roberton village. The present church dates from 1863/4, designed in Gothic style by David Rhind. It is a rectangular building with small buttresses and a porch, with the bell hung over the gable. It has 2 memorial stained-glass windows and a war memorial in the grounds. The earlier church stood at the top of Manse Brae, where the cemetery is still located (and was marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was built in 1658/9 following complaints by Borthwick residents of the lack of a nearby church, which led to decades of dispute with Hassendean. A stone dated 1659 is built into the cemetery wall. It is recorded being repaired in 1721 and re-thatched in 1738 and 1769, but the thatch replaced with slates in 1770. Flagstones were first laid on the church floor about 1789. The old graveyard is part of the modern one, and is the burial place of Chisholmes of Chisholme, Lockharts of Cleghorn and Potts of Todrig and Borthwicksiel. This replaced the earlier cemetery at Borthwick Waas, while the church replaced Kirk Borthwick, which formerly stood opposite that cemetery. The church bell has an inscription reading ‘For the Tolbuith of Melros – 1649’ and the initials of John, Earl of Haddington. It may have been brought from Hassendean (along with the new roof) in 1690, and may also have spent some time in the river near Hornshole (according to tradition). The oldest surviving communion token is small and made of lead, bearing the inscription ‘R.K.’ and the date 1705. The history of the earlier church, the formation of the Parish of Roberton in 1690, and the suppression of the Parish of Hassendean is complicated, and mixed up with national (as well as local) politics. In the early years the glebe and manse were far from ideal: a new glebe was arranged in 1721. The Manse was repaired in 1827 and it is stated in 1834 that the glebe consisted of 16 acres, and crossed the county boundary, so that the Minister could vote in both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. An ornate piece of stonework (a scroll capital), unearthed in an adjacent field in 1963 (and now in the Museum), may come from Hassendean Kirk. Note that a separate Free Kirk congregation was set up after the Disruption of 1843, this being known as ‘the Snoot Kirk’ and used until 1927, with the congregation merging with that of the main church in 1930. Roberton church was linked with Teviothead 1966–72, then linked with St. Margaret’s and Wilton South 1972–83. It became formally united with St. George’s West in 1984, which was renamed Teviot Parish in 1996. A roll of the ministry is: John Colt, from c.1663; Thomas Shiels 1689–c.93; John Ferguson 1696–99; Robert Scott 1700–1727; Henry Erskine 1728–73; James Erskine 1774–86; James Hay 1786–1825; William Berry Shaw, assistant 1801–12; Alexander Nivison 1826–44; Charles Kinmeir Greenhill 1845–86; Mercer Hall 1887–1927; Æneas E. McNess 1894–1929; Cyrus M. Mortimer 1930–54; James B. Primrose 1955–60; Samuel Weir 1960–65; Robert McConnell 1966–83; Neil R. Combe 1984–. Roberton Moss (ro-bur’-in-mos) n. boggy area to north of Roberton village. The filter works for Alemoor were built there.

Roberton Pairish (ro-bur’-in-pä-reesh) n. parish around Roberton village and the Borthwick valley, created in 1689 from parts of the neighbouring parishes, including Hawick, Wilton and disjoint parts of Hassendean, including the area immediately around the village itself. Toshaw and neighbouring farms came from Hawick Parish, with Milsington, Girnwood and other farms coming from Hassendean, and Harden, Highchesters formerly being in Wilton. This followed about 3 decades of dispute, with Roberton Kirk being built in 1659, during confusion over the secession of Scott of Buccleuch (who owned much of Hassendean), but then material from the new Kirk being removed to repair Hassendean, following a decision in favour of Hassendean in 1666. The Revolution of 1688/9 and the restoration of Presbyterianism saw a successful petition to create Roberton as a Parish. The moving of the old church roof from Hassendean to Roberton in 1690 incited violence from the parishioners of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The Parish was about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, bounded by Ettrick, Yarrow, Ashkirk, Selkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Cavers and Eskdalemuir. The Parish long had part (about half) within Selkirkshire, but it was moved entirely into Roxburghshire in 1891. Parish registers go back to 1680, but the early ones are fairly incomplete, and the first part is really for Hassendean. An early Parish records is of £38 being stolen from the poor box in the unoccupied Manse in 1700. The first meeting to assess the Parish poor was in 1740. The records have significant gaps in the 1740s, 1750s and 1760s. Note that there is a separate parish of the same name in Lanarkshire, which sometimes causes confusion.

Roberton Place (ro-bur’-in-plis) n. private housing built in 1970 at the top of the West End, off Longbault Road, and named after the village of Roberton.

Roberton Schuil (ro-bur’-in-skil) n. school in Roberton village. It was noted at the General Assembly in 1724 that all parishes in the Presbytery had schools except for Roberton and Ettrick. The first record of a teacher being appointed was in 1765, and a new schoolhouse was built in 1790. In 1834 it was reported that ‘one-third of the parish is so situated that the children cannot attend’, since they are ‘at a distance of five and eight miles’. This situation was probably the reason for the establishment of small schools at Howpasley and Redfordgreen. A new schoolhouse was finished in about 1835. In 1836 it is recorded that there were 60 pupils in attendance. The present school building was erected in 1875 and long served as the local primary school, with several attempts to close it, and closure finally coming in 2010. The Borders Archive has School Board minutes for 1873–1919. The schoolmaster’s house in the 1830s contained 5 rooms, including kitchen. Robert Miller was schoolmaster in at least the period 1798–1800 and Robert Miller until 1822. Andrew Hogg was master there in the 1820s, until about the mid-1830s, and Thomas Anderson from 1833 until the 1860s.

Robert Paiterson Place (ro-bur’-pi’-ur-siplis) n. Robert Paterson Place, housing development at Burnflat, built in 2006 and named after the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’, who was born there.

Roberts (ro-burts) n. Rev. John minister of Southdean Kirk 1951–65. His time as minister included the period when Southdean first became linked with Edgerston.

Robert’s Hill see Robert Hill

Robert’s Linn (ro-burts-lin) n. waterfalls off the Slitrig, where the Newcastleton road crosses a deep ravine. This area is famous for jasper, which was used to make the first Burgh Seal for example, and also for fossils. Further up the stream can be seen signs of the former lime-workings that gave their name to the Limekilnedge. The Cattrail ends near here, leading to speculation that the falls had some special significance for our early ancestors. The area is also sometimes known as ‘the Linsns’. The high bridge there was rebuilt in 1903 using girders salvaged from the Tay Bridge disaster. A story circulated that it was bombed by a Zeppelin during WWI, but this was unsubstantiated. The bridge collapsed and was rebuilt as an embankment in 1982. There was once a farmstead in the area, where Robert Elliot and family were living in 1794 – ‘Ca’in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o’ Robert’s Linn . . . ’ [DH] (also written ‘Robertslinn’; the stream there may be the one marked ‘The Ryillyn B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, suggesting either an error or a different origin for the name; it is ‘Robertsline’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Robertson (ro-burt-sin) n. Alastair S., M.B.E., elder son of Nichol. He served as an apprentice designer with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., then worked with Munrospun in Galashiels, before joining Walker, Caledon, tweed manufacturers of Belfast, where he became Managing Director. He was a keen rugby player for Hawick junior teams, and also in Northern Ireland and served in the Royal Navy during WWII. He married Mairi Charlton from Ireland. Alexander (b.c.1779) cooper in Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1795/6) born at Makerstoun, he was blacksmith at Minto. He was recorded there in the electoral roll of 1837 and was still there in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jane T., Thomas, Margaret, Alexander and James. Alexander (b.1801/2) gamekeeper at Commonside in 1851 and 1861. He was living at Commonside Cottage since at least 1841. In 1834 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Govenlock, innkeeper at Moss Paul. Their children included James, Robert, Alexander, John, Margaret and William. Andrew (d.bef. 1808) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Jackson, who died in 1808. Their children included: Andrew (b.1763); Barbara (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Elizabeth (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Andrew (again, b.1773) Derek (1965 – ) born in Hawick, grandson of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He is an ambulance paramedic, working in Hawick but living in Newcastleton. He wrote ‘The Men Who Marched Away – Liddesdale and the Great War’ (1992) and ‘All These Fine Fellows: Hawick and District and the Great War 1914–1918’ (1999). Rev. Edward Macallan (b.1928) educated at Aberdeen and Oxford Universities, he became an Episcopalian minister. He was at Bristol and Swindon before coming to Hawick, where he was Rector at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk 1960–69. He left to take up a Scholarship at Queen’s College, Birmingham, moving to Alloa, where he worked as a teacher, before taking charge of Bathgate 1978–82, moving to Strathgryde in 1982, AUCHTERARDER in 1990 and retiring in 1993. Eric ‘Pinner’ (?)- son of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He has been Captain of Hawick Golf Club and British one-armed golf champion (having lost an arm in an accident at Hawick Station). He is father of Margaret and Dawn. Jessie (19th C.) from Kelso, she came to Hawick to assist in the shop of George Tunrbull the draper at 14 High Street. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Janet Riddle died in 1810. John ‘Jackie’, ‘the Voo’ (1921– ) son of John Proctor, he is known locally as a singer. His brother Wullie also had the same nickname (which was not there in the previous generation). He may be the last person living to remember meeting J.E.D. Murray. He was Acting Father in 1968 to Elliot Hutton. He was member of the Common Riding Committee from 1966, was President of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1973 and Callants’ Club President in 1986. The avenue at the Nipknowes that the followers take is informally named after him. His son Jim was Cornet in 1977, while another son John was later Honorary Provost. He was Jubilee Acting Father in 2018. John (?– ) son of Jackie. He was a local Councillor and Honorary Provost in 2002. Nichol (20th C.) apprenticed to Forbes Nursery, he served in WWI with the 1/4th KOSB. He was wounded on that fateful day of 12th July 1915 and invalided home. One of the last local survivors of the Gallipoli campaign, he wrote about his experiences afterwards. Peter H. (19th/20th C.) grocer who was...

Cornet in 1899, with his uncle James A. Henderson as his Acting Father. He was Cornet the year of the earliest film clips of the Common Riding, this being a hot and sunny weekend. He served as Acting Father to Francis A. Henderson in 1922. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Flight in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (1830–97) son of the shepherd at Branxholme, he was assistant teacher in a school run on Episcopal principles, taught by Rev. Campbell in Hawick High Street around 1850. He went to South Africa as a missionary, being transferred to Zululand (once a separate country) in 1860, where he founded the first mission of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This was at Kwa Magwaza, the mission being later destroyed in the civil disturbances. He lived and worked with the Zulu people for many years, gaining the native name ‘Unzimela’. He also (anonymously) compiled and published ‘Zulu Izaga, that is proverbs, or out-of-the-way sayings of the Zulus; collected, translated, and interpreted, by a Zulu missionary’ in Durban in 1880. Around 1891 he moved to Tahlwati where he founded a mission using his wagon, and where a church was later built in his memory. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702. He married Jean Turnbull in Cavers 1700. His children probably included: Thomas (b.1700); Ann (b.1702); Margaret (b.1704); and Alexander (b.1718). William (17th C.) servant of Robert Grierson from Clarilaw. In 1684 he was listed among local men listed as being fugitives because of attending field conventicles. It is unclear whether this is the Clarilaw near Haseande where the Cornet is or the one in Bowden Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Ann (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); William (b.1724); and Hugh (b.1725). Perhaps the same William married Margaret Taylor in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (1720–97) from Dunfermline, he was brought to Hawick by local interests in 1752 to start carpet manufacturing and was entered as a Burgess in 1756. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others, renewing the partnership ten years later. The Hawick Carpet Company lasted until 1806. In 1763 he was rewarde with £ 40 from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures for mechanical inventions (a new kind of ‘throw mills’ and a machine for teasing wool) improving carpet manufacturing. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in Hawick in 1765. In 1770 he was the first feuor, from the Langlands Estate, of the lands of Roughheugh, where Rosalee Brae now is; he is still listed as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £ 10 18s 6d) in 1788 and still recorded that way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (even although he was deceased by then). In a description of Hawick’s trade in about 1777 it is stated that his company had 14 looms weaving carpets. He purchased part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. He may be the William who witnessed a baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780, performed by Rev. Williamson (of the East Bank Kirk). In 1789 and 1790 he paid tax in Hawick for having a female servant. He is listed as a carpet manufacturer on the 1787–90 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Mr Robertson’ who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1795 and probably the manufacturer William who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was a trustee of the East Bank Meeting House, and at one point complained about the meagre allowance allowed for boarding visiting preachers. He appears to have had a son, also William, with whom he is probably sometimes confounded. He may be the weaver William (some of the birth entries being written ‘Robson’) married to Jane (or ‘Jean’) French, whose children included Isabel (b.1756), William (b.1760), John (b.1761) and Ann (b.1763); Jean French died in Hawick in 1782. William (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was married an Honorary Burgess in 1750. William (18th C.) quarter-master of the Scots Greys, who was married an Honorary Burgess in 1776. William (18th/19th C.) son of William, the instigator of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He may be the William, son of William and Jean French born in Hawick in 1760. It is possible that he was the ‘W. Robertson, carpet manufacturer’ recorded as Cornet in 1778. He is ‘Mr William Robertson, jun. Hawick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. In 1789 he married Janet, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Their children included: Mary (b.1790); Jane (b.1794); and William (b.1795). He may also have been the William whose son John died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the deceased William ‘Robison’, ‘Carpetweaver’, whose son William’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1806. Perhaps a relative was the William in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1837 he was listed as leaving from the Grapes.
Robert the Bruce

on alternate Tuesdays, bound for Glasgow, and on alternate Thursdays for Langholm, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. Rev. William (20th C.) minister of Kirkton from 1931 until about 1940. William G. (??-??) ‘Bill’ or ‘Wullie’, High school teacher and columnist for the Hawick News, writing the ‘G.R.’ column as well as covering rugby. He was also heavily involved with the Common Riding, being Secretary of the Committee in the 1950s. William S. ‘Willie’ (1904/05–91) owner of W.S. Robertson (Outfitters) Ltd. at 13–15 High Street from the 1930s until his retiral in 1973. He was an enthusiastic viola player with the local opera and retired to Dunbar. William ‘Wullie’, ‘the Voo’ (1912–2000) well known Westender, brother of Jackie. The origin of his nickname is unknown, and it was also later applied to his brother. As a boy he witnessed the terrible charabanc disaster at the Vertish in 1919. He was a dispatch rider for the R.A.F. during WWII and later worked with the Gas Board. He was known for performing the ‘Canoe Song’ from ‘Sanders of the River’. He also scratched ‘Voo’ into many trees up the Westend, several marked after his death with small brass plaques. His wife’s name was Cathy and his son was ‘Billy Voo’. Rev. W.M. (19th/20th C.) minister of Hawick Baptist Kirk 1919–19. He was said to be a fervent evangelical preacher, who sometimes packed the Theatre or the Town Hall. He served in France with the Soldiers’ Christian Association for several months in 1918. He left Hawick for Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool. He may be the minister of the same name who was at Mount Pleasant in Vancouver from 1927.

Robert the Bruce (ro-bur-‘thu-broos) n. Scottish hero, otherwise known as Robert I.

Robin Reidcap (ro-bin-reed-kap) n. legendary servant of Lord Soulis, supposedly dwarfen and with vampire-like fangs, whose ghost is said to inhabit Hermitage Castle today – ‘Lord Soulis he sat in Hermitage Castle, And beside him Old Redcap sly – ‘Now, tell me, thou sprite who art mickle of might, The death that I must die!’ [JL], ‘For doon i the dungeons Gleg Reid-cap still lurks, In plain disregard For the Office o Works!’ [DH] (cf. reid-cap).

Robison (ro-bin-sin) n. G. Allen (19th/20th C.) photographer in Hawick in the late 1800s and early 1900s. He trained as a photographer with Russell & Sons of London. At various times he was based at Burnlington House on North Bridge Street, as well as at East Bank House and on the Exchange Arcade.

Robison (ro-bee-sin) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Marion Cowan in Roberton in 1729 and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1731. Andrew (19th C.) grocer, tea, and wine merchant at 23 High Street in the 1850s and 60s. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. Ebenezer (b.1795) whip and thong maker, son of Elizabeth. He was listed in Wilton on Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on Wilton Damside and on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861 (although these are probably the same address). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Park from Lilliesleaf in 1821. Their children included: Ebenezer; Andrew; Elizabeth, who married William Richardson; twins Barbara and Margaret; Mary; Agnes; and Janet. George (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Janet (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot in 1623 along with Archie Henderson when they had 2 sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant at Braidlie in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) married Bess Nichol in Roberton in 1727. Their children included: Janet (b.1729), baptised in Roberton; and James (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk. Matthew (17th C.) resident of Liddesdale who was mentioned in about 1645. According to the Buccleuch records ‘One Matthew Robison and his brother had just returned from an excursion into the Debateable Land after some cattle of their own, and had a sleuth-hound with them’. The hound was sent off to search out some thieves who had been challenged ‘at Catheugh and Cringleford, until they came to Carshop, from whence they stole threescore sheep’. Ralph (18th/19th C.) overseer for...
George Douglas of Cavers. In 1806 he was residing at Berwick when he was found guilty of theft, fraud and breach of trust. Robert (17th/18th C.) Wright in Hawick. In 1722 he is recorded refusing to pay a penalty and so being summoned to appear before the Session. It is possible he was the Robert ‘servant to John Pringle Wright in Hawick’, who married Isobel Rae from Branholtontown in 1721. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Robisonou’ in 1631 on a list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Yethouse in Castleton Parish. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he was rebuked before the congregation for ‘Sabbath-breaking’ and in 1697 he was chastised for ‘travelling with a load on the Lord’s day’ (also spelled ‘Robisone’; it was probably once interchangeable with Robson).

Rob’s Cleuch (rozh-klooq) n. small stream in the Rule valley, which rises on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill. On the south side is evidence of a former settlement, largely obliterated by cultivation, but still observable as a roughly circular hollow. Near the head of the cleuch are the remains of a farmstead, which Walter Deans suggested may be the original site of Bonchester farm (also written ‘Rob’s Cleugh’).

Robslan (rozb-lind) n. alternative name for Brighoose.

Robson (rob-sin) n. Adam (1720–1805) son of Adam and Jean Beattie. He was a farm worker who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He married Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1761) and Mary (b.1767), who married different John Ellioths. He also had a son Adam (1765–c.1844), who married Mary Pott and emigrated with his family to settle in Lanark County, Ontario. Adam (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Robertson Burnfoot in 1775 and Borthwickshiel in 1785. He married Helen Geddes in Robertson in 1769. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Janet (b.1770); James (b.1772); John (b.1775); Adam (b.1779); Robert (b.1777); George (b.1782); and Patrick (b.1785). Adam (18th C.) Wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the Adam who married Janet Murray in Hawick in 1778. His unnamed son died in 1787. Adam (18th C.) Gardener and ‘Chaise Drive’ for Adam Scott of Galalaw in 1785 and 1786. This was in Robertson Parish, so he was probably working at Borthwickshiel.

Adam (1765–1885) born in Castleton Parish, son of Adam and Helen Hume, who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He worked for a while as a shepherd for his brother-in-law John Elliot (2 of his sisters had married John Ellioths!). He married Mary, probably daughter of Thomas Pott. They had 11 children, with 6 emigrating with them to Canada in 1817, and settling in Lanark County, Ontario. Their sons John and James had already travelled to Canada a year or so earlier. Their children included Adam (b.1790), Mary (b.1791), Isabella (b.1793), Thomas (b.1795), John (b.1797), Mary (again, b.1799), Janet (b.1801), Margaret (b.1804), Peter (b.1806), Jean (b.1808) and Robert (b.1813). He died in Drummond, Quebec. Adam (b.1786/7) born in Castleton Parish, he was a carter. He was listed among heads of households in Newcastle in 1835–41. He was also listed as a carter in Newcastle in 1861, when he was living at 17 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Jessie and their children included John, Jean, Robert, Alexander, James and Bessy. He may be the Adam of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (1861–aft. 1901) youngest son of William and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Galashiels. His wife was Phillis and they had a daughter Margaret Douglas. Adam (19th/20th C.) joiner of the firm A. & J. Robson. His brother was John, partner in the firm, and their sister Mary married Robert Edgar (cousin of the Hawick Express editor). He married Janet Laidlaw Wilson, who died in 1940, aged 87. Adam (1928–2007) born and educated in Hawick, and then at Edinburgh College of Art, where he played rugby. He then switched to the Linden, before becoming a famous wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. from 1952 to 1961. He also gained 22 Scottish caps and went on to be President of the Scottish Rugby Union. He was also President of the Scottish Schools Rugby Union. He was Art Master at Dollar Academy for 32 years, also widely exhibiting his paintings, with one prominent in the Health Centre, and his tribute to Tom Scott (1997) on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was Callants’ Club President in 2002. He married Netta Renwick and their children were Shona and Judith. He wrote 3 books, one being a history of the Edinburgh Borderers rugby club. Robson Court is named after him. Alexander ‘Alec’ (b.1846) 2nd son of blacksmith Thomas. He was a stone mason, known as a great athlete and authority on coins. In 1873 in Wilton he married Helen Brodie (b.1852) and their children included Mary Gowenlock Newton (b.1874). He died in Australia. Allan Watt (d.1981) son of William S., he was born and brought up in Hawick. His studies at the Art College in Edinburgh were interrupted by War Service, but he continued after the War to train in art and teaching. From 1949 he was Head of the Art Department at Perth High School. He developed a strong interest in nature and botany in particular. He joined the Perthshire Society of Natural Science in 1954 and for many years was Chairman of the Botanical Section. He was also an area recorder for the Botanical Society of the British Isles and helped preserve many valuable plants in and around Perthshire. He illustrated his father’s books: ‘The Story of Hawick’, with about 17 pen and ink sketches; and ‘Hawick Place Names’, with ‘Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions’, showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1357 Charter. His original ‘scraperboard’ images of ‘Auld Hawick’ are in the Museum collection. He married Jessie and had a son Alan. Andrew (17th C.) listed along with James Small in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). Andrew (19th C.) coal merchant in Hawick in the late 1800s. Andrew (c.1889–1949) born in Hawick, he was an engineering apprentice with his father, who was a foreman with James Melrose & Sons. He then worked for a steel manufacturing firm in Middleborough before studying engineering at Edinburgh University. He spent 12 years as Principal of West Hartlepool Technical College and in 1933 became Principal of Handsworth Technical College in Birmingham. He was an active member of the Institution of Production Engineers. He returned regularly for Hawick Common Riding and spent many holidays in Rulewater. He was married twice and had a daughter. Charles of Samieston (1770–1830) son of James, who was tenant of Belford and Chatto. He was one of the founding members of the Jedforest Club. He was a Captain in the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire militia. He also served as Collector of Supply for the county and was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He married Martha, eldest daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. A small portrait was painted of him around 1800. Rev. Charles (b.1861) from Hawick, son of James and Jessie Inglis. His family attended the East Bank Kirk. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1885 and was ordained as minister of Clune Park Port-Glasgow in 1889. In 1893 he moved to Pollok Street Church in Glasgow and in 1899 to Inverness Antiburgher church. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this farm is. He is recorded along with William, who was presumably his son or brother. James was also there, as well as David Hall. Euan (1954– ) born in Corbridge, Northumberland, he has been M.S.P. for Roxburgh & Berwickshire from 1999, and has also been Scottish Liberal Democrat Chief Whip. Francis (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Flatt and ‘Schortbus’ in southern Liddesdale in 1632. Gavin (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Gavin born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1781 to Robert and Elizabeth Grieve. George (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the ‘Cadger’ listed on Main Street in the 1841 census. George (b.c.1808) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Kirkwyny and described as ‘Frame Work Knitter – Woollen & Chelsea Pensioner’. He married Agnes Donaldson, who had previously been married to the oldest son of James ‘Pawkie’ Paiterson. George (b.1831/2) quarry worker in Denholm. He lived in an old house by the school gates. When that was demolished he lived in the White Swan. His wife Matilda came from Cupar in Fife and they had a son, James. George ‘the Prince’ (19th C.) resident of the Canongate in Denholm. He worked on the railway. Isabella ‘Bella’ (19th/20th C.) resident of a house on the Kirkwyny, near where the Drums and Fifes start on the Thursday night of the Common Riding. She would regularly come out to offer a tray of rum and milks to the band. Her son Dod was a founder member of the 1514 Club. James (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1595/6 his son William was granted lands in the village. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Cuthbert and William, and so probably closely related. James (17th/18th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same James was in Highchesters in 1711 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scott in Drydenburn, but was 'in ye paroch of Robertoun'. He could be the same as the James who lived at Highchesters. James (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was recorded being 'nou in Flanders' when his son James was baptised in Hawick; the child was 'begotten in fornicatio[n] with Margaret Scott and Margaret's brother Robert made 'faith for the education of the child'. The witnesses were gardener James Falsyde and glover John Hart. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: James (b.1737); Adam (b.1738); Thomas (b.1740); and William (b.1743). James (b.1710/1) son of a shepherd. He moved to Newbigging near Hawick when his father became shepherd in 1726, staying 6 years, then being shepherd for 2 years at Raesknowe and 2 years at Acreknowe and Wimington Rig. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time and living at Templehall. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Pringle in Robertson Parish in 1761. Their children included: John (b.1761); Agnes (b.1768); and Jean (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Easton and Thomas Hoy. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae at Whitfield in 1773. James (d.1781) recorded as servant of 'Mr. Dickson' when he died in Hawick. This was presumably the minister of Bedrule, who had died in 1787. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwick Burnfoot in 1780. His children included James (b.1776), Thomas (b.1778) and Charles (b.1800). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded at Dykeraw in 1778. He married Janet Watson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1778. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Linthill. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (b.c.1780) barber on the High Street in Hawick, probably at No. 32 on the 1841 census. James (b.1788/9) from Elsdon in Northumberland, he owned the farm of Waterside near Letham. In 1851 he was living there with his wife Janet and daughter Matilda. He married Janet Lachlan (from Dalkeith) and their children included: William (b.1808), 1st son; Robert (b.1810), 2nd son; and Mary (b.1812). James (b.c.1800) originally from Yarrow, son of Robert. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Bramsholme and he was shepherd at Bramsholme 'Gate' (probably the Lodge) in 1851. He married Isabella Oliver in Ancrum, and their children included: Robert (b.1830); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1832); Joan (b.1835); Williamina (b.1838), who probably died young; and Jeany. James (19th C.) second official singer of Hogg's 'Teribus' at the Common Riding. He could be the same James who is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a cart and plough wright on Buccleuch Street, or the James living on Green Wynd on the 1841 census, or even the blacksmith, father of the composer William Inglis. James (b.1816) blacksmith in Wilton, he was son of Hawick blacksmith Thomas and Elizabeth Bookless. He was on Wilton Place in 1851 and Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jessie Inglis in 1841 and their children included: Margaret; Thomas; Eliza; William Inglis (b.1853), who became a professor of music; James Alexander (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); and Charles (b.1861), who became a minister. James (19th C.) grocer in Cavers or Minto Parish, recorded in 1852. James (b.1852/3) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was known as an authority on local antiquities, particularly arrow-heads. He was also noted as a prize-winner at flower shows. He married Janet Oliver, from Denholm, and she died in 1932, aged 80. Their eldest daughter was Mary. They are buried in Denholm. James (b.1855) youngest son of William `Billy Buttons' and related to the Denholm blacksmiths. He had brothers John (Hawick Town Councillor) and William and a sister Beatrice. Like his father and brothers, he started off as a stocking-maker. He later became a teacher and private tutor. He was an expert on local history and wrote extensively about the Scottish Borders, producing several books including 'Border Sketches' (1891), `Churches and churchyards of Teviotdale' (1893) and ‘Border Battles and Battlefields’ (1897). He also wrote ‘Teviotside legends & stories’ (1895) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth. He died in Hawick. James Scott (1921–2010) born in Hawick, son of William Scott. He attended Hawick High School and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He won a Rockefeller Foundation Studentship to continue his studies in New York, and survived his ship being torpedoed on the way. Back in Edinburgh he graduated M.D. in 1945, then served as Captain in the R.A.M.C., worked in Edinburgh and then went to Harvard University, where he carried out renal research. He married Mary Macdonald, who was a pathologist. In Britain he set up the Acute Renal Failure Service and was significantly involved in the first kidney transplants.
He also advised on dialysis treatment protocols for avoiding infection. After brief appointments at Harvard and in Australia, he became Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University in 1977, as well as President of the Renal Association. At Edinburgh he also revised the undergraduate medical curriculum and was editor-in-chief for an influential medical text book. He was a member of Edinburgh’s New Club. John (17th C.) took to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and was elected Cornet in 1711. He could be the John, son of Robert and Helen, born in Hawick in 1689 or the John, son of William and Helen Muir born in 1785. He is probably the John whose daughter Anne was baptised in Hawick in 1718. John (1773–1834) 2nd son of James of Samieston. He was tenant farmer at Belford. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club and served with the western troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. He married Esther, younger daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. Their elder son was Dr. James Robson-Scott of Ashtrees and their younger son was Thomas Robson-Scott of Newton. He died at Belford.

John (b.1780s) son of a blacksmith in Denholm, probably Thomas. His brother Thomas was also a blacksmith there. He was an apprentice stocking-maker in Denholm, but was apparently noticed on the Green by Lord Minto, who suggested he joined the Royal Navy. He rose through the ranks, but was demoted when he allowed a deserter to escape. He spent some time at Portsmouth, where he got married to Mary Buchanan and had a son, William. He then spent 6 years serving in India, took part in the capture of Algiers in 1812 and was on the ship that took Napoleon to St. Helens. He returned to Denholm with his wife and son, ‘Billy Buttons’. John (b.1803/4) born in St. Boswells, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1837. He was listed as a joiner in 1841 and innkeeper in 1851. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was innkeeper at the Cross Keys. His wife was Jessie, and their children included William and Helen. In 1861 his wife was running the inn, and so he was presumably deceased (or travelling). John (1826–99) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. His father and brother Thomas were blacksmiths at Teviot-head and elsewhere. He was blacksmith at several places, but lastly (and for the longest period) in Denholm. He was originally based on Main Street, but in 1864 moved to the Quarry Road, where he built a new smiddy, house and stable. At the age of 17 he married Mary Newton, from Gordon in Berwickshire, and she died in 1883, aged 60. He had many sons with her (8 of whom survived), including: George, who died young; Thomas (b.1844/5), blacksmith at 46 High Street; Alexander (b.1846, ‘Alec’), who died in Australia; John (b.1848/9), also a blacksmith, died in Penicuik; Robert (b.1851), mason in Hawick; Robert Newton, monumental sculptor; James (b.1853/4); William Hardie (1856–1927), who died in Canada; George (b.1858); and Mark Newton (b.1861), who became a minister. The average height of his sons was 6 ft 1½ in. He also remarried and had more children. John (b.1845/6) born at Wilton Dean, he was eldest son of William, and grandson of John, who was in the Navy. His brothers were William, Precentor at Bedrule, and James, local historian. He worked as a stocking-maker and stone hewer. He was Precentor in the Denholm Free Kirk for 13 years. He moved to Hawick, where he was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward and was heavily involved in religious and temperance movements in the town. He was associated with West Port Church, Hawick Home Mission, the Sabbath School Union, the Poorhouse Committee and the Parish Council. He married Janet Oliver from Cavers. John (b.c.1850) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was also a blacksmith and known as an athlete. He died in the prime of life in Penicuik. Mark Newton (1861–1939) youngest son of John, who was blacksmith at Denholm, and Mary Newton. He was born and attended school in Denholm, then moved to Hawick at 16. He was a teacher there for over 8 years. He wrote poetry and also produced an article on ‘Lower Rulewater and its Associations’ for the Archaeological Society. From 1886 he resolved to do ‘home’ missionary work and was stationed at Fisherton, Musselburgh. Afterwards he was Presbyterian Minister in County Durham and Congregational Minister at Sanquhar and Cumnock. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick in the early 1900s. As well as publishing many poems in the local press, he also contributed some articles on Border life and scenes. He privately published ‘Some Denholm Families’. His first wife and child died about 2 years after he was married. Like his brothers, he was tall, being about 6 feet 3 inches. Mary nee Waugh (b.1864) daughter of Andrew Waugh and Agnes Purdom. She was assistant nurse at Weens for several years. She married Will Robson and their children included John, Agnes Purdom and Janet Oliver. Dr. Michael J.H. (1933–) Hawick Museum curator and contributor to the Archaeological Society Transactions. He was also a founding member of the Borders Family History Society. He retired to the Isle of Lewis. He has written several short books, including: 'Tibbie Shiel' (1986); 'Ride with the moonlight: the Mosstroopers of the Border' (1987); 'Sheep of the Borders' (1988); ‘No road this way after dark: George Harkness’s reminiscences of Liddesdale’ (1989); ‘Break with the past: changed days on two Border sheep farms (Langburnshiels and Riccarton) with The record book of the Riccarton Mill Club’ (1991), ‘Surnames and clansmen : Border family history in earlier days’ (1998); ‘Dykes, ditches and disputers: a history of boundary and field enclosures in the Borders’ (2004); and others relating to the Highland and Islands. Miss S. singer at Colour Bussings and other functions in the early 20th century. Patrick (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. Peter (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shepherd at Boghall and then Hermitage Bridgend. He was also an elder at Castleton Kirk. He was listed as male head of his family at Boghall in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes, from Heiton. Their children included Peter, John, James, Agnes and Helen. Robert ‘Rob’ (16th C.) called ‘Fwll Mowth’ in a bond of 1562, where William Oliver in Lustruther and Gavin Oliver in West Houses have to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Robert (17th/18th C.) carter and merchant in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was a Burgess of Hawick. Probably the same Robert was a merchant in 1699 when he witnessed a baptism for smith James Scott. He witnessed a baptism for fellow carrier James Wilson in 1701 (where he is recorded both as a carter and as a merchant). He is probably the merchant Robert who witnessed baptisms for smith James Scott in 1704, for piper William Turnbull in 1706, for workman Robert Gledstains in 1708, for carrier James Wilson in 1712 and for carrier William Rae in 1713. John Scott was his servant in 1711 (when he witnessed a baptism for him) and Thomas Huntly (who gave evidence relating to the use of the Common in 1767) was his servant in 1715. He is probably the Robert listed as a merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for carrier James Henderson and for smith Thomas Huntly. He is probably the Robert, married to Helen Robson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Marion or Margaret (b.1686); Walter (b.1687); John (b.1689); Isobel (b.1691); and Helen (b.1693). Robert Newton (b.1851) born in Eccles, he was 4th son of Denholm blacksmith John. He trained as a stonemower at Denholm Hill Quarry and became a monumental sculptor in Hawick. He was an active member of Allars Kirk and the Archaeological Society, being particularly involved in cleaning up and preserving the remains of Southdean Kirk. He carved the WWI alabaster and bronze WWI memorial tablet for Allars Kirk. He also worked on the Johnnie Armstrong memorial at Teviothead. He married Janet Oliver, from Appletreehall. In later life he had a long, flowing beard (it is said, to protect him from stone dust), making him look patriarchal. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with John Oliver in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Langnewton’ in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); Dand (b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were William Turnbull (probably related to his wife) and John Noble. In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for William Collin in Horsemylehill, in 1683 others for William Turnbull and for Adam Craig and in 1687 for Walter Runciman. He also witnessed a baptism in 1686 for John Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and Margaret Dodds. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as occasional tenant in Bewlie in 1716 when he leased lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. Thomas ‘Tam o the Yett’ (18th C.) former resident of Liddesdale, said to be an ancestor of the blacksmiths of Denholm. A story is told of how a Liddesdale minister examining children asked who the strongest man was, and was given his name as the reply. He may have been a descendant of Thomas ‘Robison’, farmer at Yethouse. Thomas (d.1805) son of Thomas, he was probably farmer at Calaburn. He married Isobel Young in Hawick Parish in 1764. Their children included: Margaret (b.1765); Isobel (b.1767); James (b.1770); William (b.1771); William (again, b.1772); Alexander (b.1776). He died at Calaburn, with his wife following a few days later. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet Anderson in Ewes Parish in 1783. Their children, baptised in Langholm, included Christian (b.1788), Mary (b.1790), James (b.1792), Thomas (b.1799) and William (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His shop was in a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaming. He was probably the blacksmith of the same name, as well as the John, who was in the Navy. Thomas (b.c.1790) master blacksmith at Denholm, probably the same man named on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His brother John was in the Navy. In 1815, he married Isabella (‘Bell’) Hardie, from Dargues in Redewater. They had 6 daughters and 4 sons: Thomas (b.1816), blacksmith at Teviothead and in Hawick; James, possibly blacksmith in Middlesburgh; Ann (b.1818); William (b.1824), also a blacksmith in Denholm; John (b.1826), blacksmith in several places, but longest at Denholm; Mary; Isabella, who married William Easton from Yetholm; Betty; Catherine; and Helen, the youngest. He could be the smith who donated a stone ball, found in Denholm, to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1777/8-1844) Hawick blacksmith, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1837 he was on the High Street and is recorded at about 9 Brongham Place on the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Bookless, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included: Helen (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); Elizabeth (1814–28), who probably died young; Isabel; James (b.1816); and William. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He was probably related to the other Robson blacksmiths. He may be the ‘Tam Robson’ who supervised the roasting of an ox at the Tower Knowe for the celebration of the coming of age of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. Thomas (18th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the ‘Woollen Shubber’ living on the Howegate in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Thomas and Walter. Thomas ‘Tam’ (19th C.) carrier of the mail between Langholm and Hawick. He was a keen fisherman (described in John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’), and it was said that if the trout were biting then the letters to Hawick would be late!

Thomas (b.c.1815) from outside Roxburghshire, he was an excise officer living on the Howgate in 1841. The other residents were probably wife Jane, mother Barbara, sister Jane and daughter Isabella. Thomas (1816-81) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. He was blacksmith at Teviothead and then at 54 High Street. He is listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater’s 1852 directory. He later moved to 5 Teviot Road and became a retailer. He married Catherine Waugh, from Southdean Parish, who died in 1906, aged 88. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.c.1843), who married William Wilson, Hawick rag and waste merchant; Thomas (b.1839), who died young; Robert (b.1840), who died aged 15; another Thomas (who also died young, like his following 4 siblings); William; Catherine; Robert; John; and Isabella (b.1850, died aged 26). Thomas (1819–94) born at Cappuck, he later farmed at Menslaws. He was recorded at Menslaws in a directory of 1868. He married Eliza Wilson Cockburn (who died in 1906) and their children were Agnes Cockburn (who died young), Catherine Home (who died in 1958), Janetta (who died in 1969) and Thomas Cockburn (who died in 1931). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (b.1817/8) carrier, son of carter Richard. He lived in Jedburgh and is recorded in 1852 operating a weekly service to Hawick, leaving from the Horse Market. In the 1860s he was operating a twice weekly service between Hawick and Jedburgh. Thomas (c.1845–c.1925) eldest son of John, blacksmith at Denholm. He carried on a blacksmith’s business at 46 High Street. Later he worked at Weensland Mills. He had some musical talent and was Precentor at East bank Kirk. He was also a noted angler and authority on local natural history. He died in Hawick at more than 80 years old. Thomas Cockburn (1869–1931) born at Menslaws, son of Thomas and Eliza Cockburn. He was Manager of the National Bank of Scotland in London and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (19th/20th C.) of Weensland, responsible for stuffing a large fraction of the Museum’s bird collection. He could be the same as the Thomas (d.c.1925) who worked at Weensland Mills. Walter (15th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1493 when he was accused at a Jedburgh court of conspiring with Archibald Armstrong (who was already ‘at the horn’) in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. Walter Ker served as surety for him. It is unclear if this is Harden on Borthwick Water or another one. Walter (17th C.) described as a merchant in a Magistrates Court case of 1642 when Andrew Deans was ordered to pay debts and expenses to him. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Cleughhead in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. Walter ‘Wattie’ (20th C.) fiddler from Denholm. He often played along with Tom Hughes in the 1970s. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of James there’. William (16th C.) charged with the murder of William Hall ‘of Wollie’ (probably Wolfelee). He was recorded being ‘in Roachtowchmyylne’ (probably Roughheugh Mill) and James Langlands of that Ilk acted as surety for him, and so he was probably a local man. Langlands had to pay 20 merks to Hall’s only daughter when Robson failed to appear. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gowanbrae in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) from Falstone in North Tyne, he lived at Waterside in Southdean Parish. He married Barbara Baptie from Bucham. Their Children (baptised in Byrness) included: Isabel (b.1809); and Janet (b.1811). William Hutchison ‘Billy Buttons’ (b.1811/2) son of John of the Navy and grandson of the Denholm blacksmith. He was born in England, while his father was stationed there. His nickname came from the coat, festooned with military buttons, which his mother made for him when he was a child. He lived up the Doctor’s Pend in Denholm and later had the house called Rosebank built. In part of that house he ran a small stocking-maker’s with his 3 sons. He later moved to Westgate Hall and finally to Hawick. He would carry his wares throughout the Borders and into England, where he was known as ‘Stocking Wullie’. In Wilton in 1845 he married Janet Cairns, from Hawick Muir. Their children were: John (b.c.1846), who was a stocking-maker and hewer and married Janet Oliver; William (b.c.1850), also a stocking-maker; Beatrix (b.c.1853), who married Bailie Kennedy; and James (b.1855), stocking-maker, teacher and local historian. William (b.1813/4) farm labourer in the Teviothead area. In 1841 he was living at Commonside Lynn, moved to Hayknowe and by 1861 was farm steward at Broadhaugh. He firstly married Ann, and secondly Margaret Wylie. His children included John, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary, William, James and Andrew (1859–1930), who emigrated to Illinois. William (1814–81) born at Falstone in Northumberland, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Woolhope. He married Margaret (1819–97), daughter of Newcastle upon John Douglas. Their children were: William (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); John (b.1848), Janet (b.1850) and John (b.1852), who all died young; Robert (1853–1930); James (1856–89), law clerk in Edinburgh; Hector (1857–1901), ironmonger in Wigtown and Stirling; Walter (1859–1932), bank clerk in Lanarkshire; and Adam (b.1861), solicitor in Galashiels. William (b.1824) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie, he was also blacksmith in Denholm, on Main Street. He married Agnes Miller (sister of John Miller) in Cavers Parish in 1854. Their children included: Robert (b.1849); Thomas (b.1852); James (b.1854); William (b.1856); John Hardie (b.1859); George (b.1862); Isabella (b.1866); and Agnes (b.1868). William Cairns ‘Billy’ (b.1849/50) 2nd son of William, ‘Billy Buttons’, and grandson of sailor John. He was born in Kirkton Parish. He had brothers John, who was a Councillor in Hawick, and James, who wrote local history books. He worked as a stocking-maker. He was Precentor at the Old Chapel in Denholm and at Bedrule Kirk. In 1872 he married Helen, daughter of William MacNeil, teacher at Bedrule. His son John was born in Eccles in 1882, and he had a grandson, also Billy, who was a teacher in Cumnock. He lived to about 80, settling in Leitholm and becoming a noted antiquary. William Inglis (1853–1891) son of blacksmith James. He composed music for ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ and ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. Born in Hawick he apprenticed as a blacksmith, and later worked as a frame-smith, but his career eventually turned to music. By 1881 he was advertising himself as an instructor for the ‘Tonic Sol-fa College’ at 1 Laing Terrace. He also led St. Mary’s choir. In 1882 he won a Curwen Scholarship of the Tonic Sol-fa College in London. There he became a member of the London Musical Composition Club, graduated from the Tonic Sol-fa College and was appointed by the U.P. Church as a music teacher. In 1883 he became leader of psalmody at Queen Anne Street U.P. Church in Dunfermline, and later taught in Glasgow and Govan. For his last 7 years he was choirmaster at Free St. George’s Church in Glasgow. He was appointed as Professor of School of Music for Scotland at the Glasgow Athenæum (later the Royal Scottish Academy of Music). He adopted his mother’s maiden name as a middle name, presumably to distinguish himself from other Williams. He married Nancy Scott and their son, William Scott wrote 2 books on Robson Court

Hawick in the mid-20th century. He died in Cambusbarrang and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. William Hardie (1856–1927) younger son of Denholm blacksmith John. He emigrated to Canada in 1881. He was known as an expert on Canadian fossils, with his collection given to the Ottawa Museum. He died in British Columbia. William (19th C.) Hawick cyclist, who lived at Havelock Street. He can be seen in a photograph of 1899 with his trophies. He may be the same as the engineer and sawmill owner. William (19th C.) engineer of Hawick, and member of Allars Kirk. He may be the William whose sawmill is listed on Havelock Street in a 1900 directory. William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of William Inglis and Nancy Scott. He worked as an advertising manager. He wrote ‘Hawick Place Names’ (1947) and ‘The Story of Hawick’ (1937, revised 1945 and 1947). He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He married Elizabeth Hannah Watt and their son James Scott was Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University (formerly spelled ‘Robesone’, ‘Robsone’, ‘Robsonne’ etc.; see also Robison and Robertson, which were formerly not distinguished).

Robson Court (rob-sin-kör) n. part of the Meadows, refurbished in 1986 and named after rugby player Adam Robson.

Robson’s (rob-sinz) n. former sawmill on Weensland Road. Its traction engine can be seen in a photograph of 1913. This is probably the same company whose sawmill was on Havelock Street in 1900.

Robson-Scott (rob-sin-skö) n. Dr. James of Ashtrees (1814–83) eldest son of John Robson (son of James of Samieston) and Esther Scott (daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel). Educated in medicine, he joined the East India Company and went to Madras about 1836, later being appointed surgeon with the 4th Madras Infantry, and retired in 1858. On his return to Britain he took the additional surname of Scott, having inherited the lands of Ashtrees from his uncle John Scott of Riccalton. He lived at Belford, Morebattle, where he had been born. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He joined the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club, becoming President. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He married Marianne, daughter of James Grant of Correemomy, Inverness-shire. His children were: Maj. James S., who succeeded to Ashtrees; and 2 daughters, one of whom married John Corse Scott of Synton. He died following an illness contracted while visiting his brother at Newton, and is buried in Howman kirkyard. John Alexander of Newton and Menslaws (1858–1940) eldest son of Thomas. He was educated at Fettes College and Edinburgh University. He travelled extensively, and had a collection of stuffed birds, which he shot himself. He also bred horses. In 1887 he married Margaret Suter, 2nd daughter of Walter (or William) Lang, and she died in 1940. Their children included: Thomas Selby, who was killed in WWI; Theresa Dorothy; and Marjorie. His children are recorded as followers of the Jedforest Hunt. Thomas of Newton, Bedrule (1815–93) 2nd son of John Robson and Esther Scott and brother of Dr. James. He inherited Newton from his uncle Thomas Scott, taking the additional Scott surname. He leased the farm at Lethem (which had long been in the Scott family), as well as several other sheep farms, and was an authority on sheep-farming. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He found a hammer of felsite on his farm in the mid-19th century. In 1861 he was farming 8500 acres at Lethem and employing 28 people. He was recorded at both Lethem and Newton in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of the lands of Newton on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1857 he married Mary Anne Leslie, daughter of Rev. T. Wight, and she died in 1897. Their children were: John Alexander of Newton; Esther Anne; Thomas William of Lethem; Sarah; Charles George; and Lillias. The family have an enclosure in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas William ‘Tom’ (b.1866) younger son of Thomas of Newton. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hunt 1894–97 and Master of Hunt 1903–32. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. He lived at Lethem and also at Lanton Tower, which he purchased. He farmed at Lethem, Southdean and Peel. In 1892 he married Florence Jane, daughter of William Lang, who was a cousin of Andrew Lang’s. He secondly married Violet Cunningham. His children included John (killed following illness in WWI), Tom, Esther and William Douglas. His children Esther, John and Tom were all followers of the Jedforest Hunt when young. There is a signed portrait of him in the Horse & Hounds Inn at Bonchester. Thomas Selby (1894–1914) son of John, he attended Rugby School and was killed in WWI. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots and was recorded missing at Wytschaete, Flanders. There is a memorial plaque to him inside Bedrule Kirk. William Douglas (1901–81) youngest son of Tom, born in Southdean Parish, he became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London 1968–73. He wrote several works on Goethe and translated Sigmund Freud into English, his wife Elaine helping him in some of this work.
Robsteed

Robsteed (rob-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Robsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Clerilandis, Thomscoatsteid, Crauswat, Gushank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-laird) n. nickname of Robert Wilson of the mid-1800s.

Rob the Hecker (rob-thu-hek-lur) n. resident of Denholm in the 19th century. A story is recounted (in the Border Counties’ Magazine) of his youthful love for his native village. His father sent him to start service somewhere near Lilliesleaf, and when he got to Hassendean he looked back and said ‘O ma bonny Denholm! aw’ll never sey ye mair!’ His father left him at his new place of employment, but was surprised to find him already back in Denholm when he returned home. His nickname presumably comes from the former manufacturing of lint.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-laird) n. nickname for Robert Scott, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who farmed at Binks.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-laird) n. nickname for Robert Scott, a man of gypsy descent who was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be ‘keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh’ about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-laird) n. nickname used locally in the 19th century. This may be the same man as Robert Scott, farmer at Binks – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI] (note that one version of the poem has ‘Jock the Laird’).

Rob the Naig (rob-thu-nag) n. nickname of Robert Tilton.

Rob wi the Dog (rob-wi-thu-dog) n. nickname of Robert Oliver.

Rob Young (rob-yung) n. blacksmith Robert Young, mentioned in the song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens: Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI].

Rochead (roch-head) n. John Thomas (1814–78) Edinburgh born architect, who trained with David Bryce before established his own practice in Glasgow. Here he designed many of the grandest buildings of the latter part of the 19th century. In Hawick he was responsible for designing the Corn Exchange, St. Andrew’s Free Church and several mansions, including Silverbathall House, Hillhead House, Langlands Park, Heronhill, Mansfield and Thornwood.

rock (rok) n., arch. distaff in spinning, the staff holding the unspun flax or wool – ‘But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An’ that was a bad beginnin’ o’ [T], ‘. . . by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there . . . ’ [BR1693] ‘. . . And thus she sung, and twined her rock, When at the door a feeble knock’ [JTe] (from Old Danish).

the Rock (thu-rok) n. feature indicated on Wood’s plan of 1824, marking the northern end of the Little Haugh. It was situated somewhere between the current Little Haugh and the Drill Hall area, on the land once occupied by Teviot Crescent Mills, and was presumably a rock of some sort.

rocky-rowe (ro-k’ee-row) n., arch. an amusement among children involving a rocking motion, also known as ‘wey the butter, wey the cheese’ – ‘And the old bairns’ game of ‘rockety-rowe’, when two would stand back-to-back with their arms linked and by stooping alternately, raise each other from the ground, chanting: ‘Wei butter, wei cheese, Wei a pund o’ cannle-grease, Yowe up, mei doon, This is the way to London toon’’ [DH], a rolling gait – ‘Thom sailor has his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI].

rocklay (rok-lä) n., poet. A kind of short cloak with a long cape, a mantle—‘...violence kivers thame as aine rocklay’ [HSR], ‘...an’ let thame kiver thameis’ wi’ thair ain confunshon as wi’ aine rocklay’ [HSR].

Rocksteid (rok-steed) n. Former lands in 1632, listed among the possessions of Francis Beatie in Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Twa steids Over and Neather, with the pertinents’ thairof called Roksteid’, along with ‘Neirland’ (probably Netherraw) and ‘Podotoun’ (probably Paddington).

Rockvale (rok-väl) n. Name for group of houses on Liddesdale Road (previously Lynnwood Road), being Nos. 1–6. The first house (No. 4) was built sometime before 1857 and took the name in the 1880s, the others being built in 1926. They were originally reached from the main road via a foot bridge over the mill lade. They were demolished in the 1980s? (the origin is presumably from the rocky protuberance, now a disused quarry, overlooking the valley).

Rockview (rok-vew) n. House in Denholm, off Minto Road, which was a blacksmith’s in the early 20th century.

roddin (ro-diin) n., poet. A track, path—‘...gae they wayses furth bie the fit-roddins o’ the fok’ [HSR].

Rodd (rodz) n. Lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Roddis’. At that time the tenants were John and James Elliot and the lands were valued at one merk. It is unclear where this is, but it was listed between Ramsiegill and Roughley, so it is possibly the same place as ‘Reddadenn’.

Rodes (rødz) n. Former farm near Southdean, although the precise location and name are uncertain. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and John Storie in 1694 (it was ‘Roods’ and ‘rods’ in 1694).

Rodger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (17th C.) Tenant in Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in Clarilaw. It is possible he is the Andrew, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Roberton (but probably Hassendean), included Isobel (b.1683) and Margaret (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Henderson and John Armstrong. He is probably the Andrew who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 and witnessed another for John Turnbull in 1688. Andrew (18th C.) farmer on the Cavers estate who, before about 1737, made early winnowing machines or corn fanners, inspired by descriptions of a Dutch model (perhaps communicated to him by Douglas of Cavers). These may have been the first mechanical means of separating grain from the chaff in the whole of Britain. Another version tells how in 1733 he found a machine discarded in Leith by James Meikle (brought back from Holland) and made one of his own in 1737, supplying them for £3 each by 1740, having given up his farm. He thereafter sold them in the area, although there were religious objections that they were supplanting the Lord’s creations. In 1723 he obtained a property in the Sandbed from his uncle James Rodger, which had previously belonged to Langlands. On either this property or elsewhere at the Sandbed he established a shop. His descendants traded in fanning machines there for about the next 100 years. Some dispute with the Hawick Parish Session (which is unclear) resulted in him giving up the title for another Sandbed property about 1724 (perhaps part of the same property) where the Grammar School would then be built. Andrew Turnbull and John Pringle were charged with valuing his house for the Kirk Session. A portrait of him exists (he is also referred to as ‘Rogers’ and sometimes called ‘William’). He was recorded living at Cavers itself in 1723 when one of his children was baptised. He is probably the Andrew, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Marion (b.1711), William (b.1713), James (b.1715), Margaret (b.1717), Betty (b.1720), Robert (b.1723), an unnamed son (b.1725), Hugh (b.1727) and Ann (b.1729). Andrew (b.1801/2) born in Traquair Parish, he was a shepherd at Sundhope and also toll-keeper at Fiddleton around the 1860s. In 1851 he was at Sundhope and in 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Fiddleton, with his son James as the toll-keeper, and his daughter Joan also there. His wife was Violet and their children included James, John, Walter, Elliot, Robert, Isaac, Adam, Euphemia and Joan. James (17th C.) Resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the the James who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 in Robertson Parish (but actually the Hassendean part). James (18th C.) Resident of Robertson Parish. He was at ‘Utter Parkhill’ in 1782 and Parkhill in 1784. His children included: James (b.1779); Jane (b.1782); and Helen (b.1784). James (17th/18th C.) Married Isobel Dryden in Kirkton Parish in 1721. James...
(b.1826/7) son of Andrew, he was born in Selkirk Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as toll-keeper at Fiddleton, living there with his father as well as his sister Joan. James (19th C.) flesher in Hawick. He went bankrupt in 1873, with the Commissioners for his estate being John Nichol and Walter Forsyth. Maj. James (1864/5–1930) worked in the woollen industry. He married Bella, only child of A.K. Innes. He was probably son of John and Margaret MacRaw. Janet (d.1787) servant of Dr. William Scott, who lived at Brieryhill. She died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) butcher of the Back Row, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed on the Howegate. Matthew ‘Mat’ (d.1698) joiner in Deanburnhaugh. He took over from Adam Elliot. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as a weaver in Whitchesters in 1704. In 1704 he also witnessed a baptism for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He gave evidence in 1710 relating to a fight in St. Mary’s between 2 other weavers. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. He married Janet Glendinning in 1701 and their other children were Janet (b.1701), John (b.1703), William (b.1704), Janet (again, b.1706) and Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and James Grieve in Commonside and in 1708 were gardener William Scott and carrier Henry Paterson. Robert ‘Duke’ (19th C.) possibly the same Robert recorded as butcher at the Back Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He took over as town drummer from Caleb Rutherford, about 1830 – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM]. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included: Robert (b.1670); William (b.1672); Bessie (b.1674); and John (b.1684). William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (but probably the part that was Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included James (b.1684) and Elizabeth (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were James and Andrew, who were surely related to him. The 1687 witnesses were 2 William Turnbuls. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull and Margaret Scott. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen ‘Murie’ and their children born in Hawick Parish included: Bessie (b.1687); and an unnamed son (b.1688). William ‘pedder’ (i.e. peddler) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the William married to Helen ‘Murie’ or the one married to Janet Dryden. William (17th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for Ashkirk Parish. This suggests he was probably a Kirk elder. He is probably the William who married Margaret, daughter of William Scott, in Wilton Parish in 1711. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: William (b.1717); and Bettie (b.1719). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Parkhill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the William whose wife Mary Stavert died in 1795. William (d.1805) described as ‘weaver and shopkeeper to Mr. Oliver’. It is unclear which Oliver this was. Perhaps the same weaver married Helen Scott in 1763 and had children: Margaret (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1768); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Scott and Robert Renwick (who married Elizabeth, perhaps his sister). William (d.1837) wright of Hawick, probably a descendant of Andrew. It is possible he is the ‘Roger’ whose premises near the top of Walter’s Wynd are shown on Wood’s 1824 map (also written ‘Rodgar’; see also Roger).

Rodgers (ro-jurz) n. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Kirk Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. Mary (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories.

Rodgie (ro-jee) n. Rev. Andrew (1777–1861) from Abernethy, son of Thomas and Margaret Wright. He was minister of the Green (or West End) Church for 53 years, ordained in 1807, following the death of Rev. Dr. Young. He may have been in Hawick since late the previous year, having also been called to Jedburgh. He was well known for receiving the Cornet and his supporters every year at Myreslaw Green, sending his servant round with the bottle, giving them ‘A guid, cauld cauker, Frae a man that was nae Quaker’, in a verse that may have been added to Balbirnie’s ‘Auld Song’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed at Myreslawgreen in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Often referred to as ‘Rodgie o the Green’, he was known for insisting on strict observance of the Sabbath (which included no fiddling, secular singing, cooking or walking). In 1856 he was presented with a purse containing 90 sovereigns on the occasion of his jubilee. He married Isabella Summers in Hawick in 1825 and they appear to have had 4 children: Isabella (b.1826); Margaret (b.1828), still living in Hawick in 1861; Thomas (b.1831), who died young; and Mary (b.1837), also died young. A portrait of him exists. His mother-in-law died in Hawick in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in the cholera outbreak). His wife is recorded in about 1874 (along with Janet Brown, perhaps a relative) as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. William (1836/7–73) said to be from Hawick, he may have been related to Rev. Andrew. He worked as a banker in Bombay. In 1863 in Hawick he married Mary Elisabeth, daughter of Dr. Walter Graham. He is recorded being present at the famous otter hunt organised at Hawick in 1863. He died of dysentery in Jerusalem on his way back from Bombay. A cross was erected in the cemetery at Jerusalem in his memory (also written ‘Rogie’).

Rodman (rod-mun) n. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-naire in Jedburgh when he had remission for crimes. He was listed as being from Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep and cattle from 4 separate farms. His surety was Thomas Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hunderdale. He was separately listed in 1494/5 when he had remission for stealing sheep from 2 other farms, with his surety being Thomas Rutherford in the Grange of Abbotrule. This surname seems to be otherwise unknown in the area.

Rodono (ro-dō-nō) n. house on the western bank of St. Mary’s Loch. The estate was an ancient barony dating to at least 1236, and was long held by the monks of Melrose. There was a nearby chapel (at Chapelhope, at the head of the Loch o the Lowes). In 1442 it was listed among lands whose fees were held by Melrose Abbey. In 1484 it was contained in a list of lands to which the monks appointed David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert as Bailies, with Sir Walter Scott appointed to the same office in 1519. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Ringwoodfield) and in 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £82 12s 8d. In 1557 Robert Scott of Bowhill paid rental to Melrose Abbey for lands here, namely ‘Langbank’, ‘Quithoup’, ‘Litillhou’ and ‘Mekillehou’. The lands were valued at £25 in about 1564. In 1566 Queen Mary and her husband Darnley held a council here, when they mentioned the scarcity of deer seen on the royal hunting trip and emphasised the penalties for others shooting the animals. When it was bought by John Scott of Teviotbank in the mid-19th century he revived the old name. The mansion was built in 1866 for this John Scott (also called ‘of Rodono), but he died before it was completed. It was then owned by Thomas and William Turnbull of Fenwick and sold in 1890. The Earl of Wemyss rented it out as a hunting lodge. For a while it was leased by Robert Pringle, of Pringle of Scotland, who used the name for his factory in Hawick, as well as for the unshrinkable process Pringles applied to underwear. It later became a hotel, known for wild society functions, with stories of a Model-T Ford being driven out onto a frozen St. Mary’s in 1934 to later sink, and also said to be where Mandy Rice-Davies of the Profumo affair is alleged to have hidden out in the 1960s. It was sold by Lady Elizabeth Benson in 1994 and renovated in about 2000 (the name probably comes from the old Scots for the rowan tree; it was ‘Rodanoch’ in 1235/6, ‘rodon’ in 1442, ‘Rodonow’ in 1484, ‘Rowdonov’ in 1519, ‘Rodonoland’ in 1524, ‘Rodonoland’ in 1525 and 1553/4, ‘Rodonald’ in 1538, ‘Rowdondal’ in 1540, ‘Rowdono’ in 1557, ‘Rodonaldland’ in 1574 and ‘Rodono’ in 1670).

Rodono (ro-, ri-dō-nō) n. Rodono Mills, part of the Pringle’s knitwear operation on Teviot Road. The original buildings of Walter’s Wynd were built for John Nixon & Sons in 1869 and renamed ‘Rodono’ by Pringle’s (after the hunting lodge at St. Mary’s Loch, which Robert Pringle leased). There was a fire there in 1939, destroying the offices and much of the company archives. The buildings were developed to their final massive size through extensions in 1952, 1955, 1958 and 1968. However, it was closed in 1976 due to costs, with all the machinery being moved to Glebe Mills and administration to Victoria Mill. The building was demolished in 1980/1. The rubble was used to fill part of Weensland dam and raise the ground level opposite the sewerage works. The land was used for the new Health Centre in 1989. The name was also adopted as a trade name for the shrink-resistant process applied by Pringles to underwear from 1899.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Parson of Rule. He may be the earliest known priest of Hobkirk Parish. Sometimes in the period 1165–78 he witnessed a charter for Richard Comyn, relating to Holyrood Abbey and land in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Roger’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted in Hawick in a Selkirk court case of 1809. William (18th/19th C.) describer of a version of how Hawick men accounted for themselves at Flodden, as recounted in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850). He may be the same William who married Marjory Donaldson (sister of Agnes, Isabella, Elizabeth and Jane), and had 7 children, including Janet, who was the 2nd wife of manufacturer Alexander Laing. He may also be the William who is shown as owner of property on Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map (see also Rodger; formerly sometimes ‘Rocher’).

rogerowse (ro-gu-ows) adj., arch. given to freedom of speech, outspoken (noted by J. Jamieson).

Rogers (ro-jurz) n. Ann (b.c.1790) milliner at 26 High Street, along with Mina. They are recorded on the 1841 census. Rev. Douglas Malcolm (1916–95) born in Leeds, he was trained at Yorkshire United Independent College and became minister of Providence Chapel, Cleckheaton in 1948. Thereafter he served as minister in Halifax and Sunderland, before becoming minister at Hawick Congregational Kirk 1969–71. After Hawick he was minister at Girdlington, Yorkshire. He married Edith Doreen Speck.

Rogie see Rodgie

rogues-money (rögz-mu-ne) n. a tax raised on counties for the expense of arresting and imprisoning criminals. The local use and administration of these funds appears to have been a matter of some debate – ‘Paid Mr Weir, to carry his expenses to Jedburgh for the rogue-money relating to the brig’ [BR1740].

the Rogues’ Cait (thu-rögz-kär) n. spring-cart that used to be sent round to the neighbouring parishes for transporting prisoners to Jedburgh Jail. This started around the 1840s.

the Rogues’ Hole (thu-rögz-höl) n. occasional name used for the Town prison (e.g. in 1782), being under the former Town House (also called the Thiefs’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Roll-aboot (röl-u-boó) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lit a sang Tae Shuch-les, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

the Roll o Honour (thu-röl-o-nur) n. record of local men who fell in the 2 World Wars, held in the Museum. The original was executed by Graham Johnston, W.R. Lawson and William Wallace MacGregor. It consists of 8 pages of illuminated vellum in a stand of oak, containing the names of 693 who were killed in WWI. The names are arranged alphabetically by Regiment. James Haig executed a similar design for the WWII roll.

the Roll o the Clans (thu-röl-o-thu-klawnz) n. list of prominent and landed men in the Borders and Highlands in the records of the Privy Council for 1590, with an abbreviated version in the records of the Scottish Parliament for 1587. Its full title is ‘The Roll of the Clannis that hes Capitanis, Cheifis, Chiftenis, quhomeon they de-pend, ooftims agains the willis of thair Landis-lords, alsweill on the Bordouris as Hielandis, and of sum special personis of branches of the saidis Clannis’. Like other records of the time, it shows that Border families were considered to be clans as much as their Highland cousins. It also forms an invaluable record of local lairds at the time, listing about 100 Lairdships in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire, naming many men explicitly.

Romanno (rö-maw-nô) n. Matthew (15th C.) notary responsible for the sasine for the Cousins, sold by Margaret Cousin to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. The ‘precept’ was witnessed in Hawick, and the sasine itself signed at Branhholme. He was described as a presbyter of Glasgow diocese, and so was probably a local church official. He wrote his name as ‘Matheus de Romanox’. He also wrote the sasine for Simon of Routledge selling the Birkwood and Burnflat to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448.

Romanno Bridge (rö-maw-nô-brïj) n. village in Peeblesshire, in the northern part of the Scottish Borders, south of West Linton. The ‘bridge’ is over the Lynne Water. The Romans of that Ilk came from here. John Scott in Whitehaugh had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The lands were owned by the Murrays from 1513 until 1676. In 1677 it was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shaws (it is ‘Rommanos’ in 1502 and ‘Ralmanno’ in 1526).

the Romans (thu-röl-munz) n., pl. empire builders based in Italy, who conquered England, and made in-roads into Scotland. They occupied parts of Britain from the middle of the 1st century to the beginning of the 5th. Agricol’s conquest of the North started in 78 C.E., as part of which he built the forts at Raeburnfoot and News-eads, driving a wedge between the Selgovae and Novantae tribes. Although there was no major Roman settlement in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick, there are many signs of nearby Roman habitation, including at Ruberslaw, Craik Cross and Aikwood. There is a Roman road running from Raeburnfoot to the Borthwick valley via Craik Cross, although it is unclear where it continued on the near side of Craik. However, in 1948 the remains of a stone-built culvert (used to divert the stream under the road) was discovered on the left bank of the Borthwick after flooding, midway between Craik and Northope Haugh; this has subsequently washed away. There has been a suggestion of a continuation of this road up the Borthwick valley and then via Blawearie to Hangingshaw Hill, then between Woo Law and Groundistone Height, proceeding to Harelaw, and connecting to Newstead. There is another possible Roman road connecting Eskdale with Teviotdale, running via Ewes Doors to Caerlernig. Several Roman altar stones were reused in the building of Jedburgh Abbey. Trimontium near Melrose was an important fort in the 1st and 2nd centuries. Hadrian’s Wall is about 40 miles to the south, and Dere Street only about 12 miles to the east. At Teviothead a Roman coin (of Vespasian) was found in 1856, and more recently a denarius of Augustus was found near Fulton Tower. A bronze swastika brooch from the late 2nd century was found at Denholmhill around 1930. Nearer to Hawick, 2 temporary Roman camps were revealed by aerial photography in the 1960s, these lying near Cavers Mains and Eastern farms. The Romans pulled out of the Borders by 369 C.E., which was effectively the start of the Dark Ages, and the period of Roman occupation was quickly forgotten. However, there have been several local finds of artefacts. The leg of a large bronze statue was found at Milsington in 1820, along with the bronze base of another statue (suggested to be loot from a site in England, and described in 1887/8). A bronze horde was unearthed on Ruberslaw in 1863 (2nd century, now in the Museum), as well as a ‘first brass’ of Vespasian found nearby, 2 bronze coins uncovered on Hallrule farm, and a couple of dressed stones from near the summit. More recently a Roman coin was found in a garden at Maclagan Drive, and a Romano-British carved stone at Appletreehall. And in 2011 a horde of 228 coins from the time of Vespasian to Commodus were found on Synton Hill – ‘Lords of the earth, the Roman legions wheel Their glittering files, and stamp with gory heel, Bathe the keen javelin’s edge in purple dew: While Death smiles dimly o’er the faulchion blue’ [JL].

roondaboot (roond-du-boot’ n.) roundabout, merry-go-round, traffic circle – ‘the roondaboot was his doonfaa on his driving test’, ‘...he’d hev ti wait at yon roondaboot at Galalaw ...’ [IWL], adj. roundabout, indirect – ‘she hed sic a roondaboot way o pittin things, A never kent what she was on aboot’.

roondaboot (roond-du-boot’) n., pl. a circular earthwork – ‘There are a great many roundabouts in the parish, commonly called Picts around in the parish, commonly called Picts.

the Roond Close (thu-roond-klos) n. probably the oldest of the High Street closes, at No. 17, named after the rounded archway for which it was once notable. It also once held one of the minor gates giving access to the town. Staples for the iron gate were visible until about 1840. The building to the east bears a triangular stone with the inscription ‘J.S.M.D. Feare Gode. 1600’, taken from the front of the house when it was rebuilt in 1871; this pended house probably partly defended the close. It was also known as the Wide Close in the early 1800s, and around this time contained a public house (called the Royal Oak or Blue Bell). In the mid-19th century it contained Brunton’s contractors and joiners. Many of the houses were demolished in the 1930s, followed by the lower cobbled area, including the I.O.G.T. hall and further buildings after the War, to make way for the Rodono Mill factory. Steps were built to retain the right of way, and Rodono itself was demolished in 1980, and the Health Centre built in its place.

Roond Croft (roond-kraft) n. former name for a piece of land near Hawick, referred to by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900. The location is uncertain, but it is possibly related to an earlier form of the Roond Close.

roonders (roon-durz) n. rounders, a children’s bat and ball game – ‘Hei taught oo rugby, cricket, roonders, Country dancina, softba’, gym

And A dinni mind tellin ee A was gliffed stiff for him’ [IWL].

Roondhaugh (roond-hawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by the Scotts of Woll in 1609 when it is ‘Roundhauch’ and part of the lands purchased by the Cochranes in 1795.

roothness (rooth-nis) n., poet. abundance, fullness – ‘...but trustet in the roothniss o’ his riches, an’ strenchinenet himsel in his wicketniss’ [HSR].

Ropelawshiel (rōp-lu-sheel) n. cottage in Craik Forest, recorded from at least the early 18th century. It is located where the Ropelaw Sike joins the Rankle Burn, and within the boundaries of the former farm is the source of the Rankle Burn. It was used for several years as a cottage by Chay Blyth and is now a holiday home (the origin of the name may be from roplaw, a young fox; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Roper (rō-pur) n. William (19th C.) Hawick man who emigrated to Highlandville, Massachusetts. He returned for the Common Ridings of 1887 and 1888, and sang a Hawick song (to the tune of ‘Bonnie Dundee’) at the 1888 Dinner. He is probably the son of Joseph recorded aged 7 on the Mid Raw in 1841. He may be the William listed among Hawick men who met with Robert Ewen in Guelph on his Canadian tour of 1878; he is recorded singing ‘Teribus’ along with fellow Teri George Murray.

Rope Sike (rōp-sīk) n. stream that rises between Windburn Hill and Brown’s Hill and flows roughly to the south to meet the Flosk Burn near Langburnshiels.

roplaw (rop-lu) n., arch. a young fox (said to be only a Teviotdale word, noted by J. Jamieson; it is possibly the origin for ‘Ropelawshiel’).

ropple (ro-pul) v., arch. to run or grow up rapidly (of vegetation) – ‘Roppled up, grown up with rapidity, large, but not strong in appearance, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

Rosalee (rō-za-lee) n. house built in the mid-19th century on the slopes above Langlands Road near Ladylaw. It was the home of the Rev. John Thomson and his family – ‘Sae ikka true Teri three cheers let us gie, For the Mr. and Mrs. o’ fair Rosalee’ [VW] (sometimes written ‘Rosalea’).

Rosalee Brae (rō-za-lee-brā) n. road above Langlands Road leading to Rosalee, Ladylaw and some other large houses. The ‘Dog Hoose’ used to stand on the left side of this road and ‘Saut Haa’ on the right.

Roscins (ros-kīnz) n. Thomas (13th C.) granted the lands of ‘Bethrull’ in Roxburghshire in 1357 by William, Earl of Douglas. This seems likely to be the same as Bedrule. However, there is no other record of a surname like ‘Roscins’ connected with this area.

Rose (rōz) n. Arthur (1634–1704) son of the minister of Birse, his name is also written ‘Ross’. He graduated from Marischal College in 1652 and became minister of Kinearny in 1656. He then became minister of Old Deer, then Rector of Marischal College, minister of St. Mungo’s, Bishop of Argyll and Bishop of Galloway. In 1679 he succeed Andrew Burnet as Archbishop of Glasgow. And in 1684, after Burnet’s death, he succeeded him as Archbishop of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. After Parliament abolished episcopalianism in 1689 he continued to preach secretly as an Episcopalian and died in the Canongate. He is buried at Restalrig.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. name given in 1865 to the houses built at Thorterdykes in the years 1861–64 on part of the old Tryst ground, and also on the land known as Haggishaa. The houses were built by Thomas Reid, mason and farmer at St. Leonard’s. The name may derive from thickets of wild roses previously growing there.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. house in Denholm. It was built for William Robson, who was a stocking manufacturer in the village. It was later home of John W. Turnbull, clothier.

Rosebank Road (rōz-bawngk-rōd) n. name given in the early 20th century to the road between the Loan and Burnflat Brae, after the houses called Rosebank, which already stood there. The north side was built up in 1927 and the south in 1929. The street is where the riders divide for the Chases, married men to the front and single men to the rear.

Rosecroft (rōz-kroft) n. house on the Dean Road just outside Denholm, which was formerly called Rosebank. It once housed a stocking-shop.

Rosedale (rōz-dāl) n. Turgis (d. bef. 1131) referred to in a charter of about 1125. He was Lord of Liddel, holding lands in what would later be called Liddesdale, and was probably a descendant of the earlier Baron, Turgis Brundis. He founded the house of Augustinian canons of Liddel (an offshoot of Jedburgh Abbey) in a place that came to be known as Canonbie. He gave the religious house of Liddel (as well as the church of ‘Kirchanders’, i.e. Kirkandrews) to Jedburgh Abbey when it was founded in about 1138. He was succeeded by his son William. William (12th C.) son of Turgis, who was Lord of Liddel, he was a baron from Yorkshire. He is recorded as being ‘de Rosedale’ in a grant of about 1160 in which he gave his lands of Kershope to the hospital of Rosenberg

St. Peter in York. The grant is confirmed in a copy made in the early 14th century, which describes the boundaries of the lands, giving some interesting historical details. The grant is confirmed by Malcolm IV, and there are referred to as ‘Greshoppa’ (but surely the same place). In the 1150s he founded the Cistercian priory usually called Rosedale Middleton. Along with his wife he also granted lands of ‘Greshoppa’ in Yorkshire to the same religious house, as confirmed by King Malcolm. He may be the ‘Guido’ who, with the consent of his son Radulf, gave 42 acres (where the Esk and Liddel join) to Jedburgh Abbey, along with free fishing from the ditch of Liddel to the church of Liddel. His wife was Godehild and he had a son, Turgis, who is the last known member of the family.

Rosenberg (rō-zen-berg) n. one time pseudonym of Adam Grant. Sometimes also ‘M. Rosenberg’, it was used by him in for example, 1898 and 1900, for attribution as composer for ‘Hawick’ and ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’. Presumably Grant believed that a Germanic name added musical gravitas. The name continued to appear up until about WWI, even although Grant was using his own name on other publications from the early years of the 20th century. It is probably a coincidence that Mrs. Roseburgh, who lived near Galashiels, signed her poetry ‘M. Roseburgh in the mid-to-late 19th century (or else the name is a coincidence).

Rosenberger (rō-zen-bur-gur) n. Frederica (20th C.) from Budapest in Hungary, she left because of Nazi persecution. She became manageress of the Marcus factory in Hawick. Robert son of Mrs. Frederica, the Hungarian manageress at Marcus’s dress-making factory. He was taught at the High School and Edinburgh University, becoming a Professor of Bacteriology.

the Rose o Teviotdale (thu-rōz-ō-tee-vi’-dāl) n. local temperance society of the late 19th century, one of the lodges of the Good Templar movement.

Rosevale Cottages (rōz-vāl-ko’-ee-jeez) n. group of houses off Mansfield Road, on one side of Rosevale Street, built in 1882, and named in 1883.

Rosevale Street (rōz-vāl-stree’) n. short street between Mansfield Road and Mansfield Square, named in 1888, either for thickets of wild roses that grew there or just invented. The housing here was built by Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. to provide convenient housing for workers at Eastfield Mills.

Rosfritha (rōz-fri-tha) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Saszifa) at the Chapel of St. Cuthbert (identified with a site near Cogsmill) mentioned by a contemporary historian as coming from ‘Hawich’. This was written around the 1170s, and referred to an earlier time, possibly much earlier. Hence the pair are (assuming they existed) the first named residents of Hawick. The story was that they went to the old chapel on the feast day of the saint, to join others in celebration, after the previous fast day. However, in the evening their candle went out, and after some remonstration, they prayed to Cuthbert, at which a new lighted candle appeared. Sir James Murray called his 4th daughter ‘Rosfrith’, inspired by this story (also transcribed as ‘Rosfrith’).

rosit (ro-zi’) n., arch. resin, especially the material rubbed on the bow of a fiddle, rosin – ‘A name wi’ a scrauch o’ rosit in’t, the skirl o’ tormentit gut . . .’ [DH].

rosity (ro-zi’-ee) adj., arch. of the nature of resin or ‘rosit’ – ‘. . . the space within and around these was built up with whins and rositty faggots’ [JAHM].

rosity-fingers (ro-zi’-ee-fing-urz) n., arch. name applied to someone who is light-fingered or sticky-fingered.

Ross (ros) n. Rev. Alexander L. (19th/20th C.) assistant minister of St. Cuthbert’s 1904–09. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop in 1909. His time as Curate in Hawick ended when he became Rector at Rosyth.

Andrew (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh, the ‘Ross Herald’, i.e. one of the officers of the Court of the Lord Lyon. Around 1903 he was charged by the Town Council with researching into the historical basis for the Hawick Flag. His report endorsed the views of Craig & Luing and others, resulting in the square blue and red flag being replaced with a more accurate duplicate of the 1707 flag – ‘a pennon, azure, a saltire or’. Rev. Donald G. (d.c.1940) assistant minister at St. George’s Kirk from 1911, taking over as senior minister on the death of Rev. Johnman in 1923, and remaining until 1935. He came to Hawick from Pollok Street Church in Glasgow. Although he was formerly the assistant, due to the declining health of the senior minister, he in fact took on most of the ministerial duties. He ‘kirked’ the Cornet in 1912 and 1914, and oversaw the construction of the new church 1913–16. He was the first minister of the church to reside at the new Manse at Broomieknowe. He was apparently a great elocutionist and gave very powerful sermons. He celebrated his silver wedding anniversary in 1925, but his wife (Williamina Martin) died in 1934. Due to declining health he resigned in late 1935 and retired to Edinburgh. There is a memorial window to him in the church and another to his wife.

Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Rae in 1793, but her death is recorded in 1795. Sgt. James (18th/19th C.) professional soldier with the Royal North British Fusiliers. He was brought to Hawick in 1798 to work with the new Hawick Military Association of volunteers. James (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk, coming from Free St. David’s in Edinburgh in 1856 and serving until 1879. Rev. John Wallace (1886–1974) born at Turakina, New Zealand, son of Rev. John, he studied at the University of Wellington and was ordained in 1913. He became Chaplain-Captain in the New Zealand Expeditionary Force. Apparently unpopular with the men on a troop ship sailing to Suez, the captain threatened to throw him overboard! He served as Chaplain with the 5th Royal Scots at Gallipoli. He returned to New Zealand in 1919, but later attended classes at New College, Edinburgh and was inducted minister at Burnmouth, Berwickshire in 1922. He became minister of Denholm Kirk from the time of the reunion (1929, when it became part of the Church of Scotland) until 1953. In 1957 he moved to London to live with his daughter. He married Ruth Marjorie McGlashan in 1922. He died at Lewisham, London. Margaret ‘callit Nuris’ (17th C.) local woman who was attacked by Bailie James Burn in April 1641, having her forehead cut in the process. Burn accused her of being a witch, for being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was fined and put in the stocks, which must have been unheard of for a sitting Bailie. Her nickname was presumably ‘Nurse’.

The Rotary Club (thu-rô’-u-ree-klub) n. international social and charitable organisation of businessmen and professionals, began in the U.S.A. in 1905, typically restricted to men in their 40s or above. Hawick is in District 1020, and the local club regularly meets in the Buccleuch Hotel founded??.

Rotten Moss (ró’-in-mos) n. area to the west of Whitfield and east of Pisgah Hill.

Rottenraw (ro’-in-raw) n. former name for land near Hundalee, once a home of the Rutherfords. In 1638 it was given by John Rutherford of Rottenrow to Robert Scott (‘in Burnfutt near Tiviot’) who was marrying his daughter Anne (spelled ‘Rattinraw’ etc.).

Rotten Sike (ro’-in-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, rising near the boundary with Dumfriesshire and running north-east past the farm of Whisgills to join Tinnis Burn.

Rotten Sike (ro’-in-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Knowe and joining the Tweedern Burn north of Tweedhead farm.

Rough (rowch) adj., arch. rough – ‘…ane peck of insufficient humilcorn meill, out of which there was dight ane choppin dish full of rough seids’ [BR1675]. ‘Ay whow, bairns, it’s a rough nicht. How the wund’s souchin’ i’ the chumla seids’ [JAHM], ‘…And it’s dreich, gey dreich on this rouch hill heid Whaur the cauld air gars ane nither’ [WL] (also spelled ‘dreich’).

Rouchchesters (row-chches-turz) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is unknown, but it was listed between Strange and Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants were Patrick Oliver and the lands were valued at 12s 6d (it is ‘Rochchesteris’ in 1541).

Roughhurst (row-ch-hurst) n. former farmstead on the Jed Water, just to the south of Auld Jedburgh. In 1541 the tenant was John Laidlaw and the lands were valued at 12s 6d. The tenants there in 1669 were Thomas, Martin, Lyle and Thomas (junior) Laidlaw and in 1694 were Thomas and John Laidlaw. This may be the ‘Roughchestre’ which was burned by the English in 1544 (it is ‘Ruchhirst’ in 1669; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ruchhirst”).

Rouchope (row-chhop) n. former place name in Hobbirk Parish, near to Hyndlee. These were the lands of ‘Rughope’ granted to William of Wauchope in the early 14th century. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands were owned by the Turnbuls in the mid-16th century. The lands were purchased by William and Robert Chisholme (of Stitches) in 1684. The ridge to the west of the Note o’ the Gate road just south of Wigg is still ‘Rough-hope Rig’ on the Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Rouchope’ in 1538 and 1541, and ‘Ruchhoip’ in 1539; Pont’s sketch c.1590 and Blaeu’s 1654 map appears to label either Wigg Rough-heuch

Burn or Hyndlee Burn as ‘Rucchoop B.’ and ‘Rucchhapee B.’ and somewhere even higher up is labelled ‘Ruchswyre’.

Rough-heuch see Roughheugh roudes (row-dis) n., arch. a strong masculine woman, an old, ill-natured woman – ‘O never vex ane roudes auld. Although she rax your faithe, For, late and air, revenge she’ll seek. When least you dreed the skain’ [JTe], adj. applied to an old woman with masculine characteristics – ‘A gey roudes boody’ [GW].

rouen (row-in) pp., adj., arch. torn, riven, ripped – ‘Rouen, Rent, torn, riven; especially applied to old pieces of dress, and to wooden dishes when split, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (a past tense of rive).

rough (rich) adj., arch. bounteous, well-supplied, especially with plain fare – ‘A rough table (gh in rough is guttural) = a well-laden table, bering a variety of dishes; a table ‘groaning under the weight of good things’’ [ECS].

Roughcleuch Rig (ruf-klewch-rig) n. ridge to the east of Linhope farm, lying between Lightning Hill and Wether Law.

Rough Gill (rug-, rowch-gil) n. small stream in western Liddisdale, rising on Cooms Fell and running roughly south-eastwards to eventually join the Black Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rough Grain (rug-, rowch-gran) n. small stream in upper Liddisdale, rising on Mid Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on the large scale 1899 Ordnance Survey map.

Rough Grain (rug-, rowch-gran) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Hartsgearth Fell and runs roughly to the north-west to join Chapel Grain and then the Twislehope Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

rough-heid (rug-, rowch-heed) n., arch. a turf or divot, especially a piece of peat cut from the surface and with the grass still attached – ‘These are to give notice to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they are discharged from casting dry land soads of any part of the Common or roughheads (except roughheads in the Mosses), and from casting turfs or divots on the Common ...’ [BR1816]. ‘An’ divots an’ rough-heads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Roughheugh (rug-hew, rowch-heuch) n. former name referring to the area in Wilton between Howlands and Easter Howlands, and from Ladylaw to Lockieshedge, lying ‘contiguous to the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’, and bounded on the south by Wilton Path to Old Wilton Churchyard, on both sides of Princes Street. The name was also used for the corn mill there, and the later hosiery mill. The name dates at least to the mid-17th century and is preserved in a house on Greensidehall Road. In 1650 there are 14 ‘communicants’ recorded on a map of local parishes, when it is ‘rouch-heuch’e; they are Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet ‘Symontonn’, John Redford, Thomas Clerk, Mary Armstrong, John Clerk, Isobel ‘Howatson’, Robert Riddell, Margaret Shortreed, Janet Ellioe and Janet Redford. John Miller was recorded there in 1724 and George Wallace in 1737. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Haugh lying ‘between Dangerfield and the rough land as described by hillocks’. The lands were part of the estate of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold off in parts around 1780: the Waulk Mill to John and William Thomline; the Corn Mill to Robert Scott; and other parts to James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson. John Clerk was living there in 1780. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) the lands are listed as consisting of the Waulk Mill and Corn Mill and 7 other parts, owned by John Thomline (plus William by 1811), Robert Scott, James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson; together they were valued at around £140. The Laird of Langlands held some enclosures in the area, which were sold off to Rev. John Thomson in the mid-19th century. By the early 20th century the name was no longer in use (the origin is presumably from the roughness of the land around the steep bank).

Roughheugh Dam (rug-hewch-dawn) n. another name for Wulton Dam.

Roughheugh Haugh (rug-hew-hawf, rowch-heuch-hawf) n. former name for part of the Under Haugh – ‘There’s teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heunch Hauch’ [JAHM] (this also inspired the Hugh MacDiarmid poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’).

Roughheugh Mill (rug-hew-mil, rowch-heuch-mil) n. former corn mill, near the south end of Commercial Road. It is shown in a crude sketch of 1810, with the miller’s cottage alongside (and a water wheel, with the adjacent waulk mill also having a water wheel). It is labelled ‘Rough Heugh Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. The building that held the water wheel was once on the Burgh boundary with Wilton; in the early 1700s the Flag used to be unfurled and given 3 cheers there after the visit to the Coble Pool on Common Riding Friday. William Cavers was miller there in 1694, with Simon Wright the under-miller, and Thomas Rutherford also listed there. Alexander Scott (probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester) was tenant in the mid-18th century and then his son Robert Scott was tenants after him. Robert is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1811 it was valued at £26 9s. It was still an active mill in the 1820s, when Pigot’s directory lists the millers as Walter Chisholm and David Fiddes. Thomas Goodfellow and David Fiddes were millers there in 1837 and 1841, with John Fiddes there in 1851. Soon after it (or a building on an adjacent site) became a waulk mill, carried on by John Wilson after William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851. Langlands Mill was constructed on the site in about 1860. John Wilson was listed as owner of the land there in about 1874 (also spelled ‘Rouch-heuch’, etc.; it is ‘Roughheughmiln’ in 1797 and incorrectly written ‘Roughhead mill’ in 1837).

Roughheugh Peth (ruf-hew-peth) n. Roughheugh Path, an old name for Wilton Path or the Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Rough-hope (ruf-hop, rowch-up) n. former farm in the upper Borthwick valley, lying on the Rough-hope Burn, to the south of Eildrig. James Oliver was there in 1785 and James Lunn and family in 1796 (it is ‘Roughshope’ in 1795).

Rough-hope Burn (ruf-hop-burn) n. stream that rises on Philhope Fell, running roughly north-west to join the Eildrig Burn, and hence the Borthwick Water. There are some old field boundaries about half-way up the stream. The stream fed the reservoir, later known as Philhope Loch, which was used to boost the level of the Borthwick Water and the Teviot.

Rough-hope Rig (rowch-up-rig) n. ridge just to the west of the B6357, shortly before coming to the Note o’ the Gate pass. There is a picnic spot near there. On the ridge is a linear earthwork, about 400 m long, running from the Wigg burn north-east to the main road.

Rough Joke (rowch-jök) n. nickname for John Oliver in the late 1700s.

Roughlaw Sike (rowch-law-sïk) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It is mentioned in a charter of 1606, defining the west side of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. It is unclear where this is exactly, but perhaps the small tributary of the Hallrule Burn that runs past Heathfield cottage (it is ‘Rowchelawyske’ in 1606).

Roughlee (ruf-lee, rowgh-lee) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, between Falside and Edgerston. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester Roughlee. Simon Young from there had remission for plundering neighbouring farms in 1493 and John Young for similar crimes in 1494/5. The lands of ‘Wester Roughlie’ were valued at 20 shillings in 1538, with ‘Mydrouchlieis’ at 30 shillings and ‘Rowchlenwke’ at 40 shillings. The 20 shilling land of ‘Rouchlie vocatarum Westir Roughlie’ is recorded in 1539, as well as the 30 shilling land of Midroughlee and the 40 shilling land of Roughleenuek. William Douglas was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for 1538 and in 1539 claimed £10 pertaining to his inheritance. ‘Lyonell Ollyver’ is recorded there in 1544. Michael and John Young was there in 1571/2. David Laidlaw was there in 1588. Robert Douglass of Brieryyards was infefted in the lands in 1588 and was served heir to his father John in 1606. The cottage there was once part of Falside farm. This is probably the ‘Ruchlie’ recorded in 1669 when the tenants were Robert and John Storie and Adam Bell. Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Oliver were tenants there in 1694. The ancient settlement on the eastern slope of the hill to the east of the current farmstead may be the former Easter Roughlee; it consists of a roughly oval enclosure, with 2 possible hut sites inside, but has been largely destroyed by forestry plantation. A little to the west is Roughlee Strip, where there are 2 enclosures visible in aerial photographs. To the north there was a plantation bank, now covered with forest. Further south, on a shelf overlooking the Jed Water, are the remains of another farmstead – ‘And her eye was fixt on the Klesly brae ’Till the red sun glinted fair; – On the Roughlee height, where now in sight, A knight did onward bear’ [JTe], (also written ‘Roughlee’, it is ‘rowchlie’ in 1493, ‘rowchlee’ in 1494/5, ‘Rouchleyis’ in 1538, ‘Rowghleeis’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlieis’ in 1571/2 and ‘Roughlie’ in 1694; ‘Eister Rowchlie et Wester Roughlie’ are recorded in 1606; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rucclhy’).

Roughleenuek (rowch-lee-newk) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, to the east of Roughlee. It was valued at 40 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. It was burned by an English raiding party in 1544. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards.
Roughleeneuk Hill

from his father John in 1606. Ninian, John and Lyle Young were tenants of ‘Rouchnuek’ in 1669 and Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. Andrew Ker ‘of Roughlioneuk’ was recorded as deceased in 1731. George Davidson was farmer there in at least 1790–91. James Davidson (‘Dandie Dimmont’) lived there in the late 1700s and William Scott was farmer there in at least 1794–97. The farmstead was still marked on maps in 1863, and is still visible in aerial photographs, with a plantation bank 150 m to the south (it is ‘Rowclhlenyke’ in 1538, ‘Rouchnenewke’ in 1539, ‘Rowle Newke’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlienwik’ in 1606, ‘Roughlinouck’ and ‘ruchlinuck’ in 1694 and ‘Roughlawnook’ in 1731. Probably the place marked ‘Nuik’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Roughleenock’ in 1718, ‘Roucheenock’ in 1723, ‘Roughlinock’ in 1727, ‘Roughlenwke’ in 1538, ‘Rouchlenewke’ in 1539, ‘Rowle Newke’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlienwik’ in 1606, ‘Roughlinouck’ and ‘ruchlinuck’ in 1694 and ‘Roughlawnook’ in 1797; probably the place marked ‘Nuik’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Roughleenock’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘neuk’ could just refer to a remote place.

Roughleeneuk Hill (rowch-leew-nk-hil) n. Roughleoneok Hill, hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 241 m, in a bend of the Jed Water to the east of Roughlee. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map showed a farmstead there, comprising 5 buildings and an enclosure, the outlines still visible in aerial photographs.

Roughley (raf-leec) n. farmstead to the east of Hermitage, off the Roughley Burn. The tenants of the Englishman John Thirlwall were given protection by Edward III in 1365, suggesting that these lands were formerly among those held by Comyn. In 1541 the tenants were Ninian and John Elliot. Anthony Elliot was tenant there in 1622. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1632. John Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 160 acres, bounded by Laws, Riccarton, Taylorcleuchhead, Shaws, Milburnholm and Stichelhill. The farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one and another house was marked, perhaps among Dean’s Cleuch. Henry Haliburton was there in 1778. The farmer in 1794–97 was Robert Turnbull. John Little was shepherd in 1835. There was once a large burial cairn there, which was dismantled, the fist found inside being acquired by Sir Walter Scott – ‘When three long years were come and gone, Two shepherds sat on Roughly hill; And ay they sigh’d, and made their moan, O’er present times that look’d so ill’ [ES] (the name probably comes from the Old English ‘ruh leah’, meaning ‘uncultivated clearing’; it appears as ‘Routhlie’ in 1541, ‘Rouchlie’ in 1622, ‘Ruchlie’ in 1632, ‘Roughlaw’ in 1694, ‘Rouchlie’ in 1778 and ‘Roughlee’ in 1797; it is ‘Ruchly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Roughlee’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Roughly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Roughley Burn (raf-leec-burn) n. major stream in upper Liddesdale, rising in the hills to the east of Whitrope and running south, fed by many smaller ‘sikes’ and ‘gills’ to join the Hermitage Water at Shaw's.

Roughley Sike (raf-leec-sik) n. small stream that rises on the western slopes of Arnton and fell and runs to the west to join Roughley Burn.

rough runch (rowch-runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum.

Roughside Hill (raf-sid-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Synton Mossend. It reaches to more than 270 m.

Rough Slack (rowch-slawk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Birny Fell and running south to join Ralton Burn.

the Rough Wooin (thu-ruf-woo-in) n. sobriquet for the rampage of English armies in 1544 and 1545 throughout the Scottish Border country. This was an attempt to force the Scots to allow the wedding of King Henry VIII’s young son Edward to the infant Mary Queen of Scots. Among other places, the abbeys of Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Melrose were left in ruins, and in Hawick Drumlanrig’s Tower was about all that survived the conflagration. The attacks were led by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and looted, along with 192 towers and villages in the Borders, with around 400 Borderers being killed. The devastation was even worse in 1545, when Teviotdale was laid waste, including Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassenendean and Brier-yards among other villages.

rouk (rowk) n., arch., poet. mist, fog, smog, drizzle, vapours – ‘He gars the rouks ascen’ frae the en’s o the yirth . . .’ [HSR], ‘Fire an’ hail; snaw an’ rouk; stormie wund fu’ re-thick’ [HSR], ‘. . . where yin canna sei bye yin’s neb for skomfeeshin rowks an drowes’ [ECS], ‘When the smuiky rowk fyles a’thing’ [GW], ‘. . . to re-pay us for a’ the derk and weet, the glaur and mirk’ [WL] (also written ‘rowk’).

rouky (row-kee) adj., poet. misty, drizzly, damp, foggy, muggy – ‘The inn-man, easin the sneck, Peered into the rouky nicht’ [WL] (also spelled ‘rowky’).

roup (rowp, roop) n., arch. an auction – ‘his goods an effects will be set be public roup’, ‘...and after ye roup, the money then gotten should be given in’ [PR1722], ‘Received roup of the seats in the kirk for 1755...0 10 6’ [BR1755], ‘...While high-bred dame – bereft o’ hope – Is doomed to stand a public roup – The highest bidder gets her’ [JR], ‘A sale o’ furniter, a roup O’spuds at Black’s Hotel. I’ll tell ye a’ aboot it if Somebody brings my bell’ [WP], v. to cry hoarsely (from Old Norse; also spelled ‘rowp’).

roupit (row-pee’, -pi’) adj., pp., arch. hoarse – ‘A rowpit cough’ [GW] (also written ‘rowpit’; cf. crowpit).

Routin Burn (row’-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, stream that rises on Roan Fell on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, and flows into Hartsgarth Burn. Along the stream lie 2 shepherd’s bothies, 2 sheep-folds, 6 shieling huts, a pen and a ‘knocking stone’.

Routin Burn (row’-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, small stream in the headwaters of the Twislehope Burn. It rises near Pike Fell on the border with Dumfriesshire, only a couple of miles west of the other stream of the same name.

Routledge (row’-, rowt-, roo’-lij) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s as ‘Jamie’s Adam Routledge’. He was one of a group of Englishmen complained of by Thomas Armstrong of Tinniburn for stealing livestock from him. He could be the ‘Addame Routledge of the Netechuighe’ listed among Routledges of the English Border in 1583.

Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His name appears as ‘Routlage’ right after John, who was presumably related. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded along with John in 1473 as a deputy of the Constable of Bewcastle. How he was related to the Hawick members of the family is not known, but these appear to be the first recorded members of the family near Bewcastle (possibly the eponymous home). Around 1478 they were let the lands and castle of Bewcastle by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, with instructions that they maintain the Border there. During a land dispute of 1538 an old witness in Bewcastle stated that ‘...60 years bipast when Liddesdale men came into England and were sworn to King Richard at Carlisle’ that ‘let all the lands of Bewcastle to Cuthib and John Routlege, Robt Elwald, and Ger-ard Nyxon, and before that’...as well the said castle as all the lands belonging to the same of long time lay waste’. David (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale. He was witness to Adam Hepburn being served as heir to his father Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. He is recorded as ‘Daud Routlech, sergeo’, suggesting he was a local official of the area. Probably the same David was also witness to William Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. He may be the same man as the Bailie for Douglas of Cavers.

David (15th/16th C.) bailiff and later factor for James Douglas of Cavers. Possibly the same David ‘Rucclarch’ or ‘Rutlethe’ held 8 participles of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter; these were on the south side of the public street, and represent one of the largest amounts of any single owner. He may be the David ‘Routlesche’ who in 1512 he was directed to be one of James Douglas of Cavers Bailies to give sasine of Denholm to William Cranston. He may be the same David who was listed on a pardon by James V in 1526, along with a great many Scotts, Kerrs, Pringles, Turnbuls and Eliotts, as well as John, Archibald and Simon ‘Routlage’. Probably the same David was listed among tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court case of 1541. Probably the same David was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550 (for the lands of Colifort). Isobel (16th C.) widow on the English side, recorded in 1581. Her house was apparently raided by 30 Eliotts, who stole 4 oxen, 6 cows, her only horse and all her possessions. James (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and Simon son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed. to appear. Probably the same James was also called in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5. James (16th C.) holder of half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument of resignation of 1529/30 (not a century earlier as apparently written), William ‘Routlich’, son of the deceased John resigned all rights to these lands, the ‘kyndness’ of which was held of this James. He was surely related to John and William, as well as to other nearly contemporary local Routledges. He may be the ‘Jacobi Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland for 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He could be the James (‘on trows’) who, along with John (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance. James of Todhills (16th C.) from Cumbria. In 1540 the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants complained about a raid he led into Rulewater, where ‘Thome Oliver’ and ‘Will Kowman’ were slain at Abbotrule. John (15th C.) recorded in 1471, along with David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong, when they gave pledges for Walter to appear at court in Selkirk. He was probably related to Walter in some way. John (15th C.) recorded in 1473, along with Cuthbert as deputies to the Constable of Bewcastle. John (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was called by the Sheriff, William of Douglas, but failed to appear. At the same time Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon were also called. He could be the John ‘in trows’ who, along with James (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance; he seems to be distinct from John, son of Simon in the Trows, who is recorded separately in 1502 (and may have been his nephew or similar). John (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. John ‘Black John’ (15th/16th C.) Englishman who along with John Dalgleish and others was brought with his accomplices to burn Branhholme some time prior to 1510. In that year Dalgleish was convicted of this and other crimes and sentenced to hanging if he could not find sureties. He is recorded as ‘Black John Roucleshe’ (which in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ is suggested to be ‘Roughcliffe, or Roweleff’, but seems clearly to be a transcription error for ‘Routlesche’) and was a ‘traitor of Levin’. He was probably related to the Simon and Matthew who burned the Scott’s seat at Bucleuch about 20 years earlier. John (d.bef. 1530) ‘kyndlie’ tenant of half of the land of Crook in Cavers Parish. He may have been son of Simon in the Trows. He was succeeded in this tenancy by his son William, who resigned his rights to his superior (Douglas of Cavers) in 1529/30. They had the ‘kyndness from James, who must surely have been a relative; his surname is recorded as ‘Routlech’. Probably the same John ‘rouclisch’ failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493: Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon, were also called and failed to appear, and were surely related. Probably the same John is recorded as son of Simon (who was ‘in le trowis’) in 1494/5 when he failed to appear again, with Dougs of Cavers being fined; his father Simon, as well as James and Simon (perhaps his brothers) were also called at the same Justice-aire. He may be the ‘Johannis Rutlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. In 1502 he is recorded as son of Simon in the Trows ‘nunc in le cruk’ (i.e. now in the Crook) when he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, and was fined for not appearing. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Archibald is listed after him and so probably related. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) son of Mungo, an Englishman. He was entered as a prisoner to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1562, by Archibald Elliot of Falsnash and his son. John (16th C.) listed in 1585 as ‘Jjonn Rowclege’ among a list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell who had respite for all their crimes. He is listed along with Armstrongs from around Eskdale. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Elliot of Copshaw, recorded in 1605. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a grocer and spirit merchant of the High Street recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was living at about No. 50 with his wife Margaret in 1841. His widow Margaret was still living there in 1851. He may be the same John who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left, along with Rev. Wallace, in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Peggy, daughter of stockmaker William Beck; she secondly married M. Thompson. They had no children.
John (19th C.) farmer at Greenholm in Liddesdale in 1868. Mals (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. It is unclear if her first name was short for something more familiar. Margaret (b.1786/7) married John, who was a grocer and spirit merchant. By 1851 she was a widow living on the High Street. She was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. Martin (16th C.) Procurator of the Scottish Nation in the University of Orleans from 1537. He described himself as being of the Clan Scott and was the last of his family to sign his name ‘de’, in his case ‘de Rotheluge’. Matthew (15th/16th C.) son of Simon, who was tenant at the Trows. In 1494 there was a decree against them to repay the value of the livestock and goods they had taken or destroyed from the house and farm at Buccleuch. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Simon at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, when he was surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He may be the ‘Mathei Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with James, John and Simon (with his name appearing first), as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He was recorded again at the Justice-aire in Hawick, as son of Simon in the Trows, when he was once more surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. Matthew (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is listed in the sasine of the Barony of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name is recorded as ‘Matheo Routlichis’. He may be the same Matthew, son of Simon, who was charged with plundering and burning Buccleuch in 1494. Nichol (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Nicholl Routleche’ along with a number of Nixons and others of Liddesdale who has remission from their crimes from the Privy Council in 1516. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry. His only surviving son Jack was a Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. who was killed in 1917. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Torlishope who appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1650s. Whether he was a descendant of the earlier Routledges is unknown. He married Isobel Huntly and their children included Bessie, James (b.1657) and Michael. Simon (15th C.) Burgess of Hawick who was listed among the witnesses to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there recorded as ‘Simone Rowlteg’. In a charter of 1433 he is referred to as ‘Simon of Routluge’ when William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick feued the lands of ‘Byrkwode called the oxgang’ (near the present day Duke’s Wood) and the lands of Buruflat to him. He is also mentioned in a deed of 1447 as a Burgess, when he conveyed part of the land of the Branxholme estate to Sir Walter Scott of Bucceleuch. The land was known as ‘Cusingland’ and was the dowry of his wife Margaret (or ‘Margret’) Cousin (or ‘Cusyne’). In 1447 he also feued Birdwood (incorrectly transcribed in one record as ‘Birdwood’) to Sir Walter, and is again referred to as a Burgess of Hawick, and as a Bailie in the 1448 sasine. In 1453 he was one of the 2 Bailies who witnessed the first known sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick. In 1455 he is one of the Burgessess of Hawick listed on the notarised document attesting that John of St. Michael had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchester; he is there referred to as ‘burgensis ac sergendus’ of the Barony of Hawick, this second title presumably equivalent to Bailie or Baron’s Bailie. He is mentioned again in 1456, this probably referring to him witnessing an earlier retour for Whitchesters; there he is ‘Symon de Routluge de Hawiki’. He is one of the earliest recorded people with this surname, and also the earliest known Burgess of Hawick. He may closely related to the Simon (15th C.) witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas in 1464/5. He is recorded as ‘Simone de Routlague’ and one of the ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. ‘esquires’). Since the sasine was made at Cavers, he was surely a nearby landowner, but it is unclear whether he is the same as the earlier Burgess and Bailie of Hawick or the later Simon from Trows. It may be the same man who was ‘Simone Rouletlych’ when he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. Simon (15th C.) possibly related to the earlier Simon. He is recorded in 1484 on the panel of inquest for James Douglas as heir to his father Sir William of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick. He may also be the ‘Symone Rowclugh’ recorded in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Simon ‘roulisch’ who William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was called to enter at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, and not appearing, Douglas was fined (similarly John, James son of Simon, and Simon son of Simon, were all failed to be entered, and were surely closely related to him, Simon and James probably being his sons).
He may be the same Simon ‘in the trows’ who was subject was charged with plundering Buccleuch in 1494 along with his son Matthew (with their sureties the Douglas). He is recorded as ‘Symonis rouclisch in le trows’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his sons John and Simon also failed to appear at the same Justice- aire, as well as James (probably also his son). Simon (15th C.) recorded as ‘Symon routlage i the trows’ (and probably not ‘prowis’ as stated by William Fraser) in 1494 when Walter Scott, grandson of Sir David of Buccleuch, obtained a decree from the Lords of Council against him for the theft and plunder (‘spuillez’) of the manor and farm of Buccleuch. His son Matthew is also mentioned. Presumably this happened before David Scott died 2 or 3 years earlier. They stole 5 horses, 40 cows, 40 sheep, 2 oxen, large quantities of food etc., including 80 stones of cheese and butter, and ruined the manor, leaving ‘nocht on bed or baulks’. Given the similarity of the names (Simon and Matthew), it seems likely this family was closely related to that of the Hawick Burgess, possibly the same. Their residence appears to have been the Trows (and not ‘Prows’, known to be connected with the Bewcastle branch of the family), since Douglas of Horns hole acted as surety for the 1494 decree. He may be the ‘Symonis Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, James and Simon and many Rutherford s, who had their fines compounded. His son Matthew is recorded in 1494/5 and 1502. His son John, ‘now in le cruk’ (although it is unclear whether this refers to the father or the son) is recorded in 1502, when he was fined for failing to appear in court. Additionally, he is ‘in le trows’ in 1502 when John and James in Trows served as surety for him at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh and were fined for his non-appearance. It seems likely that Simon in Trows and Simon in Crook were the same person. Simon (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and James son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. In 1494/5 he failed to appear again (as well as his father Simon and James and John, who were probably his brothers). Simon (16th C.) tenant in Crook in 1592. He is recorded as a witness to the instrument of sasine in which Martin Douglas inherited Crook from his father. He was surely related to John, who was associated with Crook about 60 years earlier, and probably also a descendant of Simon, tenant in the Trows. It is possible he is the same man as Simon in the Trows. Thomas (16th C.) subject of a bond for him to be entered as a prisoner in 1561/2. The bond was between several Eliots (Archibald of Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin, John of Copshaw and Elder Will) Sir John Kerr and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Elliots promising to deliver him to ‘the irn yettis of the Fairniehirst’, and was signed at Hawick. A few months later Elliot of Falnash in another bond entered John, ‘son to Mungo Routlache, Englishman’ as a prisoner, so this seems likely to have been a relative. The same man (or a son perhaps) could have been recorded in 1581; in a raid by the Elliots of Liddesdale, a Thomas of ‘Todholes’ (i.e. Todhills in Cumbria) was taken prisoner and his horses and oxen stolen. This same Thomas of Todhills complained in 1582 of having livestock and goods stolen by ‘Kimmont Jock, Eckie of Strubholm and Jock Armstrong of Calhill’. The same Thomas of Todhills was injured in another raid by the Armstrongs of Mangerton, Whitehaugh etc., in 1583; several other Routledges were targeted, including George of ‘Greinhilesh’ and Anthony of ‘Nutticleugh’, with Alan being killed and William, John and another Thomas being injured ‘in peril of death whereof one hath his legge cut of’. Walter (15th ) recorded in 1471 when John, as well as David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong gave pledges that he would appear at court in Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1640s and 50s. He may have been related to the contemporary Robert, and possibly was a descendant of the earlier local Routledges. He married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included 2 Michaels, Janet, Isobel and Margaret (there are many older spellings, including ‘Routledge’, ‘Rouchligis’, ‘Rouclesche’, ‘Rouclisch’, ‘Routelych’, ‘Routhlethe’, ‘Routlage’, ‘Routlagh’, ‘Routlaige’, ‘Routlachi’, ‘Routlache’, ‘Routlege’, ‘Routlesche’, ‘Routlich’, ‘Routlooch’, ‘Routluge’, ‘Rowclough’, ‘Rowtleg’, ‘Rowltugh’, ‘Rutledge’ and ‘Rutlethe’).
the family is ‘Simon de Routledge’, a Burgess and Bailie of Hawick, recorded in several documents of the 1440s and 1450s. Simon and his son Matthew lived at the Trows, and were charged in 1494 with plundering the manor and lands of Buccleuch. There is a record of a payment made from the Treasurer of Scotland to ‘men of Levin callit Rowlteych’ in 1491. Another early member of the family is John ‘Routlech’, who was already deceased in 1529/30 when his son William resigned his ‘kyndlie’ tenancy of half of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish, which they held of James (surely another relative). There were other people with this surname, probably closely related to the earlier Simon, holding prominent positions in Hawick over the next century. David held 8 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick’s 1537 Charter, probably the largest of any single landowner).

Sir Christopher Dacre, with a band of 500 men, set upon them in 1528, and although he failed to dislodge them from the lands of Tarras, the family appear to have dispersed afterwards. There were later Routledges in Hawick, e.g. the families of Robert and Walter in the 1640s and 50s, but whether directly related to the earlier Burgesses is unknown.

rovin (rō-vin) n., arch. a roving, a set of lightly twisted fibres in the process of being spun, also called a ‘slub’ or ‘slubbing’ – ‘The rovings were pieced together by boys on a leather rubber at the back of the Billies ...’ [JGW].

He ran the Hawick Motorcycle Centre, worked as an engineer with Pringle’s and later opened The Photo Shop on the High Street. He often contributed letters to the local press. He married Irene Gentleman. He moved to the Leicester area to be near his son Mark and died there.

Rowanhill (row-in-hil) n. former lands in the upper Teviotdale, listed as part of the extensive Rowantreihill

Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and in 1693. It seems likely this is a scribe’s or transcriber’s error for Bowanhill. However, it is not impossible that it could be associated with Rowantree hill, although this is probably on the wrong side of the Teviot valley or Rowantree Knowe on the right side (it is ‘Rowanhill’ in 1693).

Rowantreihill (row-in-trihil) n. Rowantreehill, probable name for a farm in Jedforest. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 2 steadings and valued at 44 shillings. In 1541 John, Marion and Adam were tenants of part of the lands paying 22s, John and Robert Oliver were tenants in another part paying 11s and Robert ‘the Sheriff’ Oliver was tenants in the last part paying 11s (it is ‘Rowntreihill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Rowntreihill’ and ‘Rontreihill’ in 1541).

Roxburgh Castle

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small town in Central Otago on the South Island of New Zealand. It lies on the Teviot River (now called the Clutha), and was also once called Teviot itself, with Ettrick and Mount Benger nearby. It was named by some of the early settlers and was an important centre during the local gold rush of 1862. Streets in the town include one named after Hawick, as well as Abbotsford, Ancrum, Berwick, Branxholm, Cheviot, Edinburgh, Ednam, Hermitage, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddle, Melrose, Scotland and Tweed.

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. John (d.1196) Canon of Glasgow, who witnessed several charters from the 1160s. It is possible he was the Master John associated with either Lessuden or Longnewton. He was appointed Treasurer of Glasgow Diocese in 1195/6, but only held the appointment for a few months before dying at Melrose Abbey. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesestate. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruecastle, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1794 and 1797. He was recorded as owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stitchelhill. He is listed as male head of household there 1835–41. He emigrated to America in 1842.

Roxburgh Castle (roks-bu-ru-kaw-sul) n. also called Marchmount, built above the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed. It passed back and fourth between Scotland and England several times, with the English holding it about as often as the Scots. Alexander II was married in the Castle in 1239. A large number of Scottish charters and other records were removed there on the orders of Edward I in 1292, before subsequently disappearing forever. Robert the Bruce’s sister Mary was hung there in a cage from 1306–10 on orders of Edward I. Sir James Douglas recaptured it in 1313, but the English held it from 1334 until...
Roxburghshire

1460. A bridge connecting the area with Kelso was destroyed in 1398 and its successor destroyed by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1411. During the 1460 siege of James II died when one of his cannons exploded; a yew tree in the grounds of Floors Castle marks the spot. Queen Mary of Gueldres dismantled it, but it was rebuilt by the English in 1547. When the Scots regained it for the last time they razed it themselves, around 1550 – ‘Roxburgh! how fallen, since first in Gothic pride Thy frowning battlements the war defied, Call’d the bold chief to grace thy blazon’d halls, And bade the rivers gird thy solid walls!’ [JL].

Roxburghie Drive (roks-bu-ru-driv) n. one of the bigger roads through Stiches, being his continuation of Hazelwood Road. It was built in 1976 and named after the 9th Duke of Roxburghe, George Victor Robert John Innes-Ker, who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council (often erroneously written ‘Roxburgh’).

the Roxburgh Roondie (thu-roks-bu-roon-dee) n. local brie-like cheese made at Standhill farm by Jim and Anne Shanks from 2007.

Roxburghshire (roks-bu-ru-shir, roks-bu-ru-shIr) n. former county which included Hawick, Jedburgh and Kelso. It was the southernmost county of Scotland and was bounded by Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Selkirkshire and the English Border. It contained what was formerly Teviotdale and part of Liddesdale and was divided into over 30 parishes. Jedburgh was the county town, although there was a proposal around 1891 to change this to Hawick. The area was 669 square miles, although changes to the boundaries means this number does not apply to all times. The county is full of archaeological remains, including Bronze Age burial cairns, British forts, Roman camps and roads, vestiges of settlements and peel towers. The county is named after the formerly important town and Castle of Roxburgh.

Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry (roks-bu-ru-shir-jen’-ul-min-in-yo-min-ree-kaw-vul-ree) n. local volunteer regiment that existed 1797–1828, also known as the Roxburghshire Yeomanry or the Roxburghshire Light Dragoons Yeomanry Cavalry. Hawick was the main rallying point for the upper troop. In 1798 the Burgh gave them £25 to purchase drums and fifes. The western Captain-commandant was William Elliot of Harwood, while William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae served as Colonel. Their uniforms consisted of scarlet jackets laced with white cord, blue collars and cuffs, black leather helmets with a bearskin crest and a red and white heckle feather, white breeches and black boots.

the Roxburghshire Militia (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-mi-lish-a) n. volunteer regiments of the early 19th century, formed in 1809 after the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers had been disbanded. The 1st Regiment was headquartered at Jedburgh, and contained many local men, while the 2nd Regiment was based at Kelso. The 1st Regiment had Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) as Lieut.-Col., with James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) as Major and the first Captain was Walter Scott of Wauchope. They were disbanded in 1828 (note that several different names were used for these units).

Roxburghshire Nursin Association (roks-bu-ru-shir-nur-sin-aw-sö-see-ä-shin) n. nursing association formed in 1900 to provide for nursing needs in local country areas. Fees were paid to join the association and only members could benefit from its services. It operated until the National Health Service was set up in 1948.

the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-rë-ful-vo-lun-teez) n. formal name for the Border Rifles, a volunteer outfit founded in 1861.

the Roxburghshire Word-Book (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-wurd-book) n. the most useful resource for words that are peculiar to various parts of the county, written by George Watson and published in 1923. Words that are local to the Hawick area are denoted ‘[W]’, for Western Roxburghshire. As well as the word list itself, the introductory sections compile a huge amount of information about pronunciation and other facets of Roxburghshire vernacular. The book was compiled by Watson from the help of many communicants (most of whose names are unknown) from various parts of Roxburghshire, this following articles and lists of words that he published in the local press to encourage people to help him. Earlier books of poetry are much used to provide examples, and phrases from Elliot Cowan Smith are often included (sometimes without attribution). Watson was from Jedburgh and worked for the Oxford University dictionary project, effectively following in the footsteps of James Murray.

Roxburghshire Yeomanry (roks-bu-ru-shir-yö-min-ree) n. another name for the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry.
Roxburgh Viaduct

Roxburgh Viaduct (roks-bu-ru-vl-a-dukt) n. disused railway viaduct across the Teviot, by the village of Roxburgh. Built in 1847, it has an interesting iron footbridge built into it at the level of the river bank.

Roxburgh Volunteers (roks-bu-ru-vo-lun-teerz) n. name given to several distinct (but inter-related) volunteer military units. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry was first set up in 1794 and disbanded in 1802, to be re-formed as the Roxburghshire Corps of Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, lasting until 1828. The Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers was formed in 1803 during the perceived threat of French invasion. It was initiated by Walter Scott of Wauchope, who became their captain. They were mobilised during the False Alarm of 1804. The unit disbanded in 1809, but was essentially replaced by the Roxburghshire Militia the same year. Another volunteer unit, called the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk Volunteer Rifle Corps was set up in 1859, with Hawick units, the 4th and 5th being set up in 1860 and 1861. The 4th absorbed the Denholm Company in 1863 and the 5th was disbanded in 1867. The 4th Roxburgh Corps became D and E Companies of the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk (The Border) Rifle Volunteer Corps in 1880. They become part of the K.O.S.B. from 1887, with K Company formed in Hawick in 1892, and the whole set of Companies renamed the 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. in 1908.

Roxbury (roks-bu-ree) n. suburb of Boston, Massachusetts, which was apparently named for the many rocks there (although a connection with our county is not impossible). The town of West Roxbury (annexed to Boston in 1874) was the site of the Boston area Common Ridings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This was organised by Hawick exiles under the auspices of the Scottish Border Club. It consisted of sports (races, baseball throwing etc.) and other events on Common Riding Saturday, with the location Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. There is a photograph of the 1886 celebration. Ex-Cornet Walter Irvine attended in 1888. There are American Cornets recorded from 1877 until at least 1926.

Roxmount (roks-mown) n. former farm a mile or so south-east of Hawick (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map close to the modern farm of Kaimend).

the Royal (thu-roi-ul) n. pub at 22 Howegate in the latter 19th and early 20th centuries. It was also known as ‘the Royal Bar’. The proprietor for many years was John Barclay.

the Royal Bank (thu-roi-ul-bawngk) n. the Royal Bank of Scotland erected an impressive building at 12 High Street in 1857/8, designed by Peddie & Kinnear, constructed by James Harkness, with ornamental work by Alex Pirnie. On the top corners of the building can be seen the monogram ‘P K’ and the year ‘1857’. The location had previously contained 2 adjacent hosterries, the Ordnance Arms and the Harrow Inn. The first agent was James Carmichael, solicitor, and later Haddon & Turnbull took over. The building was turned into the Registry Office and now is education service offices. Meanwhile the Royal Bank had another office at 4 Tower Knowe. After it merged with the Commercial group in 1969 it obtained its current branch at 31 High Street (built as the National Bank about 1870). It stretches over 31, 33 and 35 High Street, and is a grade C listed building.

royal burgh (roi-ul-bu-ru) n. a town granted its charter by the Crown rather than the local landowner. There were 65 royal burghs in Scotland. Nearby ones include Jedburgh, Selkirk, Roxburgh and Peebles.

the Royal George (thu-roi-ul-jorj) n. former popular name for the ‘Whusky Hooses Mill’ which stood opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church, also known as ‘the George’. It was presumably named after the famous Royal Navy vessel of the same name, which was the largest warship in the world when it was launched in 1756. The ship fought in the Seven Years War and became infamous when it sank in 1782 during routine maintenance with the loss of more than 800 lives.

Royal Highlanders (roi-ul-hi-lin-durz) n. three officers of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment, Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie, were made Honorary Burgesses in 1802. This was when they passed through Hawick on their way back from Egypt after having ‘immortalised themselves in defeating the French Invincibles’.

the Royal Mail (thu-roi-ul-mal) n. name of a stagecoach operating out of Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh from the Tower Inn every day at 9.30 a.m., going via Selkirk and Galashiels, and leaving for London at 12.30 p.m., via Langholm and Carlisle. The other coach operating at the same time was ‘the Standard’.

Royal Nurseries see Buccleuch Nurseries

the Royal Oak (thu-roi-ul-ok) n. former hostelry near the top of the Round Close in the 19th century, also known for a while as the Blue Bell Inn. It can be seen in a sketch by T.H.
Laidlaw. James Elliot, proprietor, was considered to have provided the finest spread of the local innkeepers at the Reform Bill open air dinner of 1832. Elliot was listed as vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It could have been where Mary Hunter was publican on the Round Close in 1841. Also the name of a separate local pub on Wilton Path at roughly the same time, and another small licensed house on the north side of Buccleuch Street in the mid-19th century (the name is shared with hundreds of other pubs in Britain and refers to the tree in which Charles II hid from Cromwell’s army).

rubber (ru-bur) n., arch. a robber – ‘Ye’re that damned Indian rubber Warren Hastings; get off the ground at yince’ [RM].

rubbers (ru-burz) n., arch. scrapie, a disease of sheep, marked by constant scratching (cf. scratchie).

rubbin-oot-indie (ru-bin-oo’-in-dee) n., arch. an India-rubber, eraser.

Ruberslaw (roo-burz-law) n. hill about 4 miles due east of Hawick, lying on the boundary of Cavers and Hobkirk parishes. It reaches a height of 424 m (1392 ft), and is the most prominent landmark in Roxburghshire. It was long considered to be an extinct volcano, but the reality is that the geology is much more complex (although the rocks are predominantly basaltic, the shape probably came from erosion). It is topped by an Iron Age fort, and was also used as a Roman signal station. The fortifications on the hill-top were first described by A.O. Curle in 1905. There was an extensive stone citadel on top (about 72 m by 32 m), defended by a wall, with an entrance on the north-east side. There is also an annex on the south side, including the plateau below the summit. These were probably rebuilt from the stones of the Roman signal station, as a Dark Age ‘nuclear’ fortification, with Roman stone. A less well-defined outer wall is probably part of an earlier Iron Age structure. A cairn on the east side was removed in the late 19th century. A horde of bronze vessels was unearthed there in 1863 (including a jug handle, decorated with grotesque figures of 2 dwarfs and a bird) and are in the Museum, as well as 2 stones with diamond-shaped carvings. Several flints found there are in the Hawick Museum. Other flints and an arrowhead are in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, as well as an unfinished stone axe. The hill was used for Covenanters’ meetings of the mid-17th century, at Peden’s Pulpit (a rocky cleft at the south-west side of the summit) and elsewhere on its slopes. In a wood near the head of the Hawk Burn is a ‘burnt mound’. Pine trees on the north side are said to be remnants of the ancient Caledonian forest. Part of the slopes were used as Common land in Denholm and in the 18th century each feuar’s allotment was marked out with stones – ‘Oft have I wandered in my vernal years Where Ruberslaw his misty summit rears’ [JL], ‘Dark Ruberslaw, – that lifts his head sublime, Rugged and hoary with the wrecks of time! On his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years’ [JL], ‘Did you see the shadow’s speeding On the slopes of Ruberslaw?’ [RSC], ‘…Waiting helpless the beak and claw Of the carrion birds of Ruberslaw!’ [WHO], ‘…where Ruberslaw’s summit stands out and looks down on the wild lovely Border and Denholm’s wee toon’ [GM], ‘Rest on the heights an’ look ayont Where Ruberslaw shows green, An’ a’ the countryside displayed Aroon’ the Border Queen’ [WFC], ‘When Rubers Law has on his cap, The Dunion on her hood, A’ the auld wives on the ground at yince’ [WFC], ‘Dark Ruberslaw, { that lifts his head sublime, Where Rubserlaw his misty summit rears’ [RSC], ‘...the shadow’s speeding On the slopes of Ruberslaw!’ [WHO].

Ruberslaw Drive (roo-burz-law-driv) n. street in Denholm, running parallel to the Loaning and connected with Ruberslaw Road.

Ruberslaw Hoose (roo-burz-law-hoos) n. house in Crieff near Perth. It was built in the late 18th century, being a branch of the Commercial Bank from 1811, and then was a home of Sir William Elliott of Stobs from at least 1878, when his first wife died there. It is unclear who named the house (but the connection to the Elliots of Stobs seems unlikely to be a coincidence).

Ruberslaw Pairish (roo-burz-law-pâ-reesh) n. combined parish consisting of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule, set up in 2003, and extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean in 2004.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-rôd) n. part of Burnfoot, named after the prominent hill. It was built in 1951, with additional houses added in 1957.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-rôd) n. street in the south-eastern part of Denholm, built on the site of a former livestock market. The private housing development there dates from the 1970s.

rubiator (\textit{ruo-bee-a-tur}) \textit{n.}, \textit{arch.} a bully, a violent, swearing person – ‘He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator’ [JoJ], ‘Hei cam in leike a roobeaater (a violent bully), an cowpeet the taibl yownt owre’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Rubstic (\textit{rub-stik}) \textit{n.} race-horse, trained locally by John Leadbetter. It won the Grand National in 1979, being the first Scottish horse to do so.

ruck (\textit{ruk}) \textit{n.}, \textit{arch.} a rick, stack of hay – ‘O! as we ran about the rucks o’ hay! I hinna seen sincesyne a blyther day’ [CPM].

the Rude Day (\textit{thu-rood-da}) \textit{n.} mediaval festival of the Exultation of the Cross, celebrated on 14th September (3rd May in England), supposedly the date of the discovery of the ‘true cross’. It was important locally before the Reformation and is recorded in the mid-16th century as a day sometimes chosen for signing documents etc. It was the occasion of a Fair in Jedburgh, the day in 1601 being marked by a skirmish, when a group of about 30 Turnbuls from the Minto area came to town seeking Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost). At the end of the fight Ker and his servant were dead, along with 2 of the Turnbuls, and several men were left seriously wounded (still referred to in the 1622 Circuit Court records; also spelled ‘Rood’).

Rudd (\textit{rud}) \textit{n.} Charles Clifford (b.1811/2) from Yorkshire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police in 1851. He was living at about 3 Tower Knowe. He was also listed as Superintendent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a son Thomas Frederick. By 1861 he was a widower working as Police Constable in Jedburgh.

rue-claw (\textit{roo-klaw}) \textit{n.}, \textit{arch.} a mild sore made worse by scratching.

Ruecastle (\textit{roo-, row-kaw-sul}) \textit{n.} hamlet a mile or so north-east of the Dunion, formerly in the Barony of Bedrule. A piece of land there was granted by Lady Bethoc and her husband Rudolph to the monks of Jedburgh when that abbey was founded (as confirmed in several later charters). There is a suggestion that an area of elevated land to the east of the farm may have been the site of a tower. There is also a tradition that the local courts of justice were held there until removed to Jedburgh. William ‘de Ruecastle’ is recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The Fletcher family held part of the lands from before 1464 until they sold them to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1558/9. In 1491 there was a ‘procuratory of resignation’ by Thomas Dickson of Ormiston, to resign (presumably a different part of) these lands into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh; they appear to have been gained by John Rutherford of Hundalee. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. The village there was burned by an English party led by Philip Dacre in 1513, including 2 towers, burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and burned again by Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the Abbot of Jedburgh. It was among lands granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre in 1623. Lands there were held by Lord Jedburgh in 1629. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned lands there, which he feu'd in 1632. In 1643 the lands there were valued at a total of £459, owned by Thomas Rutherford, Andre Turnbull, Laird Storie, Alexander Miller, George Fletcher and the Earl of Traquair. In 1665 Thomas, son of John Rutherford was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling lands there, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle. In 1788 the main part was owned by John Rutherford of Knowesouth and valued at £396 13s 10d (with teinds of £70 6s), part owned by Thomas Rutherford valued at £41 3s 10d, a small part owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters (that had been acquired by Bennet of Chesters) valued at £37 2s 4d and a another part owned by Thomas Storie valued at £18. William Roxburgh was there 1794–97 and William Young was also farmer there in 1797. The farm was part of the estate of Knowesouth, until sold by the heirs of Capt. Rutherford to George Pott of Dod. Part of the lands were acquired by Bennett of Chesters before 1811 and combined with his estate, with the rest being owned by Rutherford of Knowesouth; together the parts were valued at about £510. Gideon Pott acquired further parts from William Oliver Rutherford and from Thomas Storie. The area may be the origin of the similar surname. A cist was found a few hundred yards to the south, containing an urn that was said in 1949 to be preserved in Monteviot House. A stone axe found enarly is in the National Museum of Antiquities. In a field about 500 m to the north are the possible remains of a settlement. A former resident, perhaps fictional, is mentioned in the ballad ‘The Grey Peel’ (as recited by ‘Matthew Gotterson’) – ‘An’ gallopin’ up comes Ruecastle Hew, On his Bewcastle naig o' the guid steel grey. An' Fernhiirst grim, but ever heart true, Whase ready Kerr hand redds mony a fray'T] (the name probably derives from Old English 'ruh' and Anglo-Saxon 'ceaster', meaning 'rough fort', suggesting an early fortification of some sort there; it is written 'Reucastel', 'Ruecastle', 'Rowcastel', 'Rowcastle', 'Rochcastle', 'Ruecastel', 'Rowcastell', 'Rowcastill', and variants; it is first recorded as 'Rughechestre' in about 1140 and is 'Rucastle' in the 13th century; it is 'Roucastell' on Blaeu's 1654 map and the modern spelling appears on Stobie's 1770 map).

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as 'merchant of Hawick' when he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1692. He may be related to the Adam who was born to William and Marion Scott in Hawick in 1650 and may be the Adam who was father in Hawick of an unnamed child in 1690 and James in 1693. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Adam who is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Scott. Elizabeth nee Kelly (18th C.) wife of Bailie Walter, whom she married in the early 1750s. She was apparently the first Hawick citizen to travel out to America and return safely! She was at that time 72 years old and visiting her son John, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. Francis (18th C.) probably closely related to Robert. He could have been the Francis born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1678. He is probably the Francis who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for merchant David Young in 1705. In 1723 he was entered as a new elder of Hawick Kirk and was a candidate for Session Treasurer in 1725. He may have witnessed (the record is hard to read) a baptism, along with Robert, for wigmaker Francis Miles in 1726 and another for carrier George Porteous in 1727. He is also mentioned in reference to the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. He may be the Francis, saddler in Hawick, who witnessed the notarial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He is recorded as a merchant in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with merchant John. He is probably also the saddler Francis who witnessed a baptism for Gideon in 1745; Gideon thus seems likely to have been closely related. He also witnessed a baptism for gardener William Paterson in 1743. He may have been the Francis who died around 1750 and gave his estate to Francis, young son of Bailie Gideon (perhaps therefore his brother). George (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. He may be the George who was married to Isobel 'Merlay' and had a son Hector in Hawick in 1636. George (17th C.) married to Janet Gilbertson, they had daughter Janet in Hawick in 1653. Bailie Gideon (b.1713) son of Robert, he was a Magistrate in Hawick roughly in the 1730s and in 1740. He may have been the Gideon who was Cornet in 1730. He was probably the (ex-)Bailie Ruecastle involved with overseeing work to rebuild the Bailies' seat in St. Mary's in 1734 and building a new Parish School in 1739. He was 'present Baillie' in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for writer James Weir and Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and also 'late Baillie' in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir, and also when his own child's baptism was recorded. He appears to have died shortly before 1751, when the Hawick Session agreed to act as trustees for his minor son Francis, who had been left the estate of another Francis (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Watson and their children included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Francis (b.1734); Thomas (b.1735); John (again, b.1738); Anne (b.1740); Francis (again, b.1741); Anne (again, b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Gideon (b.1747). The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir and in 1745 were former Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis (who was surely closely related to him). Gideon (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick when he paid the Horse Tax in 1790–92. He also paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. He contributed £1 to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He is probably the son of Gideon, born in 1747. Hector (17th C.) married to Isobel Minto, their daughter Grizel was born in 1645. Hector (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Marion Brown and their children included Bessie, Hector, and probably Andrew in the period 1687–92. He may have been son or grandson of George. He may be the 'Hector Reucastel younger' listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. John (16th C.) recorded in Hawick's 1537 charter as 'Rowcastel'. He owned a 'particulate' of land on the north side of the High Street. He may have been the ancestor of the later Ruecastles of the Town. John (17th C.) one of a list of 16 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the

Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he is among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (b.1657) son of Robert and Janet Tweedie, born in Hawick. Probably the same John became a cooper’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. It is not impossible that he is the same as Bailie John. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor’ to carrier Walter Ruecastle in 1716, when he and William Douglas had complaints made against them for sitting in seats in St. Mary’s that were reserved for the incorporated trades. The 2 of them even broke open the door to the balcony when it was locked by Robert Jolly. He was presumably the same John who was involved in a scuffle with Robert Jolly in 1716 in the Wester Loft of St. Mary’s during the Sunday service, when ‘Jollie did thrust him hard by his feet upon his belly’. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Chief Magistrate of Hawick in the early 1700s, recorded as such during the swearing of the oath of allegiance to King George by the Council and Burgessess in 1714. It is unclear how he is related to the other Ruecastles (but based on his children’s names, his father may have been Walter and his mother Anna). He is probably the John who in 1719 married Bessie (or Betsy), daughter of Walter Paterson, and had children: Margaret (b.1721); Bessie (b.1727); Walter (b.1729), baker and magistrate; John (b.1731); Jean (b.1735); Isobel (b.1739); Bessie (again, b.1740); Beatrice (b.1742), who probably married clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull; and Janet (b.1744). Given the birth years it seems likely he is also the John whose children recorded with Bessie Scott (perhaps an error, or indicating his wife had previously been married) were: Anna (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725), who may have married James Paterson, ‘Ilka Thursday’. He is probably the merchant John who witnessed baptisms for workman Gilbert Oliver in 1741 and for Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. In 1745 he also witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with fellow merchant Francis. John (18th C.) elder of Hawick Session, recorded in 1751. He was in care of a horse belonging to the Session, with instructions to sell it, and also appointed as a trustee for the affairs of the deceased Bailie Francis Ruecastle. Since he was not referred to as a late Bailie, then he may not have been the same as the earlier Bailie John. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter in 1758. John (1755/6–1808) son of Walter. He went to America, serving in the U.S. Army during the American War of Independence, becoming a Captain. He married Phoebe Thomas of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. When his mother went out to visit him she was apparently the first Teri to take a trip out to America and return safely. Mrs. ?? (17th/18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the early 1700s. She is recorded several times in the Parish Records in connection with payment for drinks associated with Kirk Session events, such as funerals and the ‘roup’ of seats in the gallery. She may have been related to the John who was Bailie. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘viatore’, i.e. ‘traveller’ when he was witness to a 1622 sasine for land in Hawick owned by Allan Deans. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with making a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott and had son James in Hawick in 1636. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet Gledstains and had daughter Isobel in Hawick in 1646. Robert (17th C.) selected as one of 2 people in Hawick to collect the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ordered in 1655 to pay Walter Stavert to pay money borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh and for a leg of mutton. He is described as a traveller in 1655 when someone was ordered to pay him for carrying wool to Edinburgh, ‘for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick’ and ‘for ane dry killit fische’. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Scott. Their children included George (b.1648), Bessie, an unnamed child (b.1653) and Walter (b.1655), in the period 1648–55. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet ‘Twiddie’, they had son John in Hawick in 1657. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Isobel Scott. Their children included William (b.1654) and Robert (b.1656). Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Wintrop. Their children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1674). Robert (17th C.) married to Agnes Mow, their son William was born in Hawick in 1673. Robert (d.c.1688) tailor in Hawick. His will was recorded in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1688. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. He could be the Robert recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He served as Magistrate between about 1690 and 1710, certainly recorded in 1697, 1707 and again around 1709. He is probably the Robert who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism for merchant David Young in 1705. He was Bailie in 1707 when along with the other Bailie, Robert Brown, he was fined by the Council for ‘the publick undenyable and unaccountable abuse ... att the rydeing of the Commone’, with the pair ‘striking att others' horses with their whips and staves’; the nature of the incident is not described, but it seems likely it was related to the near riots that happened at the previous year’s Common Riding over carrying the Flag. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Gledstains and John Scott ‘Whitegates’ in 1707, for Walter Gledstains (junior of Hilliesland) in 1708, for Walter Gledstains, ‘Walter Alison’, for Henry Orrock and for merchant William Dickson in 1709, for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1711, for Bailie James Burn in 1712 and for Bailie George Martin in 1714. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the Councillors given a key to the Charter Chest. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. In 1715 he was given custody of ‘the charter little chest’, with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the keys. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Turnbull in 1716. He was probably the Bailie Ruecastle charged in 1717 with collecting money from the area between the Cross to the bridge. And in 1718, when he was a Magistrate, there was a serious dispute with ex-Bailie Graham, who accused him (apparently at a Council meeting) of being a thief and worse; the exact nature of the argument is not recorded, but it was resolved after the Minister intervened. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721. Another dispute of 1722 led to him having all the elders publicly questioned about whether they had ‘heard him speak opprobriously and disparage-inglie of Mr Robert Cunningham our minister’. He continued as Magistrate in the 1720s and was also Parish Treasurer in the 1720s. He may have been the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Wintrop, who was born in Hawick in 1670 (although there are other Roberts recorded being born in 1648 and 1656). He may be the Robert recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hanick Toun’ and probably from the west side. It is possible that he was the Robert, who, along with Walter, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He married Anna Elliot and their children included: Mary (b.1700); Anna (b.1704); Beatrix (b.1705); William (b.1709); and Gideon (b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Graham and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Patrick Richardson and George Martin, in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1709 Bailies Walter Elliot, James Burn and Walter Graham. He was probably also the Robert whose daughter Jean married Robert Ogilvie in 1720. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish (with no mother’s name given) were probably also his: Anna (b.1702); Anna (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1711). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Moss in 1725. Simon (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott, their children included William (b.1635) and an unnamed son (b.1641). Walter (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined for insulting and assaulting the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. It seems that Scott was in the ‘houss’ (i.e. probably pub) of William Elliot, sorting out some financial business between him (Walter) and John Hardie, when he came in, calling the Bailie ‘ane fals judge’, and when there was an attempt to remove him he ‘instantly, insolentlie, and most violentlie fell upon the sd. bayleyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head’. As well as being fined, he was ordered to go to the stocks. The financial dealings also involved his father, who was presumably alive at the time. He could be the same man as the carter. Walter (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the Walter listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded as a carrier of Hawick when he married Abigail Lamb in Edinburgh in 1694. He could be the Walter who was born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1674 (although there are other possibilities). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for cook James Wright in 1712. In 1713 he was a ‘carier’ when he witnessed a baptism for ‘drummer’ Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex). In 1716 his ‘servitor’ John ‘Roucastle’ was one of the people who the weavers complained were using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s; this John could have been a close relative. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Richard Miles in 1705. It is possible that he was the Walter, who, along with Robert, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He may have been father of Bailie John (whose first male child was called Walter). Bailie Walter (1729–c.1795) son of John and Bessie Paterson. He was a baker of Hawick who was a Magistrate during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and served through the 1750s and 1760s. He witnessed a baptism for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull (probably his brother-in-law) in 1768. He was witness for baptisms for Archibald Paterson in 1775, 1777, 1780 and 1781 and for James Dickson in 1777. He married Elizabeth Kelly (or ‘Bettie Kellie’) and had 13 children, including: Robert (b.1756); James (b.1758); Walter (b.1759); Charles and William (twins, b.1761); Barbara (b.1762); Walter (again, b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); Christian, who married Andrew Haddon (from Selkirk); and John, who was a Captain during the American Revolutionary War. The 1758 baptism was witnessed by John (probably his father or brother) and James Paterson (perhaps his uncle) and the 1766 one by John (probably his father) and another Walter (Henderson perhaps). William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Ruecastel’ when he swore allegiance to Edward I of England in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal was oval, showing a figure with a branch in the right hand, a scroll in the left, and a kneeling figure on the left, with the name ‘S’WILL’I D’RUCASTELE’. He is also recorded receiving a pension from King Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. Whether he had a direct connection with the Hawick family of 3 centuries later is unknown. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is also mentioned in a Magistrates court case of 1642 when Thomas Oliver is accused of using irreverent language towards him, particularly calling him ‘man-sworn’. He is probably the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the William who was Bailie in the 1650s. He is probably also the William recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He could be the William who was married to Marion Scott and had several children in Hawick, including William (b.1639), Margaret (b.1643), Marion (b.1643), Walter (b.1646), Robert (b.1648), Adam (b.1650) and James (b.1652). William (b.1650) born in Hawick, he married Janet (or ‘ Jenet’) Richardson in 1674. Their children included Marion (b.1669), Janet (b.1671), Walter (b.1674), Isobel (b.1675), William (b.1677) and Francis (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Dickson and William Purdom (also spelled ‘Reucastell’, ‘Rewcastel’, ‘Rewcastell’, ‘Rewcastle’, ‘Roucastell’, ‘Roucastle’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcassell’, ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rucastle’, ‘Ruecastle’ and other variants in earlier documents).

Ruecastle Burn (ruefu’ face’ [RDW], ‘an’ saufes sic as be o’ ane

Ruecastle Moor (rove-castel-moor) n. former name for the moor near Ruecastle. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

the Ruecastles (thu-roo-kaw-sulyz) n. family that was prominent in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries, but then entirely disappeared. The surname surely derives from the area of Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. William ‘de Ruecastel’ is listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and had a pension from Robert the Bruce. The eponymous lands were in other hands by the mid-15th century, but there are no instances of the name until ‘Ruecastill’ appears as a landowner on Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Then Thomas, Margaret, Agnes and Nicholas Ruecastle were married in Hexham in 1581, 1586, 1590 and 1596, respectively. The Hawick branch is recorded continuously from the 1630s, and furnished many Magistrates, Councillors and Elders. They were probably all from a single local male ancestor. It seems likely that the Northumbrian branch was also related, however some of the occurrences further afield may have an entirely different origin. There is a vast range of spellings in early records of the name. Modern variants include ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rewcassell’ and ‘Reucastle’.

the Ruecastle Tenement (thu-roo-kaw-sulte-ne-min’) n. former popular name for the building at 7 High Street, before the British Linen Bank purchased the land in 1862 and rebuilt on it. It was built around 1690, and was a 3 storey construction. The Ruecastle family, which provided several Hawick Bailies, had lived there for 3 generations. It can be seen in an 1860 photograph, showing the shops of W. Douglas, saddler, J. Kemp, cooper and Wm. Rutherford on the ground floor. It was demolished in 1861.

ruefi (r-o-fi’) adj., poet. ruelful – ‘He sees that sae will be the case, An’ wi’ a lang-drawn ruefu’ face’ [RDW], ‘... an’ saufes sic as be o’ ane

rewfu’ speerit’[HSR], ‘…I wull be rewfu’ for my sin’[HSR] (there are spelling variants).

the Rufus Trophy (thu-roo-fis-troo-fee) n. trophy competed for at the Common Riding race meeting. It was first raced for in 1934, replacing the Medway Cup, which had been won outright (after 3 victories) by ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart on Rufus. The first winner was the same rider on his horse Rufus! It was won outright and replaced by the Hornshole Stakes in 1950.

Rufy (roo-fee) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Johannem ruffy’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander Weens of that Ilk failed to produce him to answer to the murders of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods escheated to the King. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rutherford. He was recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. He was presumably related to Thomas who was also put to the horn for the same crime. Thomas (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He must have been a prominent Roxburghshire Laird of the time. However, it is unknown where exactly he was from or whether his surname was a variant of something else. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Adam, brother of William Douglas of Cavers, failed to enter him into the court for his part in the murder of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods forfeited.

rug (rug) v., arch. to tug, pull roughly, plunder, spoil, n., arch. a pull, tug, a bite of grass (of a farm animal), feed – ‘...unless when he brought them on to the several ground to give them a rugg for a part of the day’[C&L1767] (note by E.C. Smith).

rug an rive (rug-in-riv) v., arch. to tug, tear, pull at with great force or persistence – ‘...fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head ...’[BR], ‘Swearin’ an’ tearin’, they rug an’ they rive, Wha to be foremost wi’ Meggie rugby (rug-bee) n. a religion practised by many people in Hawick, with its main church at the foot of Mansfield Road. It was first introduced only in 1872, so for hundreds of years before that Terries must have had little to cheer about! The game was introduced locally when the Cricket Club decided to purchase a ball for the younger players to exercise with in the winter months. The club itself was formed in December 1873, with Robert Michie as Captain. The first organised game was against Langholm in 1874. George Wilson was a mainstay of the early committee, which was reorganised in 1885. At that time ‘Hawick’ (playing at the Volunteer) and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ (playing at the cricket field) were formed separately. They played matches against each other and the St. Cuthbert’s team for a few years, but by 1892 only ‘Hawick Football Club’ survived. Although the official game started only in the late 19th century, the local tradition of ‘Baa’ games goes back probably several centuries, and there is a description of a game (‘the pledges’) played by youths in the 18th century, which bears some striking similarities, although without the ball (often ‘the rugby’).

rugby-fitbaa (rug-bee-fi’-baw) n. name still used frequently, perhaps to distinguish it from other forms, before the ‘handling rules’ came in.

ruggit (ru-gi’, -gee’) pp., arch. tugged, pulled roughly – ‘...saying that he maliciously and unrespectfully ract and ruggit her from her said seat’[Ash1639], ‘How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’[RH].

ruggy (ru-gее) adj., arch. tangled, knotted, difficult to comb – ‘...wui a toozy, taaty heed that wad be richt an ruggy tred’[ECS].

rubbish (ri-beesh) n., arch. rubbish – ‘Throw that rubbish aback o the feier’[ECS].

Ruickbie (rik-, rook-bee) n. James ‘Jamie’ or ‘Reubie’ (c.1757–1829) born in Innerleithen, he lived much of his life in and around Hawick. He was a miller to trade, being the assistant at Nisbet Mill and then working at Newmill. After this he became a toll-keeper, at Haremoss (for a year), then Colterscleuch (for 12 years), then at Langholm and finally at the West-End toll-bar in Hawick. Entirely self-taught, he wrote a good deal of poetry, and also played the fiddle. He settled in Hawick as landlord of the Harrow Inn (at 12 High Street), where he enjoyed the friendship of other more distinguished writers. He belonged Rule (rool) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Adam Reuel of Stawelle' in 1225. He was brother and heir of Richard and resigned the lands of Balmerino in Fife in favour of Queen Ermen-garde (widow of William the Lion and mother of Alexander II). In the period 1211–33 he witnessed charters for St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘ade de Rule clerics’. Adam ‘de Roule’ (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with ‘Allyn’, parson of the church of ‘Roule’ in Roxburghshire. Thomas of Rule was another signatory, so perhaps related. He gained lands at Molle (south of Morebattle) through marriage. About 1300 he granted some of these lands to the monks of Kelso Abbey, with witnesses including both Hugh and William ‘de Roule’. Probably the same Adam ‘de Rule’ was recorded (along with William) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1, and also witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden at about the same time. He married Johanna, daughter and heiress of Sir Henry of Halyburton, and widow of Ralph Wyschard. Adam (14th C.) granted his lands of Altonburn to John ‘of Coupland’ in about 1354, with his name given as ‘Adam de Roule’. 3 years later these lands passed to John Ker (who thus became the first Ker of Altonburn); witnesses to this deed included William of Gledstones and William ‘de Roule’. He may have been the same as Adam of Yetholm, son of Alan of Rule. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Roull in Abbotroul’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when Walter Kerr of Linton was found guilty of stealing 6 sheep from his land at Cosserhill. Alan (13th C.) recorded in charters of the early 1200s, during the reign of Alexander II. He witnessed a charter for the nuns of Coldstream and also for a gift of half of the lands of ‘Eschirche’ (Ashkirk) to the Bishopric of Glasgow. In the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes, with other Roxburghshire men also listed. He appears to have at this time been an English subject. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander some time before 1249. Alan ‘of Roule’ (13th/14th C.) possibly the same man as the parson of the church at Rule who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1296 his wife Alicia was forced to give up her dower lands in ‘Dovanby’ in England; this was part of a long list of followers of John Baliol who were thus ordered by Edward I. In 1317 he granted his ‘manor of Roule with Neyfs and their sequals’ to Adam of Yetholm. This may have been his son Adam of Rule, who granted the lands of Altonburn (near Yetholm) to the Kers. Alison (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir William Ogilvie of Strathearn, who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. In 1507 they were granted the Barony of Strathearn, it is said because she was the first to inform the King of the birth of a son by his wife Margaret Tudor. She was also named along with her husband in several other charters in the period 1508–13. She appears to have been a member of the court and friend of the Queen. She died before her husband, and they had only one child, John. It is unclear how she was related to other Rules. Andrew of Primside (d.bef. 1439) owner of significant lands in the Barony of Plenderleith. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules, but it seems likely he was a descendant of Alan of Rule. He borrowed £100 from Andrew Ker of ‘Altonburne’ (Attonburn, near Yetholm, which had been acquired from the Rules in the previous century) in 1430 and let lands in Primside to him in the meantime, the money to be repaid at St. Mary’s in Hawick (there is a suggestion that the original date of this lease may have been 1413). In 1430 he sold ‘ten husbandlands of the Maynis’ in Primside to Andrew Ker, with the permission of his son George, this being confirmed in 1432 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He resigned his lands to George, his son and heir, in 1432. George, married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Cessford. However, George must have died before him, and he had no other surviving sons, because his 4 daughters became co-heiresses of his lands of Hownam, Plenderleith and Hyndhope. In 1439/40 Andrew Ker acquired some of his lands from his daughters Marjorie, Isabella, Janet and Ellen. In 1443 the Mains of Hownam, and lands of Plenderleith and Hyndhope, which had belonged to the 4 co-heiresses, passed to Andrew Ker. Andrew ‘Dan’, (d.1918) 3rd son of Robert and Jane, grandson of John, Inspector of Poor, and nephew of Private Harry. He was born in Hawick and joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He was awarded the Military Medal, General Service Medal and Victory Medal and was killed in action near the end of WWI. His name is recorded on the Vis-en-Artois Memorial. Bernard (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1364 when he resigned his lands of ‘Foucerou’ (now ‘Folla Rule’) in Aberdeenshire. Brian (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Fiftelar’, i.e. probably a fife player, at the Scottish court in 1506. His name is recorded as ‘Bryane Roule’. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Ellen (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Janet. In 1439 she is ‘Elena Roule of Primside’ when she appointed her husband Thomas Young, along with Stephen Scot, Thomas Gledstains and other as procurators when she resigned her part of Primside into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. The sisters’ lands of Primside were granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, and the other charters transferring their lands to the Kers followed in 1443 and 1454/5. George (d.bef. 1440) son of Andrew of Primside. His father resigned his lands of Primside to him in 1432. He married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn (and Cessford). Ker gained the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule’s daughters in 1439/40, suggesting that both father and son were deceased by then. George (15th C.) recorded as witness to charter by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78. John ‘Roule’ was also a witness, suggesting they were related. He is probably the same man as George of Edmondfield. Perhaps the same George was Bailie in that part for David Ranton of Billy (in Haddingtonshire) in 1478), with his brothers Patrick and John as witnesses. George ‘of Edmondfield’ (15th C.) recorded in 1489–90 when he was involved in a court case with Archibald, Earl of Angus, relating to the lands of Bonkle. He was probably related to Andrew of Primside. He was appointed by the 5th Earl of Angus as Bailie of the Barony of Bonkle, but later ejected from this office. There was an inquest for his son George inheriting Edmondfield in 1505. George (16th C.) minstrel appointed by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. George (16th C.) witness to a document of the Riddells of that Ilk in 1551. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Nichol. Their children included: John (b.1799); Margaret (b.1801); Walter (b.1803), carter in Hawick; Thomas (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1810), who married Alexander Pringle Scott; George (b.1815); Jane (b.1818); and Isabel (b.1821). George (b.1815) son of George and Elizabeth Nichol. He was partner in Rule & Leyden, dyers of Teviot Road. The business later amalgamated with British Cotton & Wool Dyers, Ltd. He was a dye journeyman on the Crescent in 1841. He married Margaret Pringle in 1837 and their children included: George (b.1837); Margaret (b.1838); John (b.1841); Elizabeth (1843–1913); buried in Wellogate cemetery; Jane (b.1845); Frederick (b.1849); Adam (b.1851); Helen (b.1853); and Isabella (b.1855). Their daughter Elizabeth died in 1913 aged 70 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He is probably the son of George and Elizabeth Nichol born in Hawick in 1815. Harry (1875/6–1917) son of John, Inspector of Poor in Hawick. He served with the Army Service Corps, HQ 52nd Lowland Division. He married Elizabeth Linton, and their children were John, Jim and Janet. He died at sea when the S.S. Ivernia was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Greece. His name is recorded on the Mikra Memorial. Henry (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘de Reuel’ in the period 1188 when he was witness to several benefactions of William the Lion to the monastery of Arbroath. He was granted the lands of ‘Culbrach’, which included Balmerino, in Fife. He was present at a court in Kinghorn in 1204. He must have been directly related to Richard (possibly his son) who is also recorded as witness in a similar period. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Orm of Abernethy. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Rouel’ in 1260 when he was listed as a master of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Hugonis de Roule’ in 1320/1 when his seal was attached to a charter of Sprouston. Adam and William are also mentioned in the charter, and so they were surely all related. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded as ‘Umphra Rewll’ in a long remission for any past crimes for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. Given the others with whom he is listed, he probably lived near Langholm. Isabella (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjorie, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by then. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Rowle’ in 1526 when he was a witness for a document for Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. He was ‘James Rowill’ in another in 1530, and also for others in 1531. He may be the ‘Jacobo Rouill’ when he witnessed a saisine for the baronies of Lugton and Langnewton in 1522. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he was a tenant of Kelso Abbey in 1567. Janet (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Ellen. Their are documents transferring their lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Her name is given as ‘Jonet of Roule’. John (14th C.) recorded as witness to a ‘quitclaim by Robert de Colleuyll’ to Roger of Alton, regarding revenue of lands for Kelso Abbey, in 1328. His name appears as 'Johne de Roule'. He could be the John whose son William was recorded in 1369. John (15th C.) recorded as a priest in the King's household in 1468. He was also recorded as a Prebyter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1468. Probably the same John (along with George) was witness to charters by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78, and was Steward of Alexander, Duke of Albany in 1479. He may be the same 'John Laird of Rule' listed among a set of Scottish ecclesiastics appointed as ambassadors for appeasing the truce on the Border. And in 1476 there is a summons for 'John of Roule' and others for stealing horses from Sir John of Swinton; there is a confirmation of this in 1477. He may also be the 'John Roule' who witnessed a document relating to Home of Craling in 1479. John (16th C.) witness in 1523/4 to a charter of his sister Margaret for lands in Linlithgowshire. Another witness was James Ramsay, Prebendary of Corstorphine. This establishes a connection with Corstorphine, where the poet 'Gentill Roull of Corstorphine' had his praises sung by William Dunbar a generation earlier. Perhaps the same John was witness to a document of Kirkintilloch Church in 1523. Sir John (16th C.) Prior of Pittenweem before 1526. He was an ally of Cardinal Beaton. He had at least 4 sons, John, James, William and Ninian. John (16th C.) tenant of Newtown in Roxburghire, recorded in 1531. John (16th C.) signatory of the band of Dumfries in 1570. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Elspeth Nichol and their children included: Agnes (b.1671), an unnamed son (b.1671) and Stephen (b.1675), all baptised in Hawick Parish; and Bessie (b.1684) and John (b.1686), baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses in 1686 were James Turnbull and James Veitch. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todsaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was shepherd at Mervinslaw in 1709. Alexander, son of a shepherd at Mervinslaw (with the father's name blank) was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1706. John (17th C.) listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls John (18th C.) wright in Nether Bonchester. His son John was baptised in 1788. John (19th C.) Inspector of Poor, Collector of Poor Rates and Clerk to the Burial Ground for Hawick Parish towards the end of the 1800s. He wrote the poem 'Song by a Callant Abroad'. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in 1868, and probably wrote the history published in 1889. It seems likely that the same John Rule was also editor and part owner of the Hawick Express in the late 19th century and who was recorded as 'Editor' at 72 High Street in 1875. His children included Harry (killed at sea in 1917) and Robert. Margaret (b.1801/2) grocer on the Backdamgate. In the 1851 census she was living with her sister Isabella, and was unmarried. She was listed as a shopkeeper on 'Back Damgate' in Slater's 1852 directory. Marjory (15th C.) daughter of Andrew (possibly the oldest). She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Primside, Hownam Mains, Plederleith and Hyndhope, along with Isabella, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Martin (16th C.) recorded as 'Roule' when he was owner of a tenement in the 'Walkargait' in Jedburgh in 1574. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith in 1499. He was also Provost of Dalkeith in 1478 when he witnessed a declaration by his brother George, Bailie for David Ranton of Billy. Another brother, John, was also witness. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as serving in the King's spicerie in 1499 and 1500. He was paid his fee according to the Exchequer Rolls, with his surname written 'Roule'. Probably the same 'Pait Roule' was recorded in 1497 when money was sent from the King's Treasury to him, lying sick in Ayr. Richard (12th/13th C.) probably son of Henry and Margaret Abernethy. He is recorded being present at the court of King William at Alyth in 1180, where his name is 'Ruel'. He witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s. In 1205 he was witness to a charter of William the Lion at Forfar. He also witnessed several gifts of the King to the monastery of Arbroath in the period 1188–1214. Henry, who is a witness at about the same time may have been his son or other close relative. Perhaps the same Richard is recorded in charters during the reign of Alexander II, i.e. 1214–49. This was at the same time as Alan and Thomas of Rule. Adam, brother and heir of Richard, is recorded in 1225. Richard (13th C.) recorded in connection with the lands of Bunkle, Berwickshire, in 1247. Richard (13th C.) witness to a renewal of lands in Mow granted to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Heiton in the period 1269–89; he is listed as 'Ricardo de Rule'. In the period 1270–90 he confirmed a grant of a 20-shilling land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he had remission for wheat ‘fermes’ in 1496 for the lands of ‘Osanisden’. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘de Ryhull’ in about 1240 when along with his wife Christiana, he held half of the lands of North Middleton in Northumberland. Robert (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1391 as ‘a rebel and traitor’ when his lands of ‘Promset in Teyvadle’ (Primside) were forfeited to Thomas ‘Sparowe, late prisoner with the Scots’. Robert (15th C.) Chaplain of the church of St. Nicholas in Aberdeen in 1444. He is recorded as Chaplain there in 1468. Robert (15th C.) recorded in a Berwickshire inquest in 1464. Robert (17th C.) Border minstrel who was supposedly slain by William Henderson of Priesthaugh near Allanhaugh in 1627, as immortalised in the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. It is possible he was connected with George, who is recorded as a minstrel hired by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in charters between 1214 and 1249. For example he was witness to Petronella, daughter of Adam Herring of Minto, when she granted land in the Borthwick to Melrose Abbey. He may be the same Thomas of Rule recorded on a jury in Northumberland in 1231 and as a witness of a grant to the canons of Kirkham in Northumber-land in 1256. Thomas (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I by signing the Ragman Rolls of 1296. Another signatory was Adam of Rule, as well as William ‘de Rouley’. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as Rector of Cambuslang (Lanarkshire) in 1329. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘Rouk’ (possibly just a transcription error) during the reign of David II, 1329–71. He resigned his lands of Butland or Butelend in the Sheriffdom of Edinburgh to James Douglas of Strathbok. He may also have resigned his lands of ‘Little-Rulwod’. Possibly the same Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ forfeited certain lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed the grant of the Forest of Ettrick to John Ker in 1358 and was juror at Roxburgh in 1361. And he may be the Thomas who was on an English jury in 1367 deciding which lands had been taken from English subjects by Scotsmen. Thomas (14th C.) witness to a court case in Dundee in 1348. He is recorded as ‘Ruwell’. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Aberdeen in 1390, and as a Bailie in the period 1406–35. He was Provost of Aberdeen in 1417. In 1424 he was still recorded as ‘of Rowle’ when witness to a charter in Aberdeenshire. Thomas (15th C.) eminent ecclesiastic, contemporary with the Provost of Aberdeen of the same name. In 1429 he became a Canon of Glasgow Diocese. In the period 1426–32 he was annually the ambassador to England, designated Chaplain to the King of Scots. In 1429 he was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1438 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in a Northumberland record of 1523. Thomas (16th C.) listed among tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (18th C.) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Waldeve (12th C.) witness to a charter to a canon of Ralph de Soulis to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s, recorded as ‘Waldevo de Rula’. His name is also translated as ‘Waltheof’. Walter (14th C.) Precentor of Glasgow Diocese mentioned in the period 1321–33. For example he witnessed the document of 1329 where the Bishop of Glasgow confirmed the founding of a chantry at Roxburgh Church by Roger of Alton. He was surely directly related to other early ‘de Rules’. Walter (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roull’ in 1387 when he was granted a Canonry of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII. He already held a position at the church of Tarbolton. Walter (b.1803) carter in Hawick, son of George. In 1861 he was living at 2 Allars Crescent with his mother Elizabeth, brother John and sister Elizabeth (widow of Alexander Pringle Scott). William (13th/14th C.) witness to a grant by Adam ‘de Roule’ of lands of Molle to Kelso Abbey about 1300. Another witness was Hugh ‘de Roule’, hence all 3 are likely to have been closely related. He may also be the William ‘de Roule’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1302 ‘William de Rue’ was King’s Clerk to Edward I at Roxburgh. About 1304 he is mentioned in a charter of donation granted by Robert ‘Wischart’, Bishop of Glasgow. This refers to land ‘of Bromilaw’ bordering his lands. He is probably the William ‘de Rule’ who is recorded (along with Adam) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. It has been suggested by some that he may be the same as the William who became the first Turnbull. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1357/8 when he was witness for the lands of Altonburn passing to John Ker, with William of Gledstones, James of Lorraine and Alexander of Flex being other witnesses. The lands had passed from Adam of Rule in 1354, so this may have been a relative. He also witnessed a further charter of related lands in 1358, passing from William of ‘Blakdene’. In 1369 he was ‘Willemi de Rowele’, son of John, when he resigned lands in ‘Hunedoum’ to Melrose Abbey. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to charters in Edinburgh in 1465 and 1471. William (b.c.1805) born in Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker living at 5 Round Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861 and still there in 1875. By 1861 he was employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Langholm. Their children included Alexander, Hendry, William, John, twins Thomas and Walter, and Mary (spelled ‘Reule’, ‘Reull’, ‘Rule’, ‘Roule’, ‘Ruile’, ‘Rowle’ etc. in early records).

the Rule (thu-rool, -rowl) n. popular name for Rule Witter – ‘Between ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fring’d with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull . . .’ [JL], ‘On these sweet scenes I love to ponder, And each fair spot in memory see; So dear must be, where’er I wander, The valley of the Rule to me’ [FMC], ‘... As he crossed the Rule, girth deep at the ford, A rider rose dark from the haugh and roared With a voice that shivered the night air And startled the wild fowl, ‘Who goes there?’’ [WHO].

Rule Hervey (rool-her-vee) n. earliest known name for the lands of Abbotrule Parish, first recorded in about 1165 in a charter to Jedburgh Abbey by William the Lion. These lands were granted to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in exchange for a ‘ten pound’ land in ‘Hardinghestorn’ (Northamptonshire). The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from ‘Rule Bethoc’, i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as ‘Rulam Heravei’ in about 1165).

Rulehaugh (rool-hawch) n. area of flat land near the mouth of the Rule Water, possibly lower down in former times before the course of the rivers altered. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands of ‘Rulehalch’ to the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1395 there was a duel there when Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) was challenged by Thomas Struthers (an Englishman), with Archibald Douglas and Sir Henry Percy as judges. Struthers was killed in single combat. It is possible this was the same as the Deadhaugh, where Turnbulls supplicated to James IV in 1510 (it is ‘Rulehalch’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Rules (thu-roolz) n. once important family whose name was connected with the area of Rulewater. Adam and Thomas ‘de Roule’ from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. They held the lands of Altonburn, Primsde, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, all of which were disposed of by 4 co-heiresses around 1440. There were also Rules in Aberdeenshire from early times. It is unclear what fraction of the world’s Rules are descended from this local family.

Rule’s Land (roolz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Ruecastle in the Parish of Bedrule. They were feued by Rev. Joseph Tennant of Bedrule from Thomas Hamilton in 1632 (called ‘Roullis land’).

Rule-Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Ruleton (rool-tin, -toon) n. Ruletown, former name for farms and lands in Hobkirk Parish, at Town-o-Rule. Both Ruletownhead and Ruletownfoot were recorded in the 17th century. In 1694 James Grieve paid tax for 4 hearths there ‘for himself & cottars’, with William Turnbull also a cottar there.

Ruletonfit (rool-tin-fi, -toon-) n. Ruletownfoot, former which was once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam Turnbull and Beatrix Lorraine were there in 1643, each with lands valued at £10. On the 1694 Hearth Tax records, John Lorraine was listed there, with Andrew Mathew and William Blaikie as cottars. Separately Thomas Turnbull and Thomas Scott are listed as tenants there in the Hearth Tax rolls, with James Oliver, James Wilkie and James Turnbull being cottars there, and Adam Sharp ‘deficient’ in not paying the tax (it is ‘Roultonfit’ in 1643, ‘Roultonfute’ in 1662 and ‘Roultonfoot’ in 1694).

Ruletonheid (rool-tin-heed, -toon-) n. Ruletownhead, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam and Walter Turnbull were tenants there in 1643, when it was valued at £140. It had the same value in 1678. It later became part of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the late 17th century part of it was owned by Helen Turnbull, along with West Fodderlee. In earlier times the farm seems to have been incorporated into West Fodderlee, the Grange and Bowatsyde. In 1788 it was owned by the trustees of George Dickson and valued at £96 11s. George Elliot was there in 1794 and John Walker in 1797, with James Dalgeleish being shepherd in the same year. In 1811 it was listed (in 2 parts, split between Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes) along with ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford, among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, having a combined value of about £224 and previously being owned by George Dickson and George Elliot. By about 1874 it was owned by David Henderson, including a part formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull (valued at £96 11s). The tenant was Ruletoonheid Mill

Tom Brown in the mid-to-late 19th century, then passing to the Douglas family. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £300. It seems there was once also a corn mill here (also formerly written ‘Ruletonhead’ and ‘Rule-town-head’, it was ‘Roul toune-head’ and ‘Roultonhead’ in 1678).

Ruletoonheid Mill (root-tin-heed-mil)n. former corn mill at Ruletownhead. The last miller there was Ralph Prendergast.

Rulewater and its People (root-wa-tur-and-its-pee-pul)n. book written by George Tancred of Weens, published in 1907. It contains a truly extraordinary number of anecdotes from the general area of the Rule valley, as Tancred systematically described the histories of all the major families of Hobkirk Parish, in addition to much of Bedrule and Southdean. Importantly, the book does not just focus on the histories of the ‘gentry’, but includes all social strata. A facsimile edition was published by Borders Regional Library in 1992.

Rule Witter (root-wi’ur)n. the Rule Water, a tributary of the Teviot, joining it from the south near Spittal-on-Rule. It is formed by the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns. The region gave rise to a surname, with the first recorded ‘Roules’ being in the mid-12th century. A history of the parishes along the Rule valley was written be George Tancred in 1907 and republished in 1992 – ‘Then Tividale came to wi’ spied; The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi’ Cranstane, Gladstain, good at need, Baith Rewle water, and Hawick town’ [T], ‘He’s lang since left Roull’s smilin’ scene, An’ fairy nuiks o’ prattlin’ Jed, An’ Oxnam’s pines an’ banks sae green, An’ wimplin’ Kule’s soft dreamy bed [WP] (also sometimes one word ‘Rulewater/Rulewitter’; formerly spelled ‘Roull’, ‘Rowll’, etc.; it is ‘Ruaile’ in about 1406, ‘Watter of Rowe’ in 1530 and ‘Reull-water’ is recorded in the 17th century; the origin may be the old Celtic for ‘steep slope’).

Rulewitter Court (root-wi’ur-kör)n. Rulewater Court, a street planned for Stirches and appearing on Burrow’s street map of Hawick, although never built.

Rulewitter Rifle Club (root-wi’ur-ri’ful-klub)n. Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club, established following a meeting of 1905, called by Mr. Carr-Ellison of Greenriver. Mr. Waldie of Braidhaugh gave a piece of land on his farm for a rifle range. The original membership was 30, with office-bearers being Sir Robert Usher of Wells, George Tancred of Weens, Major E.H.M. Elliot of Wolfelee. It is the last item to be described in Tancred’s book on Rulewater, but it is unclear if the club lasted very long.

Rulewud (rool-wud)n. Rulewood, former farm in the Rule valley, probably once owned by the Rule family. ‘Thomas de Rillewod’, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, may have been owner of these lands. Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ is recorded resigning some lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. It was later home to a local branch of the Gourlay family. Henry Gourlay granted the lands to his son John in 1380, confirmed in 1390. In 1387 John was served heir to his father Archibald. John Gourlay of Rulewood is recorded in the 1490s and several times until 1509 when William Lord Herries of Terregles granted these lands to him. He was deceased by 1521 when his son John was granted lands at Kirkton, and this John was served heir to the lands in 1525. This John also appears in 1533, when he was on an inquest along with William Turnbull ‘in Roulwode’. The lands were listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10. William Turnbull was tenant in 1516. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. ‘Roulwodesyde’ is recorded in the Baronial dispute of 1562, and is described as being the east part of the lands of Hallrule; the ‘Woulroidisflat’ mentioned there may be related, assuming an error. William Turnbull ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ is recorded in 1622. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoood parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It later became part of the estate of Wells and was described in 1738 as ‘all and haill the land of ‘Roulwode’, otherwise Huntlyhill’ (it was ‘Roulwoode’ in 1497/8 and 1509/10, ‘Roullwoode’ in 1508, ‘Rowlewode’ in 1526, ‘Rowlewood’ in 1545 and ‘Roulwode’ in 1622; see also Little Rulewud).

rum an milk (rum-in-milk)n. traditional Common Riding drink. The Drums and Fifes are given this as a reward after marching round the former tolls on the Friday morning. The origin and history are unclear, but it is said that one of the members of the Drums and Fifes was given (or asked for) milk with his rum to settle his stomach, since he was not feeling well; the drink caught on with the rest of the band, and then with Common Riding supporters in general. There is a reference in reports of the Common Riding of 1890 to ‘a liberal supply of fresh milk and other customary refreshments’ for the Thursday morning ‘Hut’.
Rum and Milk

traditional rum has for many years been ‘Skipper Rum’. Bella Robson would regularly come out of her house on the Kirkwynd to offer a tray to the band in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Rum and Milk (rum-awnd-milk) n. local interest comic strip produced by Jim Coltman for the Hawick News from the early 1990s.

rumberella (rum-bur-e-la) n., arch. an umbrella – ‘Gies the siller, an’ ye’re get yer rumberella’ [WNK]. Note the umbrellas were not used locally until the late 18th century; the first one seen in the Yarrow valley, for example, was in 1779 (perhaps in a joking sense).

Rumblin’ Brig (rum-bl-in-, rum-lin-brig) n. one of the most familiar tunes played by the Drums and Fifes (along with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and ‘Teribus’). The tune appears to be peculiar to Hawick, although there are other tunes known elsewhere that have a similar name. The tune is played on Picking Night on the march to the Cornet’s house if the route takes the band to the south. It was combined with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ in the Scocha song ‘Bottles at Dawn’.

rungumption (rum-gump-shin) n. common sense, gumption – ‘she hedni enough rungumption ti bide away fri um’, ‘Rungumption, Rum-mil gum-shion, Rumble-gumption, . . . the remark commonly made as regard to one who is viewed as having more sound than sense, ‘He has a gude deal o’ the rumble, but little o’ the gumption’, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also runmleggumption).

rummelt (rum-nul) pp. rummelled – ‘Sae blithe and clear the Spetchman sang, As by his haugh the Tei’ot rummle’t’ [DH] (also written ‘rummlet’).

Rummie Riddell (ru-mee-ri-dul) n. nickname for a local innkeeper around 1800, presumably someone called Riddell – ‘When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An’ up the muirlan’ striddle, Ye canna lang be at a loss, Ca’ in to Rummie Riddell’ [JR] (note this is printed ‘R—e R—l’ in the published version, although it is not hard to fill in the blanks).

rummle (ru-nul) v. to move or search through something clumsily, to rummage – ‘she was rummlet throwe her drawers looking for the scissors’, ‘He rummled’ lang the riverside, Ne’er saw the grey trout scuttling by . . . ’ [WFC], to rumble – ‘ee’re just openin yer mooth an lettin yer belly rummle’, ‘. . . maist deeed an daivert a donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz’ [ECS], ‘The Laird’s lauch rummled wi’ muckle glee, But the ledly glorwered wi’ an angry ee’ [WL], n. a clumsy search or movement, a rumble – ‘oo heard the rummle o a thunner’, ‘Did ee ever hear the rumnul o a yoke-a-tuillie doon the Loan skly?’ [ECS], ‘The rummel when ee went throwe a tunnel Ee’d been warned when the train gien a whustle’ [AY], a fidget, one who moves constantly or clumsily – ‘ee’re an awfi rummle, can ee no sit still?’ (also spelled ‘rummel’).

rump (rump) v., arch. to pull up violently by the roots – ‘Rump oot thae weeds’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith).

Rumplie Laidlaw (rum-pee-lad-law) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the late 19th century, presumably for a member of the Laidlaw family – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumplie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI] (‘Rumplie’ may refer to having one’s hair cut very short).

run (run) pp. ran – ‘the horse run up the Mair last year’.

runagate (ru-nu-ga’) n., arch. a renegade, deserter, vagabond – ‘. . . for injuring of the said Gilbert Watt, in calling of him ane twa facet thief, and ane runnigat beggar fra toune to toune’ [BR1645].

runch (runch) n., arch. a wrench, a spanner, v. to wrench.

runch (runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum, or wild mustard, Sinapis arvensis; the first of these was also ‘yellow runch’ and the second ‘rough runch’ – ‘The Runches, comprising both the Field Mustard and the Joint-podded Charlock, the garlic-tasted Jack-by-the-hedge, and several others come under this category’ [JAHM].

runch (runch) v., arch. to eat or bite avidly – ‘Runchin’ at an aipple’ [GW].

Runciman (run-see-num) n. James (17th C.) smith in Raperlaw recorded at on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths there.
runkle

His name is written ‘Runciaman’. He is probably the James who owned a ‘quarter of land’ in Nether Ancrum, valued at £13 6s 8d, listed as a former owner in 1788. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for the Routledges of Crook, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He must have been a local landowner, tenant or church official. He is an early example of this surname, which is recorded as ‘Runseman’. He may have been related to the earlier Patrick. Patrick (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men, mostly associated of William Douglas of Cavers, who had remission in 1488/9 for supporting James III. His surname is recorded as ‘Runsyman’. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautions for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Watt Runseman’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as ‘Runchiman’ in 1868 when he married Janet ‘Reedford’ in Robertson Parish. Their son Thomas was born in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Robson and Thomas Hardie. Helen (who married John Douglas in Robertson in 1687) and Bessie (who married Thomas Hardie in the same year) were probably his sisters. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Wat (formerly ‘Runchiman’, ‘Runciaman’, ‘Runseman’, ‘Runsyman’, etc.).

rung (rung) n., arch. a staff, strong stick, cudgel, wheel-spoke – ‘...much more primitive ...than the sword ...such as ...‘ane rung’ [BR], ‘...by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses roche when she was spinning there ...’ [BR1693], ‘I took my rung that I had flung Ayont the auld jambstane ...’ [WaD].

rung-wheel (rung-wheel) n., arch. the spoked wheel driven by the cog-wheel in a corn mill – ‘As there are two wheels in a corn-mill, which work into one another, the one which has cogs drives the other, and is called the cog-wheel, the other, from its having spokes or rungs, is called the rung-wheel, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

runkle (rung-kul) n., arch. a wrinkle, crease – ‘The description of feeding hungry schoolboys, by ‘taking the runkles oot o’ their wame’, amused him greatly’ [JW], v., arch. to wrinkle – ‘O the bane o’ St Giles. The bane o’ St Giles, Makes the face o’ the faithless Runckled wi’ smiles’ [FL], ‘Ach, ye’re no’ foolin’ me, Ye brazent hag, Wi your wrinkled hide ...’ [DH] (also written ‘runckle’ and ‘wrunkle’).

the Rural (thu-roo-rul) n. popular name for the Women’s Rural Institute or W.R.I.

rush (rush) n., arch. a rash, skin-eruption.

Rushy Hope (ru-shie-hop) n. small stream that rises on Wether Law and Millstone Edge, forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

Rushy Rig (ru-shie-rig) n. hilly ridge to the east of the Note o the Gate.

ruskie (rus-kee) n., arch. a basket for carrying seed corn, a large straw bonnet worn by countrywomen – ‘Ruskie, A coarse straw-hat worn by peasant-girls and others, for defending their faces from the sun, Roxb., Mearns; synon. Bon-grace’ [JoJ].

Russell (ru-sul) n. Alexander (1808/9–bef. 1851) from Ancrum, he was a gardener in Wilton. In 1851 he is listed as a gardener on Upper Damside, employing 2 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Alexander, Robert and Jane. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living on Wellington Street. Rev. David (1783/4–1868) from Tolcros, he was a schoolteacher, and then was ordained at Colinsburgh Relief Church in Fife in 1811. He moved to Hawick in late 1812 to become the first minister of the new Relief (later Allars) Kirk. His son was the engineer, naval architect and mathematician John Scott Russell. In Hawick he remarried and had more children, and introduced one of the earliest Sunday Schools. Following ongoing dispute over his stipend he resigned in 1819 and later moved to Errol near Perth. He was unable to carry on his duties following some kind of ‘mental ailment’ in 1847. He seemed able to carry on in about 1849, but the same affliction returned by 1854, and he was ‘dead to the world’ for many years before his death. A photograph of him exists.

Frances, Countess Russell, see Frances Elliot. Francis (1814–95) son of Dr. James (Professor of Clinical Surgery at Edinburgh University) and Eleanor Oliver (daughter of William Oliver of Dinalbye). He trained as a lawyer, was called to the bar in 1836 and in 1860 became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire, serving until 1885. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and lived at Jedbank until retiring back to Edinburgh. He married twice. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Fulton. In 1502 Matthew and Martin Oliver in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from him. Rev. James (b.1808) son of Robert and Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick. He attended school at Yarrow, under the instruction of James Scott. He was minister at Yarrow and wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886), which contains anecdotes about many local people of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He had a cousin, Robert Laidlaw from Philiphaugh. He married Janet Margaret Shand. His children included Robert and John Harvey Shand (1861–84). James ‘Jimmy’ (1867–1956) son of artist John Bucknell. His mother died of smallpox in Edinburgh and the family moved to Fochabers, Morayshire. His great delights were fishing and poaching. He learned painting in his father’s studio. He moved to Glasgow, painting commissions of fish and countryside scenes. In 1918 he and his wife moved to Bonchester Bridge, where they lived above the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Later they moved to Weens Cottages (‘the Sclenty’) and lastly lived in Denholm. In Rulewater he acted as telegraph boy until he was about 80. He continued to paint almost up until his death. His paintings were signed ‘J.B. Russell’, distinguishing them from those of his father. From a Catholic family, he married Protestant Annie Hendry, keeping the marriage secret for years. They had children: Peggy (b.1900); Hendry Smith (1906–88); and William Hendry (1915–41), also known as Dovish, who died in Greece in WWII. He painted the caricature of the ‘Rulewater Foothunters’ in the Horse and Hounds. His painting of Wilton Lodge gatehouse is in the Museum, as well as another of a bridge. James Lyon ‘Jimmy’ (1935–) son of Hendry Smith and Isabella Lyon, and grandson of the artist. James, he is a social scientist born in Wilton. He lived in Denholm and Rulewater until 1960, later splitting his time between Rulewater and Ireland. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews and Ph.D. from Strathclyde and worked at the University of Ulster, specialising in issues related to children. He carried out survey research for several government agencies and other organisations, particularly in Northern Ireland. After retirement he carried out personalised funerals for people without church connections in the Edinburgh area. He wrote the words and music for the song ‘The Burn ’at Rins Throu’ Bins- ter’. He also wrote an article on ‘The Rulewater Foothunters’ for the Scots Magazine in 1987. In 1960 he married Heather Begg and had children Fiona Jane, Roisin Anne and Kevin. John (16th C.) farmer at Over Billerwell. His barn is mentioned in 1562 as part of the dispute over lands in the Barony of feu-Rule. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1772. In 1760 in Ashkirk Parish he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) daughter of George Thorburn; she was sister of Jean Thorburn, who married John Anderson, farmer at Newton. Their children included: Helen (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1764); John (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); George (b.1771); Betty (b.1772); and possibly Isabel. The witnesses in 1772 were James Dryden and James Scott. Lord John (1792–1878) M.P. from 1813, he was a supporter of extending the franchise and granting religious equality, being one of the drafters of the Reform Bill. He served as Home Secretary, Secretary for War and the Colonies, and Leader of the House of Commons, before becoming Prime Minister in 1846–52 and again briefly in 1865–66. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick during a stay at Minto House in 1840. In 1841 he married the 2nd Earl of Minto’s daughter, Lady Francis Anna Maria. John Scott (1808–82) born in Parkhead, son of Rev. David, his mother (a Scott) dying at an early age. His father became minister of the Hawick Relief Kirk in 1812, where he remarried, and remained until 1819; thus the family must have spent more than 6 years in Hawick. The young John went on to become a naval engineer and architect. He is remembered as the discoverer of the ‘solitary wave’, the full significance of which was not explained and generalised until the 1960s. Rev. Robert (1766–1847) born in Fife, one of a family of 11, he attended Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. He taught at a school biefly and was a private tutor for the Napiers at Merchiston Hall, near Falkirk. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1788 and ordained as minister of Ettrick in early 1790. He was a regular visitor at Wilton Lodge, which his patron Lord Napier purchased; the room he used there was known as ‘the prophet’s chamber’. He moved to Yarrow in 1791, succeeding Dr. Cramond and remained there until he died. In 1805 he became Chaplain to the Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly and obtained a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1811. Rev. Campbell of Lilliesleaf referred to him (somewhat facetiously) as ‘the beauty of holiness’. He married Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick; she died in 1843. His son James succeeded him as minister of Yarrow and wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886). He also had another son Walter and a daughter who predeceased him. He was rarely ill, never spending a whole day in bed in his life, and not requiring a doctor until 3 days before his death. When he died he was ‘father of the Synod’. Robert the Rustic Bard (19th C.) tinsmith at 4 Bourtree Bank. He married Janet, daughter of jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were James A. (a plumber), Robert (an ironmonger) and George (a plumber, who emigrated to America). Rev. Thomas (1830/31–80) from Bucklyvie, son of John, who was the minister there. He became the 6th minister of Allars Kirk in 1857. He moved to Albion Chapel, London in 1863, then to Forest Hill, Sydenham in 1870, although he was only there 2 years. In 1872 he ceased to be recognised as a minister of the U.P. Church. Rev. William Cuthbertson (1839–90) born in Coupar, Angus, son of schoolmaster John. He was educated in Edinburgh New College 1864–68, where he trained for the Free Church ministry. He was based at Lauder before being ordained as 3rd minister of Wolfefee Free Kirk in 1872. In 1878 he married Janet Calvert, daughter of George Scott (who was visiting her aunt and uncle in Lauder), postmaster at Mimico, Canada. They had 2 children: William Cuthbertson (1880–1941), born in Hobkirk, who trained as an engineer, joined the K.O.S.B. and died in Lasswade; and Janet (b.1881), born in Hobkirk. He came down with Bright’s disease and moved to Musselburgh for a change, but died after a few months there. Rev. Winning (19th/20th C.) appointed as assistant to Rev. David Hislop at Hawick Evangelical Union Kirk in 1894. Soon afterwards the church united with the Congregational Union. It is unclear exactly how long he remained in Hawick (formerly ‘Russel’).

Ruth (rooth) n. Henry (15th C.) resident of Longnewton, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aine in Jedburgh. He had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Gibson, with his surety being George Rutherford of Longnewton.

Ruthead (ru'-heed) n. Ruthead, pass at the head of Ruthead Sike, which flows into Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley. The pass here reaches a height of 352 m, and was formerly on the old road from Lairhope to Howpasley, linking the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys.

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd) n. village and former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. Before being destroyed in 1545 there was a hospital near here for the protection of travellers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, as well as ruins of the old British fort called Ringley Hall. The area was a small parish in ancient times, later absorbed into Maxton. The land is intimately connected with the Rutherfords of that Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the early 17th century, then the Scotts of Thirlestane and later to the Don and Antrobus families (also written ‘Rutherford’ and variants: the origin of the name is probably Old English for ‘cattle ford’ and it first appears in about 1165; an alternative is the Flemish for a ‘knight’s river crossing’; less likely, but more romantic, are tales involving King Ruther fording a river, and related stories; there is a more recent Rutherford in Linton Parish, Peeblesshire).

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd, -ford) n. Adam of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501 in relation to lands of ‘Glenisland’ in Roxburghshire for which he had a sasine. His name is given in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Afe Rutherford de eisdem’, but it is unclear how he was related to other Rutherford of that Ilk. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of George of Longnewton. In 1498 he was listed (along with his brother Gilbert, a cousin George and his ‘brother’s son’ David) among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Thomas Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. In 1510 he had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. Adam (15th/16th C.) farmer of the lands of ‘Hirdmanstone’, probably the same as ‘Hermiston’ in Lilliasleaf Parish. In 1502 David Scott, called ‘Lady’, ‘in Stirkshaws’, had a remission for leading the ‘Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen’ in a raid on his lands. This included stealing 5 horses and burning corn and houses there. He may be the Adam whose son James was killed at the Kirk of Hawick around 1502. Adam (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh who was appointed one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburgh in 1545 in order to officiate over the inheritance of James, son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Bonchreston. In 1684 he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam of Kidheugh (16th/17th C.) grandson of William and Kidheugh and probably son of Robert. In 1621 and his son John had a charter of Nether Crailing. In 1656 he gave a charter of lands in Bedrule to Thomas Rutherford of Whitehouse in Nisbet. He married Isobel, daughter of Ragwell Bennett of Chesters. Andrew of Kidheugh was probably his son. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1732 being paid for cloth for the Burgh Officers and drummers clothes. He may have been a local tailor. Alexander (b.1820) youngest son of Bonchester joiner James and Isabella Thomson. He followed his father into the joinery business. However, he became paralysed in the middle of his life, had to be maintained by Hobbkirk Parish and died in Hawick Poorhouse. His brother William (who had emigrated to Australia) sent money back to cover the expenses for his maintenance. Alison (1712–94) daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairmile, Selkirkshire. In 1731 she married Patrick Cockburn of Ormiston, and thereafter was referred to as Mrs. Cockburn. She was a leading society figure in Edinburgh, and wrote a version of ‘The Flowers of the Forest’. Andrew of Hunthill (c.1430–c.82) son of John. He had a charter for Nether Wormalston in Peeblesshire in 1452. He is probably the ‘Andro of Rutherforde’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English. In 1479 he had a sesine for Makerstoun and Grubet. He married Janet Rutherford of that Ilk. Their children included: John, who succeeded; Thomas of the Grange; and Andrew of Swinside, who died at Flodden, and whose daughter Margaret married her cousin (once removed) Sir Nicholas of Hundalee. Andrew of Chatto and Hunthill (d.1529) son of George of Hunthill. He was the 3rd husband of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston. From her he inherited several lands, including the ‘half merk land of Bethiroull’ (i.e. Bedrule), which they sold to Andrew Ker of Ferniehirst. He may be the Andrew who had sesine for the lands of Swinside in 1506. In 1529 he had a charter for Capehope and other lands, along with his wife Helen. He died without issue and his brother John succeeded to Hunthill in late 1529. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in the Grange. He may have been related to the slightly later George of the Grange. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndale in Jedforest. His name is recorded there as ‘Andree Ruthirfurde in Grange’. Andrew of Hundalee (c.1530–96) son of Sir Nicholas. His older brother George died a rebel. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 (perhaps earlier), amnulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle of Smailholm in 1561. Their children included: John; Nicholas, who succeeded; and Andrew. However, it is stated in some family histories that he had no sons, and was succeeded by his brother Nicholas. Andrew of Hundalee (16th C.) son of Nichol, whom he succeeded. He was ‘youngar of Hundoley’ in 1567 when ordered to remain in ward in Edinburgh; at the same time he and Robert Fraser of Overton were sureties for entering a servant of Fraser’s. He was also surety for Dand Davidson of Birnryg. Along with his father and many other prominent Borderers, he signed a bond in 1571/2 to act against thieves. He was ‘youngar of Hundoley’ in 1572/3 when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Richard of Edgerston as his surety (and apparently vice versa); he himself was surety for George of the Grange, as well as ‘Jock of the Knowe’. He married Christian, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. However, he had no issue, and Hundalee was eventually inherited by his sister Marie, who married Sir James Ker of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. Andrew of Townhead (d.1674) stabbed James Douglas (brother of Sir William of Cavers) on their way to Jedburgh after dining together at Swanside. He subsequently tried to flee abroad, but was caught, tried and beheaded at Edinburgh Cross. He must have been related to other Rutherfords of Townhead and of the Hall. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick Town Clerk from 1670 until about 1673. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He was notary for the document drawn up (probably in 1672) for the Commission by the Town Council to discuss an equal division of the Common with the Earl of Queensberry. He was also listed as notary when he witnessed a baptism for John Chalmers in Hawick in 1673. A man of the same name is recorded as schoolmaster in Ancrum in 1643 (but there is no obvious connection). Andrew (d.1664) 5th and youngest son of William of Wrightsland and Quarryholes, with his 3rd wife
Rutherford

Isabel Stewart of Traquair. His father was eldest son of William, a ship's captain in Leith, who was grandson of Archibald Rutherford, Canon of Jedburgh and descended from the Laird of Hunthill. He had a successful military career in the French service, where he became a Lieutenant General. He had 4 brothers, one of whom was a treasurer to the King of Spain. Coming to England after the restoration of Charles II, he was recommended by the King of France. He was the 1st Lord Rutherford in 1661 and served as Governor of Dunkirk. In 1663 he was created the 1st and only Earl of Teviot. In that year there was an inventory made of his possessions (amounting to almost £200,000 Scots, as well as a will. He was mentioned several time in the diaries of Samuel Pepys. He died in Tangiers after being sent there to be Governor by Charles II. Having no issue, he had named Sir Thomas of Hunthill as his heir. Andrew of Edgerston (1646/7–1718) 2nd son of John. He succeeded to Edgerston in 1686, his elder brother John having already died. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths at his house at Edgerston. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas. He contributed a legacy to ‘poor lame soldiers’ were inherited by his younger brother Thomas.

pany in 1695. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas.

Andrew and Bessie Kerr. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded ‘in Rule’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner in Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. Andrew (17th C.) listed at Swimnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Barnhills in the 1860s. Ann (18th C.) chambermaid at Midshields in 1791, when she was working for Archibald Douglas. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrue had remission for several crimes, including his slaughter. Perhaps the same Archibald is also mentioned when John Davidson in Minto was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 10 ewes from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Rutherfords. Archibald (d.1685) 4th son of John of Hunthill. In 1670 he succeeded his brother Thomas in the lands and barony of Scraesburgh, otherwise known as Hunthill, as well as Newlands and Linton in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as owner of Hunthill, Scraesburgh and Groundhousenook in 1678, valued at £1200. In 1680 he succeeded his brother Thomas as the 3rd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament as a peer. He died abroad, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Robert. He was the basis for the Master of Ravenswood in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Bride of Lammermuir’, the bride being based on his betrothed, Janet Dalrymple. His testament was registered with the Commissariot of Peebles in 1691. Bertie (17th C.) recording being ‘of the Wood’ in 1643 when his lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £20. It is unclear where this was. Caleb (1675–c.1831) son of Robert and Mary Simpson. He was apprenticed as a shoemaker, but gave up the trade to become Burgh Officer. He worked as the town crier and drummer as well as sheriff’s officer. He would also call public auctions etc. in the time before there were newspapers in Hawick. He roused the town with his drum during the False Alarm of 1804. He also acted as crier of races and games at the Common Riding, and was one of the Halberdiers. In addition he was annually the toastmaster at the King’s Ranting, and was paid extra for singing. He was well known as a trickster and wag, and for avoiding steady work at all costs. He used to repeat things like the Burgess Roll, adding amusing comments of his own. Due to such idiosyncrasies, he frequently came to grief for breach of Bailie’s orders. His wife was referred to as ‘Jean Caleb’, and with her and ‘the Noted Beattie’ they used to perform shows around the south of Scotland and northern England. One incident is related of him claiming to exhibit ‘a horse’s head where it’s tail should have been’ at Kelso Fair. After being dismissed for being drunk one Common Riding he is supposed to have said ‘There’s ye’re drum; ye’ll carrie’t hame for me. Ye’ll sune get another drummer, but ye’ll never get another Caleb.’ He is surely the ‘Calib Rutherford, shoemaker’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784 (even although he would have been quite young at the time). He lived to a ripe old age, and his drum is in the Museum. He appears in a cameo role in ‘The Gutterbludes’ – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM], ‘...Or Caleb rise to beat the drum, And I cry out ‘They come, they come!’’ [AD]. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Richardson in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761) and Thomas (b.1772). His son Charles died in Hawick in 1782. He witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in 1766. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Craling Parish. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Betty Little. Charles Faa...

Blyth (1824/5–1902) son of Esther Faa Blyth, who was the last Queen of the Gypsies. Born at Kirk yetholm, he spent 58 years of his life in England, but returned in 1898 to claim the gypsy crown. This was said to be to ‘boost the tourist trade’, the coronation being a pageant attended by thousands. He was visited in his palace by the Hawick Archæological Society field trip in 1901. He died less than a year later, while sitting in his chair. Charles Dickson (1825/6–95) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. In 1841 he was an apprentice grocer living on the Sandbed. On the 1861 he was visiting his brother Walter at Mabonlaw. He went to Edinburgh as a young man and is said to have broken his leg when he kicked out at a rat, but hit something solid instead; he was attended to in his recovery by Christina Smart who he subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded ‘in Gramis’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was. David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose daughter Margaret (b.1682) was born in Hawick. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park. He subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded ‘in Gramis’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was. David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose daughter Margaret (b.1682) was born in Hawick. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park when Andrew Oliver & Son moved to Weensland Road. They continued sales there until the early 1900s. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Euphan (17th C.) servant of Francis Scott, former minister of Hassendean. She is recorded in 1693 when Robert Scott was fined in Hawick for striking her ‘with ane rung, and breaking of her mistress rocke when she was spinning there’. Francis (d.bef. 1841) watchmaker of the High Street, who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is recorded as a watch and clockmaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Henderson and their children were: Francis Elliot; Agnes; and William, who carried on the jewellery business. An unnamed child of his died in 1811. His wife was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. Sir George of Chatto (c.1380–c.1428) probably son of Robert of Rutherford and nephew of James of that Ilk. He was squire of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He was probably a survivor of the Battle of Vermuel in 1424. He married Janet Rutherford, possibly of Edgerston; she was related to the Loraines who held the lands of Hummelknowes near Hawick and in 1428/9 was described as his ‘wylfe quylem’ (probably former wife). He is probably the ‘Georgio de Rutherfurde’ as witness to a charter for Home of Wedderburn about 1413 and witness to a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben in 1414. He had a charter of confirmation for Chatto in 1429, but appears to have died shortly afterwards. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Other children were: Adam, Prior of the Anchorites in Ancrum; George of Langnewton; Walter of Redheugh; Katherine, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Helen, who married Sir Thomas Borthwick of Collylaw and Bourhouse. George of Ettles Cleuch (15th C.) son of Robert of Chatto. He was a member of the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492, when he is listed as ‘Georgium Ruthurfurde de Ediliscuch’. 1495 there was a ‘retour or inquest’ at Jedburgh, finding that he was heir to his father in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddilisschuch’ and Hangingshaw, as well as the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunt hill. He also had a sasine for the same lands. George of Hunthill (d.c.1496) son of Robert and Margaret Glendinning. He could not have been Laird for very long. His wife’s name may have been Mariotta. He was succeeded by his son William. George of Longnewton (d.c.1499) 3rd son of George of Chatto. He was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains in 1483 and left his seal on a document relating to Synton in 1494. In 1493 he was surety for Henry Rauch in Longnewton (who had remission for the murder of Thomas Gibbinson), as well as for Patrick and Arthur Crawford in Longnewton Mill. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1494 when Alexander, Lord Erskine succeeded to his father’s lands of Synton and hereditary Sheriffship of Selkirkshire. In 1494/5 he was surety for Henry Ruth in Longnewton. Also in 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from him at ‘Camys’, as well as 40 sheep from him at Sandystanes. In 1497 he gave a charter ‘from his place of Sandystanys’ to his grandson Walter. In the same year he was mentioned in an inquest relating to the boundaries of Melrose Abbey lands. He married Catherine Lyle. His sons Adam and Gilbert were recorded in 1498. He may already have been dead when the ‘Dominus de langnewtoni’ (no forename given) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. A case at the 1502 Justice-aire at Jedburgh related how 120 of his sheep had been stolen from ‘Sandystanis’ by the Laird of Minto and ‘reset’ by Adam Scott ‘in Hawchesteris’ (probably Highchesters). Another case in 1502 involved Peter Turnbull in Bonchester, who was in a group who burned 120 bolls of barley and 60 bolls of wheat belonging to him, as well as stealing 25 oxen, 28 cows and 76 sheep from him, and burning 11 horses, and other goods of his at Barnhills. Peter Turnbull was also involved in burning 26 bolls of barley and 40 bolls of oats at ‘Sandystanis’, with the help of John Turnbull of Minto and others. One more case in 1502 recorded how Adam Graham-slaw had stolen 41 sheep and 8 trefeves of barley from him. In 1510 his son Adam had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. George of Hunthill (15th/16th C.) son of William. In 1500 there was a dispensation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, allowing him to marry Elizabeth Turnbull, although they were related in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity. In 1507 there was a ‘re-tour of inquest’, finding that he was heir of his father William of Hunthill, in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, Ettes Cleuch and Hanging-shaw. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he confirmed a charter of Scraesburgh for Ninian Glendinning. In 1520/1 he had a charter for a 4 merkland in Scraesburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, and married Helen, daughter of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk; John of Hunthill, who married Christine Pringle; William, who married Christian Armstrong; and Archibald, who was Canon of Jedburgh and married a Douglas of Bonjedward. George of Hundalee (c.1470-c.1545) son of John, whom he succeeded. He was ‘junior Laird of Hundalee’ in 1502 when serving as surety for Lawrence in ‘quhitmeir’. He was a Bailie for Sir William Colville of Ochiltree in 1504. In 1508 he was part (along with his father) of the panel of retour for Adam Hepburn. He was one of the major Border Barons who signed a bond in 1525 to help the Earl of Angus, the Warden. In 1526 he was listed among the many Borderers in a remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Nicholas and Andrew were also listed. He had a charter for Hundalee in 1528. In 1538 he was charged with assisting ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne, John Ruthirfurde, called Jock of ye Green, and other rebels at the Kingis horn’. In 1539 he had a charter for Ashitrees. In 1544 he signed a bond to serve Henry VIII during the ‘Rough Wooing’, but in the following year the English burned Hundalee anyway. He was succeeded by Sir Nicholas, his son. George ‘Cockbank’ (16th C.) said to be a ‘great riever, thief and manslayer’. He was on a 1540 list of Scottish rebels ‘reset’ within England who the Wardens wanted captured. He is there ‘Geo. Rutherford called Cok Bankes’ and listed along with his brother ‘Hobbe’ and a son with unknown first name, as well as other Rutherfords. He is probably the ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne’ listed along with John ‘called Jock of ye Green’ and other rebels who Ker of Cessford, Douglas of Cavers, Rutherford of Hundalee and Ker of Dolphinstone were accused of assisting in 1538. About the same time he was captured and held in Carlisle Castle with his son Thomas and Tom Bell, probably so they could be exchanged for the Englishman Dr. Hillyard. In 1540 James V refused to exchange him for the churchman, but offered to swap him for any English lawbreaker; his fate is not recorded. He was probably related to ‘Robin’ and ‘Gawen’, who are also listed in 1540. He is probably the George recorded along with Thomas Turnbull in 1541, when they were accused of having been on a raid into England with 100 other Scotsmen in which John Routledge and Robert Noble were killed. George of Longnewton (16th C.) listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He is also recorded in 1560 on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was son of William, who was murdered earlier by Robert Ker of Newhall. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, suggesting that he could not write himself. George of the Grange (16th C.) signed a bond with John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, along with Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell. He was also part of the bond in same year among Turnbuls, Elliotis and others to bring in William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). In 1560 he signed the bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1569 he was ‘George Ruthirfurde in the Grange’ when a set of Homes, Rutherfords and Kers were caution for him to remain in ward in Forfar. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the

along with 14 of his sons. He died in the Battle of Worcester, had 21 sons, most of whom served the King during the Civil War. He contributed to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. The owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as 'Lady Symington', and unrelated to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. The owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as 'Lady Farnington' is probably in fact Lady 'Symington', and unrelated to him. George (d.1651) said to be brother of John in East Nisbet. After the Union he received lands on Rede Water through marriage. He apparently had 21 sons, most of whom served the King during the Civil War. He died in the Battle of Worcester, along with 14 of his sons. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Fairnington in 1674. He could be the same as one of the other Georges, although this seems like a separate generation. He is probably the Laird who paid the land tax in Roxburgh Parish in 1678. He may be the George of Fairnington who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas (and Elizabeth Turnbull), who was son of Robert of Edgerston. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George and Elizabeth Rutherford of Edgerston. He succeeded his father in 1692. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1686 he married Barbara, daughter of John Haliburton of Newmains and Margaret Rutherford of Edgerston; she died in 1750. Their children were: George, who succeeded, and killed his brother-in-law; David; Margaret, who married Robert Pringle of Clifton; and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, and secondly George Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, Lord Provost of Edinburgh. George of Fairnington (b.1691) son of George and Barbara Haliburton of Newmains. In 1716 he slew Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw in a drunken fight over the rights to a spring bordering their properties; the spring was afterwards known as the 'bloody well'. He kept in hiding until it was clear that he would not be prosecuted. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. His wife could have been the ‘Lady Fairnington’ who paid the window tax at Timpendean in 1748. His son George, W.S., married Mary, daughter of Strother Ker of Littledean. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Lieut. George of Knowesouth (d.1806) 2nd son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He succeeded his brother John, who died without an heir, only a few years after inheriting Knowesouth. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, and while serving on the Trident had been responsible for sentencing some men to illegal punishments, which had led to their deaths. He was taken into custody in Plymouth, but escaped from ship the night before the trial, and was believed to have drowned. Doubts over the circumstances of his death (and rumours that he had effected an escape) led to delays in legal proceedings to decide on the inheritance of the estate. He was ultimately succeeded by his aunt, who had married Thomas Scott, and their son Charles Scott. George (18th/19th C.) watch and clockmaker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have been related to Francis, who was listed separately as a clockmaker at the same time. One of them was probably the Rutherford marked at about 39 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. George (b.c.1800) from Jedburgh, he was farm steward on the Minto estate. He married Mary (or ‘Mina’) Easton, probably in St. Boswells. In 1841 he was living at Minto Lilieilaw Lodge with his wife and 4 children. Their children included: James (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1830); John (b.1833), partner in Turner & Rutherford’s in Hawick; and Isabel (b.1839). George (b.1806) joiner at Blacklee and Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. His father was James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge, while several other brothers were also joiners. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at ‘Killnknowe’, and was a joiner at ‘Blackley’ in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis and their children included: James (b.1830); William (b.1832); Helen (b.1834); Isabella (b.1836); Thomas (b.1838); Janet (b.1839); Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845); and Margaret (b.1847). George (d.c.1895) son of James. He carried on his father’s tailor’s business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They had a son, Thomas. After his death his wife carried on the business for a few years, before it was taken over by William Sharp. She later married Mr. Irving. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Gilberti de Ruthirfurde’ in 1437 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted lands in Eckford for capturing him. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. One suggestion is that he is the same man as William, 3rd son of Sir Richard and Jean Douglas. Gilbert (1832/3–99) Hawick resident. In 1852 he married Agnes Park, and she died in 1907, aged 75. Their children included: Maggie, who died young; William, who died at West Meridan, Connecticut, U.S.A.; Mary; Frank; Betsy; John; and Gilbert, tweed merchant. He died in Howlands Terrace and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He beame a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie’s coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI. George, cashier with Blaikie’s coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI.

Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He beame a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie’s coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI. George, cashier with Blaikie’s coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI.

Gilbert (c.1395–1454) son of Sir Richard. Along with his brother Nichol he was appointed guarantor of a treaty with the English in 1449. He is probably the ‘Jamys of Rothirfurd’ who witnessed a document between Haig of Benersyde and Melrose Abbey in 1425. In 1427 he was ‘Jacobo de Rothirfurd’ when he witnessed the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he was an the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he witnessed a contract between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He witnessed a charter of 1435 transferring lands of Branxholme etc. in the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He may be the James who witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. He also witnessed a sasine for the lands of Grahamslaw in 1436/7, and was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk when he infested the same lands in 1439. In 1439 he was on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward and in 1446/7 he was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he was witness to a feu charter between Simon de Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for
Rutherford

Burnflat and part of Birkwood, near the present day Duke’s Wood. He held the lands of Edgerston at least by 1448 when he had a sasine. In that year he was ‘Jacobo de Ruddeurde de eodem’ when he witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw. In 1449 he and his brother Nicholas acted as guarantors for a treaty with the English. In 1451 and 1452 he had charters for the lands of ‘Leithbert, ‘Leithbertshiels’, etc. He married Christian a grand-daughter of Sir Robert Lauder and was succeeded by his son James. James of that Ilk and Wells (c.1420–93/4) son of James. He was the first Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Note there is some debate over these generations, one genealogy suggestion being that there are 2 separate Jameses covering this entry. In 1455 he had remission for certain rents because of the damage he endured on the death of his father in defence of the realm. He was the ‘lorde of Rutherfurde’ on the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he received the patronage of the Kirk of Rutherford (previously belonging to the Earl of Douglas), was a Conservator of a truce with the English and was appointed a Warden of the Marches. In 1464 he had a sasine for Hownam. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald Douglas and on the panel for deciding on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. In 1468 he was part of an agreement with the Homes and Kers over lands of Crailing. In 1471 he received a charter of the lands of Hownam, Capehope and Swinset, confirmed along with his wife in 1483. He is probably the James who had a debt relating to Crown lands in 1471, with Thomas Turnbull and Robert Rutherford as pledges. In 1482 he had a charter for the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1483 he was also witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains and another for Smailholm. He was appointed a commissioner for settling the Border marches in 1487, under the designation of Lord Rutherford. In 1488 he was mentioned in a charter of James III re-granting the regality of Cavers to William Douglas; there he is stated ‘for the favour which he bears to the said William Douglas’ to perform his service to the King. He gained the barony of Edgerston in 1492/3 and is recorded in that year when his superior James Douglas confirmed the lands of Rutherford and Wells (or ‘Walls’, in the Barony of Cavers) to him and his heirs. His possessions described in 1492/3 included the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. He is last recorded in early 1494 when he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Erskine. Their children included: Philip, whose son Richard succeeded, and whose widow married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; John, recorded as son of the Laird of Rutherford in 1493; Thomas of Edgerston, who succeeded his nephew as Rutherford of that Ilk; Andrew; Robert; Christian, who married Sir Robert Ker of Caverton; and Janet, who married John Rutherford of Hundalee. He was succeeded by his grandson Richard, who was the last Rutherford of Rutherford. James (d.c.1500) son of Adam, he was murdered at the Kirk of Hawick. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for his murder, as well as a long list of other crimes. Some other Turnbulls (accomplices of Peter) were ‘at the horn’ for being involved in his murder. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Patrick Turnbull at Wauchope Tower ‘componed’ for associating with the Turnbulls who were responsible for his murder. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was part of a letter of ‘respite and protection’ for the friends and family of William Douglas of Cavers (Sheriff of Teviotdale), while he was away in Denmark. Other men named were William Douglas (heir of the Sheriff) and William, Robert and Thomas Rutherford. It seems likely that they were members of the family of Rutherford and Wells. He could be the same as the James listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran, recorded between the Rutherfords of Hundalee and of Grange. James (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, when he paid for 8 hearths. James (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (b.1697/8) shepherd in Hawick Parish. He worked as shepherd for 20 years at Alton Croft, 14 years at Nether Southfield and later at Langflat. In 1761 he was 3 men selected to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft to regularise it. He was a widower in 1767 when he gave evidence in the court case regarding the division of the Common. James of Bowland (d.1747) only son of Robert of Bowland and Anne Murray. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1730–34, succeeding his cousin John Pringle. He also served as Commissary for Peebles in 1733. He was a ruling elder at the 1737 General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He is supposed to have owed a large sum in arrears of teinds, but was unable to find evidence that his father had purchased the right of these teinds; however, in a dream his dead father told him about the old writer who had the documents, which he was able to retrieve the next day. He married Isabella, daughter of John Sharplaw (or perhaps Simpson). His daughters Anna and Barbara emigrated to North Carolina. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was living at Eilrig. In 1726 he married Helen Haliburton, also from Roberton. His children included: Janet (b.1727); Maly (b.1728); Barbara emigrated to North Carolina. James (18th/19th C.) listed as gardener at Midshiels in 1791 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the James in Wilton who married Agnes Hogg in Melrose in 1790. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandystones in Ancrum Parish. He owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. James (b.1768/9) born in Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Barnhills. In 1851 he was farmer there of 360 acres, employing 12 labourers. His children included Elizabeth, Agnes and Andrew. James (b.1876/7) son of Tom, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, probably son of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. He first set up as a joiner at Hobkirkstyle, then moved to Langraw and finally to Bonchester Bridge by about 1813. His joiner’s shop was next to the blacksmith’s there. He married Isabella Thomson (1779/80-1847) and their children were: Agnes (b.1804), who must have died young; John (b.1805), joiner at Old Gatehousecote; George (b.1806), joiner at Kirkstyle; James (1808–41), whose son Tom was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; Elizabeth (b.1810), who probably died young; Thomas (b.1811), who was a soldier and then policeman in Hawick; William (b.1812), who emigrated to Australia; Robert Scott (b.1814), also a joiner, married Isabella Hall; Agnes (again, b.1816), who married a Hawick shoemaker called Elder; Douglas (b.1818), who worked in a sawmill in Leith; and Alexander (b.1820), who followed his father as a joiner. He could be the James who was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. It is possible he was the James, son of John and Janet Noteman, born in Wilton Parish in 1778. James (d.bef. 1840) slater in Hawick. His daughter Jeniima died in 1840. James (1808–41) 3rd son of Bonchester joiner James. He married Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson and grand-daughter of John Stevenson, Laird of Kirkstyle. Their son Thomas (b.1832) eventually took over as blacksmith from his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson. James (1818/9–1900) tailor of 60 High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 21 High Street. He married Mary Wilson, who died in 1892, aged 73. Their children included Betsy Waldie, William, Isabella and Elizabeth, who all died in infancy, Robert, James, George (tailor and tobacconist), Alison and Mary (who married Andrew Wight). James (b.1825/6) born in New York state, he was a hosiery warehouseman in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Teviot Place (which may be the same as 4 Teviot Road). He married Isabella Elliot and their children included: George (b.1856); and Thomas Elliot (b.1861). James (b.1842/3) born in Roberton Parish. In 1901 he was shepherd at Dodburn. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter who was also Janet. James (b.1843) son of William, farmer at Ferniehirst Mill. He was farm steward at Kershau and in 1877 or 1878 moved to Gatehousecote, where he was also farm steward. By 1891 he had moved to Chesters Grange in Ancrum Parish. He married Isabella Hood and their children were William Rae (b.1877), John Hood (b.1878), Cecilia Richardson (b.188), Henry James (b.1883), Charles (b.1885/6) and Robert (b.1887/8). James (b.1876) son of Tom, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated in Hobkirk and served his apprenticeship with his father. He worked in Kelso and Hawick, returned to Bonchester, worked with a shipbuilders in Belfast and then in Edinburgh, before taking over as blacksmith at Bonchester in 1899. In about 1904 he became tenant of the inn at Bonchester and gave up the blacksmith’s business. He married Margaret Sparks, who was sister of his brother Thomas’ wife. James (20th C.) Managing Director of Turner & Rutherford’s at Mansfield Mills. He was in this position at the time of the 1955 fire, which was not long before the firm foelded. Janes see Mrs. James Rutherford Oliver. Janet (17th C.) landowner in Abbotrule Parish in 1663. She paid £70 on the Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps she was widow of a man who formerly owned lands in Abbotrule, for example ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’. Mrs. Janet (18th/19th C.) closest relative of William Turnbull, last Laird of Langraw. She inherited the property sometime in the 1790s.
Rutherford

She married a Mr. Easton, who settled in America, and sold Langraw in 1801. Jean (18th/19th C.) wife of Caleb, she was known as ‘Jean Caleb’, and her surname is uncertain. Together with ‘the Noted Beattie’ they locally performed ‘Wild Man of Bengal’ shows. Her snuff box is in the Museum, with the date February 22 1803. John of Hundalee (15th C.) probably son of Nicholas of Hundalee. In 1434 he was ordered to leave Jedburgh Abbey and to allow the Abbot, Thomas Cranston, to take possession (probably a dispute over burial rights in the choir between the 2 families). He was witness to the sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. John, son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet was also a witness, showing that they are different men; he is there recorded as ‘Johannis de Rutherfurde de Hundwelle’. In 1464/5 he was ‘Johne of Ruthirforde of Hundwellesc’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over Kirktoun Mains and the Flex. In 1467 he is recorded as ‘Johannis Ruthirfurde, dominus de Hundwelay’ when he was appointed by Parliament (along with John Ainslie of Doplphinston) to make an evaluation of Roxburghshire. He appears to have married Margaret Charteris (daughter of Thomas of Cagnore) and then a daughter of Sir Thomas Cranston. The contemporary John appears easy to confuse with him, while the later John of Hundalee was possibly his son, but more likely to have been son of Andrew of Hundalee. John (d.c.1470) son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet. Along with his father he witnessed the sasine of Woollee and Wolfhopelee to David Home in 1436. This was also witnessed by John of Hundalee, showing they are 2 separate people, even although he may be the later John of Hundalee; this is clearly confusing, and family histories may be muddled. In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1453 he had alease of the Crown lands of ‘Kyncavil’. In 1457 he had a sasine for lands at Falnash, Hassendean, Grubet and Kirk Yetholm. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1458 he is probably the John, heir of the deceased Nicholas who had previously dealt with the accounts for Jedburgh. He firstly married Elizabeth, sister of John Rutherford of Yetholm. His second wife was Margaret Turnbull. He was succeeded by his son Andrew of Hundalee and had another son George. John of Edgerston (d.def. 1501). In 1494 he was fined 10 pounds at the Judiciary Court for failing to produce Walter (probably a relative). He was one of the sureties (with Sir Robert Ker) for the appearance of Robert Langlands to answer to his murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw in 1494/5; they had to pay £20 when Langlands failed to show up. In the same year he was also surety for Thomas, son of Nicholas Rutherford, who had killed Duthac Rutherford, for James Davidson in Raperlaw, George Davidson in Raperlaw and for the Grahamslaws of Newton. He also served as surety for others in 1494/5 and was fined for the non-appearance of some of them. He was possibly second son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and elder brother of Thomas of Edgerston. He is probably the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2, and also the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who was surety for a resident of Edgerston in 1493. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Ninian in Ancrum. At the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, he was surety for himself, as well as his brother acting for him. He failed to appear and was to be fined at the next court. At the 1502 Justice- aire he was surety for his brother Ninian in Ancrum, as well as for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston; failing to appear, he was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. John of Hundalee (c.1450–c.1524) son of Andrew of Hundalee. In 1491/2 he was recorded as ‘Johanni Ruthirfurde de Hun dole’ when he had a charter for the lands of Ruecastle (resigned by Thomas Dickson), as well as Samieston (resigned by Thomas Ker of Cess- ford). In 1492 he obtained a decree from the Privy Council against William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, as well as John Gledstains of that Ilk for 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas. He was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for the lands of Synton in 1494, where he is ‘Johan nem Ruthirfurde de Hundoile’. At the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 his ‘suitor’ was Adam Sluthman, who was present at the court for his lands of Ruecastle. In 1499 he witnessed a document for Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1502 he presented Nicholas Oliver at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Grubet. In 1502 he and his brother Thomas had remission ‘for intercommuning with ye Ruthirfurdes, ye Kingis rebels’. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Richard in Littledean, for James in Nisbet and for John ‘Fiffe’, and he was fined for the non-appearance in court of William Turnbull in Bonchester. In 1504 he acted as a specially appointed ‘bailie in that part’ for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. In...
1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1509 to give the inheritance of Cavers Barony to James, son and heir of Sir William Douglas; he is recorded as ‘John Ruthirfurd of Hundalee’ and George is also listed (so possibly related). The house at Hundalee was destroyed by the English while he was Laird. He married Christian Boyd. Their children included: George, who succeeded; Lucia, who married Adam, son of Philip Nisbet of that Ilk; Janet, who married Adam Grimslaw; Margaret, who married Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; and Alison, who had a marriage contract with George, eldest son of William Ker in Lintalee, but appears to have died before the wedding, since her parents were ordered to pay 90 merks to Ker in 1500. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Johanne ruthirfurd’ called ‘ffe’ in ‘le grange’. In a separate court entry he was found to be in-firm, with his surety being John of Hundalee. It is unclear how he might be related to other Rutherfords of Grange. John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ (c.1510–77) son of George, he succeeded his older brother Andrew. There was a ‘retour of inquest’ in 1529, finding that he was heir of his brother Andrew in the lands of Nether Chatto and others. A further ‘retour of inquest’ in 1558 established that he was heir to his brother in the lands of Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraesburgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and baronies in the 1530s. He was convicted in 1538 of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’; also convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other Rutherfords and also Kers. In 1541 he was tenant of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resetting English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of Tynedale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Hunthill’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was listed among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for his sons was John of the Knowe. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he granted the lands of Scraesburgh (occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others) to his son and heir John. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he and his son John was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse and as part of the restitution his 2nd son William was to marry a daughter of James Ker of Corbethouse, while his son and heir John was to offer his sword to ask forgiveness from James Ker. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. In 1561 he was listed among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, and then he himself was warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. Also in 1565 he signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ (but helped by the notary). Additionally, he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council in 1565 to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered to enter ‘Sym Oliver, Cuddy Hendirsoum, and Mathow Dowglas’ to the Warden. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He signed the bond of peace for the Borders in 1569. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Additionally in 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour, as well as for Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and was directed to relieve Sir Walter Ker of Cessford of a debt. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and was surety for David Oliver in Whiteside. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571 and 1577. In 1576 he was surety for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1572/3 he gave his assurances that he would not help Thomas Kerr of
Rutherford

Ferniehirst, with Richard of Edgerston as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. He married Christine Hoppringle and Isobel, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His children included: John, who succeeded; Mariotta, who married William Rutherford of Leith; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; Betty, who married Richard Rutherford of Edgerston; Steven; and Thomas of ‘Grundisnucke’. He may have secondly married a daughter of Ker of Greenhead. He could be the ‘vuquhile Maister Johne Rutherfurde’ named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574 in connection with the lands of Lanton. John (d.bef. 1560) probably son of Thomas and brother of Richard and Philip. He was said to have ‘dwelt in the tofts’, ‘had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot’ and to have been ‘of memorable strength and courage’. He is listed being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in 1560 on the document attempting to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean and his friends. Also ‘Johne Ruthirfurd thair’ (hence probably related) was mutilated in the same attack. As part of the attempt to resolve the feud, the daughter of Philip in Edgerston was to marry Andrew, son of Robert Ker of Newhall. John of the Knowe (16th C.) recorded in 1553/4 as a pledge for the sons of the Laird of Hunthill, that they would keep order. He described as being ‘in Know’ in the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was one of the signatories of the bond, and hence must have been a fairly important family representative at that time. In 1572/3 he was ‘Jok of the Know’ when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Andrew of Hundalee and Richard of Edgerston as sureties. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He is probably the John of Hunthill who signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He is listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, at about the same time. He is recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. He married his cousin Grizel Home and also married Agnes Kirkton (perhaps in 1558, when the couple were granted lands in Scraesburgh). His children included: William, who may have been the eldest son (and if so, predeceased his father), recorded in 1592 when he was denounced as a rebel; Thomas, who succeeded and who married a Cranston of that Ilk; John, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Bankend, who married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk; Grizel, who married Walter Orniston of that Ilk; Jean, who married Adam Rutherford of Chatttoo; George; Andrew; Percie; Steven; Robert; and 5 other daughters. Richard of Litleleugh may also have been his son. John ‘Jock’ of Tofts (16th C.) probably son of Richard of Edgerston. He was said to be a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot. He was named in several accusations of raids on English farms in 1590. His son Andrew is also listed in some of them. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd surviving son of John ‘the Cock’ of Hunthill. In 1619 he was referred to as ‘Master John Ruthirfurde, sheriff-depute of County Roxburgh’. In 1623 he had the lands of Hyndhousefield, Howdenbraes and Maison-Dieu confirmed to him, his wife and eldest son. He married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. His eldest son was John of Bankend, who served as Provost of Jedburgh. John of Hunthill (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hunthill and Jean Cranston. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1610. In 1615 the lands of Nether Chatto, ‘Eildescleuch’, ‘Hanganshaw’ and Gateshawfield were conveyed to him and his wife by James Ker of Chatto. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1630. His lands of Hunthill, Scrasburgh, etc. were valued at £1200 in 1643. He was still alive in 1666 when he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. He married Alison, daughter of Andrew Kerr, 1st Lord Jedburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, but had no male heirs; John, who succeeded his elder brother, but died unmarried; Sir Thomas, who succeeded his 2 older brothers and became the 2nd Lord Rutherford; Archibald, 3rd Lord Rutherford; Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford; Lilias, who married Henry Ker of Graden; Isobel, who married Alexander Burnet of Carllops; Helena, who married Thomas Lewin of Amble; Anna, who married Rev. Thomas Abernethy of Hownam; and Margaret, who married William Elliot of Dinlabyre. John (d.1679) 2nd son of Richard of Littleheugh. His older brother Walter died without issue and he succeeded his father in 1626. His lands included ‘Capehope vocatis Phillop-hope, Hardroddis, Maksydbank, Priestschawis, &c.’, to which he was served heir in 1643, with confirmation in 1666. He married Euphemia, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Dod. He was succeeded by his sons Walter and John. John (17th C.) recorded in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He owned lands valued at £140, but the name of the property is not listed. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1665) transcribed ‘de Cowsnothe’ in the 1666 services of heirs. In that year his son Thomas (referred to as ‘junior’, presumably meaning he was a minor) was served heir to his lands of Rueycastle, including Harden Mains and Newtonhaugh. He was described as already deceased in 1672 when his son Andrew became a merchant’s apprentice in 1672. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, and another son Robert became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1673. John of Edgerston (c.1622–86) eldest son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He raised a troop in the 1640s and fought for King Charles; it is said that at the Battle of Dunbar he was severely wounded and all but 5 of his men were killed, and he lost a leg while defending the bridge at Worcester. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1654/5 he and Robert (Town Clerk of Jedburgh) were acquitted of liability for a sum of £300, which was taken from the tax-collector by ‘a strong party of mosstroopers’. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. After the Restoration he commanded a troop of dragoons who kept order in the Borders. He paid the land tax in 1678 for £2700 in Jedburgh Parish. Also in 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He married Barbara Abernethy, daughter of the Bishop of Caithness (and related to the family that had earlier possessed lands at Teindside and Harwood south of Hawick, with his mother being a Murray of Philiphaugh). He had 4 sons and 12 daughters, including: John, who died before him; Andrew, who succeeded, but died without issue; Thomas, who succeeded Andrew; and Robert of Bowland, who married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. His testament was recorded in 1682. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1704 he was ‘in Dernicktoun’ (presumably Darnick in Melrose Parish) and Margaret ‘ivson’ was ‘his wife in Goldilands’ when their daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldilands and gardener James Falvyde. John of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Cecilia Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn in 1711. He may have been a doctor, and succeeded his father before 1715. His sister Ann married William Chisholme, son of Robert and grandson of Walter of Stirches. His children included: John, who succeeded; William (b.1711); and Ann. John of Ladfield (17th/18th C.) descendant of John of Ladfield (d.c.1686), who was Provost of Jedburgh. His father may have been Adam. He was ‘younger’ in 1712 when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased William Rutherford of Falla, this taking place at Hummelknowes. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1702. John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Storie in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in both Bedrule and Jedburgh Parishes. Sir John of Edgerston (1687–1747/8) son of Thomas. He was knighted in 1706 and succeeded to Edgerston in 1720. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash (his sister Violet) sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He is probably the Sir John who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Cairncross of Langlee in 1710. They had a large family, including: John (b.1712), who succeeded; William (b.1714) of Nether Ancrum; Thomas (b.1715), who married Martha Town from York and whose sons Richard and John were in the Navy; Susannah (d.1791), who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank; Robert of Fainington (b.1723), who became a Russian Baron; James (d.1742), who was unmarried; Walter (1723–1804), who married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander, and whose son John was an American politician; Mary, who married Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean; Elizabeth, who married John Horsburgh of that Ilk; Jean, who married Charles Inglis of Manorhead; Hugh, who had 4 daughters; Archibald; Jean; and Agnes. He secondly married Sarah, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dean (sister of his son-in-law). Their children were: Henry of Hunthill, who married Agnes Lauder; and Christian, who married Rev. Dr. Davidson of Muirhouse. John (1695–1779) born in Yarrow, son of John, minister there, he was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. He was educated in Selkirk and at Edinburgh University. He became a partner in a medical practice in Edinburgh in 1721 and they petitioned the University to start teaching Medicine, the 4 becoming the first Professors of Medicine there. He delivered clinical lectures in the Royal Infirmary, beginning the relationship between the university and the hospital. He firstly married Jean Swinton. His son Daniel was a physician and botanist, and his daughter Anne was mother of Sir Walter Scott. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Tudhope in Bedrule Parish in 1721. John of Edgerston (1712–58) son of Sir John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Cairncross. He trained as an advocate and was elected M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1734, being re-elected in 1741. However, later that year his younger brother Walter convinced him to go to America, where he joined the Independent Regiment of Foot in New York. In 1756 he became a Major in the Royal American Regiment. In 1737 he married Eleanor, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto; she died in 1797 at her house in George Square, Edinburgh. They had 11 children, most of whom were born in America, and 7 of whom survived to adulthood: John, who succeeded; Jean (or Jane) married William Oliver of Dinlabyre; Robert (d.1780), who served with the East India Company; Archibald (d.1779) who was an army Captain; Eleanor (d.1822), unmarried; Elizabeth, married Andrew Sinclair of Hermandston and was mother of Lord Sinclair; and Agnes (1758–1840), who died unmarried. He died at Ticonderago and his family then relocated back to Scotland. John of Knowesouth (d.1788) son of John and Isabella Scott. He was served heir to Knowesouth in 1728 and in 1739 married Mary, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, this marriage ending in divorce. It appears that he was mentally ill, and the records describe years of abuse before she finally left him in 1749. He paid the window tax in Bedrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. By 1763 he was an inmate of the ‘Bedlam’ in Edinburgh. He is recorded as Laird in 1764 when his eldest son Thomas married Margaret Elliot of Kirklands in Ancrum. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1747 he was in a dispute with William Henry, Marquess of Lothian over his alleged wrongful possession of the lands of Ruecastle. It appears that an infeftment of Ruecastle was made obtained by his (young) eldest son Thomas in 1748 (or perhaps 1758). In 1770 this son Thomas was in dispute with his wife, younger children and creditors. These other children were: Jean, who married Thomas Scott and whose son Charles later succeeded to the estate; Capt. John of the Royal Navy; and another daughter, who married Jedburgh lawyer John Thomson. In 1788 he is recorded owning lands valued at £466 19s 10d, with his son Thomas also holding lands valued at £48 10s. He died in Edinburgh. John ‘the Little Major’ of Mossburnford (1746–1830) son of Thomas and grandson of the Laird of Edgerston. His father died in the Barbados when he was an infant, and he was sent back to the care of his grandfather at Edgerston. After going to America to seek his fortune he was apparently captured by Indians, but escaped after several years. He joined the 42nd Highland Regiment and was promoted to Captain in 1778. After retiring and returning to Scotland he purchased the estate of Mossburnford. He was later a Major in one of the local volunteer regiments (probably the 2nd Regiment of Dumfries militia). His nickname derived from his short stature. He paid tax on 2 male servants in Jedburgh Parish in 1778 and 1779. He was probably also Collector of Supply for about 35 years. He paid the Land Tax for Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1785. He was one of the Borders men who entertained Burns on his tour of 1787. He was on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, along with his son John. In 1810 he was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He married Eleanor Chalk of Artane, Dublin and secondly Agnes, daughter of Rev. Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle. His children included: John, W.S. (b.1777), who was the Edinburgh agent for Jedburgh; Charles (1780–1846), who inherited the lands of Fairnington, but died unmarried; Thomas (b.1784), who succeeded his brother; Martha, married Charles Robson of Samieston; Helen (or Eleanor) married William Elliot, Laird of Harwood; Walter (1801–56) who served with the East India Company in Bengal; and at least 5 who died young. Capt. John (b.1744) younger son of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr of Abbotrule. His elder brother Thomas inherited the estate and then it passed to his sister Jean (who married Thomas Scott), since he was unmarried. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He died in the early 1800s. He could be the John who was recorded at Knowesouth in 1797, where he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as 2 non-working dogs. He may be the Rutherford of Knowesouth who was eldest son of Maj. John of Mossburnford, and was an agent for Jedburgh in Edinburgh, dying in 1801. On the other hand, he could be the Capt. John who died in 1833 and was considered as the last of his line. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shiplaw Cross in 1780. This was the highest cottage in Cavers Parish. He had a son James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge and his great-grandson was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. Note that Tancred lists him as James rather than John. John of Edgerston (1748–1834) son of John of Edgerston and that Ilk. He was born in America, while his father was in the army there. He succeeded to Edgerston following his father’s death in 1758 (his father having been overseas since succeeding Sir John in about 1749). He owned land at ‘Rink’ in Hawick, which was used for the October market from 1779. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and was already on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1780 he was appointed Major and Captain in the Southern Regiment of Fencibles and by 1797 was in command of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Militia). In 1788 he was described as a ‘popular man’ in a private list of voters in Roxburghshire, and was also said to be connected with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was additionally listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. His estate in Jedburgh Parish was valued at more than £2000 in 1788, and he also owned other lands in Oxnam Parish. He paid tax on 2 male servants in 1778, and was taxed for having male and female servants through the 1780s into the 1790s as well as for owning a carriage in the period 1788–98 and for having horses and dogs in the period 1785–97, including 8 carriage or saddle horses and 4 non-working dogs. In 1797 he was knocked off his horse in Jedburgh and struck in the head, but fully recovered. In 1803 he became Colonel-Commandant of both battalions of Roxburghshire volunteers. He was listed as ‘Major’ on the 1808 subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He paid the land tax on his estate in 1811, and also owned Overton. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1802–06 and Roxburghshire 1806–12. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1787 he married Mary Ann, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Leslie-Melville and died without issue. He left the lands of Edgerston to William Oliver of Dinlabyre, son of his sister Jane, and Fairnington to Charles, son of John Rutherford of Mossburnford. There is a watercolour sketch of him by Lord Sinclair. John (18th C.) resident of Alton in Wilton Parish. In 1777 he married Janet Notman. Their children included: Thomas (b.1783); and Robert (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were George Scott and James Lorraine. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Howpasley. His children included Henry (b.1783) and John (b.1786). John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Knowesouth in 1794, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. John (d.c.1805) eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He apprenticed as a lawyer to William Riddell and became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He died after succeeding his father. He died without issue and the Knowesouth estate was inherited by his brother George, who also died without issue. John (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1789 he paid a fine for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Betty Hogg. Their children included: Charles (b.1790), baptised in Wilton; Walter (b.1792), baptised in Minto; Isabel (b.1795), baptised in Minto; William (b.1802), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and Thomas (b.1805), baptised in Minto. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Synton Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also recorded at Synton Mill in 1797 when his son Francis died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. Capt. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1830). He died unmarried and so the family estate passed to Charles, eldest son of his oldest sister, who sold it. He is probably the Capt. John who is listed as owner on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He must be different from the Capt. John recorded earlier. John (b.1805) son of James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He was a joiner at Old Gatehousecote in Hobkirk Parish. By 1851 he was a joiner at Old Belses. He married Helen Curran Murray in 1831. Their children included Robert, James, Walter, Isabella, John, Helen and George. In 1855 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tasmania, where several sons worked as carpenters. Rev. John Hunter (19th C.) evangelical minister from Kelso from the early 1840s. The Congregational Church in Kelso started in 1841 and met in the Friends’ Meeting house there. He led the first communion service of what would become the Hawick Congregational Kirk in May of 1848. This was in the Suscription Rooms, with an audience of about 45 people. He had been invited to Hawick in 1847 by William Munro, minister of the faltering Congregational group in Hawick, and took up the invitation in the Spring of the following year. The ‘mission’ of intense prayer meetings lasted for 7 weeks and had to be moved twice to larger premises. Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh joined after the first week, and they preached together for the next 6 weeks, the direct result of which was the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk (which became today’s Congregational Kirk). He preached himself every other week until Alexander Duff arrived in late 1848. John (b.1811/2) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was at Old Larriston. His wife was Agnes Scott and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Janet, John, William, James and Andrew. John (1838–1914) composer of the music for ‘The Border Queen’, written specifically for Thomson’s words. Born in the West End, he was (probably) son of Thomas. However, his early years are unclear. He is probably the John who was 3 years old when listed with his sister Mary living with Ann Anison on the High Street, in 1851 was a ‘pauper scholar’ lodging on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 was a boarder at 4 Melgund Place working as a shoemaker. He worked for 30 years as a shoemaker, with Robert & William Burnet of the Howegate. He apparently had a fine baritone voice and was prominent in the choir of the Catholic Church in Hawick. In 1884 he emigrated to Australia as a hotel keeper, to help out his widowed sister. There is a report of a ‘Hawick Night’ at the Middleburgh Hotel there in 1885. He is recorded as a subscriber to the 1888 and 1889 Common Ridings, where his address is Royal Hotel, Rockdale, Sydney, N.S.W. He was a member of the Sydney Scottish Borderers Association. He returned to Hawick in 1892 and 1901, and was apparently preparing to return for the quater-centenary when he took ill. It is not known whether he wrote any other music. In 1860 he married Margaret Gallagher. Their children included: Mary (b.1861); Ann (b.1863); Edward (b.1866); William (b.1866); John (b.1870); His daughter Margaret married Bailie John Gilroy. He is buried at Rockwood Necropolis, Sydney. John (19th C.) iron merchant who was one of the early elders of St. Andrew’s Free Church. Katherine (15th/16th C.) younger daughter of Philip, who was the only son of James of that Ilk and Wells. After the death of her brother Richard of that Ilk, there was dispute over succession to the lands and titles, Rutherford and Wells going to her sister Helen, with the rest going to their uncle Thomas. She lost out on her portion due to her fornication with a relative, James Stewart of Traquair, who she married when quite young. He died at Flodden and she claimed ‘that in tender age she had been reft away by the said James Stewart, held in subjection and compelled to marry him’. In 1536 she was ‘Lady of Trakquare’ when she had a court order not to communicate with the rebel Douglases who were in England. Her son and heir to Traquair was William Stewart.
Rutherford

Lawrence (15th C.) recorded as tenant in Oakwood in 1494/5. He had remission for a number of crimes: stealing cattle from several different people, including an ox from the Vicar of Ancrum; resetting Robert Young and William Scoon; stealing sheep from Yair and Kershope; stealing and resetting horses; burning the farm of Hartwood; and stealing from the widow of William Dickson. His surety was John Rutherford of Edgerand. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He had remission for stealing sheep from Ninian Murray out of Kershope, with George, junior Laird of Hundalee as his surety. He was ‘in quhitmeir’, which was probably Whitmuir. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cows from a servant of Margaret Murray out of Traquair. He was recorded being ‘now in ‘hartwod’ (probably the lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk). His surety was Ralp Ker of Primside Loch. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £20 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being ‘of Rydvell’ and Marie Turnbull was also there, but it is unclear where it was. Mungo (16th C.) tenant of Nisbet. He was on the 1553/4 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Bramsholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Kentigernum Ruthirfurd in Nesbet’ and may also have been known as Quentin. One of his descendants was John (brother of Gavin), who married Grizel Ramsay, and died at East Nisbet in 1630. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) early member of the family. He witnessed a document in the Melrose charters in the period 1269-89. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He held the Manor of Doddington in Northumberland, which was forfeited by Edward I; in 1306 his grand-daughters and heiresses, Eva and Marjorie, petitioned the English King to restore their lands of ‘Doddingstone’. ‘Blind Harry’, in his history of 1460, states that he met Sir William Wallace in Ettrick Forest with 60 warriors. He may have been related by marriage to Marion Braidfute, heiress of Lamington. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Nicholas of Yetholm (d.c. 1457) probably son of Sir Richard of that Ilk. He may be the Nicholas who received charters for Kirk Yetholm, Grubet, Makerstoun, Corbet and other lands in the years 1421, 1426 and 1430. However, these generations are quite confused. Probably the same Nicholas was part of a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam. He served as Bailie in Liddesdale for William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, recorded in 1428/9. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. He was also Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1436 for the granting of the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn; he is there ‘Nicolaud de Rutherfurdf de Zhetam’. He is probably the Rutherford who was Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1439 for a charter for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1449, along with his brother James of that Ilk, he was appointed as a guarantor of a treaty with the English. He may be the ‘Nechole of Rutherfurde’ who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1456 of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1458 his heir John was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to his having previous handled the accounts of Jedburgh. He may be the ‘Nicol’ who was a younger son of Sir Richard of that Ilk, and ancestor of the Henderlee (or Hundalee) branch. His son John also witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee in 1436, and separately also John of Hundalee (showing that they are separate people). His son John married Elizabeth Rutherford of Yetholm. He had a grandson, John, who became Provost of Aberdeen, with that office also being filled by 3 later generations of the same family. Sir Nicholas of Hundalee (d.1572/3) probably son of George, whom he succeeded in about 1545. He married his distant cousin Margaret and secondly married Margaret McDowell. He was listed (along with his father George and brother Andrew) among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He may be the Nicholas said to have been one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland in 1531. In 1544 he was among local Lairds who gave their pledges to England. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford, accused of raiding the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Bramsholme in collusion with the English. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He is probably the Laird of Hundalee who was appointed as a deputy march warden in 1553. In 1553/4 he was first listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers and the pledge for him was Bartholomew of the Grange. He and other Rutherfords also appeared to promise that Adam and Charles, their pledges, would remain in ward in Edinburgh. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Bramsholme and Buccleuch. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the

with the Bailies of Jedburgh to the price of

the King. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliaments, Kers and Turnbulls in a bond of allegiance

Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherstated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of

of Smailholm. However, in some genalogies he is

Nicholas

Makertoun. Nichol may have been another son.

Andrew Ker of Graden; Mary, who married David

who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and of Haining) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. In 1564 he and James Langlands of that IIk were listed as sureties for Ormiston of that IIk in the bond between the Scotts and Kers and their supporters. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Also in 1565 he was engaged in a serious dispute with the people of Jedburgh, and tried to insist that they should chose him as their Provost, because of family tradition;

a number of Burgesses and local landowners were summoned before the Privy Council to resolve the ‘allegeit bluid and inymitie’. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel

Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he and his sons Andrew and Nichol were sureties for George in the Grange. In 1596 and again in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves.

He is said to have been at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575, although it seems more likely that was his son. He signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbolls in 1578 (although perhaps this was 1569). His children included: George,

who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and

Andrew Ker of Graden; Mary, who married David

Ainslie of Fala; and probably Martin, vicar of Makertoun. Nichol may have been another son.

Nicholas (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherford-

s. He may be the ‘Nycholl Ruderfurd’ who signed the bond between the Rutherfords and Kers in 1560. Nicholas of Hundalee (c.1565–c.1628) son of Andrew of Hundalee and Margaret Hoppringle

of Smailholm. However, in some genalogies he is stated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of

Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherfords, Kers and Turnbolls in a bond of allegiance to King. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliament, along with Douglas of Bonjedward, to meet with the Bailies of Jedburgh to fix the price of

and in 1620 gave a charter of Belses to his son-in-law, Sir James Ker of Crailing. He was listed as a land-owner in the Barony of Belses in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. He married Martha, daughter of Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded in 1633; John; James; Marie, who

Ker, 2nd Lord Jedburgh; Margaret; and Anna.

Ninian ‘Ringan’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde’. Along with ‘Hew of Douglace’ he appears to have captured George

Young, who Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring before the next Justice Aire in Jedburgh.

He could be the Ninian in Ancrum who was surety for his brother John at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5; John did not appear. This same Ninian in Ancrum was allowed to ‘compone’ for many crimes in 1494/5, in particular stealing livestock and grain from several tenants in Fairnington, as well as thefts along with his brother

John, with the Laird of Rutherford as surety. In 1502 his surety was his brother John (who was also surety for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston), who failed to appear and hence was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized.

Presumably he was the same as Ninian in ‘uvir ancrum’ who was surety for himself in 1502 and was fined and deprived of his lands until he found surety. Philip (d.bef. 1492) eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His widow later married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had an only son, Richard (who succeeded his grandfather), and 2 daughters: Helen, who married Sir John Foreman of Davine, secondly Andrew of Hunthill and may also have married 2 other times; and Katherine (or perhaps Christian), who married James Stewart of Traquair and later became heir of the Rutherfords of that Ilk. He pre-deceased his father. In 1495 his widow (now wife of Scott of Branxholme) brought a case to the Lords of Council demanding payment of promised rentals. Philip (15th/16th

C.) witness of a sasine for the Erskines in the lands of Synton in 1508. He could not have been the son of James of that Ilk (and Margaret Erskine), since that Philip died before his father, several years earlier. Perhaps the same Philip, son of Alan, was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn; his brother John was also listed. Philip (16th C.) probably younger son of Richard and son of Thomas of Edgerston. He is recorded as being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. As part of the agreement, Andrew, son and heir of Robert Ker of Newhall was to marry his daughter; he signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he was unable to write. He may have been son of John in Edgerston, whose earlier murder was part of the feud. John Rutherford, also in Edgerston, who signed the 1560 bond, was probably his brother. In 1573 he and John ‘broder in Edyarstoun’ were among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was a tutor to his brother Richard’s son Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. Sir Richard (c.1345–1424/5) probably son of William (or possibly a younger brother). He was said to be a favourite of King Robert III. In 1390 he was ‘of that Ilk’ when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. He was one of the ambassadors to the Court of England in 1398 and was also Warden of the Marches from about this time. About 1399 he was captured by the English, according to the story along with his 5 sons (although he may in fact have had no more than 3 sons) and John Turnbull (‘out with the sword’). In 1424 (apparently not long before his death) he made a ‘retour of inquest’ for lands of Hownam, witnessed at Hawick. He married Jean Douglas and their sons were: Sir James: John of Chatto, ancestor of the Hundalee branch; and Nichol, ancestor of the Hunthill branch. He was succeeded by James, although there is some suggestion that he was predeceased by his son and succeeded by his grandson James. He may also have had sons William (or Gilbert) of Eckford and Sir John, who was killed at Cravant in France along with Sir John Turnbull. Richard of that Ilk (d.c.1502) grandson and heir of James of Rutherford, only son of Philip. He was the last Rutherford of that Ilk. He was served heir to his ‘goodfather’ (presumably grandfather) according to an inquest in 1499. A document of 1500 shows lands of his going to several Kerrs because of ‘non-entry’. He is probably the Richard whose name led a 1501 list of Rutherfords and others whose fines were compounded by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He died without children, leading to a dispute over who should succeed to the estates and titles, these mainly going to his uncle Thomas, although his sister Helen inherited the estates of Rutherford and Wells. However, in 1502 the gift of ward of the lands of Rutherford was granted by James IV to Andrew, Bishop of Moray and his brother John Forman.

Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. In 1502 he had remission for wounding George Young in Minto Craig, as well as stealing several items from Young. His surety was John Rutherford of Hundalee. Richard of Edgerston (16th C.) son of Thomas (or perhaps Robert). He is probably the ‘Richart Rutherfurd of Edyarstoun’ listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledges were Charles and John ‘some of the Grene’. He may have succeeded about 1558 and in 1559 he finally settled the dispute over succession to Rutherford lands and titles with his cousin, Sir John Stuart of Traquair (who received the estates of Rutherford and Wells). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands with John Haitlie of Mellerstain in order to settle the feud between those particular families and he signed ‘at the pen led by the notar’ (meaning that he could not write himself). In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1564 he was ‘Lard of Edyarstoun’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle. Also in 1567 he was surety for entering several men with the War- den. In 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour. He also signed a bond to suppress the Border thieves in 1569 and another recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with John, younger of Hunthill, and 2 Turnbulls. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioned (along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule) for several men from Southdean, as well as for John of Hunthill. He himself swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Andrew, younger of Hun- dalee, as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Rox- burgh’ in 1573. He signed a ‘bond of manrent’ to Archibald, Earl of Angus in 1574. He was at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. Also in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1583/4 he (or his son) was among the Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He married Elizabeth (‘Bittie’), sister of John Rutherford, the ‘Cock o Hunthill’. He was probably succeeded by his son Richard. Other sons may have been: John of the Tofts, a man of prudigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot; Philip, tutor of Edgerston; and Gilbert of ‘the Aicks’. Richard (16th C.) Provost of Jedburgh. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. In 1569 he was also among the signatories of a bond to suppress thieves on the Border. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for Hob Young in Waterside. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1605) probably son of Richard (although not all sources agree there was another generation here). He was witness to the 1595 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He married Jean, daughter of William Elliot in Hartsgarth. They had a son Thomas (the ‘Black Laird’), and a daughter Margaret, who married Thomas Haliburton of Newmains. He may also have had 8 other sons who helped him in his exploits on the Border; however, this could be confusion among generations, since it is separately claimed that he was helped by his 6 brothers. His daughter Jean was served as his heir in 1611. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1615) eldest son of Thomas ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Robert. Richard of Littlheugh ‘Dickon Draw-the-Sword’ (d.c.1634) son of John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ or possibly William of Littlheugh. He led the Jedburgh men at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575. He is probably the Richard, son of William of Littlheugh who was accused in 1590 of raiding into England. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He was on the inquest for the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622 and 1623. He also served as Provost of Jedburgh, an office later held by his nephew, John of Bankend. He appears to have been unable to write, since his signature had to be led when he supported a bond with the Earl of Bothwell. He married Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Lilias’ sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died without an heir) and John of Capehope. John of Capehope’s grandson, Capt. John, became 5th Lord Rutherford in 1737. Richard (b.1822/3) tailor in Hawick. In 1851 he was a Master Tailor at Market Place (i.e. the Tower Knowe), employing 1 man and 1 apprentice. His wife was Agnes. Robert (12th C.) perhaps the earliest known member of the family. Sometime in the reign of David I he witnessed a charter to Gervase de Rydal. He is there recorded as ‘Rober tus dominus de Rodyrforde’. There is no clear genealogy connecting him with later generations. However, it seems likely he was an ancestor of Hugh, who is recorded in about 1200 and Gregor, who is recorded in about the 1210s to 1230s. Sir Robert (d.1330) son of Sir Nicholas. He was said to be a friend of Robert the Bruce, accompanying him on the trip to Palestine with the heart of James Douglas. He died in Spain. Robert of Chatto (c.1410–bef. 95) son of Sir George of Chatto and Janet. However, these generations are confused, and it may be that there are two men here, one being a son of John of Chatto. In 1429 there was a confirmation by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the gift made formerly to his father George, of the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddyliscлуч’ and Hangingshaw; this was confirmed in 1439/40. In 1437 he was one of those who was on the ‘retour’ at Jedburgh for Sir William Douglas of Drumlarnig inheriting the East Mains of Hawick, and was also on the 1450 retour for William Douglas to inherit his father’s Barony of Hawick. In 1464 there is a grant of lairs in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey to him and his wife Margaret (a highly unusual example of the granting of the right of sepulture). In 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also on the panel to rule on the disputed lands of Kirkton.
Mains and the Flex. In 1465 he had a charter from Simon of Glendinning for the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill (which he is said to have acquired by marriage). He is recorded in 1468 in a document relating to lands of Crailing for the Homes of that ilk. In 1471 he witnessed a document for Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Simon Glendonyn. He had a charter of the lands of Hunthill and half of Scraesburgh from his father-in-law in 1465/6. He witnessed a charter for James Rutherford of that ilk in 1468, another for William, Lord Abernethy in 1471. He is probably the Robert who was pledge for James of that ilk in 1471 and whose fine for absence from the Beltane Court was remitted in 1478. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. In 1486 he is mentioned along with George and Richard, probably his sons. He was succeeded by his son George of Hunthill, while Robert of Chatto was probably another son. Robert (15th C.) assigned the lease of Aikwood in 1484, along with his grandson and heir, Ninian. He leased it with his son Lawrence in 1485. Robert (15th C.) son of Lawrence. In 1490 he was assigned the Crown lands of the Middeasteal of Hartwood. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Robert (16th C.) listed as 'Roben' among 'Scottesmen rebels resete within England' in 1540. He was said by the English Wardens to be hiding in Redesdale. He may be related to George 'Cockbank'. Robert (16th C.) recorded being 'in Edzarstoun' (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He and his friends were said to be responsible for killing William Hattie 'in Fawnis', while his own son John was killed by the Haitlies. It is unclear if he was Laird of Edgerston, or just tenant there, but it seems likely he was father of Richard, who was Laird in the 1560s. He may have been the 'lard of Egerston' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, 'the Black Laird'. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. He acted as a cautioner for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638 (even although it appears to say 'W.'.). Around 1640 he purchased the Mill of Edgerston and other lands, which had been inherited by Francis Elliot of Hartshaugh through marriage. He firstly married Marion (or Margaret) Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Turnbull of Minto. He was succeeded by his son John. He may have been father of 'Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt', who is recorded in a document of 1666 describing the division of the choir of Jedburgh Abbey into burial lairs for various Rutherfords. Robert (17th C.) notary public recorded in 1640 at the admission of Henry Elliot as minister of Bedrule. Robert (d.1724) younger son of John of Hunthill. In 1685 he succeeded his brother Archibald as 4th Lord Rutherford, also inheriting the family lands comprising the Barony of Hunthill, including the 10 merk lands called Gledstane's Lands. In 1691 he sold Nether Chatto and the Barony of Scraesburgh to Sir John Scott of Ancrum. He sat as a peer in Parliament until the Union. He married Dame Sara Ollens and they had 2 children: Margaret, who married Charles Scott of Palace Hill; and John, who died young. Like his elder brothers, he died without male issue and the honours were later claimed by Capt. John, descendant of Richard of Littleheugh. Robert of Bowland (d.1728) son of John of Edgerston. He purchased Bowland (on Gala Water) in 1697. In 1712 he purchased Hollinglee and Thornilee in Ettrick. He married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; she was widow of Alexander Pringle of Whytbank. In 1728 his widow resigned her annuity to her only son James, who succeeded and was M.P. for Selkirkshire. They also had a daughter, Barbara. Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) solicitor in Edinburgh, he was referred to in the family as 'the Nottar'. He was said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He served as Deputy Receiver General for Scotland. He inherited some lands from his father, acquired parts of Capehope from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1701 and bought lands in Scraesburgh in 1702. He firstly married Bethia Lidderdale and they had 2 sons, David and Capt. William, neither of whom produced a male heir. In 1699 he secondly married Alison, only surviving daughter of John Ker of Shaw. Their numerous family included: Robert, who married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton; and Alison, who wrote a version of 'Flowers of the Forest'. He was the last of his family to be buried in the Bell-house at Jedburgh Abbey. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as a 'walker' (presumably a 'waulkker'). His wife was a Cavers (first name not listed) and their children included Robert Rutherford (1706). Other children, baptised in Hawick, who are probably his include: John and William (b.1713); and John (again, b.1716). The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of James, surgeon in Jedburgh. He married Esther, daughter of Robert Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1738 he was one of the 3 ‘heirsportioners’ (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitlaw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitlaw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains of that Ilk. The lands of Dod were divided among them. Rev. Robert (1719/20–90) son of Gideon of Kidheugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1746 and became preacher at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) from 1750 until probably 1756. He moved to Longframlington in Northumberland in that year and became minister at Castleton in 1763, where he was presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–89. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Widdrington of Huxley in Northumberland, and she died in 1768, aged 26. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism’ (1794). Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, who was a solicitor in Edinburgh, said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He inherited his father’s lands in Ancrum and Scraesburgh. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton. Robert of Fairnington (1723–c.94) 4th son of Sir John of Edgerston and Elizabeth Cairncross. He was created a Baron of the Russian Empire following the assistance he gave during Russia’s war with Turkey in 1770. He repurchased the lands of Fairnington in 1779, planting trees and naming fields after some of his Russian friends. He also built a summer house on top of Down’s Law in the 1780s; this was known ever after as the ‘Baron’s Folly’. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and was described at that time as being ‘very independent’. Also in 1788 (and still in 1811) he was listed as owner of Fairnington and neighbouring lands in Roxburgh Parish; he was listed in the county valuation as ‘Baron of the Russian Empire’. He was taxed for having 3 female servants in the period 1785–91, as well as 3 male servants 1785–91 and 4 in 1792, 1793 and 1794 (when he was deceased). He is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls in the 1780s and 1790s, but was deceased in the year 1794/5, when the duty was paid on his behalf by John of Edgerston. He left Fairnington to his nephew, John of Edgerston. There is a portrait of him by Benjamin West. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751). Robert (d.1787) mason in Hawick who married Mary Simpson in 1761. She was daughter of Andrew Simpson and Agnes Turnbull. Their children were probably: Thomas (b.1762); Caleb (b.1765); Helen (b.1767); unnamed (b.1773); Susan (b.1775); and Robert (b.1777), known as a fiddler. He died in Hawick. He was probably born in 1738 in Cavers, son of Thomas, although it has been suggested he is the son of Walter and Isabella Turnbull born in Wilton in 1724. Robert (b.1768/9) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Branzholme Town. He was recorded there as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and was also stated to have been a farm grieve. He married Jane (1784–1859), daughter of James Crawford and Janet Elliot; she was from Wilton, also known as Jenny and Janet and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Their children included: Walter (b.1814), who succeeded as shepherd and emigrated to Canada; and Charles Dickson (b.1825), a grocer living in Hawick. Robert (1776/7–1843) probably son of mason Robert. He was in the Militia in his youth, and noted for refused to flog a fellow soldier. Afterwards he was not himself given corporal punishment (perhaps because he was a balloted soldier), but had his wages reduced by twopence a day as a result; it was said he submitted to this cheerfully for the man ‘had dune him nae ill’. He was well known locally as a fiddler, being described by James Wilson as ‘long remembered by the present generation as a charming performer on the violin’ and ‘without any of the dashing execution of the race of youngsters who strive to dazzle rather than delight, his object was to please’. He paid a yearly visit to Tyneside and performed often at Minto House. A portrait of him exists in the Museum, painted by Adam Brown, and donated in 1897 by his granddaughter, Mrs. Joseph Wilson. He is probably the Robert, recorded as ‘musician’ on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, living with wife Mary and children Robert, William, Thomas, Mary, Martha and Robert (possibly a grandson). Robert (1789–1838) son of Thomas and Maydeline Dryden. He was probably nephew of Caleb. He was a builder at Millbank, i.e. the Mill Path. He probably owned the building on the south side of the top of the Mill Path, labelled ‘Mr. Rutherford’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as a builder at ‘Townhead’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and at ‘Mill bank’ in 1837. He married Jane, daughter of William Waldie; she married William Laidlaw after she was widowed and died in 1871. His children included: Mary (1815–80), or ‘May’, who married William Rutherford, watchmaker; Thomas (1816–69), who married Mary Hutton, and died in Newcastle, New South Wales; William (b.1818), who married Beatrix Brydon and emigrated to Ontario, where he may have named the village of Millbank; Robert (1821–43); Elizabeth (1822–93), who married George Hogg; John (1826–75), who married Elizabeth Hackins; Jane (1828–57), first wife of auctioneer James Oliver; Agnes (b.1830), who married James Johnston and William Laidlaw; George (1831–58), who died in Hong Kong; and James (1833–8). Most of his family were still living at Millbank on the 1841 census. Robert (1814–bef. 61) son of James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge. In 1851 he is listed as a joiner at 4 Bonchester Bridge, employing 1 man. He married Isabella, daughter of shepherd Andrew Hall. Their children were: Helen (1850–60); James (b.1852), who was a joiner with Douglas Taylor; and Isabella (b.1855, although it is unclear if he was the father). He went to America, leaving his family behind, and died there. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living at Hallrule Cottages. Robert (c.1846–98) son of shepherd Walter. He became a shepherd. In 1870 he married Ellen Nichols. His children included Helen or Nellie (b.1870); Walter (b.1871), Ann (b.1875), Roberton (b.1877), Janet (b.1879), Mary (b.1880), Aggie, born in Canada; and John, also born in Canada. In 1882 the family emigrated to Huron County, Ontario and he was farmer at East Wawamash. He was killed by a bull on his won farm in the Camille district of Manitoba. Samuel (17th C.) described as servant to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1642 when he accused a large group of his drinking companions of stealing his wallet and its £11 contents. He was also accused by John ‘Lethane’ of trying to retrieve his wallet through violence. Susanannah (b.c.1795) from England, she was publican in Newcastle upon Tyne, recorded at the King’s Arms in Pigot’s 1837 directory. This was probably the same place that became the Liddesdale Hotel at about 17 Douglas Square. In 1841 she was living with Thomasina (probably her mother). Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for premeditated felonies carried out against him at Bonjedward. The nature of the crimes is not given, but were presumably plundering of his farm. He could be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.bef. 1504) killed in Jedburgh Abbey. In 1504 there was a long list of tenants, factors and servants of the Archbishop of Glasgow, Robert Blackadder, who had remission for involvement in his murder. In 1506 there was remission to John Forman and several Rutherfords for involvement in his murder. It is unclear which branch of the Rutherfords he belonged to, and what the circumstances were that led to his death. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Nicholas, who was denounced as a rebel in 1494/5 for the murder of ‘Duthac Rutherfurde’ and who was also ‘at the horn’ in 1498 for his part in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. The Thomas who was connected with the death of Patrick Hepburn was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Adam Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Thomas of Edgerston (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of James of that Ilk and Wells. His brothers Philip and John died before him, and he succeeded his nephew Richard. However, his niece Helen gained Rutherford and Wells, and he kept Edgerston. He was thus the progenitor of the Lairds of Edgerston. He was probably the son of James of that Ilk who was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was succeeded by his son Richard (or possibly Robert). Other sons may have been: Philip, who lived at Edgerston and was tutor to his nephew Thomas, the ‘Black Laird’; John, who is said to have had 6 digits on each hand and foot, and to have had ‘memorable strength and courage’, and whose descendants occupied ‘the Tofts’; and Archibald of the Townhead, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Townhead and of ‘the Hall’. It is possible he was the Thomas who was on the panel in 1482 for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He may have been the Thomas who as on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525, and who was listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Thomas of the Grange (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Hundalee. He seems likely to be the brother of the Laird of Hundalee who in 1493 acted as surety for Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He was described being in the Grange of

Abbotrule at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he acted as surety for Patrick Rodman. Also in 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Hundalee when he was surety for Jedburgh men. He is listed as being ‘in the Grange’ among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His sons Andrew, George and ‘Dougal Stible’ are also listed (the last presumably being a son-in-law). He was probably succeeded by George. Thomas (16th C.) first man listed as a witness to the instrument of resignation for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30, witnessed at Cavers Kirk. It is unclear whether he was a church official or local landowner, or how he related to other Rutherfords. Sir Thomas ‘the Black Laird of Edgerston’ (c.1550–1615) son of Richard and grandson (or perhaps great-grandson) of the first Robert of Edgerston. His nickname came from his complexion and dark hair (‘being of a swarthy complexion and black haired’), but he was also known as a local leader to be reckoned with, along with his 9 sons (or perhaps this is his 8 brothers). He supposedly turned the tide of battle at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 when he arrived with the Jedburgh contingent; however, he only succeeded as Laird in 1605 and hence it was likely to have been his father or grandfather Richard who was at the Raid. He is also said to have led the Rutherfords at the Battle of the Hencleugh. He married Jean, daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who may have been his cousin (although there is much confusion over this). He is said to have had 9 sons (but this is not documented, and may also have referred to his brothers). He was succeeded by his sons Richard and Robert in turn. A daughter, Jean, inherited Stobs, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. He is also said to have had a daughter Joan, who married William, called ‘Neck of Steel’, son of Robert Elliott of Larriston (but this may be confusion). Thomas of Tofts (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Rutherfurde of Toftis’ in 1610 when he was on an inquest relating to lands in Rulwater. His son Robert was accused of stealing horses in 1623. Thomas of Hunthill (16th/17th C.) son of John of Hunthill. In 1583 he and his father were summoned to appear at Jedburgh to answer charges and in 1593 he was summoned for charges of treason for being an accomplice of the Earl of Bothwell. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance of a man he was cautioner for. In 1612 he had a charter for the lands of Hunthill and others. He married Jean, daughter of John Cranston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son John of Hunthill. His daughter Grizel married Adam Kirkton of Stewarfield, the contract being signed at Wolfelee in 1612. Thomas of Ruecastle (16th/17th C.) probably a younger son of George of Longnewton, he was served heir to his brother Andrew ‘called of Quhytehouse in Nesbit’ . He had a charter of ‘Rouchcastell’ in 1642, along with the attached forest and the mains of Harden. In 1643 he was ‘in Whitehouse’ when his lands in Ruecastle were valued at £240. In 1656 he was referred to as ‘Thomas of Rowcastell, called of Quhytehouse, in Nesbit’. He is probably the Thomas ‘of whythouse’ who paid tax on £340 in Bedrule Parish in 1663, as well as £144 worth of land he had purchased from the Earl of Traquair. He married Elizabeth Mader. It is unclear how he was related to the Thomas of Ruecastle who was served heir to his father John of Knowesouth in 1666. Sir Thomas of Hunthill (d.c.1680) 3rd son of John. He succeeded his brother John in 1656. He is probably the ‘Thomas Rutherfoord called of the towns in Sjraisburgh’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. In 1664 he succeeded to the estate of Rutherford after the death of his relative Andrew, Lord Rutherford and Earl of Teviot. In 1665 he complained to the Archbishop of Glasgow over rights to the loft in Jedburgh Church. He was also made the 2nd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Regality of Hawick in 1672. In that year he wrote to the inhabitants of Hawick exonerating them from attending the Head Court at Thornhill (near Drumlanrig) that year; he wrote from Jedburgh, suggesting that he could be same man as Thomas of Hunthill or Thomas of Knowesouth. Also in 1672 he was recorded, when setting the fair in October, being asked to use the Hawick drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’, rather than the ones from Jedburgh; he called the roll in the kirkyard for all the inhabitants to ride the fair. Thomas of Ruecastle or Knowesouth (17th C.) eldest son of John of Knowesouth. In 1666 he was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling land of Ruecastle, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ (annexed to the Barony of Grubet), as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle with a piece of land called Newtonhaugh (in Bedrule Parish), some land in the Earldom of Rutherford

Traquair and a further 1 1/2 merklands in Ruecastle (in the Barony of Ulston). It is unclear how he was related to the John of Ruecastle recorded a little earlier, but was described in 1666 as ‘junior’ (suggesting this was used to distinguish him, or just that he was a minor when he succeeded). In 1673 his brother Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He paid the land tax in Bedrule Parish in 1678, the lands then valued at £511 and included lands previously in Ruecastle. In 1687 he sub-leased the lands of Minto ‘Kaims and Hills’ from William Mather. He is probably the Thomas of Knowesouth who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He may be have been Laird in 1694 when the Hearth Tax was paid on the Knowesouth estate. He contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1673 he married Isabel, daughter of Robert Ker of Linton (hereditary Bailie of Jedburgh) and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Isobel Ker. He married Cecilia Douglas, grand-daughter of George Douglas of Ardit, and daughter of William Douglas and Agnes Scott (daughter of Patrick of Ancrum). His son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708. His son John (b.1684/5) was probably a doctor and in 1710 married Isobell, daughter of the deceased William Scott of Raeburn. His daughter Ann married William Chisholme of Broadlee in 1702. His daughter Christina (1702-82) married Gilbert Ainslie in 1724. Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1683, he became minister of Southdean Parish in 1689. However, he was deprived later that year for ‘not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, and not praying for their majesties William and Mary’ (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy), and was said to have instead prayed for the late King James. The case was brought to the Privy Council by a group of Southdean Parishioners. He was declared a fugitive, but what happened to him afterwards is not known. Thomas of Edgerston, Hunthill and Wells (c.1650–1720) 3rd son of John. He succeeded after his brother Andrew’s death in 1718, but only held the lands for a couple of years before his own death. They had become ‘of that Ilk’ in 1703 when Robert Earl of Rutherford resigned his lands. He was also Laird of Wells, purchasing it (with his wife’s money) from Charles Stewart, 4th Earl of Traquair in 1687. He was listed as Laird of Wells in 1694 when he paid for 19 hearths in several parishes. He was also ‘of Wells’ when he contributed £800 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1690 and 1704 he was listed as Laird of Wells on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. However, in 1707 he sold Wells it to William Elliot, and was thus the last Rutherford Laird of Wells. He also acquired Bonjedward, Mounthooly and Scraesburgh, before 1707, when he was recorded as owner of more than £2200 worth of land in Bonjedward. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of of Walter Riddell of Minto and Catherine Nisbet of Dirleton. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir John. His other children were: Barbara; Catherine; Jean, who secondly married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1718; Agnes; Isabella; Susanna; and Violet, who married Robert Scott of Falmash. A stone preserved in the new Wells House built in the early 20th century, bore 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of both him and his wife. Thomas of Knowesouth (1742–96) son of John and Mary Ker, he held a charter of Knowesouth in 1758 (his father being declared insane). He was descended from the Rutherfords of Ruecastle. In 1788 he was ‘younger of Knowesouth’ when his lands of Westfield (and others) in Lanton were listed in the valuation roll. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788: he was described at that time as having a small estate, being ‘once Sheriff-Substitute of the County under Oliver of Dinlabyre’ and probably being a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–94. He paid tax for having a male servant in 1778, 1779 and 1794. In the 1788 county valuation he is recorded as owner of ‘Lands in Newcaust acquired from his father’, valued at £48 10s (including teinds). He is still recorded as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls of lands in Lanton, including ‘Lady Lands, formerly in Cavers Parish’. He married Christine Elliot, and their 4 children were: John, who briefly succeeded; George, in the Royal Navy, who succeeded for a very short period; Ann, who married Dr. William Somerville; and Cecilia (d.1804), who died at Knowesouth. None of these children produced heirs. He later married Ann, daughter of William Falla. Their children were: Thomas; Charles; Hugh, who emigrated to Ontario; and William, who lived in Ancrum and married Janet Angus. After his death there the order of inheritance was complicated and disputed, but the estate eventually went to his sister Jean, who married Thomas Scott, uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. Thomas (18th/19th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825, where he is listed as 'watchmaker'. He could be the son of clockmaker William who was born in Hawick in 1784. Thomas (b.1762) son of mason Robert and Mary Simpson. He was elder brother of Caleb. He married Magdalen Dryden in 1787 and they had a son Robert (1789–1838). He may have secondly married Jane Elliot and their children included Francis (b.1794). It seems likely he was a mason, like his father. Thomas (1784/5–1855) son of shepherd Thomas and Helen Reeve. He was a farm worker at Haysike, and is recorded there in 1841. He married Jane, daughter of agricultural worker George Michie, and she died in 1859, aged 75. Their children were: Thomas, gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa; John, shoemaker; and Maggie, who married James Wintrip. Thomas (b.1807/8) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Sandystanes in the 1860s. In 1861 he is recorded there along with his brothers John (retired accountant), George (retired farmer), William (also a farmer) and sister Isabella. He is listed as farmer at Sandystones in 1868. Thomas (b.1811) son of Bonchester joiner James. He served for 21 years in the army. After his discharge he became a policeman in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Police Office, Chelsea Pensioner’, living at 10 O’Connell Street. He married Elizabeth Young in Hawick in 1859 and their Children included: James (b.1859), who worked with Turnbull the Dyers; and Richard (b.1861), who probably died young. Thomas Elliot (1816–1900) son of Thomas, he was born at Branxholme Park. He was gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa (also known as Byreleehaugh) near the head of the Ale and also lived at Bellendean Cottage. He married Christina Scott (granddaughter of ‘The Pether’) at Haysike and she died at Wellogate Place in 1877, aged 54. Their children were: Jane Scott (d.1844), only daughter, who died in infancy at Todshawhill; Thomas, who became a coal merchant; David; George; and Walter R. He and some of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (b.1816) mason in Hawick, son of Robert. In 1841 he was listed as head of the family at Mill Bank, living with his widowed mother and his siblings William, Robert, John, Jane, Agnes and George. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1832–1906) son of James and Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson. His father died when he was young, and in 1841 he is listed with his mother in the home of his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated by George Tancred’s mother and then at Hobkirk School. He was assistant blacksmith at Bonchester Bridgend in the mid-1800s, and effectively took over as blacksmith by the 1860s and formally after his great-uncle Andrew Stevenson’s death in 1871. He helped carry letters to Chesters for a while. His great-grandfather John was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. James Elliot took over from him as blacksmith in about 1902. In 1853 he married Agnes Burns (d.1901), who came from Ancrum. Their children were: Janet (b.c.1853); Andrew Stevenson (b.1854), blacksmith in Newcastle; Elisabeth (b.1856), who lived in New York; Christina (b.1858), a professional cook in New York, who married James Rennie; Margaret (b.1860), who married blacksmith Gideon Scott and lived in Hawick; Agnes (b.1862); John Burns (b.1863), blacksmith in Belfast, who married Jean Waugh, daughter of the tenant at Hartshaugh Mill; Agnes (again, b.1865), who married Ecclefechan blacksmith Andrew Calvert; Thomas (b.1867), a tailor and clothier with businesses in Belfast and Bangor, he married Isabella Sparks, sister of his sister-in-law; Alexander Burns (b.1870); Alexander Burns (again, b.1871), wine and spirit merchant in Crook, County Durham; and James (b.1876), blacksmith for a while and later proprietor of the Fox & Hounds. Said to possess a wonderful memory, he helped George Tancred with information for his book on Rulewater. He died in Hawick. Thomas (1846–1909) son of gamekeeper Thomas and Christina Scott. He became a coal and hay merchant of Wellogate Place. He was active in the Total Abstinence Society, the Congregational Church and the P.S.A. He married Catherine, daughter of William Whillans (from Chesters), and she died in 1935, aged 88. Their children were Thomas, Isabella Christina (who married James H. Haining) and Catherine Jane. He is buried in the Wellogate. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494 when John of Edgerston failed to produce him to stand trial before the High Court of the Judiciary in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Walter ‘in falsishop’ (i.e. Phaup) composon in 1494/5 for stealing sheep from Hartwood and Haining, a cow from Minto, oats from Fairnington and other crimes. Walter, son of Walter in Phaup, failed to appear at the court in 1494/5 and his surety, John of Edgerston, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘lusty’ (probably a nickname meaning ‘lusty’) in Edgerston. He was surety for John ‘Cowar’, also in Edgerston. Walter (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Rutherford Rutherford

Professor of Physiology at Edinburgh University. He may have been son of John of Capehope, being the Walter of Capehope who paid the land tax in Hownam Parish. Walter (1723–1804) younger son of Sir John of Edgerston. He served with the army in America, being a Captain in the 60th Regiment. He persuaded his brother John to join him in America, and there John died at Ticonderoga (where he was probably also present) in 1758. He was later a hostage of the Americans and eventually settled there. He married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander. Their son John (1760–1840) was a land surveyor and politician, who spelled his name ‘Rutherfurd’, served on the U.S. Senate, laid out part of Manhattan and settled New Jersey’s boundaries; he named his house Edgerston’, at what is now called Rutherford, New Jersey. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Walter (1814–97) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. He worked as a shepherd in the Borthwick area. Mabonlaw. He won a silver medal for speed in shearing sheep. In 1851 he was shepherd at Branxholmtown and was at Mabonlaw in 1861. In 1844 he married Ann Clark (1825–55), who may have been from Dyke, Morayshire. Their children included: Mary (b.1845), who married Andrew Huggan; Robert (b.c.1846), who emigrated to Canada; Janet (b.1847), returned to Scotland; John (b.1849), became an undertaker in Glasgow; Charles (b.1851), partner in Rutherford & Kay, wine merchants; Isabella (b.1851), who went to Frankford, New York; and Alexander (b.1854). In 1861 he secondly married Helen Scott Beattie, daughter of John Beattie, shepherd at Combe; her mother was Isobel Scott, said to be related to Sir Walter Scott. Their children were: Isabella (b.1862); Walter (b.1865); Adam (b.1866); Helen (b.1869); James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); and Ann (b.1875). In 1881 they emigrated to a farm at Turnberry in Western Ontario, and he died in Bluevale, Huron County. Walter (19th C.) farmer of Crailing Tofts. He was well known as a local golfer, being first President of the Border Golfers’ Association. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Bunyan from Spittal-on-Rule and his uncle was William Rutherford, Professor of Physiology at Edinburgh University. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. William (13th C.) recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rotherford’ parson of ‘Lillesclyue’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf). ‘Johan de Lillesclif’ was also recorded there, as well as ‘Aynur de Rotherford’ (of Roxburghshire) although whether they were related is unknown. His seal bore a bull’s head with a human head between the horns, and with the name ‘S’WIL’MI DE ROTHIRFORD’. He could also be the clerk of the same name who witnessed a gift of land in Dryfe (Dumfriesshire) in the mid-13th century. William (d.c.1363) probably son of Sir Richard. He was listed as ‘Willelmo de Rotherford’, Lord of that Ilk when he witnessed a charter for Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354 and another for Roger of Alton relating to the Church of Roxburgh. He also witnessed the same lands of Altonburn passing to the Kers in 1357/8. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey. In 1363 he was already deceased when his lands in Teviotdale were granted to the custody of John Ker until his heir William reached the age of majority. However, William probably died before this, since he appears to have been succeeded by Sir Richard, probably his son. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘of Ruderfurde’ in 1429/30 when he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. James (probably of that Ilk) was also listed, but it is unclear how this William was related to other family members. William (16th C.) younger son of George of Hunthill and brother to Andrew and John. In 1544 he was tutor to William of Langnewton. He held lands at Over Ancrum. He married Christian, daughter of Christopher Armstrong of Mangerton; her brother was John Armstrong of Gilnokie. William of Longnewton (16th C.) probably grandson of George of Longnewton and son of Walter. In 1544 William, younger brother of the Laird of Hunthill, was his tutor. He was served heir in 1547, presumably when he came of age. He had sasine for various other lands in 1550. However, he appears to have been murdered by Robert Ker of Newhall, part of a family feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers that led to a bond being signed in 1560. His son George was also mentioned in 1560, and was to be satisfied by Sir Andrew Ker of Liddledean. It is unclear if he or his son was the William who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. William of Kidheugh (16th C.) son of Adam, or perhaps son of Walter, younger brother of George of Longnewton. He is recorded as possessor of Kidheugh in 1545, and also owned Langrink in Selkirkshire. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was on the panel (but transcribed as ‘Reidhauch’) for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William of Longnewton (16th C.) possibly son of the earlier William. In 1578 he signed a bond of allegiance with other Rutherfords, Turnbulls and Douglas of Cavers. He may have died before 1583 when the other barons of the bond were declared rebels. William of Littleheugh (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott ‘the Tinckler’ led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. His son Andrew was accused of being on another raid at the same time, with his sons Andrew and Richard being recorded in 2 additional accusations. His designation was transcribed ‘Lyttelewghhe’. He was also recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. William (d.c.1619) local man described as ‘in Rafflat’ probably Rawflat, Ancrum Parish) in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging too much interest on loans. He appeared to answer the charges. His son William was served as his heir in 1619. William (16th/17th C.) schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was recorded as master there in a deed of 1616. He was also witness to a ‘wadset’ for lands in the Kirkaugh of Hobkirk in 1618; Robert, ‘servitor to William Rutherford, notary public’ was another witness, and so possibly his servant. James Arbuthnott was recorded as master in 1619. He may be the William who was reader at Hownam in 1609. William (17th C.) served as heir to his father William in Rawflat in 1619. William of Bankend (d.bef. 1714) eldest son of John of Bankend, who was Provost of Jedburgh. He was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. In 1676 he sold Bankend (with the consent of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, his wife’s trustee). He was later referred to as being ‘of Lochend’. He married Esther Langlands, who was grand-daughter of George Langlands of that Ilk. His widow is recorded in a bond of 1714. They had 4 daughters, who were served as co-heirs to their father: Margaret; Isobel; Lilias; and Esther. William (17th C.) weaver who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William (17th C.) served as interim Town Clerk in 1696. He was a Bailie of Jedburgh and recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1690 when his son Thomas became a baxter’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as William of Bankend. Dr. William of Barnhills (d.bef. 1731). He bought the lands of Barnhills from Sir William Bennet of Grubet in 1703, with sasine in 1705. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchest. He had 2 daughters: Margaret, who married Rev. Alexander Mackenzie of Edinburgh; Helen; and Jean, who married John Mowbray from Edinburgh. Each of his daughters inherited a third of Barnhills. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Northcroft in 1751. He married Margaret Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1746), baptised in Ashkirk; and Thomas (b.1751), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. William (d.1797) clockmaker of Hawick. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1784). The record of his death states that he was ‘killed by a fall over a stair’. The death of his wife Nelly Scott is recorded in 1805. William (1797/8–1871) probably born in Northumberland, he was teacher at Woodburn 1822–25. He then came to Hawick, where he was teacher of Mathematics and other subjects at the Grammar School. About 1832 he moved to be master at Corporation Academy, Berwick, in 1838 moved to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and retired about 1864. He was a member of the council of the Royal Astronomical Society 1844–47 and Honorary Secretary in 1845 and 1846. He contributed mathematical problems to publications such as the ‘Ladies’ Diary’ and co-edited the first volume of ‘The Mathematician’ in 1845. He also edited many other mathematical books, including ‘Simson’s Euclid’ and Hutton’s ‘Course of Mathematics’. He published about 15 papers, including a solution of spherical triangles, and the calculation of π to 440 decimal places. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a daughter, Mary Fenwick. He died at his home in London. William Oliver (1781–1879) of Edgerston, son of Jane Rutherford and William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was born at Weens, with a celebratory larch planted on the side of the walk to the garden. He succeeded to Dinlabyre on the death of his father in 1830. He was ‘younger of Dinlabyre’ when he served as a Lieutenant in the Roxburgh Volunteer cavalry that responded to the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for the Rutherfords
Rutherford

Roxburghshire in 1805, when still ‘junior of Dirlabyre’. He was also a founder member of the Jed-forest Club in 1810. He succeeded his father as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father), when still younger of Dirlabyre. He was probably the William listed as ‘sheriff clerk, Jedburgh’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was Sheriff during some of the local election troubles of the 1830s, requesting that a troop of dragoons be sent to Hawick in 1835, and reading the Riot Act twice on that occasion. He purchased the estate of Knowesouth from Charles Scott, and had the mansion there built, but sold it not long afterwards to George Pott in 1838 (although may have held on to part of these lands). He also acquired part of the lands of Ruecastle from the heirs of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. After his uncle John of Edgerston died in 1834, he was passed the lands of Edgerston and changed his surname. He was recorded at Edgerston in Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Dinlabyre in 1852. In 1839 he was present at the banquet at Branxholme for the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Chairman of the Lunacy Board for Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, and Chairman of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He retired from his duties as Sheriff in 1868. In 1804 he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse, and she died in 1859. His children included: William, who died young in 1818; a second son who died the same year; Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Denniston in Malta; William Alexander Oliver (b.1818), who succeeded and whose son William Edward Oliver sold Edgerston; Jane, who married McDuff Rhind, Sheriff-Substitute for Wigtownshire; and Archibald John, who succeeded to Dinlabyre. His name was sometimes written ‘Oliver-Rutherford’. William (b.1804/5) watchmaker of Hawick, son of Francis and Alison Henderson. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841–61 censuses he was living at 7 High Street. His mother was living in the adjacent house in 1851. He married May Rutherford, daughter of builder Robert. His children included: Jane (b.c.1839); Alice (b.1841); Francis (‘Frank’) E.; Robert; Matilda, who married Thomas Davidson; Andrew S.; Agnes; and Elizabeth A. A portrait exists of him. William (b.1812) son of Bonchester joiner James. He emigrated to Australia and is said to have done well. When he heard of the death of his brother Alexander (who had suffered paralysis), he sent money back to Hobkirk Parish to cover the expenses for maintaining him. William (b.1813/4) born in Hawick, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was living at Mabonlaw and in 1851 his family were there (but he was presumably absent during the census). By 1861 he was at Glenkerry. His wife was Janet (from Kirkton Parish) and their children included Helen, Robert, James, Janet, William and Thomas. William (1818–80) son of Hawick builder Robert and Jane Waldie. He married Beatrice, daughter of William Brydon and Margaret Hogg. Their children were Margaret, Jean, Matilda, Robert William, Catherine Anne, Elizabeth H., Georgina, Alice Mary, William Thomas and Agnes, at least the first of which was born in Hawick. They emigrated to Ontario in about 1850. It may be that he was responsible for naming the area ‘Millbank’, near Waterloo and Stratford in Ontario. William ‘Willie’ (1849/50–1937) resident of the small house in Cogsmill that used to be the school. His wife ran the post office and shop there. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1925, aged 74. Their son William John was born in Hawick in 1891. They are buried in Denholm (formerly written ‘Rutherford’, ‘Ruderfurde’, ‘Ruderfurde’, ‘Rutherforde’, ‘Rutherfoord’, ‘Rutherfurde’, ‘Rutherfurde’, ‘Ruthurfurd’, ‘Ruthurfurd’, ‘Rutherford’, etc.).

the Rutherfords (thu-ru-thur-furdz) n. prominent family around the Kelso and Jedburgh areas. The family name is believed to have originated in their lands near Maxton, various versions of the traditional story involving a fording of the Tweed that led to Scots victory. They had land in Roxburghshire since at least the 12th century. Aymer and Sir Nicholas ‘de Rotherford’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as well as William, who was Parson of Lilliesleaf. Sir Richard Rutherford, Warden of the Marches, and his 5 sons helped repel English incursions in the years around 1400. He is the direct ancestor of the Rutherfords of Chatto, Edgerston, Hunthill, Dundee, Fairnington and Fairnilee. Robert Rutherford of Chatto gained renown in helping with the victory at Otterburn. In 1544 some of the Rutherfords were among the families that ‘did set on red crosses on their cotes’ and support the English army in the burning of Jedburgh etc. Thomas Rutherford, the Black Laird of Edgerston, was famous for his daring attacks on the English in the 16th century, particularly at the Raid of the Redeswire. The Edgerston branch tended to spell their name ‘Rutherford’. A feud with the Turnbuls in Teviotdale was recorded in Parliament in 1479. General Andrew Rutherford became Lord Rutherford in 1661 and was made Earl of Teviot (a title that became extinct) in 1663. The Rutherfords also held the lands of Wells in Rulewater. The various branches of the family are intimately connected with the other local landed families through marriage. A family of that name in Hawick were known for their abilities on the fiddle for several generations around the 18th century. The family motto is ‘Nec Sorte Nec Fato’ (‘Neither by strategy nor by chance’) and the shield is silver with a red border and three blackbirds at the top – ‘... The Rutherfoords, with grit renown, Convoy’d the town of Jedbrugh out’ [T].

Rutherford (see Rutherford)

Rutherford’s Directory (ru-thur-furdz-dil-rek-tu-ree) n. directory of businesses and prominent individuals in the south of Scotland, as well as listing statistical information for each of the 3 Borders counties. It was officially known as ‘Rutherford’s Southern Counties Register’ and was published in 1867 by J. and J.H. Rutherford of Kelso. It is an invaluable source of local information in this decade, and contains considerably more detail than the more general directories of Scotland. It was reprinted in facsimile form in 1990.

Ruthven (ruh-vin) n. William 4th Lord Ruthven (c.1541–84). Along with his father Patrick, he was involved with the murder of Mary Queen of Scots’ secretary Rizzio. In 1572 he captured a force under Ferniehirst and Buccleuch, which had unsuccessfully tried to surprise Jedburgh (which was loyal to the infant James VI) and then retreated to Hawick. In 1578/9 he was the King’s Lieutenant in the West Marches when he brought an action against 22 Border Lairds for the deeds of the men for whom they served as cautioners. He was later involved in a plot to seize James VI and was executed.

He was minister at Greenlaw from 1905, then at Hillhead in Glasgow and Canmore Street in Denfermline, before taking becoming Hawick Congregational Kirk minister in 1934. His wife was a grand-daughter of Evangelical Union founder James Morrison, and a daughter of another well known E.U. figure, George Gladstone. He was President of the Congregational Union of Scotland, and in this capacity was the first Hawick minister to broadcast a Sunday evening service on the radio, in 1936. He was well known for his talents as a preacher, and led special monthly evening services for young people. He demitted in 1941, intending to retire, but was appointed interim minister in Kilmarnock and later at Sannox, Arran, where he died.

safe oot, safe in (sā-oo’-sā-īn) interj. slogan used to send riders off at the Common Riding, and a toast drunk at some functions. It is also used in other Common Ridings (e.g. Selkirk, Annan, Biggar and Linlithgow), while in Peebles the phrase is ‘Safe oot, safe roond and safe in’. The origin and antiquity of the slogan is uncertain, but it may be related to Psalm 121 ‘The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore’. It is mentioned in 1806 in the letter than William Nixon sent along with the sash for the Cornet, and so its use goes back at least to this time – ‘Wishing the Cornet and his company ‘Safe Out and Safe In’, I have the honour to remain ... ’ [C&L1806], ‘Safe oot, Safe in’ my Border lads! And safely win ye hame’ [RSC], ‘Safe oot, safe in’, our Border prayer We lift it today as when ... ’ [RSC], ‘And, while tae the coast aye the Te’iôt shall rin, Be it honoured the toast aye – ‘Safe oot and safe in’!’ [CB].

In September 1939 about 900 evacuees (mothers, children and teachers) arrived in Hawick, along with 600 others for the Denholm, Minto, Robertson and other country areas. Like other communities Hawick had its own Home Guard, and women helped on farms through the Land Army. The ration book office was at 21 High Street. Stobs Camp became an extremely active place during the War years. St. Mary’s Kirk was requisitioned and Allars Kirk Hall was set up as the reserve headquarters for Civil Defence. Many iron railings around the town were requisitioned for the War effort in 1942. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1940–45, but the marches were ridden by Chap Landles (on his own in 1940), accompanied by some supporters (14 in 1941). Hawick soldiers stationed ‘somewhere in England’ appointed W. Slorance as Cornet in 1940, and ‘somewhere in Scotland’ they appointed E. Moffat as Cornet in 1941. The 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. appointed Jim Reid as their Cornet in 1945, using a flag made by the women at Pringle’s, which was dipped in the Elbe; this was returned with the names embroidered on it of places where they had lost comrades. There were celebrations in Hawick on both V.E. and V.J. Days.

sald (sawld) pp., arch. sold – ‘… and signit thaim to be sald for the payment of the rest of the said sowme …’ [SB1500] (cf. selt).
Salenside (sä-lin-sid) n. farm just south of Ashkirk. There was once an ancient tower there, although there is now no evidence of its precise location, but there is a suggestion that Salenside Cottage was built on the same site. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. Andrew Scott ‘of Salynside’ was said to be part of the raid at Carlisle Castle in 1596. Robert Scott of Salenside was charged with murder in 1614. It was valued at £116 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. John Easton and William Scott were tenants in 1694. John Riddell was living there in 1710. The house had a fire in the 1760s. In 1753 they are described as ‘twenty-shilling lands’. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson, with a value of £116, and still listed with the same owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, being valued (along with Castleisde and Broadlee) at £519. William Little was farmer there in the mid-19th century and William Inglis in the 1860s – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (the origin is possibly the Celtic ‘sallin’, meaning ‘little heel’; also spelled ‘Salinsyde’ etc.; it is ‘Salingyside’ in 1609, ‘Sallensyde’ in 1621 ‘Sullinsyd’ in 1632 and ‘Sallinside’ in 1710; it is marked as ‘Solansyde’ on Blaen’s 1654 map, although quite far south of the Ale Water, and is ‘Sallenside’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).
Salenside Cottage (sä-lin-sid-ko-ej) n. cottage that stands on a knoll, south-west of Salenside farm. It was once suggested that its lower walls were converted from the base of the old tower of Salenside, but it is clear that the walls are not substantial enough for that, and so if this was true, then the cottage must have been rebuilt. More recently it had a 3-storey tower built onto it.
Salisbury Avenue (salz-bu-ree-aw-vi-new) n. street of relatively large houses off Weensland Road, built around 1898. It is named after Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne Cecil (1830–1903), 3rd Marquis of Salisbury, who was Prime Minister 3 times. The designs for the half-timbered villas were by J.P. Alison.
Salkeld (sal-keld) n. Thomas deputy of the English Warden, Lord Scrope. He captured Kinmont Willie in 1596, after a truce meeting to discuss Border disputes – ‘O have ye na heard o the fause Sakelde? O have ye na heard o the keen Lord Scroop? How they hae taen bauld Kinmont Willie, On Hairibee to hang him up?’ [T].
sall (sal) v., arch. shall – ‘… sall content and pay to Jhone of Murray of Fallolhill and Niniane Murray the sovm of thua hundreth merkis …’ [SB1500], ‘… Impr. whatsoever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick, sall pay 5 pundis …’ [BR1640], ‘Item, the clark sal tak for every bill making twa shillings …’ [BR1640], ‘A’ the yirth sall worshup thee, an’ sall sing untill thee; thaye sall sing til thy name’ [HSR], ‘Sall I come skirtin the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh, Or the road by Chapel-hill?’ [WL], ‘Amid destruction Hawick sall flourish, And sall improve when ye sall perish’ [WNK] (auxiliary verb used to indicate intention; also spelled ‘sal’ and sometimes shortened to ‘s’; see also salbe).
sallni (sawl-ni) contr., arch. shall not – ‘The Lord is my shepherd; I sallna inlak’ [HSR] (cf. sanni).
sallt (sawlt) pp., poet. shalt – ‘...thou sallt basch thame inti flendirs like ane patter’s vesshel’ [HSR], ‘I wull instruct thee, an’ teech thee in the waye whil thou sallt gae...’ [HSR].

Sally Maclusky (sav-lee-un-klus-kee) n. nickname for a Hawick character, probably from the 19th century – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

the Salmon Inn (thu-saw-min-in) n. pub at 14 Ladylaw Place in the latter part of the 19th century.

Salt Hall see Saut Haa saltire (sal-tIr, -tir) n. a St. Andrew’s cross, particularly used as a symbol of Scotland – ‘Jests tear through the blue, Bring me back to you, I see my spirit fly, Saltires, I see satires, in the sky’ [Sco].

the Salvation Airmy (thu-sawwl-, sel-vä-shin-är-mee) n. evangelical and charitable movement with a quasi-military style, founded in London in the 1860s and re-named in 1878. The Hawick branch started in 1887, with the founder Gen. Booth visiting the town in 1905. The first meetings were in the Temperance Hall on Croft Road, with location shifting to Silver Street, Drumlanrig Square, Tannage Close and then the Mill Path around 1920. In 1961 the property on Croft Road was purchased and rebuilt into the new Citadel, occupied in 1962 (also spelled and pronounced ‘Selvation’).

Salvation Airmy Citadel (sawl-vä-shin-är-mee-si’-u-del) n. Salvation Army meeting house, on Croft Road, opened in 1962, with previous citadels being located in other parts of the town since 1878.

Sametoun (sav-mee-tin) n. lands said to be in the Barony of Wilton and listed along with Outersidemill and Todshaw when granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. It is unclear what lands the name could refer to, and hence it is possibly an error for the lands of similar name in Oxnam or Jedburgh Parishes.

Sam Marsden’s (sawm-nawrz-dinz) n. High Street fishmonger’s shop on the north side of the High Street in the mid-20th century.

samen (sä-min) adj., arch. same, aforementioned – ‘...and beis nocht tennandis til hym of the same’ [SB1470], ‘...and service of frie tenentitis of the samyn, with the pertinents, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ...’ [SB1509], ‘...desyreing the samen to be ratified, confirmed and approvin by them ...’ [BR], ‘...and obleist him not to wrong the meiths and marches of the samen’ [BR1675], ‘By reason of y manse being remote from other houses and none at present inhabiting ye samen ...’ [PR1711] (also spelled ‘saminn’, ‘samyn’, etc.).

Sam’l Lawrence see Samuel Lawrence

sampil (sawm-pul) n., arch. an example, specimen, especially of stolen goods – ‘The said John Hardie ...to be brought to the mercatt croce of Hawick ...and to stand thereupon with the sampell of the stouth upoun his shouldeurs or ells ane paper upoun his breist or fairhead to declare the fact’ [BR].

samwich (sawm-weech) n. a sandwich.

the Samye Ling Centre (thu-sawm-mee-ling-sen’-ur) n. Tibetan-style Buddhist monastery and community near Eskdalemuir, about 20 miles from Hawick, formerly the estate of Johnstone House. It is named after a Tibetan monastery, and was started by 2 American buddhists who had started a small temple and gifted the house and grounds to 2 visiting abbots in 1967. It became Scotland’s first Buddhist monastery, and the first phase was largely completed by 1988, with the full courtyard still being worked on, and plans to make it the most extensive temple outside Tibet. It was inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1993.

sanct (sangt) n., poet. a saint, either literally or figuratively – ‘A sair sanct for Ettrick hospitality Mr Boston must have been!’ [DH].

the Sandbed (thu-sawnd-bed) n. name for the relatively low-lying area near the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot, now an official name for the street from the roundabout to Albert Road. The name derives from the alluvial, sandy deposits that were there before the area was built up (interestingly, Kilmarnock also had a Sandbed from early times, and there is also an area in Dumfries that had that name). The name goes back at least to the late 17th century and the area was formerly part of the Common. In 1712 it is recorded that someone was fined ‘for breaking the ground in that part of the common called the Haugh and Sandbed, at the foot of the Church-wynd, by digging, delving, and bigging of ane dyke there’. It eventually became an enclosed space, which was well used on market and fair days (e.g. in 1701). There were houses across what is now Buccleuch Street and an archway gave access to the gardens there. It stopped being used for public gatherings with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1741. The land around the area was feued for building in 1782, split into lots for houses (with a 99 year lease) and 2 building areas in the centre were sold in 1791. When the New Road was opened in 1815 the market was moved to the Tower Knowe. At the same time the houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished to provide access to Buccleuch Street. The name was officially changed to Teviot Square by the Town Council from the late 1840s, but it was never popular and was abandoned after about 10 years. There was a public weighing machine for use by carriers near the Ewe & Lamb from before the days of the railway until the latter part of the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed renovations to Nos. 11 and 12 in 1895. The area also saw traffic lights introduced in 1939. The traffic pattern was altered with a more substantial roundabout and demolition of the island site of 3 and 4 Sandbed in 1987. The street contains a post office, a launderette and the Angling Club offices. Note that the building on the corner is unusually 5 stories high. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are grade C listed buildings – ‘Then through the Sandbed the pair did go…’. [WE].

Sandbed (sawn-bed) n. also called ‘Sandbed English’, a humorous term for an attempt to speak English by someone who normally speaks only broad Hawick, an affected, comical mixture of proper English and broad Hawick, e.g. ‘pussy get down off that ruif’ – ‘he was speakin in his best Sandbed’.

Sandbed English (sawnd-bed-ing-glesh) n. affected English spoken by someone who normally only speaks in dialect – ‘San’bed English, ‘fine’ English as attempted to be spoken by a Borderer, in which Scotch words are unintelligibly introduced’ [GW] (see Sandbed).

Sanderson (sawn-dur-sin) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Margaret Porteous and their children included: Janet (b.1681); and Margaret (b.1684). Walter Scott was witness in 1681. James Scott and Walter Gledstains in 1684 and Walter Sanderson (presumably a relative) and Robert Wright in 1686. He may be the tenant in ‘Hoap’ (perhaps Heap) whose will was recorded in 1686. Probably the same Adam was recorded as witness to baptisms in Roberton Parish for James Scott in 1680 and for John Hope and John Martin in 1681. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford in Roberton in 1685. Their children included: Andrew (b.1686); Helen (b.1687); and Robert (b.1689). The 1687 witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He could be the same Adam who was previously married to Margaret Porteous. Adam (17th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1711), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (b.1704), baptised in Minto, may also have been their child. The witnesses in 1711 were merchant Thomas Hardie and carrier James Aitkin. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (d.1750) resident of ‘Greenside’ in Wilton Parish whose funeral is recorded. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1681). The witnesses were James Deans and Walter Sanderson (who was surely related to him). He witnessed a baptism for George Ridell in 1681. James (17th/18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who left £60 to the poor of Hawick Parish in 1748 (and so was presumably a native). Probably the same merchant James witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1737 and others in 1740 for gardener Walter (who was probably related) and for smith Robert Young. James (18th C.) took over part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1726, after the death of Robert Scott. He is probably the James who married Beatrix, daughter of James Davidson, in Hawick Parish in 1711; his children may have included James (b.1713), Margaret (b.1714) and Janet (b.1717). Jean (c.1730–c.1810) wife of Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’. She received a widow’s pension of £40 and lived in a cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ a little below Stobs Castle, on the opposite side of the Slitrig. She became known for her dirty habits and wild appearance and was evicted by Sir William Elliot, who had her house demolished, apparently because her appearance and behaviour frightened his horses. Thereafter she lived in Hawick. She was said to have turned down a suitor later in life, when she discovered she would lose her pension if she remarried. She survived her husband by about 50 years. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret ‘Bleakie’ in 1680 and their children included: James (b.1680); Margaret (b.1683); Jean (b.1686); and Adam (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were James Scott and James Blakie and in 1686 were James Blakie (perhaps related to his wife) and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassendean’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a ‘half-pecke ane mutchkin short’. She may be the ‘Marie’ recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hanick Toun’. She could be the Marie, wife of John Nasmith, whose son William Nasmith was born in Hawick in 1652. Robert (18th C.) living in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed daughter was baptised in 1734, with no residence given. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) tenant of one of the local farms of Alexander Lord Home in 1562/3. Home (as superior of Midshiels, Appletreethall, Broadlee, ‘Cotlaw’, Burnside and mill) tried to have his ‘pretended tenants’ removed. Thomas (17th C.) resident at ‘millmaue’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He was probably a farmer at Moormaw. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism along with Walter in 1688 for James Shiel in east Burnfoot. He married Helen Shiel in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Bessie (b.1685); and Helen (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott (probably of Lees) and James Shiel (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1680); Helen (b.1683); and Simon (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Deans and James Shiel. He could also be the Walter, married to Isobel Shiel, whose had a daughter Jean (b.1694) baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish in 1681 for James, in 1682 for William Nichol, herd in Boonraw, in 1686 for Adam (who was probably a relative) and in 1688 (along with Thomas) for James Shiel in East Burnfoot. Walter (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. He is probably the Walter ‘in Apelttreehall’ whose wife Janet Brown’s will is recorded in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer in Hawick. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Anna (b.1716); and William (b.1719). The witnesses in 1712 were smith John Scott and wright Francis Gledstains. William (18th C.) resident at Heap in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Aitken in 1725 and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1726. The witnesses were William and James Aitken (probably related to his wife). He is probably the William in 1735 witnessed a baptism for William Lamb, resident of Wester Burnfoot. William (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is probably the William who married Betty Little in 1779 and had children: James (b.1780: William (b.1781); Isabel (b.1784); James (again, b.1787); and Margaret, who died in 1809. William ‘Wulie’ (1853–1943) journalist, editor of the ‘Border Magazine’, poet and museum curator from Peebles. He gave us the words and music for ‘The Soft Lowland Tongue’, which is also sung in many other Border towns. He sometimes wrote under the name ‘Tweedside Laddie’ (formerly ‘Sanderson’).

Sandhope see Sundhope

Sandilands (san-dee-lindz) n. Sir James of Calder (d.bef. 1426) son of Sir James and Jean Stewart, daughter of King Robert II. He was thus brother-in-law of King Robert III. He held the right to inherit several lands and titles following the death of Isabella, Countess of Mar (sister of the King’s son-in-law, George Douglas, Earl of Angus). This included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffship of Roxburghshire, Lordship of Jedburgh, Lordship of Liddesdale, lands of Bonjedward and town of Selkirk, as well as lands further afield. In 1397 he passed them on to George Douglas, Earl of Angus, but they reverted to him after the Earl’s death, as confirmed in a charter of Robert III in 1404/5. Confusion over the Barony of Cavers grew out of the earlier grant to Archibald Douglas (1st of Cavers) not being confirmed by Robert III. Sometime around 1390 he and John Haliburton of that Ilk granted the lands of Falnash and others in Tranent to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1425 he is mentioned in a charter for Patrick Lindsay and in 1426 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. He married Jonet and was succeeded by his son Sir John. James of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for attacking the Earl of Arran. His sons John and William are also listed. He was Captain of Hermitage Castle for a short period in 1532/3. James (d.1579) 1st Lord Torphichen, brother of John of Calder. He was son of a first cousin of the Parson of Hawick with the same surname. He held lands in Rule valley, with the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (part of Harwood) being feued to Andrew Turnbull in 1567. He married Janet Murray and died without an heir. John (d.1583) second son of James of Cruvie (and descendant of the daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Liddesdale and Cavers, as well as being descended from a daughter of Robert II). He was Parson of Hawick, although he may simply have held the living and not actually preached in the Parish, since William Auchmowtie served as Reader of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton at the same time. He held the `prebend' of Hawick before the Reformation. He is recorded as witness to a charter relating to John Sandilands of Calder in 1554, where he is described as `Rector of Hawick'. He is also recorded with this title in 1557. Thus he was probably associated with Hawick Parish both before and after the Reformation. In 1558 both he and John Spottiswood are described as Rectors of Hawick in a charter for James, Lord Torpichen. In 1569/70 the Bailies of Edinburgh ordered that town to pay him the `maillis' he was owed for the grammar school there; he was said to be `persoun de Hawik', but clearly was based in Edinburgh. He was still `parson and vicar' in 1581 according to a document relating to teinds with Hawick, although he may simply have held the living and not actually preached in the Parish, since William Auchmowtie served as Reader of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton at the same time. He held the `prebend' of Hawick before the Reformation. He is recorded as witness to a charter relating to John Sandilands of Calder in 1554, where he is described as `Rector of Hawick'. He is also recorded with this title in 1557. Thus he was probably associated with Hawick Parish both before and after the Reformation. In 1558 both he and John Spottiswood are described as Rectors of Hawick in a charter for James, Lord Torpichen. In 1569/70 the Bailies of Edinburgh ordered that town to pay him the `maillis' he was owed for the grammar school there; he was said to be `persoun de Hawik', but clearly was based in Edinburgh. He was still `parson and vicar' in 1581 according to a document relating to teinds with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear whether he held the position until his death. He married Janet Craig and had 1 child, Margaret. He died in Edinburgh, where his last will and testament is recorded (also spelled `Sandelandis').

the Sands (thu-sawndz) n. alternative name used for the Sandbed before about 1700.

Sandy (sawn-dee) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also sometimes ‘Sandie’).

Sandy Burnett’s (sawn-dee-bur-nits) n. popular name for the hill below Greensidehall, presumably named after a former owner of the nearby farm.

Sandy Fussy (sawn-dee-fu-see) n. name given to at least one rag and bone man of the early 20th century, who would give balloons to children in exchange for scrap items. The original ‘Sandy Fussy’ probably predated this, although whether he was fictional is unclear.

Sandy Fussy’s Cairt (sawn-dee-fu-seez-kär) n. name sometimes used for the local children’s rhyme, sung to the tune of ‘the Keel Row’ (and similar to ‘Charlie is my darling’), see Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum.

Sandhyaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by Scott of Woll in 1609, when it is ‘Sandiehauch’. It is ‘Sandy Hall’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map, marked to the east of New Woll, near where the Woll Burn meets the Ale Water. John Scott was recorded there in 1788 and Andrew Scott was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Cleghorn was farmer in the 1840s to 60s.

Sandhyaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former cottage in the Ewes valley, on the other side of the main road from the farm of Bush. There were Welshes there in 1841 and Welsches, Jacksons and others there in 1861. Poet Matthew Welsh lived here.

Sandypatch Sike (sawn-dee-pawch-sik) n. small stream in souther Liddesdale, joining Tinnis Burn to the south of the farm of Redmoss.

Sandystanes (sawn-deestanz) n. Sandystones, farm by the Ale Water, east of Belses. This may be the ‘Standestanerig’ (in West Lilliesleaf) which was sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey in the early 1200s. In 1502 it is recorded that 120 of George Rutherford’s sheep had been stolen from there by William Turnbull of Minto and reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters. Robert Taylor was also recorded there in 1502. It was owned by George Rutherford of Langnewton in 1506 when the Turnbulls of Minto attacked the farm, burning barley and oats there. It is mentioned in 1508, with lands of 120 or 140 acres here between the Sandstones and ‘Vuiralan’crum’ (or ‘Vuiran’crum’), commonly called the Sandystanes, being attached to the Lordship of Liddesdale. John ‘Ritchisone’ was there in 1694, James Rutherford in 1797 and Thomas Rutherford in 1868 (the name derives from its situation between two fords, which are paved with stones; it is ‘sandy Stanis’ in 1502 and ‘SandeStanis’ in 1508).

sang (sawng, sang) n. a song – ‘...And never mair, at a Gloamyne Buchtie, Wald she singe an’ other sange’ [JTe], ‘The Sang o’ sanges, whilk is Solomon’s’ [HSR], ‘O sing untill the Lord ane new sang . . .' [HSR], ‘But troth, by the way I sing this sang, You’ll hear wi’ my brogue there’s something wrang . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘. . . And the auld soul-sturrin’ sangs’ [WL], ‘I’ll sing a sang o’ Hawick my name: I’ll sing it a’ my days’ [GD], ‘And the never restin’ waves Sing their never endin’ sang’ [TK], ‘. . . But aye the sweetest sang they hear Is Hawick ‘mong the Hills’ [MrsW], ‘. . . and lang may they flourish Wi their ain tribal ploys and ceremony and sang . . . ’ [DH].

the Sang Singer (thu-sawng-sing-ur) n. official singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Song Singing ceremony. He also has many other duties to perform at the Snuffing. He leads the singing of ‘Teribus’ outside St. Leonards farmhouse after the Thursday Night Chase and after the Thursday and Friday morning ‘Huts’. He also leads the singing of the ‘Auld Sang’ outside the Tower before the riders set out on the Friday morning, and he sings the complete version of Hogg’s song at the ‘Sang Singin’. The first singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ was James Scott in 1819, and he was followed by James Robson, Mark Nichol and Frank Scott (‘Uncle Braid’). Then there was John Scott (in 1875). Later came Charles Hessel, William Clark (1883–1907), James Yule?? (from 1907), Hamilton B. Little (after 1918), James Yule 1946, ?? Black, Harry Storie (??–1972), Bert Armstrong (1973–84), Henry Douglas (1985–99) and Michael Aitken (2000–).

the Sang Singin (thu-sawng-sing-in) n. ceremony that takes place at the Mill Path on a specially constructed platform as part of the Common Riding. This is near to the site of ‘Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage’, on the thatched roof of which the ceremony took place until 1859, and at the old boundary of the Burgh with the lands of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1860 the ceremony took place amid the ruins of the old cottage, and thereafter has been held near the site, except in 1919 when it was temporarily moved to the Horse monument. Before the current permanent platform was built at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent (when ??) a temporary one used to be erected on the other side of the road. The ceremony is held on the Friday afternoon, immediately after the Principals have been to the Dipping of the Flag. It involves the singing of ‘Teribus’, following the official announcement that the marches have been duly recorded. There ceremony of 1889 may be the earliest recorded in a photograph. Since 1905 the Drums and Fifes have played the party back to the Town Hall to return the Flag.

Sangster (sawng-stur) n. Evelyn along with husband Gilbert, organiser of the Hawick Summer Festival for its first 20 years. Also organiser of the Christmas Parade. The couple moved to Hawick from Montrose in 1974, after which they became involved in Stirches Youth Club and Hawick Community Council. Gilbert mainstay of the Hawick Summer Festival, along with wife Evelyn. They married in 1971 and worked in the abattoir after moving to Hawick.

Hence the Prov., ‘Ye are as stiff as a stappit saster’, i.e. a crammed pudding’ [JoJ].

Satchells (saw-chulz) n. former estate east of Synton, about 5 miles north of Hawick, in Lilliesleaf Parish. It was home of the Scotts of Satchells, since at least 1607, according to a charter to Robert Scott. Robert was said to be one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, holding the lands of ‘Southuirig’ (i.e. Southdeanmuir) for his services. Robert’s son was Capt. Walter, who wrote ‘A True History’ of the Scott family in rhyming couplets, published in 1688 (and reissued in Hawick in 1894) In 1615 Jean and William Scott of Satchells (possibly the widow and her son) helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a group in Hawick to slaughter 60 of Sir James Douglas’s sheep. Walter Scott (the same man as the poet Capt. Walter) was owner in 1663, when it was valued at £200 and in 1678, when it was valued at £256. John Scott was owner in 1788, when the value was £200. John Corse Scott of Synton owned it in 1811, when it was valued at £256. There is still a farm there. It is probably the ‘Schotteschales’ in Lilliesleaf Parish that was granted to Alexander of Huntington some time in the period 1202–7 – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhose, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’[WSB] (the origin of the name is proba-ably from Old and Middle English ‘secat schele’, meaning ‘the huts in a corner’; it is ‘Satscheilles’ in 1609, ‘Satchelis’, ‘Satscheillis’ and ‘Satschellis’ in 1616 and ‘Satscheilles’ in 1633; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Saltscheilles’ in the

the 1850s and 60s. Andrew Douglas was farmer there in the 1930s. Near the shepherd’s cottage of Saughtree Grain is the site of a standing stone known as ‘the Knocking Stone’ and others called ‘the White Stones’. Saughtree Fell, to the west, reaches a height of 434 m and contains a triangulation pillar. Some flints found near there are in Hawick Museum – ‘O Willie, ’tis light, and the moon shines bright, Will ye go and watch the deer wi’ me?’ ‘Ay, be my sooth, this very night;’ – And away they went to Saughtretree [ES] (it is ‘Saughthretree’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ‘The Laird of Lairistan’ and is occasionally ‘Sauchtree’; the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘sealh treow’, meaning ‘willow tree’; it first occurs as ‘Saughtree’ in 1541, ‘Sauchetrie’ in 1652, ‘Sauchtrie’ in 1685 and ‘Saghtrees’ in 1694; it appears on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, but without a label, is ‘Saughtrees’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Saughtree Cross (thu-sawch-tree-kros) n. name sometimes given to one of 2 stone crosses found near the Abbey Sike in the vicinity of Saughtree in about 1850 and 1880. The first consists of a round piece of stone, carved with a cross, which may have formed the capital of a wayside marker. The second is a somewhat larger rough-hewn stone cross, with part of a sword pommel carved on it; this may have been a grave marker, for example. They were deposited in the Museum.

Saughtree Fell (sawch-tree-fed) n. hill to the north of Saughtree farm. It reaches a height of over 450 m and contains a triangulation pillar on the secondary summit. It appears to be labelled ‘Daston Fell’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, suggesting that Dawson Fell may have been an alternative name.

Saughtree Grain (sawch-tree-grän) n. former shepherd’s cottage near where Alison Sike and Cliffloipe Burn unite in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale. Alternative names were Cliffloipe (on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), Dawstoneburn Grain (on the 1841 census) and just ‘Grain’ (on the 1851 and 1861 censuses). The original cottage was a little further up than the more modern one. It was said that the steep sides of the valley here meant that the residents would not see the Sun for about 6 months. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851, and Arthur Armstrong in 1861.

Saughtree Kirk (sawch-tree-kirk) n. small church in Saughtree village, built in 1872, when there was discussion of making this a separate Saughtree Schuil (sawch-tree-skil) n. former school at Saughtree, situated on the main road south of the hamlet. It opened in 1809. There were 20 pupils there in the 1830s. James Telfer, referred to as ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ ran the school in the late 1880s. The school and house were rebuilt on the old site, perhaps around 1880. The Borders Archive have registers for the period 1938–63 and log books for 1904–63.

Saughtree Viaduct (sawch-tree-vl-u-dukt) n. former railway viaduct near Saughtree station in upper Liddesdale. It was a 5-span bridge, taking the Border Counties railway across the Dawston Burn.

the Saut Box (thu-saw'-boks) n. former name sometimes used for the jail in the old Town House – ‘If any obstreperous prisoners required watching at night in the ‘Saut box’ or ‘Rogue’s hole’ …’ [V&M] (see Hawick Jail; the epithet may have been because of the shape, a ‘saut-box’ usually having a flat back and curved front, or just because of its small size).

Sauter’s Ford (saw'-urz-ford) n. formerly one of the main fords across the Tweed, situated near Melrose. Also the name of a for across the Ale Water, connecting Bewlie with Cavers Carre. The name is probably related to the days when the smuggling of salt was big business.

saut-fat (saw'-, salt-faw') n., arch. a vessel for holding salt, salt-cellar – ‘…broad pleats, two chandiles, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW1681] (also saut-fit).

saut-fat (saw'-fi) n., arch. a salt cellar (probably an error of ‘salt-foot’ for the word saut-fat).

Sauthaa see Saut Haa

Saut Haa (saw'-haw) n. Salt Hall, a house built probably in the late 17th century, which was an important centre for storing salt through the 18th century. It stood nearby the present house ‘Little Salt Hall’ above Langlands Road, on the right side of the later entrance to Rosalae. It appears on Wood’s 1824 map, but unlabelled, and was already indicated on a sketch of Wilton drawn in 1810. It was a cottage with a door and 2 small windows, and a stair leading to 2 first floor attics. A lane ran behind it from what is now Rosalae Brae. It was inhabited until 1887, thereafter used as sheds for nurserymen and demolished in 1901. It was notorious for the suicide of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ there in 1758 (or perhaps 68??). Another ‘Salt House’ is recorded near West Port in the late 1700s beside Bowie’s Well and also referred to as the ‘Salter’s House’ (also written ‘Sautha’’, etc.).

the Saut Hoose (thu-saw'-hoos) n. the Salt House formerly at the West Port. It had behind it one of the wells coming from the ‘Schidder Springs’.

the Savins Bank (thu-sa-vinz-bawngk) n. the Hawick Bank for the Savings of Industry was founded in January 1815. It has been the oldest savings bank with a continuous existence in Britain. Begun to encourage thrift among the working classes, it had a slow start, but then had several moves to larger premises, including 14 High Street, and the current building at 11 High Street. This was designed by J.P. Alison and built 1914/5 as a classical ashlar-fronted building, with interior fittings by Scott Morton & Co. The bank merged with the Langholm Savings Bank in 1960, Jedburgh in 1970, and other Trustee Savings Banks in 1970 and 1975. TSB merged with Lloyds to form Lloyds TSB in 1999. The building is grade B listed.

savree (sav-ree) adj., arch. savoury – ‘Sei bye some mair o that savree meat, wull ee?’ [ECS].

saw (sawn) v., arch. to sow – ‘An’ saw the fields, an’ sette vinyairds …’ [HSR], ‘Thaye that saw in teears, sall sheer in joy’ [HSR], ‘How be yow clippin the gress the teime A’m sawin the seed?’ [ECS], ‘It’s lang sin’ I gaed doon the furrows sawin’, And eerie’s the sough o’ the wun’; The dreep o’ the rain is aye faain’, faain’, Waes me for a glint o’ the sun!’ [WL] (the past tense is sew and the past participle sown).

Sawmill Street (saw-mill-stree’) n. name given on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map to part of what had previously been named Dovemount and would be named Havelock Street in 1864. It was given this name because of the saw-mill at the north-western end of the street, with proprietor Mr. Robson.

sawn (sawn) pp., arch. sown – ‘…Will find where he has naething sawn That weeds will grow on field an’ lawn’ [FL], ‘Licht is sawn for the rich- teous, an’ gladness for the upricht in hairt’ [HSR] (past participle of saw; cf. the past tense sew).

saxhorn (saks-hörn) n. a brass musical instrument invented by Adolphe Sax, resembling a buggle, but with valves instead of keys. There were many ‘Saxhorn Bands’ set up in the mid-1800s, but Hawick’s band is the only remaining one in Scotland that uses the old word.
the Saxhorn Band

The Saxhorn Band, also known as the Saxton Band, is Hawick's brass band, which acts as a marching band, a concert band and a competitive band. Founded by Samuel Stainton in 1855, following a petition to the Magistrates to support the setting up of a brass band for the town. There have been many ups and downs since then, but it is still going strong after more than a century and a half. The Band briefly dissolved in 1878. In 1945 the Council decided to help financially with the Band, but this discontinued with the end of the District Council. There were originally 14 members, which has grown to around 25 at full strength. Stainton acted as leader for the first few months, with Stephen Teal then becoming the first appointed Bandmaster. Walter Atkinson was a prominent Bandmaster 40 years later, with James Amos leading in the successful post-WWII period. In 1961 they became Scottish Championship Band and later competed in the national finals, also playing in the televised evening concert in the Albert Hall. The band have practised in a huge number of locations over the years, in part of the former Dickson & Laings mill in the later years of the 20th century, before moving to O’Connell Street. They have been prominent at ceremonial parades in Hawick over the last 150 years, for example during the Wars, and in the unveiling of the Horse monument. At the Common Riding they have many specific duties, including meeting the Cornet after the Picking, meeting the cavalcade at the Volunteer after the Moss-paul Ride-out, playing the Cornet from the Town Hall to the Horse on Colour Bussing night, and leading the Provost’s procession from the Horse on the Friday morning. They also play ‘Invocation’ at the Handing-Back. They were heard on the 1937 BBC radio broadcast of the Common Riding and are on the ‘Hawick Sings’ records. In addition they usually lead the children’s procession to the Vertish Hill Sports. They have also played a New Year’s concert at the Tower Knowe for a great many years. A history ‘Seven Score Years’ was written by Owen Connelly in 1995 and Gillian French wrote a Ph.D. thesis entitled ‘Follow the Band: Community Brass Bands in the Scottish Borders’ in 2014 – ‘…And then the Saxhorn Band, with fervid glee, Sends forth brave notes that please the listening ear’ [JCG], ‘The Saxhorn Band is hard tae bate Thensks tae Bob Hume and Gladys Tait’ [IWL].

scanth (skanth) n., poet. scarcity, dearth – ‘Til free thair saul fae deft, an’ til keep thame alaeve in scanth o’ fude’ [HSR], ‘Thaye salna be shæm in the ill time, an’ in the days o’ scanth thaye sall be satisﬁe’ [HSR].

scant (skawrt, skawr’) v. to scrape, scratch, scribble (a letter etc.) – ‘…In a ring scart oot be oor heel in the stoor’ [??], ‘They will scart yer hert on the raws, An’ expect folk tae gie them applause’ [FL], ‘A stinkin’ midden, a scartin’ hen – There’s sma’ choice there ’tween craws and men’ [DH], to scrape out, ‘…he told the amusing story about a little boy who wished to ’skart’ the jelly pan, and was told by his mother that he might scart the pan, but it would have to be the outside. In the same way the public should tell the Council that they could only be permitted to ’skart’ the outside of the Common-Riding pan’ [HNe], to make a scraping sound – ‘A skartin skeelie on a skuil sklate’ [ECS], ‘Archie o’ the Reuch Sike, scartin’ Drops o’ Brandy …’ [DH], arch. to scratch (the buttons) off another person by a downward sweep of the fingers – ‘…And gat his buttons scartit at the Auld Smiddy end’ [JT], ‘To scart one’s buttons, … a mode of challenging to battle among boys, Roxb.’ [JoJ], n. a scratch.

Scarnook (skawr-nook) n. former name for a house in Robertson village, located just to the south of the school (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

scarletina (skawr-li-ti-nu) n. disease caused by a bacterial toxin, most commonly affecting toddlers, with symptoms being sore throat, fever, bright red tongue and a characteristic rash. It was formerly a great killer of children. The disease arrived in Hawick in 1831, Dr. John Douglas remarking that this was the first major disease to appear in the Town. It claimed the lives of many (probably tens of) children and a few adults that year. The disease was almost entirely wiped out by the use of antibiotics in the 20th century.

a mark made hurriedly with a pen, a form of challenge among boys (also spelled 'skart').

scartit (skawr-tee', skawr-ti') pp. scratched, scribbled – 'The Thieves Road, and a route ower the hags o' The Roan Scartit in wi' a pencil' [DH].

scartle (skawr-ul) n., arch. an implement for scraping ashes out of a fireplace, a scraper for a cow-house – 'The grape and the skartle he [Frost] froze in the stank'[HSR], 'Gie'z that scartel, an A'll raik out the feier'[ECS], v. to rake out ashes, scrape out in small quantities (also written 'scartel').

Scatterpenny (skawr-ur-pe-nee) n. cottage on the A7 past Branhholm. The bend in the road near here, sometimes called 'Scatterpenny Corner', has been a frequent site of accidents. A pool in the Teviot there was formerly a popular swimming haunt. The site of the present cottage was once the location for a small hamlet, where an inn was kept by Jean Scott, also known as 'Jean the Ranter', mother of 'The Bonnie Lass o' Branxholm'. The inn there was said to be very popular among drovers in the early 19th century (the origin of the name is uncertain, but there are places of the same name elsewhere, perhaps suggesting that the alehouse was where travellers would mis-spend their money).

scaud (skawd) v., arch. to scald, scorch, inflame the skin, burn with desire – 'The heart scauds and sorrows that poortith maun dree Couldna daun' the skin, burn with desire { `The heart scauds and moor, and scaur' [DA], 'And here's a wee rogue wi' a scuar on his chin . . . '[TCh]. 'It may be found on all the scours along the Teviot and Slatrig, and is especially abundant above Crow- byres Bridge'[JAHM], 'The Teviot takes its quiet way Past level haugh and loamy scour, Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o'er some pebbly bar'[JCC], 'A wee bit scour o'fends her e'e. She plants a braw Scots thristle to scald, scorch, in

scaudit beer (skawr-dee'-beer) n., arch. a kind of gruel made with oats and hot beer (noted by J. Jamieson; also 'scaudit ale').

scaul (skawl) n., arch. a scold, scolding – 'Makes us the butt of a' his scawl'[JR] (also spelled 'scawl'; cf. scauld).

scauld *(skawld) v. to scold – 'My Mither still may scauld and ban, And a' the men misca' '[JT], n. a scold, scolding (also scaulen).

scaunle (skaw-nul) n., arch. a scandal – 'She spends her days collectin' scaunle, Her tongue gaun like the auld pump haun'le'[IJ].

scaup (skawp) n., arch. the scalp – 'Be't Yankee scaup or Russian knob'[JoHa], ' . . . an' the hairie scaup o' sic an ane as gaes fullunlie on in his trespassis'[HSR].

scaur (skawr) v., n., arch. scare – 'Should Satan e'er present his playz, We'll scaur him off wi' auld Blink-bonny'[DA].

scaur (skawr) n. a bare place on a hillside, cliff, rocky bank, particularly one being undercut by a river or stream – 'Till it seems lyin' nestled 'mang hillocks an' scours A whole fairy city, up-biggit wi' stars'[JJ], 'Is it the roar of Teviot's tide. That chafes against the scaur's red side?' [SWS], ' . . . he passed on his road thither a scaur, by the side of a rivulet . . . '[EM1820], 'To wage in headlong heat a mimic war, And drive the fox o'er moss, and moor, and scaur'[DA], 'And here's a wee rogue wi' a scuar on his chin . . . '[TCh]. 'It may be found on all the scours along the Teviot and Slatrig, and is especially abundant above Crow- byres Bridge'[JAHM], 'The Teviot takes its quiet way Past level haugh and loamy scour, Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o'er some pebbly bar'[JCC], 'A wee bit scour o'fends her e'e. She plants a braw Scots thristle to scald, scorch, in ame' [WP] (this is the anglicised or literary version of cf. scer, with G. Watson writing that it occurs 'only in literature or educated speech').

Scaur (skawr) n. Scar, former farmstead in the Dod valley, corresponding roughly to the present position of Dodburn Filter Cottage, with the woods to the south of there still being known as Scar Plantation (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

the Scaur see the Scer

the Scaurend (th-skawr-end) n. former name for part of Roberton village, at the western side, so named because of the 'scour' by the bend in the river there. The house of the same name was once the manse for the Snoot Kirk.

Scaurnook (skawr-nook) n. former farmstead in Roberton Parish, probably near to Scaurend. William Murray was living there in at least 1786-94. Carrier John Elliot was there in 1841 and retired farmer Robert Elliot in 1851 (it is 'Scare Nook' in 1786 and 1788).

the Scaur Pool (th-skawr-, -sker-, -pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot at Mansfield, near where the mill lade came out. This also formed the eastern end of the property once used as nurseries by Dickson's. Also called the 'Sker Pool' – 'The Doctor was one day taking his accustomed walk along the north bank of the Teviot and Mr. Williamson wading more than knee deep and fishing in the Scaur Pool'[WNK], 'As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o' bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school'[JCG].

Scaw Mill, name for a mill on the Liddel Water, located near the cliffs by the farm of Flatt (marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map).

Scaw’d Law (skawd-law) n. hill in Cavers Parish, just south of the Maidens, reaching a height of 503 m. James Turnbull was recorded as resident there in 1770. There are the remains of a linear earthwork on the eastern side of the hill, perhaps connected with features noted near Leap Hill and near King’s Sike, and presumably once boundary markers (the origin is probably ‘hill with a shieling’, from Old Norse, or old Scots ‘scald’, i.e. a hill with bare patches; there are several other hills called ‘Scaw’d’ or ‘Scawd’ elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Scamiln’ in 1770).

Scawmill (skaw-mill) n. cottage on the Cala (or Dean) Burn, reached from the Dean via the old track along the burnside, having a very picturesque setting among the woods. It may also once have been known as ‘Timbersidemill’, but it is unclear if they were the same place or neighbouring farmsteads (both names appear in contemporary 18th century baptismal records). There was presumably once a corn-mill there, perhaps even the same one later known as Dean Mill. James Scott was there in 1724, William Brown in 1733, John Scott in 1791 and William Scott in 1797. It was still active when Walter Smith was recorded as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories – ‘Just leave the Dean by Scawmill farm, and o’er the well-worn stile, Up by the low and thick set hedge The very briars smile’ [WFC] (also ‘Scaw Mill’; it was ‘Scadmiln’ in 1724, ‘Scalmiln’ in 1733 and ‘Skawmill’ in 1791).

Scaw Mill see Scawmill

Scenes of Infancy (seenz-ov-in-fin-see) n. longest poem written by John Leyden. It is mainly constructed in praise of the countryside of Teviotdale, where he spent his youth, weaving in a large number of local myths and legends, but also covering wider historical ideas, international issues of his day, and religious and social topics (including a denunciation of the slave trade). Although nominally looking back to his childhood, and lamenting the changes caused by the agricultural revolution during his lifetime, it at the same time looks forward towards his future in the wider world. It was published in 1803, shortly after he sailed for India (never to return). In fact it is a collection of pieces written over several years, with connecting sections added in the months before his departure – ‘Beside the Ettrick Minstrel stood a name, The Bard who sung the Scenes of Infancy! As also stood the darling Cunningham, Who sung old faery Cluden, Nith, and Dee’ [JTe].

Scher (sker) n., arch. a mark left on improperly washed clothes, v., arch. to mark clothes through not washing properly (also spelled ‘sker’).

Scher (sker) v., arch. to scare (also spelled ‘sker’).

Scher (sker) n., arch. a ridge of rock, precipitous bare bank, cliff, especially one made of red rock – ‘Fornent iz, . . . Mintilh Craigs . . . brest raise ther skerrs’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘sker’; cf. the more anglicised scaur; from Medival English and Old Norse).

the Scher (utthu-sker) n. Lynnwood Scar, i.e. the cliff behind Lynnwood – ‘. . . she sat on the Scher watchin Lynnwud Mills chimney bein demolisht’ [IWL]. The same name was also formerly used for the slope along the Avenue of Wilton Lodge (also ‘the Scaur’).

the Scher Plantin (th-sker-plawn-in) n. plantation along the western side of the Dod Burn just south of the farm of Dod.

the Scher Pool see the Scaur Pool

Schaedle (sha-del) n., arch. schedule – ‘A looket the shuttle o the kist, bit A coodna finnd the schaedle’ [ECS].

Schaemmard (sha-ward) pp., adj., arch. ornamented – ‘Item, ane pair of black velvot breikis, with ane clok lyned with schag all schammarred our with black silk lace . . . ’ [SB1633].

Schanyie (shan-yee) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) wright from Brauxholme who is described in a 1612 list as being convicted along with many other local men of charging too much interest on loans. His name is also written as ‘Schange’ and he seems not to have appeared to answer the charge and hence was declared a rebel (it is unclear to which modern name this might correspond).

Schair see shear

Scheme (skeem) n. a housing scheme, typically known as a ‘housing estate’ in England, and particularly applying to those built by the council. Housing schemes in Hawick include Burnfoot, Stiches and Mayfield.

Schent (shent) pp., poet. put to death, destroyed, damned, perished – ‘For the Lord kens the waye o’ the righteous: but the waye o’ the ungodlie sall be utterlie schent’ [HSR], ‘. . . thay schent at the rebuik o’ thy countenance’ [HSR].
Scherwinlaw

Scherwinlaw see Sherwinlaw

Schetky (shet-kee) n. John Christian (1778-1874) born in Edinburgh, from an old Tran-sylvanian family, he settled in Oxford, and became professor of drawing at the naval college, Portsmouth, where he was well-known as a marine painter. He was commissioned by Sir Walter Scott to paint 12 views along Border rivers to illustrate ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ in 1810. The painting of Hawick, from 1808, is one of the first images of the town, the view being from roughly near Wilton Grove. There is also a view of Harden Glen from when he visited the area in September 1807, and a view of Goldielands showing its already ruined state around that time.

Scheves (sheevz) n. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He had possession of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in 1418, but in the following year resigned in favour of William Croyser. Probably the same John ‘de Scheves’ was Clerk of the Rolls and Register of Brechin in 1426 and associated with St. Andrews Diocese in the 1430s.

Schiehallion (shee-haw-lee-in) n. local folk group, consisting of the Lammies from Hawick and another couple from St. Boswells, performing since about 1980 and having released about 4 tapes (note there are other groups from elsewhere with the same name).

schuil (shoil) n. school – ‘what schuil did ee gaun ti?’, ‘The bairns new oot o the skul for leave . . . ’[ECS], ‘He’s never out o’ some mischief, He’ll no’ gang to the schule, He tore his car-ritch leaf frae leaf To mak’ a dragon’s tail’[JT], ‘. . . Wad tempt o’o for tae jok the schule and seek the floorey bracs’[VW], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’[DH], ‘There werea mony bairns about In oor wee village schule, But, ah, it was a bonnie spot, Doon by the shelt’ring hill’[WFC], ‘And noo, in the schule o’ the warld, A hantle o’ heidstrong loons . . . ’[WL], v. to school – ‘. . . where hei schuiled yin o’ his maist famous pupils, Christopher Murray Grieve’[IHS], ‘She’d ne’er been schuiled i’ the artfu’ wiles That jauds betray wi’ their hauntin’ smiles’[WL], ‘I canna schule mysel’ to fit Wi toonsmen, drawn sae keen the bricht Upon each other’s avarice’[DH] (spelled ‘schule’ and other variants).

the Schuil Board (thu-skil-bōrd) n. the School Board, which was formed in Hawick in 1873, following the Education Scotland Act of 1872. It took over the responsibility of running the schools from the Parish heritors, and put the control in the hands of a locally elected Board. Minute books for 1873-1947 are in the Borders Archive.

schuilhoose (skil-hoos) n. schoolhouse, a building in which pupils are taught, sometimes also serving as the residence of the schoolmaster. The need for a separate school building (rather than using St. Mary’s Kirk) was agreed upon at least as early as 1683. Rent paid for the schoolhouse by the Kirk Session of Hawick is recorded in 1712, although this was some temporary accommodation. Some time after 1722 the first purpose-built Hawick Parish schoolhouse was erected (at Slitrig Bank), but it was carried away by the 1767 flood.

schuilmaister (skil-mās-tur) n. a schoolmaster. John Liddersdale, who signed the Solemn League and Covenant in Hawick in 1638 is recorded as being a schoolmaster, presumably in Hawick, but this is uncertain. Hawick’s schoolmaster is first explicitly mentioned in 1657, when Walter Martin held the position. He was recorded again as schoolmaster in 1665, with a Mr. Chisholme being next, but his first name is not known. John Purdom took over in 1669 and is the first of whom we have any substantial information. During his time the Grammar School was established, taking away some of his teaching duties, as well as salary; in 1710 a bond was granted by the Council for payment to the new master of the Grammar School. Some of the payment for the Parish Schoolmaster came directly from the pupils, and the income was also supplemented with the master serving as Session Clerk, as well as Kirk Reader. Subjects taught by the single master included Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Latin and Singing. Walter Turnbull, ‘the Little Masiter’, was schoolmaster from the 1730s until the 1750s. James Inglis was Parish schoolmaster at the time of the flood of 1767, having started in 1756 and serving until his death in 1806. He was succeeded by Christopher Armstrong, until 1820. In the 1830s there were around 150 pupils. The schoolmaster’s house appears to have been inadequate for most of the history of the school. In the early 19th century the house at 20 Buccleuch Street was used. The first purpose-built house for the schoolmaster was constructed along with the new Buccleuch Street school 1860. The Grammar School was founded in 1710, with the first master being James Innes, who was called Rector to distinguish him from the Parish school master. There was a common master for the two schools for much of the 18th century, until the 1770s. The two schools merged in 1824, with James Murray as the common Master. Once the schools were big enough to require many teachers, rather than just a master and a few assistants, the term ‘heidmasiter’ would be used. The word ‘Rector’ was initially used at the Grammar School and transposed to the High School when they merged (also hyphenated; see Rectors for a full list of High School Rectors; cf. heidmaister and the Pesh).

the Schuilmaister’s Field (thy-skil-mäisturz-feld) n. local name for a field at Honeyburn just outside Denholm. It was presumably once connected with the local schoolmaster.

schuils (skilz) n., pl. schools. Hawick currently has 6 primary schools (Burnfoot, Drumlanrig, St. Margaret’s, Stiches, Trinity and Wilton), several outlying primary schools (Denholm, Hobkirk, Newcastleton, Robertson, Teviothead) and one High School. St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s and Wilton Dean schools also once existed in town, along with several small private schools. There used to be several other small schools in country areas around the Town, including at the Allan Water, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Burnmouth, Clarilaw, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Howpasley, Kirkton, Minto, Newmill, Refordgreen, Riccarton, Saughtree, Southdean, Stouslie and Wolfelee. During the 18th century there are records of people being paid by Hawick and Wilton Parishes to teach children (probably in their own houses) in the areas of Branholmetown, Borthwickhaugh, Northhouse, Raesknowe, Thornyhall (i.e. Teviothead) and Whitlaw. The earliest school in Hawick started in the mid-17th century and was located in St. Mary’s Church, with the churchyard as a playground. The first purpose-built school was on Slitrig Bank, but was washed away in the 1767 flood. The Grammar School, which originally taught in Latin, was founded in 1710. It existed alongside the Parish School (also then referred to as ‘the English Schuil’) for more than a century. They came together in 1825 as ‘the United Schuils’ and later ‘Buccleuch Schuil’. However, even the combination of the 2 schools was still insufficient provision for education, leading to many small private schools cropping up from about the 1710s, although originally they were forbidden to teach ‘further than the Psalm Book’. More small private schools appeared through the 19th century, with one being set up in 1836 by several local individuals with a young teacher hired from Edinburgh (as described by Robert Wilson). The New Statistical Account (1840) states that Hawick had as many as 10 ‘adventure schools’ and that it was not ‘known that there are any of the native population above fifteen years of age who cannot read’. There were apparently as many as 19 separate institutions existing in Hawick and Wilton in 1865. Most of these private schools lasted only a short time, and they included: Brand’s Schuil (a.k.a. Teviot Grove Academy); the Chartist Schuil; Hawick Academy; Heronhill Schuil; the Subscription Schuil; Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy. It is traditional that on the Thursday of the Common Riding the Principals visit the primary schools and the Cornet asks the Head if the pupils can have the rest of that day and the next day off to support him; the Cornet’s own school is visited first. A full list of Hawick and neighbouring schools is: Allan Water Schuil/Priesthaugh Schuil; Ashkirk Schuil; Bedrule Schuil; Beverley Schuil; Brand’s Schuil/Teviot Grove Academy; Burnfit Schuil; Burnmooth Schuil; the Chartist Schuil; Cogsmill Schuil; Clarilaw Schuil; Craigmount Schuil; Denholm Schuil/Cavers Schuil; Drumlanrig Schuil; the Industrial Schuil/the Raggit Schuil/Drumlanrig & St. Cuthbert’s Schuil; Hawick High Schuil/Hawick Grammar Schuil/the Latin Schuil/Dodd’s Schuil/Buccleuch Grammar Schuil/Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil/Buccleuch Schuil/Hawick United Schuils; Hawick Parish Schuil/the English Schuil; Hermitage Schuil; Heronhill Schuil; Hobkirk Schuil; Howpasley Schuil; the image Gairden; Kirkton Schuil; Minto Schuil; Newcastleton Schuil; Newmill Schuil; Redfordgreen Schuil; Riccarton Schuil; Saughtree Schuil; Southdean, Stouslie and Wolfelee. In 1851, according to the Census, Hawick and Wilton had 18 adventure schools and the Cornet asks the Head if the pupils can have the rest of that day and the next day off to support him; the Cornet’s own school is visited first.

schuilwages (skil-wä-jez) n., pl. school fees – ‘To Master John Purdom for poor boyes school-wages . . . £3 18s’ [PR1703].

Sclater (sklā-ur) n. Elizabeth (18th C.) born at Fodderlee Birks (according to George Tancred). In 1745 she was living with her family in one of the cottages at Weensmoor. Since her family had previously lived near Fodderlee it seems reasonable to suppose that they gave their name to the ‘Sclater Ford’ there; however, this would require that the same family had been there for more than 200 years. When they were at Weensmoor in 1745 it is said that the Highland host stopped at the farm on their march to England, but found only the children at home – ‘They did no harm and tried to pacify the bairns, who were afraid of them’. She was grandmother to Mr. Aitken, who was a plasterer in Jedburgh. It is possible she was the Elizabeth who married Robert Williamson and had children baptised at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh: Elizabeth (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Moses (b.1783). There were Sclaters recorded in St. Boswell’s, Bowden and Melrose at about this time (the name is probably a variant of the modern ‘Slater’).

Sclaterford (sklā-ur-furd) n. site of a skirmish in the months following Flodden, as reported in a (one-sided) letter from Lord Dacre in November 1513: ‘so to the Sclater Ford on the water of Bowset; was pursued by the Scots, assisted by Davd Kerr of Fernehirst, the Laird of Bondgedworth, and the sheriff of Teviotdale; the Laird of Walghope and Mark Trumbill are hurt’. The site was a ford over the ‘water of Bowset’ which is probably associated with Bowshot Hill in Abbotrule, and has been identified with the Fodderlee Burn. It is recorded that the Laird of Wauchope (or ‘Walghope’) was injured with an arrow and had his horse slain, while Mark Turnbull (‘Trumbill’) had a spear-head left in him, and many others were injured. It is said that there was a large cairn there until the early 1800s, which may have been connected with the skirmish. The ford was probably named after the family called Sclater who once lived near there (until about the early 1700s according to Tancred, which suggests the same family lived there for about 200 years). In 1903 a memorial plaque was erected by the Archaeological Society on the bridge over the Fodderlee Burn, which is believed to be at the site of the former ford. The plaque was replaced in 2007. The same area was also known as ‘Crawfenford’ – ‘When the beacons blaze for Redeswire On the Carter Bar, N’ ‘Out wi the sword’ ti Sclaterford Wi Scotts n’ Kerrs ana’ [IHS] (often referred to as ‘the Sclaterford’).

Sclenty Haa (sklen’-ee-haw) n. former cottage near Weens. George Scott was there in 1784. There were Redpaths and Sibbalds there in 1841, as well as teacher Helen Laidlaw (it is ‘Sclentiehall’ in 1784).

the Sclenty Schuil (thu-sklen’-ee-skil) n. former school in Hobkirk Parish in the early-to-mid 19th century, intended for small children who were too young for the Parish school. It was established about 1831 by Mrs. Cleghorn of Weens, who supplied the money for the books and the teacher’s salary. The building was a thatched cottage with one room, divided by 2 box-beds. The schoolmistress was Nelly Laidlaw, referred to as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’. On the 16th of October each year, George Tancred’s (nee Cleghorn) birthday, Mrs. Cleghorn would give out toys and books to the children. The building was later the residence of a shoemaker. The name survives in the ‘Upper Sclenty Plantation’, on the left-hand side of the road between Bonchester Bridge and Weens House. This is probably the same place meant by the farm of ‘Stentyhaugh’, where Robert Barrie was tenant in 1797.

sclidder (skli-dur) n., arch. a slide, sliding movement, slope covered with loose stones, v., arch. to slide, slip – ‘To sclidder, sclither, to slide to the right or left, when one intends going straight forward; particularly applicable to walking on ice, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘sklider’; the word was applied to springs around the top of the Loan; see also sclither and slider).

the Sclidder Springs (thu-skli-dur-springz) n. name sometimes given to the springs that feed the Smaile Burn. They formerly came out at the Nipknowes and were conducted by lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan and to 6 separate wells, forming Hawick’s main public water supply from 1797–1865 (the original cost being £600). These wells or ‘spriglet pants’ were at the West Port (‘Bowie’s Well’), bottom of the Mid Row, foot of the Howegate (the ‘Printer’s well’), at the Town House, and at 2 other locations (presumably along the High Street). The source was also called the ‘Town Moor’ or ‘Haggishan’ supply (the derivation is probably from ‘sclidder’ meaning ‘slippery’; the name was already lost by the mid-19th century).

scliddery (skli-du-ree) adj., arch. slippery – ‘Let thair waye be mirk an’ sklydderie . . .’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘skliddy’ and variants; cf. slidden). sclipn (sklim) n., arch. a climb – ‘Teedisome brae’, quo A, eanow, bit for aa A stect keinda, it was rale niece, that sklimm’ [ECS] v., poet to climb – ‘So sklim’ high heaven, trinnle throw hell … ’ [DH] (also written ‘sklinnim’ and ‘kslim’).

sclither (sklí-thur) n., v., arch. slide, slip (also spelled ‘sklither’; variant of sclidder).

Scobie (skó-bee) n. W. associated with the Youth With A Mission, which met in the former Hawick Home Mission premises on Bourtree Place. He started his own church, called ‘The New Life Christian Fellowship’, which met at the Evergreen Hall. The name was later changed to Abundant Life Church, and in 1988 the group purchased the former Catholic Church at Burnfoot.

Scocha (skó-shu) n. Scottish folk music band from Hawick, originally formed as a duo by Iain Scott and David Chapman. The name comes from a contraction of Scott and Chapman, and they get upset when it is pronounced incorrectly! Phil Clayton (‘Phil the Base’) became the third member of the duo, followed by Alan Brydon as the fourth and Dougie Anderson as the drummer. Their first CD, ‘Bordering on …’, was released in 2001, along with a video ‘Songs of the Border’. A CD single ‘The Borders’ was released in 2002 and a second album ‘The Land We Love’ in 2004, accompanied by their ‘World Tour’ of the Borders. The 3rd album ‘Gie’d Sum Wellie’ was released in 2006. A live CD was released in 2008, followed by a live DVD in 2009. Their 4th studio album, ‘Scattyboo’, was released in 2012. In 2012 Alan Brydon left, with Ross Walsh joining on drums and Dougie Anderson moving to lead guitar. Phil Clayton left at the end of 2013, to be replaced as bassist by Neil Jackson. The new line-up released ‘Moonlight Again’ in 2016 and the live double album ‘Live on the Borders’ in 2017.

scodgie (sko-je) n., arch. an earwig (a form of scottie, but perhaps related to its homonym).

scodgie (sko-je) adj., arch. slavish (of tasks), dirty, rough – ‘All, from the scodgie lass to the chambermaid, were on terms of great cordiality with the members of the family than obtain now’ [V&M], n., arch. a drudge, hard-worked servant, a rough apron worn for dirty work (also spelled ‘scogie’).

scodgie brat (sko-je-braw) n., arch. a harden sack apron formerly used for doing dirty housework, particularly scrubbing the doorstep.

scogie see scodgie

scone (skón) n. one of a number of sorts of cake baked on a griddle, particularly a drop-scone, but sometimes one flavoured with treacle or occasionally a more substantial cake containing potato (note that the pronunciation has a long ō sound, not the o of general Scots or the diphthong e-oo affected as an attempt to sound ‘posh’).

scone-fittit (skón-fi-it, -ee) adj., arch. flat-footed (this term, platter-fittit and plachi-fittit are all noted by E.C. Smith).

scoof (skoof) n., arch. a scoop, used by grocers etc (cf. scuif, this variant being particularly heard in Teviotdale).

scool (skool) n., v. arch. scowl (also written ‘scool’).

scoolie (skoo-lee) adj., arch. scowly, characterised by a scowl, shading the face with a brow turned down at the front – ‘The scowly hat, and beard so gray, – The bridegroom stood before her’ [JTe], ‘A scoolie hat = a hat overshading the eyes’ [ECS] (also written ‘scooly’).

Scoon (skoon) n. Andrew (19th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret Thomson and they had children in the 1830s. An unnamed child died in 1837. His mother, who lived at Roadhead, died in 1824. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1771); Janet (b.1771); Patrick (b.1773). The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related).

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Helen (b.1635); and Janet (b.1642). Witnesses to the baptisms included Patrick and Simon, who must have been closely related. The 1635 baptism is one of the earliest existing Hawick Parish records. James (1790—1827) probably son of Walter and Mary Elliot, residents of Todshawhill. He may have worked for a while as a forrester with his brother Walter in Langholm. He emigrated to South Africa in 1817, in a party of Scotsmen including his brother Robert (later a hunter and explorer). He settled in Cape Town as a blacksmith. In 1824 he married Francina, and they had 3 children, including Walter. However, he died in 1827, it is said at the age of 34. James (b.1812/3) from Canonbie, he was a labourer at Limickilnedge Lime Works in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Dinah and Isabella. James (1836—89) son of John and Agnes Robson. He was born in Langholm, and descended from the family of the Branxholme area. He became a tweed designer at Glebe Mills and the other local contemporaries of the same name. However, he is difficult to separate from renting Todshawhill with Robert (probably his son) was baptised in Roberton Parish. In 1751 he was recorded there in 1753 when one of his children was tenant farmer for part of Todshawhill, starting in at least 1748. He was recorded there in 1753 when one of these children was baptised in Roberton Parish. In 1751 he was renting Todshawhill with Robert (probably his father). However, he is difficult to separate from the other local contemporaries of the same name.

Scoon
His wife’s name is unknown. Their children included: Robert (1749–1832) who married Beatrice Turnbull; John (1750–1836), baptised in Roberton, who also farmed at Todshawhill; and Jean (b.1753). Walter (b.1753), baptised in Roberton, who married Mary Elliot, was probably his son; Walter’s grandson James became a tweed manufacturer in Hawick. Mary, born to John ‘in Branhxhome’ in 1747 may also have been a child of his. John (1718–91) tenant farmer at Todshawhill, probably son of Walter and Isobel Millar. He is probably one of the 2 Johns recorded as tenant of Todshawhill in 1764. He is listed as resident of Todshawhill in the baptism records of several of his children. He married Beatrice Tait, who died in 1795, aged 74. Their children were: Walter (b.1748), baptised in Roberton, who died age 29; Robert (b.1749), baptised in Roberton; Jenny, who died young; Agnes (b.1751), married Robert Ballantyne; William (b.1752), died young; Isabella (b.1755), baptised in Roberton, who married James Laidlaw; William (again, b.1756), baptised in Roberton, who married Helen Elliot; John (b.1756), baptised the same day as William; Robert (b.1759), baptised in Roberton; and Jean (b.1763), baptised in Roberton, who married Adam Nichol. He is buried at St. Mary’s. His sister Mary died the same year as him. He may be the John of ‘Todgahill’ who was cautioner in 1764 for Isobell Scoon’s marriage to Robert Young. John (18th C.) married Isobel Nichol in Roberton Parish in 1766. He may be the same as one of the Johns who farmed at Todshawhill. John (d.1829) farmer at Branhxholme Park. A child of his died in 1816 and a son in 1829. He died in Hawick. He was surely related to the later John at Branhxholme Park. John (1750–1836) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and probably Beatrice Tait (or possibly son of the John born in 1713, this generation is confused by multiple men of the same name). He married Rachel Riddell in Roberton in 1770. Their children were Robert (b.1770); John (1771–1861) who died in Seneca, New York; Janette (1773–1839) who married James Scott and died in Seneca, New York; James (1769–1851) died in Seneca; Walter (b.1776); William (1779–1863) who married Margaret Hutton and Elizabeth Amos and died in Hawick; Beatrice (b.1782); and possibly Walter (b.1787), if he was at Shirenscleuch then. He may be the same as the John who was farmer at Easter Parkhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1771–1861) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Rachel Riddell. In 1800 he emigrated to the New York, where he settled in Seneca and

Patrick excluded: James (b.1657). He married Catherine Laidlaw, and their children in 17th C. lived in Hawick Parish. He married Susanna Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1641). He is probably the same John who secondly married Margaret Scott, since John was at Mabonlaw in 1822 when their son John was born, and at Martinshouse in 1813 when their son William was born. John (18th/19th C.) married Jane Watson. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Andrew (b.1804). John (1789–1835) farmer at Todshawhill. He was eldest son of Robert and Janet White. His heirs were recorded as tenants of Todshawhill in the period 1834–43. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1829, aged 41. Their children included: Robert (1812–85) who married Mary Nichol and died at Sparland, Illinois; William (1813–77) who married Henrietta Pool Gass; Wilhelmina (1815–43) married Walter Turnbull and emigrated to Canada; James (1818–57) farmed at Newstead Mill; and Charles Riddell (1826–93) died at Seneca, New York. He died at Hawick. Mary ‘the Cannie Wumman’ nee Turnbull (d.1857) known as ‘Mrs. Scoon’, she was listed as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851. She was listed as a vintner at the Plough in Slater’s 1852 directory. She is also said to have been landlady of the Harrow Inn (but this may be confusion with the names). She married innkeeper William, and took over after his death. It is unclear what character trait gave her the nickname ‘Cannie’ (or ‘Canny’). Patrick (15th C.) resident of Belses Mill. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including bringing in Englishmen to steal 18 oxen and cows from him, for burning his house and pillaging goods from him. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Richardson, and their children included: Helen (b.1641). He is probably the Patrick recorded as a witness to baptisms in 1635 and 1639. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susanna Scott and their children included Anna (b.1650), with witnesses to the baptism Walter Scott and George Scott. Patrick (17th C.) lived in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Laidlaw, and their children included: James (b.1657). Patrick (d.c.1699) son of Robert. He was tenant farmer in Branxholm-town in at least the period 1671–96. In 1675 he was listed as son of Robert, who also leased part of Branxholmetown. In 1690–97 he and John (probably his son) were each leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he and John leased part of Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. He married Helen Hope and had children: John (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1672); another unnamed son (b.1674); William (b.1678) and Janet (b.1680). The witnesses in 1674 were Robert Dickson and James Burn. He secondly married Bessie Elliot and had children: Walter (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Patrick (b.1688), who married Agnes Elliot. Witnesses to the 1685 baptism were James Hume and Adam Ogilvie. He is probably the Patrick who witnessed (along with John Richardson) a baptism for James Martin in 1673. His will is recorded in 1699, although his surname is transcribed ‘Shoon’. Patrick (1685/6–1719) son of John. He was smith at Pathhead (presumably not the one in Wilton) and is buried at Castleton. Patrick (b.1688) son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot. He was farmer at Branxholmontown. In 1711 in Roberton he married Agnes Elliot. Patrick (18th C.) recorded being paid as Park Keeper at Hassendean for the Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1764–66. He had a voucher for salary in 1765 for weeding and keeping the hedges on Hassendean Common. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scoons. Roberts. baptism for James Craw, tenant at Branxholmtown, in 1711. He is probably the son of ‘Mary’ Riddell who is recorded leasing part of Branxholme Town as early as 1711, and is explicitly listed from 1714. The pair were in arrears for the rental there in the period 1711–17. He was tenant of 2½ along with Walter (as also John Wilson) in 1723 and along with Walter in 1735. He was tenant of Todshawhill in the period 1749–56 along with John, probably his son, or cousin. He married Agnes Elliot (1688–1736). Their children were: John (b.1712); another John (b.1713); Walter (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1720) who married Helen Murray; William (b.1722); and James (b.1724). The witnesses in 1712 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Robert Thomson in Newmill. He died at Todshawhill farm. Robert (b.1720) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot. He married Helen Murray (from Hawick Parish) in 1766, and she died in 1808. He might be the Robert, son of Robert, who died in 1790. He may also be the Robert, ‘Branxholmtown’, married to Janet Burton, whose son Walter was born in 1759. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1753 he married Janet Haliburton. Robert (1759–1828) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Beatrice Tait. He is recorded as farmer at Todshawhill in the estate records from 1792–1812, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and in baptismal records. He could also be the Robert who was listed as farmer at Broomiebras in 1792 and 1812. In 1788 he married Janet White, who died in 1795, aged 33. In 1797 he secondly married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Bunyan, who died in 1841, aged 73. His children included: John (b.1789) who farmed at Todshawhill; Janet (1791–1873) who married Thomas Hall and died in Hawick; Beatrice (b.1793); Jane (1795–1847), who married Thomas Hogg; James (b.1799), who died aged 22; Margaret, who died aged 29; Isabella (1802/3–59) married Robert Brydon, steward at Highchests; Elizabeth, died aged 26; Robert, died in infancy; and twins Robert and Elizabeth, who died in childhood. Margaret and Mary, ‘both interred in one grave, pox’ in 1830 were probably also his daughters. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert, carter in the Fore Row, who died in 1832, and whose wife Beatrice Murray, died in 1807. Robert (1789–1837) said to be from the Hawick area, he was a trader in southern Africa. Given the name and date, it is possible he was a son of Walter and Mary Elliot, who lived at Todshawhill; this Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1788. He went to South Africa in 1819 as part of Benjamin Moodie’s Scottish settler party (his brother James also being in the party). In 1827 he and William McLuckie travelled inland to the headwaters of the Marico River, the Ndebele territory of Mzilikazi. In 1829 he reached further into the interior, to the area of modern Pretoria, hunting and trading ivory, and establishing a relationship with Mzilikazi, which may have involved selling arms. The information he and fellow traders gained was passed on to Dr. Andrew Smith, who led a significant expedition into the central South Africa in 1834. He and fellow trader David Hume explored the valley of Olifants River and the Soutpansberg about this time. He is also mentioned as an ivory trader in 1836. In 1837 he was reported as being the only man who could recognise the gemsbok when a specimen was captured. He died of a heart attack while returning from a hunting trip. Parts of his journal may have survived. Robert (1812–83) farmer at Todshawhill, son of John and Margaret Scott. On the estate records he is tenant in 1836, as his father John’s heir. He emigrated to the U.S.A. about 1842, apparently still owing money on the lease. He was the last family member to farm at Todshawhill. In 1836 he married Mary Nichol. Their children were: Margaret; Jane; John, who married Ella Currie; Jessie; James; Charles, who married Mary Jennie; William; Minnie; Elizabeth; and Robert. Simon (17th C.) witness, along with Patrick, to a baptism for James and Janet Glendinning in 1635. This is one of the earliest Hawick Parish records. It is unclear how he might have been related to Patrick and James. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably brother of Robert and son of John and Margaret Riddell. He took over the tenancy of Branxholmtown from Margaret Riddell in 1719 (hence it is unlikely that he was son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot). He farmed Branxholmtown along with Robert until about 1735 (when the pair were recorded still leasing the farm). In 1717 he married Isobel Miller, who was servant to Thomas Shiel at Todshawhill. His children were: John (b.1718), who married Beatrice Tait and farmed at Todshawhill; Margaret (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); and twins Robert and Walter (b.1729). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott, and their children included Walter (b.1714). Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer at Commonside. His parents names are not known, but he was surely related to the other local Scoons. He married Agnes Falside. Their children included: Walter

Henry went to South Africa with his brother; and William (b.1794). Walter d.1832 shoemaker at Kirkstylefoot. In 1831 he was served heir to his father Robert, who was a farm servant in Hawick. Walter (1785–1840) son of Walter and Mary Elliot. He was born in Roberton Parish (at Todshawhill) and became a blacksmith at Langholm. He could be the Walter who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Elizabeth Young (1784–22) and secondly Janet Stothart (1799–1842). He had at least 13 children, but only a few survived into adulthood. Children with his first wife were: Walter (1811–59); John (b.1813), who died young; Euphemia (1815–97), who married and emigrated to the U.S.A.; Margaret (1818–1907); James (again, b.1821), also died young; and 3 unnamed. With his second wife there were: James (b.1823), who died young; Robert (1824–78); William (1826–46); Isabella (1828–87), who died in Wigan; Mary (1830–69); Elizabeth (1831–71), who died in Bury; Janet (b.1835); and James (b.1837). Most of the family are buried in Langholm. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Robert Young. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Sarah Winthrope in 1756 and their children included: Robert (b.1756); Andrew (b.1759); and Agnes (b.1761). He must have been a fairly prominent man in the town, since the witnesses to baptisms include ‘writer’ Thomas Winthrope (perhaps his father-in-law) and Bailie James Scott, as well as George Scoon (presumably a relative). He may be the ‘Servant to Mr Somervel’ who witnessed baptisms for Walter Turnbull, David Baldie, Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. William (18th C.) farmer at Todshawhillshiel. He had children: Margaret (b.1780); Walter (b.1783); and Beatrices (b.1783). He was clearly related to the other Scoons of Todshawhill, but it is not clear how.

He is probably the William who married Helen Elliot in 1779. William (b.1779/80) listed as ‘Formerly a Farmer’ in the 1861 census, when he was visiting the Young family on O’Connell Street. William (1817–c.50) innkeeper in Hawick. He was son of William and Elizabeth Amos. In 1841 he was innkeeper of the Tushielaw Inn and based on the birthplaces of his children was later at Crosslee Toll (near Stow) and then in Hawick. He married Mary Turnbull in 1836; she is recorded as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851, and she died in 1857. Their children included: Walter (1837–55); Helen (1839–1918); Mary (1842–89); William (1849–66); and Isabella, twin of William, who married John Kyle. William (19th C.) shepherd at East Buccleuch. In 1836 he was married to Mary Turnbull, by the dissenting minister in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1837); and Helen (b.1839) (also formerly ‘Scoon’, ‘Scone’, ‘Scoone’, ‘Scoones’ and ‘Scoons’).

Scoon an Barrie’s (skoon-in-baw-reez) n. tweed manufacturing company based at Weensland Mills in the late 19th century. They also purchased Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and the partnership evolved into Scoon & Hood’s.

Scoon an Hood’s (skoon-in-hoodz) n. tweed manufacturing company, which grew out of Barrie & Scoon. Their main premises were at Teviotdale Mills at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road (48 Commercial Road). There was a serious fire in 1959, and later the mill became part of Innes & Henderson. In the latter part of the 20th century it was converted into a garage, Thornwood Motors.

scotch (skoch) adj. relating to or characteristic of Scotland, but uniformly loaned as a phrase throughout the nation, the terms ‘Scots’ or ‘Scottish’ being preferred, except in particular phrases such as ‘Scotch broth’. Also note that it is never used for ‘whisky’.

scotchbald (skoch-bawld) n., arch. an earwig (also written ‘scotchbolt’, a variant of ‘Coachbell’, ‘Touch-spale’ or the English ‘Twitchbell’; shortened to scotchie; scodgie may also be related).

scotchie (sko-chee) n., arch. an earwig (a shortened form of scotchbald and possibly related to scodgie).

Scotch Kershope (skoch-ker-shup) n. cottage on the Kershope Burn, on the Scottish side of the Border, used as an outdoors educational facility. William Elliot was shepherd there in 1861. Enclosures marked near there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map are no longer visible.

Scotch nettle (skoch-ne’-ul) n., arch. a white-flowered, stingless nettle, perhaps Lamium album.

Scotland (sko-shu) n. poetic name for Scotland – ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Odin...’[JH], ‘Proud of his laws, tenacious of his right, And vain of Scotia’s old unconquer’d might’[JL], ‘All now is changed, and haleyon years Succeed the feudal baron’s sway: And trade, with arts and peace, appears To bless fair Scotia’s happier day’[RW], ‘When fair Scotia’s host at Flodden lost The flower o’ its chivalry’[TK], ‘...We showed them Scotia’s door’[GLG], ‘...For Scotia owns no braver men Than dwell in Teviotdale’[MrsW], ‘From many a house gay flags and pennons fly, And Scotia’s ancient emblem in the breeze...’[JCG], ‘When Scotia lost on Flodden Field The Hawick Callants won Renown, that through the centuries Has never been outdone’[WFC], ‘They sealed, in blood, for Hawick that day The worth of Scotia’s men of yore; Revere them evermore’[IWS].
Scotland  (sko'-lind, sko'-lund) n.  one of the four nations of the United Kingdom, an independent country until 1603, with its parliament merging with that of England in 1707 (and being re-established in 1999). The capital is Edinburgh, population 5,100,000 (1991) – ‘Auld Scotland’s howes and Scotland’s knowes, And Scotland’s hills for me’ [HSR], ‘Oh! Scotland! Bonny Scotland! In your purple robe arrayed, You’re my laughing barefoot lover and my tattered gipsy maid’ [WHO], ‘Scotlands calling (Scotland), Scotlands calling (Scotland), Calling, Calling, You home’ [AIB].

Scotland Yet  (sko'-lind-ye’, sko'-lund-yet) n.  the most famous song written by Henry Scott Riddell, and once regarded almost as the Scottish national anthem. It was set down in ?? at Ramsaycleuch, in Hawick Parish at that time, supposedly while sitting on a rock on a summer’s morning following a heavy rain fall. The tune was composed by Peter McLeod of Edinburgh, and the money raised from selling the sheet music was used to pay for iron railings around the Burns Monument at Calton Hill. The ‘honours three’ in the refrain refers to the crown, sceptre and sword of Scotland. The song was often sung at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. The song was revived by Scocha on their 2004 album – ‘The song he wrote was one day sung Wherever Scotsmen met. Its patriotic strains can still Be heard in Scotland yet’ [IWL].

Scots  (skots) n.  the language spoken in Scotland, derived from a Germanic dialect spoken by Anglo-Saxon settlers, being a distinct, if far from homogeneous, form of English, adj. pertaining to Scotland or the Scots, Scottish. It is fiercely debated whether Scots it is a separate language or merely a set of dialects. The speech of Hawick people has much in common with Scots in general, but also much that is peculiar to Teries.

Scotts an English  (skots-an-ing-gleesh) n., arch.  game formerly played by boys, in which 2 teams defend their hats and coats from each other. It was said (in Chambers 1841 ‘Popular Rhymes of Scotland’) that the game particularly flourished in Hawick, where the boys would defiantly shout ‘King Covenanter, come out if ye daur venture! Set your feet on Scots grund, English, if ye daur!’.

Scots Dyke an Hare Mos Turnpike  (skots-dik-an-här-mos-turn-pik) n.  turnpike road legislated by the general Act of 1764, with this specific road act published in 1770 (with an additional act for repairing and widening the road in 1785, and the acts repealed in 1807). This led to a great improvement in the road, allowing it to be passable by wheeled traffic, thereby allowing Hawick to develop as a centre for the carrying trade. The cost of constructing the road was borne by subscribers, who recouped their money via tolls collected approximately every 6-8 miles along its length. The road ran from the English Border at Scots Dyke (in Dumfriesshire) to Hare Moss (in Roxburghshire) just outside Selkirk, following the route of the modern A7. It passed through Hawick via Martinshouse, Langbalk and the Loan. The Haremoss and Scots Dyke (East District) Turnpike Trust was established by an Act of 1829. It covered the administration of more than 20 miles of road in Roxburghshire. The revenue for upkeep of the road and repayment to the creditors came from 5 tolls. George & James Oliver acted as Clerks to the Trust in the mid-19th century (also called ‘Scotch Dyke’).

Scots Greys  (skots-gräz) n.  regiment that amalgamated to form the Royal Scots Dragoons Guards in 1971. William Robertson, quarter-master of the regiment, was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. At the election of 1835 a troop of these dragoons was sent to Hawick to try to keep the peace.

Scots Law  (skots-law) n.  legal system of Scotland, based on Roman legal ideas, where legality is decided by interpreting fundamental principles rather than appealing to precedent. There are also many differences with the English system in the naming of court officials etc.

Scots pound  (skots-pownd) n., arch.  a former unit of currency used in Scotland. It was fixed at 1/12th of a pound sterling at the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and ceased to be a legal unit following the Union of the Parliaments in 1707. However, it continued to be used in practice for some time after that, particularly in rural areas. Hawick Parish records made the switch to sterling only in 1753.

Scottstown  (skots-toon) n.  farm in Peeblesshire, on the Tarth Water, just to the north-east of Kirkurd. This appears to have been an early property of the Scots, before they moved to Bucleuch and Branxholme.

Scott  (sko’) n.  Adam (13th C.) recorded around 1240 when Christian, daughter of Adam FitzGilbert, donated the lands of Inglisston to the Chapel of St. Mary, with some rights reserved to the men of Blyth, as they had in the days of ‘Adam the Scot and William the Bald, of good memory’. Since these lands were adjacent to those of Kirkurd and Scotstoun (held from early times by the family that became the Scotts of Buccleuch), it is possible that he was an early ancestor. His name is given in Latin as ‘Ade Scoti’. Adam (d.c.1255) referred to as the deceased previous owner of lands in Gullane (East Lothian) which were granted to the church there sometime between 1213 and 1255. Adam (13th C.) listed on the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. No other information is given about him, so it is not known if he is associated with later Scotts. Adam (13th C.) witness to a charter that the Comyns had for lands in Kirkintilloch (Dumbartonshire) in about 1277. Adam (13th C.) messenger who was paid, along with Henry Pykard ‘cokin’, for delivering letters from King Edward I to members of the Scottish court in 1296/7. His connection to other Scotts is unknown. He could be the same man as ‘Adam Skot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, perhaps at the time a prisoner in Newcastle Castle. He could also be the Adam recorded in ‘Hilderton’ church in 1279, admitting that he was a mercenary soldier and had renounced the King. Adam (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in the Parish of Linton in Peeblesshire, around 1300. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. Probably the same man was also witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. It is unclear how he might be connected to other contemporary Scotts, but Sir Walter was also on the 1438 panel, and William and his son John were witnesses to the 1441 sasine. Perhaps the same Adam was witness to the 1448 sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat, between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Simon of Routledge; the other names appearing beside his are Stephen of Castletlaw, Walter and Richard, who were probably near relations. Adam Ade’ (15th C.) Ranger of Ettrick Ward according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1456, where his name is listed as ‘Atkino Scot’. He is recorded as Ranger several times from 1457 to 1467, with Sir Walter as Master Ranger; Sir Alexander (of Howpasley) took over by 1469, and David also served as a Ranger for Ettrick in the 1460s. It seems unlikely (because of the age) that he could be the later son of Sir Alexander, but he was surely a close relative, possibly an otherwise unrecored brother of Sir Alexander and son of Sir Walter. Perhaps the same Adam was on the panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Adam (15th C.) Bailie of Rutherglen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1477 and 1481. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Annelshope (d.bef. 1502) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, and brother of Walter of Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Ade Scot’, one of the heirs of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in a charter for the Barony of Branxholme in 1484. He is probably the ‘Ada Scot’ who witnessed a document in 1482 in which Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton to David Scott of Branxholme; Robert was also a witness, probably his cousin of Whitchesters. Possibly the same Adam was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. And probably the same Adam was witness to the charter granting Robert of Allanhaugh the Lordship of Whitchesters in 1484/5 and his resignation of the lands almost immediately after. He may be the Adam who was witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487, along with James and several local landowners. He may be the ‘Ade Scot’ who was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne for the document leasing his lands in 1488. He was Warden of Ettrick Ward in the period 1489–92, responsible for administering the Crown lands there, and so his name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for Scotland. He took over the office from Walter, who had taken over from William (surely all closely related). In 1488 he had the farm of Cacrabank for his fee and in 1490 and 1492 he leased ‘Garliscleuch’. He also let the farm of Gamescleuch in 1492. After 1492 he is recorded being in arrears as former Ranger for Ettrick. In 1494/5 he was ‘de auldinnis hop’ when standing as surety for Bernard Shortreed in Esenside, ‘in auldernischop’ when he was surety for John Burnet, resident of Tushielaw, and ‘in auldinnis hop’ when he was surety for Oliver Lauder with Thomas Turnbull and for William Peacock in Buccleuch. He was additionally surety, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, in 1494/5 for John in Ernleach. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as ‘in Auldinnischop’ when he was allowed to pay a fine for stealing 2 horses from the servants of the Earl of Angus at Hermitage; Walter of Howpasley was caution for him. Later he was allowed to compound for the crimes of: stealing the 2 horses at Hermitage; resetting the ‘traitors of Leven’; resetting Edmond and Fergus Storie; resetting Robert Brydon, John Frissel and John Pattinson, particularly when they plundered Wolfhope; stealing 5 cows from ‘rafftrehop’; stealing 16 cows from Deuchar; and common theft before the date of his compounding. Walter of Howpasley was again his surety. John was allowed to ‘compone’ along with him in 1494/5 and was presumably a close relative. In the Treasurer’s accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was recorded as brother of Walter of Howpasley in 1499 when he was assigned Tushielaw for 3 years. He was also assigned Gamescleuch and Corsecleuch in 1499, and still had to pay appears as the former Ranger of Ettrick Ward. He was referred to as deceased in the 1502 Exchequer Rolls. He may be the Adam recorded as ‘Ade Scott’ along with his son Walter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for Ettrick Forest. Adam (15th C.) recorded in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme, where he was bequeathed 30 sheep. He was listed as ‘Ade Scotte’ and may be the same as one of other contemporary Adams. Another man, listed as ‘Ade Scote, claudio’ (probably ‘lame’) was given 6 sheep. Adam (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh. He was surety for Thomas Clomnwell in Minto. He was recorded being ‘in wolfhop’, which may well be the Wolfhope near Tushielaw (but it could be the one in Ewesdale or Wolfhopelee in Rulewater). Adam ‘Corvus’ (15th C.) son of Thomas of Bush. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aiire held in Selkirk. His nickname was presumably associated with the crow. Adam ‘Ade’ (15th/16th C.) listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. He is probably the same as one of the other Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being in ‘Hawchesteris’, probably Highchesters near Hawick. He had remission for resetting 120 sheep, which had been stolen by the Laird of Minto from George Rutherford at Longnewton and ‘Sandystanis’. His crimes also included associating with rebels Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William Scott. At the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission from the King for these crimes, with George of Whames as his surety. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when it is said that he had a horse and 23 sheep stolen from him at Kershope. John in Whitehaugh has remission for these crimes. Adam of Hermiston (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of Synton in 1494, where he was ‘Adam Scot de Hirdmanstoun’. In 1500 he was one of the witnesses to an instrument of resignation by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was also on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; he is recorded as ‘Adam Scot of Hirdmenstone’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Clarilaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He is mentioned in a charter of 1521 as being cousin of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The later David in Clarilaw may have been his son or other close relative. In 1526 he was tenant in Clarilaw when he was listed on the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their attack on the Earl of Arran; ‘William Scot, and George Gledstanis, his brother’ are listed right after him (they may have been step-brothers or brothers-in-law), as well as (separately) William in Hassendean. His eldest son was Robert of Clarilaw. He may be the same as the Adam of ‘Nethirmanis of Hassendien’ whose son Robert had a ‘precept of clare constat’ (meaning he was probably deceased) in 1550/1 for the lands of Little Drinkstone. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant of Harwoodhill in 1502 when his son Patrick had remission for being involved in the theft of 200 sheep. Adam (d.1530) of Tushielaw, probably son of David of Tushielaw and grandson of Alexander of Howpasley (although some accounts place him as son on Alexander). Called ‘King of the Thieves’ or ‘King of the Border’, he was a powerful chief in the early 16th century. He may be the Adam ‘in Turschelaw’ recorded paying a fine in the Exchequer Rolls of 1499. He is recorded (as ‘Ade’) in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1503 receiving remission for his rieving crimes, and in 1505 he received remission for breaking out of prison in Edinburgh Castle. He received a charter for the lands of Tushielaw in 1507. In 1512 he is recorded as one of those involved in the feud between supporters of Lord Maxwell and Lord Crichton of Sanqhar. The lands of Gilmancleuch, ‘Cowinlaw’ and Gamescleuch were feued to him in 1510. The ‘fermes’ of Corsecleuch, Cacra-bank, Tushielaw and ‘Cowinelaw’ were remitted to him in 1513. He is one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace on the Border in 1524/5. In 1525 he and the Laird of Henderland were warned to find pledges. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. In 1528 he was witness to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is also recorded in late 1528.
as witness to the document recording the decision over the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh. The Sir Walter ‘of Tushielaw’, who was nearly contemporary with him was probably his uncle Sir Walter of Howpsley. He was arrested along with William Cockburn of Henderland, as an example to other thieves of the time. He was supposedly hanged by James V’s men on an old ash tree in front of his stronghold, although he was probably actually executed in Edinburgh. The charges against him included taking ‘blackmail’ from ‘John Browne in Hoprow’, ‘Andrew Thorbrand and William his brother’, ‘the poor Tenants of Hopcaizow’ (possibly Howpsley) and ‘the Tenants of Eschescheill’. He was beheaded and his head placed on top of the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. Among his descendants were probably the Scotts of Horsleyhill, who were important in Hawick in the 17th century. His sons Robert, John and William are also listed in the 1526 remission. He was succeeded by William, presumably his son. This could be the William who was tenant in Cacrabank in 1541, along with ‘his moder’, who would therefore be his widow. Adam (16th C.) listed in the 1526 pardon to a large number of Borderers for taking in part in an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in Falside’ (probably the lands in the Ettrick valley), and so could have been related to the Scotts of Kirkurd and Hassendean, who held those lands. His brothers Alexander and William are also listed. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded claiming the tenancy of Falside in Ettrick in 1541. Adam (16th C.) witness in 1526/7 to a document relating to the tenancy of the lands of Harden. He was brother of Simon of Fenwick. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Scotts, with one possibility being Adam of Tushielaw. Adam of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably son of either William or Robert of Hassendean. He was Laird of Burnfoot (and probably also Burnhead) in Teviotdale (as opposed to Ale). He may be the Adam of Newhall who witnessed a charter relating to Harden in 1520. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with William of Harden and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was among 10 Scotts and an Elliot who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was listed among the Scotts who were involved in breaking down the doors of the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking for Sir Peter Cranston. They were all later bound over not to harm Cranston. His son William is also listed, and appears to have died before him. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as being ‘in Quhithoip’ (i.e. Whithope), when he was one of the first in a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branhmole complaining that their lands had been raided by the Kers in the previous year. In 1550 he was a witness to a lease granted by the curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step son of Sir Walter Scott of Branhmole) to his mother, signed at Branhmole; he was there ‘Adame Scott in Quhihoup’. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam of Allanhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was also ‘Adam Scot of Alanehauche’ in about 1557, when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Ringwodhat’. Although it is unclear, he does not appear to have been the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time, and so was possibly brother of the Laird (perhaps William), or perhaps from an earlier branch of Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is also recorded in 1562 as one of the relatives of the minor Sir Walter of Branhmole to whom letters were sent to arrange the selection of guardians. In 1564 he was listed (first) among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Allanhaugh. He could be the Adam (with brother William) listed right after Robert of Allanhaugh in the 1526 pardon for a large number of Borderers assisting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran; in this case it may even be that he and William were both brothers of Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1585 there was a bond signed (in Selkirk and Hawick) between Sir Walter of Branholme and Robert of Allanhaugh, to settle a feud that existed between them, arising from the death of David (son of the deceased Adam of Allanhaugh) and Hob Dalgleish (Sir Walter's servant at Braidhaugh); the bond mentions other sons of his, making it clear that he was not closely related with Robert of Allanhaugh, who was Laird at that time. Adam of Bonnington (d.bef. 1607) son of Robert, together with whom he first acquired the lands of Bonnington near Peebles in 1552. His older brother had acquired Rysholm (through their mother), but died in 1549. He acquired Wamphray from his mother, but (along with his father) sold it in 1549. He was mentioned along with his father in a charter involving lands in Peeblesshire in 1557/8. In 1561/2 he resigned to his superior his lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig; he signed ‘wt my hand at the pen led by me’. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several Scotts and others of sheep stealing. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands in 1572. He had a court case with Robert of Haining in 1580. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of Sir Walter’s servant at Braidhaugh); the bond ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who arose from several farms around the Lothians, as well as Nether Whittlaw (owned by Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre), the murder of at least a couple of men and taking the Minister of Lyne prisoner. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of ‘Sandy’s Ninian’), these being 2 of the last ‘riervers’. He is also recorded (presumably in error) as ‘Adam Steill, alias callit the Peck . . . ane of the maist notable thieffes that evir raid’. He may be the Adam ‘little Peck’ listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; John ‘the Tinkler’ and Andrew ‘the Breadie’ were also listed. Additionally he was recorded in 1598 among ‘brothers, tenats and servants’ of William of Fahnash when there were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn and further complaints from Sir James Sandilands, that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who raise to the fray’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Deephope. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘Adame Scot of Lochahaucht’ when he witnessed the ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick in which Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. All the other witnesses were quite local, but it is unclear where ‘Lochahaucht’ might have been. Adam of Gledstains (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. The others were mainly Turnbulls of Rulewater, suggesting that his lands were possibly ‘Little Gledstains’ there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raif on Stirling). He was tenant at Mosspeebie, and his son John is also listed. Adam of Todshawhaugh (16th C.) listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He also signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in 1594 when his son Walter was on a long list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. William of Todshawhaugh, listed by Scott of Hassendean as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, was surely closely related to him. Adam (16th C.) recorded as being in Ormestoun when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas of Crook. William Scott and Robert Scott, both ‘in Hawick’ were also involved. He was surely related to John in Ormiston, who is recorded in 1589. Adam ‘Adie the Peck’ (d.1601) hanged in Edinburgh for a list of crimes. This included cattle and sheep stealing from several farms around the Lothians, as well as Nether Whittlaw (owned by Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre), the murder of at least a couple of men and taking the Minister of Lyne prisoner. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of ‘Sandy’s Ninian’), these being 2 of the last ‘riervers’. He is also recorded (presumably in error) as ‘Adam Steill, alias callit the Peck . . . ane of the maist notable thieffes that evir raid’. He may be the Adam ‘little Peck’ listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; John ‘the Tinkler’ and Andrew ‘the Breadie’ were also listed. Additionally he was recorded in 1598 among ‘brothers, tenats and servants’ of William of Fahnash when there were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn and further complaints from Sir James Sandilands, that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who raise to the fray’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1598 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him, meaning he was not among the Scotts for whom Buccleuch was considered chief. Adam of Alton (d.1604) recorded as ‘Adame Scott sone to Robert Scot of Auldton’ in a long list of those given ‘respite’ by the King for the 1593 murder of Lord Maxwell, Warden of the Marches at Dryfe Sands. Scott of Satchells says he was in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He succeeded his father Robert in 1594. In 1603 he was also ‘of Alton’ on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by the then Baron, James Cunningham. He died shortly afterwards and had 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Robert, ‘vocat de Al-toun’. In 1606 his son Walter was served as his heir to the lands of ‘Littill Dombstoun’ (probably meant for ‘Drinkstone’) in Chamberlain Newton, as well as heir to his grandfather Robert in the lands of East Hassendean (thus establishing the connection between these 3 generations of Scotts of Alton). He must have been related to the ex-Bailie of the same name recorded in 1612. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Bonnington and son of Adam. He was accused in 1616–17 of accompanying his brothers Simon and John, together with ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane when Walter ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered while fishing on the Et-trick. Adam (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert, he was brother of William in Burn-head. He married Bessie, daughter of John Lang-lands, minister of Wilton. However, he appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his other brother, Robert. Bailie Adam (16th/17th C.) ex-Magistrate of Hawick, who was involved in the incident of 1612 in which the town challenged the authority of the Baron regarding the town’s ability to impose taxes. He was also mentioned as Bailie in a murder case in the same year. His son James may have become an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1615. Rev. Adam (d.bef. 1625) minister of Hawick Parish from 1612 until at least the end of 1623. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1607 and became minister at Minto in 1608. He may well have been related to a local branch of the Scotts; his father was probably Walter, a merchant of Edinburgh. He was translated from Minto and presented to Hawick Parish by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in August 1612. He was recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1622. The circumstances of his death are not recorded, but he must have been relatively young. After his decease he was succeeded as minister by Robert Cunningham. Adam of Burn-foot (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 along with other Scotts when they were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. The other Scotts were from Midshiels and Hawick, and he paid the 1000 merks caution to ensure that Adam, son of Walter of Midshiels did not molest Thomas Turnbull of Knowe or others there. He is recorded as being ‘of Burnfitt’ in 1643, when his lands in Hassendean Parish (presumably Burnfoot) were valed at £312. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burn-foot, but he may have been a tenant of Burnfoot, rather than Laird. Adam of Shaws (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He is probably the son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch who was served heir to his brother William in 1647. He had at least 4 sons: James, who succceeded; Adam in Deloraine, who purchased North Bowhill; Scott of Grassyard; and Francis, a shepherd mentioned by Scott of Satchells. His lands were presumably Shaws, between the Ale and Et-trick valleys. He was described as ‘in Schawis’ in 1670 when his eldest son James married Marion Scott of Shielswood. Adam ‘Wester Adam’ (17th C.) smith of Hawick who was ordered to pay a fine of 100 merks for failing to appear at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the Adam, smith in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Adam, smith, was mentioned in the Burgh Records of 1640, when there was a dispute between him and Thomas Deans; Thomas claimed that he had been promised payment of various sorts from him (presumably for being a servant), including money, a pair of shoes, oats, barley and clothing. Adam ‘in Yairliside’ (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a horse in the Town Book in 1641. His location was a variant of Earlside, and he may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He was witness to a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds in Hobkirk Parish. His ‘servitor’ Walter Scott was also a witness, while this same or a different Walter was his son, who witnessed a sasine in 1659. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill, along with William (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. He could be a descendant of Andrew, tenant of Todshawhill, listed as a ‘pensioner’ of Buccleuch. Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Dunlie in the parish of Cassiltoun’ (probably Dinlees on Hermitage Water) when he witness a document relating to the lands of Appotside in Rulewater in 1656. Adam of Ashtrees (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when his lands in Southdean Parish were valued at £33. He may be the same as one of the other Adams. Adam of Galalaw (17th/18th C.) recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He must have been related to the later Adam of Galalaw. He was probably the Laird of Galalaw who witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme of Stirches in 1708. In 1709 his servant Robert Elliot had a child baptised. Also in 1709 his son Alexander witnessed (‘younger of Galalaw’) a baptism for Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He was a resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Esther, daughter of Rev. John Langlands and their children included: John (b.1683); William (b.1685); and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ (his brother-in-law) and Robert (perhaps his own father or brother). He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms for other Scotts in Roberton Parish in 1686 and 1688 and a baptism along with Francis (perhaps the minister) in 1688. Adam (d.c.1695) described as ‘portioner in Hassendean’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same as ‘Adam Scott of Hassindene’ who is mentioned in 1637 as ‘younger’ of Hassendean and who in 1669 was served as heir to his father, Robert of Hassendean. He was in turn succeeded by his son Robert in 1695. In 1692 he had a renewed lease with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Over Hassendean, ‘east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same’. Adam (d.c.1693) listed as ‘in Wood, in Abotroule parish’ when his will was recorded in 1693. It is unclear where this farm might have been. Adam (17th C.) resident of Havick Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford and their children included: Walter (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Robert and William, who were probably related to him. Adam of Burnfoot (17th C.) probably son of Walter. He sold Burnhead to William Scott, tenant in Burnhead. He was one of the heritors accused of instigating the riot at the removal of the roof of Hassendeane Kirk in 1690. It seems likely he was the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for William (later referred to as ‘of Burnhead’) in 1686 and another for Robert in Burnhead in 1687. He was probably one of the men arrested following the riots of 1690; there is a warrant for the arrest of Adam and Robert Scott of Hassendeane and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690, which may relate to him. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot who paid tax for 4 hearths in his house in 1694. In 1695 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington (probably a hangover from earlier wadsets between the 2 families). In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot. His eldest son was probably also called Adam. He is probably the Adam in Burnhead who married Grizel, sister of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1678; her will is recorded in 1687, when he was listed being ‘in Burnhead’. He is also recorded ‘in burnhead’ in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in 1682. His children with Grizel Turnbull included: John (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and possibly James (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were John and William Scott (who were probably related to him). In 1686 he ‘had a bastard child baptised’ called James, with witnesses Walter Paisley and John Muir. Adam of Bowhill (17th C.) purchased the lands of Langhope from John in 1691. It is unclear how he was related to the others Scotts of Bowhill. Adam (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam (17th C.) cottar at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was surely related to other Scotts of Girnwood. Adam (17th C.) rented half the farm of Overhall in 1690 and 1692, with James renting the other half. The pair were also listed as residents at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. They were surely related. In 1694–98 he was renting half of Overhall, with the other half rented by Walter Scott, ‘Chief’, who was surely also related. He and Walter also served as cautioners for Margaret Scott, widow of James Scott, who was renting part of Borthaugh in 1696; this suggests that they were closely related. In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill. He paid to rent the Wilton mortcloth in 1704, but it is unclear who had died. Adam (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Riddell and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Margaret (b.1700); and John (b.1702). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Robson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1693); Bessie (b.1699); Bessie (again, b.1700); Helen (b.1702); Agnes (b.1704); and an unnamed child (b.1708). Adam (17th/18th C.) son of Walter ‘in Wauchope’ and brother of William, who was Chamberlain to Buccleuch. He witnessed documents for the Elliots of Harwood in 1688, 1692 and 1700. He was a tenant at Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased the farms of Stonedge and Howa from Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. These were jointly valued at £856 12s. In 1724 he transferred these lands to his brother William, who was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was probably unrelated to the later Scotts of Wauchope. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Lauder in Hawick in 1706. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish, where he married Isobel Scott in 1708. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses William Henderson in Flex and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Brown in Ashirk in 1716. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1710 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. He may be the Adam who married Janet Gordon in Robertson in 1703. Other children, baptised in Robertson, who could be his, include: Margaret (b.1707); Agnes (b.1713); Adam (b.1714). Adam (17th/18th C.) probably son of Adam. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Burnfoot upon Teviot’. He is probably the ‘Archibald’ (assuming this is an error) of Burnfoot listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1700. He may also be the Scott of Burnfoot listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1700. He is probably the Adam who (along with Gavin Plummer) sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Cavers par.’ in 1701 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick Parish. This suggests he was a farmer in a part of Cavers bordering on Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Paterson, probably daughter or sister of miller James Paterson. Their children included: Janet (b.1701); and Barbara (b.1715). Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant of Woll who was reported in 1718 for disparaging remarks against the elders of Ashkirk Parish, calling them ‘sky-balds’, and complaining that one of the elders had called him a ‘ragabast’ and Jacobite villain. He married Margaret Brown in 1716 and their children included: Walter (b.1717); John (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). Adam (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Bridges in 1705 and another for merchant William Black in 1721. He married Helen Lauder in 1706 and their children included: Francis (b.1710); Adam (b.1713); James (b.1718); Helen (b.1722); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1713 were William Gardner and mason John Napier (who also witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine on the same day). He is probably also the weaver whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1721, with the witnesses being merchant James Aitken and cooper John Aitken. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Cavers and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included Walter (b.1736). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1721 and 1735. He is probably the Adam who witnessed a baptism for David Renwick at Lees in 1725. He married Mary Scott in Wilton in 1720. Their children included: William (b.1721); Isobel (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Agnes (b.1728); Adam (b.1731); Mary (b.1733); and John (b.1735). The witnesses in 1721 were William and Adam Scott and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Gledstains Scott in Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Helen (b.1730); and Francie (b.1733). Adam (18th C.) married Isobel Leyden in Cavers in 1728. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Cavers and their children included: Isabel (b.1739); James (b.1744); and Adam (b.1748). Adam (d.bef. 1772) of ‘Tandlaw’ in Wilton Parish (Tandlaw probably). He is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1772, when his daughter Barbara married John Greig. He is probably related to the earlier Scott of Tandlaw. Adam ‘Goud Yeddie’ (18th C.) building contractor, probably the grandfather of Mrs. Armstrong of the Post Office. He was one of 2 contractors for the Hornshole Bridge, but gave up after an early accident brought down the framework on which the arch was to be constructed. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1750 he married Helen Scott, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Adam (b.1751); Elizabeth (b.1753); Ann (b.1754); Thomas (b.1756); John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Haliday abd their children included: Margaret (b.1751); John (b.1756); Margaret (b.1759); and Adam (b.1762). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Nichol and their children included: Thomas (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1761). Adam ‘Lint Aidie’ (1723/4–98) flax merchant in Hawick. He married Helen Scott in 1750, the marriage being announced in both Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes; she died in 1795, aged 68. Their children, baptised in Ashrkirk Parish included: Adam (b.1751), the eldest son, dyer, gold lace maker and travelling merchant; Elizabeth (b.1753); Ann (b.1754); Thomas (b.1756), who may have been a minister; John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759). Additional children, baptised in Hawick Parish, were: Margaret (b.1764); Helen (b.1765); James (b.1767); Walter (b.1770); and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1765 were ‘Mr John Laurie, student’ and John Kedie. Adam (18th C.) shepherd in Upper Dalgleish. He is famous for his home-spun prayers, as described by the Ettrick Shepherd (who had an uncle who herded with him). Adam (b.1731) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Laird of Nether Boucherest, where he was born. He became a planter at Montego Bay in Jamaica and married Mrs. Thorpe. His estate may be the one called St. James, referred to in 1800, with Adam Scott as the former owner. Adam (d.bef. 1797) tailor in Hawick. He married Janet Hardie in 1758 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: Robert (b.1758); Isobel (b.1761); Barbara (b.1764); Marion (b.1767); and Adam (b.1771). Adam of Galalaw (18th C.) probably descended from the earlier Scotts of Galalaw. He was listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 being entered into the lands ‘in the old parish of Hassendean’, probably the farm in Wilton Parish just north of Hawick. He may be the Adam of Borthwickshiel who paid the window tax in Roberton Parish in 1748. He was given the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiel by Walter Scott of Harden in 1770, and passed this on to Francis (brother of Walter of Harden) in 1780. He is marked as owner of Borthwickshiel on Ainslie’s 1773 map. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax for Roberton in 1785. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1785–86. He was taxed (in Roberton Parish, presumably at Borthwickshiel) for having a male servant in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was probably father or brother of Elizabeth, who married George Pott. Adam (1751–bef. 1819) eldest son of Adam, flax merchant of Hawick, known as ‘Lint Aidie’. He was a dyer, gold lace maker, and later travelling merchant of Hawick, later moving to Sunderland. He married Jane (1751–1837), daughter of baker and farmer Thomas Kedie. Adam (18th C.) miller in Hawick. On the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘Mr Adam Scott, miller, Hawick Mills’. ‘John Scott, miller, there’ (possibly the miller at Hummelknowes at that time) is listed after him, and so may have been related. ‘John and Adam Scott in Hawick’, who paid the cart tax in 1791, may be these same 2 men. He married Esther Scott in 1754 and their children included: Ann (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); and Francis (b.1762). The witnesses in 1757 were Bailie Robert and merchant George, who may have been related. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whithope (in Roberton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He married Alison Brown and their children included: George (b.1783); and Thomas (b.1786). These baptisms were not entered into the Roberton Parish records until 1808. It is possible that his marriage was in 1777 in Melrose. Adam (b.c.1770) blacksmith at ‘Spinneysbank-End’ in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was living with his wife Margaret and his son Robert, who was also a blacksmith. He could be the Adam from Langhaugh who married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert, tenant in Blackburnfoot. Adam (c.1784–1857) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He is probably the Adam, son of John, born in Hobkirk in 1782. In 1851 he is listed as a ‘Travelling Grocer’ at Reasknowe. He married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Leithead, who died atSunnybank in 1865, aged 78. Their children probably included: John (1811/2–35); Helen (1815/6–30); Thomas (b.1818); William (b.1820); William (1821/2–29), who died at Priesthaughshiel; and Charles (b.1823). He died at Raesknowe and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, after several others had been declared unfit or deserted. He may be the weaver of Hawick who was already deceased in 1810 when his wife Betty Cairns died. It is possible he is the ‘Kill Dryds Adam’ whose death is recorded in 1805; if so, then he was surely related to weaver Robert, who had essentially the same nickname. Adam (18th/19th C.) clogger on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Adam of Ashtrees (18th/19th C.) son of John of Ashtrees and brother of Thomas of Peel. He held Ashtrees according to the county valuation of 1788. He was succeeded by his son John, whose trustees sold the lands in 1855 to John of Riccalton (a cousin). Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron (1790–1865) son of John of Ashtrees and Isabel Rae. His father’s executors sold Ashtrees and it passed to a cousin. He farmed a large farm in West Rossshire. He married Janet, daughter of James Hall of Sciberscross, Sutherlandshire. Their children were: John of Drynoch, Skye; James, who went to Australia; Sir Henry Hall; Thomas; Margaret; Anne; Jessie; Esther; and several other daughters. Adam (1796–1838) son of James, who was herd in Wanchope, Hobkirk Parish. He sailed to America in 1812, along with a sister and Thomas Lockhart. He may have stayed with relatives in Bovina, New York state before settling in Ontario, on the Otontoa River. There he built a saw and grist mill in 1818, the area becoming known as Scott’s Plains. It was remaned Peterborough in 1825. He was described as being a huge man, 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighing 260 pounds. He married Patricia Ann Mann and their children were Margaret, Adam, Jeanette, James, Walter and Elizabeth. A plaque on the grounds of the Adam Scott Collegiate and Vocational Institute records how he was the first settler in Peterborough. Adam (b.1798/9) cattle dealer who was living at Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was still at Wester Parkhill and described as an agricultural labourer. His wife was Catherine (or Christina) and their children included Walter, James, Adam, William, Robert, John and Christopher. He could be a descendant of Robert, who was at Wester Parkhill in the latter part of the 18th century. Adam (b.1816/7) born at Legerwood, Berwick, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 7 Sandbed. He was recorded as a grocer at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory, and was also listed as an insurance agent for Northern. He married Agnes Laing, and their children included: George Laing (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); David Laing (b.1846); Jane Margaret Mary (b.1848); and Agnes Helen (b.1850). Adam (b.1816/7) born in Melrose, he was a policeman in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at Forkins Police Station and listed as 1st Class Police Constable. His wife was Agnes (from Eckford) and their children included Samuel, Janet, Adam, Isabella C., Andrew and William. Adam (19th C.) son of John Scott and Margaret Turnbull. He was shepherd at Shankendshielis, being recorded there in 1861. In 1859 he married Jane, daughter of John Dalgleish and Jane Smith. Adam (1826–81) son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was listed as a joiner along with his brother Charles in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a master joiner, employing 4 people. His premises were on Bourtree Place, specifically on Munro’s Close. He was the first person in Hawick to ride a ‘velocipede’. In 1861 he presented to the Archæological Society a silver coin of Edward II that he had found at Bourtree Place. He married Agnes Fleming (from Ancrum) and they had a son, Charles William. Adam (b.1828) son of Robert and Agnes, he was born in Wilton Parish, his father being farmer at East Boonraw. He himself was farmer at Burnfoot on Ale. In 1861 he was farming 800 acres there, and employing 6 people. He married Elizabeth Anderson (from the Burnfoot on Ale family) in 1852 and their children included: Thomas Anderson (b.1853), who emigrated, but returned; Robert (b.1855); Agnes (b.1857); Alexander Miller (b.1858); Adam (b.1860); David F. (b.1863), settled in Colorado; Sybella Fotheringham (b.1865), also in Kansas; William (b.1867); Ebenezer Anderson (1869–93); Elizabeth (b.1871); Charles Anderson (b.1875); and John Marcus (b.1877). Most of the family emigrated to America, settling in Pottawatomie County, Kansas, where the last 3 children were born. Adam (19th/20th C.) Hawick builder responsible for most of the stone-work at Stirches House, completed in 1902. There is a photograph of his work force outside the house. He may have been the same A. Scott who was Burgh Assessor around 1890. He may also be the Adam whose daughter Agnes was Cornet’s Lass in 1899. Adam (1874–1954) son of builder John and Margaret Inglis. He was a mason in Newcastleton, living at 1 Union Street. He married Agnes Dixon, who died in 1952, aged 80. Their children included: John Dixon (1908–9); and Margaret Inglis (‘Peggy’, 1911–19). They are buried in Etalton Cemetery. Agnes ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’ nee Murray (b.1590s) daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. She married William, younger of Harden in 1611. The romanticised version of the story involves the young Scott being captured in a skirmish, and choosing to marry the ugliest of Murray’s daughters in order to escape the gallows. In fact the true story is preserved in 2 detailed wedding contracts, making it clear that the marriage was a well-planned arrangement. She was still a minor at the time, and the contract involves many details about lands for female heirs, etc. The dowry had the value of £7,000. Her name is signed ‘Agnes Morraye’. Her eldest son, also Sir William, succeeded to Harden, while her 2nd son became Sir Gideon of Highchester. She is celebrated in a sculpture unveiled at Elibank in 1999. Presumably there was some basis for the characterisation of her physiognomy. Agnes (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when she was owed for her annual fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. Agnes (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Bessie were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (17th C.) convicted in Hawick in 1695 of bleeding Robert Scott ‘by thrusting her hand in his mouth, and ryveing out of his cheiks’. Agnes ‘Nans’, nee Noble (18th/19th C.) mother of James, schoolmaster at Yarrow and later occupant of Sillerbuthall. She was described (by Rev. James Russell) as ‘quite a character; kind, active, economical’. Her husband’s name is unknown. She lived with her son at Yarrow (presumably meaning she was widowed), and had a very high opinion of him. She was in charge of the boarders, of whom there were as many as 30 in the small house. Agnes nee Cook (b.1805/6) from Roberton, she was an innkeeper and grocer, listed at about 17 High Street on the 1851 census. She was also listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a widow, with children Janet and Margaret, born in Midlothian, and also living with her mother, Janet Cook, from Cavers, and sister Mary Cook. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Ailmer (12th/13th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch relating to the lands of Whitchesters. This probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Alexander. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as customs office in Perth in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1460s. He also rendered the accounts of the Bailies of Perth. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balcudie. Alexander (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the decision for John of St. Michael a few years earlier.

Albert ‘le Escot’, who along with John (presumably his brother or son) was given further protection ‘to trade in the realm during the King’s pleasure’. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Walter, son of Thomas, in the house of ‘Robert de Prudewyk’. Alexander (13th C.) listed as ‘Alisaundre Scot of Perthay’ in Lanarkshire when he paid home to Edward I in 1296. He could have been related to Sir Richard of Muredeston. Alexander (13th/14th C.) ropemaker at Newcastle. Along with ‘Matildis Scot’ and 3 other men, he is recorded in 1304 when payment was made for their wages in going to make ropes for Edward I’s castle at Stirling. Alexander (15th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Balcudie.

Sidney, who along with ‘Matildis Scot’ and 3 other men, he is recorded in 1304 when payment was made for their wages in going to make ropes for Edward I’s castle at Stirling. Alexander (15th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Balcudie relating to the lands of Whitchesters. This probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Alexander.

Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington (d.1488) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of the first Walter of Balcudie and brother of Sir David. He is sometimes said to be the same as Alexander, Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery, but this is a different man (although probably related). His father had gained the lands of Abington (in South Lanarkshire) in 1458/8, after being forfeited by the Douglases. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh for Robert Scott of Haining in 1463. In 1467/8 he was granted Howpasley by James III, the lands having previously been in the possession of the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies. In 1469 he and David together leased the farm of Mount Common. In 1470 he paid the redemption money for Midshiel and Appletreehall to their superior William Livingstone of Drumry; the appended shield shows the ‘bend charged with two crescents and a mule’ of the Scotts of Balcudie, with another mule which probably indicating cadet status. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Ettrick in the period 1469–5, taking over from Sir Walter of Buccleuch and having the lease of ‘Aldanishop’ (probably Eldinhope) for his fee; he was also stated in 1475 to be ‘de Kirkurde’. In 1471 he had a debt along with his mother and John Colquhoun, relating to Crown lands. In 1483 he was witness to a charter from Henry Wardlaw, giving the half barony of Witon to John Scott of Thirlestane (who was probably a relative). He is recorded as dead in 1478 (an error for 1488 perhaps), when his son and heir Sir Walter of Howpsalay had to pay William Inglis regarding the lands of Meiklehope. His sons Alexander and Adam are also mentioned in 1488. In 1493/4 (after he was deceased) his ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Midshiel and Appletreehall were assigned by William Livingstone of Drumny to Alexander, Lord Home. His sons were: Walter of Howpsalay; Adam, probably the Ranger of Ettrick Ward; Robert, who was ‘Tutor’ of Howpsalay; William, Abbot of Melrose; and probably David of Tushielaw. ‘Sym Scot’ is probably another son (recorded in 1526 as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpsalay). From the fact that his son Walter held the lease on Eldinhope along with his mother ‘Johannis Douglas’ from later in 1488 (probably after his death), with her name given as ‘Jonete Dowglas’ in 1492, it seems that his wife’s name was Joan or Janet Douglas. He probably died at the Battle of Sauchieburn in June 1488. Alexander (15th C.) Rector of Wigtown and Director of the Chancery and Clerk Register of Scotland. He is sometimes said to be the same as Sir Alexander of Howpsalay and Abington, but the 1488 charter for the Barony of Branxholme proves this not to be the case (there he was the last witness, while the charter itself refers to Alexander, brother of Sir David of Buccleuch as being deceased). However, it seems likely that he was also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is possible he is the Alexander, from the Diocese of St. Andrews, who notarised the 1464/5 sasine of Kirkton Mains and Flex for William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is probably the royal clerk who witnessed charters in the Glasgow cartulary in about 1473 and 1476. In the 1470s he received an annuity from the custom of woolen cloth in Edinburgh. He was listed as Rector of Wigtown, Clerk Register and auditor many times in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1480s. In 1483 he was Canon of Aberdeen and Clerk Register when he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Errol. And in 1483/4 he witnessed a charter for Alexander Home of that Ilk. In May 1488 he was Rector of Wigtown and Clerk of the Rolls and Register for the charter regranting the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas. And in the same month he had the same titles when he witnessed the charter for the resignation (and regranting) of the Barony of Branxholme. In 1491 he was witness to a ‘procuration of resignation’ involving Ruecastle. He also witnessed a large number of charters not relating to the Borders for James III in the period to 1483–8 and for James IV in 1488–9. He was still recorded as Rector of Wigtown in 1496. His signature is recorded (and reproduced in the 1877 study of the accounts of the lord high treasurer of Scotland). Alexander (15th C.) given 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander (15th C.) tenant in Broadlee, probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. He was mentioned in 1493 and 1494/5 when his son John was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John ‘in braudle’ was also mentioned, and was surely related. Alexander (15th C.) brother of Robert of Whames. In the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically stealing cattle from the tenants of Robert Ramsay in ‘dene hous’ and stealing sheep from William Murray in Sundhope; his surety was Robert of Whitschester. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘hop-toun’ recorded in 1498 at the Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for riding Andrew Taylor’s mare to death, killing Thomas Elphinstone’s cow and hurting him, and striking a child of the Laird of Adamland. William Bell in Peebles was his surety. His home was probably associated with Hopeton Tower near Eddleston. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. He is recorded being ‘in Mouslaw’, which seems likely to be Muselie. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he could be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (15th/16th C.) probably related to the Scotts of Howpsalay and/or Stirches. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’ had a remission for dealing with the sheep stolen by him and Richard Armstrong (called ‘Skaw’) from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’. Walter Scott of Howpsalay and Robert Scott of Stirches served as sureties. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh who witnessed the letter of acquittal in 1510 between George Scott of Whames and Robert Muir of Rowallan. He is probably also the Edinburgh man who witnessed a document relating to lands in Leith held by Melrose Abbey in 1511. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Howford (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1508 when he was on an assize that convicted Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig. He was granted the feu of the middle steadying of Langhope (also known as Howford) in 1510. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 as holder of the lands of Howford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts.

Sir Alexander (d.1513) of Hassendean, said by Scott of Satchells to have been killed at Flodden, and to have been the ancestor of the Scotts of Haining, Stotstarvit, etc. He is also listed by Abercromby in his list of those slain at Flodden. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main Scott branches, although he could have been son of David of Hassendean (if he existed at all). Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Borders men who had repulse in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. After him are listed Adam, Steven and William ‘brether to the said Alexander Scot’, with ‘brether’ being plural, suggesting all 3 men were his brothers. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts they belonged. Sir Alexander (d.c.1542) Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts, since the name was quite common at the time. He may be the same Alexander who was presented to the vicarage of Glenholm in Peebleshire in 1505. He was keeper of the Rolls of Exchequer for many years. He was paid by the Crown for copying rentals etc. in 1509. In 1528 he raised an action relating to crops at Ratho, and in 1529/30 he gave evidence concerning the Lordship of Dirleton, which he had possessed for 12 or 13 years. He was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts from at least 1526–42. In 1540 he founded a chaplainry in the church of Irvine. About the same time he had a letter of commendation from James V for his faithful service ‘in all sessionis, chekkeris, and register’. His name occurs frequently in the Exchequer Rolls in at least the period 1537–1540, including as witness to the accounts, for making payments in the name of the convent of St. Andrews and payments to the Dictator of the Rolls. James, who succeeded him as Provost of Corstorphine (and Auditor) was 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters. Sir Alexander (d.bef. 1540) possibly 2nd son of Robert of Allanhaugh, and grandson of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed by James V as Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534. His son Robert succeeded at an early age, and later acquired Knightspottie and other lands. Robert’s grandson John became the first Laird of Scotstarvit. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of Steven. He is recorded selling a tenement of land in Hawick in 1558, this being one of the earliest known Hawick sasines. The land lay in the West-end, being bounded by James Brown’s land on the north, ‘the hill path on the south’, ‘Doniere Portussis’ on the east and the ‘Common Vennel’ on the west. This may have been similar to the land known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and ‘Bridgehaugh’ a century later. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkinside and Adam of Deephope. David, also ‘callit Huttitill’ was also listed (and surely his brother or similar), as well as ‘Blak Sande in Deiphop’. ‘Andishop’ may have been Annelshope or Eldinhope. He was surely related to ‘Rowie of Huttkill’, who was recorded in 1616. Alexander ‘Black Sandy’ (16th C.) tenant in Deephope. He was recorded in 1573 when he and others from ‘Andishop’ and elsewhere, were to be entered before the court in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkinside and Adam of Deephope. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1581 he was a cautioner (along with Mungo) for George of Synton being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. There was a further caution by him and Mungo in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’, and the caution for Robert of Haining was confirmed later in 1581. This was concerned with the dispute between the Scotts and Elliots, specifically the complaint that David Elliot had been attacked near Headshaw by a group of Scotts. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). Alexander ‘Lang Sandie’ (d.bef. 1635). In 1605 he had a ‘discharge’ (i.e. cancellation of an obligation) from William of Howpasley for rental of his lands of Wark (it is unclear to which area this refers, but presumably fairly local). In 1635 his grandson John in Howpasley was served as his heir; he was at that time described as being ‘commonly called ‘Lang Sandie’ in Hawick. Alexander (16th/17th C.) brother of Thomas ‘called of Ormestoun’. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands... and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Tushielaw (17th C.) eldest son of William and Grizel Scott. He obtained a charter for Tushielaw in 1663. He is recorded as ‘Andrew (Alexander) of Tushilagoe’ when his son Patrick was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, Edinburgh, in 1664. He may have been the Scott of Tushielaw who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He may have been Laird in 1671 when the land tax was paid in Dumfriesshire for ‘Lands pertaining to Tussilaw’. His son William succeeded when he was still a minor (and was soon after succeeded by Walter, the last Laird, who may have been his brother rather than his son). Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. He may have married Margaret Elliot (said to be the mother of Walter, the last Laird). Alexander (17th C.) ‘cottar’ at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander of Galalaw (17th C.) once owner of the lands called ‘Robertoun Cleughfoot’. If this was really in the 1600s, then he may have been father of Adam of Galalaw who was recorded around 1700. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. He was miller in Rulewater and then tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He had 2 sons: George, farmer in Falla; and Robert, who was also tenant at Roughheugh Mill. It may be that John in Hummelknowes was the same Alexander was recorded being paid for ale given to the ‘cassars’ (i.e. road-layers) in 1721. Dr. Alexander (1691–1743) eldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane and Christian Don. He had his fathers goods deponed to him in 1727 and is also recorded in 1737 in records relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch. These lands of ‘Thirlestain’ are probably those near Yetholm, and not the lands in the Ettrick, then belonging to Francis, 6th Lord Napier. In 1729 he married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and granddaughter of John Kerr of Frogden; his wife died in 1781. They had 11 children: Barbara (1730–76); William (b.1731) Edinburgh merchant; Christian (b.1732), who married Leith of Freefield; John (b.1733); Anne; James (b.1735); Rebecca; Agnes; Madeline or Magdalene (b.1739), who resided at George Square and lived to an old age; Charles (b.1740); and Walter (b.1742). His son and heir William inherited Chatto and Sunlaws and took the surname Scott-Kerr. Alexander of Synton (1690–1764) son of John, he succeeded when still a minor. His ‘curators’ (presumably during his minority) were John Erskine of Shielfield, Walter Scott of Woll, William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Scott of Todrig and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. There appears to have been a dispute over the boundary between his lands of Synton and Ashkirk with Groundistone owned by Scott of Buccleuch. He matriculated arms in 1711, a star between 2 crescents and a red rose, with motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for Hawick druggist Gideon and Sunlaws’s own. In 1744 he witnessed a baptism for Hawick druggist Gideon and Susanna Scott. In 1744 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (along with his grandson), and also for Selkirkshire. In 1711 he married Magdalene, daughter of Sir William Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Margaret (b.1713), baptised at Synton, probably the same daughter Margaret who married John Chisholme of Stiches in 1736; John (b.1713), who died before his father, but whose son Alexander succeeded to Synton; Elizabeth (b.1715); an unnamed child (b.1716); Gilbert (b.1717), recorded becoming an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1733; and Alexander (b.1719), baptised at Synton. Alexander of Scott Galalaw (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He may be the Alexander, ‘younger of Galalaw’ recorded as a baptismal witness (for Robert of Coldhouse) in 1709: he was thus son of Adam of Galalaw. He was ‘of Galalaw’ in 1724 when he witnessed another baptism for Robert of Coldhouse. Although still being designated ‘of Galalaw’, it seems that he was no longer directly connected with those lands. The baptisms he witnessed suggest that he might have been related to Robert of Coldhouse. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1756. He may be the Alexander who married Bessy Pott (who was recorded at Highchesters in 1756. He may be the Alexander who married Bessy Pott (who was from Cavers) in Roberton in 1749 and had children William (b.1750), Isobel (b.1752), Betty (b.1756) and Janet (b.1759). Alexander (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton in 1763. Alexander of Sinton (d.1782) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Alexander in a sasine of 1765. He was recorded being ‘of Sinton junior’ in the 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He is marked as proprietor of Sinton on Ainslie’s 1773 map. He had the house rebuilt around 1776. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1778 and 2 in 1779. In 1773 he married Eleanor (‘Nelly’ or ‘Helen’), daughter of Walter Grieve in Branholme Park. Their children were: John, the only son, who succeeded; Catherine, who later inherited the estates; Mary; and Helen. Alexander (1729–1804) 7th son of Gideon, farmer in Ladhope. His grandfather was John of Woll. He succeeded to his father’s tenancy of Ladhope in Yarrow. He paid the Horse Tax there in the period 1785–97 and the Dog Tax in 1797. In 1782 he married Christian, daughter of Mr. Scott, farmer in Eldinhope (perhaps Francis, who lived to be 94). Their children were: Gideon (1783–1844), who died without issue; Walter (1787–1863), who also died childless; William, who succeeded to the Ladhope tenancy; John (b.1795), who became a baker in Edinburgh, married a Miss Buchan of Peebles, and died without issue; Margaret; Jane; and Christian, who married John Scott of Over Deloraine. Alexander (c.1760–1835) younger son of George of Falla and grandson of Alexander, tenant of Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a draper in Jedburgh and a Bailie there, as well as being factor to the Earl of Hopetown. He is also said to have spent a considerable amount of money on new kinds of explosives. He is probably the Jedburgh merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Isabella Rutherfurd, thereby obtaining possession of the farm of Falla. His children were: George, who worked for the Admiralty Office; William; John, whose son inherited Falla; Thomas; Adam; Isabella; Elizabeth; Alice; and Ann. His daughters became joint proprietors of Falla. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Grieve, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included Katharine (b.1774) and Mary (b.1775). He may also be father of an unnamed child (b.1780) also baptised in Ashkirk. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Charles (b.1771); James (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Charlotte (b.1776); and George (b.1787). Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Ashkirk on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. He is probably the Alexander who was married to either Helen Grieve or Margaret Scott. Alexander (18th/19th C.) grocer and meal dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778) elder son of Robert, tenant at Roughheugh Mill. In 1851 he was farmer of 400 acres, employing 13 people. He married Margaret, daughter of William Bell and Markie Minto, and she died in 1829, aged 43. Their children were: Marky (b.1815), who married William Hobkirk; Robert of Kinninghall (1817–98); Ann (b.1819); William (b.1821); and Mary (b.1821), who married John Scott, farmer in Barnhills. He is buried at Bedrule. Alexander Pringle (1799–1853) twin of Francis Napier, he was son of George and born at Yair House, where his mother had worked. He was named after Alexander Pringle of Whytbank, who owned Yair. He worked for Pringles as a woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. In 1844 he married Elizabeth (1810–93), daughter of George Rule and Elizabeth Nichol; the marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. They had children: Alexander (b.1852/3), who was manager at R. Pringle & Sons; and Bella, who lived at 8 Carnarvon Street. In 1851 he was living at Backdamgate and in 1861 his widow was living at 2 Allars Crescent with her mother (Elizabeth Rule) and siblings. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Alexander (1830–1917) 2nd son of John Sibbald, tenant in Over Deloraine. He was tenant farmer at Ramseycleuch (in Ettrick). He emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A. in 1881 and helped found the Presbyterian Church at Paullina. He married Helen Scott, from Howford. Their children were: John Sibbald (b.1862), who lived at Deloraine farm in Iowa; William F. (b.1864), who married Janet, daughter of Walter Cowan; Henry Alexander (b.1876), who married Mary, daughter of John Cowan; Isabella Michil (d.1907); Jean Elliot, who married John Cowan; Wilhelmina Young, who married her cousin John Sibbald Scott; Christina A., who married Thomas H. Aitken; and Nelly Janet who married Fred L. Huston. Alexander (b.1830/1) son of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as an engineer and moved to Galashiels, where he worked as manager of the gasworks. In 1854 he married Mary (1830/1–88), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Francis, Andrew, Elizabeth and Janet Agnes Oliver. Alexander (1840–1920) son of William and Mary Scott, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1870 he married Janet, daughter of Robert Grieve and Janet Shackleton of Lilliesleaf. In 1880 they emigrated to the Canadian prairies, and he became the first postmaster in Minto, Manitoba. They had 8 children, the first 5 being born in Ashkirk, and the others in Manitoba. This included Dr. Alexander Gladstone (1882–1970), known as ‘Canada’s first flying doctor’, who founded the hospital in Bossano, Alberta. Alexander (b.1851) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He farmed at Falnash, then Kinninghall and later at Vencen, Yetholm. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Hobkirk (builder in Hawick), and later married her sister Georgina Isabella Grierson Hobkirk. Alison (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Andrew (14th C.) clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. In 1393 he was notary for the instrument confirming Sir John Swinton in his lands. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Philip in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Andrew (15th C.) joint tenant of an acre near Linlithgow in 1484 and again in 1495. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) recorded in ‘north schelis’ (probably North Shields) in the 1498 Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was fined for the non-appearance of his brother Thomas. Later Thomas was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (probably somewhere in Peeblesshire). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) Bailie of Inverkeithing, recorded in 1541. He was probably related to earlier Scotts in Inverkeithing. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Hawick’ in 1598 when he witnessed a contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He may be the earliest known doctor in Hawick. Probably the same surgeon Andrew was listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owned for his ‘pensioun the said year, foure bolles heipit oatt meill, at ellevine punds the boll, inde fourtie foure pun-des’[SB1633]. There was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh of the same name whose daughters Janet and Bessie were served as his heirs in 1643. Andrew of Todshawhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahill’. He was said to be among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Robertton (although from which one is unknown). Andrew of Salenside (16th/17th C.) said to have been one of the Scotts of Ale Water who was part of the 1596 raid to rescue Kimmont Willie. He may have been a younger brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade (as suggested by Scott of Rodono) or a brother of Walter ‘the Hawk’ of Whitslade and uncle to Sir Walter (as suggested by Keith Scott). He may be the Laird of Salenside who was recorded as present at the Parliament of 1592. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Salenside in 1609. He is recorded in 1613 when his son Walter became a brewer’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to Robert of Salenside, who was summoned before the Presbytery for murder in 1614. Thomas, who inherited Whitehaughbrae in 1621, was probably his son. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Scabbcleuch. In 1604 he was witness to an instrument of sasine for a charter of Simon Scott of Bonnington for lands in the upper Ettrick. He may have been related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Midghehope, etc. Andrew ‘Braid’s Andrew’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He is there recorded as ‘Andro Scot in Raburn, called the Braid’s Andro.’ In 1615 his son ‘Wattie’ (also referred to confusingly as ‘Braidis Wattie’) was involved in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley and executed for sheep stealing at Eilrig in 1616. It is unclear whether ‘Braid’ refers to a name or a location (possibly ‘Broadlee’ or ‘Braidhaugh’). He was probably also the Andrew ‘the Braid’, son of John ‘the Tinckler’ (who was tenant at Harwood) among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. Andrew of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1616. He was also served as heir to his father’s lands of Belses, the south side of Bowhill and half the lands of Kershope Forest. He is mentioned in 1627 in an action that was brought against him and Robert of Hartwoodmyres. He was succeeded by Philip, last of Aikwood, who was probably his brother. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Edinburgh’ in 1624 when he had a charter of the lands of Bonnington from James VI. He must have been a close relative of John and John’s brother Simon, who had previously held the lands. It is also possible that he was the same man (or closely related to) the Andrew who was a surgeon in Hawick at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who was an apprentice to Henry Lumsden in 1592/3 in Edinburgh and Guild-brother in 1608. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Heap, recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James ‘in Holcadrumbhill’ is listed after him, and may have been related. Andrew of Foulshiels (d.bef. 1647) son of James. He is recorded as owner of the lands of ‘Fadinside’ in Lindean Parish in 1643. In 1643 he married Janet, who was an illegitimate daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his brother Walter. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Hermiston. He is ‘Andro Scott, portioner of Hermiston’ when he signed the 1638 ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He was recorded as a portioner in the 1643 county valuation, with lands in Hermiston valued at £130. Probably the same ‘Andrew Scott of Hermistowne’ was listed among landowners of Lilliesleaf in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Broadmeadows (17th C.) said to have been son of William of Tushielaw. However, in 1627 he was son of William in ‘Falishope’ (i.e. Phaup in the Ettrick valley) when he made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He held Broadmeadows in 1628 according to a roll of properties. In 1634 he was in the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch at Hawick. He carried the Earl’s sword. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1644. Andrew of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and his 1st wife. He gave a charter of Broadmeadows to his half-brother Andrew of Tushielaw. It seems likely that he was the same man as Andrew of Broadmeadows. In 1651 his eldest son William is listed as ‘our servitor’ in the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. Andrew of Weens (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Wayns’ when he was witness to a marriage contract of Robert Elliott and Margaret Riddell in 1652, signed at Appotside. His son Walter was also a witness. He witnessed further sasines in Rulwater in 1653 and 1654. He was recorded in about 1663 on the Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £200 for Weens. John of Weens, who paid the land tax in 1678, was probably his descendant. Andrew of Bowhill (d.c.1668) eldest son of Robert. He appears as witness to several documents in the 1660s and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. His younger brother James eventually succeeded to Bowhill, and may in fact have bought the estate during his and his father’s lifetime. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to John, who is also listed. He may be the Adam who married Bessie Robson and whose son Adam was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1690, with witnesses John Scott and Henry Mitchellhill. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John and James were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as son of deceased Andrew ‘in Tushillaw’ when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliotts of Harwood in 1699. Andrew (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was recorded at the ‘mihreport of Hawick’ in 1708. He was an elder in Hawick Session in 1718. His children included: William (b.1700); Robert (b.1704); and Andrew (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Alexander, ‘officer’ and Robert, flesher (who may have been related), in 1704 were Alexander Young ‘officer’ and John Tudhope ‘flesher’ and in 1708 were ‘undermillers’ James Paterson and Walter Riddell. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘customer’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism in

Hawick for wright Robert Scott. He was also ‘customer’ in 1714 when (along with ‘officer’ Alexander Young) he witnessed a baptism for John Rae. It is unclear if this meant he was a customs official or an itinerant worker perhaps. It is possible he is the same man as the wright. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Turnbull. Their children included: Janet (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Andrew (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). The 1721 baptism was witnessed by mason John Turnbull and also Andrew Turnbull; the same men witnessed the 1726 baptism and may have been from his wife’s family. Andrew (18th C.) son of Walter. In 1722 he married Marion Maben, the wedding being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. They had a daughter Jean baptised in Hawick in 1722. Andrew ‘Black Andrew’ (d.1778) Cornet in 1724. He had a son, ‘D. Scott of Ettrickbank’. He also had a daughter who married William ‘Philips’ (probably Mary who married William Philip). His death in Hawick is recorded in 1778. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Helen Hardie and their children included: Isabel (b.1737); and James (b.1738). Shoemaker John was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Isobel, and so was probably related. He may be the shoemaker Andrew who witnessed a baptism (along with fellow shoemaker William) for shoemaker Thomas Weens in 1765, and another for tailor William Lamb in 1766. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Agnes Noble, who was from Wilton. Their children included John (b.1763). Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Allan in 1756. They had a son William baptised in 1764. Andrew (18th C.) described as ‘Pigman’ in Hawick Parish. His wife was Ann ‘Doeg’ and their children included Frederick (b.1758). The witnesses were wright Francis Paisley and barber Francis Miles. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1770s. He is probably the Andrew who was a merchant at 7 High Street (although it is possible there were 2 merchants of the same name around the same time). He may be the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1741. He may be the merchant Andrew from whom ribbon was purchased for the Burgh Officers in 1756. He was probably the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1757 and 1765 for merchant William Veitch and his wife Christian Scott (who may have been his sister or other relative). In 1763 he was likely the Andrew, merchant, who was one of the men appointed to collect money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s. He was probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull junior in 1764 (along with Thomas Turnbull Senior), the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter (probably his son or brother) in 1766 and 1768, and the merchant Andrew who witnessed a baptism for William Philip in 1777. He was probably the ‘Bailie A.’ who was on the list of subscribers for the Slitrig Brig in 1777. In 1778 he received interest on the bond for £250 he had with the magistrates and council of Selkirk. He may be the Bailie of this name who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Tom Weens in 1793 and baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. However, he could be the Andrew who ‘died in the Kirk’ in 1798. He married Alice (or Alison) Wilson and their children included: John (b.1756); Andrew (b.1758); Christian (b.1759); Andrew (again, b.1762); and Archibald (b.1767). Walter (b.1744) may also have been his son. The witnesses in 1758 were merchant William Veitch and shoemaker John Oliver. It may have been a descendant of his who was the ‘A. Scott’ at about 7 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Beatrice Turnbull. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); Ann (b.1765); Thomas (b.1767); Ann (b.1770); and Martha (b.1775). Esther (b.1772) and Sarah (b.1778) were independently wealthy sisters living at about 7 High Street in 1841 and 1851; they could also have been his children, suggesting he was related to the earlier merchant Andrew who lived at that address. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Eliza (or Elizabeth) Irvine in Hawick Parish in 1787 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1787); and Andrew (b.1789). The witnesses were ‘The Associate Congregation’. Andrew (18th C.) married Christian Scott in Roberton in 1786. Andrew (18th C.) married Nelly Scott in Roberton in 1787. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1794 he and Robert (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck as a stockingmaker. It is possible he is the same man as the merchant Bailie Andrew and may have been related to the earlier shoemaker Andrew. Andrew (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1700s. He took over from Walter Scott, and may have taught a young John Leyden in the late 1780s. Andrew (1757–1839) poet from Bowden, son of John and Rachel Briggs. He was largely uneducated, working as a cowherd and in other farming jobs. He then enlisted in the 80th Regiment and was sent to serve in the American War of Independence. After Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown, he became a prisoner of war on Long Island. Apparently the book of verse he wrote while there was lost. After the peace treaty was signed he was released and returned to Britain in 1784, settling back in Bowden. He focussed on supporting his wife and children, but eventually published his first slim volume of verse in 1805, expanded in 1808. His 'Poems Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect' (1811) and other publications were very influential in their day; many local people subscribed to his 1811 book. His popular poems included 'Swinging o' the Lint', 'The Guid Farmer' and 'Symon and Janet' (about the False Alarm). George Watson of Edinburgh painted his portrait. Said to be a man of simple tastes and habits, he died in Bowden and is buried there. Andrew (18th/19th C.) assessor and tax-gatherer who lived in Denholm. He possessed the sword that had been used by Sir Gilbert Elliott to kill Col. Stewart in 1726, getting it from a relative of Sir Gilbert's servant. He passed it on to his friend George Forrest, gunmaker in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of Denholm. He was an apprentice with Thomas Colledge, who was probably the first manufacturer in the village. He supplied the Glasgow market, and is said to have done well. It is claimed that the demand was so high that his customers would meet him 20 miles from Glasgow to bid against each other. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1796 he married Isobel Turnbull, who was from Robertson Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandyhaugh in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Isabel Laidlaw and had children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish): William (b.1761); Alexander John (b.1765); and Charles (b.1767). Andrew (1786/7–1868) boot and shoemaker in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at about 45 South Hermitage Street in 1851 and 1861. He could be the Andrew from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Helen Mitchell, who died in 1852, aged 69. Their children included: Charles, who was also a shoemaker; Matthew (1810/1–42); and 2 who died in infancy. Andrew (1789–1846) spinner of Hawick, who was precentor in the Relief Kirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded at about 30 Loan in 1841, living with wife Isabel and children Isabel, Andrew, Helen, Archibald, Jane, Agnes and John. Andrew 'Andrew the King' (1791–1873) son of William, landlord of the King's Head (hence the nickname). He was trained as a weaver, but known as a harmless simple-minded fellow, who was out of work for most of his life. He lived with his sister, 'Nelly the King', and a drawing of him is in the Museum. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Mary Shiel in Cavers Parish in 1813. Andrew (18th/19th C.) son of D. of Ettrickbank and grandson of 'Black Andrew'. His property around where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were built is marked on Wood's 1824 map. It is said that he had no offspring. He may be the Andrew of Ettrickbank who married Jane Jarvis MacLaine (1829–82). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Andrew (b.1801/2) road labourer who lived at Berryfell Plain. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included: Agnes; Andrew; Thomas; Adam; Robert C.; and Walter, who may have hanged himself in a stable at Dryhope in 1859. He was still at Berryfell Plain in 1868. Andrew (1800–70) 3rd son of William, schoolmaster at Burnmouth in Castleton, he was born there in upper Liddestale. His mother was Isabella Veitch, from Bedrule, who was a cousin of William Veitch, author of 'Greek Verbs'. He was a great runner, swimmer and wrestler in his youth. He was educated at Newcastleton School, then in Edinburgh, also working as an assistant teacher. About the age of 19 he taught at a school in Castleton; one story is told of how he paid the blacksmith a penny to allow him to try to break off the tip of his anvil with a hammer, which he succeeded on doing at the third attempt. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh in 1829. He became a teacher at Tain, then a tutor in Lanarkshire, and then was an instructor on ships around the Mediterranean. He was classics master at Dollar from about 1835. In 1841 he moved to Brockville, near Montreal in Canada, but returned to Scotland in 1844, becoming master at Pultneytown, Wick. He was appointed Professor of Hebrew at King's College, Aberdeen in 1846, becoming Professor of Oriental Languages at the (united) University of Aberdeen from 1860. He died unmarried. He is said to have fallen in love with a pupil at Dollar, Miss Todd, and was engaged to be married to her, but she died before the wedding could take place. He was said to be a proud and independent Borderer, with conservative views, and quick to argue, although with a strong sense of himour. He travelled widely, and was also a great collector and reader of books (many of which were bought by Cambridge University Library). He wrote a Latin inscription for the memorial stone of his friend and colleague Prof. William Tennant. Andrew (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a farm labourer who lived at Hawick Shiel. He was recorded there 1841–61. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and their children included Mary, Sarah and David. In 1857 he gave to the Museum a ‘flint spearhead, one of several found some years ago near the Giant’s Grave, Hawick Moor’.

Andrew (b.1807/8) shepherd at Wolfechleadhe. He was living at Wolfechleadhe in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was an agricultural labourer at Branxholme Town. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Ballantyne (from Ashkirk) and their children included: Andrew (b.1831); George (b.1832); William (b.1836/7); Elizabeth (b.1838/9); Isobel (b.1841); Robert (b.1843/4); and James (b.1844/5). The first 2 children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (b.1810/1) born in Minto Parish, he was a gardener at Teviot Lodge. He is recorded there in 1851, with his wife Margaret and son William. Andrew (b.c.1810) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, James and Gilbert. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. Andrew (b.1814/5) from England, he was a road surveyor in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Mill Bank, and described as a ‘Civil Engineer; Road & Land Surveyor’. His wife was Marianne, and their children included Elizabeth M., Andrew W., Georgina, Caroline L. and Arthur. Dr. Andrew James (1817–84) eldest son by the 2nd marriage of William of Teviot Bank. In 1854 he married Emma, daughter of Gen. Frederick Blundell. His eldest son was Col. William Augustus. Andrew (1825/6–99) son of Charles and nephew of Adam. He was a tailor who lived at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish and was an elder of the Kirk there. He was listed at Forkins in the 1861 census, living with his mother Jane. Andrew (b.1825/6) son of Walter, who was a labourer living at Ormiston. He was farm steward at Barnes in 1861. He married Jane Paterson and their children included Isabella, Christina and Walter. Andrew (b.1830/1) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Singdean, and married Elspeth Telfer. From his father he learned the secret of a herbal plaster, which was supposed to cure cancer. He became shepherd at Twislehope near Newcastle- ton. In 1867 his plasters are said to have removed a huge tumour on the wife of a Galashiels tradesman. His children included: Elspeth, who married William Mather and was post-nitress at Langhaughwalls in Rulewater; Adam, who was a shepherd at Toftholm in Liddesdale and succeeded to the secret prescription; and Walter, who was shepherd at Swinelaws in Oxnam. Andrew (b.1839/40) son of grocer Walter. He was an actuary with Hawick Savings Bank and later acted as Burgh Assessor. In 1875, when accountant and actuary for the National Savings Bank, he was charged with breach of trust, embezzlement, theft and forgery. Anna (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1670, she and her sister Bessie were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bouchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westburns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinestead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Anna Helena (d.c.1696) daughter of Walter and granddaughter of Walter of Whitslade. Her grandfather was also known as Walter ‘of Harlaw’ She married Sir William Adair of Kinhill (who died 1661) and then Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall, cousin of her 1st husband. In 1694 she was served heir to her grandfather’s lands of Hartwoodburn. She was mother of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntrath, as well as Sir Walter Adair, who was served as her heir in 1696. Anne (1651–1731) also known as ‘Anna’, youngest daughter of Francis the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch. She was born at Dundee, where her mother sought refuge after the departure of Cromwell from Scotland. Her ‘tutors’ were the same as those of her sister Mary, with the 3 Border tutors (Sir Gideon of Highchester, Sir William of Harden and Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs) continuing their disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors. Like her sister, there were struggles over her control, and in particular over who she should marry (e.g. attempts to arrange her marriage to the son of the Earl of Tweeddale). Eventually wardenship and marriage were assigned to her uncle, the Earl of Rothes. She became Countess on the death of her sister Mary in 1661, formally being served heir to her father. She became Duchess on marrying James Crofts, Duke of Monmouth, in 1663 at the extremely young age of 12; her husband was an illegitimate son. of Charles II, who changed his name to Scott. This was arranged with the encouragement of her mother Lady Wemyss and her tutor Sir Gideon of Highchester. The lengthy marriage contract of 1663 describes in great detail the possessions of the family at that time. In 1663 her possessions in Hawick Parish were valued at over £5800 and those in Hassendean at £1561. She was referred to as ‘Annam Buckcleuchiae Comitissam’ in the patent where her husband was created Duke. In 1666 the couple resigned their honours and estates and obtained a new grant of the titles for the Duke, together with the titles of Duchess of Buccleuch, Countess of Dalkeith and Countess of Buccleuch for her; this gave her the rights and titles independent of her husband. However, there were still disputes over the legality of her marriage contract and whether it conflicted with her father’s entail. She resided for several years at the court in London, where she was described as ‘one of the wisest and craftiest of her sex, and has much wit’. She was mentioned there in the diary of Samuel Pepys and was said to have become lame through a dancing accident in 1668. She was also said to have been plain of features, although with a charming manner. She spent some time in France. In 1675 she and her husband were given a charter for the lands and Barony of Hawick. She appears to have remained uninvolved in her husband’s schemings to capture the Crown; her actions around this time are portrayed through the character of Marmoutière in the play ‘The Duke of Guise’. It is said that she helped save her husband after being implicated in the Rye House Plot of 1683. He then went to Holland, returning in an ill-fated expedition following the death of Charles II. After the execution of her husband in 1685, she obtained a new grant of her Buccleuch titles in 1687 (although the English titles were forfeited), in order to ensure that they passed to her children. And in 1693 an Act of Parliament ratified that the estates would pass to her eldest son James, Earl of Dalkeith. The lands and Barony of Hawick had fallen to the Crown after the death of Monmouth, but in 1686 a new charter erected Hawick into a free barony and regality, given to her (and with Walter Scott of Alton as the Bailie of Regality). She signed her letters ‘A.B.C.’ (for ‘Anna of Buccleuch, Countess’). In about 1698 it was suggested that she might resign her lands and titles in favour of her eldest son (as the Duchess of Hamilton had done), but she decided ‘to keep all the rights I enjoy from God and my forefathers. I was my sisters aire, and I bless God I have children which I trust in his mercy will be mine when I am dead. The Duchess of Hamilton is but a woman, and wee are not such wis creatures as men, so I will follow no exampull of that sort till I see all the nobill men in Scotland resin to their sons; then I will consider of this busines’. She returned to Scotland in 1701, residing at Dalkeith House. She visited Hawick (perhaps for the first time) in April of 1702, when she signed the Sederunt Book for her local lands. She extended and improved the family’s Scottish lands, including major renovations to Drumlanrig Tower. She is also recorded as paying for ‘causay layers’ to pave the Hawick streets. She also held the patronage of St. Mary’s kirk. In a land valuation of 1710 she was by far the largest landowner in Hawick Parish, her lands being valued at more than £7000. She can be considered the last of the true Scotts of Buccleuch rather than of Great Britain. She acted throughout her life as a widow of a royal prince, and was said to be the last person in Scotland to keep young pages as attendants. Her last will of 1722/3 names her grandson Francis as her successor. In 1688 she remarried, to Charles, 3rd Baron Cornwallis of Eye (as his 2nd wife), and he died in 1698. She was predeceased by all of her children. Those with her first husband were: Charles (1672–74), Earl of Doncaster, who died young; Sir James (1674–1705), Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded; Lady Anne (1675–85), who died in the Tower of London; Henry, Earl of Deloraine (1676–1730); Lord Francis (1678–79), who also died young; and Lady Charlotte (b.1683), who died in infancy. They were buried in Monmouth’s vault in Westminster Abbey. By her 2nd husband she additionally had (also with the surname Scott): Anne (b.1690), who died in infancy; George (b.1692), also died in infancy; and Isobella (1694–1748), died unmarried. She was eventually succeeded by her grandson Francis, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith – ‘In England now the Dutches dwells, Which to her friends is a cursed fate, For if they famish, starve, or die, They cannot have a groat from that estate’ [CWS], ‘For she had known adversity, Though born in such a high degree; In pride of power, in beauty’s bloom, Had wept o’er Monmouth’s bloody tomb’ [SWS]. Anne (19th C.) listed as a midwife in 1838 when the death of a child of hers is recorded in Hawick. She was spouse of the deceased James Scott (but there is no other identification). Anse of the Bush (16th C.) recorded as ‘Anse of the Busse’ under the heading ‘Scotts of Ewesdale’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs.
The other listed is ‘Thome of the Flower’. His name may be ‘Ante’ rather than ‘Anse’ (and it is also possible this was just a transcription error for ‘Arche’). ‘Watt of the Bus’, recorded in 1642, could be his son. Archibald (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Possibly the same Archibald was among the witnesses for a document relating to Whitechesters in 1484/5. He may be the Archibald, son of Sir David of Branxholme, who leased the lands of Eldinhope in 1485, with the consent of his father. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His son William is also listed. Archibald (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Arche Scott of the Buss’. He was listed along with John ‘the Braid’ and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. Archibald ‘of Deiphoip’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1608 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for 2 of his sons and Walter of Whitslade not to harm him or his family. His sons Walter, Adam, Thomas, James, John, William and Archibald are all mentioned. Also in the same year other kin and associates of Scott of Thirlestane were bound over not to harm him. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Glenrachane’ (i.e. Glenrauchan) in 1606, among men declared as fugitives. He was surely related to Hob there, who was also listed as a fugitive in 1605. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Northous’ (i.e. Northhouse) in a summons against him in 1619. This was included in a letter from Gilbert Watt to the Earl of Buccleuch. He was probably related to the ‘Will’ of Northhouse recorded in 1608. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘of ffalnesh’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Falnash. It is possible that this is an error for Archibald Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) described as ‘vestiarius’ (tailor or cloth merchant) in Hawick in 1648. He was served as tutor to his grandson John Scott, as the closest relative of John’s deceased father Robert, who was a clothier in Edinburgh. He was presumably quite old in 1648, but could possibly be the Archibald, married to Janet Paisley, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1652 (or married to Margaret Thin, with son John baptised in 1652, or married to Helen Falside, with son Archibald baptised in 1654). Archibald of Synton (17th C.) recorded as ‘rootmaster’ for Selkirkshire in 1649. He is probably the same as Capt. Archibald of the Roxburgh and Selkirk Fencibles; he was not in fact Laird of Synton, but was son of Walter (13th Laird) and younger brother of George (last of Synton). He died unmarried. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as liferenter in Stouslie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when he paid tax on £91. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but it is possible he was connected with the Scotts of Boonraw, Stitches and Synton. Archibald (d.1720) 2nd Laird of Boonraw, son of George and grandson of George of Synton. He is said to have been 14th in descent from Buccleuch. He may have been Laird in 1694 when tax was paid for 3 hearths at Boonraw. In 1700 he renounced his right to the arms of the Scotts of Boonraw, in favour of Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1701 he is recorded being rebuked at Roberton Kirk for a mock marriage with Esther Turnbull on the Sabbath, held at Todshawaugh. It was suggested in 1714 that he was ready to sell his lands, which would make an ideal way of investing the ‘Orrock Bequest’, which had been left to Hawick Parish; however, the appeal to the Duchess of Buccleuch was unsuccessful and the estate, instead of becoming owned by Hawick, eventually became part of Buccleuch’s properties. In 1720 he witnessed baptism for weaver Thomas Tinlin and for James Scott in Hawick. He is said to have died at an advanced age, unmarried (putting aside the mock marriage in 1701), and it is also said that this ended the direct line of Scotts of Synton and Boonraw. However, there is also a suggestion that he had a brother, Richard, who was ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1712, along with fellow tailor George, he witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Wyndhead’. He married Margaret McVittie and their children included John (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were fellow tailors George Scott (who was probably a relative) and James Turnbull. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hislop, as recorded in 1709 and 1711. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, deceased tenant in Falnash. He married Margaret Borthwick and their children included Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were John in Fahlash and William Aitchison and in 1711 were William Aitchison, his servant and John Ballantyne, tenant in Rashiegrain. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as 'Wyndhead' when his son John was born in 1714. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of the Wyndhead. He is probably the same Archibald whose other children baptised in Hawick were Margaret (b.1709) and Bessie (b.1711). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnhead in 1726, 1729 and 1736. He married Jean Scott in 1719 and their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Isabel (b.1720); Walter (b.1723); Archibald (b.1729); William (b.1733); and Agnes (b.1736). The witnesses in 1726 were Thomas Dodds and John Miller, in 1729 were John and James . . . (perhaps Dryden) and in 1736 were Thomas Dodds and Adam Armstrong. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1718 he was living at Howpasey. His children included: Helen (b.1715) and Marion (b.1718). He may be the Archibald who married Esther Turnbull in Robertson in 1701. Archibald (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for gardener James Aitkin in 1757 and 1762. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Woodburn in 1761. He married Isobel Thomson in 1750. His children included Jean (b.1751), Mary (b.1754) and Walter (b.1756) and John (b.1761). Archibald (b.c.1770) farmer at Easter Langbaulk. He is listed there in 1841 and 1851, and was unmarried. He may have been brother of John, who also farmed there. Archibald (b.1772/3–1858) joiner in Newcastle. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a wright in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street. He married Jane Turnbull, who died in 1894, aged 78. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded as Session Clerk in Castleton in 1832. He could be the same as the joiner in Newcastle. Archibald ‘Auld Commonsie’ of Howcleuch (1779–1874) 2nd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He succeeded to Howcleuch (his elder brother Walter succeeding to Wauchope), but lived and farmed at Commonsie. His father also conveyed to him the superiority of the lands of Wigg and part of Wauchopehead. He was related to the nursery Dicksons, his mother being Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837). He was listed as ‘Archibald Scott, Esq. of Howcleuch’ among the landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He presented some items from Antigua to the Museum in 1863. In 1804 he married Charlotte, daughter of John Sibbald of Pinnacle and sister of Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle; they had no children and Howcleuch was inherited by his nephew Charles. In 1841 and 1861 he was living at Commonsie, along with 5 servants. He was listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiel in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He lived to within about 4 years of a century, hence the nickname ‘Auld’ applied to him. He died in Hawick at the age of 96 and was buried in Robertson Cemetery. Archibald (b.1791/2) from Canonbie, he was a meal dealer in Newcastle. In 1841 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 2 Whitchester Street. His wife was Helen and they had sons Archibald (a carrier) and Abel. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (1822/3–1903) second son of farmer John and nephew of Mr. Murray whom he assisted with the farm at Cleuchhead. After marrying he farmed at Townhead, Lustruther, Wauchope Common, Templehall and Hawthornside. He married Isobell, daughter of Robert Armstrong, from Meikledale, and she died at Heathfield in 1897, aged 77. They had 3 daughters (Catherine, Margaret and Ellen) and a son (John), who probably did not survive infancy. After retiring he lived at Drythropple and Orchard Cottage. He and his wife are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (1804/5–74) born in Castleton Parish, he was toll-keeper at the Note o’ the Gate. He is recorded there as toll-keeper and labourer in 1851. He was an agricultural labourer back in Newcastle in 1861. He married Jane (or Jean ) Nixon, who died in 1874, aged 66. Archibald (19th C.) listed as a shop-keeper on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (b.1823/4) son of John and Margaret Murray. He was shepherd at Wolfehopelee. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, along with his wife Isabella Armstrong. In 1851 he was recorded at ‘Mackside (Townhead)’, which was probably Wolfelee Townhead. He married Isabella Armstrong in Hobkirk Parish in 1847. Their children included: Catherine (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Ellen (b.1853); and John (b.1860). Archibald (b.1826/7) son of meal-dealer Archibald. He was a carrier in Newcastle. In 1852 he is listed leaving the Coach and Horses in Hawick bound for Newcastle every Wednesday. He may be the Archibald who was working as a railway labourer at Whitknowe in 1861; his wife was Isabella and they had children Mary Ann, Archibald, Elizabeth, John and Fenwick. Archibald (b.1826/7) joiner in Newcastle, son of Thomas and grandson of Archibald. In 1851 he was at about 30 South Hermitage Street, living with his mother Janet and siblings Thomas, Henry, John and Helen. He was still there in 1861. His wife was Margaret, who died in 1915, aged 64. Their children included: Margaret (1880/1–1939), who married Alexander Stormont; and Archibald (1882/3–1948). They are buried at Ettleton. Archibald (19th C.) carrier who lived in Chesters and operated between Hawick and Rulewater. Arthur of Gamescleuch and Newburgh (d.c.1610) probably son of Simon of Winterburgh. He is probably the ‘Mr. Arthur of Wynterburgh’ who is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1593 he was ‘of Gamescleuch’ when in dispute with William Cranston (fear of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheill’. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been at the rescue of Kinnmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he was part of a group of Scotts that attacked Adam Veitch ‘in Fechane’, burning his timber, etc. He is referred to as ‘of Newburcht and Geminiiscleuch’ (i.e. Newburgh and Gamescleuch) in 1603 when he acted as surety for John and Christie Armstrong, sons of John Armstrong of Langholm. In 1603 he was one of the men who selected Sir Walter of Branholme to arbitrate the dispute over the lands of Gamescleuch. He gave the lands of Gamescleuch to his cousin Walter (ancestor of Lord Napier) when he succeeded his father to Newburgh. His illegitimate son Robert is among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane bound over in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. His sons John and Arthur are also mentioned among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. His sons included: Sir John of Newburgh, who succeeded; Arthur; and Robert, who was illegitimate. He was described as a learned man. His son John was served as his heir in 1610. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636 was surely related. Baldred (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Master Baldred le Scot’ in 1306 when Edward I granted him safe conduct in ‘coming from beyond seas to Stirling castle’. His connection with other Scotts is unknown. Benedict (12th/13th C.) recorded as Benedict Scot’ in 1229, when the Bailiffs of Yarmouth were commanded by an English court to deliver his ship and let him return to Scotland. Bernard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’ in an English document of 1270. Along with others, merchants of Placentini, he was given safe conduct to trade in England for 3 years. Campbell (1747–66) younger son of Francis and brother of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. In 1764 he toured Europe along with his brother, accompanied by Adam Smith. In 1764 he was granted ‘different’ of the lands of Over and Nether Harwood and others. But he did not live long enough to enjoy these gifts. He died in Paris, and his brother the Duke then returned to Britain. Catherine (b.1774) daughter of Alexander of Synton and sister of John and Helen. After her brother John’s death she had the right of inheritance granted to her in favour of distant male relatives (namely John, only son of Hugh Scott of Gala, and Hugh Scott of Harden). In 1800 she married John Corse of Bughtrig and they changed their surname to ‘Corse Scott’. Her son John succeeded to the Synton estate. Charles (16th/17th C.) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (who was killed by the Kers in 1552), making him half-brother to Walter of Goldielands; alternatively he could have been a son of Sir Walter of Goldielands, which would make more chronological sense (and in which case he could be the Charles of Goldielands who died in ‘98’ and whose grave tablet was found in St. Mary’s in 1863). His son Walter inherited Goldielands from his cousin, also Walter, and afterwards started the Scotts of Crumhaugh. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. His son may have been the last Walter of Goldielands (although it is possible there was an intervening generation). If so, then his daughters included: Jean, whose daughter Lilias married William Knox; and another, whose son was Robert Scott of Glack. However, these generations are very unclear. Charles of Bonnington (17th C.) 2nd son of James of Bonnington. He succeeded after his older brother Gilbert’s death in 1675. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Edinburgh in 1678. In 1680, along with his siblings James and Catherine, he was served heir to his father James of Bonnington. Charles (17th/18th C.) recorded as a ‘student’ in 1680 when he and another student witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish. It seems possible that they were connected with the Parish Kirk in some way. Also in 1680 he and Walter were recorded as students when they witnessed a baptism for George Deans and Agnes Scott (who could be related). Charles of Langhope (d.bef. 1693) probably the successor of John, he was already deceased in 1693 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to the John, who sold Langhope in 1691. Charles of Crumhaugh (1663/4–98) probably eldest son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He may have been named after Charles II. He is probably the ‘Charles Scott of Goudiands’ who paid tax for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been the ‘Goldilands, younger’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldilands, elder’ being his father Walter). He is probably also the ‘younger Goldiland’ who was cautioner for James Scott when he rented ¼ of Borthaugh in at least 1691–94 (with his name given clearly as Charles in 1691). He had a Crown charter for the estates of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1696, this included ‘Howpasplesy and Crumhaugh, Trinity lands, Corsback and others’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He married Rachel, daughter of Langlands of that Ilk (who may have re-married Francis Elliot of Fenwick). Their children included: Janet (b.1688), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1689), also baptised in Hawick, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1746), who married Rev. Hugh Kennedy, minister of Cavers; and Rachel, who married her cousin, Walter, in Comonside, 1st Laird of Wauchope. The witnesses in 1688 were Walter of Alton Croft and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1717 he was succeeding to the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasplesy and others by his son Walter, this being in 1717 after 18½ years of ‘non-entry’, suggesting the time of his death. It was probably his tombstone that was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s in 1863, and reads ‘Here lyis Charles Scott of Goudiands who died in October 22 98 and of age 34’; this implies that he died before his father (although these generations are still confused, and it is possible this was a different man, in 1598, rather than 1698). Charles (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Palace Hill’. He was said to be a loyal supporter of the Stuart cause in 1715. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. Their children included: John of Belford, who married Marion Baillie from Ashiestiel, had an only child, Agnes, supported the Jacobites in 1745 and lost his estate; Patrick, who died at sea; Margaret, married Capt. Ronalds; Cecilia married Mr. Sinclair, W.S.; and Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Rose of Udny and was grandmother of Mary Yule, who married Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. He died in the Tower of London. Charles (17th/18th C.) owner of a garden to the west of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed in the 1720s. He was referred to as ‘of Goldielands’, although that designation was no longer formally recognised by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He must have been related to the Lairds of Crumhaugh, but precisely who he was is unclear; it is possible that the reference was to the already deceased Charles of Crumhaugh. Charles (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1724. Charles (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie in the period 1726–29. He took over from Thomas Scott and William Scott of Stonedge before him, so he may also have been a son of William. He may be the same as the Charles ‘in Roan’ who was former Chamberlain to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in an assignation of 1730 for rental arrears. Charles of Crumhaugh (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1733 being ‘of Crummuch’ when he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Falnash. It is unclear how he fits in with the earlier and later Charleses of Crumhaugh. Charles of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) son of Francis of Gorrenberry. He is said to have witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras in 1731 (but this date must be wrong, or else it was a son of the Earl). His wife Jane died in 1767, aged 65, and is buried at Bromley Church in Kent. His son John (of Gorrenberry, a doctor in London) died in 1785, and is also buried at Bromley. He may be the Charles (‘brother to Gorrenberry’) who married Margaret, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasplesy (1719–57) eldest son of Walter and Beatrice Scott of Falnash. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1746. He is probably the Charles of Crumhaugh who (along with Robert of Fenwick) witnessed a baptism in 1747 for Gideon (likely his brother) and Rachel Scott. He was probably the Charles recorded being in arrears for renting the farms of Branxholme Town and Chapelhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1748. In 1750 he was registered as heir to his father Walter and grandfather Charles in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpsaley and others; these lands had been in ‘non-entry’ for nearly 23 years (possibly suggesting some legal challenges, and/or that his father had died when he was very young). He also held lands of Blackcleuch (near Teviothead). He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’, meaning the Parishes of Cavers, Hawick, Wilton and Robertson, in at least the period 1742–8 and possibly until 1757. His accounts for 1744 include repairs to Hassendean Mill, Hawick Kirk, Hawick Mill, Slitrig Bridge, Hawick Tower and the barns and stables of Branxholme. He is probably the ‘Cromhaugh’ recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer’s book in 1746. He paid the window tax in Hawick for ‘Branksholm house’ in 1748. It was probably his servant William Scott who is recorded getting married in Edinburgh in 1750. He may have been the Laird mentioned in 1757 in ‘A state of the affair twixt the Laird of Cromoch and Mistris Glenhouse anent a parcel wooll sold to the decaest Thomas Glenhouse’ (in the National Archives). He married Christian Anderson; his wife is recorded in a case of 1758, along with his trustees, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. His children included: Walter (b.1742); Michael (b.1744); Robert (b.1745); and Charles (b.1747). Patrick Christie ‘maltster’ was witness to the 1745 baptism. His eldest son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Cromhaugh. Another son was probably Gideon, tenant in Priesthaugh, while his daughter Henrietta (1740–1818) married Rev. James Erskine of Shielfield in 1768. ‘Miss B. Scott, daughter of the deceaest Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, Esq.’, who died at ‘Goldlands’ in 1809 was probably also his daughter. He may also have sometimes been referred to as ‘of Goldielands’. The Crumhaugh estates were sold to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, after his death. Charles (b.1723/4) weaver in Hawick. He gave evidence in 1767, regarding the former uses of the Common; he was described at that time as married and a Burgess. He had been among the party of Hawick inhabitants who went out to Blackgrain Moss to break up the ‘bakes’ made illegally on the Common by residents of Hawick Shiel and other farms. He could have been the Charles, son of William and Bessie Douglas, born in Hawick in 1723 or the Charles, son of John and Helen Henderson, born in 1724. However, it is also possible he is the son of Richard, said to have been a younger son of George of Boonraw. This Charles (d.1776) married Janet Porteous (daughter of Robert Porteous, shoemaker) in 1756, was a weaver and had several children baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Richard (1757–58), presumably named after his father; Charles (b.1759), probably ‘Charlie o the Crescent’; Agnes (b.1761); Mary (b.1762); James (b.1763); Robert (b.1764); and Elizabeth (b.1766). Robert Collier was witness to the 1766 baptism. Charles of Woll (b.1744) eldest surviving son of William of Woll, along with whom he is recorded as a witness in Roberton parish in 1766. He was ‘younger of Wool’ in 1780 when added to the voters’ roll of Roxburghshire, based on his superiority of ‘the five pound land of Biewie’ in the Barony of Lilliesleaf, as well as Mabonlaw and ‘Whinny park’ in the Barony of Harden. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having ‘a pretty good estate’, being brother of ‘John Scott, W.S.’ and probably voting with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He paid the land tax for £560 for Midgehope in Ettrick Parish, as well as about £470 for Broadmeadows and £200 for Shaws in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 his lands of Woll were valued at £959 (including the teinds). He paid tax for having a female servant in 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1791. He was also taxed for having a male servant (for most of this period Andrew Leggat, who was a coachman as well as gardener) in the period 1785–94 and for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98. He is recorded as owner of 7 farm horses at Woll in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 2 carriage or saddle horses in the period 1785–97. He may also be the Charles listed at North Synton in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded paying the land tax for Broadmeadows in 1802. In 1803 he sold the lands of Broadmeadows, which the family had gained through his mother, Jean Balfour. He paid the land tax on Woll in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son William. In 1777 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of William Waugh of Shaw and Barbara Plummer; she died in 1831. Their surviving sons were: William (b.1778), who succeeded; Andrew (1779–99), who had no children; Charles Balfour (b.1782), who succeeded his nephew, Charles Andrew; and
Col. John (b.1790), who succeeded his nephew Charles. Other children included: Barbara; Jean (b.1781), who married Col. Dunsmore; Elizabeth; Gilbert (b.1790); and Janet (b.1794), who married James Grieve. He may also have been father of Catherine, who married Robert Dickson of Hassendeanburn in 1792. Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch (1728–1808) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope and Rachel Elliot. He farmed at his father’s lands of Howcleuch, and was given these lands at least as early as 1784, when his father retired. He also succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his brother Walter in 1796. His lands of ‘Mains of Borthwickshiel, formerly in Wilton’ were valued at £146 4s 9d in the valuation of Robertson Parish. He is probably the Charles Scott at Commonside who (along with Thomas Grieve) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot. He is probably the Charles at Commonside who paid the Horse Tax in 1785–94. He had 5 horses working on his farm at Wauchope according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was probably the Charles who was farmer at ‘Commonside etc.’ with 10 horses; he additionally paid tax for 2 carriage or saddle horses at Wauchope. He may be the Scott who paid tax on 3 non-working dogs at Commonside in 1797 and 2 at Wauchope. Additionally he was joint tenant in Mervinslaw with William Turnbull in 1797. Also in 1797 he paid tax for having a house servant. He is probably the Mr. Scott at Commonside who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the land tax on Howcleuch in 1802. He gave a large contribution to support the local volunteers in 1803. He was listed along with his son Walter among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He conveyed parts of the superiority of Wauchope to each of his sons Walter and Archibald, another part to Charles Douglas, and retained a last part for himself. He was still listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiel in 1811. His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1812. It is said that he was of a much less ‘morose temper’ than his brother. In 1776 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. Their children were: Christian (b.1777), who married Archibald Dickson, her cousin; Walter (b.1778), who succeeded to Wauchope; Archibald (b.1779), who succeeded to Howcleuch; Charles (1782–1856), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1782), who married Hugh Mitchell from Dumfries; Robert, (1786–1833), who also died unmarried; James (b.1789), who was with the East India Company; William (b.1792), who was a Captain in India; Agnes, who died young; and Jessie, who married John Cockburn. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who died in 1816, aged 24, was probably one of his daughters. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 was probably also a daughter. He died at Wauchope and was buried in the family aisle at St. Mary’s. Charles ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’ (1759–1840) son of Charles and Janet Porteous. He was a Hawick linen manufacturer, who was descended from the Boonraw Scotts. He was based on the Cross Wynd and then moved to the Crescent, the location later being the showroom of John Laing’s; he gained this property from his wife, whose father James Ekron (d.1787), merchant in Hawick, had formerly owned it. His house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, opposite the end of the Kirk Wynd. He is probably the Charles recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of the ‘particate lands’ of Hawick at Allars; this land was feued by later in the 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It was said (by his grandson, James Murray) that he employed 6–8 weavers, mostly working from home, producing ‘custom work, in which department he produced the finest diapers and napery, being the only weaver of these sorts in the district’. He also sold linen goods at St. Boswells Fair, ‘Boswell’s Fair sarkin being a well-known material at that time’, for which purpose ‘he employed several old women constantly spinning, – some in the country, others in the town’. It is said that when he was trying to seek a position in the excise for his son John he went to Scott of Harden for support, claiming to be a relation through the Scotts of Synton. In 1791 he married Betty (b.1771), daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron; she was said to be known to her family (for unknown reasons) as Mary or Margaret, although she was born Elizabeth and recorded as ‘Betty Oliver’ in the 1791 marriage record. Their children included: Agnes (1792–1839); Charles (b.1794) of Bourtree Place; Janet (1796–98); Janet (again, 1798–1845), the 3rd child, who married James Henderson, carrier and Hilliesland ‘Laird’; Isabel (1799–1831), who married Thomas Anderson; Mary (1803–88), the 6th child, who married Thomas Murray and was mother of Sir James A.H. Murray; John (b.1806), who worked for the excise and married Catherine Watson; and Elizabeth, who died young. His tombstone was close Charles (1782–1856) born in Hawick Parish, he was 3rd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He trained as a lawyer, was apprenticed to Archibald Gibson and became Writer to the Signet in 1806. He became an Honorary Burgess of Peebles in 1823. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Yair. In 1818 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’), youngest daughter of Alexander Ker, proprietor of Yair. In 1834 he emigrated with his family to Canada, settling at the farm of Blenheimhill in Dumfries Township, Waterloo County. His address is given as Slitrig Bridge in 1841, with his 3 younger children, as well as Mary and James (who were probably his siblings) and 2 female servants. In 1851 there were 5 farm and house servants living with his family at Milsington. In 1814 he married Esther, daughter of Kelso architect William Elliot. Their children were: Thomas (b.1815), who succeeded as tenant at Milsington; William (b.1816), doctor in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; John (b.1818), who moved to Australia; Charles (b.1819), who died abroad; Robert (b.1821), who moved to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1822), who died young; Walter (b.1824), also died abroad; Jane, who married Hawick lawyer James Carmichael; and Mary. Charles (b.1790) tailor at the Forkins in Hob Kirk Parish. His wife was Jane and they had a son, Andrew, who was also a tailor. Charles (1794–1861) eldest son of Charlie of the Crescent and uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a heddle maker at 5 Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was at Bourtree Place, listed as a handloom weaver, but by 1851 was a heddle maker there. He married Margaret, daughter of Yeddie Smail (or ‘Smeal’, d.1882). Their children included: Eliza (1821–42); Margaret (1822–1902), who married baker Robert Oliver from Morpeth; Charles (1824–96), who married Annie Knox and emigrated to Winnipeg; Adam (1826–81), joiner; Alison Munro (1828–97), married John Douglas, farmer at Essenside; Agnes (1830–99), married hosiery manufacturer William Lyle; Jessie (b.1833), who married Andrew Scott, accountant in Glasgow; John (b.1836), who died young; Mary (b.c.1839); John (b.1841–47); and William Munro (b.1844). Charles (b.1798/9) farm worker in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside. He married Anne Waldie in 1822 and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessie’, b.1823); Peter Brown (b.1824); Charles (b.1827); Margaret (b.1832); Mary (b.1839); and Charlotte (b.1849). Charles (1805–69) son of Walter, he was a boot and shoemaker of Teviot Square, i.e. the Sandbed, where he was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was also a grocer and spirit merchant, being based at 6 Sandbed. His address is given as Slitrig Bridge in 1841, Teviot Square in 1851 and 6 Sandbed in 1861. In 1841 in Hawick Parish he married Jessie (1817–88), daughter of William Laidlaw from Hob Kirk. Their children were: Walter (b.1842), who died unmarried; Helen Douglas (1843–1928), unmarried, who had a family tree for the Laidlaws; William Laidlaw (‘Wowie’, 1847–1922), who was also a shoemaker; Isabella Mary (1852–1928); and Charles Douglas (1854–76), who died unmarried. He is buried in the Wellogate. He is probably the Charles whose wife’s heirs are recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Charles Andrew of Woll (1817–1838) elder son of William of Woll. His father died in 1820, while he was still a child. He died unmarried, and was succeeded in the Woll estate by his uncle Charles Balfour Scott. Charles of Howcleuch (1819–95) 2nd surviving son of Walter Scott of Wauchope. He studied sheep management with the factor of Lord Breadalbane. He farmed at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish and Dykeraw in Southdean. But he was more interested in hunting than farming, being a member of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was a keen riding partner of Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood and the Hendersons of Abbotrule. Afterward he lived at Lintalee, where his mother joined him later in her life. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847, and when he retired he was the oldest member. He became attached to his sister-in-law’s sister, Margaret Amelia, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts (of Ravensbourne Park, Kent), but was financially unable to marry her; she married Capt. Robert Main, had 2 sons, but became a widow, after which he was able to marry her, although she had to give up the inheritance she had from her deceased first husband’s family. They married in 1862 and were said to have been happy together till the end of their days. That same year he came into inheritance from the death of his brother Archibald. And in 1874 he succeeded to Howcleuch from his uncle Archibald. Thereafter he purchased Langlee and had the house largely rebuilt. He is probably the ‘Trustee of Mr. Scott of Wauchope’ recorded as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in about 1860. He was recorded at Langlee and Lintalee in a directory of 1868. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard along with his wife. He was succeeded by his nephew Arthur Francis. He matriculated arms, the same as those of Scott of Wauchope with a crescent counterchanged. His portrait was painted by Sir George Reid. Charles Scott-Plummer. Charles (b.1821) see Charles Scott-Plummer. Charles (b.1822/3) shepherd at Braediehope in Liddesdale according to the 1861 census. He was born in Teviothead Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella, Adam, Thomas, Janet, John and Robert. His mother was Janet from Kirkton. Charles (1824–96) son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a cabinet-maker at 4 Bourtree Place, according to the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory the firm is listed as ‘Charles, jun. & Adam, East end’. He married Annie Knox and in 1854 they emigrated to Winnipeg, where they had a family of 9 children. Charles William Douglas (b.1827) son of David, who farmed at Priesthaugh. He was recorded as farm steward in 1861, living with his father at Priesthaugh. In 1857 he donated some rocks to the Archaeological Society. He was listed as farmer at Priesthaugh in 1868. Charles S. (d.1881) son of Thomas (‘Sly Tammie’) and brother of Walter (of Lyle & Scott). He was a wool merchant at 18 Oliver Crescent. He married Isabella Melrose. Their children included Mary E., Charlotte H., Agnes H., James M. (who died at Loos in 1915), Isabella and Margaret. Charles (1834–1912) 3rd son of John, tenant in West Deloraine. He farmed at Over Whittlaw and emigrated to Iowa in 1901, like his brother Alexander. In 1865 he married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter Elliot, farmer at Over Kirkhope. Their children were: John Sibbald, who married his cousin Wilhelmina Young Scott and secondly Gertrude Ducket; Walter (1869–1911); Henry (b.1871), a doctor in Chicago; Gideon (b.1873), who married Effie Smith from Selkirk and lived at Keith, Banff; Charles Alexander (b.1883), a chemist at Sheldon, Iowa; Margaret, who lived at Sheldon; Christina Agnes, who married Elmer S. Gardner; Wilhelmina Elliot, who married Dr. George Skene; Mary Arbuthnott, who married Dr. B.C. Stewart; and Grace Elliot, a nurse in Sheldon, Iowa. Charles (b.1853) 2nd son of John, estate carpenter under 4 Lairds of Edgerston. He was a forester and carpenter and also worked at Edgerston, but moved to Weens in about 1900. He married Mary Story in 1879 and had a son. Charles (1857–1940) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at Milsington. He took over the lease from his father and was able to purchase the farm from the Duke of Buccleuch after WWI. He was thus the first Scott who was Laird of Milsington. He was known as an expert judge of Cheviot sheep. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He married Mary, daughter of John Tullie, farmer at Bowanhill. Their children included: Thomas (b.1899); and John Charles (b.1903). Charles (19th/20th C.) Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, who lived at Tandlaw. Charles William (b.1866) son of joiner Adam. He was a general dealer in Trinidad. He married Margaret, daughter of George Blaikie of Bridge House. They had 2 daughters, Sybil and Margaret. Charlotte (b.1766) christened in Ashkirk, she was ‘begotten in fornication with Captain Scott of Gaudilands’, her mother being Isobel Scott in Longtown. Her father was probably Capt. Walter of Crumhaugh (since that family often also had the appellation ‘of Goldielands’). Christian (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1703. This could be the same Christian listed on the Heathax Rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the Christian on the subscribers list for the new Kirk bell in 1793/4. Christian ‘Christy’ nee Anderson (18th C.) wife of Charles of Crumhaugh. She received a widow’s pension from the Duke of Buccleuch, her husband having been factor to the Duke, as well as a distant cousin. She is recorded along with Margaret and William, who were presumably her children, and Christian Davidson, who may have been a younger child or a grandchild. Christian (b.c.1790) milliner at 41 High Street. She was already a widow in 1841. Her children included William, Ann, and Jean (or Jane). Christian (b.1804) daughter of Robert, who was farmer at Todshawhaugh. Her mother was Janet Jardine from Thorlieshope. She was a boarder at the school at Linhope in Yarrow Water, as described by Rev. James Russell. In 1827 she married James Dickson of Housebyres. Christopher (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and they had a daughter Christian (b.1798).

Christopher Bartle Hugh (1924-97) of Gala, son of Philip Beaumont Frere and Jean Winifred Mary Makk dougall Scott-Makk dougall. He was educated at Eton and King’s College, Cambridge. In 1941 he succeeded his uncle John to Gala and changed his surname to Scott. He married Anne Margaret D’Arcy, daughter of Henry Francis Hobart Kerr in 1948. Their children were: John Philip Henry Schomberg (b.1952), who succeeded; Dominic Christopher Hugh (b.1955); Julian Sebastian Frere (1956-84); Rupert Benjamin Bartle Frere (b.1958); and Sebastian Simon Frere (b.1961). Cochrane (b.1817/8) from Neilston in Renfrewshire, he was a nair in Hawick. He lived on Punch Bowl Close in 1841, with his wife Betsy and son Robert. By 1851 the family had moved to Coldstream. Constance Emily Monteach (b.1860s) only child of William Monteach and Amelia Douglas. She became the 9th Baroness of Ancrum and was succeeded by her cousin Irene Dulier. David (13th C.) tailor recorded in 1298 when protection was asked for him to accompany Ralph ‘de Monthermer’, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford in the service of Edward I in Scotland. David (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453. He was granted the lease of ‘Druncors’ (in Linlithgowshire) by the King. It is possible that he is the same as David of Buccleuch or the later David of Inverkeithing. Sir David of Buccleuch (c.1430–1491/2) 7th Laird of Buccleuch, and also of Branxholme and Hassendean. He was eldest son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, and brother of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. During his father’s life he was sometimes designated ‘of Eckford’. He witnessed a lease, along with his father and others, for lands in Borthwickshiels in 1445. In 1451/2 he had a sasine for lands in Linlithgow and is described there as heir of Sir Walter. In 1453 he was granted the Barony of Eckford, and thereafter was referred to as being ‘of Eckford’. In 1454 he had a charter for the lands of Irlands-lands in the Barony of Wilton and in 1455 he had a charter of the lands of Whitchesters, forfeited by John St. Michael. Also in 1455 he is recorded being obliged to pay William Douglas of Drumlanrig 200 merks at St. Mary’s. He accompanied his father in the force that met the Douglases at Arkinholm in 1455; it was probably for these deeds that he gained the forfeited lands of Whitchesters. In 1457, along with his father, he witnessed the appointment of Andrew Ker of Cessford as Baillie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1459 he was let the farms of Mount Common and Redford for ‘half ferms’. In 1461, when described as heir apparent to his father, he was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme. He is recorded as his father’s heir in the 1463 resignation of the family estates, with Branxholme being then erected into a Barony. Immediately afterwards he he a precept and then sasine infesting him in the Barony of Branxholme. He was heir apparent of Sir Walter in 1464 when he witnessed a transumpt for an inquest concerning the lands of Cranshaws for Swinton of that Ilk. He is probably the David who was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffship of Roxburgh in 1464/5, and he was appointed as a special sheriff for the associated precept of sasine. Also in 1464/5 he was ‘of Whitchester’ when he witnessed the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1465

he had a marriage contract for his eldest son Walter and Katherine, sister of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. If Walter died, then one of his other sons was to marry another Lindsay. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1469. In 1469/70 he and his son Walter were made Keepers of Hermitage Castle for 19 years by Archibald Douglas, 'Bell the Cat' (5th Earl of Angus), who was also Lord of Liddesdale (and whose sister married his son David). After Walter died, a new arrangement was made in 1471/2, keeping him as Bailie of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, and Keeper of Hermitage Castle, along with his new heir David, and contracting David to marry the Earl's sister Jean. In 1470 he made a marriage contract for his daughter 'Jonet' to marry James, son and heir of William Douglas of Drumlanrig, the dowry being 500 'merks', and the lands of Whitcheser to be held in ward. In 1470 he and his heir Walter are listed in a Douglas charter as being in line to inherit certain lands on Hermitage Water if the line of Douglas of Cavers failed; he is there mentioned as being kinsman of Archibald Earl of Angus (although any family relationship at that point is unknown). In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King's enemies. In 1471 he witnessed a sasine for lands at Borthwickshiels. He was Ranger of Ettrick Ward in at last the period 1467–78, having for his fee the lease of Cacrabank and later Eldinhope. In 1472 he and his son David were confirmed as Keepers of Hermitage Castle and Bailies of the Lordship of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, for a period of 17 years. In 1472 he was appointed as one of Earl's bailies to give sasine of the lands on Hermitage Water to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King's couriers was paid to send him and the Earl of Angus a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1475 he witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Caverton. In 1478 there is a record of Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick complaining that he owed the church 44 merks. He probably remained as Keeper of Hermitage about up until his death. Sometime shortly before he died his house and lands at Buccleuch were plundered by Simon and Matthew Routledge (tenants at the Trows). He had already extended the house at Branxholme, and the primary residence of the family moved there. In 1475/6 he had the lands of Kirkurd resigned to him as superior, the lands being the dowry for the marriage of his daughter with John, son of John Lindsay of 'Cowban-toume'. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation relating to the Kers of Cessford. In 1482 Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton in order that a new infeftment be made in his favour. He was probably the second Scott to sit in the Scottish Parliament, in 1481 as 'of Kirkurd' and in 1487 as 'Lord of Buccleuch'. In 1484 he and his son Robert were made joint Bailies of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, specifically Melrose-lands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie for some of the same lands. Also in 1484 he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick and witnessed the associated sasine. In 1487 he appointed his son Robert as procurator for resigning into the King's hands his lands and baronies. In 1488 he resigned his lands of Branxholme, Eckford, Lanton, Buccleuch and Kirkurd to the King, in order for them to be regranted into the barony of Branxholme. This was because of service he and his son Robert gave to the King at the Battle of Blackness; this charter lists his heirs at that time. Also in 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford and he was pledge for leases granted to Walter Scott in Tushielaw and William Roger and Robert Scott in Winterburgh. In 1491 his leases of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope were all vacant because of his death. In 1492 there is a record in the Kign's Treasurer's accounts of money for his 'ward and marriage'. He is said to have married a daughter of Thomas, Lord Somerville (she was left 240 sheep, 11 cows and 11 oxen in his will, but was not named). His children included: Walter, who married Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, but died before him and without an heir; David, who married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, and whose son Walter succeeded; Robert of Allanhaugh, to whom in 1484/5 he granted the lands and Lordship of Whitchester; William (possibly of Foulshiels), mentioned in 1471/2 as the 3rd son; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig; Margaret, who married James Haig of Bemersyde; an unnamed daughter, who married John, eldest son of John Lindsay of Covington; and Isabella, who married Sir Simon Carruthers of Mouswald and secondly John Murray of Falahill. He also appears to have had a son John, who is mentioned in his will as 'his son', and also Archibald, mentioned as his son when he took over the lease of Eldinhope in 1487. His will and testament lists his goods, a large number of people with whom he had financial obligations, and others who were bequeathed money or items; his goods were valued at £740, he was owed £380 and he gave money, livestock or grain to more than 40 people (most of them probably local). He is buried in the Church of the Holy Cross, Peebles, and bequeathed 40 shillings to the Church of Hawick, as well as Peebles and Rankleburn. David (15th C.) recorded as customs officer of Inverkeithing in the period 1486-88. He was also Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1487. He was probably related to John, who held a similar office in Inverkeithing. Either he or a later David was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1512. David (c.1450–bef. 1484) second son of Sir David of Branxholme. By 1471 he was heir apparent, since his older brother Walter had died before him. In 1476 he witnessed a charter of Robert Scott of Haining to his cousin, Thomas Middlemas, for lands in Peeblesshire. A ‘tack’ of 1478 by Archibald, Earl of Angus confirms to him lands, farms, rents, mill, capons, etc. within the Lordship of Selkirk. In 1479 Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick, brought an action against him for wrongfully collecting £44 of tax, which he said belonged to the church; it is unclear how this was resolved. He married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, with whom he had 3 sons, William, Gibbons, and James. The later James was known as ‘Bell-the-Cat’, her brother; the couple were jointly given Dryfesdale. In 1471/2, along with his father, he became Keeper of Hermitage and Bailie of the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, the appointments being made by the Earl of Angus. He pre-deceased his father and the titles were inherited by his (probably only) son, who became Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. David (15th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1486 he leased the lands of `Midsteid de Gildhouse’ in Ettrick Ward, with Sir David of Buccleuch as his pledge. David of Whitehaugh (15th C.) gained the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 for yearly payment of a penny. The estate would remain in his family for about 400 years (although in fact it may have passed between different branches of the Scotts). He must have been related to Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. His son may have been Philip of Heap. He may also have been related to the Robert of Whitehaugh recorded in 1499. David (15th C.) bequeathed 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Dauid Scote’ and was probably local. David of Hassendean (d.bef. 1515) eldest son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was granted the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall by his father James of Kirkurd in 1494. At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 he obtained remission for the following crimes: stealing 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell, in the company of Ninian Armstrong; stealing 19 cows and 3 horses from the Earl of Bothwell at Castelaw; stealing 12 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell at ‘Laudonia’; and stealing 3 horses from Blackbarony. His surety was Walter of Howpasley. He is listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded in 1510/1 in a charter giving him the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (probably later Burnhead and Burnfoot) and lands in Easter Hassendean called ‘Dedrig’. Also in 1510/1 he gave his ‘brother german’ Robert the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean. In 1512 he was witness to the sasine where Walter of Syntoun transferred Harden to his brother William. In 1515 wardship of his lands were given to Walter of Buccleuch and to the King’s tutor, John Stewart, Duke of Albany. Sir Alexander may have been his son, and they may both have perished at Flodden (if he existed). He appears to have been succeeded (in Hassendean) by his brothers John and then William. It seems very likely that he is the same man as David of Galalaw. David ‘Lady’ or ‘the Lady’ (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was ‘prope stirkschawis’ (i.e. near to Stiches). He had remission for stealing 60 sheep from Patrick Paterson at Colmslie, with his surety being William Turnbull in Minto. He is also described as ‘in Stickschawes’ (i.e. Stiches) in another case in 1502 when he was pardoned for several crimes: stealing a horse, 40 sheep and other items from Blackhaugh; bringing in the Robsons, Dodds and Charles from England to burn Hermiston, belonging to Adam Rutherford; stealing 5 horses from Hermiston, and burning houses and grain there; bringing in Archibald Armstrong, Ninina Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘traitors of Leven and Liddlesdale’ to burn 6 houses and 7 horses at Minto Craigend; bringing in the same men to steal cows and horses from the tenants of Minto; and common theft. His surety was William Turnbull of Minto. He also had remission for bringing the ‘Armstrangis’ (presumably a generic term for Liddesdale thieves) and ‘Traitors of Levin’ (i.e. thieves from across the Border) to steal 180 oxen and cows, 20 horses and goods from the tenants of Synton; since the Scotts of Stiches were closely related to the Scotts of Synton, there may have been a family dispute involved in this raid. He was also implicated in the murder of George Newton and George Cavers in the same raid. Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was indicted for involvement in this or a similar incident. Also in 1502 he had a remission for stealing a horse, sheep and household goods from ‘John Spedane and Andrew Michelson furth of Blackhalche’ (whether the one in Rulewater or Ewesdale is unclear), as well as for bringing ‘the Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen, to the Burning of Hirdmanstown, belonging to Adam Ruthfurte’ (probably ‘Hermiston’ in Lilliesleaf Parish), including stealing 5 horses and burning corn and buildings there. In addition he led Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and ‘other Traitors of Levin Liddalisdale’ on a raid to Minto Craigend, where they burned the farms and seven horses, and stole cows, horses and goods. On top of that he stole 60 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this incident possibly also involving Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole), as well as 6 cows and other goods from William and John Aitken at the Haining. William Turnbull of Minto was surety for him for answering to these offences. Note that Robert of Stiches was the Laird at this time, and it is unclear how (or if) they were related; it is possible he was the David, son of Robert of Stiches and Synton, who was recorded in 1526. He may also be the David, brother to William in Harden, who was listend among those Borders men pardoned in 1526 for their role in attacking the Earl of Arran; if so then this would support the idea that he was related to some (or all) of these branches.

He may also have been related to the slightly earlier David of Whitehaugh. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘de Franscurni’ on the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501. He was listed as a debtor along with ‘Ade Scot’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. It is unclear where his lands might have been. David of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is recorded in 1502 as ‘of Tushelaw’ when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with his son William Scott, as well as the Armstrongs. He is probably the ‘Davie wi the Tod’s Tail’ of Howpasley, referred to by Satchells, who married a daughter of Robert Elliot (12th) of Redheugh. His brother Walter was also sometimes known as ‘Of Tushielaw’. His children were: Adam, who succeeded; (probably) John of Thirlestone; William; and Robert of Bowhill. David of Galalau (15th/16th C.) listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He was a witness in 1507/8 to the document relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick for Scott of Whitchesters. He is recorded in a remission of 1510 as ‘of Gallolaw’ for assisting rebels; he is named along with John and Walter Scott and John Lindsay. He is also recorded in 1511 as being ‘of Gallowlaw’ when he claimed the lands of ‘Lang Hassindene’ of which he had been tenant, and that had been owned previously by Elizabeth Cunningham. However, 3 years later she was confirmed in these lands by the superior, Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. It seems likely he is the same man as David of Hassendean. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Quhithauche’ in 1510 when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting he was related to some (or all) of these branches. He may also have been related to Robert of Whitehaugh who is mentioned in 1499. David of Howpasley, see David of Tushielaw. David (d.c.1544) first son of Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch. He was given the baronies of Braxonholme, Eckford and Kirkurd and the Lordships of Buccleuch, Rankilburn and Lempitlaw by his father in 1528 (with liferent to himself), but predeceased him. He may also have had a son Walter, who was heir to Sir Walter (mentioned in 1551), but must also have died, since Sir Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd (his brother) succeeded. In 1574 Dame Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter of Braxonholme, was granted the ward and non-entries of certain fees previously gifted to him; he is there described as ‘Dauid Scott, sone and apperand air for the tymne to ymhulie Schir Walter Scott of Braxonholme, knyght, quhilk ymhulie David wes gudschir brothir to Walter Scott, now apperand of Braxonholme’. Also in 1574 his grand-nephew, Walter, was served heir to his baronies of Braxonholme and Eckford, as well as other lands; this was presumably a legal formality, since he (David) had never in fact succeeded to these baronies. David (16th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ (i.e. Clarilaw) in when he gave back the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ (near Hassendean) to William of Hassendean in a ‘letter of reversion’ (i.e. following a loan). He was also witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden to William Scott in 1535. In 1541/2 he was one of the nobles serving as caution for John Johnstone of that Ilk. He may have been son or other relative of Adam of Clarilaw. David (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there, and may have been related to Thomas, who was also listed. David (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branchholme, Sir Walter of Birkside and Adam of Deephope. Alexander, also ‘callit Huttitill’ was also listed, as well as ‘Blak Sande in Deiphop’. ‘Andishop’ seems likely to have been Anneshope in Ettrick or Eldin hope in Yarrow. He was surely related to ‘Rowie of Huttikill’, who was recorded in 1616. It is unclear where ‘Huttitill’ was located. David (16th/17th C.) of Stobicote, brother of Walter of Goldielands and a younger son of ‘Wicked Wat’, the 9th Laird of Buccleuch. He is one of the ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch listed by Scott of Satchells (and there stated to be brother of Sir Walter of Goldielands). He may have been the first Scott of Stobicote. He could be the ‘yonger sone of the Lorde of Bukclowghes’ (name not given) listed in 1541 along with several Kers, accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. David of Raesknowe (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of ‘Pensioners of Buccleuch’. He was said to be a descendant of the Scotts of Allanhaugh, but the precise relationship with them is unknown. He was probably related to Robert of Raesknowe, who was possibly a little earlier. David of Hassendean (d.c.1564) eldest son of William of Hassendean. He was witness in 1551 to a confirmation of the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham. He was killed by a band of Elliots and others, his murder case being tried in 1564, with William Elliot of Horsleyhill and others found guilty. It may be that those conspiring in this murder included his nephew James (son of his brother Walter), who was also executed. This event played a role in the deadly feud between the Elliots and the Scotts, which lasted for the next several years. He may have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. David (16th C.) servant to Walter Turnbull of Hobsburn. He is listed in 1567, along with his employer, among men were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer accusations of raiding into England. David (d.1570s) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. He was said to have ‘fallin in my hand accidentlie’ by Sir Walter of Branchholme, while he was a minor, his death being related to the salying of Sir Walter’s servant at Braidhaugh, Hob Dalgleish. The resulting feud was settled through a bond of 1585, between Sir Walter of Branchholme and Robert of Allanhaugh; however, it is unclear whether his own close family (brothers are mentioned) were simply being forced to capitulate through this bond, since they appear not to have been directly related to the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time. David (16th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. He and his brother John were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birken side in the lands of Appletreeshall and Midshiels. David (16th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts he may have been from. David (16th/17th C.) brother of the deceased Laird of Synton (either George or possible Walter) who was in a gang of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the custody of the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Walter Scott, called ‘Old Walter’ in Synton was also involved, so possibly his brother or other near relative. David (16th/17th C.) son of the late John ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’. In 1609 he had an action against Hector Turnbull of Barnhills and his son and heir John for not paying what they had borrowed from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. He also had a brother John, who inherited his father’s lands in 1609. David (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Newlands’ in 1643, when listed as owner of lands in Belses in Ancrum Parish in 1643, valued at £156. David of Canonbie (1627–48) son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and younger brother of Francis, 2nd Earl. He was born at Newark Castle. He was listed among those on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648, but is said to have died in that year, apparently in battle (and unmarried). However, his testament and inventory is confirmed in 1666 (by Jean, his only surviving sibling), making it unclear when he died; it could be that Jean, Countess of Tweeddale, was making clear that she was still owed part of his share of the amount given in their father’s will, after the death of all other legitimate siblings. David (d.c.1685) Commissary Depute of Peebles, Collector of the Forest and Commissioner of Excise and the Militia for Selkirkshire in the 1680s. He was probably brother of the Laird of Tushielaw, although it is unclear which one. David (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberrie. In 1663/4 he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie. David (d.c.1683) tenant in Blackhope (although it is unclear which one). His will was recorded in 1683. David (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married ‘Lizie Loran’, i.e. Elizabeth Lorraine, in 1699 (she was surely related to other Lorraines in Ashkirk at about the same time). Their children included Janet (b.1695). It is possible that the same David married Elizabeth Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1699 and had children: Robert (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1706). David of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) said to be descended from Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He is recorded being ‘in Merriela in Cavers parish’ when his son was baptised in Hawick in 1708. He married Margaret, a younger daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. They had a son, also David, who was a Captain in the Royal Regiment of Artillery and served in the American Wars in the 1770s. He may also have had a sister, Janet, who married William Borthwick, farmer at Glendinning. His children included James (b.1708), baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses James Chisholme and Thomas Wright. He could be the David, resident at Merrylaw, whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. Janet (b.1727), baptised in Cavers Parish, may also have been his child. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1737 he was at Outersideshiel when his son James was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his, include Isabel (b.1746) and Margaret (b.1753). David (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Heap Inn’ in 1747. He married Mary Cowan in 1744, the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes. Their daughter Isabel was baptised in Wilton in 1747, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Dryden. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiel in 1763 and 1764 and Roberton Burnfoot in 1767 and 1774. He married Margaret Learmonth in Roberton in 1759. His children included Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1764), Janet (b.1767), Jean (b.1769) and David (b.1774). David (d.c.1792) son of David of Merrylaw and Margaret Scott, from the Todrig branch. He served with the Royal Artillery in America. He was at St. Augustine in 1773, acted as Commissary of Horse in 1780 and received an address from the inhabitants of Kings and Queens Counties on Long Island in 1782. In the following year he was promoted to Major. His name disappears in 1793, but he may be the Maj. David who died in camp at Seringapatam, India. Rev. David (1765/6–1822) licensed by Langholm presbytery in 1797, he was presented to Castleton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and ordained there in 1801. He remained minister of Castleton until his death. He is described as ‘devout and liberal in his sentiments, he was faithful and zealous in the discharge of duty, particularly in promoting the religious education of youth, while he was a friend to the poor’. In 1807 he married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1848, aged 73. They had daughters: Margaret (1809–23), and Mary (1813–41), who married Robert Stavert, merchant in Manchester. He is buried in Castleton kirkyard. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Blackhall on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787 when he had a saddle horse. ‘Heirs of D Scott’ was the record on the 1790 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 farm horses at Blackhall in 1797 and also paid the dog and clock taxes there in 1797. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–1797, appearing along with Hugo from 1788. It seems likely he is different than (but surely related to) the David who was at Blackhall at about the same time. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. David (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. He is recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. His daughter Ann died in 1798. He could be the David who married Marion Thomsine in Wilton in 1758 and had children Jean (b.1760), James (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Andrew (b.1768), John (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1776). David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dewyhaugh (in Teviothead Parish), when he paid the cart tax in 1791. He was also listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. David (1777/8–1851) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Flatt in Liddesdale and later at Hoscasteshiel, as well as being tenant in Redfordgreen. He married Jean, daughter of William Scott, ‘the Pether’, and she died at Bellendean in 1866, aged 86. Their children were: William (b.1804), farmer at Garwald Shiel and later Sallfoot, Moffat Water; Thomas (b.1806), who emigrated to America; Isabel (1808–35), who died at Redfordgreen; Helen (1811–87), who married Eskdalemuir shepherd Walter Beattie; George

(b.1813), shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee; Elizabeth (b.1818/9), who married blacksmith William Pow; Jean; Christina (b.1823/4), who married gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford; and another daughter, who married a farmer in Ettrick. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. David (b.1791/2) born in Langholm, he was farmer at Priesthaugh. He held a Scottish long-jump record. He was in the Chair for the Wisp Club dinner of 1844. He was also a subscriber to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded at Priesthaugh near the end of the 18th century or Robert who was recorded there in 1821. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 45 arable acres and 2505 hill acres, employing 5 labourers. He was still there in the 1861 census, farming 3300 acres and employing 5 men. He married Christian Aitchison and their children included: Margaret (b.1824); Walter H. (b.1823/4); Charles William Douglas (b.1827); and David C. (b.1830/1). He could be the David, son of Hugh and Margaret Amos, born in Langholm in 1791. David Dundas (b.1800/1) of Briery Yards, from Midlothian. He was a historian and friend of David Laing. He translated theological works, including Ranke’s ‘History of the Popes of Rome’. There was a publication of 1856 describing a local disagreement ‘Clerical Despotism and Synod of Justice, or True State of the Case between the Rev. J.A. Wallace, Free Church, Hawick, and David D. Scott, Esq., Briery-yards, &c.’ He chaired the centenary Burns night at the Commercial Inn in 1859. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards, along with the official owner, Thomas Turnbull, for whom he was the main trustee. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Mary C., and their children included Katherine J. and Elizabeth. David (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Linton and their son Gideon was baptised in 1830. David (b.c.1810) stocking-maker in Wilton and Hawick. He was probably the David listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, but living in Hawick in 1835 and 1840. He was David ‘Senr.’ at Dovemount on the 1841 census, living with David ‘Jnr.’ who was apparently just 5 years younger; he could be the warehouseman recorded at Dovemount in 1835 and in Hawick in 1840. He is probably the stockingmaker David whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1840. David (1834–1902) son of Thomas and Janet Notman, and grandson of wright James Scott. He was apprenticed to blacksmith John Manuel in Lilliesleaf. He was living near Liverpool when he got married in 1859 and later lived at Ladylaw Place, then at Pathfoot and Damside. In 1861 he was recorded as a blacksmith living at Whitrope Tunnel along with other labourers; his wife and first child were in Ladylaw Place with his in-laws, wool-spinner Walter and Mary Riddell. In 1859 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Riddell. Their children were: Mary (1859–87), who married her cousin John Robson; Thomas (1861–1946); Janet Notman (b.1864), who died young; Janet (again, b.1866); and Jean (b.1869); Walter (b.1871), who also died young; Elizabeth (b.1876); and Ann Robson (1879–1947). The first 6 children were born in Hawick. In 1874 he emigrated to Ottawa, Canada with his family. He became head blacksmith at Gibson Quarry, Beamsville, Ontario. David (19th C.) mason at Bonchester Bridge. He was Parish Registrar in Hobkirk. He married Helen, daughter of Peter Bruce, who was born at Swinnie. David (19th C.) mason in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1865. In September of that year he had the added distinction of leading the procession up to the Town’s new water supply on the Allan. David (1942/3– ) born and raised in Hawick, he worked for the Hawick News and then the Cumberland Evening News, before starting at the Scotsman in 1968. He eventually became the Scottish Government editor for the newspaper, and in 1999 was awarded an O.B.E. for contributions to Scottish journalism. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1999. David ‘Davy’ (1958/9– ) attended Trinity and the High School, he became a housing director for Barratt’s. Regarded as one of the greatest Burns authorities in the Borders, he has been a highly sought-after speaker at dinners. He is an honorary member of Hawick Burns Club and the 1514 Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2016. Dickson (b.1804/5) from Melrose, he was a tailor in Newmill, recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Thomas Borthwick, farmer at Newmill. Their children included Thomas (who worked as a miller), Alexander (a shepherd) and Jane (who may have married Mr. Bell, farmer at Wattaman, Dumfriesshire). Duncan (13th C.) son and heir of Michael of Balweary, who may have been the ‘wizard’. He consented to his father’s gift to Dunfermline monastery, also confirmed by Alexander II in 1231. He also granted and consented to a further gift of lands in Fife and Perthshire, sometime before 1250. He had 2 sons: Sir Michael, 1st Laird of Blawearie; and Gilbert, who witnessed a charter in 1236. Duncan (13th/14th C.) son of Michael of Balweary. He paid homage to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as ‘Duncann Scotus’. Also in 1296 his wife Mary petitioned King Edward I for support after he was captured at Dunbar; he is there ‘Duncan le Escot’. In 1297/8 there is a record of expenses for his imprisonment in England. In 1310 he was part of an agreement for lands in Perthshire. Duthac (d.c.1491) recorded paying rent in ‘Uviar Argati’ in Doune in the period 1480–90, along with his wife Janet. His widow was still paying rent in 1492 and 1495. He was presumably dead after the Scottish saint. It is unclear how he was connected with other Scotts.

Ebenezer (b.c.1775) tenant at Burnflat in Hawick. He was selected for service in the Militia in 1799, but failed to appear and was later declared unfit for service. In 1841 he was listed as a woollen hand-loom weaver at Burnflat. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, Gilbert and Agnes. Edmund (17th C.) recorded as servant and ‘officiar’ to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same Edmund is listed separately as ‘officiar in Tiviot’ when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same. Edmund is recorded as ‘officiar’ to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was selected for service in the Militia in 1799, but failed to appear and was later declared unfit for service. In 1841 he was listed as a woollen hand-loom weaver at Burnflat. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, Gilbert and Agnes. Edmund (17th C.) recorded as servant and ‘officiar’ to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same Edmund is listed separately as ‘officiar in Tiviot-dail’. Edward (16th C.) recorded in a document in the Glasgow Cathedral chartulary in 1525. He appears to have been a Burgess of Glasgow. Elizabeth (15th C.) received 6 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is listed among servants of the Laird. of Sir William. Elizabeth (16th C.) daughter of William and grand-daughter of the Sir Walter who was murdered in 1552. After her father’s death, her mother remarried to Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and so she is sometimes referred to as Elizabeth Murray. According to a 1568/9 contract between Scotts and Kerrs (atoning for the murder) she had to marry the grandson of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1660 she married Charles Lauder from Wind. In 1670, she and her sister Anna were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotsrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bousthe, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinestead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Headsaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’.

Elizabeth (17th C.) listed among the poor people living at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish, who were unassessed for the hearth tax in 1694. She is distinct from Bessie, who lived at Headsaw. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Town o’ Rule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident at Mabonlaw, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in 1694. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) married James Riddell, who farmed at Wiltonburn. Her husband was renting 1/4 of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, but she was listed as his widow renting 1/3 in 1694. She may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. Elizabeth of Mangerston (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of Mangerton and hence probably daughter of Sir Francis. Her brother was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Eskdale. She prepared the accounts for her brother in the year 1696–97, by which time he was presumably deceased (or too ill). She was served heir to her brother in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. However, nothing else is known about her. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (18th C.) tenant in Crawhill in Wilton Parish when she paid the window tax in 1748. She is recorded as ‘Mrs. Betty Scott’. It is unclear who her husband was or even whether her maiden or married name was Scott. However, she is surely related to John Scott, who was living at Crawhill in 1751. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ nee Rutherford (1729–89) daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope and Margaret, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairmielee. She was a niece of Alison Cockburn, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. When younger she was attached to a man who drowned on a passage to Ireland, so she remained single for much of her life. However, in 1768 she married Walter of Wauchope. She was noted as an artist and poet, her collected poems ‘Alonza and Cora’ being published posthumously in 1801. In 1787 Burns visited the house on his Border Tour. She had sent him a verse epistle offering him a ‘marled plaid’ in appreciation of his work, and he replied by composing the ‘Epistle To Mrs. Scott, Gudewife of Wauchope-House’. His notebook describes how ‘she possessed all the sense, taste, intrepidity of face, and bold critical decision which usually distinguish female authors’. She was apparently a friend of Dr. Blacklock, Allan Ramsay and Allan Cunningham. She died a couple of years after Burns visit, it being said that ‘the activity of her mind has destroyed a strong constitution’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Dickson (1757–1838) daughter of Archibald of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. She was born in Minto Parish. She married Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and had 6 boys plus 3 girls. She is probably the Mrs. Scott of Wauchope recorded living on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Her portrait was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon when he was young. Elmer see Ailmer. Esther (17th C.) daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, she married Elliot of Falnash and then George Langlands of that Ilk. Esther (1772/3–1855) listed as ‘independent’ and ‘annuitant’ in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, at about 5 High Street. She lived along with her younger sister Sarah, who also died unmarried in 1855. It seems likely they were daughters of Andrew and Beatrice Turnbull, with siblings Robert (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Thomas (b.1767), Ann (b.1770) and Martha (b.1775). Their father is probably Bailie Andrew, merchant of Hawick, and the property is probably the ‘A. Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Ewen (15th C.) son of John, he acted as a Ranger for James II, like his father. However, it is unclear to which branch of the family they belonged. From 1440 his name is recorded as ‘Eugenio Scot’ and associated with lands in Arran and Bute. His name last occurs in 1451. Francis (16th/17th C.) described as ‘natural son’ of John Scott, ‘called of Tuschelaw’ (i.e. Tushielaw) in a charter of 1618. His father was son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, infamous for killing Walter of Gamescleuch in 1609. Francis of Woll (d.bef. 1643) eldest son of Robert of Woll. He was recorded as Laird in 1627. However, he was succeeded by his brother James by 1643, and so presumably died without heirs of his own. Francis (17th C.) shepherd who was son of Adam in ‘Schaws’ (or Shawes) and grandson of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells in his postral. Francis of Synton (d.c.1646) 4th son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was brother of Sir William of Harden, Hugh (who started the Scotts of Gala), Walter (in Essenside), Margaret (who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Esther (who married Elliot of Falnash and secondly George Langlands of that Ilk), Janet (who married Thomas Scott, later Laird of Whitslade) and Margaret (who married David Pringle of Gala); so he was locally very well connected. He is described as ‘in Howfuird’ and later as ‘of Sinton’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. He assisted in managing the Buccleuch estates. In 1624 he married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitlade. In 1627 he purchased the Synton estate from his distant cousin George (their great-grandfathers had been brothers), thus starting a new line of the Scotts of Synton, which would become the Corse Scotts. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1641 he purchased most of the lands of North Synton from the Veitch family; thus enlarging the estate. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of the lands of Easter Essenside (valued at £200), the west side of North Synton (£208), the east side of North Synton (£338) and Birkwood (£200). His children were: William, who succeeded; Margaret, who married William Scott of Tushielaw; Francis (b.1633); Walter; Elspeth; Isobel (or Isabel); Agnes; Helen; Christian; and Grizel. Note that these generations are somewhat uncertain, although it seems he was succeeded by his son William, and then his grandson John. Some of his daughters were named in 1665 when their mother made a disposition for the monies owed to her through her marriage contract. In 1662 his son Francis was appointed as guardian for John (later of Synton), son of his son William of Synton. Francis of Castleside (d.bef. 1669) probably grandson of George ‘of Castleside’ (and hence great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat o Harden’). Castleside was inherited by the 3 daughters of George of Castleside, namely Janet, Margaret and Bessie in 1632, and he must have inherited it (or bought it from) them sometime before 1636.
He bore the Earl of Buccleuch's gauntlets at his funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. In 1638 he was 'in Casthillisyle' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. In 1639 he complained to Ashkirk Session that his mother-in-law Margaret Scott of Castleside had called him a 'thief and traitour', after apparently he 'maliciously and unreverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat' in the church; presumably an argument over the family seat in the kirk, and a son who did not get along with his mother-in-law! It is possible she was the daughter of George of Castleside from whom he inherited the lands. In 1641 he had a 'letter or inhibition' against Gavin Cessford of Westhouses for fraud against him, the case heard in Melrose. He is also mentioned in another Melrose case of 1642. He may be the man recorded as 'Castleside for Newtoun' (presumably Newton farm) who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish for £156 in 1663; he also paid tax on £160 in Ashkirk Parish for Castleside. He is on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish in 1666. His widow Isobel (presumably Scott) was 'liferentrix' of Westhouses and Gattonsdie in a document of 1669. Francis (1626–51) 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, son of Walter, the 1st Earl. He succeeded when still a minor and so had some of his male relatives as 'tutors'. Specifically, in 1634 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Baronies of Branhxholme, Buccleuch, Eckford, Lanton, Whitchester, Lenwitlaw, Rankilburn, Eilrig and Kirkurd (united into the Barony of Branhxholme), the Barony of Hailes (which included Alemoor), as well as lands in Ettrick and Yarrow, Greenwood and the Lyne, Teindsie, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool, Porterslands in Grahaamslaw, the Monk's Tour in Hassendean, the lands of the Lordship of Melrose, the Baronies of Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Town Yetholm, the Lordship of Liddesdale, including the Castle of Hermitage, the advowson of the Kirk of Hawick and other lands in Haddington, Edinburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Dumfries and Lanark, combined into the Barony of Hailes. In 1636 he was a student at St. Andrews, then at St. Leonard's College until 1642. His wardship and marriage rights were granted to the Earl of Stirling, although his widow gave these up in 1642 for a large payment. He was present at the Parliament of 1641 when only 14 years old. He purchased the Lordship of Dalkeith from the Earl of Morton in 1642. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminals, theves and ressetters of thift'. In 1643 he loaned 9000 merks to the Collector General of Scotland. In a county valuation of 1643 he was the landowner with the highest yearly value in Hawick Parish (about 7/8 of the total, amounting to £6311 3s 4d) and also almost half the total in Wilton Parish, as well as more than half of Castleton Parish, a third of Cavers Parish and about a quarter of Hassendean Parish. He was one of the men appointed as Colonels of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1643 (when only 17) and was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. New colours were made for his regiment in 1644, and this could be the 'Bellenden Banner'. In 1644 he complained about the number of men he was being asked to supply to the army. As part of the Covenanters army his regiment took part in the storming of Newcastle in 1644 and he was also at Marston Moor. In 1645 he was appointed Judicator over a large fraction of Roxburghshire, including the Lordships of Liddesdale, the Debateable Land etc., Ewesdale, Ashkirk, Hassendean, Cavers and Hawick, with the power to appoint courts. He received a charter of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1647. In 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was a heritor of Wilton Church as well as presumably of Hawick. In 1647 was made Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was also at the 1649 Parliament that repealed the acts of the 'Engagement'. In 1650 he resigned his baronies of Branhxholme, Hassendean and others in favour of himself and his heirs, including provision for inheritance through any female heir, whose husband would have to take the surname Scott. Also in 1650 he was one of the commissioners appointed to welcome Charles II to Scotland, although his castles at Newark and Dalkeith were possessed by Cromwell. He went further north for safety, but died at Dalkeith 'after a short illness' (which is not specified), before reaching his 25th birthday. He was one of the last Scottish noblemen to adhere to the Royalist cause, even when it was clearly hopeless. He was buried in Dalkeith Church (and not in Hawick, like his forebears). He married Lady Margaret Leslie, 2nd daughter of the 6th Earl of Rothes, who was widow of Alexander, Lord Balgonie. She was nominated as one of the 'tutors' for his children, should he die before her, and she later married the Earl of Wemyss (becoming the Countess of Wemyss). Scott of Satchells is not very complimentary when he writes ‘These infants sweet were left to their guardians to keep, Their tutors oft suffered control, Their mother was so impudent That she must always have her intent’ [CWS]. His children included: Mary (b.1647), who succeeded him; Walter (b.1648), who died in infancy; Margaret (b.1650), who also died young; and Anna (b.1651), who succeeded after her sister’s death. For years after his death there were efforts by his tutors to reduce the huge fine imposed on the family for his support of Charles, claiming that he had served in a Parliamentary Regiment in 1643 and acted against the ‘Engagement’ in 1648 – ‘And he began to talk anon, Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone . . . ’[SWS], ‘Earl Francis his father Earl Walter did succede, Into his earldom but not his head; Yet he wanted neither hand, head, nor heart, But could not act like to his father’s part’ [CWS], ‘He had no Heismale, but Daughters left behind, For to enjoy his great Earldom and Land’ [CWS]. Francis (17th C.) schoolmaster of Hassendean, probably father of the last minister of the Parish, Rev. Francis. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1640) illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, with an unknown mother. In 1635 he had a charter of the lands of Mangerton from his nephew Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, and he had another daughter, Marie. He was succeeded by his brother William. He died, was buried in Holland, and in 1648 there was still a dispute over the funeral costs between the Earl of Buccleuch and William of Mangerton (his brother). Francis of Newton (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Newingetoune’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was probably son or brother of John and Walter of Chamberlain Newton, who are recorded shortly before, and may have been father of Walter of Newton, who is recorded a little later (and perhaps grandfather of the later Francis of Chamberlain Newton). Francis of Shielwood (b.1638) eldest son of Walter of Shielwood. He is recorded in an inventory of writs of 1648 and in a discharge with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1663. He is said to have died not long after obtaining possession of his estates. He was succeeded by his younger brother, Robert. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Hugh of Gala. He is referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James of Gala in 1664 and 1665. He was given 300 merks Scots annually according to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1650, where he is described as ‘our servand’. Francis of Arkleton (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was brother of Robert of Harwood. In 1661 he was recorded still responsible for money that his father (as Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir) owed to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He granted a bond to Isobel Ker, wife of George Douglas of Bonjedward in 1663. He sold Arkleton to Walter Elliot in 1669, with the consent of his mother Anna. In 1664 he married Isobel, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. Francis of Phaup (17th C.) described as ‘of Phaope’ in 1657 in a factor’s extract to Sir William Scott of Harden and another to his brother Capt. John Scott in 1671. He was a Colonel serving in Brussels in 1666. He was probably brother to Adam, who became a gunsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671, and in which case his father was Robert. He paid tax on land valued at £526 13s 4d in Selkirkshire in 1678. James of Phaup, recorded in 1682, may be his son. Sir Francis of Mangerton (d.1672) eldest son of William. He inherited the lands of Mangerton and others from his father in 1648. This probably included Hartrigge in Jedburgh Parish. He may have been a minor when he succeeded; there is a record of discharge to his curators in 1667. However, he appears to have already been acting as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Eskdale in at least the period 1661–72. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his son Francis, who was served as his heir in 1675. The name of his wife is unknown; it was probably his mother (not his wife) who was the Lady Mangerton listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (but possibly from earlier). Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Bridges and their children included: Janet (b.1673); Archibald (b.1676); Bessie (b.1678); Thomas (b.1680); Adam (b.1681); Isobel (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1687). The witnesses in 1678 and 1680 were William Bridges and William Swan. Francis of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) son of John. He is also recorded in a deed of 1682. He was served heir to his father in 1686. He became Commissioner of Supply (for Selkirkshire) in 1685 and was succeeded by John, probably his son. Also in 1685 he had a marriage contract with Margaret Bertram, widow of Alexander Russell. The Ettrick Shepherd wrote that he was often in his (Hogg’s) grandfather’s house. Francis (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Vaills’ when his will was recorded in one of the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh or Selkirk. It is unclear where this was (perhaps Valesburn or Walls, or possibly Walls in Dumfriesshire). Francis of Langshaw (d.c.1690) younger son of Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw, and younger brother of Sir John of Ancrum. He witnessed a document for Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1662. In 1669 and 1673 he is listed as son of Patrick of Langshaw when he witnessed 3 charters for the commissioners of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. Documents relating to the ‘mul ters’ of Langshaw mention from around 1670 to 1675. He purchased the lands of Broadwoodshiel in 1672.

He obtained crown charters of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1674 and 1690. He paid land tax on Langshaw in 1678. He is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, and is recorded in cases held in Melrose in 1684. He was succeeded by his son, Walter, who was succceeded by another son, Thomas. In 1690 Walter was served heir to his lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, Calfshaw and Langhaugh in the Parish of Hawick. Thomas was served as his heir to Lang-shaw and other lands in 1695. Francis (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married ‘Giles’ Murray in 1683 and their children included Francis (b.1687), with witnesses Richard Thomson and Andrew Deans.
He is probably the same as one of the other Francises, e.g. the one later recorded at Wester Groundistone. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1696) son of Sir Francis. There is a marriage contract of 1672 between him and Christian Kerr, involving the annual rent of Nether Mangerton. He was served heir to his father in 1675. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Calroust in Morebattle Parish and ‘easrighe thicksyde and his lands in ulstoun’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was also the ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ who paid the land tax on £1280 in Castleton Parish in 1678. In 1684 there is a document relating to a bond with Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, nephew of his sister. His wife, ‘Lady Mangerton’ was among the heritors fined in 1684 for refusing to accept Episcopalianism.
In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose (where he is ‘Sir Francis Scott of Manjertoune’). He was probably the Laird of Mangerton appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale from 1692-95. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. His sister Elizabeth prepared the accounts for 1696-97, by which time he was deceased. She was served as his heir in 1700, inher-iting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. Capt. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, and brother of Walter, Earl of Tarras. In 1690 he was involved in a bizarre court case in which Jean Weyms accu-cised him of injuring her finger so that it had to be amputated. He could be the brother of the Earl of Tarras who is recorded serving in Buchanan’s regiment in Holland in 1688. He was ‘brother to the deceas’d earl of Tarras’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company. In 1697 he leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Francis (17th C.) rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, 1692 and 1694. Gideon of Falnash served as his cautioner in 1692 and 1694, suggesting a family connection; it is possible he was even Gideon’s brother, Francis of Greenhill.
Francis (17th C.) listed as tenant at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to William, who was a cottar there. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1697 when his daughter Helen was baptised; his wife was also a Scott. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam in Overhall and John in Wiltneburn. Francis (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed separately from the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He seems likely to be the weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Francis (17th C.) resident of Wester Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the same Francis recorded at Groundistone in 1696; his wife was also a Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in that year. The witnesses were James Scott and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. He may be the Francis who married Isobel Scott in Ashkirk in 1689. Helen (b.1697), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his daughter. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g.
George in Easter Groundistone. Rev. Francis (d.bef. 1716) probably son of schoolmaster Francis. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1659, was presented by John Turnbull, Laird of Minto to Minto Parish in 1664 and was minister there until 1678. He was then translated to Hassendean, where he was the last incumbent. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in at least 1666. He may be the Francis who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for Robert Wait in Robertson Parish in 1688. He was depriving in 1689 for refusing to read the 'Proclamation of the Estates', i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy, and continuing to pray for James VII after his abdication. An 'instrument' was brought against him by Robert Scott, younger of Hassendean and John Turnbull of Knowe, following his removal by the Privy Council. After being deprived he moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach to Episcopalians, along with Thomas Somerville, ousted minister of Cavers. This was probably on a secretive and informal basis until 1712, when the Act of Toleration was passed, and an Episcopalian meeting house was opened at the Playlaw (or Kirkwynd). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands and Rev. John Somerville of Hawick. He may be the 'Mr Francis' who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Horsleyhill in 1680. He is probably the 'Mr Francis Scott' listed 'eist the water' in Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He married Elspeth Buckham (or Buckholm) and their children were mostly baptised in Robertson Parish: Margaret (b.1680); James (b.1682); Francis (b.1684), who became a merchant in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in both 1684 and 1688 were James Scott and Thomas Gray. He died in Hawick and in 1716 his widow finally returned the church paraphernalia to Robertson, including bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. It is recorded that part of his tombstone still existed in 1879. Francis (17th C.) recorded in Borthwickbrae in 1687 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. The witnesses were George ... (probably Scott) and Walter Scott. Given the dates, it is probably different from the Francis who married Giles Murray and also seems unlikely to be the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1685 as uncle to the Laird of Tushielaw (probably Walter, and hence brother of William). He was cautioned, along with his wife, Margaret Elliot, the Laird of Tushielaw's mother, for the amounts collected by David Scott, the Laird's brother. He may be the same Francis, who along with David, were referred to as brother's of the deceased Laird of Tushielaw in 1676, when they were in a court case in Melrose. Francis (b.1633) younger son of Francis of Synton and brother of William of Synton. In 1662 he was appointed as guardian for his nephew John (later of Synton), son of his brother William. Francis of Gorrenberry (d.1689) son of John of Gorrenberry and grandson of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Morton and Canonbie in 1660–61 and for Liddesdale and Canonbie in 1665–70. In 1663 he was appointed a Justice of the Peace and in 1685 was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £1600 in Castleton Parish (presumably for Gorrenberry) and £900 in Kirkton Parish (this was probably for Adderstoneshiel and Adderstonelee). He was mentioned when his son Andrew became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1692. The 'Lady Garnerry' fined in 1684 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism was probably his wife. He married Anna (or Penelope), youngest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie. His daughter Anna married Archibald Douglas of Cavers, while his son Charles witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras. He was succeeded by his eldest son John. He may be the Scott of Gorrenberry whose daughter Marion married Sir James Don, 2nd Baronet. Francis of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier Francis of Newton. In 1690 he was one of the main instigators in the crowd trying to prevent the removal of Hassendean Kirk's roof. He is probably the Laird whose estate is described as 'Neutons Lands' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; he paid tax on 7 hearths for 'His hous at Meitchels' (presumably Midshiels). He is probably the Francis of Newton who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and 1704. He was recorded as 'Laird of Newton' in baptismal records of 1705, 1707 and 1709. His children included: Mary (b.1705); Robert (b.1707); and Gideon (b.1709). When his daughter Mary was baptised, The witnesses in 1705 were Robert of Hassendean and Francis of Alton, in 1707 they appear to have been 2 other Francis Scotts and in 1709 were Robert of Hassendean and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. Other children of his (also baptised in Wilton) may have been Isobel (b.1703) and Janet (b.1707). Probably the same Francis of Chamberland Neutoun' married Alison Langlands (perhaps daughter of Rev. John) in 1713; she was from Jedburgh Parish. Francis (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars' living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Francis (1645–1712) 1st Baronet of Thirlestane, son of Patrick of Tanlawhill. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1666 and was served heir to his father in 1667, including lands in Rutherford, Nether Crailing.
Scott

Smaillholm, Bowerhope, Gamescleuch, Kirkhope and the town of Selkirk. He was further served heir to his father in 1676, in the lands of Fleming, 'Tamluhar', Dunfelding, Davington and Nether Cassock. He was also served heir to his brother Walter in 1667. He was surely the Francis, son of Patrick of Thirlestane, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest 1660–62 (although he would have been very young, or his year of birth is incorrect). It is said that he came to the assistance of his distant cousin Francis of Davington, to protect him from his tutor's son, John of Rennaldburn (who was trying to encroach upon him during his minority). It is also said that he narrowly escaped being implicated in the Rye House Plot. He paid £1000 for tax on his lands in Dumfriesshire in 1671. He paid tax on lands (although it is unclear which ones, this surely included Langhaugh) in Hawick Parish valued at £850 in 1678, as well as paying for Rutherford in Maxton Parish. He is probably the Scott of Thirlestane fined £2776 in 1680 for being a supporter of the Covenanters. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. In 1678 he was he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 and 1690 for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and in 1704 for Selkirkshire. He was Selkirkshire Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1669–74, 1685–6 and 1693–702. In 1689 he was appointed Captain of the western regiment of Militia. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Company in 1695. Also in 1695 he was served heir to his brother Walter's lands in Upper Teviotdale, explicitly Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. In 1704 he was appointed Master of Works. In 1673 he married Henrietta, 6th daughter of William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian; she died in 1741, aged 90. They had 5 sons and 4 daughters, but only 2 survived childhood: Sir William, who succeeded; and Henrietta, who was 4th wife of William, 12th Lord Ross. An unnamed child of his was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1686. Another son may have been John, listed as 'son to Thirlestane' when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. Francis of Colmslie (17th C.) recorded in 1679 in an Edinburgh court case. He was among a party of Melrose men who were returning from Bothwell Bridge when they set upon John Drurie of Grange. He is also mentioned in Regality of Melrose records in 1670 and 1682. He was cautioner for Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh (and probably the same as Patrick of Langshaw), for a bond in 1678, suggesting that they were closely related. He is listed separately from Francis of Langshaw on a list of Regality of Melrose heritors in 1682 (showing they are not the same man). Francis of Greenhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood. His brothers included Walter of Harwood, Gideon of Fulnash and William, apothecary in Hawick. He paid the land tax in Hownam Parish in 1678 (for land valued at over £400, but which lands are not listed). He was fined £800 Scots in 1680, essentially for being a Covenant supporter. Francis of Davington (d.1706) only son of Sir John of Thirlestane (who had not succeeded to the Thirlestane estates). He was still a minor when his father died in 1666, his ‘tutor and curator’ being John of Newburgh. It is said that his tutor’s son John of Rennaldburn tried to exert undue influence on his affairs, and so his distant cousin Francis of Thirlestane came to his rescue. His other curators were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Patrick of Thirlestane, Walter of Goldielands, Thomas of Whitslade and Sir James Johnstone of Wester Raw. It was said that he was ‘a man of weak understanding’. He spent some time in Dalkeith tolbooth in 1695 for failing to provide for his step-mother, Margaret Scott and Walter of Burnfoot. In 1679 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Douglas of Auchin intully. Their children were: John of Davington, who succeeded, but died without children; Robert of Davington, who succeeded his brother; William, who had a farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch and whose son William lived at Moffat; Francis, who also had a farm from Scott of Buccleuch; James, whose son was Robert at Binks, who provided a family genealogy in 1792; David; Anne; and Mary, who married Rev. John Liston, minister of Aberdour. Francis (b.1684) son of Francis, last minister of Hassendean and Elspeth Buckh am. He was a merchant in Hawick. He could be the merchant who (along with Robert, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. Francis (17th/18th C.) brother of William of Horsleyhill. He is recorded becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696. He is probably the same as the ‘Dr. Scott’, brother of Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the guests cited for being at the ‘supernumerary marriage’ of John Hardie and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1706. He may have succeeded his brother and could be the Francis of Horsleyhill who had a charter in 1712 for ‘the lands of Belfoord commonly called Mowtown’ and ‘the four merkland of Weymsland’ (probably Weensland). In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands of Weensland were valued at £264. He was father of Capt. Robert of Horsleyhill. He is probably the Francis of Horsleyhill who was involved with transfer of lands of Belford (formerly called Mowtown) with his father Robert. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hawick Parish. His daughter May was baptised in 1720, with witnesses John Chisholme, preacher and Caerlenrig and Gideon of Harwood (who may have been related to him). He may be the Francis who married Jean Elliot in Hawick in 1711. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who may be his are Francis (b.1711) and William (b.1714). Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1704 he was at Mervinslaw, when his name is recorded as ‘Francie’. His children included Gideon (b.1704); Robert (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). He could be one of the Francises who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1707. Francis (17th/18th C.) miller at West Burnfoot, probably in Wilton Parish. A baptism of his servant William Goodfellow is recorded in 1711. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Isobel Paterson and their children included: William (b.1718); George (b.1720); James (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (b.1729). Francis (1687–1769) 4th son of Francis of Davington. He led the legal battle against the Napiers of Thirlestane to recover his family estates, eventually taking the case to the House of Lords, but without success. It was said that he had a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He had one known child, Agnes (1723–90), who was unmarried. He died at Holm, practically bankrupt by the legal battle he had championed. Francis (1695–1751) 2nd Duke of Buccleuch, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith and grandson of the 1st Duke and Anne Scott, whom he succeeded. He was only the second in his family in 260 years to be of full age at succession. Before succeeding he was known as Lord Scott of Whitchester and then Earl of Dalkeith after the death of his father. In about 1720 he became engaged to Lady Jane Douglas only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas, but the match was broken off, and it is said he fought a duel with her father as a result. In 1725 he was made a Knight of the Thistle. He was confirmed in the Baronies of Hassendeans, Sheriffdom of Selkirk, etc. in 1731. In 1738 he purchased Over Hassendeans from Archibald Douglas of Cavers. The titles of Baron Tindale and Earl of Doncaster (which had belonged to his grandfather) were restored by Parliament in 1743. He was a Scottish Representative Peer in Parliament 1733–41, Grand Master of the Freemasons in 1723/4 and made a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1745 he called out his tenantry to support the citizens of Edinburgh against Charles Edward Stuart. When hereditary jurisdictions were abolished in 1747, he was compensated for losing the Regality of Hawick. He paid tax on 42 windows in Hawick Parish in 1748, perhaps for Drumlanrig’s Tower. Although his intended marriage with Lady Jane Douglas (only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas) did not take place, in 1720 he married another Lady Jane Douglas, eldest daughter of James, Duke of Queensberry; this is where the Queensberry title and lands came to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Their children were: Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (1721–50), who predeceased his father; Jane (1723–79), who died aged 56; Anne (1724–37), who died aged 12 and who has a monument to her memory at Hillingden, Middlesex; Mary (1725–43), who died aged 17; and Charles of Bowhill (1727–47), who died aged 20; He was succeeded by his grandson Henry. His 1st wife died of smallpox in 1729. In 1744 he secondly married Alice (who had been his mistress), daughter of Joseph Powell, but they had no children; she died in 1765, aged 63. However, he also had 6 children by Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, who he allowed for in his will, and possibly 4 children with Elizabeth Jenkins. Another son was Maj. Walter of Datchet, Buckinghamshire. Lady Louisa Stuart called him ‘a man of mean understanding and meaner habits’. He was buried in Eton Chapel next to his brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Deans and their children included James (b.1724), Isobel (b.1727), Margaret (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1730). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Ainslie (from the Ainslies of Blackhill) and their children included Robert (b.1712). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Miller in 1715 and their children included Margaret (b.1718) and Helen (b.1723). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Kedie and their children included Jean (b.1723), William (b.1724), John (b.1728), John (again, b.1730), Anna (b.1732) and James (b.1733). Francis (1705–73) see Francis Napier. Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th C.) son of Col. Robert and Agnes Douglas. He was incorrectly named ‘John’ in Keith Scott’s genealogy. He was great-grandson of Robert of Horsleyhill who gained Weensland, Shaws and Burnflat in 1653. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 as ‘late of Horsleyhill, now of Belford’. He was still on the roll in 1788 and described as ‘An intimate of the Duke of Buccleuch’. Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Belford in Morebattle Parish, valued at £1290 6s 8d (and the teinds of £233 6s 8d). He had a daughter who married Thomas Davidson, surgeon in Kelso. He was succeeded by his son Henry. He may be the Lt.-Col. Francis James who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. Francis of Gorrenberry (18th C.) son of John. His sister Anne married Walter Scott of Harden. In 1729 he gave a bond for his sister to John, 2nd son of Walter of Harden. In 1750 he sold Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel to Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers (who may have been a cousin of some sort); his factor for the transaction was George Grant. He appears to have been living at Nether Tofts when his children Charles (b.1716) and Archibald (b.1719) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. Little else is known about him, and he appears to have been the last Scott of Gorrenberry. He may be the Laird of Gorrenberry who was said to have been with the Jacobite army in 1745, meeting the Hobkirk Schoolmaster Sam Oliver (who had acted as guide) and leading him safely through the camp and past the Prince. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Briggs and their children included Walter (b.1735) and Henry (b.1737). Francis (1710–39) 2nd Earl of Deloraine, eldest son of Maj.-Gen. Henry, 1st Earl and Ann Duncombe. He was thus grandson of the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. When he was born he took the title Viscount Hermitage, which had been created for his father. On the death of his father in 1730 he became 2nd Earl of Deloraine, as well as 2nd Lord Goldielands. He held the rank of Cornet of Horse. He married Mary, daughter of Matthew Lister and secondly married Mary, daughter of Gervase Scrope. He died without issue at Bath and his titles passed to his younger brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Henderson in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children included Jean (b.1734). It is possible he is the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Kedie. Francis (1721–50) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest son of Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch. He also had the title of Lord Scott of Whitchester. He was great-grandson of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and in 1731 she infefted him in several lands, including Nether Newhall (i.e. Burnfoot), Easter and Wester Hassendean, Gilmanscleugh, etc., as well as the lordship of Musselburgh. He was a lawyer, educated at Oxford University, and became M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1748. In 1742 he married Caroline Campbell (1718–94), eldest daughter and co-heiress of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich. His wife was god-daughter of Queen Caroline, wife of George II. She survived him and remarried to Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, later becoming Baroness Greenwich. Through this marriage the Scotts of Buccleuch inherited the lands of Granton. His eldest son John, Lord of Whitchester (1745–49) died of smallpox, aged 4. His 2nd son Henry (1746–1812) became the 3rd Duke. His only surviving daughter, Lady Frances (1750–1817), married Archibald Douglas, 1st Lord of Douglas in 1783. Other children were: Campbell (1747–66), who died unmarried, aged 19; James (1748–58), died aged 9; and Caroline (1743–53), who died aged 10. He himself died of smallpox aged 29, predeceasing his father by about a year, and was buried at Dalkeith. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Lockie and their children included Janet (b.1742), Helen (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748), Mary (b.1751) and John (b.1753). Francis (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1739); Jean (b.1741); Francis (b.1749); Janet (b.1753); Thomas (b.1757); and Christian Smeal (b.1759). Francis of Alton (18th C.) recorded at Alton in 1722 when one of his children was baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Francis ‘of Alton’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He is probably also the Francis who is ‘younger of Altoun’ in a memorandum of 1708 (among the papers of the Douglasses of Cavers). He was also ‘of Aldtoun’ in a ‘search of incumbrances’ undertaken by John Hodge in 1742. It appears that he sold the lands of Alton (just north of Hawick) to John Horsburgh of that Ilk about 1742, with the agreement of his eldest lawful son Patrick. He was thus the last of the Scotts of Alton. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. He married Anna Scott and their children included John (b.1722), with witnesses Thomas Kedie and George Scott (probably the George also recorded in Alton that year). He could be the Francis who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. Francis (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1743 and 1757. The following children, baptised in in Roberton Parish, were probably his: James (b.1743); Margaret (b.1745); Walter (b.1748); Christian (b.1749); Margaret (b.1752); and Francis (b.1757). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Young in 1754 and their children included Jane (b.1760). Francis (18th C.) wigmaker and barber of 9 High Street. There is an existing sasine of 1764 in which he borrowed money from John and William Thomline, with his property as collateral. He later sold 9 High Street to Walter Wilson. His son Walter was made an Honorary Burgess. He could be the ‘Mr Francis Scott, Hawick’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1766 he (along with Robert of the Cross Keys) witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (who was probably related to him). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1756 he married Janet Thomson and their son Francis was born in 1760. He may be the tobacconist Francis who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757. Francis of Beechwood (1732–1803) 2nd surviving son of Walter of Harden, brother to the next Laird, who was also Walter. He was recorded in 1735 when his father had to define his heirs. He lived for a while in Bombay, where he was a merchant. For a few years, perhaps 1770–80, he held the superiority of the lands of Borthwicksheils. It is recorded in 1780 that he was struck off the voter’s roll in Roxburghshire, since he had lost his lands in the county. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was written that it was ‘believed will not take the oath’. In 1776 he married Mary (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their children were: Walter; Alexander, a minister, who succeeded; Francis, who died young; Charles, who died in Jamaica in 1805; Hugh, a Major in the East India Company; John, Lieut. in the East India Company; William, in the Royal Navy; and Mary, who married Rear Admiral Thomas Folliott Baugh. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Grieve in 1763. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Blair in 1771. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Miller in 1784. Francis (b.c.1775) resident of Deamburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer and parish pauper. He was living with Mary (probably his wife) and Francis (probably a grandson). Maj. Francis (1773–1813) 2nd son of John of Whitehaugh. He served with the 59th Regiment of Foot at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope and also in India. He also served in Spain and received a gold medal after the Battle of Vittoria in 1813, commanding the regiment there. He was killed leading the volunteers at San Sebastian. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Eldinhope in the Yarrow valley. He lived to the age of 94. It is said that he still used a pony to ride the 10 miles to church when he was aged 90, the combined total of the ages of horse and rider being 120. He paid the horse tax (along with Walter) at Eldinhope in 1786 and the dog tax in 1797. It may have been his daughter Christian who married Alexander Scott, farmer in Ladhope. He was probably cousin of Charles and Walter Scott, farmers at Catslackburn, who also lived in their 90s. He is buried in the churchyard at St. Mary’s Loch. Francis Napier (1799–1884) twin brother of Alexander Pringle, he was born at Yair, and was the first of the twins born. His father was contractor George and his mother was Eleanor Inglis, who worked as a lady’s maid at Yair House; she attended Lady Napier ‘during confinement’ (perhaps also at Yair) and then was asked to stay on for her own childbirth. He was named after Lord Napier, who owned Wilton Lodge at the time of his birth, and hence must have had a connection with the family (perhaps as former employer of his mother). He was a framework knitter in Hawick, living at Wilton Kirkstyle and then on Wilton Place and Havelock Street. He was listed as head of household at Wilton Kirkstyle in 1840 and 1841 and is probably the warehouseman recorded at Gibsnose in 1835. In 1824 he married Janet (1802–52), daughter of John Oliver and Anne Neil; she was born in Ashkirk Parish and was sister of Isabella Oliver, wife of John White, who lived at Midshiels. Their children were: George (b.1826) and John (b.1827), who both died in infancy; John (again, b.1829), painter in Selkirk, who married Mary Wilson; Alexander (b.1830), who married Mary Ekron, and was a gasworks manager in Galashiels; Anne (1833–44); Lilias (1835–79), who married Adam Murray and went to Canada; George (again, b.1837), who married Elizabeth Miller Pringle; Isobella (1839–42); Francis (1841–1933), who married Hannah Bodimeade and Esther Hunter; Jessie (b.1844), who married joiner William Aimers; and Margaret (b.1846), who married grocer Andrew Blance.

He died at 5 Slitrig Bank. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Francis (b.1803/4) originally from Canonbie, he was a clog and last-maker in Hawick. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory on the High Street, on the Howegate in the 1837 directory, and on Allars Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 census he was listed on Silver Street and in 1851 and 1861 on Allars Crescent. He married Margaret Rutherford in Hawick in 1835. Their children were Alison, Thomas, Agnes, Francis, Margaret, Helen, William and Walter. Francis, M.P., see Francis Hepburne-Scott. Francis ‘Frank’ (1811–1873) known as ‘Uncle Braid’, he was fourth singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He was known as a fisherman and also wrote a small amount of verse. Francis Napier (1841–1933) born in Wilton Parish, son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a painter-decorator in Hawick, with his business premises and house at 26 High Street. In 1888 he discovered a sundial (a square block with 2 faces, dated 1683) built into one of the grates of 26 High Street. In Selkirk in 1867 he married Hannah Matilda (1844–68), born in Hendon, daughter of William Bodimeade, a blacksmith in Harrow in England and Hannah Odell; she was a teacher, and it is unclear how the couple met. They had a son, Francis William (b.1868), who was a Bailie; the mother died within a few months of this birth. In 1873 in Wilton he secondly married Esther, daughter of cabinetmaker John Hunter. Their children were: John (b.1874), who died young; Lilias, who also died young; Ella; Janet Oliver (b.1881); Jessie; Mary, who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Edinburgh; and John Hunter, a dentist in Edinburgh. Bailie Francis William ‘Frank’ (1868–1947) painter-decorator at 26 High Street and Hawick Magistrate. He was son of Francis Napier, who was also a painter and decorator, and Hannah Bodimeade. He was one of the early members of the Callants’ Club, acting as President during the War years 1915–19. In 1906 he was the first to suggest that Hawick should have its own art gallery, so it was called the ‘Scott Gallery’ when finally built in 1975. He also instigated the erection of the Caa Knowe cairn, which was unveiled in 1911. In 1916 he proposed that the Callants’ Club lay a wreath at the Horse on 12th July to comemorate the fallen in Gal lipoli. He was an active member of the Hawick Free Kirk (St. George’s) serving as Session Clerk 1899–1915. He travelled to the U.S.A. and is said to have brought back what was Hawick’s first record player. He married Isabella (1874–1915), daughter of Richard Edmondson. Their children were: Francis Napier (‘Napier’, b.1900); Elizabeth Kennedy (‘Lizzie’, b.1903); and Richard Ed mondson (‘Dick’, b.1910). After his first wife died, he secondly married Mary Ann Rowe. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Francis George ‘F.G.’ (1880–1958) 2nd son of George, a mill parts supplier in Bourtree Place and Janet, daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. He was born in Hawick at 6 Oliver Crescent, and shared a birthday with Burns. It is said that his father insisted on a traditional religious upbringing, but his mother introduced him to Border ballads. He was educated at the High School and Teviot Grove Academy. He had piano lessons until he was 15, when his father thought it would interfere with his schoolwork. He was Dux Medal list in 1897, apparently arguing that a mistake had been made when he came second in the final exams. He went to Edinburgh University in 1897 to study English and train as a teacher, but abandoned his degree in the second year. He did teaching practice at Trinity in Hawick and taught briefly at Drumlunrig and then in Falkirk, before moving to Langholm (1903–12, where one of his pupils was Hugh MacDiarmid). He later taught at schools in Dunoon and Glasgow. He also studied for a music degree from Durham University. He studied composition under Roger-Ducasse at the Paris Conservatoire. In 1925 he became lecturer in music at Jordanhill, and remained there until he retired in 1946. He also published some poetry (e.g. ‘On Border Hills’ in 1904). He became a close friend of the poet Hugh MacDiarmid and the painter William Johnstone (his cousin), with whom he tried to initiate a ‘Scottish Renaissance’; he set many of MacDiarmid’s poems to music, while Johnstone painted several portraits of him. He was musically influenced by Schönberg and Bartok, but tried to develop a Scottish style. He wrote more than 300 songs, many published in his 6 volume ‘Scottish Lyrics Set to Music’. He most often used traditional Scots words, with the musical style being contemporary folk art-music (about which opinions differ). He also wrote ‘Renaissance’ (a concert overture), ‘The Seven Deadly Sins’ (for full orchestra), ‘Cumha nan Laoch’ (‘Lament for Heroes’ for string orchestra) and ‘The Ballad of Kynd Kit tock’ (for baritone and orchestra). His main local contribution is ‘Oor Bonnie Border Toon’, which he wrote while still in his teens. As a teacher he is said to have had a formidable presence, with a booming voice and piercing blue eyes. He is also said to have had a mischievous sense of humour. Although he was friendly with several other poets and artists, he seldom mixed with other musicians. He was awarded a doctorate by Glasgow University in 1957. He married Burgess Gray (a trained mezzo-soprano) of Fraserburgh and had 4 children: Francine; Lillias; George; and Malcolm. He died at his home in Glasgow and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. In 1980 a centenary plaque was unveiled at his birthplace, 6 Oliver Crescent, by the Saltire Society and the Archaeological Society. A biography ‘Francis George Scott and the Scottish Renaissance’ was written by Maurice Lindsay in 1980. Francis Townsend ‘Frank’ (1940–2001) son of Dick and grandson of Bailie Francis. He was elected a Town Councillor at age 26, was later a Regional Councillor, and became Hawick’s first Honorary Provost 1978–82. He was appointed a Bailie and served as Justice of the Peace for 26 years, being Chairman of the Justices Committee. Mainstay of the Common Riding Committee for more than 30 years, he served as Secretary 1988–2001. He was also President of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for 19 years and on the Committee for 40 years. In addition he was President of the Callants’ Club and of the Archeological Society, as well as Transactions editor for many years. He updated the ‘Companion to Hawick’ (1998) and wrote a history of the Conservative Club.

In his work as architectural technician he had a hand in several Hawick renovation projects. He is buried in the Wellogate and Frank Scott Court is named after him. A memorial seat on the Miller’s Knowes has an entrance pillar from East Bank Church as its base. Francis William (1962–) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. A keen football player for Hawick United, Hawick Legion and Hawick Royal Albert, he scored over 100 goals for both the Legion and the Albert. He was Common Riding Secretary 2008–16, and has also served as President of the 1514 Club and the Mostroopers’ Club. Gannel (13th C.) recorded in 1229, in an assise held at Newcastle. He was ‘Gannel Scot’ in relation to a tenement in ‘Chipches’ (presumably Chipchase). Geoffrey (13th C.) recorded as ‘Galfridium Scot’ when he was involved in a court case listed in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He may be the same man separately listed as ‘Galfridium de Scotia’ in a case at Newcastle. ‘Galfrido et Willelmo’ mercenaries of Scotland were also listed in 1279. George of Synton (14th/15th C.) eldest son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton (although some sources suggest he was 4th son of the first Walter of Buccleuch). He was either the 1st or 2nd of the Scotts of Synton (accounts differ here), and probably married a daughter of Sir John Turnbull of Falshope (probably Phaup near the head of the Ettrick in Selkirkshire). He had a son Walter, as well as possibly William. This branch eventually produced the lines of Harden, etc. (but again accounts are contradictory). He may also sometimes be confused with his grandson (or great-grandson) George, one of the last of the first set of Scotts of Synton. George (15th/16th C.) owner of the lands of Lairs (adjacent to Lairhope, near the head of the Teviot). In 1501 there was an agreement between him and William, son of James Douglas of Drumlanrig, where he would be allowed to continue to hold these lands in ‘alba firma’ if he could produce proof that he had this arrangement with James Douglas. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges (perhaps George of Borthaugh). He was probably related to Robert, who was listed as tenant in Lairs in 1501. George of Borthaugh and Whames (d.bef. 1528) son of Robert. In 1502 he served as surety for Adam in Highchesters (when he was ‘de quhomys’). In 1505/6 he had a notorial instrument involving his claim on his father Robert’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near the modern Pathhead); this document mentions that his grandfather was Stephen of Muirhouse. In 1508/9 he was ‘of the Quhomys’ when he was given ‘warrandice’ of his grandfather Stephen’s lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 he wrote (with his own hand) a letter of acquittance, stating that John Muir of Rowallan had paid him the £40 and 14 merks owed on the warrandice for Commonside, Harwood and Dryden. In 1517 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme from his father. He married his cousin, whose name is not recorded. With her he had his eldest son, John, and then remarried and had another son, Walter. He declared on his deathbed (in the presence of the Laird of Buccleuch, 2 notaries and other witnesses) that he never had dispensation to marry his cousin and so his 2nd son should succeed to his lands, which included Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and the Wallis in Drynisdale (probably Dryfesdale). He may be the George who was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. In 1528 a set of arbitrators (all Scotts) met to decide on inheritance and found in favour of his elder son. In 1526 the list of Border men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran included John in Borthaugh, with the brothers Walter, Philip and George listed afterwards, so perhaps all sons of his. George of Synton (15th/16th C.) son of Walter and a Johnstone, he was probably 6th Laird of Synton. He married a daughter of Scott of Robertson, said to have been Thomas (although it is unclear there was such a man, so perhaps another Scott of Robertson is meant). This was meant to be around the 1460s. He was succeeded by his son Walter, and was said to have had another son, who was William of Harden (but this seems to be confusion over generations with similar names). Note that the connections between Synton and Harden genealogy around this time are quite uncertain. George (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Goldie lands’ in 1510 when he was surety (along with William in Hawick and David in Whithaugh, with William in Fenwick and John of Haining also mentioned) for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of ‘Aidschaw’ (i.e. Headshaw). It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, since the first Laird of Goldie lands whose genealogy we know was Scott of Buccleuch’s son Walter, who was given that title about 30 years later; however, he seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Headshaw, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. William was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. George ‘of the Bog’ (d.1530) said to have been a resident of Liddesdale, he gains a reputation as a reiver. He was said to be particularly cruel, burning the houses of those he raided, sometimes with their wives and children inside. He was captured by Johnstone of that Ilk and presented for trial, along with Hector and their accomplices, by Robert, Lord Maxwell. It was decided to give him the same punishment he had inflicted on his victims, and so he was burned at the stake ‘quhilk deid was neuer sense in this realme of befoir, nor will be hereafter’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (16th C.) described as ‘in Sanct Mynynnis Well’ (and separately as ‘Mynnis’) when part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. This may be St. Mungo’s Well in Peebles, although all the other men on the panel appear to be local (e.g. Scotts of Ashkirk and Headshaw), and so either another location is suggested or he was a relative of local Scotts. Another possibility is ‘St. Michael’s Walls’, in which case he would be the same man as George, son of John of Robertson and Walls. George (16th C.) suggested by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been a grandson of the Walter who was immediate ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was called ‘How-coat’, suggesting he owned or farmed Hoscoat. He was then said to have succeeded his father as Laird of Synton, to have married a daughter of John Edmonston (or ‘Adimston’) of Ednam and to have been succeeded by his son Walter. Part of his life corresponds to that of the later George of Synton, however, these generations seem to be hopelessly confused. George (16th C.) son of John of Robertson and Walls. In 1526 he is listed (along with Stephen) as son of John in the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527 receiving remission for his crimes. George (16th C.) abbreviator of the King’s household expenses. He attested to payments in the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–1542. His name is given as ‘domino [Sir] Georgeo Scott’, and he may have been a cleric rather than a knight. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. George (16th C.) listed as ‘Sir George’ in 1538 when the benefice of Hassendean Kirk was given to him, after John Duncan was ‘eschated for barranty’. In 1545 John Anderson asked for 18 months prorogation in order to oust him. George (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to Philip, who was the tenant at Wiltonburn. George of Blindhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1550 among 10 Scotts and the chief of the Elliot’s, who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep order and hand over criminals. He may be related to later Scotts of Blindhaugh. George (16th C.) witness to a sasine of 1558 (one of Hawick’s earliest surviving) relating to land in the West-end sold by Adam Cessford to James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (d.1578) brother of Robert (who was a Burgess of Hawick) and James (a cordiner). He was killed by a group of Scotts, the circumstances being unknown, but the full group including Robert of Allanhaugh, William in Allanhaugh (‘now in Hawik’) Simon in Over Southfield, Wat there, ‘Syme’ there and ‘Watt’s Jock’. In 1581 his brothers (on behalf of their mother and all their kin) wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, describing how they had received satisfaction for the crime and forgave the assailants. Without the preservation of the record in the Buccleuch archives we would know nothing about this family; as it is, it is difficult to connect them with any other Scots. George of Synton (16th C.) probably second son of John, grandson of Walter (10th Laird) of Synton and brother of Walter (11th); Scott of Satchells suggests he was son of Walter, but that seems less likely, given the timing. His name was inscribed on 2 panels on the former house at Synton, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNOTVN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOWN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT)…’ It therefore seems that he was tenant in Synton in 1570, but recognised as the heir to Walter (perhaps the omission of the word ‘son’ is significant); this may be the year of his marriage. He was mentioned in 1581 as one of the Scotts called before the Privy Council in Edinburgh to try to stop the feud with the Elliots. He was also ordered to confer with the council in 1583/4 regarding the quieting of the Borders. He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with Robert of Haining, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgessess of Edinburgh; this caution was renewed later in 1581, with John Edmondson of Ryeslaw as surety. His servant John Scott of the Palace was charged with resetting stolen horses, and as a result of not appearing to answer for his servant, he was denounced rebel. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1586 he is recorded as a ‘curator’ of the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1590 he may have been the same Synton for whom William Dalmahoy was surety that he would not harm the vassals of the Earl of Angus and David Edmestoun of Wowmet was also separately surety for him that he would help the Warden. He signed the clan bond in 1589, when he was ‘George of Sinton’. He must also have been Laird on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He married Margaret, daughter of John Edmonston of Ednam. Their children included: Walter, who succeeded; David; John of Yorkston, who purchased Headshaw and Langhope; George, who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610; James of Kirkhouses, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie; and Agnes. George of Todrig (d.bef. 1580) probably the 3rd and youngest son of William of Harden, who was also Laird of Todrig (consistent with the description of Scott of Satchells). He succeeded to Harden in 1561 on the death of his father (probably at Todrig). He thus became the first Scott who was just ‘of Todrick’. He was succeeded by Walter, probably his son. Walter’s brothers Robert and William are recorded in 1620, and so were presumably also his sons. Note that Scott of Rodono regards him as a fiction of Scott of Satchells, and suggests instead that Walter of Todrig was descended from William ‘in the Mott’. George (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Woll’ in 1608 when he was part of a large group of men accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Woll. George of Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, who died in 1608, and Isobel Douglas. It appears that he was Laird of Synton while his father was still alive. He was the 14th and last of the family to be designated ‘of Synton’. In 1610 he was served heir to the lands of Boonraw, these passing to his descendants for the next 110 years. He was also served heir to his father’s lands of Outersiderig. He married Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whittaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) and their children were: Walter, who died unmarried; George of Boonraw; and Richard, minister of Kirkbean and Ashkirk. Note that generations seem confused in some accounts. In 1627 he sold the Synton estate to Francis, son of Walter Scott of Harden (a distant cousin, their great-grandfathers having been brothers). This was probably forced on him to clear debts. His widow was probably the ‘Mar. Gladstains’ who was liferenter of an unnamed farm (most likely Boonraw) and Stoulsie in Hassendean Parish in 1643 and also the ‘Lyfrenter of Boonraw’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. George of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as ‘callit of Deringstoun’. This was in the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, who, having gotten off the charge of slaughtering Douglas of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley, but was charged with stealing sheep from his lands of ‘Castle-hill’ in 1613 (among other thefts). It is unclear whether this is the place of that name near Ashkirk or the one near Branxholme. He was surely related to the half century earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and the slightly earlier John ‘of Drinkstone’. George the Souter’ and ‘Marion’s Geordie’ (d.1616) cordner in Hawick. He assisted in the 1615 plan of Lady Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells to slaughter the sheep of Sir James Douglas, newly possessed of Howpasley. In the trial he was painted as the main instigator and was accused of threatening Jock ‘the Sucker’ at sword-point to carry through with the crime. He said he would accept his guilt if Jock repeated the accusations to his face, which Jock duly did. He then referred to his dog ‘Hyde-the-bastard’, saying ‘Sa lang as I and my Bastard brother levis (meaning be his dog), Howpaslet sall nocht plenische’ (i.e. be stocked). He had also been questioned by Douglas in Hawick about his whereabouts that night, and pointed a cocked pistol at Douglas, which was taken from him before he could shoot. Additionally he had failed to show up at the previous Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was later hung for these crimes (although the records suggest that several of the jury were favourable to Douglas of Drumlanrig). His mother was presumably Marion and it is possible he was brother of ‘Marion’s Hob’. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todshawhaugh. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. He is also mentioned in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm his father, him and their associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ik and his son. George of Castleside (d.c.1630) probably a younger son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He is recorded in 1607 when he complained that James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank and Thomas Ker of Cavers have not paid what they owe him; he is there ‘in Castlesyd’. In 1618 he served as a cautioner for Walter, son of John in Newark. He is mentioned several other times in the period 1592–1629. In 1632 his half-brother Robert Langlands was imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as ‘of Bondra’ in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1678 he witnessed (along with Robert of Horsleyhill) a baptism in Hawick in 1635. George (17th C.) recorded in the Council Records of 1651 when he was fined £10 for keeping false weights, specifically ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Waugh and their children included: John (b.1634); Marion (b.1640); Thomas (b.1643); Robert (b.1648); and George (b.1651). The witnesses in 1651 were Andrew Liddersdale and John Scott. George (d.c.1690) of Boonraw. Son of George of Synton and Boonraw. He was probably the ‘G. Scott of boonraw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was Bailie-depute of Hawick (i.e. appointed by the Baron) and resided in the Tower, as recorded in 1668. In that year it is written that, at the request of the Bailies of Hawick, he set free 3 people called ‘Bridgs’ who had been imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as ‘of Bondra’ in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire for raising money to support the King. He paid the land tax for Boonraw and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1678, valued at £291; he was probably also the man recorded as ‘Boonrau for Overtoune’, paying the land tax in Oxnam Parish in 1678. In 1680 he witnessed (along with Robert of Horsleyhill) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In 1692 the lands of Stouslie ‘being formerly possest by the deceast George Scott of Boonraw be ane 19 yeares tack’ were possessed by his heirs and representatives. He married a daughter of Douglas of Gervald (who was hence grand-daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers). How many children he had is unclear, with Haining citing local tradition that he had 3 sons, George, Archibald and Richard, while Keith Scott records just 1 son, Archibald, and a daughter, Ann. His children may therefore have included: George (said to have been born in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells, over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He is also mentioned in 1660 as George ‘callit of Whitslaid’ when his daughter Anna married Charles, eldest son of William Lauder of Windpark. He somehow inherited the Barony of Maxton (perhaps through marriage), which had previously been held by the Kers. In 1670 his daughters Bessie and Anna were served heirs portioners to this Barony and all the associated lands, which included a large part of Abbotrule. George (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Dinlees on Hermitage Water in 1632. George (17th C.) tenant in Bowknowe. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. George (17th C.) recorded in the Council Records of 1651 when he was fined £10 for keeping false weights, specifically ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Waugh and their children included: John (b.1634); Marion (b.1640); Thomas (b.1643); Robert (b.1648); and George (b.1651). The witnesses in 1651 were Andrew Liddersdale and John Scott. George (d.c.1690) of Boonraw. Son of George of Synton and Boonraw. He was probably the ‘G. Scott of boonraw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was Bailie-depute of Hawick (i.e. appointed by the Baron) and resided in the Tower, as recorded in 1668. In that year it is written that, at the request of the Bailies of Hawick, he set free 3 people called ‘Bridgs’ who had been imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as ‘of Bondra’ in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire for raising money to support the King. He paid the land tax for Boonraw and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1678, valued at £291; he was probably also the man recorded as ‘Boonrau for Overtoune’, paying the land tax in Oxnam Parish in 1678. In 1680 he witnessed (along with Robert of Horsleyhill) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In 1692 the lands of Stouslie ‘being formerly possest by the deceast George Scott of Boonraw be ane 19 yeares tack’ were possessed by his heirs and representatives. He married a daughter of Douglas of Gervald (who was hence grand-daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers). How many children he had is unclear, with Haining citing local tradition that he had 3 sons, George, Archibald and Richard, while Keith Scott records just 1 son, Archibald, and a daughter, Ann. His children may therefore have included: George (said to have been born in 1672, but that seems rather late), who probably died young; Archibald (d.1720, supposedly at an advanced age), who succeeded, but died unmarried, thus ending this branch of the Scotts; Ann, who is also stated to have died unmarried; and Richard, said to have married a daughter of Charles Ogilvie and claimed to be the ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent, who was grandfather of Sir James A.H. Murray. With the murky end of this family, the line of the original Scotts of Synton was also lost. His will is recorded in 1690 (or perhaps 1698). George (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Woll. He was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He was served heir to his father in 1670, although his elder brother James had already sold the lands of Woll. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Robertson Parishes. He married Margaret Fairgrieve. His wife’s surname was recorded as ‘Furgrie’ in 1671 and ‘ffeirgrive’ in 1681. Their children included: Margaret (b.1671), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1681), baptised in Robertson; and Walter (b.1684), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses to the 1671 baptism were Francis Simpson and John Scott. The 1681 witnesses were George Brown and Francis Scott (who was probably related). George (17th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. There was a bond from his father to him for 550 merks Scots. He had a son, Alexander, who was tenant at Roughteugh Mill, and was progenitor of the Scotts of Falla. He may be the George whose name is said to appear on a list of those found guilty of ‘nonconformity’ in 1684. George (d.c.1686) probably tenant in Borthaugh. He is recorded being ‘in Bortoch’ when his will was listed in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1686. He was probably related to Walter ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Dockleuch’ (i.e. Doecleuch), he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s according to James Wilson. He paid £140 for the land tax in Cavers Parish in 1643; the same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. George (17th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish, probably somewhere to the south of the Town. He is recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He married Janet Black, and their children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1701) and William (b.1704), as well as probably Bessie (b.1702), Isobel (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1701 were smith James Scott (surely related) and Francis Elliot, in 1702 were William Henderson in the Flex and James Davidson in Newbigging, in 1704 were William and Francis Henderson (both smiths at the Flex) and in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. George (17th C.) Hawick resident who was fined £20 Scots in 1688 ‘for deserting the town when the Militia was listing’. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. George (17th C.) tenant at Foderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th C.) resident at Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) listed as wright among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also a wright on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (17th C.) merchant listed as ‘called greina’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed with the word ‘Grinna’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinna’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, John is also listed in 1694 with the same name. George (17th C.) resident of Easter Groundistone. He was there according to baptismal records of 1682 and 1688 and also according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Adam Glendinning in Groundistone in 1698. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. Francis in Wester Groundistone. In 1709 George Lorraine was recorded as his servant. He married Agnes Scott in Robertson Parish (actually the old Hassendean) in 1681 and their children included: Robert (b.1682); George (b.1685); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1682 were James C... and Robert Scott and in 1688 were William Scott (who may have been related to him or his wife) and William Palmer. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, or more likely Hassendean. He married Margaret Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Agnes (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were William Telfer and Andrew ‘heughane’ (perhaps Huggan) and in 1687 were James Halliwell and Andrew ‘heughane’. George (17th C.) described as ‘pedder’ in 1694 when his wife Marion ‘Robisons’ was fined for making ‘bakes’ on the Common. George (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1702 he was recorded as a servant at North Synton. He married Janet Cowan in Ashkirk in 1701 and their children included: John (b.1702); Isobel (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); and George (b.1717). George (17th/18th C.) listed as tailor in Hawick. He may be the George who, along with merchant Michael, witnessed a baptism for smith James in 1708. He witnessed another baptism in 1711 for John Scott (servant to Robert Robson). In 1712, along with fellow tailor Archibald, he witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Wyndhead’. He was listed as a tailor in 1714 when he witnessed a further baptism for tailor Archibald (who was probably related). In 1712 he married Elspeth Scott, who was widow of William Scott. To distinguish him from other men of the same name, he is recorded as ‘called George Wyndhead’. He is probably related to other Scotts with that designation. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Redford in 1714 and their children included James (b.1729) and Walter (b.1733). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Alton in 1722 and Wester Burnfoot in 1729. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for Robert Scott, resident of Groundstone. He may be the George who got married in Wilton in 1713, with no wife’s name recorded. He married Margaret Martin and their children included: George (b.1717); Agnes (b.1719); Margaret (b.1722); Bessie (b.1724); Helen (b.1728); and Ann (b.1732). The witnesses in 1724 were Richard and another George Scott (perhaps the one from Boonraw) and in 1728 were Robert Scott and James Dickson. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1735. In 1725 he married Mary Swan. Their children (baptised in Selkirk and Ettrick Parishes) included David (b.1731), George (b.1735), Samuel and James (b.1742). George (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1732. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Georges. George (18th C.) merchant who was appointed as one of the Commissioners for building the Teviot Bridge at Hawick in 1738. He was also one of the men (all Councillors presumably) appointed to oversee the building of a new Parish School in 1739. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for weaver Robert Douglas and his wife Nicholas Scott (who may have been related to him). He also witnessed 2 baptisms in 1745, one for merchant Robert, who may have been related. He may be the George who is recorded in 1752 giving in money ‘for stones of Millport’, perhaps connected with repairs to Teviot Brig. Probably the same merchant George witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1747. He married Helen Fletcher in 1735 and their children included: George (b.1736); Robert (b.1738); Margaret (b.1742); Janet (b.1747); and John (b.1749). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and George Hart. George (18th C.) joiner at Deanburnhaugh, grandfather of the George who wrote about Deanburnhaugh, as well as Adam who was joiner in Hawick. He married a daughter of William Scott ‘the Pether’. George (1724–1815) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and then at Roughheugh Mill. He was tenant farmer at Falla. He married Elizabeth Borthwick and their children were: Alexander (b.1756), who died young; John, who married his cousin; Euphemia; Thomas (1761–1849); Alexander (b.1759) of Falla; and Elizabeth. George (1734/5–1818) wright in Newcastleton. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Armstrong, who died in 1806, aged 67. Their children included: Jean (1777/8–83), who died at Burnmouth; and 2 who died in infancy. Other children probably included: Archibald (1771/2–1858), also a joiner in Newcastleton, and marked on the same gravestone; and Thomas (1774/5–1846) buried in the adjacent plot. They are buried in Ettrleton Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 4 farm horses. George (1773–1861) born in Wilton Prish, son of William and Isabel Kedzie. He was a joiner at Deanburnhaugh and also described as a merchant there in 1808 (when his children’s previous baptisms were recorded). In 1800, in Roberton Parish, he married Mary Davidson, who died in 1836, aged 64. Their children included: Mary (b.1801); William (b.1803); Isobel (b.1805); and Robert (b.1808). He was living alone on the 1841 and 1851 censuses and in 1861 was a retired joiner, living with the family of his son William. He may have been related to the earlier joiner of the same name. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. George (1779–1805) from Singlie in the Ettrick valley, son of William, who was tenant farmer there, and brother of Robert, who was at Todshawhaugh. He was a school-mate of Mungo Park. He trained as a draughtsman and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. He was artist on the expedition of Mungo Park back to Africa in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) married a daughter of George Turnbull, from whom he acquired the farm of Calaburn. He had a son Thomas when he was living at Hawick Shiel. He later lived at Kirkton. He had another son, Robert (b.1800), who was a vet at Kirkton and then Cauldmill. George (d.1826) contractor in Wilton. He married ‘Lillias’ Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1790 (his wife’s name being recorded there as ‘Lillie’), probably named after his father. Their children included: Mary (b.1801); William (b.1803); Isobel (b.1805); and Robert (b.1808). He was living alone on the 1841 and 1851 censuses and in 1861 was a retired joiner, living with the family of his son William. He may have been related to the earlier joiner of the same name. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. George (1779–1805) from Singlie in the Ettrick valley, son of William, who was tenant farmer there, and brother of Robert, who was at Todshawhaugh. He was a school-mate of Mungo Park. He trained as a draughtsman and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. He was artist on the expedition of Mungo Park back to Africa in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) married a daughter of George Turnbull, from whom he acquired the farm of Calaburn. He had a son Thomas when he was living at Hawick Shiel. He later lived at Kirkton. He had another son, Robert (b.1800), who was a vet at Kirkton and then Cauldmill. George (d.1826) contractor in Wilton. He married ‘Lillias’ Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1789, probably when they were both quite young. Their son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1790 (his wife’s name being recorded there as ‘Lillie’), probably named after his father. Their daughter Sophie was baptised in Wilton in 1793 (his wife then being ‘Lillies Englis’), perhaps named after a daughter of Lord Napier (for whose wife his wife was probably lady’s maid) born in 1791. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1791 for William Dalgleish, resident of Roadhead in Wilton. In 1799 his wife (recorded on the Selkirk Parish baptismal record as ‘Elanor’) had twins at Yair House, where she was working as a lady’s maid. The twins were named Francis Napier (after Lord Napier, who at the time owned Wilton Lodge, and for whom his wife had previously worked) and Alexander Pringle (after the owner of Yair); the baptism was attended by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank and Rev. William Shaw of Selkirk. The family were buried in the old Wilton Cemetery and he was listed as ‘Contractor Wilton’ on the headstone (although precisely what kind of contractor is unclear). It seems likely that he was the George, son of Robert in ‘Broadlieburnfoot’, baptised in Roberton in 1771. George (18th C.) resident of Hob Kirk Parish. In the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘George Scott; Sclentiehall’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.1834) master of Minto School. He was master at Yarrow school for 2 years, in the early 1780s, taking over from Alexander Wilson, but then moving to Minto. He was certainly master at Minto by 1788 and remained until the 1820s. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Dalgleish (b.1761) in Minto in 1786. Their children included: James (b.1788), clerk of works for architect William Burns in Edinburgh; Jean (1789–1859), who married and moved to Edinburgh; Simon (1792–1871), a clerk; George (1794–1857); Margaret (1797–1867), died unmarried; Walter Dalgleish (1800–1852), advertising agent; and Betty (b.1807). He wrote a will in 1826. George (d. bef. 1816) wright and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He married Janet Dryden, who died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776); Walter (again, b.1777); Helen (b.1784); and Jane (b.1787). The witnesses in 1776 were John Dryden (presumably related to his wife) and Thomas Huntly. His daughter Mary died in 1781. George (1777–1853) Border minor poet, who wrote ‘Heath Flowers’. He was born at Dingleton, and educated at Melrose and Galashiels, then Edinburgh University. At age 22 he became parish schoolmaster at Livingstone and 6 years later became schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf, starting in 1805. He is recorded as master of Lilliesleaf School on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living in Lilliesleaf with his wife Isabella and children Thomas (mason) and Isabella. He retired from teaching in 1850 and in 1851 is recorded as retired schoolmaster living at the schoolhouse in Lilliesleaf. It is said that many of his former pupils rose to great heights in their respective fields. He was patronised by Sir John Riddell of Riddell and was also a correspondent with Sir Walter Scott. He published a small volume of his poetry, ‘Heath Flowers; or, Mountain Melodies’ in 1820. He also wrote a statistical account of Roxburghshire, which was never published. George (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1803 he contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French). George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1808 and his daughter Isabel and son George died in the same year (although it is possible more than one weaver called George are compounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Young’s Street in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. George (d.bef. 1808) tenant at Whithope Mill. He was recorded there in 1786. His son George died in 1808 and his wife Margaret in 1809. He is surely related to Adam and John, who were tenants in the early years of the 19th century. He may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1774. His children included George (b.1786). George (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick, he was grandfather of manufacturer Peter. He may have been son of Thomas and Janet (possibly the George born in Wilton Parish in 1779, son of Thomas and Nelly Irwin) or perhaps was a younger brother of Thomas. He married Margaret Affleck and she died in 1867. Their children included: Christina Affleck (1815–75), who married William Laidlaw; George (b.1820/1), who was a grocer; Jane (1824–60); and probably James. He may be the handloom weaver who was living on Melgund Place in 1841, along with his children Jane and James (but with no sign of his wife). George (b.1780) gunmaker on the Sandbed. He was a Hawick gunsmith in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded at about No. 11 Sandbed on the 1841 census, along with a younger George, probably his son. George (1794–1857) son of George, schoolmaster at Minto. He was educated at Minto and in Edinburgh. He was Parochial Schoolmaster of Cavers from 1814. He was teacher in Denholm in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In the 1830s he is listed as master of Cavers School and land surveyor in Denholm at the same time. He is responsible for a plan of Denholm village in 1835. He also served as Session Clerk. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as Parochial Schoolmaster in Denholm. He probably lived at the old schoolhouse, which was on Denholm Green. He was the earliest teacher of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. He married Helen, daughter of John Beattie and Cicily Hall. Their children were: Cecil (b.1822), who died in infancy; Cecil (1823–49); George (b.1825), who worked as an advertising and newspaper agent in Edinburgh; Jeanie (b.1828), who died in infancy; Jeanie (1830–46); Helen (b.1834); and Margaret (b.1836), who died in infancy. By 1861 his wife was recorded as ‘Fundholder’ and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (1792–1850s) son of John and Helen Scott, from Selkirk Parish. He was born at Newark, where his father worked on the farm, tenanted by Robert Scott (probably not directly related). He was at Synton Parkhead and then at Synton Mill. His wife was Jean, from Yarrow. Their son John (b.1832) was born in Ashkirk and worked as a ploughman, then on the railway. They also had a daughter, Margaret. George (18th/19th C.) farm steward to Henry Elliot at Gatehousecote. His son James became steward at Hallrule. He died at Spittal-on-Rule. George (b.1804/5) gunmaker and ironmonger on the Sandbed, probably son of gunmaker George. The shop was at No. 11. His wife was Eliza and they had sons Frank C. and James L. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he was runner-up in the 624 yards race in the 1830 St. Ronan’s Games, and winner in 1831. It is said that in 1831 ‘Scott for ever!’ was the general cry. He also won the long race in 1833 and 1834. George (b.1808) from Robertson Parish, son of William and Isobel Glendinning. He was listed as a flresher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flresher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwynd in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isabel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) born in Belses, he was farmer in Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in 1851 as farmer of 12 acres, living on Main Street. His wife was Agnes from Paislay. Their children included Margaret, George, Isabella, Adamina G., Mary and John. George (19th C.) son of shepherd David Scott. He was a shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. He married Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’, d.1904). They had 9 children, including James (farmer at Overhall), Nellie, Euphemia, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. George (19th C.) tenant at Bedrule Mill in 1857. George (19th C.) shepherd at Wigg in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. George (b.1817/8) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter (born in Peeblesshire) and William (born in Cavers Parish). George (1820/1–92) from Yarrow, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Robina. George (1820/1–92) grocer on the Howegate, son of George and Margaret Affleck. He was father of Peter, who founded Pesco’s. In 1841 he was a clerk, living with Thomas and Janet (possibly his grandparents) on Walter’s Wynd. In 1851 he was a frame-worker on the Loan. In 1861 he was recorded as ‘Post Messenger’ at 19 Howegate. He married Marion Elizabeth (1829–88), daughter of Peter Adamson. Their other children included: George (b.1850), a baker; Peter (1852–1925), manufacturer; Marion (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1860), who signed his death certificate; Thomas (b.1862), who was Cornet in 1887; Elizabeth (b.1864); Catherine (b.1867); Susan (b.1869); and Jemima (b.1872). He died at Drumlanrig Square. George (1836–1904) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Synton Lodge. In 1851 he was still living with his mother and brothers at Dimpleknowe. In 1861 he was a thatcher living in Denholm. He married Margaret Riddell and had children: William (b.1860); Mary (b.1862); Robert Riddell (b.1865); Helen (or ‘Nellie’, b.1872); Jessie (b.1875); and George (b.1881). All children were baptised in Cavers Parish. The family emigrated to Canada and he died at Minto, Manitoba. George (1837–1907) son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a mill finisher in Hawick. He latterly lived at 16 Bourtree Place. In 1860 he firstly married Elizabeth Miller Pringle, daughter of James Pringle, cousin of the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, hosiery manufacturers. Their children were: James Pringle (b.1862), also a mill finisher; Beatrice (b.1866); and Janet Oliver (b.1868). In 1871 he secondly married Janet (d.1897), daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. Their children were: Mary Greenwood (b.1873); Robert; Francis George (b.1880), composer; and Margaret Lilias, who married Robert Furness. George (1850–1926) born in Teviothead. He was agent for the Prudential Insurance Company in Hawick. In 1879 he married Isabella Grieve Laidlaw (1838–1927), youngest daughter of James Laidlaw, farmer at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill. Their children were: George Henry (b.1880), a baker in Carlisle; Isabella Helen (b.1881); Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, b.1883); and Jemima Margaret (b.1885). George (19th C.) builder who lived at Slitrig Bank. George (1850–1940) eldest son of George and Marion Adamson. He was brother of Peter, who established ‘Pesco’s’. He was a baker in Hawick. Apparently he and his brother were note draughts players. In 1872 he married Susan Wright Thorburn. Their children were: Margaret Rae (b.1875); Marion A. (b.1877); Agnes Thorburn (b.1878); John T. (b.1880); Georgina (b.1882); Christina (‘Kate’, b.1884); Peter (b.1886); Isabella Henderson (b.1889); and Elizabeth (b.1891). George (1879–1950) eldest son of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He was Cornet in 1904. He joined the family firm in 1892 and became a Managing Director in about 1903. He was usually referred to as ‘Mr. George’. He gifted communion cups to St. George’s Kirk in 1921 and lived at Langlee. He married Janet Riddle. George Alexander (1888–1963) born in Hawick, he became a biologist and schoolmaster. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He was Biology Master in Newton Stewart and later at George Heriot’s, where he became Head of Biology. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland and a member of the Science Masters Association, Scottish Secondary Teachers Association and Scottish Educational Film Association. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. George Douglas (19th/20th C.) served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI, where he was wounded and invalided out. He was Cornet in 1925 and Acting Father in 1958. J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father (for the 4th time). Gerard (13th C.) recorded in a document in Norwich in 1242, relating to some captured sacks of Scottish wool. Lucas ‘Scot’, mayor of Dunwich, appended his seals instead, and so is probably a relative. He is recorded as ‘le Escot’ in 1263 when he (unsuccessfully) appealed the death of his son Robert at the hands of Nicholas Percival of ‘Dunwych’ in Suffolk. Richard, his nephew, accused someone else (also unsuccessfully) of the same murder in 1272. Probably the same Gerald ‘le Scot’ is recorded in relation to a write of trespass in Northumberland in 1264. Sir Gideon of Highchester (d.1673) 2nd son of Sir William Scott of Harden. His forename came from his maternal grandfather, Sir Gideon Murray. He is usually described as being ‘of Highchester’, even although the farm is more often called 'Highchesters'. In 1643 he was given the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshielis, as well as others; this was part of his marriage contract with Margaret Hamilton. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646 (as 'Jedeon'), 1648 and probably 1649. He is recorded in 1648 when commissioners had to be appointed for valuation of teinds at Harden, Highchesters, Mabonlaw and Todshaw, following a dispute between him and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1648 he was one of the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. In 1650 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He is listed (along with his wife and 19 other people, presumably servants and farm workers) on the Harden estate in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He is probably the Gideon who witnessed the baptism of Gideon (later of Falnash), son of Robert of Harwood in Hawick in 1651. He was the main proponent for having Hessean Church removed to Roberton in the 1660s (fighting against the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch). He was knighted in 1650. He was appointed Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire by Charles I, and continued through the 1650s. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was also one of the 'tutors' of the young Mary Scott of Buccleuch in the 1650s and was the executor for her will. In 1654 he acted along with John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale on behalf of the Countess Mary, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell; however, he was deeply distrustful of the Earl of Tweeddale, and it appears that both were attempting to exert influence on the other tutors for their own ends, in particular to arrange the marriage of the Countess. In fact his son Walter married Mary in secret (when they were both very young), and there was a continuing power struggle with her mother, the Countess of Wemyss, as well as with the 'Lothian tutors'. In 1660 he borrowed £2400 pounds from the Duch of Buccleuch. He was knighted in 1660, when he accompanied the young Countess of Buccleuch to London, and his son Walter was made Earl of Tarras at the same time. He also served as tutor for Anne of Buccleuch, and continued to have disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors after the death of Mary. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £4800, presumably for backing the wrong side. He had a licence from the Privy Council, allowing him to eat meat during Lent in the 1660s. He is probably the Gideon who is recorded paying the 1663 land tax for £814 in Wilton and £600 in Hassendeaun. About 1666 he was appointed one of the 'curators' of Francis of Davington. In 1673 he matriculate his arms. He acquired the lands of Harden from his brother Sir William, who nevertheless continued to be 'of Harden', while he was still designated 'of Highchester'. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Hamilton of Preston, and his son Walter (later Earl of Tarras) succeeded to Harden. His other children were: William, who married Jean, daughter of James Kirkaldy of Grange; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell (younger) of that Ilk; Margaret, who married James Corbet of Tollcross, but appears to have later lived in Hawick; another Agnes, who married Sir James Grant of Dalvey and later William Rutherford of Barnhills; Thomas, who became a merchant's apprentice in Rouen in 1671; Gideon; Francis, who became a Captain; and Mary. Gideon is recorded becoming an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1676, by which time Sir Gideon was dead. A year later Thomas became a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was 'son to John Scott of Wool' in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company (along with his brother Walter). He may have been known as 'of Newhouse' (although it is unclear where this was). In 1704 he married Jean (b.1688), daughter of William Elliot of Bowie and Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott of Sinton; she was sister of William, who was 2nd (but sometimes stated to be 1st) Elliot Laird of Borthwickbrae. It is said that they eloped together, and found themselves unsupported by their families. The Duke of Buccleuch took pity on them and settled them on the farm of Ladhope in Yarrow. Their children were: John (b.1706), who died on the coast of Guinea; William (b.1709), tenant in Kirkhope; Walter (b.1712), who died young; Walter (b.1722), who married 3 times, to a Mowbray, a Napier and a Williamson; Gideon (b.1724); Thomas (1727–96), who settled in Morpeth and married Ann Douglas, who died at the age of 106; Alexander (b.1729), who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope; Isobel, who married James Curle of Moodlaw; Agnes; Betsy; Mary, who married John Mair; Anne Jean, who married James Pott of Dod, farmer at Penchrise; and Christian. One of his descendants (from the Morpeth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see Gideon of Falnash. Gideon of Highchester (1678–1707) eldest son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Robertson, Howcleuch, Borthwickshiel Mains, Alemoor, etc. In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchesters and other farms to his mother Helen, Countess of Tarras, for supporting his brothers and sisters Helen, Walter, Elizabeth, Agnes, Thomas, Anne and Margaret. In 1695 he also had a charter for the Barony of Minto, including the lands of Craigned and Deanfoot, as well as Minto, which was erected into a Barony. However, he sold the lands and Barony of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1703. In 1704 he was listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 it is recorded that he owed money to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the rent of Todshaugh and Whames. In 1697 he married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Kinloch of Gilmerton and secondly married Mary Drummond, daughter of John, Earl of Melfort in 1700 (and after his death he remarried Sir James Sharp of Scotscairg). With his second wife he had 2 sons, Walter and John, who both succeeded to Harden, but had no male heirs. They also had a daughter, Mary. A horn powder flask belonging to him still exists at Mertoun House. Gideon of Falnash (1651–c.1727) 5th son of Robert of Harwood and brother of Walter of Harwood. Note that one of the witnesses at his baptism was Gideon, presumably of Highchester, indicating that this is where his forename came from. He farmed at Fenwick, Goldielands and Alton Croft and lived at Broadhaugh (and although he was ‘of Falnash’, he appears not to have lived there). He was probably the ‘Falnash’ who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick in 1677 when he ‘confessed the striking of Walter Hardie, and came in the bailies’ will’. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1678–1727, and in later years was referred to as ‘Auld Falnash’. In the period 1678–94 he was Chamberlain for Hawick, Wilton, Cavers and Hassendean parishes, later referred to as Teviotdalehead. He was still ‘of Outerside’ in 1692 when he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch, but was ‘of Falnash’ when he served the same role in 1694 and 1698. He was Gideon of ‘Uttersyderig’ (i.e. Outerside) in a deed of 1682 and when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. It is possible he was the Gideon who was imprisoned in 1683 along with other local lairds for being supporters of Covenanters. He was ‘of Uttersyde’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for John Elliot in Harwood. He was the same Gideon ‘of Uttersyde’ who obtained the lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (both in Peeblesshire) from Robert Scott of Glack (who appeared to have no heir, and was probably his brother) in 1689. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He is probably the Gideon who was listed at Broadhaugh in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was still referred to as ‘of Uttersyde’ in the early 1690s, but by at least 1694 was ‘of Falnash’. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Francis, who rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch; this suggests a family relationship perhaps. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. He is probably the Gideon who was served heir to his brother, William, apothecary in Hawick in 1696. In 1699 he gave up the lands of Ladyurd to James Geddes of Kirkurd, although there is a related court case against him by James Geddes’ son James in 1707. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as ‘Regal Bailie’ of Hawick, i.e. the Duchess’s representative in the affairs of the town. In 1700 £100 was given by him (in name of the Duchess) for the poor of Hawick Parish. Also in 1700 he witnessed the baptism for Gideon, son of Hawick merchant Walter Elliot (suggesting that the child was named after him). He gave a bond of 5,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1703 (presumably on behalf of the Duchess of Buccleuch), which formed the majority of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1704 he was again on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704, the Council resolve to talk with him regarding help with fixing the ‘dam brigs’, the port at Horsleyhill’s Wynd, thatching the Tolbooth, oil for the clock, rope for the bell and shoes for the piper. He had another child named after him in 1704, this time when he witnessed a baptism for his gardener at Fenwick, Walter Paterson. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot, in 1706 others for workman John Shiel and for apothecary Walter (who named his son Gideon, probably after him), in 1707 for Adam Elliot of Arkleton, in 1708 for Bailie George Martin and for glover John Scott, in 1709 for John Scott ‘Whategate’ and for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood) and in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Brauxholme Town. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1710, he was the second largest landowner, behind the Duchess of Buccleuch. His daughter (and so presumably he) was in Broadhaugh in 1716 when she married Walter of Crumhaugh. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott from Harwood (who may have been related to him). In 1721 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for Robert of Burnhead and Agnes Scott (his daughter). It was described in 1767 (in depositions given regarding the former use of the Common) that he had warned the tenants of the Duchess of Buccleuch from encroaching on Hawick’s Common. He appears to have first married Jeanette, eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, with the marriage contract being in 1677 (when she was probably quite young); at that time he was recorded as brother-german to Walter of Harwood. He secondly married Mary (b.1660), daughter of James Scott of Thirlestane; she probably died in 1729, since payment was received for ringing the funeral bells ‘to the Lede Fenish’s’. His children included: Robert, who succeeded to Falnash; Agnes, who married Robert Scott of Burnhead; Beatrice (or Beatrix, probably the ‘Beatricks’ baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696), who married Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; James (b.1698), baptised in Hawick; Christian, who married a Mr. Johnstone (but this could be confusion with Mary); Gideon, who became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720; and Mary, the youngest child, who mar-rried James Johnson of Park Tower in Canonbie Parish in 1727. Isabella Scott (who married William Elliot in Braudlie and Whitaugh in about 1700), said to be a daughter of Scott of Falnash, may have also been his daughter (although perhaps she was too old for this generation). He may also have been son of ‘John Scott younger in Falnash’, whose widow Janet Aitchison remar-mied in 1711. The witnesses to the 1698 baptism were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. A ‘Graham’ of Falnash was recorded as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick in 1721, although this may have been an error. His son Robert is mentioned in connection with the Hawick Parish Session from 1722; so he either started performing the duties of his elderly father before his death, or his death was earlier than 1727. He was already deceased at the end of 1727 when his daughter Mary’s mar-rriage was proclaimed in Hawick. He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon Scott’ who bequeathed £20 to the poor of Hawick Parish when he died. He is buried in Ewes Kirkkyard along with his first wife Jeanette Elliot. Gideon of Falnash (d.1759) eldest son of Robert of Falnash, who he succeeded in 1734. He also served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for local estates, referred to as ‘Teviotdalehead’ in the period 1747–57, being replaced by Robert of Orchard. He leased the farm of Wester Groundistone from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Dying without issue, he was succeded by his brother Thomas, who sold off the Falnash estate. The 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire contains a blank for the fore-name of Scott of Falnash (presumably because it was unclear who his successor was at that time).

Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish.
He married Christian Scott in 1719, the marriage being at Wilton (but also proclaimed in Robert-on). He was at Alemoor in 1721, 1726, 1728 and 1736, Wester Alemoor in 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1733 and 1736. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1721); Margaret (b.1726); Mungo (b.1728); Gideon (b.1729), perhaps father of Gideon the millwright; Ann (b.1729); Alexander (b.1733); twins Jean and Ann (again, b.1733); and Gilbert (b.1736). In the 1733 Robertson baptism he was recorded being in Cavers Parish, suggesting that Christine (b.1735) and Alison (b.1737), baptised in Cavers, were also his children; in 1735 he is recorded being ‘in Cavers’ and in 1737 at Whitriggs. Gideon (18th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He is recorded as a thatcher in Hawick in 1740. He mar-rried Margaret (or Marion) Hislop, their marriage being recorded in Ashkirk and Cavers Parishes in 1727 (he was from Ashkirk Parish and his wife from Cavers). He was recorded at Shielswoodhaugh in 1733 when his first child was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1727); Gideon (b.1740); Marion (b.1742); and Thomas (b.1745).
The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Walter Graham and merchant John Cavers. In 1742 the witnesses were the same as those for shoemaker William’s child baptised the same day, namely baker Robert (who may have been related to one of them) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. Gideon (d.bef. 1763) druggist in Hawick, perhaps the son of Walter, apothecary in Hawick, born in 1706. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1746 in a baptism for one of his children and also when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Francis Gledstains. He mar-rried Susanna Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Gilbert (b.1741); Catherine (b.1743); and Elizabeth (b.1746). The baptismal witnesses in 1741 were merchants Francis Gledstains and Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were Alexander of Synton and ex-Bailie William Tudhope and in 1746 were John at Wninington Rig and ex-Bailie Robert Howison. He is also mentioned as a Hawick druggist in a marriage record of 1763, when his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Burnett in Edinburgh. It was probably also his daughter Margaret who married Andrew Porteous there in 1768. He is probably the Gideon who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wiltin Parish. He was recorded living at Midshiels in 1747. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Charles of Crumhaugh and Robert of Fenwick; given these witnesses it seems likely that he is the same man as Gideon in Priesthaugh, brother of Charles of Crumhaugh, with his first wife Rachel Scott perhaps being daughter of Robert of Fenwick. Gideon (d.1806) tenant farmer at Priesthaugh, probably son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and brother of Charles of Crumhaugh. Some accounts say he was ‘in Priesthope’, but that is probably a transcription error. He is recorded in Priesthaugh several times in the Peebles Consistory Court documents in the period 1758–60. In 1783 he took out a bond for £700 with Sir Alexander Don of Newton, John Ker of Cavers and William Riddell of Camieston, which they owed after his death. He is probably the Gideon recorded at Penchrise on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. His daughter Beatriz was the second wife of Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Wauchope, marrying him in 1789. His descendants were the Scotts in Priesthaugh, which eventually failed in the male line. Walter, farmer at Priesthaugh in 1797 was probably his son. He is probably the Gideon, married to Rachel Elliot, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish included Walter (b.1753), Robert (b.1755) and Charles (b.1757). His testament after he died lists his living children and executors as Charles and Jean in Priesthaugh and Margaret, widow of Charles Aitchison at Unthank. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, possibly at Stobicoate. It is possible that he is the Gideon, son of Gideon, baptised in Roberton in 1729. In 1762 he married Mary Scott, from Canonbie Parish, and she died in 1776. Their children included: Gideon (b.1765), who was probably the Hawick millwright; and Elizabeth, who married millwright James. The witnesses in 1765 were wright Gideon Easton and tailor James Dickson. It seems likely that he is the same Gideon who was resident at Borthwickbrae Parkhead when his children William (b.1772) and James (b.1774) were baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the Gideon whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787. Gideon (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Agnes Tudhope in 1777 and she died in 1781. Their son James was baptised in 1779, perhaps the Hawick man of that name who worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway. The witnesses in 1779 were workman James Hogg and Church Officer Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same man as the Gideon who married Mary Scott, if this was his second wife. Gideon (1762–1841) son of William, who was descended from the Scotts of Woll, his mother being Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. He was farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells. He was farmer at Kirkhope (in Yarrow Parish) according to the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Teindside. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia to replace John Pringle, who was declared unfit. However, he failed to appear and was declared a deserter. Probably the same Gideon was recorded at Southdeanrig when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. It is possible he is the same man who married Agnes Tudhope (and perhaps earlier married Mary Scott). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick and Wiltin Parishes. He married Mary Stewart in Cavers in 1788 and their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); Jane (b.1792); and John (b.1794). His wife is recorded as ‘Isabel Stuart’ in 1791. The witnesses in 1792 were the ‘whole Congregation’. Gideon (1765–1833) born at Stobicoate, possibly son of Gideon and Mary Scott. His family were supposed to be descended from the Scotts of Davington. He received only 4 months of schooling and became a herdsman as a boy, later serving as an apprentice in Hawick with Walter Turnbull, carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural implement maker. Thereafter he started his own business as a millwright, this later becoming Gideon Scott & Sons, based on the Cross Wynd. As well as building machinery, he was hired as a surveyor and was well known locally as an inventor and amateur astronomer. He suggested the suitability of the Teviot by the Little Haugh for water power, and subsequently William Laidlaw built Teviot Crescent Mills there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a millwright on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He helped convert many of the Hawick mills to water power, for example his firm supplying the new water wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829. He also fitted out mills in Wigan and at Chillingham. He erected windmills at Anderstonshiels and Penielheugh. In about 1802 he invented an early reaping machine, which was unpopular among the local workers, since it reduced manual labour so much; so after testing it successfully in the dead of night he smashed it up himself. He was also known for launching balloons at local celebratory events, e.g. to mark the end of the Friday Sports of 1826. Entirely self-taught, he was regarded as a prodigy by the townsfolk, and was a great believer in and advocate for education, starting the Trades' Library in a room of his own house. He was also a leader in the running of the Hawick School of Arts, and gave a lecture there himself, being the first 'layman' to do so (in an age when public lectures were formal and intense affairs), illustrating an astronomy talk with an orrery of his own design. He was also an early influence on the career of John Pringle Nichol (later Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University), who came to Hawick as a school teacher. The pair would walk up to Hilliesland to watch the heavens, or spend the night talking in his astronomical study. For the solar eclipse of 1820 he blocked off a window in his observing room, and set up a screen, so that the many people he invited there could watch without staring directly at the Sun. He also described the aurora borealis seen over Hawick in 1826. Nichol returned to Hawick to watch the 1832 transit of Mercury with him, from a garden in Allars Bank (part of his property there being sold as the site for Allars Kirk in 1811). He was also a close friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny, a fellow self-taught inventor and scientist. He promoted the idea of connecting Hawick to the south by railroad (although his idea involved a route up the Allan Water). A few years before his death there was a great reunion of the families of his 7 sons and 2 daughters, all of them attending the Common Riding festivities that year. There is no known portrait of him, although there are images of his sons Gideon and James (his 5th son), who were also millwrights. Another of his children was Susan, who married James Cranston (and whose daughter Mary married William, son of blacksmith Gavin Pow). His wife may have been Margaret Leithead (b.1772), daughter of Walter and Marjory Thomson, with the marriage taking place in Hawick in 1790. They had children baptised in Hawick, including: Gideon (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); and Marjory (b.1796). Other children were: James (b.c.1805); Andrew (b.c.1810); Gilbert (b.c.1815); Mary (b.c.1815); and Isabella (b.c.1818). The witnesses in 1792 were the Burgher Congregation and in 1794 were the 'Special Congregation'; the family were thus presumably members of the East Bank Kirk. There must have been 2 additional sons born around 1800. He died at his house on the Cross Wynd. 'Gideon Scott & Sons', machine-makers, engineers and millwrights, is listed on Back Damgate in Pigot's 1837 directory (even although this was after his death); the company wrapped up in 1841. In 1841 Margaret was living on the Cross Wynd with sons James, Gilbert and Andrew, and daughter May (probably the same as Marjory). Gideon (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. He married Mary Bell and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1794. In the baptismal record he was 'at Northhouse in the Parish of Cavers – at present in Whithope'. The same couple are recorded having a daughter Joan baptised in Canonbie in 1798. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nellie Leyden in Wilton in 1793 and their children included Thomas (b.1799) and Walter (b.1801). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Janet Brydon and their children included Christian (b.1813). Gideon (b.c.1770) recorded as an ostler at Wilton Damhead in 1841. He was living there with Helen, probably his wife. He was listed at Damhead (with no occupation given) among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He could be the millwright of that name recorded at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Gideon (b.c.1778) grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 28 Langholm Street and living with Agnes, probably his wife. Gideon (1785/6–1839) 6th son of William, tenant farmer at Singlie. He took over the lease from his father. He married Elizabeth Ballantyne, and she died in 1878, aged 70. Their children included: Gideon, who farmed Singlie and Hyndhope; and Katherine, who married Alexander Gibson. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He probably had a direct connection to Hawick and was distinct from the Gideon living in London who also subscribed. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Barbara Armstrong. in 1828. Gideon (19th C.), C.E., recorded donating several items to the Museum in 1863. Since he was an engineer and living in London, he may well be the son of millwright Gideon born in 1792. He could be the ‘Gideon Scott, London’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Eliza Smith and their children included Walter (b.1860). Gideon (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Ellen Burnet in 1861. Gideon (b.1839) probably the only son of Gideon, farmer at Singlie (who seems to have died the year he was born). He gave up Singlie and farmed instead at Hyndhope. In about 1879 he emigrated to New Zealand. He had 4 sons (including James and William) and 2 daughters. Gideon (b.1829/30) son of James. He was a frame-worker living at 6 Round Close in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Isabella. Gideon (19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret, daughter of Tom Rutherford, blacksmith at Bonchester. They had 1 son and 4 daughters, including Agnes (b.1881), who was born in Melrose Parish. His wife later lived in Hawick. Gilbert (12th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbertus Scoth’ between about 1165 and 1177, when he was asked to perambulate the lands for a charter between Eschina de Molle (wife of Walter, the Steward) and the monks of Paisley Abbey. It is unclear if he was related to other Scotts. Gilbert (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ when he was on an assize for the Lovels in Sussex in 1264. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Richard ‘de Suarland’, and was described as at that time servant in ‘Swarland’. Gilbert (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1545 as ‘indweller of Deip...’ when he and his associates were said to have taken a French ship. Gilbert of Bonnington (d.1675) probably the eldest son of James of Bonnington and his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greystairs in Edinburgh. He was succeeded by his younger brother Charles. Note, this is Bonnington in Lothian (distinct from the earlier Scotts of Bonnington family). He is buried in Greystairs in Edinburgh. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. In 1841 he was living at ‘Pirnie-hall’ in Hobkirk and in 1851 at Gatehousecote Cottages. He married Helen Aitchison in Maxton Parish in 1838. Their children included: David (b.1838); Andrew (b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Christian (b.1845); Janet B. (or Jessie, b.1847); Helen (b.1851); Gilbert (b.1854); and John (b.1856/7). Some of his earlier children were baptised in Ancrum, Maxton and Roxburgh Parishes. Gilbert (b.c.1815) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, Andrew and James. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. In 1831 there was a paternity case against him by Helen, daughter of Hawick spinner George Cunningham. Gilbert McKenzie (b.1826/7) listed as baker and shopkeeper on Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on Wilton Kirkstyle as a grocer and baker, employing 3 men. He lived with his siblings Helen, Andrew and Adam, and nephew Walter. Gladstanes (b.1813/4) born in Teviothead Parish, he was a labourer living at Unthank Cottage in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Sykefoot in Ewes. It is unclear where his first name came from. He married Isabella Wilson from Langholm and their children included Adam (b.1836), Janet (b.1838), Helen (b.1841), Ann (b.1843), John (b.1845), William (b.1847), Margaret (b.1849), Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’, b.1850) and James (b.1854). Graham of Fulnash (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick. This seems likely to be a transcription error for Gideon of Falnash. The record of 1721 concerns the trial of Walter Dean for stealing a grey mare from John Currie from Northumberland. Grizel see Grizel Borthwick Helen (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Braithholme, when he died in 1552. She is listed between 2 unnamed ‘nutrici’ (nurses), suggesting this was also her occupation. It is possible she was the same Helen listed among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he complained against the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others in 1549. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick. She was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784 (one of only 9 women listed). Helen ‘Nelly’ (1789/90–1861) daughter of carrier William and Margaret Gray. She also had a brother William. She was a shopkeeper at Stobs Woodfoot. She died unmarried. Henry (12th/13th C.) witness to 2 grants to Lindores Abbey by Earl David, brother of the Scottish King, in the late 1190s. He also witnessed a ‘quitclaim’ in the Lidores Chartulary in about 1210. Henry (13th C.) recorded on the 1256 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was ‘Henricus Scot’ from ‘Edelingham’. ‘Henricus Scoticus’ is listed in a separate case, and probably a different man. Henry (13th C.) listed on the 1279 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was a burgess of Newcastle on Tyne at that time. His name is written ‘le Scot’ and ‘le Schot’. There are also pledge made by ‘Henrici Scot’ and ‘Henrico le Scot’ in the same year. He could be the ‘Henry le Escot’ who was a pledge for Nicholas in Newcastle in 1266, and the Henry le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with John and Nicholas also listed). Henry (13th C.) recorded in a document from King Edward I to the Sheriff of Cumberland in 1280. He bought a mare at Carlisle Fair, and stated that ‘John de Wynchales’ claimed it was his and furtively stole it from him. This case appears to have been used as a precedent to clarify the March laws to deal with such cross-Border incidents. It seems clear that he was from the Scottish side, although how he was related to other Scotts is unknown. Henry (13th C.) man from Edinburgh who paid homage to Edward I in 1296, where he is recorded as ‘Henry le Scot’. He may also be the ‘Henricus Scoticus’ who is listed in 1296 among Scotsmen renouncing their treaty with France, in order to reconcile with England. His lands in Edinburgh were also restored to him in that year. He may be the same Henry from Fife who swore fealty to Edward I in 1304. Henry (13th/14th C.) among the men on the inquest at Roxburgh for the inheritance of William de Charteris for the half barony of Wilton in 1303/4. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he is the first known Henry with a local connection. However, it is possible that he is the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and had his lands restored. Henry (14th C.) recorded in 1364 in an indenture by Henry Strother, Sheriff of Northumberland, where he is charged to pay money to vintners in Newcastle. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Henry (15th C.) mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1457 in relation to a loan in Flanders. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His son John was separately fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘in convale riggis’, but it is unclear where this was. Henry (15th C.) recorded in Haddington in 1495 when the customs from his sheep skins. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Perhaps the same Henry, owner of a ship, was recorded in Ross in 1509 and 1513. Henry (16th C.) witness in 1549 to a charter in which Robert Scott of Howpsley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Perhaps the same Henry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. Henry (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hawick Parish in 1574/5, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick and several neighbouring parishes (i.e. he was the actual minister, obtaining most of the stipend). John Sandilands was Parson about the same time. He was also recorded as Reader in Hawick in 1576, 1578 and 1579, with the position being vacant in 1580. His stiped was £10 8s. 10d. There is no evidence regarding which branch of the family he came from. Henry (17th C.) witness, along with Robert, to the baptism of a son of Thomas Scott in Hawick in 1687. These other Scotts may have been closely related to him. Note that the forename ‘Henry’ was not common among Scotts of the time. Henry (1676–1730) 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He was made Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage and Baron Scott of Goldielands in 1706, just in time to vote for the Treaty of Union. He was chosen as one of the Scottish representative peers in Parliament 1713–30, and also served in the army. His mother complained about how much money she had lavished on him and stated in one letter of 1719/20 than ‘he is now acting the old Scots proverb – ens wod an’ ey the war’ [i.e. ‘daft once, daft always’].

He married Anne, daughter of William Duncombe of Battlesden, and she died in 1720. Their children were: Francis, 2nd Earl of Deloraine, who married Mary Lister and Mary Scrope; Henry, 3rd Earl of Deloraine, who married Elizabeth Fenwick; and Anne, who died in infancy. He secondly married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and Henrietta (b.1728), who married Nicholas Boyce. He himself died before his mother. Henry (1712–39/40) 3rd Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl. He held the rank of Captain in the Royal Navy. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenwick. Their children were: Henry (1737–1807), 4th Earl; and John (1738–88). After the death of his brother Francis in 1739 he gained the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. However, he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry ‘the Hero o Quebec’ (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the ‘Milnport Scotts’, he was son of George, a merchant. He became a Burgess in 1752 and married Jean Sanderson, who by all accounts drove him into the army. The local tradition of his story is as follows (related in the 1863 Transactions by William Norman Kennedy, and mentioned briefly by James Wilson in 1850 and again in 1858). He distinguished himself in military service in Canada, being promoted through the ranks and achieving a commission without purchase as a Major. He led a decisive attack on an island rock at Cape Breton in 1758, permitting Louisbourg to be taken. His main moment of fame came in 1759 on the Heights of Abram near Quebec City, where he was reportedly first to enter the gate of the city. There he planted the Union Jack on the walls, apparently uncontrollably exclaiming ‘Hawick for ever’. In this seminal moment in Canadian history Gen. Wolfe’s forces were victorious over the French, although both leaders were slain. Wolfe was nicknamed ‘the Hero of Quebec’ throughout Britain, but in Hawick that epithet was reserved for Henry Scott. Afterwards he was once more promoted, but apparently died aboard ship on the way home before he received the promotion, with relatives and townspeople suspecting he was murdered by jealous fellow officers. This Hawick version bears some similarity to the documented life of a Maj. George Scott, although with several important differences, hence it is difficult to separate fact from fancy here (perhaps the Hawick man was at Quebec, but the connection with Louisbourg may have come from the story of ‘Major’ Scott in Percy’s ‘Anecdotes of Enterprise’, popular in the early 19th century; Maj. George Scott was already in the army in 1750 and eventually became Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica, dying in a duel in 1767, his will mentioning his wife Abigail and 3 brothers, at least one of whom was in Halifax, and hence he seems unlikely to be the Hawick man). Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly the case that a man from the Mill Port Scotts played some part in the events in Quebec, even if they were not quite as dramatic as recalled later (presumably Wilson and Kennedy obtained their information from people who were only about a generation removed from the historical events). A verse of James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ commemorated Scott in the early 19th century – ‘Long this boast on truth’s been founded On Quebec’s high rampart sounded – Hawick for ever, and independent!’ [JH]. His wife survived him by about 50 years and lived for a while at the cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ near Stobs, living on a government pension. It is said that he had no children. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. In 1763 he married Frances, daughter of Thomas Heath, but they separated before 1780. He died in London without issue and his titles became extinct. Henry (1741–1817) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Singlie, and grandson of William in Milsington. He farmed at Over Deloraine in the Ettrick valley from 1770. He paid the horse taxes there in the period 1785–97 and the dog taxes in 1797. He married a daughter of Anderson of Rashiegrain, with whom he had a daughter Alison. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Sibbald. Their children were: John, also tenant at Over Deloraine; Henry, farmer at Over Kirkhope; James (1792–1864); William, who became a doctor with the East India Company; Margaret, who married Dr. Thomas Anderson of Selkirk in 1808; and Eliza, who married Rev. W.B. Shaw, minister of Roberton and later Eves. Eliza and Margaret were said to have been the prototypes for the characters of ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’, and Eliza was also celebrated as ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Deloraine’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem (note that Keith Scott mixes the 2 daughter’s husbands). Henry (1746–1812) 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, son of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the 2nd Duke. He succeeded as a child, was educated at Eton, and when young spent nearly 3 years travelling in Europe with Dr. Adam Smith. His ‘curator’ during his minority was Charles Townshend, his step-father. He gained the Crumhaugh estates in about 1760, as well as many other local lands (including Harwood and Teindside) about the same time. He settled in Dalkeith, and spent much of his time in Scotland. It is said that he would sometimes visit his tenants in disguise. He made his first visit to Hawick in 1764, when he was welcomed by the Bailies. In 1767 (while he was still a minor) his agents started proceedings against the Town of Hawick, claiming rights of pasturage on the Common; when the final decision was made in 1777 he gained 330 Scots acres of what had been Hawick Common. Additionally in about 1769 he (or his Commissioners) brought a case against some inhabitants of Hawick for not paying multures on ‘his Grace’s mill of Hawick’. He was taxed for having a either 1 or 2 gamekeepers at Bowhill in the period 1778–90 and was taxed for having 4 dogs at Bowhill and 15 in Langholm in 1797. He was responsible for making Sir Walter ScottSheriff in Selkirkshire and was the first President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783. He published a paper called ‘Abstract of a Register of the Weather kept at Branxholme, for ten years, ending December 31, 1783’. On the outbreak of war with France in 1778 he raised a regiment of fencibles, mainly from his own estates. In 1785 he paid for half the costs to have the main streets of Hawick properly paved and gave £100 for the new Town Hall in 1786. He is also credited with support for the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike. In 1785 he paid the land tax for lands in Selkirk Parish. In 1788 his lands in Roxburghshire included large parts of Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Melrose, Roberton and Wilton Parishes, as well as Hassendean, the Barony of Eckford and Lempitlaw, the teinds of Maxton, the customs of St. Boswell’s Fair and part of Lanton. In 1794 he succeeded to Caroline Park and other estates that were held by his mother. In 1798 he became Colonel of the militia in Edinburgh, assuming control again in 1803 after the truce broke down. He gained the Queensberry and other titles of the Douglases of Drumlanrig in 1810. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1804–12. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. Known as ‘Duke Henry’ or ‘the Good Duke’, he had a reputation for being generous and was said to be highly popular among the locals. However, in 1767 he (or presumably his advisors) raised an action in the Court of Session against Hawick, concerning ownership of the Common, which ultimately led to the Division of 1777. ‘Midlothian Fencibles’. He also established Newcastleton in 1793 and was known as an agricultural improver. In 1767 he married Lady Elizabeth Montagu, only surviving daughter of George, Duke of Montagu; she became a patron of many charities in Edinburgh and died in 1827, aged 84. The Buccleuch family gained vast estates in England through this marriage. He was succeeded by his son Charles William Henry (1772–1819), who adopted the surname Montagu-Scott. His other children were: George (b.1768), Earl of Dalkeith, who died in infancy; Mary (1769–1823), who married James George, Viscount Stopford and later Earl of Courtown; Elizabeth (1770–1837), who married Alexander, 10th Lord Home; Caroline (1774–1854), who married Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead, who was later 6th Marquess of Queensberry; Henry James (1776–1845), Baron Montagu of Broughton; and Harriet (1780–1833), who married William, Earl of Ancram, who was later 6th Marquess of Lothian. He died at Dalkeith and is buried there – ‘Contented, therefore, we maun be, E’en wi’ the hut we sit in – They say o’ landlords east and west, Oor ain Duk Henry is the best O’ a’ the Lairds o’ Britain’ [HSR]. Henry (18th/19th C.) wright at Milsington. His wife died in Hawick Parish in 1809. A daughter married John Murray, from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. Henry of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th/19th C.) son of Francis James, he was the last Laird of Horsleyhill. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish. In 1792 he married Catherine, daughter of John Hay of Newhall. His only child was Hannah Charlotte, who married Sir John James Douglas (whose son became Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas on inheriting the lands) and secondly married William Scott-Kerr of Chatto and Sunlaws. The ‘Mrs. Scott of Horsleyhill’ who died in Edinburgh in 1806 may have been his wife. Henry James Montagu (1776–1845) Baron Montagu of Boughton, younger brother of the 4th Duke of Buccleuch. He acted as guardian to his nephew Walter, the 5th Duke, during his minority. The pair were made Honorary Burgesses when they passed through Hawick in 1821. He succeeded to the Montagu Baronetcy on the death of his grandfather, George Duke of Montagu, and adopted Montagu as his surname. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1804 he married his cousin Jane Margaret Douglas (d.1859), who was eldest daughter of Archibald, Lord Douglas of Douglas and his aunt Frances. They had 4 daughters: Lucy Elizabeth (d.1877), who married Cospatrick Alexander, Earl of Home; Mary Margaret, who married Lieut.-Col. Frederick Clinton; Jane Caroline (d.1846), who died unmarried; and Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry (1790–1873) 2nd son of Henry, tenant at Over Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He became Laird of Over Kirkhope and tenant in Crosslie, as well as being a hatter in Edinburgh. He was also in partnership with his cousin, Henry Scott, 5th son of William, tenant in Singlie. His company ‘Messrs. H. Scott & Co. hat manufacturers Edinburgh’ subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1820 he married Isabella Martin. Their children were:

Henry (b. 1830), probably died young; John, tenant in Crosslie; William Henry (b. 1836), who emigrated to Canada; Elizabeth, who married James Alexander; Agnes, who married Matthew Whiting; Isabella, who married Mr. Mein, dentist in Edinburgh; Janet; and Margaret. Henry Erskine (d. 1847) son of William and decendent of the Scotts of Clarilaw, he was born at Brighton. He succeeded to the lands of Ashieburn when his father died in 1807, but he sold them before his own death. Henry (1796/7–1866) farmer and farmer. He began as a ploughman and was also a shepherd, later becoming a farm steward, managing Stelshaw (near Bewcastle) for William Aitchison of Linhope. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Penchrise Cottage. In 1820 in Cavers Parish he married Mina; daughter of James Lunn; she died at Milsington in 1888, aged 89. Their children included: Beatrice, who married Walter Thomson, and may also have had a son John with William Aitchison of Linhope in 1843, who was raised by his grandparents; Thomas (b. 1825), born at Crailing; Marion (1828–1909), who married Thomas Scott, farmer at Milsington; William (b. 1831); James (1836–1921); and Henry (b. 1844), who married Janet Ewart. He was grandfather of Henry Anderson, long time resident of Rulewater. He died at Stelshaw and is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Henry (b. 1801/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Milsington Shankfoot, in 1851 he was at Deephope in Ettrick Parish and in 1861 he was a boarder at Tweed Bridge End. He married Mary Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1826 and was a boarder at Tweed Bridge End. He married Mary Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1826 and their children included: Thomas (b. 1829); James (b. 1831); Mary (b. 1833); William (b. 1836); Henry (b. 1839/40); and John (b. 1845/6). Henry (b. 1808/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eilrig. He was unmarried and living with servants and lodgers in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 people. In 1854 he married Mary Moffat (from Canonbie) and their children included: Janet (b. 1854/5); Mary (b. 1856); James (b. 1857); William (b. 1859); Thomas (b. 1860); Robert (b. 1862); George (b. 1863); and Henry (b. 1866). Henry Francis of Harden, 7th Lord Polwarth, see Henry Francis Hepburne-Scott. Henry Ale (1828–81) eldest son of John Sibbald in Over Deloraine and descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He married Jane Mills of Horsburgh Castle. Their children were: John (b. 1863), who emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A.; Jane Purves, who married Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope; Christina, who married Robert M. Mills from Melbourne; Lizzie Mills, who married Archibald C. Morrison from Edinburgh; Georgina Henrietta; and Arbuthnot. Henry John Alexander Makdougall of Gala (1901–40) son of Hugh James Elibank Scott-Makdougall of Makertoun and grandson of Maj. Hugh, 9th of Gala. He succeeded his uncle John as 11th Laird. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He became Captain in the 60th Rifles, King’s Royal Rifle Corps. In 1935 he matriculated arms and had his surname legally changed from Scott-Makdougall to Scott, but retaining Makdougall as a middle name. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He was killed in action in Calais, France. He was succeeded by Christopher Bartle Hugh, son of his sister Jean Winifred Mary Scott Makdougall. Herbert (12th C.) Clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He served several Bishops between about 1150 and the 1170s. For example, in the early 1160s he was ‘master’ and ‘clerk’ when he witnessed a gift to St. Andrews Cathedral Priory. Hugh (13th C.) witness in about the 1140s to a charter for the lands of Conveth in Kincardineshire and also a gift of Balcorno in Fife at about the same time. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Scot de Nessebyk’ and ‘Hugone Scot de Nesebick’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His wife Marjorie is also mentioned. He may be the same man as ‘Hugone de Cantuar’ who is recorded in 2 separate cases involving lands in Corebridge. Hugh of Greenhead and Gala (d.c. 1645) 2nd surviving son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was also earlier referred to as ‘of Deuchar’, but became the first Scott of Gala. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1622 he was mentioned in a rental document in Melrose. He is also mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records as caution for John Watson of Boldside and John White of Greenhead. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was ‘Hew Scott, sone to Walter Scott of Harden’ in 1644 in a registration of rental for Regality of Melrose lands, and further mentioned in bonds in Melrose in the 1640s, when he was Bailie of the Regality. In 1621 he married Jean Hoppringle of Galashiels, daughter and heiress of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smalholm. Their children were: Anne; James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh; Walter, a Major in the Army; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Auchty-Donald in Aberdeenshire; John, who settled in Italy; David, who became a surgeon in Edinburgh; Francis, who was referred to as 'brother-german' of James in 1664 and 1665; and William, still alive in 1652, and was probably the Capt. William ‘brother to Galloscheill’ in 1658. Hugh of Gala (d.c.1697) son of James. He was probably the Laird of Gala whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £3600 in 1678. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1681–82 and on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. However, he was apprehended in 1684 (along with Walter, Earl of Tarras and other Border Lairds) for refusing to support Episcopalanism. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Thomas, who married Elizabeth Borthwick; Hugh; Patrick, who died young; John, who became a Colonel in the Guards; Grizel, who married John Pringle of Torsence; Margaret, who died young; and Anna, who married Walter of Raeburn, then Henry McDougall of Makerstoun and finally a Home of Eccles. His son James was served as his heir in 1697 and his will was recorded in 1698. Rev. Hugh (1630/1–91) recorded as ‘Hew’, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1649. He was called to Bedrule in late 1657 and ordained there in 1658. However, he was deprived in 1662 for being a Covenanter and forced to leave the Presbytery, being later replaced by James Adamson. He was 'indulged' (i.e. allowed to resume his duties again) in 1672 and became minister at Oxnam, moving to Galashiels later the same year. He continued there until 1678 and by 1688 (the dates may be confused here) was minister at Stow. He was a member of the Assembly of 1690. He was described as ‘faithful and pious in his calling’ and ‘singularly pious’. In 1659 he married Jean, only daughter of Lancelot Pringle of Leitis and she died in 1709. Their their children were: David, Helen (who married Thomas Waldie in Edinburgh, and was allowed a guinea by the Presbytery in 1725) and David (again, or another error). Hugh of Gala (d.1771) 5th Laird of Gala, son of Sir James. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Stewart of Stewartfield. Their children were: James (b.1730), who died young; John (b.1732), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Euphemia, who died young; Magdalene, who also died young; Anne; Catherine, who married Capt. John Douglas of Ederton, a brother of the Laird of Cavers, who later became Laird himself; Christian (b.1737); Isobel, who died young; and Stewart (b.1741). Hugh of Harden (1758–1841) son of Walter and Diana Home Campbell (daughter of the last Earl of Marchmont). There are documents of 1767, 1774 and 1779 confirming him as the heir to Harden. He was ‘younger of Harden’ when admitted to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He also inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1796. He was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire in 1788. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1780–84 and in 1812 was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he is recorded paying tax for ‘The two Oakwoods & Mill’, as well as ‘Whithillbrae, Hitlarburn’ and Inner Huntly in Yarrow Parish. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary’s Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1820 he assumed the additional surname of Hepburne, the estates of the Hepburnes of Hambie descending to him through his great-great-grandmother, Helen Hepburne, Countess of Tarras. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1795 he married Harriet Brühil, daughter of Hans Maurice, Count de Brühl of Martinskirk, Saxon Ambassador at the Court of St. James’s. This Lady Polwarth was a patron of Sir Walter Scott (and also something of an artist, with sketches of her young sons Henry Francis and Francis surviving); she died in 1853. His children were: Charles Walter (b.1796), who died young; Henry Francis, who succeeded; Rev. William Hugh (1801–68), Rector of Maiden Newton, Dorset; Rev. George William (1804–30), Rector of Kentsibear, Devon, who was given the lands of Bewlie in 1825, and died without issue; Francis (1806–84), who gained the lands of Bewlie in 1831; Harriet Diana; Maria Amabel, who married Maj.-Gen. George C.D. Lewis; Elizabeth Anne, who married Col. Charles Wyndham of Rogate, Sussex, M.P.; and Anne, who married Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswood. He had his portrait painted in 1787. Hugh (d.1818) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–97. He had 2 farm horses, as well as a saddle horse, along with David, who was presumably his brother or son. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Col. Hugh of Gala (1764–95) son of John, he was 7th Laird. He became Colonel in the 26th (Cameronian) Regiment and died during an insurrection in Grenada. He paid the land tax for Galashiels and Blindlee in 1785. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but said to be ‘an officer in the Army, now in Canada’ who would vote with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787 he married Isabella, daughter of Prof. Alexander Monro of Craiglockhart and Auchenbowie. They had an only child, John, who succeeded. Maj. Hugh of Gala (1822–77) son of John, he was 9th Laird. He held the rank of Major in the Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia. He was also Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Justice of the Peace in that county. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Isabella, daughter and heiress of Capt. Charles Kinnaird Johnstone-Gordon. Their children were: John Henry Francis Kinnaird, who succeeded; Hugh James Elibank (b.1861), who adopted the surname Scott-Makdougall when he succeeded to Makerstoun from his first cousin twice-removed, and his son Henry John became 11th Laird of Gala; Magdalen Augusta Lavinia, who married Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis John Davies, Commander-in-Chief Scottish Command; and Maj. Charles Archibald Ramsay (1863–1920) of the South Wales Borderers. He died in France. Hugh (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wells. His wife Agnes Veitch died in 1821, aged 45, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard, along with a daughter, Agnes. Iain Hunter (168–) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. He worked for joinery firm Brydon’s and attended Borders College, eventually joining the technical staff and later the teaching staff. He was a founder member of the band Scocha with David Chapman. He is heavily involved in promoting Hawick’s culture and history, even although he works in Gala. He sings ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ for which he produced all the recordings. He has been involved in many local projects, including being the driving force behind the James Thomson memorial statue and the Archaeological Society Transactions archive. Ingram (d.1616) one of the men who, in 1615, slew the sheep belonging to Sir James Douglas at Howpasley, at the instigation of Lady Scott, widow of Howpasley. He fled to the ‘Northe’, where he was later apprehended along with ‘Wattie’ Scott (possibly a near relative) and was hanged in Edinburgh. He may have been related to some of the others, who were Jock ‘the Suckler’, ‘Marion’s Geordie’ and William ‘in Satchells’. He met them at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley before they ‘ran throw the haill fllok of scheip, slew, lamet, and menzet to the number of threscoir’. Isaac (12th/13th C.) probably from Brechin, he was a Clerk of St. Andrews Diocese. His surname was sometimes ‘Forteviot’, referring to a benefice he held in Perthshire. This suggests he was not related to other Scotts. He witnessed several charters in the 1190s. He witnessed a notification by the Bishop of St. Andrews in 1204, and is not recorded after 1213. He had a son, Nazar. Isabella (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when Margaret Oliver was fined by the Magistrates for calling her ‘witchesgait, and saying that she devoored her awine child’. Isabella (1694–1748) daughter of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her 2nd husband, Charles Cornwallis. She was known as Lady Isabella Scott and was the only one of the Duchess’ children to outlive her. In 1731 she was infested by her mother in the lordship of Melrose. She was named the Duchesses ‘sole executrix in England’ in her will of 1722/3. According to her mother’s last will, she was also given the personal estate of the Duchess in England in 1732. She died unmarried and Melrose was inherited by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. Isabella née Hogg (b.1793/4) married Walter Scott, grocer and spirit dealer. She was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow at about 8 Buccleuch Street, living with her children Agnes, Walter, Robert, Mary Ann and Andrew. Isobel (13th C.) recorded in 1296 when she paid homage to Edward I. She was from Fife and was one of only a small number of women on the list. Her name is recorded as ‘Isaebel Scot’. She was presumably a widow or heiress. Isobel ‘Lady Synton’ née Douglas (16th/17th C.) wife of the last Walter of Synton, who died in 1608. She was daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and probably the aunt of Ann Douglas, who married Sir William Douglas of Cavers. She appears to have thereafter lived at South Synton. In 1615 she is described as ‘the guidwyffe of South Sinton’ when she was summoned to the Presbytery for publicly abusing the minister of Ashkirk, Alexander Hogg, between the Sunday sermons. In the next year she was charged with not attending her own church, saying ‘She wald not repare to her kirk all the dayes of her lyf, nouther wald she gif ane reason therefor’. This presumably stemmed from a disagreement with the minister’s new ways. It is stated that she preferred to take communion at Lilliesleaf and Hassendean, and was rebuked by the ministers there for doing so. She apparently eventually reconciled with the minister and was readmitted to the Ashkirk communion. Her children were George of Synton (who sold the estate), Anne, Archibald, Elspeth and Christian. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in the Ashkirk Session records of 1635 as ‘Isabel Scott in Synton Mill’. She complained that Margaret Tullie had called her a witch and a thief. Tullie denied calling her a witch, but claimed she could prove that she was a thief, and called several witnesses to support the claim that she had robbed the purse of Andrew Nichol in Synton Mill. However, the outcome was ‘that they ken her to be ane honest woman, and free of any thyft so far as they ken or know’. Her accuser was made to sit at ‘ye place of repentence’. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel of Whitehaugh (d.1759) probably daughter of Walter and sister of Rev. Robert of Robertson. She succeeded to the Whitehaugh estates on the death of her brother William in 1751. In 1753 she married Rev. William Somerville, minister of Hawick (and was said to be about 80 at that point). She died without any children and her second cousin John succeeded her to Whitehaugh. J. of Grahamswood (17th C.) signatory of the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His name is given as ‘J. Scott of Grameswood’, but it is unclear where this might have been. James (13th C.) recorded as James ‘le Scot’ in 1256 when he was arrested in the town of ‘Roubiry’ (probably Rothbury) along with Robert of Crailling, on suspicion of larceny. James (15th C.) servant of the King recorded in 1454 when he received his fee. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. James (15th C.) recorded as witness to the 1464/5 sasine granting the Barony of Cavers and Sherifflom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He appears as ‘Jacobi Scot’. He may be the same as James of Kirkurd. James (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Boon- raw in 1487. Other witnesses included Adam Scott and local landowners. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but it is possible he was the same as James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. James of Kirkurd (d.c.1501) later referred to as ‘of Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean’. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Henders land; hence he was brother of David of Branholme and Buccleuch and Alexander of Abington and Howpsley. However, the fact that his name does not appear in an entail of Branholme made by David in 1488 (while those of Alexander and other more distant Scotts appear) suggests that he may not have been a full brother of David. He was witness to a ‘letter of revision’ in 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branholme. In 1484 he was granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) from their superior, David Lindsay of the Byres. He appears to have resigned Kirkurd at the same time. He also acquired the lands of Hassendean from the Cunninghams of Glencairn. He was probably the ‘Jacobi Scot’ who leased the lands of Fulsde in Ettrick Forest from 1473 and in 1490 granted the lands of Middletost of Falside by James II for helping to expel rebels. Also in 1477 his fine for retaining a cottage in Falside was remitted. He was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492; he is there ‘Jacobum Scot de Hasinden’. He may have been the ‘James Scot of Kirkvood’ transcribed as witness to a document in 1494 relating to lands in Hassendean, and he was ‘of Hassendean’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine. Also in 1494 he gave a charter of the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his son David, reserving the limerent to himself. Among the witnesses were his son John, as well as Robert of ‘Achinstanceich’, and 3 other Scotts, William, Walter and Robert, who may have been related. His wife Margaret was also mentioned in this charter, but her surname is not recorded. He is probably the James who had 16 sheep stolen from him at ‘fawsyd’ according to a case brought against John in ‘Tushielaw in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘in hassinden’ when his son David had remission for stealing livestock from farms of the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the ‘Jacobi Scot’ who was granted income from the land of Falside in 1499; in 1501 the rental was assigned to his wife Margaret and son John. Also in 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Ja- cobi Scot in Hassindane’ in relation to remittance of a fine on John Hay of Yester. In 1503 he is still recorded having the lease of Falside (although he may have been deceased by this time). His sons were: John Scott of Over Netherhall (later Burnhead) and of Hassendean, his heir; David of Hassendean; William of Hassendean; Robert of Nether Newhall (later Burnfoot); and Adam of Clarilaw. One of his daughters may have married George Gledstains (who is listed as ‘brother’ of Adam in Clarilaw and William in 1526). He was probably also the James whose wife Margaret received the lands of Falside (in Ettrick) ‘in livery’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (possibly his son) being granted heredity of Falside (which was later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean). He is probably also the James of Hassendean whose son Walter was witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1494–1513. He was somehow associated with the King’s stable. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Perhaps the same James ‘once in the King’s livery’ (i.e. where oats and other food for horses was kept) was given a payment in 1538. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Askirk’ (i.e. Ashkirk) when he served as surety for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, who had stolen sheep from several farms. Robert of Stiches was also surety. This suggests that he was related to the Scotts of Headshaw and of Stiches. In 1526 he was listed as being ‘of Askirk’ among the many Borderers who were pardoned for supporting the Homes against the Earl of Arran (perhaps a couple of years earlier); his son Walter was also listed. John of Ashkirk, killed in 1526 and Walter in Ashkirk, recorded in 1533, were possibly descendants. James (d.1563) 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the church. During the reign of James V he was Clerk to the Treasury, and was recorded being paid as such in 1533. He is probably the James, writer in the Exchequer, who is recorded in 1538 and 1540. In 1543 he succeeded Alexander Scott (of unknown connection) as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. Like his predecessor he was also one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts (1544–62) and is recorded several times in this period as Provost of Corstorphine. In 1554 he was appointed as an Ordinary Lord of Session. He had a manse built at Corstorphine, which contained his coat of arms. In 1560 he was granted the parsonage of Kirkurd (in Peeblesshire) by Trinity Collegiate Church (in Edinburgh) along with William, Burgess of Edinburgh (and presumably a near relative). James (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Holfrud’ (probably Howford) on the 1526 list of Borders men pardoned for their support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. James ‘Beld Jamie’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as being ‘callit Beld Jame’, with James ‘in Holfrud’ and James ‘of Ingland’ listed right before and after him, respectively. He was presumably bald. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers given remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘of Ingland’, but it is unclear what this means. James (16th C.) recorded as Bailie of Selkirk in the Exchequer Rolls for 1541. James of Flex (16th C.) witness to a 1556 document relating to the transfer of Nether Harden between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope who was listed in 1549 among those whose lands had been attacked by Walter Ker of Cessford and others, in a complaint by Sir Walter of Buccleuch. Helen was listed right after him and so may have been related. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branzholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Jacobo Scott eius seruo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James ‘Bailzie’ (16th C.) mentioned in Hawick’s first existing sasine (of any detail), dating from 1558, when he was sold a piece of land (perhaps corresponding to what was later called ‘Wylie’s Dub’) by Alexander Scott. He is referred to as ‘alias Bailzie’, suggesting that this was a nickname, and that he was not in fact a Bailie of the Town (or had previously been a Bailie). James (d.c.1564) son of Walter ‘in Hassindene’. He was listed among the men tried in 1564 for the murder of David of Hassendean (who may have been a relative of some sort). Other men involved included Elliots of Horsley-hill. It appears that he was one of the men who were executed for the crime. His relationship to the other Scotts is unclear, however, it may be that he was a nephew of the David who was murdered. These events may have been the catalyst for the deadly feud between the Scotts and the Elliots that lasted for several years. James (16th C.) illegitimate son of John Scott, who was Vicar of Hawick in the 1530s. He appears to have been legitimised in 1538, the document given by John of Burnhead. In 1556 he had a precept of sasine, also from John of Burnhead. This was probably for the lands his father had held at Wester and Easter Muremaw (later called ‘Lees’). James of Alton Croft (16th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as ‘of Altown-Crofts’ among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been descended from the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He must have been related to the later Walter of Alton Croft. James (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as the man who collected the teinds for Hassendean and Cavers. He was presumably an agent of some sort for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Robertson (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1559 involving Harden and as witness in 1579 to the payment of Ker of Cessford’s fine for the failure of young Ker of Faldonside to marry Janet, sister of Buccleuch. In 1590 he was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’. It is unclear how he was related to the Johns of Robertson recorded earlier and later. It is possible he was a brother of the former John (and hence younger son of Stephen) and uncle of the John who was supposedly present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. James (16th C.) described as ‘in Quhistslaed’ (i.e. Whitslade) in 1574 when he and William Scott ‘in Harden’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birksend (later Howpasley) for a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot. They also had a ‘letter of reversion’ for a loan on the lands of ‘Auldtrouss’ in Ettrick Forest as well as Easter Craik in the same year. James (16th C.) Reader of Ashkirk Parish in 1575 (not to be confused with John, who was minister here at the same time). He was also described as Vicar in 1586. However, in 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Southdean), who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, and then excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence. In 1590 he was one of 3 men (the others being Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh and Thomas Newbie, vicar at Hassendean) who agreed never to abuse the sacraments nor function in the kirk after being threatened with death, and it was decided that ‘they should be tame to the mercat-croce of Edinburgh, and stand twa houris, with paiparis on thair heidis, contening the cryme’. It may be that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation, and had not abandoned his ways. He was also the described as ‘at South Sinton Mill’ and ‘in Sintonmill’ and was a close associate of Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh. James (16th C.) cordiner in Hawick recorded in 1581, brother of George and Robert (who was a Burgess). In 1581 he and his brother Robert wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘witht my hand twicheand the pen led by the notar vunderwrittin’ (suggesting that, unlike his brother Robert, he was not able to write). It is unclear how this family might be related to other Scotts. James of Gilmanscleuch (16th C.) eldest son of John of Thirlestane with his 2nd wife Marian Douglas (this was the claim of Scott of Satchells, refuted by John Scott of Rodono, but confirmed by Keith Scott). In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts in 1589. He is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of the Warden, Lord Maxwell, and his men in 1593 at Dryfe Sands; his brother Robert was also listed. His ‘oy’ (i.e. grandson) ‘Alie Batie’ is mentioned in a bond of 1609, involving Scotts of Thirlestane, Headshaw and Tushielaw. He is ‘James of Gilmerscleugh’ when he witnessed the 1612 bond for keeping peace on the Border. He could have been one of the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch who was said to be responsible for the death of a son of Walter Scott of Harden. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had 3 other sons: William; Andrew; and Adam. William and Adam, brothers of Robert of Gilmanscleuch, were recorded in 1631. James (16th C.) 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He had a ‘tack’ of the lands of Dodbank. He was probably the great-grandfather of Captain Walter of Satchells. His eldest son was Robert, who had several charters connected with Dodbank and Satchells in 1607–09. James of Kirkhouses (16th C.) probably 4th son of George of Synton. Capt. Scott of Satchells says that he went on the mission to rescue Kinmont Willie in place of Scott of Synton in 1596. He was father of John of Kirkhouses, who inherited in 1609. James of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1578/9 he was one of the men accused of accompanying his brother Walter to attack the farm of Gattonside, and denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge. In 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenants to be harmless in ‘his three husband lands lying in Hundishoip’. He is probably the James, brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He held the lands of ‘Hundils-sheope’ in Peeblesshire. He is recorded in a charter of 1596. In 1602 he and others were removed from the lands of Sir William Stewart of Traquair by Gideon Murray of Elibank. His sons were probably: John; James; Robert in Holly Arch; and Thomas in Hundleshope. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Mekle Jame Eister’ in 1590, along with Robert Scott of Haining, when a group of Murrays were put under caution not to harm them. It is unclear how he might have been connected with other Scotts. James of Foulshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600. He succeeded John, who must have been either his father or brother. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then Walter. James (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Bowhill. In 1608 he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk. His brother William was also there. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) from an unknown branch of the Scotts. However, later cautioners for the family were Scotts of Castsleside and Hartwoodnyres, suggesting they were closely related. He is probably the James, listed as tenant in Newark in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. In 1585 he was ‘in Newerkmynl’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him ‘that the vassals, tenants, and servants of William Earl of Angus shall be harmless of the said James’. Sometime around 1603–7 he left Newark to his son John, and became a Magistrate in Selkirk. James (16th/17th C.) perhaps tenant at Nether Bon-chester. Walter Deans (writing in 1887) claims his name is recorded on a deed of 1600, and that he was succeeded by Thomas (although Thomas actually succeeded Walter). James ‘Afhand’ (16th/17th C.) among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands in ‘Fechane’ in 1602.
Others were Scotts of Hundleshope, Thirlestane, Gamelshiel, Bonnington and Bowhill. James of Glenrath (d.1619) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘of Boyken’ in Westerkirk. The lands of Glenrath are probably those south of Peebles. Scott of Satchells lists him among the clansmen who were at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. His children were all minors when he died: Walter, who succeeded to Glenrath in 1628; William in Linton, whose son John succeeded his uncle; James; Marion; Elizabeth; and Margaret. His brother John of Mackerssway was served as tutor to his children William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret in 1620.
James (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘of Newholme’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He was brother of William of Montbenger and had a son John, who was a surgeon in Edinburgh. In 1645, his nephew Robert, son of William of Montbenger, was served as tutor to John’s sons (and therefore his grandsons) James and John. James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, so proba-ably son of the previous Sir Walter. In 1620 he had a marriage contract with Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg, involving lands at Eil-don. In 1631 these lands were granted to Walter Chisholme in Darnick, and it was restated that he was brother of the deceased Sir Walter of Whitslade. He could be the James of Whitslade who in 1663 was jointly responsible (along with widow Margaret Turnbull) for land taxes in Hassendean Parish. James of Huntly (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Walter and son of Robert, who was on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was on an inquest in 1616, and probably had recently succeeded his brother (since Walter was recorded as Laird in 1612). He is probably the James ‘called of Huntlie’ whose son John was served heir to his lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest in 1639. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John of Newark, who he succeeded in 1626. He apparently sold Newark to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He subsequently became a merchant and burgess in Selkirk. He was listed in the last testament of Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he owed more than £14,000. In 1605 he married Grisel, daughter of James Murray of Philiphaugh. James (16th/17th C.) listed as tenant in Newbigging in 1627 when he was one of 9 men responsible for making a valuation of the lands of Hawick Parish. Rev. James (1578/9–1634) appointed to the vicarage of St.
Mary of the Lowes by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1608. It seems likely that he was some kind of relative. In the same year he was accused by the Presbytery ‘of being our guid companion in drinking and beiring company both in Edinburgh and at home’. He was also accused of being a card-player and being negligent in his duties. By 1618 he was non-resident and urged to find a house nearer to his congregation. However, he appears to have remained as the minister until his death. He was listed in 1633 as ‘minister at Yarkirk’ when he was owes his annual stipend from the deceased Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 as tenant in ‘Holcaldrumhill’, among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. He is listed along with Andrew in the Heap, who may therefore have been a relative. It is unclear where his farm might have been. James (17th C.) son of George, resident of Leith, who was already deceased when he purchased Hassedean from William Cunningham in 1622. He was at that time a resident of Bruntsland. James of Roberton (16th/17th C.) son of William of Roberton. He was the last of the Lairds of Roberton. In 1627 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Roberton and Howcleuch, with the mill, valued at £6 13s 4d. However, later in 1627 he sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden. It is not known what happened to him after that. James (17th C.) listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 as a ‘servant’. He was owed money for keeping the ‘teynd yaird’ in Hawick, as well as for building the walls and ‘heiding the stakes’ (i.e. putting heads on the stakes). It is unclear where this yard was located. James (17th C.) described as ‘portnr. of burn ffit’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear which Burnfoot he occupied (but probably not the one on Ale, since Walter there signed separately), and how he was related to other Scotts. James (17th C.) possibly minister or assistant at Abbotrule about 1638. In that year he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick, his name recorded as ‘Mr. James Scott, Abbatroull’. The minister at that time was James Ker, so it is possible this is a transcription error. James of Woll (d.bef. 1670) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his brother Francis by 1643. He is presumably the same James, son of Robert ‘of Well’ who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as ‘lawful son to Robert Scott of Wall’ (and separately as ‘Well’) when he complained about being imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown; he complained that Brown ‘causelessly conceaved a deadly hatred against him ... while ... alone and engaged upon his lawful business, caused apprehend him and warded him in the tolbooth, and that without any conviction or lawful warrant’, after which he was also warded by William Duff, servitor to Lord Saltoun, who claimed he was a debtor. He complained to the Privy Council after 20 days in prison, and was freed. He had 3 daughters in the period 1642–45, but had no male heirs. He sold the lands of Woll to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1660. His brother George was returned heir to their father in 1670. James (17th C.) eldest son of William of Salensis, and brother of Thomas. In the period 1633–53 he pursued an action against his step-sisters Jean and Margaret, presumably over the lands of Essenside, which had belonged to their father, Walter of Essenside. James (17th C.) described as possessor of ‘purke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632. James of Crookston (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Katherine Jardine. He is recorded in a letter of inhibition in 1630. In 1641 he is referred to as ‘of Cruixtoun’ when he witnessed (in Hawick) a document for his brother Sir John of Thirlestane, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estate. Rev. James (d.1679) son of Walter ‘in Catslak’. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1615, was presented to Kirkton at the end of that year, and became minister there, probably sometime in 1616. He was translated to Tongland in 1619. He was a member of the Commission for the Maintenance of Church Discipline in 1634 and contributed to the building of Glasgow University in 1636. However, he refused to subscribe to the Covenant and was deposed in 1639 for ‘absence from his flocke eight Sabbaths together, sacrilege, intromitting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytery, tabling (playing at draughts), conversing with excommunicated Papists, and declining the General Assembly’. He was attached to the Rectory of Ford in Northumberland in 1660 and had a stipend allowed by Parliament in 1661, which was increased in 1663 ‘because he hath been an extraordinary sufferer these twenty-four years bygane’, and his disposition annulled in 1664. He returned to Tongland in 1663. However, in 1665 he was translated to Ancrum, as replacement to the formerly popular John Livingstone, who was exiled as a Covenanter. His appointment came amid huge disturbance, when a woman grabbed his cloak and he used his staff on her, with her brothers jumping into the fray. In the ensuing trial the 2 brothers (Turnbulls from Ashieburn) were transported to Virginia, their sister being whipped through Jedburgh and 4 boys were ‘whipped through Edinburgh, branded in the face, and sold as slaves to Barbados’. He remained at Ancrum until his death about 14 years later. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Maxwell (minister of Borgue) and has a son James. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in the 1640s at the time of the Covenanters. He was Bailie in early 1641.
In 1643 he was ‘late bailie’ when he ‘made count and reckoning of his intromissions with the contributions that were gathered for the soldiers at Newcastle in 1641’. He may have been the James ‘callit of Newton’ who was on the ‘leet’ for the Bailies in 1638 and the James who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. James (17th C.) described as a ‘lorimer’ (i.e. saddler) in a Hawick Magistrates case of 1642, when Thomas Oliver was ordered to pay him for the oats his livestock had eaten. In 1645 the Town Clerk Gilbert Watt complained that he had called him several names, against the town’s laws. The same ‘lorimer’ was elected to the Council in 1648. James (17th C.) described as a ‘cadger’ (i.e. carrier) when he acted as appraiser in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving another James, ‘lorimer’.

James of Park, in Wilton (17th C.) recorded as a landowner in a valuation of Wilton Parish of 1643. This describes ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap’, and valued at £200. He may also be the James whose lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He also signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He is probably the James ‘of Heap’ described as a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, by James Wilson. He is probably also the James of Whitehaugh recorded in 1648 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Probably the same James of Whitehaugh paid the land tax on £200 for Whitehaugh in 1663. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh or elsewhere. One possibility is that ‘Park’ is a transcription error for ‘Glack’ or ‘Clack’. James (17th C.) proprietor of Wiltonburn in a record of 1650 relating to the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Margaret Scott and their children John, Robert and Margaret.

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Davidson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Robert Scott and Adam Govenlock. James (17th C.) herd at Branxholme recorded in 1655 and 1656. It is possible he is the James ‘elder’ who rented part of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park, along with another James (perhaps his son) in 1671. He could be the tenant of the west end of Branxholme Muir recorded in 1677; he may have been a servant of the Scotts of Buccleuch (but the document is hard to read). James (17th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1684 his son John was witness to the financial document for erecting the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He may one of the 2 Jameses who were on the Council in 1668. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1668) one of the ordinary Clerks of Session. This is Bonnington in West Lothian, unrelated to the place of the same name near Peebles that was a Lairdship of a separate branch of the Scotts. He was 2nd son of Lawrence of Harperrig, and was the ‘Maistir James Scott’ who had a charter of the lands of ‘Bonightingone’ in 1629, with ratification in 1641. He first married Violet, daughter of Robert Pringle, W.S. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Elliott of Stobs, and widow of William Ben- net, minister of Ancrum (and she may have been the sister of his son William’s wife). He was appointed Clerk of Session in 1649 when his elder brother Sir William of Clerkington was appointed Lord of Session. In 1662 he is listed among those excluded from the King’s pardon until they paid a fine. His children were: William, who married Elizabeth Elliott and died without a male heir; Robert, who succeeded, but only had a daughter; Violet, who married James Douglas of Cliftonhall; Elizabeth, who married John Maitland; Marion, who married Rev. John Lumsden; and Jean, who was married to James Park, writer, who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1678; Gilbert, eldest son by his 2nd wife, who succeeded his half-brother Robert; Charles, who later succeeded; James, last male of this family, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672; Catherine; and Barbara, who was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1668. In 1680 his son Charles of Bonnington and other children James and Catherine, were erved as his heirs. Baillie James of Ormiston (17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick in the 1670s and 1680s, distinct from the ‘litster’ who was a contemporary Baillie. He was ‘called Ormeston’ in 1673 when he was named in the trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Nichol in 1680 and another for James Chisholme in 1688. He is probably the Baillie Scott of Ormiston whose servant Elspeth Scott was struck by stones in 1683 when watching linens that were being bleached by the side of Teviot. He may be descended from the Ormiston Scotts recorded in 1589 and 1592. He was ‘late balyvea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Bailylea Scott ormusston’, who paid tax on 2 heartths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James recorded in 1697 when, along with 3 others, he was forbidden from holding public office in Hawick on account of being ‘abetors and hounders out of the last illegal election in October 23 last’.

Scott

Scott

Hawick
He witnessed a baptism (for Robert Scott, ‘wynhead’) in 1701 and another in 1702 for Gideon Gardner (when he was ‘called ormston’). He may be the James who was deceased in 1708 when his son Robert caused a commotion in St. Mary’s by trying to take his former seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ after the Council had passed a statute stating that these seats were reserved for the present Bailies. He was therefore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1685 when the finances for the new balcony were being sorted out, and may have been related to the Bailie Walter who had helped finance the balcony in 1684 and subsequently died. He may be the Bailie James who was insulted by Adam Young in 1685, along with his son John; the claim was that they had reset peas taken by some of the Royalist men. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘called Tushilaw’ in 1677 when he was one of the witnesses to the ‘bond of provision’ by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He must have been a younger son of one of the Tushilaw Lairds of the late 1600s. James of Bonnington (d. bef. 1675) succeeded to the lands from Robert, who was either his father or brother. He may have married Margaret Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Gilbert, who died shortly afterwards, and then succeeded by his 2nd son Charles. James (17th C.) married Janet Elliot in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish, but probably the part that had been Hassendean. Their daughter Bessie was born in 1687, with witnesses William Toshaw and Walter Clerk. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (actually the part corresponding with Hassendean). He married Isobel Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Isobel (b.1683); William (b.1685); and Magdalen and Martha (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Gledstains and Adam Sanderson and in 1683 were William and Robert Rodger (who were surely related to his wife). Bailie James (17th C.) dyer (or ‘litster’) in Hawick, who lived at ‘Casaend’. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1665 when he gave evidence that Bessie Douglas had indeed insulted the Bailie. His is probably one of the 2 Jameses who was on the Council in 1688. He was a Bailie during the 1670s. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is recorded in 1686 as ‘Jas. Scott, littster, lat baylyea in Hawick’, and is distinct from the James of Ormiston who was a contemporary Bailie. He was also recorded as a lister in Hawick in a bond of 1682. He may be the James who was Bailie in late 1685 (but only if the Bailie ship changed between November and March). He may also be the former Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1687 as having a garden in the West End, south of the King’s Highway. He was ‘litster, late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in in 1693/4. He is probably the James ‘laite Bailyea’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Wright. He is probably the James who declared in 1703 that on the last night of the previous year there were only 2 people to be found drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704. James (17th C.) described as servitor to Robert of Horsleyhill when he witnessed a Hawick sasine of 1688. James (d.c.1688) servitor to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. His will was recorded in 1688. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James of Shaws and Shielswood (17th C.) eldest son of Adam of Shaws. He paid the land tax in 1678. In 1692 he paid the teind duty to the Commissioners of the Duchy of Buccleuch for the lands of Outerside. He was ‘of Sheillwood’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Company. In 1670 he married Marian Scott, heiress of Shielswood (probably daughter of Walter). He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. His eldest son was Walter. James of Brieryyards (17th C.) eldest son and successor of John of Brieryyards. He is mentioned as a landowner in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean parish, and hence probably succeeded before that. He may be the person who paid the land tax on Brieryyards and Hornshole in 1678 (with no name recorded). He had a sasine of Brieryyards in 1682, and was listed that year among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He also had a confirming charter of the lands of Hornshole in 1683, these having been passed to him by his brother John in 1667 (as part of a ‘wadset’ with the Turnbulls) and gained from the Turnbulls in 1671. Probably the same James ‘of Bririeyards’ was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It is stated there that his eldest son was John and that John of Cockerheugh was his brother. He married Margaret Hay and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: david (b.1680); Francis (b.1681); Elspeth (b.1683); Helen (b.1687); and Marie (b.1689). He is clearly ‘of Bririeyards’ in 1681 when the witnesses were Walter and John Scott (presumably relatives, perhaps his brothers). The witnesses in 1687 were again Walter and John Scott. James of Gala (d. bef. 1672) son of Hugh, 1st Laird of Gala. He married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Phillphaugh. Their children were probably: Walter; George; Donald; John; David; Francis; William; and Hugh, who succeeded. James nee Crofts (1649–85) illegitimate son of Charles II and Lucy Walters (who was also known as ‘Mrs. Barlow’). He was created Baron Scott of Tindale (in Northumberland), Earl of Doncaster (in Yorkshire) and Duke of Monmouth (in Wales) by the King, shortly before his marriage to the young Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. He assumed the title of first Duke of Buccleuch when he married the Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. However the marriage was arranged when they were very young (he was 14), and it is said that his real partner was Lady Henrietta Wentworth. In 1666 he and his wife resigned their titles to the crown to be regranted with separate honours. In 1669 he was appointed Colonel of a Regiment of Foot Militia in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire by Charles II. He was confirmed as Lord Dalkeith in 1772. He was appointed High Chamberlain of Scotland in 1673. He received the Barony of Hawick (including the patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk) from the Crown in 1675. He was listed in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, holding land valued at about £9000 in Castleton Parish, £6000 in Cavers Parish, £2000 in Hassendean Parish, £9000 in Hawick Parish and £2500 in Wilton Parish (among others). Additionally his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at almost £20,000. In Hawick Parish his possessions included Alton Croft and Alton Town, Whames, Wester Weens and ‘Husband-lands in Hawick, with mill and customs’. He became Captain-general of the Forces and was sent to quell the insurrection in Scotland in 1679, being commander at Bothwell Brig. He then engaged in intrigues against his uncle the Duke of York and moved to Holland in 1684. Belief (probably unfounded) that his father married his mother in Rotterdam before his birth helped encourage him to seek the Crown. In 1685, following the death of Charles II, he landed at Lyme Regis, claiming to be the protector of the Protestant faith and proclaiming himself King. He marched to Taunton with about 6,000 followers, but was defeated by King James’ army at Sedgemoor and fled. Disguised in shepherd’s clothing, he hid out for 2 days, but was taken prisoner. He was executed at Tower Hill in London, having the same morning said his final goodbye to his wife and children; it was described how the executioner took 5 strokes in attempted to sever the head from the body, to the great displeasure of the crowd. He forfeited all his titles, but his wife Anna would remain as Duchess of Buccleuch. His children with her were: Charles, Earl of Doncaster, who died in infancy; James, Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded to the Buccleuch titles; Henry, Earl of Deloraine; Francis, who died in infancy; Charlotte, also died young; and Anne, who died in the Tower of London in 1685. He also had illegitimate children with Elinor, daughter of Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth: Maj.-Gen. James Crofts; Henry Crofts, Commander of H.M.S. Gosport; Isabella Crofts, who died young; and Henrietta Crofts, who married Charles Poulett, 2nd Duke of Bolton – ‘A Rebel he was in his time, And did the Nation much perplex: At his Invasion he was tane, And his Head cut off with an ax’ [CWS]. James of Thirlestane (17th C.) 4th son of Sir William of Harden, his brothers were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Walter of Raeburn and John of Woll. In 1661 he purchased Thirlestane (although this is probably the place near Yetholm, and not the one in the Ettrick valley), as well as Heiton Mains and Mill from Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He was Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Liddesdale in 1659–60. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debatable Lands. In 1668 he exchanged some lands with his nephew Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He may be the James of Thirlestane who was fined in 1680 for being a Covenanter. He is probably the James ‘of thirlestoun’ who paid the land tax in Roxburgh and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He is probably the ‘James Scott off Thirles-toune’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682 (with Sir Francis of Thirlestane also listed). He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk in 1659. His children included: Mary (b.1660), who married Gideon Scott of Falnash; William, who succeeded; Walter; John; Gideon (b.1671); and 2 sisters. The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Pringle of Clifton, James Don and James Robertson. James (17th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife was Janet Scott and their son Andrew was baptised in 1678, with witnesses William Douglas and Simon Aitchison. Perhaps the same James and his wife Janet Scott had a daughter Janet baptised in 1671, with witnesses George and Robert, who were presumably related to either him or his wife. James ‘Cookie’ (17th C.) married to Bessie Douglas, and father to William. He is recorded in a case in 1674 when his wife was found guilty of striking and biting her son. His children with Bessie, included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1673 and 1682. He is possibly the same as ‘Cockie’ and it is unclear if he was the same as James the Bailie who was a ‘litister’ at about the same time. James ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’. It seems likely that he was related to the later James, ‘Laird’, the first recorded Cornet, perhaps his grandfather. James of Bowhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Andrew in 1668. However, it is possible that he purchased Bowhill during the lifetime of his father and brother. He held lands at Merton from 1657. He served as some kind of agent for the Scotts of Buccleuch according to a 1660 document. In 1661 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he owed rent for the Barony of ‘Thickfoord’ to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Parishes of Castleton and Canonbie in at least the years 1671–89. He was recorded in a deed of 1682. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He could be the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch who was based in Edinburgh in the 1670s, with several letters to him (from George Scott of Pitlochie) surviving. The same James may have been Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1668 when he leased Sandieknowes from Lady Smailholm. He was recorded as tenant in Roan (in Castleton Parish) in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 3 hearths. He had a court case against Andrew Ker of Littledean in 1694 and 1695 regarding rents. He probably married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Scott of Foulshiels. He appears to have been deceased by 1714. This branch of the family held lands at Bowhill from at least the mid-16th century, and these would eventually pass to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by John, probably his son, who would be the last male of this family line. James of Phaup (17th C.) recorded in 1682 on a list of the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He may have been son of Francis. James (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill in 1684 when he was part of a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the test’. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Laics’ among Roxburghshire men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity in 1684. This could be a transcription error for ‘Lairs’ perhaps. James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Marion Young and their son William was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were James Gledstains and Robert Langlands. James (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Bristo’ in 1691 and 1697 when he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is unclear who he was. James (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was separate from James in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Andrew and John were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. James (17th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Wintonourrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John and Thomas who are also listed there. James (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as shepherd at Borthaugh. He could be the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–94; his cautioner in 1692 and 1694 was ‘young goldiland’ (probably Charles), suggesting he was related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. In 1696 and 1698 his widow Margaret was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh, with Adam and Walter (farmers at Overhall) as her cautioners. It is possible he was the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) listed in 1690 as ‘Ja Scott Scrivener’ (the last word is hard to make out) when he rented 1/4 of the farm of Borthaugh. He is listed separately from another James Scott, who rented 1/4. He is surely related to ‘Robert Scot Scrivener’, who was renting Borthaugh in 1694. It is possible he is the James ‘in Borturk’ in 1684 when his wife Bessie Scott’s will is recorded; he was probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1686, as well as Walter ‘in Burtoch’. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam, who was listed there, was surely related. The pair were each renting half of Overhall from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690 and 1692. James (17th C.) tenant in Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was on the east-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 when he paid tax on 2 hearths. In 1700 and 1704 he was ‘smith in Hawick’ when his children were baptised. Probably the same smith James witnessed a baptism for smith George in Hawick in 1701. He is probably distinct from the smith at Branxholme at the same time. His children included: James (b.1700) and Walter (b.1704). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant Robert Robson and Henry Orrock and in 1704 were merchant Robert Robson and glover John Scott. James ‘Scottie’ (17th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1708 he is described as ‘smith distinctionis causa called Scottie’ He married Agnes Purdom in 1707 and their children included Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1708 were merchant Michael and tailor George (who could have been related). He could be the same man as the slightly earlier blacksmith of the same name if he married for a second time. James ‘Pedee’ (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when he was fined for refusing to let the Bailies enter his house, and he also chained Bailie Gledstains’ barn. He tried to escape and had to forcibly taken to the Tolbooth. He was explicitly referred to as being ‘called Pedee’ (i.e. footman), but it is unclear what this nickname meant exactly. He was also listed as ‘pedee’ in Hawick, among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was resident of the Hawick ‘eist the water’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with ‘Pedie’ recorded after his name. This presumably distinguished him from the blacksmith and others of the same name. James (17th C.) carter in Hawick listed as ‘Colifert’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also recorded as ‘James Scott colifert’ among residents of the east-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably owner or otherwise associated with Colifort. He was again ‘Colifert’ when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1704, when he witnessed a baptism for gardner Thomas Boyd in 1705 and when his daughter Helen married Andrew Waugh in 1713. James (17th C.) resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish.

He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1694), James (b.1696) and John (b.1696). James (1674–1705) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest surviving son of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He was titled Earl of Doncaster until the death of his father. In 1692 he was proclaimed King by a group of ‘thirty or forty wyld people’ at Sanquhar Cross, but nothing came of it. He received the lands of Chisholme and Woodburn from the estate of his deceased father in 1696. He served with the army in Flanders, returning to Britain in 1702. In 1694 he married Henrietta, daughter of Lawrence Hyde, Earl of Rochester and she died in 1730. Predeceasing his mother, the Dukedom was inherited by his eldest son Francis (1695–1751). His other children were: Charles (b.1700), who died young; James (1702–19), who died aged 17; Henry (b.1704), who also died young; Anne (1696–1714), who died aged 18; and Charlotte (1697–1747), who died unmarried at the age of 50, the only other to survive her grandmother, Anne. He himself died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Stobicote. He is recorded there in 1700 when he was fined ‘for forre-stalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from a servant of James Ogilvie in Branxholme and then selling it to a Jedburgh butcher for a higher price. Probably the same James is listed at Stobicote on the 1694 Hearth Tax records; he appears right after John, to whom he was likely related (perhaps John was his father). He was ‘tenant in Stobbitcoat’ in 1712 when he married Anne Scott, step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill. Their children included: William (b.1712); Beatrice (b.1716); John (b.1718); James (b.1720); Ann (b.1724); and Walter (b.1727). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Thomson in Newmill (his wife’s step-father) and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill and in 1716 were William Thomson, both older and younger. He was still at Stobicote in 1724. James (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for gardner James Falsyde. He married Beatrix Laing and their children included Joan (or perhaps ‘Jean’, b.1700); Marie (b.1702); James (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); Anne (b.1709); William (b.1711); and Walter (b.1714). His wife may be the Beatrix born to James Laing and Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1670. The witnesses in 1700 were William Laing and ‘Mr’ James Laing, in 1702 were glover James Burn and gardener James Falsyde, in 1705 were fellow glovers James Burn and William Bruntfield and in 1709 were Bailie James Burn and William Laing. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Wiltonburn in 1705 when his son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who were probably related. He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Wiltonburn. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1706 he was listed among the men who were fined for involvement in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. He is listed separately from James ‘of Westport’, and was presumably also different from James ‘the Laird’, who was Cornet in 1703. James (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester. He was a writer in Jedburgh and died unmarried. James (17th/18th C.) joint tenant in Nether Southfield along with Walter in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He was recorded at Nether Southfield in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield and in 1713 when one of his own children was baptised. He married Margaret (or Marion) Young and their children included: James (b.1704); William (b.1709); and James (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and in 1713 were Walter and (another) James Scott, both also in Nether Southfield. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) when several of his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. This includes: twins George and John (b.1703); Margaret (b.1710); Agnes (b.1712); and Helen (b.1717). James (17th/18th C.) recroded at Harden Burn in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is hard to separate from other local men of the same name. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Whithope. He is recorded there in 1710, 1715, 1716 and 1726. His children include Margaret (b.1710), Adam (b.1715), Robert (again, b.1716) and Robert (b.1726). There are several other children of James Scotts in Roberton at a similar time who could be his. James of Calfield (17th/18th C.) from a prominent Dumfriesshire farming family. He may have been descended from Francis Scott of Davington’s sister Katherine (although one genealogy has him as a son of Francis of Davington). He was later described as being ‘of Beltenmont’. He was probably the James in Calfield who married Agnes Scott, sister to the Laird of Burnhead (William Scott) in Hawick in 1721. His children included: Katherine, who married William, 3rd son of Robert Scott of Davington; Isabel, who married John, brother of her brother-in-law William Scott; Margaret, who married Gilbert Elliot, descendant of the Lairds of Redheugh and Larriston; and William, who was a vintner in Dumfries. Jean may have been another daughter, who married David Muir, Provost of Annan. Sir James of Gala (d.aft. 1721) son of Hugh and Isobel Ker, he was the 4th Scott of Gala. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1695 and for Roxburghshire in 1696. He contributed £600 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was served heir to his father Hugh in 1697. He was appointed as Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1698, serving as his father-in-law had done; he remained in this position until 1702. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and their children were: Hugh, who succeeded; William, who died young; John (d.c.1754) who was States Doctor in Batavia, and died childless after returning to Scotland; Archibald, a Major in the Dutch East India Company; Catherine (or Katherine), who married Rev. Henry Davidson, minister at Gala; and Elizabeth. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Milsingtonshiel in 1721 and 1723. His children included Margaret (b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). It is possible this is the James who married Margaret Rae in 1717. He could be the James at Outerside in 1720 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1721 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1727 when his daughter Jean was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) son of John and grandson of John of Remnaldburn and Newburgh. In 1721 he married Philadelphia, daughter of William Ballentine of Crooksyde, Cumberland. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) Hawick Bailie, recorded in 1710, 1713 and 1720, probably distinct from the earlier and later Bailies of the same name. He was one of the Bailies when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was recorded as Bailie in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for William Miller. He is probably the ‘late Bailie’ of that name who, in 1715, was given one of the keys to the Charter Chest. He may also be the ‘Bailie Scott’ referred to in 1718 in connection with resolving the dispute between Bailies.
Ruecastle and Graham, and hence was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1721 he (along with Bailie Walter Purdom) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. He is probably also the Bailie Scott appointed to collect monies at the east end of the Town in 1722 and also part of the Commission for appointing the new minister that year. It seems likely he is also the Bailie of the same name in 1727 (and referred to as John Scott, Senior). James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Branxholmtown. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield. In 1714 he (and carrier Robert Scott, possibly a relative) witnessed a birth for Walter Scoon in Commonside. James ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) first recorded name of a Cornet, in 1703. He was a weaver (as recorded in a baptismal record of 1712) and probably from the west side of the Slintrig, since the Cornet 2 years later was also from that side. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan (along with weaver John Lunn), in 1701 for weaver John Lunn (along with weaver Mungo Swan) and in 1708 for weaver Mungo Swan (along with Michael Briggs) and for weaver Thomas Turnbull (also with Michael Briggs). He is probably the same ‘James the Laird’ who is one of the members of Hawick Kirk who objected in 1711 to the appointment of Robert Cunningham as the new minister, on the grounds that he could not be heard in the west-end of the Kirk. In the 1713 baptismal record he is ‘distinctionis causa called James the Laird on the west side of Hawick’ and in 1714 he is ‘distinctionis causa called John the Laird son, weaver in Hawick’. He married Helen Lunn in June 1703, which would be immediately after his Common Riding was over, suggesting that he did not serve as Right- and Left-Hand Man (or, if they had such supporting roles in those days, he did not have to remain unmarried). Their children included: Thomas (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); Walter (b.1710); Malie (b.1712); Andrew (b.1713); and John (again, b.1714). His wife’s name is given clearly in most of the baptismal records; she is likely to be related (perhaps sister) to weaver John Lunn for whom he served as baptismal witness. In 1704 the witnesses were James Scott, ‘westport’ (presumably the Cornet of 1705) and John Clerk ‘at ye westport’ (who could possibly be the name of an unknown early Cornet and perhaps related to to Janet Clerk, wife of Thomas ‘Laird’). The witnesses in 1706 were the same John Clerk at Westport and James ‘Doctor’, in 1708 were Francis Scott in Hawick and Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands, in 1710 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot, in 1712 were weaver Thomas Briggs and James Scott ‘called Laird ther’ (which is presumably an error, perhaps for John), in 1713 were Bailie William Laing and John Laing (William’s son) and in 1714 were shoemaker John Scott and weaver John Stevenson. Based on the children’s names, one might guess that he was son of Thomas, who was recorded with the nickname ‘Laird’ in 1693; however, if the 1714 baptismal record can be trusted then his father was John, and hence Thomas may have been his uncle. His father may have been the ‘John Scott called Laird’ who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1704. He was probably also related to Robert, a shoemaker with the nickname ‘Laird’ in the 1670s to 1690s (possibly another uncle), as well as James ‘Laird’ recorded in 1676 (perhaps his grandfather). James (17th/18th C.) of Westport, merchant, son of Walter (possibly the same ‘Westport’ recorded in a ‘letter of horning’ in 1676). He was Cornet in 1705, and the main leaders of the rebel group in 1706, being fined and briefly imprisoned for his actions against the Bailies. It is probably only a coincidence that the first two known Cornets have the same name! However, he served as a witness for the first child of James ‘Laird’, in 1704. The mention of his name in the Town Book of 1705 contains the first recorded use of the word ‘Cornet’. He was surely related to other Westport Scotts. His father James was already deceased in 1706. In 1705 he witnessed (along with John Swan) a baptism for weaver John Lunn. James ‘Drover’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (17th/18th C.) drover recorded in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a weaver called Douglas. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William, who settled at Milsington. In 1717 he married Margaret Rea (probably daughter of Thomas) in Hawick, and they had a daughter Isobel; this could be the Isobel baptised in Roberton in 1733, daughter of James ‘son of Wm in milsinton’ (but hard to read). In 1726 he was recorded as a notary in Hawick. James ‘Doctor’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is recorded with his nickname when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for Black John Swan, in 1705 for weaver John Lunn, in 1706 for James ‘Laird’, in 1709 for weaver Archibald Douglas, in 1711 for wright John Pringle, in 1712 for weaver George Witgh and in 1713 for John ‘Whitegates’. He was ‘called doctor’, so that this was clearly meant as a nickname, and he is not the same man as the slightly later surgeon of the same name. He is recorded as ‘distinctione causa called Doctor’ when rebuked in 1716 for being at the drunken brawl at Thomas Huggan’s house; he was stepson to Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was at Ormiston when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick, son of Walter. In 1719 he was living in Cavers itself when he married Margaret Dryden. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1717 he was living in Denholm when he married Margaret Plerdengast. He was also living in Denholm when his son George was baptised in 1720. James (17th/18th C.) ‘chirurgeon in this town’ (i.e. surgeon in Hawick) who married Margaret Scott in 1724 at Cornhill in Northumberland. Margaret had previously been married to Patrick Scott (also in an irregular marriage), and was sister of the Laird of Burnhead. The minister was Rev. Thomas Blair, former episcopal incumbent of Lennel (Coldstream) who had been ejected in 1689 (suggesting that at least one of the families were adherents of Episcopalianism). The couple were rebuked by the Hawick Session in 1724 for ‘the trespass of their irregular marriage’. It seems likely he was not the same man as the ‘Doctor’ James, recorded earlier. However, he may be the ‘James Scott, called Westport, Doctor’, who was a Bailie in the 1720s. In 1725 he was ‘surgeren Apoticiary’ in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Burnhead (his brother-in-law). In 1737 he witnessed the baptisms of a child of Walter Tinlin (actually ‘Rob the Naig’) and a child of William Oliver (possibly ‘Auld Cash’). On his death his wife gave £25 4s to the Town for the use of the poor. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick, son of Walter. In 1719 he married Sarah, daughter of William Gledstains. Their children included: William (b.1720); Jean (b.1721); Walter (b.1723); John (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Sarah (b.1727); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald of Boonraw and John ‘Whitegates’. James (18th C.) younger of ‘Whitefield’, recorded in 1735 (according to James Wilson). He could have been a son of Walter of Whitfield and Harden. He may also be the James of Whitfield who witnessed a baptism in 1733 for Robert of Falnash. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wiltonburn in 1724. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); Bessie (again, b.1722); an unnamed child (b.1724); and Charles (b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitehaugh in 1721 and 1724 and Borthaugh in 1727. He married Janet Scott in 1720 and their children included: Anna (b.1721); William (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); Janet (b.1727). The witnesses in 1721 and 1724 were the same, namely William of Whitehaugh and Rev. Robert (brother to William of Whitehaugh); this suggests that either he or his wife came from the Whitehaugh branch. The 1724 baptism in Wilton was performed by Rev. Robert, with witnesses William of Whitehaugh, along with James (‘grandfatther to ye child’), Walter of Cokerheugh and John (‘uncle to the sd Child’). It is hence possible he was brother of William of Whitehaugh (and perhaps also John), with the 1724 witness James being his wife’s father. He could be the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John Kersel at Borthaugh in 1727 and may be the James who witnessed another for Robert of Burnhead in the same year. William (b.1740) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Hawick born to parents of the same name may also be in this family. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Borthaugh in 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1735. He is easy to confuse with the other James who was also at Borthaugh at the same time. He married Janet Wright in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); Mary (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were William Turnbull and Robert Cowan, in 1727 were John (perhaps a relative) and John Dryden, in 1729 were Thomas Wilson and George Bell and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1721 and 1727 and Scawmill (probably the same place) in 1724. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1718); Thomas (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Anna (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); James (b.1728); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie and in 1724 and 1727 were Robert and William Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife). James (18th C.) miller at Burnfoot Mill and Crawhill Mill in Wilton Parish from the 1720s until about 1750, being tenant for the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1722 he is recorded being at ‘w: burnfott mln’ (i.e. West Burnfoot Mill), in 1724 at ‘Wester burnfoot mln’, in 1727 and 1729 at ‘W. Mi1n’ (i.e. Wester Mill), at ‘E: Burnfoot’ in 1733 and at Crawhill in 1738. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine at Stirches in 1727. After being at Burnfoot Mill he moved to Hawick Mill, where he was miller in the 1750s. He married his first wife, Margaret Huntly, in 1719 in Wilton and they had at least 9 children, all baptised in Wilton: Jean (b.1721); Margaret (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); James (b.1727); Adam (b.1729); Helen (b.1731); Susanna (b.1733); Robina (b.1735); and Thomas (b.1738). He later had 2 children by his second wife, Margaret Ligerwood (also written ‘Lizzarhide’), including Isobel (b.1745). The witnesses in 1722 were William and John Scott, in 1724 were John Scott and John Huntlie, in 1727 were ‘James W. Jo. & Fran. Scotts’ (perhaps several relatives), in 1729 and 1733 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1735 were James and John Dryden, in 1738 were James Simpson (the new minister of Wilton) and Walter of Cockernheugh, and in 1745 were shoemaker John Brown and merchant Robert Scott. His sons and sons-in-law held several other local mills. He is probably the miller recorded in 1760 as witness to a baptism for Walter Purdon and Robina Scott. He is probably the miller whose son Joseph, a wright, had his house at the bottom of the Mill Port carried away in the 1767 flood. It is likely that the 1762 record ‘New Mort James Scott Crawhill’ was for his funeral. James (18th C.) son of John. In 1726 in Minto Parish he married Jean, daughter of Robert Kersel. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1729. In 1728 he married Jean Scott and their children included: Rachel (b.1729), with witnesses Adam and William (who were probably related to him or his wife). Note than another James married another Jean Scott in Wilton in 1731. Other children of these 2 couples include: Agnes (b.1731); Agnes (b.1732); Margaret (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); Isobel (b.1737); Jean (b.1739); Ann (b.1739); and Gavin (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Parkhead or Parkhill (this is hard to read) in 1732 when his son William was baptised in Roberton in 1732. He may be the James who was in Wester Parkhill in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Roberton. Perhaps the same James was recorded as ‘Servt. to Borthwick brea at . . . ’ in 1743 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton. James (18th C.) recorded at Weensland Mill in 1729 when he married Margaret Cavers in Cavers Parish. James (18th C.) recorded at Trowmill in 1729 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (1701/2–43) tenant in Doveshau Mill (in Bedrule Parish), i.e. presumably the miller. He may therefore have been an ancestor of the family that supplied many millers around Hawick. He married Margaret Borthwick (who died in 1734, aged 28). Their son William died an infant. They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Based on neighbouring gravestones, his father may have been John (who died in 1705), and his son John (who died in the Grange in 1794). Thomas in Bedrule Mill (who also died in the 18th century) may have also been related. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1742 he married Margaret Legerwood (who may have previously been married to Thomas Elliot). This was probably his second marriage. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1743), baptised in Wilton; Isobel (b.1745), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.c.1749), tacksman at Roughheugh. James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: an unnamed son (b.1739); Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1746); Gilbert (b.1747); and Marion (b.1753). Bailie James (18th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1739 and 1740. In 1739 he was one of those appointed to oversee construction of a new Parish School. He may be the Bailie recorded in 1732 when masons were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after putting up the dial of the Kirk clock. He was Bailie along with John Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He paid tax on 12 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the ‘Bailie James’ (no surname given) recorded in 1752 paying in money for ‘stones of the well’, perhaps related to fixing the ‘Teviot Brig. He may be the Bailie of that name who witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Winthrope in 1757. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He was probably also the James who was a Bailie in the 1750s and 1760s. He is probably the ‘Cuddyfit’ who lived at the bottom of the Howe-gate and was elected Bailie many times, lastly in 1765. Rev. James (1717–1773) son of William of Africa and Ashieburn and grandson of Walter of Clarilaw. He succeeded to his father’s estate in 1733. He was licensed as a preacher in 1740 and became minister of the Associate Presbytery Church at Gateshaw (near Morebattle) in 1742. He preached in the open air for 7 years, until a church was built on the Kale. In 1758 and 1759 he paid the window tax in Morebattle Parish. In 1745 he married Alice (‘Allie’), youngest daughter of Ebenezer Erskine, and she died in 1814, at the age of 94; a sketch of her exists. In 1747 he sided with the Anti-Burghers, while his wife’s family sided with the Burghers, and she would thereafter attend the Burgher Kirk in Jedburgh. He was said to be infallingly regular in his habits, so that people set their watches by him. He had 3 sons: Ebenezer (d.1756), who died young; William (d.1807), who succeeded to Ashieburn; and Ebenezer (again, d.1828), a doctor in Dalkeith. Manuscript sermons of his survive, some published in a volume in 1774. James (18th C.) resident of Whithope in 1742 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Craikhope in 1742 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains in 1752 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) cooper recorded at Meadowshaw in 1753 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. Perhaps the same cooper James was recorded witnessing a baptism in 1743 in Hawick for workman Thomas Oliver. He may be related to the cooper James who was recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in a baptismal record of 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1756 when his son Francis was baptised. James (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1766, when his daughter Helen married John Allan. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: James (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Andrew (b.1764); Francis (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Thomas Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Damside. He married Agnes Allan in Wilton Parish in 1761 and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1765); Helen (b.1767); James (b.1770); Jean (b.1772); Robert (again, b.1774); and Ketty (b.1778). The witnesses in 1770 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young. He could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. James (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1763 and 1766 when children of his were baptised in Robertson Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1763); and Helen (b.1766). He may be related to the earlier Scotts who lived at Whithope. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick who was witness to a sasine in 1764. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Margaret Cockburn in 1762, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: Agnes (b.1765); and Janet (b.1768). The 1768 baptism was witnessed by William Scott and William Bower. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for George Gray and Helen Scott (perhaps his sister), with Walter Scott as the other witness. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Betty and Margaret (b.1767); Betty (again, b.1768); James (b.1770); and Jane (b.1773). James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His daughter Isobel was born in 1765 and his daughter Christian in 1771. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (d.1770) eldest son of Robert of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was a surgeon in Carlisle and then Langholm. He married Mary Rae in 1728. He had a son James, who died without issue. He also had daughters Elizabeth, Mary, Susanna, Charlotte, Anna and Margaret. His brother John did have children, but this branch also failed in the male line (although there is some dispute over details of these generations). James (1738–1807) tenant farmer of Skelfhill, son of Robert who had farmed there before him. He previously farmed at Gorrenberry, where most of his children were born. He is recorded at Skelfhill on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Pott (or Potts), their children baptised in Castleton Parish including Jean (b.1766), Jenny (b.1772), Margaret (b.1773), James (b.1775), William (b.1776) and Gideon (b.1778). One of his children was Betty, born in 1769, who married Adam Turnbull. His son Robert later farmed at Skelfhill. He may be the same James whose son James became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1770. His son William, of Huddersfield, is recorded dying at Fahnash in 1800. He himself died at Skelfhill. James (d.c.1772) only son of James of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm, near Eskdalemuir. He married Christina Stewart. Their only son was Robert, who farmed at Holm and then at Binks. After his death there was extensive litigation over the succession to the estate and it was eventually sold. James (18th C.) of Boonraw and Sillerbithall. He farmed at Boonraw and was also Laird of Silverbuthall. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. He was an elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife began attending the Anti-Burgher church.
in Midlem, and it is said that they went to different churches each Sunday, with no disagreements in the family; but when their child was baptised in Wilton, and the minister (Rev. Simpson) used the opportunity to rebuke dissenters, he resolved to leave the established church. A meeting followed with other, like-minded people in 1763, which led to the establishment of the Green Kirk in Hawick in 1766. He was probably the James who witnessed a baptism for fellow Anti-Burgher Robert Smith in 1770 and another for William Cook in 1772 (as well as several other baptisms). As owner of Silverbuthall he got part of the former Wilton Common when it was divided, and this land was later sold to William Oliver by Thomas Scott (who must have been his heir). He was probably also the James, tenant of Wollrig, who sold part of Silverbuthall to William Robertson (of the carpet factory) and James and Walter Knox (in Damside). In 1788 he is recorded as owner of ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’, valued at £80. He was probably unrelated to the later James of Silverbuthall.

James (18th C.) tobacconist of Hawick. In 1758 he married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle. Their children included: Thomas (b.1759), John (b.1760), Mary (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1765). He may have been related to the later tobacconist. Capt. James of Forge, J.P. (d.1799) only son of William of Meikledale. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane and known as the ‘Laird of Canonbie’. He spent 16 years in the East India Company, where he was in the Bombay Marines. He was J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire. He married Mrs. Mary Coode in 1764, and she died childless. He secondly married Phoebe, who was daughter and co-heiress of James Dixon of Bath and sister-in-law of George Harris, Lord of Scringapatanam and Mysore. Their children were: William (b.1774), who died at Burt pore; Charles (1776–1822), Aide-de-camp to Lord Harris; Catherine Eliza (1777–1853), who married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson and was a poet and novelist; Phoebe Christian (1779–1804) died while visiting her uncle in Madras; Jemimah (b.1781), who died in Hawick Parish. His nickname suggests he may be a descendant of the Walter ‘Chief’. Rev. James (1738/39–1823) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, he was a member of the Established Church, and was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian congregation in Branton, Northumberland in 1774. He was inducted as 4th minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh in 1783. He served as Moderator of the Relief Synod. He was described as ‘a tall, rather primitive-looking old gentleman’, with a black suit that he used for 40 years. His will mentions his ‘only son Revd James Scott’, minister at Dalkeith and then Cowgate in Edinburgh (and said to be the prototype for ‘Mr. Wiggie’ in Dr. Moir’s ‘The Life of Mansie Waugh’), and daughters Agnes (married to a Laidlaw) and Christian (the youngest). He is said to have been a younger brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, who appears to have been a son of Robert of Falnash; however, there is clearly some confusion with the contemporary Rev. James, minister at Perth and it is unclear which of the 2 men was brother of Rev. Thomas. He paid tax for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1815 he was becoming old enough that he was supplied with an assistant, who was the next minister, James Porteous. James (1743/4–89) buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the Scotts from Lantonhill. He died at Howden in Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Bell, who died at Rueycastle in 1809, aged 67. He secondly married Alison Rae, who died at MarelFebd in 1823, aged 48. He had a son, Franncis, who died in Edinburgh in 1806, aged 35. James (b.c.1745) from Hawick, he emigrated to America in 1775 and lived in Pennsylvania. He married his second wife Margaret Tully in Hawick in 1770. His children were: John; James; Robert; Joseph; Margaret; Isabella, who married William Davis; William; Agnes; Maria; and Thomas. His will and some personal letters survive. James (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1773 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may have been related to Archibald who was at Woodburn slightly earlier. James (18th C.) recorded as possessor of a ‘House and yard’ in Minto Parish in 1780. The rental value was 10s. James (b.c.1750) herd in Wauchope. He may have been related to former tenants of Wauchope. He is probably the shepherd at Wauchope recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He may have married Nelly Irvine in Robertson Parish in 1780. He had at least one son, Adam (b.1796), who emigrated to the U.S.A. and settled in Ontario. Other children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, who may have been his include John (b.1781), Walter (b.1784), Nelly (b.1786, to James in Hillshaugh), Isabel (b.1788), Beatrice (b.1790), James (b.1792) and Robert (b.1800). James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be related to other Scotts who were skinners. James (18th C.) cooper in Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is surely related to John, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. It is also possible he was related to the cooper of the same name who was at Meadshaw in 1753. James (18th C.) listed as coachman at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Elliott. In 1786 he was a ‘House Servt.’ and was coachman in 1788 and 1791. James (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. James (d.1795) from Kirkton, his death is recorded in Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in Hawick in 1791. He was living at Greenbank in 1798 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish, with his wife acting as sponsor (suggesting that she attend the church there, but he did not). James (d.bef. 1806) tailor in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Nichol is recorded in 1806. He was probably related to other tailors called Scott. James (18th C.) recorded at ‘Newmills’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Newnill on Teviot. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Hawick, probably son of Thomas and Christian Weir. A family tradition says they were descended from Auld Wat of Harden. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Scott, who was from Ashkirk. Their children were: Thomas (b.1795), who married Janet Notman; Mary (b.1796); Gideon (b.1798); and David (1801–73), who married Janet Wilson. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Turnbull in 1781 and their children included: Thomas (1783); Jane (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Robert (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1793 were Robert Rennick and Walter of Whitehaugh (who may have been a relative). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in the period 1787–1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. He married Jean Ogilvie and their children included: Janet (b.1777); Jean (b.1779); Mary (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); Robert (b.1789); and James (b.1793). James (18th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Wilton Parish in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isabel Hogg. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1794, with witnesses Andrew Scott and George Ogilvie. James (b.c.1775) carter on the Back Row. It could be his property marked ‘Jas. Scott’ near the top of the Howe gate on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with his children James, Ninian and Christian. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreehall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was probably father of John, who was also tenant at Denholmhill. James (1746/7–1817) tenant at Upper Raw in Castle-

Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with William; they owned 3 horses. His wife was Margaret Graham, who died in 1831, aged 68. Their children included Margaret (1783/4–1803), Janet (1721/2–1804), Elizabeth (1798/9–1804), Robert (d.1804) and Janet (d.1808). James of Silverbuthall (c.1765–c.1841) teacher at the school in Yarrow, his mother was Agnes (‘Nans’) Noble. He was appointed in 1784, taking over from Alexander Wilson (with George Scott being there briefly). He dramatically increased the reputation of the school, so that it attracted boarders from as far away as Hawick. He focussed particularly on handwriting, English grammar and geography. In about 1816 a cousin of his came to help teach languages and he retired as schoolmaster in 1818. He is said to be of slight physique, even although his mother claimed he was as ‘buirdly’ as the minister; he wore a small yellow wig, as was the custom of the time. He kept bees and also gathered meteorological data, his records of 1837 being used by the minister in the New Statistical Account to describe Hawick’s weather. He was engaged to be married to Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. Professor James paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as coachman at Branxholme in 1797, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) apprentice under the care of James Hogg. He sang Hogg’s ‘Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ at the ‘rebel’ Common Riding of 1809. He was also the first official singer of ‘Teribus’ in 1819, i.e. the first Common Riding ‘Sang Singer’. He may be the same James who was imprisoned along with James Hogg in 1817 for illegally organising against the stocking-maker employers. He was still alive in 1863 when his recollections provided information for Robert Murray’s article on Hogg. He could be the James (b.c.1794) from Cavers Parish, living on the Loan in 1841, in Orrock Place in 1851 and at 9 Howegate in 1861, whose wife was Isabella and children included Walter (or Peter), Thomas, Benjamin, Gideon, Catherine and Helen. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Renwick and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1798); Francis (b.1808); and Margaret (b.1811). James (b.1775/6) High Street tobacconist. He served as Town Treasurer, and also helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was one of the founders members of Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a tobacconist in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories; he may also be the same as the general shopkeeper listed in 1837. His shop was at No. 40 High Street and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and was probably the ‘Scott of Burnhead’ who provided the version of the Hornshole story, which was included in Wilson’s book; this was the first published account of the origin of the Burgh Standard. In 1809 he married Elizabeth, daughter of deceased Hawick draper George Turnbull. According to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret, and so he presumably re-married. His children included: William (1809–77), Cornet, who helped with the business, and was later a farmer at Burnhead; George (b.1811); Elizabeth; and Margaret (b.1815). His premises (at 40 High Street) are marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. A portrait of him exists. Based on family names, he may be the James, son of William and Margaret Scott, born in Hawick in 1773. James of Whitehaugh (1775–1852) 3rd son of John. He succeeded to the Lairdship on the death of his brother Walter in 1841. He was the last of the Scott Lairds. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. His residence for many years was at Whitslade. In 1841 he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his elder brother Walter and in 1851 he is at ‘Whitehaugh-place’ with his sister Agnes Stavert, niece Margaret Stavert and 4 servants. He died unmarried. His nephew Capt. John Chisholme inherited the estates (after adding ‘Scott’ to his name). He is buried in Whitehaugh Aisle, along with his brother Walter. James (18th/19th C.) probably son of Gideon and Agnes Tudhope baptised in Hawick Parish in 1779. He may have been half-brother of millwright Gideon. He worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway in the 1820s, along with his brother William. James of Ellem (d.bef. 1854) 2nd son of John of Middedgehope, who was a younger son of William of Woll. His wife was Agnes, and in 1854, when she was her widow, she purchased Teviot Bank from his nephew John Scott, W.S. They had a son, William John, who married Terese N. Harris. James (c.1780–1820) eldest son of Robert. He farmed at Skelfhill like his father before him. He passed on the lease to William Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. James (b.c.1785) farmer in Hawick, who may have been the older brother of ‘Robbie the Cow’. He could be the ‘Jas. Scott’ shown at 43 High Steet on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he appears to be living with Robert, who was an accountant. James (b.1787/8) farm worker who lived at Wiltonburn Cottages. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841, when he was hind at Wiltonburn. In 1851 he was a ‘hind or ploughman’ at Wiltonburn. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and they had a daughter Christian. James (1788–1855) son of William and Janet Jack. He was a ploughman, working nearly all his life in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was listed in Craeling. He firstly married Ann Dryden and had children: Rachel (b.1819/20); William (b.1820/1); and George (b.1822/3). He secondly married Margaret Byers (from Kirkton Parish), who died in 1880, aged 85, and their children were: Janet (b.1826/7); Walter (b.1828/9); Robert (b.1830/1); Jane (b.1832/3); Andrew (b.1835/6); and Richard (b.1839/40). He died at Ulston and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. James (1789–1810) 5th son of Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was born in Hawick Parish. He worked with the East India Company, travelling to India in 1806 and serving in a Madras native infantry regiment. He died unmarried. James ‘Blind Jamie’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick in the early 1800s. In 1822 the deaths are recorded of 2 of his infant sons. He may have run a boarding house or inn of some kind, since in 1822 it is recorded that ‘A Poor Woman’s Daughter Died at Blind Jammie’. James (b.1790/1) from Ancrum, he was a joiner on Bourtree Place in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he was living in ‘Mr McKie’s house oppos. Bourtree place’. He was listed as ‘James & Son, East end’, joiners and a wheelwrights in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Cecily and they had a son John. James (b.1790/1) from Hawick, he was a gardener in Newcastle, living on Douglas Square. In 1851 he was at about 4 Whitchester Lane. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Elizabeth. James (1791/2–1857) mason in Newcastle. In 1841 he was on South Hermitage Street and in 1851 he was at about 1 Walter Street. He married Margaret Scott, from Canonbie, who died in 1859, aged 63. Their children included: Andrew (1815/6–58), who died on the passage from India; William (1821/2–55), who died in Hamilton, Ontario; Mary Ann (b.1830); Jane (b.1833); James (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Robert (d.1841), who died in infancy. He is buried at Ettleton. James of Boghall (d.bef. 1811). His daughters Isobel, Janet, Margaret and Jane exchanged parts of Boghall with the lands of Boonraw, with Henry Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1811–18. He may have been son of Walter of Boghall, who is recorded in 1757. Rev. James (1799–1864) born in Cavers, son of schoolmaster Andrew and Margaret Telfer. He studied at Edinburgh University and became a minister at Torphichen in 1827, moving to Dalmeny in 1829 and Dirleton in 1843. He married a daughter of Walter Baird and they had a large family. Some of his sermons were published in 1865. James (19th C.) son of shepherd George and Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’). He was a farmer at Overhall and well known as a sheep dog trainer. James of Allanshaws (1795–bef. 1863) 2nd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood, and brother of William in Girnwood. He was a cattle dealer and also farmed at Eilrig and Allanshaws. He succeeded his uncle William to the lease on the farm of Milisington, but lost it in 1831. He was also based for a while at the Crescent, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He could be the James Scott whose property is marked at about No. 12 Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1845 he discharged a bond of his uncle's to Elliot of Harwood. His wife was Mary. Their daughter Mary Anne married Rev. John Thomson of St. John’s Church. James (b.1800/1) skinner at Crowbyres in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a cattle-driver living on the High Street. He could be partner in either ‘Nichael & Scott, Punch Bowl close’ or ‘Scott & Michie, Teviot square’, both of which are skinners listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Barbara and their children included Janet, Margaret, John, Walter, Elizabeth and George. In 1861 he was a skinner at 20 High Street. James (b.1800/1) wright in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he is listed on the north side of Main Street. His children included Jessie, John, James, William C. and Andrew. James (b.1802/3) mill foreman. He was listed as a weaver on Damside in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1841 he was living on Damside and in 1851 on Wilton Path, with his brother Walter, sister Margaret, son John and niece Jessie. He was probably father of John ‘the Gover’, who was living with his aunt Margaret in 1861. James (1802/3–79) son of Walter, farmer at Howden near Jedburgh, and Christian Grieve. He lived at Hassendean Bank. He married Euphemia Biggar, who died in 1841, aged 30. Their children included: Elizabeth (1831/2–1907); James (1833/4–60; Christina (1838/9–1917); and Margaret (1841/2–82). James (b.1803) born in Robertson Parish, son of Walter and Mary Young. He was a shepherd at Eilrig and elsewhere. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Eilrig. He was at the Flex in 1861 and was already a widower by then, living with his son John, daughter Margaret and brother-in-law Thomas Graham. He married Helen Hogg, who died in 1848, aged 47. Their children included: Janet (b.1825); Walter (b.1826); Mary (b.1828); Alexander (b.1829); James (b.1832); Henry (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); William (b.1840); John (b.1842); and Thomas (b.1844). He died in 1875 and was buried in Robertson Cemetery. James (b.1804/5) probably son of millwright Gideon. He worked as an engineer and millwright in Hawick. He was probably the millwright of that name who is recorded constructing a 300 seat stand (opposite the Steward’s stand) for the afternoon Games at the Common Riding of 1834. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wrapped up in 1842 he was one of the partners. In 1841 he was living at 8 Cross Wynd with his mother Margaret and siblings May, Gilbert and Andrew. By 1851 he was living with his sister, Mary Kerr, in her boarding house at 6 Cross Wynd. He appears not to have married, and probably died before 1861. James (b.1805) son of Andrew and Joan Hope, he was born in Melrose. He was a farmer living in Lilliesleaf in 1841, where his first 3 children were born. He later moved to be tenant farmer at Coliforthill. He was recorded there in 1851 as farmer of 281 acres, employing 5 labourers, and also in 1861. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Jane (probably Wilson) and their children included Andrew, Isabella, Thomas, Alexander, John, Joanna, James and George. James (b.c.1805) shepherd at Eilrig. He was recorded there in 1851, when he was already a widower. His children included Mary, Henry, Margaret, William, John and Thomas. James (19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He worked on renovations at Branxholme Castle in 1837. James (b.c.1810) toll-gate keeper at Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded there in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Janet, Mary, Margaret and Robert. James (b.c.1810) skinner on the High Street. In 1841 he was at about No. 50, while in 1851 his widow (listed as ‘formerly skinner’) and family were at about No. 6. He could have been partner in either ‘Nichael & Scott, Punch Bowl close’ or ‘Scott & Michie, Teviot square’, both of which are listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Ann, Margaret, John, Jane, Wilhelmina, Helen, James and Isabella. James (b.1810/1) recorded as an ‘Agent’, at 4 Teviot Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Ann. James (b.1816/7) from Kilmallie, near Inverness. In 1851 he was a machine-maker living at Weensland. He was manager of the gas-works in Hawick in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included James (married to Helen), Margaret, Walter, Andrew, Isabella, Adam, Alexander, John and Robert. James (b.1819/20) from Ettrick Parish. In 1851 he was a coachman at Appletreehall. In 1861 he was listed as an innkeeper at the back house of 6 High Street, which was the Fleece Inn. In 1868 he was listed as innkeeper of the Victoria Hotel. His wife was Margaret from Wilton and they had a daughter Mary, who was born in Ashkirk Parish. James (b.1820/1) from Portobello, he was schoolmaster in Ashkirk. He is recorded there in 1851, with his sister Helen. James (b.1821/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a joiner, living at Allanhaugh Mill in 1851. His wife was Agnes and their children included Beatrice and John. James (b.1821/2) teacher of English at the small school at Hermitage in the 1850s.
and 60s. In 1852 he was listed as teacher of the ‘Auxiliary Parochial’ school at Hermitage. He was son of Walter, farmer at Netherraw. James (b.1824/5) shepherd at Singdean in 1861. His wife was Helen and their children included Isabella, Walter and Margaret. His brother Andrew was also at Singdean in 1861. James (1832/3–1908) son of George, he was born at Bedrule. As a youth he worked for Mr. Turnbull of Spittal-on-Rule, then worked at Kinninghall and Greenriver, then briefly at Hawthornside. In 1868 he became farm steward at Hallrule, and remained there for about 34 years. He later became tenant at Bonthecott Bridge, then at East Fodderlee. In 1864 he married Ellen (or Helen), daughter of Walter Smith, and she died in 1908, aged 73. Their children included: Isabella, who died young; and Margaret, who married Adam Young. James W. (b.1835/6) from Clarilaw, he was teacher at Cogsmill. He is recorded there in 1857, and still there in the early 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret W. and Archibald. James (1836–1921) son of Henry, farmer at Stelshaw. His sister Marion married Thomas of Milsington. He married Elizabeth Ewart, who died at Stelshaw in 1881, aged 41. Their children included: James (d.1882), who died young at Langleyburn; Grace (1873/4–97), who died in Hawick; Janet (1865/6–99), who died at Kershope; and Mina (1871/2–99). James (19th C.) farmer at Southdean Glebe, recorded there in 1866. James (1844–1928) born at Midlem Burn, a few miles from Selkirk, son of William, who was a mason, his mother being a sister of Rev. Sturrock of the Seccession Kirk at Midlem. He spent 20 years as a mason in Galashiels, moving to Selkirk in 1878. Always interested in nature, and inspired by the great meteor display of 1885, he became fascinated by astronomy and over 5 winters he constructed an astronomical clock (that was 8 feet high and 5 feet wide). This was followed by the construction of a ‘Jupiter clock’, then a ‘solar clock’ and a fourth instrument to demonstrate the causes of the seasons for children. These were shown at the Scottish National Exhibition and later gifted to the Burgh of Selkirk. However, it may be that only one of them survives. James (19th C.) Town Crier of Hawick in the 1880s. James (19th C.) grocer of Wellington Street, who later became an usher with the Court of Session. James (19th C.) tanner in Hawick, related to the ‘Whack’ Scotts. He married Margaret, daughter of Hawick jallor Michael Anderson. Their children were James, Margaret and Michael. James (1852/3–1908) baker at 25 Howegate. He married Margaret, sister of newspaper proprietor James Edgar, and she died in 1939, aged 84. Rev. James Brand (19th/20th C.) born in Milnathort, he became minister of East Bank Church in 1900, having been at Saltcoats West (Erskine Church) from 1890. He was involved in the temperance movement. His name is usually written ‘J. Brand’. He moved to Crail, then Arran in 1925 and Corsock in 1926. James (19th/20th C.) Governor of Hawick Poorhouse in the late 1800s, the precise dates being unclear. James (d.1936) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother Thomas. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. He was killed by a bull in 1936. James Brydon (1894–1958) younger son of Peter and brother of George. He served in WWI. Like his elder brother he was a Director at Pesco’s, taking on this role in 1925 and being the driving force behind the company until his death. In 1918 he married Violet Irene, daughter of John Noble Pillans. Their children were: Peter Brydon (1920–43), who lived in Teddington and died in Burma; and Christine Mary (1925–2001), who lived in Denholm, married Donald Robert McCormick and died in Red Deer. He decided not to live on Sunnyhill along with other family members, but instead moved to Denholm Lodge. He donated a baptismal font to Denholm Kirk in memory of his son Peter. He died in Milan, Italy. Maj. James Kenny Courtney of Burnhead (b.1928) succeeded from his uncle, Lt.-Col. William Scott-Watson. Educated at Marlborough and Sandhurst, he served in the Hussars and was Assistant Division Commander in Western Australia, Tasmania and Hong Kong. He matriculated arms in 1977 and has no direct ties to the Hawick area. Jane ‘Janie’ (1788/9–1837) wife of Adam Turnbull, bookseller of Jedburgh. She is one of the few people recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. She must have had a connection with the Rulewater area. Jane nee Veitch (b.1800/1) from Langholm, she is recorded as an ironmonger in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her husband was gunmaker and ironmonger Joseph. In the 1851 census she is a widow living at about 21 High Street, employing 4 men in the ironmonger’s and tinsmith’s business. She is also listed as a tin-plate worker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Jane (b.1783/4) resident of Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in 1841. She is listed as ‘Ind.’, suggesting that she was a widow with some means. Presumably the same woman is recorded as ‘Jessie’ at Brieryshaw.
Cottage in Ewesdale on the 1851 census; she is described as an unmarried ‘Annuitant’. In 1861 she was ‘Fund Holder’ living alone at Brieryshaw Cottage. Jane (b.c.1805) recorded as ‘Dealer in Bread &c.’ on Wilton Damside on the 1841 census. She was living with Agnes, possibly a sister, and children William Whitson and James Hardie. Jane (b.1833/4) grocer in Newcastleton. She was on Douglas Square in 1861, living with her brother James (a mason), sister Mary Ann Scott and niece Margaret. Janet (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jonete Scot’ in 1487 in a charter for lands in Glasgow. Probably the same ‘Jonete’ is also listed in another charter in 1497, along with Alexander. It is possible that the same Janet leased the lands of ‘Newtoun of Reras’in Largs in 1481. It is unclear how she might be related to other Scotts. Janet (16th C.) daughter and heir of Walter of Howpasley, who died at Flodden. She must have been quite young when he died, since she did not succeed to his lands until 1530, before which she was under the guardianship of her uncle Robert. Her brother Robert succeeded to the main lands of Howpasley, while she inherited Appletreehall and Midshiels. She married Thomas MacDowell (or McDougal) of Makerstoun. With his consent in 1532/3 she transferred the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels to her uncle Robert Scott, this being confirmed by the King James V in 1536. She was still alive in 1540, when Sir Walter of Branxholme (then in ward) was given permission to pursue legal proceedings against her. Her seal of 1532 shows a ‘bend sinister’ (i.e. the wrong way, probably in error) bearing 3 stars, with a bird and a crescent on the shield. Janet (16th C.) listed in 1539/40 as widow of Robert ‘Elwand of [Toungtis?]’ when she purchased the lands of ‘lec rot’ in the Mains of Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley. She paid 120 pounds Scots for the farm and Robert promised to guarantee her and her heirs peaceful possession of the lands until he paid them the same. It is unclear if it is just a coincidence that the former heiress of the lands of Appletreehall was also called Janet Scott (or if perhaps there is confusion over the two nearly contemporary Roberts of Howpasley). Janet née Beaton (1519–1569) daughter of Sir John Beaton of Creich and Janet Hay. She was the third wife of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and survived her husband by 16 years. She is supposed to have ridden in full armour at the head of 200 Scotts in order to seize the Laird of Cranston at the Kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1559; it may be that he was suspected of being involved in the murder of her husband in 1552. She was also implicated in intrigues involving Bothwell and Queen Mary, and was popularly believed to employ witchcraft. She had married Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, then Simon Preston of Craigmiller and thirdly Sir Walter. She apparently divorced her 2nd husband (the Provost of Edinburgh) and Walter divorced his 2nd wife, so that the two could marry. The inter-relationships of their children are extremely convoluted. For example, her sister Grizel married Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, her step-son! She may also have been the mother of Walter of Goldielands, as well as David of Stobiegate. In 1542 there was a discharge for her rights to the land of Cranston Riddell and Muirhouse in Edinburgh, and Blackgrain, Catslack and Montbenger in Selkirkshire. In 1550 her son James Crichton leased to her for 19 years the lands of Cranston Riddell, together with Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain. In 1552/3 she and her daughters, Grizel, Dorothy, Janet and Margaret were granted the teinds of Lessuden for 19 years. She held the superiority of the lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall until her death. In 1564 she had an order from Mary, Queen of Scots, recalling the bond made in 1552 between the Scotts and the Kers, which was broken by the Kers murdering her husband, and instructing her to pursue justice for the breaking of the bond (and not formally for the murder!). In 1567 she was instructed to present her ‘householdman and servant’, Dand Ker ‘in Scheilstokbrais’, who was among men accused of raiding into England. She is fictionally represented by ‘the Lady’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Of noble race the Ladye came, Her father was a clerk of fame, Of Bethune’s line of Picardie: He learn’d the art that none may name . . . ’[SWS]. Janet ‘Jean’ (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and his 3rd wife Janet Beaton; she may have been born before they were married. She herself married John Cranston of that Ilk (who held lands in and around Denholm, and died in 1552); she bore his successor Sir William Cranston. In 1564/5 she was contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside, as part of the arrangements to settle the feud between the 2 families; however, this never happened, since Sir Walter Ker of Cessford was fined 1000 merks in 1577/8 (confirmed in 1579) for the marriage not taking place. In 1580 she is recorded as wife of Robert of Haining. Janet (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Bessie and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Janet (d.c.1661) daughter of Sir William of Harden and grand-daughter of ‘Auld Wat’. In 1639 she may have married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh (although some histories say he married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross). In 1661 her brother Walter of Raeburn was served as her heir. Janet (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Janet Jean (1750–1824) eldest surviving daughter of William Scott of Woll and Jean Balfour. She is said to have been one of 5 (or perhaps 6) daughters who were over 6 feet tall. In 1771 she married James Grieve, younger brother of the tenant of Branxholme Park, but he died 2 years later. In 1792 she secondly married Rev. Benjamin Dickison, minister of Kirkton and later Hobkirk. She is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Janet Jan (b.c.1785) grocer at Whiteknowe in Castleton Parish. She is recorded there in 1841, as a widow, with her son James and also Jane Webb. She married James Kitchen (also written ‘Ketchin’ and variants), who lived at Roughley. Jasper (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Mangerton in Castleton Parish. His forename is not common in the family. Jean Jean (16th C.) sister of Scott of Bucchleuch (although it is not clear which one). She married Gavin Eliott of Stobs, who was a descendant of the Elliots of Redheugh; it has been suggested that her marriage was an attempt to end the feud between the 2 families in the 1560s. The couple owned the ‘sex merkland of Chalmer-lane Newtoun’ in 1573, when they complained that Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton, attacked her and her husband’s servant James Storie. Jean Jean (16th/17th C.). She helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a band of fellow Scotts to slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. Most of the prepetrators were brought to court by Sir William Douglas, and eventually hanged, although the two ladies were spared, along with William Scott ‘callet of Satchellis’ who was presumably her son. She may have been the widow of Robert of Satchells and mother of Captain Walter, in which case she was daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Jean Jean ‘Holland’s Jean’ (16th/17th C.) natural daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Bucchleuch, her mother probably being Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland. Her name suggests that she was born when the Earl was fighting in the Dutch Wars, 1604–9. She married Robert Scott of Whitslade, but they appear to have had no surviving male heirs. Jean Jean (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She was probably a shopkeeper or lodging house keeper. Jean Jean (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that she had a larger house or perhaps an inn. It is possible she was the same woman known as ‘Jean the Ranter’ in the poem ‘The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme’. John John (d.1203) referred to by English historians around 1200 as ‘Joannes Scotus’. He may have been from Cheshire, but of Scottish parentage, with his mother being sister of Matthew Kynynmount, Bishop of Aberdeen. He was appointed Bishop of St. Andrews in 1178, but this was against the wishes of King William, who wanted the position for his chaplain, Hugh. He appealed to the Pope, and was successful, but William nevertheless banished him from the kingdom. This led to Hugh being excommunicated, followed by the King himself, with the whole of Scotland placed under interdict. After the Pope died, and a new one was installed, an agreement was reached in which Hugh became Bishop of St. Andrews and he became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1182/3. It seems unlikely he was related to anyone else of the surname Scott. John John (12th/13th C.) clerk, recorded as ‘Master John le Scot’ in Reading in 1226/7. Alicia of Oxford appealed that he should be tried before the Bishop of Lincoln, for an unspecified crime. John John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Scotus’ in 1228 when an assize was appointed by the Sheriff of York, for men whom he accused of larceny and felony. He was stated to be in the King’s prison at Appleby. John John (13th C.) listed as ‘John the Scot’ in 1231 in London, when he was found guilty of masquerading as a clergyman and stealing money from merchants. Presumably a different ‘John the Scot’ was recorded in 1225/6 in relation to a boat from Scotland that had been arrested at Lynn. Sir John Sir John (d.1249) son of David, Earl of Huntingdon, who was brother of King William the Lion. He as known as ‘John Scot’, but it is unclear if he was related to anyone else with this appellation. He was knighted at Roxburgh Castle in 1223. He also became Earl of Huntingdon and of Chester. He is probably the ‘John le Scot’ recorded in 1227, when the Sheriff of Huntingdon made a demand on the men in his bailliary. He married a daughter of Llewellyn, King of Wales. John John (13th C.) recorded in 1256 as being ‘of Schele’ in a set of John (13th C.) son of William ‘le Scot’, he was recorded in 1266 in a court case in York. ‘Alesia de Lacy’ was his heir and had a case against Peter, sacrist of the chapel of York. John of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick. He held the lands of Great Reston, which had previously belonged to his father. The land appears to have been gifted to Coldingham Priory and then purchased by him. He is also recorded in another document of Coldingham in 1261/2. He was succeeded by his brother Patrick, some time in the 1270s. John (13th C.) mentioned in 1261 as son and heir of William ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannes Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He could be the same man as ‘Johannes Scot de Schele’, who is recorded in a separate case. He could also be the John ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (along with Nicholas and Henry). ‘Johannem Scot’ is listed in 1279 in a case related to lands in Westmorland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannem Scot’, foreseter of ‘Beleassis’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case in Coquetdale. Probably a different man of the same name was accused of many robberies, fined and declared a fugitive. John (13th C.) resident of Glasgow. In 1283 he was ‘Johanne Scot’ when he witnessed the sale of a plot of land in Rottenrow. John (13th C.) recorded in 1285 as ‘Master Johannis Scoti de Moneedy’, rector of schools of St. Andrews. He was tenant of the lands of Monethy (in Fife) in 1293 and 1294, and probably belonged to the Balweary branch. He may be the Master John who received the benefice of Brechin in 1274, also holding the church of Cortachy (in Angus). John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni le Scot, majori Novi Castri super Tynam’ in 1290 in a list of provisions made at Berwick for the English King. He was thus presumably a resident of the Newcastle area. He could be the same ‘Johannes Scot, ballivus’ in Tynedale who was listed in another document for Edward in 1292. John (13th/14th C.) resident of Linlithgow who was involved in a case of trespass in 1299. He was also in another such case in 1302, and was also accused of stealing someone else’s cattle in the same year. His name is given as ‘Johanne Scotte’. John (13th/14th C.) listed among the men of Edinburgh as ‘John le Scot’ when they paid homage to Edward I in 1296. In 1296 he is listed among Edinburgh men in the roll of Scotsmen who renounced their treaty with France in order to reconcile with King Edward. He is probably the same man as the burgess of Haddington who was on an inquest in 1296 and was on a jury in 1312. It is possible he was the same John who was on an inquest in 1296 regarding the lands of Ballencrief in East Lothian. John ‘the Lameter’ (14th C.) second son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn (or possibly of Sir Richard). However, information about these generations is quite uncertain. He was said in some early family histories to be the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton and Harden, among other branches. Walter, 1st Laird of Synton was his son. It is said that he attended school at St. Mingo’s in Glasgow and married in a way that may have been disagreeable to his father. His grandson is supposed to have been Walter ‘the Ratton’, who was 1st Laird of Synton. However, most of the claimed details of his life have no documentary support. John (14th C.) recorded resigning the lands of ‘Gillastoun’ in Fife sometime during the reign of David II. He appears to have lost the lands through forfeiture. It is unclear how he was related to other Fifeshire Scotts. John (14th C.) resident of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1360s. He received an annuity from the mills of Haddington in the period 1361–1373. In 1375 the annuity was paid to his heirs and he was presumably deceased by then. It seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Bailie of Haddington of the same name and probably father of the Bailie John recorded in the following decades. John (14th C.) Bailie of Linlithgow mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1364. He was probably related to other early Scots with a Linlithgow connection. John (14th C.) Bailie of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–99. He rendered the accounts of North in 1389–92. He was surely a descendant of the John from a few decades earlier. John (14th C.) custom’s officer in Inverness in the period 1365–69 according to the Exchequer Rolls. His ship was hired for building operations at St. Monands in 1366 and 1369. He was further recorded as a Burgess of Inverness during the reign of David II, giving a donation to the Lady Chapel. He was Bailie of Inverness according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1389. John of Headshaw (14th/15th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton (although there generations are very uncertain). He may have been father of Walter of Headshaw. It is possible he was brother of Robert of Stirches, as well as possibly James in Ashkirk. John (15th

C.) witnessed the charter passing the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9. His designation is not given, so it is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts. John (15th C.) served as the King’s Ranger in the 1440s and 50s, when his name occurs many times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1440 he was given his fee for the previous 2 years, for the audit associated with Crown lands in Arran and Bute. He was granted the lease of the lands of ‘Barrone’ (probably on Bute) for his fee throughout the 1440s and his name occurs associated with audits in Glasgow in 1453 and 1454. He was recorded as a courier in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1450s and 60s (although he is listed as ‘quondam’ in 1455, suggesting he may have died and that there are thus 2 generations of John here). He was paid his fee relating to Bute and Arran in 1455 and 1462 and in 1468 relating to Ayr. Perhaps the same John is recorded as a servant of the Queen in 1458. His son Ewen also acted as Ranger until the early 1450s, but then his name disappears. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Burnhead (15th C.) probably 2nd son of James of Kirkurd, who was a younger son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He received a charter for the lands of Over Newhall from his father in 1492 (it has also been suggested that he could have been a younger son of Sir Walter, but that seems unlikely). ‘Over Newhall’ was later known as Burnhead; he was thus the 2nd Laird of Burnhead. He witnessed the charter in 1494 in which his father granted Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his brother David; there he is stated to be his father James’ heir apparent. He is probably the John, son of James of Falside (as well as Kirkurd and Hassendean), who in 1501 had a lease of Falside along with his mother Margaret, on the renunciation of the lands by his father. Also in 1501 he acted as pledge for Robert of Stirkshaws. He was additionally designated ‘of Crowhill’ and may have had a son William, although these generations seem confused. John of Burnhead may have been his successor, although other accounts suggest he died without a male heir. John 4th Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of Walter, his mother being a Scott of Hassendean. He married a daughter of Quentin Riddell of that Ilk, but died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (15th C.) arrested in 1452 as a rebel, with John Tweeddale being paid a fee for his capture. This is listed under business at Linlithgow in the Exchequer Rolls, but it is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John (15th C.) owner of a ‘tenement’ on the south side of Hawick, described in Hawick’s earliest known sasine of 1453. His piece of land was to the west of the property passing from John Turnbull to Robert White. John (15th C.) Bailie of Montrose. He was recorded several times in the Exchequer Rolls of 1450s and 60s as customs officer in Montrose. Probably the same John was also recorded in association with the customs in Arbroath in 1445. John (15th C.) named first on the 1463/4 list of local men rewarded by the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was surely related to some of the other Scotts listed, e.g. Robert of Todshaw, who came after him. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Symentoun and Wester Lymmeris’ in Lanarkshire in 1466. He may have been the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) rendered the accounts for Sir David, as Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1473. He may have been a relative of Sir David. John (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to Kirkurd and David Scott of Buccleuch. He is listed as ‘Johanne Scot’ along with William; they may both have been closely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. John (15th C.) held a sasine for Fingask and part of ‘Rate’ in Perthshire in 1476. It is unclear how he was related to other Johns. John (15th C.) customs officer in Inverkeithing in at least the period 1475–85. He also served as Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1482. He was surely related to David (perhaps his father), who served in the same role in Inverkeithing at about the same time. Either he or a later John was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1511. Perhaps the same John was customs officer at Montrose in 1471. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Ogingstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. His name was listed first, with other Scotts there being William, junior, Katherine and Robert. They were surely all related. John (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for the lands to pass to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Scot’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1483 given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean, probably the same John is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Clarilaw in the Barony of Hassendean, which passed from the old Baron to the new Baron in 1493/4. It is possible he is the same as John of Burnhead or John of Thirlestane. John of Thirlestane (15th C.) recorded in a charter of 1483, when he gained the (western) half barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw. He may thus be the first Scott to hold the half barony, although it is unclear exactly who he was. He is also referred to as ‘of Huntlee, in the forest of Ettrick’. He may have been connected with the Howpasley and Tushielaw branch, since Alexander Scott (Clerk of the Rolls for Scotland) was one of the witnesses of the 1483 confirmation (however, it seems too early for him to be the John of Thirlestane, who was probably the grandson of Alexander of Howpasley). It also seems likely he was related to Robert of Muirhouse and Whames, who received the lands of Underchesters from Henry Wardlaw a year earlier. One possibility is that he was another son of the first Walter of Buccleuch, hence brother of David of Buccleuch, Alexander of Howpasley and James of Kirkurd and Hassendeane. He was still Baron of Wilton in 1491, when he was asked by the King to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Harden. He had a confirming charter for the barony in 1494/5, and was there referred to as ‘Johannis Scot de Weltoun’ in Roxburghshire. He was probably not closely related to Stephen ‘of Weltoun’ (which were other lands, near the modern Cumbernauld) or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine, who is recorded holding lands in Wilton in 1493. By 1506 the half Barony of Wilton was held by the Earl of Bothwell, and so he must have lost the lands by then (or died). He may be the John who acted as Deputy Warden for Ettrick (for Walter Scott) in 1494/5. It is not known if he had any children and it is unclear who succeeded him as Laird of Thirlestane, but there was a William of Thirlestane mentioned in 1502, probably son of David of Tushielaw. John (15th C.) notary in 1484/5 for the charter in which Sir David of Branhholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). Since all the signatories are relatively local he was probably a local cleric. However, this is likely to have been too early for him to be the notary John who is recorded in the period 1527 to 1540. Probably the same ‘Magistro Johanne Scot’ was Rector of Rankleburn in 1491/2 when he witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme (and was bequeathed 40 shillings). He was probably related to Sir David, as well as to the primary witness, William, Rector of Southdean. John (15th C.) recorded among debtors in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme. He owed 15 nobles and is listed as ‘Johannes Scote eius filius’, suggesting that he was a son of Sir David. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Thirlestane and Wilton. John (15th C.) listed as ‘Johanni Scote, pincerne’ (i.e. cup-bearer or butler) in 1491/2 when he was bequeathed 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branhholme. John of Toshawhaugh (15th C.) leased the east steadings of Langhope in the period 1486–1492. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when his surety, John of Whit haugh was fined for his non-appearance. He was ‘in braidlee’, which may have been Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined again in 1494/5, along with John, son of Alexander in Broadlee. John (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 as son of Alexander in Broadlee. He was recorded right after John in Broadlee, and hence a different man. He was surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. He was fined for a second time in 1494/5. John of Deloraine (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being called because of his lands in ‘wiltoun’. It is unclear what lands in Wilton these were (but it is not impossible that he held the half Barony and was hence the same man as John of Thirlestane). He could be the John who obtained remission along with William Inglis at the Justice-aire of Selkirk in 1494/5, recorded in the King’s Treasurer’s accounts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes, this included resetting ‘John Rede and John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, resetting Hector Armstrong, stealing horses and goods, abetting the English, communing with Robert, Philip and Andrew Scott when they were at the horn, helping John son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden to steal sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, killing a man called ‘Colthride’ and resetting thieves of Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Robert of Whitchesters was surety for him. Also in 1494/5 his eldest son Robert was surety for John Reid in Singlie; perhaps the same Robert of Deloraine was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes in 1494/5. His son Robert, called ‘Bellit Robin’ was recorded in 1502. He was probably also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connections of this branch of the family are unknown. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, meant, or how he might have been related to other Scotts of Tushielaw. Along with ‘John Rede’, John of Deloraine had remission for resetting him; his crimes included stealing sheep from ‘Thomas Johnsone, furth of Quhithop’. He was also listed as ‘Johannes scott-stow in tuschelaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing 26 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 16 sheep from James Scott in Falside; stealing a horse from Broadmeadow; stealing 3 oxen and 60 sheep from William Ker in Yair; for common theft and delivery of stolen goods before his previous compounding; and for stealing 4 head of cattle and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair. His surety was John Murray of Hangleshaw. He was presumably tenant in Tushielaw, but it is unclear what the ‘stow’ John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘gener’ (i.e. son-in-law) to William Little in Thornycleuch. He was found to be infrum at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, but fined £10. John (15th C.) son of Henry in ‘conwale riggis’. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance in Selkirk. John (15th C.) tenant in ‘ernheuch’ (i.e. Erncleuch) in 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, his crimes including: stealing 2 cows from Hartern; bringing in thieves “de levyn’ to raid Thomas Middlemas in Ploro; the slaughter of Middlemas’ wife and 2 sons; stealing a black horse from Jedburgh; stealing 16 sheep; stealing 5 head of cattle at different times from Hartern, as well as goods; and for common theft before the date of his previous compounding. His sureties were Robert of Allanhaugh and Adam in Annelshope. He may also be the John who was allowed to ‘compone’ along with Adam in Annelshope in 1494/5, for a set of rieving crimes. He is recorded in 1494/5 having received remission from the King. John ‘Little’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘parvo Johanne scot’. He had sheep stolen from him at Howford by David Launder and others, for which Launder was allowed to ‘compone’. It is unclear if he was related to later Scotts of Howford. John (15th/16th C.) husband of Margaret and father of Alexander. He was already deceased in 1499 when his widow and son were granted the East stead of Launghope and in 1501 when they were granted the Middle stead. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Northhous’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1498 when he and John Turnbull (from Dryden) received a pardon for their crimes of assisting the English ‘of Levin’ (presumably relating to a particular raid). He is ‘Johanne Scot de Northhous’ in 1500 when he witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme. In 1501 he was pledge for David Elphinstone when he was assigned the farm of Glensax in Ettrick (he may thus be the John who had 7 stirks stolen from Glensax by Sir Thomas Turnbull in Phaup according to the Justice-aire of 1494/5). He may be the same John in ‘Northhous’ who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from him by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510, which, together with other crimes, led to Dalgleish’s execution. John (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Johannem Scot’. 2 Roberts are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. John (15th/16th C.) described in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1499/1500 as ‘in Wiltoun’ when he received remission for helping the rebels ‘of Levin’ in murder, pillage etc. John of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was fined for the non-appearance of John in Broadlee. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis scot de quithalch’. Perhaps the same man is listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined; he appears there as ‘Johannis Scot in Quithauch’. In 1502 he was ‘in quithalch’ when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from Adam Scott out of Kershope, and separately for stealing cattle from John Romanno of Romanno, with Robert in Synton as his surety. He was probably related to the slightly earlier Walter of Whitehaugh, as well as later Scotts of Whitehaugh. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Hermiston recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh, with his surety being Robert in Synton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Hector Lauder in Clerlands had remission for stealing livestock and goods from him out of Whitslaid, in the company of a gang of Armstrongs. It is possible he is the same man who also tenanted Hoddom House at the same time (where the same people also raided). It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Whitslaid. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Hector Lauder in Clerlands had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows from him out of ‘hodum hous’ (possibly Hoddom House), in the company of the Armstrongs. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Bailie of Irvine and custom’s officer there in the period 1508–13. Perhaps the same John was Bailie of Irvine recorded in 1538 and 1546. He was probably related to Robert, who was also in Irvine around 1540. John of Haining (d.1513) son of Robert of Haining. He was recorded as son of Robert of Haining in 1482, with his son Robert mentioned in 1488. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Robert when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining. In about 1499 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Haining (along with his son John) with the permission of John Murray of Falahill. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Haining. He was surety for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw in 1510, when Thomas was convicted of being part of the killing of John Murray of Falahill. He was killed at Flodden and his son Robert was served heir in 1514. He had another son, Walter, who served as ‘tutor’ for his nephew Thomas during his minority. It seems that he also had another son, John, who leased Haining along with him in about 1499. John of Borthwick (15th/16th C.) possibly father of John ‘the faster’, as well as another son, who was father of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, and may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Robertson. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Orchart’ (i.e. Orchard) when he witnessed a document for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30. His son was also John. He was surely related to other contemporary Scotts, but the precise relationship is unknown. John of Borthaugh (15th/16th C.) eldest son of George of Borthaugh, by his first wife (who was his cousin). In 1526 he is recorded (as ‘of Burnthauch’) in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was superior over some of his lands. Also in 1526 he is probably the John ‘in Borthauch’ listed among the Borders men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran; the brothers Walter, Philip and George are listed after him. In 1526/7 he had a charter ratified for the lands of Muirhouse in Edinburghshire. In 1527 he is among the local lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527. There was dispute over succession to the lands of Borthaugh, Comonside and Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdale’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father had sworn on his deathbed that his 1st marriage had not been fully legal and hence inheritance should go to the eldest son of his 2nd marriage, Walter. A set of arbitrators (all Scotts) in 1528 found that he should inherit, since he had never been declared illegitimate, but that ‘Quhomnis’ and ‘Woltoun Greyne’ should go to his brother. He is recorded in a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to lands of several local Scotts, e.g. he is there recorded as holding ‘lands of Drivisdall and 40s. land in Woltoun’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie and some lands in Wilton); it is therefore possible that he is the same man as John in Walls. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to the King’s will in order to better keep order on the Border. He sold the lands of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk sometime before 1531. This may have been to settle debts with Lawson of Highriggs in Edinburgh. John of Robertson and Walls (d.bef. 1535) probably son of Stephen of ‘Weltoun’, who was also of Muirhouse and of Castlelaw (or Castlecary). He was probably also closely related to John of Thirlestone who held the half-barony of Wilton from 1483 until at least 1491. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Scot in Wallis’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501; most of the other 15 men listed along with him were from the area immediately around Hawick. Around 1501 he had disposed of ‘Weltoun’ (probably the name of lands near Cumbernauld associated with Castlecary and not the western half-barony of Wilton), and was now ‘of Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ or ‘St. Michael’s Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and not the more local ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’; however, it is not impossible that the earlier designation gave its name to the lands of Woll later). In 1502 he is recorded as being of ‘Valis’ when he acted as surety for Walter Scott of Headshaw and also ‘in Walis’ when he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands. Also in 1502 he was ‘in le walis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse from Adam Murray at Mutelee and 3 horses from Lord Cranston at Kirkhope; his sureties were Robert in Synton and Walter of Headshaw. Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands. In 1502 he acquired the lands of Robertson (which had belonged to a branch of the Scotts more than a century earlier). He also held a sasine for the lands of Howcleuch in 1520. In 1526 he was ‘in the Valys’ when listed on the remission given to a large number of Borders men for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Stephen and George are also listed. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow; he is there ‘of the Valis’. He was one of the Scotts who was on the arbitration panel to decide on the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He is recorded as holder of ‘5 merklands in Dryvisdaill’ (Dryfesdale, near Lockerbie) in a discharge relating to ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9. He is also mentioned (along with several other Scotts) in the indenture of 1529 intended to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order on the Border. He may have died shortly afterwards, since Walter of Robertson is mentioned in 1535. His son George is recorded receiving a pardon in 1527 (probably after being outlawed for rieving). The celebrated faster, John of Borthwick, may have been a member of the same family. He was succeeded by Walter of Robertson and then Stephen of Robertson (probably a younger son). It is possible he was the same man as John of Borthaugh. John of Ashkirk (d.1526) killed at the Battle of Skirmish Field, when the Scotts and their allies tried to wrest control of the young King James V from the Earl of Angus. In the indenture signed by Scotts and Kerrs 3 years later, one of the agreements is that Mark Ker of Dolphinston and Andrew Ker of Graden shall visit the 4 main pilgrimage sites of Scotland, saying a mass for his soul, and those of the other Scotts killed in the battle. He was probably related to the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and Walter there in 1533. John of Hassendean (d.c.1530) brother of David of Hassendean, from whom he succeeded. He is recorded in 1528/9 for ‘non-entry’ of his lands at Galalaw. He married Agnes Scott and died without a son. His heir was his brother’s son (some accounts say his brother) William of Hassendean, who received the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire in 1539. John (16th C.) local clergyman. It is possible there was more than one man of this name, but it seems reasonable to assume that the notary of the 1520s was the same as the Vicar of Hawick Kirk in the 1530s and 40s. He was notary in 1527 to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter Branholme and James Murray of Falalahill; he is recorded there as ‘Schir John Scot, notar public’. He was ‘Sir John’ when he served as notary for a document of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (witnessed at Branxholme) relating to the Barony of Kirkurd in 1527. And he was notary for the document giving the decision on the disputed succession to Borthaugh in 1528. In 1528/9 he was ‘Sir John’ when acting as notary for the discharge by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely the ‘Schir John Scot, vicar of Hawik’ who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falalahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branholme in 1528. In 1530 he was Vicar of Hawick when he was recorded as a procurator for several men in Selkirk for an action brought against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk; he also brought an action in Selkirk ‘in name of his brothers and others’ against Alexander Tait ‘lord of Pirne’. In 1530/1 he was ‘vicar of Hawick’ when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Janet Kerr. He was ‘vicar of Hawyk’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was Rector of Hawick Parish from at least 1536; a record in the Register of the Privy Seal has him taking over the Rectory following the decease of Alexander Murray (although this was probably much earlier); he is recorded as ‘D. Johannis Scott’. He was Vicar of Hawick, recorded as a witness to the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig. In the Charter he is not mentioned explicitly as the chaplain (to whom 2 participates of land are assigned), although he himself is separately listed as having 4 participates, and other clergymen are also mentioned; it is therefore unclear what his position was at St. Mary’s, but probably he held the ‘living’, without being the preacher. In 1537 there was also a priest of Glasgow diocese of the same name who was notary for a sasine for the lands of Meikledale. In 1539/40 he was ‘the venerable man John Scot vicar of Hawik’ in a record of a sale of land at Appletreehall (by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Janet Scott, widow of Robert Elwand), contained in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Probably the same man was notary for a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1540 between Simon Scott of Feniwick and William Scott of Harden (since the witnesses are all local men, although there is some ambiguity, since ‘John of Wod’ was the last witness on the related bond). In 1544 he is also described as Vicar of Hawick when he resigned lands at ‘East Murmawe’ to John Scott of Burnhead; this suggests he may have been related to the Scotts of Burnhead. He may have still been Vicar in 1550. His brother’s great-grandson William in Catslack was served heir to his lands of East Moormaw (in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) in 1606, thus establishing a connection between him and the Scotts of Catslack. Perhaps the same ‘Sir John Scot, notar publick’ drew up the bond of 1548 when the Elliots entered Robert Crozier as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. In 1538 there is a ‘Preceptum Legitimationis’ for James, natural son of John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; thus he had at least one son. The fact that he witnessed or notarised several documents for the Scotts of Branxholme suggests that he may have been related to the Laird in some way. John of Borthwick (16th C.) celebrated faster, part of a local branch of the Scotts. He was possibly son of John of Borthwick and descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells says he was ‘cousin-german’ to Walter of Whitehaugh. He came to notoriety about 1531 and was written about by Archbishop Spottiswode. He is supposed to have been unable to pay the costs following a legal case and sought sanctuary near Holyrood, where he abstained from food and drink for 40 or 50 days. This drew the attention of the King, who shut him up in a room for some of this period (however, it may be that the period was more like 32 days). He claimed he received sustenance from the Virgin Mary and when done ‘came into thee street, half nakede, and made a speech to the people which did flock aboutheum’. He then went to Rome with a certificate from the King, was examined there by the Pope, and given a priests habit and certificate that he had lived ‘sine cibo et potu per centum et sex dies’. After that he travelled to Jerusalem, apparently stocking up on palm leaves and stones from the pillar on which Christ was scourged before returning to England. There he cursed the behaviour of King Henry VIII, was arrested, and spent 50 days in prison, again apparently without food. He was sent packing to Scotland, and the last mention of him is in 1541 when 2 shillings were paid to ‘John Scott, callit the Sanct, at the King’s command’ – ‘To John of Borthwick, who fasted so long, Three sundry times he did perform’ [CWS], ‘Bare-bread and water the king allowed for his meat, But John Scott refused, and would not eat; When the forty days were come and gone, He was a great deal lustier than when he began’ [CWS].

John (16th C.) son of John. He and his father were described as being ‘elder and younger’ tenants of Orchard when they witnessed a 1529/30 instrument of resignation for the Routledges of the nearby lands of Crook. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns (but not ‘Sir’ John the priest, who is listed separately). Another John was also listed as holding 2 1/2 particates on the same side of the street. A piece of land lying between one of these John’s lands and that of John Short to the west was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) resident of Whames, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He may be related to William, who was tenant of Whames at that time. John of Robertson (d.c.1566) probably son of Stephen ‘in Valis’, who purchased Robertson and Howcleuch from his brother Walter of Robertson in 1535. In the 1540s he acted as surety for James White, tenant of Borthwickshiels. He is recorded as deceased in 1566 when the rights to his son and heir John’s ward and marriage fees were given to Robert Scott. John ‘the Clerk’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with his brother Robert ‘of Colfurd’ and Hob ‘Wait Aboot Um’. The 3 men were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and were instead to be pursued for their crimes. He was convicted for sheep-stealing and related crimes and hanged, along with Hob ‘callit of Colyfurd’, Mark Elliot ‘callit of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falsers’. It is unclear where exactly he came from, but perhaps the Slitrig valley. John of Synton (d.bef. 1557) probably son of Walter 9th Laird of Synton (although these generations are very confused), whom he predeceased. His mother was probably Walter’s first wife, who was a daughter of Cockburn of Orniston. In 1530/1 he was recorded as son and heir of Walter of Synton when he was entered in ward at Borthwick Castle, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. Sureties for them were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. His sons were probably: Walter of Synton, who succeeded his grandfather Walter; George of Synton, who succeeded his older brother; William, tenant in Langhope, ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly; James, tenant in Dodbank, ancestor of the Scotts of Satchells; and Robert of Shielwood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1557. John (16th C.) described as ‘in Drinkstone’ (i.e. Drinkstone) when he was witness to a 1556 charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden. Also recorded as ‘in Dringston’ when witness to a sasine in 1559. In 1566 he is ‘Johme Scot of Dryngston’ when he had a letter of reversion for the lands of ‘Litill Dryngston’ in favour of Robert Scott in Hassendeanburn on payment of £70 Scots. He is probably the same ‘Johme of Dringestoun' who is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574; he had sold a piece of land to Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent John Watson. He may also be the John ‘in Drinkston’ who was listed by Scott of Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Robertson. And he is probably the John ‘in Dringstone’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. Sir John of Thirlestane (d.1549) probably son of David of Tushielaw, grandson of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw, ‘King of Thieves’. Along with Robert of Howpasley he entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilmancleuch and is probably the John ‘in Thiristine’ who occupied Alttrieve and Crosscleuch. He was said to be the only Baron to declare his support for James V at Fala Moor in 1542, coming ‘into the King’s host at Soutray Edge with three score and ten lancers on horseback of his friends and followers’. As a result the family were given arms with the royal fleur-de-lis and motto ‘Ready, aye ready’ (however, the veracity of this story is challenged in some accounts, and the relevant warrant is considered by some to be a forgery). He is probably the John ‘in Thiristleane’ who along with his son Robert witnessed a bond signed in Hawick in 1543, between Nichol Graham and Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1549 the Commendator of Melrose granted a discharge of all duties etc. on his lands of ‘thiristine, ramsclewis, scadcleuch, craig and kirkhop’ now that he was deceased. Satchells (probably his great-grandson) says he married a daughter of Scott of Allanhaugh (possibly Robert, who owned land in Hawick and lived about the right time). His children included: Robert, who succeeded; Philip of Kirkhope, who was 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade; Andrew, who died without issue; Simon of Newburgh; and William, who witnessed a contract for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1567. He secondly married Marion Douglas and had another son, James of Gilmanacleuch. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailzie’ as witness to a sasine of 1558. The purchaser of the land in the sasine was James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’, so there may be an error or confusion here. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne’ along with Simon in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guidman of Alanehauch’, who was probably either William or Robert (or possibly Adam), when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. John (16th C.) tenant in Catslack. In 1563 he was involved in a dispute over land with William Elliot, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautionser for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John ‘the Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with Airchie of the Bush and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. John of Dryhope (16th C.) 2nd Laird, succeeding Simon. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was father of Mary ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. He signed the marriage contract for his daughter with Walter Scott of Harden in 1576/7 (despite the fact that Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford said that her father was Philip, and many others followed this version of events). He may also have had a daughter Christian, who married James Tweedie of Fruid. The testament of his wife Margaret was written in 1581/2. He signed the clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to the 1st Laird, Simon. He may have been father of the next Laird Philip, as well as Philip’s brothers: Simon of Montbenger; Andrew; Adam; and Walter. John of Burnhead (d.1582) probably son of John and great-grandson of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He granted a charter to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, for Easter and Wester Moorlaw (later called ‘Lees’, near Appletreethall) in 1535 and 1539. He also granted a precept of legitimization to John’s son James (suggesting they were related perhaps). John, the Vicar, resigned his lands of Easter Moorlaw in 1544, and he further granted a precept of sasine to John’s son James in 1556. He is said to have lived to an advanced age. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert. John ‘Johnnie’, ‘Philip’s Jock’ (16th C.) resident of Hawick who was named in a court case at Leith in 1571, along with Allan Deans, George Maxwell and Robert Scott. This was in connection with the on-going efforts of the Warden and the people of Jedburgh to quell the activities of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His name is recorded there as ‘Philips Jok’ and the cautionser was Sir William Ker of Caverton (the younger of Cessford). In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as their cautioner. His son 'John' was involved in another case in 1574, along with Allan Deans and John Cavers. His father was presumably Philip, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the known men of that name; it is possible he was the Philip recorded in 1549 at Wiltonburn complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford.

John (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Montbenger. In 1582 his widow, Margaret Lowes, complained that a gang of Armstrongs and others raided the farm of 'Eister Montberngier', stealing about 360 sheep and all the goods from there, and then attacking Deuchar. His sons William and Adam were also mentioned, with Adam being kidnapped by the rievers. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and son of Margaret Turnbull. In 1573 he was declared a fugitive for non-appearance when he, his brother Walter and mother Margaret, were charged with attacking the half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton occupied by a servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He and his brother David were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birksend in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. John of Middlestead (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Roberton (d.1606) mentioned in 1566 as son and heir to John of Roberton, when his wardship was given to Robert Scott (it is unclear which Robert this was). Perhaps the same John signed the Scott bond of clanship in 1589. He must have been related in some way to James of Roberton, recorded in 1578. Scott of Satchells says that John Scott of Roberton was among the 33 chosen to accompany Buccleuch to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596; this was probably him. He was succeeded by his son William of Roberton in 1610. John (16th/17th C.) listed as being 'in Stoussle' (i.e. Stousle) by Scott of Satchells when he listed the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch, probably relevant to the period around 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other branches of the Scotts. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hassendean in 1575. He may be the 'Sir John' who was in dispute over the Vicarage of Hassendean with Ninian Westmin in 1550. Presumably the same man was the Reader of Southdean 1579–82. It is not impossible that he is also the same as the minister of Ashkirk etc. In 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk) who were deprived for 'abusing the sacraments'. They were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence, but yielded when threatened with death in 1590. The precise basis of the theological disagreement is unclear, but it may suggest that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation. John of Foulshiels (16th C.) probably either the son or grandson of William, the first Scott of Foulshiels. In 1592 Walter Scott was surety for him. He subscribed to a deed of loyalty in 1593. He was probably succeeded by James. Rev. John (16th C.) became 'exhorter' at Selkirk and St. Mary’s of the Lowes in 1568. Probably the same John is recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1571. He is recorded as Minister of Ashkirk in late 1573. By 1575 he was Minister at Ashkirk, with Selkirk, Kirk of the Lowes, Ettrick and Rankilburn also in his charge. However, James (not John) Scott was also recorded as Reader in 1575, becoming Vicar in 1586. In 1576 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been dispossessed of the 'half toun and landis of Elistoun' in the Lordship of Melrose by Thomas and then Robert of Haining. He had titles showing that his predecessors had been in possession of these lands as kindly tenants. John (16th C.) tenant of Newark, as described in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s last testament of 1574. He could be related to the later Chamberlain of the same name and location, who was son of James of Newark. Hence he could have been father of James of Newark, and presumably descended from one of the other family branches. John (16th C.) said to have been the 6th son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was killed during a hunting trip by one of the Scotts of Gilmanseucleuch, who then forfeited their lands to his father, who is supposed to to have said that they were worth a dead son. There is a story about how his body lay uncorrupted for many years in the vault of Hassendean Kirk, as a result of being treacherously slain. His death may have been the inspiration for the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’, but could also be confused with the murder of ‘Auld Wat’s’ other son, Walter in Esenside in about 1616 or Walter of Gamescleuch in a duel in 1609. John of the Palace (16th C.) servant of Walter Scott of Synton. He is mentioned in the 1580s when charged with resetting 4 horses stolen from Ewington, one of which he kept for himself. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Scott of the Palice’ and described as ‘sic ane dissolute and lawles persone as he will not compeir for na charges without his said master present him’. His master was subsequently pronounced rebel for not appearing. His place of abode was probably related with the area later referred to as ‘Palace Waas’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell, receiving remission for any past crimes (perhaps associated with the raid at Stirling). He is listed as a tenant farmer at Arkleton. John ‘the Tinkler’ (16th C.) tenant in Harwood. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is recorded as ‘Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, in Harret’, and he signed by ‘twychand the pen’ (meaning that he was unable to write). He was also ‘the Tinkler’ when among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; his son Andrew ‘the Bready’ was also listed, as well as Adam ‘little Peck’. His name occurred first on the list of Scotts, Laidlaws, Oliviers and others, and they were accused by Percival ‘Clemond’ of leading about 500 men on a day-long foray in which they took 80 cows, 7 horses, goods worth £20 and ransomed 8 prisoners. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Scot in Tenisde’ in the 1594 ‘respite’ by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. His name occurs near several other local Scotts, but it is unclear where he was tenant. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Ormiston’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. However, Adam in Ormiston, recorded in 1592, seems likely to be related. John (16th C.) listed as ‘Johne Scot in Dellorien’ (i.e. Dellorain) among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607-17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Humdalishoip’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Hundilshoip’ he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Winterburgh received the cautioner. He is referred to in 1596/7 as ‘sometime in Hundilshoip’, when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Humdalishoip’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Humdalishoip’ he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, and his son also gained his lands of ‘Alcolmefeld, Wodgrevington’ and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625. His son John was recorded as a creditor of Sir of the Tour in Hawick’ later in 1609 when his son David brought an action against the Turnbulls of Barnhills. He may be related to the earlier Robert and later William, who are also ‘of the Tour’. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Ellits and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. He is recorded being called ‘Stowre of Quinisleuch’ (perhaps Whinsleuch) and he is listed after Adie ‘the Peck’ and hence perhaps related. He may be the ‘Johne Scott, callit the Stowr’ who had been warded with Henry Lord Sinclair, but released by 1573 (and this seems likely to have been an error for Thomas). John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘of Monks-tower’ by Scott of Satchells, among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be ‘brother to old William Scott of Altoun’, but his connection to other Scotts is unclear. John the Clerk (16th/17th C.) resident of ‘Elrig’ recorded in 1612, which could be Elrig in the Borthwick valley. James Noble in East Burn of Stobo complained to the Privy Council that he had not found caution for killing his father. He could have been related to the earlier John called ‘the Clerk’. John (d.c.1625) probably the eldest son of James of Hundleshope. He was possibly the ‘Johne Scot in Hudennshop’ recorded in 1583/4 when there was caution made that James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Winterburgh received the cautioner. He is referred to in 1596/7 as ‘sometime in Hundillishoip’, when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Humdalishoip’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Humdalishoip’ he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, and his son also gained his lands of ‘Alcolmefeld, Wodgrevington’ and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625. His son John was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John of Bonnington (16th/17th C.) son of Adam and brother of Simon of Bonnington. He was probably present at the Carlisle raid in 1596 in which Kinmont Willie was freed. He was tried in 1601 for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘the Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). Along with 3 other Scotts, Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’ (all brothers of Robert of Bowhill), he was convicted and ‘put to the horne’. He was referred to as being ‘in Quholplaw’ (probably Whelplaw in Lauderdale) and ‘alias callit Johne of Bonytoun’. It is unclear why this group of Scotts attacked Napier. He was probably also the John, brother of Simon of Bonnington who was part of a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602. He appears to have succeeded his brother Simon to the lands of Bonnington in about 1622, but died a few years later. He succeeded his brother Simon and deceased nephew Robert to the lands of ‘Ermesheugh’ and Singlie in 1624. He is probably the same John who was accused of murdering Walter ‘in Essenside’, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in about 1616, abetted by his brothers Simon and Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane. Since the murderer was said to be a Scott of Newhouse, then perhaps they were related to the Bonnington Scotts. If this was the same man, then he must have been acquitted. He succeeded his brother Simon in the lands of Bonnington, but these went to Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh) in 1624, and later to William Burnet, his grand-nephew. He was in succeeded in his other lands by his son Robert. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Woll. Scott of Satchells lists him among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as being ‘of Ashkirk’. He is recorded in 1608 among a party accused of attacking and maltreating some residents of Selkirk. His half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) was his accomplice, and they attacked the ‘knokkeiper’ John Jackson, apparently after they were ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. After the pair were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk a group of Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and elsewhere) freed them. Along with his half-brother John Turnbull he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh or declared rebels. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ettrickhouse, recorded in 1609 among the supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He may be the ‘Jocky ill-to-haud’ who was a natural brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Sir John of Newburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur of Newburgh. Scott of Satchells describes him as ‘that Prince of Poets than whom Chaucer, Glovet, Sir Thomas More and Sir Philip Sydney never had a more Poetic Vein’. He was served heir to his father in 1610, in the lands of Winterburgh and ‘Fawodgrange alias Craighall’ in Ettrick Forest. He was bonded in 1610, along with his brother Arthur and John of Hundlehope, for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. In 1626 he is listed as owner of a ‘£4 land’ in the Barony of Belses, part of the temporal lands of Jedburgh Abbey. In 1631 he complained against Andrew Scott, surgeon in Edinburgh. He was listed on the last testament of Water, Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He was probably succeeded by his son John. His natural son David is recorded in 1640 in a document relating to the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also had a daughter who married Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636, was surely related. John of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish whom the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to oust. He was presumably a direct descendant of the earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and related to the George ‘callit of Deringstoun’ recorded in 1616. John ‘Wat’s Jock’ (d.bef. 1610). In 1610 his son Bailie Robert and his wife Helen Turnbull had a sasine for a tenement off the Kirkwynd in Hawick. His father was presumably Walter. One of the witnesses was ‘Jock’s Wattie’, who could have been another son. He may be the same man as ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ named in 1581, along with Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott (resident of Hawick) 3 years earlier. And also the ‘Johne Scot, alias Wattis Jok, burges of Hawik’ who was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Bransholm and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud; his brother Thomas (also a Burgess) was also a witness. John ‘Jean’s John’ (16th/17th C.) son of the deceased ‘Symme Scot in Southfield’, recorded in 1609 when he was among several men fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. The other men included 2 sons of Kinmont Willie, suggesting he was part of a gang of would-be rievers from Liddesdale. It is unclear if this Southfield is the one near Hawick. John (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1609 to his father John, who was ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick. He also had a brother Dacid, who is also recorded in 1609. It seems likely this was a property-owning family of Scotts who lived at the Tower Knowe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their relationship with other branches is unknown. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) bellman of Hawick who is mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, the events taking place in 1610 (and described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’). He was presumably a Burgh Officer, one of the earliest on record. John ‘Bonnie Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) nickname for a Hawick resident, recorded in a 1612 document along with a number of people accused of over-charging interest on loans. He is there listed as ‘Bony Johnnie Scot’ and he appeared in court to answer the charge. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Johne Scott callit Bony Jony’ in the 1616 trial of the men accused of salughtering the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Along with James Wemys and James Lethen, he helped take the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott before he could shoot James Douglas. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John of Newark (d.1622) son of James. His father left him Newark (although it is unclear whether this was ownership or tenancy) in the early years of the 17th century. He is described as ‘in Newark’ when he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1609–15. In 1608 his son James was among a group of Scotts and others who were accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. He may be the John ‘in Newark’ listed among local men accused of overcharging on interest by the Privy Council in 1612 (but omitted from the list of those found guilty). In 1618 his son Walter Scott was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar. He married Agnes Simpson and their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, Burgess of Selkirk; and Walter in Broadhaugh. His son Walter had cautioners George of Castleside and Robert of Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were close relatives. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Tushielaw, and younger son of William of Tushielaw. Along with his son William (a minor at the time) he was accused in 1607 of killing John, father of John Govane of Cardrona (a family that would later connect with the Scotts of Tushielaw through marriage). He was the uncle of the John Scott who killed Walter of Thirlestane in a duel. John of Kirkhouses (16th/17th C.) from a branch of the family near Ashkirk, son of James. His grandfather was George Scott of Synton. He inherited the lands from his father in 1609. He was probably the John ‘in Kirkhouse’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1614 he was summoned (along with his kinsman Robert Scott of Salenside) to appear before the Presbytery to answer to charges of murder. He is probably the John of Kirkhouses who was part of band of Scotts that forcibly took the farm of Hartwoodburn from its tenant in 1627. John of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1619 and succeeded to his father’s lands in Peeblesshire in 1625. In 1629 he and his wife Helen Geddes had a charter for the lands of Hundleshope and others. He was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John ‘Jock’ or ‘the Suckler’ (d.1616) son of Thomas of Nether Braidlie. He was one of the men involved in the slaughter of Sir James Douglas’ sheep at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley in 1615, apparently in revenge for Douglas taking lands at Howpasley. He was the first to be sent for by Lady Howpasley, and at the Market Cross of Hawick he met with Jean Scott of Satchells and ‘Marion’s Geordie’. After the plan was hatched, he met some of the others at the foot of the Eilrig Burn in the Borthwick valley. The other men involved were George, Walter and Ingram Scott, and William Scott of Satchells, the first 3 all being caught and hung at Edinburgh Cross after Jock had turned informer. His deposition claimed that George had threatened him when he had second thoughts about going through with the crime; when faced with this George asked him to repeat the statements to his face, which he did. For thus turning informant he was declared to be of lesser guilt and left in prison after the 1616 trial. However, later that same year he himself (mis-transcribed as ‘Jok the Suttler’) was hanged at the same place for sheep stealing; the specific charge was for taking 4 sheep from ‘Adam Almouse’, tenant at Muselee, as well as ‘ane zow and ane hog, pertening to George Scott, callit of Deringstoun’ from his lands at Castlehilk, ‘ane blak zow, pertening to Rowie Scott, called Rowie of Huttiikil, furth of the Lyn besyde Eilrig’ and 7 ewes from James Rowie in Raeburn. These crimes took place 1612–14. Sir John of Scotstarvit (1558–1670) descended from Robert of Allanhaugh, son of Sir David of Buccleuch. He succeeded his grandfather in 1592, at the age of 7. He had the tower of Scotstarvit rebuilt near Cupar in Fife, which still survives. He was a Judge, Directory of the Chancery, Lord of Session and Privy Councillor, but lost his positions when Cromwell occupied Scotland. He assisted Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch to run his estates while he was fighting in Holland, and carried the coronet at the Earl’s funeral. Along with Sir William of Harden he went to court to hear the King’s ruling on the land dispute between Francis Stewart and the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of the Earl of Buccleuch and served as one of the trustees for Mary, when she succeeded to the Buccleuch estates. He was the last of the original tutors named as ‘sine quibus non’ by Francis Earl of Buccleuch, but lost control to Gideon of Highchester and the Borders tutors. He was instrumental in having Pont’s maps of Scotland published by Blaeu in 1654, and contributed to the accompanying text. He also wrote ‘The staggering state of the Scots statesmen’, containing satirical sketches of prominent Scotsmen of his age (and back to 1550), published eventually in 1754. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthorn Dene. Their children were: Robert, who died young; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir John; William; Alexander; Robert; Ludovic; Margaret; Jean; Helen; Eupham; Anna; Eliza; Rebecca; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Janet. His second wife was Margaret Melville, with whom he had a son George, and he thirdly married Eupham Moneypenny and had sons Cecil and Walter. It seems that in 1651, when the Scotts of Buccleuch failed to have a male heir, he was the most senior representative with an unbroken male succession. His descendant, David, was an M.P. in the mid-18th century, but the branch failed in the male line in the early 1800s. John (16th/17th C.) ‘brother-german’ to Walter in Allanmouth in 1606 when he purchased the lands of Hobsburn Weens from Thomas Turnbull. He was thus the first of the Scotts of Weens. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘of Weenis’ when he was part of an inquest. In 1612 he was ‘in Weneis’ when he was Bailie to Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam for a sarise in Rulewater. He is referred to as ‘called of Allanmowth, now in Weymes’ in a sarise of 1617 when he gained a bakehouse in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allanmowth who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. Note that another John, accused in 1607 of killing the father of John Govane of Cardrona, was his uncle. According to Satchells he was one of the men who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was listed as ‘Jhone Scot, his sone lawfull’ after Walter of Tushielaw, when they were witnesses to a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose in 1607. He was described as ‘John Scott, called of Tuschelaw’ in a charter of 1618. His natural son Francis was also witness to the charter, as were Robert, ‘fiar of Tuschelaw’ (his older brother) and Sir Walter ‘of Tuschelaw’ (his father). He was the John, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch (or Thirlestane), recorded in the Selkirk Presbytery records of 1609 and possibly the inspiration for ‘The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow’. He was excommunicated after this, but his pardon by James VI for the slaughter of Walter Scott, brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, is recorded in 1614 and after due repentance his status with the church was reinstated in 1615. He is probably the John, brother of Robert of Tushielaw who witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule in 1619 and who witnessed a bond in 1620 between Thomas Turnbull, tenant at Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle, servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. In 1620 he was served as tutor to William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret, children of his brother James of Glenrath. He married Jeanne, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He had at least one legitimate son, Walter. John (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. He is probably the John of Chamberlain Newton recorded in 1612 when he and Michael Hunter of ‘Pownmude’ complained to the Privy Council about several Stewarts. In 1619 he signed a bond in Hawick with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule, which was registered in 1624. Witnesses included William, ‘fiar of Quhithauch’ and Walter ‘called of Altoun’. It is possible he is the John of Brieryyards whose nephew William of Chamberlain Newton was served heir to his lands of Brieryyards and ‘Braidleyis’ in 1633 and 1637. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brieryyards. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance at court in Jedburgh of Robert in Hawick, ‘called Symmeis Hob’, and Walter ‘called Dandis Wattie’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. He could be the same man as the later John of Brieryyards, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whithope. He was listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. It is possible he is the same James ‘in Quhyhope clerk in this detail’ who acted as clerk for an indenture between the March Wardens in 1594/5. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632.
as possessor of the Liddesdale farms of ‘Rouraltonholme’ (probably at Ralton) and Auldshiels. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as joint tenant, along with Gavin Elliot, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Close alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as ‘bailie in Liddisdaill’ in a document listing the possessors of the lands that made up the Lordship of Liddesdale. He possessed the lands of ‘Flocksteid alias Flasket’. He may have been bailie to the Lord of Liddesdale. John (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. John of Huntly (17th C.) son of Andrew, who was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1636 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Winterburner with mill in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fwoodgraing alias Craighill’. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Scotts of Winterburner. John (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. John of Huntly (17th C.) son of James ‘called of Huntly’. He was served heir to his father in 1639 in the lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fwoodgraing alias Craighill’. He is one of the last recorded Lairds of Huntly. However, Walter of Huntly is recorded just a few years later, in 1644, so possibly his brother. John of Catslacknowe (17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Montbenger, and before that the Scotts of Dryhope. He may have been son of Walter of Montbenger and father of Rev. James of Kirkton and Ancrum. However, Rev. James’ father may instead have been Walter of Catslacknowe. It is unclear if he was related to the John of Catslack recorded in 1563. John (17th C.) recorded as being from Borthaugh in 1642 when he acted as an apraiser in a Magistrates Court case involving someone’s livestock eating someone else’s oats. He could be related to the John who previously owned Borthaugh. John (d.1646) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold Bucleuch’. He was Provost of Crichton. In 1632 he was recorded as ‘brother natural’ to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, who was given the rentals from Crichton; this suggests he was a son of Sir William of Kirkurd and Grizel Beaton (who secondly married Andrew Murray of Blackbarony), however, it seems more likely he was from the next generation. He bore the arms of Montgomery in the funeral procession of the Earl of Bucleuch in Hawick in 1634. In 1643 he received a gift of 400 merks from Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell ‘for advancing his fortoun’. John (17th C.) described being ‘callit of Borthwick’ in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He may have been related to earlier Scotts of Borthwick. Mary Scott, listed right after him in 1643, had land in Hawick valued at £3. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is recorded owning the lands in 1628 and was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He is recorded writing to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1656, regarding the valuation of his lands. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, presumably for being a Covenanter supporter. He was probably the Scott of Gilman-scleuch who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He was probably father of Francis. His son may have been John of Rennaldburn (although this may be confused). John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh (d.c.1672) grandson of Arthur of Newburgh, and son of Sir John. He may also have been knighted himself. He held the lands of ‘Renalburn’ (or ‘Rennaldburn’) near Eskdalesmuir (the later farmhouse there said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice). He inherited Newburgh in 1654, being served heir to his grandfather Arthur. In 1656 he witnessed a charter (for lands in Dalkeith) for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1661 he is described as ‘callit of Newbrugh, lait bailzie of Esdaill’ when listed owing more than £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in about 1663. From 1666 he was ‘tutor and curator’ for Francis of Davington (to whom he was distantly related), son of Sir John of Thirlestane. In 1670 he infefted Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall in the Barony of Westerhall. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale Parishes from the mid-1650s until the early 1670s. About this time other people stood in for him, suggesting either he was dead or incapacitated. However, John of ‘Rennelburn’ is recorded in deeds of 1682, and may have been his son. He married Margaret Canide. His 2nd daughter Janet married Adam Elliot of Meikledale. His son John was also Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch. Other children were James (b.1621), and Marie. John of Gorrenberry (d.1668) natural son of Walter, the 1st Earl Bucleuch, by Annas (or Agnes) Drummond. In 1629 he was given the lands of Gorrenberry as well as others. He acted as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Eckford, Langholm, Lemplitlaw and Liddesdale from the 1640s to the late 1650s. He was also Chamberlain for Teviotdale-head in the 1680s. His lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1600 in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 there was a letter to him from Earl Francis, discussing the teinds of Eckford and the Mains. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the ‘John Scott, bailiff and B. brother to the Lord of Buccleuch’ to whom a complaint was made in 1650 about some of Cromwell’s soldiers having their horses stolen in the Borders by tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother’s will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and served as one of the tutors of Countess Mary during her minority, signing a letter protesting against her ‘pretendit’ marriage in about 1659. He also was involved in a law suit with some of her other guardians in 1659 over breaking the locks on her charter chests. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £9000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale, where he had been Chamberlain. He was recorded paying the land tax (of £1600) in 1663. He was probably the first Scott of Gorrenberry, and may have married a Riddell. His son and successor was Francis. He had other sons: David, who was living in 1670; John, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663; and Robert, who was living in 1668. It is also possible that Walter of Alton was another son. His sons and grandsons and those of Walter of Alton Croft were mentioned in 1681 as among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch.

John (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Hawick in 1648/9. He may have been the same John who was described as ‘maltman’ in the 1638 ‘leet’ for Bailies, and in the following year in reference to money gathered relating to soldiers in the Town. He was probably also one of the 2 councillors of the same name (one of whom is described as a merchant) who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He is also recorded as appraiser (for eaten oats) in a Magistrate’s Court case in 1642. He served as Bailie in the 1650s and may be the John who was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick during some of the 1660s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘John Scott Alton’ in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Sir John (c.1615–66) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, with his 2nd wife Katherine Jardine. He was younger brother of Sir Robert, who died without children. He was served heir to his brother Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621. In 1632 he is described as son and heir of his father Sir Robert in a document relating to the lands of Altrieve and Coreceleuch in Selkirkshire; Robert, son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot is also mentioned, and so possibly a relative. He was involved in a court case in 1634 (referring to a contract of 1623) with Sir William Scott of Harden and Robert Scott of Headshaw, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication relating to the lands of Bourhope brought by Robert Scott of Whitslade, and decrees of appraising over the same lands with Patrick of Tanlawhill (his cousin) in 1642 and Robert of Whitslade in 1643. In 1641 he signed a contract with his cousin Patrick relating to the Thirlestane estate, but the terms were not clearly specified, and also Sir William of Harden resigned the Thirlestane estates to him, the 2 documents being signed in Hawick. This was important for the subsequent dispute of succession between him and his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill, fought (and lost) by his descendants in court in the period 1727–44. His cousin Patrick clearly manipulated the situation (even having him imprisoned in Selkirk and in Home Castle) and eventually claimed the Thirlestane estates outright, although he was still fighting for his family lands until his death. He was served heir to his father Sir Robert in 1642 (perhaps as part of the legal battle). In 1643 he was referred to as ‘son and heir of the late Sir Robert’ of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdale. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation of 'Thirlestane' until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Esdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir David Ogilvie of Clova (his comrade in arms).
Their children were: Francis of Davington; and Katharine, possibly an ancestor of James Scott of Calfield. He secondly married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. John of Allanhaugh (17th C.) probably son of William of Allanhaugh (or perhaps Walter of Allamouth). He was listed in a county valuation of Hawick Parish in 1643, with his lands valued at £110. It is possible he is the same as John of Weens, recorded in the earlier 1600s. John of Todshawhill (d.c.1653) recorded in the 1643 county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with the value being £133 6s 8d.
In 1631–37 he was a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for rents in part of Branxholme and Wilton. He may be descended from Andrew of Todshawhill, who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. John of Yorkston and Headshaw (d.c.1646) 2nd son of George of Synton. His lands may have been near Temple in Midlothian (unless there is another place of the same name). He is probably the ‘brother german’ of Walter of Synton who in 1609 was involved in a sasine for the lands of Satchells. In 1629 he purchased Head-shaw and Langhope from the old family of Scotts of Headshaw. He is recorded in the period 1631– 42 as Chamberlain in Liddesdale to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1632 he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning for lands in Belses. He is probably the ‘John of Syntoune’ who, along with Robert Pringle of Stichel, captured ‘Geordy Armstrang of Dykraw’. In 1634 he was part of the Earl of Buccleuch’s funeral procession in Hawick, where he carried the arms of Douglas of Angus. He appears to have repurchased Head-shaw, Dryden and other lands in 1636. In 1637 he was ‘Johnne Scot of Heidschaw, baillie of Liddeisdale’ when he witnessed a document for the sale of Harwood. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick as ‘Johnne Scott of Heidschaw’.
In 1643 he was listed as owner of Dryden, valued at £290, as well as Headshaw, ‘Crawknows, and Cleuches’, valued at £760 10s. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire.
He was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. His son William of Headshaw is also mentioned in Buccleuch accounts for 1646, was served as his heir in 1653 and had a sasine as his heir in 1655. He was also recorded in 1660 (after his decease) when the curators for Mary Scott of Buccleuch tried to recover a debt from his sons William and John, owed to her father.
His children were: William, who succeeded; Walter of Dryden; John of Langhope; Mungo in Dryden; and Robert, also in Dryden. John (17th C.) recorded as being in ‘Castlehill’ in 1631–48 when he was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdalemuir and Westerkirk Parishes. In 1633 he was listed as a ‘servant’ of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch who was still owed his fee for the year.
He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in 1648. His designation was given as ‘Ormiston’, suggesting that he lived there. He was probably related to James of Ormiston and the later John of Ormiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Bessie Gledstains and their children included: Beatrix (b.1636); Anna (b.1639); and Walter (b.1648).
John of Clerklands (17th C.) landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson.
He paid the land tax on £180 in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 and £182 in 1678. He may have been the same as one of the other local Johns. John (b.1620) son of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. He was probably the John of Rennaldburn who was served heir to his father John in 1673 and also in 1697. He was referred to as ‘Squire of Newburgh’ and ‘alias of Rennalburn’. His father was ‘tutor’ for the young Francis of Davington, whom it is said he ‘tried to encroach upon and would have deprived him of his remaining estate, but for the friendship of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane’. Like his father, he served the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain for Eskdalemuir, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale from the 1670s through until 1692 and a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He also had a court case against Francis Scott of Thirlestane around 1676. He was living at the time of publication of Scott of Satchells doggerel history (1688).
He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690 and 1692. His son was James. John of Satchells (17th C.) recorded in a deed in 1655. He was probably a younger son of Robert, with his brothers being William and Capt. Walter. He may have succeeded his brother, but they both probably died without heirs, since Capt. Walter appears to have succeeded on returning from the wars. John of Brieryards ‘of Briddieyards’ (d.bef. 1667) local landowner of the mid-1600s, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton and possibly son of Walter. In about 1621 he had a charter of the lands of ‘Calffald’ from the Commendator of Melrose. In 1638 he was appointed as tutor to Walter, son of William of Chamberlain Newton, his brother. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He was recorded as owner of ‘Briddieyards’ in 1643. He was on the Committee of War in 1646 as ‘of Breidieairdis’, in 1648 as ‘of Brieryairdis’ and in 1649 as ‘of Breireyards’. He may have been the same man as John of Hornshole. In 1656 he and his sons (including Walter) purchased a ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ from Thomas Turnbull; this was probably Cockerheugh. In 1657 he had a ‘wadset’ with John Turnbull of Minto in which he gave 2200 ‘merks’ for liferent of Hornshole, and also his 2nd son John to have the lands ‘in fee’; this was confirmed by an instrument of sasine in 1658. He is probably the ‘Breirie yards’ who paid the land tax on £260 in 1663. In a disposition of 1667 his eldest son John is ‘now of brieryairdis’. John (17th C.) Bailie of Langholm. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £12.00 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Eskdale, where he had been acting as Chamberlain. John of Langhope (d.1666) 3rd son of John of Yorkston and Headshaw, and grandson of George of Synton. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He bought Langhope from his brother William. He is recorded in the period 1641–47 and 1649 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in Liddesdale (or the Debateable Land) and Canonbie; at this point he was the 2nd surviving son of John of Headshaw. He is mentioned as a temporary Chamberlain in Buccleuch estate records for 1646, replacing the deceased John of Headshaw, along with William of Headshaw (his elder brother). In 1661 he was listed as still owing £2000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debateable Lands for both him and his deceased father John of Headshaw. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was probably the Scott of Langhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1653 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whitslade. His children included: William (b.1654), who succeeded, but sold Langhope; John, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1670; and Elizabeth. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1652 the Council found that traveller Thomas Oliver was not liable to pay him for £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pipes, another £6, 10s. for ‘hott waters’, as well as 8 merks of powder and 8 merks of white sugar, all of which Oliver had been transporting from Edinburgh for him, but were ‘brak, drownet, and lossit by the way’. John (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he accused Walter ‘Westport’ of selling him 3 barrels of spirits that were supposed to be ‘24 stoupis’, but was short. Walter was acquitted by the Hawick Magistrates. John of Hornshole (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same man as the John listed as tenant in Hornshole in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John in Hornshole, married to Margaret Glendinning, was recorded in 1694, when his son James was baptised in Wilton Parish; the witnesses were William Scott and Thomas Scott, who were probably related, and it is one of the earliest Wilton Parish records. He may possibly be the same as John, son of John of Brieryards. John (17th C.) rented part of the farms of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park in 1671. Perhaps the same John leased 1/3 of Branxholme Mains in 1696 and 1697. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he was fined ‘for abusing and taking away of the bailies their good name, by calling them robers’. Perhaps the same John was banished from the Burgh in 1675 ‘because of several thefts committed by him’. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Jackson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1673. The witnessed were John Cuthbertson and James Wright. John (17th C.) recorded being ‘called Yles’ in 1673 when he was listed among those named in the court case relating to the disturbances at St. Jude’s Fair in Hawick. James Wilson says that the ‘nickname has been preserved, and is pronounced ceilly’ and suggests that it meant he had an eye missing or some other peculiarity with his eyes. John of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1678 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was probably son of Walter, who paid the land tax there in 1663. It also seems that he could be the same man as John of Lees. It is unclear how he was related tp Rev. James of Kirkton, who was also associated with Catslack. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Westport of Haik’ in 1674 when his son William became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This could be the same family as the Cornet of 1705, and probably also related to Walter ‘called Westport’, who is recorded in 1676. John (17th C.) recorded in 1684 as being ‘in Weins’ when his son Robert was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear if he may be the same as the contemporary John of Weens. It is possible he was the John of Hawick who had to flee to England in 1676 for being a Covenanter, where he was said to have been involved in preaching in Cumberland and Northumberland. John of Bowhill (17th/18th C.) probably son of James of Bowhill. He appears to have been the last male in this family line. He sold the lands to Adam in Dehoraine, brother of Francis of Grassyards. John of Headshaw (d.1691) eldest son of William. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration (listed under Dumfriesshire). His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, etc. to him in 1688. He married Jean Hackett (or Halket) in Edinburgh in 1682; she was only daughter of Col. R. Halket, and probably a cousin of some sort. When he died his sister Mary (who had married Patrick Porteous) became heir to Headshaw. John (17th C.) son of Thomas in Bonchester (probably the same as Thomas ‘of’ Bonchester). He was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. Perhaps the same John (said by George Tancred to be a Writer to the Signet) died in 1705 and was buried at Greyfriars Kirkyard in Edinburgh. John of Synton (d.bef. 1705) son of William. If he was the 3rd son, then his 2 older brothers must have died before him and with no heirs. In 1662 his uncle Francis was appointed as tutor during his minority. He is recorded in a sasine of 1670 when his ‘brother-germane’ William was served heir to his father William of Synton (d.c.1690) minister of Synton. In 1675 he was served heir to his father William of Synton, in the lands of North Synton; his father had died earlier than this, suggesting that perhaps this is when he reached majority. He paid the land tax at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678 (half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130) and was also owner of the lands of Essenside (valued at £365), although at that time North Synton was in the hands of Rev. Robert Cunningham. He may also be the Laird of Synton who whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £1600 in 1678. He is recorded as ‘of Synetoune’ in a bond of 1682. He later added Satchells to the estate and gained some land from Selkirk Common. He owned additional lands in Tweedsmuir Parish, according to a ‘tack’ of 1687 by Francis Scott, minister of Tweedsmuir (who may have been a relative). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 35 hearths on his lands. In 1696 he and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with James Melville of Halk. He is also recorded in 1670 when his ‘brother-germane’ William became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Murray of Blackbarony in 1686 (probably not the daughter of John Murray of Cringletie, as stated by Keith Scott). In 1702 he secondly married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and widow of William Scott of Raeburn. His children were: Alexander (b.1690), who is recorded in an assignation by his grandmother Lady Blackbarony in 1697, and succeeded; Jean, who had a similar assignation in 1697, but appears to have died a year later; and Margaret, who received money from his mother-in-law’s estate in 1699 and married William Elliot of Borthwickebrae in 1706, by which date he was deceased. The 1690 baptism was witnessed by John of Woll and William (probably of Headshaw). He may have been the John, son of William, born in Ashkirk in 1646. He may have died in 1710 (as stated by Keith Scott). Rev. John (d.c.1690) minister of Hawick. He was tutor in the family of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, and may also have been related to that family. Based on his witnessing of documents of the Elliots of Harwood, he may have been a son of a sister of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1650 and became Hawick minister in 1657. He may be the John of Hawick whose behaviour was complained about at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles in 1655. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopacy, effectively being forced to leave the town; however, he is said to have preached regularly at conventicles, e.g. at Earlside. He apparently contemplated joining a Covenanter force in 1666, but refrained when he found out how disorganised they were. However, he was present at the Pentland rising in 1666. He fled to the north of England, preaching in Northumberland and Cumbria. In 1678 he chaired a meeting of outed ministers who opposed the more extreme views of Richard Cameron and others. He also helped Archibald, Earl of Argyll escape in 1681, giving him a Covenantanter password, then arranging for him to stay with Pringle of Torwoodlee, and then go via Hawick to Northumberland and eventually to Holland (although Argyll was later captured and beheaded). He survived past the Revolution, but appears not to have resumed service as a minister. In 1658 he married Marion, daughter of John Livingstone, the minister of Ancrum; she died aged only 19 in 1661, and is buried at St. Mary's. He later married Elizabeth Anderson, who died in 1698 and is buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. It is possible he was the ‘Mr John Scott’ recorded as resident of Lilliesleaf in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 James Livingstone, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his wife Marion (although it is unclear why this was so long after her death). John of Ormiston (17th C.) merchant of Hawick in the 1600s. He was listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably related to (or confused with) James of Ormiston, and the earlier John. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. John of Cockerheugh (17th C.) probably 2nd son of John of Brieryyards and brother of James of Brieryyards. His father purchased ‘a merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (probably Cockerheugh) from Thomas Turnbull in 1656 and had a ‘wadset’ in his name in 1657 with the Turnbulls, involving ‘the markland of horneshole with houses’. He transferred the wadset and lands to his brother James in 1667. He may be the John who (along with Walter, perhaps another brother) witnessed baptism for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687. Also in 1681 there was a ‘disposition and assignation’ to him from Walter, probably also a brother (or other near relative). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the crowd that gathered to try to stop the roof being removed from Hassendean Kirk. Along with his nephew John (son of James ‘of Brricyairdis’) he was accused of striking Charles Lithgow in this incident. He is probably the John whose son Walter inherited Cockerheugh from him in 1721, and whose daughter Bessie married Walter (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’), also in 1721. In 1705 he was ‘of Cockerheugh Now Tennant in Langlands’ when a woman appeared before the Session to confess to being pregnant by his son Walter. John of Lees (d.c.1685) recorded being ‘of Leis’ in 1685 when his will was registered. Probably the same John is recorded being of Moormaw in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners and tenants of 1666. He was presumably related to other Scotts of Moormaw and Lees. He may be the same man as John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. In 1682 he was ‘of lyes’ when (along with Adam) he witnessed a baptism for William of Clarilaw (who was probably related to him). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Renwick in 1680. His designation appears to be ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe). James Newbie and Andrew Angus were witnesses. Perhaps the same John, with his wife’s name as ‘Rennick’ had a son John baptised in 1696. He was surely related to Robert, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. John ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Whitegates’, ‘Cloaks’ (17th C.) merchant of Hawick. It is hard to separate the contemporary Johns, but it seems clear that the merchant and ‘Whiteyetts’ are the same man. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Scott ‘Flex’) for Thomas Scott and in 1682 another for Baxter James Lands. He was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon; since he confessed and appeared before the Bailie, he was excused. He is recorded as merchant in in several deeds of 1682. He could be the ‘merchant Elder’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could also be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1698. He is ‘Whitegates’ in 1700 and ‘Whitegates junior’ in 1705 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for merchant Michael. In 1706 he was ‘whitegates’ and witnessed a baptism (for workman William Riddell) along with John ‘younger Soger’. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Elizabeth Wilson and in 1720 another for James Scott and Sarah Gledstains. He is recorded in 1701 in the Burgh Records and in 1718 in the Hawick Session Records, when he was rebuked for providing William Whaton with military-type coat and sword to ride through the town, as part of a wager. He married Margaret Paterson (being recorded as both merchant and as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘whitegates’ in separate baptismal entries) and had children: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686), who fled after getting Margaret Brydon pregnant; John (b.1688); and Gideon (b.1700). In 1700 he is ‘whitegates younger’, suggesting his father was also John ‘Whiteyetts’. The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie William Laing and Adam Ruecastle and in 1700 were Michael Scott and William Laing. He could also be the John whose son John was baptised in 1699, with Walter Anderson and William Paterson as witnesses. Either he secondly married Agnes (or Ann) Scott, or this was his son, perhaps the ‘younger’; his name is given as ‘Cloaks and Whitegates’ in some of the records. Their children included: Gideon (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Jean (b.1712); John (b.1713); and Janet (b.1715). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Ruecastle and Walter Anderson, in 1708 were Gideon of Fahnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1712 were shoemaker Walter Scott and William ‘Whaton’ and in 1713 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and Walter Anderson. It is unclear if his nickname referred to a specific place, and if so, where this might have been. John (17th C.) son of Bailie Scott, although it is unclear which one. In 1685 Adam Young was fined for insulting him and his father, specifically ‘calumniating them and taking away yr. good name’ in claiming they had reset peas that had been taken by footboys of Lord Airlie’s troop (i.e. Royalists under James Ogilvy of Airlie). John of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1688. Along with William of Brieryyards he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart (from Clydesdale), who had twins in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Whitehaugh (or if ‘John’ was perhaps an error). John (17th/18th C.) cordiner (i.e. shoemaker) in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Briggs in 1680 and another for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. His son Walter was witness to a Hawick sasine of 1688, while another son William served as ‘procurator’ for Patrick Cunningham in the same sasine. He is and was listed as a shoemaker among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the cordiner listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptism for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan in 1707, for wright John Pringle in 1711 and for Thomas Greenshiels and for James Scott ‘Laird’ in 1714. He may be the same shoemaker (although perhaps this is another generation) who married Janet Briggs and had a son Thomas baptised in 1708, with witnesses Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. John (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Andrew, who is also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was listed along with Andrew and James, each having a single hearth, and so it seems unlikely the was the same man as John of Headshaw. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed right before James, and so probably related. He could be an ancestor of millwright Gideon. John (17th C.) shepherd at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from another John (not shepherd) there. John (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James and Thomas, listed after him at the same place, were presumably related to him. It is possible he is the John, in Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1680. John (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) ploughman at Adderstoneshiel listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as a tailor at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same tailor John was in Mervinslaw in 1709. The witnesses were Andrew . . . , tenant in Mervinslaw, and John Rule, shepherd there. It is also possible he was the John in Borthaugh who received money from the Wilton poor box, including for the purchase of a coat in 1705. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690-96 an a third in 1698. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; a separate John was also recorded as a washer in the same place. He witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill in 1697. He may have been closely related to Robert or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed with the word ‘Grinna’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinna’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, George is also listed in 1694 with the same name. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is listed separately from men of the same name who were tailor, cordiner, ‘yonger’ and ‘Grinna’. He could be the same man as the smith recorded in 1693/4. John ‘younger’ (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick ‘eist the water’. His name is written ‘John Scott yonger’. He could be the same man as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Sodger’. John (17th C.) carrier in Hawick who was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed separately from the ‘Soldier’, who was a carrier at the same time. He could be the John, who along with Robert, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. John ‘Sodger’ (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1692 he was recorded as ‘Sodger’ when leasing 34 acres of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4, where his name was listed as ‘John Scott, carrier, called soldier’. He was listed as ‘Shouldier’ and resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1707 he and his son, John younger, were fined by the Council for ‘violent putting, thrusting, and expelling, under cloud of night’ the horses of William Aitken, younger, from his barn; the Aitkens were also carriers in Hawick, but it is unclear what the dispute was between the families. In 1713 he (or possibly his son) was ‘distinctionis causa called John the Souldier’ when when witnessing a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and Margaret Scott (who may have been related to him). John ‘Goudilands’ (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694, when he paid for 2 hearths. He was associated with Goldielands in some way, although Charles of Goldielands was also listed on the tax rolls. It is possible that he could be the same man as ‘Uncle John’. John (17th C.) shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John listed as shepherd at Dryden a few decades later. He is probably the John ‘in Dryden’ whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1706, with witnesses Adam Elliot of Arkleton and James Grieve in Commonside. Perhaps the same John was recorded as herd at Drydenburn in 1713. He married Helen Hislop and their children included: Margaret (b.1702); Isobel (b.1703); Margaret (again, b.1707); Elizabeth (b.1710); and Bessie (b.1713). The witnesses in 1713 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume ‘probationer’ and tailor James Robson (from Roberton Parish). John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Whitcheusters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and Walter, who were also listed there. He could be the John who (along with Walter) was in Whitcheusters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. John (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. This is listed under Hassendean Parish, but is clearly the farm in Wilton Parish. He may have been related to Adam of Burnfoot, who was probably Laird at that time. He may be the John who (along with William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for James, tenant at West Burnfoot Mill and another in 1729 for George at West Burnfoot. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Applettreehall. Probably the same John was listed in Applettreehall in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Jean Bell and their children included: Janet (b.1681), baptised in Hawick; an unnamed son (b.1685), baptised in Hawick; and David (b.1688), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1688 were John Hope and George Scott. John ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was father of James ‘Laird’ (Hawick’s first known Cornet), according to a baptismal record for one of James’ children in 1714. He himself witnessed a baptism in 1704 (along with James ‘Doctor’) for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. It seems likely that the was also a weaver. He was surely related to the roughly contemporary Robert and the earlier James, who were both also nicknamed ‘Laird’. John of Woll (d.c.1706) 5th son of Sir William of Harden. He purchased the lands of Woll in 1660. He paid tax on £533 6s 8d in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678. He wrote to his brother Sir William in 1665 from Aikwood. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick, Selkirk and St. Mary’s in at least the periods 1657–63 and 1671–1703, when he also covered the Barony of Kirkurd. He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690, 1692, 1694 and 1698. He may have been the John who served as Chamberlain for the Countess of Wemyss’ rents in Teviotdale in the period 1652–66 (although there were other contemporary men of the same name); and also responsible for the Countess’ rentals in Eckford Parish. He was also factor to his brother Sir William of Harden in the period 1660–83. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £700 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for... rentals in Ettrick Forest. He received the East Mains of Selkirk from Walter Scott of Harden and his wife Margaret Ker in 1669 (although it is unclear who this Walter could be, given the dates). In 1678 he acted as ‘amicable compositor’ between the parties involved when part of Selkirk Common was divided. He is recorded in deeds of 1682. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Kel and Gideon Scott. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. In 1692 he was one of the 2 Chamberlains of Buccleuch who gave their consent for Francis Gledstains wanted to enclose part of the Flex. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also Berwickshire and in 1693 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1702. Also in 1693 there is an existing letter to his nephew Walter, Earl of Tarras. He was probably the Laird of Woll who paid tax on 8 hearths at his house in 1694. When his eldest son married in 1694 he resigned the lands of Woll to him. He may be the John ‘of Well’ who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He married Agnes, only daughter of Robert Scott of Harwood and started the Scotts of Woll (or restarted, since there was an earlier branch of the Scotts who were Lairds of Woll). His children included: Walter, who succeeded; John, who married Margaret Scott; Gideon; 2 other sons, who died before 1710 without having sons; Agnes (b.c.1675), who married Alexander Veitch of Glen in 1698; Margaret, who married John, son of Francis Scott of Gilnanscleuch in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1696. He married a Renwick and their children included John (b.1696). The witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1698 when his son was baptised in Hawick. This was the day before the baptism of a child of Gideon Scott of Falnash and with the same witnesses, Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. John of Langhope (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Langhope and St. Leonards. He appears to have purchased Langhope from his father in 1688, and was served heir to these lands of his father’s in 1691. However, later in 1691 he and his wife Janet sold the lands to Adam of Bowhill. Sir John of Ancrum (d.1712) son of Patrick and Elizabeth Simson, and descended from the Scotts of Balwawrie. He is sometimes called ‘of Kirkstyle’ (in Perthshire), although his father probably sold those lands. He is also sometimes called ‘of Langshaw’, like his father, although those lands would go to his younger brother Francis. In 1654 he bought the lands of Ormiston from William, Earl of Roxburghe and was the ‘fayre of Langshaw’ who was the son of Patrick Langshaw. He was listed as ‘fayre of Langschar’ in 1661 when he and his partners owed money to the Scotts of Buccleuch for duties on the coal-fields of Sherifhall. In 1663 he is recorded holding lands in Melrose Parish that had previously belonged to Lord Elibank. He is recorded in document in the Melrose Regality records, relating to the ‘multures’ of Langshaw and other matters in 1663–68. In 1668 he had a sasine of the lands of ‘Wouplaw’. He acquired Ancrum from Charles Kerr, 2nd Earl of Ancrum. He had a charter of the lands and barony of Ancrum in 1670 and in 1671 became the 1st Baronet of Ancrum (in the baronetcy of Nova Scotia). He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead for the years 1660–62 (as Scott of Langshaw) and 1665–70 (as Scott of Ancrum). He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1664. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1665. He paid the land tax on £2400 in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1694 he paid tax on 19 hearths for his estate at Ancrum. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In the early 1700s he was accused of embezzling money during the minority of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1652 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Francis (or perhaps William) Scott of Mangerton, and they had 5 sons and 5 daughters. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bennet of Grubet, and had 2 further daughters, from whom are descended Sir Hector Maclean Hay of Alderston and Sir William Henry Walsingham Calder. In 1708 he lastly married Barbara, daughter of Walter Ker of Littledean. His children were: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; Charles of Palace Hill, who married Margaret, sister of John, 5th Lord Rutherford; John (b.1702), a merchant, who spent time in London and Jamaica, settled in New York and whose descendant, John Morin Scott, was Mayor of Philadelphia; Andrew, also a merchant, who participated in the disastrous Darrien colony; William, an advocate; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Elliot of Stobs; Anna (or Anne), who married William Scott of Raeburn and secondly John Scott of Syntoon; Cecilia (or Cicely), who married William Ainslie of Blackhill; Jean, who married John Murray of Bowhill; Elizabeth, who married John Erskine of Shielfield; Margaret, who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade, and later Sir David Murray of Stenhope; and Christian, who married Sir Thomas Calder of Muirtoune. John ‘Wyndheid’ (d.c.1712) married to Bessie Paisley. His nickname may have come from living at the head of Walter’s Wynd, suggesting he was related to the later Walter (although it is possible that the Cross Wynd or Kirk Wynd are meant). In 1676 he was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with Robert Taylor, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. There he was referred to as ‘Wyndheads’. Probably the same John ‘called Wyndhead late servant to Robert Robson’ had a son Archibald baptised in Hawick in 1711, with witnesses Dand Gray in Whitlaw and Andrew Rid dell in Goldielands. In 1712 his widow was called before the Kirk Session and rebuked for harassing her neighbours. He may be related to Robert ‘Wyndheid’, recorded in 1701 and George ‘Wyndheid’ also recorded about the same time. John (d.bef. 1715) tailor in Hawick, married to Isabel Harkness. In 1704 he was ‘taylor in Hawick near to ye Casyend’. He may be the John, ‘taylier’ who witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1688. He is probably the tailor John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the tailor listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1707 he was ‘tayler, and towne tresawrer’ when the 2 Bailies were fined for their behaviour at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Town of the new Grammar School. He married Isobel Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1700); John (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); George (b.1707); Isobel and Margaret (b.1709); and Francis (b.1711). The witnesses in 1700 were Glover John and merchant William, in 1702 were Bailies Robert Hardie and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1709 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. In 1715 his widow was involved in a dispute with Robert Deans over who should sit in a particular pew in St. Mary’s. He may be the John described as ‘sometimes tailyor in Hawk’ in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married Town Clerk Walter Gledstains; however, if he died before 1715 then this would have to have been a different tailor John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roshiegrain. He married Marion Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John ‘Uncle John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of the Hawk area. His nickname was recorded in 1702 when he was a witness to a birth for Walter in Goldielands, with the other witness being Robert of Tandlaw; it seems likely he was related to the Goldielands and Tandlaw branches, but it is otherwise unclear who he was. He married Jean Stuart in Hawick parish in 1704, when the nickname is again recorded and their son Robert was born in 1707, when the nickname is recorded once more. Presumably it distinguished him from other contemporary Johns. In 1705 he and Jean Stewart had another son, John, baptised in Hawick; there he is recorded being in Blackcleuch and the witnesses were Robert in Blackcleuch (perhaps his father) and John in Falnash. John (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for flesher Robert Renwick (along with merchant William) and for tailor John, in 1704 for Robert Scott, ‘Pope’ and for smith James Scott and in 1709 for weaver Patrick Forman. In 1707 he was ‘oulawed for deriding and mocking the bailie’. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Allan. He was appointed in 1718 to try to raise money for a new Kirk clock in Hawick. In 1720 (along with candlemaker John) he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Cavers. He may be the ‘John Scott Shoemaker’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1721. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull and he witnessed another for gardener Walter in 1740. He married Mary Rutherford and their children included: Robert (b.1705); Margaret (b.1708); and Thomas (b.1715). William Scott, shoemaker, witnessed the 1705 baptism and so may have been his father or brother. The 1708 witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot. John (d.1710) tenant in Falnash. He was recorded in 1711 as ‘younger in Falnash’ when his widow Janet Aitchison married William Scott in Skelfhill. He may have been a son of Gideon, ‘Auld Falnash’. He is probably the John in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Stewart, smith in Falnash, in 1704 for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn, in 1705 for John in Blackcleuch and in 1709 for Archibald in Hisslop. He was ‘tenent in Falnesh’ when he married Margaret Anderson in 1702; she was daughter of Edward Aitichon, tenant in Eweslees. They had children: Margaret (b.1703); Marion (b.1704); Helen (b.1706); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Morton. He was already deceased in early 1711 when his son John was baptised in Hawick, his father-in-law Edward Aitichon agreeing to arrange for the education of the child; the witnesses were Archibald, tenant in Hislop and John Armstrong.

John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1702 he was probably at Denholm when his son William was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1710 he was recorded as servant to Robert Robson. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included: Archibald (b.1711); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1717); and Helen (b.1720). The witnesses in 1710 were George Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He was recorded being ‘called John Scott Acreknow’ (to distinguish him from other Johns) when his son William was baptised in Hawick in 1711. The witnesses were William Gledstains and Alexander Hislop, both tailors in Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) described as a skinner in Hawick when his son William became an apprentice baxter in Edinburgh in 1717. He may be related to the earlier John of Westport (given the name and trade coincidence). He may be the same John as the glover. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in ffilnesh’ (i.e. Falnash) in Cavers Parish in 1716 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is unclear how he was related to Scotts in Roberton or at Falnash (e.g. the earlier John in Falnash, who died in 1710).

John of Davington (1680–c.1710) eldest son of Francis of Davington. Dying without children, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. John (17th/18th C.) younger son of Scott of Bonchester (probably Walter), he is possibly the same man as John of Ashtrees. He took part in the 1715 rebellion, along with William Kerr of Abbotrule. He was banished as a result of this. A story (recounted by Walter Deans in 1887) was told of his time in the colonies, labouring at a government building, when the Governor’s new wife recognised him, saying ‘That stane wad row easier doon Bunestir Hill, than up there’, whereon he recognised her as a local woman of lowly birth who had once been whipped through the streets of Hawick! Keeping quiet about this, his conditions were improved and he was later sent back on a ship to Britain, but lived and died on Jersey rather than in Rulewater. George Tancred states that in 1740 he was father of a girl aged 8 and a boy aged 5. He was probably nephew of George (son of Thomas in Bonchester), who was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of Francis. He also appears to have served as a Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1678 he paid the land tax of more than £800 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gillmenscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (i.e. his son John also served, although after this it is unclear whether he or his son are being described). In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. In 1707 he was involved in a bond with Francis Scott of Bailielee and Robert Scott ‘in Overdelorain’. Sometime before 1712 he lost his estates because of debts, including Gilmanscleuch, which went to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He married Margaret Scott, daughter of John of Woll, and was succeeded by John. John (d bef. 1710) 2nd son of John of Woll and grandson of Sir William of Harden. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter, Agnes. He died before having male heirs, however. John (17th C.) married Margaret Henderson in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Ashirk Parish in 1689, with witnesses Thomas Wallace and Thomas Scott (who may have been related). John (17th/18th C.) son of John, he was described as ‘younger of Gilmanscleuch’ in the period 1685–90 when they both served the county of Selkirkshire. In 1689 he was appointed as an officer in the local Militia. About 1728 he was appointed Surveyor of Roads. His son was probably William, last to be called ‘of Gilmanscleuch’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as tenant in Branxholme in 1702, 1709 and 1713. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas ‘hutson’ in 1702, for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for carrier Robert in Branxholme Town (along with William in Branxholme Town) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson in 1701 and their children included William (b.1702), with witnesses James Ogilvie and William Scott, both also in Branxholme. He may be the same John who was at Branxholme Mains in the 1690s. His son-in-law was William Scott, who had a son Robert baptised in 1709; presumably this means he had a daughter in about the 1680s. John of Gorrenberry (d bef. 1729) son of Francis. In 1691 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He took the money from the Orrock Bequest and paid interest to the Hawick heritors in the early 18th century. He must be the owner of ‘Goranberrie’ in either Cavers or Kirkton Parish, which was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694; it is not stated where his house was, but it seems likely to have been at Adderstone. He was ‘of Gorrenberrie’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Company. He appears to have have held lands in Kirkton Parish, since his servant William Lorraine was resident in that parish when he is recorded marrying in 1707; but since William was married in Edinburgh it suggests he also had a house there. He is probably the Laird of Gorrenberry who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1722 there is record of a payment made to the Burgh for the use of the bell for a burial relating to him. In 1723 he was mentioned in the Hawick Session book for his interest (presumably meaning return on his money) in ‘ye building of ye Schoolhouse for ye Grammar School’. In 1724 there was again deliberation about ‘the affaire of the Money in Gorrenberry’s hands for a Schol-house and Schoolmaster’s house’. He married a daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, possibly Cecily. His children included: John (b.1698); Charles (b.1700), baptised in Hawick; Francis, who succeeded; James (b.1703); Ann, who was the 3rd wife of Walter Scott of Harden; another daughter who may have married Douglas of Cavers; and another daughter, probably Margaret, who married John Elliot of Whitla. He may be the John of Gorrenberry who married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1716 (as her second husband). The witnesses in 1698 were ‘Mr’ Alexander Riddle and James Heatley and in 1700 were William Kerr of Abbotrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Adderstoneshiel. His son Walter was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.1707) may also have been his son. He may be the ‘servitor’ to John Tait in Adderstoneshiel whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch as owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 7 acres, 3 roods and 27 perches. He is surely the same as one of the contemporary Johns, but it is not clear which one. John ‘Young Sodger’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, presumably son of ‘Sodger’. In 1704 he was John ‘younger Soger’ when he (along with John ‘Whitegates’) witnessed a baptism for workman William Riddell. He is also mentioned in the parish records of 1714 answering ‘for his sin of adultery’; he is thus one of the earliest adulterers explicitly on record in Hawick Parish! He is described as ‘sojer’ and ‘younger of the Wester Kirk Style’. He was ordered to appear in sackcloth on the next Sunday, but failed to do so, appearing some months later in front of the Presbytery, along with his co-sinner where they were rebuked and referred back to the Session (presumably to pay a fine). In 1724 he was described as ‘distinctionis causa, called the young Souldier’ when rebuked along with Thomas Weddell for breaking the Sabbath. It seems likely that his name was to distinguish him from John Scott, ‘Sodger’, who may of course have been his father. John ‘Herd’ (17th/18th C.) listed as being ‘called herd’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘John Scott herd’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Margaret Purdon in Hawick in 1700, when he is recorded as ‘John Scott called Herd’. He is further recorded with the same nickname in 1714 when he received money from Hawick Session to help buy a horse ‘for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer’, the charity being repeated the following year for a similar purpose. He may have been Town Herd, or otherwise worked as a shepherd, or this could have been an unrelated nickname. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1718). John (17th/18th C.) candlemaker, who was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was directed to collect monies from ‘Whitla, Whittalashaugh, Flexes and Burnflat’, suggesting he may have lived in this area. In 1720, along with glover John) he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Cavers. And in 1722 he was appointed to collect from ‘ye Meekle bridge to Wm. Dickson’s house’, although it is unclear to which bridge this referred. In 1727 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of William Ekron. He may also be the John who witnessed several baptisms in 1728. He married Janet Renwick and their children included Christian (b.1709) and Elspeth (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John whillans and merchant William Dickson. Probably the same candlemaker secondly married Margaret Clerk and had children Margaret (b.1714), Jane (b.1717), James (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Christian (again, b.1722), John (b.1725) and Helen (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1714 were Bailie Walter Elliot and William Hodge. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk (distinct from the candlemaker). He lived at Branxholme, and may have been related to William, ‘elder in Branxholmton’; the 2 were charged with collecting monies from the Branxholme area in 1717. He may also be the ‘James’ (perhaps a transcription error) mentioned as being one of the aged elders in 1718. John (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick who was admitted as a Burgess in 1692. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms for James Grieve (from Wilton) in Hawick in 1701 and for James Henderson in Weensland in 1709. He was listed as a smith and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed baptisms in 1711 (along with Francis Gledstains) for carrier William Rae and in 1712 for William Sanderson (tenant in Hawick). He could be the John who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He married Jean ‘Betie’ (i.e. Beatie) (from Westerkirk) in Hawick in 1703, with children including: William (b.1704); Margaret (b.1708); Robert (b.1716); and Jean (b.1718). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Wilson and merchant Walter Oliver, in 1708 were merchant Walter Wilson, James Falsyde and John Shiel and in 1716 were wright Francis Gledstains and merchant James Simpson. In 1721 probably the same smith married Elspeth ‘Red’ (probably Reid), who was widow of George Hardie. In 1722 he is recorded being paid 12 shillings ‘for yell [ale] when the ded bell was mended’. In 1723, along with another smith, James Beattie, he was asked to explain himself to the Hawick Session about ‘entertaining all the night in his house Janet Andison’ who was involved in a ‘scandal’ in Ettrick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) son of Robert in Shelfhill. In Hawick Parish in 1700 he married Margaret Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘John Scot at ye port’ in 1709 when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were weavers John Swan and John Swan (suggesting that he was probably also a weaver and from the West-end). He was probably related to the West Port Scotts. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker. In 1709 his daughter Anna was baptised, with witnesses Bailies Robert Hardie and James Burn, as well as ‘bailiffs’ William Laing and Walter Elliot. There are several other children who could be his. John (c.1678–1754/5) shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He married Jean Goodfellow, probably daughter of Archibald from the Belcastro area, whose brother William farmed nearby; she died in 1783, aged 93. He had sons Thomas (1713/4–42), Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw) and William (‘the Auld Mason’). John of Weens (d.1727) probably descended from Andrew of Weens. He was one of the last Scott owners of Weens estate. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, for ‘Weymes’, valued at £200. He is also recorded in a bond of 1682. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for having 3 hearths at Weens. He is listed as John ‘of Weens’ when he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He may have married a daughter of Rev. James Ainslie of Minto. His son was also called John. In 1722 he and his son made an arrangement with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, whereby they gave up their pasturage rights to Feu-Rule Common in exchange for ¼/5th of the land of the Common (now Hallrule farm). He was probably the Laird of Weens for whose burial the funeral bells were rung in Hawick in 1727. In 1729 his daughter Betsy married Sam Oliver, schoolmaster at Hobkirk. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. In 1715 he married Euphen, daughter of Robert Riddell. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); and John (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Riddell and Walter Nixon. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw and their children included Thomas (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) beadle of Hawick Kirk in the early 1700s. He was son of Walter, who died in 1717, and whom he replaced. In 1720 he was rebuked for taking several days to return from Selkirk Fair, missing the Sabbath in Hawick. And in 1724 he was severely rebuked for drunkenness, ‘(as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink’ and unable to bring another person before the Session for the same crime. After much debate he submitted to the censure of the Session, was rebuked before the congregation, and kept his job. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His designation is too hard to read in the Parish Records. In 1716 his son John was baptised, the mother being Isobel ‘Lithen’ and the record labelled ‘Adult’.

of the other Johns. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield. He was witness to a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Sir John of Ancrum (d.1746) son of Sir Patrick, he was the 3rd Baronet. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherglen for John Scott of Belford. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of William Nisbet of Dirleton. His children included: Patrick (d.1742), who was an army officer and died before his father; Sir William, who succeeded; John of Craigintinnie (b.1729), who also took the surname Nisbet, and whose son John became 5th Baronet of Ancrum; Patrick; Walter (b.1733); Margaret; and Christian (1730–88). John of Whitslade (d.1734) younger son of Gideon. He succeeded to Harden in 1720, after the death of his brother Walter, becoming 9th Laird. He was probably a minor when he inherited the lands, since they were run by curators until 1723. About 1724–26 there were legal proceedings over claims on part of the Harden estates by his former ‘tutors and curators’, Walter of Whitfield, William of Thirlestane and Walter of Woll. He married Jean Erskine, daughter of Alexander, 4th Earl of Kellie. They had daughters: Anne, who married Thomas Shairp of Houston; and Mary Lilias (said to be a great beauty). A document of 1726 disponed Harden House as jointly owned with his wife. Dying without male issue, the estate went to his uncle Walter (of Whitfield), second son of the Earl of Tarves. John of Whitslade (d.bef. 1727) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded to the family estates after the death of his brother Thomas. He thus became the 8th and last Laird. He sold off the Whitslade estate about 1722 (having had the lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714), it having been in the family for around 6 generations. At that point the estate included Castleside, the Redfordgreens, Ashkirk farm, Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Broadlee. He leased the lands of Harden Mains for 2 years in 1723, leading to legal disputes involving his brother Walter with Walter of Whitfield after his death. He died unmarried, ending this branch of the family. He was said to have been 14th in descent from the Baron of Buccleuch. Thus the direct representation of the Synton branch passed to the Scotts of Todrig. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Bridihall’ (i.e. Brieryhill) in 1724. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1717), Agnes (b.1719), Helen (b.1722), Helen (again, b.1724) and Robert (b.1726). The witnesses in 1724 were David Taylor and John Miller. He is probably the John who on the same day in 1724 (along with David Taylor) witnessed a baptism for John Miller. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawickshire. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Thomson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1729). The witnesses in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Scott. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawickshire. He married Janet Henry. They had a son William baptised in 1721, on the same day as a child of another John (with the same witnesses), who was recorded as tenant in Hawickshire. They also had an unnamed son in 1723. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1724 he was rebuked for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Anna, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand, widow of John Watson (who had been Clerk to the Regality in Hawick). They were married in Hawick by John Middleton, with witnesses Andrew Turnbull (mason) and Walter Gledstains (lawyer); the inclusion of a Gledstains suggests they may have been adherents of the Episcopalian church. They had a child John (b.1728). John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Outerside in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Deanburnhaugh in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There are several potential marriages and many children who could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Mains in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Todshaw in 1725 when his son William was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton. His snuff box is in the Museum, labelled ‘John Scott in Kirkton – his box 1735’. It is unclear who he was. John (18th C.) recorded at Branxholme in 1734 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Presumably his family or his wife came from the Borthwick valley. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was possibly 3rd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester and Jane Turnbull; however, it is also suggested that that John was sent to the plantations after the 1715 rebellion (and hence was a different man). He was factor to Capt. John Rutherford of Edgerston. He married Helen, daughter of Thomas Oliver of Ashtrees. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. These would later pass to his grand-nephew Dr. James Robson-Scott. His children included: Adam, who became Laird of Ashtrees; and Thomas, who became Laird of Peel and married Esther Turnbull. John of Lees (18th C.). A 1738 letter exists in the National Archive, sent from him in Midhurst, Sussex to Mrs. Margaret Scott of Horsleyhill, mentioning that he intends to deliver an Episcopal sermon at Hassendean Kirk (long ruined by then) and mentions (possibly Alexander) Scott of Burnhead. He was surely related to the Scotts of Burnhead. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew, who was therefore probably related. In 1743 he witnessed baptisms for tobacconist William Saddler, tailor Walter Rae, Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull and Robert Fowler in Sea Croft. He also witnessed 3 baptisms in 1745, one for the Town Piper William Brown, another for William Wilson ‘messanger’ and the last for carrier John Pott, along with shoemaker Thomas. His name is given first and hence Thomas was probably his son or younger brother. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Waugh and his wife Margaret Scott (who was possibly related to him). He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for Francis Gledstains in 1725 and the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for weaver John Elder in 1760. All of these witnessing suggests that he was an elder of the Kirk. John (18th C.) recorded in 1740 as ‘Hynd at Crumhaugh’. He married Grizel Elliot in 1730 and their children included William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were Rev. James Mason of St. Boswell’s and Grammar Schoolmaster James Anderson; it is unclear what the connection was. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1742 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be related to the later Scotts who were at Broadlee Burnfoot and Broadleeshiel. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at East Highchesters in 1742 when his daughter was baptised. It is possible this is the same man as the tenant of Highchesters Mill, if he had an earlier marriage. He may be the same John who was at Whithope in 1735 when his son John was baptised. There were several other children baptised in Robertson who could also be his. John (18th C.) recorded being at Winnington Rig in 1746. He was a witness in Hawick for merchant Gideon and his wife Sussana Scott. He may have been related to one member of this couple. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 (along with another John, shoemaker) and another in 1746 for carrier James Oliver. John of Belford (18th C.) son of Charles and grandson of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. His mother was Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. In 1738 he tried to claim the Lordship, after the death of his distant relative, Alexander, 6th Lord Rutherford. He supported the Jacobites in 1745, meeting Charles at Kelso. As a result of this support he later lost his estate, and was never able to claim the peerage. He paid the window tax for Belford (in Morebattle Parish) in the period 1748–59. However, it is possible he was the John ‘of Palacehill’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Marion, daughter of Alexander Baillie from Ashiestiel. They had 5 daughters, the eldest being Agnes, who married Thomas Cockburn of Rowchester (in Berwickshire). John (18th C.) recorded as a ‘wool comber’ in 1730 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick. In 1735 he was recorded receiving a Burgess ticket gratis. It is unclear why this happened, but perhaps he had been brought in from outside Hawick to stimulate the manufacturing of yarn. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (d. bef. 1777) son of John of Weens. He is probably the ‘younger of Weens in ye parish of Hopkirk’ recorded in 1712 when his daughter Janet ‘begoten in ye aforesd parish in fornication’ was baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert Hardie and John Craw (‘fowler’ in Branxholme Town). In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodggeill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. In 1733 he married Marion (or ‘Mary’), 3rd daughter of William Elliot of Harwood. In 1744 he sold the lands of Weens to John Armstrong with the consent of his wife. Marion was a widow in 1777 when she had a discharge to her brother Henry. His son James was baptised in Hobbirk Parish in 1738 (when he is recorded being ‘of Weens’). Other children baptised there who may have been his included Elizabeth (b.1734), Margaret (b.1736), Henry (b.1739), Christian (b.1741), an unnamed son (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Crawhill in 1751, 1759 and 1764. He married Helen Scott in 1750 (with a marriage of a couple having the same names also recorded in 1744) and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1750); Susanna (b.1751); James (b.1753); Elizabeth (b.1755); John (b.1757); Gideon (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); John (b.1762); Helen (b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Margaret (b.1768); John (b.1771); and Christian (b.1773). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and John Scott, in 1759 were Thomas and Robert Scott (who are likely to have been related to him and his wife) and in 1764 were John Scott and John Hart. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1764. He married Jean Douglas and their children included: Mary (b.1760); Esther (b.1762); Marjory (b.1764); William (b.1767); Robert (b.1769); Agnes (b.1772); and Jean (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Easton and Thomas Reid. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766 he married Euphane Ruecastle. Their children included: John (b.1767); Walter (b.1768); John (again, b.1770); and Elizabeth (b.1771). John (18th C.) tenant in Highchesters Mill. He married Beatrix Thomson in 1756 and she died in 1797, aged 66. Their children included Archibald, William (b.1762), Beatrix (b.1764), John (b.1777) and Mary (b.1772). Other children baptised in Robertson Parish that may have been his include Margaret (b.1760) and Nelly (b.1768). He died at the age of 50 (although not in 1748, as reported). The family are buried in Borthwick St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1737 the Treasurer’s book records money ‘paid to my wife when ye workmen went to see where ye brige should be’; this suggests he may have been involved with the building of Teviot Brig, and may be the same man as Bailie John. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Newton in 1733. He married Margaret Dryden in 1731 and their children included: Margaret (b.1733); and Jean (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 were Robert and William (who were probably related to him). John (18th C.) shepherd at Dryden. He was probably related to the John, shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot, recorded in 1694. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and John (b.1749), born in Cavers Parish. Bailie John (18th C.) referred to as ‘younger’ when Bailie in the 1730s (suggesting that he may have been son of another John). He was Magistrate in 1738, when plans were laid for building Teviot Bridge. Also in 1738 he witnessed a baptism of James Weir (who was Town Clerk). Along with William Tudhope he arranged for the bond to pay for construction of the bridge. He was Bailie along with James Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He may be the ex-Bailie John who, along with Thomas Turnbull and Rev. Partick Cunningham, sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1740s. He was listed as ‘late Bailie’ when he witnessed baptisms for wright James Winthrope in 1740, Walter Scott of Newton in 1743 and writer James Weir in 1745. He was recorded in 1747 when the tradesmen were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after taking down the kirk bell. He may be the Bailie John who witnessed another baptism in 1757. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailleys in the 1740s. He may be the John who was still a Bailie in the 1760s. He is probably the Bailie John who, along with Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, witnessed a baptism for the younger Thomas Turnbull in 1763. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1746 he was living at Galalaw. His married Helen Easely in 1746. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746, when the witnesses were John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1747 he was living at Netherhall. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1733 and their children included: John (b.1739); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and Robert (b.1750). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. John younger of Synton (d.bef. 1765) eldest son of Alexander of Synton. In 1735 he married Mary, only daughter of William Oliver of Dinhabyre (and grand-daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk). However, he died before his father, his only son Alexander succeeding to the Synton estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairbairn, school-master at Galashiels; she died in 1815. John (b.c.1749) son of James and Margaret Legerwood. He was a ‘tacksman’ at Roughheugh in Wilton Parish. John (18th C.) miller in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. He married Elizabeth Thomson in 1767, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and St. Boswell’s parishes (but another marriage is recorded in Hawick in 1770). Their children included: James (b.1771); William (b.1773); James (b.1776); Ann (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1782); Beatrix (b.1784); Elizabeth (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Jane (b.1790). The witnesses in 1778 were William Mason and Walter Purdom. An unnamed child of his died on the last day of 1790 (at the same time as the child of under-miller Adam Jardine, suggesting there was perhaps some disease in the household). Probably the same John married Ann Boyle in 1792 (recorded in both Hawick and Kelso Parishes) and in 1796 made an application to the Barons at the Exchequer Chambers in Edinburgh in respect of the estate of his deceased wife. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children (all baptised in Hawick Parish) were: William (b.1755); John (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Isobel (b.1761); Beatrice (b.1763); and Isobel (b.1765). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Thomas Laidlaw and weaver Charles Miller, and in 1765 were Walter Burn and Archibald Henderson. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1751 and 1758. He married Margaret Henderson in 1751 and their children included: John (b.1751); John (again, b.1752); James (b.1754); Helen (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Thomas (b.1762); and James (b.1764). Scott and in 1758 were Robert Ormiston and George Scott. John of Gala (1732-85) son of Hugh, he was 6th Laird. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’). He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants in the period 1778-79. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, only daughter of George McDougall of Makerstoun. Their children were: Elizabeth; Col. Hugh, who succeeded; Barbara (1764-1844); Adm. Sir George (1769-1841); and Col. John (1774-1832), whose eldest daughter Maria Sarah Maksdougall inherited Makerstoun. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1762 and Boonraw in 1764 and 1767. In 1760 he married Margaret Lorraine, who was from Yarrow. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); twins William and John (b.1764); Helen (b.1767); and Janet (b.1768). The witnesses in 1762 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott and in 1764 were Robert and Walter Ormiston (probably both in Boonraw). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1780. He married Betty Martin in 1779 and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1781); Robert (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); Margaret (b.1791); Andrew (b.1797); and Thomas (b.1798). The witnesses in 1780 were James Martin and James Scott (probably related to his wife and him). John (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. The same piece of land was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1780 and 1785 when his children Nelly and Ann were baptised. Probably the same John was at Harden in 1788 and 1789 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. There are several marriages in Roberton around this time that could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He is surely related to the cooper James, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781.
