of William of Roberton. He was the last of the Lairds of Roberton. In 1627 he was served heir to his father's lands of Roberton and Howcleuch, with the mill, valued at £6 13s 4d. However, later in 1627 he sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden. It is not known what happened to him after that. James of Hagbrae (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1633 when he gave his consent to a contract over the lands of 'Evillane', involving Robert of Dryhope (presumably a near relative). His lands were in Midlothian. In 1639 his son James became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1642 his daughter Martha married Rev. Gideon Penman, ministed of Crichton, who was later 'of Hagbrae', was deposed for adultery and was imprisoned for witchcraft. Col. Sir James of Rossie (c.1600–c.50) Justice of the Peace in Fife and Gentleman of the Royal Bedchamber. He fought in the army of the Republic of Venice in the Thirty Years War. He carried the 'defunct's pincell and motto of colors' in the funeral procession of Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in 1634. He commanded part of the Covenanters army at Tippermuir in 1644. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts he came from, but his prominence in the Earl's funeral procession implies some close connection to Scott of Buccleuch. James (17th C.) listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 as a 'servant'. He was owed money for keeping the 'teynd yaird' in Hawick, as well as for building the walls and 'heiding the stakes' (i.e. putting heads on the stakes). It is unclear where this yard was located. James (17th C.) described as 'portnr. of burn ffit' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear which Burnfoot he occupied (but probably not the one on Ale, since Walter there signed separately), and how he was related to other Scotts. James (17th C.) possibly minister or assistant at Abbotrule about 1638. In that year he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick, his name recorded as 'Mr. James Scott, Abbatroull'. The minister at that time was James Ker, so it is possible this is a transcription error. James of Woll (d.bef. 1670) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his brother Francis by 1643. He is presumably the same James, son of Robert 'of the Woll' who became a saddler's apprentice with David Brown in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as 'lawful son to Robert Scott of Wall' (and separately as 'Well') when he complained about being imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown; he complained that Brown 'causelessly conceaved a deadly hatred against him ... while ... alone and engaged upon his lawful business, caused apprehend him and warded him in the tolbooth, and that without any conviction or lawful warrant', after which he was also warded by William Duff, servitor to Lord Saltoun, who claimed he was a debtor. He complained to the Privy Council after 20 days in prison, and was freed. He had 3 daughters in the period 1642–45, but had no male heirs. He sold the lands of Woll to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1660. His brother George was returned heir to their father in 1670. James (17th C.) eldest son of William of Salenside, and brother of Thomas. In the period 1633–53 he pursued an action against his step-sisters Jean and Margaret, presumably over the lands of Essenside, which had belonged to their father, Walter of Essenside. James (17th C.) described as possessor of 'Parke callit Copshaholme' in 1632. James of Crookston (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Katherine Jardine. He is recorded in a letter of inhibition in 1630. In 1641 he is referred to as 'of Cruixtoun' when he witnessed (in Hawick) a document for his brother Sir John of Thirlestane, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estate. James (17th C.) married Janet Duncan and had a daughter Janet baptised in Hawick in 1635. James (17th C.) son of John 'in Borthauch'. In 1630 he became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh with Adam Scott (who may have been a relative). Rev. James (d.1679) son of Walter 'in Catslak' according to the 'Fasti'. However, Walter Scott of Satchells suggested that his father was John of Catslacknowe and his grandfather was Walter of Montbenger. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1615, was presented to Kirkton at the end of that year, and became minister there, probably sometime in 1616. He was translated to Tongland in 1619. He was a member of the Commission for the Maintenance of Church Discipline in 1634 and contributed to the building of Glasgow University in 1636. However, he refused to subscribe to the Covenant and was deposed in 1639 for 'absence from his flocke eight Sabbaths together, sacrilege, intromitting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytery, tabling (playing at draughts), conversing with excommunicated Papists, and declining the General Assembly'. He was attached to the Rectory of Ford in Northumberland in 1660 and had a stipend allowed by Parliament in 1661, which was increased in 1663 'because he hath been an extraordinary sufferer these twenty-four years bygane', and his disposition annulled in 1664. He returned to Tongland in 1663. However, in 1665 he was translated to Ancrum, as replacement to the formerly popular John Livingstone, who was exiled as a Covenanter. His appointment came amid huge disturbance, when a woman grabbed his cloak and he used his staff on her, with her brothers jumping into the fray and some boys throwing stones at him (although they missed). In the ensuing trial the 2 brothers (Turnbulls from Ashieburn) were transported to Virginia, their sister being whipped through Jedburgh (although rather leniently, according to the feelings of the populace) and 4 boys were 'whipped through Edinburgh, branded in the face, and sold as slaves to Barbados'. He remained at Ancrum until his death about 14 years later. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Maxwell (minister of Borgue) and has a son James. This James was 'son to Mr. James Scott, sometime minister at Tungland' in 1648 when he became an apprentice merchant with 'John Scott, elder' (who may have been related) in Edinburgh. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in the 1640s at the time of the Covenanters. He was Bailie in early 1641. In 1643 he was 'late bailie' when he 'made count and reckoning of his intromissions with the contributions that were gathered for the soldiers at Newcastle in 1641'. He may have been the James 'callit of Newton' who was on the 'leet' for the Bailies in 1638 and the James who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. James of Hundleshope (d.c.1698) son of John of Hundleshope. He was recorded as laird in 1648 (although still junior at that time) and also in a deed in 1673. In 1666 he married Rachel, daughter of David Murray of Stanhope-Murray; at that time his father John infefted him in the lands of Hundleshope, but reserving the liferent for himself. His children included: John, who died without heirs; David, who succeeded; and Alexander. He may be the Laird of Hundeleshope mentioned by Scott of Satchells in 1688. James (17th C.) married Agnes Stevenson and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1644. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Miller and their children included Janet (b.1646), George (b.1648) and Walter (b.1648). James (17th C.) described as a 'lorimer' (i.e. saddler) in a Hawick Magistrates case of 1642, when Thomas Oliver was ordered to pay him for the oats his livestock had eaten. In 1645 the Town Clerk Gilbert Watt complained that he had called him several names, against the town's laws. The same 'lorimer' was elected to the Council in 1648. James (17th C.) described as a 'cadger' (i.e. carrier) when he acted as appraiser in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving another James, 'lorimer'. James of Park, in Wilton (17th C.) recorded as a landowner in a valuation of Wilton Parish of 1643. This describes 'Scott of Park's Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap', and valued at £200. He may also be the James whose lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He also signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He is probably the James 'of Heap' described as a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, by James Wilson. He is probably also the James of Whitehaugh recorded in 1648 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Probably the same James of Whitehaugh paid the land tax on £200 for Whitehaugh in 1663 and was recorded in a deed in 1663. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh or elsewhere. One possibility is that 'Park' is a transcription error for 'Glack' or 'Clack'. James (17th C.) proprietor of Wiltonburn in a record of 1650 relating to the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Margaret Scott and their children John, Robert and Margaret. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included: Robert (b.1638); Adam (b.1640); Bessie (b.1641); Walter (b.1642); Malie (b.1644); and Adam (again, b.1646). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Davidson and their children included: William (b.1639); John (b.1641); Walter (b.1643); Francis (b.1645); Robert (b.1648); and Helen (b.1651). The witnesses in 1639 were Robert and Adam, who may have been related. James (17th C.) married Margaret Stewart and had a daughter Bessie baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) married Janet 'Inglish' and had a daughter Isobel baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Davidson. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses in 1651 were Robert Scott and Adam Govenlock. James (17th C.) married Margaret Nichol and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1652. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included William (b.1648) and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were William and John. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Douglas and their children included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William 'Corkie' (b.1655), who was a tailor. In 1682 William was fined for assaulting his mother Bessie Douglas and siblings John and Mary. James (17th C.) herd at Branxholme recorded in 1655 and 1656. It is possible he is the James 'elder' who rented part of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park, along with another James (perhaps his son) in 1671. He could be the tenant of the west end of Branxholme Muir recorded in 1677; he may have been a servant of the Scotts of Buccleuch (but the document is hard to read). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included Marion (b.1672), Margaret (b.1684) and John (b.1686) James (17th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1684 his son John was witness to the financial document for erecting the 'Steeple Loft' in St. Mary's. He may one of the 2 Jameses who were on the Council in 1668. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1668) one of the ordinary Clerks of Session. This is Bonnington in West Lothian, unrelated to the place of the same name near Peebles that was a Lairdship of a separate branch of the Scotts. He was 2nd son of Lawrence of Harperrig, and was the 'Maistir James Scott' who had a charter of the lands of 'Boningtoune' in 1629, with ratification in 1641. He was the 'Mr. James Scote, 2d sone to Laurence Scot, aduocat' who carried the 'Grate Gumpheon of black tafta' at the funeral for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in 1634. He first married Violet, daughter of Robert Pringle, W.S. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Eliott of Stobs, and widow of William Bennet, minister of Ancrum (and she may have been the sister of his son William's wife). He was appointed Clerk of Session in 1649 when his elder brother Sir William of Clerkington was appointed Lord of Session. In 1662 he is listed among those excluded from the King's pardon until they paid a fine. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. His children were: William, who married Elizabeth Eliott and died without a male heir; Robert, who succeeded, but only had a daughter; Violet, who married James Douglas of Cliftonhall; Elizabeth, who married John Maitland; Marion, who married Rev. John Lumsden; and Jean, who was married to James Park, writer, who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1678; Gilbert, eldest son by his 2nd wife, who succeeded his half-brother Robert; Charles, who later succeeded; James, last male of this family, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672; Catherine; and Barbara, who was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1668. In 1680 his son Charles of Bonnington and other children James and Catherine, were erved as his heirs. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included Mungo (b.1658) and William (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were John and William Stewart, who were surely related to his wife. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'Chisim' (i.e. Chisholme) and their son Walter was baptised in 1660, with witnesses John of Langhope and Thomas Nichol. Bailie James of Ormiston (b.c.1640) Magistrate of Hawick in the 1670s and 1680s, distinct from the 'litster' who was a contemporary Bailie. He may be descended from the Ormiston Scotts recorded in 1589 and 1592. He was 'called Ormeston' in 1673 when he was named in the trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Nichol in 1680 and another for James Chisholme in 1688. In 1682 he was 'called Ormiston, Bailie of Hawick, aged forty years, married' when he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home for leading the Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig's Tower. He is probably the 'Baylyea Scott, Ormistown' recorded being disobeyed by an offender on the street in 1683. He is also probably the Bailie Scott of Ormiston whose servant Elspeth Scott was struck by stones in 1683 when watching linens that were being bleached by the side of Teviot. In 1685 he was abused by ex-Bailie Robert Wright, who was fined for refusing to go to the Tolbooth. He was 'baylyea Scott, Ormistoun' in 1686. In 1688 weaver Thomas Turnbull was fined for making false allegations against him. He was 'late baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the 'Bailyea Scott ormston', who paid tax on 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. In 1694 he and his son witnessed a Gledstains baptism; this suggests that he was an Episcopalian supporter. He may be the James recorded in 1697 when, along with 3 others, he was forbidden from holding public office in Hawick on account of being 'abettors and hounders out of the last illegal election in October 23 last'. He witnessed a baptism (for Robert Scott, 'wyndhead') in 1701 and another in 1702 for Gideon Gardner (when he was 'called ormston'). He may be the James who was deceased in 1708 when his son Robert caused a commotion in St. Mary's by trying to take his former seat in the 'Steeple Loft' after the Council had passed a statute stating that these seats were reserved for the present Bailies. He was therefore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1685 when the finances for the new balcony were being sorted out, and may have been related to the Bailie Walter who had helped finance the balcony in 1684 and subsequently died. He may be the Bailie James who was insulted by Adam Young in 1685, along with his son John; the claim was that they had reset peas taken by some of the Royalist men. Either he or the other Bailie James had a bond with (i.e. loaned money to) Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge in 1691. James (d.bef. 1689) recorded in Aikwood in 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1683 and 1684 when he had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. In 1689 William McGie, 'chirurgeon barber in Glasgow' was the assignee for the annual rent of him and his wife Janet Craig. He was probably son of Robert of Aikwood and succeeded his brother Andrew. He was surely connected with Philip, who was in Aikwood in the early 18th century. He could be the grieve in Aikwood, recorded in a discharge in Selkirk. James (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Robert. He served as Brigadier in the Life Guards and is mentioned by Walter of Satchells. Perhaps the same James is 'called Tushilaw' in 1677 when he was one of the witnesses to the 'bond of provision' by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1672) succeeded to the lands from Robert, who was either his father or brother. He may have married Margaret Pringle. His children included: Gilbert, who succeeded, but died shortly afterwards; Charles, who succeeded Gilbert; and James, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Scott. Their children included Janet (b.1655) and Jane (b.1669). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Brown. Their children included Robert (b.1671), James (b.1673), George (b.1675) and Agnes (b.1678). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Brown. Their children included Adam (b.1672), Agnes (b.1676), Margaret (b.1678), Helen (b.1680) and John (b.1686). James (17th C.) married Janet Elliot in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish, but probably the part that had been Hassendean. Their daughter Bessie was born in 1687, with witnesses William Todshaw and Walter Clerk. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (actually the part corresponding with Hassendean). He married Isobel Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Isobel (b.1683); William (b.1685); and Magdalen and Martha (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Gledstains and Adam Sanderson and in 1683 were William and Robert Rodger (who were surely related to his wife). Bailie James (17th C.) dyer (or 'litster') in Hawick, who lived at 'Casaend'. He was recorded as a 'litster' in 1665 when he gave evidence that Bessie Douglas had indeed insulted the Bailie. His is probably one of the 2 Jameses who was on the Council in 1668. He was a Bailie during the 1670s. He was recorded as a 'litster' on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He is recorded in 1686 as 'Jas. Scott, littster, lat baylyea in Hawick', and is distinct from the James of Ormiston who was a contemporary Bailie. He was also recorded as a lister in Hawick in a bond of 1682. He may be the 'present Baylea' who was assaulted in the High Street by Thomas Glendinning in 1682. He may be the James who was Bailie in late 1685 (but only if the Bailieship changed between November and March). He is probably the James whose son John was fined and imprisoned for threatening to break down the door of Janet Hardie in 1684. He may be the 'Baylyea Scott', who, along with his son John, was verbally abused by Adam Young in 1685. In 1686 he was 'Jas. Scott, littster, lat Baylyea in Hawick' when his son John was held in the Tolbooth for stealing money from the house of ex-Bailie Walter Purdom. He may also be the former Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1687 as having a garden in the West End, south of the King's Highway. He may be the James who (along with Bailie John) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for miller James Paterson. He was 'litster, late baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in in 1693/4. He is probably the James 'laite Bailyea' who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was recorded as a 'litster' in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Wright. He is probably the James who declared in 1703 that on the last night of the previous year there were only 2 people to be found drinking after the ringing of the 10 o'clock bell. He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704. He may have been related to tailor John 'Casae end', who witnessed a baptism in 1712. James (17th C.) described as servitor to Robert of Horsleyhill when he witnessed a Hawick sasine of 1688. James (d.c.1688) servitor to Sir William Eliott of Stobs. His will was recorded in 1688. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James of Shaws and Shielswood (17th C.) eldest son of Adam of Shaws. According to

Walter of Satchells he was brother of Adam in Deloraine and Francis in Grassyards. He paid the land tax in 1678. In 1692 he paid the teind duty to the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Outerside. He was 'of Sheill-wood' in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He must have fallen on hard times, since in 1712 he sold Shielswood to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (and his son Gilbert), in agreement with his eldest son Walter; this means he was the last Scott of Shielswood. In 1670 he married Marian Scott, heiress of Shielswood (probably daughter of Walter). He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. His eldest son was Walter – 'Honest James Scot of Shielswood, Whose like there is not many, Whose love and piety doth feed and help so many' [CWS]. James of Brieryyards (17th C.) eldest son and successor of John of Brieryyards. He is mentioned as a landowner in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean parish, and hence probably succeeded before that. He may be the person who paid the land tax on Brieryyards and Hornshole in 1678 (with no name recorded). He had a sasine of Brieryyards in 1682, and was listed that year among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He also had a confirming charter of the lands of Hornshole in 1683, these having been passed to him by his brother John in 1667 (as part of a 'wadset' with the Turnbulls) and gained from the Turnbulls in 1671. In 1689 he was in a group including Andrew (brother of William of Clarilaw), Francis in Branxholme, ex-Bailie James Gledstains and Sheriff-Officer Andrew Angus, when weaver Thomas Turnbull insulted the 2 sitting Bailies. Probably the same James 'of Bririeyairdis' was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It is stated there that his eldest son was John and that John of Cockerheugh was his brother. He married Margaret Hay and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: david (b.1680); Francis (b.1681); Elspeth (b.1683); Helen (b.1687); and Marie (b.1689). He is clearly 'of Bririyeards' in 1681 when the witnesses were Walter and John Scott (presumably relatives, perhaps his brothers). The witnesses in 1687 were again Walter and John Scott. James of Gala (d.bef. 1672) son of Hugh, 1st Laird of Gala. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh. Their children were probably: Walter; George; Donald; John; David; Francis; William; and Hugh, who succeeded. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, along with his son Hugh. James (17th C.) Schoolmaster in Selkirk, recorded in 1659 and 1673. He is probably also the 'Doctor' of that name recorded in discharges in Selkirk in 1657–65. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. James nee Crofts (1649–85) illegitimate son of Charles II and Lucy Walters (who was also known as 'Mrs. Barlow'). He was created Baron Scott of Tindale (in Northumberland), Earl of Doncaster (in Yorkshire) and Duke of Monmouth (in Wales) by the King, shortly before his marriage to the young Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. He assumed the title of first Duke of Buccleuch when he married the Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. However, the marriage was arranged when they were very young (he was 14), and it is said that his real partner was Lady Henrietta Wentworth. In 1666 he and his wife resigned their titles to the crown to be regranted with separate honours. In 1669 he was appointed Colonel of a Regiment of Foot Militia in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire by Charles II. He was confirmed as Lord Dalkeith in 1672. He was appointed High Chamberlain of Scotland in 1673. He received the Barony of Hawick (including the patronage of St. Mary's Kirk) from the Crown in 1675. He was listed in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, holding land valued at about £9000 in Castleton Parish, £6000 in Cavers Parish, £2000 in Hassendean Parish, £9000 in Hawick Parish and £2500 in Wilton Parish (among others). Additionally his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at almost £20,000. In Hawick Parish his possessions included Alton Croft and Alton Town, Whames, Wester Weens and 'Husband-lands in Hawick, with mill and customs'. He became Captain-general of the Forces and was sent to quell the insurrection in Scotland in 1679, being commander at Bothwell Brig. He then engaged in intrigues against his uncle the Duke of York and moved to Holland in 1684. Belief (probably unfounded) that his father married his mother in Rotterdam before his birth helped encourage him to seek the Crown. In 1685, following the death of Charles II, he landed at Lyme Regis, claiming to be the protector of the Protestant faith and proclaiming himself King. He marched to Taunton with about 6,000 followers, but was defeated by King James' army at Sedgemoor and fled. Disguised in shepherd's clothing, he hid out for 2 days, but was taken prisoner. He was executed at Tower Hill in London, having the same morning said his final goodbye to his wife and children; it was described how the executioner took 5 strokes in attempted to sever the head from the body, to the great displeasure of the crowd. He forfeited all his titles, but his wife Anna would remain as Duchess of Buccleuch. His children with her were: Charles, Earl of Doncaster, who died in infancy; James, Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded to the Buccleuch titles; Henry, Earl of Deloraine; Francis, who died in infancy ; Charlotte, also died young; and Anne, who died in the Tower of London in 1685. He also had illegitimate children with Elinor, daughter of Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth: Maj.-Gen. James Crofts; Henry Crofts, Commander of H.M.S. Gosport; Isabella Crofts, who died young; and Henrietta Crofts, who married Charles Poulett, 2nd Duke of Bolton – 'A Rebel he was in his time, And did the Nation much perplex; At his Invasion he was tane, And his Head cut off with an ax' [CWS]. James of Thirlestane (17th C.) 4th son of Sir William of Harden, his brothers were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Walter of Raeburn and John of Woll. In 1661 he purchased Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the one in the Ettrick valley), as well as Heiton Mains and Mill from Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He was Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Liddesdale in 1659–60. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debatable Lands. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. In 1668 he exchanged some lands with his nephew Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He may be the James of Thirlestane who was fined in 1680 for being a Covenanter. He is probably the James 'of thirlestoun' who paid the land tax in Roxburgh and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He is probably the 'James Scott off Thirsletoune' listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682 (with Sir Francis of Thirlestane also listed). He was mentioned in 1684 when arrested and brought to Edinburgh along with Sir William, younger of Harden (his nephew); he was released, but William was put in irons. He may be the Scott of Thirlestane who was cautioner for Neil, brother of the Earl of Argyll, in 1685. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk in 1659. His children included: Mary (b.1660), who married Gideon Scott of Falnash; William, who succeeded; Walter; John; Gideon (b.1671); and 2 sisters. The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Pringle of Clifton, James Don and James Robertson. James (17th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife was Janet Scott and their son Andrew was baptised in 1678, with witnesses William Douglas and Simon Aitchison. Perhaps the same James and his wife Janet Scott had a daughter Janet baptised in 1671, with witnesses George and Robert, who were presumably related to either him or his wife. James 'Cockie' (17th C.) married to Bessie Douglas, and father to William. He is recorded in a case in 1674 when his wife was found guilty of striking and biting her son William. His children with Bessie, included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1673 and 1682. He is possibly the same as 'Cookie' and it is unclear if he was the same as James the Bailie who was a 'litster' at about the same time. James 'Laird' (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his 'quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more'. It seems likely that he was related to the later James, 'Laird', the first recorded Cornet, perhaps his grandfather. James of Bowhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Bowhill. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. In 1642 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he became a merchant's apprentice with John Moffat in Edinburgh. Probably the same James, son of Robert of Bowhill was listed in 1648 as a merchant in Edinburgh when he acted as 'bailie in that part' for a sasine for Broadmeadows being trnsferred from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw. He held lands at Mertoun from 1657. He succeeded his brother Andrew in 1668; however, it is possible that he purchased Bowhill (or part of it) during the lifetime of his father and brother. He served as some kind of agent for the Scotts of Buccleuch according to a 1660 document. In 1661 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he owed rent for the Barony of 'Thickfoord' to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Parishes of Castleton and Canonbie in at least the years 1671–89. He was recorded in a deed of 1682 and was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He could be the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch who was based in Edinburgh in the 1670s, with several letters to him (from George Scott of Pitlochie) surviving. He may have been 'grieve' to Sir William Scott of Harden, who had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk for annual rents in 1665 and 1667. The same James may have been Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1668 when he leased Sandieknowes from Lady Smailholm. He was recorded as tenant in Roan (in Castleton Parish) in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 3 hearths. He had a court case against Andrew Ker of Littledean in 1694 and 1695, regarding rents; he was said to then be residing in Kelso with his family. He probably married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Scott of Foulshiels. However, he may be the James 'of bowgill' who married Elizabeth Ker (perhaps daughter of Ker of Linton) in Pencaitland Parish in 1672. He appears to have been deceased by 1714. This branch of the family held lands at Bowhill from at least the mid-16th century, and these would eventually pass to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by John, probably his son, who would be the last male of this family line. James (17th C.) recorded in 1679 as 'Clerk of the Chamber accompts of Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth' when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. James (17th C.) recorded in 1679 as 'cellar keeper to Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth' when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. James of Phaup (17th C.) recorded in 1682 on a list of the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He may have been son of Francis. James (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill in 1684 when he was part of a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to take 'the test'. James (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Laics' among Roxburghshire men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity in 1684. This could be a transcription error for 'Lairs' perhaps. James (17th C.) recorded in 1688 as servitor to Sir William Scott of Harden. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1688 following the desire of his master. James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Marion Young and their son William was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were James Gledstains and Robert Langlands. James (17th C.) son of Rev. James of Ancrum. He was listed as being 'of Bristo' in 1691 and 1697 when he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Walter of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. It is unclear who he was. James (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was separate from James in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Andrew and John were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. James (17th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John and Thomas who are also listed there. James (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as shepherd at Borthaugh. He could be the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–94; his cautioner in 1692 and 1694 was 'young goldiland' (probably Charles), suggesting he was related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. In 1696 and 1698 his widow Margaret was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh, with Adam and Walter (farmers at Overhall) as her cautioners. It is possible he was the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) listed in 1690 as 'Ja Scott Scrivener' (the last word is hard to make out) when he rented 1/8 of the farm of Borthaugh. He is listed separately from another James Scott, who rented 1/4. He is surely related to 'Robert Scot Scrivener', who was renting Borthaugh in 1694. It is possible he is the James 'in Borturk' in 1684 when his wife Bessie Scott's will is recorded; he was probably related to George 'in Bortoch', whose will is recorded in 1686, as well as Walter 'in Burtoch'. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Johnstone and their son James was baptised in 1691. The witnesses were James Pringle and Andrew Scott. James (17th C.) resident of Yarrow Parish. He married Bessie Murray and their son Robert was baptised in Ashkirk in 1691, with witnesses John Gray and John Helm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'Curray' (presumably Currie) and their children included Margaret (b.1687) and Janet (b.1694). The witnesses in 1694 were James and Andrew Scott, who were probably relatives of some sort. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam, who was listed there, was surely related. The pair were each renting half of Overhall from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690 and 1692. James (17th C.) tenant in Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was on the east-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 when he paid tax on 2 hearths. In 1700 and 1704 he was 'smith in Hawick' when his children were baptised. Probably the same smith James witnessed a baptism for smith George in Hawick in 1701. He is probably distinct from the smith at Branxholme at the same time. His children included: James (b.1700) and Walter (b.1704). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant Robert Robson and Henry Orrock and in 1704 were merchant Robert Robson and glover John Scott. He may be the smith James who witnessed a baptism in 1723 for Walter 'Wyndhead' and Anne Scott. James (17th/18th C.) younger son of Thomas of Whitslade. His father was already deceased in 1709 when he became an apprentice goldsmith to James Michelson in Edinburgh. James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. In 1713 his daughter Helen married Walter Hogg, who was from Canonbie, and in 1716 his daughter Blench married John Nichol, who lived at Eilrig. James 'Scottie' (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1708 he is described as 'smith distinctionis causa called Scottie'. He married Agnes Purdom in 1707 and their children included Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1708 were merchant Michael and tailor George (who could have been related). He could be the same man as the slightly earlier blacksmith of the same name if he married for a second time. James 'Pedee' (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when he was fined for refusing to let the Bailies enter his house, and he also chained Bailie Gledstains' barn. He tried to escape and had to forcibly taken to the Tolbooth. He was explicitly referred to as being 'called Pedee' (i.e. footman), but it is unclear what this nickname meant exactly. He was also listed as 'pedee' in Hawick, among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was resident of the Hawick 'eist the water' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with 'Pedie' recorded after his name. This presumably distinguished him from the blacksmith and others of the same name. James (17th C.) carter in Hawick listed as 'Colifert' among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also recorded as 'James Scott colifert' among residents of the east-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably owner or otherwise associated with Colifort. He was again 'Colifert' when his daughter Margaret married William Scott (from Cavers Parish) in 1703, when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1704, when he witnessed a baptism for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1705, when he witnessed a baptism for workman William Gledstains in 1712, and when his daughter Helen married Andrew Waugh in 1713. It seems that he married Marion Young and their children included: William (b.1688); and James (b.1704). James (17th C.) resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter and another James, who were later tenants at Hawick Shiel. James (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1694), James (b.1696) and John (b.1696). The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott (perhaps a relative) and John Minto (who lived at Easter Essenside). It is possible he is the James recorded at Easter Essenside in the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. James (d.bef. 1710) recorded as Sheriff-Clerk in Edinburgh in at least the period 1669–93. In 1669 he was made a Burgess of Caongate, gratis. In 1670 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of James Boyd of Temple. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1672 he was involved in a process of scandal with Edinburgh surgeon George (who may have been kin). His son James became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1710, by which time he was deceased. James (1674–1705) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest surviving son of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He was titled Earl of Doncaster until the death of his father. In 1692 he was proclaimed King by a group of 'thirty or forty wyld people' at Sanquhar Cross, but nothing came of it. He received the lands of Chisholme and Woodburn from the estate of his deceased father in 1696. He served with the army in Flanders, returning to Britain in 1702. In 1694 he married Henrietta, daughter of Lawrence Hyde, Earl of Rochester and she died in 1730. Predeceasing his mother, the Dukedom was inherited by his eldest son Francis (1695–1751). His other children were: Charles (b.1700), who died young; James (1702–19), who died aged 17; Henry (b.1704), who also died young; Anne (1696–1714), who died aged 18; and Charlotte (1697–1747), who died unmarried at the age of 50, the only other to survive her grandmother, Anne. He himself died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. James 'Drover' (17th/18th C.) tenant in Stobicote. Either he or James from an earlier generation is recorded there in 1700 when he was fined 'for forestalling of the public market' by buying a lamb from a servant of James Ogilvie in Branxholme and then selling it to a Jedburgh butcher for a higher price. Probably the same James is listed at Stobicote on the 1694 Hearth Tax records; he appears right after John, to whom he was likely related (perhaps John was his father). He was 'tenant in Stobbitcoat' in 1712 when he married Anne Scott (daughter of William Scott and Margaret Falsyde), step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill, the marriage taking place at Newmill. He was recorded as 'Drover' in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish and was also 'drover' in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a weaver called Douglas. He was 'distinctionis causa called Drover tenent in Stobitcoat' in 1718 when his son John was baptised; this makes it clear that 'Drover' was a nickname, that he was distinct from the other contemporary Jameses with different nicknames, and that the tenant in Stobicote was the same man as 'Drover'. In 1720 he was 'in Stobbitcoat in Cavers parish'. Also in 1720 he witnessed (along with John Elliot in Stobicote) a baptism for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children with Anne (or Anna) Scott, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: William (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); John (b.1718); James (b.1720); Ann (b.1724), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1727); and Janet (b.1729). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Thomson in Newmill (his wife's step-father) and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill, in 1716 and 1718 were William Thomson, both older and younger in Newmill, and in 1720 were John Elliot in Stobicote and Robert Nixon. He was still at Stobicote in 1729. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton. In 1704 his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. There were several other children baptised around the same time who could also be his. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Wiltonburn in 1705 when his son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who were probably related. He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Wiltonburn. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1706 he was listed among the men who were fined for involvement in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. He is listed separately from James 'of Westport', and was presumably also different from James 'the Laird', who was Cornet in 1703. He is probably the tailor who married Janet Falsyde and whose children included: Mary (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); James (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); and James (again, b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were James Craw and William Falside (who was surely related to his wife). James (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester. He was a writer in Jedburgh and died unmarried. His sister Janet married Adam, tenant in Wauchope. James (17th/18th C.) joint tenant in Nether Southfield along with Walter in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. He was recorded at Nether Southfield in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield and in 1713 and 1718 when his children were baptised. He is probably the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. He married Margaret Young and their children included: William (b.1709); and James (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, in 1713 were Walter and (another) James Scott, both also in Nether Southfield, and in 1718 were tailor Gideon Chisholme and Walter (also tenant in Nether Southfield). James (17th/18th C.) resident in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) when several of his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. This includes: twins George and John (b.1703); Margaret (b.1710); Agnes (b.1712); and Helen (b.1717). James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Harden Burn in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is hard to separate from other local men of the same name. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel, as recorded in 1718. He was probably related to Walter, who was also tenant there. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: William (b.1704); Marion (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Adam (b.1711); John (b.1713); Robert (b.1716); Euphan (b.1718); Margaret (again, b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and an unnamed child (b.1726). Perhaps the same James, tenant in Hawick Shiel, married Margaret Stevenson (also from Hawick Shiels) in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Whithope. He is recorded there in 1710, 1715, 1716 and 1726. His children include Margaret (b.1710), Adam (b.1715), Robert (again, b.1716) and Robert (b.1726). There are several other children of James Scotts in Roberton at a similar time who could be his. He may be related to the James recorded in Whithope in 1742. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret 'Plenderghast' in Hawick in 1717. James of Calfield (17th/18th C.) from a prominent Dumfriesshire farming family. He may have been descended from Francis Scott of Davington's sister Katherine (although one genealogy has him as a son of Francis of Davington). He was later described as being 'of Beltenmont'. He was probably the James in Calfield who married Agnes Scott, sister to the Laird of Burnhead (William Scott) in Hawick in 1721. His children included: Katherine, who married William, 3rd son of Robert Scott of Davington; Isabel, who married John, brother of her brother-in-law William Scott; Margaret, who married Gilbert Elliot, descendant of the Lairds of Redheugh and Larriston; and William, who was a vintner in Dumfries. Jean may have been another daughter, who married David Muir, Provost of Annan. Sir James of Gala (d.aft. 1721) son of Hugh and Isobel Ker, he was the 4th Scott of Gala. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1695 and for Roxburghshire in 1696. He contributed £600 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was served heir to his father Hugh in 1697. His brother John became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1699. He was appointed as Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1698, serving as his father-in-law had done; he remained in this position until 1702. His brother Thomas became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1708. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and their children were: Hugh, who succeeded; William, who died young; John (d.c.1754) who was States Doctor in Batavia, and died childless after returning to Scotland; Archibald, a Major in the Dutch East India Company; Catherine (or Katherine), who married Rev. Henry Davidson, minister at Gala; and Elizabeth. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsingtonshiel in 1721 and 1723. His children included Margaret (b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). It is possible this is the James who married Margaret Rae in 1717. He could be the James at Outerside in 1720 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1721 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1727 when his daughter Jean was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) son of John and grandson of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. In 1721 he married Philadelphia, daughter of William Ballantine of Crooksyde, Cumberland. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) glover who was a Bailie in Hawick, recorded in 1710, 1713 and 1720. He is distinct from the earlier and later Bailies of the same name. He was recorded as 'glover' in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for gardener James Falsyde and in 1707 another for tailor James Cowan. He was one of the Bailies when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was recorded as Bailie when he witnessed baptisms in 1712 for William Miller, in 1714 for workman William Gledstains and for William Bruntfield, in 1715 again for William Miller, in 1717 for Bailie James Burn and in 1720 for merchant Francis. He is probably the 'late Bailie' of that name who, in 1715, was given one of the keys to the Charter Chest. He may also be the 'Bailie Scott' referred to in 1718 in connection with resolving the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and hence was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1721 he (along with Bailie Walter Purdom) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. He is probably also the Bailie Scott appointed to collect monies at the east end of the Town in 1722 and also part of the Commission for appointing the new minister that year. It seems likely he is also the Bailie of the same name in 1727 (and referred to as John Scott, Senior). He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for miller John Henderson in 1729. He married Beatrix Laing and their children included: Joan (or perhaps 'Jean', b.1700); Marie (b.1702); James (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); Anne (b.1709); William (b.1711); and Walter (b.1714). His wife may be the Beatrix born to James Laing and Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1670. The witnesses in 1700 were William Laing and 'Mr' James Laing, in 1702 were glover James Burn and gardener James Falsyde, in 1705 were fellow glovers James Burn and William Bruntfield, in 1707 were glover James Burn and Walter Scott in Crumhaugh, in 1709 were Bailie James Burn and William Laing, and in 1714 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Branxholme Town. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield. In 1714 he (and carrier Robert Scott, possibly a relative) witnessed a birth for Walter Scoon in Commonside; he and Robert also witnessed another baptism for Walter Scoon in 1714. It seems likely he was related to the other Scotts who were joint tenants in Branxholme Town in the early 18th century, namely John, Robert and William. He is probably distinct (but related to) the James, tenant in Branxholme Town who married Helen Wilson in 1724. James 'Laird'

(17th/18th C.) first recorded name of a Cornet, in 1703. He was a weaver (as recorded in a baptismal record of 1712) and probably from the west side of the Slitrig, since the Cornet 2 years later was also from that side. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for weaver 'Black' John Swan (along with weaver John Lunn), in 1701 for weaver John Lunn (along with weaver Mungo Swan) and in 1708 for weaver Mungo Swan (along with Michael Briggs) and for weaver Thomas Turnbull (also with Michael Briggs). He is probably the same 'James the Laird' who is one of the members of Hawick Kirk who objected in 1711 to the appointment of Robert Cunningham as the new minister, on the grounds that he could not be heard in the west-end of the Kirk. He is probably the James 'called Laird' who in 1712 witnessed a baptism for another James 'called Laird', the son of John 'Laird'. In the 1713 baptismal record he is 'distinctionis causa called James the Laird on the west side of Hawick'. A baptismal record in 1714 refers to the separate James, son of John 'Laird', who may have been a cousin. He married Helen Lunn in June 1703; this would have been immediately after his Common Riding was over, suggesting that he did not serve as Right- and Left-Hand Man (or, if they had such supporting roles in those days, he did not have to remain unmarried). Their children included: Thomas (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); Walter (b.1710); and Andrew (b.1713). His wife's name is given clearly in most of the baptismal records; she is likely to be related (perhaps sister) to weaver John Lunn for whom he served as baptismal witness. In 1704 the witnesses were James Scott, 'westport' (presumably the Cornet of 1705) and John Clerk 'at ye westport' (who could possibly be the name of an unknown early Cornet and perhaps related to Janet Clerk, wife of Thomas 'Laird'). The witnesses in 1706 were the same John Clerk at Westport and James 'Doctor', in 1708 were Francis Scott in Hawick and Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands, in 1710 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot, and in 1713 were Bailie William Laing and John Laing (William's son). Based on the children's names, one might guess that he was son of Thomas, who was recorded with the nickname 'Laird' in 1693; he may be the James, son of Thomas, who was baptised in Hawick in 1674. He was probably also related to Robert, a shoemaker with the nickname 'Laird' in the 1670s to 1690s (possibly an uncle), as well as James 'Laird' recorded in 1676 (perhaps his grandfather) and Walter 'Laird' who witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam in 1707 (perhaps his brother). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Irvine and their unnamed children was were baptised in 1720. He may also be the James married to an Irvine whose unnamed child was baptised in 1706 and the James married to Margaret Irvine whose child Thomas was baptised in 1717. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) of Westport, merchant, son of Walter (possibly the same 'Westport' recorded in a 'letter of horning' in 1676). He was Cornet in 1705, and one of the main leaders of the rebel group in 1706, being fined and briefly imprisoned for his actions against the Bailies. It is probably only a coincidence that the first two known Cornets have the same name! However, he served as a witness for the first child of James 'Laird', in 1704. The mention of his name in the Town Book of 1705 contains the first recorded use of the word 'Cornet': 'the Baylyeas and Counsill appointed the Common to ryd upon Friday next, the first day of June, and nominate James Scott, called of West Port, to be coronett for yt year'. He was surely related to other Westport Scotts. His father Walter was already deceased in 1706. In 1705 he witnessed (along with John Swan) a baptism for weaver John Lunn. He was recorded as 'present Bailie' in 1723. He is recorded as James, son to the deceased Walter 'Westport', when in 1719 he married Sarah, daughter of tailor William Gledstains. Their children included: William (b.1720); Jean (b.1721); Walter (b.1723); John (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Sarah (b.1727); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald of Boonraw and John 'Whitegates', in 1723 were William Gledstains (presumably his father-in-law) and Robert Elliot, and in 1726 were Robert and William Elliot. In the 1726 baptismal record he was 'Billia James Scott', and in 1730 'Bailie', making him easy to confuse with contemporary Bailies of the same name. The witnesses in 1730 were William Gledstains (probably his father-in-law) and wright Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). James (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William, who settled at Milsington. In 1717 he married Margaret Rea (probably daughter of Thomas) in Hawick, and they had a daughter Isobel; this could be the Isobel baptised in Roberton in 1733, daughter of James 'son of Wm in milsinton' (but hard to read). In 1726 he was recorded as a notary in Hawick. James 'Doctor' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, probably a weaver. He is recorded with his nickname when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for 'Black' John Swan, in 1705 for weaver John Lunn, in 1706 for James 'Laird', in 1709 for weaver Archibald Douglas, in 1710 for weaver Michael Briggs, in 1711 for wright John Pringle, in 1712 for weaver George Wight and for merchant Michael Briggs, in 1713 for John 'Whitegates' and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He was 'called doctor', so that this was clearly meant as a nickname, and he is definitely not the same man as the slightly later surgeon of the same name. He is recorded as 'distinctionæ causa called Doctor' when rebuked in 1716 for being at the drunken brawl at Thomas Huggan's house; he was stepson to Francis Elliot 'in Hawick'. It is unclear if he is the same as James, son of John 'Laird'. James 'Laird' (17th/18th C.) weaver who was son of John 'Laird' and one of many contemporary Jameses. In 1712 he is 'distinctionis causa called Laird', mking it easy to confuse him with Hawick's first known Cornet, of the same name and nickname! In 1714 he is 'distinctionis causa called John the Laird son, weaver in Hawick'. This distinguishes him from James 'Laird' (Hawick's first known Cornet), although they were probably related, perhaps as cousins. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in 1720 for weaver John Stevenson. He married Janet Bryson; she may have been the daughter of William Bryson and Janet Scott who was baptised in Hawick in 1686. Their children included Malie (b.1712), John (b.1714), William (b.1717), Janet (b.1720), James (b.1722) and Walter (b.1724). The witnesses in 1712 were weaver Thomas Briggs and James 'called Laird' in Hawick (his namesake, who was Corner in 1702 and married Helen Lunn). The witnesses in 1714 were shoemaker John Scott and weaver John Stevenson, and in 1720 were weaver Thomas Greenshields and merchant Walter Bryson (who was surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was at Ormiston when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living in Cavers itself when he married Margaret Dryden. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1717 he was living in Denholm when he married Margaret Plendergast. He was also living in Denholm when his children George (b.1720), James (b.1722), Isabel (b.1725), Helen (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), Elspeth (b.1729) and Robert (b.1730) were baptised. He may be the James in 'Denholm eastend' when his daughter Janet (b.1732) was baptised. James (18th C.) son of John of Gorrenberry. In 1718 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary to John Lauder in Edinburgh. James (18th C.) recorded 'in Cowdhouse' (i.e. Coldhouse) in 1765 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in in Denholm when his sons John (b.1737) and William (b.1742) were baptised. He was 'Tenant in Denholm' in 1745 when his daughter Jane was baptised. He may be the same man as the earlier resident of Denholm, or else related to him. James (17th/18th C.) 'chirugeon in this toun' (i.e. surgeon in Hawick) who married Margaret Scott in 1724 at Cornhill in Northumberland. Margaret had previously been married to Patrick Scott (also in an irregular marriage), and was sister of the Laird of Burnhead. The minister was Rev. Thomas Blair, former Episcopal incumbent of Lennel (Coldstream) who had been ejected in 1689 (suggesting that at least one of the families were adherents of Episcopalianism). The couple were rebuked by the Hawick Session in 1724 for 'the trespass of their irregular marriage'. It seems likely he was not the same man as the 'Doctor' James, recorded earlier; however, it is less clear if he is the 'James Scott, called Westport, Doctor', who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He was 'Chirurgeon' in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Tudhope. In 1725 he was 'sururgen Apoticary' in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Burnhead (his brother-in-law). In 1729 he was 'Chyr:' when he witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Watson (who also had an irregular marriage and married his sister-in-law). Along with John (probably the Bailie) he witnessed another baptism for Thomas Watson in 1732. In 1737 he witnessed the baptisms of a child of Walter Tinlin (actually 'Rob the Naig') and a child of William Oliver (possibly 'Auld Cash'). On his death his wife gave £25 4s to the Town for the use of the poor. It is not known how he might have been related to other local Scotts (e.g. Walter, who was a surgeon in Hawick at the same time). James (18th C.) younger of 'Whitefield', recorded in 1735 (according to James Wilson). He could have been a son of Walter of Whitfield and Harden. He may also be the James of Whitfield who witnessed a baptism in 1733 for Robert of Falnash. In 1736 money was paid to the Wilton Session with his name attached, perhaps for his funeral. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wiltonburn in 1724. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); Bessie (again, b.1722); an unnamed child (b.1724); and Charles (b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, probably son of James and grandson of Robert of Easter Heap. He was at Whitehaugh in 1721 and 1724 and Borthaugh in 1727. He married Janet Scott in 1720 and their children included: Anna (b.1721); William (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and Janet (b.1727). The witnesses in 1721 and 1722 were the same, namely William of Whitehaugh and Rev. Robert (brother to William of Whitehaugh); this suggests a close conenction to the Whitehaugh branch. The 1724 baptism in Wilton was performed by Rev. Robert, with witnesses William of Whitehaugh, along with James ('grandfatther to ye child'), Walter of Cockerheugh and John ('uncle to the sd Child'). It is hence possible he was a cousin of William of Whitehaugh (and also Robert and John), with the 1724 witness James being his own father or his wife's father; this would make him the same man as James, wright in Hawick and father of John, who succeeded to Whitehaugh. He could be the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John Kersel at Borthaugh in 1727 and may be the James who witnessed another for Robert of Burnhead in the same year. William (b.1740) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Hawick and born to parents of the same name may also be in this family. He is probably the James 'indweller in Peebles', whose son William was named in the 'testament dative' of the deceased William Scott of Whitehaugh in 1750. In 1753 he was 'late in Borthaugh, now Residenter in Peebles', when it was said that his eldest son William, who was now deceased, had been named as one of the heirs of William of Whitehaugh, or failing him, his second son Robert, who was then also deceased, or any other son. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Borthaugh in 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1735, but Netherhall in 1732. He is easy to confuse with the other James who was also at Borthaugh at the same time. He married Janet Wright in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); Mary (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were William Turnbull and Robert Cowan, in 1727 were John (perhaps a relative) and John Dryden, in 1729 were Thomas Wilson and George Bell, in 1732 were John Lamb and James Ormiston and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1721 and 1727 and Scawmill (probably the same place) in 1724. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1718); Thomas (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Anna (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); James (b.1728); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie and in 1724 and 1727 were Robert and William Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife). James (18th C.) tenant in Branxholme Town. He is probably related to the other Scotts who were tenants there, and the slightly earlier smith of the same name. He is recorded as tenant in Over Southfield in 1725. He is 'tenent in Branxholmtoun' when he married Helen Wilson (from the same place) in 1724. Their children included: Anne (b.1725); Walter (b.1727); David (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); John (b.1739); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1725 were cottar William Hobkirk and John Wilson, tenant in Branxholme Town (who was probably his father-in-law or brother-in-law). James (18th C.) miller at Burnfoot Mill and Crawhill Mill in Wilton Parish from the 1720s until about 1750, being tenant for the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1722 he is recorded being at 'w: burnfott miln' (i.e. West Burnfoot Mill), in 1724 at 'Wester burnfoot miln', in 1727 and 1729 at 'W. Miln' (i.e. Wester Mill), at 'E: Burnfoot' in 1733 and at Crawhill in 1738. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine at Stirches in 1727 and witnessed a baptism for James Liddell, resident of Burnfoot, in 1736. After being at Burnfoot Mill he moved to Hawick Mill, where he was miller in the 1750s. He married his first wife, Margaret Huntly, in 1719 in Wilton and they had at least 9 children, all baptised in Wilton: Jean (b.1721); Margaret (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); James (b.1727); Adam (b.1729); Helen (b.1731); Susanna (b.1733); Robina (b.1735), who may have married Walter Purdom; and Thomas (b.1738). He later had 2 children by his second wife, Margaret Ligerwood (also written 'Lizzarhide'), including Isobel (b.1745). The witnesses in 1722 were William and John Scott, in 1724 were John Scott and John Huntlie, in 1727 were 'James W. Jo. & Fran. Scotts' (perhaps several relatives), in 1729 and 1733 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1735 were James and John Dryden, in 1738 were James Simpson (the new minister of Wilton) and Walter of Cockerheugh, and in 1745 were shoemaker John Brown and merchant Robert Scott. His sons and sons-in-law held several other local mills. He is probably the miller recorded in 1759 and 1760 as witness to baptisms for Walter Purdom and Robina Scott (perhaps his daughter), and also for miller Adam (perhaps a relative) in 1762. He is probably the miller whose son Joseph, a wright, had his house at the bottom of the Mill Port carried away in the 1767 flood. It is likely that the 1762 record 'New MortJames Scott Crawhill' was for his funeral. James (18th C.) son of John. In 1726 in Minto Parish he married Jean, daughter of Robert Kersel. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1729. In 1728 he married Jean Scott and their children included Rachel (b.1729), with witnesses Adam and William (who were probably related to him or his wife). Note than another James married another Jean Scott in Wilton in 1731. Other children of these 2 couples include: Agnes (b.1731); Margaret (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); Isobel (b.1737); and Ann (b.1739). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1732, 1739 and 1741. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1732); Jean (b.1739); and Gavin (b.1741). The witnesses in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1739 were John and James Dryden and in 1741 were Adam Scott and William Marshall. He is hard to separate from the other James who also married a Jean Scott. James (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Smail and their children included Mary (b.1730). The witnesses were Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and another James. James (18th C.) resident of Parkhead or Parkhill (this is hard to read) in 1732 when his son William was baptised in Roberton in 1732. He may be the James who was in Wester Parkhill in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Roberton. Perhaps the same James was recorded as 'Servt. to Borthwickbrea at . . . ' in 1743 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton. James (18th C.) recorded at Weensland Mill in 1729 when he married Margaret Cavers in Cavers Parish. It is possible there may be an error for James 'Stot', who was miller in Weensland at about that time. James (18th C.) recorded at Trowmill in 1724, 1729 and 1737. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1729); and Thomas (b.1737). There are several other children baptised in Cavers around the same time who could be his. James (1701/2–43) tenant in Doveshaugh Mill (in Bedrule Parish), i.e. presumably the miller. He may therefore have been an ancestor of the family that supplied many millers around Hawick. He married Margaret Borthwick (who died in 1734, aged 28). Their son William died as an infant. They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Based on neighbouring gravestones, his father may have been John (who died in 1705), and his son John (who died in the Grange in 1794). Thomas in Bedrule Mill (who also died in the 18th century) may have also been related, as well as Archibald, recorded in Doveshaugh in 1721. He is probably the James 'in Doushaugh' who had an unnamed child baptised in Hobkirk in 1739. James (b.1709) son of Robert of Coldhouse and Jean Cunningham. He was his father's tenant in the farm of Tandlaw in about 1744–47. James (d.1770) eldest son of Robert of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was a surgeon in Carlisle and then Langholm. He married Mary Rae in 1728; her will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1784. He had a son James, who died without issue. He also had daughters Elizabeth, Mary, Susanna, Charlotta, Anna and Margaret. His brother John did have children, but this branch also failed in the male line (although there is some dispute over details of these generations). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Teindside in 1731 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1742 he married Margaret Legerwood (who may have previously been married to Thomas Elliot). This was probably his second marriage. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1743), baptised in Wilton; Isobel (b.1745), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.c.1749), tacksman at Roughheugh. James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: an unnamed son (b.1739); Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1746); Gilbert (b.1747); and Marion (b.1753). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Hardie. Their children included: Isobel (b.1740); Margaret (b.1742); and John (b.1745). Bailie James (18th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1739 and 1740. In 1739 he was one of those appointed to oversee construction of a new Parish School. He may be the Bailie recorded in 1732 when masons were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after putting up the dial of the Kirk clock. He may be the 'late Baillie' who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for weaver James White. and in 1742 for gardener Robert Ker. He was Bailie along with John Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He paid tax on 12 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the 'Bailie James' (no surname given) recorded in 1752 paying in money for 'stones of the well', perhaps related to fixing the Teviot Brig. He may be the Bailie of that name who witnessed baptisms for writer Thomas Winthrope in 1757 and for shoemaker John Oliver in 1761. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He was probably also the James who was a Bailie in the 1750s and 1760s. He is probably the 'Cuddyfit' who lived at the bottom of the Howegate and was elected Bailie many times, lastly in 1765. Rev. James (1717–1773) son of William of Africa and Ashieburn and grandson of Walter of Clarilaw. He succeeded to his father's estate in 1733. He was licensed as a preacher in 1740 and became minister of the Associate Presbytery Church at Gateshaw (near Morebattle) in 1742. He preached in the open air for 7 years, until a church was built on the Kale. In 1758 and 1759 he paid the window tax in Morebattle Parish. In 1745 he married Alice ('Allie'), youngest daughter of Ebenezer Erskine, and she died in 1814, at the age of 94; a sketch of her exists. In 1747 he sided with the Anti-Burghers, while his wife's family sided with the Burghers, and she would thereafter attend the Burgher Kirk in Jedburgh. He was said to be infailingly regular in his habits, so that people set their watches by him. He had 3 sons: Ebenezer (d.1756), who died young; William (d.1807), who succeeded to Ashieburn; and Ebenezer (again, d.1828), a doctor in Dalkeith. Manuscript sermons of his survive, some published in a volume in 1774. James (18th C.) resident of Whithope in 1742 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to the earlier James in Whithope. James (18th C.) resident of Craikhope in 1742 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1751 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains in 1752 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) cooper recorded at Meadshaw in 1753 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same cooper James was recorded witnessing a baptism in 1743 in Hawick for workman Thomas Oliver. He may be related to the cooper James who was recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in a baptismal record of 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1756 when his son Francis was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: James (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Andrew (b.1764); Francis (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Thomas Scott. James (18th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1763 he married Helen (or 'Nelly') Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.1775) and William (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. James (18th C.) weaver who lived on Damside. He married Agnes Allan in Wilton Parish in 1761 and their children included: Robert (b.1764) and William (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and Helen (b.1767), James (b.1770), Jean (b.1772), Robert (again, b.1774) and Ketty (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1770 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1759 he and blacksmith Robert Young witnessed a baptism for carrier William Richardson and in 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young (suggesting some family connection). He could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. James (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1763 and 1766 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1763); and Helen (b.1766). He may be related to the earlier Scotts who lived at Whithope. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick who was witness to a sasine in 1764. Probably the same wright witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom in 1765; it is possible he was the same man as the miller James who witnessed earlier baptisms for Walter Purdom. He also witnessed a baptism for Walter (probably a relative) in 1767. He may be the James, wright in Hawick, who was father of the John who inherited Whitehaugh in 1759, and who acted for his minor son's interests in the court proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; this John was said to be 2nd cousin of Isobel, last child of Walter of Whitehaugh, although the precise family connection is unclear. It is also possible he is the same man as James in Borthaugh. James (18th C.) from Yarrow Parish, in 1762 he married Jane Dunlop in Ashkirk. Their son James was baptised in Yarrow in 1766. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Buckham and their children included: Isabel (b.1761); Robert (b.1763); and John (b.1765).

James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Margaret Cockburn in 1762, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: Agnes (b.1765); and Janet (b.1768). The 1768 baptism was witnessed by William Scott and William Bower. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for George Gray and Helen Scott (perhaps his sister), with Walter Scott as the other witness. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Betty and Margaret (b.1767); Betty (again, b.1768); James (b.1770); and Jane (b.1773). James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His daughter Isobel was born in 1765 and his daughter Christian in 1771. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) married Isabel Shortreed in Ashkirk Parish in 1771. James (1738–1807) tenant farmer of Skelfhill, son of Robert who had farmed there before him. He previously farmed at Gorrenberry, where most of his children were born. He is recorded at Skelfhill on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Pott (or Potts), their children baptised in Castleton Parish including Jean (b.1766), Jenny (b.1772), Margaret (b.1773), James (b.1775), William (b.1776) and Gideon (b.1778). One of his children was Betty, born in 1769, who married Adam Turnbull. His son Robert later farmed at Skelfhill. He may be the same James whose son James became a baker's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1770. His son William, of Huddersfield, is recorded dying at Falnash in 1800. The labourers Gideon and Archibald, recorded there on the ballot for the Militia in 1799, may have been his sons. He himself died at Skelfhill. James (d.c.1772) only son of James of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm, near Eskdalemuir. He married Christina Stewart. Their only son was Robert, who farmed at Holm and then at Binks. After his death there was extensive litigation over the succession to the estate and it was eventually sold. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Dykes in 1770 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (18th C.) of Boonraw and Sillerbithall. He farmed at Boonraw and was also Laird of Silverbuthall. He had sasine for the lands of Easter Heap in 1733. As James 'of Easter Heap' he was one of the instigators (along with Robert Langlands of that Ilk and William Scott of Brieryhill) for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. It sems likely he is the same as the James, resident of Silverbuthall (as recorded in at least 1743 and 1748), who married Helen Irvine in 1743 and had children Thomas (b.1743), Margaret (b.1746), Jean (b.1748), Anne (b.1750), George (b.1751), Allison (b.1752), Helen (b.1754) and George (again, b.1756) baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1743 were Walter Scott and James Dryden and in 1748 were George and John Scott (who may have been related). It is possible that his wife was Helen, daughter of Thomas 'Irwine', baptised in Minto in 1721. His lands of 'Silverbuthall or Easter Heip' were valued at £80 in 1764, 'rated in the name of George Scott' (presumably his son). He was an elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife began attending the Anti-Burgher church in Midlem, and it is said that they went to different churches each Sunday, with no disagreements in the family; but when their child was baptised in Wilton, and the minister (Rev. Simpson) used the opportunity to rebuke dissenters, he resolved to leave the established church. A meeting followed with other, like-minded people in 1763, which led to the establishment of the Green Kirk in Hawick in 1766. He was probably the James who witnessed a baptism for fellow Anti-Burgher Robert Smith in 1770 and another for William Cook in 1772 (as well as several other baptisms). As owner of Silverbuthall he got part of the former Wilton Common when it was divided, and this land was later sold to William Oliver by Thomas Scott (who must have been his heir). He was probably also the James, tenant of Wollrig, who sold part of Silverbuthall to William Robertson (of the carpet factory) and James and Walter Knox (in Damside). In 1788 he is recorded as owner of 'Easterheap or Silverbuthall', valued at £80. It is possible he is the James (b.1715) son of George, who was baptised in Wilton; howver, he does not seem to have been closely related to the later James of Silverbuthall. James (18th C.) tobacconist of Hawick. In 1762 he (along with shoemaker John) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Stevenson. In 1758 he married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle. Their children included: Thomas (b.1759), John (b.1760), Mary (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1765). He may have been related to the later tobacconist. James (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1776. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included George (b.1776). Capt. James of Forge, J.P. (d.1799) only son of William of Meikledale. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane and known as the 'Laird of Canonbie'. He spent 16 years in the East India Company, where he was in the Bombay Marines. He was J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire. He married Mrs. Mary Coode in 1764, and she died childless. He secondly maried Phoebe, who was daughter and co-heiress of James Dixon of Bath and sister-in-law of George Harris, Lord of Scringapatam and Mysore. Their children were: William (b.1774), who died at Burtpore; Charles (1776–1822), Aide-de-camp to Lord Harris; Catherine Eliza (1777–1853), who married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson and was a poet and novelist; Phoebe Christian (1779–1804) died while visiting her uncle in Madras; Jemimah (b.1781), who married Maj.-Gen. Robert Bell; Sybella Frances (d.1820), who married Adm. Charles James Johnston; and George Fraser (1784–1848), who succeeded to Larriston and took the additional surname Elliot. Rev. James (1733–1818) 3rd surviving, and probably youngest son of Robert of Falnash. He was born at Crawhill in Wilton Parish and was educated in Edinburgh. He was probably brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, although in some accounts he seems to have been confounded with the contemporary Rev. James, minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He was educated in Edinburgh, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1758, ordained at Kinfauns in 1759 and translated to Perth, Second Charge, in 1762, becoming the main minister there in 1771. He gave up because of age and infirmity in 1807. He had a great love of literature and the fine arts and was well known in his day as an antiquarian. In 1784 he founded the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth and spent time translating and transcribing old documents. His collection was purchased for the Advocates' Library, which now forms part of the National Library of Scotland. In 1760 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Mercer of Pinhill. Their children were: Robert (b.1762), who died young; Thomas (1763–1814), who lived in Jamaica; Elizabeth (b.1765); Violet (b.1766), also died young; Susan (1767–1854); and James (b.1769), merchant in Glasgow. All of his children died unmarried. He wrote 'Sermon occasioned by the Death of the Rev. David Black' (1771), 'Lives of the Protestant Reformers in Scotland' (1817), 'History of the Life and Death of John, Earl of Gowrie' (1818), 'Essays on Evangelical Subjects' (1824), and an account of the Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna Irvine and their children included Andrew (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. He married Mary (or Marjory) Irvine in Hawick in 1765 and their children included: Walter (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768), with the baptism appearing to be recorded twice; Mary (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1772); James (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). The witnesses in 1766 were William Scott and Abel Armstrong, in in 1768 were Abel Armstrong and William Miller plus William Leithead and in 1772 were Abel Armstrong and James Dunlop. James 'the Chief' (c.1700–78) son of the tenant of Overhall, he was a thatcher in Hawick. He was one of the witnesses in 1764 in the court case for the division of Wilton Common and who perambulated the Common; there he was described as 'commonly called Chief'. He recalled the perambulation of the common by the Lairds of Falnash, Langlands, Whitehaugh and others when he was 12 or 13 years old. He was mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1766, when his daughter Helen married John Allan. Probably the same thatcher in Hawick was among those selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He is also recorded when he died in Hawick Parish. His nickname suggests he may be a descendant of Walter who was also called 'Chief', perhaps they were father and son. In 1764 he describes how his father was tenant at Overhall from the time of his birth until 1741 and he worked on the farm from an early age. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Law and their children included: Margaret (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1749); James (b.1751); George (b.1755); Janet (b.1759); and George (again, b.1760). Rev. James (1738/39–1823) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, he was a member of the Established Church, and was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian congregation in Branton, Northumberland in 1774. He was inducted as 4th minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh in 1783. He served as Moderator of the Relief Synod. He was described as 'a tall, rather primitive-looking old gentleman', with a black suit that he used for 40 years. His will mentions his 'only son Revd James Scott', minister at Dalkeith and then Cowgate in Edinburgh (and said to be the prototype for 'Mr. Wiggie' in Dr. Moir's 'The Life of Mansie Waugh'), and daughters Agnes (married to a Laidlaw) and Christian (the youngest). He is said to have been a younger brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, who appears to have been a son of Robert of Falnash; however, there is clearly some confusion with the contemporary Rev. James, minister at Perth and it is unclear which of the 2 men was brother of Rev. Thomas. He paid tax for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1815 he was becoming old enough that he was supplied with an assistant, who was the next minister, James Porteous. Robert Murray recounted a story in 1872, told to him by an old man 9 years earlier, about his son (perhaps the later minister at Dalkeith and Cowgate) raising the devil, who 'saunted' when he rebuked him. James (1743/4–89) buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the Scotts from Lantonhill. He died at Howden in Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Bell, who died at Ruecastle in 1809, aged 67. He secondly married Alison Rae, who died at Marelfield in 1823, aged 48. He had a son, Framncis, who died in Edinburgh in 1806, aged 35. James (b.c.1745) from Hawick, he emigrated to America in 1775 and lived in Pennsylvania. He married his second wife Margaret Tully in Hawick in 1770. His children were: John; James; Robert; Joseph; Margaret; Isabella, who married William Davis; William; Agnes; Maria; and Thomas. His will and some personal letters survive. James (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1773 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to Archibald who was at Woodburn slightly earlier. James (18th C.) married Esther 'Lennicj' in Ashkirk Parish in 1777. James (18th C.) recorded as possessor of a 'House and yard' in Minto Parish in 1780. The rental value was 10s. James (18th C.) married Margaret Goodfellow in Hobkirk Parish in 1775. James (b.c.1750) herd in Wauchope. He may have been related to former tenants of Wauchope. He is probably the shepherd at Wauchope recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He may have married Nelly Irvine in Roberton Parish in 1780. He had at least one son, Adam (b.1796), who emigrated to the U.S.A. and settled in Ontario. Other children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, who may have been his include John (b.1781), Walter (b.1784), Nelly (b.1786, to James in Hillshaugh), Isabel (b.1788), Beatrice (b.1790), James (b.1792) and Robert (b.1800). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Bowanhill in 1792 when his sons William and John were baptised and in 1797 when his daughter Rachel was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Bowknowe, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1792. James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be related to other Scotts who were skinners. James (18th C.) cooper in Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is surely related to John, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. It is also possible he was related to the cooper of the same name who was at Meadshaw in 1753. James (18th C.) listed as coachman at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott. In 1786 he was a 'House Servt.' and was coachman in 1788 and 1791. James (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. Perhaps he could be the James whose son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. He could also be the labourer in Orchard in 1789 when his son James was baptised in Cavers. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Whitchesters. On a list of local volunteers in 1803 he was listed as being above age but willing to serve. James (d.1795) from Kirkton, his death is recorded in Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in Hawick in 1791. He was living at Greenbank in 1798 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish, with his wife acting as sponsor (suggesting that she attend the church there, but he did not). James (d.bef. 1806) tailor in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Nichol is recorded in 1806. He was probably related to other tailors called Scott. James (18th C.) recorded at 'Newmills' in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Newmill on Teviot. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Hawick. He was probably son of Thomas and Christian Weir. A family tradition says they were descended from Auld Wat of Harden. In 1792 he married Elizabeth ('Betty') Scott, who was from Ashkirk. Their children were: Thomas (b.1795), who married Janet Notman; Mary (b.1796); Gideon (b.1798); and David (1801–73), who married Janet Wilson. The 1795 baptism was recorded in 1812, by solemn declaration to Bailie Peter Wilson of the father and 'nurse Agnes ...' [perhaps 'hume'], with the 1797, 1798 and 1801 baptisms also recorded then. The witnesses were Gideon (probably his wife's brother) and Robert Weir (perhaps his uncle). James (18th/19th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Turnbull in 1781 and their children included: Thomas (1783); Jane (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Robert (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation and in 1793 were Robert Renwick and Walter of Whitehaugh (who may have been a relative). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in the period 1787–1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. He married Jean Ogilvie and their children included: Janet (b.1777); Jean (b.1779); Mary (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); Robert (b.1789); unnamed female (b.1791); and James (b.1793). James (18th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Wilton Parish in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isabel Hogg. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1794, with witnesses Andrew Scott and George Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreehall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1795 when his son Anthony was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm when his daughter Euphan (b.1789) was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) married Margaret Rae in 1793, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was probably father of John, who was also tenant at Denholmhill, as well as George, who was living there in 1797. His sons James and John were on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (1746/7–1817) tenant at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with William; they owned 3 horses. His wife was Margaret Graham, who died in 1831, aged 68. Their children included Margaret (1783/4–1803), Janet (1791/2–1804), Elizabeth (1798/9–1804), Robert (d.1804) and Janet (d.1808). James (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Todlaw in 1801. His sons James and Thomas were listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. James of Silverbuthall (c.1765–c.1841) teacher at the school in Yarrow, his mother was Agnes ('Nans') Noble. He was appointed in 1784, taking over from Alexander Wilson (with George Scott being there briefly). He dramatically increased the reputation of the school, so that it attracted boarders from as far away as Hawick. He focussed particularly on handwriting, English grammar and geography. He is recorded in a letter of 1813 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In about 1816 a cousin of his came to help teach languages and he retired as Schoolmaster in 1818. He was said to be of slight physique, even although his mother claimed he was as 'buirdly' as the minister; he wore a small yellow wig, as was the custom of the time. He kept bees and also gathered meteorological data, his records of 1837 being used by the minister in the New Statistical Account to describe Hawick's weather. He was engaged to be married to Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. He came to live at Silverbuthall in about 1822, having bought it after 'Auld Cash' died. He was probably unrelated to the James who had lived at Silverbuthall a few decades earlier. He was listed as 'James, Esq. Silverbuthall' when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and was there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He was also examiner at Wilton School. Former pupils from Yarrow were regular guests of his. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He is probably the James at Silverbuthall described as 'Ind.' on the 1841 census. He died at Silverbuthall and his fortune was split among distant relatives. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1790 he married Isabel Robson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Helen (b.1796); John (b.1797); Betty (b.1800); William (b.1801); and James (b.1806). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie Irvine and Andrew (who was probably related) and in 1797 were Bailie Irvine and James Richardson. Probably the same merchant James paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as coachman at Branxholme in 1797, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) joiner in Belses, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) apprentice under the care of James Hogg. He sang Hogg's 'Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick' at the 'rebel' Common Riding of 1809. He was also the first official singer of 'Teribus' in 1819, i.e. the first Common Riding 'Sang Singer'. He may be the same James who was imprisoned along with James Hogg in 1817 for illegally organising against the stocking-maker employers. He was still alive in 1863 when his recollections provided information for Robert Murray's article on Hogg. He could be the James (b.c.1794) from Cavers Parish, living on the Loan in 1841, in Orrock Place in 1851 and at 9 Howegate in 1861, whose wife was Isabella and children included Walter (or Peter), Thomas, Benjamin, Gideon, Catherine and Helen. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Kersel in Wilton in 1794.

He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Deanbrae according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Adam was also listed and hence perhaps his brother. James (b.c.1770s) son to James in Denholmhill, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother John was also listed. He could be the son of James baptised in Cavers in 1776. Perhaps the same James was a labourer in Denholm on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Lymiecleuch, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Robert was tenant there at the same time and perhaps related. James (b.c.1770s) weaver living at Lockieshedge according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James (b.c.1770s) farmer at Woll Rig according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was probably the son of tobaconnist William (and Margaret Scott) baptised in Hawick in 1773. He was listed as a tobacconist in Hawick on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799; he may also be the 'Son of William' listed on the ballot in 1801. He served as Town Treasurer, and also helped compile a 'New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick' in 1814. He was one of the founders members of Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a tobacconist in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories; he may also be the same as the general shopkeeper listed in 1837. His shop was at No. 40 High Street and is marked on Wood's 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked 'Tudhope & Scott'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and was probably the 'Scott of Burnhead' who provided the version of the Hornshole story, which was included in Wilson's book; this was the first published account of the origin of the Burgh Standard. In 1809 he married Elizabeth, daughter of deceased Hawick draper George Turnbull. His premises (at 40 High Street) are marked on Wood's 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the business on the Sandbed marked 'Tudhope & Scott'. According to the 1841 census he was a 'Tobacco Manf.' living with his children William and Elizabeth, along with Margaret (either a second wife, or a sister or other relative) and a female servant. His children included: William (1809–77), Cornet, who helped with the business, and was later a farmer at Burnhead; George (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1812); and Margaret (b.1815). The witnesses in 1811 were tobacconist Francis (probably a relative, perhaps his brother) and merchant Thomas Turnbull (his wife's brother) and in 1812 were hosier William Beck and wright Walter Wilson. A portrait of him exists. James of Whitehaugh (1775–1852) 3rd son of John. In 1797 he was recorded as son of John of Whitehaugh when listed among men in Wilton Parish balloted to serve in the Militia; he paid £10 to avoid serving, this being made explicit in the 1798 list. However, he was again on the ballot in 1799 as 'son of John Scott Whitehaugh'. He succeeded to the Lairdship on the death of his brother Walter in 1841. He was the last of the Scott Lairds. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. His residence for many years was at Whitslade. In 1841 he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his elder brother Walter and in 1851 he is at 'Whitehaughplace' with his sister Agnes Stavert, niece Margaret Stavert and 4 servants. He died unmarried. His nephew Capt. John Chisholme inherited the estates (after adding 'Scott' to his name). He is buried in Whitehaugh Aisle, along with his brother Walter. James (b.c.1770s) brewer in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) probably son of Gideon and Agnes Tudhope baptised in Hawick Parish in 1779. He may have been half-brother of millwright Gideon. He worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway in the 1820s, along with his brother William. James (b.c.1770s) mason at Leaheads according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James Boswell (d.1799) recorded in 1798 as substitute in the Militia for David Scott in Merrylaw. It is unclear where he came from. He died before serving in the Militia, with George Oliver, wright in Denholm, drawn in his place. James (b.c.1775) member of the East Bank Kirk, he was a carter in Hawick. It could be his property marked 'Jas. Scott' near the top of the Howegate on Wood's 1824 map. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with his children James, Ninian and Christian. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1805), James (b.1807), Robert (b.1810), Ninian (b.1815) and Christian (b.1818). James (b.c.1780) joiner in Denholm according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (b.c.1780) son of James, farmer at Todlaw. 'Denholm braeheads' is crossed out and hence perhaps essentially the same place. James (b.c.1780) servant at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1805), James (b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. Harris. James (c.1780–1820) eldest son of Robert. He farmed at Skelfhill like his father before him. He passed on the lease to William Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. James (b.c.1785) farmer in Hawick, who may have been the older brother of 'Robbie the Cow'. He could be the 'Jas. Scott' shown at 43 High Steet on Wood's 1824 map. In 1841 he appears to be living with Robert, who was an accountant. James (18th/19th C.) farmer who was Cornet in 1810. He was also based for a while at the Crescent, where he is recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory and in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He could be the James Scott whose property is marked at about No. 12 Slitrig Crescent on Wood's 1824 map. In 1845 he discharged a bond of his uncle's to Elliot of Harwood. His wife was Mary. Sturrock of the Secession Kirk at Midlem. He spent 20 years as a mason in Galashiels, moving to Selkirk in 1878. Always interested in nature, and inspired by the great meteor display of 1885, he became fascinated by astronomy and over 5 winters he constructed an astronomical clock (that was 8 feet high and 5 feet wide). This was followed by the construction of a 'Jupiter clock', then a 'solar clock' and a fourth instrument to demonstrate the causes of the seasons for children. These were shown at the Scottish National Exhibition and later gifted to the Burgh of Selkirk. However, it may be that only one of them survives. James (b.18201/) Town Crier of Hawick in the 1880s. He was called to Moffat in about 1895, but declined. He became minister of East Bank Church in 1900. He was involved in the temperance movement in Hawick. He resigned in 1907 and became minister at Alva Eadie in 1912, then Crailing in 1922, then Kildonnan, Arran in 1925 and Corsock in 1926. He resigned again in 1929, to facilitate the church union. He married Edith Caroline Ross in 1892. He published a collection of sermons 'Soul-Culture' in 1901. His name is usually written 'J. Brand'. James (1854–1940) manufacturer in Hawick. Like his elder brother he was a Director at Pesco's, taking on this role in 1925 and being the driving force behind the company until his death. In 1918 he married Violet Irene, daughter of John Noble Pillans. Their children were: Peter Brydon (1920–43), who lived in Teddington and died in Burma; and Christine Mary (1925–2001), who lived in Denholm, married Donald Robert McCormick and died in Red Deer. He decided not to live on Sunnyhill along with other family members, but instead moved to Denholm Lodge. He donated a baptismal font to Denholm Kirk in memory of his son Peter. He died in Milan, Italy. Rev. James Pringle (d.1954) originally with the Free Church, he was minister at Arbroath Princes Street. He moved to Hawick West Port in 1931 and remained until 1938. In 1945 he became minister at Berwick Tweedmouth, but demitted in 1949. Maj. James Kenny Courtney of Burnhead (b.1928) succeeded from his uncle, Lt.-Col. William Scott-Watson. Educated at Marlborough and Sandhurst, he served in the Hussars and was Assistant Division Commander in Western Australia, Tasmania and Hong Kong. He matriculated arms in 1977 and has no direct ties to the Hawick area. Jane (d.c.1581) described as 'sometime spouse' to William in Kirkhope when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1581/2. Jane (18th C.) daughter of Margaret Dodds from Denholm. In 1795 she had 'hatural child born and baptised' called Alexander. Jane 'Janie' (1788/9–1837) wife of Adam Turnbull, bookseller of Jedburgh. She is one of the few people recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. She must have had a connection with the Rulewater area. Jane nee Veitch (b.1800/1) from Langholm, she is recorded as an ironmonger in Slater's 1852 directory. Her husband was gun-maker and ironmonger Joseph. In the 1851 census she is a widow living at about 21 High Street, employing 4 men in the ironmonger's and tinsmith's business. She is also listed as a tin-plate worker on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. Jane (b.1783/4) resident of Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in 1841. She is listed as 'Ind.', suggesting that she was a widow with some means. Presumably the same woman is recorded as 'Jessie' at Brieryshaw Cottage in Ewesdale on the 1851 census; she is described as an unmarried 'Annuitant'. In 1861 she was 'Fund Holder' living alone at Brieryshaw Cottage. Jane (b.c.1805) recorded as 'Dealer in Bread &c.' on Wilton Damside on the 1841 census. She was living with Agnes, possibly a sister, and children William Whitson and James Hardie. Jane (b.1833/4) grocer in Newcastleton. She was on Douglas Square in 1861, living with her brother James (a mason), sister Mary Ann Scott and niece Margaret. Janet (15th C.) recorded as 'Jonete Scot' in 1487 in a charter for lands in Glasgow. Probably the same 'Jonete' is also listed in another charter in 1497, along with Alexander. It is possible that the same Janet leased the lands of 'Newtoun of Reras'in Largs in 1481. It is unclear how she might be related to other Scotts. Janet (15th/16th C.) married Robert Dickson. She was recorded as a widow in a land transaction in Edinburgh in 1502. Janet (16th C.) daughter and heir of Walter of Howpasley, who died at Flodden. She must have been quite young when he died, since she did not succeed to his lands until 1530, before which she was under the guardianship of her uncle Robert. Her brother Robert succeeded to the main lands of Howpasley, while she inherited Appletreehall and Midshiels. A marriage contract of 1526 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) clearly records her as daughter of the deceased Walter, 'lord of Howpaslot'; this was for marriage with John Baird, Lord of Posso, and contained the names of priests 'to act jointly on their behalf and to receive the said dispensation on their behalf to prove the legitimacy of their descendants'. This suggests that the couple may already have had children, including Sir Gilbert Baird, Elizabeth Baird (who married Sir Michael Naysmith) and Janet (who married William Geddes) who died in 1527. She married (or secondly married) Thomas MacDowell (or McDougall) of Makerstoun. With his consent in 1532/3 she transfered the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels to her uncle Robert Scott, this being confirmed by King James V in 1536. Also in 1532 (with another Walter serving as her Bailie), she sold her lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire to Robert Scott; she and her husband both signed 'with my hand at the pen'. She was still alive in 1540, when Sir Walter of Branxholme (then in ward) was given permission to pursue legal proceedings against her. Her seal of 1532 shows a 'bend sinister' (i.e. the wrong way, probably in error) bearing 3 stars, with a bird and a crescent on the shield. Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1530/1 as widow of George when she was given as owner of a rig of land in Selkirk. In 1534 she and her son James leased a mill in Selkirk from Andrew Ker of Primside. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as widow of Walter. She had sasine for her husband's 3 husbandlands in Denholm, inhabited by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. Janet (16th C.) listed in 1539/40 as widow of Robert 'Elwand of [Toungtis?] when she purchased the lands of 'le cot rig' in the Mains of Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley. She paid 120 pounds Scots for the farm and Robert promised to guarantee her and her heirs peaceful possession of the lands until he paid them the same. It is unclear if it is just a coincidence that the former heiress of the lands of Appletreehall was also called Janet Scott (or if perhaps there is confusion over the two nearly contemporary Roberts of Howpasley). Janet (16th C.) heir of John, recorded in 1543 when her lands in East Haining were mantioned in a Selkirk document. The lands of Walter were adjacent, and hence he may also have been a relative. Janet nee Beaton (1519–1569) daughter of Sir John Beaton of Creich and Janet Hay. She was the third wife of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and survived her husband by 16 years. She is supposed to have ridden in full armour at the head of 200 Scotts in order to seize the Laird of Cranston at the Kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1559; it may be that he was suspected of being involved in the murder of her husband in 1552. She was also implicated in intrigues involving Bothwell and Queen Mary, and was popularly believed to employ witchcraft. She had married Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, then Simon Preston of Craigmillar and thirdly Sir Walter. She apparently divorced her 2nd husband (the Provost of Edinburgh) and Walter divorced his 2nd wife, so that the two could marry. The inter-relationships of their children are extremely convoluted. For example, her sister Grizel married Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, her step-son! She may also have been the mother of Walter of Goldielands, as well as David of Stobicote. In 1542 there was a discharge for her rights to the land of Cranston Riddell and Muirhouse in Edinburgh, and Blackgrain, Catslack and Montbenger in Selkirkshire. In 1550 her son James Crichton leased to her for 19 years the lands of Cranston Riddell, together with Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain. In 1552/3 she and her daughters, Grizel, Dorothy, Janet and Margaret were granted the teinds of Lessuden for 19 years. She held the superiority of the lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall until her death. In 1564 she had an order from Mary, Queen of Scots, recalling the bond made in 1552 between the Scotts and the Kers, which was broken by the Kers murdering her husband, and instructing her to pursue justice for the breaking of the bond (and not formally for the murder!). In 1567 she was instructed to present her 'household man and sevant', Dand Ker 'in Scheilstokbrayis', who was among men accused of raiding into England. She is fictionally represented by 'the Lady' in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' – 'Of noble race the Ladye came, Her father was a clerk of fame, Of Bethune's line of Picardie: He learn'd the art that none may name . . . ' [SWS]. Janet (16th C.) daughter of Robert, resident of Perthshire. In 1551 there was a marriage contract between her and Hugh, son of John 'Fenesoun'; the marriage to take plae 'in all gudly haist'. The dowry was 90 merks, while the couple were to receive tacks from the lands of Carpow, 'Pitgrugny' and Ferryfield near Abernethy. Janet 'Jean' (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and his 3rd wife Janet Beaton; she may have been born before they were married. She herself married John Cranston of that Ilk (who held lands in and around Denholm, and died in 1552); she bore his successor Sir William Cranston. In 1564/5 she was contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside, as part of the arrangements to settle the feud between the 2 families; however, this never happened, since Sir Walter Ker of Cessford was fined 1000 merks in 1577/8 (confirmed in 1579) for the marriage not taking place. In 1580 she is recorded as wife of Robert of Haining. Janet (d.c.1576) described as 'sometime spouse' to Robert Peebles, Burgess in Dundee when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1576/7. Janet (d.c.1580) widow of Robert Glen, 'indweller in Inchekerrie'. Her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1580. Janet (d.c.1587) described as 'sometime spouse to James Pyrle, in Gibbonestoun', Holywood Parish, Dumfriesshire. Her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1587. Janet (d.c.1590) wife of John Brydon in Fastheuch, Selkirkshire. Her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1590. Janet (d.c.1592) described as 'sometime spouse' to William Simpson, merchant Burgess of Glasgow when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1592. Janet (d.c.1596) described as 'sometime spouse' to Patrick Aitken, Burgess of Dumfries, when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1596. Janet (d.c.1597) widow of Thomas Lauder in 'Wormistoun, par. of Ettlistoun', Peeblesshire when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1597. Janet (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Bessie and Margaret, she was served 'heir portioner' to her father. Janet (d.c.1661) daughter of Sir William of Harden and grand-daughter of 'Auld Wat'. In 1639 she may have married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh (although some histories say he married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross). In 1661 her brother Walter of Raeburn was served as her heir. Janet (17th C.) servant to Rachel Gledstains. In 1686 she gave evidence in a case involving wool stolen from outside William Paterson's door. Paterson took a fleece out of Gledstains' house, claiming it was his, but she stated that 'she had bought the same individuall wool at St Boswell's Fair the day before'. Janet (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Janet (18th C.) teacher in Hawick in at least the period 1737–75. She received a salary of £2 per year from the Duke of Buccleuch (as main heritor) 'conforme to a grant signed by the said Duke's Commissioners'. There is no information about where she might have taught, or how many pupils. Janet 'Jean' (1750–1824) eldest surviving daughter of William Scott of Woll and Jean Balfour. She is said to have been one of 5 (or perhaps 6) daughters who were over 6 feet tall. In 1771 she married James Grieve, younger brother of the tenant of Branxholme Park, but he died 2 years later. In 1792 she secondly married Rev. Benjamin Dickison, minister of Kirkton and later Hobkirk. She is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Janet 'Jenny Rattles' (d.1801) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 she married Archibald Paterson, who was also from Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1801, along with her nickname, whose interpretation is unknown. Janet 'Cauld Pottage' (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1808 when her unnamed child died. Janet (b.c.1785) grocer at Whiteknowe in Castleton Parish. She is recorded there in 1841, as a widow, with her son James and also Jane Webb. She married James Kitchen (also written 'Ketchin' and variants), who lived at Roughley. Jasper (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Mangerton in Castleton Parish. His forename is not common in the family. Maj.-Gen. J.C. (19th C.) resident of Hoscote in the 1870s. In 1871 he donated to the Museum 'a list of forty coins' from all over the world. He was at Hoscote in directories of 1872 and 1878. In 1878 he was Captain of Hawick Golf Club. Jean (16th C.) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is not clear which one). She married Gavin Eliott of Stobs, who was a descendant of the Elliots of Redheugh; it has been suggested that her marriage was an attempt to end the feud between the 2 families in the 1560s. The couple owned the 'sex merkland of Chalmerlane Newtoun' in 1573, when they complained that Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton, attacked her and her husband's servant James Storie. Jean (16th C.) daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1569 she married Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Oxnam, this being part of a bond between the Scotts and the Kers. In 1573/4 she was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while her husband was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (her mother-in-law) and Andrew Kerr (her brother0in-law) were harassing her farms. Her children included: Sir James Kerr of Crailing; Thomas Kerr of Oxnam; Ann Kerr, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert Kerr, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname 'Carr'. In 1590 she and her son were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 she was 'Lady Pharnyhirst' when she was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Jean of Satchells (16th/17th C.). She helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a band of fellow Scotts to slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. Most of the prepetrators were brought to court by Sir William Douglas, and eventually hanged, although the two ladies were spared, along with William Scott 'callet of Satchellis' who was presumably her son. She may have been the wife of Robert of Satchells and mother of Captain Walter, in which case she was daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. However, since Robert of Satchells is not mentioned (but was known to have been alive), then either she was acting on her own, or her husband was absent, or else she was widow of the previous Laird of Satchells, James. Jean 'Holland's Jean' (16th/17th C.) natural daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, her mother probably being Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland. Her name suggests that she was born when the Earl was fighting in the Dutch Wars, 1604–9. She married Robert Scott of Whitslade, but they appear to have had no surviving male heirs. Jean (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. She was probably a shopkeeper or lodging house keeper. Jean (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that she had a larger house or perhaps an inn. It is possible she was the same woman known as 'Jean the Ranter' in the poem 'The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme'. Jean (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. She was living at Boonraw in 1729, when her death is recorded. John (d.1203) referred to in a now lost 13th century history as 'Joannes Scotus' from 'Podoth' in Cheshire, but of Scottish parentage. His mother may have been sister of Matthew, Bishop of Aberdeen, of the family which first took the designation 'Kynynmound' from lands in Fife. He was also possibly related to Bishop Richard, and was nephew (or son) of Odo, Steward at St. Andrews. It is possible he was 'John Nepos Episcopi', who was nephew of Bishop Robert of St. Andrews. He qualified as Master by 1178 and was said to have studied liberal arts, physics and theology at Oxford and Paris. He was appointed Bishop of St. Andrews in 1178, but this was against the wishes of King William, who wanted the position for his chaplain, Hugh. He met with William at Redden, Sprouston in 1181. He appealed to the Pope, and was successful, but William nevertheless banished him from the kingdom. This led to Hugh being excommunicated, followed by the King himself, with the whole of Scotland placed under interdict. After the Pope died, and a new one was installed, an agreement was reached in which Hugh became Bishop of St. Andrews and he became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1182/3. He was at the Papal court in Verona in 1186 and made peace with King William by 1188. He witnessed many royal charters after that until 1202. He acted as Papal judge-delegate for cases involving Kelso And Jedburgh Abbeys in about the early 1190s. He had nephews Robert and Simon recorded in about 1200. An example of his seal exists. He was buried at Newbattle Abbey. William Benyng wrote about his life in the 13th century, including miracles attributed to him and the fact that he was considered locally to be a saint; this life was rewritten in the 15th century, but both works are lost. It seems unlikely he was related to anyone else of the surname Scott. John (12th/13th C.) clerk, recorded as 'Master John 'le Scot' in Reading in 1226/7. Alicia of Oxford appealed that he should be tried before the Bishop of Lincoln, for an unspecified crime. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Scotus' in 1228 when an assize was appointed by the Sheriff of York, for men whom he accused of larceny and felony. He was stated to be in the King's prison at Appleby. John (13th C.) listed as 'John the Scot' in 1231 in London, when he was found guilty of masquerading as a clergyman and stealing money from merchants. Presumably a different 'John the Scot' was recorded in 1225/6 in relation to a boat from Scotland who had been arrested at Lynn. Sir John (d.1249) son of David, Earl of Huntingdon, who was brother of King William the Lion. He as known as 'John Scot', but it is unclear if he was related to anyone else with this appelation. He was knighted at Roxburgh Castle in 1223. He also became Earl of Huntingdon and of Chester. He is probably the 'John le Scot' recorded in 1227, when the Sheriff of Huntingdon made a demand on the men in his bailliary. He married a daughter of Llewellyn, King of Wales. John (13th C.) recorded in 1256 as being 'of Schele' in a set of pleas at Newcastle. He was exonerated from murdering Jordan of Clydesdale, but fined for being present. John (13th C.) son of William 'le Scot', he was recorded in 1266 in a court case in York. 'Alesia de Lacy' was his heir and had a case against Peter, sacrist of the chapel of York. John of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick. He held the lands of Great Reston, which had previously belonged to his father. The land appears to have been gifted to Coldingham Priory and then purchased by him, according to a document in 1261/2, where his name is 'Johannis Scoti de Ristona'. He was succeeded by his brother Patrick, some time in the 1270s. John (13th C.) mentioned in 1261 as son and heir of William 'le Escot' in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. John (13th C.) listed as 'Johannes Scot' in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He could be the same man as 'Johannes Scot de Schele', who is recorded in a separate case. He could also be the John 'le Escot' who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (along with Nicholas and Henry). 'Johannem Scot' is listed in 1279 in a case related to lands in Westmorland. John (13th C.) listed as 'Johannem Scot', forester of 'Beleassis' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case in Coquetdale. Probably a different man of the same name was accused of many robberies, fined and declared a fugitive. John (13th C.) resident of Glasgow. In 1283 he was 'Johanne Scot' when he witnessed the sale of a plot of land in Rottenrow. John (d.1294) recorded in 1285 as 'Master Johannis Scoti de Monedy', rector of schools of St. Andrews. He was tenant of the lands of Monethy (or (in Fife) in 1293/4 and also in 1294/5, when the lands were in the King's hands after his death; these lands seem to have lain within Strathmiglo, but the precise location is not known. He probably belonged to the Balwearie branch, since Michael held nearby lands at the same time. He may be the Master John who received the benefice of Brechin before 1274, also holding the church of Cortachy (in Angus). John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johanni le Scot, majori Novi Castri super Tynam' in 1290 in a list of provisions made at Berwick for the English King. He was thus presumably a resident of the Newcastle area. He could be the same 'Johannes Scot, ballivus' in Tynedale who was listed in another document for Edward in 1292. John (13th/14th C.) Templar, who was recorded as 'dictus de Sotton Anglicus', suggesting he may have been English. He joined the order in Ponthieu in about 1296. John (13th/14th C.) resident of Linlithgow who was involved in a case of trespass in 1299. He was also in another such case in 1302, and was also accused of stealing someone else's cattle in the same year. His name is given as 'Johanne Scotte'. John (13th/14th C.) listed among the men of Edinburgh as 'John le Scot' when they paid homage to Edward I in 1296. In 1296 he is listed among Edinburgh men in the roll of Scotsmen who renounced their treaty with France in order to reconcile with King Edward. He is probably the same man as the burgess of Haddington who was on an inquest in 1296 and was on a jury in 1312. It is possible he was the same John who was on an inquest in 1296 regarding the lands of Ballencrieff in East Lothian. John (13th/14th C.) name of 2 men recorded together at the house of Raymond Lull in Paris in 1309/10, testifying to the orthodoxy of Lull's writing. One man was M.A. and the other was B.A. It is possible that they were designated 'Scot' in France, despite also having other names, with John Fleming, John de Kinkell, John Mandeville, John de Pilmour and John Wishart all possibilities. John (13th/14th C.) servant of Sir Duncan Comyn. In 1303/4 he was recorded bringing 2 greyhounds from Sir Duncan Comyn to English King at St. Andrews. John (13th/14th C.) 'cokino' (perhaps messenger) to the English Prince. In 1303/4 he delivered letters to Aymer de Valance and others. John 'of Great Petlyng' (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1307 when he was pardoned for the murder of John Lenegle of the same place. John of Dundonald (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1307/8 when the English King commanded the bailifs of Scarborough to pay his expenses as one of the Scottish prisoners. His surname was written 'Scote'. John (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Newcastle recorded in 1308/9 in a document relating to a debt for providing supplies for English garrisons in Scotland. His surname is written 'Skot'. He could be the John recorded as a resident of the Newcastle area in the 1290s. It is possible he is the John whose son Richard is recorded at an inquisition held at Newcastle Castle in 1367/9. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Dundee in 1311/2. His name is given as 'Johannes Skot'. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1319 as son of Richard when he was pardoned by Edward II for joining the Scots. This was on account of bringing back the Bishop of Ely's servant, who had been imprisoned after a skirmish in Yorkshire. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1329. He was 'Johanni Scot', a clerk in Rutherglen. He was also recorded in 1330 receiving his fee from the King. He may have been related to Andrew, who was also recorded in relation to Rutherglen in 1329. John (13th/14th C.) Provost in Montrose recorded in 1329 and 1330 and Customar in Montrose in 1332. He may have been related to other Scotts in Montrose, e.g. David who was also recorded in 1329. John (14th C.) recorded as Bachelor of Medicine in Paris in 1330/1, in an appeal among academics there. It is possible he is the same as a man with another designation in Scotland, e.g. John Smailholm or John de Wedale. John 'the Lameter' (14th C.) second son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn (or possibly of Sir Richard). However, information about these generations is quite uncertain. He was said in some early family histories to be the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton and Harden, among other branches, with Walter, 1st Laird of Synton, being his son. It is said that because of his lameness, he was unfit for leadership in the Borders and so sent to school at St. Mungo's in Glasgow; he later married in a way that was disagreeable to his father. His grandson is supposed to have been Walter 'the Ratton', who was 1st Laird of Synton. However, most of the claimed details of his life have no documentary support – 'A Son he had at that same tide, Which was so lame could neither run nor ryde, The Laird wist not what to do with him, For Border service he was fit for none, At his place cal'd Scotstoun' [CWS], 'John his Lam'd Son, If my Author speak true, He sent him to St. Mungos in Glasgow, Where he remain'd a Scholars time, Then married a Wife according to his minde, And betwixt them two was procreat, Both Sons and Daughters of the Name of Scot' [CWS]. John (14th C.) man at arms in Roxburgh in 1337 and listed at the English garrison at Roxburgh in 1342. John (14th C.) recorded resigning the lands of 'Gillastoun' in Fife sometime during the reign of David II. He appears to have lost the lands through forfeiture. It is unclear how he was related to other Fifeshire Scotts. John (14th C.) resident of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1360s. He received an annuity from the mills of Haddington in the period 1361–1373. In 1375 the annuity was paid to his heirs and he was presumably deceased by then. It seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Bailie of Haddington of the same name and probably father of the Bailie John recorded in the following decades. John (14th C.) described in 1363 as 'John Scot of Leverton, a poor priest in the diocese of Lincoln'. He made 2 requests, for a benefice from Waltham Abbey and from Crowland Convent. John (14th C.) Bailie of Linlithgow mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1364. He was probably related to other early Scotts with a Linlithgow connection. John (14th C.) Scottish merchant. In 1369/70 and 1370 he was among a group of merchants who complained to English authorities that 2 Flemish vessels loaded with their freight wrecked off Suffolk and although some of the sailors escaped and claimed the goods, they were plundered, in violation of the rules of the truce between the 2 countries. John (14th C.) Bailie of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–99. He rendered the accounts of North in 1389–92. He was surely a descendant of the John from a few decades earlier. John (14th C.) custom's officer in Inverness in the period 1365–69 according to the Exchequer Rolls. His ship was hired for building operations at St. Monands in 1366 and 1369. He was further recorded as a Burgess of Inverness during the reign of David II, giving a donation to the Lady Chapel. He was Bailie of Inverness according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1389. John (14th C.) clerk of Dunkeld Diocese. In 1380 there was a request for a canonry of Moray for him, with the expectation of a prebend. This was based on an approach to the Pope by Bishop Adam Tyningham of Aberdeen. Nothing else seems to be known about him. John of Headshaw (14th/15th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton (although there generations are very uncertain). He may have been father of Walter of Headshaw. It is possible he was brother of Robert of Stirches, as well as possibly James in Ashkirk. John (14th/15th C.) Prior of Fyvie in Aberdeenshire, recorded in 1395. John (14th/15th C.) priest recorded in 1406 when there was a request for a benefice from Dunfermline Abbey for him. John (14th/15th C.) priest recorded in 1406 when Matthew Glendinning, Bishop of Glasgow requested a benefices for him from Kelso Abbey. John (14th/15th C.) monk of the monastery of Dunfermline. In 1415 he was granted a pension from the monastery for 3 years so that he could study at St. Andrews University. John (14th/15th C.) from somewhere in Glasgow Diocese. In 1423 he had a marriage contract with 'Hawvis Turnbule' and sought Papal permission to marry, despite being 'related in the double third degree of consanguinity'. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. He is probably the 'Johannis Scot et Hawys Turnbul' whose marriage dispensation is recorded in a document among the inventory of Coldingham Priory. John (14th/15th C.) obtained the gift of Hawick Church after the death of Critsin Cromdale in the period 1389/90–93. This probably came from Archibald, 3rd Earl of Douglas, who was superior at that time. He possessed Hawick in 1394 when, as a Subdeacon of Glasgow Diocese, he was given a promise of a canonry and prebend; this was as part of a roll of students of law in Orleans, so he presumably studied there. Probably the same John witnessed the charter passing the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9. He was Rector of Hawick when his death 'outwith the Roman Court' is recorded happening shortly before 1429/30. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts; it is possible he was a son of Robert, 3rd Laird of Rankilburn, who had a brother called John (but there is no evidence for this). John (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1430 along with Nicholas and others, when their heirs were listed as owners of 'Novum Castrum' in an inventory of the Priory of Durham. John (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. John (15th C.) served as the King's Ranger in the 1440s and 50s, when his name occurs many times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1440 he was given his fee for the previous 2 years, for the audit associated with Crown lands in Arran and Bute. He was granted the lease of the lands of 'Barrone' (probably on Bute) for his fee throughout the 1440s and his name occurs associated with audits in Glasgow in 1453 and 1454. He was recorded as a courier in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1450s and 60s (although he is listed as 'quondam' in 1455, suggesting he may have died and that there are thus 2 generations of John here). He was paid his fee relating to Bute and Arran in 1455 and 1462 and in 1468 relating to Ayr. Perhaps the same John is recorded as a servant of the Queen in 1458. His son Ewen also acted as Ranger until the early 1450s, but then his name disappears. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (d.bef. 1472) owner of the lands of Sturminster Marshall and Winborne Minster in Dorset. These lands were inherited by his cousin John, who then sold them. It is possible he was originally from Scotland. John (15th C.) cousin and heir of John of 'Sturmyster-Marchall' in Dorset. He was recorded in 1472 appointing men to deliver sasine to John Wyke of Byndon in Devon for the late John's lands in Sturminster Marshall and Winborne Minster. John of Burnhead (15th C.) probably 2nd son of James of Kirkurd, who was a younger son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He received a charter for the lands of Over Newhall from his father in 1492 (it has also been suggested that he could have been a younger son of Sir Walter, but that seems unlikely). 'Over Newhall' was later known as Burnhead; he was thus the 2nd Laird of Burnhead. He witnessed the charter in 1494 in which his father granted Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his brother David; there he is stated to be his father James' heir apparent. He is probably the John, son of James of Falside (as well as Kirkurd and Hassendean), who in 1501 had a lease of Falside along with his mother Margaret, on the renunciation of the lands by his father. Also in 1501 he acted as pledge for Robert of Stirkshaws. He was additionally designated 'of Crowhill' and may have had a son William, although these generations seem confused. John of Burnhead may have been his successor, although other accounts suggest he died without a male heir. John 4th Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of Walter, his mother being a Scott of Hassendean. He married a daughter of Quentin Riddell of that Ilk, but died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Walter – 'John, Walters Son, I have heard relation, Married the Laird of Riddels Daughter, And died without Succession' [CWS]. John (15th C.) arrested in 1452 as a rebel, with John Tweeddale being paid a fee for his capture. This is listed under business at Linlithgow in the Exchequer Rolls, but it is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John (15th C.) owner of a 'tenement' on the south side of Hawick, described in Hawick's earliest known sasine of 1453. His piece of land was to the west of the property passing from John Turnbull to Robert White. John (15th C.) Bailie of Montrose. He was recorded several times in the Exchequer Rolls of 1450s and 60s as customs officer in Montrose. Probably the same John was also recorded in association with the customs in Arbroath in 1445. John (15th C.) resident of Surrey, son of William. In 1459 there was a command from King Henry VI for him to get sasine of his father William's lands, since he hd proved his age. The document also sys 'respiting his homage till Easter next, but taking his fealty', perhaps suggesting that the family came from Scotland ans settled in England. John (15th C.) named first on the 1463/4 list of local men rewarded by the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was surely related to some of the other Scotts listed, e.g. Robert of Todshaw, who came after him. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of 'Symentoun and Wester Lymfleris' in Lanarkshire in 1466. He may have been the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) rendered the accounts for Sir David, as Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1473. He may have been a relative of Sir David. John (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to Kirkurd and David Scott of Buccleuch. He is listed as 'Johanne Scot' along with William; they may both have been closely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. John (15th C.) recorder in 1476 making a supplication to the Pope to give him the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick that James Lindsay was proposing to resign. It seems that this did not come to pass. He is probably from a local branch of the Scotts. John (15th C.) held a sasine for Fingask and part of 'Rate' in Perthshire in 1476. It is unclear how he was related to other Johns. John (15th C.) customs officer in Inverkeithing in at least the period 1475–85. He also served as Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1482. He was surely related to David (perhaps his father), who served in the same role in Inverkeithing at about the same time. Either he or a later John was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1511. Perhaps the same John was customs officer at Montrose in 1471. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant in 'Ogingstoun' in Bothwell in 1480. His name was listed first, with other Scotts there being William, junior, Katherine and Robert. They were sutely all related. John (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for the lands to pass to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as 'Johannem Scot'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1483 given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. probably the same John is recorded in a 'letter of reversion' for the lands of Clarilaw in the Barony of Hassendean, which passed from the old Baron to the new Baron in 1493/4. It is possible he is the same as John of Burnhead or John of Thirlestane. John of Thirlestane (15th C.) recorded in a charter of 1483, when he gained the (western) half barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw. He may thus be the first Scott to hold the half barony, although it is unclear exactly who he was. He is also referred to as 'of Huntlee, in the forest of Ettrick'. He may have been connected with the Howpasley and Tushielaw branch, since Alexander Scott (Clerk of the Rolls for Scotland) was one of the witnesses of the 1483 confirmation (however, it seems too early for him to be the John of Thirlestane, who was probably the grandson of Alexander of Howpasley). It also seems likely he was related to Robert of Muirhouse and Whames, who received the lands of Underchesters from Henry Wardlaw a year earlier. One possibility is that he was another son of the first Walter of Buccleuch, hence brother of David of Buccleuch, Alexander of Howpasley and James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He was still Baron of Wilton in 1491, when he was asked by the King to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Harden. He had a confirming charter for the barony in 1494/5, and was there referred to as 'Johannis Scot de Weltoun' in Roxburghshire. He was probably not closely related to Stephen 'of Weltoun' (which were other lands, near the modern Cumbernauld) or Stephen's son John 'of Weltoun'. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine, who is recorded holding lands in Wilton in 1493. By 1506 the half Barony of Wilton was held by the Earl of Bothwell, and so he must have lost the lands by then (or died) He may be the John who acted as Deputy Warden for Ettrick (for Walter Scott) in 1494/5. It is not known if he had any children and it is unclear who succeeded him as Laird of Thirlestane, but there was a William of Thirlestane mentioned in 1502, probably son of David of Tushielaw. John (15th/16th C.) Englishman who was imprisoned as a spy in Newgate under the name 'John Michelessone'. In 1493/4 he was released on the King's command after 'taking security for his good carriage'. John (15th/16th C.) recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in the period 1494–99. John (d.bef. 1502) notary in 1484/5 for the charter in which Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). Since all the signatories are relatively local he was probably a local cleric. However, this is likely to have been too early for him to be the notary John who is recorded in the period 1527 to 1540. Probably the same 'Magistro Johanne Scote' was Rector of Rankleburn in 1491/2 when he witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme

(and was bequeathed 40 shillings). He was probably related to Sir David, as well as to the primary witness, William, Rector of Southdean. In 1502/3 he was the deceased 'Magistri Johannis Scot rectoris de Rankilburne' when his heirs Helen (his sister), Janet Scott and John 'Haw' had sasine for his tenement in the Vennel of Kirk of Field in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded among debtors in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He owed 15 nobles and is listed as 'Johannes Scote eius filius', suggesting that he was a son of Sir David. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Thirlestane and Wilton. John (15th C.) listed as 'Johanni Scote, pincerne' (i.e. cup-bearer or butler) in 1491/2 when he was bequeathed 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John of Todshawhaugh (15th C.) leased the east steading of Langhope in the period 1486–1492. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as surety for John of Whithaugh, who was fined for his non-appearance. He was 'in braidlee', which may have been Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined again in 1494/5, along with John, son of Alexander in Broadlee. John (15th C.) brother of William 'Gyde'. He is recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother, as well as other 'traitors of Levin', to raid the farm of Harehead. John (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 as son of Alexander in Broadlee. He was recorded right after John in Broadlee, and hence may have been a different man. He was surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. He was fined for a second time in 1494/5. John of Deloraine (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being called because of his lands in 'wiltoun'. It is unclear what lands in Wilton these were (but it is not impossible that he held the half Barony and was hence the same man as John of Thirlestane). He could be the John who obtained remission along with William Inglis at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5, recorded in the King's Treasurer's accounts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes, this included resetting 'John Rede and John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw', resetting Hector Armstrong, stealing horses and goods, abetting the English, communing with Robert, Philip and Andrew Scott when they were at the horn, helping John son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden to steal sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, killing a man called 'Colthride' and resetting thieves of Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Robert of Whitchesters was surety for him. Also in 1494/5 his eldest son Robert was surety for John Reid in Singlie; perhaps the same Robert of Deloraine was allowed to 'compone' for crimes in 1494/5. His son Robert, called 'Bellit Robin' was recorded in 1502. He was probably also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connections of this branch of the family are unknown. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw'. meant, or how he might have been related to other Scotts of Tushielaw. Along with 'John Rede', John of Deloraine had remission for resetting him; his crimes included stealing sheep from 'Thomas Johnsone, furth of Quhithop'. He was also listed as 'Johannes scot-stow in tuschelaw' when he was allowed to 'compone' for the crimes of: stealing 26 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 16 sheep from James Scott in Falside; stealing a horse from Broadmeadows; stealing 3 oxen and 60 sheep from William Ker in Yair; for common theft and delivery of stolen goods before his previous compounding; and for stealing 4 head of cattle and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair. His surety was John Murray of Hangingshaw. He was presumably tenant in Tushielaw, but it is unclear what the 'stow' John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'gener' (i.e. son-in-law) to William Little in Thornycleuch. He was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, but fined £10. John (15th C.) son of Henry in 'conwale riggis'. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance in Selkirk. John (15th C.) tenant in 'ernheuch' (i.e. Erncleuch) in 1494/5. He was allowed to 'compone' at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, his crimes including: stealing 2 cows from Harthern; bringing in thieves 'de levyn' to raid Thomas Middlemas in Ploro; the slaughter of Middlemas' wife and 2 sons; stealing a black horse from Jedburgh; stealing 16 sheep; stealing 5 head of cattle at different times from Harthern, as well as goods; and for common theft before the date of his previous compounding. His sureties were Robert of Allanhaugh and Adam in Annelshope. He may also be the John who was allowed to 'compone' along with Adam in Annelshope in 1494/5, for a set of rieving crimes. He is recorded in 1494/5 having received remission from the King. John 'Little' (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'parvo Johanne scot'. He had sheep stolen from him at Howford by David Lauder and others, for which Lauder was allowed to 'compone'. It is unclear if he was related to later Scotts of Howford. John (15th C.) son of William, lord of the manor of Stapleford Tawney in Essex. In 1485, along with his father, he was named in an indenture regarding their lands. His name was written 'Scotte' and he was 'senior', suggesting that he had a son who was also John. John (15th/16th C.) husband of Margaret and father of Alexander. He was already deceased in 1499 when his widow and son were granted the East stead of Langhope and in 1501 when they were granted the Middle stead. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'in Northhous' in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1498 when he and John Turnbull (from Dryden) received a pardon for their crimes of assisting the English 'of Levin' (presuambly relating to a particular raid). He is 'Johanne Scot de Northous' in 1500 when he witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme. In 1501 he was pledge for David Elphinstone when he was assigned the farm of Glensax in Ettrick (he may thus be the John who had 7 stirks stolen from Glensax by Sir Thomas Turnbull in Phaup according to the Justice-aire of 1494/5). In 1502 he was surety for Roland Renwick, who was accused of stealing sheep from Ettrickhouse. He may be the same John in 'Northhous' who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from him by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510, which, together with other crimes, led to Dalgleish's execution. John (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as 'Johannem Scot'. 2 Roberts are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. John (15th/16th C.) described in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1499/1500 as 'in Wiltoun' when he received remission for helping the rebels 'of Levin' in murder, pillage etc. John of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was fined for the non-appearance of John in Broadlee. His name is recorded as 'Johannis scot de quhithalch'. Perhaps the same man is listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined; he appears there as 'Johannis Scot in Quhithauch'. In 1502 he was 'in quhithalch' when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from Adam Scott out of Kershope, and separately for stealing cattle from John Romanno of Romanno, with Robert in Synton as his surety. He was probably related to the slightly earlier Walter of Whitehaugh, as well as later Scotts of Whitehaugh. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Hermiston recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh, with his surety being Robert in Synton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for stealing livestock and goods from him out of Whitslade, in the company of a gang of Armstrongs. It is possible he is the same man who also tenanted Hoddom House at the same time (where the same people also raided). It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Whitslade. John (15th/16th C.) notary recorded in a sasine in Edinburgh in 1502. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows from him out of 'hodum hous' (possibly Hoddom House), in the company of the Armstrongs. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502, along with Thomas in Branxholme, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was fined, while Thomas was alowed to compound. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendean, recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for the theft of 5 cows and an ox from James Arrous at Philiphaugh, with Robert Scott of Stirches serving as his surety. He may thus have been connected with either the Scotts of Hassendean or Stirches. At the same court sitting in 1502 he acted as surety for William, son of James of Broadmeadows, as well as Walter in Broadmeadows. John (15th/16th C.) stabler who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1517. Another stabler of the same name who became a Burgess in 1580 may have been a descendant. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Bailie of Irvine and custom's officer there in the period 1508–13. Perhaps the same John was Bailie of Irvine recorded in 1538 and 1546. He was probably related to Robert, who was also in Irvine around 1540. He may have been ancestor of Hugh of Scotsloch. John of Haining (d.1513) son of Robert of Haining. He was recorded as son of Robert of Haining in 1482, with his son Robert mentioned in 1488. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Robert when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining. In about 1499 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Haining (along with his son John) with the permission of John Murray of Falahill. In 1502 Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw had remission for stealing a heifer from him. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Haining. He was surety for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw in 1510, when Thomas was convicted of being part of the killing of John Murray of Falahill. He was killed at Flodden and his son Robert was served heir in 1514. He had another son, Walter, who served as 'tutor' for his nephew Thomas during his minority. It seems that he also had another son, John, who leased Haining along with him in about 1499. John of Borthwick (15th/16th C.) possibly father of John 'the faster', as well as another son, who was father of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, and may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Roberton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'in Orchart' (i.e. Orchard) when he witnessed a document for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30. His son was also John. He was surely related to other contemporary Scotts, but the precise relationship is unknown. John of Borthaugh (15th/16th C.) eldest son of George of Borthaugh, by his first wife (who was his cousin). In 1526 he is recorded (as 'of Burnthauch') in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was superior over some of his lands. Also in 1526 he is probably the John 'in Borthauch' listed among the Borders men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran; the brothers Walter, Philip and George are listed after him. In 1526/7 he had a charter ratified for the lands of Muirhouse in Edinburghshire. In 1527 he is among the local lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527. There was dispute over succession to the lands of Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden and 'the Wallis in Drynisdaile' (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father had sworn on his deathbed that his 1st marriage had not been fully legal and hence inheritance should go to the eldest son of his 2nd marriage, Walter. A set of arbitrators (all Scotts) in 1528 found that he should inherit, since he had never been declared illegitimate, but that 'Quhomnis' and 'Woltoun Greyne' should go to his brother. He is recorded in a 'discharge' of 1528/9 relating to lands of several local Scotts, e.g. he is there recorded as holding 'lands of Drivisdall and 40s. land in Woltoun' (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie and some lands in Wilton); it is therefore possible that he is the same man as John in Walls. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to the King's will in order to better keep order on the Border. He sold the lands of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk sometime before 1531. This may have been to settle debts with Lawson of Highriggs in Edinburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 'Myrris or Vest Manes' in Lilliesleaf in 1528, as preserved in the 'Selkirk Protocol Books'. He received payment from John in Bewlie for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the Mains of Lilliesleaf. In 1531 John 'of Myrris' assigned his lands of Myres in Lliilesleaf to his cousin Walter, tutor of Haining, which he rented from the Archbishop of Glasgow. This was further confirmed in 1531/2. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1528 when he paid John in the West Mains of Lilliesleaf for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the West Mains. John (d.bef. 1532) from the Selkirk area. In 1532/3 his widow Elizabeth Chapman abdicated herself from debts and other responsibilites connected with him. This was done in the house of John Chapman, who may have been related. John of Roberton and Walls (d.bef. 1533) probably son of Stephen of 'Weltoun', who was also of Muirhouse and of Castlelaw (or Castlecary). He was probably also closely related to John of Thirlestane who held the half-barony of Wilton from 1483 until at least 1491. He is recorded as 'Johannes Scot in Wallis' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501; most of the other 15 men listed along with him were from the area immediately around Hawick. Around 1501 he had disposed of 'Weltoun' (probably the name of lands near Cumbernauld associated with Castlecary and not the western half-barony of Wilton), and was now 'of Valis' (probably 'Walls' or 'St. Michael's Walls' in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and not the more local 'Woll' or 'Wells'; however, it is not impossible that the erlier designation gave its name to the lands of Woll later). In 1502 he is recorded as being of 'Valis' when he acted as surety for Walter Scott of Headshaw, 'in Walis' when he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and 'de Walis' when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Galashiels and for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw. Also in 1502 he was 'in le walis' when he had remission for stealing a horse from Adam Murray at Muselee and 3 horses from Lord Cranston at Kirkhope; his sureties were Robert in Synton and Walter of Headshaw. Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and was recorded being in 'Valis' when Alexander, brother of Walter of Howpasley, had remission for stealing a horse from him. In

1502 he acquired the lands of Roberton (which had belonged to a branch of the Scotts more than a century earlier). He is probably the 'Dominus de Robertoun' recorded in the Justice-aire held in Selkirk 1502, when he was fined for failing to give suit for his lands of Roberton. He also held a sasine for the lands of Howcleuch in 1520. In 1526 he was 'in the Valys' when listed on the remission given to a large number of Borders men for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Stephen and George are also listed. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow; he is there 'of the Valis'. He was one of the Scotts who was on the arbitration panel to decide on the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He is recorded as holder of '5 merklands in Dryvisdaill' (Dryfesdale, near Lockerbie) in a discharge relating to 'non-entry' in 1528/9. He is also mentioned (along with several other Scotts) in the indenture of 1529 intended to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order on the Border. His wife was Isobel Douglas and his son and heir was Walter (as described in documents relating to an inquest in Selkirk to establish Walter as his successor). His son George is recorded receiving a pardon in 1527 (probably after being outlawed for rieving). The celebrated faster, John of Borthwick, may have been a member of the same family. He was succeeded by Walter of Roberton (recorded as his son and heir in 1532/3) and then Stephen of Roberton (probably a younger son). It is possible he was the same man as John of Borthaugh. John of Ashkirk (d.1526) killed at the Battle of Skirmish Field, when the Scotts and their allies tried to wrest control of the young King James V from the Earl of Angus. In the indenture signed by Scotts and Kerrs 3 years later, one of the agreements is that Mark Ker of Dolphinston and Andrew Ker of Graden shall visit the 4 main pilgrimage sites of Scotland, saying a mass for his soul, and those of the other Scotts killed in the battle. He was probably related to the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and Walter there in 1533. John of Hassendean (d.c.1530) brother of David of Hassendean, from whom he succeeded. He is recorded in 1528/9 for 'non-entry' of his lands at Galalaw. He married Agnes Scott and died without a son. His heir was his brother's son (some accounts say his brother) William of Hassendean, who received the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire in 1539. It is possible he is the John in Hassendean who was surety in 1502 for James in Ashkirk. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being 'in Aikwood' in 1530. He who part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned everything; Thomas, 'younger there', is also mentioned. He may also be the John in 'Aikvod called Dustyba' listed along with William in Hartwoodburn and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. It is unclear how he might have been related to Michael of Aikwood. John (16th C.) local clergyman. It is possible there was more than one man of this name, but it seems reasonable to assume that the notary of the 1520s was the same as the Vicar of Hawick Kirk in the 1530s and 40s. He was notary in 1527 to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill; he is recorded there as 'Schir Johne Scot, notar public'. He was 'Sir John' when he served as notary for a document of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (witnessed at Branxholme) relating to the Barony of Kirkurd in 1527. And he was notary for the document giving the decision on the disputed succession to Borthaugh in 1528. In 1528/9 he was 'Sir John' when acting as notary for the discharge by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely the 'Schir John Scot, vicar of Hawik' who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. In 1530 he was Vicar of Hawick when he was recorded as a procurator for several men in Selkirk for an action brought against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk; he also brought an action in Selkirk 'in name of his brothers and others' against Alexander Tait 'lord of Pirne'. In 1530/1 he was 'vicar of Hawick' when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Janet Kerr. Perhaps the same 'sir John' was in 1530/1 witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. He was 'vicar of Hawyk' in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. Also recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. He was Rector of Hawick Parish from at least 1536; a record in the

Register of the Privy Seal has him taking over the Rectory following the decease of Alexander Murray (although this was probably much earlier); he is recorded as 'D. Johannis Scott'. He was Vicar of Hawick, recorded as a witness to the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig. In the Charter he is not mentioned explicitly as the chaplain (to whom 2 particates of land are assigned), although he himself is separately listed as having 4 particates, and other clergymen are also mentioned; it is therefore unclear what his position was at St. Mary's, but probably he held the 'living', without being the preacher. In 1537 there was also a priest of Glasgow diocese of the same name who was notary for a sasine for the lands of Meikledale. In 1539/40 he was 'the venerable man John Scot vicar of Hawik' in a record of a sale of land at Appletreehall (by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Janet Scott, widow of Robert Elwand), contained in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Probably the same man was notary for a 'letter of reversion' of 1540 between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden (since the witnesses are all local men, although there is some abiguity, since 'John of Wod' was the last witness on the related bond). In 1544 he is also described as Vicar of Hawick when he resigned lands at 'East Murmawe' to John Scott of Burnhead; this suggests he may have been related to the Scotts of Burnhead. He may have still been Vicar in 1550. His brother's great-grandson William in Catslack was served heir to his lands of East Moormaw (in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) in 1606, thus establishing a connection between him and the Scotts of Catslack. Perhaps the same 'Sir John Scot, notar publick' drew up the bond of 1548 when the Elliots entered Robert Crozier as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He was notary in 1550 for the sasine where William Scott was granted the lands of Colifort from James Douglas of Cavers; his notorial mark shows a large 'S' entwined around a market cross. In 1538 there is a 'Preceptum Legitimationis' for James, natural son of John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; thus he had at least one son. The fact that he witnessed or notarised several documents for the Scotts of Branxholme suggests that he may have been related to the Laird in some way. John (d.bef. 1537) member of the Knights Templar. He was recorded in 1537 when there was a dispute between English and French branches over his estate. John (16th C.) recorded being 'in Hawik' in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, when he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. The witnesses included another John (probably the Vicar), as well as Thomas (perhaps a relative), Vicar James Young, William Brydon, John Hall and Robert Chapman. Specifically, he agreed to pay a dowry to Thomas Johnstone in a marriage contract with his daughter Janet. It seems clear he was not the same man as the Vicar of Hawick of the same name, since the Vicar (along with Bailie Thomas) represented him in witnessing the contact in the chamber of William Brydon in Selkirk. He also agreed to vest the couple in his house in Hawick after a year, while his daughter Janet received 'in conjunct fee' Johnstone's tenement in Selkirk. He is probably one of the Johns who held particates of land on the south side of the main street in the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded as 'serjeant and sheriff in that part' in Selkirk. In 1531 he delivered a royal decree releasing Adam Scott of Synton from being at the horn. Probably the same John was 'interlocutor' in Selkirk for Robert Turnbull in 1526/7 and the John who witnessed other documents in Selkirk around this time. John (16th C.) recorded being 'in Haining' in about 1534. He had previously granted half a tement in East Haining to another John. He may be related to William, who was in Haining in 1535. He may be the John whose heir Janet is recorded holding lands in East Haining in 1543. John (16th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Selkirk in 1532/3 when he gave sasine of a quarter of East Haining to his son Walter, reserving a redemption to his wife Margaret Scott. This was his half of the quarter of East Haining, namely the 20 shillingland that he had in redemption fron Robert Todrig, with Bailie James acting as the 'baliie in that part' (and possibly a relative). He was also recorded as a Burgess 'in Peilgait' in about 1534 when he had half a tenement of 'Le Est Hanying' in heritable fee from John in Haining and gave sasine of it to his wife Margaret Scott (for her lifetime). Bailie James of Selkirk was a witness to the second transaction and possibly a relative. John of Borthwick (16th C.) celebrated faster, part of a local branch of the Scotts. He was possibly son of John of Borthwick and descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells says he was 'cousin-german' to Walter of Whitehaugh. He came to notoriety about 1531 and was written about by Archbishop Spottiswood. He is supposed to have been unable to pay the costs following a legal case and sought sanctuary near Holyrood, where he abstained from food and drink for 40 or 50 days. This drew the attention of the King, who shut him up in a room for some of this period (however, it may be that the period was more like 32 days). He claimed he received sustenance from the Virgin Mary and when done 'came into thee street, half naked, and made a speech to the people which did flock aboute hum'. He then went to Rome with a certificate from the King, was examined there by the Pope, and given a priest's habit and certificate that he had lived 'sine cibo et potu per centum et sex dies'. In 1532 his fasting abilities were tested by Signor Albergati of Bononia, who locked him in a room of his house for 11 days. After that he travelled to Jerusalem, apparently stocking up on palm leaves and stones from the pillar on which Christ was scourged before returning to England. There he cursed the behaviour of King Henry VIII, was arrested, and spent 50 days in prison, again apparently without food. He was sent packing to Scotland, and the last mention of him is in 1541 when 22 shillings were paid to 'John Scott, callit the Sanct, at the King's command' – 'To John of Borthwick, who fasted so long, Three sundry times he did perform' [CWS], 'Bare-bread and water the king allowed for his meat, But John Scott refused, and would not eat; When the forty days were come and gone, He was a great deal lustier than when he began' [CWS]. John (16th C.) recorded in Todrig in 1533. Along with William in Todrig and others, he witnessed a document in Selkirk. John (16th C.) son of John. He and his father were described as being 'elder and younger' tenants of Orchard when they witnessed a 1529/30 instrument of resignation for the Routledges of the nearby lands of Crook. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns (but not 'Sir' John the priest, who is listed separately). Another John was also listed as holding 2½ particates on the same side of the street. A piece of land lying between one of these John's lands and that of John Short to the west was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1540/1 when it was agreed by a list of men that he was responsible for the death of Walter Down. Attonement had 5 parts: come to the kirk without armour, presenting his sword to the family of Down and ask for forgiveness; go to the 4 main pilgrimage sites in Scotland; pay a priest to pray for the deceased for a year; and pay 20 merks to the family on the next 4 quarter days; and bind himself to act faithfully in future towards Down's family. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but among his supporters were: his brother William; Michael Scott of Aikwood and his sons William, Robert and Walter; Gilbert; and Thomas. John (16th C.) youngest son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 his father assigned him the lands of Castleside. It is unclear if he was the same as another John, e.g. John of Blindhaugh who died in about 1580. John (d.bef. 1545) recorded in Selkirk in 1545 when his heir Thomas was in possession of his tenement. John (16th C.) resident of Whames, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He may be related to William, who was tenant of Whames at that time. Probably the same John in 'Quhomes' is mentioned in 1580 when his son William witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. John of Roberton (d.c.1566) probably son of Stephen 'in Valis', who purchased Roberton and Howcleuch from his brother Walter of Roberton in 1535. In the 1540s he acted as surety for James White, tenant of Borthwickshiels. He is recorded as deceased in 1566 when the rights to his son and heir John's ward and marriage fees were given to Robert Scott. He was probably father of the later John of Roberton. John 'the Clerk' (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with his brother Robert 'of Collefurd' and Hob 'Wait Aboot Um'. The 3 men were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and were instead to be pursued for theiri crimes. He was convicted for sheep-stealing and related crimes and hanged, along with Hob 'callit of Colyfurd', Mark Elliot 'callit of the Hill' and John Henderson 'the Falser'. It is unclear where exactly he came from, but perhaps the Slitrig valley. John of Synton (d.bef. 1557) probably son of Walter 9th Laird of Synton (although these generations are very confused), whom he predeceased. His mother was probably Walter's first wife, who was a daughter of Cockburn of Ormiston. In 1530/1 he was recorded as son and heir of Walter of Synton when he was entered in ward at Borthwick Castle, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. Sureties for them were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. His sons were probably: Walter of Synton, who succeeded his grandfather Walter; George of Synton, who succeeded his older brother; William, tenant in Langhope, ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly; James, tenant in Dodbank as well as in Whitslade, ancestor of the Scotts of Satchells; and Robert of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1557. John (16th C.) described as 'in Dringstoun' (i.e. Drinkstone) in 1535 when Robert in Howford asked him to vacate his dwelling house and lands. Robert claimed to hold Drinkstone heritably, while he counterclaimed that 'he was within the terms pertaining to the fermes money and customary dues on the said place'. Presumably the issue was resolved and the same John was 'in Dringistoun' when witness to a 1556 charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden. Also recorded as 'in Dringston' when witness to a sasine in 1559. In 1566 he is 'Johne Scot of Dryngston' when he had a letter of reversion for the lands of 'Litill Dryngston' in favour of Robert Scott in Hassendeanburn on payment of £70 Scots. He is probably the same 'Johne of Dringestoun' who is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574; he had sold a piece of land to Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme's agent John Watson. Perhaps the same John of 'Dringistoun' was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his son James was also a witness. He may also be the John 'in Drinkston' who was listed by Scott of Satchells as being among the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Roberton. And he is probably the John 'in Dringstone' who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. Sir John of Thirlestane (d.1549) probably son of David of Tushielaw, grandson of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw, 'King of Thieves'. Along with Robert of Howpasley he entered a 'bond of manrent' with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. He is probably the John 'in Thirlstane' who in 1535 was said to be involved with contracts for Melrose Abbey made with Mark Ker in Kippielaw. In 1539 he paid the 'fermes' to the King's Chamberlain for a thir of Cacrabank in the name of his mother, who was a Gledstanes. In 1540 he paid Simon Glendinning of Megdale and Dalgleish as tenant of his lands of Dalgleish (then in the Barony of Synton through annexation). In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilmanscleuch and is probably the John 'in Thirlstane' who occupied Altrieve and Crosscleuch. Also in 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Additionally in 1541 he witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, as part of the marriage contract with his daughter Margaret. He was said to be the only Baron to declare his support for James V at Fala Moor in 1542, coming 'into the King's host at Soutray Edge with three score and ten lancers on horseback of his friends and followers'. As a result the family were given arms with the royal fleur-de-lis and motto 'Ready, aye ready' (however, the veracity of this story is challenged in some accounts, and the relevant warrant is considered by some to be a forgery). He is probably the John 'in Thirlestane' who along with his son Robert witnessed a bond signed in Hawick in 1543, between Nichol Graham and Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1549 the Commendator of Melrose granted a discharge of all duties etc. on his lands of 'thirlstane, ramseclewis, scadcleuch, craig and kirkhop' now that he was deceased. Satchells (probably his great-grandson) says he married a daughter of Scott of Allanhaugh (possibly Robert, who owned land in Hawick and lived about the right time). His children included: Robert, who succeeded; Philip of Kirkhope, who was 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade; Andrew, who died without issue; Simon of Newburgh; William, who witnessed a contract for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1567; and Margaret, who married William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. He secondly married Marion Douglas and had another son, James of Gilmanscleuch. He is probably the John whose sons were referred to by Walter of Satchells when he says (although not correctly) 'These seven Brethren were stout valiant men, They would not been afraid for other ten', the brothers including Thirlestane, Newburgh, Bowhill, Gilmanscleugh, Hundleshope and Kirkhope. John (16th C.) tenant in Strathmiglo in Perthshire. He acted as surety in a land transfer in Abernethy Parish in 1552. John (16th C.) tenant in 'Balhabram' in Perthshire. He witnessed a land transfer in Abernethy Parish in 1554. John (d.c.1574) tenant in Mertoun whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1574. His lands were presumably those in Berwickshire. John (16th C.) son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was described being 'of Waikfield' Probably Wakefield in Peeblesshire). There appears to have been a separate John, who was a natural son of Robert, recorded in 1594. In 1563 he infefted his brother Adam in the lands of Waikfield in return for the Kirkstead and Kirkland of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John (16th C.) son of William, Burgess of Arbroath. In 1563 he had a contract with James 'of Prynleis', relating to lands in Fife, which he inherited as heir to his mother Christine, eldest sister of John Cockburn of Wester Newton. He also witnessed another contract for James 'of Prinleis' in 1563, suggesting that they might be related. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Bailzie' as witness to a sasine of 1558. The purchaser of the land in the sasine was James Scott, alias 'Bailzie'. Perhaps the same John was Bailie in 1579 when David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton, purchased a tenement in Hawick. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johne' along with Simon in about 1557. They were sons of the 'guidman of Alanehauch', who was probably either William or Robert (or possibly Adam), when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. John (16th C.) resident of Leith. He and his wife Janet Chalmers lived 'on the south side of the Water of Leith',which they purchased according to a sasine of 1558. The heirs were stated to be 'Mariot Makie, daughter of the said Jonet' (presumably from a first marriage) and Margaret Scott, his own daughter. Perhaps the same John is referred to in other legal instruments relating to Leith, e.g. in 1566. John (16th C.) son and heir of William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562 his father assigned to him his steading in Gamescleuch 'callit Eittriksyde', with the condition that he follow the agreements already made with Simon in Thirlestane. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) tenant in Catslack. In 1563 he was involved in a dispute over land with William Elliot, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. John (17th C.) recorded in 1564 when the will of his wife Margaret Nasmyth was registered in Edinburgh. John 'Jock' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John 'the Braid' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with Airchie of the Bush and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom 'callit the Stowir' was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. John of Orchardfield (d.bef. 1561) maltman who was a Burgess of Edinburgh and lived at the West Port of that city. He was also known as John of Orchardfield or 'Orchardton', this being an area of Edinburgh at the foot of Castle Hill. His wife was Elizabeth Scott, who came from the Scotts of Balwearie, and they had children Alexander, John (d.bef. 1581) and William of Elie, Ardross and Grangemuir (1545/6–1628). He was deceased by 1561 and his wife secondly had remarried to Robert Scott when she had an notorial instrument relating to several pieces of land in 'Brochtoun' in Edinburgh. After his death, the tutors for his children were his wife's new husband Robert and William (of Edinburgh West Port), who may have been related. His wife's 2nd husband was Robert of Knightspottie. Perhaps the same Burgess was recorded being deceased in 1578/9 when his eldest son Alexander became a merchant Burgess in Edinburgh. It is unclear if he was related to the slightly later Edinburgh maltman of the same name. John (16th C.) recorded being 'of Elestoun' in a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. He gave his annual-rent of a boll of beir to pay off a debt. This place may be Ulston near Jedburgh. Later in 1579 Walter of Goldielands entered Robert of Haining into these same lands, with Scott of Haining promising these half lands of 'Ilistoun' to Janet, daughter of Sir Walter of Branxholme as part of a marriage contract; he is then described as 'now in Darnik'. He is therefore presumably the same man as John, tenant in Darnick, who is recorded in a land transaction in Selkirk in 1579, witnessed other transactions in Selkirk around the same time and in 1580 was involved with several deals for lands in Darnick, some involving the superior of the lands, Andrew Ker of Faldonside. These lands included part of 'ryndaill' and Broadmeadows. He may be the 'Master John' in Darnick who witnessed a transaction for lands in Darnick in 1579/80 and another in 1580. It was further recorded in 1580 that he was owed money by a Burgess of Selkirk and was wadset a rig of land, and had further rigs of land resigned to him in 1580/1. In 1581 he was 'Mr. John Scot in Darnick' when, along with his wife Euphemia McDowell, gave sasine of lands in 'ryndaill', Broadmeadows and Darnick to William Young, who had loaned him money. Also in 1581 he sold some land lying in Philiphaugh, resigned 2 rigs in Selkirk, sold 2 acres in Darnick and paid the redemption money for an annual rent. John of Blindhaugh (d.bef. 1580) recorded being deceased in 1580 when his widow Isabella Turnbull leased her lands of 'Wollhaucht' to Walter, brother of George of Synton. Also in 1580 David Fairlie agreed to act as cautioner for William Scott in Huntly, who was to pay £9 3s 4d to each of his children, Margaret, Elizabeth, Isabel and John, as well as £38 13s 4d to his son Walter for his 'heirship horse' and 'two heirship oxen'. In 1580/1 his widow Isabel Turnbull and William Allan assigned their lands in Blindhaugh to Thomas Shortreed in Whitehillbrae; his brother Walter was one of the witnesses. In 1581 his widow resigned her liferent of 2 husbandlands in Blindhaugh (occupied by Thomas Shortreed and James Vogan) to their son and heir Walter. She was instead granted the liferent of Castleside, while their daughter Marion (or Marie) would be taken into the household of William in Huntly (suggesting that he was related). This arrangement was made at Palace and witnessed by Walter of Stirches, Walter of Ashkirk, William in Burnfoot, John in Aikwood, William in Haining and William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Blindhaugh. John of Dryhope (16th C.) 2nd Laird, succeeding Simon. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80 and also served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead. In 1580 he was one of 2 judges appointed to decide on George of Synton's claim on lands in 'Ilistoun'. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was father of Mary 'the Flower of Yarrow'. He signed the marriage contract for his daughter with Walter Scott of Harden in 1576/7 (despite the fact that Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford said that her father was Philip, and many others followed this version of history). He may also have had a daughter Christian, who married James Tweedie of Fruid. The testament of his wife Margaret Scott was registered in Edinburgh in 1581/2. He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He signed the clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to the 1st Laird, Simon. He was probably father of the next Laird, Philip, as well as Philip's brothers: Simon of Montbenger; Andrew; Adam; and Walter. John (d.bef. 1591) tenant in Little Dunkeld. He is recorded in 1592 when the will of his wife Janet McClelland was registered in Edinburgh. John (16th C.) tenant in 'Deinshouses', Peeblesshire. He is recorded in 1596 when the will of his wife Christian Brydon was registered in Edinburgh. John (16th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another in Selkirk. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Haining and another involving a dispute over sheep at the Carterhaugh and another agreement involving the Scotts of Blindhaugh and Huntly. Also in 1580 he received £182 13s 4d Scots from Robert of Haining in redemption for the lands of Haining Rig and 'Louchtknow'; John 'Easter' was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he paid Walter Scott of Ashkirk to have the 'knaifschip and bannock' of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years. This meant he had the right to appoint the millers there. The agreement also assigned to him the 'teind sheaves' from the lands he occupied called 'baik thyne'. He may be the same as one of the other Scotts. In 1581 his wife was listed in Selkirk among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581, involving the tenants of Robert of Aikwood and others. In 1581/2 he witnessed a marriage contract between George Brig in Langnewton and John Melrose. John of Burnhead (d.1582) probably son of John and great-grandson of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He granted a charter to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, for Easter and Wester Moormaw (later called 'Lees', near Appletreehall) in 1535 and 1539. He also granted a precept of legitimization to John's son James (suggesting they were related perhaps). John, the Vicar, resigned his lands of Easter Moormaw in 1544, and he further granted a precept of sasine to John's son James in 1556. He is said to have lived to an advanced age. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert. He could be the John 'in Burnhous' whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. John 'Johnnie', 'Philip's Jock' (16th C.) resident of Hawick who was named in a court case at Leith in 1571, along with Allan Deans, George Maxwell and Robert Scott. This was in connection with the on-going efforts of the Warden and the people of Jedburgh to quell the activities of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His name is recorded there as 'Philpis Jok' and the cautioner was Sir William Ker of Caverton (the younger of Cessford). In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as their cautioner. His son 'Johne' was involved in another case in 1574, along with Allan Deans and John Cavers. His father was presumably Philip, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the known men of that name; it is possible he was the Philip recorded in 1549 at Wiltonburn complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford. John (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Montbenger. In 1582 his widow, Margaret Lowes, complained that a gang of Armstrongs and others raided the farm of 'Eister Montberngier', stealing about 360 sheep and all the goods from there, and then attacking Deuchar. His sons William and Adam were also mentioned, with Adam being kidnapped by the rievers. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and son of Margaret Turnbull. In 1573 he was declared a fugitive for non-appearance when he, his brother Walter and mother Margaret, were charged with attacking the half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton occupied by a servant of Gavin Eliott of Stobs. He and his brother David were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. John (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he owed money to John Dawson. John 'younger' (perhaps his son) was also mentioned as a debtor. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'alias Johne of Fif' when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 being in Alton when he witnessed a dispute over the 'maills' of lands in Hundleshope between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundleshope. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) son of William in Broadlee. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, relating to the lands of Sunderland. John (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His nickname is given as 'Jok Jo'. John (d.c.1582) tenant in Carpow (probably in Perthshire). His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582/3. He was probably related to Robert and Thomas, portioners in Carpow, whose wills were recorded in 1575/6. John (d.c.1583) baxter in 'Strameglo' (i.e. Strathmiglo) whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1583. He was probably related to other Scotts from that area. John (d.bef. 1594) illegitimate son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger half-brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was probably distinct from John of Wakefield. His brother Adam wadset to him the lands of 'Espehope' in Selkirkshire. In 1594 he was deceased when his son John secured a feu from the Crown for the church lands of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John of Middlestead (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Roberton (d.1606) mentioned in 1566 as son and heir to John of Roberton, when his wardship was given to Robert Scott (it is unclear which Robert this was). Perhaps the same John signed the Scott bond of clanship in 1589. He must have been related in some way to James of Roberton, recorded in 1578. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining, witnessed at Todrig Shank, along with Walter of Goldielands, William Chisholme of that Ilk and William Dalgleish in Crookston. Also in 1581 he probably (it is hard to read) witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. In 1587 he acted as surety for James White in Borthwickshiels. Scott of Satchells says that John Scott of Roberton was among the 33 chosen to accompany Buccleuch to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596; this was probably him. He was succeeded by his son William of Roberton in 1610. John (16th C.) recorded being 'in Fawdonnside' (i.e. Faldonside) in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th/17th C.) listed as being 'in Stowslie' (i.e. Stouslie) by Scott of Satchells when he listed the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch, probably relevant to the period around 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other branches of the Scotts. If he existed he may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hassendean in 1575. He may be the 'Sir John' who was in dispute over the Vicarage of Hassendean with Ninian Westmin in 1550. Presumably the same man was the Reader of Southdean 1579–82. It is not impossible that he is also the same as the minister of Ashkirk etc. In 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk) who were deprived for 'abusing the sacraments'. They were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence, but yielded when threatened with death in 1590. The precise basis of the theological disagreement is unclear, but it may suggest that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation. John of Foulshiels (16th C.) probably either the son or grandson of William, the first Scott of Foulshiels. In 1592 Walter Scott was surety for him and also Walter Cairncross in Lugat that he would be loyal to the King (signed by Robert of Aikwood and Walter in Bowhill). He subscribed to a deed of loyalty in 1593 and in that same year Robert Porteous in Dalkeith was surety for him to answer the Privy Council for associating with Hercules Stewart and other traitors. He was probably succeeded by James. Rev. John (16th C.) became 'exhorter' at Selkirk and St. Mary's of the Lowes in 1568. He was minister at Selkirk according to financial records for 'thirds of benefices' in 1569. Probably the same John is recorded as Schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1571. He is recorded as Minister of Ashkirk in late 1573. By 1575 he was Minister at Ashkirk, with Selkirk, Kirk of the Lowes, Ettrick and Rankilburn also in his charge. However, James (not John) Scott was also recorded as Reader in 1575, becoming Vicar in 1586. In 1576 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been dispossessed of the 'half toun and landis of Elistoun' in the Lordship of Melrose by Thomas and then Robert of Haining. He had titles showing that his predecessors had been in possession of these lands as kindly tenants. John (16th C.) tenant of Newark, as described in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's last testament of 1574. He could be related to the later Chamberlain of the same name and location, who was son of James of Newark. Hence he could have been father of James of Newark, and presumably descended from one of the other family branches. John (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as 'eister' when he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk in 1580. One of these was between John in Aikwood and Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he witnessed a marriage contract for Simon in Philiphaugh. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. John 'Jock', 'As-it-looks' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as 'Jok Scott, callit As it Luikis'. John (16th C.) said to have been the 6th son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden. He was killed during a hunting trip by one of the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch, who then forfeited their lands to his father, who is supposed to to have said that they were worth a dead son. There is a story about how his body lay uncorrupted for many years in the vault of Hassendean Kirk, as a result of being treacherously slain. His death may have been the inspiration for the ballad 'The Dowie Dens of Yarrow', but could also be confused with the murder of 'Auld Wat's' other son, Walter in Essenside in about 1616 or Walter of Gamescleuch in a duel in 1609. John of the Palace (16th C.) son of Alexander, as recorded in 1545. In that year he succeeded to his father's annual rent on a tenement in Selkirk. Andrew, Vicar of Cavers, was a witness, and hence possibly related. Probably the same John was recorded as a servant of Walter Scott of Synton, mentioned in the 1580s when charged with resetting 4 horses stolen from James Sinclair of Ewingston, one of which he kept for himself. He is recorded as 'Johnne Scott of the Palice', servant to George of Synton, and described as 'sic ane dissolute and lawles persone as he will not compeir ... for na chargeis without his said master be charged to present him'. His master, George of Synton, was subsequently pronounced rebel for not appearing before the Privy Council. His place of abode was presumably the area later referred to as 'Palace Waas'. He was probably related to Robert of Palace, who died in 1579. Sir John (d.c.1574). His testament is recorded in the Commisariot of Edinburgh in 1574/5. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts he came from. John (d.c.1578) tenant in 'Straythmeglo' whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1578. He may have been related to other Scotts in Strathmiglo Parish. John (16th C.) webster in Edinburgh, who became a Burgess there in 1561. Probably the same 'wobstar' was already deceased in 1579 when his eldest son James became a Burgess in Edinburgh. John (15th/16th C.) stabler who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1580. Another stabler of the same name who became a Burgess in 1517 may have been an ancestor. John (16th C.) made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1583, as an heir. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. John, 2nd son of John, who was made a Burgess in 1608, may have been his son. John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell, receiving remission for any past crimes (perhaps associated with the raid at Stirling). He is listed as a tenant farmer at Arkleton. John (16th C.) recorded as portioner in Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1565 and afterwards. He may be the same as the John who was portioner later (dying in about 1619) or otherwise might have been related to him. John 'the Tinkler' (16th C.) tenant in Harwood. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is recorded as 'Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, in Harret', and he signed by 'twychand the pen' (meaning that he was unable to write). He was also 'the Tinckler' when among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; his son Andrew 'the Breadie' was also listed, as well as Adam 'little Peck'. His name occurred first on the list of Scotts, Laidlaws, Olivers and others, and they were accused by Percival 'Clennell' of leading about 500 men on a day-long foray in which they took 80 cows, 7 horses, goods worth £20 and ransomed 8 prisoners. Additionally, in 1586/7 he is 'callit the Tinklare, in Harwode', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his unnamed son is also listed (presumably Andrew). He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne Scot in Teuidside' in the 1594 'respite' by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. His name occurs near several other local Scotts, but it is unclear where he was tenant. John (16th C.) recorded as 'in Ormiston' when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. However, Adam in Ormiston, recorded in 1592, seems likely to be related. John (d.c.1590) baxter and Burgess of Dysart in Fife. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1590. John (d.c.1605) Burgess of Dysart. He was brother of the deceased Walter, who was also Burgess of Dysart. His wills were registered in Edinburgh in 1594 and 1605. John (16th C.) listed as 'Johnne Scot in Dellorien' (i.e. Dellorain) among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. John (d.c.1595) mealman who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1580. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1595/6. It is possible that he was the maltman, Burgess of Edinburgh, whose wife Margaret Murray's will was registered in Edinburgh in 1592. John (16th C.) recorded as 'in Commonside' when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. He may also be the Scott of Commonside said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. John (d.c.1600) described as 'elder, in Nether-toun of Hamilton' when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1600. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'servant to Sir Walter Scotte of Brankxhame' in 1597 when he and Simon Armstrong of Mangerton were delivered to Lord Scrope to be prisoners within Carlisle. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Kirkstead (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining being denounced for not entering them in court. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of the Toor (d.bef. 1609) succeeded by his son John in his lands in Hawick. He is referred to as being 'called of the Tour in Hawick' later in 1609 when his son David brought an action against the Turnbulls of Barnhills. He may be related to the earlier Robert and later William, who are also 'of the Tour'. It is possible he is the John 'in Hawik' whose son John in 1579/80 purchased rigs in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John of Catslackknowe (16th C.) descended from the Scotts of Montbenger, and before that the Scotts of Dryhope. He may have been son of Walter of Montbenger and father of Rev. James of Kirkton and Ancrum, as stated by Scott of Satchells. However, Rev. James' father may instead have been Walter of Catslackknowe (as stated in the 'Fasti'). It is unclear if he was related to the John in Catslack recorded in 1563. He may be the John 'of Catslak' whose daughter Helen had a sasine for lands in Deuchar in 1580, from Thomas Dalgleish in Deuchar; he was witness to the sasine. He is probably also the John 'in Catslak' in 1580 when he witnessed a sasine for the daughters of his sister and her husband John Turnbull of Philiphaugh. He is probably the John 'in Catslak' in 1581 when, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. Additionally in 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for Andrew 'Dandie' and witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. John (16th C.) tenant in Montbenger. He is recorded as signatory to a bond at Cadrono in 1595. He may be related to the earlier tenant of the same name. John 'Jock', 'the Stour' (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and 'slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray'. He is recorded being called 'Stowre of Qukinscleuch' (perhaps Whinney Cleuch) and he is listed after Adie 'the Peck' and hence perhaps related. He may be the 'Johne Scott, callit the Stowr' who had been warded with Henry Lord Sinclair, but released by 1573. Probably the same John was brother to Thomas 'callit Thome of the Stoir' in 1586/7 when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be the 'Johne Scot of Deir of the Scoir' recorded in 1600, when along with 'Dandie' Armstrong, called 'Braid Sword' and John Armstrong, called 'Sandy's Johnnie', he was accused of stealing 3 horses and 3 webs of cloth from John Simpson in Gilmerton. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him when the case came before the Privy Council. In another case in 1600 he was recorded as 'Jok Scott, called the Stowre of Quhynecleuch', accused of raiding the farms of Sir James Sandilands; this makes it clear that he was from Whinney Cleuch. John (16th/17th C.) described as 'of Monks-tower' by Scott of Satchells, among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. He was said to be 'brother to old William Scott of Altoun', but his connection to other Scotts is unclear. John 'the Clerk' (16th/17th C.) resident of 'Elrig' recorded in 1612, which could be Eilrig in the Borthwick valley. James Noble in East Burn of Stobo complained to the Privy Council that he had not found caution for killing his father. He could have been related to the earlier John called 'the Clerk'. John (16th/17th C.) baxter in Glasgow. In 1611 his son and heir Thomas, also a baxter, was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow. In 1613 his second son James (a tailor) was also made a Burgess there. John (d.c.1619) probably the eldest son of James of Hundleshope, although it is also claimed that he was 2nd son of Sir Robert of Eskdale and Thirlestane. He may be the John 'parson in Hundellishop' who in 1581 had a dispute with Thomas, son of Robert of Howford regarding the 'maills' of lands in Hundleshope. He was possibly the 'Johnne Scot in Hundennshop' recorded in 1583/4 when there was caution made that James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Winterburgh received the cautioner. He is referred to in 1596/7 as 'sometime in Hundillishoip', when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. He is probably also the John, 'in Jedwartfeild', brother of William in Glack, who in 1597/8 was accused (along with his brother William and Arthur in Gamescleuch) of attacking and capturing Ralph Ker, servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as 'portioner' of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was 'of Hundelishoip' on the 'retour' panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was 'portioner of Hundilshoip' when he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to James Gledstains of Cocklaw. He thus became Baron of the Barony of Hundleshope, which included Acrefield, the commonty and pasturage of Cademuir and pieces of land in Peebles and the pendicles of Hundleshope called Mylnetoun, Mylnetoun Mill, Hallyards and Merchdyke. Probably the same John 'of Hundilieshoip' was recorded in 1618 when his brother William of Glack served as his cautioner not to harm the Moffats of Granton (which may be a clue to connect this family with the Scotts of Glack); similarly there was a caution for the Moffats not to harm him. He married Christian, daughter of William Burnet of Barns; this was before 1608 when he received a tocher of 2000 merks from his father-in-law. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, with the rules over being a minor waived in 1621; his son also gained his lands of 'Alcolmefeild, Wodgrevington' and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625 and was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. He also had 2 daughters: Margaret, who in 1635 became 2nd wife of Alexander Veitch in Nether Horsburgh (and later Manor); and Isabel. His widow later married Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. John of Bonnington (16th/17th C.) son of Adam and brother of Simon of Bonnington (with Scott of Satchells referring to him as 'John Scot brother to Bonnitoun'). He was probably present at the Carlisle raid in 1596 in which Kinmont Willie was freed. In 1599 Lord Salton was his surety that he would 'keep the King's peace'. He was tried in 1601 for the murder of Archibald Napier of 'the Wowmet' (Woolmot, near Edinburgh); along with 3 other Scotts, Walter, James and William 'in Schostanis' (all brothers of Robert of Bowhill and sons of Robert of Aikwood), he was convicted and 'put to the horne'. He was referred to as being 'in Quholplaw' (probably Whelplaw in Lauderdale) and 'alias callit Johne of Bonytoune'. It is unclear why this group of Scotts attacked Napier.

He was recorded as brother of Simon of Bonnington among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands at 'Fechane' in 1602; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He may have been involved in the murder of Walter Scott in 1616. He appears to have succeeded his brother Simon to the lands of Bonnington in about 1622, but died a few years later. He succeeded his brother Simon and deceased nephew Robert to the lands of 'Ernesheugh' and Singlie in 1624. He is probably the same John who was accused of murdering Walter 'in Essenside', son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden in about 1616, abetted by his brothers Simon and Adam and 'Will's Sym' of Thirlestane. Since the murderer was said to be a Scott of Newhouse, then perhaps they were related to the Bonnington Scotts. If this was the same man, then he must have been acquitted. He succeeded his brother Simon in the lands of Bonnington, but these went to Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh) in 1624, and later to William Burnet, his grand-nephew. He was in succeeded in his other lands by his son Robert. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Woll. Scott of Satchells lists him among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as being 'of Ashkirk' and also as 'Askirk's John'. He is recorded in 1608 among a party accused of attacking and maltreating some residents of Selkirk. His half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) was his accomplice, and they attacked the 'knokkeiper' John Jackson, apparently after they were 'hounded out' by Robert Scott of Haining. After the pair were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk a group of Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and elsewhere) freed them. Along with his half-brother John Turnbull he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh or declared rebels. He could be the John in Ashkirk recorded in Selkirk in 1580 in a transaction involving Helen Scott, widow of Mungo Donaldson. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ettrickhouse, recorded in 1609 among the supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He may be the 'Jocky ill-to-haud' who was a natural brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Sir John of Newburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur of Newburgh. Scott of Satchells describes him as 'The Prince of Poets, and Knight of New-burgh, Chaucer, Glovet, Sir Thomas More, And Sir Philip Sydney, who the Lawrel wear: They never had a more Poetic Vein, Than New-burgh's John, that was Mr Arthurs Son' and also 'that Sir John Scot, Whom the Muses lov'd, and hovered at his Gate'. However, there is no other indication that he was a poet. He was served heir to his father in 1610, in the lands of Winterburgh and 'Fawodgrange alias Craighall' in Ettrick Forest. He may also be the John who Satchells refers to being 'called Jocky ill to had' (presumably 'Ill-to-haud'). He was bonded in 1610, along with his brother Arthur and John of Hundleshope, for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. In addition there was a complaint in 1617 against his brother Arthur by James Mitchellhill, burgess of Selkirk. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. Along with John of Gilmanscleuch and Sir Robert of Thirlestane he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones. In 1622 he was appointed as one of 10 men to assist Walter of Buccleuch in administering justice on the Border. In 1626 he is listed as owner of a '£4 land' in the Barony of Belses, part of the temporal lands of Jedburgh Abbey. In 1631 he complained against Andrew Scott, surgeon in Edinburgh. He was listed on the last testament of Water, Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He was probably succeeded by his son John. His natural son David is recorded in 1640 in a document relating to the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also had a daughter who married Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636, was surely related. John of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 on a list of land-owners in Hassendean Parish whom the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to oust. He was presumably a direct descendant of the earlier John 'in Drinkstone' and related to the George 'callit of Deringstoun' recorded in 1616. John 'Wat's Jock' (d.bef. 1610). In 1610 his son Bailie Robert and his wife Helen Turnbull had a sasine for a tenement off the Kirk Wynd in Hawick. His father was presumably Walter. One of the witnesses was 'Jock's Wattie', who could have been another son. He may be the same man as 'Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok' named in 1581, along with Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott (resident of Hawick) 3 years earlier. And also the 'Johne Scot, alias Wattis Jok, burges of Hawik' who was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud; his brother Thomas (also a Burgess) was also a witness. John 'Jean's John' (16th/17th

C.) son of the deceased 'Symme Scot in Southfield', recorded in 1609 when he was among several men fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. The other men included 2 sons of Kinmont Willie, suggesting he was part of a gang of would-be rievers from Liddesdale. It is unclear if this Southfield is the one near Hawick. John (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1609 to his father John, who was 'called o the Toor' in Hawick. He also had a brother Dacid, who is also recorded in 1609. It seems likely this was a property-owning family of Scotts who lived at the Tower Knowe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their relationship with other branches is unknown. It is possible he is the John son of John 'in Hawik' whose in 1579/80 purchased 3 rigs of land in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'younger' in Selkirk in 1580, along with 'elder' John, who was presumably his father. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1581 when his cautioners were Gavin Murray and John Young. Additionally in 1581 he made an agreement with William Keen in Lindean. John (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Howpasley (probably William). In 1599 he was a tenant of his father, who was surety for him, as well as Walter of Ladhope (who may have been related). He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) bellman of Hawick who is mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, the events taking place in 1610 (and described in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials'). He was presumably a Burgh Officer, one of the earliest on record. John 'Bonnie Johnnie' (16th/17th C.) nickname for a Hawick resident, recorded in a 1612 document along with a number of people accused of over-charging interest on loans. He is there listed as 'Bony Johnne Scot' and he appeared in court to answer the charge. Presumably the same man is recorded as 'Johnne Scott callit Bony Jony' in the 1616 trial of the men accused of salughtering the Laird of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley. Along with James Wemys and James Lethen, he helped take the pistol from 'Marion's Geordie' Scott before he could shoot James Douglas. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John of Newark (d.1622) eldest son of James. His father left him Newark (although it is unclear whether this was ownership or tenancy) in the early years of the 17th century. He is probably the John recorded in 1581 being 'in Newerkmylne' when he gained crofts in Selkirk. Either he or another John is the 'bretheris sone' of James in Newark listed among people owing money to Thomas Cruickshank in 1581. In 1582 he resigned his lands in Selkirk to his father James in Newark Mill; Selkirk Bailie William was one of the witnesses and hence parhaps related. He is described as 'in Newark' when he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for 'the Forest' in the period 1609–15. In 1608 his son James was among a group of Scotts and others who were accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. He may be the John 'in Newark' listed among local men accused of overcharging on interest by the Privy Council in 1612 (but omitted from the list of those found guilty). In 1618 his son Walter Scott was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar; Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him, as well as his sons James and William, and William in Fastheugh for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. Also in 1618 he complained about a group of Elliots attacking his tenants and servants at Foulshiels in Liddesdale. His house in Selkirk is mentioned in a document in 1619. He married Agnes Simpson and their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1607 and was later a Burgess of Selkirk; Walter in Braidhaugh and Arkleton, who was a factor for Scott of Buccluch; and William. His son Walter had cautioners George of Castleside and Robert of Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were close relatives. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Tushielaw, and younger son of William of Tushielaw. Along with his son William (a minor at the time) he was accused in 1607 of killing John, father of John Govane of Cardrona (a family that would later connect with the Scotts of Tushielaw through marriage). He was the uncle of the John Scott who killed Walter of Thirlestane in a duel. John of Kirkhouses (16th/17th C.) from a branch of the family near Ashkirk, he was son of James. His grandfather was George Scott of Synton. He inherited the lands from his father in 1609. He was probably the John 'in Kirkhouss' who witnessed to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579 (with his son James also a witness). In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580 he received redemption money from Walter of Ashkirk for the lands of 'Ediehauch', 'Ediebray', 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. Also in 1580 he borrowed £21 Scots from John Mitchellhill, Burgess of Selkirk and was recorded in an arrangement involving bolls of bere with Elizabeth

Elliot, widow of Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. His 'onset and croft' in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Additionally in 1581 he resigned his possessions in Ashkirk that had been wadset to him by Walter of Ashkirk and under the reversion Walter assigned to him part of Salenside Croft and 'Skakriggis'. In 1581/2 he received money from the Mitchellhill family for lands within Selkirk. In 1581/2 his first-born son James took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. He was probably the John 'in Kirkhouse' who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1614 he was summoned (along with his kinsman Robert Scott of Salenside) to appear before the Presbytery to answer to charges of murder. He is probably the John of Kirkhouses who was part of band of Scotts that forcibly took the farm of Hartwoodburn from its tenant in 1627. John of Hundleshope (d. bef.1675) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1619 and in 1621 the Privy Council ruled that he could become portioner of Hundleshope, even although still a minor. He succeeded to his father's lands in Peebleshire in 1625. His curators included Sir Robert of Thirlestane (who was probably a relative of some sort), his uncle William in Glack, Burnets from his mother's side, and Sir John Stewart of Traquair. In 1628 his mother resigned her claims to parts of Hundleshope in his favour, with an agreement that he would pay for the tochers of his sisters Margaret and Isabel. In 1629 he and his wife Helen Geddes had a charter for the lands of Hundleshope and others. He was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. His sister Margaret became the 2nd wife of Alexander Veitch in 1635. In 1635 he married Helen, sister of James Geddes of Rachan, and after resigning his lands, in 1636 had a new charter for him and his wife of the Barony of Hundleshope. In 1642 he disponed the lands and barony of Hundleshope to John, Lord Linton, with the consent of his father, John Stewart, Earl of Traquair, but the lands of Hundleshope, Milton and Hallyards were disponed back to him, with Lord Linton as superior. He is probably the John of Hundleshope whose superiority of Nether Glenrath was acquired by Sir John Veitch of Dawyck. In 1655 he sold part of Hundleshope adjacent to Cademuir to the Burgh of Peebles and in 1656 was infefted in land in Cunzineuk, which he then sold to the Sheriff-Clerk of Peebles. In 1657 he was accused of being the father of a child who had been baptised 16 years earlier, with another man originally assumed to have been the father. He was succeeded by his son James, to whom he infefted in Hundleshope in 1666, reserving the liferent for himself. John 'Jock' or 'the Suckler' (d.1616) son of Thomas of Nether Braidlie. He was one of the men involved in the slaughter of Sir James Douglas' sheep at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley in 1615, apparently in revenge for Douglas taking lands at Howpasley. He was the first to be sent for by Lady Howpasley, and at the Market Cross of Hawick he met with Jean Scott of Satchells and 'Marion's Geordie'. After the plan was hatched, he met some of the others at the foot of the Eilrig Burn in the Borthwick valley. The other men involved were George, Walter and Ingram Scott, and William Scott of Satchells, the first 3 all being caught and hung at Edinburgh Cross after Jock had turned informer. His diposition claimed that George had threatened him when he had second thoughts about going through with the crime; when faced with this George asked him to repeat the statements to his face, which he did. For thus turning informant he was declared to be of lesser guilt and left in prison after the 1616 trial. However, later that same year he himself (mis-transcribed as 'Jok the Suttler') was hanged at the same place for sheep stealing; the specific charge was for taking 4 sheep from 'Adam Almouse', tenant at Muselee, as well as 'ane zow and ane hog, pertening to George Scott, callit of Deringstoun' from his lands at Castlehill, 'ane blak zow, pertening to Rowie Scott, called Rowie of Huttikill, furth of the Lyn besyde Eilrig' and 7 ewes from James Rowie in Raeburn. These crimes took place 1612–14. Sir John of Scotstarvit (1585–1670) descended from Robert of Allanhaugh, son of Sir David of Buccleuch. He weas son of Robert and grandson of Robert of Knightspottie. He succeeded his grandfather in 1592, at the age of 7. He had the tower of Scotstarvit rebuilt near Cupar in Fife, which still survives. He was a Judge, Directory of the Chancery, Lord of Session and Privy Councillor, but lost his positions when Cromwell occupied Scotland. He was made a Burgess of Canongate in about 1622 and in 1630 his servant Robert Scott was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis). He assisted Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch to run his estates while he was fighting in Holland, and carried the coronet at the Earl's funeral. Along with Sir William of Harden he went to court to hear the King's ruling on the land dispute between Francis Stewart and the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was appointed as one of the 'tutors' for the children of the Earl of Buccleuch and served as one of the trustees for Mary, when she succeeded to the

Buccleuch estates. He was the last of the original tutors named as 'sine quibus non' by Francis Earl of Buccleuch, but lost control to Gideon of Highchester and the Borders tutors. He was instrumental in having Pont's maps of Scotland published by Blaeu in 1654, and contributed to the accompanying text. He also wrote 'The staggering state of the Scots statesmen', containing satirical sketches of prominent Scotsmen of his age (and back to 1550), published eventually in 1754. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthornden. Their children were: Robert, who died young; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir John; William; Alexander; Robert; Ludovic; Margaret; Jean; Helen; Eupham; Anna; Eliza; Rebecca; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Janet. His 2nd wife was Margaret Melville, with whom he had a son George (who married Mary Margaret Rigg, sister of Lady Douglas of Cavers, and was in charge of a ship that transported Covenanters to the plantations, but died on the voyage in 1685). He thirdly married Eupham Moneypenny and had sons Cecil and Walter (who was served as his heir in certain lands in 1672). It seems that in 1651, when the Scotts of Buccleuch failed to have a male heir, he was the most senior representative with an unbroken male succession. His descendant, David, was an M.P. in the mid-18th century, but the branch failed in the male line in the early 1800s. John (16th/17th C.) 'brother-german' to Walter in Allanmouth in 1606 when he purchased the lands of Hobsburn Weens from Thomas Turnbull. He was thus the first of the Scotts of Weens. In 1610 he is recorded as 'of Weineis' when he was part of an inquest. In 1612 he was 'in Weneis' when he was Bailie to Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam for a sasine in Rulewater. He is referred to as 'called of Allanemouth, now in Weymes' in a sasine of 1617 when he gained a bakehouse in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allanmouth who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. Note that another John, accused in 1607 of killing the father of John Govane of Cardrona, was his uncle. According to Satchells he was one of the men who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and James, to 'observe the King's peace'. He was listed as 'Jhone Scot, his sone lawfull' after Walter of Tushielaw, when they were witnesses to a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose in 1607. He was described as 'John Scott, called of Tuschelaw' in a charter of 1618. His natural son Francis was also witness to the charter, as were Robert, 'fiar of Tuschelaw' (his older brother) and Sir Walter 'of Tuschelaw' (his father). He was the John, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch (or Thirlestane), recorded in the Selkirk Presbytery records of 1609 and possibly the inspiration for 'The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow'. He was excommunicated after this, but his pardon by James VI for the slaughter of Walter Scott, brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, is recorded in 1614 and after due repentance his status with the church was reinstated in 1615. He is probably the John, brother of Robert of Tushielaw who witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spital-on-Rule in 1619 and who witnessed a bond in 1620 between Thomas Turnbull, tenant at Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle, servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. In 1620 he was served as tutor to William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret, children of his brother James of Glenrath. He married Jeanne, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He had at least one legitimate son, Walter. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whithope. He was listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the Liddesdale farms of 'Rouraltonholme' (probably at Ralton) and Auldshiels. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as joint tenant, along with Gavin Elliot, of the lands of Over and Nether 'Closse alias Welshaw' in Liddesdale. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as 'bailie in Liddisdaill' in a document listing the possessors of the lands that made up the Lordship of Liddesdale. He possessed the lands of 'Flocksteid alias Flasket'. He may have been bailie to the Lord of Liddesdale. John (d.bef. 1634) described as 'burgess of Hawick' in 1634 when his son William became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the John who acted as witness for the Hawick Parish valuation in 1627. John (d.bef. 1629) recorded being 'in Hawick' in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction. John (17th C.) son of Andrew, who was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1636 he was served heir to his father's lands of Winterburgh with mill in Ettrick Forest, as well as 'Fawoodgraing alias Craighill'. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Scotts of Winterburgh. John (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, 'commonly called 'Land Sandie' in Hawick. John (17th C.) married Janet Routledge. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1635) and Catherine (b.1642). John of Huntly (17th C.) son of James 'called of Huntly'. He was served heir to his father in 1639 in the lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest, as well as 'Fawoodgraing alias Craighill'. He is one of the last recorded Lairds of Huntly. However, Walter of Huntly is recorded just a few years later, in 1644, so possibly his brother. John (17th C.) recorded as being from Borthaugh in 1642 when he acted as an appraiser in a Magistrates Court case involving someone's livestock eating someone else's oats. He could be related to the John who previously owned Borthaugh. Probably the same John 'in Borthauch' is recorded in 1630 when his son James became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh with Adam Scott (who may have been related). John (d.1646) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter 'the Bold Buccleuch'. He was Provost of Crichton. In 1632 he was recorded as 'brother natural' to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, who was given the rentals from Crichton; this suggests he was a son of Sir William of Kirkurd and Grizel Beaton (who secondly married Andrew Murray of Blackbarony), however, it seems more likely he was from the next generation. He bore the arms of Montgomery in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. In 1643 he received a gift of 400 merks from Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell 'for advancing his fortoun'. Also in 1643 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. John (17th C.) described being 'callit of Borthwick' in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He may have been related to earlier Scotts of Borthwick. Mary Scott, listed right after him in 1643, had land in Hawick valued at £3. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1634); Margaret (b.1634); John (b.1635); James (again, b.1636); Margaret (b.1639); John (b.1643); Christian (b.1645); Marion (b.1647); and Janet (b.1649). There is probably more than one family here. The witnesses in 1639 were William Scott (perhaps a relative) and James Burn. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: James (b.1635); Adam (b.1636); John (b.1639); Walter (b.1641); Isobel (b.1643); and John (again, b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married 'Margerie' Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1640); Adam (again, b.1643); William (b.1650); and Margaret (b.1653). John of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. In 1621, along with Sir John of Newburgh and Sir Robert of Thirlestane, he promised not to molest the Elphinstones (who were responsible for the death of his father). He is recorded owning the lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1628. Along with Robert and William, probably his brothers, his copy book was discovered turned into the covers of another book and described by J.A.H. Murray in 1871; on one page he wrote 'Remember man as thow goest by As thow art now, anes so was I, And as I am, so most thow be, Remember man that thow most die', dated 1630 at Selkirk. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643, and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He is recorded writing to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1656, regarding the valuation of his lands. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, presumably for being a Covenanter supporter. He was probably the Scott of Gilmanscleuch who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He was probably father of Francis. Another son may have been John of Rennaldburn (although this may be confused). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: Walter (b.1642); and Robert (b.1644). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Langlands and their children included: John (b.1647); Janet (b.1651); and Walter (b.1655). John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh (d.c.1672) grandson of Arthur of Newburgh, and son of Sir John. He may also have been knighted himself. He held the lands of 'Renalburn' (or 'Rennaldburn') near Eskdalemuir (the later farmhouse there said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice). He inherited Newburgh in 1654, being served heir to his grandfather Arthur. In 1656 he witnessed a charter (for lands in Dalkeith) for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1661 he is described as 'callit of Newbrugh, lait bailzie of Esdaill' when listed owing more than £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch. Also in 1661 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Dumfriesshire.

He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in about 1663. From 1666 he was 'tutor and curator' for Francis of Davington (to whom he was distantly related), son of Sir John of Thirlestane. In 1670 he infefted Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall in the Barony of Westerhall. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale Parishes from the mid-1650s until the early 1670s; he was recorded as Chamberlain and Bailie of Eskdale in a deed of 1663. About this time other people stood in for him, suggesting either he was dead or incapacitated. However, John of 'Ranaldsburne' and 'Rennelburn' is recorded in deeds of 1673 and 1682, and may have been his son. He married Margaret Canide. His 2nd daughter Janet married Adam Elliot of Meikledale. His son John was also Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch. Other children included: James (b.1623), whose wills are recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1684 and 1695; and Marie. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1673 – 'John Scot the Squire of Newburgh-hall, Alias of Rennal-burn as men him call. To the first John of Rennal-burn late, He was Son of that Sir John of worth, The Prince of Poets, and Knight of New-burgh' [CWS]. John of Gorrenberry (d.1668) natural son of Walter, the 1st Earl Buccleuch, by Annas (or Agnes) Drummond. In 1629 he was given the lands of Gorrenberry as well as others. He acted as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Eckford, Langholm, Lempitlaw and Liddesdale from the 1640s to the late 1650s. He was also Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead in the 1680s. His lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1600 in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 there was a letter to him from Earl Francis, discussing the teinds of Eckford and the Mains. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the 'John Scott, bailiff and B. brother to the Lord of Buccleuch' to whom a complaint was made in 1650 about some of Cromwell's soldiers having their horses stolen in the Borders by tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother's will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and served as one of the tutors of Countess Mary during her minority, signing a letter protesting against her 'pretendit' marriage in about 1659. He also was involved in a law suit with some of her other guardians in 1659 over breaking the locks on her charter chests. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £9000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale, where he had been Chamberlain. He was recorded paying the land tax (of £1600) in 1663. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 his wife Elizabeth Hamilton, Lady 'Carberrie', was recorded in a discharge. He was probably the first Scott of Gorrenberry, and may also have married a Riddell (according to Scott of Satchells he married a daughter of Sir John Riddell). His children included: Francis, who succeeded; David, who was living in 1670; John, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663; and Robert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1666 and was still living in 1668. It is also possible that Walter of Alton was another son. His sons and grandsons and those of Walter of Alton Croft were mentioned in 1681 as among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch – 'John Scot he was a Natural Son, To Walter Earl of Buckcleugh, Begot on Madam Drummond, A noble Lady by birth, By Kindred Cousin-german To the Right Honourable Earl of Perth' [CWS]. Bailie John (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Hawick in 1648/9. He may have been the same John who was described as 'maltman' in the 1638 'leet' for Bailies, and in the following year in reference to money gathered relating to soldiers in the Town. He was probably also one of the 2 councillors of the same name (one of whom is described as a merchant) who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He is also recorded as appraiser (for eaten oats) in a Magistrate's Court case in 1642. He served as Bailie in the 1650s and may be the John who was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick during some of the 1660s. John (17th C.) recorded as 'John Scott Alton' in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Sir John (c.1615–66) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, with his 2nd wife Katherine Jardine. He was younger brother of Sir Robert, who died without children. He was served heir to his brother Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621. In 1632 he is described as son and heir of his father Sir Robert in a document relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire; Robert, son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot is also mentioned, and so possibly a relative. He was involved in a court case in 1634 (referring to a contract of 1623) with Sir William Scott of Harden and Robert Scott of Headshaw, over the lands of Thirlestane. He may be the John of 'Thirrilsone' who was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1634, along with Walter of [blank] (although it is unclear who this is). In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication relating to the lands of Bourhope brought by Robert Scott of Whitslade, and decrees of appraising over the same lands with Patrick of Tanlawhill (his cousin) in 1642 and Robert of Whitslade in 1643. In 1641 he signed a contract with his cousin Patrick relating to the Thirlestane estate, but the terms were not clearly specified, and also Sir William of Harden resigned the Thirlestane estates to him, the 2 documents being signed in Hawick. This was important for the subsequent dispute of succession between him and his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill, fought (and lost) by his descendants in court in the period 1727–44. His cousin Patrick clearly manipulated the situation (even having him imprisoned in Selkirk and in Home Castle) and eventually claimed the Thirlestane estates outright, although he was still fighting for his family lands until his death. He was served heir to his father Sir Robert in 1642 (perhaps as part of the legal battle). In 1643 he was referred to as 'son and heir of the late Sir Robert' of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdale. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation 'of Thirlestane' until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Eskdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. He is probably the Sir John of Thirlestane recorded in a deed in 1663. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir David Ogilvie of Clova (his comrade in arms). Their children were: Francis (b.1646) of Davington, baptised in Canongate; and Katharine, possibly an ancestor of James Scott of Calfield. He secondly married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. John of Allanhaugh (17th C.) probably son of William of Allanhaugh (or perhaps Walter of Allanmouth). He was listed in a county valuation of Hawick Parish in 1643, with his lands valued at £110. It is possible he is the same as John of Weens, recorded in the earlier 1600s. John of Todshawhill (d.c.1653) recorded in the 1643 county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with the value being £133 6s 8d. In 1631–37 he was a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for rents in part of Branxholme and Wilton. He may be descended from Andrew of Todshawhill, who was one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. John of Yorkston and Headshaw (d.c.1646) 2nd son of George of Synton. His lands may have been near Temple in Midlothian (unless there is another place of the same name). He is probably the 'brother german' of Walter of Synton who in 1607 was involved in a sasine for the lands of Satchells. He is probably the John 'of Sintoun' who served as assignee to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in a complaint against the Ainslies of Jedburgh in 1617. He is also recorded as John 'of Syntoun' in 1620 when a complaint was made that he and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, still owed the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth for lodging William of Howpasley there for several years. In 1629 he purchased Headshaw and Langhope from the old family of Scotts of Headshaw. He is recorded in the period 1631–42 as Chamberlain in Liddesdale to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1632 he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning for lands in Belses. He is probably the 'John of Syntoune' who, along with Robert Pringle of Stichel, captured 'Geordy Armstrang of Dykraw'. In 1634 he was part of the Earl of Buccleuch's funeral procession in Hawick, where he carried the arms of Douglas, Earl of Angus. He appears to have repurchased Headshaw, Dryden and other lands in 1636. In 1637 he was 'Johnne Scot of Heidschaw, baillie of Liddeisdale' when he witnessed a document for the sale of Harwood. In 1638 he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick as 'Johne Scott of Heidschaw'. In 1643 he was listed as owner of Dryden, valued at £290, as well as Headshaw, 'Crawknows, and Cleuches', valued at £760 10s. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also on the Committee of War for

Roxburghshire in 1644. His son William of Headshaw is also mentioned in Buccleuch accounts for 1646, was served as his heir in 1653 and had a sasine as his heir in 1655. He was also recorded in 1660 (after his decease) when the curators for Mary Scott of Buccleuch tried to recover a debt from his sons William and John, owed to her father. His children were: William, who succeeded; Walter of Dryden; John of Langhope; Mungo in Dryden; and Robert, also in Dryden – 'And John Scott, we all do ken, Was Son to George Scot of Sinton' [CWS]. John (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Castlehill' in 1631–48 when he was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdalemuir and Westerkirk Parishes. In 1633 he was listed as a 'servant' of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch who was still owed his fee for the year. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in 1648. His designation was given as 'Ormiston', suggesting that he lived there. He was probably related to James of Ormiston and the later John of Ormiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Bessie Gledstains and their children included: Beatrix (b.1636); Anna (b.1639); and Walter (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. Children who were probably his included: Robert (b.1634); Robert (again, b.1637); Walter (b.1641); Janet (b.1642); and Margaret (b.1645). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1646. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Noble in 1634 and their son George was baptised in 1651. The witnesses included George (probably related). Other baptisms to a John Scott in Ashkirk may also be his children. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Thomson in 1646 and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1653. John of Clerklands (17th C.) landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax on £180 in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 and £182 in 1678. He may have been the same as one of the other local Johns. John (b.1620) son of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. He was probably the John of Rennaldburn who was served heir to his father John in 1673. He was referred to as 'Squire of Newburgh' and 'alias of Rennalburn'. His father was 'tutor' for the young Francis of Davington, whom it is said he 'tried to encroach upon ... and would have deprived him of his remaining estate, but for the friendship of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane'. Like his father, he served the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain for Eskdalemuir, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale from the 1670s through until 1692 and a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He also had a court case against Francis Scott of Thirlestane around 1676. He was living at the time of publication of Scott of Satchells doggerel history (1688). He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690 and 1692. He is probably the Laird of Rennaldburn whose sister was under 13 when charged in Jedburgh in 1684 with not attending her own church, but listening to Covenanting preachers; he was cautioned for her good behaviour in the future. In 1690 he and his brother James witnessed the marriage in Langholm of Walter Gledstains, junior of Hilliesland, carried out by ousted Episcopalian minister Rev. John Stewart of Wilton. He may be the John whose will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1692 and whose widow Margaret Scott's will was recorded in 1693; another John was served heir to his father John in 1697. He was said to have been succeeded by James, who married in Philadelphia in 1721; however, that may be the next generation. John (17th C.) married Malie Scott in Ashkirk in 1652. John (17th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1652. John (17th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1653. John (17th C.) married Masie Elliot in Ashkirk in 1653. John (17th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Ashkirk in 1654. John of Satchells (17th C.) recorded in a deed in 1655. He was probably a younger son of Robert, with his brothers being William and Capt. Walter. He may have succeeded his brother, but they both probably died without heirs, since Capt. Walter appears to have succeeded on returning from the wars. John of Brieryyards (d.bef. 1667) local landowner of the mid-1600s, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton and probably son of Walter. He is probably the tenant in Brieryyards who in 1611 was fined for the non-appearance at court in Jedburgh of Robert in Hawick, 'called Symmeis Hob', and Walter 'called Dandis Wattie'. He is probably the John of Chamberlain Newton recorded in 1612 when he and Michael Hunter of 'Powmude' complained to the Privy Council about several Stewarts. In 1619 he signed a bond in Hawick with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule, which was registered in 1624; witnesses included William, 'fiar of Quhithauch' and Walter 'called of Altoun'. In about 1621 he had a charter of the lands of 'Calffald' from the Commendator of Melrose. It is possible he is the John of Brieryyards whose nephew William of Chamberlain Newton was served heir to his lands of Brieryyards and 'Braidleyis' in 1633 and 1637. In 1638 he was appointed as tutor to Walter, son of William of Chamberlain Newton, his brother. In 1638 he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. He was recorded as owner of 'Briddieyards' in 1643. He was on the Committee of War in 1646 as 'of Breidieyairdis', in 1648 as 'of Breiryairdis' and in 1649 as 'of Breiryeards'. He may have been the same man as John of Hornshole. In 1656 he and his sons (including Walter) purchased a 'merk land of Hassendeanbank' from Thomas Turnbull; this was probably Cockerheugh. In 1657 he had a 'wadset' with John Turnbull of Minto in which he gave 2200 'merks' for liferent of Hornshole, and also his 2nd son John to have the lands 'in fee'; this was confirmed by an instrument of sasine in 1658. He is probably the 'Breirie yards' who paid the land tax on £260 in 1663. He was also recorded in 2 deeds of 1663, along with his son William. In a disposition of 1667 his eldest son John is 'now of briricyairds'. He is probably the already deceased John transcribed as 'of Badenyairds' in 1659 when his son William became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th C.) married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1660. John (17th C.) Bailie of Langholm. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £12,00 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Eskdale, where he had been acting as Chamberlain. John of Langhope (d.1666) 3rd son of John of Yorkston and Headshaw, and grandson of George of Synton. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He bought Langhope from his brother William. He is recorded in the period 1641–47 and 1649 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in Liddesdale (or the Debateable Land) and Canonbie; at this point he was the 2nd surviving son of John of Headshaw. He is mentioned as a temporary Chamberlain in Buccleuch estate records for 1646, replacing the deceased John of Headshaw, along with William of Headshaw (his elder brother). In 1660 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Margaret Chisholme in Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £2000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debateable Lands for both him and his deceased father John of Headshaw. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was probably the Scott of Langhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1653 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whitslade; it is possible this is the marriage recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1652. His children included: William (b.1654), who succeeded, but sold Langhope; John, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1670; and Elizabeth (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk. In 1656 he is recorded being 'of Langhop in the parish of Krkop' and the witnesses were William 'of . . . ' (probably of Headshaw, his brother) and Robert (perhaps another brother) – '. . . Who sprung from a worthy Stock of late, Who was the Son, I very well knew, Of John Scott of Headshaw' [CWS]. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Liddell and their children included Margaret (b.1635), James (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Walter (b.1642), Marion (b.1643), John (b.1645), Adam (b.1647), Marion (again, b.1649), William (b.1652) and Christian (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Walter Purdom and Robert. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Veitch (or 'Heilling Veatche') in 1647 and their children included: Margaret (b.1652); John (b.1655); and Helen (b.1657). Given his wife's surname, it is possible that they were both connected with Synton. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1652 the Council found that traveller Thomas Oliver was not liable to pay him for £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pipes, another £6, 10s. for 'hott waters', as well as 8 merks of powder and 8 merks of white sugar, all of which Oliver had been transporting from Edinburgh for him, but were 'brak, drownet, and lossit by the way'. John (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he accused Walter 'Westport' of selling him 3 barrels of spirits that were supposed to be '24 stoupis', but was short. Walter was acquitted by the Hawick Magistrates. John 'West Port' (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when his child William with Janet Robson was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) and another John. He was 'westport' and the baptism was labelled as 'for:'. He was described as 'in Westport of Haik' in 1674 when his son William (presumably the same one) became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh. This could be the same family as the Cornet of 1705, and probably also related to Walter 'called Westport', who is recorded in the period 1648–79. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included Manie (b.1656) and Agnes (b.1671). The witnesses in 1656 were James and Robert. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Gibson in 1660. John of Hornshole (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same man as the John listed as tenant in Hornshole in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John in Hornshole, married to Margaret Glendinning, was recorded in 1694, when his son James was baptised in Wilton Parish; the witnesses were William Scott and Thomas Scott, who were probably related, and it is one of the earliest Wilton Parish records. He may possibly be the same as John, son of John of Brieryyards. John (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberry. In 1663 he became a merchant's apprentice with Patrick Fife in Edinburgh. John (17th C.) rented part of the farms of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park in 1671. Perhaps the same John leased 1/3 of Branxholme Mains in 1696 and 1697. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Leyden and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1671. John (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he was fined 'for abusing and taking away of the bailies their good name, by calling them robers'. Perhaps the same John was banished from the Burgh in 1675 'because of several thefts committed by him'. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Jackson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1673. The witnessed were John Cuthbertson and James Wright. John (17th C.) recorded being 'called Yles' in 1673 when he was listed among those named in the court case relating to the disturbances at St. Jude's Fair in Hawick. James Wilson says that the 'nickname has been preserved, and is pronounced œilly' and suggests that it meant he had an eye missing or some other peculiarity with his eyes. John of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1678 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was probably son of Walter, who paid the land tax there in 1663. It also seems that he could be the same man as John of Lees. It is unclear how he was related tp Rev. James of Kirkton, who was also associated with Catslack. John (17th C.) married to Janet Bell. His unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1672. John (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1673 being 'in Corslee'. This is probably Crosslee in Ettrick. John (d.1679) from 'Ettrick Forest'. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is inknown where exactly he lived. John (17th C.) recorded in 1684 as being 'in Weins' when his son Robert was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear if he may be the same as the contemporary John of Weens. It is possible he was the John of Hawick who had to flee to England in 1676 for being a Covenanter, where he was said to have been involved in preaching in Cumberland and Northumberland. John of Bowhill (17th/18th C.) probably son of James of Bowhill. He appears to have been the last male in this family line. He sold the lands to Adam in Deloraine, brother of Francis of Grassyards. John of Headshaw (d.1691) eldest son of William. He was probably the 'younger of Headshaw' who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration (listed under Dumfriesshire). He is probably the 'John Scot appearand of Headshaw' to whom Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' in 1688. His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, etc. to him in 1688. He married Jean Hackett (or Halket) in Edinburgh in 1682; she was only daughter of Col. R. Halket, and probably a cousin of some sort. When he died his sister Mary (who had married Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw) became heir to Headshaw. John (17th C.) recorded in 1689 when he was 'called of Southfield'. He was fined 'in an egregious blod committ by him upon James Gledstaines, late baylyea, in diver pairtes of his bodie'. He mau be the same as one of the other Johns. John (17th C.) son of Thomas in Bonchester (probably the same as Thomas 'of' Nether Bonchester). He was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. He is mentioned in 1690 as son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester when he had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. Perhaps the same John (said by George Tancred to be a Writer to the Signet) died in 1705 and was buried at Greyfriars Kirkyard in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1693. John of Synton (d.bef. 1705) son of William. Said to be the 3rd son, but if so then his 2 older brothers must have died before him and with no heirs. In 1662 his uncle Francis was appointed as tutor during his minority. In 1670 his brother William became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh. He is recorded in a sasine of 1670 and annexed the lands of North Synton in 1675 (although they were partly in the family since 1641). He was recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1675 he was served heir to his father William of Synton, in the lands of North Synton; his father had died earlier than this, suggesting that perhaps this is when he reached majority. He paid the land tax at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678 (half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130) and was also owner of the lands of Essenside (valued at £365), although at that time North Synton was in the hands of Rev. Robert Cunningham. He may also be the Laird of Synton who whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £1600 in 1678. He is recorded as 'of Synetoune' in a bond of 1682. He later added Satchells to the estate and gained some land from Selkirk Common. He owned additional lands in Tweedsmuir Parish, according to a 'tack' of 1687 by Francis Scott, minister of Tweedsmuir (who may have been a relative). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 35 hearths on his lands. In 1696 he and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with James Melville of Halhill. He is also recorded in 1670 when his 'brother-germane' William became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his sister Elizabeth. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Murray of Blackbarony in 1686 (probably not the daughter of John Murray of Cringletie, as stated by Keith Scott). In 1702 he secondly married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and widow of William Scott of Raeburn. His children were: William (b.1688), baptised in Ashkirk, who probably died young; Alexander (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk, who is recorded in an assignation by his grandmother Lady Blackbarony in 1697, and succeeded; Jean (b.1694), also baptised in Ashkirk, who had a similar assignation in 1697, but appears to have died a year later; and Margaret, who received money from his mother-in-law's estate in 1699 and married William Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1706, by which date he was deceased. The 1690 baptism was witnessed by John of Woll and William (probably of Headshaw) and the 1694 one by Alexander Murray (probably his father-in-law) and Walter of Todrig. He may have been the John, son of William, born in Ashkirk in 1646. He may have died in 1710 (as stated by Keith Scott) – 'And John Scot of Sinton he is a pretty man, He outstrips in Wisdom any man I ken' [CWS]. Rev. John (d.c.1690) minister of Hawick. He was tutor in the family of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, and may also have been related to that family. Based on his witnessing of documents of the Elliots of Harwood, he may have been a son of a sister of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1650 and became Hawick minister in 1657. He may be the John of Hawick whose behaviour was complained about at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles in 1655. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopacy, effectively being forced to leave the town; however, he is said to have preached regularly at conventicles, e.g. at Earlside. He apparently contemplated joining a Covenanter force in 1666, but refrained when he found out how disorganised they were. However, he was present at the Pentland rising in 1666. He fled to the north of England, preaching in Northumberland and Cumbria. In 1678 he chaired a meeting of outed ministers who opposed the more extreme views of Richard Cameron and others. He also helped Archibald, Earl of Argyll escape in 1681, giving him a Covenanter password, then arranging for him to stay with Pringle of Torwoodlee, and then go via Hawick to Northumberland and eventually to Holland (although Argyll was later captured and beheaded). He survived past the Revolution, but appears not to have resumed service as a minister. In 1658 he married Marion, daughter of John Livinsgtone, the minister of Ancrum (and famous Covenanter); she died aged only 19 in 1661, and is buried at St. Mary's. He later married Elizabeth Anderson, who died in 1698 and is buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. It is possible he was the 'Mr John Scott' recorded as resident of Lilliesleaf in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 James Livingstone, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his wife Marion (probably her brother, although it is unclear why this was so long after her death). John of Ormiston (17th C.) merchant of Hawick in the later 1600s. He was listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th centiry. He was probably related to (or confused with) James of Ormiston, and the earlier John. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed a baptism (along with Schoolmaster John Purdom) for mason David Rutherford in 1685. He could be the John Scott 'ormston' who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter in 1720. John of Cockerheugh (17th C.) probably 2nd son of John of Brieryyards and brother of James of Brieryyards. His father purchased 'a merk land of Hassendeanbank' (probably Cockerheugh) from Thomas Turnbull in 1656 and had a 'wadset' in his name in 1657 with the Turnbulls, involving 'the markland of horneshole with houses'. He transferred the wadset and lands to his brother James in 1667. He may be the John who (along with Walter, perhaps another brother) witnessed baptism for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687. Also in 1681 there was a 'disposition and assignation' to him from Walter, probably also a brother (or other near relative). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the crowd that gathered to try to stop the roof being removed from Hassendean Kirk. Along with his nephew John (son of James 'of Bririeyairdis') he was accused of striking Charles Lithgow in this incident. He is probably the John whose son Walter inherited Cockerheugh from him in 1721, and whose daughter Bessie married Walter ('Uncle to Crumhaugh'), also in 1721. In 1705 he was 'of Cockerheugh Now Tennant in Langlands' when a woman appeared before the Session to confess to being pregnant by his son Walter. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Skelfhill in a deed of 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lees (d.c.1685) recorded being 'of Leis' in 1685 when his will was registered. Probably the same John is recorded being of Moormaw in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners and tenants of 1666. He was presumably related to other Scotts of Moormaw and Lees. He may be the same man as John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. In 1682 he was 'of lyes' when (along with Adam) he witnessed a baptism for William of Clarilaw (who was probably related to him). John (17th C.) married to Janet Renwick. His children, baptised in Hawick, included Esther (b.1674) and an unnamed child (b.1680). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Renwick in 1680. His designation appears to be 'in Barnknow' (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe). James Newbie and Andrew Angus were witnesses. Perhaps the same John, with his wife's name as 'Rennick' had a son John baptised in 1696. He was surely related to Robert, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. John 'Whiteyetts' or 'Whitegates', 'Cloaks' (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. It is hard to separate the contemporary Johns, but it seems clear that the merchant and 'Whiteyetts' are the same man, although it is possible that the entry here describes 2 generations. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Scott 'Flex') for Thomas Scott and in 1682 another for baxter James Lands. He was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon; since he confessed and appeared before the Bailie, he was excused. He is recorded as merchant in several deeds of 1682. In 1685 'John Scott, yor [younger], of Whyte Yetts' was fined for striking merchant Thomas Scott 'in ane fenced court'. In 1689 he witnessed (along with weaver James Beattie) a baptism for Walter Anderson. He could be the 'merchant Elder' listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1701 he was 'of Whytyetts' when he was (bizarrely) fined £10 Scots for not prosecuting John Scott, litster for assaulting James Cowan, tailor. He could also be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1698. He is 'Whitegates' in 1700 and 'Whitegates junior' in 1705 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for merchant Michael. He was 'whitegates' in 1706 when he witnessed a baptism (for workman William Riddell) along with John 'younger Soger' and also in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter, allong with tailor John 'Casae end'. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Elizabeth Wilson and in 1720 another for James Scott and Sarah Gledstains. He is recorded in 1701 in the Burgh Records and in 1718 in the Hawick Session Records, when he was rebuked for providing William Whaton with military-type coat and sword to ride through the town, as part of a wager. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for wigmaker Robert Miles. He married Margaret Paterson (being recorded as both merchant and as 'Whiteyetts' or 'whitegates' in separate baptismal entries) and had children: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686), who fled after getting Margaret Brydon pregnant; John (b.1688); and Gideon (b.1700). In the baptismal record of 1700 he is 'whitegates younger', suggesting his father was also John 'Whiteyetts', and making it clear that the 'younger' referred (at least some of the time) to him and not to his son John (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie William Laing and Adam Ruecastle and in 1700 were Michael Scott and William Laing. He could also be the John whose son John was baptised in 1699, with Walter Anderson and William Paterson as witnesses. Either he secondly married Agnes (or Ann) Scott, or this was his son, perhaps the man born in 1686; his name is given as 'Cloaks and Whitegates' in some of the records. Their children included: Gideon (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Jean (b.1712); John (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); and Thomas (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were

Robert Ruecastle and Walter Anderson, in 1708 were Gideon of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1712 were shoemaker Walter Scott and William 'Whaton', in 1713 were James Scott 'Doctor' and Walter Anderson, and in 1718 were Walter Henderson and David Miller. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother to the Laird of Whitslade. It is unclear if his nickname referred to a specific place, and if so, where this might have been. John (17th C.) son of Bailie Scott, although it is unclear which one. In 1685 Adam Young was fined for insulting him and his father, specifically 'calumniatting them and taking away yr. good name' in claiming they had reset peas that had been taken by footboys of Lord Airlie's troop (i.e. Royalists under James Ogilvy of Airlie). John of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1688. Along with William of Brieryyards he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart (from Clydesdale), who had twins in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Whitehaugh (or if 'John' was perhaps an error). John (17th/18th C.) cordiner (i.e. shoemaker) in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Briggs in 1680 and another for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. He could be the shoemaker whose wife Margaret Turnbull gave evidence in 1686, regarding a case involving the theft of wool from William Paterson. He was thus probably the John who married Margaret Turnbull and whose children included: John (b.1673); Walter (b.1675); William (b.1675); and Margaret (b.1678). His son Walter was witness to a Hawick sasine of 1688, while another son William served as 'procurator' for Patrick Cunningham in the same sasine. He is and was listed as a shoemaker among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the cordiner listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He is probably the cordiner who witnessed a baptism for the Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1694 (suggesting that he was an Episcopalian). He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver 'Black' John Swan in 1707, for wright John Pringle in 1711, for Thomas Greenshields and for James Scott son of John 'Laird' in 1714, for weaver James Weens in 1720, for weaver John Weens in 1723, for gardener Walter in 1726 and for gardener William Paterson in 1728. He may be the same shoemaker (although perhaps this is another generation) who married Janet Briggs and had a son Thomas baptised in 1708, with witnesses Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. He was probably the senior of 'John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers' who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. John (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Andrew, who is also listed. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was listed along with Andrew and James, each having a single hearth. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1715 as cottar in Headshaw; he married Helen Wilson (perhaps in 1715, with no wife's name recorded) and their children included William (b.1715), Andrew (b.1717) and John (b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed right before James, and so probably related, perhaps his father. He could be an ancestor of millwright Gideon. John (17th C.) shepherd at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from another John (not shepherd) there. John (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James and Thomas, listed after him at the same place, were presumably related to him. It is possible he is the John, in Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1680. John (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to later Scotts of Hummelknowes Mill. John (17th C.) ploughman at Adderstoneshiel listed among the 'deficient' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as a tailor at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same tailor John was in Mervinslaw in 1709. The witnesses were Andrew . . . , tenant in Mervinslaw, and John Rule, shepherd there. It is also possible he was the John in Borthaugh who received money from the Wilton poor box, including for the purchase of a coat in 1705. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96 an a third in 1698. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; a separate John was also recorded as a webster in the same place. He witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill in 1697. He may have been closely related to Robert or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694. He may be the John recorded at Wiltonburn in 1696; he married a Renwick and their children included John (b.1696), with witnesses John and Robert Scott. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed with the word 'Grinna' after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. It is unclear if 'Grinna' is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, George is also listed in 1694 with the same name. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He is listed separately from men of the same name who were tailor, cordiner, 'yonger' and 'Grinna'. He could be the same man as the smith recorded in 1693/4. John 'younger' (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick 'eist the water'. His name is written 'John Scott yonger'. He could be the same man as 'Whiteyetts' or 'Sodger'. John (17th C.) carrier in Hawick who was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed separately from the 'Soldier', who was a carrier at the same time. He could be the John, who along with Robert, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. He is probably the carrier who was a witness in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters for attacking Drumlanrig's Tower. He was listed as a carrier when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. John 'Sodger' (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1692 he was recorded as 'Sodger' when leasing 34 acres of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4, where his name was listed as 'John Scott, carrier, called soldier'. He was listed as 'Shouldier' and resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1706 he was recorded as 'carrier in Teviotdale and indweller in Hawick commonly called Souldier John' when he is recorded making a bond in Selkirk with Walter Mitchell, merchant in Glasgow. In 1707 he and his son, John younger, were fined by the Council for 'violent putting, thrusting, and expelling, under cloud of night' the horses of William Aitken, younger, from his barn; the Aitkens were also carriers in Hawick, but it is unclear what the dispute was between the families. In 1713 he (or possibly his son) was 'distinctionis causa called John the Souldier' when when witnessing a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and Margaret Scott (who may have been related to him). He could be the 'John Scott, souldier' whose wife 'Bessie Trumble' was in 1682 fined for assaulting Jean Scott, wife of Robert Scott, 'Ormistoune'; if so he may be the John, married to Bessie Turnbull whose children included Janet (b.1680), Janet (again, b.1681), John (b.1683), John (again, b.1684), Agnes (b.1685) and Walter (b.1687). John 'Goudilands' (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694, when he paid for 2 hearths. He was associated with Goldielands in some way, although Charles of Goldielands was also listed on the tax rolls. In 1689 he was listed as 'brother to Goldilands'. He married Catherine Scott and their son James was baptised in 1689, with witnesses dyer George Young and merchant James Simpson. James (b.1683) and Walter (b.1686), baptised to John and Catherine Burn in Hawick in 1683 could also be his children. It is possible that he could be the same man as 'Uncle John'. John (17th C.) shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John listed as shepherd at Dryden a few decades later. He is probably the John 'in Dryden' whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1706, with witnesses Adam Elliot of Arkleton and James Grieve in Commonside. Perhaps the same John was recorded as herd at Drydenburn in 1713. He married Helen Hislop and their children included: Margaret (b.1702); Isobel (b.1703); Margaret (again, b.1707); Elizabeth (b.1710); and Bessie (b.1713). The witnesses in 1713 were 'Mr' Thomas Hume 'probationer' and tailor James Robson (from Roberton Parish). John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Possibly the same John in Whithope was recorded in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and Walter, who were also listed there. He could be the John who (along with Walter) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. John (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot. In 1693 there was a bet between 2 Hawick butchers about whether or not a lamb had come from his farm at Burnfoot. He was listed at Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. This is listed under Hassendean Parish, but is clearly the farm in Wilton Parish. He may have been related to Adam of Burnfoot, who was probably Laird at that time. He may be the John who (alogn with William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for James, tenant at West Burnfoot Mill and another in 1729 for George at West Burnfoot. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. Probably the same John was listed in Appletreehall in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Jean Bell and their children included: Janet (b.1681), bapstised in Hawick; an unnamed son (b.1685), baptised in Hawick; and David (b.1688), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1685 were James and Stephen Greenshields (the latter being quartermaster of the weavers) and in 1688 were John Hope and George Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Greenshields and their children included Helen (b.1682), James (b.1684), Bessie (b.1684) and Thomas (b.1686). John (17th/18th C.) son of litster James. In 1684 he was guilty of 'ane egregious and insolent ryott, in offering to beat up and break the door of the dwelling-houss of Jean Hardie, subtenant to Janet Ritchieson, in the middest of the night'. About a week later he was fined for breaking out of the Tolbooth. He may be the son of 'Baylyea Scott', who, along with his father, was verbally abused by Adam Young in 1685. In 1686 he was described as son of ex-Bailie and litster James when he and William Hardie were imprisoned in the Tolbooth for stealing money from the house of ex-Bailie Walter Purdom. He may be the litster who in 1698 was fined for 'ane egregious ryott and bluid, by his most masterful coming in upon the houss of Robert Wright, late baylyea, and without any manner of provocation not only assassinated and assaulted the person of the said Robert Wright, and bled him, but also shoke the person of Margratt Fraser, his spouse'; Wright was also fined for assaulting him. Perhaps the same litster was recorded in 1701 when John 'of Whytyetts' was fined for not prosecuting him for assaulting tailor James Cowan. John 'Laird' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was father of weaver James according to a baptismal record for one of James' children in 1714; however, this was the James who married Janet Bryson and not James 'Laird', who married Helen Lunn and was Hawick's first known Cornet. Nevertheless, he was surely related to the roughly contemporary Robert and Walter, and the earlier James, who were also nicknamed 'Laird'. He himself witnessed a baptism in 1704 (along with James 'Doctor') for weaver 'Black' John Swan. It seems likely that he was also a weaver. John of Woll (d.c.1706) 5th son of Sir William of Harden. He purchased the lands of Woll in 1660. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He paid tax on £533 6s 8d in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678. He wrote to his brother Sir William in 1665 from Aikwood. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick, Selkirk and St. Mary's in at least the periods 1657–63 and 1671–1703, when he also covered the Barony of Kirkurd. He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690, 1692, 1694 and 1698. He may have been the John who served as Chamberlain for the Countess of Wemyss' rents in Teviotdale in the period 1652–66 (although there were other contemporary men of the same name); and also responsible for the Countess' rentals in Eckford Parish. He was also factor to his brother Sir William of Harden in the period 1660–83. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £700 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest. He received the East Mains of Selkirk from Walter Scott of Harden and his wife Christian Ker in 1669 (although it is unclear who this Walter could be, given the dates). He was recorded in a bond of relief in 1673. In 1678 he acted as 'amicable compositor' between the parties involved when part of Selkirk Common was divided. He is recorded in deeds of 1682. Also in 1682 he was on the jury that found Alexander Home guilty of being at the head of the group of Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig's Tower; however, it may be that he was one of the jurors who voted to acquit. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife's withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Scott. It was said that he paid 2600 merks to Meldrum 'to save the Duchess of Buccleuch's people in that shire from more particular sufferings'. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. In 1692 he was one of the 2 Chamberlains of Buccleuch who gave their consent for Francis Gledstains wanted to enclose part of the Flex. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also Berwickshire and in 1693 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1702. Also in 1693

there is an existing letter to his nephew Walter, Earl of Tarras. He witnessed a baptism in 1693, in Ashkirk Parish, for John, younger of Gilmanscleuch. He was probably the Laird of Woll who paid tax on 8 hearths at his house in 1694. When his eldest son married in 1694 he resigned the lands of Woll to him. He may be the John 'of Well' who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He married Agnes, only daughter of Robert Scott of Harwood and started the Scotts of Woll (or restarted, since there was an earlier branch of the Scotts who were Lairds of Woll). His wife, Lady Scott of Woll, was a strong supporter of the Covenant, attending field meetings (perhaps on Lilliesleaf Moor) and in 1684 was fined £300 Scots for failing to attend services at Ashkirk Kirk. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; John, who married Margaret Scott; Gideon; 2 other sons, who died before 1710 without having sons; Agnes (b.c.1675), who married Alexander Veitch of Glen in 1698; and Margaret, who married John, younger of Gilmanscleuch in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Hawick' in 1698 when his son James was baptised in Hawick. This was the day before the baptism of a child of Gideon Scott of Falnash and with the same witnesses, Adam Elliot of Arkleton and 'Mr' Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. John of Langhope (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Langhope and St. Leonards. He appears to have purchased Langhope from his father in 1688, and was served heir to these lands of his father's in 1691. However, later in 1691 he and his wife Janet sold the lands to Adam of Bowhill. Sir John of Ancrum (d.1712) son of Patrick of Langshaw and Elizabeth Simson, and descended from the Scotts of Balwearie. He is sometimes called 'of Kirkstyle' (in Perthshire), although his father probably sold those lands. He is also sometimes called 'of Langshaw', like his father, although those lands would go to his younger brother Francis. He was a tutor for Robert of Horsleyhill. In 1654 he bought the lands of Ormiston from William, Earl of Roxburghe and was the 'fiar of Langshaw' who was the son of Patrick of Langshaw. He was listed as 'fiar of Langschaw' in 1661 when he and his partners owed money to the Scotts of Buccleuch for duties on the coal-fields of Sheriffhall. He was recorded as 'of Langshaw' and Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 3 deeds of 1663. In 1663 he is recorded holding lands in Melrose Parish that had previously belonged to Lord Elibank. He is recorded in document in the Melrose Regality records, relating to the 'multures' of Langshaw and other matters in 1663–68. In 1668 he had a sasine of the lands of 'Wouplaw'. He acquired Ancrum from Charles Kerr, 2nd Earl of Ancrum. He had a charter of the lands and barony of Ancrum in 1670 and in 1671 became the 1st Baronet of Ancrum (in the baronetcy of Nova Scotia). He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead for the years 1660–62 (as Scott of Langshaw) and 1665–70 (as Scott of Ancrum). He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1664. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1665. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He paid the land tax on £2400 in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was tried in 1680 for speaking against the King and the Privy Council. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He had a house on the High Street in Edinburgh, which he sold to Sir Gilbert Eliott. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688 – 'The Laird of Langshaw him I have no mind to flee, He is a gentleman, and is of Kin to me' [CWS]. In 1694 he paid tax on 19 hearths for his estate at Ancrum. In 1700 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, in right of his deceased father, Patrick of Langshaw. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In the early 1700s he was accused of embezzling money during the minority of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1652 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Francis (or perhaps William) Scott of Mangerton, and they had 5 sons and 5 daughters. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bennet of Grubet, and had 2 further daughters, from whom are descended Sir Hector Maclean Hay of Alderston and Sir William Henry Walsingham Calder. In 1708 he lastly married Barbara, daughter of Walter Ker of Littledean; when the local minister refused to proclaim the banns 3 times in a single day, he took his intended bride to Cornhill where they were married. His children were: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; Charles of Palace Hill, who married Margaret, sister of John, 5th Lord Rutherford; John (b.1702), a merchant, who was apprenticed in Edinburgh in 1677, spent time in London and Jamaica, settled in New York and whose descendant, John Morin Scott, was Mayor of Philadelphia; Andrew, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1693, and participated in funding for the disastrous Darien colony; William, an advocate, who was imprisoned for taking part in the uprising of 1715; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Eliott of Stobs; Anna (or Anne), who married William Scott of Raeburn and secondly John Scott of Synton; Cecilia (or Cicely), who married William Ainslie of Blackhill; Jean, who married John Murray of Bowhill; Elizabeth, who married John Erskine of Shielfield; Margaret, who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade, and later Sir David Murray of Stenhope, M.P. for Peeblesshire; and Christian, who married Sir Thomas Calder of Muirtoune. John 'Wyndheid' (d.c.1712) married to Bessie Paisley. His nickname may have come from living at the head of Walter's Wynd, suggesting he was related to the later Walter (although it is possible that the Cross Wynd or Kirk Wynd are meant). In 1676 he was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with Robert Taylor, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was 'ane half-fourpitt short'. There he was referred to as 'Wyndheads'. With his wife Bessie Paisley his children included: John (b.1680); John (again, b.1685); William (b.1687); and Bessie (b.1690). The witnesses in 1685 were James Lands and William Douglas. Then probably the same John married Helen Stoddart in Hawick in 1709 and had a child Archibald (b.1711). He was John 'called Wyndhead late servant to Robert Robson' in 1711, with witnesses Dand Gray in Whitlaw and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. In 1712 his widow was called before the Kirk Session and rebuked for harassing her neighbours. He may be related to Robert 'Wyndhead', recorded in 1701, George 'Wyndhead' also recorded about the same time and Walter and another John 'Wyndhead' recorded a little later. John 'Causeyend' (d.bef. 1715) tailor in Hawick. His nickname designated where he lived, although it is unclear exactly where this was. In 1704 he was 'taylor in Hawick near to ye Casyend'. In 1712 he was witness to a baptism for shoemaker Walter and was distinguished as 'Casae end' from the other witness, John 'Whitegates'. He may have been a descendant of the earlier James at the 'Casa End'. He may be the John, 'taylier' who witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1688. He is probably the tailor John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and the tailor listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1707 he was 'tayleor, and towne tresawrer' when the 2 Bailies were fined for their behaviour at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He married Isobel Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1700); John (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); George (b.1707); Isobel and Margaret (b.1709); and Francis (b.1711). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John and merchant William, in 1702 were Bailies Robert Hardie and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1709 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. In 1715 his widow was involved in a dispute with Robert Deans over who should sit in a particular pew in St. Mary's. He may be the John described as 'sometimes tailyor in Hawick' in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married Town Clerk Walter Gledstains; however, if he died before 1715 then this would have to have been a different tailor John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Rashiegrain. He married Marion Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John 'Uncle John' (17th/18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. His nickname was recorded in 1702 when he was a witness to a birth for Walter in Goldielands, with the other witness being Robert of Tandlaw; it seems likely he was related to the Goldielands and Tandlaw branches, but it is otherwise unclear who he was. Presumably his nickname distinguished him from other contemporary Johns, but its meaning is unclear. He married Jean Stuart (also from Hawick Parish) in Hawick in 1704, when he was 'distinctionis causa called uncle John'. Their children included: John (b.1705); Robert (b.1707); and Walter (b.1709). In the 1705 baptismal record he is stated to be in Blackcleuch and the witnesses were Robert in Blackcleuch (perhaps his father) and John in Falnash (perhaps anpther relative). His nickname is again given in the 1707 baptismal record. The nickname is recorded once more. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1700 as 'brother-german to the Laird of Tishilow' when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis 'by request of deacon convener'. He was probably brother of Walter, the last Laird of Tushielaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddell in 1696 and their children included Robert (b.1706), John (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Bell and their children included Alison (b.1708), Andrew (b.1713) and William (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as a servant at Synton Mains in 1709. He married Helen Brown in 1706 and their children included: Janet

(b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Magdalen (b.1714); and Helen (b.1716). John (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for flesher Robert Renwick (along with merchant William) and for tailor John, in 1704 for Robert Scott, 'Pope' and for smith James Scott and in 1709 for weaver Patrick Forman. In 1706 he and glover James Burn were paid £20 Scots for providing coats 'for the use of the two officers, pyper, and drummer, att the Common-ryding in 1705'. In 1707 he was 'onlawed for deriding and mocking the bailie'. He witnessed baptisms in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Allan, in 1717 for merchant Walter Elliot and Bessie Scott, and in 1718 for shoemaker Walter Scott and for merchant William Dickson. He was appointed in 1718 to try to raise money for a new Kirk clock in Hawick. In 1720 (along with candlemaker John) he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Cavers, for merchant William Dickson and for merchant James Aitkin. He may be the 'John Scott Shoemaker' who witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1721. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull and he witnessed others for gardener Walter in 1740 and for shoemaker George Gardner in 1744. He married Mary (also recorded as Marion and Martha) Rutherford and their children included: William (b.1701); William (again, b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Margaret (b.1708); John (b.1711); Rachel (b.1713); Thomas (b.1715); Jean (b.1718); and David (b.1721). William Scott, shoemaker, witnessed the 1705 baptism and so may have been his father or brother. The 1708 witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot and in 1718 were Alexander Scott of Boonraw and merchant John Robson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray in 1707 and their son Thomas was bapised in 1708. John (d.1710) tenant in Falnash. He was recorded in 1711 as 'younger in Falnash' when his widow Janet Aitchison married William Scott in Skelfhill. He may have been related to Gideon, 'Auld Falnash'. He is probably the John in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Stewart, smith in Falnash, in 1704 for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn, in 1705 for John in Blackcleuch and in 1709 for Archibald in Hislop. He was 'tenent in Falnesh' when he married Margaret Anderson in 1702; she was daughter of Edward Aitchison, tenant in Eweslees. They had children: Margaret (b.1703); Marion (b.1704); Helen (b.1706); Bessie (b.1708); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Morton. He was already deceased in early 1711 when his son John was baptised in Hawick, his father-in-law Edward Aitchison agreeing to arrange for the education of the child; the witnesses were Archibald, tenant in Hislop and John Armstrong. John (1659/20–1738) tenant in Denholm. He is buried in Cavers Old Cemetery, along with his son William (1703/4–49). He could be the resident of Cavers Parish who in 1702 was probably at Denholm when his son William was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1710 he was recorded as servant to Robert Robson. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included: Archibald (b.1711); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1717); and Helen (b.1720). The witnesses in 1710 were George Scott 'Wyndhead' and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He was recorded being 'called John Scott Acreknow' (to distinguish him from other Johns) when his son William was baptised in Hawick in 1711. The witnesses were William Gledstains and Alexander Hislop, both tailors in Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is hard to separate from another shoemaker of the same name. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Hardie (on the same day that one of his own children was baptised). He married Margaret Briggs in 1705 and their children included: Janet (b.1706); Jean (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); James (b.1716); and Helen (b.1722). The witnesses in 1716 were Bailie George Martin and gardener James Falsyde and in 1722 were his brother Walter (perhaps the shoemaker, or else the servant of the minister) and student John Cunningham. He may be partly confounded with the earlier shoemaker of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) described as a skinner in Hawick when his son William became an apprentice baxter in Edinburgh in 1717. He may be related to the earlier John of West Port (given the name and trade coincidence). He may be the same John as the glover. John (b.c.1675) younger son of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was brother of William, Robert, Mary and Isobel. He was still alive in 1744, when there was a discharge regarding the inheritance of these siblings. He must not have had any children, since otherwise they might have succeeded to the family estate. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being 'in ffalnesh' (i.e. Falnash) in Cavers Parish in 1716 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear how he was related to Scotts in Roberton or at Falnash (e.g. the earlier John in Falnash, who died in 1710). John of Davington (1680–c.1710) eldest son of Francis of Davington. Dying without children, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. John (17th/18th C.) younger son of Scott of Bonchester (probably Walter), he is possibly the same man as John of Ashtrees. He took part in the 1715 rebellion, along with William Kerr of Abbotrule. He was banished as a result of this. A story (recounted by Walter Deans in 1887) was told of his time in the colonies, labouring at a goverment building, when the Governor's new wife recognised him, saying 'That stane wad row easier doon Bunestir Hill, than up there', whereon he recognised her as a local woman of lowly birth who had once been whipped through the streets of Hawick! Keeping quiet about this, his conditions were improved and he was later sent back on a ship to Britain, but lived and died on Jersey rather than in Rulewater. George Tancred states that in 1740 he was father of a girl aged 8 and a boy aged 5. He was probably nephew of George (son of Thomas in Bonchester), who was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of Francis. He also appears to have served as a Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1678 he paid the land tax of more than £800 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 'John Scotts, elder and younger of Gillmenscleugh' were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (i.e. his son John also served, although after this it is unclear whether he or his son are being described). It was his son John (and not him) who married Margaret, daughter of John of Woll; it is unclear who he married. Michael, son of John 'of Gilmingiscleugh', recorded in a deed in 1663 and Robert, son of John 'of Gilmerscleuch', recorded in a deed of 1673, were probably his sons. John (d.bef. 1710) 2nd son of John of Woll and grandson of Sir William of Harden. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter, Agnes (although this could be confusion with John of Gilmanscleuch). He died before having male heirs, however. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Telfer and their son James was baptised in 1684. John (17th C.) married Margaret Henderson in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Ashirk Parish in 1689, with witnesses Thomas Wallace and Thomas Scott (who may have been related). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Paterson and their children included: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686); John (b.1688); Gideon (b.1700); and Janet (b.1702). John (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Horsleyhill. In 1687 he became an apprentice to merchant Robert Campbell in Edinburgh. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of John, he was described as 'younger of Gilmanscleuch' in the period 1685–90 when they both served the county of Selkirkshire. In 1689 he was appointed as an officer in the local Militia. In 1690 'John Scotts, elder and younger of Gillmenscleugh' were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire. He was still 'younger off Gillmenscluch' in 1693 when a daughter of his was baptised. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. In 1707 he was involved in a bond with Francis Scott of Bailielee and Robert Scott 'in Overdelorain'. Sometime before 1712 he lost his estates because of debts, including Gilmanscleuch, which went to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. About 1728 he was appointed Surveyor of Roads. He married Margaret Scott, daughter of John of Woll (perhaps in Ashkirk in 1722), and their daughter Agnes was baptised in Ashkirk Parish, with witnesses John of Woll and George Currer. His son and heir was probably William, last to be called 'of Gilmanscleuch'. His son Robert became a mason's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1730. Rev. John (d.1741) minister of Carluke. He was licensed by Lanark Presbytery in 1693 and ordained at Carluke in 1694. In 1701 he was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis); alternatively he could be the 'preacher of the Gospel' who was made a Burgess in 1712 or 'one of the ministers of Glasgow' who was made a Burgess in 1713. He became minister at St. Paul's Glasgow in 1713. He married Grizel, son of Carluke minister Peter Kid; she died in 1734. Their children were: Peter, minister of Laigh Kirk, Paisley; John; Mary (1704–64); Elizabeth (d.1725); Sussanah (d.1714); and Barbara. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as tenant in Branxholme in 1702, 1703, 1709 and 1713. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas 'hutson' in 1702, for Walter Scott, herd in Branxholme Town in 1703, for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for carrier Robert in Branxholme Town (along with William in Branxholme Town) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson in 1701 and their children included William (b.1702), with witnesses James Ogilvie and William Scott, both also in Branxholme. He may be the same John who was at Branxholme Mains in the 1690s. His son-in-law was William Scott, who had a son Robert baptised in 1709; presumably this means he had a daughter in about the 1680s. John of Gorrenberry (d.bef. 1729) son of Francis. In 1691 he was served heir to his father's lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He took the money from the Orrock Bequest and paid interest to the Hawick heritors in the early 18th century. He must be the owner of 'Goranberies Hous' in either Cavers or Kirkton Parish, which was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694; it is not stated where his house was, but it seems likely to have been at Adderstone. He was 'of Gorrenberrie' in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He appears to have have held lands in Kirkton Parish, since his servant William Lorraine was resident in that parish when he is recorded marrying in 1707; but since William was married in Edinburgh it suggests he also had a house there. He is probably the Laird of Gorrenberry who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1711 he agreed to take the money bequeathed by Rev. Alexander Orrock (for the Grammar School) and invest it, providing the Hawick Parish with money for the 'rent' of this mortified sum in 1712. In 1722 there is record of a payment made to the Burgh for the use of the bell for a burial relating to him. In 1723 he was mentioned in the Hawick Session book for his interest (presumably meaning return on his money) in 'ye building of ye Schoolhouse for ye Grammar School'. In 1724 there was again deliberation about 'the affaire of the Money in Gorrenberrie's hands for a Schol-house and Schoolmaster's-house'; it was resolved that money had effectively been lost by not receiving the interest annually from him. He married Margaret, daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. Their children included: Francis, who succeeded; Anna (b.1695), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1698); Charles (b.1700), baptised in Hawick; James (b.1703), baptised in Hawick, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1718; Margaret (c.1704–68), who married John Elliot of Whithaugh; Ann (again, b.1709), who was the 3rd wife of Walter Scott of Harden; and another daughter who may have married Douglas of Cavers (but this could be confusion with an earlier generation). The witnesses in 1695 were Archibald douglas and James Gledstains of that Ilk, in 1698 were 'Mr' Alexander Riddell and James Heatley, in 1700 were William Kerr of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law) and James Gledstains of Cocklaw, and in 1703 were William Kerr of Abbotrule (again) and Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw. He may be the John of Gorrenberry who married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1716 (as her second husband). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Adderstoneshiel. His son Walter was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.1707) may also have been his son. He may be the 'servitor' to John Tait in Adderstoneshiel whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch as owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 7 acres, 3 roods and 27 perches. He is surely the same as one of the contemporary Johns, but it is not clear which one. John 'Young Sodger' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, presumably son of 'Sodger'. In 1704 he was John 'younger Soger' when he (along with John 'Whitegates') witnessed a baptism for workman William Riddell. In 1707 he is 'Souldier younger' when he and William Aitken, younger, witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He is also mentioned in the parish records of 1714 answering 'for his sin of adultery'; he is thus one of the earliest adulterers explicitly on record in Hawick Parish! He is described as 'sojer' and 'younger of the Wester Kirk Style'. He was ordered to appear in sackcloth on the next Sunday, but failed to do so, appearing some months later in front of the Presbytery, along with his co-sinner where they were rebuked and referred back to the Session (presumably to pay a fine). In 1716 he is 'Souldier' when his son John was baptised, the mother being Isobel 'Lithen' and the record labelled 'Adult:'. In 1724 he was described as 'distinctionis causa, called the young Souldier' when rebuked along with Thomas Weddell for breaking the Sabbath. It seems likely that his name was to distinguish him from John Scott, 'Sodger', who may of course have been his father. Walter Scott 'Soldier', recorded in the 1740s, may have been his son. John 'Herd' (17th/18th C.) listed as being 'called herd' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the 'John Scott herd' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He married Margaret Purdom in Hawick in 1700, when he is recorded as 'John Scott called Herd'. He is further recorded with the same nickname in 1714 when he received money from Hawick Session to help buy a horse 'for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer', the charity being repeated the following year for a similar purpose. He may have been Town Herd, or otherwise worked as a shepherd, or this could have been an unrelated nickname. John (17th/18th C.) tailor of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1709 when his son John was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1718). John (17th/18th C.) candlemaker, who was an Elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was directed to collect monies from 'Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes and Burnflat', suggesting he may have lived in this area. He witnessed baptisms in 1717 for merchant Walter Elliot and Bessie Scott, in for Robert Manuel in Hawick and in 1720 (along with glover John) for merchant John Cavers and for merchant William Dickson. In 1722 he was appointed to collect from 'ye Meekle bridge to Wm. Dickson's house', although it is unclear to which bridge this referred. He witnessed further baptisms in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson, 1726 for John Fairgrieve and for gardener Walter in 1726 and in 1727 for William Ekron. He may also be the John who witnessed several baptisms in 1728. He married Janet Renwick and their children included Christian (b.1709) and Elspeth (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John whillans and merchant William Dickson. Probably the same candlemaker secondly married Margaret Clerk in 1713 and had children Margaret (b.1714), Jane (b.1717), James (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Christian (again, b.1722), John (b.1725) and Helen (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1714 were Bailie Walter Elliot and William Hodge, in 1720 were Walter Purdom and Francis Ruecastle and in 1722 were Bailie George Martin and merchant William Dickson. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk (distinct from the candlemaker). He lived at Branxholme, and may have been related to William, 'elder in Branxholmtoun'; the 2 were charged with collecting monies from the Branxholme area in 1717. He may also be the 'James' (perhaps a transcription error) mentioned as being one of the aged elders in 1718. John (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick who was admitted as a Burgess in 1692. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms for James Grieve (from Wilton) in Hawick in 1701 and for James Henderson in Weensland in 1709. He was listed as a smith and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed baptisms in 1711 (along with Francis Gledstains) for carrier William Rae, in 1712 and 1716 for William Sanderson (tenant in Hawick), in 1718 for Robert Scott, 'Wyndhead', in 1720 for merchant James Beattie, in 1723 (along with John Chisholme, 'Laird') for gardener John Tait, for waulker William Hood, for gardener Robert Ker and for weaver Walter White, in 1725 for workman William Henderson, and in 1729 for shoemaker George Oliver. He is probably the John 'smith in ye Wynd' who witnessed a baptism (along with Francis Gledstains) for weaver Walter White in 1718, and the John who witnessed a baptism for the same man in 1731. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme 'Laird'. He could be the John who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He married Jean 'Betie' (i.e. Beattie) (from Westerkirk) in Hawick in 1703, with children including: William (b.1704); Margaret (b.1708); Robert (b.1716); and Jean (b.1718). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Wilson and merchant Walter Oliver, in 1708 were merchant Walter Wilson, James Falsyde and John Shiel and in 1716 were wright Francis Gledstains and merchant James Simpson. In 1721 probably the same smith married Elspeth 'Red' (probably Reid), who was widow of George Hardie. In 1722 he is recorded being paid 12 shillings 'for yell [ale] when the ded bell was mended'. In 1723, along with another smith, James Beattie, he was asked to explain himself to the Hawick Session about 'entertaining all the night in his house Janet Andison' who was involved in a 'scandal' in Ettrick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) son of Robert in Skelfhill. In Hawick Parish in 1700 he married Margaret Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'John Scot at ye port' in 1709 when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were weavers John Swan and John Swan (suggesting that he was probably also a weaver and from the West-end). He was probably related to the West Port Scotts. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Thorbrand and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker. In 1709 his daughter Anna was baptised, with witnesses Bailies Robert Hardie and James Burn, as well as 'bailiffs' William Laing and Walter Elliot. There are several other children who could be his. John (c.1678–1754/5) shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He married Jean Goodfellow, probably daughter of

Archibald from the Bewcastle area, whose brother William farmed nearby; she died in 1783, aged 93. He had sons Thomas (1713/4–42), Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw) and William ('the Auld Mason'). John (17th/18th C.) probably son of James and grandson of Robert of Easter Heap. For the 1724 baptism of Robert, son of James in Borthaugh, he is described as 'uncle to the sd Child', while another witness was James 'grandfatther to ye child', who may have been his father. John of Weens (d.1727) probably descended from Andrew of Weens. He was one of the last Scott owners of Weens estate. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, for 'Weymes', valued at £200. He was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking 'the Tower and Castle of Hawick'. He is also recorded in a bond of 1682. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for having 3 hearths at Weens. He is listed as John 'of Weems' when he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He may have married a dughter of Rev. James Ainslie of Minto. His son was also called John. In 1722 he and his son made an arrangement with Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, whereby they gave up their pasturage rights to Feu-Rule Common in exchange for $^1/_{15}$th of the land of the Common (now Hallrule farm). He was probably the Laird of Weens for whose burial the funeral bells were rung in Hawick in 1727. In 1729 his daughter Betsy married Sam Oliver, Schoolmaster at Hobkirk. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. In 1715 he married Euphen, daughter of Robert Riddell. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); and John (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Riddell and Walter Nixon. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Bell in Ashkirk in 1723. Perhaps he is the same John who earlier married Marion Bell. John (17th/18th C.) millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. He appears to be distinct from the tenant there of the same name, but may have been related. He married Elizabeth (or 'Bessie') Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The same couple appear to have had a daughter Helen baptised in Wilton in 1728. The witnesses in 1725 were 2 William Riddells in Allanhaugh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas (b.1715) was baptised in Ashkirk in 1715. The mother was Helen Laidlaw (presumably from Ashkirk) and the couple were married earlier that same year, although the child was 'begotten in fornicatione'. John (17th/18th C.) Beadle of Hawick Kirk in the early part of the 18th century. He was son of Walter, who died in 1717, and whom he replaced. In 1718 he was already 'beddell' when he witnessed baptisms for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe, for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh and for John Napier. He witnessed further baptismis in 1719 for William Langlands, in 1720 for a posthumously born child, for 2 'Fornicators' and for maltman William Hardie and in 1722 for Robert Scoon in Branxholmtown and for Clerk to the Regality Thomas Watson. In the early 1720s there was an entry in the Parish Records: 'To John Scott, Beddal, for his shues dune again ... £1 16 0', He is probably be the 'Walter Scott Beddell' recorded in a 1722 baptismal record; this is presumably an error for his father's name. In 1720 he was rebuked for taking several days to return from Selkirk Fair, missing the Sabbath in Hawick. In 1723 he was witness for the baptisms of 2 illegitimate children and he witnessed other baptisms in 1724 and 1725. Also in 1724 he was severely rebuked for drunkenness, '(as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink' and unable to bring another person before the Session for the same crime. After much debate he submitted to the censure of the Session, was rebuked before the congregation, and kept his job. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Crumhaugh. It seems that he was a poor and unwell parishioner who was paid 'to go to Moffet Well' in about the 1720s. There was also a payment to bring him back, and further payments of poor relief to him and then to his widow. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield. He was witness to a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. John 'Wyndhead' (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Henderson and their children included: Robert (b.1721); and Charles (b.1724); and Robert (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were Benjamin Thomson and Patrick Angus and he may be described as a weaver (although it is hard to read). Sir John of Ancrum (d.1746) son of Sir Patrick, he was the 3rd Baronet. He is probably the 'John, yr., Esq., of Ancrum' who was made a Burgess of Canongate (gratis) in 1724/5. He was younger in 1727 when listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton (his father-in-law). He was made a Burgess and Guild

Brother of Edinburgh in 1737, in right of his father. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford for John Scott of Belford. His Ancrum estate was valued at about £4700 in the 1740s. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of William Nisbet of Dirleton and she died in 1738. His children included: Patrick (d.1742), who was an army officer and died before his father; Sir William, who succeeded; John of Craigintinnie (b.1729), who also took the surname Nisbet, and whose son John became 5th Baronet of Ancrum; Patrick; Walter (b.1733); Margaret; and Christian (1730–88). John of Harden (d.1734) younger son of Gideon. He succeeded to Harden in 1720, after the death of his brother Walter, becoming 9th Laird. In 1720 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow, gratis. He was probably a minor when he inherited the lands, since they were run by curators until 1723. About 1724–26 there were legal proceedings over claims on part of the Harden estates by his former 'tutors and curators', Walter of Whitfield, William of Thirlestane and Walter of Woll. He married Jean Erskine, daughter of Alexander, 4th Earl of Kellie. They had daughters: Anne, who married Thomas Shairp of Houston; and Mary Lilias (said to be a great beauty). A document of 1726 dispones Harden House as jointly owned with his wife. Dying without male issue, the estate went to his uncle Walter (of Whitfield), second son of the Earl of Tarras. He granted Harden (including Mabonlaw and Highchesters) to his uncle Walter in 1731, with the instrument of sasine registered in 1732. His testaments are recorded in the Commissariot of Lauder in 1735, 1736, 1737 and 1740. John of Whitslade (d.bef. 1727) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded to the family estates after the death of his brother Thomas. He thus became the 8th and last Laird. He sold off the Whitslade estate about 1722 (having had the lands 'disjoined' in 1714), it having been in the family for around 6 generations. At that point the estate included Castleside, the Redfordgreens, Ashkirk farm, Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Broadlee. He leased the lands of Harden Mains for 2 years in 1723, leading to legal disputes involving his brother Walter with Walter of Whitfield after his death. He died unmarried, ending this branch of the family. He was said to have been 14th in descent from the Baron of Buccleuch. Thus the direct representation of the Synton branch passed to the Scotts of Todrig. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at 'Bridihall' (i.e. Brieryhill) in 1724. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1717), Agnes (b.1719), Helen (b.1722), Helen (again, b.1724) and Robert (b.1726). The witnesses in 1724 were David Taylor and John Miller. He is probably the John who on the same day in 1724 (along with David Taylor) witnessed a baptism for John Miller. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Thomson ('sometimes tenent in Whitchesters). Their children included: Margaret (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1729). The witnesses in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Scott. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Scott and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1724); and Mary (b.1726). John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Black in Hawick in 1715. John (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Clerk in Wilton in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Scott (perhaps in 1718, with no wife's name given in the record) and their children included: James (b.1719); Rachel (b.1723); William (b.1728); and Elizabeth (b.1731). Thomas (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk, with no mother's name given, may also be his child. It is possible he is the same man as the John whose wife was Elspeth Scott. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Hawick Shiel in 1721 and is 'coater in Fennick' in 1723. He married Janet Henry. They they had a son William baptised in 1721, on the same day as a child of another John (with the same witnesses), who was recorded as tenant in Hawickshiel. They also had an unnamed son baptised in 1723. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was recorded in 1728 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Oliver, for Robert Hardie and in 1729 when he witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Watson. He is also recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott 'junior surgeon'. He could also be the John who witnessed the wedding in Edinburgh for the same Walter, and hence was probably related to him. He is probably the John who in 1732, along with James Scott (probably the surgeon) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Watson again (suggesting perhaps that he was related to the Scotts of Burhead, like Watson's wife). Perhaps the same 'late Bailie' John witnessed a baptism for merchant Andrew Riddell in Hawick in 1738 (when another John appears to have been Bailie). In 1724 he was rebuked for his 'irregular marriage' with Anna, daughter of William Laing and Jane

Thorbrand, widow of John Watson (who had been Clerk to the Regality in Hawick). They were married in Hawick by John Middleton, with witnesses Andrew Turnbull (mason) and Walter Gledstains (lawyer); the inclusion of a Gledstains suggests they may have been adherents of the Episcopalian church. They had a child John (b.1728), with witnesses John Laing (surely related to his wife) and Robert Elliot (although it is not clear which one). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Kershope on Yarrow. In 1752 he was deceased when his only daughter Jean had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Priesthaugh in 1726 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Doecleuch in 1726 and 1729. His children included: Jane (b.1726); and John (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Outerside in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Deanburnhaugh in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There are several potential marriages and many children who could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at at Mains in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Todshaw in 1725 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was in Todshawhaugh in 1765 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. John (18th C.) tenant in Stirches in the mid-1730s, as recounted in evidence given regarding the division of Wilton Common in 1764. John (18th C.) son of William of Burnhead. In 1705 he became an apprentice feltmaker to Alexander Bowie in Edinburgh. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton. His snuff box is in the Museum, labelled 'John Scott in Kirkton – his box 1735'. It is unclear who he was. John (18th C.) recorded at Branxholme in 1734 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Presumably his family or his wife came from the Borthwick valley. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Bessy Goodfellow, who died in Hawick in 1787. Their son John was baptised in 1738, with witnesses John Telfer, 'Kirk Officer' and William Oliver, tailor. His may be the marriage with Janet Goodfellow recorded in Kirkton in 1743 (although the dates do not seem to match). He may be the same as the earlier tenant in Hawick Shiel of the same name (if he married twice). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Crawford and their children included: Agnes (b.1731); Janet (b.1733); and George (b.1735). John (b.1705/6) farm worker in the Hawick area. In about the period 1723–25 he was herd for Thomas Scott in Tandlaw. He gave evidence in 1764 at the court case for the division of Wilton Common and was 'servant to James Oliver in Ashybank' at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Magdalene Bowie in 1739 and their son John was baptised in 1741. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. Perhaps the same weaver witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe and for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill, and in 1726 for weaver Walter. In 1719 he was separately recorded as weaver and as Beadle; if this was not an error, then he is the same John as the Beadle. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Kay in 1739. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was possibly 3rd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester and Jane Turnbull; however, it is also suggested that that John was sent to the plantations after the 1715 rebellion (and hence was a different man). He was factor to Capt. John Rutherford of Edgerston. His lands were valued at £33 6s 8d in the 1740s. He married Helen, daughter of Thomas Oliver of Ashtrees. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. The lands were valued at £33 6s 8d in the 1740s. These would later pass to his grand-nephew Dr. James Robson-Scott. His children included: Adam, who became Laird of Ashtrees; and Thomas, who became Laird of Peel and married Esther Turnbull. John of Lees (d.bef. 1763) apparently hereditary owner of the lands of Lees in Wilton. He may be the son of John in Lees who was baptised in Wilton in 1708. A 1738 letter exists in the National Archive, sent from him in Midhurst, Sussex to Mrs. Margaret Scott of Horsleyhill (perhaps his sister), mentioning that he intends to deliver an Episcopal sermon at Hassendean Kirk (long ruined by then) and mentions Scott of Burnhead (presumably Robert) not replying to his requests for 24 years of teind and rent. He was surely related to the Scotts of Burnhead. In 1763 Christian Scott, widow of John Norville was his eldest sister and executrix. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew, who was therefore probably related. He was probably the junior of 'John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers' who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. In 1742 he witnesed baptisms for shoemaker Thomas (who was probably related) and for flesher William Renwick. In 1743 he witnessed baptisms for carrier John Pott, for tobacconist William Saddler, tailor Walter Rae, Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and Robert Fowler in Sea Croft. In 1744 he witnessed a further baptism for shoemaker Thomas, while he and Thomas together witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell 'at Park'. He also witnessed 3 baptisms in 1745, one for the Town Piper William Brown, another for William Wilson 'messanger' and the last for carrier John Pott, along with shoemaker Thomas. His name is given first and hence Thomas was probably his son or younger brother. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Waugh and his wife Margaret Scott (who was possibly related to him) in 1757. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for Francis Gledstains in 1725. He may also be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver John Elder in 1760 and for weaver Robert Stevenson in 1762. All of these witnessings suggest that he was an elder of the Kirk. He may be the shoemaker who married Henrietta Hope in Hawick in 1724. He was probably related to other shoemaking Scotts (e.g. the earlier and later Johns). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Walter (b.1731) and Walter (again, b.1735). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); and Robert (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Appletreehall in 1744. He married Magdalene Scott and their children included: Robert (b.1740) and John (b.1741), baptised in Ashkirk; and Walter (b.1744), baptised in 1744. The witnesses in 1744 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. He may be the same as the John who married Magdalene Bowie in Ashkirk in 1739. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son John was baptised in 1743. John (18th C.) recorded in 1740 as 'Hynd at Crumhaugh'. He married Grizel Elliot in 1730 and their children included William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were Rev. James Mason of St. Boswell's and Grammar Schoolmaster James Anderson; it is unclear what the connection was. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Elliot and their son Robert was baptised in 1728. It is possible that theirs was the marriage recorded in 1722 (with no wife's name listed). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1742 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be related to the later Scotts who were at Broadlee Burnfoot and Broadleeshiel. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ashybank in 1742 and as herd at Ashybank in 1749. John Scott was his farm servant in 1764, when he gave evidence in the coutr case regarding the division of Wilton Common. His children included Robert (b.1742) and Adam (b.1749). Other children baptised in Cavers Parish around the same time are probably his. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Giddenscleuch in 1749. He married Margaret Riddle and their children included John (b.1749). He may have been related to David, who was at Giddenscleuch a little earlier. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at East Highchesters in 1742 when his daughter Christian was baptised. It is possible this is the same man as the tenant of Highchesters Mill, if he had an earlier marriage. He may be the same John who was at Whithope in 1735 when his son John was baptised. There were several other children baptised in Roberton who could also be his. John (18th C.) recorded being at Winnington Rig in 1746. He was a witness in Hawick for merchant Gideon and his wife Sussana Scott. He may have been related to one member of this couple. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 (along with another John, shoemaker) and another in 1746 for carrier James Oliver. John of Belford (18th C.) son of Charles and grandson of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. His mother was Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. In 1738 he tried to claim the Lordship, after the death of his distant relative, Alexander, 6th Lord Rutherford. He supported the Jacobites in 1745, meeting Charles at Kelso. As a result of this support he later lost his estate, and was never able to claim the peerage. He paid the window tax for Belford (in Morebattle Parish) in the period 1748–59. He is probably also the 'Sir John' whose property in Morebattle was valued at over £500 in the 1740s. However, it is possible he was the John 'of Palacehill' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Marion, daughter of Alexander Baillie from Ashiestiel. They had 5 daughters, the eldest being Agnes, who married Thomas Cockburn of Rowchester (in Berwickshire). John (18th C.) recorded as a 'wool comber' in 1730 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick. In 1735 he was recorded receiving a Burgess ticket gratis. It is unclear why this happened, but perhaps he had been brought in from outside Hawick to stimulate the manufacturing of yarn. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John of Weens (d.bef. 1777) son of John of Weens. He is probably the 'younger of Weems in ye parish of Hopkirk' recorded in 1712 when his daughter Janet 'begoten in ye aforesd parish in fornication' was baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert Hardie and John Craw ('fowler' in Branxholme Town). In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. In 1733 he married Marion (or 'Mary'), 3rd daughter of William Elliot of Harwood. His estate was valued at £200 in the 1740s. In 1744 he sold the lands of Weens to John Armstrong with the consent of his wife. Marion was a widow in 1777 when she had a discharge to her brother Henry. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738 (when he is recorded being 'of Weens'). Other children baptised there who may have been his included Elizabeth (b.1734), Margaret (b.1736), Henry (b.1739), Christian (b.1741), an unnamed son (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). John (18th C.) married Ann Thorbrand in Ashkirk in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Jean (b.1744) and John (b.1745). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Chisholme and their children included: Thomas (b.1748); Isabel (b.1749); John (b.1751); Janet (b.1754); Thomas (again, b.1757); and Sarah (b.1759). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Crawhill in 1751, 1759 and 1764. He married Helen Scott in 1750 (with a marriage of a couple having the same names also recorded in 1744) and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1750); Susanna (b.1751); James (b.1753); Elizabeth (b.1755); John (b.1757); Gideon (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); John (b.1762); Helen (b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Margaret (b.1768); John (b.1771); and Christian (b.1773). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and John Scott, in 1759 were Thomas and Robert Scott (who are likely to have been related to him and his wife) and in 1764 were John Scott and John Hart. John (18th C.) mason in Ashkirk. He married Helen Tait in 1761 and their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); Walter (b.1767); Alexander (b.1769); Elspeth (b.1772); John (b.1775); Alexander (again, b.1777); and Jean (b.1779). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1764. He could be the John of 'Milling [probably 'Milma'] alias Lees' whose lands in Wilton Parish were valued at £52 in the 1740s. He married Jean Douglas and their children included: Mary (b.1760); Esther (b.1762); Marjory (b.1764); William (b.1767); Robert (b.1769); Agnes (b.1772); and Jean (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Easton and Thomas Reid. John (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as 'Herd' in 1767 (probably his occupation, but it might instead have been a nickname). He married Helen Henry in Ashkirk in 1757 and their children included Alexander (b.1767). The witnesses in 1767 were John Rieve and Thomas Laidlaw. He was already deceased in 1781 when the death of his wife was recorded in Hawick. He may have been related to John 'the Herd' recorded in 1708. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766 he married Euphan Ruecastle. Their children included: John (b.1767); Walter (b.1768); John (again, b.1770); and Elizabeth (b.1771). John (18th C.) tenant in Highchesters Mill. He married Beatrix Thomson in 1756 and she died in 1797, aged 66. Their children included Archibald (b.1756), William (b.1762), Beatrix (b.1764), John (b.1777) and Mary (b.1772). Other children baptised in Roberton Parish that may have been his include Margaret (b.1760) and Nelly (b.1768). He died at the age of 50 (although not in 1748, as reported). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. He may have been related to the Robert who was at Highchesters Mill in the 1740s. John (d.bef. 1763) younger son of Robert of Davington, brother of James and William. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, although his branch failed in the male line. He was an attorney in Canonbie. He married Isabel, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children included: Robert, in the Seaforth Regiment in the American War, and also in India; James, moved to Canonbie; William, married Ann Little and killed in a quarry accident; John, also at Canonbie; probably Francis; Jane; and Margaret.

John (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill, probably the son of John, born in 1725. He married Mary Dodds in 1755 and they had an unnamed child in 1758. John of Gorrenberry (d.1785) son of Charles of Gorrenberry. He was a doctor in the London area. He was recorded as a doctor on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jean Fox, who secondly married Charles Fox of Chacomb and died in 1820. Their children included: Francis (b.1768), who died in infancy; and Charles, M.D. (d.1794). The family are buried in Bromley, Kent. John (18th C.) descended from the Scotts of Synton, through millers at Boosmill on Ale Water, who also farmed at Dimpleknowe, and then moved to a mill on Rule Water. However, Keith Scott also suggests he was a son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and at Roughheugh. He himself became miller at Hummelknowes, and later married the widow Henderson, tenant of the mill. In 1755 he was recorded as miller at Hummelknowes, with wife Jane Scott. He was also recorded at Hummelknowes Mill in 1761. Children, baptised in Cavers, who were probably his include: Margaret (b.1751); George (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); and John (b.1761), who was also tenant in Hummelknowes. It is unclear if the William of Hummelknowes who paid the window tax in 1748 is an error for his name or was perhaps a relative. John (18th C.) Town Treasurer listed in 1734. He may be the same as Bailie John or one of the other contemporary men with the same name. In 1734 there is a record in the Treasurer's book that he paid his son for joinery work on the lofts of St. Mary's Kirk. In 1737 the Treasurer's book records money 'paid to my wife when ye workmen went to see where ye brige should be'; this suggests he may have been involved with the building of Teviot Brig, and may be the same man as Bailie John. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Newton in 1733. He married Margaret Dryden in 1731 and their children included: Margaret (b.1733); and Jean (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 were Robert and William (who were probably related to him). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself when his son Hugh was baptised in 1737 and when his son Charles was baptised in 1742. He may be the weaver John who was in Cavers in 1744 when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) shepherd at Dryden. He was probably related to the John, shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot, recorded in 1694. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and John (b.1749), born in Cavers Parish. The witnesses in 1739 were Robert Elliot of Rigg and Walter Scott at Commonside. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1736. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Aitkin in 1730. Their children included: Helen (b.1732); Helen (again, b.1738); John (b.1740); and Agnes (b.1743). The witnesses in 1732 were confusing both also John Scott (Senior and Junior)! Bailie John (18th C.) referred to as 'younger' when Bailie in the 1730s (suggesting that he may have been son of another John). He could be the John 'Junior' who along with John 'Senior' witnessed a baptism for another John in Hawick in 1732. He was Magistrate in 1738, when plans were laid for building Teviot Bridge. Also in 1738 he witnessed a baptism of James Weir (who was Town Clerk). Along with William Tudhope he arranged for the bond to pay for construction of the bridge. He was Bailie along with James Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He may be the ex-Bailie John who, along with Thomas Turnbull and Rev. Partick Cunningham, sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1740s. He was listed as 'late Baillie' when he witnessed baptisms for wright James Winthrope in 1740, Walter Scott of Newton and merchant Andrew Riddell in 1743, mason Andrew Wilson in 1744 and writer James Weir in 1745. He was recorded in 1747 when the tradesmen were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after taking down the kirk bell. He may be the Bailie John who witnessed a baptism in 1757 and another in 1759 for tailor James Gledstains. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He may be the John who was still a Bailie in the 1760s. He could be the Bailie James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms for Richard Purdom and Jane Scott (perhaps his daughter) in 1762, 1764, 1766 an 1773; in 1762 the entry may say 'skinner' (but is hard to read). He may be the tailor who witnessed a baptism for William (perhaps a relative) in 1766 and who also hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. He is probably the Bailie John who, along with Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, witnessed a baptism for the younger Thomas Turnbull in 1763. John (b.c.1719) resident of Wilton and Hawick

Parishes. He spent 13 years as tenant of Galalaw along with his brother Thomas, leaving in about 1751. He was recorded living at Galalaw in 1746. By 1764 he was 'residenter in Flex' when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of part of Wilton Common. He married Helen Easton in Wilton in 1746. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746, with witnesses John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1744 and 1747 he was living at Netherhall. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1733 and their children included: John (b.1739); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and Robert (b.1750). The witnesses in 1744 were 2 James Scotts and in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. John (18th C.) recorded in Deanbrae in 1759 when he hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John younger of Synton (d.bef. 1765) eldest son of Alexander of Synton. He is probably the 'John Scott of Sinton' whose lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £256 in the 1740s. In 1735 he married Mary, only daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre (and grand-daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk). However, he died before his father, his only son Alexander succeeding to the Synton estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairbairn, Schoolmaster at Galashiels; she died in 1815. John (b.c.1749) son of James and Margaret Legerwood. He was a 'tacksman' at Roughheugh in Wilton Parish. John (1749–1824) miller in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. He is probably the John, miller in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty', 1758–c.92) Thomson in 1767, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and St. Boswell's parishes; however, another marriage of the same couple appears to be recorded in Hawick in 1770. Their children included: James (b.1771); Dr. William (1773–1884), surgeon who made his fortune in the West Indies; James (b.1776); Ann (1778–1852), who married miller John White; Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1782); Beatrix (b.1784); Elizabeth (1786–1853), who married Thomas Wemyss; Robert (b.1789); and Jane (b.1790). The witnesses in 1773 were James Tudhope and James Turnbull, in 1776 were Walter Purdom and Robert Thomson, in 1778 were William 'Masen' and Walter Purdom, in 1784 were stockingmaker William Thomson and Session Clerk James Inglis, and in 1789 were John Henderson and another John Scott. An unnamed child of his died on the last day of 1790 (at the same time as the child of under-miller Adam Jardine, suggesting there was perhaps some disease in the household). Probably the same John married Ann Boyle in 1795 (recorded in both Hawick and Kelso Parishes) and in 1796 made an application to the Barons at the Exchequer Chambers in Edinburgh in respect of the estate of his deceased wife. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Aitken and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children (all baptised in Hawick Parish) were: William (b.1757); John (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Isobel (b.1761); Beatrix (b.1763); Jane (b.1765). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Thomas Laidlaw and weaver Charles Miller, and in 1765 were Walter Burn and Archibald Henderson. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1751 and 1758. Perhaps the same John 'in Boonraw' was among those selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He married Margaret Henderson in 1751 and their children included: John (b.1751); John (again, b.1752); James (b.1754); Helen (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Thomas (b.1762); and James (b.1764). Scott and in 1758 were Robert Ormiston and George Scott. John (18th C.) married Martha Rae in Ashkirk in 1759. John (18th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster in Southean in 1759. When he started or finished is not known, but Thomas Turnbull was master until 1751 and William Preston took over from at least 1770. There was a John Scott who attended Edinburgh University in the years 1753–58, who may be the same man. John of Gala (1732–85) son of Hugh, he was 6th Laird. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still 'junior'). He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants in the period 1778–79. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, only daughter of George McDougall of Makerstoun. Their children were: Elizabeth; Col. Hugh, who succeeded; Barbara (1764–1844); Adm. Sir George (1769–1841); and Col. John (1774–1832), whose eldest daughter Maria Sarah Makdougall inherited Makerstoun. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1762 and Boonraw in 1764 and 1767. In 1760 he married Margaret Lorraine, who was from Yarrow. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); twins William and John (b.1764); Helen (b.1767); and Janet (b.1768). The witnesses in 1762 were Thomas

Scott and Robert Scott and in 1764 were Robert and Walter Ormiston (probably both in Boonraw). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1769), James (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), John (b.1783) and Rachel (b.1786). The witnesses in 1771 were Robert and James Harkness. The witnesses in 1783 and 1786 were the whole congregation. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1780. He married Betty Martin in 1779 and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1781); Robert (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); Margaret (b.1791); Andrew (b.1797); and Thomas (b.1798). The witnesses in 1780 were James Martin and James Scott (probably related to his wife and him). It is possible he was the weaver John whose child's burial is recorded in 1799. John (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. The same piece of land was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1786. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Mary (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); and Elizabeth (b.1788). Given the forename coincidence he may also have been father of Charles (b.1783), who emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1780 and 1785 when his children Nelly and Ann were baptised. Probably the same John was at Harden in 1788 and 1789 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. There are several marriages in Roberton around this time that could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He is surely related to the cooper James, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. Perhaps he is the same as the John who married Jane Irvine and was living at Muselee in 1792. John (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1780. Their children included Isabel (b.1782). John (18th C.) shepherd in Hobkirk Parish. He married Isabel Blaikie and their son Adam (who was also a shepherd) was baptised in 1782. Several other children baptised in Hobkirk around this time may also have been his. John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Borthwickbrae according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1790–91. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Irvine in Roberton in 1781. Their children included Margaret (b.1792), baptised in Roberton; and Mary (b.1799), baptised in Ettrick Parish. John (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. His daughter Sarah died in 1798. John 'Gover' (d.bef. 1809) Hawick resident whose wife Betty Cunningham died in 1795. The death of his daughter Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be related to the later 'Gover'. John (18th C.) resident of Weens in 1790 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Sir John of Ancrum (1757–1812) son of John, who was 3rd son of Sir John, 3rd Baronet of Ancrum. He was born at Longnewton. His father succeeded to Craigentinnie in right of his mother, taking the additional surname of Nisbet. He became the 5th Baronet of Ancrum, succeeding his uncle Sir William. He was a Cornet with the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, then with the Horse Grenadiers and 17th Foot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to 2 copies of Burns 'Edinburgh Edition' in 1787. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 (when described as 'once Aide-de-camp to the late General Mackay, Commander-in-Chief, but now not employed. At present unfit for business'. In 1794 he was appointed Major-Commandant with the Roxburgh Cavalry, later being promoted to Colonel and travelling with them to Ireland. He (as well as his mother, Mrs. Scott Nisbet) paid tax for having both male and female servants in the period 1778–91, and just himself from 1792–97. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the period 1792–98 was taxed for owning a carriage. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1799 he was on the Lieutenancy Committee in Roxburghshire. He was recorded as owner of an estate in Ancrum Parish valued at more than £2000 in 1788 and 1811. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810, and presented them with a snuff mull, which was used at dinners long afterwards. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1792 he married Harriet, daughter of William Grahame of Gartmore. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; Harriet, who married George Oldmixon; Elizabeth, who married Col. de Fevelas; Margaret; and Lucy. He was buried in Old

Greyfriars in Edinburgh. John, W.S. of Midgehope (1757–1803) 3rd son of William of Woll and brother of Charles. He was apprentice to lawyer Cornelius Elliot. In 1780 he received the superiority of lands in Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, but renounced them again in 1791. He also acquired the estate of Glenormiston in Peeblesshire. He was apprenticed to Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and became Writer to the Signet in 1784. In 1782 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Caverhill. His children were: William of Teviot Bank; and James of Ellem. He could be the Edinburgh lawyer who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1778. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, and described as being a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch, but having his 'real vote from his father'. Lieut. John of Synton (d.1796) only son of Alexander. He is probably the John of Synton who paid the land tax in 1785 for Synton and Synton Mill. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of Satchells (valued at £200). He was Lieutenant in the 57th Regiment and died in Grenada. He left no male heirs, but had 2 surviving sisters Catherine and Helen, the first of whom inherited the Synton estate. John of Horsleyhill, see Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill. John (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1779 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same John was a labourer in Denholm when his son Thomas was baptised in 1781. John (18th C.) recorded in Mosspaul in 1779 and 1782 and as innkeeper there in (probably) 1788. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1779); James (b.1782); and John (b.1788). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1780 and 1782 when his children Christian and Isabel were baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Cavers itself in 1787 when his son Paul was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded as miller in Denholm in 1789 and 1795 when his sons, both called Robert, were baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Johns, and was probably related to other Scott millers. John (18th C.) listed in the 1785–91 cart tax records as 'John Scott Post' and 'John Scott the Post', suggesting that he was deliverer of mail at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and their children included Benjamin (b.1769). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1771. John (18th C.) Heritors' Clerk in Hawick in the mid-1700s. According to Frank Hogg (writing in 1876) there was a saying 'Ye mun just wait on, as John Scott sais to the puir folk', because he told people asking for poor relief to come to th meeting themselves and wait their turn. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. He witnessed a baptism in 1775 for stocking-maker James Haldane. He is recorded as a shoemaker when his son Thomas died in 1787 and when his daughter Peggy died in 1794. He could be the John who married Elizabeth Aitkin, with children including Thomas (b.1782), Mary (b.1784), Margaret (b.1786) and Henrietta (b.1792). The witnesses in 1792 were Peter Young and Thomas Rae. John (18th C.) married Ann Hume in Roberton Parish in 1776. John (18th C.) described as 'analysts of Valuation Books'. He wrote an analysis of the land valuations of Selkirkshire for the Commissioners of Supply for that county in 1785 and another for Roxburghshire in 1788. These contain valuable details about how lands had changed hands between the 1643 and 1678 valuations, and then continuing through the 18th century. He may have worked in Edinburgh, but is seems fairly likely that he was associated with one of the local Scott families. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (b.1770s) resident of Weensland Mill. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. However, in 1800 his name was drawn to replace Adam Leyden, who had been found to be unfit for service; he was then stated 'not to be found' and Walter Dalgleish was selected in his place. He could be the John from 'Weanslandmiln' who is written about in a latter in 1822 when he ran a grist (i.e. corn) mill in the area of Bathurst, Canada, and married a daughter of Peter Hume, who had 3 uncles also living in that part of Canada. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Mains, which he leased from Walter Scott of Harden in 1770 for 7 years. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also owned 4 farm horses there in 1797. Additionally he may be the John recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf. In 1811 it is recorded that he had feued the part of Lilliesleaf Common known as Stotfield and Nolt-lair from William Riddell of Camieston. It is possible he is the same as John of Synton. It may be his son George who is recorded on the Militia ballot list in 1799. John (d.bef. 1787) resident of Hawick Parish. He was already deceased when the death of his wife Betty Lunn is recorded. John (18th C.) married Agnes Beattie in Roberton Parish in 1789. John (d.1809) tailor in Hawick. He was brother of Walter, wright, who was already deceased in 1809. He could be the tailor whose son John died in 1777. It is possible he was the 'John Wyndhead' whose son Walter the tailor died in 1810. John (1749/50–1828) Schoolmaster in Ancrum from 1777 until at least 1826. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825, suggesting that he had a connection to Hawick. It is recorded that Thomas Paterson spent most of 1813 running away from his school, which he described 'as a place of torture, pain and punishment'. His son George was on the Militia list for Ancrum in about 1800. The Schoolmaster at Ancrum from 1828 was also John, and hence perhaps his son. John (18th/19th C.) Schoolmaster at Lessuden. In 1792 he married Betty Oliver in Cavers Parish. It is possible he is the same man as the Schoolmaster in Ancrum. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Nanny (b.1794); John (b.1796); and Agnes (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Hislop in Hawick Parish in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whithope Mill (on the Borthwick), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He may have been related to Adam, who farmed Whithope at the same time and George, who was referred to in 1808 when his son George died. John (b.c.1760) son of George, tenant in Falla. His grandfather was tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He married his cousin Euphemia, daughter of Robert Scott, also miller at Roughheugh Mill. Their children were: Robert; George; John; Ann, who married D. Clarke; and Betsy. They may all have died without issue. He may be the 'John Scott Milns' who is recorded as owner of 3 horses in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably also the John 'in Hawick Mill' recorded in the 1810 inventory after the death of 'Auld Cash'. He is probably also the John of Hawick Mill whose wife's death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. John (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, he married Agnes Beattie in Roberton Parish in 1789. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1798), baptised in Ettrick; and Walter (b.1802), Isabel (b.1803) and Robert (b.1806), baptised in Yarrow. In 1841 his widow is recorded at Catslacknowe, with sons Archibald and Robert. John (1766–1850) son of Robert, who farmed at Whitchesters. He became tenant farmer at Boonraw. In 1796 he married Euphemia Elliot (also born in 1766), both being described as from Hawick Parish; both of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1850. Their children included: Robert, who also farmed at Boonraw; George, who married Mary Thompson and had 3 children, but died of smallpox while emigrating to America; William (b.1801), who became a doctor in Canada; and 3 children who died in 1809, Janet, Margaret and John. He and his wife (although her name is given as Elspeth) are recorded at East Boonraw in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Mein in Hawick Parish in 1796. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. In 1799 he was listed on the Militia ballot in place of Richard Renwick, who had been declared unfit to serve; however, he paid £10 forfeit. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior Mason Whinfield' in the Lieutenancy Book for Ashkirk Parish in 1797; in 1799 he was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish'. Probably the same mason John was living at Headshaw Mill in 1801 according to the Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. He may be the son of John baptised in Ashkirk in 1775. John (b.c.1770s) son to James in Denholmhill, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother James was also listed. Probably the same John was recorded as tenant at Denholmhill on the 1801 Militia ballot. John (18th/19th C.) married Ann Oliver in 1798, both being from Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in 1800. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scott tailors. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret (or Peggy) Tait and their children included Agnes (b.1805), Margaret (b.1808), Isobel (b.1811), Mary (b.1814). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Blyth and their children included James (b.1805), Thomas (b.1807), Thomas (again, b.1809), George (b.1811), John (b.1813), Agnes (b.1813). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Bartle and their son Gideon was baptised in 1823. John (18th/19th C.) resident of London when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is listed along with James, also of London, and it seems likely that the pair had a direct connection with Hawick. John (b.1769) 2nd son of Rev. William of Southdean and brother of Adam Scott-Elliot of Arkleton. His children included: William; Rev. Charles; Adam; Margaret; Sybil; Ann; Elizabeth; and Mary. There were apparently no grandchildren John of Whitehaugh (d.1823) 2nd cousin of Isobel and William, who had previously held the lands of Whitehaugh. He was son of James, wright in Hawick, who represented him in the legal proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He succeeded in 1759 on the death of Isobel, but was still a minor at that time. He was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765; he was 'representative of the late William Scot of Whitehaugh' and sasines were produced for William succeeding his father Walter. At that time the estate consisted of 'Whitehaugh, Heip, Timberside, Timberside-mill, or Skaw-miln, Greensidehall, and Leeheads', valued at £648 10s. In 1774 he witnessed a baptism for Bailie John Hardie. He is 'John Scott, Esq; Whitehaugh' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He was listed in 1788 (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) as owner of 'Whitehaugh, otherways called Wester Whitehaugh; and Wester Heap, otherways called Easter Whitehaugh', valued at £648 10s. He also sold the small piece of land called 'Souter's Acre', which was later owned by Thomas Laidlaw of Silverbuthall. He paid the Horse Tax at Whitehaugh from 1785–94. In 1797 he is recorded as owner of 2 horses in the Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He helped fund the extension to the old Wilton Kirk in 1800. About the same time he contributed (£15 15s) to the local subscription to support the war against France. He is recorded as a vassal of Buccleuch in correspondence of the mid-18th century in the Buccleuch archives. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 along with his son Walter. As well as the lands of Whitehaugh, he also owned the farms of Greensidehall and Broomhall. In 1767 he married Margaret (perhaps also known as Elizabeth), daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Chamberlain Newton; they were both in Hawick Parish. They had 12 children, although only 3 sons and 3 daughters survived childhood. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1768); Walter (b.1769), who succeeded; William (b.1770); Agnes (b.1772), who married Adam Stavert of Hoscote; Francis (b.1773), Major in the army, killed in the Peninsular War; James (b.1775), who succeeded Walter as the last Laird; Elizabeth, 'Betty' (b.1776), who was the 2nd wife of Gilbert Chisholme of that Ilk; Susanna (b.1778); William (again, b.1782); and Margaret (b.1783). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. Their children included: Margeret (b.1794); Margaret (again, b.1795); Christian (b.1798); and Robert (b.1799). John (b.c.1765) ploughman in Yarrow and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Helen (or 'Nellie') Scott and their children included: George (b.1792), who married Jean Stewart; John (b.1796), who married Christian Nichol; Margaret (b.1800), who married Robert Turnbull; Mary (b.1806), who married William Scott, thatcher and farm-worker at Synton; Walter (b.1809); and William (b.1812), who married Jane Currie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Timbersidemill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed owning 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Easter Essenside on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was also the farmer at Easter Essenside listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish'. John (b.c.1780) servant at Easter Essenside according to the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. He is probably distinct from John who was farmer at Easter Essenside from at least 1789. John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the 'J. Scott' whose letter from 'Askirkmill' in 1791 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His servant William Scott was recorded at Ashkirk Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the John, married to Anne Scott, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included: Nelly (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); Charlotte (b.1796); Alexander (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); James (b.1802); John (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1805); and James (b.1807). John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick, son of George. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire among the men balloted to serve in the Militia (there is another entry for a wright of the same name, which may be a duplicate and a third entry for John, wright with William Rodger). In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. Probably the same wright John was still listed on the ballot of 1801. He was probably the son of wright George baptised in Hawick in 1776. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick, listed in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797, separately from 2 other men of the same name. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He is probably the John Scott, from Hawick Parish, who could no longer be found in 1800, so that Walter Dalgleish was selected in his place. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick with William Rodger, listed in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. In 1799 he was listed having been '(then) with Wm Rodger' among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Susan Oliver and their children included Margaret Hume (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) cooper and wheelwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the wright in Lilliesleaf whose son William was baptised in 1789. Agnes (b.1791), John (b.1793), Helen (b.1795), Susan (b.1798) and James (b.1800) were probably also his children. John (b.1772) possibly son of James, who was tenant at Denholmhill, where he was later tenant himself. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Blyth and Isabel Reid, who was born at East Middle. Their children were: Isabell (b.1802); Elizabeth, 'Betty' (b.1803); James (b.1805), who died in Australia; Thomas (1809–67), who may have died at sea; George (1811–96), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes (b.1813); and John (b.1813). They were baptised at the Burger Kirk in Hawick. He could be the John listed at Denholm Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. John (b.c.1770) farmer at Langbaulk. He is recorded there in 1841, along with John and Mary, probably his children. He was probably related to William, who was about the same age and also a farmer there. John (b.1770s) stockingmaker recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still on the list in 1801. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (b.c.1775) local hosiery employer, known as 'John the Turk'. He is probably the hosier who was Cornet in 1806. The nickname may have already been in the family, but he was known for reducing wages, having labour organisers (including James Hogg) imprisoned, etc. There is a record of him receiving help from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for purchasing a ribbed stocking frame in 1798. His attempt to reduce the price of men's stockings by 6 pence per dozen, through wage reductions, led to the first known strike of hosiery workers in 1817. He is listed as a manufacturer on the High Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, and seems to have been at 'Turk's Close', around No. 60 on the 1841 census (along with his wife Ann). He is probably the Hawick spinner of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1826 he received further help from the Board of Trustees for carding and spinning machinery. His house stood on the site of the Bridge Hotel. He married Ann Gledstains, last of her family in Hawick. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: Ann (b.1816); and John (b.1816), who died in 1819. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin's House in 1797, along with William. They were surely related to the later farmer at Martin's House, also called John. John (18th/19th C.) son of John. He took over from his father as tenant of Hummelknowes Mill. He is probably the John recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married a miss Deans and his children included John (also miller at Hummelknowes) and Walter (farmer at Hummelknowes). He died at Hummleknowes Mill. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of 'Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham's Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr'. This separate piece of the former lands of Rev. Cunningham was valued at £10 19s; it seems likely to have been land near the modern Allars Crescent. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns, and perhaps related to Walter, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham's lands. John of Ashtrees (b.1762/3) born in Oxnam Parish, he was son of Adam and grandson of John. He was descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was farmer at Woodhouse. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as tenant of 'Woodhouse &c.' when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Woodhouse in 1797. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded as proprietor of 'Ashtree, Woodhouse, Southdean' on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, and of 'Ashtree, Woodehouse' in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was 'Landed prop.' at Woodhouse, occupying 100 acres, with 550 acres of hill pasture and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Isabel Rae and among their children was Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron. In 1855 his executors sold the farm of Ashtrees to his cousin, Thomas Scott of Riccalton. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Turn according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799. John (b.c.1770s) labourer at New Mill according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Minto-hill-end' when he subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. John (b.c.1780) cabinet-maker who lived on the Mid Raw in 1841. He was living at Riddell in 1841 and at Riddell West Lodge in 1851. His wife was Betty and their children included Walter, Agnes, Margaret and Ann. John (1784–1860) born at Gripknowe in Kirkton Parish, son of John and Helen Renwick. He was an agricultural labourer, moving to Melrose Parish. He lived at Shielshaugh Cottage and also Abbey Street, where he served as Abbey Keeper. In 1815 in Ancrum he married Beatrice (1792–1836), daughter of William Boa and Beatrix Scott. Their children were: Rev. John D. (1817–95), who died at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada; Catherine (1821–99), who also emigrated to Canada; William T. (1828–95), lived in Bruce County, Ontario; James (1828–97), who died in Manitoba; Rev. Peter (1830–1908), also in Ontario; Robert (1832–1900), also Ontario. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet or Jessie Young in Glasgow in 1801. His wife was daughter of Rev. Dr. John Young. Their children, baptised in Hawick were: Thomas (b.1802), who was a teacher; Helen (b.1805); and John Young (b.1807), manager of the Hawick Gas Works and miller at Hawick Mill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Riccalton (1785–1858) younger son of Thomas of Peel. He was tenant farmer at Lethem, jointly with his brother Thomas. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was probably the John recorded at Letham among subscribers to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was elected as an honorary member at the first meeting of the Jedforest Club, and arranged to have the club coats made out of Cheviot wool. In 1829 he bought Riccalton from the daughters of the Duke of Roxburghe, also purchasing the superiority. He then became an ordinary member of the Jedforest Club. In 1855 he bought Ashtrees from the trustees of John Scott, tenant of Woodhouses (and a distant relative). He died unmarried, leaving Ashtrees to his nephew, Dr. James Robson, and Riccalton to his nephew, John Elliot (2nd son of his sister Helen). He may be the Scott of Riccalton recorded as owner of Middles Knowes in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. John (b.1787/8) born in Southdean Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Hayknowe in 1841. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd at Elliotsfield and in 1861 at Wauchope Burn, along with his wife Margaret from Jedburgh. century. He was listed there among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was farming 700 acres and employed 18 labourers. It is said that he and his sons were instrumental in changing the way farming was done locally, turning hill farms into half-arable farms. He married Agnes Culbertson (from Morebattle) and their children included: William (b.1821), who succeeded to Timpendean; Thomas (b.1819); James (b.1823); Robert (b.1826); George (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); and Elizabeth (b.1833). John (b.1788/9) farmer at Longrow in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 260 acres there. His wife was Jane and their children included Archibald, Mary, Thomas, Jane, Elizabeth, Ann, Helen and John. John (b.1788/9) from Canonbie, he was an innkeeper in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was farmer at Langraw and in 1851 was farming 260 acres there ('worked by family'). He kept the Commercial Inn in the 1860s (the same as the Liddesdale Hotel on Douglas Square). His wife was Jane G. Ballantyne of Whithope. Col. John of Woll (b.1790) youngest surviving son of Charles of Woll. He was 'of Ravenswood' before the death of his brother Charles Balfour in 1838, and the relinquishing of Woll by his nephew Charles Scott-Plummer. He thus gained Woll in 1839, and sold the estate in 1863 to a Mr. Ainslie. He was recorded at Woll in 1841, along with his wife, 2 daughters, a governess and 3 other domestic servants; he was then 'late E. I. Compys. Service Pen'. He married Clementina Marianne, daughter of Edward Shaw. They had 2 daughters: Clementina (b.1829), who married John Henry Durbin; and Elizabeth (b.1831), who died in 1883. John of Gala (1790–1840) only son of Col. Hugh, he was 9th Laird. Like his ancestors he served as Baron Bailie of Galashiels. He became one of Sir Walter Scott's closest friends. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. In 1820 he married Magdalen, daughter of Sir Archibald Hope of Craighall and Pinkie. Their children were: Maj. Hugh, who succeeded; Capt. Archibald (1827–70), who died without issue; Elizabeth; and Isabella. John (b.1791/2) son of John, with his mother being a Deans. He was miller at Hummelknowes Mill, like his father before him. He was recorded as miller at 'Hublknows' in 1851, with his brother Walter as farmer. He was still listed as miller there in Slater's 1852 directory. He was unmarried. Sir John of Ancrum (1798–1814) son of Sir John, he was 6th Baronet, but only briefly. He was born at Athlone, while his father was serving there with the Roxburgh Cavalry. He joined the Navy and died on board H.M.S. Rhine at age 16, having succeeded his father only 2 years earlier. However, he was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was succeeded by his brother William. John (b.1795) youngest son of William, farmer at Singlie, and Margaret Pott. He became a physician in Edinburgh and is referred to in glowing terms in Riddell-Carr's 'Border Memories'. He had one son, William Henry, also a physician, who died aged 24. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Aitchison and their children included: Sarah (b.1819); John (b.1821); Walter (b.1823); and William (b.1825). John (b.1796/7) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Nook Haugh and in 1851 and 1861 was a road contractor at Whinfield. Adam (b.1833), Helen (b.1835), Janet (b.1837), Elizabeth (b.1839) and Jane (b.1841). He was presumably related to the William and John who were recorded as farmers there in 1797. He could be the John born to James in Cavers Parish in 1792. John (b.c.1795) joiner at Riddell. He was living at Riddell East Lodge in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Margaret (or Mary) and their children included Margaret, Francis, Andrew, John and George. John (b.1797/8) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1861 he was at 35 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Murray, daughter of the tenant farmer at Whisgills (probably Thomas); she died in 1861, aged 61. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1819–32); Archie; Thomas; David (1828/9–1911); Janet (1830–32); and Janet (again, b.1834/5). His grandsons farmed at Wolfehopelee. John (b.c.1805) flesher on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street, along with Charlotte, possibly his sister. John (b.1805/6) from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Harwood on Teviot. He was there in 1851, farming 750 acres. He was unmarried. John of Teviot Bank and Rodono (1809–67), W.S., son of William. His grandfather was John and his great-grandfather William of Woll. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Gilbert Laurie Finlay. He became Writer to the Signet in 1832. He became a Roxburghshire J.P. and was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded to Teviot Bank and sold it in 1854 to Agnes Scott, widow of his uncle James Scott of Ellem. He purchased the lands of Riskenhope from George Pott of Dod and Chapelhope from John Gray Henderson of Abbotrule, these being on the banks of St. Mary's. He renamed the land Rodono, after the ancient barony there, and built a mansion house, but died before it was completed. In 1863 he presented the household expense book of Mrs. Bennet of Chesters to the Museum, along with manuscripts of Rev. Hardie of Ashkirk's sermons, a letter from Rev. Thomas Boston and a stirrup-cup used by Mrs. Turnbull of Knowe. In 1850 he married Anne, 2nd daughter of Henry Singleton of Belpatrick, County Louth. They had no family. He was compiling a history of the Scotts of Woll and others when he died, leaving a manuscript entitled 'A Genealogical Memoir of the Scotts of Thirlestane with Genealogical Notes of other Families of the Name of Scott'; three typed copies of the extensive manuscript are lodged in libraries (one in the National Museums of Scotland). They are a valuable source of information gathered together on branches of the Scott family through the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. He died in Marienbad, Czech Republic, where his widow had a church erected in his memory in 1879. His wife died in 1891. There is a portrait of him by John Watson Gordon in the collection of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty's Signet. John (b.1806) youngest son of Charlie of the Crescent, he was uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. His father sought a position for him with the excise, and got the support of Scott of Harden, claiming that they were distantly related. He claimed to be 2nd cousin of Lady Ogilvy, who was also called the Duchess of Airlie; this supports the family claim that his great-grandfather had married a daughter of Charles Ogilvy. He may have moved to Argyll for a while. He married Catherine Watson and their children were: Agnes, who married Richard Johnson, bank clerk in Liverpool; George, bank clerk in Edinburgh; and 3 other children who went to Australia. After his wife died he moved to Essenside, with his niece, Mrs. John Douglas, keeping house for him. John Young (1807–80) son of John and Jessie Young, he was grandson of Rev. Dr. John Young. His wife could be the 'Mrs Scott, Slitrig Crescent' who in 1859 donated to the Museum an aurochs horn found at Milsington Moss, as well as a large ram's horn. Lord John (1809–60) see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John of Synton (19th C.) see John Corse Scott. John (b.c.1800) cooper in Lilliesleaf. In 1836 in Hawick he married Ann Miles and their daughter Christian was baptised in 1836. It is possible that he was the John living on Needle Street in 1841, with Chistina (likely his mother), Isabel, Margaret, Janet, Andrew and Walter (probably siblings), along with Bella, Christian (probably his daughter) and James Williamson (son of Margaret). John (19th C.) Treasurer and Secretary of Liddesdale Curling Club in the 1860s. He was Cornet in 1853, the last year that the old racecourse on the Moor. He returned to Hawick for the 1881 Common Riding. He could be 'the Gover' who was recorded winning foot races at the Common Riding of 1862, like he had done many times in the past. He was Chairman of the Race Committee and Steward at the Races (e.g. in 1873), as well as being a Town Councillor. In 1887 he wrote an account of his early memories of the Common Riding for the Hawick Express. His nickname reportedly came from his father's penchant for using the word 'gover' (meaning a stupid or aimless person). In 1861 he was an unmarried 'Tweed Foreman' living at 5 Teviot Crescent with his aunt Margaret Scott as his housekeeper, and also his young cousin Charlotte. He was probably the John, son of James, born in Wilton Parish – 'Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van' [HI]. John (1831–86) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton.

He is probably the John Scott living at about the Cross Keys Inn in 1841 and 1851, with joiner and spirit dealer John Turnbull and Jeany Turnbull, senior and junior. Jane or 'Jeany' Turnbull (b.1819) was presumably the aunt who raised him, and likely the sister of his mother. He attended Minto School under Mr. Hamilton. Encouraged by his cousin Rev. James Duncan, he won many prizes in local flower shows as a boy. In the 1851 census he was listed as a stockingmaker, but very shortly after that he started an apprenticeship as a gardener, working in Jednburgh and Westmorland. He then became a gardener at the Royal Botanical Gardens in Edinburgh, being foreman of the propagating department from 1859, where he experimented with hybridization. He contributed 3 papers to the transactions of the Botanical Society. He also corresponded with the great botanist Sir J.D. Hooker. He moved to Calcutta Botanic Garden in 1864, where he became Curator of the Royal Botanic Garden, his passage to India being paid for by Darwin. However, he was also of a nervous and shy disposition, such that 'the condition of nervous tension in which he seemed to live was indicated by frequent nervous gestures with his hands and by the restless twisting of his long beard in which he continuously indulged'. John (b.c.1830) originally from Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably the thatcher, son of widow Mary, living at Dimpleknowe in 1851. He married Mary Scott in 1852 and their children, baptised in Ashkirk, were William (b.1852) and Jane (b.1854). He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Scott in 1775 (registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes) and whose children included: George (b.1776); Jane (b.1783); and Joseph (b.1785). Joseph (b.c.1790–bef. 1851) gun-maker and ironmonger at the Sandbed, listed on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He is also listed as a tinsmith there. In 1837 he was listed as a blacksmith and tin-plate worker on the High Street, with 'Joseph Scott & Sons' also being listed as ironmongers, gun-makers and tin-plate workers on the Sandbed. On the 1841 census he was at about 21 High Street and listed as a smith. His wife and daughter were still running the ironmonger's business in 1851. However, confusingly Slater's 1852 directory lists among the ironmongers 'Joseph Scott & Sons' on Teviot Square and Jane Scott on the High Street. He married Jane Veitch, apparently in Edinburgh in 1826. Their children included: Joseph (b.1828), who probably died young; and Elizabeth (b.1830). He is probably the Joseph born to Joseph and Peggy in Wilton in 1785. He is said to have purchased some bronze axeheads found at Minto Kames, and donated them to Kelso Museum. Joseph (b.1799)

In 1923 he published his compilation of Scott family history, called 'Scott, 1118–1923' (reprinted in 1969). When he was almost done with his work he discovered the unfinished study by John of Rodono; he then incorporated some of this information, and lodged 3 typed copies in library collections. In 1910 he married Rosina Marguerita, daughter of Cavalier V.A. Montaldi of Forest Hall. Kenneth (1953/4–) 'Ken' lawyer based in Denver, Colorado, but frequent visitor to Hawick. In 2017 he received the Mostar Peace Prize for his work investigating and litigating war crimes in the former Yugoslavia. He has also worked on cases in Somalia, the Lebannon and South Sudan. He has been an adjunct professor at the U.S. Air Force Academy, the University of Colorado-Boulder and Regis University. He first came to Hawick in 1998 when touring to investigate his Scottish roots, staying for the Common Riding that year. He was Callants' Club Chief Guest in 2015. Kentigern (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1337 when Edward III had him under his speciail protection since he had 'long dwelt at his allegiance in his realm'. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His forename is recorded as 'Quintigern'. Lady of Howpasley (16th/17th C.), presumably widow of the former Laird of Howpasley, who was either Walter or his son William. Neither her first name nor her maiden name are recorded. Assisted by Jean Scott of Satchells, she presided over a Council of War at Hawick Cross in April 1615, complaining that Sir James Douglas had taken lands at Howpasley, and urging a band of supporters to kill all the sheep there. About 60 sheep were slaughtered, in an act of spectacular barbarism, described as 'sic monstruous and unhard of crewaltie, as the lyk quhairof hes nicht bene hard amangist the wyld Irisch and savadge people'. Several of the perpetrators were subsequently hanged, although she escaped punishment, and the lands of Howpasley were soon afterwards back in her family's hands. Lancelot (16th/17th C.) soldier in the army in Holland, probably an officer. Capt. Walter of Satchells describes meeting him when he joined the army and hearing about his ancestors, the Scotts of Balweary. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded as 'Laurence Scot' in 1272/3 when he had a letter granting safe conduct from King Edward I so he could visit 'the threshold of St. Andrew the Apostle'. He was described as 'in Irvine' and hence may have been an ancestor of Lawrence of Harperrig. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) graduated from the University of Glasgow in 1509. Perhaps the same man is recorded in 1516 when 'Jonet Mur', a widow, protested in Glasgow that he had promised to marry her and hence she objected to his betrothal in Irvine to 'Isabella Mugumry'; however, Muir later retracted her statement. In 1519 he was 'Mr. Laurence Scot' when he witnessed an instrument in Irvine. Lawrence of Harperrig and Clerkington (d.1637), J.P., son of Hugh of Scotsloch. He was descended from a branch of the Scotts of Buccleuch who had moved to Ayrshire. Before 1592 he was apprenticed to Robert Scott of Knightspottie, Rector of Chancery, and became an advocate. He is probably the 'Lowry Scott, writer' who became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1601. In 1604 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in right of marrying Bessie, daughter of William 'Hoppringle', who was a Burgess. He bought Harperrig in 1605. In 1620 he was witness to a charter for the Earl of Buccleuch for the lands of Goldielands. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will. He may be the same advocate who was one of those representing a group of Scotts accused of slaughtering sheep at Howpasley in a trial of 1616. In 1617 he and his son-in-law James Scott were charged with assault. He represented the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 when he accused a number of Hawick men of cutting down trees on his land. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Pringle from Edinburgh. His children were: Sir William of Clerkington, who was one of the Lords of Session; James of Bonnington (in West Lothian); Lawrence of Bavelaw; Marion, who married James Scott of Vogrie, uncle to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit; Margaret, who married William Wallace of Shewalton; Agnes, married Patrick Kinloch; Joanna, married James Clerk; and Alison, married Peter Houston. In 1650 he was named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis. He was a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch 1658–59 and listed in 1661 as still owing money for the rentals for these years. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of Stephen Boyd of Temple. He secondly married Katherine Binning (who is recorded as his widow in 1673). The couple were granted the Barony of Corstorphine by Oliver Cromwell. His son Lawrence of Bavelaw was served as his heir in various lands in 1670 and 1673, and was in turn served by another son Charles in 1691. His children were: Lawrence (1643–79), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Binning; Marion; Ann; Margaret, who married Hugh Wallace, W.S.; Barbara; Janet; William (1647/8–90), who succeeded his half-brother Lawrence; Charles (d.1701), who succeeded his brother William; Hugh (b.1658); David (b.1660); Katherine; Barbara, who married Sir Roger Hogg; Eupham; Christian, who married Sir Alexander Brand; Marion; Janet, who married Michael Lumsden; Anna; and Agnes, who married Adam Fullerton, W.S. Lawrence (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 for Patrick Howburn. Perhaps the same Lawrence was cited in about 1640 for 'his sin of profaning ye Lord's-day by his untymous and excessive drinking'. Perhaps the same Lawrence had children baptised in Ashkik, including: Walter (b.1643), James (b.1646) and John (b.1649). Leticia (13th C.) recorded as surname 'Scot' in 1272, when she gave half a mark to have a writ 'ad terminum' at Westminster. Lilias (17th C.) daughter of Jean, who was sister of the last Walter of Crumhaugh (although these generations are quite uncertain). She married William Knox, servant to George, Lord Ross. She inherited parts of the Goldielands and Crumhaugh estates from her uncle Walter (along with her cousin Robert Scott of Glack). But these passed to another relative, Walter of Crumhaugh, in the early 1670s. Lilias (b.1835) daughter of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver. She married spinner Adam Murray and they emigrated to Canada, living in Ontario. They had a daughter, Jessie Murray Scott (b.1857), perhaps before they were married. They had a daughter Annie who maried William Roper (son of William Roper from Massachusetts and Ann, daughter of Robert Greenwood from Hawick); their daughter Annie Roper married her father's cousin William Maxwell, a son of Grace Maxwell, who was halfsister of Ann Greenwood. They also had a son George Stevenson Murray. Lucas (d.bef. 1270) recorded in 1242 as 'Lucas Scot mayor of Dunwich' in pleas in the county of Norfolk, relating to sacks of Scottish wool. He was probably related to Gerald, who was also listed. He is recorded as 'Luke the Scotsman' in a document from the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk in 1243. He is 'Lucas le Scot' of Dunwich in a court case in 1256 and another in 1258. He is further listed as 'le Escot' in a plea at Dunwich in 1258, and also as 'les Escot' of Dunwich in a document from Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His wife suffered some sort of infirmity, and there was a case against a surgeon called Reginald, whose goods they had kept when he tried to cure her; his son Richard is also mentioned. His son and heir Richard is recorded in another document in 1267/8. In 1260 he is 'Luke the Scotsman of Dunwich' in a case involving merchants from Hamburg. Ludovic (15th C.) merchant from Genoa, perhaps originally of Scottish origin. In 1447 there was an expense at Roxburgh Castle recorded to him and other Genoese merchants. Malcolm (13th C.) recorded as 'Master Maucolus de Scocia' when he paid fees at Oxford Unversity in 1277. He is referred to as 'Malcolmi dicti Scoti'. Mallie (d.c.1599) described as 'Maillie, relict of James Gilmour', portioner of Auchtermuchty in 1599 when her will was registered in Edinburgh. Margaret (13th C.) recorded York in 1254, when she had a writ of trespass. Margaret (15th C.) tenant of half of 'Nethir sannake' in Galloway in 1481, when her right was assigned to John Kennedy. Margaret (15th/16th C.) wife of John and mother of Alexander. She was a widow in 1499 when the East steading of Langhope was assigned to her and her son Alexander. And in 1501 the Middle stead was assigned to the pair. Margaret (16th C.) wife of Laurnce Huggan. She is recorded in 2 documents from Abernethy Parish in Perthshire in 1551, giving up her rights to the lands of 'Ovir Vestir Pitgrunze'. Margaret (16th C.) recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme, she was possibly a Scott. The entry states that payment is due 'to Thomas Hendrie in Selkirk, for claith furneist to Margaret of the Wallis'. This may have either been Woll in the Ale valley or Walls in Dryfesdale (where there were also Scotts). Margaret (d.c.1581) described as 'sometime spouse' to John of Dryhope when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1581/2. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts she came from. Margaret (d.c.1586) described as 'alias Brandlow, sometime spouse' to John Robertson, maltman, Burgess of Perth in 1586 when her will was registered in Edinburgh. It is unclear what her nickname referred to. Margaret (d.c.1589) described as 'sometime spouse to John Seytoun, mariner, in Northsyde of the bridge of Leith' in 1589 when her will was registered in Edinburgh. Margaret (d.c.1594/5) described as 'sometime spouse' to John Hogg in Carpow, Abernethy Parish, Perthshire, when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1594/5. She was probably related to John in Carpow and Robert and Thomas, portioners in Carpow. Margaret 'Dame Margaret' or 'Lady Margaret' nee Douglas (d.1640) daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She married Sir Walter in 1568 and had the work on Branxholme Castle completed after her husband's death in 1574; her name and initials are inscribed in the walls. In 1574 she was granted the 'ward and non-entry', as well as other fees due to her deceased husband, Sir Walter. She secondly married Francis Stuart, Earl of Bothwell (who was forced to flee the country and died abroad) before 1577; however, after their honeymoon the couple were not allowed to see each other because he was still very young. After this marriage she was often referred to as 'Countess of Bothwell'. Her factor in the lands of Milsington about 1580 was James Grieve. In 1580 she complained to the Privy Council (along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the sons and nephews of Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh; this involved her farms of Harwood, Slaidhills and Whitlaw. Additionally in 1580 her servant William 'Dwngelsoun' arranged for her to loan £60 Scots to Robert Scott of Alton, for the annual rent of his lands of the East Mains of Hassendeanburn. In 1581/2 she further complained against 15 thieves, who were declared rebels. She claimed ownership of estates of her husbands, including Bellendean, which had sheep stolen from them by a band of Elliots and Armstrongs in 1582. When the Earl of Bothwell was accused of treason in 1592 she intercepted the King in Edinburgh, pleading for mercy for her and her husband. Also in 1592 there was a complaint by Thomas, brother of Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst, who had been granted the liferent of the lands she had been granted by her first husband and subsequantly forfeited, had been denied the fees and duties by her chamberlains. She had a letter of protection from the King revoked in 1595 for misusing it, but had another given to her soon afterwards. In 1598 she is recorded in a contract with her son Sir Walter's tenants in Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) receiving a 'grassum' of 33 s 4 d every 5 years during her lifetime. In 1626 she is recorded as owner of half of the lands of Haughhead in Eckford Parish and was said to have lived there. Her children included: Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Margaret Scott, who was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane (but this is probably confusion with an earlier Margaret); Mary Scott, who married William Elliot of Larriston; Francis Stewart (b.1584); John Stewart; Frederick Stewart; Henry Stewart; Elizabeth Stewart (b.1590), who married James, Master of Cranston and was mother of William Cranston, 3rd Lord Cranston; Helen Stewart, who married John Macfarlane of that Ilk; Jean Stewart, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; and Margaret Stewart, who married Alan, 5th Lord Cathcart. She lived to a great old age (perhaps over 90) and is buried at Eckford. Margaret (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter of Burnfoot. She was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James 'Lethame' in 1616 in Hawick Parish Church. She is specifically said to have 'in the verie tyme of divyne service' struck him 'with ane mekle grite key of twa pund wecht in hir hand', making his head bleed within the church. Later, she was accused of assaulting James on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices, armed 'with lanceis, staulffis, swerdis, long kentis or grite treis', again wounding him in the head and giving his wife 'mony bauch and bla striakis'. Lastly she was accused of leading a group to James' house to attack him and his wife. Not appearing before the Privy Council she was denounced as a rebel. She later complained about not being informed that she should appear and after finding caution was ordered to pay James Lethem a fine of 10 merks. The origin of this dispute is not described. Presumably her own surname was also Scott, but it is unclear from what branch of the family she came. Margaret (b.c.1600) only daughter of 'Auld Wat' of Harden and his 2nd wife, Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswood of that Ilk. She married David Pringle, heir apparent of Galashiels and in 1625 secondly married Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun. The marriage contract with her brother Sir William suggested that she was still a minor in 1623. She received 'annualrent' of Makerstoun as part of the contract in 1625 and in 1632 renounced her right to the demesne lands of Smailholm to Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. Margaret 'Maggy Fendy' (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Harden and Mary, 'the Flower of Yarrow'. She married Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and Horsleyhill, 'Gibbie o the Gowden Garters' and their son William succeeded to Stobs. In 1643 she is recorded as mother of William when she was liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish valued at £666 13s 4d. She may also have been the 'Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill' who owned lands in Hassendean Parish valued at $637, also in 1643. She is probably the 'Lady Stobs' who was said to have refused to attend her parish church when the minister was an Episcopalian. It was said that her grandson Gilbert (later 1st Lord Minto) spent a lot of time in her company. Margaret (16th/17th C.) mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Francis' wife appears to have been Isobel, and so would have been her daughter. In 1639 there is a dispute in the Ashkirk Parish records between her and her son, apparently over access to the family seat in the Kirk. She claimed Francis had 'maliciously and unreverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat', while he claimed she had called him 'theif and traitour'. The precise nature of the dispute is not clear. However, she is referred to as 'sometyme in Castleside'. The resolution was that she 'would hear no reason' and so was charged to appear before the Selkirk Presytery. The fact that she was referred to as 'of Castleside' herself suggests that she was Margaret, daughter of George of Castleside, who was served heir to her father, along with their 2 sisters Janet and Bessie, in 1632. Margaret (17th C.) owner of the lands of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1643. She is recorded as 'Mar. Scott for Braidlies', valued at £160. Probably the same 'Goodwife of braidlie' paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. She was presumably widow of the former Laird of Broadlee. It is also possible that she was the same Margaret as the mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Margaret (d.1672) daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, and also related to the Scotts of Brieryyard. She married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiels and had at least 5 children, including William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. She may be the 'Mariota', daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who was served heir to her father's brother Simon in 1643. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Robert of Whitslade. In 1647 she was served heir to her father's lands of Ettrickhouse, Bowerhope and Dalgleish, all of which were contained in the Barony of Synton by annexation. Margaret (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Bessie and Agnes were served heirs to their 'foir grandsher' (probably great-gandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 as 'goodwife of Coudhouse', i.e. wife of Scott of Coldhouse (although her husband's name is unrecorded). James Henderson was found guilty of giving her 'a blow foragainst the heart'. It is possible she is the same woman as Marie of Coldhouse, recorded in 1663. Margaret (17th C.) resident of 'Crawknow' in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She is recorded as 'Margrat Scott in Brugh', suggesting that she was perhaps widow of a Scott who had farmed at nearby Brugh. Margaret (17th/18th C.) wife of James, who farmed at Borthaugh in the early 1690s. In 1696 and 1698 she herself was renting $\frac{1}{4}$ of Borthaugh and was then a widow. Her cautioners were Adam and Walter, farmers at Overhall, who were probably closely related. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving poor relief from Hawick Parish in the 1720s. Specifically she was given 4 shillings 'for a pair of spectekles'. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Margaret (b.1736) resident of Wilton Parish. The Session records for 1736 record the receipt of 'more of the valow' of her effects. Margaret (d.c.1782) widow who had her will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1783. Her surname is listed as 'Scott alias Brown' and she was from Hawick, Roxburghshire. It is unclear if she was a Scott or a Brown. Margaret 'Cripple Meg' (18th C.) recorded in 1781 when her daughter Margaret died in Hawick. Her nickname seems self-explanatory. It is unclear if Scott was her maiden or married name. Her daughter could be the Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1773, with no parents names given. Margaret (18th C.) housemaid at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Margaret (d.1815) daughter of Robert of Burnhead. In 1786 she married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton. She succeeded her brother to Burnhead following his death in 1795. She died without issue and was in turn succeeded by her cousin William Watson. Margaret 'Peggy' nee Anderson (b.c.1780) possibly the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Roberton Parish in 1770, she married Thomas Scott and lived at Deanburnhaugh. She lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s. She was described as being 'everybody's body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others'. She had at least 8 children in the period 1799–1819. In 1841 she was recorded living in Deanburnhaugh with her younger son Robert, together with James (probably her grandchild) and young teacher Thomas Amos. In 1851 she was living with her son Robert, daughter Isabella and grand-daughter Isaballa Rutherford. In 1861 she was living with her son Robert, granddaughter Christian Rutherford and great-grand-daughter Isabella Miller. Margaret (1809–23) daughter of Rev. David of Castleton. She was listed among subscribers to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Margaret Taylor (1848–1921) daughter of James, who was a carpenter from Roxburghshire, and perhaps from the area around Hawick. She grew up in Dundas, Ontario, attended the Toronto Normal School, and then taught at Pickering, Strathroy, Brantford and Ottawa. She was headmistress of the Toronto Model School and then the Toronto Presbyterian Ladies' College. However, in 1903 she set up her own school in Toronto, which she called 'Branksome Hall', probably after the fictional castle of Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', rather than the real castle of Branxholme. The name was suggested by Alexander MacMillan. She moved to Vancouver because of ill health, and died there. She was survived by brothers James and William (superintendent of emigration in Ottawa), and sisters Mrs. Conklin, Elizabeth and Jean. Maria see Mary, Countess of Buccleuch. Marie (17th C.) liferenter of Coldhouse in the 1643 county valuation, when her lands were valued at £40. Probably the same Marie was recorded as owner of lands in Hawick valued at £3. She was probably widow of the former Laird of Coldhouse (perhaps Peter, recorded being 'of Cowdhome' in 1654). It is possible that she was the Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres, who married Walter of Howford (who was connected to the Coldhouse family) in 1615. She may be the 'goodwife of Coudhouse' recorded in 1676. William of Coldhouse held these same lands in 1678 and seems likely to have been her son. Marion (d.bef. 1566) cousin of William of Balwearie, she was one of the ladies-in-waiting to Mary Queen of Scots. She was a businesswoman in her own right, who traded internationally through a factor in Dieppe. She firstly married Alexander Scott, Burgess of Edinburgh, secondly married Nichol Cairncross, merchant of Edinburgh, and thirdly married George

Henderson of Fordell, who was Provost of Edinburgh. Her children included: Agnes; Margaret, who was probably a royal nurse and married John Bellenden; Anne; and Janet. A rental book and book of hours belonging to her survive. Marion (d.bef. 1573) owner of a piece of land in Edinburgh that was near the Castle wall and the High Street. It was mentioned in a sasine for a neighbouring tenement in 1573, when she was already deceased. Marion (d.c.1591) described as 'sometime spouse to John Gibson, dwelling in Litill-Ardit, in Luchars, par. in Fife' when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1591. Marion recorded as resident of the lands of 'eister . . . ' [possibly Moormaw] in a decrete of 1607 against her, Robert of Burnhead and others. Her name is recorded as 'marein scot'. Given that she is explicitly named, it seemed likely she was a tenant and perhaps widow of the former tenant. Marion (17th C.) daughter of William of Fingland. She married William Wilson 'in Gulzeaneflat'. In 1662 she was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley. However, Howplasy passed shortly thereafter to Walter, son of her cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Marion Adamson (1886–1963) daughter of Peter, founder of Pesco's. When her father died she took over the house Norwood. She never married. Marjorie (d.c.1582) described as 'sometime spouse to umquhile Henry Broun, of the Horne' when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. Marjorie (d.c.1583) described as 'sometime spouse to Mr. Thomas Monorgund, in Argayth', Errol Parish, Perthshire, when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1583/4. Mark (d.c.1620) son of William in Haughhead in Eckford Parish. In 1594 he had a 'precept of clare constat' for his deceased father's lands, granted by Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh. His daughter Helen was retoured as his heiress in 1620 and married Robert Hall. Mark (17th/18th C.) recorded as drummer in Selkirk in 1708. He was given a salary in that year, including 3 pairs of shoes. Note that he had an unusual forename for a Scott at that time. Martin (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Martinus Scot' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501. Along with 'Willelmus Unys' he had his fine in Roxburghshire compounded. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. Martin (d.bef. 1609) merchant in Edinburgh who became a Burgess in 1585/6. He was already deceased and recorded as 'Mairtine' in 1609 when his eldest son George became a merchant in Edinburgh. Mary (16th C.) called 'the Flower of Yarrow', popularised in the ballad of the same name. She was said to be the daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope Tower and renowned for her beauty; in fact she was probably sister of Philip, and 2nd daughter of John of Dryhope, but presumably tales of her beauty had real foundation. In 1576 she married Walter Scott of Harden ('Auld Wat', the marriage contract still exists) and bore 4 sons and 6 daughters. She is there referred to as 'Marion', and was to be infeft in liferent in the lands of Mabonlaw as part of the contract, with Harden to pay to Dryhope 400 merks Scots. She is said to have served him his spurs when the larders were empty. Mary (16th/17th C.) wife of Simon of Bonnington. It is unclear if she was also a Scott. In 1617 she is 'Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun' when she complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts of Harden and others. She stated that she had several children, with only a son surviving (presumably Robert) who died at the age of 19 following injuries sustained through an attack by William Riddell, miller in Todrig Mill, who was supported by Walter Scott of Harden. She further complained that she and her grandchildren were attacked at their house at Newhouse (probably the place near Ettrickbridge), with the walls being undermined and collapsing, with the occupants narrowly escaping, then her nurse being assaulted, some of the small children being trampled underfoot by the assailants and her only milk cow having its udder deliberately injured. Later a larger group of Scotts 'all bodin in feir of weir, with swerdis, gantillatis, plaitslevis, and utheris wappomis invasive' demanded the keys to their tower of Newhouse and ousted them without their belongings in the middle of winter. They also forbade any of the 16 mills in Ettrick Forest from grinding her corn, only to be saved by Sir Robert Scott of Traquair offering his mill. She further complained that she still held the liferent of her husband's lands, and hence the Scotts of Harden should not be allowed to take her crops, with her having no means of livelihood or house for her grandchildren. She appeared personally before the Privy Council, but it was found that she had failed to prove the charges. Mary (1647–1661) Countess of Buccleuch, she succeeded her father, Francis, the 2nd Earl, at age 4, being served heir to all the lands and titles of the Scotts of Buccleuch, including the half Barony of Wilton, the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, the Lordship of Liddesdale, etc. She was also referred to as 'Maria' or 'Marie'. Her tutors and trustees were Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit, Sir William Scott of Clerkington, Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir William Scott younger of Harden, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, Gideon Scott of Highchester, John Scott of Gorrenberry, Patrick Scott of Thirlestane, Lawrence Scott of Bavelaw and Patrick Scott of Langshaw. There were disputes between the 'Lothian tutors' and the 'South Country tutors', as well as between Gideon Scott of Highchester and John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale (her uncle), who were trying to arrange for her marriage. There was also a great power struggle between her mother, Countess of Wemyss, and the appointed trustees for control of her and her sister Anne; Oliver Cromwell was enlisted in support, affirming that the daughters should be entrusted to their mother. During her minority Dalkeith house was occupied by Gen. Monck. She had a huge fine of £15,000 imposed by Cromwell for her father's support of Charles II, with the tutors pleading for a reduction in the amount. There were schemes to marry her to the sons of many noblemen, probably including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Lord Robert Kerr, a son of the Earl of Tweeddale, the son of Scott of Scottshall in Kent and the son of John Scott of Gorrenberry. She was in fact married in secrecy to Walter, eldest son of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, when she was 11 years of age (and he was 14), although there was an attempt to annul the marriage until she was at least 12! However, Cromwell died in this period, which complicated the legal challenges, although there continued to be machinations to control her future and that of her sister. She was never in good health, being regularly attended by doctors (who probably did more harm than good), with an arm infection that refused to heal. She went to London for the curing power of the King's touch, but the journey probably made her condition worse and then she caught measles on her return to Scotland. She died at the age of 13. The power struggles continued, with the last revision to her will giving family control to the Earls of Rothes and Wemyss, freezing out Sir Gideon of Highchester and her husband Walter of Tarras. She was succeeded by her sister Anne (or Anna) and was buried at Dalkeith. She was recorded in several deeds in 1663, although already deceased by then. Mary (17th/18th C.) sister and heiress of John of Headshaw. In 1681 she married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. She succeeded to the estate of Headshaw in 1691, there being no male heirs. This included Headshaw Mill and Dryden, as well as Crawknow and Clews. In 1696 she and her husband sold Headshaw to Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was involved in an 'action of relief' with Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1713. Her daughter Henrietta married Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She is also referred to as 'Marie'. Mary Lilias (d.1790) eldest daughter of John of Harden. She was sometimes known as the 'Flower of Yarrow', like her ancestor namesake. There was a portrait of her by Allan Ramsay, which hung in Hamilton Palace (transferred to Mertoun House), painted it is said for the Duke of Hamilton who was infatuated with her, although she was attached to the 2nd son of Scott of Scotstavert (who died, and she never married). She is also said to have had the song 'Tweedside' written about her, particularly the lines 'What beauties does Flora disclose! How sweet are her smiles upon Tweed! Yet Mary's still sweeter than those; Both nature and fancy exceed'. Mary 'Floor o Rankleburn' (18th/19th C.) married Thomas Smith, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. Her nickname came from her good looks, the story being that a gentleman visiting her father's house asked for her name, and said that since there was a Mary Scott 'Flower of Yarrow', she should be the 'Flower of Rankleburn'. Her daughter Mary married Robert Purdom. She also had several other children, including Peter, Patrick, Robert, Archibald, Thomas, Andrew, Margaret and Jane. Mary (18th C.) chambermaid at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Mary (b.1808/9) from Selkirk, she was school mistress at Deanburnhaugh. She is recorded there on the 1851 census. Matthew (c.1184–c.1230) recorded as 'Master Matthew de Scotia' in Paris in 1218, when he was examined for his suitability to teach as a Doctor of Theology. Based on the rules in Paris, he must have studied and taught in Arts for at least 8 years and studied theology for another 5 years. His origin is unknown, but he could be connected with one of the 2 Matthews of Aberdeen. He may have been a Chaplain in 1223. In 1223 he was in Scotland as 'Master Matthew Scotus' when he witnessed a royal charter at Selkirk. He may have witnessed some charters in the following years, although he is hard to distinguish from the earlier Matthew of Aberdeen, Probably the same man became the King's Chancellor by 1227. He then witnessed several royal charters, and was referred to as 'Scotus' the King's Chancellor in 1228 when he was elected as Bishop of Aberdeen, although he turned this down in favour of Dunkeld. He was also mentioned in a letter from Ralph Neville, Bishop of Chichester, in 1228. He visited Durham around this time, along with 'Master Henry Scot', Master Abel de Golin and Robert 'de St. Egidio'. He probably died before the next Chancellor was appointed in 1231; howver, it is possible he lived until the 1240s and was the same man as the later Matthew de Aberdeen. If he died in 1230, then this may have been before becoming Bishop of Dunkeld. He may be the same 'Master Matthew Scot' who was Archdeacon of Cleveland in York Diocese in the 1220s and who was given the Church of Simonburn in Durham Diocese by the Scottish King in 1228/9. Matthew (13th C.) listed as 'Mathæus le Scot' along with Walter and Adam from Chillingham for robbing a house in the area of Hebburn and Lynemouth. Matthew of Belstanerig (16th C.) mentioned in 1586/7 when his brother Alexander was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Matthew (17th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as 'Mathew if the bent in Tuchellaw'. He promised to pay John Brydon, bridlemaker in Selkirk for an unspecified reason. Matthew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as 'Mathou Scott, called Broid of Steill', and was probably associated with the lands of the Steele. May (d.bef. 1753) daughter of Walter of Whitehaugh and sister of William. Her name is sometimes written 'Mary'. When her brother died in 1750, she and her sister Isobel inherited the Whitehaugh estates, with the majority going to Isobel (who married Rev. William Somerville). There was also a claim by William's cousin James and his sons, with John eventually succeeding in 1759. She retained liferent of some of the estate. Her will from 1733 states that her surviving siblings should pay for 4 communion cups to be given (2 each to Wilton and Roberton), inscribed 'Given by Mrs [probably an honorific, not meaning that she was married] May Scott sister to William & Mr Robert Scots, with the year of God'. Michael (c.1175–c.1234) sometimes called 'the Border Wizard'. His surname is often written 'Scot'. Traditionally his birth and death have been placed in the Borders, although there is no evidence for this. He was possibly Michael, who was second son of Richard, and grandson of Uchtred. That Michael held lands in Fife and flourished in the reign of William I, and his descendants are the Scotts of Balwearie, as well as the Scotts of Ancrum; however, as a priest he was unlikely to be the same as a landowner who had legtimate descendants. He studied in Oxford and Durham, then travelled widely around Europe, serving as court astronomer and physician (or astrologer and alchemist) to Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. He is recorded in Toldeo, Spain, in 1217 and was later in Italy in the court of Frederick II. He had a promise from the Pope of a benefice in Canterbury in 1223/4 and had licence for 2 cures in Scotland, as well as the Archbishopric of Cashel in Ireland, which he resigned by 1224 (on account of not understanding the Irish language). He had another licence to hold a cure in England and 2 in Scotland in 1225 (supporting the idea that he came from Scotland). His promise of a benefice in Canterbury was renewed in 1227. He was recorded as a visitor in Durham Cathedral , but there is no definitive proof that he spent time in Scotland. He translated many important works from Arabic into Latin, thus reintroducing Aristotelian ideas to the western world. Legends of his supernatural powers abound (popularised in Dante, Boccaccio and Sir Walter Scott), and few hard facts are known about his life. He is supposed to have helped bring the infant Maid of Norway to claim the Scottish throne in 1290, when in his 70s, although this was probably a later Michael of Balwearie. He is also said to be buried in Melrose Abbey along with a 'mighty book' of necromancy, although others suggest he was buried at Home Coltrame in Cumberland. He is said to have caused the Eildons to be split into 3 and the local belief in his magical powers continued for centuries after his death, e.g. in the 19th century it was believed by some people that he had built the cauld at Kelso Mill. It is clear that in some accounts, more than one man's life is being compounded. The Michael who held lands in Fife married Margaret, daughter of Duncan Syras of that ilk and was succeeded by his son Duncan, with his grandson Michael becoming the first Scott Laird of Balwearie; the linguist and alchemist was probably a different man, although perhaps related – 'The black spae-book from his breast he took, Impressed with many a warlock spell: And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott, Who held in awe the fiends of hell' [JL], 'In these far climes it was my lot To meet the wondrous Michael Scot' [SWS] 'And here, though history tells it not, Has crossed the wizard, Michael Scott' [WNK], '... O'erthrew the abbeyed walls of fair Melrose, Disturbing grim Sir Michael's dreas repose' [JAHM]. J. Wood Brown wrote 'An enquiry into the life and legends of Michael Scot' (1897), Lynn Thorndike wrote 'Michael Scot' (1965) and Tom Hubbard wrote 'Michael Scot: myth and polymath' (2006). Michael (13th C.) along with his wife made a grant of Gask (in Fife) to Dunfermline Abbey sometime before 1231. He is referred to as Michael Scot 'of the Kingdom of Scotland' when he made a grant for income from lands in Fife. He was witnessed another couple of grants from Fife in about 1230 and 1231. He could be the Michael, son of Malothen, recorded in 1231. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Duncan of Ceres (or Syras) and his heir was Duncan. He had another son, John. His wife was a widow in the period 1238–50 when she confirmed the grant of Gask. He was surely associated with the Balwearie family, but the details are uncertain; in particular he appears to be contemporary with Michael 'the Wizard'. Michael (13th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1265. This was in the accounts of the Sheriff of Traquair regarding the lands of 'Stuth'. His surname was written 'Scoto'. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th C.) son of Duncan and probably great-grandson of the first Richard. He was knighted by Alexander II. He married the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Balwearie, and so came into possession of Balwearie in Fife, which the family held for another 13 generations, ending with Col. Walter of Balwearie, who died in Flanders in the reign of Charles II. He may be the Michael who paid homage to Edward I in 1291, and was succeeded by his son, also Sir Michael, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1295/6. His seal bore a chevron with 3 lion's heads, with a crescent on each side of the shield, and the words 'S' MICHAELIS SCOTT MILITIS'; this may be the earliest seal known for the Scott family. His wife Mary (or perhaps MArgaret) is recorded as wife of a prisoner held in England in 1296. Michael (13th C.) from Linlithgowshire, he paid homage to Edward I in 1296, and is presumably separate from Sir Michael of Balwearie. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Michael. He is recorded at Kinghorn in 1291 and signed the Ragman Rolls of 1295/6, where he is 'Sir Michael Scot of Fife'; his seal bore a chevron between 3 lion's heads. He was recorded in 1294 among holders of the lands of the Earldom of Fife. He was taken prisoner at Dunbar and held at Wallingford Castle in England in 1296/7; his name is recorded as 'Dominus Michael le Scot'. He is listed in a 'letters patent' in 1297 promising to serve Edward I in France and elsewhere. His lands were restored by Edward I in 1297, along with those of 'Duncan le Scot', who was probably his son or grandson. He is listed on a roll of horses used by supporters of Edward I in 1298. He was on a jury in 1305 in Perthshire. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry, while grandson Duncan was progenitor of the Scotts of northern Scotland and a later descendant was Andrew, progenitor of the Scotts of Ancrum. He has sometimes been identified as Michael 'the Wizard', but there is no evidence to support this and that Michael lived much earlier. Sir Michael (bef. 1320–46) 2nd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), probably son of Sir Richard and an Inglis of Muthockstone (although these early generations are still a litle uncertain). He may have been born at Rankleburn (the first of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be born locally). He was known as a gallant warrior, who distinguished himself at Halidon Hill in 1333, and was knighted some time previous to this. He fought in the division commanded by Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, and was among the few noblemen who survived the battlefield. He also accompanied David II to the unfortunate Battle of Durham (or Neville's Cross) where he was killed. He was succeeded by Robert, who was probably his son (although that is not certain). Another son John is said to have been ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden, Whitslade, Todrig, Raeburn, Woll, Thirlestane, etc. His daughter Jean may have married John Ainslie of Dolphinston. Nothing much else is known about him, including the name of his wife. His Christian name may have derived from the ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie (perhaps his great-granduncle), but seems to not have been used afterwards. Michael (14th/15th C.) born in Flanders, he was husband of the daughter of William od Swyne, who was a Burgess of Calais. In 1400 he was granted the privileges of a Burgess of Calais for his good service. He was further recorded in 1401/2 as an indweller of Calais when Henry IV conferred upon him the franchises and liberties of Calais for his good service and aid to the garrison there. This was in spite of the restriction that the town could only have Englishmen as burgesses. He may have been of Scottish origin and born in Flanders. He was also mentioned being in Calais in a petition of 1405. Sir Michael of Balwearie (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William. He disposed of the lands of 'Cambrune' to Sir John Wemyss of that Ilk. He is probably the Laird of Balwearie who granted lands in Fife to his brother William during the time of Robert, Duke of Albany. He was one of the hostages for King James I in 1424. The name of his wife appears to be unknown. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; and Margaret or Marjory, who married Sir John Melville of Raith. Michael of Aikwood (d.c.1544) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1517. Robert of Bonnington was probably his brother. Their mother's name is unknown, but his forename may have come from that side of the family. In the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for supporting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran, he is recorded as 'Maister Mychaell Scot in Aikwod' and 'Thomas Scot, thare' was also listed and perhaps his son; it seems that he was given the designation 'maister' because he trained for the priesthood (or possible the law), taking an M.A. He is probably the 'Maister Mychaell Scot' who was among the local men who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1528 he was 'magistro Michaeli Scot de Aikwod' when appointed as one of the Bailies for infefting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme. In about 1529 he and his son William were given half the lands of Bowhill in exchange for a sum to be used as the dowry for his niece Isabel Murray; Thomas in Aikwood was one of the witnesses. Also in 1529 he gained Isobel Murray's lands of the west side of Kershope. He was probably one of the witnesses to the discharge from Patrick Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528/9, where he is recorded as 'Mr. Michell Scott' just before 'sir John Scot, notary'. In 1530 he witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. He is recorded in 1530 as 'master' when witness to a document in Selkirk and other documents in 1531 and 1531/2. In 1532/3 he was 'master Michael Scott master of arts' when involved with an inquest into the succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1532/3 he was also witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1533 he was 'brother german' to Isabel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) when she assigned to him her lands in Kershope; 'instruments' were sought 'at the manor of the said master Michael'. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was 'master Michaell Scot in Aikvod' in 1536 when he witnessed the proclamation of a royal letter in Selkirk. Also in 1536 he purchased Hermiston 'with the fortalice of stone and lime called the Peile in the barony of Lillescleif' from Walter Scott of Roberton. In 1536/7 there was a complaint about him farming at Easter Bowhill. In 1538 he gave have of Hermiston to Thomas Scott in Todrig. In 1539 a loan from him to Isobel Scott (probably his sister in her second marriage, wife of Alexander Elliot) was discharged. Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam. He was witness for an action involving Alan Mithag in 1539/40. He was one of the supporters of John Scott in 1540/1, when it was agreed that John should answer for the death of Walter Down; his sons William, Robert and Walter are also listed. According to the Exchequer Rolls he claimed the lands of Aikwood in 1541 and was also tenant in half of Bowhill, half of Huntly and the wester side of Kershope. In 1541 he bound himself to William in Bowhill (probably his son) and others, with William in Hartwoodburn as a witness. He had a charter for the lands of 'Aikwood' in 1541, along with his wife Isobel Ker and son William. William was also granted Bowhill in the same document and witnesses included Thomas and Gilbert Scott, as well as Robert and William Scott. In 1541/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Alexander and another in 1543/4 for George in Blindhaugh. He married Isabel Ker, from an unknown branch of the Kers. In 1541 he was said to have built 'an honest mansion and tower' at Aikwood when he obtained a new infeftment to himself and his wife, producing a charter from 1517 for Aikwood and Bowhill; his son and heir William is also mentioned. His children included: Walter who succeeded to Kershope; William, who succeeded to Bowhill; Robert, who succeeded his elder brothers; Adam, recorded in 1552; possibly Thomas, mentioned in the remission of 1526; and Elizabeth, stated to be sister of Robert in 1580, when she had a marriage contract with Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. His widow secondly married Robert Scott of Wamphray. Michael of Vogrie (d.bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when his son Walter had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in 'Cartho'. Walter was to receive certain lands in Stow and John in Kirkhouses was a witness. Probably the same Michael 'in the vogrie, par. of Borthuik' had his will registered in Edinburgh in 1583/4. Michael of Innerteil and Balwearie (d.c.1586) recorded in 1586/7 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he fits in with the genealogy of the Scotts of Balwearie. Michael of Aikwood (16th C.) listed on the roll of 'Landit Men' in Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Oakwood at that time was Robert; however, it is possible that the long deceased Michael was meant. Michael (16th/17th C.) brother of 'Hob Scot in the Howfurd'. The pair were described as 'suster sones' to Walter Scott of Harden ('Auld Wat') in 1617 when Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington's household. They were also said to have later 'trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit' and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Michael (17th C.) Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch at the time of the Earl's death in 1633. It is unclear what branch of the family he came from. Michael (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Marion (b.1650). Michael (17th C.) son of John of Gilmanscleuch. He is recorded in a deed of 1663. Michael (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott 'Whiteyetts' in 1700. In 1703 he was fined for drinking after the ringing of the 10 hour bell. He witnessed further baptisms in 1705 (along with Walter in Crumhaugh) for innkeeper William called 'of Goldilands' and in 1708 for smith James Scott (along with tailor George). In 1716 he was rebuked by the minister for 'being extremely drunk laitlie in the street, and not capable to go to his dwelling house'; the minister told him he was a 'most sad spectacle', but not being previously guilty of drunkenness he was only admonished and told to mend his ways. He witnessed baptisms in 1720 for smith Thomas Huntly and for weaver Walter Douglas. He married Margaret Gledstains, and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); Margaret (b.1705); James (b.1709); and John (again, b.1712). The witnesses in 1700 were baker John Whillans and John Scott 'Whitegates', in 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant Patrick Angus, in 1704 were Patrick Angus again and Bailie George Martin, in 1705 were John Scott of Whitegates 'younger' and merchant John Forman, in 1709 were tailor William Gledstains and baxter William Hodge and in 1712 were Bailie James Burn and shoemaker Robert Porteous. Michael (b.1798/9) originally from Melrose, he was a local stockingmaker and then carrier. In 1841 he was a stockingmaker at Shuttlehall in Cavers Parish, in 1851 he was a stockingmaker at Raesknowe and in 1861 he was a carrier living on North Hermitage Street, Newcastleton. He married Ann Hume in Hawick Parish in 1824. Their children included Robert, Peter, James, John, William and George. Michael (b.1832/3) resident of Hawick, born in Wilton. In 1841 he was a 10-year old 'Tobacco Spinner' living with the Ferguson family on Punch Bowl Close. In 1851 he was a hosiery dresser living with his brother Andrew on the Back Row. In 1861 he was a 'Woollen Hosiery Warehouseman' living at 71 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Ellen, Ann, Janet and Jane. He may be the Michael who in 1865 donated to the Museum '2d Maundy money of Queen Anne'; in 1689 he was living on the High Street when he donated a 'jeton' token of Hans Krauwinckel (probably 16th or 17th century), 'found in a garden at back of Town Hall'. In 1872 he donated a French silver coin. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Stirches Mains on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. It is unclear who she may have been married to. Alexander was recorded as tenant at Stirches Mains on the ballots for the Militia in 1797, 1799 and 1801 and may have been her son. Thomas, also listed at Stiches Mains in 1799 and 1801 may have been another son. One possibility is that she is Janet Buckham, 2nd wife (and presumably widow) of Robert, miller at Roughheugh, and step-mother of Alexander (later of Kinninghall) and Thomas (later of Little Cote). Mrs. Robert (16th C.) wife of a Hawick man, mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. She is listed being owed money 'for sum ordinar dwtie', but what this duty might have been is unclear. Mungo (d.c.1599) Burgess in Edinburgh recorded several times in the period 1574–84. In 1574/5 he was surety for a case involving Jedburgh Abbey. He was also cautioner (along with Alexander, also a Burgess of Edinburgh) for George of Synton when he was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, and also for Walter Scott of Goldielands (along with Robert, Burgess in Edinburgh and and James Gledstains of Cocklaw). There was a further caution by him and Alexander in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining 'now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each'. It seems likely that he was closely related to Alexander and Robert, and probably also related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Buccleuch. In 1581/2 he acted as cautioner for Robert of Aikwood. In 1593 he was a Burgess of Edinburgh listed among the cautioners for the inhabitants of Kelso being loyal to the King. He was also involved in a bond not to harm an Edinburgh tailor in 1595. He is probably the Burgess of Edinburgh whose will was recorded in 1599, with the will of his wife, Bessie Aikman, being recorded in 1586. Mungo (16th C.) became a merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1583. He is distinct from the slightly earlier merchant of the same name. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Castellsyd' (i.e. Castleside) in the records of the Circuit Court of 1623 when several local men twice gave their security for his appearance. They included Andrew Allan, John Gowanlock and James Coltart in Headshaw, John Turnbull and John Campbell in Newton and Gilbert Elliot of Brugh. It is unclear whether he was related to George and Francis of Castleside. He may be the Mungo whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included James (b.1631), Walter (b.1635) and John (b.1636). Perhaps the same 'Mungno' witnessed Ashkirk baptisms in 1651 for John White and in 1652 for James Easton and Janet Scott. Mungo (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mungo (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Jean Scott. In 1698 he was recorded as servant of the Laird of Bewlie. He married Helen Rae and their children included William (b.1698), Thomas (b.1703) and Walter (b.1708). He may be the Mungo, born to James and Agnes Stewart in 1658. Mungo (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Dryden and their children included Janet (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation and in 1774 included Bailie Elliot. Nelly (b.1768) and Elizabeth (b.1769) were probably also his children. Mungo (b.c.1780) hand-loom weaver in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he is listed at 'Make Shift' somewhere near Broadlee or Milsington. He was from out of the county and living with Jane, probably his wife. He could be the Mungo who married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1813. Mungo (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Nazar (12th C.) son of Isaac, who was a priest of St. Andrews Diocese. He is recorded in a Dunfermline document in the period 1183–1203. Nell 'Nelly the King' (19th C.) sister of 'Andrew the King', and also known as a simple-minded soul. Her first could be a short form of 'Helen'. She may have been born in 1798. Nichol (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1430 along with John and others, when their heirs were listed as owners of 'Novum Castrum' in an inventory of the Priory of Durham. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, Henry and John, who are also listed. Nichol (d.c.1594) son and heir of Henry. His father was already deceased in 1583 when he became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. His will was recorded in the commissariot of Edinburgh in 1594/5. Nichol (16th C.) cordiner in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1588/9. His eldest lawful son John was also a cordiner and made a Burgess in 1617. Their connection to other Scotts in unclear. Nichol (16th C.) tenant in Mosspeebles. He is recorded in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was 'in Mespeble' among men who Lord Maxwell and separately Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others 'to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]'. He was probably related to Adam, recorded in Mosspeeble in 1585. Nichol (d.bef. 1594) Burgess of Edinburgh. His will is recorded in 1594/5. His eldest son William became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1596. Perhaps the same 'Nicholl Scot, burgess of Edinburgh' who witnessed a legal instrument in Edinburgh in 1570. Nicholas (13th C.) resident of Northumberland. He is recorded in the 1279 assize roll there when his wife Agnes had rights to the young heir of 'Walteri super Teysam'. He may already have been dead by this time. Another entry for the same year mentions 'Nicholaus le Scot'. He could be the same as Nicholas 'le Escot' who was listed in an assize relating to lands in Newcastle in 1266; Henry 'le Escot' was also a pledge for him. He may be the Nicholas 'le Escot' who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with Henry and John also listed). It is unclear whether he or his wife were related to other Scotts. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1318 as an English knight in a receipt involving provisions from th King's stores in Newcastle. Perhaps the same main is recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2; his name is given there as 'Nicholaus Skot'. Part of his seal exists and seems quite distinct from the Buccleuch arms. Nicholas of Okham (14th C.) clerk who was pardoned by Edward III at the request of Edward Baliol, late King of Scotland in 1355/6. The agreement was made in Roxburgh and was regarding the death of a monk of Westminster. Nicholas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 being 'in Quhytsyde', which could be Whiteside in the Jed valley. He complained that James Tweedie of Dreva and his son owed him money and should be apprehended. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed among the many Borders men given remission in 1526 for their earlier support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. After his name appears 'William brether', presumably meaning his brother. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, but the Christian name is not common among Scotts. Ninian (d.bef. 1580) listed in 1580 in Selkirk, when his widow Marion was among those who Janet Gledstains owed money to. Ninian (b.c.1770s) shepherd at Sundhope according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish on the ballot in 1801. Perhaps the same Ninian was a member of the East Bank Kirk who married Agnes Reid and had a son William (b.1807). Ninian (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Eilrig according to the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. Osbert (13th C.) recorded as 'Osberto scoto' and 'serviens' of Walter Oliphant, Justiciar of Lothian, when he was witness to a statement about a dispute between Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, and Jordon of Corra. This was sometime in the period 1223–42. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) referred to in a charter of the 1270s involving Coldingham Priory and the lands of Great Reston. The same gift to Coldingham is described in a charter of Robert, son of Reginald of Reston, which is some time before 1233. His sons were John and Patrick. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick and brother of John. He witnessed several charters involving Coldingham Priory. In the 1270s he had a claim to the lands of Great Reston, which had previously been held by his father and brother. Probably the same Patrick also held land in 'Westrenigton' according to an inventory of Coldingham Priory. Patrick (13th C.) merchant of Berwick recorded as 'Patrick le Escot' in 1276, when there was a complaint of wool being stolen from their boat on the way to Dieppe. He is 'Patricio Scot de Berewyk' in an inventory of lands associated with Coldingham Priory at about the same time. He is 'Patrick Scot' in 1296 when his former house in Berwick is mentioned in another case and he was 'Patrick Lescot' when he swore fealty to Edward I in that same year. His seal was oval with a classical head and cross and the name 'S'PATRICII SCOT'. He may be the same as 'Patricius Scot' recorded in relation to Bamburgh in 1279. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Patrick (13th/14th C.) juror in 1310 for cases involving Lindores Abbey. Patrick (14th C.) resident of Berwick, whose tenement is listed in an English legal petition of 1335. Patrick (14th C.) recorded as Licentiate of Arts in Paris in 1339. There is no sign of him back in Scotland as a priest, but he may be the same as a Patrick with a different designation. Patrick (14th/15th C.) Chaplain to Robert, Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland. In 1418 he was recorded as perpetual vicar of Inverkeilor Church, as well as chaplain to Muriella, Duchess of Albany, who had a request to the Pope for a another benefice. He swapped the vicarage of Inverkeilor for Stirling with Michael 'Uchilere', with a request to have this confirmed by the Pope in 1420. Patrick (d.bef. 1432) Rector of Culter in Lanarkshire. His death is mentioned in 1432 when there was a plea to the Pope for his replacement. Patrick (15th C.) servant of James II when he was Duke of Rothesay, recorded in 1438. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491, where he owed one merk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (d.bef. 1502) recorded in 2 land transactions in Edinburgh in 1502/3. His lands on the south side of the 'King's street' are mentioned. Patrick (15th/16th C.) served as Chamberlain of Strathearn and Comptroller of receipts. He is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500–10. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) son of Adam, tenant in Harwoodhill. In 1502 he had remission for resetting Richard Armstrong, called 'Skaw', who had stolen 200 sheep from David Hoppringle at 'Fechane', with the help of Alexander Scott. Walter of Howpasley and Robert of Stirches acted as sureties, suggesting one or both were related to him. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing 60 sheep from 'langcluch' and 15 sheep from Alexander Turnbull in Dodrig; his surety then was Robert in Synton. Patrick (15th/16th C.) witness to an instrument in the Commissary of Lesmahago in 1512. Patrick (15th/16th C.) became a saddler Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1517, as 2nd son to his father. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1556 as tutor to Gavin, son of the deceased Alexander. This was in a memorandum relating to their interest in houses in Edinburgh and also sums of money. Perhaps the same Patrick witnessed another memorandum in 1555. Patrick (d.bef. 1574) painter in Glasgow. James (presumably his son) was served as his heir in 1574 and was thereby made a Burgess of Glasgow. He may be the Burgess of Glasgow whose daughter married traveller Thomas Park, who was made a Burgess there in 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Patrick of Monzie, see Peter of Monzie. Patrick (16th/17th C.) said to be a surgeon and Burgess in Hawick around 1600. His great-granddaughter Janet Scott was served heir to him in 1667; she married carrier Patrick Hardie. Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane (d.1666), son of Walter of Gamescleuch and Janet Porteous (probably being named after his maternal grandfather). His father was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw, part of a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches that lasted for many years. He was a nephew of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, and also held the lands of Howpasley from his cousin Robert Scott. He was placed in charge of bringing Walter, Earl of Buccleuch's body from London to Leith in 1633, a journey that took 15 weeks, and included being shipwrecked on the Norwegian coast (as described vividly by Scott of Satchells). About 1634 he redeemed some of the mortgages of his cousin Sir John of Thirlestane, from Sir William of Harden and others, and thus had most of the lands transferred into his name. He was Chamberlain to Francis, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the 1640s, as well as Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton into the 1650s. In 1641 William Wallace made the factor's account in his place, since he was ill. In 1641 he signed a document in Hawick with his cousin Sir John, relating to the Thirlestane estates, but with the terms unspecified. He had his cousin imprisoned on 2 occasions. Eventually he would claim permanent ownership of the Thirlestane estates, in precedence to his cousin Sir John. This was at least partly because of different allegiances in the Civil War (Sir John's descendants would fight the succession in court a century later). In 1642 he had a decree of appraising against Sir John, relating to the lands of Bourhope. In 1643 he had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others in Peeblesshire, which he gained from his cousin John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was cautioner for a William Scott in about 1646. He supported the Parliamentary side in the Civil War and was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1648–49. After being fined by both Cromwell and the Royalists for taking sides, he repurchased Thirlestane from Sir William of Harden and others. In 1644 he was witness to a contract for lands at Smailholm. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1650 he was also named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis in his will and served in this capacity for the young Marie, Countess of Buccleuch, being involved in a law suit in 1659 with some of her other tutors over breaking locks to her charter chests. In 1653 he was involved in the construction of the bridge over the Yarrow at Deuchar, acting as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a charter of the lands of Rutherford. He was fined by Cromwell in 1654 and also fined in 1662 for complicity with Cromwell! In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £8000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest, where he had been Chamberlain. In 1663 he was appointed as a justice of the peace for Selkirkshire. He was also recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony and was succeeded by his son Sir Francis. Other children were: David, who was buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1659; Walter, who held Howpasley briefly; Jean, who married Sir James Hay of Linplume; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Bannerman of Elsick; and Mary, who married Sir William Primrose of Carrington. He may also be the Patrick whose wife Agnes had a testament in 1637 – 'Then Patrick Scot, his Father-Brother Son, Took on the designation of Thirlston, A very worthy Courteous man was he, He married Murray daughter to the Laird of Black-barony' [CWS]. Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw (17th C.) son of George of Kirkstyle and Catherine Montcrief. He was descended from the Scotts of Balwearie, through a son, Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle in Perthshire; Col. Walter, last Scott of Balwearie, who died unmarried in Flanders in the reign of Charles II, sent him the seal of the Balwearie family; however, similarity of Christian names, and a statement of close kinship by Scott of Satchells suggests instead, or additionally, a relationship with the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was described as 'writer of Edinburgh' from about 1638 and through the 1640s, when he dealt with city business for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and by 1652 he was 'now of Langshaw'. He sold Kirkstyle in Perthshire and purchased Langshaw (although it is unclear if these were the lands in South Lanarkshire, or the place north of Galashiels). He may also later have acquired the lands and barony of Ancrum (although perhaps the first connection may have been through his son Sir John). He was also previously 'of Eddrington', and had a crown charter of Langshaw in 1653. In 1650 he was named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, as well as being described as 'wryter in Edinburgh, our servitor', when he witnessed the document. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1655, in right of his father-in-law, Andrew Purves. He was recorded in various documents in the Melrose Regality records in the period 1657–61. He served as 'receiver general' for the Buccleuch estates in at least the period 1650–72. He was recorded as 'of Langshaw' in a deed of 1663. He may be the Patrick, writer in Edinburgh, who had a discharge from the treasurer of Selkirk in 1664/5 for his pension. He may also be the Edinburgh writer recorded in deeds in 1663. He was Chamberlain for the Lordship of Dalkeith in at least the period 1669–74. There were legal proceedings against his son by the Duchess of Buccleuch 1673–1704 over an embezzlement he is alleged to have committed. He may be the same Patrick described as the Earl of Buccleuch's attendant in 1636–38, and was factor in at least the period 1638–41 and 1650–56. He was recorded in deeds in 1673. In 1629 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Simson, sister of David Simson of 'Monturpie' and they had 3 sons and 1 daughter. In 1647 he secondly married 'Cicilie Drurie' (or Cicely Drury), daughter of Sir Robert Drury of Rugham, and widow of George Douglas, Doctor of Divinity; with her he had 1 more daughter. He seems to have also married Agnes, daughter to Andrew Purves; she was already deceased in 1655 when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh as a result of marrying her. His children were: Sir John, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, who married Elizabeth Scott of Mangerton; James, who became a merchant Burgess in Edinburgh in 1693 and died without issue; Francis of Langshaw; Agnes, who married William Douglas of Ardet (and may be the Agnes who later married John Wilkie, merchant in Edinburgh), and was mother of Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie; and Cicely, who married Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1666, and whose daughter married John Scott of Gorrenberry. Patrick, 'lawful son of the said Patrick Scott of Langshaw' is recorded as witness to a document for Mary, Countess of Buccleuch in 1658 and in deeds of 1663 and 1682, and so must have been another son; his daughters Agnes and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1696. Francis of Colmslie was caution for a bond for the 'deceased Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh' according to a case heard in Melrose in 1683; this may well have been him. Sir Patrick of Longnewton and Ancrum (d.1734) son of Sir John (he is easy to confuse with his grandfather Patrick of Langshaw). He became an advocate in 1676 and was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburgshire in 1678 and 1685. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1684, and was entered again in 1700 (gratis), in right of his father Sir John. He was 'feir' of Ancrum in 1678 when he paid the land tax on the whole value of Longnewton Parish (valued at more than £2000). In 1688 he was 'of Long-newton, appearant of Ancrum, Knight' when Walter of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him. He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eckford in 1689–95. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire 1685–86 and was appointed again in 1689, but replaced in 1693 for absence; this is surely related to the poltics of the day. In 1690 (before he succeeded to Ancrum) and in 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he held the 'teinds' of the Baronie of Eckford and the 'tacks' of the lands of Lempitlaw and 'Langtoune' (probably Longnewton) owned by the Scotts of Bucceuch. In 1694 he paid tax on 10 hearths at his house in Langnewton. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He could be the Patrick who in 1700, along with his servant was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis). In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his daughter Elizabeth. There are some existing letters between him and his brother William and son John from 1709. He married Anne, daughter of William Wallace of Helington. His wife was wealthy, but they had no issue. In 1680 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Harden. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; William, who became an advocate, marrying Anne, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Barton and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie of Blackhill; Christian, who married John Pringle of Whytbank; Elizabeth, who married George Douglas of Friarshaw; Anna; Jean, married David Muirhead of Linhouse and secondly James Gartshore; and Margaret, who died unmarried. Some correspondence exists in the National Archives between him and family members. Patrick, W.S. (d.1711) nephew of Hercules Scott, who was a merchant in Edinburgh. He is easy to confuse with Patrick of Langshaw and Patrick of Langnewton. He trained a lawyer, being apprenticed to Robert Innes and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1699. He could be the 'Mr. Patrick, W.S.' who in 1707 was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis). He married Elizabeth Carmichael. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1691 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Although hard to read, his wife's name is Janet ... [possibly Paterson]. Patrick (18th C.) son of Walter, minister at Westruther. His brother Francis also served as minister at Westruther. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. It is unclear what his connection to the family was. Patrick (18th C.) eldest lawful son of Francis of Alton. He was 'younger of Altoun' in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter of Newton, who may well have been related), for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott (who may also have been closely related). He was recorded in 1742 agreeing to his father's sale of the lands of Alton to John Horsburgh of that Ilk. It is possible he was the Patrick who witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in Wilton in 1733 and the Patrick who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. He may be the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains in Wilton Parish in 1751. Patrick (d.bef. 1762) miller in Bedrule parish, recorded in 1762 when his daughter Janet married John Turnbull, wright, in Edinburgh. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is sometimes recorded as 'Peter'. He is listed on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls at Whitlaw. He was probably the 'Patrick Scot in Borthaugh' described as tenant farmer in Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd; this suggests he was directly related to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh. He may have been the Patrick, son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, born in Hawick in 1728. He seems likely to have been the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains (perhaps from the Gledstains of Whitlaw family) in Wilton Parish in 1751. He is probably the Patrick of Borthaugh who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Scott of Whitehaugh in 1753. Paul (16th C.) made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1582. His eldest lawful son John was a skinner in Glasgow and became a Burgess in 1617. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Peter (13th C.) clerk from Oxford who was listed among those indicted for attacking the Papal Legate at Oseney Abbey in 1238. He was listed along with Roger as lodgers of Master William de Lichfield, who fled after their arrest was ordered. It is unclear what happened to him afterwards, but he could possibly be the same man as 'Peter de Joniston', a clerk of Arbroath. Peter (13th C.) recorded as Master and of the 'natione de Scocia' when witness in Bologna to a document relating to Simon de Kinross. It is possible he is the same man as Peter de Campania, or possibly Peter de Coldingham. Peter of Monzie (16th C.) recorded being 'of Monze' when he was Chamberlain for Strathearn, according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1536–42. He is probably the 'Patrik of Monze' whose will was recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1584. His lands were in Perthshire, with his heiress, Margaret Scott, granting them to her son James Graeme in 1613. Peter (16th/17th C.) 'son natural' of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 his father was caution for him, his half-brother Robert and Walter of Whitslade that they not harm Archibald of 'Deiphop' and his sons. In 1609 he was among the men (under Walter of Headshaw) whom his father and brother Robert and their tenants were bound not to reset. Sir Robert and the others were then fined for resetting him and the other men. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Peter (d.bef. 1654) referred to as being 'of Cowdhome' and already deceased in an act of caution of 1654, preserved in the records of Jedburgh Sheriff Court. Capt. Walter Scott (the later poet) complained against his son Robert. It seems likely that this is 'Coldhouse' in Wilton Parish. Peter (17th/18th C.) probably a Hawick Councillor. In 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the 'stent' in the area 'west the water', suggesting he lived in the West-end. Peter in Whitlaw (see Patrick). Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Ancrum Mill in 1797, when he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at

Clarilaw in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Peter (b.1826/7) born in Hawick Parish. In 1861 he was a 'Game Watcher', living at 'Hill House (Wood)' in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen. In 1872 he was 'gamekeeper, Newcastleton' when he donated a rapier to the Museum. Peter (19th C.) coachman to Robert F. Watson in Hawick in the 1860s to 80s. Peter (1852–1925) hosiery manufacturer, born in Hawick, with residence at Norwood. He was son of George, grocer at 19 Howegate, and his brother Tom was Cornet in 1887. He started work at age 13 for Peter Laidlaw at Wilton Grove, eventually taking over the small frame shop. He may be the 'Mr Peter Scott, Millbank, Hawick' who in 1876 donated to the Museum a 'piece of walrus skin, tanned'. He founded Peter Scott & Co. in 1878, with Mr. Adamson as his partner, although it was not until 1899 that he established the 'Pesco' brand of underwear. The expansion of the company after that was explosive. He was Chairman of the Scottish Hosiery Association, and served on several committees during WWI. He was also President of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers' Association, and a Director of the South of Scotland Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. He bought about 6 hectares of land on Sunnyhill, at the top of Roadhead and there had the villa Norwood built for him in 1904, designed by J.P. Alison; Norwood would be owned by the family until 1964. The gatehouse Norwood Lodge was built about the same time, with the adjacent Woodgate and Langlee built in about 1907. He was also a keen bowler, acting as President of the Buccleuch Bowling Club and took part in a bowling tour of Canada in 1910. He and his brother George were also noted draughts players. He gifted the 'Beechwood' and 'Norwood' trophies, which were competed for among the local clubs. He also gifted an organ to St. George's Kirk in 1919 in memory of his daughter Bessie. In 1876 at Wilton Dean, he married Mary, daughter of James Brydon from Castleton. Their children were: George (1879–1940), who was a director in the family firm; Esther Laidlaw (b.1880), who died young; Marion Adamson (1886–1963), who never married; Jeanie (b.1887); Bessie (1890–1917); and James Brydon (1894–1958), also a company director at Pesco's. It is said that he was well liked in the town and proud of his 'guitterbluid' heritage. He died suddenly while on holiday in the south of France, and his funeral procession was one of the biggest ever to be seen in Hawick. Peter Brydon (1920–43) son of James Brydon and grandson of Peter, founder of Pesco's. He served with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, having the rank of Lieutenant. He died while in Burma and there is a baptismal font in his memory in Denholm Kirk. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of 'resetting, supplying and intercommuning' with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Philip of Heap (15th/16th C.) described as 'Philip Scot of Hoip' in 1508 when he witnessed a sasine of lands at Synton. He must have been closely related to David of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1479, and Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. He was in turn succeeded by Walter, who gained the lands of Wester Heap in 1532. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded as a sergeant at the Court in Jedburgh in 1502. Perhaps the same Philip was recorded in 1530 acting for Thomas Forest when he rented part of the lands of Philiphaugh from Robert Turnbull. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Philip of Headshaw (d.c.1531) son of Walter of Headshaw, who he succeeded. He is recorded as 'of Aidschaw' in 1510 when his brother Thomas was convicted of being part of the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting that some of them were closely related. He may be the Philip recorded along with the Laird of Dawyck in 1515, when officer Gilbert Rutherford was instructed to collect payments from them on behalf of the King. He was on the 1517 'retour' for Sir Walter of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and a son of the Gledstains family; he is there 'Philp Scot of Eadschaw'. He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his son Walter also listed). And in 1527 he was among the Lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvod'. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In a document of 1531 he assigned to his 2nd son Robert the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, which he held in tack from Queen Margaret; his brother William of Ormiston 'sought instruments'. Also in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. In 1532 his widow, Isabel Murray was involved in a dispute with his son and heir, Walter; James Pringle and Walter in Synton represented his wife, while Philip Riddell and William in Harden represented his son. In a further dispute in 1535, Isabel mother is described as the stepmother of Walter, and hence she must have been his second wife. He was succeeded by his son Walter of Headshaw and also had another son, Robert (who is recorded as brother of Walter in 1541/2). Philip (16th C.) tenant in Dryhope and 'Farmynhop' in 1541. Probably the same Philip in 'Dryhoup' was accused (along with Robert of Howpasley) by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there, and William sought restitution through the efforts of John Murray of Kershope. Perhaps the same Philip witnessed a transaction for John Scott of Thirlestane in 1539. He may be the Philip who paid his share of ward for Caverhill and Glack in Peeblesshire in 1554 and 1556. He was 'of Drihoup' in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction where Robert of Howpasley leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgelish in Deuchar. Immediately afterwards Dalgleish leased half of Whithope to John, who appears to have been his son. In 1564 he was listed as 'Philp Scot of Drihope' among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may be related to the later Philip of Dryhope. Philip (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhill recorded in 1549 as the first of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when they complained about their farms being raided and burned by the Kers. Either he or Philip in Wiltonburn could have been father of 'Philip's Jock'. Philip (16th C.) tenant in Wiltonburn in 1549 when he was among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who complained about the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others. It is possible that he was father of 'Philip's Jock' recorded in the 1570s. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as son of the deceased Hector in Selkirk when he witnessed a promise by 'Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw'. Philip (16th C.) brother of Scott of Hassendean, as well as brother of William. In 1580 he was 'bother german to Scot of Hassindane' when he witnessed a declaration in Selkirk involving Walter of Stirches. In 1583/4 he was brother to 'Scot of Hassinden among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time, since David was murdered in 1564 and is usually said to have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. Philip of Kirkhope (16th C.) son of John of Thirlestane, and younger brother of Robert, who succeeded. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been the 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. Since she had 2 other husbands, this presumably means that he died relatively young, and is said to have had no children. Philip of Dryhope (d.bef. 1632) probably son or brother of John. He is sometimes stated as the father of Mary, 'Flower of Yarrow', but she was probably his sister. He is listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590. In 1591 he purchased half of Stanhope in Peeblesshire and sold it again in 1600. In 1591 Walter of Tushielaw served as surety for him. He purchased the lands of Glensax from Alexander Horsburgh in 1600. He was 'of Dryhoip' when denounced as a rebel in 1592 for his part in the Falkland Raid (and Dryhope was ordered to be demolished at about the same time); his brother Andrew was a signatory to the bond of caution for him by John Hay of Smithfield. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Scott of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1610 there is a bond of caution for him and his sons Philip and William. In 1611 he gave back (presumably following repayment of a debt) the lands of Midshiels, Appletreehall, Coitlaw and Crawhill to Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border and was also on the panel of 'retour' for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Additionally in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. His brother James (and son William) are recorded in 1617. In 1618 he was listed as one of the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood. He is 'recorded as 'elder of Dryhoip' in charters of 1618 and 1621 and in 1621 when the Hays of Smithfield complained he had not settled a debt. He married Margaret, and his eldest son was Robert, although he was succeeded in the Lairdship of Dryhope by his son Philip. Another son William was complained about in 1612 and 1617 and witnessed a charter in 1618. In 1620 both Philip elder and Philip younger were vited by the tailors of Edinburgh for not paying them. In 1628 he resigned his half of the lands of Glensax. Note that these generations are quite confused (Keith Scott suggests there were 2 generations of Philips of Dryhope, father and son, but it is unclear when the son succeeded). Philip of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) possibly the same man as Philip of Dryhope. He is recorded in 1627, but by 1630 the lands of Oakwood had passed to a Murray, possibly of the Elibank family. The lands of Oakwood later became part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden. Philip of Dryhope (17th C.) younger brother of Walter, the previous Laird (recorded in 1669). He may also have been brother of the Laird before, Robert, and hence a younger son of William. He was the last Scott Laird of Dryhope. It is possible he is the Burgess of that name recorded in Selkirk in 1665 and the witness recorded there in 1683. Philip (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to Sir William of Harden. He is recorded in 1692–1716 as factor for the lands in Selkirkshire and in 1704 when his son Walter became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh. In the 1720 Hawick Parish records he is stated to have been lately Chamberlain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 his eldest son Walter married Sara, daughter of Walter Scott, also an apothecary in Hawick. He may be the Philip 'in Whitmurehall' recorded in a bond with the Scotts of Harden in 1687 and a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1700. Perhaps he was the same man as Philip in Oakwood. He could be the Philip, married to Grissell Bruce, whose son Walter was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1688. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded being in Cogsmill in 1709 when he married Margaret Riddell in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1709, in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He was still tenant there according to other discharges of 1719 and 1729, as well as a bond in 1725. He was one of the founding members of the 'Honest Country Club' in 1711. Probably the same Philip was in Oakwood in 1732 when he borrowed money from the Selkirk Merchant Company; it was due for repayment in 1736, but he had still nor paid it back by 1738. He was surely related to James, who was recorded in Aikwood at the end of the 17th century. In 1723 his daughter Jane (1701/2–76) married Walter, 2nd son of William in Milsington. Philip (18th C.) recorded as 'in Todrigg' in 1753 when he was paid by Scott of Buccleuch for acting as gamekeeper. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Scotts of Todrig. Rachel nee Langlands (17th/18th C.) described as 'of Wilton', so she was probably daughter of one of the last Langlands Lairds. She married Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, probably in the mid-1680s. She had a 'bond of provision' from her husband in 1696. However, Charles died about a couple of years later. She is probably the same Rachel who secondly married Francis Elliot of Fenwick. Her children included Walter (who succeeded to Crumhaugh) and probably James, who was a surgeon in Hawick. Rankin (14th C.) recorded in 1388 as 'Rankyn Scote'. This was in a warrant to the Archbishop of York, stating that Richard II had appointed him keeper of his 'carues' (i.e. ploughs). Rebecca (18th C.) paid the window tax for Midshiels in 1748. She is 'Rebeca Scott Medsheils'. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts, but perhaps was connected to the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who sold Midshiels in about the mid-18th century. Reginald (13th C.) recorded as 'Reginaldus le Scot' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a case in the town of 'Lowick'. Revin (14th C.) recorded as 'Revinus Scotus' when he graduated B.A. at Paris in 1395/6. His name appears to be corrupted in the list and so it may be that he is the same as some other Scott. Richard (12th C.) probably the son of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He witnessed a charter by the Bishop of St. Andrews to Holyrood Abbey in about 1158 (although the charter is now lost, and so there is no proof that he was son of Uchtred, and it is not even clear where this information originated). He was succeeded by Richard, who was likely his son. It has been suggested that another son was Sir Michael, ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie, although there is no proof of this. Richard (12th/13th C.) son of Richard and perhaps grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He married Alicia, daughter of Henry and Eschina de Molla (or Molle). He and his wife received lands in Roxburgh in the reign of Alexander II. He may thus have been the first Scott to be associated with Roxburghshire, and was referred to as Richard 'of Molle'. Sometime between 1185 and 1215 he granted lands in Mow to Kelso Abbey; he is referred to there as 'son of Anselm of Mow' (so perhaps there are 2 Richard Scotts confounded here, or 'son' meant 'son-in-law'). He was also referred to in charters of c.1190 for lands adjacent to his in Mow. He was succeeded by his son William. It is also possible that Almer Scott of Mow, recorded about the same time, was related to him. Richard (12th/13th C.) recorded in a court case in London in 1220. He was caught with the stolen seal of Walter de Morton, and was ordered to be hanged for the crime. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1236 along with Walter and Robert, his brother. They were accused of attacking Eustace (Bailif of the Abbot of 'Burgo'), beating him, killing his horse, and imprisoning his servant. The Sheriff of Northampton was commanded to make them appear at Westminster. It is unclear how they were related to other Scotts. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1244 when the Sheriff of Huntingdon commanded him to give a knight's fee to John Baliol. He may be ancestor of later Scotts of Huntingdon. Richard (13th C.) recorded in Leicester in 1262 as 'son of Robert Scot junior' when he gave a mark for an assize. Richard (13th C.) recorded as 'le Escot' in a document relating to Northumberland in 1265. He could be the same as Richard 'le Scot' who was listed in 1255/6, along with his wife Margery, in a court case in Northumberland. He may also be the 'Richard Scot, essoin' of Roger Bertram listed in a plea in Northumberland in 1258/9. Richard (13th C.) son and heir of Lucas 'le Escot' of Dunwich, recorded in a document relating to Norfolk in 1267/8. In 1268/9 he was Richard 'le Scot of Dunwich' when he was recorded in relation to money due to the English King's Exchequer from Dunwich in Suffolk. He was also recorded in 1271 in relation to a ship that he claimed had been owned by his father Lucas. In 1272 he accused someone at Stratford of the murder of his cousin Robert 'le Escot' (son of Gerald). Also in 1272 he was accused of stealing a cask of wine from someone in Dunwich and paid 20 shillings for a writ. Sir Richard (c.1265–1320) Laird of Rankilburn (synonymous with Buccleuch) and Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) in Lanarkshire. He was probably son of William; however, these early generations are quite uncertain and considering the years when they are documented, there is room for a missing generation. Nevertheless, from him onwards, the genealogy of the Scotts of Buccleuch is generally considered to be secure. Capt. Walter of Satchells says that he originally resided at Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. He swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296 (in the Ragman Rolls) under the name 'Richard Le Scot de Murthoxtoun', in the County of Lanark; 9 other people of the same surname are also recorded, with Alexander 'de Pertheyk' also being from Lanarkshire, and William (no designation given) being the only one from Roxburghshire. His seal bore a lion rampant 'regardant' and the name 'S'RICARDI SCOTI'. He may have been the first Scott to have local lands, at Rankilburn, sometime before 1296. These may be the lands in Selkirkshire that were restored to him (assuming it is the same Richard) in 1296. He may have held these lands as Ranger of the King's Forest. He is likely the Richard who also swore fealty to King Edward in 1304. He acquired the Barony of Murdostoun (in Lanark) by marriage with the Inglis heiress. As a result the crescent and stars of the Scott arms were placed on the bend of Murdostoun thereafter. He was probably father of Sir Michael of Rankilburn and Murthockstone and possibly also of John (ancestor of the first Scotts of Synton, although this may have been his grandson). The Walter 'le Scot' who also swore fealty to Edward in 1296 may have been his brother (perhaps older brother), and held lands in Peebles. An English record of 1302 pardons Eustace de Fenham for the death of William, son of Richard Scott, on account of his service on the coast of Scotland; this may have been his son. For some reason his Christian name was not used afterwards by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Richard (13th/14th C.) Templar whose name is recorded as 'Richard Scoti'. He joined the order in Paris in about 1302. Richard (13th/14th C.) listed in 1317 among Scotsmen who were captured at 'le Redepethe' when 'plundering and burning in Tynedale'. Some Englishmen rescued most of them, but it is not recorded whether this included him. Richard (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1319 when his son John was pardoned by Edward II for joining the Scots. Richard (14th C.) son of John of Newcastle. In 1367/8 there was an inquisition held at Newcastle Castle, with the panel deciding that it would not damage the King's interests if he was permitted to make a deer park of his woods of 'Benewelle called le Westwode'. This later became Scotswood, one of the most troubled areas of West Newcastle. Richard (d.bef. 1420) Bailie of Dundee recorded in the period 1386–1405 according to the Echequer Rolls. He was 'Clerk of Cocket of Dundee' in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1397–20. He thus held the seal for issuing customs documents. He was responsible for rendering the accounts of the Baillies of Dundee, and was also paid for numbering animal skins there. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to 2 land transactions in Edinburgh in 1502/3. He was deceased in 1502 when his lands on the south side of the 'King's street' in Edinburgh are mentioned in 2 other documents. Richard (d.c.1577) flesher and Burgess of Perth. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1577/8. Richard (16th C.) son of John. His father was already deceased in 1559/60 when he became a saddler Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. Richard of Burnbroom (d.c.1596) described as 'of Burnebrume, par. of Monkland' in Lanarkshire when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1596/7. Rev. Richard (1641–1722) 3rd son of George, the last of the old Scotts of Synton, with his mother being Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whitlaw. His brother was George of Boonraw. He was educated in Edinburgh, receiving his M.A. in 1658 and becoming minister at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire in 1675. He became minister in his home Parish of Ashkirk in 1685. In 1688 Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him, describing him as the 'Right Reverend, and truly Pious, and vertuous generous Gentleman, Mr Richard Scot, Parson of Ashkirk'. However, he was deprived of his living in 1689 for refusing to read the Proclamation of the Estates and to pray for William and Mary, i.e. being an Episcopalian (or a Jacobite). He married Katherine Crichton and their children included Jean, who married Alexander Leslie, an Aberdeen advocate and secondly married Alexander Abercrombie of Fetterneir; she is mentioned in a disposition of 1724 as a widow of Abercrombie. He is recorded being resident in Lady Yester's parish in Edinburgh along with his wife and daughter in 1694. He died in Edinburgh without male issue. It has been suggested that he may have helped Scott of Satchells with his 'True History', particularly with the part on the descent of the Scotts of Sinton and perhaps the list of 48 Lairds by the name of Scott. His year of death is sometimes incorrectly given as 1702 – 'And there is procreat betwixt them twa, This present young Laird of Bon-raw. Most reverend Sir, I hope you'l pardon me For waiding so deep in your Genealogie' [CWS]. Richard (17th/18th C.) said to be a younger son of George of Boonraw, and brother of Archibald, the last Laird of Boonraw. If he existed it would prove the claim that Charlie of the Crescent was descended from the Scotts of Boonraw. He was said (by James Haining) to have married a daughter of Charles 'Ogilvy' (although it is unclear who this might have been, perhaps a different Ogilvie than the local Chamberlains). However, he is easy to confuse with Rev. Richard, who was of the previous generation. It is possible he was the Richard who (along with George) witnessed a baptism in 1721 for John Turnbull in Wester Groundistone and who (also with George) in 1724 witnessed a baptism for George in Groundistone and in 1729 (also along with George) witnessed another baptism for a different George in Groundistone. It is possible he was the Richard whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1703), who may have married Alexander Purdom in Hawick in 1725; Bessy (b.1705); Janet (b.1707); and Agnes (b.1710). He may also be the Richard, married to Margaret Scott, whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Richard (b.1717); and William (b.1720). Richard of Boghall (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1722 as witness to 2 baptisms in Hawick. One was for Robert Nichol, workman in Weensland (with the other witness being Robert, tenant in Newton), while the other was for William Stoddart, workman in Hawick. It is possible he is the same man as the son of George of Boonraw. Rev. Richard (1729–90) son of John, minister of Stenhouse. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, licensed by the Presbytery of Peebles in 1752 and ordained at Cranshaws in 1759. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1761 and remained there until he died. He was said to have been 'mild and gentle in manner', but 'fervent in the divine service'. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785 and 1787. In 1761 he married Mary Turnbull, and she died in 1796. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Janet (b.1762), who married William Irvine; James (b.1764), a merchant in New York; Hector (b.1766); John (b.1768), who died young; Anne (b.1768), a twin to John; John (again, b.1771), merchant in London; Martha (b.1774); and George (b.1778), also merchant in London. He wrote 'Letters on the Culture of Potatoes'. Richard (18th C.) married Helen Rae in Wilton in 1859. Richard (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick Parish. The mother was Mary Rutherford and 'Forni-' was indicated beside the entry. The witnesses were Walter of Boghall (perhaps his father) and carrier Walter Purdom. Richard (b.1889) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a warehouse foreman in Hawick and later became a publican. In 1916 he married Elizabeth Anderson Ballantyne (1892–1977), whose father was a mill foreman, brother was killed at the Somme and paternal grandfather was Burgh Chamberlain in Galashiels (all called Andrew). His daughter Margaret Dobson (1920–2018) married Richard Street and was known for her efforts to protect Scottish heritage. Richard Edmondson 'Dick' (1910–1991) local artist, writer and historian. He was son of Bailie Francis, married Agnes Little Townsend (b.1913) and was father of Francis Townsend (Frank) and Elizabeth Anne (Anne). Born at 26 High Street, he left school at 14 to work for Watsons, then worked in the family painters and decorators from about 1935. During WWII he served in the Physical Training Corps, but did not enjoy his forced exile from Hawick. In the mid-1950s he became a reporter with the Hawick Express, eventually taking over as editor from John Hood. He was the anonymous writer of the 'Betty Whutson' column for the years 1961–83. As an artist he was responsible for hundreds of Hawick scenes, usually in watercolour, signing as 'R.E. Scott'. He exhibited at Art Club shows regularly for decades, as well as having paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1943 and 1944. And as a sign-writer his work was a familiar sight around Hawick for several decades. He was a successful sprinter with the Teviotdale Harriers in the 1930s, being club 100 yards champion in 1930, 1935, 1936 and 1937. He won the Common Riding sprint in 1930, the 120 yards handicap and 100 yard scratch race at the 1937 Lauder Common Riding on the same day, was Border 120 yards champion in 1936 and 1937 and 100 yards champion in 1937 and won a 100 yards handicap event at Clyde F.C. Sports in 1938. He was also a member of the Hawick Swimming Club, becoming Club President, Secretary and Captain. He had a 28 year connection with the Scouting movement, helping set up the first Cub troop in the late 1920s and becoming a local Cub Scout Commissioner. He was a member of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for many years, and was also a member of the P.S.A. Choir and the Masons. He spent much of his 'spare' time trekking the local hills with his wife Agnes. He wrote 'The Companion to Hawick' (1970, revised 1981), 'Hawick's Honorary Burgesses Since 1734' (1974), 'I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbulls' (1977) and 'A Hundred Years are Gane and Mair, A History of Hawick Burns Club 1878–1978' (1978), as well as many articles for the Archæological Society Transactions. He was Secretary, Syllabus Secretary, Transactions Editor and President of the Archæological Society, giving 50 years of service. In 1967 he became Curator of the Museum, revelling in this job, and living in the flat on the top floor of Wilton Lodge until his retirement in 1975. He was known for his modest nature and for being an enthusiastic and meticulous local historian of his day, questions being referred to him long after his retirement – '. . . So Hawick folk both young and old, never forget Dick Scott: In praises, he deserved far more than those he ever got' [IWL]. Robert (12th C.) witness to a grant of lands in Kinross-shire to St. Andrews Priory in the 1170s. Robert (12th C.) recorded in a record of Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire in 1189/90 as 'Robert le Scot in Ailiesbiria'. The Sheriff of those counties gave account for his lands there. Robert (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Walter, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Robert (13th C.) recorded as 'le Scot', messenger, when there was a writ in 1242 for his payment of 1 mark for his expenses by King Henry's gift. Robert (13th C.) recorded as Robert 'de Scotia' in Bologna in 1279. He was a Master and also 'nepos domini Roberti Testorerii guesnensis'; this may be Robert de Tynedale, Treasurer of Glasgow about that time, and if so he could be the same man as Robert de Tynedale, recorded as a medically qualified cleric in the 1290s. Robert (13th C.) recorded as Robert 'le Scot' 'of Hecham' in a document of 1290 relating to the Priory of Lewes (presumably the one in Sussex). His lands may have been at Hexham. He was married to 'Cristiana Atehallegate'. Their son John acknowledged in the document that he was 'servus' and 'rusticus' of the Prior. He could be the same as 'Robertum Scot' and 'Robertus le Scot' recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unknown if he was related to other Scotts. Robert (13th/14th C.) Templar, who was recorded as Robert 'le Scot'. He joined the order in about 1283 at Château Pèlerin in modern Israel. He left the order, but 2 years later went to Rome to confess, paid a penance and was readmitted at Nicosia. He was later in England, at Daney in Kent, and may have been among the Templars arrested in 1309. Robert of Esperston (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in Midlothian. As told in a 14th century document, his daughter Christina married William, daughter of Geoffrey of Halkerstoun, who gave his wife's lands to the Knights Templar; after William's death, she was forcibly removed from her lands, losing a finger in the process, appealed to the King, was re-instated in her lands, but was expelled by the Templars once more in 1296. Robert (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1296 in a case relating to Richard of Whiteacre. This was among cases at a court of the English army held at Roxburgh. Probably the same Robert (along with William) was paid in 1307/8 for acting as messenger from Cumnock, to Ayr and then to Lanark. Robert (c.13th C.) landholder in Dumfries mentioned in an undated document of Kelso Abbey. Robert (13th/14th C.) from Glasgow, he was recorded in 1301 when he delivered letters to the Queen from the (English) Sheriff of Roxburgh regarding expenses. He may have been related to William, who was recorded at the same time. Robert (13th/14th C.) archer at Edinburgh Castle according to an English document of 1311/2. Robert (13th/14th C.) recorded as owner of lands of 'Roucan' in Cullen, Moray. This was in a charter for William, son of William 'de Karlo', nephew of the King, during the reign of Robert I. Robert (bef. 1346–c.89) 3rd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch) and also of Kirkurd and Mudiestoun. He was probably son of Sir Michael (althought these early generations are still murky). His brother John was probably the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden and Raeburn. Little is known about him, probably because this was a relatively peaceful period in Scottish history! He lived for more than 40 years after succeeding his father. He held the lands in Selkirkshire, as well as those older lands in Peeblesshire and the lands in Lanarkshire that had been acquired through marriage. It is possible that he died at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, although there are no records to support this. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter, who had a charter for the superiority of Kirkurd in 1389. It is possible he is the Sir Robert, from Glasgow Diocese, whose widow Alice had permission in 1408 to marry Richard Turnbull. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in an English documents when he was pardoned by Edward II in 1335. Perhaps the same Robert was in the garrison at Roxburgh in 1342, when his son Robert was also mentioned. Robert (14th C.) son of a priest, with surname recorded as 'Scoti'. In 1394 there was a request for him to receive a benefit from Paisley Abbey. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in 1410 as a former owner of the lands of 'Borthwic' and 'Thoftcotys' in the Borthwick valley. Since the first record of the name 'Roberton' was only a few years earlier, it is possible that the area was named after his house there. It is stated that the lands were conferred on Sir William 'of Borthwic' on resignation by him. Hence it is possible there was a connection between the first of the Borthwick family and the Scotts. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch and possibly related to the later Scotts of Roberton and Borthwick. Robert (14th/15th C.) esquire in the county of Huntingdon recorded in 1426/7. He was one of 3 men who bound themselves to produce at court in London a merchant from 'Conyngham' in Scotland who had a debt to Englishmen. Robert (d.1426) 5th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), he succeeded his father, the first Sir Walter Scott, who died at Homildon Hill. He is named as the superior of the lands of Kirkurd in a charter for Ladyurd in 1406. In 1406/7 he confirmed a charter, as Lord of 'Murthoustoun' for lands in the Barony of Kirkurd. In 1410 he is probably the Robert who resigned his lands of Borthwick and 'Thoft Cotys' (possible Hoscote) into the hands of Robert, Duke of Albany, so that they could be granted to Sir William of Borthwick; however, this may have been a regranting, and it is unclear how long he may have held these Borthwick lands. In 1415 he exchanged his lands of 'wynzehope' called Glenkerry (on the Tima Water) for lands at 'Bellinden' (i.e. Bellendean) with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This was with permission of his son Walter, and they kept fishing an hunting rights in their old lands. He also acquired half the lands of Branxholme from John Inglis in 1420, thereby becoming the first Scott of Branxholme. In 1426 he granted Lempitlaw to his son Walter, shortly before he died. He is also probably the Robert 'of Murthar and Liston' (probably a transcription error for 'Muthokston') who witnessed an undated charter whereby John Inglis of Manor and Branxholme granted 'Kyrktoune and Toftis' in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. Other sons were probably Stephen of Castlelaw and Burrellands and Robert of Haining. His 1415 seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star and the words 'SIGILLUM ROBERTI SCOTT'; this is the earliest known seal for the main branch of the family. Robert (14th/15th C.) Rector of Tinwald in Dumfriesshire. In 1427 he made a request to the Pope to confirm him in Tinwald because of some dispute. In 1429 he requested to be given the Church of Lincludden. He was also said to be Chaplain to Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. Robert (15th C.) English Lieutenant to the Constable of the Tower of London. He received Scottish prisoners from Pontefract Castle in 1424 and from Knaresburgh in 1424. He was also recorded in 1434, 1437/8 and 1438 regarding expenses for Scottish hostages, through accounts of the Warden of Roxburgh Castle; he is described as 'late lieutenant of the constable of the Tower'. Robert (15th C.) listed as a Bailie of Hawick (along with Thomas Blair) among the witnesses to the sasine of 1452 regranting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Presumably the same man is described as a Burgess (probably of Hawick) in 1454 when he was witness to a legal instrument relating to lands in Eckford, which was witnessed in a tenement of 'John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic'. It is unclear how exactly he was related to the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch, but this establishes that there were Scotts within the Burgh from its very earliest days. Robert of Todshaw (15th C.) name in an 'instrument of obligation' from King James III in 1463/4 for the sum of 1200 merks Scots. This was in payment equivalent to the 50 merks of money and 50 merks of land promised for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, brother of the Earl of Douglas. He may be the Robert who in 1463 was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. He is probably the same as Robert of 'Togehaugh' (i.e. Todshawhaugh) who witnessed a charter for the lands of Whitchester in 1484. It seems likeley that his lands were at Todshawhaugh (rather than what was later called Todshaw). Perhaps the same 'Robertus scot in todshawhalch' was able to 'compone' in 1493, along with John Turnbull in Hawick for the crime of bringing in Englishmen; his surety was the Laird of Howpasley. Robert of Eilrig (15th C.) leased the lands of Craik from Alexander Cockburn of Ormiston in 1477 for 6 years. Cockburn also appointed him as 'Bailie' of those lands, with the power to holds courts etc. Robert (15th C.) recorded as customs officer in Arbroath in the period 1481–96. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Robert of Muirhouse and Whames (d.c.1505) son of Stephen. He had a sasine for the lands of 'Murhaus' (i.e. Murihouse near Edinburgh) in 1464. He is recorded in 1482 being sold the land of 'Underchesters' (probably adjacent to Highchesters) by Henry Wardlaw, at that time still Baron of Wilton. The 'Murehouse' was in the Barony of Crichton (now in Midlothian) and not the place near Dryfesdale in Dumfriesshire (where there was a connection in the next couple of generations), or the area near Lilliard's Edge. He is probably the same Robert, son and heir of Stephen of Muirhouse, who witnessed a 1453 sasine at Milsington. This Stephen seems was also referred to as being of Castlelaw, who was a brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He is probably the Robert 'of Dogehauch' who repaid the loan on the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1477 (which had involved Stephen of Muirhouse 15 years earlier). It also seems likely he was related to the Howpasley and Thirlestane branches; John of Thirlestane received the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw in 1483. He is 'roberti de quhamys' in 1493 when his brother Alexander was allowed to 'compone' for stealing livestock. He is probably the Robert 'in Quhommis' recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, along with 'Thome Howate' had their fines remitted. His son and heir George had an instrument in 1505/6 where he claimed his father's lands of Muirhouse. Robert of Cockerheugh (15th C.) recorded as 'of Cochehaucht' when witness to a charter of 1484/5 when Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He was probably closely related to the Scotts of Hassendean. Robert of Bowerhouse (15th C.) mentioned in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing sheep from him. He is recorded being 'de bourhous', which is probably Bowerhouse, perhaps the one near Lauder. Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester (d.bef. 1506) 3rd son of Sir David, 7th Laird of Buccleuch. By 1471/2 he was the 2nd surviving son of Sir David (the oldest son Walter having died) when he was named in the marriage contract between his brother David and Jane Douglas; if David died, then he was to marry Jane, sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. He may be the 'Roberto Scot' who witnessed the document passing Mangerton from the Armstrongs to David of Buccleuch in 1482. He received Whitchester from his father in 1483, with a charter of the lands and lordship following in 1484/5. He resigned them back to his father shortly afterwards, apparently so that Sir David could arrange the entail of his lands. Following the death of his brother David (whose son Walter would succeed to the Buccleuch titles) he became increasingly important in the running of his father's affairs. In 1484 he was, with his father, granted the Bailiary of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey (meaning that they administered the lands financially and judicially). He is recorded as son of David of Buccleuch when he leased the Crown lands of Winterburgh in 1483. The lease continued in 1488, along with William Roger, with Sir David of Buccleuch as pledge, and continued further in 1490 and 1492. In 1487 he was procurator for his father when he resigned his lands into the hands of the King. In 1488 he and his father were thanked for their serive to the King at the Battle of Blackness, with the Barony of Branxholme being regranted and him named as second in line, after his nephew Walter (who became Lord of Branxholme and Buccleuch). Also in 1488 he leased the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne for 19 years from Sir Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the 'Robert Scot of Branxholme' who is recorded in a sasine of 1490 purchasing land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He features prominently in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, being given £40 and appointed as 'tutor' for Sir David's heir Walter (his nephew), as well as a 'tutor' for William Turnbull of Minto. In 1491/2 he was 'of Quhytchester' when he witnessed a sasine for William Douglas of Cavers. In 1492 his nephew Walter assigned to him all the moveable goods of his father Sir David, in order to pay off debts etc. In 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, he served as surety for: Robert, son of Gilbert Elliot; Alexander, brother of Robert of Whames; Thomas Brown in Minto; Walter of Howpasley; William, son of William of Goldielands; John Melrose in Whithaugh; George Waugh in Hawick; John Davidson in Minto; and others. In 1494/5 he was Robert 'of Quhitchester' when he served was surety for Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, John of Deloraine, David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick, and George Fawlaw in Hawick. That same year he 'was permitted to compound' (i.e. pay a fine) for the slaughter of Adam Crawford and for associating with Alexander Jardine, who was a rebel; the Laird of Buccleuch was surety for him. He is recorded in the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also Robert 'of Allanhaugh' in 1494/5 when, along with Adam in Annelshope, he was surety for John in Erncleuch. In 1498/9 he had remission from the King for communing with and assisting rebels and for other crimes. In 1499 he was 'de Quhitchester' when he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. He was one of the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. He is recorded in a bond of 1500, where Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew and superior) held his tenancy of the lands of Whitchesters until he repaid a debt to Alexander Cockburn of Ormiston Hall; however, it is possible that this was his son rather than him. He is probably the 'Robertus scot de allanehalch' who was surety in 1502 for Alexander Weens and was fined for the non-appearance of Weens at court in Jedburgh. Also in 1502, at the Justice-aire in Peebles, he was surety for Alexander in Hopeton, who may have been the same man as his son Alexander. Additionally, along with Patrick Dickson, he was joint surety in Edinburgh for entering George Dickson for the murder of Simon Dickson. He may have married Christian, sister of William Cockburn of Henderland, who was hanged as a reiver in 1530; however, this seems more likely to have been his son. It has also been suggsted that his wife was Janet Adamson. However, what is documented is that he married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Tweedie of Drumelzier; the 'tocher' for this marriage was the lands of Wester Deanshouses in Newland Parish, Peeblesshire, which were in dispute in 1498, and sold following the death of his wife Elizabeth Tweedie by 1505. His oldest son was also Robert, who held property in Hawick and farmed at Whitchesters. His grand-daughter married John Scott of Thirlestane. Other sons were: Alexander, who served as a clerk to James V and was the progenitor of the Scotts of Scotstarvit; James (said to be the 3rd son), who was Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine; and Walter, who sold his interest in Wester Deanshouses in 1519. It is claimed that he died at an advanced age, but in that case he must have had his children late; this is because Scott of Rodono suggests he was dead by 1509, with his sons then being minors (younger than 25), so that Walter of Howpasley was then the closer adult male relative to the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1506/7 he was already deceased when his son Robert was involved in redeeming a loan with John Murray of Falahill with a tower in Hawick as collateral; he may have had this tower 'between the bridges' built – it is possible that it was the predecessor of Drumlanrig's Tower. Robert of Haining (15th C.) possibly 3rd son of Robert, 5th Laird of Buccleuch (however, he would appear to have lived about a generation later than this). In 1463 he had a charter for the lands of 'Grevistoun et le Gillishauch' in Peeblesshire from James Crichton of Cairns, witnessed in Edinburgh by David and Alexander, son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd (6th Laird of Buccleuch, hence perhaps his nephews). In 1464/5 he was 'Robin Scot of the Haynig' when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1476 he granted a charter for lands in Peeblesshire to his cousin Thomas Middlemas. In 1477 he sold the lands of Haining, witnesses again including David and Alexander, sons of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The lands passed to Murray of Philiphaugh, but returned to his son John. He is recorded in a 'letter of reversion' with David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. This involved borrowing on lands in Selkirk, with security of the lands of 'Uverhawikschelis', 'Netherhawikschelis' and 'Quhitrig' in the Barony of Branxholme. He is probably the Robert who acted as one of the Earl of Angus' Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484/5 he is described as 'Bailie in that part' in a sasine giving the lands of Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme, and in the same year he is 'in Hanyng' when he witnessed the charter giving Whitchesters to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh (with Adam listed after him, so possibly a son). In 1486 it is stated in the Exchequer Rolls that he held the Haining for life. He was appointed as one of the bailies in 1488 for the leasing of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne by Robert Scott from Sir Thomas Turnbull; he was there referred to as 'Roberto Scot de Hanyng'. His son Robert was witness to a related document in 1488 and was also 'junior' in 1492 when he and his mother Janet had a 3 year lease on the Haining. In 1489 he was on the retour panel for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. Either he or his son was 'Robertum Scot de Hanyn' in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 he was recorded when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining (with his son John also having sheep stolen). He is the 'Robert Scot in Hanyng' listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig. He was succeeded by John of Haining, who is recorded in 1510 and died at Flodden. His wife's first name was Janet, but her surname is not recorded. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed 12 sheep in the last will of Sir David of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is separate from Robert of Allanhaugh, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Horsleyhill (15th C.). William Elliot of Larriston is said to have married his daughter and thereby inherited Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he may have been related to other local Scotts; the Scotts of Horsleyhill of the 17th and 18th centuries were descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw, and so (presumably) not closely related. Robert (15th C.) first witness listed on the 1494 charter in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. He is listed as being of 'Achinstancleich', but it is uncertain where these lands were. It seems likely he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with Robert Edgar. The pair were already 'at the horn' when James Young in Eldinhope was convicted of resetting and communing with them. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of David, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was surety for James Laidlaw in 'Wynterburn' (possibly Winterburgh) who had remission for killing his cousin John Laidlaw from Wolfehope. It is possible he was Robert, son of the Laird of Buccleuch, but that Robert was recorded being of Whitchester when he served as surety in the same year; hence it seems more likely he was son of David, younger of Buccleuch, and hence brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. However, he could be son of some other David with a connection to Selkirkshire. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Philip and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of 'resetting, supplying and intercommuning' with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Robert (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as 'Robertum Scot'. 2 Johns are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Langhope. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1499, coming after Adam in Tushielaw in the list of payments made in Ettrick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Hartshaw (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1499 when his son Walter gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope was assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where 'Hartschaw' was. He may have been the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) occupier of the lands of Redford for 6 years prior to 1499, when they were let instead to the Comptroller, Patrick Home, and he had to pay the balance due. These were the 3 steadings of 'Hindhop, Drycleuchschele, and Redefurd' in Ettrick Forest, which may have been associated with what was later called Redfordgreen. He may be the Robert, who had payment for the 'fermes' of some Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in the period 1503–06. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500 to a document for Scott of Branxholme, relating to the lands of Whitchesters. He is recorded as being 'de La Toure', although it is unclear which tower. He may be related to Adam of Hermiston or Walter, son of James of Hassendean, who are also listed. He may be the same man as one of the other contemporary Roberts. It is possible that he is son of Robert of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh, and resided as the tower 'between the bridges' in Hawick, which is mentioned in a document of 1507/8. He may be related to John 'called of the Toor', who is recorded in 1609. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lairs who is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded as 'Robertus Scot in Laris'. It seems likely he was related to George, who owned Lairs at that time. Robert of Deloraine (15th/16th C.) son of John of Deloraine. In 1494/5 he was recorded as elder son ('filius senior') of John when he served as surety for John Reid at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. He may have been tenant of Deloraine, rather than owner. Probably the same Robert 'of Dalorian' was recorded in 1494/5 when he received 'remission' along with David Lauder for assisting the King's rebels etc. Also in 1494/5 he was allowed to 'compone' for several rieving crimes (including stealing cows from Thomas Frissell, horses from Wolfhope and cows from Newark), with Walter of Howpasley as surety. He could also be the 'Robertum Scot de Ettrik' recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 in relation to payments made to him. He was recorded in 1502 as being called 'Bellit Robin' (probably meaning that he was bald) when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Jedburgh court. In 1510 it must be the same man who is 'Belde Robin Scot' when the Lady of Buccleuch (Elizabeth Kerr, wife of Sir Walter, the 8th Laird) was surety for him, but fined for his non-appearance; he was denounced a rebel and his goods forfeited. His nickname suggests that he was bald-headed. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was fined £40 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander 'Wyndis' of that Ilk was convicted at the same time for the crime done to Philip Fawlaw, who lived in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to several land transactions in Edinburgh in 1502. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1516) possibly a son of the first Robert of Haining, although this is far from certain. He might be the Robert, son of Robert of Haining, who is recorded in 1486, 1488 and 1492. He was the first Scott of Oakwood, and is recorded as such in 1503 when he was witness to a pledge made by William Cranston of that Ilk at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. His children included: Michael, who succeeded; and Robert, who may have been grandfather of Simon of Bonnington. He may also have had a daughter Isabel, who married James Murray of Bowhill (whose daughter later transferred her lands to her uncle, Michael of Aikwood), Robert (d.bef. 1532) son of Robert of the Haining. In 1486 he leased the lands of 'Weststeide de of Filchosyde' in Ettrick Ward. He was witness to a document relating to the lease of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne in 1488. He is explicitly referred to as son of Robert of Haining (who was one of the bailies in that part for the precept associated with the same land transfer). In 1492 he is recorded as 'Roberto Scot juniori' when he and his mother leased the lands of Haining. It seems that Haining was later inherited by his brother John. He may be the same man as Robert of Aikwood. Robert of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Robert Scot of Quhittheff' when witness to a sasine in 1499 for George Douglas, Master of Angus. This is probably the Whitehaugh near Hawick, although this is not certain. He was probably related to David 'in Quhithauche' who is recorded in 1510 and perhaps the David who first gained Whitehaugh in 1479. He may have been related to the Scotts of Heap and Borthwick. Although Scott of Satchells' genealogy of the Scotts of Whitehaugh is largely unreliable, he may correspond to the Robert of Whitehaugh who he says was son of the first Walter of Whitehaugh, related to the Scotts of Borthwick and ultimately descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Robert of Burnfoot (15th/16th C.) probably 3rd (or 4th) son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was referred to as 'of Nether Newhall' and later 'of Burnfoot', showing that these were once different names for the same estate. He is recorded in 1510/1 receiving the 2 'merklands' of 'Dowiswod' in the Barony of Hassendean from his brother David of Hassendean. He may have been succeeded by Adam. Robert of 'Stirkshaws' and Synton (d.bef. 1509) probably 2nd son of Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws (Stirches), although there are varied interpretations in these generations. It is likely that he was great-great-grandson of George of Synton. He must have had a tower at Stirches, and was certainly involved in the transfer of Harden land to William 'Boltfoot', who is the ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was later the 8th Laird of Synton, making it unclear whether he was the same man as Robert 'in Synton', or whether there were 2 contemporary Roberts, both associated with Synton. He is probably the Robert of Stirches to whom James Newton of Dalcove sold the lands of Boonraw for 300 merks in 1481; in the associated sasine of 1487 he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw (further complicating the genealogy). In 1499 he is described as 'Roberti Scot in Langhop' when his rental entry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1500 he was one of the men appointed to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was assigned the 'Weststeid de Gildhous, alias Dodbank'; he was described there as 'Robert Scot [mortuus] de Stirkschaw' (i.e., already dead, suggesting perhaps that there are 2 distinct Roberts of Stirches in this period) and the pledge was given by John, son of James Scott (probably of Kirkurd and Hassendean). He also refused the rental of Redford in 1501. In 1501/2 there is a bond of reversion with Alexander, Lord Home, in which he agreed to resign the lands of Harden on payment of £100 Scots at the alter of Wilton Kirk (however, it is unclear whether this happened). In 1502 he was 'de stirkschawis' when he served as surety for John in Hassendean at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. In 1504/5 he bought the '6 merkland of Bondraw of old extent' (i.e. Boonraw, perhaps repurchasing) from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlemas; these lands had formerly belonged to James Newton of Dalcove, and he had a charter for the lands in 1505. In 1531 he was referred to as 'Vat Scot doughters sone and ayr to umquhill George Vaych of Norcht Synton', suggesting that he married a daughter of George Veitch, and thereby inherited part of Synton. However, Satchells says he was married to a daughter of Rutherford of Hunthill. His sons were Walter of Synton, William of Harden and David. He was killed by Andrew Crossar (i.e. Crozier), for which Crossar was drawn and hanged in 1509. He was probably dead by 1507/8 when Walter of Stirches (presumably his son) is recorded, and in 1510, when Walter, son of the deceased Robert, is mentioned holding lands in Synton, in an indenture between the Erskines and Kerrs. He was certainly deceased in 1512 when his son Walter transferred Harden to his other son William. David 'Lady' was recorded as tenant in Stirches in the early years of the 16th century, suggesting he may have been a close relative, possibly his son. In 1526 the long list of Borders men who had remission for their attack on the Earl of Arran contains 'Walter Scot of Syntoun, William Scot in Hardane, Dauid Scot his brother', all of whom were probably his sons. Adam Scott is recorded as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton, and hence was probably married to one of his daughters. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as 'Robertum Scott de Turri prope Selkirk' on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father's lands of Alemoor. His lands were clearly near Selkirk, but it is unclear whether they were a tower, or somewhere with a similar name. It is possible he was the same Robert mentioned being 'de La Toure' in a 1500 document. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw, brother of Philip, David, Simon, Walter and Thomas. He was tenant in Synton and is easily confused with Robert of Stirches, who was also sometimes 'of Synton'. In 1493 and in 1494/5 he was surety for Hector Lauder, Laird of Todrig, who had been involved with a raid on Minto and other crimes. In 1502 he is Robert 'in syntoun' who, along with William in Fenwick, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. Also in 1502 he was surety for John in Whitehaugh, for John in Hermiston, for John in Walls (along with Walter of Headshaw), for William in Fenwick (when he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw) and for Patrick in Harwoodhill (when he was 'in syntoun'). Additionally in 1502 he was 'de stirkschawis' when he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, who had stolen livestock from Harthern and wounded a man in Selkirk, and also (along with Walter of Howpasley) served as surety for Patrick, son of Adam 'in Hardwodhill', for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and (with George Turnbull of Hallrule) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument in Ayr in 1524. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1532) son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden. He was served heir in 1514. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, who was still a minor when he died. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is probably the Robert whose heirs are mentioned in 1527 when James 'Mouss', Burgess of Selkirk, resigned the fourth part of his lands of East Haining, which he held in bond from them. His son Thomas succeeded to Haining in 1538. Robert (16th C.) son of Adam of Tushielaw. He is mentioned in 1526, when Thomas McClellan of Bomby complained that his mother-in-law was removed by her son James Gordon of Lochinvar and delivered to him. Also in 1526 he was among Borderers listed having remission for the attack on the Earl of Arran; his father and brothers John and William were also listed. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Blindhaugh in 1535 when he witnessed a document at Drinkstone. This involved Robert in Howford requesting John in Drinkstone to vacate Drinkstone. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Howford (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was then 'in Howford' and warned John 'in Dringstoun' to vacate Drinkstone, which belonged heritably to him. John protested that he had valid possession consistent with the dues agreed to be paid to him. It is unclear how this dispute was resolved. Robert in Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses. The connections here may give a clue to the origins of the Scotts of Howford. In 1538 he witnessed (along with George in Blindhaugh) a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and 'Chames'. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between his son Walter and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who appears to have been a sister of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). George in Blindhaugh was decribed as 'gudschir' (i.e. grandfather or other senior male relative) of his son Walter; it seems likely that George in Blindhaugh was his brother. An entry (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1540 makes it clear that Marion Dalgleish was his wife, and hence the marriage contract was between step-brother and step-sister. He is probably the Robert 'in Howford' recorded in 1544 when John, heir of the deceased James Gledstanes of Cocklaw complained that he and his tutor William Scott (perhaps an uncle) had made an arrangement for 6 ½ husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed Gledstains 200 merks redemption money. The Robert of Howford listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch, may have been his son. Robert 'Tutor of Howpasley' (15th/16th C.) probably the 2nd or 3rd son of Alexander of Howpasley. He may be the Robert of Howpasley who in 1493 served as surety for Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole and may also be the Laird of Howpasley who was surety for Robert in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick. However, Walter of Howpasley (presumably his brother) is also recorded as surety for several people in 1493 and 1494/5, and it appears that both men were designated as Laird of these lands at the same time. He is probably the 'Robertum Scot de Holpaslot' who was on the 1517 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the lands of Branxholme. In 1524/5 he was 'Tutor of Howpaslot' when he was one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace. He was listed as 'tutour to Howpaslot' in the large number of Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his brother Simon also listed). In 1526 he was one of the men recorded in a protest by the superior of his lands, Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may also have been tutor to the Scotts of Buccleuch, like his brother Walter. In 1527 he was witness to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. In 1527 he was among the local lairds, led by Sir Walter of Branxholme, given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he (along with other supporters of Buccleuch) was pardoned for crimes of treason and had his lands restored; this was at the instigation of Buccleuch, and the crimes referred to presumbly included trying to capture the young King at Skirmish Field. He is 'tutor of Howpaslot' in 1528, when one of the abitrators asked to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He also witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill in 1528. He is further recorded as witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands in 1528/9, where he is described as 'Robert Scot, tutor of Howpaslet' and holder of the lands of Craik. He is mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was the first of the Lairds of Roxburghshire listed as submitting themselves to the King's will to keep peace on the Border. In 1532 he was still 'tutor of Houpaslot' when he was executor (along with George of Blindhaugh) for Janet of Howpasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primside a fee for the marriage of Janet to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun; he also promised to bind himself to 'his beloved friend' George of Blindhaugh, against payment for this dowry. A charter of 1532/3 transfers Midshiels and Appletreehall from Janet Scott (daughter of his brother Walter) to him. This is confirmed in a royal grant of 1536, Appletreehall and Midshiels formerly being held by his father (presumably Alexander of Howpasley). Robert (d.bef. 1539) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1516/7, in right of his wife, who was a daughter of William Forsyth. In 1539 his widow Elizabeth Forsyth gave her tenement and rigs in Selkirk to their daughter Elizabeth; James (who was probably a relative) pointed out that he already had liferent of the tenement. Robert (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1524, in right of his wife, who was a daughter of Laurence Henrison. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert (16th C.) resident of Perthshire. In 1551 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and Hugh, son of John 'Fenesoun'; the marriage to take plae 'in all gudly haist'. He was to pay 90 merks as a dowry, while the couple were to receive tacks from the lands of Carpow, 'Pitgrugny' and Ferryfield near Abernethy. He may be the Robert, portioner in Carpow in Fife whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1575/6, at the same time as that of Thomas, also portioner in Carpow. He was probably related to John in Carpow, whose will was registered in 1582/3. Robert 'Auld Hob o Riskenhope' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1557 when he paid rental on Shorthope in the Ettrick valley to the monks of Melrose. He was probably related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Thirlestane etc. Robert (16th C.) tenant in 'Vestir Dron' in Perthshire. He is recorded as witness to a document of 1558 relating to lands there. Several other documents at about that time were witnessed by Roberts who could be him. Robert of Howpasley (d.bef. 1567) son of Sir Walter of Howpasley. His uncle Robert was his 'tutor' for many years; he was a minor until at least 1530. He is probably the Robert to whom in 1532 Janet (his mother) sold her 10 merklands of Birkenside in Berwickshire, and which he then sold to Andrew Ker of Primside. In 1533 he (and presumably not his uncle), along with John of Thirlestane, entered a 'bond of manrent' with Malcolm, Lord Flemming (Chamberlain of Scotland). Also in 1533 he and Philip in Dryhope were accused by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there. In 1539 he and Ninian Anderson received 289 sheep on behalf of Thomas Marjoribanks, which Patrick Murray of Falahill, 'Sanders' Murray and James Grieve owed to the King's grace. He is probably the Robert of Howpasley who had 6 particates of land within Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He had the lands of Howpasley confirmed to him and his wife Isobel Murray in 1536, and later received the 'non-entry' duties of the lands for the years since the death of his father Walter. He is the Laird of 'Howpaslot' who was on an assize in Edinburgh in 1534. In 1535 he had a black horse stolen from his lands of 'Wolcleuche' by Simon Armstrong and others and his farm at Howpasley was burned by a group of Armstrongs, with 60 cattle being taken. In 1539 he and Thomas (son of Adam) were warned to remove their tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. In 1539/40 he sold the farm of 'le cot rig' in the Mains of Appletreehall to Janet Scott, widow of Robert 'Elwand'; it is written that he 'binds himself faithfully after coming to his house from Edinburgh' to guarantee peaceful possession of the farm by Janet until he paid her the same amount back. In 1539 he was on the 'retour' panel for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. In 1541 he occupied the lands of Whitehope (in Yarrow), Ladhope (in Ettrick) and 'Aldishope' (in Ettrick), as well as claiming the lands of Howford. In 1541 he was one of the cautioners (for the huge sum of £10,000) for John Johnstone of that Ilk. Also in 1541 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. An English document of 1543 describes how his farms at 'Appiltre and Chauerbenton' (presumably Appletreehall and Chamberlain Newton) were attacked by men from Tynedale, who took 70 head of cattle, 170 sheep, 28 horses and goods from the houses, as well as 12 prisoners. He is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter in 1547/8 when they complained about the Kerrs joining the English at Pinkie, and burning their lands. In 1549 he granted his 2 husband lands of Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; his heir Walter, and other son Robert, were among the witnesses. In 1550 he gave a further charter to Hector Turnbull for the lands of Pinnacle and Broomlands. Also in 1550, he entered into a bond with Sir Walter of Branxholme and 9 other Scotts (and Elliot of Redheugh) in which they promised the Queen and Lord Governor to assist in bringing in criminals. He is recorded in 1553, along with his son Walter, when their lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire were 'apprised', i.e. sold to pay debts. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557 he was fined for not appearing among other Scotts to answer for the attempted murder of Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1562 he leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgleish in Deuchar; the witnesses included William in Hartwoodmyres, William's son Thomas, Adam of 'Vamfra', Philip of Dryhope and William in Tushielaw. Also in 1562 he witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562/3 he was elder of Howpasley when, along with his son Sir Walter, the superior of the lands tried unsuccessfully to have him removed. He is probably the 'Lard of Howpaslocht' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the Laird of Howpasley listed on Monipennie's c.1594 compilation of Border lairds (even although he was long deceased by then). His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Murray, who was 2nd daughter of John 'the Outlaw Murray' of Falahill. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in 1578/9. His children may also have included John of Thirlestane. Robert of Allanhaugh (d.c.1557) son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters, he held 3 'particates' of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He may be the same man as Robert 'de La Toure' who witnessed a charter relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1500 (although it is possible there was another generation of Roberts). In 1507/8 he was probably the Robert, son and heir of Robert of Whitchesters who had a loan with John Murray of Falahill involving the 'turrim edificatam burgo de Hawic inter pontes' (i.e. the tower built in Hawick between the bridges). If this is true, it suggests that the predecessor of Drumlanrig's Tower was built by the Scotts of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh. In 1517 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch inheriting his father's barony of Branxholme. He was probably the Robert of 'Allanehauche' who, with several others, swore to help the Earl of Angus (the new Warden) keep the peace in 1524/5. He is probably also the Scott of 'Allanshaugh' who is recorded in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1526. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He is mentioned as being pardoned about 1528, along with Robert of Howpasley and William of Hassendean, and also mentioned in the indenture of 1529 attempting to reconcile the Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In 1530/1 his son and heir apparent William was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle along with John, son of Walter of Synton, with sureties being Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he was indicted for not paying to George, Lord Home 9 years of rent for the lands of Greenwood and Lyne; his brother Adam acted as surety. Also in 1535 he was tried in Jedburgh of a set of rieving crimes, specifically bringing men from Liddesdale to burn Midlem and steal from several farms near there, as well as at Croslie, Fastheugh, Yair, Town-of-Rule, Sunderlandhall, Clarilaw and elsewhere; he was found innocent of the charges. He is recorded as 'of Alanhaucht' in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. In 1541 he was accused by Sir Walter of Buccleuch of attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff, and 'had she not been ready, the butt end had slain her'; later that year, on Boxing Day, he drove away the cattle from Branxholme, and clearly there was a feud of some sort between the two Scotts. He may be the 'Rob Scott of Halowathe in Tevedall' who was recorded in an English letter as having his houses burned by men of Bewcastle in 1542, and 16 of his cows taken. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1554/5 he is recorded in a sasine as the tutor of the young Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was one of the group of 200 Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston in 1557, being later bound over not to harm Cranston afterwards. He seems likely to be the Robert 'of Allanmouth' listed among the 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He served as a 'tutor' for Walter Scott of Buccleuch during his minority. He may be the Robert of Whitchesters who was said to have married Christian, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland. He was succeeded by his son William, and may also have had a daughter who married John Scott of Thirlestane. In 1541 he infefted his son William (and William's wife, Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane) in his 6 merkland of 'Quhyisester treis' in the Barony of Whitchesters.

In 1569 his grandson and heir was stated to be another Robert of Allanhaugh (whose son William is recorded in 1581); it therefore seems likely that the succession was this Robert, William, Robert and William again, all before 1600. Robert of Alton and Clarilaw (16th C.) eldest son of Adam of Clarilaw. He is recorded as 'in Clarelaw' in 1528/9 in a 'discharge' of fees by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, relating to lands of several Scotts. He probably also related to the David 'in Clarelaw' recorded in the 1530s and 1540s. He is said to have lived to an advanced age and was succeeded in the lands of Alton by his son Adam. He is probably the Robert 'in Clarilaw descended from the antient house of Hassanden' who was listed by Satchells as being among the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch. Probably the same man was recorded as son and heir of Adam of 'Nethirmanis of Hassinden' in 1550/1 when he was infefted in the lands of Little Drinkstone. In 1566 presumably the same Robert is 'in Hassendenburn' when he had a letter of reversion in his favour from John Scott of Drinkstone for the lands of Little Drinkstone. He is recorded as Robert of Over Hassendean when he was witness to a confirming charter for the Turnbull of Hassendeanbank in 1571. He is similarly recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; he had purchased some land from John Scott of Drinkstone, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme's agent, John Watson. In 1580 he gave annual rent of his lands of the Over Mains of Hassendeanburn to the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell (widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) for the loan of £60 Scots; this was with the consent of his eldest son Adam. He 'touched the pen' to subscribe (meaning that he could not write himself). He was probably the Robert of Alton listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was also a witness in in 1581 to a 'letter of slains' in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was 'of Altoun' when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He may be the Robert of Hassendean who was involved in a dispute with Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1592 over a 2 merk land in Dowswood. Keith Scott suggests he lived to an advanced age and died about 1594, but this seems too late, so there may be 2 generations here. His son was Adam of Alton and his grandson was Robert of Alton; in 1606 Robert was served as heir to his father Adam in lands in Chamberlain Newton and to his grandfather Robert in lands in Hassendean, thus establishing the link between the 3 generations. In 1653 Robert of Alton's daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served 'heirs portioners' of Robert 'of Easter Maines of Hasindaine', their 'foir grandsher', who was probably him; hence he was great-grandfather of these 3 women. It is unclear how he was related to earlier and contemporary Scotts of Hassendean, however, it is possible he was closely connected with David (who was killed about 1564). Robert (16th C.) 2nd son of Philip of Headshaw. In 1531 he assigned to him the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, his uncle William of Ormiston acting as official for the legal transaction. It is unclear whether this happened, since his brother Walter was occupying Hartwoodburn in 1541. However, also in 1541 Walter assigned to him one quarter of Hartwoodburn, 'lying in ryndaill by open fields' for 5 years. He is recorded again as brother of Walter in a Selkirk document of 1541/2. In 1542 he is probably the Robert who let half of Hartwoodburn to John Angus, with the advise of Walter in Headshaw (probably his brother) and Walter of Haining. He could be the Robert in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1544, involving Thomas. In 1579 he was recorded as brother german of Walter of Headshaw when he was witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. Robert (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He gave in his reports with William, junior, who was surely related. He was probably also related to John, who was an official in Irvine at about the same time. Probably the same Robert was a Burgess of Irvine recorded in an instrument made in Ayr in 1531 and who held lands in 'Newtoun' in Ayrshire in the same year. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh who was recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. Robert (16th C.) possibly a son of David of Tushielaw and younger brother of Adam of Tushielaw and John of Thirlestane (although this is uncertain). He was Parish Clerk of St. Mary of the Lowes. He was described as 'in Bowhill' in 1557 when he was repledged for his part in the armed mob which came to the Church at St. Mary's seeking to kill Sir Peter

Cranston. His sureties were Sir John Scott, Commissary of the Archbishop of Glasgow and Robert Scott of Bonnington. Other men named include Scotts of Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. He is probably the Robert 'of Bowhill' who paid rental for lands in Rodono to Melrose Abbey in 1557. He is easy to confuse with Robert of Aikwood and Bowhill. Robert of Horsleyhill (16th C.) charged by the Queen's Advocate in 1563 with 'Resetting of Inglismenne, and Thiftuus Steling of certane Oxin'. William of Tushielaw was fined for not producing the relevant documents. Since it appears that Horsleyhill was owned by the Elliots about this time it is unclear how he could have been Laird (perhaps this was an error of Pitcairn in 'Scott' for 'Elliot'?; however, descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw would later own Horsleyhill). Robert 'Wait Aboot Um' (16th C.) recorded in 1562 along with Robert 'of Collefurd' and John 'callit the Clerk'. The 3 were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, but instead we to be pursued for their crimes. His name is explicitly recorded as 'Wait About Him', but it is unclear what this meant. Robert 'Hob' (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with John 'callit the Clerk' his brother and Hob 'Wait About Him'. He is listed as Robert 'of Collefurd'. The 3 were excepted from the assurance given by the Scotts that they would end their feud with the Kers, but instead these men were to be pursued (and hence presumably already found guilty of crimes). They were convicted of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged, along Mark Elliot called 'of the Hill' and John Henderson 'the Falser'; he is recorded as 'callit of Colyfurd'. He was surely related to the William, son of Walter, who had a sasine for Colifort in 1550. It was probably his widow who was the Katherine Scott, wife of the deceased Robert 'of Collenfurde' who remarried to Walter Dalmahoy in South Synton and resigned her lands in Hundleshope (in Peeblesshire) to her son Thomas Scott. In 1562 his son Thomas married Isabella, daughter of John Gledstains of that Ilk, and they were granted 4 husbandlands in Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington (d.bef. 1563) probably from the Scotts of Aikwood, but the precise connection is not established. He could, for example, have been a younger son of the first Robert of Aikwood. Sometime in the period 1514–1524 he married Katherine, daughter and heiress of John Boyle of Wamphray (in Dumfriesshire) and Rysholm (in Ayrshire); she was widow of John Johnstone and died in 1524. He assumed the designation 'of Wamphray and Rysholm'. In 1530 he was surety for 4 Johnstone brothers and in the same year Helen 'Baty' (wife of Alan Stewart) sued him for the right of marriage of the heir of Wamphray. He served on an assize in 1532 in Dumfriesshire and in 1535 was cautioner for Philip Murray of Falahill. In about 1540 he and Sir Walter of Buccleuch were released from ward after making promises to help keep order on the Border. He was 'of Wamphray' recorded in ward in 1540 when he was releaed (along with Robert of Howpasley) on condition of keeping the peace, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges. In 1541 he was 'of Wamphray' when he claimed tenancy of the lands of Winterburgh in Ettrick. His son Robert was infeft in the lands of Rysholm in 1541, but died before 1549. He was recorded as tenant in 'Rysholme' in Ayrshire in 1542, when he had a sasine for those lands. He was accused of being a traitor and spy in 1545 and appears to have taken refuge at Aikwood. He is also listed being of Wamphray in 1547/8 among the supporters of Sir Walter of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs, and in 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts to sign a bond with the Queen, to keep order and bring in criminals. In 1550 he was 'of Wamfrey' when he witnesed an obligation by Sir Walter Scott to bring in criminals on the Border. He and his son Adam sold Wamphray to James Johnstone of Pocornwell in 1548/9 and they also disposed of Rysholm in about 1550. They then moved to Selkirkshire, where he was 'in Haikwood' (i.e. Oakwood) in 1550. In about 1550 he purchased 'Haitpule and Little Ernstoun' from Lord Brthwick; he had previously been tenant in Haitpule (or Heathpool). At about the same time he and his son Adam bought 'Halmedow and Horsward' (Hallmeadow and Horswaird) from John Touris of Manor. In 1552 he was described as 'in Aikwode' when he and his son and heir Adam purchased both halves of the lands of Bonnington from the daughters and heirs of Martin Wylie. He was 'formerly of Wamfra' in 1552 when he and Robert of Thirlestane paid fines for people at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed as 'of Wanfra' among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557/8 he was 'sometime of Wamfray' when along with his son Adam they were bound by a charter to sell 'Ryisholme' in Ayrshire to John Hamilton of 'Beynstoun'; however, they were unable to do so, having been evicted and hence had to give rentals of Bonnington and other lands in Peebleshire to Hamilton. He is probably the same as the Robert 'of Bonyntoune' who was surety for some of the Scotts charged in 1557 with trying to kill Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes, and who was on the panel for charging John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. In 1557 he was 'of Bonytoun' when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for 'Espyhoup' and 'Stobeclouch'. In 1558 he was 'of Wamfra' when he received 'cloiss writtingis' from the Queen. In 1560 he had a charter for the lands of Wakefield in liferent, and to his son John in fee. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He secondly married Isobel Ker, who was widow of Michael of Aikwood. He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his son Adam, and he was grandfather of Simon of Bonnington (who was served heir to his grandmother, Katherine Boyle, in 1611); he may be the Adam 'of Vamfra' recorded in 1562. His other sons were: Robert, who predeceased him; John of Wakefield; John (again), an illegitimate son; and Robert, another illegitimate son, who was legitimatised in 1576 (and may be the Robert of Wamphray mentioned in 1597/8). He is probably the Robert recorded in a service of heirs in 1625; William Burnet succeeded to the brother of his great-grandfather on his mother's side, as heir to John of 'Walkmanfield' (in Peeblesshire), son of Robert of Bonnington, brother of Adam. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1550 as Bailie to Lord Hay, Constable of Scotland, in a legal instrument in Perthshire. Robert of Thirlestane (d.c.1576) son of John, the first recorded Laird of Thirlestane, in Ettrick valley. In 1550 he was among local lairds (including Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Howpasley) who swore to the Queen and Lord Governor that they would help bring in criminals. In 1553 there is an assurance by Walter Kerr of Cessford not to hurt him or his family and friends (this following the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in Edinburgh). In 1557 he was listed as being 'of Schastaine' (perhaps a transcription error) when he paid rental for 'Craige', 'Ramseclouch' and 'Thrilistane' to the monks of Melrose. He was also involved in 1557 with the band of about 200 Scotts and their supporters who sought out Sir Patrick Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes as part of a feud. He was appointed one of the curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1562, when he was in his minority. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was probably the 'Gudman of Thirlstane' on an assize of 1564 involving the murder of David of Hassendean. And in 1564/5 he was also listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in the bond signed with the Kerrs; he signed 'with my hand at the pen', indicating that he could not write). He was probably Warden-Depute of the West Borders, although no dates are known. In 1567 he was one of the cautioners for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Walter of Branxholme and Thomas, son of Walter Ker of Cessford. Also in 1567 he and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie's Will in Gorrenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. In 1568 he had a charter of feu-right for Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch, Scabcleuch and Craighill from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey. In 1568/9 his support was mentioned as a curator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on t further bond between the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1569 he (along with Sir Walter of Branxholme, Langlands of that Ilk and William, Lord Borthwick) was surety for several Elliots. He was also cautioner for Walter of Headshaw in 1569 and for other Borderers in 1573. In 1573 he was named as a debtor in the will of Dr. John Craig in Edinburgh. In late 1573 he was charged to enter Ade Dodds and George Laidlaw, tenants in Ramseycleuch. He was curator of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, recorded in 1575, but is deceased by 1577. He is probably the Laird listed in Monipennie's c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border chiefs. He married Margaret Scott, who may have been daughter of 'Wicked Wat' (not a daughter of the 1st Lord of Buccleuch, as suggested by Satchells); she was among the curators of her son Robert, complaining about the treatment he had at the hands of Simon Scott of Winterburgh, and was still living at Thirlestane in 1609. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert. Other sons were Walter of Gamescleuch and William of Fingland (who may also have had the lands of Merrylaw); both these sons are listed among those involved with the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands, and both were probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie – 'Johns Son, Robert, was Warden in his time, The fight of Robertshill he did gain, He for King, and Countrey did maintain the Truth; He married Scot, Daughter to the Laird of Buckcleugh' [CWS]. Robert of Allanhaugh (16th C.) recorded as 'Young Robert

Scot of Alanehauch' in 1557 when he rented the Brugh from Melrose Abbey. Probably the same Robert is described as heir to his deceased grandfather in 1569, when there was a discharge from his cousin, Sir Walter of Branxholme, for whom his grandfather acted as tutor during Sir Walter's minority; he was also granted the non-entry of the rents and other fees associated with Whitchester, from the time of the death of the former Robert of Allanhaugh (around 1557) until he became of age. He is probably the Robert of Allanhaugh who in 1579 sold (or borrowed money on) the annual rent of 'Reahousknow' for £100 Scots to Walter of Todrig; the transaction was witnessed at Riddell. Probably the same Robert of Allanhaugh is listed in 1581 among Scotts and their allies who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council; his son William is also listed. He was most likely the Robert of Allanhaugh (along with William 'in Alanehaucht, now in Hawik', presumably his son, and Scotts associated with Over Southfield) who were involved in the murder of Hawick resident George Scott in 1578; George's brothers Robert and James wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick in which they forgave the assailants. In 1585 he had a bond with Sir Walter of Buccleuch, settling an old feud over the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh, and Hob Dalgleish, servant of Sir Walter's in Braidhaugh; his 'brother germane' Walter is also listed. In 1590 his cautioners were Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Sit John Edmonson. He was also recorded in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders and was 'of Allanhauch or Raisknowis' in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Probably the same Robert 'of Allanehauch' was in 1599 listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. Papers relating to him in the period 1581–1600 are in the National Archives. It seems possible that he was son of William, but may have been the direct heir of his grandfather, the previous Robert. However, the history of this family is very unclear. Robert (d.1540s) probably eldest son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington. In 1542 he was infefted in his father's lands of Rysholm, but died shortly afterwards, his father's successor being his brother Adam of Bonnington. Another Robert was his father's illegitimate son. Robert (16th C.) Bailie of Hawick, recorded in 1560 when Thomas Short inherited his brother John Short's tenement on the north side of the High Street. He is probably also the Bailie who signed the 1569 bond against the thieves of Liddesdale, along with many inhabitants of Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and Peeblesshire. He may be the same as one of the other local Robert Scotts of the time. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to answer some kind of bond, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. 'Philip's Jock' was one of the other men and hence possibly related. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Stirling. In 1563 he 'asked instruments' in Edinburgh for a momorandum for 'Katherin Scot, relict and executrix of Johnne Cuthill in Dene'. He may have been related to Katherine. Robert (16th C.) son and heir of William 'in Hawik', mentioned in 1557 and in 1565/6. His father had leases on lands in Hawick owned by Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh (and formerly belonging to Soutra). It is possible he is the same as Robert 'in Hawik' recorded in 1592. Robert of Stirches (16th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton by his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk. His step-mother was a Cockburn of Ormiston, from whom the family inherited the lands of Whitslade. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Stirches. Scott of Satchells describes him as the eldest son of Walter of Synton with his 2nd son Margaret Riddell. He is probably the Robert, son of Walter of Synton who appeared for his father in 1561 to promise to produce 'Hob Flescheour', who was accused of theft in Berwick. In the same year he was listed as son to Walter of Synton among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In the charter for Stirches in 1575, he appears to be described as 2nd son of Walter of Synton and already deceased, when his son and heir Walter was granted the 6-merk land of Stirches. He may be the Robert, brother to Walter of Stirches who witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. He married a daughter (possibly Helen) of Rutherford of Hunthill and was succeeded by his son Walter 'the Hawk' (who was probably the first to be designated 'of Whitslade', and was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of Whitslade in 1605). Scott of Satchells also says he had a son Thomas, who was 1st of Todrig, but this appears to be off by a generation.

It is said that another son, also Robert, accompanied Scott of Buccleuch on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may have been responsible for the building (or rebuilding) of the tower at Stirches – 'Betwixt him and Margaret Riddel was procreat, Twelve Bairns that was all married, Robert of Whit-slade was their first Son, And William of Huntly was his Brother-German' [CWS], 'His Father Robert thy great Grandsir, Of Stirches was design'd, Because his Father Walter Scot Liv'd at Whitslade, in his time' [CWS]. Robert (d.1583) natural son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington. He was legitimised in 1576. He is probably the Robert of Wamphray who received a promise of money for merchandise in Edinburgh in 1577. In 1581 was a merchant burgess of Edinburgh, 'of the house of Wamfray', when along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington (his half-brother) in a dispute with Robert of Haining. Robert 'of Wamphra', who was subject to a complaint involving a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1597/8 was probably his son. His testament was not confirmed until 1601, with his grandson (also Robert, burgess of Edinburgh) as his main executor; he is there described being of Bonnington. Robert of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Harden, as stated by Scott of Satchells. He was eldest son of William with his 2nd wife, who was a Ker of Fairnilee and widow of Riddell of that Ilk. His brother was George of Todrig and his lands were Burnfoot in the Ale valley (as opposed to Burnfoot-on-Teviot). He may be the Robert of Burnfoot who, along with Robert of Burhead, was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He may have been father of William of Burnfoot in Ale and hence Robert and Walter, brothers of William. These 3 brothers were mentioned in 1612 when the sons of the Earl of Bothwell were involved in an ongoing dispute with them over land and tithes. Robert (16th C.) described as son of deceased Robert of Raesknowe in an undated marriage contract with Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Sir Thomas lived until 1572, and hence it must have been before this date. He was probably related to David of Raesknowe who was one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. Probably the same Robert 'of Reahousknowe' was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his brother William was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he witnessed an agreement in Hawick between Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. Robert of Over Hassendean (16th C.) see Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. Robert (d.c.1568) described as 'skippar in the Westir-Wemyis' in 1568 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. Robert (d.c.1568) described as 'wobstarm in the Potter-raw' in 1568/9 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. Robert (16th C.) mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is stated that 'Robert Scottis wyf in Hawik' was owed 'for sum ordinar dwtie, sex pundis', suggesting that she had provided some kind of service to the Laird (perhaps catering). Robert (d.c.1574) described being 'in Mildane' when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1574. It is unclear where he lived. Robert of Palace (d.bef. 1579) recorded in 1579 when the inventory of his widow Isabel Donald was listed in Selkirk. The witnesses were Robert (brother of Walter of Headshaw), John in Kirkhouses (and his son James), George Waugh in Kirkhouses and John Beattie in Burnfoot. His wife had previously been married to Andrew Shortreed. The executors for his children were Walter of Headshaw and George Shortreed of Essenside. His daughter with her, Marion 'alias Mane' was left with George of Synton. Robert (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1580, in right of his wife, Isabella, daughter of William Lawson. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'callit of Glenrathane' when, along with his brother George and Hob 'callit Huitill' they were accused of attacking Martin Elliot of Braidlie's farm at Northcroft. Their chief was Walter of Goldielands, and so they must have been relatively local. 'Glenrathane' is probably Glenrauchan in Ewesdale, rather than Glenrath south of Peebles. He is probably the 'Hob Scott in Glenrachane' listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was surely related to Archibald there, who was declared a fugitive in 1606. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) referred to as 'callit Huitill' in 1581 when there was a complaint against him and 2 other Scotts (Hob of 'Glenrathane' and his brother George) attacking Martin Elliot's farm of Northcroft. It is unclear where 'Huitill' might have been. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1581) son of Michael of Aikwood. He was younger brother of Walter and William, who both appear to have died without heirs. In 1553 he received a precept from the Archbishop of Glasgow as heir to his father's lands of Hermiston. In 1554 he succeeded his brother William to his half of Bowhill. He was 'of Bowhill' when served heir to his brother Walter in the half steading of Kershope (called 'Westsyd de Kershop' in Ettrick) in 1555. Scott of Satchells describes him as the progenitor of the Scotts of Bowhill. In 1564/5 he married Marion, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk. In 1580 there was a marriage contract between his sister Elizabeth and Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. Also in 1580 he sold some woods near Selkirk to a group of men. In 1581 he and William of Tushielaw were the 'byndaris' in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain. He is probably the 'Robert of ... wod' listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Also in 1581 there was an agreement between his son and heir Robert and his widow Marion over liferents, which were in 1581/2 assigned to Isobel, daughter of John Home of Crumstane, his widow's 2nd husband. He was succeeded by his son Robert, and it is unclear which of the Selkirk records of about 1580 relate to him and which to his son. His children include: Robert, who succeeded to Bowhill; William (in Scotstaines) who was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596; James, recorded in 1599; and Walter (alive in 1592). Robert (16th C.) described as 'scribe to the Lords of Session' in 1574. In that year he requested that 'travellor' Robert (perhaps a relative) should be made a Burgess of Glasgow. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Robert (16th C.) recorded as brother to Walter of Stirches when he witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. He was thus perhaps a son of the previous Robert of Stirches. Rev. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of 'Hindscha' (i.e. Headshaw) he became minister of Ashkirk in 1585/6, on the death of Daniel Chalmers. However, nothing else is recorded about him. It is possible he is actually the same man as Robert of Headshaw, unless there are 2 generations of Walter of Headshaw and he is son of the 1st (or else Walter of Headshaw had 2 sons called Robert). Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick recorded in 1579/80 when he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. He was also listed as Burgess of Hawick in 1581, when he was recorded as brother of George and James (who was a cordiner). In 1581 he and his brother James wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document 'wytht my hand' (although his brother James did not). He may well be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert 'Hob o the Knowe' (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he resigned a tenement there in liferent to his wife, Alison Lyle. Robert (16th C.) servitor to Adam Hislop in Catslack. In 1581 in Selkirk he is listed among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Robert (d.c.1586) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1577, in right of his wife, Margaret, eldest daughter of James Hunter 'glassinwrycht'. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1586. His wife Agnes Cowie's will was registered in 1576 and his wife Margaret Hunter's in 1592. Robert (d.c.1592) writer in Edinburgh, who was a Clerk of the College of Justice. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1592 and that of his wife Elizabeth Scott in 1593/4. He could be the writer in Edinburgh who requested that John, son of David Wilson, be made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1579. Robert (d.c.1594) described as 'in Mekill-Futhie', Farnell Parish in Angus in 1594 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. Robert (d.c.1595) described as 'in Brometoun' in Lanarkshire whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1595. Robert (d.c.1578) described as 'in Grenand-manise' in Dalry Parish when his wife Marion Maxwell's will was registered in Edinburgh in 1578. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded by Scott of Satchells being 'of Clack' among the 'pensioners' of Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have received the lands of Fenwick for his service. There is no other record of such a man, and so it may be that there is confusion here with later Scotts of Glack and Fenwick (who are certainly inter-connected). Robert of Howford (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596 and to have received the lands of 'Cowd-house' (i.e. Coldhouse) for his service. He must have been related to the later Scotts of Coldhouse. He was probably son of Robert of Howford and was succeeded by William, probably his son. He may be the Robert of 'Cowfurd' recorded in 1581 when his son and heir Thomas was involved in a dispute over the 'maills' of lands in Hundleshope with John, parson in Hundleshope. It is unclear if he was related to 'Hob Scot in the Howfurd', who is recorded in 1617. Robert of Knightspottie (c.1530–92) son of Sir Alexander, who was a son of Robert of Allanhaugh. He was said to be young when his father died and was raised by his uncle James. In 1558 he was appointed tutor to William Adamson (perhaps related to his grandmother). He was a lawyer who served as Clerk of Session and Director of Chancery. He acquired Knighspottie in Perthshire in 1584. He firstly married Elizabeth Sandilands, but they had no children. He secondly married Elizabeth Scott, who came from the Scotts of Balwearie and who had been married to John Scott of Orchardfield, maltman in Edinburgh, whose children included Sir William of Ardross. Their own children were at least: Robert, who married Maragret Aitchison of Gosford and whose only son was Sir John of Scotstarvit; James of Vogrie, who married Marion, daughter of Lawrence Scott of Harperrig; and an unnamed daughter. Robert (16th/17th C.) fisher in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1595/6 on account of marrying a daughter of Burgess Archibald Homill. He may be the deceased fisher Robert whose eldest son John (a merchant) was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1632. His connection to other Scotts in unclear. Robert of Langhope and Huntly (16th/17th C.) listed as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch in Scott of Satchells family history. He is there recorded as 'of Langup' and having the lands of 'Outterhuntly for his service for several ages'. He was also said to have been in the group that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably son of William 'in Huntly', who was 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. His brothers Walter and William were listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane about 1610. He was probably succeeded by his son Walter, who appears to have been succeeded by another James, who was probably a younger son. William, recorded in 1608 as brother of Walter, was probably yet another son. Robert of Shielswood (16th/17th C.) 5th son of John, younger of Synton. His sons probably included: Robert of Shielswood; and Walter of Girnwood. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1611) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a bond of 1576/7, not to remove 'kindly' tenants and in the following year lost a dispute with John, minister of Selkirk, over the possession of 'the half toun and landis of Elistoun'. Also in 1576/7 he was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branxholme's sister Janet. In 1579 Walter of Goldielands, acting as Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose, entered him into the lands of 'Elestoun' or 'Ilistoun' (which had been possessed by Adam of Bonnington). He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he appears to be recorded as Provost of Selkirk and complained that Walter of Goldielands had backtracked on his promise to appoint him as Provost Depute; Scott of Goldielands claimed he was not appointed as Depute, but elected into that role. In 1580 he had a court case against Adam of Bonnington and his wife 'Dame Janet Scot' was mentioned in a sasine fo 'Ilistoun'. Additionally in 1580 he received 200 merks from James in Whithope in redemption for the lands of 'Hanyng Mot' and was recorded in a transaction involving lands in 'Ilistoun', with his brothers William and Walter acting as witnesses. Also in 1580 he paid redemption money to John in Aikwood for the lands of Haining Rig and 'Louchtknow'. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stirches. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs (he may have been involved with Scott of Headshaw in the attack on the Elliots of Braidlie). He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with George of Synton, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh; Alexander was cautioner for him when the surety was renewed. Also in 1581 he leased the half land of Haining Rig to Gilbert Govenlock; William in Haining was a witness. Additionally in 1581 he had an arrangement with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the 'feu maill' of the lands of Haining and witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Further in 1581 he admitted Adam Broadfoot to a piece of land in East Haining, with his brother William acting as a witness, and he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. He also in 1581 took a loan from John Geddes in Branxholme for annual rent of lands in Haining, witnessed by 2 of his servants. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1587 he acted as cautioner for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, for Walter of Branxholme and for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He signed a bond with other Scotts in 1589 and was listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' of 1590. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 a number of Murrays were put under caution not to harm him and James Scott 'callit Mekle Jame Eister'. Additionally in the same year James Pringle of Torsonce and William Borthwick of Crookston were his cautioners for him not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. In 1590/1 he was a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was in dispute over the minister of Selkirk, according to documents of 1594, 1595 and 1607. He represented Buccleuch at a meeting of Wardens representatives at Dayholme on the Kershope Burn in 1596. Afterwards Lord Scrope's agent, Salkeld, captured Kinmont Willie, leading later to his daring rescue from Carlisle Castle. In 1597/8 he was still Provost Depute of Selkirk. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Also in 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. He is probably the Scott of Haining listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. Also in 1600 he was procurator for James of Balwearie, who was cautioner for Scott of Buccleuch, in a case before the Privy Council. In the early years of the century he (along with Sir Robert of Thirlestane) acted for the interests of Sir Walter of Buccleuch while he was abroad. In 1601 he was mentioned in an English letter listing Armstrong who were outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch, when he appears to have been acting as a Deputy Warden. In 1602 he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds. In 1602 (while Walter of Buccleuch was abroad) he was charged with entering a group of Scotts of Hundleshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill, who were accused of raiding the lands of Adam Veitch. He was also meant to present James of Whithope in 1602, but failing to do so, was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not producing the Scotts of Whithope, Gamescleuch, Thirlestane and Hartwoodmyres for not paying their portion of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. In 1603 he was still standing in for Walter of Buccleuch when he failed to appear to enter the Scott Lairds of Bonnington, Newburgh, Kirkstead, Dryhope, Thirlestane and Deephope and he was also 'keeper depute of Liddisdaill' when there was a complaint that he had not entered Armstrongs and others for a raid on 'Sewingdene', delaying making restitution to the complainers, and again being denounced. In 1606 he was surety for Ninian Armstrong and Andrew Henderson in a murder trial. In 1607 he was involved in a dispute with the minister of Selkirk. In 1608 it is said that he 'hounded out' John, brother of Walter of Woll and his half-brother John Turnbull, leading to them attacking some citizens in Selkirk, and then being rescued from the Bailies by a gang of Scotts including his brother William; his servitors Walter and John Gledstains were also involved. Also in 1608 a letter under the seal of James VI demands that he remove himself from Yair Corn Mill. His son Robert and several of his servants were alleged to have attacked Sir Andrew Ker's lands at Selkirk Mill in 1608; his servants included Thomas Young, Francis Scott, William Elliot, Patrick Brown and William Thomson. He was summoned to appear in Edinburgh in 1608. He is probably the Robert who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. Along with his wife Janet Scott and his son Robert (along with his wife Elizabeth Murray) had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). Some time before 1580 he married Janet, daughter of Sir Walter (9th of Buccleuch); she had previously been married to John Cranston of that Ilk, and contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside. In the marriage contract in 1579, he promised to give her his half of the lands of 'Ilistoun', as well as his tenement in Selkirk. In 1580 he resigned to her his lands 'lie burnemylne' plus the loch called 'Hanyng Louchet' with millrace, and the crofts called 'lie mylnecroft', 'lie harisbuttis, Hoppringillis acre, Craufurdis acre, chekynis acre, myln croft'; his wife was referred to as 'Dame Scott of Hanyng' and the agreement was witnessed by his brother William. At the same time he granted his wife an annual rent of some lands. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. He also had a younger son, William, who was one of the rescuers of Kinmont Willie.

Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 being 'in Stirkfield' when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. This was 'at the pen led by William Wylie, clerk, writer of the band'. His lands were probably Stirkfield between Peebles and Biggar. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. He held the lands of the southside of Bowhill. He is probably the Robert 'of Rowhill' [sic] who was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Walter of Todrig, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Walter, James and William 'in Schostanis', together with John 'in Quholplaw' were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of 'Wowmet' (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). And in 1602 his brother James was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at 'Fechane' and he was ordered to present his brother. His son Robert may have succeeded him in 1625. He may be the man mentioned by Walter of Satchells in 1688 as the grandfather of James of Bowhill who had been killed by the Napiers: 'Thy Guidsir was by the Napiers slain'. Robert of North Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bowhill and nephew of Robert of (southside of) Bowhill. In 1609 he succeeded to his father Walter's lands of North Bowhill. In 1627 he was one of the Scotts who paid reparation to the Napiers on behalf of John Scott in Wooplaw (alias John of Bonnington). Robert of Bowden (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1594 as 'callit of Bowden' on the list of 180 or so men who had a 'respite' for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He is probably related to William of Bowden, who was recorded in the 1550s. Robert 'Hob' of Wamphray (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 as Burgess of Edinburgh when he was one of the witnesses to a transaction made in Selkirk. This involved John Chisholme in Eldinhopeknow and the widow of John Chisholme in Mountbenger. His name is recorded as 'Robert Scot alias Hob of Wamfery'. He was 'of Wamfray burgess of Edinburgh' in 1580/1 when he had sasines for the annual rent of lands in Newstead and Eildon. Probably the same Burgess of Edinburgh who in 1581 was a cautioner (with Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, as well as James Gledstains of Cocklaw) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). Probably the same Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh, was in 1580 one of 2 judges appointed (by Sir Walter of Birkenside and William of Tushielaw) to decide on George of Synton's claim on lands in 'Ilistoun'. He may be the illegitimate son of Robert of Wamphray, whose birth was legitimatised in 1547. Robert (16th/17th C.) son and heir of the deceased James, Burgess in Selkirk, recorded in 1580. David Fairlie appears to have been acting as his tutor for 5 years, in relation to his half of the mill of 'Hadderlie' and his future marriage. He held lands from Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch that he set to Andrew 'Loucht'. Robert (16th/17th C.) natural son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1581/2 he witnessed a sasine for his father (recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books). Robert of Burnfoot (d.1612) son of William. His lands were Burnfoot on Teviot, and he should not be confused with Robert of Burnfoot on Ale. In 1585 he succeeded his grandfather Adam in the lands of Over and Nether Newhall. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot for whom Walter of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw acted as cautioners in 1590. He may be the 'Robert alias Rob Scott of Burnefute' listed (along with William of Burnfoot) among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2; his unnamed brothers are also mentioned. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably the Robert of Burnfoot who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'; Robert 'tutor of Burnefute' was also listed (and may have been associated to Burnfoot on Ale). He is listed among a large number of Scotts and others among 'pretended tenants' whom the Baron of Hassendean, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands in 1603. His inventory of writs from 1612 mentions his son Adam (and is in the Borders Archive). He had at least 3 sons: Adam, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his elder brother; and William, tenant in Burnhead. He is probably the 'Guidman of Burnefute' listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. Robert (16th C.) recorded as 'Robert Scot in Hawik' when he was witness to an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. William in Hawick was Bailie for the superior of th lands and Adam in Ormiston was also a witness. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as 'Hobb (Robert) Scott called 'bradowe' '. It is unclear whether his to-name was a nickname or location.

Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as 'tutor of Burnefute'. He was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'; Robert of Burnfoot (probably on Teviot) was also listed, suggesting he may have been associated with Burnfoot on Ale. Robert 'Hobbie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as 'Hobbie of Candie'. He was listed among other Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear where 'Candie' was (perhaps a transcription error) or if he was the same as another Robert. Robert of Easter Groundistone (16th/17th C.) nephew to Robert of Headshaw according to Capt. Scott of Satchells when he listed him as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch. His grandfather was Walter of Headshaw, but it is unclear what his father's name was (possibly Walter). Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as 'Hob Scott of the Laik', but it is unclear where this might have been. Sir Robert of Thirlestane (c.1558–1627) son of Robert, with his mother being Margaret Scott (either daughter of 'Wicked Wat' of Buccleuch or Wat of Harden). He is first recorded in 1568, and Satchells (his grandson) claims he was born in 1566 (although he appears to have reached majority by 1581); Satchells also says he was at St. Andrews University with the young King James VI and Sir Walter of Buccleuch, but there is no other evidence for this. During his minority his 'tutor' was his uncle Simon of Gamescleuch, while his curators were Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1578 he and his curators complained that his tutor 'Sym Scot of Wintirburch' had taken 2 horses from Thirlestane, harassed his tenants and then forcibly taken possession of the house at Thirlestane; Simon was ordered to restore Thirlestane to him. He is said to have attended the University of St. Andrews along with the young Walter of Buccleuch (and at the same time as the young James VI), and about 1585 accompanied Walter to the site of the old Rankleburn Kirk, where they found some buried tombstones bearing the arms of Buccleuch. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. His brother Walter was recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk involving Thirlestane in 1581. In 1583/4 he is among the Border Lairds summoned by the Privy Council for advice on preserving peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1583/4 he and Sim of Winterburgh were cautioners for John in Hundleshope. He could be the Robert 'in Cringillis' who witnessed a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was purchased the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord Home, his family having been 'kindly tenants' there for generations. He was also listed on the 1590 'Roll of the Clans'. A confirming charter of 1590 records that he purchased the lands of Crookston in Peeblesshire. on account of a messenger taking refuge there, this being part of a dispute between Cranston and Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch. He gained the lands of Kirkhope in Ettrick and the teinds of Ettrick Kirk in 1594; his eldest son and heir, Robert was also given liferent of these properties of Melrose Abbey. In 1596 he was one of the men consulted by Walter of Buccleuch in organising the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and he accompanied Walter to London to see Elizabeth I in 1597 (with their route being described in detail by his grandson, Walter of Satchells). In 1596/7 the citizens of Peebles complained that he had led a group of Scotts to attack their lands of 'Kaidmure'; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. Along with his brother Walter he is included in a list of supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Walter was also listed. In the same year he served as cautioner for Simon of Bonnington and Sir Walter of Branxholme declared that he 'holds his lands of him' and was therefore obliged to answer for him. In the early years of the 1600s he and Robert of Haining acted for Sir Walter of Branxholme while he was abroad. In 1602 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him in regard to charges against him by the warden of the middle marches 'at the instance of the laird of Neutoun, Englishman'; he later refused to enter himself into court or to pay the amount and hence was to be declared as a rebel. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Additionally in 1602 he was denounced for not paying £51 13s 4d for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. His brother Wat was accused of being on a raid in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he sold the lands of Cruxton to William Elliot, Burgess of Peebles. In 1605 he had a bond to enter his tenants (Scotts of Hundleshope and others) for not appearing to answer charges of attacking the lands at 'Fechane'. He was probably knighted in 1606 and in 1607 was Member of the Scottish Parliament for Selkirkshire, the first elected representative. He was involved in every local quarrel of his day, including helping organise the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He was caution for several relatives and tenants in 1608 not to harm Archibald 'of Deiphoip', and also caution for Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. There was a feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw, culminating in the death of his brother Walter at the hands of John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1609. In 1609 he and his son Robert (and several others) were bonded not to reset Walter of Headshaw and a group of other men, and were later fined for resetting the same men (including his natural son Peter and brother William). In 1609 he also complained against Armstrongs and other men who were troubling him in his lands and vowing to take his life. He witnessed a charter for Scott of Woll in 1609. In 1610 there was a bond of assurance with the Scotts of Tushielaw in order to resolve the feud. That same year he was ordered apprehended since he still had a 'horning' for the attack on Peebles in 1596/7. Also in 1610 he and his son had a 'wadset' with Robert of Whitslade and another with Robert of Burnfoot and he was cautioner for the Scotts of Whitslade and Satchells that they would not harm Walter in Hawick, called Todshawhill and his associates. In 1612 there was a complaint to the Privy Council that he and his son Sir Robert had not paid former fines and should be apprehended, the Council also asked him and Walter of Tushielaw to appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. William Scott, younger of Harden had him and others removed from the lands of Deephope in 1615/16. In about 1620 he had a charter for Thirlestane, Ettrickhouse, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch from the Commendator of Melrose, as well as another charter for half of the lands of 'Cringillis'. He and his son Robert were also granted the teinds of the new Kirk of Ettrick. In 1621 he had 15 sheep stolen from his lands of Eskdalemuir and along with John of Gilmanscleuch and Sir John of Newburgh he promised not to molest the Elphinstones. Also in 1621 he was appointed as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In the years 1621–3 he was involved with financial bonds with Sir William of Harden, as well as Sir Walter of Whitslade and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch (essentially borrowing money using his lands as collateral). In 1622 he was fined for not being on the jury for the case involving Turnbulls of Belses etc. He was recorded in a disposition of 1623 to his chief the Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1623 he was one of the representatives of Tweeddale and Selkirk on the Parliamentary Commission to discuss the export of Scottish wool. In 1624 he rented Gamescleuch from Sir William Scott of Harden. Also in 1624 his lands of Crookston were 'apprised for debt', and he also sold an 'annualrent' there. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of the jail in Selkirk (the others being Gavin Elliot of Brugh, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and his servant John 'Skaillis'), breaking the walls on 2 sides, his prison bed being found to have 2 plow blades and 'twa greit craw-irnes'; he must have been in his 60s by then! It appears that his estates were resigned to Sir William of Harden, and later inherited by his nephew Patrick of Tanlawhill, although there was dispute for the next century with the descendants of his son (with his 2nd wife) Sir John. In about 1626 he appears to have lost the lands of Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch (at least temporarily) to John Fisher, perhaps because of non-payment of loans to Scott of Harden. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk sometime before 1594. In 1602 he secondly married Katherine, daughter of Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His sons were Sir Robert, Sir John and James. John was listed in the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 owing rental money to Mary Lyon (wife of Sir Robert of Crookston, i.e. his sister-in-law). In 1616 his daughter Grizel married Walter of Tushielaw without his permission. Other daughters were Jean, who married Robert of Satchells, and probably Susannah, who married Sir Walter of Whitslade. He may also have been the Robert who inspired the story told of a 2nd wife of Thirlestane being involved in the jealous murder of her stepson (this would be Katherine or Catherine Jardine and her stepson, Sir Robert). He is easily confused with his son, also Sir Robert

(often called 'of Crookston'), who appears to have pre-deceased him in 1619. In 1621 he was served heir to his son Robert's lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. Also in 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. His wife Catherine Jardine held lands of Davington and others 'in liferent' after his death, recorded in 1627 in a document with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. His son John was served as his heir in 1642. Robert 'Sim's Hob' (16th/17th C.) referred to as 'in Hawick' when he was witness to a discharge of 1605 between 'Lang Sandie' Scott and William Scott of Howpasley. His father was presumably Simon. Probably the same 'Robert Scot in Hawik, callit Symmies Habie' was recorded in 1611 when he failed to appear in court at Jedburgh; John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Burnfoot. George Langlands of that Ilk was cautioner for him in 1610, that he not harm William in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates. His brother and several other Scotts were also involved in this dispute. He was also mentioned in 1612 as brother of William of Burnfoot on Ale (along with Walter, another brother) in the ongoing dispute with the sons of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Rev. Robert (c.1577–1629) early Regent of the University of Glasgow. He was admitted to the Collegiate Charge in 1604 and moved to St. Mungo's in 1616. He was one of 42 ministers who signed a Protestation for the Liberties of the Kirk in 1617. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow in 1616. He served as Rector of Glasgow University 1618, 1619 and 1621–26. He was summoned in 1620 for not conforming to the Articles of Perth and was appointed as one of 2 deputies to attend court regarding the affairs of the Church in 1627. He married Esther Fleming, widow of George Geddes of Edmestoun Mains and secondly married Agnes, 3rd daughter of Robert Hamilton of Goslington. His children were: John, recorded in 1616; Robert; Laurence; William; Margaret; and Lillias, who maried James Scott, Provost of Irvine, who was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1623 through marrying his daughter. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Robert in Northhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 when Hector Turnbull of Stonedge had a complaint against him before the Privy Council. He may be the 'Hob Scot', brother to Will 'called of Northhouse', named along with his brother, when Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (and later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that they attacked him in Hawick, 'with drawn swords'; Gilbert later complained that they had not responded and requested that they should be apprehended, although it is unclear what happened next. He was 'of Northhouse' in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as 'Hob Scot in the Howfurd' and brother of Michael, both being 'suster sones' to Walter Scott of Harden ('Auld Wat'). Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington's household. They were also said to have later 'trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit' and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear if he was directly related to the Scotts 'of' Howford, or who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield in in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. He may have been related to later Scotts of the Southfield area. Robert of Howshaw (16th/17th C.) said to have headed the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He rode fully armed, carrying a small banner of the Earl's colours on the point of his lance. The account comes from Chamber's Domestic Annals of Scotland, copied from Sir James Balfour's 'Ancient Heraldic and Antiquarian Tracts' (1837), where the name is transcribed 'Houeschaw'. However, it seems likely that 'Howshaw' is an error for some different place, since this Robert is otherwise unknown; the most likely possibility would seem to be 'Headshaw'. Robert of Satchells (16th/17th C.) son of James, who was probably 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He is said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace (transcribed in one version being 'of Stitschellis'). He had a charter fom John, Archbishop of Glasgow for the lands of Satchells in the Barony of Lilliesleaf in 1607, and a confirming charter from the King in 1609. In 1609 he also had a charter for Dodbank in Selkirkshire, which his father James, and others before him had occupied. In 1610 Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as caution for him, that he not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates; he was named along with Walter of Whitslade and his son Thomas, suggesting a close link between these families at that time. He is one of the signatories of the 1612 bond to keep peace on the Border. It appears that he lost the Satchells estate, probably through a loan, and moved to a small farm in Eskdalemuir. It is unclear when he died; one possibility is that Jean of Satchells, who was involved with the sheep-slaughter incident of 1616 along with Lady Scott of Howpasley, was his widow, but he seems to have been recorded after that. In 1617 he was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council; however, it is unclear if he was already deceased at this time. He may also be the Robert who complained at the Privy Council in 1619 about men from Hindhope cutting down trees on his land at Dodhead. His wife was probably Jean, daughter of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was probably the father of Capt. Walter the poet and family historian, and also William. Additional children may have included Robert, referred to as younger of Satchells in the 1620s and John, mentioned in a deed of 1655. He is probably the 'Robert Scot of Satchels' who was among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch, having 'Southinrig for his Service', according to his son Capt. Walter. Keith Scott suggests he died about 1629 (but then Lady Satchells would not have been a widow in 1616, and hence might have been his widowed mother); he also suggests there are 2 generations called Robert, so the situation is quite unclear. Robert of Aikwood (d.1615) son of Robert of Aikwood and Marion Cranston. Keith Scott suggests he was son of William, but that conflicts with R.C. Reid's 1950s genealogy, which is supported by transactions made in Selkirk about 1580, which probably involved his father Robert. He may be the same man as Robert of Bowhill, eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he was son of the deceased Robert of Aikwood when his mother Marion Cranston made her step-daughter Isabel Home 'cessioner' to recover the 700 merks that he owed his mother. He also witnessed a sasine for Adam of Bonnington in 1581/2. He signed the bond with the other Scotts in 1589. In 1590 Patrick Murray of Falahill was his cautioner that he would not harm William Douglas, Earl of Angus or his dependants. He witnessed a deed in 1592. Also in 1592 he signed a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiels. He had the present tower at Oakwood built in 1602; a dressed stone there bears that date, as well as the initials 'R.S.' and 'L.M.' (perhaps a Murray) and a crescent for the Scotts of Harden. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was summoned before the Selkirk Presbytery, accused of perjury against the minister of Selkirk and in 1614 was cited by the minister for 'drinking during the time of sermon'. In 1611 he was caution for Philip of Dryhope. He was witness to the bond for keeping peace on the Border in 1612. He was succeeded by his son Andrew in 1615, in the southside of Bowhill, half of Kershope and the 'Peile-Quarter' in Belses. Philip of Aikwood (who succeeded Andrew) may have been another son. He may also have been the 'goodman of Aikwood' whose sons James and William are listed in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Robert 'Hob the Lonkie' (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, after a man apparently hung himself in the Kirk steeple in 1610. His nickname may be a transcription error for 'Loukie', meaning lucky or fortunate. Bailie Robert 'Hob' of Alton (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. The Robert 'of Auldtoun' whose son Adam is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593 may have been his direct ancestor; it is possible he was son of Adam referred to as 'vocat de Altoun', who was younger brother of Walter of Alton. He was Bailie in 1603, 1612 (at the same time as 'Marion's Hob') and 1619, and possibly other years, since it is hard to distinguish the various Roberts. He may be the 'Hob Scot, bailie of Hawik', who was cautioner for Jamie Chisholme at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was involved with the incident in 1612 in which the Bailies imposed a stent and market tax without seeking the permission of the Baron, thereby testing the legal authority of Douglas of Drumlanrig within Hawick. An extract of his sasine of 1615 is in the National Archives, this having been copied from the Protocol Book of Gilbert Watt (Hawick's later Town Clerk). In 1620 he is recorded paying back a loan made to Thomas Rutherford, brother of John of Hunthill. He was also a 'personne of assyse' in the Commissioners' Court of 1622 and 1623. He is recorded in 1627–29 claiming a debt against the Earl of Buccleuch, where he is described as 'sometime bailie in Hawick'. 'Robert, bailie in Hawick, called of Auldtown' is also mentioned in a dispute with William Douglas of Drumlanrig relating to a bond of 1601. The later Robert of Alton (who died around 1650) was probably his brother Walter's son. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William called 'of the Know', with George and David also being brothers. In 1608 they were bound over not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick (the nature of the dispute being unclear), and he was similarly bound. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Bailies of the same name. They may also have been related to John Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, who acted as surety for them. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in 1610, along with Adam Scott, when Jock Elliot died while imprisoned in the Kirk steeple. Elliot's wife took the Bailies and others to court for his death, but the decision was that it was a suicide. He was one of the men called to give evidence at the trial. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Bailie Roberts, but it is unclear which one. Sir Robert of Haining (16th/17th C.) son of Robert. In 1608 he is 'younger of Haining' when he was part of a group of men complained about by Sir Andrew Ker of Heiton, saying that they came to his lands of Selkirk Mill and 'violentlie caist out the dam-heid furth thairof'. They returned with a group of Scotts, Murrays, Elliots, Gledstains, etc., threatened the millers and smashed equipment. He and James 'Corsane' were imprisoned, with 2 others being asked to appear later. In 1610 he was 'younger of Hanying' when along with his wife 'Elspeth' Murray he was involved in a dispute with the Lord of Buccleuch over ownership of Haining mill. He succeeded his father in 1611. In 1612 he was one of the witnesses called by the Privy Council in an attempt to resolve the feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane. In 1614 he gave sasine of some lands in Selkirk to James Cowan. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He was removed from the Earl of Home's lands at Hartwoodburn in 1622. About 1625 he sold Haining, but was still known as 'of Haining' afterwards. Along with his wife Elizabeth Murray and his father Robert (and mother Janet Scott), he had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). He is probably the same Sir Robert of Haining who carried the arms of Scott of Buccleuch in Earl Walter's funeral procession in Hawick in 1634. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and had at least 2 sons: Sir Robert, who succeeded; and Walter, portioner of Guilan. Bailie Robert 'Marion's Hob' or 'Marion's Rab' (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in late 1612, along with 'Hob of Alton', when the authority of the Baron was challenged. He was also Bailie in 1622, 1623 and 1626. He served as a juror at the Commissioners' Court of 1622 and 1623 when he was 'laitt bailye of Hawik'. His servitor, William Johnstone, is recorded in the trial for the claimed murder of John Elliot in Hawick in 1610. He was probably one of the 2 Bailie Roberts listed among the 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He could be the Bailie Robert who acted as cautioner for James Henderson in 'Catheuch' in 1611. His mother was presumably Marion. It is possible his brother was the contemporary 'Marion's Geordie'. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1614. He is presumably different from 'Hob of Alton' and 'Marion's Hob', but could be the Robert 'of Westport' recorded in documents at the same time; the proliferation of men of the same name makes this confusing. There was also a Robert (with no nickname) who was Bailie in 1627, and a 'laitt bailie of Hawick' when he was a 'personne of assyze' acting in Dumfries Circuit Court in 1622. Robert of Salenside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1614, along with his kinsman John Scott of Kirkhouses, when he was summoned before the Presbytery to answer for charges of murder. He must have been related to Andrew of Salenside, who is recorded in 1613 (possibly his brother or elder son, but if so he was probably dead by 1621 when Thomas of Salenside is recorded). Robert (16th/17th C.) son of James in Whitslade and grandson of John, younger of Synton. In 1580 he had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood, with the consent of his deceased father's brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly. He agreed to give his future wife liferent of Dodhead if he should die before her and also agreed to ratify the contract when he reached the age of 21. Also in 1580 he was recorded as son of the deceased James of Whitslade when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men who were involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, but describes him as brother of the Laird of Whitslade. This suggests that he was son of Robert of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade; however, that would appear to be muddled. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.)

Magistrate from Hawick. In 1627 he and James Gledstains were Bailies when there was a series of records with the Privy Council involving men from Hawick who had been selected to be sent to the wars in Germany; he was fined 300 merks and had to find caution for a further £1000 in order to make him produce the named men. He is surely one of the two Bailie Roberts listed in 1627 among 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, who he succeeded in 1625. However, there appears to be confusion among Roberts of Aikwood and Bowhill (and the fact there were 2 separate lines of Scott of Bowhill adds to the confusion). He carried the arms of Douglas of Drumlanrig in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He had 2 sons, Andrew and James, both of whom succeeded to Bowhill. His son James became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1642. In 1648 this same son James, a merchant in Edinburgh, was 'bailie in that part' when he granted sasine of Broadmeadows from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw; the Scotts of Bowhill were distantly related to the Scotts of Tushielaw. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to James in 1688, in which he says 'Thy Father Robert yet survives', suggesting that he lived to a very old age. Robert of Tushielaw (d.1632) eldest son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, brother of James and John, who were both at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers James and John, to 'observe the King's peace'. He signed a bond among Border Lairds, along with his father in 1602. He was 'apparent of Tuischelaw' in 1604 when he acted as bailie for a sasine of the Regality of Melrose for lands in Ettrick. In 1612 he signed the bond for keeping peace on the Border. In 1617 he was 'apparent of Tuschelaw' when his son Walter was listed among Scotts and others who freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was described as 'fiar of Tuschelaw' and lawful son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw in a charter of 1618 in which he received lands at 'Wairdlawrig' in Selkirkshire from John, Lord Hay of Yester. In 1619 he was 'of Tuscholaw' when his brother John witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. In about 1620 he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for Glenkerry, Midgehope and Phaup. However, these must have been effectively mortgaged that time, since also in 1620 the lands of 'Glencarie' and Midgehope, held in 'wadset' from him, were given by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs to his youngest son James. He was 'of Tuscholaw' in 1620 when his brother John witnessed a bond between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1633, and he in turn was succeeded by the younger son, William of Fawdshope. Robert of Shielswood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and brother of Walter of Girnwood. He had a charter for Shielswood in the Parish of Ashkirk in 1609. He is mentioned in various documents in the period 1606–26. He was Robert 'in Schelliswoid' on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott 'the Suckler' of sheep stealing. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brother Walter was also listed. In 1629 he was appointed as tutor to Robert and Walter, sons of his deceased brother, Walter of Girnwood. He is recorded in 1632 when his eldest son Walter leased part of the lands of Belses. He married Margaret, who re-married Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres after his death. He was succeeded by Walter and had another son, Robert. He may have had a daughter Isobel who married Walter Scott of Burnfoot's brother Francis. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts (including his brother Walter), to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced. His cautioner was George Langlands of that Ilk, and one record seems to state that he was uncle of George (although this may be a transcription confusion). He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Whitfield (16th/17th C.) recorded carrying the arms of Ker of Cessford in the funeral procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. It is unclear who he was, but probably the same as another Walter. Robert of Hassendean (d.bef. 1669) recorded in a 'letter of apprising' (i.e. transferring heritable lands to clear debts) of 1604, with 'Dedrig, Easter and Wester Cappitrig' passing to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was probably a son or grandson of David of Hassendean, who was killed around 1564. He was succeeded by his son Adam in 1669, but may have died earlier. He may be the same man as Robert of Over Hassendean. He may have been the Laird listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. And he may be the Robert of Hassendean who was said to have been in the party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may be the Laird of Hassendean who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. He may be the Scott Hassendean (no forename given) who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Sir Robert of Crookston (d.1619) eldest son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his 1st wife, who was Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk (however, it is hard to separate father and son, and some accounts confound them in a single generation). He appears to have been born before 1594, when his name first appears. In that year he was eldest son and heir of Robert of Thirlestane, when they were both granted the teinds and vicarage of Ettrick Kirk for their lifetimes. Before he succeeded his father he was known as 'of Cruxton' or 'Cruikstane'. He acquired Gamescleuch in 1605 and in 1607 (when he was 'younger' of Thirlestane) he had a charter for the lands of Bourhope (or 'Bowerhope') adjacent to St. Mary's Loch. He is probably the younger Laird of Thirlestane (first name not given) who was on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He was involved in the bond of 1609 (along with his father and several others) not to reset Walter of Headshaw and other men, and the action by Walter of Tushielaw to fine them for resetting the same men. He was knighted about 1612. His memorial stone inscribed 'S / R S MEMENTO MORE 1619' is in Ettrick Kirk (although it is possible this was his father's, and the next 8 years refer to incidents in his life). His life may be the basis of the story told (first by the Ettrick Shepherd and later by Sir Bernard Burke) of a 2nd wife at Thirlestane (presumably Katherine Jardine) having her step-son murdered so that her own son could inherit the estates, but when found out her husband had her locked up for a year while his eldest son lay in state and he spent the family fortunes in lavish feasting. It is unclear what truth there is in the story, but in 1617 he married Mary Lyon, daughter of the Earl of Strathmore, and died without issue; Mary Lyon remarried to Robert Semple of Beltrees, and in 1633 was named in the will of the Earl of Buccleuch being owed money through John, 'son and air to the said vmquhile Sir Robert of Thirlestane' (presumably her brother-in-law). His younger brother Sir John (son of Katherine Jardine of Applegirth) did not succeed either, the titles going to their cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill who effectively purchased the Thirlestane estate. In 1621 his father, Sir Robert of Thirlestane was served heir to his lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes; this strongly suggests that he was deceased by 1621. He is the 'Sir Robert of Cruikstane' who is recorded as deceased in the period 1649–77 when his brother and heir John was involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over lands in Eskdale. John is described as the son and heir of Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a 1632 document involving the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch (so he was certainly already deceased by then). He is said to have left an illegitimate son, Peter, who was living in 1609. He was probably uncle of Walter Scott of Satchells, who wrote about him – 'Sir Robert Scot his Son, for whose death I mourn, He married Lyon, daughter to the Master of Kinghorn. His death was to all his near Relatives, A worthy man was he, And died without Succession' [CWS]. Robert 'Geordie's Hobie' (16th/17th C.) one of 3 Hawick men acquitted in 1621 of carrying hagbuts and pistols in public. They specifically were accused of having 'schoit and slayne thairwith greit nomberis of thair nightbouris propper dowis and wyldfoull of all kyndis, and useis the same for thair particular revenge upoun all sic personis aganis whome they beare querrell'. The other 2 were Allan Deans and Robert Armstrong. His father was presumably George. Robert (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of Arthur of Newburgh. He was listed in 1608 among relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald 'of Dephoip' or his sons. Robert of Gilmanscleuch (d.bef. 1621) son of James. He was called 'Truth' and was said to be one of the men who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He married Bessie Naysmith and his sons were: John, who succeeded; William; Gideon; and Adam, tenant at Shaws who was father of Francis. He was killed by John Elphinstone in Henderson and his brother David, who were declared rebels in 1620. In the following year a commission of Scotts was formed to apprehend the 2 men, the case being brought by his widow and sons William and Gideon. He is probably the Robert of Gilmanscleuch whose son Adam was served heir to his other son William in 1647. He was probably father of John, Robert and William whose copy book was discovered turned into the covers of another book and described by J.A.H. Murray in 1871 – 'For Francis Scot of Gillmans-cleugh, To you I do commend, In hopes your Worship still will be his Friend, The Son of John, the Son of Robert, call'd Truth, Who was the Son of James, The first of Gillmans-cleugh' [CWS]. Robert of Westport (16th/17th C.) one of the 'personnes of assyze' representing Hawick at the Justice Court of 1622 in Dumfries as well as in Jedburgh (along with another Robert), and in 1623 (along with Robert of Alton and 'Marion's Hob'). It is unclear whether this is one of the other men of the same name, but he was clearly distinct from Robert of Alton and Bailie Robert, since all 3 sat on the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622. He may be related to later Westport Scotts, e.g. father of the Walter recorded in the 1650s and 1670s. Robert of Burnhead (d.1609) probably eldest son of John of Burnhead. He is probably the Robert of Burnhead who, along with Robert of Burnfoot (ptobably on Ale), was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was among those listed in 1603 as men that the Baron, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands. There us a decrete of 1607 against him, John Reid, John ... and 'marein scot' for money related to the lands of 'eister ...' [perhaps Moormaw]. He was succeeded by his son William and had 2 other sons, one of them probably Adam (who married Bessie Langlands) and the 3rd son probably the Robert who fought in Hollans. Robert of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Headshaw, whom he succeeded before 1593. He may have been the Laird of 'Eidschaw' listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. He may be the Robert of Headshaw (unless this is an error for Walter) who is recorded being held in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with Paul Doig acting as caution for the pledge of Walter Scott of Goldielands, that he would answer for the hurting of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. He is probably the Robert 'in Headshaw' who had a charter of Headshaw and Easter Essenside in 1593 (incorrectly transcribed as 1553) from Ludovic, Duke of Lennox. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men on the Carlisle raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as the Bold Buccleuch's 'Cousin-german'. He is recorded in a series of writs of the lands of Headshaw 'disponed' to Andrew Hay in the period 1593–1624; his wife was Elizabeth and his son Robert. In 1609 he was caution for Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a bond for not resetting Walter of Headshaw (surely a relative, possibly his brother) and others. In 1610 he had a bond (along with Walter, fiar of Whitslade for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. And in another 1610 bond he was surety for Robert 'of Well' for the same thing. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was also cautioner, along with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade, for a bond involving the Hays of Smithfield in 1619. In 1620 he was Robert 'elder, called of Heidshaw' when he witnessed a charter of Goldielands for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 he had an agreement with the Countess of Home for leasing Hartwoodburn for a year, possibly longer. He is probably the Robert who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh from his sister Janet's son Walter. He is also probably the Robert of Headshaw whose 'brother-son' (i.e. nephew) was Robert of Easter Groundistone, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. It seems likely that either he or his son was the 'Robert Scot of Houeschaw' who led the funeral procession for Sir Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634; he may have been selected as the oldest local Scott chief and rode fully armed, with the Earl's colours on the end of a lance. He had sons: Robert, who appears not to have succeeded to the lands, since the estate was sold first; and Francis. Walter, brother of Robert 'of Hirdschaw' was recorded in 1621. Walter and James, two brothers of the younger Robert of Headshaw are recorded in 1627, and so were presumably his sons also. Robert (d.bef. 1627) 3rd son of Robert of Burnhead. He took an oath as Captain in the regiment of Lord Buccleuch in 1604. His wife Isobella Mowbray brought a suit of dovrce against him in 1618. He was succeeded as Captain by James Elphinstone in 1627 and presumably died shortly before that. Robert of Bonnington (d.bef. 1624) eldest son and heir of Simon. Together with his father he had 'liferent' of the lands of 'Ernescleugh' and Singlie in 1593, confirmed in 1607. He was succeeded by his uncle John. Robert (16th/17th C.) progenitor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, whose genealogy is given by Scott of Satchells, and called there 'Portioner and Baillie of Hawick'. His father was William, said to be second son to Walter, Laird of 'Midgup', who was grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. It seems more likely that he was son of William of Midgehope, who was grandson of William of Tushielaw and great-grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. He may be the same man as one of the Bailie Roberts recorded in Hawick in the early 1600s. His son William may have been the first to be called Laird of Horsleyhill. Note there appears to be a much earlier Scott of Horsleyhill family, who are presumably not directly related. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) son of 'Watis Jok', so presumably his father was John and his grandfather Walter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Bailies. He is recorded in a sasine of 1610, along with his wife Helen Turnbull, for a 'tenement' in the south side of the Kirk Wynd, which had been resigned by George Turnbull, tenant in Howay, brother of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. The land was specifically described as being between Nichol's Croft (roughly the Village), a garden of Robert Dickson, a tenement belonging to the Hendersons and the Kirk Wynd itself. Robert (d.bef. 1641) Burgess and notary in Selkirk, recorded as writer of documents in the period 1602–30 relating to Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Andrew Scott of Wemyss. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. He was deceased by 1641, when his son Thomas became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Harwood in the Rule valley. He was witness to a sasine of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. Robert of Dryhope (d.bef. 1633) probably son of William. He is recorded in 1632 in an assignation for a bond, and in 1633 for non-payment. He appears to be already deceased in 1633 when he is mentioned in a contract over the lands of 'Evillane', with the consent of James Scott of Hagbrae (presumably a near relative). However, he could be the Robert 'of Drayvpe' who carried the arms of Hamilton of Clydesdale in the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was probably succeeded by his brother Walter. Robert (17th C.) servant of Sir John of Scotstarvit. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1630. Robert (17th C.) had a charter for the lands of Brieryyards and Broadlee in 1637, with a confirmation in the name of Charles I. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, and how he was related to the later John of Brieryyards. Sir Robert of Haining (17th C.) son of Sir Robert. Although his father had sold off the Haining estate, he still had the designation. He served with the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch in 1643; in that same year he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with Earl Francis and the Earl's brother David. Also in 1643 he was witness for a charter granted by the Earl of Buccleuch to the Calderwoods in Edinburgh; he is there 'Sir Robert Scott of Hayneing'. In 1650 he was one of the witnessed for the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. His nephew Lieut.-Col. Robert appears to be the last of the Scots of Haining. He may have died in about 1650, since in the additions to the will of Francis in 1651 200 merks yearly are allocated to his widow, Grizel Ker. Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot (d.bef. 1667) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his elder brother Adam. He is recorded along with other tenants of Over and Nether Newhalls in a precept of warning issued by Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1625. He is also recorded in 1638 and 1639 when he received the lands of Rottenrow in Hundalee from John Rutherford prior to marrying Anne Rutherford, daughter of John and Isobel Bennet (this was explicitly 'Burnfutt near Tiviot', rather than the one in Ale Water, which is easy to confuse in this period). He was succeeded by his son Walter. Robert of Whitslade (d.1644) eldest son of Sir Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1628. He was served heir to his father in 1633 and his grandfather Walter in 1635. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication against John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane over the lands of Bourhope, followed by a decree of appraising in 1643. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1639–41 and was also made Parliamentary Convenor for the Selkirkshire War Committee in 1643. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He was served heir to his father Walter's lands of 'Schorthope' and Ettrickhouse in 1643. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk (valued at £243 10s), as well as Salenside (£116), Kirkhouse (£143) and Ashkirk Mill (£84). He was also listed in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £214 10s (which were owned by William Chisholme of Stirches by 1678) and Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £130 (which were owned by William Johnstone by 1663). He married 'Holland's Jean', natural daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. His children included: Walter, baptised in 1636; Francis, baptised in 1643; Mary; and Margaret, who in 1647 was served heir to his lands at Ettrickhouse (although these later went to her uncle

Thomas), and married John Scott of Langhope. His 2 sons must have died in infancy. He died at the Battle of Marston Moor, probably fighting on the same side as Cromwell. He was succeeded by his brother Sir Walter (who died fighting against Cromwell) in 1645 and then his brother Thomas. His death is the subject of the verse in Caw's Poetical Museum (1784), probably written by Capt. Scott of Satchells, entitled 'Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitslade', although in fact the contents focus more on the later death of his brother Thomas. Robert of Burnfoot in Ale (d.bef. 1669) son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot. He is recorded in a document of 1632 along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire. Note that this is Burnfoot in the Ale valley (although it is easy to confuse him with the nearly contemporary Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot). He was served heir to his father in 1641. He is recorded paying £400 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert of Burnfoot recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Francis, who married Isobel Scott, and to whom Scott of Satchells addressed one of his dedications. He probably had two other sons, William who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1666 and George who became a surgeon's apprentice there in 1668. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot recorded paying the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678 (even although perhaps he was deceased by then). Robert (17th C.) described as the heir apparent of Satchells in 1622–25 when he was involved in a court action with George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He was probably a son of Robert and father of Capt. Walter (of family history fame), although this is not certain. Presumably the same Robert was also the 'zunger of Satchellis' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He may be the Scott of Satchells (first name not given) listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owed for rental of the lands of 'Dodheid'. He may be the Robert of Satchells recorded in 1643 when his lands of Satchells (in Lilliesleaf Parish) were valued at £200, and also his lands of 'Cringills' at £156. He is probably the Robert 'of Satscheill' who is recorded in 1653 when his son and heir apparent Walter had a bond not to harm the Bailies of Selkirk. Robert of Alton (d.bef. 1653) eldest son of Walter of Alton. He was probably nephew of the 'Hob of Alton' who was Bailie in Hawick. He succeeded his father in about 1638, the year that he signed the 'Confessions' of Faith' in Hawick. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £474; based on who owned these later, they were Alton, Knowetownhead and Tandlaw. His son William 'younger of Altoun' died before him. He was already deceased in 1653 when his daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served 'heirs portioners' to Robert of the East Mains of Hassendean, their 'foir grandsher' (either great-grandfather or great-great-grandfather). Presumably the lands of Alton passed to one of them, who married another Scott, since Scotts (perhaps from the Gorrenberry branch) held the lands until about 1742. It is possible he was the 'vmquhill Robert Scott of Auldtoun Crofts' (if Alton and Alton Croft were sometimes confused) mentioned in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch when his eldest son (name unfortunately left blank) was granted 200 merks yearly. His wife may have been Margaret Turnbull, who was recorded as 'relict of Alton' in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when she jointly with James Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £414 for lands in Hassendean Parish. Robert of Goldielands (17th C.) Bailie of Hawick (along with William Scott) at the time of the signing of the 1638 Covenant. His name appears as 'R. Scott', alongside Walter of Goldielands, suggesting that he might have been a brother or son of Walter (although there may be confusion of 2 R. Scotts here); this Walter was meant to have been the last of the distinct Lairds of Goldielands. Also in 1638 (in the first main entry in the Town Book) he was recorded as being 'callit of Goldielands' when listed as one of the Bailies at the meeting for choosing the new Bailies and Officers; he was again chosen as a Bailie for the year 1638/9. He is probably the Robert who signed the Act of Bailies and Council of 1640 (his name appearing just after the 2 Bailies). He was elected to the Council in late 1648 and was also a Bailie in the 1640s. He may be the same as the Robert who was 'brother natural of the said Sir Walter Scott' in the charter of Goldielands in 1620. Another possibility is that he is the same as Robert of Glack, who inherited part of the Goldielands estate through marriage. Robert of Woll (d.1640s) eldest son of Walter of Woll. In 1617 he was appointed guardian to his half-brother and sister, George and Katherine. Probably the same Robert 'of Well' had a bond in 1610 (with Robert of Headshaw as surety) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He is probably the Scott 'of the Well' who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. His wife Rachel complained about his beahaviour to the Privy Council several times in 1631 and 1632, where he was described as 'some time of the Well'. He was ordered to hand over all his assets to his wife and to allow her to cohabit with him, but instead went off to England with Jean, daughter of the deceased Andrew Ker of Graden, and remained with her 'in the filthie cryme of adulterie all the last harvest'. His wife apparently stated she would forgive him if he would return to her and their eight children, 'quhairof foure are so young and weake that they cannot putt on thair cloathes'. Meanwhile he kept Jean Ker 'in ane oastlerhous' until she had his child, and sold his house (probably not Woll) and belongings, making his wife and children 'brought to beggary'. He is probably the Robert 'of Wallis' whose son George became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1640 and whose son Robert became an apothecary's apprentice in 1641. Also in 1641 he is 'of the Woll' when his son James became a saddeler's apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1643 he is 'Robert Scot of Well' when his son James was incarcerated in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown. His wife Rachel was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in 1661. He had at least 5 sons: Francis, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, but sold Woll; George, who was also served heir to his father; Robert; and John. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel Tudhope and their children included Agnes (b.1635) and Isobel (b.1640). Witnesses in 1640 were William Tudhope (surely a relative of his wife) and Andrew Leyden. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'in Grundiston' in 1640, when Robert Deans was fined 'for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand'. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts, but he could perhaps be a descendant of Robert of Easter Groundistone, who is recorded by Scott of Satchells. Robert of Braidhaugh (17th C.) see Robert of Harwood. Robert of Howpasley (d.1658) probably eldest son of William of Fingland, brother of Walter, half-brother of Simon and cousin of Patrick of Tanlawhill. It is unclear exactly how he acquired Howpasley. On his death the lands passed to his brother Walter. He is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. Robert of Carterton (17th C.) recorded in 1667 when he granted a bond (for £332 Scots) to Walter Lorraine, tenant in Greens, who was described as his 'good brother' (i.e. brother-in-law). His farm was in northern Dumfriesshire, but it seems likely he was related to more local Scotts, perhaps a branch with a connection to the Lorraines of Harwood. It is possible he was the Robert, married to Alison Lorraine (perhaps daughter of Edward Lorraine and Maisie Elliot), whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Kelso in 1635. He was surely related to Francis of Carterton (perhaps his son), who is recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gillespie and their children included Robert (b.1644), Andrew (b.1645), Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1649) and Margaret (b.1653). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Gillespie and George Ruecastle. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Woll. In 1641 he became an apprentice apothecary with Patrick McAulay in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Bessie and Marion (b.1647); Isobel (b.1650); William (b.1651); Janet (b.1653); Walter (b.1655); and Janet (again, b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were David Beattie and James Newbie. Robert (17th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1651. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Scott and their child Christian was baptised in 1655. Robert of Shielswood (b.1640) 2nd son of Walter. He succeeded his brother Francis. He paid tax on £260 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded on an inquest in 1669. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Marian. She married Adam Scott of Shaws. Robert of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of William, he was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. His tutors were John of Ancrum and and Walter of Woll. He was Laird at the time Capt. Scott of Satchells wrote his 'post'ral', to whom he dedicated part (and a family genealogy is given there). In 1673 he was charged by the Hawick Bailies of having 'masterfully spuilzied out of James Liddell's house five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town'; the reason for this apparent theft is not known, but Liddell was Hawick's Procurator-fiscal, and this was a time when there were serious disputes with the Baron Bailie. Probably the same Robert of Horsleyhill gave evidence at the trial of Andrew Rutherford for the murder of James Douglas of Cavers in 1674; in fact Rutherford tried to accused him, in order to discredit his testimony. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. In 1676 he was probably already acting as Bailie of Regality when there was a case in which the weavers complaining that 2 of their members had appealed to him, rather than obey the Bailies of Hawick. In 1678 he paid land tax on £264 for Weensland in Hawick Parish and £637 (for Horsleyhill) in Hassendean Parish. Also in 1678 he witnessed (along with Walter of Goldielands) a baptism for Walter of Harwood. He is probably the Robert in 'Horbie Hill' who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. In 1680 he witnessed (along with George of Boonraw) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. He is probably the Laird of Horsleyhill who witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1681. In a 1688 sasine he is described as 'bailie in that part for James Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth'. He married Isobella Scott, probably in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 (suggesting she was from one of the branches of the Scotts in that area). His children included: William, the eldest son; John (b.1670), who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1687; Francis (b.1677), who became a surgeon-apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696; Marion (b.1680); and Janet (b.1681), who married Rev. Robert Scott of Roberton. Elizabeth (b.1669), Charles (b.1672) and Patrick (b.1682), all baptised in Hawick, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1680 were Mr. Francis (probably the minister of Hassendean) and Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Scott of Horsleyhill whose daughter Eliza married Walter of Woll in 1694. In 1678, 1685 and 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He leased the Trinitylands from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. In 1692 he signed the agreement between Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and the Town of Hawick, regarding planting on the edge of the Common. He gave a bond to his daughter Janet in 1691. He was probably succeeded by his sons William and then Francis. He is probably the Robert, Laird of Horsleyhill, who married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie and Christian Scott in Jedburgh in 1708. Robert (17th C.) described as 'in Raesknowe' when he acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1640–41 for rental records for Wilton, Branxholme and Whitchester, and in 1642–44 for Teviotdalehead and Eweshead. He may be the same as Robert of Harwood. Robert of Glack (d.bef. 1647) described being 'of Gleik, parish of Mearns' in 1647 when his son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He was deceased before some of the records of a later Robert of Glack, who was connected with the Scotts of Goldielands. Mearns was in Renfrewshire, but 'Glack' or 'the Glack' is more likely to be the narrow valley near Kirkton Manor in Peeblesshire. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Glack. Robert of Hartwoodmill (17th C.) recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (this may be an error for 'Hartwoodhill' in Lanarkshire or 'Hartwoodmyres'). The lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. Robert of Hartwoodmyres (d.1654) probably direct descendant of William of Hartwoodmyres, who is recorded in 1589 and 1596. It is possible there are 2 generations of Roberts here. In 1612 he complained that a group of Kers and others, amounting to about 60 men, came to his lands of Hartwoodmyres and 'rave up and tillit over agane' his lands, then attempted to find him with violence in mind, but he was not at home; he was unable to prove his claim to the Privy Council. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded in 1615 when his sister Marie (or Mary) married Walter Scott of Howford. In 1618 he was a cautioner for Walter, son of John Scott in Newark. In 1627 he was one of the Commissioners left by the Earl of Buccleuch to administer his affairs when he left for Holland. Also in 1627 he is mentioned in an action that was brought against him and Andrew of Aikwood in Selkirk. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will. He was part of the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch, which took place in Hawick in 1634, with him carrying the arms of Beaton of Creighe. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he witnessed a 'supplication' to the Privy Council. He is listed as one of the landowners in a 1643 valuation of the lands in Wilton Parish, the value being £26 13s 4d (it is unclear where these lands were, but by 1788 were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch). He is probably the Robert of 'Hartwoodmill' recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish; the lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (so he was M.P. for 1643–45) and in 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. In 1648 he re-married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Shielswood (and she would later marry Sir John of Thirlestane). His oldest son was William, who was the last of Hartwoodmyres. Robert of Headshaw (17th C.) probably son of Robert. His brother Walter's son Harry became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1621. He was listed as one of the major landowners in a valuation of Wilton Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £448 10s. He was probably the 'younger of Headshaw' who leased part of the lands of Belses in 1632. He was probably also the son of Robert of Headshaw who sold the estate of Whitehaugh to Andrew Hay in 1623. In 1627 he was 'of Eidshaw, younger' when accused of being among a band of Scotts who harassed the tenant of Hartwoodburn; his brothers Walter and James were also listed. In 1629 he sold the family estates of Headshaw and Langhope to John of Yorkston, 2nd son of George of Synton. He was involved in a court case in 1634 with Sir William Scott of Harden and John, son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1638 he is 'sumtyme of Heidschaw' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. He is surely the Scott of Headshaw whose 'Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh' are recorded in 1643. He is probably the Robert of Headshaw whose daughter Jean married William Scott of Synton in 1647. Robert of Heap (17th C.) recorded as owner of teinds in Ashkirk Parish in the 1643 Roxburghshire county valuation. These consisted of the teinds of Leaphill, Woll, Castleside and Broadlee (valued at £208), Whitslade (£80) and Essenside (£60), as well as tack-duty (valued at £3 6s 8d). He is recorded as one of the heritors of Wilton Parish in 1649. Probably the same Robert was 'of Wester Heap' on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Wilton and also 'of Heap' when he paid tax in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably related to James of Heap, who is also recorded in the 17th century. It is possible he is the Robert, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Grisel was baptised in Ashkirk in 1652. Robert of Burnhead (d.1677) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s (it is unclear whether he was Laird or tenant at Burnhead). In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land valued at £156 in Hassendean Parish. He was also recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish in 1663, when he paid tax on £156 (presumably for Burnhead itself). He was only son of William of Burnhead and Margaret Cairncross. In 1636 he married Marian, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters, and they had 2 daughters. In 1643 he secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Hector Turnbull of Clarilaw (through this marriage probably acquiring the lands of Clarilaw). He was succeeded by William of Burnhead, and also had at least 3 other sons: Robert of Lees; Adam; and Alexander. Andrew, recorded in 1689 as 'broyr-germon to William Scott of Clarrielaw', was probably also his son. Robert of Phaup (d.bef. 1671) recorded as 'of Phalop' and already deceased in 1671 when his son Adam became a gunsmith's apprentice in Edinburgh. Other sons were probably Col. Francis and Capt. John, who were recorded in factor's records for Sir William Scott of Harden in 1657 and 1671, respectively. Robert of Girnwood (b.c.1615) eldest son of Walter of Girnwood. He was still a minor when his father died, with his uncle Robert of Shielswood acting as tutor to him and his brother, Walter from 1629. He was served heir to his father in 1636, presumably when he reached majority. In 1640 he married Bessie, daughter of Sir Walter of Whitslade. Robert of Borthwickbrae (17th C.) recorded in a list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley in 1650. It appears that his wife was Margaret Scott and their sons William and Walter. In 1643 and 1644 he was appointed by Parliament to the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was probably the last Scott of Borthwickbrae. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included Bessie (b.1652) and Margaret (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Deans and William Ruecastle and in 1654 were John Scott and Walter Chisholme. Robert (d.bef. 1678) son of Thomas of Todrig and younger brother of the next Thomas of Todrig. He is mentioned in 1637 as son of Thomas when he became a merchant's apprentice to Alexander Clerk in Edinburgh. He is further recorded in 1678 and 1680 when his widow Isobel Scott had discharges for annual rent in Selkirk. In 1679, 1681, 1683 and 1684 his widow was'tutorix' to their daughters Isobel and Janet. Her signature is recorded in 1684. Robert (d.bef. 1681) recorded being 'in Hassendean' in 1681 when his widow Helen Caldwell's daughter Agnes was baptised in Roberton. The witnesses were John Noble and Thomas Scott. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Robert of Lees (17th C.) 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Burnhead and Elizabeth Turnbull. He appears to have been Laird of the lands that were later referred to as 'West Lees', near Appletreehall. He probably also held the lands of Clarilaw and was succeeded by Walter of Clarilaw, who was likely to be either his son or nephew. He was among the heritors accused of inciting the 1690 riot when the roof of Hassendean Kirk was removed to Roberton. He could be the same as the Robert living at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert in Lees whose son John was baptised in Wilton in 1705. It is also possible he is the Robert in Lees whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1738. Robert of Glack (17th C.) possibly son of the youngest sister of the last Walter Scott of Goldielands (although Keith Scott suggests he was married to a daughter of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands, but this seems at least a generation too early). He is recorded in a Hassendean Parish record of 1666, where he was one of those supporting suppression of the Parish. Probably the same individual is recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1643 (where he is described as 'of Cloak', with land valued at £100, which was almost certainly Fenwick) and of Wilton Parish in both 1643 (described as 'of Lack', with land valued at £130) and 1649 (described as 'of Clak'); this suggests the possibility that he may be related to James 'of Park' (with a transcription error), recorded around the same time. Glack was an estate in Peeblesshire, although he also owned the lands of Fenwick and Highchesters, and may have lived locally. Scott of Satchells lists him as one of the 'Pensioners to the House of Buckcleugh' and says he was given the lands of Fenwick for his service. In 1653 he held part of the lands of Ladyurd in Peeblesshire when he granted a bond of 12,000 merks to Robert of Harwood; Robert of Harwood had a decree of appraising for these lands in 1654, but he was owner again in 1656 when he had a charter of 'novodamus' from the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, in return for services and duties. In 1654 he transferred the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd to Robert Scott of Harwood, but had them back 2 years later, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He also paid £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663, and also in 1678 (perhaps for Fenwick), plus the land tax on lands valued at £130 in Wilton Parish (where he is recorded being 'of Clack', the lands probably being East Highchesters). He is easy to confuse with Robert, son of Robert of Harwood, who acquired Falnash and other lands. He also appears to have inherited part of the Goldielands estates and passed them to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1674. He may be the Robert 'in Glack' whose widow Jean Brown married Malcolm Inglis of Manorhead in 1666. He is probably the Robert 'Glack' who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1678 and another for William of Harwood in 1680. He is probably also the Robert of Glack whose son James with Bessie Henderson (labelled 'forn' for fornication) was baptised in Hawick in 1680. He is probably the Robert of Glack who in 1689 conveyed his lands of Ladyurd to Gideon Scott of Outerside (and later Falnash), with the consent of his wife Mary Elliot. Lieut.-Col. Robert (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Guilan, and grandson of Sir Robert of Haining. He was the last member of the Scotts of Haining of whom there is any record. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1667) son of Walter 'in Braidhaugh', (i.e. Broadhaugh) who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for upper Teviotdale and the Langholm area. The precise kinship with the Scotts of Buccleuch is uncertain. He is 'in Braidehaw' in 1638 when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. He may be the Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch who was at Raesknowe in 1640–44. He may be the Robert of Falnash listed as the 3rd largest landowner in the 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (with lands valued at £1400). He is described as 'in Braidhauche' in 1644–50 when he acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for the upper Teviot valley, like his father before him. He was also 'in Braid Hauche' in 1646, 1648 and 1649 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1651 he is 'callit of Braidhauch' and described as eldest lawful son of Walter of Arkleton in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 800 merks yearly for his lifetime. By 1652 he was referred to as 'in Braidhauche, now of Harwode', and he was still Chamberlain in 1660. He is the Robert 'of Harwoode' who acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick, St. Mary's and Selkirk in 1657–60. A bond at the end of 1653 transfers the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd (in Peeblesshire) to him from Robert Scott of Glack (who may have been a relative). But the lands were returned in 1656, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He witnessed charters for lands in Dalkeith for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1656 and 1658. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £4600 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Teviotdalehead. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £300. In 1663 he is recorded as 'liferenter of the lands of Dalcove' when he renounced the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. And in 1663 he was involved in a libel action with Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs.

Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. Furthermore, he is probably the 'Braidhaugh for Harrot' who is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663, paying £866 13s 4d. He was also recorded in 2 discharges of 1663. He married Beatrice (or Beatrix) Gledstains, from the family of Gledstains of that Ilk. Their children included: Walter (b.1640), who succeeded by 1672; Robert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1662; Francis (b.1642) of Greenhill; John (b.1644), who probably died young; David (b.1646); William (b.1649), who became an apothecary's apprentice in 1667, and was probably the same as the surgeon in Hawick in the late 17th century; Gideon of Falnash (b.1651), 'Auld Falnash', Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch; John (again, b.1652); and Agnes, who married John Scott of Woll. It is possible that Andrew (b.1656), whose mother's name is given as 'Bessie' Gledstains, was also his son. The witnesses in 1651 were Patrick Hamilton and Gideon (surely a relative and perhaps Sir Gideon of Highchester) and in 1652 were Gideon (again) and John Gledstains. He is probably the Scott of Harwood whose estate was sold off by his creditors in 1681, as further pursued in the courts in 1688. Robert (17th C.) son of William of 'Falldonsyde' (i.e. Faldonside). His father was already deceased in 1648 when he became a merchant's apprentice with John 'Riolsh' in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. He is probably the Robert 'of ... stoun' recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £66 13s 4d. He is Robert 'of Drinkstowne' in the Land Tax Rolls for 1663 when paid tax on £66 13s 4d. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone whose wife Bessie's will is recorded in 1682; they may have married in Ashkirk Parish in 1640, with children including William (b.1649), James (b.1651), Francis (b.1653) and Margaret (b.1660). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert and George (who were probably related to him or his wife). He could be the Robert of Drinkstone whose son Robert married Bessie, daughter of William of Galalaw, according to a marriage contract of 1663. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Miller and their children included: James (b.1671); Marion (b.1673); John (b.1676); William (b.1679); an unnamed son (b.1682); James (again, b.1684); and another unnamed son (b.1687). The witnesses in 1671 were James and Walter (who were probably relatives) and in 1673 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Tandlaw. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he was 'in Barnknow' (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe) when he witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson; a witness for Wilson 2 years earlier was Robert 'in Barnknow'), making it possible that this was the same man. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. Robert of Whitslade (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He married Jean Hay in Edinburgh in 1681. He may have been the oldest son of Thomas, or his younger brother. Robert (17th C.) resident of Burnhead according to a baptismal record of 1682. He is probably related to Adam who was also in Burnhead at that time. It seems likely they are the Adam and Robert who witnessed baptisms for William (later referred to as 'of Burnhead') in 1686 and 1688. He married Margaret Scott and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: John (b.1680); Robert (b.1682); Bessie (b.1687); and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were John Scott and William Scott (who were presumably related to either him or his wife), in 1682 were William and John Scott (perhaps the same 2 men) and in 1687 were William and Adam Scott. He is probably the Robert who was resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was probably related to the William who was also listed as a householder there and given the coincidence of the names, they may have both been related to the contemporary and previous Lairds of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Robert of Lees. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jean Murray and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were Thomas Gray and Robert Graham. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Marion Thomson and their children included: William (b.1674); James (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); Agnes (b.1684); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were John (perhaps a relative) and William Douglas. In he and his wife were both fined for assaulting tailor William Scott, called 'Bee', while William was in turn fined for assaulting him 'and in threatening him at his door with ane drawne sword'. He may also be the Robert who in 1685 was involved in a fight with William Douglas, being accused of hitting Douglas 'wt ane great rung'. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Helen Dryden and their children included: Adam (b.1679);

Janet (b.1681); and Christian (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Turnbull and James Law and in 1687 were John and Robert Noble. Robert (17th C.) fined £100 Scots in 1688 for leaving the town when the militia was in Hawick charging young men 'for throwing of dyce and drawing of balotes'. He clearly did not want to serve! He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bonnington (17th C.) son of John of Bonnington. He was in possession of the lands in 1670. He had a son John. He was succeeded by James, who was either his brother or son. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His brother Walter was a merchant, who in 1673 was accused of striking him, apparently the result of a misunderstanding involving Thomas Brown and Robert Dickson. He is probably 'Robert Scott, laird, shoemaker' listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; the 'laird' suggests he might have been related to Thomas and James, who had the same nickname. He is probably the cordiner of the same name listed 'uest the water' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) son of John of Gilmanscleuch. He was recorded in a deed of renunciation and dischanrge in 1673. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1679 George Hall was fined for 'ane blood' on him, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day, since 'his arms was swollen by the stockies, and he could not shear'. He was presumably a farm worker of some sort. Robert of Tandlaw (17th C.) recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. In 1673 he (along with Walter of Goldielands) witnessed a baptism for Robert (presumably a relative) and Bessie Miller in Hawick Parish. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish. He was listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. In 1688 he was a witness to boundaries being marked out between lands at the east end of Hawick. Probably the same Robert was on the list of Hassendean heritors accused of inciting the riot of 1690. There was a warrant for his arrest along with Adam (probably a relative) and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (for Hassendean Parish). Along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism in 1698 for John Easton in Drinkstone. He was witness to the birth of a child of William in Goldielands in 1702, suggesting that they were closely related. He is probably the Robert of Tandlaw who (along with Robert in Drinkstone) witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711. He married Barbara Scott and had children baptised in Roberton Parish (actually the area of the former Hassendean Parish). He was recorded at Tandlaw in a baptismal record of 1682. He is difficult to separate from Robert in Galalaw, whose wife had the same name! His children included: Helen (b.1682); and probably Barbara (b.1685), who seems likely to be the Barbara from Tandlaw who married James Ormiston in Boonraw in 1713. Some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688) may also be his children. The witnesses in 1682 were William and George Scott, who were probably related to him and his wife. The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott and Andrew Chisholme (perhaps the man associated with Coldhouse). Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1681 being at Galalaw. He married Barbara Scott in Roberton Parish in 1680 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included William (b.1681) and probably Margaret (b.1683), as well as some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were William (perhaps his father) and George (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1682, when his son Roert became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh. The Edinburgh skinner was William, who could have been a relative. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Bessie (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); and George (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Leyden and Walter Fowler. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in 'Newtoune' in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was probably one of the Scotts of Newton near Hawick. He could be the Robert, 'tenent Newton' who in 1722 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Nichol, workman in Weensland; the other witness was Richard of Boghall. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident at Newton in 1725. Robert (17th C.) son of John in Weens. In 1684 he was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear what happened to him. Robert of Greenhill (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he and Walter of Whitehaugh were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. It seems likely he was related to Walter of Whitehaugh. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to the contemporary Francis of Greenhill. Perhaps the same man was Robert 'of Whithaugh' in 1689 when (along with John) he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for David Wilson in Hawick. Robert of Falnash (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood and Beatrice Gledstains. He is probably the Robert, son of Robert of 'Horwood' who became a merchant's apprentice with John Hamilton in Edinburgh in 1662. He acquired the lands of Falnash and others from Robert of Glack (with whom he is therefore easily confused). In 1689 (confirmed in 1694) he is recorded transferring his lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters, half of 'Ladyurd' in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (the latter 2 in Peeblesshire) to Gideon Scott of Outerside (later 'Auld Falnash'), who was his brother. This appears to have been because he had no heirs, and was with the agreement of his wife Mary Elliot. He may be the Robert, married to Mary Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Adam (b.1646), Margaret (b.1647), Walter (b.1650) and Isobel (b.1653), although these births seem too early. Robert 'Muckle Robin' (17th/18th C.) recorded as having previously been servant to the Laird of Whitehaugh, who in about 1705 was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. This was recounted by Hector Cockburn in 1764, who described him as 'another old man' and gave his nickname. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Roberton Parish in the 1680s, when Hassendean was part of it. He married Marion Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and John (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were William (probably a relative) and Walter Gledstains. In 1686 the witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who may have been related to him and his wife. He may be the same as one of the Roberts recorded in Hassendean in the tax records of the 1690s. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker on the east side of Hawick. He is a 'cordiner' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 (in distinction to the one from the west). Probably the same 'cordiner' is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the wright who witnessed baptisms for Walter Henderson and for James Tudhope in 1723. He married Isobel Stoddart and their son Robert was baptised in 1700. The witnesses in 1700 were Andrew Scott 'customer' and Bailie James Deans (and also listed as John Elliot and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, but that was for Robert in Newbigging). It is unclear if he was the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) thatcher in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Perhaps he was the thatcher Robert whose grandchild died in 1794. Robert (17th C.) described as 'sometime saddler in Fanesh' (i.e. Falnash) in 1684 when he was on the long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'flesher' in 1693 when he gave evidence to the Magistrates in a case of disorder within the Kirk. Also in 1693 he was one of the men asked to decide on who won a bet between 2 other Hawick butchers about whether or not a particular lamb came from Burnfoot. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as flesher in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1700 he witnessed (along with 'officer' Alexander) a baptism for wright Andrew, suggesting that they might all be closely related. He also witnessed a baptism in 1700 for Walter Purdom. Robert of Broadmeadows (d.1694) son of William, and grandson of William of Tushielaw. In an instrument of sasine of 1692 (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection) he was given the lands of Broadmeadows by his father (recorded as 'Robert', perhaps in error), following his marriage to Agnes Kelso. His 'brother german' Thomas and servant John Ker, were among the witnesses. He died without issue and in 1694 his sisters Isabella (who married John Balfour of Kailzie) and Jean (who married advocate John Murray) inherited his lands. Through Isabella's son, Charles Balfour, the lands passed to a granddaughter, Jean Balfour, who married William Scott of Woll. His testament is recorded in 1694. Robert (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Laird of Highchester, recorded in 1694 in a sasine for lands in Minto. In 1697 he is recorded as 'late chamberlain to Heychesters'. He was 'Bailie Robert Scot of Selkirk, then factor for Haychesters' in the 1690s when he made a protest against the perambulation of Wilton Common. He was probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was distinct from Robert in Ashkirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Broadhaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) renter of a quarter of the lands of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692 and was 'Scrivener' in 1694 when he continued to rent Borthaugh. He continued to rent 1/4 of Borthaugh in 1696 and 1698, and was still described as 'Scrivener'. He was also recorded as a 'Scriver' at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Wilton Parish. He was presumably a lawyer, and may have been son of the James, who previously rented part of Borthaugh and was also designated 'Scrivener'. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Potterlampert according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert of Benholm (d.1626/7–90) son of James of Logie. His lands were in Kincardineshire. He married Catherine, daughter of Patrick Elliot of Crammond. Their children included: Robert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1689; Charles, who became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1690; and Hercules, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1693. He may have been succeeded by James, whose son Patrick became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1712. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'one of the clerks of His Majesty's chancellor' in 1673 when his son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert 'Pope' (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear what his nickname might mean. He is probably the merchant on the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In the 1704 baptismal record he is 'distinctionis causa called Pope'. Perhaps the same Robert was merchant who witnessed a baptism for James Dickson (tenant in Hawick) in 1714 and was the merchant who (along with Francis, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. His children included Helen (b.1704), with witnesses Bailie James Deans and glover James Scott. Robert (17th C.) candlemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed separately from the merchant called 'Pope', but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was called 'Ormiston', to distinguish him from other Roberts; however, it is unclear if he was related to James of Ormiston. Probably the same 'Robt. Scott, Ormistoune' was recorded in 1682 when his wife 'Jein Scott' was assaulted by Bessie Turnbull, wife of John Scott, 'souldier'. They could be the couple whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1672. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to John and Walter, who were also listed there. He was recorded as a tenant in Whitchesters in 1706 when he (along with Alexander Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at 'Mayns' in 1696 when his daughter Isabella was baptised (with no mother's name listed). The witnesses were Adam Scott and William Riddell. Robert (17th/18th C.) leased half the farm of Newbigging from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably separate from the 2 Robert Scotts (father and son) who leased Over Southfield at the same time. He was recorded at Newbigging in 1700. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Cowan, herd in Southfield and in 1708 further baptisms for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield and for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield. He was still tenant of Newbigging in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Gavin (b.1698); and Archibald (b.1700). Witnesses in 1698 were John Elliot and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were John and Gilbert Elliot, both in Southfield (who could have been related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) resident at Over Southfield in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. In the period 1690–98 half of the farm of Over Southfield was rented jointly to 'Rot. Scott father and sone'; so there were 2 generations called Robert at that time. In 1694 there was a connection made between the rental of Over Southfield and Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th C.) listed at Todshawhill among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (d.bef. 1716) resident of Wilton, recorded at Drinkstone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the same as the earlier Robert in Drinkstone, but this seems more likely to be another generation. It is possible he was the Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, who in 1663 married Bessie, daughter of William in Galalaw. He was recorded in Drinkstone in 1696 when he witnessed a baptism (along with James) for Francis in Groundistone and in 1698 when he witnessed another for John Easton in Drinkstone. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for James Grieve in Teindside. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone who witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1709; along with Robert of Tandlaw he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711 and also in 1711, along with Robert of Coldhouse, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. He was already deceased in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth married merchant William Tudhope in Hawick. Given that his daughter was a cousin of William of Whitehaugh, it is possible that he was a son of Robert of Easter Heap. Elspeth's brother, Walter in Wilton, would therefore have been his son. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Boyd and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Robert (b.1687), who may be the carrier in Branxholme Town about 20 years later. Robert's baptism was witnessed by John, who may have been a relative. He could be the Robert, who along with John, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. He could be the carrier recorded in 1685 when he gave a disposition regarding the fight between Michael Turnbull and Thomas Briggs. In 1685 his wife, Janet Boyd, was fined for proviking Margaret Gledstains, wife of James Lands, and Margaret was also fined for 'ane ryott committ on the said Janett'. He may be the carrier who was involved in a trial in Hawick in 1693, where William Rutherford of the Cannongate (presumably Jedburgh) pleaded guilty to assaulting him, but claiming that he was provoked by 'Scott almost hanging him in his gravatt, which was ultimately to cut with a 'knyf.'. 2 separate carriers of the same name are listed 'eist the water' on Hearth Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1694. One of them is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the 'carrier in Hawick' who was said to be one of 2 witnesses who walked and described the boundaries of Wilton Common in the 1690s. Robert (17th C.) resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It is unclear whether he was related to the Scotts of Alton. Robert (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/3 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1694–98. He may have been closely related to John or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694, and to another Riddell, widow of Thomas Mitchelson, who was renting part of the farm in 1696. His cautioner in 1698 was Robert Miller. He may be the Robert who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Hassendean (17th/18th C.) son of Adam. He may be the Robert of Hassendean, described as aged 40 and married, who gave evidence in the 1682 trial of Alexander Home for being a Covenanter. He may be the 'Scot of Hassinden' recorded in 1684 among Borderers fined for their wives failing to attend parish church (i.e. for supporting Covenanters); however, he was acquitted when he said that 'he did put hir away, and served ane inhibition against hir'. He is recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk and being arrested (along with Adam Scott and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe). He was served heir to his father Adam in 1695. In 1696 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Robert 'of Hessindane' who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He sold the lands of Hassendean to Anne Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1679–1710. Robert 'younger of Hassendean' brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council, and this was probably his son. However, this next Robert does not appear to have succeeded, and so he himself was the last Scott of Hassendean. Nevertheless, he is probably the Robert of Hassendean who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1709. He may be the Robert 'elder of Hassendean' whose son Robert is recorded in a deed of 1682. The pair may be the 'Hassanden Elder' and 'Hassanden yonger' recorded each paying for 2 hearths 'in the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'younger of Hassendean' when he was indicted in 1680 for being a Covenanter. The accusations against him including attacking 'the Tower and Castle of Hawick'. He was probably son of Robert of Hassendean. Perhaps the same Robert 'younger of Hassendean' brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council in 1689. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1693 he was charged with striking Euphan Rutherford 'with ane rung, and broke her mistressis rocke when she was spinning as neighbours use to do in each others houeses'. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children John and Jean were baptised in 1696, with witnesses Patrick Richardson and Robert Ruecastle (both

Bailies). He could be same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1725) carrier in Branxholme Town. Note that there was an earlier carrier of the same name, who may have been his father. The baptism of his son William, along with Margaret Turnbull (labelled 'fornicators') is recorded in 1705, with witnesses Robert Cook in Branxholme and Henry Orrock; he was recorded being 'commonly called ye Duchess of Buclughs carier in Branxholmtoun'. He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in 1711–20 (and may be related to the William, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was recorded in 1714 as a carrier at Branxholme Town, when there was a promise that he pay some of what he owed for the lease, when his son Francis was baptised in Roberton Parish, and also when he and James (smith in the same place) witnessed a baptism for the Scoons at Commonside. He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism (along with smith James) in Hawick in 1714 for Walter Scoon and Helen Scott. He was still mentioned in the rental records for Branxholme Town in 1725, but deceased in 1726, when James Sanderson took over his part of the farm. He married Agnes Armstrong (also from Hawick Parish) in 1706 and their children included: John (b.1707); Isobel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Francis (b.1717), baptised in Roberton, but also recorded in Hawick; and Adam (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Thomson and Andrew Ogilvie. 1710 were James Craw and William Scott in Branxholme Town and in 1712 were John in Branxholme and William in Branxholme Town. He is probably the Robert in Branxholme Town whose son Francis was baptised in Roberton in 1717 (along with 3 others from the same place on that day). He may be the Robert, tenant in Branxholme Town whose son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1720, with witnesses William Thomson in Newmill and smith James Dryden. If so, he is also the Robert in Branxholme Town who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He could be the Robert recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant in Heap in 1709 when his son Robert was baptised. There are several other children on record who could be his. He seems likely to be related to the earlier tenant in Heap with the same name. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant in Newton in 1717, along with Robert Storie. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1734) eldest son of Gideon ('Auld Falnash') and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. He was designated 'Mr' in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Gideon Elliot of Falnash and for Walter Turnbull cottar in Harwood. He is presumably the 'Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash', who was unanimously elected to be Cornet in 1722 (this presumably being shortly before he was married). He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead 1721–27. He was mentioned as the Baron's representative on Hawick Parish Session from 1722, and in 1723 ceased to be an Elder of Cavers to become a member of Hawick Parish Session 'in consideration of having his chief interest and business in this parish'. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 and 1724 for his sister Beatrix and Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in Hawick in 1725. He also witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Gideon Elliot of Harwood in 1726 and 1728; in 1728 he and the Laird of Harwood were witnesses for William Grieve in Fenwick. He was in charge of transferring the tenancy of Whitchesters to William Ogilvie in 1731. He purchased lands from Alexander of Galalaw in 1732. He was recorded at Crawhill in 1733. He married Violet, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Susanna Riddell of Minto. Their children were: Susanna (baptised in Cavers Parish in 1723), who married Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1755; Gideon (b.1724), baptised in Cavers Parish, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1726), baptised in Cavers Parish, who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1759, and may have been a minister of the Relief Kirk; John (b.1728), baptised in Cavers; Robert of Orchard (1731–1813), baptised in Hawick Parish; and James (1733–1818), baptised at Crawhill in Wilton Parish, who became minister in Perth. In 1735 his wife, Lady Falnash, sold her property in Hawick to Patrick Hardie, described as 'High and Leigh, back and fore, with appurtenances, trees and lime pit, in yard called the Howegate and bounded by properties of William Lang later James Scott on east, Robert Hardy and William Leiden on west and Kings hiestreet on south'. It is unclear where his young family was raised after his death. The witnesses to the 1731 baptism were James Anderson (Rector of Hawick Grammar School) and Thomas Watson (writer in Hawick) and in 1733 were James of Whitfield (after whom the child might have been named) and Charles of Crumhaugh. There is a 'bond of tailzie' from 1736 (although the date may be incorrect) between him and his eldest son Gideon. Robert (c.1660–1752) son of Thomas of Todrig and Janet Pringle. He served for a long time in the army, being involved with the artillery in the royal army at the Battle of Sheriffmoor in 1715. He was said to be 'a man of great simplicity of manners, and of great integrity and honour'. He was probably the Robert, 'brother to Todrige', whose heirs are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1696 he leased Borthwickshiels and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He was a witness in 1700 to the marriage contract of his niece Jean Scott (with William Elliot of Harwood); she was daughter of his brother, Walter of Todrig. He died at the garrison in Edinburgh Castle at the age of about 92. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Graham in Wilton in 1703. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Hawickshiels in 1704. He married Margaret Anderson and their son James was baptised in 1704, with witnesses Simon Miller and Walter Scott, both also from Hawickshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in 1705. Robert 'Wyndhead' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He presumably lived at the head of the Wynd, which was probably what became Walter's Wynd. It is therefore possible that he was connected with the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He is recorded as 'wyndhead' when his children were baptised in 1701, 1712, 1715 and 1718. In 1708 he gave evidence before the Hawick Kirk Session to say that William Scott (son of John 'Cloaks') spent time with Margaret Brydon on Common Riding night the year before, leading to an illegitimate child. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter, who was also called 'Wyndhead'. He married Margaret Crozier. Their other children included: Robert (b.1701); Robert (again, b.1710); Archibald (b.1712); Walter (b.1715); and Marjorie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1712 were tailors Archibald and George Scott (who may have been related to him) and in 1718 were shoemaker James Chisholme and smith John Scott. He was probably related to John 'Wyndhead', who died before 1712. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was tenant in Goldielands. He was thus recorded in 1702, when his son Robert was born; this was probably the same as the Robert recorded at Goldielands a few decades later. He married Mary Scott in 1701, with his father given there as Walter; from the similarity of names, it seems likely he is descended from the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. Robert of Harden (d.1710) son of William, succeeding from his brother Sir William in 1707. He was previously 'of Iliston' (or 'Elistoun', near Melrose), which he had inherited in 1686. He lived in Edinburgh before gaining the Harden titles. In 1708 he was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Berwickshire. In 1709 he sold half of Kershope to William Kerr of Chatto. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fernilee. However, he (like his brother) died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter (actually first cousin, twice removed), son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at 'Mitcha' (probably Meadshaw) in 1702 when his son Gideon was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch near Teviothead. He was recorded in Blackcleuch in 1704, 1708, 1716 and 1724. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John in Blackcleuch (also called 'Uncle John'), who may have been a relative; the other witness was John in Falnash. In 1716 he was recorded as tenant in Blackcleuch when he witnessed a baptism for William Anderson, shepherd in Blackcleuch. He could be the tenant in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for Archibald Murray, herd in Hislop and in 1720 for John Nichol from Commonbrae. He married Mary (or 'Marie') Scott in 1701 and their children included: Janet (b.1704); and Walter (b.1708). His son John was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724 (with no mother's name given). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Elliot in Commonbrae and John Beattie 'servant' and in 1708 were Walter in Crumhaugh (probably owner of the lands of Blackcleuch) and Walter in Lymiecleuch. Rev. Robert (1673/4–1727) brother of William, Laird of Whitehaugh, and hence son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693 and was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1698. He was called to Roberton Parish in late 1699 and became minister there in 1700, remaining until his death. In 1711 he was one of the witnesses to the Orock bequest. Because of the ruinous state of the Manse he and his family stayed in Hawick for most of that time; a record of 1715 refers to him and his family being forced to return to Hawick. The oldest existing Roberton communion token dates from 1705, during his incumbency. It is said that in 1703 he was one of the local ministers who walked out of the Synod meeting at Duns, in sympathy with the objections of Hawick's minister Alexander Orrock. He is probably the 'mr Rott scott' who (along with William of Whitehaugh) witnessed a baptism for James in Whitehaugh in 1721. He was 'minister of the Gospell att Robertoun' in 1727 when (along with his brother William) he witnessed a baptism for James Scott (probably his cousin) and Janet Scott in Borthaugh. He married Janet Scott in Hawick, and their children (baptised in Roberton) were: Elizabeth (or Bessie, b.1710); Walter (b.1716); and Marion. He published 'Twelve Sermons preached before and alter the celebration of the Lord's Supper' (1729). He is buried at Roberton and a memorial tablet was built into the churchyard wall, erected by his brother William. His will from 1727 survives; from here it seems that his wife was a daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and therefore his cousin. He had bonds from his wife's father, as well as from John Chisholme of Stirches and from William Tudhope and he arranged for money to go his wife, his uncle James, his cousin James in Borthaugh, and Robert, 2nd son of his cousin James (or if he died, to another son, which would be John, who eventually succeeded to Whitehaugh). Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Bailie James. In 1708 he caused a disturbance in St. Mary's by trying to take seat in the 'Steeple Loft' which had been his deceased father's, although the Council had just decreed that these front seats were reserved for the present Bailies. Along with Walter Purdom (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in jail. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary men named Robert. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Outerside in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are many possibilities for children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Hobkirk in Hawick in 1710. Perhaps the same Isabell Hobkirk married Robert Gledstains in Hawick in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Mossbrae in 1717 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1718 his son Simon was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Probably the same Robert was in Effledge in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he was recorded as 'Crawship' when he witnessed a baptism Hawick weaver Robert Riddll. His designation might signify a connection with the lands of Crawshope in upper Teviotdale. Robert of Scotsbank (d.bef. 1713) owner of the lands of 'Scott's Bank', part of the farm of Hyndhope on the Ettrick. In about 1705 he was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute; he was described as then living in Selkirk and being factor to the Laird of Harden. He was recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. In 1708 he is recorded as owner of land in Selkirk, adjacent to the main 'causey', which was laid by Hawick man Archibald Paterson. Also in 1708 he attended the 'convention of Burrows' in Selkirk and was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. There was a further discharge in 1709, which referred to a loan of 2000 merks he made to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1696 (perhaps related to the Darien Company). His widow Janet Halliday is recorded in a 'lybell' in Selkirk in 1713. He is also recorded in 1719 when his widow, Janet Halliday, complained about Thomas Hunter, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk and was also in dispute over a butcher's bill and in another case in 1720. His widow also had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, 1730, 1732 and 1734, and she complained about march stones with the 'burleymen' of Selkirk in 1731. In 1708 his second daughter (and co-heir) Mary married Thomas of Todrig. He may be the Robert who married Janet Halliday in Gladsmuir Parish in 1703 (in which case she must have been his second wife); their children included Alexander (b.1710) and William (b.1712). Robert (17th/18th C.) described as a tenant in Hawick. He married Janet Greenshiels and their children included: James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); and William (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were mason John Turnbull and Dand Gray in Weensland. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1725 (at the same time as another Robert) and Wester Groundistone in 1729. He married Isobel Hall (or perhaps Hill) in Wilton in 1719. Their children included: Margaret (b.1722); John (b.1725); Isobel (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); William (b.1731); and Robert (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were George Scott and Walter Riddell and in 1729 were William Turnbull and Robert Scott. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish. He was living at Girnwood in 1718 and 1722 when his daughters Janet and Helen were baptised. He may be the same as on of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he married Jean Taylor in Ashkirk in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) cottar in North Synton. He married Euphan Dunlop and their children included: William (b.1719); John (b.1731); and Bettie (b.1732). Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he married Dorothy McVittie in Hawick in 1721. Her name is written 'Doarthie Magvitie'. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he was at Parkhill in 1723 when his son Robert was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1722 when his son William was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer at Skelfhill. He is listed as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert recorded in Skelfhill in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, tenant in Falnash (who was formerly at Skelfhill, and was probably related). In 1722 he, along with Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and James Grieve of Commonside petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1723 he is recorded in the Hawick Session records giving in '400 merks of ye poors money'. It is possible he is the 'Old Hobby in Skelfhill' who wrote a version of 'The Braes of Branxholme' and of whom several other stories are told by William Scott, teacher in Burnmouth (see Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill whose son John was married in Hawick in 1700. He may be the 'Auld Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill' who was grandfather of Robert Scott in Skelfhill who described him in 1809; he was said to have married a daughter of John Elliot, farmer in Southfield. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Martin in 1722. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725). The 1723 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and John Glendinning in Whitchesters and the 1725 baptism by Walter Nixon and John Scott 'in Hawick'. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, residing at Tandlaw in 1729. He married Janet Gledstains in 1727 and their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Bessie (b.1730); and Robert (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were Walter Scott and William Stewart and in 1730 were William Harkness and George Stavert. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1729 (at the same time as another Robert); he is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for the other Robert in 1729. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included: William (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); James (b.1729); and Mary (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were George and Richard (who were probably related to him). He may be the Robert who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kyle at Groundistone in 1737. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Francis of Gilmanscleuch. His father was already deceased in 1711 when he became a barber's apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Boonraw in 1729. He married Margaret Easton in 1728 and their children included: Isobel (b.1729); and Janet (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were James and Robert Ormiston. Dr. Robert (d.c.1757) surgeon in Hawick, possibly the last of the Scotts of Whitslade. Dr. Thomas Somerville's 'My Own Life and Times' describes him as 'the only surviving representative of the ancient family of Whitslade'. He appears to have been brother of Walter, and also of John, who sold Whitslade. He was probably the 4th son of Thomas (d.c.1698), and was said to have greatly outlived his 6 brothers. It was also said that he was 14th in descent from the Lord of Buccleuch. He is recorded in about the 1720s when a payment was made from the Kirk Session to him 'for more cures to Rob Tailfer's daughter', as well as 'for druges to Janet Badie'. In his old age he became quite poor, being described as 'a gentlemanlike person in ruin, tall, meagre – the countenance of hunger and despondency', and is said to have survived through occasional donations of distant relatives. He was also helped by Hawick's minister Rev. William Somerville, perhaps inspired by the assistance the Scotts of Whitslade had given to Somerville's father, Rev. Thomas S. Somerville, when he was ousted as minister of Cavers during the Revolution and settled in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1745, for skinner John Currer. Perhaps a different Dr. Robert (or the same, but with confused details) is described as being the 4th son of William of Raeburn, and 14th in descent from Buccleuch; this Robert married Mary Flemming and their son Robert may have been a surgeon in Musselburgh, who married Elizabeth Chalmers, and whose daughter Helen apparently helped Sir Walter with the plot of Ivanhoe. He is recorded as 'Mr. Robert Scott Whitslade Surgeon in Hawick' when he witnessed a baptism in 1753 for a daughter of John Gledstains of Whitlaw. This suggests that he continued to be an Episcopalian throughout his life. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Agnes Elliot and their son Patrick was baptised in 1728. The witnesses were Walter in 'New...' and John in 'Ever...'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he was at Highchesters when his daughter Helen was baptised. Robert (18th C.) son of John of Gilmanscleuch. He became an apprentice mason with David Ramsay in Edinburgh in 1730. Robert (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. His son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1732 (apparently twice in successive weeks!). There are several other children baptised in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Probably the same Robert married Marion Scott and was recorded in Whitfield in 1747 when their daughter Susana was baptised in Wilton Parish. Other children of this same couple included Margaret (b.1750) and Helen (b.1752). The 1747 witnesses were Walter and John Scott, who seem likely to have been related to him or his wife. He may be the Robert who was in Whitfield in 1765 when selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. Robert (18th C.) recorded 'in Strother-house' in 1765 when he was among the men selected to perambulate Wilton Common. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1732 and 1736. His children included: Janet (b.1732); and Margaret (b.1736). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Jean Goodfellow. He was at Midshiels in 1741 when his son Charles was baptised. The witnesses were John and Walter Scott. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1741, 1743 and 1744. He married Agnes Hood in Wilton in 1738. Their children included: Janet (b.1741); Robert (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); William (b.1745); Walter (b.1749); Anne (b.1752); and Robert (again, b.1755). The witnesses in 1741 were John and Walter Scott, in 1743 were James Dryden and Walter Scott and in 1744 were Robert and Walter Scott. Robert (18th C.) servant to Rev. William Somerville in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. Robert (d.1750) resident of Stouslie whose funeral is recorded in Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Coldhouse (c.1685–1772) father of Robert, minister of Innerleithen and grandfather of Alexander, friend of Lord Byron. He is probably a descendant of the earlier Robert of Howford and Coldhouse, but the identity of his own parents are not clear (however, he seems to have been born around the time of the death of William of Coldhouse, who may have been his father). In 1765 he states that George Douglas, former tenant in Whitfield, was a relative (hence perhaps his mother was a Douglas). He is recorded being 'of Coldhouse' in Wilton baptisms in at least 1709, 1711 and 1724. He was tenant of West Burnfoot (on Ale) in 1716–18 and Drinkstone 1719–43. In 1743 his son William (as part of his marriage contract) was infeft in the lands of Little Drinkstone ('commonly called Tanlaw') and Tanlawrig ('commonly called Cowdhouse'). He was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765, with his son William representing him; however, he gave evidence of his recollections of the use of Wilton Common over the previous 70 or so years. This includes recalling the earlier time that the common was perambulated, which he suggested was when he was 10–12, but according to other witnesses was around 1705–10. His lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were valued at £80 in 1764. In 1708 in Wilton Parish, he married Jean, daughter of James Cunningham. His children included: William, who succeeded; James (b.1709), tenant at Tandlaw for a while; Margaret (b.1711); Rev. Robert (b.1714); an unnamed son (b.1717); Walter (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). William (b.1713), baptised in Wilton with no mother's name recorded, could be his son. Helen (b.1726), baptised in Hawick to a couple with the same names, could also be his child. The witnesses in 1709 were William Chisholme of Parkhill, Alexander Scott, younger of Galalaw, and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1711 were Robert of Tandlaw and Robert in Drinkstone; also in 1711, along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1724 were Alexander of Galalaw and Walter Cunningham (who was surely related to his wife, and may have given his name to the child). He is probably the Laird recorded in Hawick in 1739 when the bells were rung for 'Colldehouses wife's burell'. He witnessed a baptism (along with Alexander of Galalaw) for William Scott in Whitfield in 1744. He is probably also the 'Lard of Coldhouse' who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. His death at Tandlaw is recorded in the Scots Magazine, and he was said to be 'aged 90 and upwards'. Robert (1688–1768) 3rd son of William in Milsington. He became tenant at Singlie before 1712. He is probably the tenant in Singlie who was involved in a case with Alexander, flesher in Selkirk in 1762. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Their children included: William, who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Henry, who farmed at Over Deloraine; Margaret, who married William Scott, farmer at

Kirkhope; and Elizabeth. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1699 in Selkirk as late Dean of Guild. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Linglie, near Selkirk, as recorded in 1708 for a receipt for a transaction involving Philiphaugh Mill. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts, but it is possible he is the same man as the Dean of guild in 1715 (since the Burgh of Selkirk owned the farm of Linglie). Note the potential confusion with 'Singlie'. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Burgh Officer in Selkirk in 1716. Robert of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1724 when his daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Whitehaugh. He must have been related to the earlier John of Gorrenberry, or perhaps to the Alton branch. However, it is possible that 'Robert' is an error for another Scott of Gorrenberry. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1744) son of Walter of Harwood and Christian Ker. He may have been the 'Harwood' recorded in 1721 paying money to the town for ringing the bells at the burial of his child. It is said that the family fortunes were lost through the extravagance of his mother. He sold Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch (or perhaps confirmed the earlier sale of his father) in about 1738. His lands were valued at £440 in the 1740s. His widow Elizabeth Mason is recorded leasing the farms of Skelfhill and Fairnyside from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. This is confirmed to her eldest son Robert, said to be under age in 1744; that document also states that the Duke's tenants shall keep the privilege of casting peats. It is possible that Robert, recorded later as tenant in Skelfhill was this same son. His 5th son James eventually became farmer at Skelfhill. It is unclear whether the 'Robert Scott of Harrot' recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 was his son (or an error). His widow may be the lady recorded in the Hawick Kirk Treasurer's accounts: 'Mrs. Scott the bestcloath wt the hors clos for her husband, Mr. Scot of Harwood, £4 10s'. Robert 'Rob' (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of the early 1700s setting up seats and making a 'footgang' at Hawick Kirk. He was thus presumably a joiner. Robert of Davington (c.1682–1764) 2nd son of Francis of Davington, and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1706 and his older brother John about 1710. Sir Francis of Thirlestane had him and his widowed mother thrown off their farm at Cassock. About 1727 he (and his brothers Francis and William) started a legal battle to recover the estates lost by his great-grandfather during the Civil War (based on a document made out by his grandfather Sir John of Thirlestane in Hawick in 1641). This ended in 1744 and he renounced all rights to the lands to his brother Francis in 1747. He was known as 'Robert the Laird'. He married Mary McAlpine. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and had an only son James, who died without issue; John, attorney in Canonbie, who had several children, but also failed in the male line; and William of Meikledale. Robert (1691/2–1763) agricultural labourer in southern Liddesdale and northern England. He married Christian Turnbull, who died in 1750, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (d.1771), who died at Longcleuchside; and James (1726/7–1801), who died at Pyke. He died at Blacklin and they are buried at Ettleton. Robert (1698–1771) son of Walter of Woll and Eliza, daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He moved to Tamnymore in County Londonderry and was progenitor of a line of Scotts in Ulster, including proprietors of W. & C. Scott, millmen in Omagh. The family history is described in 'The Stones that Ground the Corn, The Story of an Irish County Grain Mill, 1850–2000', by Tony Deeson et al. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary 'Mcgahon' and their children included Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). Robert (1699–1775) son of Walter 'Beardie' and grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He was said to have gone to sea, but been shipwrecked and refused to go back. He then received a lease of Sandyknowe from Scott of Harden (a distant relative). He paid the window tax there in the 1750s. He married Barbara Haliburton in 1728; his wife's family owned the ruins of Dryburgh Abbey, among other properties. Their children were: Walter (b.1729) W.S., father of the author; Thomas (b.1731), who married Anne Scott of Raeburn and secondly Jean Rutherford of Knowesouth and was tenant farmer at Wolfelee; Janet (1733–1805), who accompanied her 4-year old nephew Walter on a trip to Bath to cure his lameness, who lived in Kelso and died unmarried; Mary (b.1735), also died unmarried; Jean (b.1737), married her relative Walter Scott of Raeburn; Robert (b.1739), who lived at Rosebank, Kelso; Barbara (b.1742), who married Mr. Curle; and John (b.1749), who died young on H.M.S. Southampton. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Whitriggs in 1725 when his son Francis was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Fenwick

(18th C.), called 'Clack'. Son of Francis of Fenwick, he married Jean Scott and later Katherine Elliot of Arkleton. He may be the Robert of Clack who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 (although this could have been the earlier Robert of 'Glack', who also owned Fenwick). In about 1710 he and several tenants neighbouring Hawick Common formed themselves into a club and 'drunk the Magistrates of Hawick, and got liberty from the Magistrates to rest their beeats on the Common from nine in the morning to twelve mid-day' (according to evidence given on the state of the Common in 1767). He is probably the 'Laird of Fenick' who paid Hawick £9 for a year's rent of the weigh-house in 1729 (suggesting he was the Baron's Bailie for the Town). He is probably the Robert of Fenwick who (along with Charles of Crumhaugh) in 1747 witnessed a baptism for Gideon and Rachel Scott (perhaps his daughter). He had a son, Gavin, but it is unclear who his wife might have been and if they had other children. The bells of St. Mary's were rung in 1732 for 'Lady Glask's buriall', which was probably his wife. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1726 he married Helen Dickson from Roberton Parish, the marriage taking place at Commonside. It is possible he was the tenant in Thornyhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1738; the other witness was Walter at Commonside, raising the possibility that there was a relationship between them. It is possible he was the son of Walter in Crumhaugh and Christian Bennet, born in 1704, who is said to have been a tenant in Crumhaugh who died without issue. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters, son of David. He married Elizabeth Douglas. Their son John was tenant at Boonraw. Walter (b.1732) and James (b.1734), born in Wilton, were probably also their children. Col. Robert of Horsleyhill (b.1704) son of Francis, descendant of the Scotts of Midgehope and Tushielaw. He was also referred to as 'Captain'. His family had extensive lands in Weensland and a town-house at the top of Walter's Wynd. In 1734 he was made an Honorary Burgess, the first one on record. In 1742 he registered arms at the Lyon Office. He also owned lands elsewhere, and was a heritor of Morebattle Parish, where his lands were valued at more than £2000 in the 1740s. In 1744 he was involved in a dispute with Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle and Mow over teinds. He was Hawick Bailie for 4 years until about 1758 (and easy to confuse with the merchant of the same name who was a Bailie at a similar time). He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He was also one of the witnesses in the Division of the Common proceedings. He is probably the 'Captain Scott of Weensland' described in 1777, among those who gained part of the Common (his allocation being included as part of that of Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick). He may be the Robert Scott whose former lands in Weensland are recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as belonging to James Dickson and passing to auctioneer James Oliver by the mid-19th century. In 1746 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Douglas of Springbank (b.1720), daughter of George Douglas of Friarshaw. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters, with their son Francis James (not John as listed in Keith Scott's book) succeeding. Robert (b.1704) youngest son of Walter and Christian Bennet. His father was uncle to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and had been described as sometimes tenant of Crumhaugh. In 1742 he witnessed (along with John Elliot at Goldielands) a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. In 1743 he received sasine of the lands of 'Croftangry' in Hawick, as heir to his half-brother Walter. He was also described as tenant in Crumhaugh himself. Also in 1743 he gained 'a tenement of land and onstead of houses in Hawick' which had been 'deponed' by his brother Walter in 1730; this may have been the same or different lands. He was then described as 'multurer'. He probably died without children. Robert (b.1724) 2nd son of James, wright in Hawick and resident of Peebles and Borthaugh, who was cousin to William of Whitehaugh. His elder brother William died and he became effectively the heir apparent to Whitehaugh. In 1744 there is an account from William of Whitehaugh for expenses related to his education. However, he died not many years afterwards and his brother John succeeded to Whitehaugh. Robert (18th C.) recorded as 'workman in Hawick' in 1765 when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as a 'baxter' in 1742 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker William (who may have been related) and for wright Henry Haliburton, and in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Crozier. He may have been father of the later Robert Scott who was also a baker. Robert (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1742 when his son James was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident at Highchesters in 1743 when his son daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. Probably the same Robert was recorded in 'Easter Haychester' in 1763 in a court case in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1742 and 1745 being 'at Goldilands' when his children were baptised in Hawick. He married Agnes Rutherfurd and their children included: Marjorie (b.1733), baptised in Oxnam Parish; and Walter (b.1735), John (b.1737), Anne (b.1739), Charles (b.1742) and Beatrix (b.1745), baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1742 were workman Walter Scott and Kirk Officer John Telfer and in 1745 included his servant Walter Scott. It is unclear whether he was directly connected to the former Scotts of Goldielands, but may have been son of the earlier Robert in Goldielands, born in 1702. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton itself in 1743 when his daughter Christian was baptised in that parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Burnhead (d.1755) eldest son of William, who he probably succeeded around 1720. He is probably the Robert 'of Burnhead' who in 1718 witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William of Brieryhill. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Walter of Crumhaugh and Beatrice Scott and for weaver Thomas Tinlin and in 1722 others for carrier Henry Paterson and for Clerk to the Regality Thomas Watson. In 1725 he and Adam in Lees witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Norville and Christian Scott (to whom he may have been related). His sister Eupham married Thomas Watson, who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick, and Margaret (probably another sister), married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. He was recorded living at Clarilaw in 1721, 1725 and 1727. In 1722 and 1724 he witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Walter of Crumhaugh. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the period 1728–43. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. His lands were valued at £380 in the 1740s. In 1719 in Wilton he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Mary (b.1721); William (b.1723), who succeeded; Agnes (b.1725); Gideon (b.1727); Margaret, who married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton in 1786, and succeeded her brother; and Walter. The witnesses in 1721 were Gideon of Falnash and Walter of Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1725 were Thomas Watson, writer in Hawick and James Scott, surgeon in Hawick (who married his sister Margaret). The 1727 baptism is recorded being 'to Robert Scott of Burnhead and his Lady Agnes Scott'; the witnesses were James (perhaps the surgeon) and writer Thomas Watson. It seems like he must be the 'Robert Scott, Laird of Burnfoot or Burnhead' who in 1722 married Ann Stoddart in Ashkirk Parish; however, this conflicts with him marrying Agnes Scott. Robert (18th C.) married Bessie Clerk in Bedrule in 1753. Robert of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1753 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. This was for 14 windows, as William (perhaps his father) had paid in 1748. His name is written 'Robert Scott Esqr. Humbleknows', the 'Esqr.' suggesting he was a man of some status. It is possible he is the same man as Robert of Burnhead, since that family owned Hummelknowes in the 19th century. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Anne Porteous and their children included: Robert (b.1741); Jean (b.1742). It is possible that the Robert married to Elspeth (or 'Eppy') Porteous was the same man, with children Robert (b.1737) and Janet (b.1739). The witnesses in 1742 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant John Ruecastle. Bailie Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Bailie in the 1750s and also recorded as Bailie in 1763. He was possibly the same merchant Robert who had been involved with the 1740 bond for the construction of the Teviot Bridge. He may be the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull 'Town Post' in 1742. He is probably the Bailie Robert who witnessed baptisms for carrier Gilbert Oliver in 1746, for merchant Walter (along with shoemaker Andrew) in 1761 and also for gardener John Lamb in 1761. In 1762 he (along with miller James) was witness for a baptism for miller Adam (who may have been related). He is probably the merchant who in 1755 was appointed as one of the 'burleymen' to go with the 'spademen' to mark the boundaries of the Common. He is probably the merchant Robert who married Betty, daughter of William Aitkin (or Aitken), and whose children included: William (b.1743); George (b.1745); and William (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott (who may have been related) and in 1747 were merchant George and shoemaker Walter. He also witnessed a baptism in 1745 for miller James (who may have been a relative). Probably the same Bailie Robert witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related), along with merchant George. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew (who may have been related). In 1767 it was described that his father-in-law, William Aitken, had liferent of a house in Hawick, for which he had the fee for his son William. He is probably the Bailie Robert whose son James died in 1777. It may have been a relative of his who was the Robert whose son Robert became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1682. Robert (18th C.) married Helen Scoon in Hawick Parish in 1758. Robert (18th C.) Church Officer in Wilton in 1773. He may be the same as one of th other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1780) tenant of Skelfhill. He is recorded being at Skelfhill in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He was listed (by John Sibbald) among local farmers who had failed in 1778. He is recorded as 'late in Skelfhill' in a notice to his creditors published in 1780; he had been declared bankrupt. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Skelfhill. However, it is possible he was son of Robert of Harwood (whose wife had a connection to Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert recorded at Skelfhill in in 1727, 1729, 1731 and 1738 when his children Robert, George, Janet and James were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may also be the 'Mr. Scott in Scalfhill' whose son John was baptised in 1741. It is unclear how he was related to the Robert who was in Skelfhill in 1772. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Mountbenger Burn in 1761 and 1765, when he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert (18th C.) recorded as resident of Whitchesters in 1766. He was probably related to the earlier Robert, farmer in Whitchesters. He married Margaret Turner in 1759 and their children included: Robert (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); and John (b.1766). Witnesses in 1766 were John Hobkirk and Robert Liddell. He may be the Robert recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Rev. Robert (1714–96) born at Coldhouse (in Wilton), son of Robert. He was licensed as a minister by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1774 and became minister at Innerleithen in 1777. There is a receipt from him in 1782 preserved in Selirk. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he was recorded as owner of Coldhouse and Tandlaw, with a value of £80 together. In 1781 he married Margaret (or perhaps Agnes) Chisholme (d.1817), daughter of Thomas, the Selkirk surgeon. They had 8 children: Agnes (1782–1802); Thomas Chisholme (1784–1811), who died in Bengal; William Chisholme (b.1785) who probably later owned Chisholme House; Charles James (1787–1807), who died at sea; Jean (b.1789); James Robert (1790–1833), who lived in Cheltenham and Jedburgh; Robert (b.1791); and Alexander (1793–1860), who was a friend of Lord Byron. It seems that Burns met him when he passed through Innerleithen on his Borders tour in 1787. Later in the 1800s his lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were owned by Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay, who was probably a descendant. Robert 'Rob the Laird' (18th C.) only son of James, who was a son of Francis of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm (near Eskdalemuir) and then at Binks. He took the daughters of James Scott of Davington (his cousin) to court in an attempt to gain the remaining family estates. In 1786 he was imprisoned in Dumfries Tolbooth for a month for illegally resuming psossession of the farm of Davington. In 1792 he drafted a genealogy of his family. He had no known children. He is mentioned in notes to the Ettrick Shepherd's poem 'Thirlestane, a fragment'; it is stated that he was called 'Rob the Laird' because he would have been Laird, and also that he referred to the murderous Lady of Thirlestane as 'the d–d b–h'. Robert (1721/2–1807) gardener at Wells. He was listed there in 1778 and 1779, when the estate was held by William Nassau Elliot. He was still there in 1785–88 when it was owned by Gilbert Eliott. By 1791 probably the same Robert was a gardener at Weens, working for William Oliver. In 1794 he was again recorded at Wells, working for Gilbert Eliott. He married Margaret Hope, and she died in 1786, aged 77. Their children included: Elizabeth (1748/9–1824), who married John Fiddes; and Margaret (1753/4–98). They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1748 when his son James was baptised. He could be the Robert living in Denholm whose when his children John (b.1753), Janet (b.1757) and Margaret (b.1761) were baptised. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Denholm. He seems to be distinct from another Robert who was in Denholm at the same time, based on the fact that they both had children baptised in 1757 and in

1761 (only a couple of months apart each time). His children included James (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1761). He could be the Robert, farmer at Denholm Farm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses; note that the place he farmed was distinct from Denholm Hill and Denholm Mill farms. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose nephew James was listed on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Robert (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being William 'the Auld Mason'. He was shepherd at Merrylaw. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and shepherd John. Robert (18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick recorded supplying the refreshments to a meeting relating to Wilton Kirk in 1764. He is probably the same Robert where it is said that the local Justices of the Peace would meet in the winter, when it was too cold in the Town House. Robert (1727/8–83) resident at Lanton. His son Thomas set up a memorial stone in Bedrule kiryard to him and other members of the family. He married Jean, who died at Lantonhill in 1819, aged 86. He may be the 'Capt. Scott' whose lands in Lanton are recorded in the valuation rolls of the 18th century. Robert, who is recorded in 1788 as owner of the adjacent 'part of James Henderson's lands in Langtoun' may have been his son. Robert (b.1738) younger son of Alexander, who was miller in Rulewater and later tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He took over from his father as tenant in Roughheugh Mill in Wilton. He was recorded there in a baptismal record of 1790 and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as owner of the 'Cornmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands' according to the county valuation in 1788 and the Tax Rolls of 1811 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He appears to have married Ann Brown, and their children were: Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778), who married Margaret Bell; Thomas of Little Cote, who married, but died without issue; Euphan (or Euphemia, b.1775), who married her cousin John, brother of Alexander of Falla; and Alice (or Alison, b.1782), who married Mr. Briggs of Middlesnows. He secondly married Janet Buckham and had children: Mary (b.1786); Helen (b.1788); Robert (b.1790); and William (b.1792). He may be the Robert who in 1770, along with Thomas, witnessed a baptism for clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull, resident of Roughheugh. Robert of Orchard (1731–1813) younger son of Robert of Falnash. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758–68 for 'Teviotdalehead', which included Hawick, Wilton, Cavers, Teviothead and Roberton. He was probably the Robert 'in Burnfoot' who was a factor for the Duke of Buccleuch during the proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1764–65; he was said to be 28 in 1764, was a grandson of Gideon of Falnash (whose office he occupied) and stated that his grandfather had died in about 1722 or 1723. In 1765 he applied to the Town Council to be allowed to cut turf on Hawick Moor 'for covering part of the office houses at Branksholm', and was allowed to do so. However, in 1766 he is probably the Duke's Chamberlain who led a group of his tenants and farm workers to try to put their sheep and cattle onto the small pieces of land that the Town had let on the Common (in a deliberate attempt to stop encroachment by neighbouring tenants); these confrontations came close to resulting in violence. In 1767 he represented the Duke of Buccleuch at the perambulation of Hawick Common made as part of the court case for its division. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as 'Robert Scott Esqr.' at Orchard Cottage, when he owned 3 farm horses as well as 1 saddle horse. Also in 1797 he was listed as being of 'Cotage', when he was taxed for male servants. He paid the land tax at Orchard in 1811. In Wilton in 1759 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard, and eventually became proprietor of Orchard himself (probably inheriting after the death of his nephew William Dickson in 1788). Their children were: Margaret (b.1761), who married Dr. Andrew Wilson from Kelso; Robert (b.1762), who probably died young; and Violet (b.1765), who married farmer Willian Bell, from whom was descended William Scott Bell of Woll. He died in Edinburgh, and is then described as 'late of Orchard'. Robert (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Deans in 1752 and their children included: Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1756); John (b.1758); Walter (b.1760); and Agnes (b.1765). He may be the Hawick carrier listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Jane Little, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included Jane (b.1762), John (b.1765) and Elizabeth (b.1767). The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at 'Broadlieshiel' (i.e. Broadleeshiel) in 1762, 1763 and 1767 and 'Broadlie burnfoot' in 1771. Perhaps the same Robert was at Gair in 1769. His children probably included: George

(b.1762); William (b.1763); Janet (b.1765); Charles (b.1767); James (b.1768); Agnes (b.1769); and George (again, b.1771), probably the Wilton contractor, who was father of twins in 1799. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Dickson in Roberton in 1761. There were Scotts on the list of comminicants in the Borthwick Water in 1650 who might conceivably have been related. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1764); Janet (b.1771); and Helen (b.1773). The witnesses in 1764 were John (probably a relative) and Alexander Bunyan. Robert (b.1757), Walter (b.1759) and Margaret (b.1762), baptised in Wilton Parish, could also be his children. Robert (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1757, 1764 and 1765 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included Janet (b.1757), William (b.1764) and Robert (b.1765). He could be the Robert who married Mary Scott in Roberton in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhopeshiel in 1765 when his daughter Jean was baptised. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was listed as 'Junr. Baker' in 1762 when one of his children was baptised. He was descibed as 'junior, baker' in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was thus probably a member of the Council. It seems likely that his father was also Robert. Probably the same Robert was recorded in 1766, along with barber Francis (perhaps a relative), when he witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (perhaps also related); his designation appears to be 'Cross Keys', suggesting he was proprietor of one of the inns of that name (perhaps the older one on the High Street). He married Mary McGaughan (or 'Mcgahan'), whose death in 1776 is recorded as 'Mrs. Scott Cross keys'. Their children included: Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1765 were writer John Gledstains and baker William Elliot. Robert (1735/6–1807) shepherd at Baldhill. They were listed 'being Sponsers for ye child', which may suggest that they had moved from the parish. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as 'Mr. Robt. Scott in Skelfhill' in 1772, when his son John was baptised. It is unclear how he might have been related to the earlier and later Roberts who lived at Skelfhill. Robert (18th C.) resident at Wester Parkhill in 1774 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. There are many possibilities of children of Robert born in Roberton around that time that could be his. Robert (18th/19th C.) 4th son of William, tenant in Milsington. He was a manufacturer in Hawick and died unmarried. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1786 he was listed as a 'Chaise driver'. Robert (1758–1815) eldest son of James. He farmed at Skelfhill, like his father. He married Jane Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1785) and James (b.1789). Robert (18th/19th C.) from Wilton Parish. In 1794 he married Isabel Armstrong, who was also from Wilton. His son Andrew died in 1810, when his cognomen appears to be given as 'Killdrys'. He is surely related to Adam, who had essentially the same nickname. Robert (18th C.) hosier in Hawick. In 1786 he and weaver Charles (perhaps 'Chairlie o the Crescent') witnessed a baptism for George Blaikie and Agnes (who may have been sister of him and Charles). He is recorded building the first saw-mills and grist-mills in the area in 1801, 1802 and 1803. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Dykeneuk, along with Isabella (probably his sister) and William Ormiston. In 1851 he is listed as an unmarried retired farmer, living at Dykeneuk with a lodger, William Ormiston (probably his sister's step-son), and his niece Janet Ormiston (daughter of his sister Isabel and Adam Ormiston). He may be the Robert listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (b.c.1765) mason who lived at Hummelknowhaugh, recorded on the 1841 census. He could be the Hawick mason who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) owner of parts of Weensland according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He had purchased 2 parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston and (presumably the same Robert) had already sold part to Andrew Porteous. He was probably related to David, who was farmer there at the same time, and David junior who was also on the ballot in 1799. His name appeared at Dewyhaugh again on the 1801 Militia ballot, along with David and mason Christopher. He may be the son of David baptised in Cavers Parish in 1777. Robert (1773–1844) eldest son of William, tenant of Singlie. He became tenant farmer at Todshawhaugh in 1800 (after the death of Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park). He was leasing 'Helms' (i.e. Whames) along with Todshawhaugh in 1802 and was listed being in arrears for Todshawhaugh in 1812. Also in 1812 he was recorded as tenant at Todshawhaugh on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. He was involved in a loan with the Jardines and Elliots of Harwood in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Janet Jardine of Thorlieshope. The deaths of his daughter Betty and son Walter are recorded in 1810, as well as the death of another son in 1824. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was probably related to Walter, who farmed at Priesthaugh earlier and David who was there later. Robert (b.c.1783) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 3 Langholm Street. His wife was probably Isabella, and children included Thomas, Robert, Elizabeth and Isabella. The family were working as carriers in 1851, when he was already deceased. However, he was still listed in Slater's 1852 directory as a carrier, leaving Hawick for Newcastleton on Thursdays. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Isobel Wight and their children included: James (b.1811); Isobel (b.1814); and Margaret (b.1817). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Ro. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Hawick, recorded at least as early as 1814. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Probably the same Robert was listed as an accountant on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the accountant listed in 1841, living on the High Street (probably No. 45) with farmer James, likely his brother; this Robert was 74 in 1861 and could be the son of William and Margaret Goodfellow born in Hawick in 1786. He is probably the Robert recorded in a letter regarding the estate of Thomas Telford, preserved in the Walter Mason collection. It is possible he is the 'Clerk to Mr Turnbull Banker' (perhaps Thomas of Fenwick) in Hawick listed (along with another clerk of the same name) in the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. In 1862 he was one of only 11 residents of the Town who had been on the list for the Militia in 1803 and were still alive. Robert (b.c.1780) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was there from at least 1841, and in 1861 was farming 160 acres and employing 3 labourers. A story is told (by W.N. Kennedy) of him in his youth; when he was to be examined for membership in the Green Kirk, he discovered that the minister was curling at the Coble Pool and so went to find him there, with Rev. Young breaking off his game to test his biblical knowledge and then return to his curling. Robert 'Robbie the Cow' (b.1786/7) owner of a tenement at 43 High Street, living on the ground floor in the mid-19th century. In 1841 he was recorded as an accountant and living with farmer James (probably his older brother) and 2 servants, including 'Barbary'. By 1851 he was there with only 'Babbie', when listed as 'Accountant and occupier of 26 Acres of land'. By around 1860 the house was occupied by George Brown, greengrocer and was later rebuilt by Walter Paisley, ironmonger. He may be the Robert born in Hawick in 1786 to William and Margaret Goodfellow, with brothers George (b.1778), James (b.1782) and William (b.1791), as well as 2 earlier Roberts (who must have died young). Ross when he fell at Baltimore. He himself was wounded at New Orleans and he was discharged in 1816, retiring as a Colour-Sergeant with a pension. He settled back in Hawick where he was landlord of the Red Lion Inn at the Sandbed (as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory). His children's births and other information are recorded in the family bible; he was living at 'East End Bar' in 1819, 'West End Bar' in 1820, Sandbed in 1821–27, Dovemount 1829–31, 'Hawick North Bar' in 1833, Roadhead in 1835 and Wilton Bank in 1836. He also worked as a stockingmaker and was a noted supporter of the strikers during the 'Lang Stand Oot' of 1822. He is probably the stocking-maker recorded in Wilton Parish at Pathhead in 1835 and at Roadside in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he and his family were living at No. 5 Wilton Bank and he was listed as 'Pensioner 85 Regt. & Stockingmr. J. Wool'. He was 'Chelsea Pensioner' on Ladylaw Place in 1851 and on Under Hope Park in 1861. In 1821 he married Helen Oliver (1795–1855) from Jedburgh. He married Catherine Anne Little, daughter of William, farmer at Birneyknowe and Salenside. Their children were: Robert (b.1867), who also became a local vet; William Little (b.1868), farmer at Langrigg; Janet Thorburn (1870–1951); George (b.1871), who worked at Birmingham and Midland Pharmaceutical College; Andrew Little (1873–92); Catherine (or Kate, 1874/5–91); and James (1883/4–1938). Robert 'Robbie Scare a Hair' (b.c.1848) son of grocer Thomas ('Sly Tammie') he was an auctioneer in Hawick. He apparently used to attend social evenings in David Shiel's public house on Baker Street, along with almost a dozen other Robert Scotts, all of whom had distinguishing nicknames! Robert 'Rob o the Bent' (19th C.) one of the men of the same name who regularly gathered in a Baker Street howf in the mid-19th century. Robert 'Kettle Robbie' (19th C.) another of the men of the same name who gathered in a Baker Street pub in the mid-1800s. Robert 'Robbie Barrel' (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same inn in the mid-1800s. He may be the Robert listed along with Thomas as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street, according to Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Robert 'Selkirk Rob' (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented the same pub in the mid-1800s. Robert 'Denum Rob' (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same Baker Street pub in the mid-19th century. It is possible he is the Robert recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a 'heckler' in Denholm. This same heckler in Denholm was involved in a dispute in 1794 with James Young in Crawknowe. Robert 'Hensmeat' (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented David Shiel's inn on Baker Street in the mid-1800s. He was brother of James, Governor of Hawick Poorhouse. On one occasion he is supposed to have been chairing the evening and said 'Rob Scare a Hair will gie us a song' when one of the other Robert Scotts appeared, to which the reply was 'Aw've nae objection, but if 'ee wull ca' me 'Scare a Hair' aw'll ca' you by your name 'Hensmeat' ' [JHH], from which we can assume the name was somewhat insulting. Robert (19th C.) resident of the Back Row. In 1867 he donated to the Museum 3 old Edinburgh newspapers, from 1785, 1790 and 1816. Probably the same Robert also donated a French coin and a Scottish copper coin in 1867. Robert (b.1827/8) carter in Newcastleton, son of Robert. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart to Carlisle once a week. In 1851 he was living with his mother Isabella and siblings Thomas, Elizabeth and Isabella at about 3 Langholm Street. His was described as a 'Feuar's Son' there in 1861. Robert (1853–1929) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh Academy and trained as a banker. He emigrated to Australia in 1876, where he was a bank manager. In about 1897 he purchased a parcel of land near Warraninni in Bridgetown, Western Australia, which he farmed with his sons; this was later split into

'Dalmore' and 'Falnash'. He married Kate Worth and they had: 3 sons, Robert Wooley, Alexander 'Alec' Bell and William 'Bill' Purdom; and 4 daughters, Mary (who married F.R. Bradley), Annie Isabel (who married M.E. Minchin), Kate Louise (who married B. Wardell-Johnson) and Ethel Margueritte. He died in Sandringham, Victoria. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robbie, he was a local vet, like his father and grandfather before him. He lived at Oliver Crescent. His children included: Robert, who was killed at Ypres on his 20th birthday; and Charles, the 4th generation vet. Robert V. (20th C.) Cornet in 1947. During WWII he saw service in France and was captured by the Japanese, spending several months working on the notorious 'death railway' in Siam. He was later on a transport ship that was sunk by U.S. bombers, and although he swam ashore, he was recaptued by the Japanese and witnessed the nuclear blast at Nagasaki. Robin (13th C.) listed as 'Robinus Scot de Hedon' on the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unclear where his lands may have been or whether he was related to the later Scottish Scotts. Roger (13th C.) recorded as 'Rogerum Scot' on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were mentioned in a case heard at Westmorland. Roger (13th C.) clerk from Oxford who was listed among those indicted for attacking the Papal Legate at Oseney Abbey in 1238. He was listed along with Peter as lodgers of Master William de Lichfield, who fled after their arrest was ordered. It is unclear what happened to him afterwards, but he could be the same man as 'Roger de Leuriten' (Rector of Wamphrey) or perhaps 'Roger de Derby'. Roger (14th C.) listed along with Master Gilbert living in Paris in 'vicus Sancti Victoris' and paying university tax sometime in the period 1329–1335/6. It is possible he is the same man as Roger de Wedale. Roger (14th/15th C.) esquire listed on the muster roll for Roxburgh Castle in 1400. His name appears among others who were from Teviotdale, although serving in the English garrison. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as 'capitane of the Armetage' in 1599 when he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1611 he was 'captain of the Irnetage' when he was cautioner for Will Foster in Langhaugh, as well as for John Armstrong 'called Quhyteheid'. He was additionally fined for the non-appearance of Rowie Crozier in Harthsgarthburnside. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He was also 'Capitane of the Airmetage' when he was fined for not appearing at a trial in 1612 (relating to the apparent hanging death of John Elliot in St. Mary's Steeple). He may have been the last such deputy keeper of Hermitage Castle. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Roland (14th C.) recorded along with Gosenius, living in Paris at the village of St. Victor sometime in the period 1329–35/6. It is possible he is the same man as Roland (or Robert) 'Oliveri'. Roland 'Rowie of Huttikill' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 when Jock Scott 'the Suckler' was hanged for stealing one his sheep (and other crimes). The sheep was taken 'furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig'. He may be the same as Rowie 'in Vttersyde' (i.e. Outerside), one of the pursuers of the case. It is unclear where precisely this place was located, but he was surely related to David and Alexander 'callit Huttitill', who are recorded at 'Andishop' in 1573. Roland 'Rowie' (16th/17th C.) one of the 'Persewaris' of the 1616 case against Jock Scott 'the Suckler' for sheep stealing. He is recorded as being 'in Vttersyde' (i.e. Outerside) and his son Walter was also a pursuer. He may be the same as the man 'callit Rowie of Huttikill', who was one of the men whose sheep were stolen. Simon (13th C.) recorded in Bologna in 1235 when Hugh 'the Englishman' accused him of assaulting people in his lodgings. He failed to appear in court and was banished. If he pursued his studies again he might possibly be the same as Simon de Carniwyth or Simon de Clairpol, but this seems unlikely. Simon (13th C.) recorded as Master and clerk of the Bishop-elect of Seville when granted protection by Henry III to travel through Gascony in 1254. The Bishop-elect was Philip, son of King Ferdinand of Castile; his sister Eleanor married Edward I of England. It is unclear why a Scottish priest should be associated with this family, and hence unclear if he came from Scotland. Simon (13th C.) recorded as 'Simonis le Scot' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His case was heard in the town of Alnwick. He is separately recorded as 'Simone de Scotia'. Perhaps the same man is recorded as Simonis Scot in Swynborne' in a record of Edward I in 1293. It is unclear whether he was related to later Scotts. Simon 'Sim' (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as 'Sym Scot' and he may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, etc.), but it is unclear how. Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, as being 'in mekilhop' (i.e. Meiklehope, perhaps the same as Meikledalehope), now 'in ...', with the location being blank. He was indicted, but did not appear, with his surety, Richard Davidson in Meiklehope, being fined (or perhaps he was surety for Davidson). Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, when he was 'in mygchop', i.e. Midgehope. He served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant in Eilrig listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Simon of Arkyn (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus had to surrender the lands of Falside (in Jedforest) to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch for failing to present him at court. He had stolen 200 'angle-nobles' from the English and is recorded as 'Symonus Scot de Arkyn'. It is unclear where 'Arkyn' was. Simon 'Sym' (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, making him son of Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw (listed next in the same 1526 document). Simon of Fenwick was listed separately and so presumably not the same man. Probably the same Simon was the first witness listed for the instrument of sasine at 'Fawsyde' (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert 'Elwand') purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; James, William in Hartwoodmyres and Roland are listed after him and some may have been closely related. Simon of Fenwick (16th C.) listed as 'Symoun Scot of Fynnik' in 1526 among a large number of men who had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also mentioned in 1526/7 when his brother Adam was a witness to a document relating to Harden. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He was one of the arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. In 1530 he is listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He is also recorded in a 'letter of reversion' of 1540 in which he resigned lands of Nether Harden (described as in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) to William Scott of Harden. A bond of the same year shows William of Harden giving him the lands of Nether Harden until George, Lord Home redeems them. In 1561 probably the same 'Sym Scot of Fynnik' was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was listed as 'Sym Scot of Fynnyk' among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is probably related to William in Fenwick, who is recorded in 1510. In the 1526 remission there is a 'Sym Scot' listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, suggesting that this was a different man (even although listed right beside Robert), unless there were multiple entries in the list. Simon (16th C.) chaplain of the diocese of Glasgow. In 1537 he was invested in the Rectorship of Rankleburn Kirk, and the benefices that came with it. The ceremony was carried out at the church itself by Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. Walter of Synton was one of the witnesses. He is probably the Simon who witnessed a transaction relating to Robert Scott of Howpasley and lands in Appletreehall in 1539/40. Simon (16th C.) recorded as 'Syme' along with John in about 1557. They were sons of the 'guidman of Alanehauch', who was probably either William or Robert, when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. He could be the 'Sym Scot of Alanehauch' listed in 1561 among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may well be 'Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild' who was named along with Robert of Allanhaugh and others in 1581, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott 3 years earlier. 'Watt Scot thair, Syme Scott thair, Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok' are all listed, and seem likely to be related. He may also be the 'umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield' mentioned in 1609. Simon 'Sym' (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with 'Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild', 'Watt Scot thair' and 'Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok'. He was presumably related to the other men listed (e.g. he could have been son of Simon, tenant in Over Southfield), all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the 'letter of slains' for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Simon (16th C.) listed as 'Sym Scot of Fernili' in about 1557, when, along with Archibald

Elliot of Gorrenberry, he rented Bowanhill and 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' from Melrose Abbey. His lands may have been Fairnilee or Fernielees, or somewhere else. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as a Burgess of Hawick. He was appointed as procurator for Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm (in Annandale) to deal with the sale of a tenement in Hawick to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 in Philiphaugh when he had a marriage contract with Janet, daughter of Edward Wilson who was either a weaver or a thatcher in Selkirk. If he died before any children were conceived then his goods were to be divided between his wife Janet and his sister's son, William Dickson. John 'Eister', Burgess of Selkirk, was one of the witnesses. He was also in Philiphaugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction for George Turnbull in Philiphaugh. Simon 'Sym wi the Spear' of Gamescleuch and Winterburgh (d.bef. 1590) 2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane (although some suggest he was the 4th son). He was the 'tutor' of his nephew Robert of Thirlestane and progenitor of the Scotts of Newburgh and Rennaldburn. He is recorded as 'in Winterburgh' in 1559 when he purchased the lands of Gamescleuch. He is 'Symon Scot of Wynterburgh' in 1561/2, when he witnessed a document for Adam, son of Robert of Bonnington. He is probably the 'Sym Scot, bruther to Robert Scot of Thirlestane' recorded in 1562 when he promised to enter James 'Mawar' to the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1562 he was said to already have some arrangement with William in Hartwoodburn when William assigned his steading of Gamescleuch to his son; he was then 'in Thirlistane'. In 1573 he was charged to enter some of his tenants in Ettrickside. In 1578 he was 'of Wintirburch' when Robert of Thirlestane (for whom he was 'tutor') complained that he had taken away 2 horses from Thirlestane, threatened the tenants, and later forcibly took possession of the house; clearly there were serious disputes between him and his charge. He was forced by the Privy Council to yield up Thirlestane house after a few months. In 1576 he was 'Sym Scot, tutour of Thirlestane' when listed among the cautioners for Sim Armstrong; he was cited for non-appearance as cautioner in 1578/9. In 1578 he signed the caution 'with my hand at the len' (meaning that he could not write). In 1579/80 he was involved in a case with Thomas Dalgleish over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; they were seeking restitution from Robert Scott of Burnfoot and Robert Scott of Burnhead. In 1581 he was probably the Simon of 'Gammescleucht' who, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He was probably the William 'of Gemmylliscleuch' listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the son of the Laird of Thirlestane who was murdered by his step-mother (although the names and suggested dates for this story are confused). He was one of the representatives of Teviotdale at the General Assembly of 1581. In 1583/4 he and Robert of Thirlestane were both among Border Lairds summoned for advice on how to keep peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale; they were also caution for an agreement between John in Hundleshope and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He was declared a rebel and in 1586 his property was escheat to Alexander Douglas, Captain of Tantallon; this was for not repossessing Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus in the lands of Catslack. He was probably succeeded by John (perhaps his elder son) and then his son Arthur – 'This Simon Scot's call'd Simon with the Spear, Tutor of Thirlston was, both for Peace and Wear, That Simon Scot, a bold and resolute Man, He was Son to John Scot of Thirlston' [CWS]. Simon (16th C.) son of Walter of Newton. He was presented to the vicarage of Hassendean in 1595 on the demission of Thomas Newbie. It is unclear whether this means he became the minister or just held part of the benefice of the Parish. His father may have been Walter of Chamberlain Newton. Simon of Dryhope (16th C.) 1st Laird. Scott of Satchells suggests he was brother of Adam of Tushielaw, while Keith Scott prefers to connect him as 3rd son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. He was succeeded by John, father of the 'Flower of Yarrow', but the relationship is unclear (Keith Scott claims his sons were Philip, Simon, Andrew, Adam and Walter, but some of these may have been sons of John). Simon (16th/17th C.) probably son of George in Northhouse and brother of William. In 1582, along with William, he witnessed a transaction at Branxholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 as brother-in-law of William Cockburn, younger of Henderland. The pair were denounced for not finding 'lawborrows' for William Veitch of Kingside in Peeblesshire. Simon (d.bef. 1609) father of John Scott who was among several men fined in 1609 for harassing the lands of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. His son was 'Jean's John', suggesting that his wife was Jean. He was referred to as 'umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield', although it is unclear if this is the Southfield near Hawick or another. Simon of Montbenger (16th/17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He was either son of Simon (1st Laird) or John (2nd Laird). Assuming he was son of John, he would also be brother of Philip of Dryhope; he was thus recorded in 1599 whxiern James Gledstains of Cocklaw was surety for him, that he would 'observe the King's peace'. He was succeeded by Robert, and later descendants were the Scotts of Catslackknowe. Simon (16th/17th C.) natural son of William of Fingland, who was brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 he was among the relations and tenants of Sir Robert who were bonded not to harm Archibald 'of Dephoip'. In 1609 he was among the men (including his father William, as well as Walter of Headshaw) who Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants were bound not to reset. This was part of the feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1610 he was ordered to be appreheded for not signing the bond relating to the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1616/7 he was probably the 'Willis Symme of Thirlestane' who was accused of accompanying John Scott and his brothers Adam and Simon of Bonnington, when Walter Scott 'in Essenside' (son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden) was murdered. Simon 'Sim' of Bonnington (d.bef. 1617) son of Adam of Bonnington and brother of John, Thomas and Adam. He succeeded his father as Laird of Bonnington in 1607. The designation may originally have come from the lands elsewhere (e.g. near Kilmarnock), but it is clear that he possessed Bonnington in Peeblesshire (not to be confused with the another Bonnington in West Lothian, later held by other Scotts), with a charter of James V as heir to his father in 1607. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in documents relating to the lands of Bonnington in 1591–1607. In 1592 his cautioner was John Tennant of Cairns that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he purchased 'Ernisheuch' and 'Singlie' in Ettrick Forest, confirmed in 1607; a condition was that he built a mansion-house there, which he did at Newhouse. He is recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1594. In 1594/5 he is recorded as being son of Adam, when he owned 'Halmedow and Horsewade' in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. In 1596/7, along with his brother John, plus Robert of Thirlestane and other Scotts, he was summoned by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles for an attack on the ploughmen at 'Kaidmure'; there was a further dispute over the same lands in 1610, with Sir Robert of Thirlestane serving as his surety. In 1597 he sold lands in Peeblesshire to William Burnet. In 1599 Robert of Thirlestane served as his surety that he would 'keep good rule and redress parties skaithed'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 his brother John was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at 'Fechane' and he was ordered to present his brother in court. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he had a charter for the lands of 'Espiehoip' on Ettrick. Also in 1604 James Tweedie of Drumelzier was surety for him that he not harm Dame Jane Herries, Lady Skirling. In 1611 he is confirmed as grandson of Robert and Katherine Boyle, when he was served as heir to his grandmother. In 1611 he had a court case against Carruthers of Holmends and the Jardines of Applegarth. Also in 1611 he had a charter for the Temple Lands of Manor. He was also one of the signatories of the bond of 1612 to keep peace on the Border and also on a 'retour' panel for Tweedy of Drumelzier. In 1612 'Simeon Scott of Bonytoun' was ordered to appear at Melrose to answer for the 'horrible slaughter of Walter Scott' of Tushielaw, which may be connected with the origin of the ballad 'The Dowie Dens of Yarrow'. In 1616/17 he was one of the men said to have accompanied his brother John when Walter Scott 'in Essenside' was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick, according to criminal complaints made by Walter's wife. Note that these 2 murders may be confused in the re-telling. It was said that the murder of Walter in Essenside was because of the death of his only surviving son at the hands of the miller of Todrig Mill (who was subordinate to the Scotts of Harden). He was declared a rebel after the murder and was either killed or went into exile. In 1617 and 1618 (and perhaps covering the period 1611–29) he was named in a court case with Sir William Scott of Harden over the value of the lands of Bonnington and others; the Scotts of Harden purchased the 'eschete' of his lands and in 1617 a charter of King James VI granted Bonnington to William, heir to Harden, with a value of his lands given as £4985 6s. 6d., redeemable within 7 years. His wife was Mary, who was recorded as 'Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun' in 1617 when she complained about the Scotts of Harden and their supporters constantly harassing her family, to the extent that her only son (presumably Robert) was killed at the age of 19 and her grandchildren and servants were hounded out of their house and lands; this was presumably part of the ongoing feud between the families and despite her protestations to the Privy Council the accused were found not guilty. It was said that his house at Newhouse was destroyed, his old nurse assaulted and his wife and children turned out into the cold. Also in 1617, Elizabeth Hay, widow of Walter in Essenside complained that he remained at large, despite being put to the horn, along with his brothers John and Adam and Simon called 'Willis Symme of Thirlestane'. A letter from the King in 1619 ordered the relevant parties to appear personally before the court. His son and heir Robert, appears to have predeceased him. He had an only daughter, Margaret (his heiress), who in 1610 married William, son of John Burnet of Barns (near Peebles); she died before 1622, when John Burnet secondly married Marion, daughter of John Inglis of Manorhead. He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his brother John, and then by William Burnet of Barns, his grandson, who inherited the lands of Bonnington in 1627. Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh also had a claim on Bonnington in 1624 and must have been a nephew or other close relative; he is probably the Andrew, merchant Burgess of Edinburgh, who had a sasine for his Temple Lands of Manor. His brother John was served heir to his land of 'Ernisheuche' and Singlie in 1624. His wife Marie Scott survived him for a long time and was known as Lady Bonnington. Simon 'Syme of Newtoune in Hawick' (16th/17th C.) recorded as a juror for the Commissioners' Court of 1622. He could be the same man as the son of Walter of Newton who held the benefice of Hassendean. Probably the same Simon in Newton was served heir to his brother Walter in the lands of Easter Craik in 1618, as well as Ladhope, 'Alterhous' and 'Quhithope' in Ettrick Forest. It is unclear whether his lands were Chamberlain Newton or a different Newton. Simon (d.bef. 1643) brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded in 1643 when Mariota Scott, daughter of his brother William, was served as his heir. He may be the same as Simon 'of Newtoune'. Simon (18th/19th C.) resident of 8 Abercromby Place in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. Stephen (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1440s and 50s. He was explicitly mentioned in 1440 in the Aberdeen area, in 1441 for work at Edinburgh Castle, for collecting the customs in Edinburgh in 1443, was paid his fee in 1444, 1445 and 1446 and received payment from Robert Moffat in Edinburgh in 1454. It is possible that he is the same as Stephen of Muirhouse and Castlelaw. Stephen of Muirhouse, Castlelaw and Burrellands (15th C.) younger son of Robert of Rankleburn and brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He may be the Stephen who was witness in 1431 to the transfer of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch (if so this was his brother); John Scott is also listed beside him and so possibly a close relative. He may be the Stephen appointed as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside in 1439 when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas and probably the 'Stephanus Scott' who witnessed a charter for Thomas Wiley of Bonnington (in Peeblesshire) in 1442. He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a charter for the lands of Borthwickshiels in 1444 (with Sir Walter also a witness). In 1445 (probably, since the date of 1400 on the document is wrong) he requested an 'instrument of transumpt' relating to the lands of Grahamslaw in the Barony of Eckford; he was there described as brother and procurator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and listed as 'Stephanus Scott de Castellaw' (there are several places of this name, so it is unclear which one this is). The Robert Scott who also signed this document may have been a close relative. In 1447 he was witness to a document relating to the 'Cusingland' involving Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge, and his brother Sir Walter. He obtained the Burrellands (in Eckford Parish) in 1448, after they were resigned by John Burrell; there he is transcribed 'of le Castellaw'. In 1448 he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat for his brother, Sir Walter. He had a crown charter for the lands of 'Murhous' in 1450; these are lands in the Barony of Crichton (somwhere near Pathhead in Midlothian, and not one of the Muirhouses elsewhere). In 1450 he also had a charter for the lands of 'Castelcary, et de Weltoune' in Stirlingshire; this suggests that the 'Weltoun' associated with him may not have been Wilton at all, and that 'Castlelaw' was actually 'Castle Cary' near Cumbernauld (adjacent to Walton farm). These lands had been forfeited by Robert Livingstone and were confirmed in 1450/1. He is probably the 'Stephano Scot' who witnessed the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap in 1451. In 1453 he was listed as 'of the Mwrhouse' when he renounced the lands of Castlecary and the Weltoune to Henry, son of Robert Livingstone of Linlithgow; it seems likely that the 'Castlelaw' sometimes connected with his name is 'Castlecary' in the former Sheriffdom of Stirling (and the Hawick connection with Castle Cary in Somerset is just a coincidence). An instrument of 1454 relating to these lands is one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick; he may be the same 'Stephen Scot of Murehouse' mentioned there, who 'asked instruments'. He is recorded as being 'of Muirhouse' when he witnessed a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1453 and also in a document of 1454 (one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick). He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn in 1454/5. He was one of Scott of Buccleuch's Bailies in Eckford. He also had a charter of the lands of 'Weltoun', which were probably the lands of Walton adajcent to Castlecary near the modern Cumbernauld; however, the family also had a connection with Wilton Parish, which is confusing. The next recorded Laird of 'Weltoun' was John, who was probably his son or grandson. His son and heir Robert witnessed the sasine for the exchange of Milsington and Wester Heap in 1453; he is recorded as Robert of Muirhouse in 1482. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter of Buccleuch in 1456. In 1462 he had a loan of 100 merks from Robert Muir of Rowallan, with the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Upper Harwood given in security. This loan was discharged by Robert of 'Dogehauch' in 1477, probably his same son Robert. He had a sasine for the lands of Muirhouse in 1463. Stephen (15th/16th C.) one of the 'bailies in that part' appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in his father's lands in Annandale. The others were Walter of Howpasley, together with William and William's son Robert. Perhaps the same 'Stephano Scot' was assigned the farm of Mount Common and steading of Deephope in 1492 and 1499 (and if so, then he was possibly related to the William who previously leased that farm); he is still recorded holding the lease of Mountcommon in 1503 and had the lease renewed in 1510, along with Deephope. Probably the same Stephen served as surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. He is probably the Stephen in Deephope who in 1502 was surety for 'Crooked Adam' in Wolfhope. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) probably younger son of John of Roberton and Walls, and brother of Walter of Roberton. In 1526 he is listed along with George as a son of John 'in the Valys' on the list of Borders men pardoned for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is described as 'in Valis' (probably 'Walls' in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) in 1528 when he witnessed the document giving the decision over the disputed succession of the lands of Borthaugh, and in 1535 when he purchased lands at Roberton and Howcleuch from his 'brother-german' Walter Scott of Roberton. His son John was also named in the charter. The witnesses were Michael Scott of Aikwood, Sir William Gordoun (or Brydoun), Chaplain, William Scott of Fauldshope, Gilbert Scott and Sir Ninian 'Bridin', Chaplain and Notary Public. He was probably the Stephen who acted as procurator for Isabel Douglas (likely his mother) in claiming her rights to lands within her lifetime, when Walter (likely his older brother) succeeded to the lands of John of Roberton. He was probably succeeded by his son John of Roberton. Stephen (16th C.) witness to a confirming charter to William Scott of the lands of Harden in 1535. He is described as 'in Hoip'. He may also have been the Stephen who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537 (along with George Scott and several Armstrongs and Littles). He may have been related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh (and Heap) or else was the same as Stephen 'in Valis'. Stephen (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with John Short and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Stephen was also listed as holder of half a particate on the north side. He may be the same as one of the other Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574, when he was surety for someone. It is unclear who he was. Steven (16th C.) Hawick man recorded as 'Stevin' in a 1558 document where he is stated as being the father of Alexander who sold land in one of the earliest known sasines relating to Hawick. It is possible he was the same man recorded owning pieces of land in the 1537 Charter. Steven (16th/17th C.) recorded in Branxholmetown in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Rev. Stewart Richmond (1886–1970) born in Irvine, son of Stewart, he was educated in Irvine and at the University of Glasgow, where he graduated M.A. in 1908. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Irvine and Kilmarnock, became assistant at Leith St. Andrew's 1912–13 and was ordained at Old Cumnock West in 1914. He served with the Y.M.C.A. in 1918. In 1922 he became minister of East Bank Kirk and served until his retirement in 1959. He wrote 'East Bank Church, Hawick: Its origin and history, 1773–1923' (1923). Susan (d.1806) daughter of the deceased 'Docter Scott Newton'. Her death is recorded in Hawick. It is unclear who her father was and whether he was a doctor or the name was a nickname; however, she was probably part of the Scotts of Newton. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Thomas de Colevilla cognomento Scot' during the reign of King William the Lion. He was clearly of the surname 'Coleville', but for some reason had also gained the appelation 'Scot'. His name appears in many charters of around 1200, most undated, and his seal bears the inscription 'SIGIll. THOME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTTI'. In 1223 he was already deceased when the Abbey of Vaudey in lincolnshire passed on his gift of lands in Ayrshire to Melrose Abbey. It seems unlikely that he was related to any Thomas (13th C.) listed in 1248/9 when he was the attorney of Devorguilla, wife of John Baliol. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1255/6 when he was imprisoned at Northampton for trespassing in King Henry's vivarium. The Sheriff there was commanded to deliver him to 12 men in his bailliary until the King's justices arrived. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1261 in London. He was pardoned at the insistence of Margaret Queen of Scotland, for the murder of 'Thomas le lung' in London. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as 'Thomaxius de Scotia' when witness to a document in Bologna in 1268. He may be the same man as Thomas, Dean of Dunblane, Thomas de Aberdeen, Thomas de Bennum or Thomas de Carnoto. Thomas (13th C.) listed as 'le Escot' in 1272, when he gave half a mark for an assize in Suffolk. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1273 as 'Thomas Scot, messenger' when he was paid by the English court for expenses transmitting letters to the King and Queen of Scotland. He may be the same as 'Thomas Scoticus' listed on a jury in Warkworth, Northumberland in 1269 or 'Thomam le Scot' (and variants) listed several times on the 1279 assize rolls of Northumberland, some entries related to Alnwick Abbey. Thomas (13th C.) merchant of Newcastle recorded in 1302 as 'Thomas Scot', when canvas was purchased from him as part of an order of goods for Edward I's fortresses in Scotland. Thomas (13th/14th C.) member of the Templars who fled when many of his brothers were arrested in England in 1309. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded as an Irish 'hobelar' (i.e. light horseman) in the English garrison at Berwick in 1312. A second horseman of the same name was also listed. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1316 when he was one of a group of Scottish prisoners in York 'lately captured at sea'. He was a prisoner at York Castle 1316–17. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Englishman who left his service before the end of the agreement and hence was imprisoned in Newgate. In 1401 the King ordered him to be released after he found sufficient securities. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Bailie of Haddington. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1412–31. Thomas (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and 'niger' Walter), but it is unclear how. Thomas of Roberton (15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George of Synton. However, there is no evidence that any such man actually existed (and hence presumably she was the daughter of a different Scott of Roberton). Thomas (15th C.) member of the English garrison at Roxburgh Castle, he was 'late of London'. In 1459 he was given a fiat of protection for a year under Henry VI's cousin Sir William Neville. Thomas (15th C.) recorded having remission for the fine of a shiel in the Eaststead of Gildhouse in 1479. He may have been related to later Scotts who were associated with Gildhouse. Thomas of Bush (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he and his son Adam were separately fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. He is recorded being 'de Bus' and was probably an ancestor of later Scotts of Bush in Ewesdale. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of

Andrew, the pair were tenants in 'northschelis' (probably North Shiels) in Peeblesshire. In 1498 Andrew was fined for his non-appearance, but later he was allowed to 'compone' for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in 'brachio' (i.e. the arm). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being already one of the King's rebels, along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with them in their involvement in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Branxholme. In 1502, along with John in Spittal, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was allowed to compound, while John was fined. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was presented by the Lord of Buccleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his 'suitor' for the lands of Lanton. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priestdykes near Lochmaben. In 1504 at the Justice-aire in Dumfries, he 'came in the King's will' for 'intercommuning with the Armstrangis, the King's rebels'. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Philip of Headshaw. In 1510 he was charged with the murder of John Murray of Falahill, with Andrew Ker of Gateshaw implicated in the same crime. Failing to appear at the Jedburgh court he was denounced as a rebel. He was represented by William in Hawick, George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. The goods of William Scott in Fenwick and John Scott in Haining were used as further insurance. This suggests that all of these men were fairly closely related. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 as witness in Selkirk when George Ker, Canon of Glasgow appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. Perhaps the same Thomas witness a dispensation to marry in 1516, for Inram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with Alexander as another witness). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'curate of the parish church of Irwin' in 1519. Probably the same 'Mr. Thomas' was chaplain in an instrument made in Ayr Kirk in 1522. He may be related to other Scotts in the Irvine area. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) listed as 'Thome Scot' among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as another contemporary Thomas. Bailie Thomas (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 as Bailie in Hawick. He witnessed a renunciation by John in Hawick (who may have been a relative) and along with Vicar John bound themselves to the contract between John in Hawick and Thomas Johnstone. Probably the same Thomas was owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He may be the same man who was recorded as a Burgess of Hawick in the 1540s and 50s. Thomas of Pitgormo (1479–1539) 2nd son of William of Balwearie. He became a judge in 1532, in place of his father, and was made Justice Clerk in 1535, being a favourite of James V. He is recorded being of 'Pettgormo' in the Exchequer Rolls. He was auditor of the Exchequer in at least the years 1537 and 1538. He married Agnes Moncrieff and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1533/4 being 'in Aikwode ester'. He and the other tenants in Aikwood delivered £10 Scots to the Queen's Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest for occupying Hartwoodmyres. Probably the same Thomas was 'in Vodburne' in 1536 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Roberton and Michael of Aikwood. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1536. Along with a Paterson, he complained that John Scott had slandered them by accusing them of stealing sheep. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when he rented 'ane quarter and halff quarter of Todrik' (i.e. Todrig) to Thomas Robson. Probably the same Thomas in 1538 'asked instruments' that the tenants of 'the town of Quhitslands' (probably Whitslade) wanted to graze their cattle at Todrig as their predecessors had done. He was also there when Katherine Gray had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed from Todrig. Also in 1538 he was 'in Todrig' when he produced a precept from Michael Scott in Aikwood for half the lands of Hermiston to fulfil a debt of service. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. In 1540 he was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) described as a Burgess of Hawick when he was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He is also witness to a confirmation of this in 1556, where he is described as 'in Hawick'. Probably the same Thomas 'in

Hawick' was on the 1553/4 panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch as heir to his grandfather. Perhaps the same Thomas 'of Hawik at the queen's command' who was recorded in 1562 in reference to 'thirds of benefices'. It is possible he was related (perhaps grandfather) to Walter, 'burges in Hawik, sonne to wmquhell Thomas Scot in Hawik, zounger', who witnessed a document in 1585. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as son of the deceased Adam. Along with Robert of Howpasley, he was warned to remove his tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. Perhaps he is the same Thomas, son of Adam, who was subject to a bond in 1539; Walter of Buccleuch, his son and heir David and Robert of Allanhaugh had a bond with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk that William would prove he was 'a bastard according to the custom of the law used in such cases'. Also in 1539 he offered to the Queen's Chamberlain the 'ferme' of Falside. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) owner of lands in the Burgh of 'Enrovre' in Aberdeenshire, as recorded in instruments of 1542 and 1543. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557. It was complained that he and another servant had been beaten at the Kirklands of Bedrule by a group of Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Thomas of Haining (16th C.) son of Robert of Haining. He was a minor when he succeeded. In 1527 he is recorded as son and heir apparent of the deceased Robert in Haining. His uncle Walter was still acting as his tutor in 1532. In 1538 he succeeded to his father's lands of 'all the lands and the loch of Hanyng'. He is recorded being of Haining in 1538 when he held a sasine for the lands and in 1539 when he warned certain tenants to remove themselves from East Haining and West Haining. He is probably the feuar of Haining recorded in 1540 when he gave sasine for part of East Haining to Thomas Morlaw. In 1541 he was 'chief lord of the lands of est Hanyng'. In 1543/4 he made a bond not to harm John Wilson. He is probably the Thomas who purchased a tenement in Selkirk from Thomas Johnstone in 1544; Walter and Robert of Hartwoodburn were witnesses. He is also listed in 1557 among the Scotts who descended on the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston as part of some feud. He was probably related to some of the other Scotts who were in the band of about 200, from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. In 1561 he was (along with Walter of Synton and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Additionally in 1561 he witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk, and was listed among men who swore they did not steal a horse in Selkirk in the previous year. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564/5 he was listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the bond with the Kerrs, and was one of the signatories. He was on the assize of 1564 related to the murder of David Scott of Hasendean. He acted as a bailie for the Commendator of Melrose in the teind records from at least 1562 and in a sasine of 1567. In 1567 he represented Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a marriage contract for Sir Walter's sister Elizabeth. In 1568 he was granted the lands of Elliston by the Commendator of Melrose and was mentioned in a sasine of Crook in the same year. He had a charter of 'feuferme' for lands in 'Ilistoun' (as stated in 1580), which later passed to his son Robert, who was involved in a dispute over these lands in 1576, with John, minister of Selkirk. His children probably included: Robert, who succeeded to Haining; William, recorded as brother of Robert in 1580 and 1581; and Walter, also mentioned in 1580. Elizabeth Turnbull's will and inventory was recorded in 1580; she was living in Haining Castle and had Robert and his wife as executors, as well as young daughters, suggesting that she may have been his second wife and step-mother of Robert of Haining. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there. Thomas 'Tom of the Stour' (16th C.) recorded as 'Thome Scot callit the Stowir' in 1569 when he entered a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale (exceluding those already under the pledge of Andrew Armstrong of Gingills). Later in 1569 he was recorded being held in Ravensheugh Castle as pledge for 'Johnne Scott callit the Braid; Arche Scott of the Buss; Thome Scott of Blakhall'. He was clearly a prominent Scott of Ewesdale at that time. He is 'called the Stowr' in the register of the Privy Council for 1573 when he was surety for someone. In 1586/7 he was 'callit of the Stoir' when his brother John was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to the Jock 'Stowre of Qukinscleuch' recorded in 1598. His nickname may have alluded to 'stour' as in a violent conflict, but appears more likely to refer to a place, perhaps in Ewesdale. Thomas (d.c.1575) portioner in Carpow in Fife. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1575/6, at the same time as that of Robert, also portioner in Carpow. He was probably related to John in Carpow, whose will was registered in 1582/3. Thomas (d.c.1580) tailor in Edinburgh, who was apprentice to John 'Mure' and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1573/4. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being owed money for an account. He could be the Thomas, Burgess of Edinburgh, who 'undertakes surety' according to the register of the Privy Council in 1577. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1580/1. His son-in-law Andrew Scott became a merchant Burgess in right of marrying his daughter 'Bessie, alias Elizabeth'. Thomas (16th C.) baxter in Glasgow. In 1577 his 2nd son James was made a Burgess of Glasgow. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other Scotts. The will of David, son of Thomas 'indweller in Glasgow' was recorded in Edinburgh in 1592/3 and may have been his son. John, baxter who was eldest lawful son of baxter Thomas, was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1634 and may have been related. Thomas of Whitehaughbrae (16th C.) possibly son of Walter of Synton and and Stirches, with his mother being Margaret Riddell. This was according to Scott of Satchells, although these generations are confused. He may have been a younger brother of John of Synton and Robert of Stirches. His mother was probably Margaret Riddell. He was ancestor of the Scotts of Whitehaughbrae, although it is unclear if he owned the lands himself. His son and heir was Walter of Whitehaughbrae. Thomas 'Jock's Tom' (16th C.) mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He is listed among those owed money as 'Thome Scot callit Jok Thome'. There is a good chance he was from Hawick, based on the others he is listed alongside. He was presumably a tradesman or merchant of some sort. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. He is listed as 'alias 'Thome of Hauden', which may be Howden; however, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Burnturk in Fife. The will of his wife Margaret Boist was registered in Edinburgh in 1576. Thomas of Abbotshall (16th C.) son of Sir Thomas and Agnes Moncrieff. His family lands were in Fife. In 1581 he was listed as 'od and overman' (i.e. the third arbitrator, to break any deadlock) in a dispute between Adam in Bonnington and Robert of Haining. He was probably selected as a fellow Scott (and probably lawyer) with no conflict of interest. His son William of Abbotshall is recorded in 1585, but appears not to have succeeded until 1606. He was probably the Laird of Abbotshall who, along with the Laird of Balwearie was pledge in 1588/9 for the Scotts of Ewesdale. His children included: William of Abbotshall; and Jean or Janet, who married James Anstruther. It is possible that Margaret Murray, 'Lady Abbotshall (Scott)', whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1593/4, was probably his wife. Thomas (16th C.) brother of 'Wat's Jock', he was a Burgess in Hawick. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. His father was presumably Walter. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) tenant at Blackhall in the Ewes valley. In 1569 he was listed as 'Thome Scott of Blakhall', along with John 'the Braid' and Airchie 'of the Buss', as those men for whom Tom 'callit the Stowir' was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was recorded in the 1585 remission for last crimes of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. His son John is also listed. Another son Tom was recorded in 1611. Thomas (d.c.1588) described being 'in Clairmestoun' in Corstorphine when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1588/9. Thomas (d.c.1590) tenant in Logie in Fife. The will of his wife Isobel Cluney was registered in Edinburgh in 1590. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) recorded as being 'Thome of the Flower', one of the Scott chiefs of Ewesdale on Monipennie's c.1594 compilation. He is listed along with 'Ante the Busse'. It is unclear where his lands were, but it is possible he is the same as Tom in Blackhall. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being 'in the Inche of Bathcat' (i.e. the Inch of Bathgate) in 1595. His son Thomas became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh with Robert Scott (possibly a relative). Thomas (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being 'in Wester-groundiston' (i.e. Wester Groundistone) and among the 24 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been the brother of William of Whitehaugh, son of Walter of Whitehaugh and descended from Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (d.c.1594) described being

'in Balmayne' in Largo Parish, Fife, when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1594/5. He was surely related to Andrew in Blamian, whose will was recorded in 1597. Thomas (d.c.1598) maltman and Burgess of Kinghorn. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1598. Thomas of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Colifort. He was granted 4 husband lands in Hundleshope by John Gledstains of that Ilk in 1562. In 1581 he was recorded as son of Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, when his mother resigned her lands of Hundleshope to him in 1581; witnesses included Scotts of Raesknowe, Allanhaugh and Drinkstone. He is probably the 'Thomas Scot, callit Thome of Hundellishop' who witnessed the bond between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh in Hawick and Selkirk in 1585. In 1618 the same lands were disponed by Walter (possibly his son) to Sir William of Harden; this Walter was succeeded by his son and then grandson. It seems possible that there was a separate Thomas of Hundleshope who lived a little later. Thomas of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Hundleshope, and tenant of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. According to Keith Scott, he was a younger son of James of Hundleshope, and if this is the case, then he was distinct from the Thomas, son of Robert of Colifort, who was granted lands in Hundleshope in 1562. He was brother of John 'sometime in Hundillishoip' in 1596/7 when part of a group led by Robert Scott of Thirlestane who the citizens of Peebles complained had attacked their lands of 'Kaidmure'. In 1602 he was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands at 'Fechane'. Others listed were Scotts of Thirlestane, Bonnington, Gamescleuch and Bowhill. He and his brother attacked the same place again in 1603. He is recorded having 6 men well horsed at the Wappinshaw of 1627 in Peeblesshire. Thomas (16th C.) became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1599, as a 'peuderer' (i.e. worker in pewter). Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Glack. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1610 he assisted his brother Simon of Bonnington in a raid on the lands of 'Caidmure' belonging to the Burgh of Peebles. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servitor to 'Lord Bugcleuch' listed about 1610 among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Salenside (d.c.1636) possibly son of Andrew of Salenside, who was on the Carlisle Raid of 1596. In 1621 he inherited Whitehaughbrae from Walter of Whitehaughbrae, who was a near relative (son of his grandfather's brother, hence first cousin, once removed). He had at least 2 sons: William, to whom he gave possession of Salenside during his lifetime; and Andrew, to whom he gave possession of Whitehaughbrae, also while he was still alive. He later sold both properties to Sir William Scott of Harden. Thomas (16th/17th C.) referred to being 'called of Ormestoun' in 1610 when he was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates and there was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. His brother Alexander was also mentioned in 1610. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas 'Tom' (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas in Blackhall. In 1611 some men stood as caution for him at court in Dumfries. Thomas 'Tom' (16th/17th C.) tenant at Nether Braidlie, although whether this is Broadlee in the Borthwick (or in Ashkirk Parish) or Braidlie on Hermitage is unclear. His son was 'Jock the Suckler', who was involved in the 1615 slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'callit of West Tynneis' in 1617. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth along with Alexander Stewart of Phaup. Presumably he was associated with Tinnis in the Yarrow valley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) beer-brewer in Edinburgh. In 1613 he took on Walter, son of Andrew of Salenside, as an apprentice. And in 1620 he took on Walter, son of Walter in Allanmouth, as another apprentice. Based on this, it is possible that he came from the Hawick area. He is probably the Thomas 'beerbrewer [armed with a] (hagbuit)' who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1611. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1629 and 1630. He was 'called easter'. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1653) younger son of Walter 'the Hawke' of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. Note, however, that some histories give conflicting accounts of the connection between the Scotts of Whitslade and Todrig. Scott of Satchells says that 'he was from Whitslade sprung'. He probably purchased the estate of Todrig from the older branch of Scotts of Todrig, perhaps around 1630. He and his wife had a charter from John Hay, Lord Yester for Todrig in 1635. He is mentioned in 1637 when his son Robert became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In the early 1650s he and his son Thomas are described as Thomas Scott elder and younger of Toderick'. He is said to have married Jean Pringle, with their dowry recorded in 1643; however, this seems more likely to have been his son Thomas, with whom he is sometimes confounded. His son Thomas was served as his heir in 1653. Thomas' brother Robert (hence another son) was recorded as deceased in 1678; this was probably his son Robert who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637. Additionally he had a son called Walter. He may also have had a daughter, Janet, who may be the Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Elliot of Larriston. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (d.1680) brother of Walter, 'Wat o the Dykes'. He was given Nether Bonchester by his nephew William of Galalaw, after the death of his brother Walter (1st Laird), following some previous family agreement. He was involved in transactions with John Kerr of Grange in the 1630s relating to feu duties. He is recorded in a document of wadset for the lands of Appotside in 1654, when he was described as 'bailie in that part'. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £180 for lands in Abbotrule. He was recorded in a hereditary bond in 1673. He is mentioned in 1690 when his son John had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. He had 3 sons: Walter of Nether Bonchester; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Falla, who was listed among Covenanter fugitives in 1684; and John, who was also in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He also had 2 daughters: Christian; and Janet. It is possible that he died in confinement because of his Covenanter principles. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as servitor to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) brother of Walter of Hyndhope. He is recorded in a deed of 1663, along with Thomas, servitor of Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1691) eldest son of Thomas. He was served heir to his father in 1653 and is recorded as Laird by 1656. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenanter supporter. He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was recorded in a bond of 1663 and 2 in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678, his estate being valued at £552. His brother Robert is mentioned in a discharge in Selkirk in 1678. In 1682 he is listed in the testament of Robert Pringle of Clifton, possibly his brother-in-law. His sons Walter and William are also mentioned. He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678 and 1685 (as 'younger', which may indicate this was his son), and in 1690 along with Walter (presumably his son). He was probably the Laird of Todrig listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, along with his brother Robert. He probably married twice, having at least 3 children with his first wife, and his 2nd wife being Janet, daughter of Mark Pringle of Clifton. She is probably the 'Jean' Pringle, with whom his 'tocher' to the Parson of Ancrum (Mark Pringle's father-in-law) is recorded in 1643. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1639); William of Milsington (b.1645), first of that branch; Robert (b.c.1660), who leased Borthwickshiels and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1696, and witnessed the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and his niece Jean Scott; Marion or Mary (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk, who married Dr. Rutherford of Jedburgh; Anna (b.1659), baptised in Ashkirk, who died unmarried; Robert (b.1660), also baptised in Ashkirk; and Jane, who may have married a Scott of Bailielee. The witness to the 1656 baptism was Sir Robert Pringle (probably of Clifton, brother of his wife). Thomas (17th C.) tenant of Hummelknowes Mill, which would have Scotts for perhaps the next 200 years. He is mentioned as one of a large number of people accused of stealing a wallet in Hawick in 1642. It is unclear if he was directly related to John Scott, who came from the Rulewater millers and married the widow Henderson, who was tenant at Hummelknowes Mill. Thomas of Whitehaugh (17th C.) appears to be the proprietor of the estate in a list of communicants of the area in 1650. John, William and James (listed under him) may have been his adult sons or brothers. It is unclear how he may have been related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh; however, it is possible he is the same man as Thomas of Whitehaughbrae. Thomas (17th C.) married Margaret Easton in Ashkirk

Parish in 1658. Thomas (17th C.) married Margaret Hastie in Ashkirk Parish in 1661. Thomas of Whitslade (d.1671) 3rd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded in 1651, his elder brothers Robert and Sir Walter having no male heirs. In 1647 he was served heir to the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel and Ettrickhouse, previously belonging to his brothers. There was a further service of heirs for him in 1655, for the lands of Whitslade, as well as Drycleuchshiel, Redfordgreen, Ettrickhouse and Dalgleish, mentioned 'feu duty and augmentation'. However, he sold the Stirches estate to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in 1660, ending two centuries of ownership by the Scotts of Whitslade. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (presumably referring to an earlier period) paying £214 for Stirches and £156 for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He fought alongside his brother Sir Walter at Inverkeithing in 1651 and was wounded there. Like his brothers Sir Walter and Robert before him, he was Member of Parliament for Selkirk, serving 1661–63. In 1661 he is recorded as Laird when he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for William of Synton. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. He was probably the Scott of Whitslade who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1666 he was one of the 'curators' of Francis of Davington. In 1613 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott ('Auld Wat') of Harden (and if this date is correct, he must have been quite young). In 1655 he secondly married Janet Mitchell, who was probably a widow. He is probably also the Thomas Scott of Whitslade who married 'Ladie Ednum' in the Canongate Kirk in 1662. His children included: George, presumably with his first wife, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663 (but must have died before him); Marie (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1657), who also died before him; and Thomas, who succeeded. The witnesses in 1656 were Sir Archibald Douglas (probably of Cavers) and John Murray (probably of Philiphaugh), the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. It is said that his death was greatly lamented and inspired the verses that appeared in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784, probably written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells (even although the title would make the poem seem to be about the earlier death of his brother Robert). Thomas of Wester Essenside (17th C.) recorded as owner of Wester Essenside in 1643, valued at £400, as well as Leap Hill, valued at £140. He also paid tax on £540 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, and he may be the same as one of the other Thomases (e.g. the younger Thomas of Todrig). Scott of Satchells states that he was buried in Ashkirk. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cessford and their children included Nellie (b.1644), William (b.1647), William (again, b.1649) and William (again, b.1654). His wife's name is recorded as 'Bessie' in 1644. The witnesses in 1654 were John (perhaps a relative) and James Liddell. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel 'Cowtert' or 'Coutert' (probably Coltart) and their children included: John (b.1676); Andrew (b.1678); William (b.1680); and Bessie (b.1683). The baptism witnesses in 1678 were James Deans and William Scott and in 1680 were William Scott, 'Flex' and John Scott in Whiteyetts. Thomas (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1684 his brother Walter was among those declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) servant at Hilliesland (presumably for the Gledstains family). In 1684 he was on a list of men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1685 'John Scott, yor [younger], of Whyte Yetts' was fined for striking him 'in ane fenced court'. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Catherine Bower. In 1686 he and his wife were absolved 'from any scandalous persut raised att the insistence of them against Margaret Riddell, relict of umq'll Robert Hardie'; this was about an accusation that Margaret Riddell came back from Jedburgh with a red petticoat that belonged to his wife, with Helen Scott (perhaps a relative) being fined 'for being the author and fountain of the sd scandall'. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was 'Jenet Lytle'. Their son John was born in 1687, with witnesses Henry Scott and Robert Scott (so possibly relatives). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Jean Hislop. Their children included: Thomas (b.1687); and Marion (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were Thomas Wallace and Adam Hislop (who was probably related to his wife). Thomas of Synton (17th C.) recorded in 1690. However, he was not the Laird at that time, so was either tenant there or was Laird of neighbouring lands. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth

Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. He could be the Thomas whose children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included Anna (b.1692), Janet (b.1694), Anna (again, b.1697), Thomas (b.1699), George (b.1701) and Robert (b.1704). Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the James and John who are also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed along with Thomas Turnbull on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas 'in Roull' whose wife's will, Janet Porteous, was recorded in 1685. Thomas (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at 'Bridiholl' (probably Brieryhill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he was 'in Brierihole' when he (along with smith Robert Miller) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell of Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the elders mentioned enacting business for Wilton Session in 1706. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same Thomas was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas 'Laird' (17th C.) recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. He leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was also listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may have been father to James 'Laird', whose first-born child was Thomas. He may have been the Thomas who married Janet Clerk and had children: James (b.1674); John (b.1676); Walter and William (b.1678); Andrew (b.1680); Jane (or 'Jean', b.1684), who married weaver John Stevenson in 1716; and Robert (b.1686). He is probably the 'Thomas Scott, Laird' whose family were given financial assistance by the Kirk Session in about the 1720s, for being 'in Distress'. He could also be the Thomas whose rent was paid by the Kirk Session for a year. Thomas (17th C.) resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Thomas was 'in hastendan' in baptismal records of 1683 and 1688. He married Isobel Waugh and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean) included: Robert (b.1683); and Bessie (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were John Noble and Patrick Dodds and in 1688 were William Waugh (who is surely related to his wife) and William Young. He is probably the Thomas who (along with John Dodds) witnessed a Roberton baptism in 1687 for Walter Turnbull. Thomas of Whitslade (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He was probably a minor when he succeeded (as 6th Laird) in 1671, since there is a record of discharge to Sir William of Harden and his other curators in 1672. He is recorded writing to his cousin Sir Gideon Scott in 1674 about permission to cut peats. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1676 for William Laing. In 1677 he was served heir to his father's lands in Innerleithen. In 1678 he paid the land tax for the Whitslade estate (valued at £1048 10s), as well as paying for the lands of Hermiston (£156) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably also the Laird of Whitslade whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £2168 in that year. He was a Commissioner in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire for raising money for the King in 1678 and was on the Commission of Supply for both counties in 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He is also recorded in bonds of 1682 and on a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose for that year, as well as in a horning against all Melrose heritors in 1690. He was living at Whitslade in 1688 when he is mentioned in Capt. Walter Scot's metrical family history, with a portion of the 'post'ral' dedicated to him. Before 1688 he married Jane, daughter of Sir John Hay of Park. They had 7 sons: Thomas, who succeeded in 1695; John, who later sold Whitslade; Walter, recorded in the 1720s in a dispute with Walter of Harden, and in 1734 when he was excommunicated; Robert (d.c.1757), a surgeon in Hawick; William, a physician in Worcester; Francis, 6th son, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and James, who became a goldsmith's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1709. It is said that only the eldest son had any surviving children. His widow may be the 'Lady Whitslade' recorded in 1707 as liferenter of part of the Roxburghshire lands formerly held by the Laird of Whitslade. He is described briefly in the lines on the death of his father and uncles that appeared in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) – 'Of beauty grave, and courage brave; Although his years be young, There's none on earth can parallel Old

Whitslade – but his son' [CWS]. Thomas (17th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. He became a merchant's apprentice in Rouen in 1671 and a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father in 1677. Thomas of Chapel (17th/18th C.) paid tax on 7 hearths for himself and his tenants in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1694. He was on the Committee of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He was also one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1699 he exchanged lands with John Nisbet, spouse of Agnes Riddell, portioner of Bewlie. He may be the Laird of Chapel whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He must have been related to the earlier Walter of Chapel. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Burn and their children included Thomas (b.1695) and John (b.1698). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Learmonth and their children included Janet (b.1697), Robert (b.1699), Isobel (b.1700) and Bessie (b.1703). Thomas of Whitslade (d.bef. 1714) son of Thomas, he was 7th Laird. In 1695 he was served heir to his father as well as to his grandfather Thomas in the lands of 'Phanops' (possibly Phaup in Ettrick) in the Regality of Melrose and in 1696 was served heir to lands in Innerleithen. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. In 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum. They had 2 daughters: Elizabeth, who married William McDougall, brother of the Laird of Makerstoun; and Janet, who died unmarried. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by his younger brother John (who sold Whitslade). In 1714 his widow Margaret remarried to Sir David Murray of Stenhope, who was M.P. for Peeblesshire. Thomas of Langshaw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Francis of Langshaw. He succeeded his brother Walter, being served heir to their father's lands and Barony of Langhsaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1695. This included 'Readhead alias Whytebank', Colmslie and Mosshouses. He appears to have been the last Scott of Langshaw. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Scott and their children included James (b.1701) and Walter (b.1704). Perhaps the same Thomas was married to 'Mary' Scott and had further children including Janet (b.1710), Walter (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), Elizabeth (b.1715), Thomas (b.1717), John (b.1718) and William (b.1719). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Northhouse in 1702 when he married Helen Allan. There are lots of children baptised in Cavers who could be theirs. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He may be the Thomas who married Bessie Richardson in Roberton in 1702 or the Thomas who married Isabel Scott in Roberton in 1705. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at West Middle in 1716 when he married Janet Scott. He was also at West Middle in 1726 when his daughter Ann was baptised. Perhaps the same couple were at Brieryyards in Wilton Parish in 1724 when their daughter Helen was baptised; the witnesses were John Scott and William Easton. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1726), Thomas (b.1728), Margaret (b.1730), Alexander (b.1732), George (b.1733) and John (b.1735). He is probably the Thomas who married Janet Dryden in Bedrule in 1725. He was also probably the Thomas was was an Elder of Bedrule in 1731. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Hassendean in 1731. He complained about nonpayment by William Tunno in Selkirk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Synton Mill recorded in 1719. He married Agnes Taylor and their children included: George (b.1714); Magdalen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); and Margaret (b.1723). Frances (b.1726), with mother 'Bessie' Taylor, was probably also his child. Thomas (17th/18th C.) cottar in 'Langtoun' (i.e. Langtonside) in Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1716. His wife's name is not recorded, but he may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1718 when his son David was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident 'in Kirkhouses' in Ashkirk Parish. In 1724 the Parish gave him 14s. He was probably a pauper at that time and was probably related to earlier Scotts of Kirkhouses. Thomas (18th C.) married Elspeth Ormiston in Bedrule in 1729. Thomas of Todrig (d.1753) only son of Walter of Todrig. He was the 6th and last Laird of Todrig (although he is also sometimes confounded with his son Thomas). He was educated at Glasgow University. He was 'younger' of Todrig in 1708 when he had a marriage contract with Mary, 2nd daughter of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. In 1713 he brought a case against several other Scotts relating to a 1669 bond of 'Auchter Auter Struther'. He was one of the petitioners in support of the lands of Whitslade being 'disjoined' in 1714. He is probably the Laird of Todrig recorded in Hawick in 1732 when the town 'litter' was rented for his son's funeral. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. His lands were valued at £552 in the 1740s. He is said to have lived too liberally, having to sell Todrig in 1748 and Wester Essenside a few years earlier. His children with Mary Scott included: Walter (b.c.1710), who was in the Horse Guards; Robert (b.1714), who died young; Thomas (b.1717); John (b.1718), possibly died at sea; William (b.1719); possibly Patrick, who also went to sea and died unmarried; Janet (1710–67), who married Mr. Howie, surgeon in Selkirk and secondly Rev. David Brown of Selkirk; and Elizabeth, who was still unmarried in 1783. He secondly married Jane, sister to John Elliot of Peel (who must have been a cousin of some sort), widow of Thomas Pringle of Kirton; they had no children together. He died in Selkirk and is buried in Ashkirk. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Stokoe in Northumberland. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of William 'in Wilsington' (presumably Milsington) who witnessed a document for the Elliots of Harwood in 1694. If the date is correct, then he would have been the eldest son, but if so must have died before his brother William, who succeeded to the tenancy of Milsington. Thomas (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton Parish in 1731. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1732) and Margaret (b.1736). He may be the Thomas who was tenant in Tandlaw in at about 1716–24 and was at Heap in about 1724. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Alemoor in 1734. He was probably related to the other Scotts who lived at Alemoor around the same time (specifically Gideon, Walter and William). His children included Walter (b.1734). Thomas (18th C.) married Elizabeth Blake in Bedrule Parish in 1747. Thomas of Falnash (d.1779) son of Robert, grandson of 'Auld Falnash' and younger brother of Gideon, from whom he succeeded to the Lairdship. He sold Falnash, along with 'Merrynees' (i.e. Merry Naze) and other lands to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. He may be the 'Dr. Thomas Scott of Fanash' who kept a lark and a song thrush in cages in his parlour (according to a letter by A.C. Hall in 1831). It is also possible that he was the same man as Rev. Thomas, minister of the Relief Kirk in Auchtermuchty. Thomas of Stonedge (d.1786) probably son of William of Stonedge. He appears to have served as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for the Liddesdale lands in 1725 (alhough he must have been quite young at the time). He was already referred to as 'of Stonedge' in 1731, when he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood, although he may not yet have succeeded to his father. He was a great improver of his lands, having dykes built and plantations laid out. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and described as 'late of Hobsburn' when he lived at Grange in Edinburgh. He may also earlier have been described as 'in Wauchope'. In 1741 he had an elaborately carved through-stone erected in Hokbkirk kirkyard; this was in commemoration of Scott of Wauchope (probably his grandfather, Walter). His lands were valued at £1300 in the 1740s. He appears to have sold Forkins to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1764 he was named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. In 1767 he was recorded as tenant of Wauchope, like earlier members of his family. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He was a lawyer who gave evidence at the trial regarding the Division of the Common and then was appointed by Lord Advocate Montgomery to make the actual Division itself. He suffered an unpleasant experience at the hands of some Hawick residents as a consequence, describing that 'the mob were very riotous, pelted the chaise I was in with the surveyors'. However, he was also made an Honorary Burgess. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780. He sold Stonedge to Robert Lisle of Acton, although the sale was never completed. In 1732 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae (the marriage recorded in Hobkirk Parish), and in 1758 purchased part of Borthwickbrae for himself. In the 1785 Land Tax Rolls it is recorded that he was liferenting about half of Borthwickbrae and the west part of Howcleuch from John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His children included: William (b.1737). Other children baptised in Hobkirk Parish who may have been his were Elizabeth (b.1727), Margaret (b.1733), Susan (b.1734), Janet (b.1736) and Thomas (b.1736). His last will and testament is dated 1778 and he died at Grange, described as 'late of Stonedge'. Thomas (b.1717) younger son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He went to sea in 1740, received several wounds and lost an eye. Around 1750 he entered into service with the East India Company, remaining 13 or 14 years. He later lived in retirement, still being alive in 1783, but without issue. Thomas (b.c.1714) resident of Wilton Parish and later Effledge. He was tenant at Galalaw from about 1736–53, for 13 years with his brother John (who later lived at the Flex). He was recorded at Galalaw in 1742, 1744 and 1751. In 1764 he was living in Effledge when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of Wilton Common. He married Isobel Blyth in Wilton Parish in 1741. Their children included: John (b.1742); William (b.1744); John (again, b.1746); Isabel (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). The witnesses were John and James Scott in 1742, John Scott and James Douglas in 1744 and James Dryden and Walter Scott in 1751. Thomas (b.1716/7) lived at Stirches from about the age of 12, where his father was tenant. He lived there off and on for 20 years, being tenant himself in about 1756–64. In 1764 he gave evidence regarding the former use of part of Wilton Common and was then in Easter Groundistone. Thomas (18th C.) married Betty Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1744. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1742 for workman William Nichol, in 1745 for weaver James Roger and for carrier John Pott (along with shoemaker John, with his name given after John's, and hence he was probably son or younger brother of John), and in 1747 for wright Robert Pringle. In 1744 he and John together witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell 'at Park'. He married Margaret Deans and their children included: Margaret (b.1737); Janet (b.1740); John (b.1742); and Henrietta (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were junior mason Andrew Turnbull and shoemaker John (who was probably related) and in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John (again). Rev. Thomas (1722–90) son of Walter, a merchant in Leith, who was descended from the Scotts of Harden, his mother being Martha Cunningham. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1742. He was presented as minister of Cavers by William Douglas of Cavers in 1746 and ordained there in 1747. He was 'Mr. Thos. Scott the mance' when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748; he paid again in 1753. He was translated to 'Second Charge' of South Leith in 1762 and moved to the 'First Charge' in 1765. In 1750 he married Helen Balfour from Pilrig, and she died in 1806. Their children were: Walter (b.1752); Martha; Janet; John, surgeon with the 10th Light Dragoons; and Thomas, minister of Newton, near Edinburgh, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Gateshaw. Thomas of Urlings, County Tipperary (18th C.) progenitor of the Earls of Clonmell. He is probably descended from one of the Border Scott branches. He married Rachel, daughter of Mark Prim of Johnswell. Their son John (b.1739) was Solicitor-General and Attorney-General and was created Earl of Clonmell. Rev. Thomas (1722/3–92) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, and brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh (however, this may be confusion). He was said to have been ordained at Harbottle in 1736, but that is surely too early. He became minister of the Presbyterian Church in Hexham in 1756. He turned down Colinsburgh in 1761, since he thought that the size of the congregation and travel involved would be too much. In 1763 he became 1st minister of the Relief Kirk at Auchtermuchty (the 5th such congregation). He appears to have ended as minister in 1786. In 1770 he married Rachel Scott, who was previously married to Rev. John Warden; she died in Edinburgh in 1810. Their children inlcuded: Robert, druggist in Edinburgh. He is buried in Canongate Churchyard. He could be the son of William and Christian Hoy, born in Wilton in 1723. It is unclear if he was brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh Relief Kirk or Rev. James (licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery), minister at Perth; he may thus have been an elder son of Robert of Falnash, perhaps born at Crowhill (like James), and may be the same Thomas who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch. It is thus possible that he was the 'Dr Thomas Scot', grandson of Gideon of Falnash, who was said at the legal proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1764 to be in possession of the papers of Scott of Falnash. Thomas (18th C.) married Mary Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children, included: Walter (b.1752) and William (b.1754), baptised in Wilton; and Helen (b.1761), Thomas (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1751. He was recorded as tenant in the Heap in a document relating to the Scotts of Whitehaugh in 1753. He married Margaret Bell in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children included Thomas (b.1751), John (b.1753), Robert (b.1755), Isabel (b.1757), Adam (b.1760) James (b.1761), William (b.1763), George (b.1765), Elizabeth (b.1768) and Margaret (b.1771). The witnesses in 1751 were

Robert and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was living at Harwood Mill in 1758. His children included Francis (b.1749), Susannah (b.1751), Jean (b.1753), Janet (b.1756) and Thomas (b.1758). Thomas (18th C.) married to Helen Renwick, their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1757. In the entry he is marked 'Buccleugh', but it is unclear if that refers to the farm or something else. Probably the same Thomas and Helen Renwick were married in Roberton Parish in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Jean Veitch and their children included: Thomas (b.1743); Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1755); and Archibald (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were William Maxwell and Charles Scott (who was probably related). Thomas (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the 1760s and 1770s. He married Marion Elliot in 1765. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (1729–1807) eldest surviving son of Walter and brother of Rev. William of Abbotrule and Southdean. He succeeded to Nether Bonchester in 1750, as grandson of Walter. He was said to have greatly improved the Bonchester estate, making a nursery for young trees and enclosing land. The couple of acres of best land that he set aside for growing and selling young trees was called the Nursery and the cottage there was called the Nursery House. The planting of trees also became popular with his neighbours, leading to the valley of the Rule becoming well wooded. He also farmed Mackside for a while and was factor for Robert Lisle of Stonedge. However, he later struggled financially and had to place his affairs in the hands of trustees, who were William Turnbull of Langraw, Thomas Scott in Lethem and Peter Brown in Minto. This led to the sale of the Bonchester estate in 1779, the purchaser being William Oliver of Dinlabyre. The Duke of Buccleuch is said to have sympathised with his kinsman and allowed him to live at a farm on the Bowhill estate for a nominal rent. He may be the Scott of Nether Bonchester (forename not given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1764 he was appointed, along with Archibald Rutherford in Jedburgh, as a surveyor of Wilton Common. He married Hannah Burnett. His only surviving child was Dorothea ('Dora', b.1778), who married Dr. William Lorraine from Glasgow (although born near Canonbie, and grandson of William Lorraine from Kirkton). He also had a daughter, Nelly, who died young. He died at Bowhill at the age of 78 and is buried at Hobkirk.

Thomas (1732–1823) 2nd son of Robert Scott ('in Sandyknowe') and Barbara Haliburton. He was thus uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He gained 'liferent' of lands that were part of Oakwood in 1759. He also held lands at Bewlie, which he resigned to Walter Scott of Harden in 1766. He was recorded as Thomas 'Son to Robert Scott of Sandicknow' [sic] among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was recorded as farmer at 'Woollie' (i.e. Wolfelee), when he owned 6 horses. He farmed at Wolfelee, holding the tenancy until 1810, then later at Monkland, near Jedburgh. During his time at Wolfelee he was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish and the young Walter Scott is said to have visited several times. For a while the tutor to his family was James Sanson, supposed to be the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott's character 'Dominie Sampson'. He was a skilled performer on the Border bagpipes, and in about 1816 wrote a list of the best Border bagpipers of earlier times. He married Anne, daughter of William Scott, 4th Laird of Raeburn (or perhaps Barbara, daughter of Walter Scott of Raeburn). In 1780 he secondly married Jean, sister of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. His children included: James, who died unmarried in Edinburgh; Charles, who inherited Knowesouth, and farmed at Milsington; Mary; Anne; and Jean, who married Andrew Oliver of Langraw. He died at Monklaw, near Jedburgh. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawickshiels. He married Mary Turnbull in 1751 and their children included: Walter (b.1752); William (b.1754); Helen (b.1761); Thomas (b.1766); and Mary (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were Walter Laidlaw and John Ker (blacksmith in Hawickshiels). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1767 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He may be one of the Thomases who married Margaret Turnbull in 1754, Isobel Anderson in 1758 or Nelly Laidlaw in 1766. Isobel (b.1758), baptised in Roberton, may also be his child. Thomas (1735/6–1800) 4th son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Walter he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. Thomas of Peel (1737–1813) 2nd son of John of Ashtrees and Helen Oliver. He was tenant farmer in Lethem, Southdean Parish, and is recorded there as farmer in 1792 when he had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood. He was 'in

Letham' when recorded as a trustee for Thomas of Nether Bonchester (who had to sell his lands) in about 1779. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785, owning 11 horses there in 1797. He also paid the dog tax at Lethem in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1807 he bought Peel (then called Baxtonlees) from Lord Douglas. He married Esther, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory), this probably being in Wilton Parish in 1777; his wife died at Lethem in 1787, aged 37. Their children included: Thomas, who inherited Peel; John of Riccalton, who later re-purchased the family lands of Ashtrees; Helen, who married Thomas Elliot, son of Elliot of Harwood; and Esther, who married John, 2nd son of James Robson of Samieston. John Robson-Scott of Newton was his direct descendant, as well as the Boog-Scotts of Peel. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish in the last quarter of the 1700s. He could be the Thomas who married Betty Best in 1772. Some of these children, baptised in Hobkirk, could be his: Elizabeth (b.1773); James (b.1774); Nelly (b.1777); Isabel (b.1778); Dorothy (b.1778); William (b.1780); John (b.1782); Robert (b.1787); George (b.1789); and William (b.1794). There may be 2 families here. Thomas (18th C.) described as 'sometime of Silverboothall', he was probably son of James, farmer at Boonraw and Laird of Silverbuthall. In the late 1700s he sold a small piece of the former Wilton Common to William Oliver 'Auld cash'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) gardener listed at Burnhead in 1791, when he was working for William Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1805) weaver in Hawick. He married Christian Weir in 1771. Their children included James (b.1772), probably the millwright; and Thomas (b.1775), probably the weaver. He was a member of the Associate Congregation, which witnessed the baptisms. His wife's death is recorded in 1805, by which time he was already deceased. Thomas (18th C.) recorded being let the farm of Pilmuir Rig for the first time in 1778, after the Division of the Common. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in Hobkirk Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He was probably related to George, who farmed there soon afterwards. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish, in 1792 he married Janet Riddell in Cavers. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Northhouse, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He is described as a 'hosier' when he died in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1788 he married Helen Pott, who was from Castleton. Their children (baptised in Castleton) included: Helen (b.1789); Robert (b.1791); Helen (b.1797); James (b.1799); and Thomas (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also there in 1797 and so presumably a close relative. His son George was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Elliot, who was from Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas whose son John was baptised in Cavers in 1786. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is presumably the Thomas listed as a joiner on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. He married Christian (or Chtistina) Downie, and their children included Walter (who carried on the business) and Jane. A younger joiner Thomas, also listed at the Sandbed on the 1841 census, may have been his son, as well as Robert at an adjacent address. He is listed as wright on the Sandbed in 1808 when an unnamed cild died and in 1811 when his daughter Nelly died. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1801 as a teacher of a private school of some sort in Wilton Parish. Thomas (d.bef. 1822) possibly miller at Hawick Mill. Most of their children were born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 Isabella Lillico was living with his family, and hence may have been his mother-in-law. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Roberton Glebefoot; his wife's daughter Elizabeth Ballantyne (b.1827/8) was also living with the family. In 1861 he was a widower living at Highchesters Mill Cottage. Thomas (b.1802) born in Glasgow, but baptised in Hawick, he was a teacher in the Hawick area. He was son of John and Janet (or Jessie) Young, and grandson of Rev. John Young of the Green Kirk. His brother John was manager of the Hawick Gas Works and miller at Hawick Mill. He began by teaching at an old smithy in Lochburnfoot and then at Old Northhouse, which was at that time a thriving village. He was 'boarded and lodged with the parents in proportion to the number of children under his charge' (according to Rev. Robert Young). He ran a school in Buccleuch Street from about 1826, later moving to Tannage Close. He is recorded as a teacher at Buccleuch Street in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on Walter's Wynd in the 1837 directory. It is said that he taught for a while in the Fleece Inn Ballroom. In the 1841 census he is living on the Cross Wynd, married to Isabel and with children Isabel, John and Jessie. In 1851 he was Schoolmaster in Lanton, living with his wife and daughter Jessie (who was described as dumb) and he was still Schoolmaster in Lanton in 1861. He is recorded there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and in 1861 was farming 1200 acres there, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Mervinslaw in a directory of 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, George, Elizabeth and Agnes. He could be related to John, who was farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797. Thomas (b.1807/8) clerk in a woollen factory according to the 1851 census. He was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as 'cashier,

Their children included: James; Elizabeth ('Betsy', b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Janet (b.1846); Agnes (b.1848); and Andrew (b.1850). He may be the Thomas, son of James and Isabel Robson born in Hawick in 1806. Thomas (b.c.1805) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he is recorded as an agricultural labourer, and is easy to confuse with the mason of the same name, who also lived at Deanburnhaugh. He married Mina Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1830 and their children included: John (b.1831); William (b.1833); Helen (b.1834); Thomas (b.1837), ploughman in Lilliesleaf. Thomas (b.1809/10) mason in Deanburnhaugh, born in Roberton Parish, probably son of Thomas. They had children: Ann (b.1836/7), who married Walter Kerr Sutherland; Thomas (b.1837/8); Catherine (b.1839/40); Adam (b.1841/2); and Mary Ann (b.1844/5. She was daughter of stocking needlemaker Peter Farquhar. Thomas (1824/5–89) 3rd son of Liddesdale farmer John. His grandfather and great-grandfather before him had been West-enders. He was a traveller with his brother's firm Pesco's. He spent some time in Ontario, Canada, where in 1883 he helped establish an annual Common Riding celebration in the Galt/Guelph area, being the first secretary of the organising committee. He was Cornet in 1887, the year that the Ceremonial Committee was appointed. His Cornet's Lass appears to have been 'Miss Montgomery', perhaps Agnes (b.1867), who was the first to buss the Flag in the Council Chambers. He married Margaret Elliot (1870–1914), daughter of John Robert Brough. Their children were: George Douglas (1899–1984), who married Ella Christie in 1933; Elliot B. (b.1901), who died young; Laura Isobel (1902–96), who married George M. Clunie; Thomas (1904–93); and Peter Adamson (1905–85). He was born at Burnfoot on the Ale Water. He studied medicine at the University of Iowa and Rush Medical Center. He worked in Illinois and Oregon and then as a surgeon on boats that travelled in many parts of the world. He retired in 1921 and moved back to his homeland, where he married Margaret, daughter of oil extractor Archibald Johnstone Donaldson in 1922, this being his 4th marriage. He died in Hawick. Thomas 'Tom' (1854–1927) watercolour painter, born in Selkirk. He studied at the Royal Institution and Royal Scottish Academy in Edinburgh and had many commissions from wealthy Border tweed manufacturers. He lived at Earlston, Bowden and lastly at Leslie Cottage in Philiphaugh. Known for his powerful landscapes, he also illustrated many Border books, including Craig and Laing's 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' (1898) and 'Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts' (1901), and was commissioned to paint 'Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514'. He was said to be a regular visitor to Hawick and encouraged the young W.S.A. Ingles in his watercolour painting. He was a guest at the 1890 Common Riding and was the first guest at the Callants' Club annual dinner in 1906. He donated a collection of his archæological finds to the Museum in 1900, including: 'ancient key found in digging foundations for Crown Hotel, Hawick (probably date about 1700); square piece of lead with name 'Gn. Scott, Hawick', evidently belonged to a merchant [but more likely the engineer of that name] (probable date about 1815); 6 frisels, Border district; 8 hammer-stones, Border district; piece of petrified wood from Oregon, U.S.A.; 50 flint knives from Craigsford Mains, Earlston; 24 flint scrapers, Borderr district; 60 flints, various, Border district; dagger, Central Africa; lead medallion – William Pitt; stone axe from Dinan; toothed sickle, date 1820, &c'. He read a paper on stone implements to the Archæological Society in 1906. In all, he exhibited 167 paintings at the Royal Scottish Academy. There is a bronze bust of him, by Thomas Clapperton, in Selkirk. A book 'Lest we Forget', about his Hawick connections, was written by M.H. Coltman in 1991. The Museum now has more than a dozen of his paintings, including 'Hawick Motte 1898'; many are on display in the Tom Scott Room in Drumlanrig's Tower. Thomas John (b.1861) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was born in Cavers Parish. In 1882 he emigrated to Australia where he married Ada M. Fox in Melbourne, Victoria. Thomas (1862/3–1918) builder in Newcastleton. He married Marion Elliot, who died in 1949, aged 78. Their children included: John (1894/5–1916), who died of wounds in France; and James, who died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (19th/20th C.) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother James. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. His brother was killed by a bull in 1936 and in 1946 he sold Redheugh to Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Uchtred (11th/12th C.) possible first known ancestor of the noble Scotts. His name is also given as 'Uchtred Fitz-Scott' or written 'Uchtred Filius Scot', i.e. the son of Scot. There are suggestions that his family came from Galloway, partly from legendsn (perhaps because people from that region were 'Scots'), and also because there were other Uchtreds in Galloway. It is also suggested that either he or close relatives held the Barony of Scotstoun in Peeblesshire before being granted lands in Selkirkshire and later Roxburghshire. Although, there is no definite information about his parentage or earlier ancestors, his designation as 'son of Scot' distinguished him from other contemporary Uchtreds. He lived during the reigns of Alexander I and David I and was among the courtiers of King David. Around 1116 he witnessed an inquest made by David (then Prince of Cumbria) regarding the foundation of the church at Glasgow, where he was recorded as 'Uhctred filius Scot'. In about the early 1120s, he witnessed the foundation charter for the monastery at Selkirk. In about 1145 he witnessed the charter of King David's son Henry

to the church of Melrose, where his name was given as 'Huctredo filio Scot'. His son was probably Richard, although there is no direct evidence for this. The Dukes of Buccleuch and many other local branches of the Scotts trace themselves directly back to him, based on the genealogy from Sir Walter Scott and others. Walter (12th C.) recorded as 'Walterus Scotus' several times in the chartulary of Arbroath during the reign of King William. His son was granted the lands of Allardyce. Walter (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Walterus Scotus' sometime around 1200 when he was granted the lands of Allardyce in Kincardineshire. There is some suggeestion that his decendents took the surname Allardyce, and that he is therefore unrelated to other Scotts. Walter (12th/13th C.) recorded as Walterus 'Scottus' in 1216 when he was commanded to deliver his ship to Gilbert Campion. This was at Tewkesbury. Walter (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Robert, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Walter (13th C.) guarantor for an agreement made at Ancrum in 1253 by Sir Walter de Moray. The other two guarantors for the payment were Sir William de Douglas and Mark de Baliol. He may be the same as the Walter who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, or else perhaps his father. Walter (13th C.) recorded in 1254 as 'de Escote' in a document of Henry III relating to lands in Bedfordshire. Walter (13th C.) clerk of Oxford who was recorded in Oxford Prison in 1254, when the Sheriff of Oxford was ordered to hand him over to the Chancellor of the University. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, with a different designation in Scotland. Walter (d.c.1263) sergeant of the King's Chapel, probably at Hereford. He was given a penny a day by the King, to be drawn by the Sheriff of Hereford. In 1263 his wife Edith and their children were granted the same penny a day for their lives. Walter (13th C.) listed as being 'of Wyteby' in 1265 when he gave half a mark to have an assize in Yorkshire. Walter (13th C.) Englishman recorded in 1265 among a list of rebels. He was Walter 'Scoticus de Weltedone' who was accused of plundering and probably forfeited his lands. Walter (13th C.) gave half a mark to have an assize in Sommerset in 1270. Walter (13th C.) listed as 'le Escot of Weltedene' in the Patent Rolls of Henry III in 1270/1. He is recorded several times in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He is 'Walterus Schot de Wilteden', 'Walterum Skot de Welteden' and variants. It is unclear where these lands were, but presumably on the English side. He could be the same Walter recorded among a set of pleas of the English army made at Berwick in 1296; this particularly involved a dispute with Matilda of Blackburnshire over trespass and a coat. Walter (13th C.) holder of lands in Peeblesshire who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is recorded as 'Wautier Lescot'. It is possible that he was son of William and brother of Richard of Rankleburn and Murthockstone (who also swore fealty to Edward I). There is some suggestion that he was the elder brother, although the chiefdom of the family passed through Richard, so perhaps he had no heirs. The lands he held may have included Kirkurd, which were certainly later owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may have been the first of his family to have the name 'Walter'. He may be the same 'Waltero Scot' who witnessed a charter relating to Soutra Hospital in about 1280. It is possible he was descended from Adam, whose name was associated with lands in Peeblesshire in the early 1200s. Walter (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, who came from Edinburgh (although it is unclear if he is distinct from the man from Peeblesshire, or whether this is a duplicate entry). He was recorded as 'Wautier Scot tenant le Euesqe de Seint Andreu, del counte de Edeneburgh' (i.e. the Bishop of St. Andrews' tenant in Edinburgh). His seal bore a hawk on a wrist, together with a crescent and star in fields and the name 'S'WALTERI SCOTI'. The crescent and star indicate a close relationship with the Scott chiefs. Walter 'the Ratton' (d.c.1400) said to have been grandson of John 'the Lameter', and son of a Chamberlain to the Archbishop of Glasgow (although there is some confusion between father and son). Alternatively he may have been a younger son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn. He was probably the 1st Laird of Synton, although accounts differ, and information about these generations is very uncertain. His nickname came from his temper and small size. In about 1389 he settled at Burnfoot in the Ale valley and became the first (new) Laird of Synton. He married a Shortreed of Headshaw. His children probably included: George, who succeeded to Synton; John of Headshaw; Walter of Ashkirk; and William of Glack. He died during the reign of Robert III – 'This worthy Ratten did begin, When Robert cal'd Fern-year was Scotlands King, The Bishop lov'd Wat well enough, And recommended him to Buckcleugh, His Chamberlain he did continue still, And at the Burn-foot in Aill, He built both Kill and Mill, Then down the Water he sought with speed, And married Head-shaws Daughter, Her Name was ShortReid, And betwixt them two was procreat, Head-shaw, Askirk, Sinton, and Glack'. Sir Walter (d.1402) 4th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), Murdostoun and Kirkurd, son of Robert. He was the first of a huge number of Sir Walters who would come later. He was said to be a brave man who performed many actions in service of the Crown. He had a charter of 1389 for superiority of the lands of Kirkurd, as well as a 5 merkland there. He may be the Walter who had an indenture in 1391 with Hugh Fotheringham for the lands of Caverton, made at Borthwick. In 1398 he was among the barons who were bound to keep peace on the Border and he was appointed as 'borowis for the Erlis boundis of Douglas of the mydil marche' (thus the first of his family associated with the Wardenship of the Marches). Additionally in 1398 he was one of the 'borowis' for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document. His wife's name is not known, and his only known child is Robert, who succeeded him. He was killed at the Battle of Homildon Hill, serving in the army of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Walter of Ashkirk (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, these generations are very uncertain, and nothing else is known about him. He was probably ancestor of the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and 1526. Walter 'Wat' (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Sim, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Sir Walter of Buccleuch (d.c.1468) eldest son of Robert, he was 6th (and last) Laird of Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) and the first to be described as 'of Buccleuch'. He was also sometimes still described as 'of Kirkurd'. He was mentioned as son and heir of Robert in 1415, when his father swapped lands of Glenkerry for Bellendean with Melrose Abbey. In 1426 he is described as son and heir of Robert of 'Murthouston' when he was granted the lands of Lempitlaw in the regaility of Sprouston. He was probably the Walter on the 'retour' for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. In 1431 he had a 'transumpt' made of the charter of 1420 in which his father was granted half the lands of Branxholme. He obtained lands of Heap in Wilton from James Langlands in 1431, a public instrument to that effect being signed at St. Mary's Kirk; he swapped these lands for Milsington in 1451 at Wilton Kirk (with a confirming deed in 1453). Also in 1431 he was superior of Kirkurd in a letter of reversion involving rentals in the lands of Ladyurd. He witnessed a confirming charter for lands in Primside in 1432 and another for Nether Crailing in 1434, both granted by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1434 he was 'lord of Morthouystoun' in a document relating to Ladyurd.i He was knighted by James II in 1437, and also granted a charter for lands in Eckford in 1439 (confirmed in 1450), apparently for capturing Gilbert of Rutherford. He is recorded in a document as Lord of 'Morthouystoun' in 1434, and was still presiding over the Baron Court of Kirkurd in 1455. He witnessed several charters granted by James II in the 1430s to 1450s. In the 1430s he gained lands at Grahamslaw from William Crichton of that Ilk (who is described as his relative, and was clearly a close political ally). In 1438 he was listed on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter for Borthwickshiels in 1444 and a lease for related lands in 1445. In 1446 he exchanged the family's Lanarkshire property (Murthockston) for the rest of Branxholme, with Thomas Inglis; in response to Inglis' complaint about English incursions on Branxholme, he supposedly remarked that 'the Cumberland cattle were as good as those of Teviotdale'. He thereby acquired Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig and part of Over Harwood. In 1446 he was witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn and in 1446/7 was on a 'retour' panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he bought the 'Cousinlands' (to the north of Branxholme) from Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge and mother of Robert Scott (hence probably a relative). He witnessed a charter for Stephen of Castlelaw (his brother) in 1448. In 1449/50, with the consent of his eldest son David, he renounced his superiority over the lands of Lochurd (and some in Kirkurd) to the chaplains of the prebend of Kirkurd (then part of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith). In 1450 he was on the panel for the 'retour' of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick. During the reign of James II he was one of the conservators of truces with England. He was a conservator of truces with England in 1449, 1451, 1453, 1457 and 1459, and he was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1451 he exchanged the lands of Heap for those of Milsington with John of Langlands. He could be the Walter who was among the conservators for the truce with England in 1451. He was on an assize for the Douglases in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the document creating the Barony of Kilmaurs for Alexander Cunningham; this was done while part of the expedition into England, led by James II. In 1453 he was granted the fees of the men of Teviotdale according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he led a group of Borderers against the remnants of the army raised to revenge the murder of William Douglas by the King, the battle taking place at Arkinholm. Thereby he was granted 'Quhytehestir' (Whitchester) in the Barony of Hawick (forfeited by John St. Michael), as well as lands in Selkirkshire. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he witnessed the document appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1458/9 he obtained lands at Abington, Phareholm and Glendonanrig, which had previously belonged to the Douglases. Along with his son Sir David he was also granted part of Langholm. In 1458 he had a charter for Glendowran and other lands in Lanarkshire (which may have been held by a cadet branch for another 3 centuries). He is recorded as Master Ranger of Ettrick ward from at least 1455 and was probably the 'Sir Walter of Kirkurd' listed as Master Ranger in 1467 when he had the farm of Eldinhope for his fee; he remained in this position until 1468. In 1461 (as superior of Branxholme) he transferred the lands of 'Kirktone and Toftis' to Katherine Inglis. In 1462 he granted a charter for an annual rent in Kirkurd. His sons David and Alexander witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1463. Also in 1463 he resigned his lands to the King, so that they could be regranted; this included Branxholme, Lanton, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Eckford, Kirkurd and Whitchesters. Branxholme was then erected into a Barony; this was for services rendered to King James III and his father James II, particularly against James of Douglas. In 1463/4 he was given a discharge for sureties that he was liable to pay to the King's officers, on account of helping to expel James Douglas. And in 1463/4 he witnessed the document where the King rewarded a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also present in Parliament in Edinburgh in 1464. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh. Also in 1464/5 he witness the document giving a reward to Robert Scott of Todshaw and other local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also on the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret, daughter of Peter Cockburn of Henderland, and appears to have had at least 3 sons (although things are still confused in these generations): David, who succeeded; James of Kirkurd and Hassendean, ancestor of the Scotts of Hassendean, Burnfoot and Burnhead (although there is some suggestion that he was not a full brother of David); and Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane, Howpasley, Horsleyhill, Gilmanscleuch, Newburgh and Tushielaw. It seems feasible that John of Thirlestane, who gained the half Barony of Wilton in 1483, was another son. Since in the 1464/5 bond between the Scotts and Kerrs, he took on the burden for 'James Langlands of that Ilk and his bairns, as one of his surname', and This Langlands was married to Marion Scott, then Marion may have been his daughter. His seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star, and the words 'S' WALTERI SCOT DE BUKCLUCH'. Walter (d.1471) eldest son of Sir David of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1465 he was contracted to marry Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. However, it is unclear that the marriage ever happened. In 1469/70, along with his father, he was made Keeper of Hermitage Castle by Archibald Douglas 'Bell the Cat'. However, he did not live much longer, predeceasing his father and dying without issue. He is mentioned in 1470 in a charter for lands in the Hermitage valley; he is there described as son and heir of David of Buccleuch. In June 1471 he was gifted the relief of the lands of West Lilliesleaf and Whitton. By the following year David (his brother) was the heir (although he may be the Walter who was witness, along with David of Buccleuch, to a sasine for the lands of Borthwickshiels in May 1471). Walter of Fenwick (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1456, possibly relating to a'retour' witnessed a few years earlier. Probably the same Walter of Fenwick is recorded as witness in 1484/5 to a charter where Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed for the precept in 1488 in which Sir Thomas Turnbull leased Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott, and also witnessed the same document. He may have been ancestor of later Scotts of Fenwick. Walter 3rd Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of George. He is said to have married a daughter of Scott of Hassendean during the reign of James II; however, it is unclear which Scott of Hassendean is intended. His children were John and Walter, both of whom succeeded – 'Walter his Son was cal'd a pretty man, He married with Scot the Laird of Hassindean, John, Walters Son, I have heard relation, Married the Laird of Riddels Daughter, And died without Succession; Walter succeeded his Brother John' [CWS]. Walter 5th Laird of Synton (d.c.1463), younger son of Walter and brother of John the 4th Laird. He married a daughter of Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and his sons included George, who succeeded. He is said to have died near the beginning of the reign of James III, but James IV is more likely. Walter (15th C.) listed among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for helping to capture John Douglas of Balveny. He is recorded as 'niger Walterus Scot', presumably a reference to a swarthy complexion. He is surely related to some of the other Scotts mentioned (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and Thomas), but it is unclear how. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of 'Wester Lymfleris' in Lanarkshire in 1478. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Whitehaugh (15th C.) recorded in the 1488 Charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He was listed among the heirs of Sir David of Buccleuch, the last to be explicitly related, suggesting he may have been a nephew of Sir David perhaps. He must have been related to David of Whitehaugh who is recorded in 1479, John in Whitehaugh, listed in 1501, and Philip of Heap, mentioned in 1508. Satchells genealogy of the Scotts of Whitehaugh seems to be largely unreliable, but perhaps he corresponds to the early Walter who Satchells says was a cousin of John, the famous faster of Borthwick. Walter of Heap (15th C.) member of the panel or the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Walter, grandson of Sir David in 1492. He was also 'Walterum Scot de Hep' in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) see Sir Walter of Howpasley. Sir Walter of Howpasley (d.1513) eldest son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. His brothers were Robert (who probably started the Scotts of Thirlestane); William, Abbot of Melrose; Adam; Alexander; and probably David of Tushielaw. In 1478 (possibly an error) he was ordered to pay William Inglis for the lands of Meiklehope in an arrangement involving his deceased father Alexander. He was witness to a transfer of land between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. He may be the Walter who acted as one of the Earl of Angus' Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484 there was a claim by Jane Douglas (widow of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch) for 8 years' rent of lands detained by him. He was mentioned in a charter of the Barony of Branxholme in 1488, clearly stated there to be son of the deceased Alexander. In 1491/2 he was one of the executors of the will of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed as tutor to young Walter ('Wicked Wat') of Buccleuch by Walter the 8th Laird and handled his affairs during his minority. In 1487–90 he was Master Ranger of Ettrick (and stated to be son of Alexander), when assigned the lands of Auldshope. In 1488 (probably just after the death of his father) and in the period 1484–90 these lands were said to be in the hands of him and his mother, Lady Joan Douglas; the lease was extended until 1496. In 1488 he was also leased the lands of Tushielaw, with David of Buccleuch as pledge. In 1493 he was surety for William Grahamslaw at Hassendean Kirk (however, Robert of Howpasley also served as surety in 1493, and was probably his bother). He was also allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of bringing William Scott, called 'Gyde', William's brother John (it is unclear whether they were related to him) and other 'Traitors of Levyn' to raid the lands of Harehead, as well as resetting Henry Scott and others. In 1494/5 he was surety for Adam 'in Auldinnischop' (probably his brother), Robert of Deloraine, David son of James in Hassendean, Adam Turnbull in Hornshole, William Dickson in Ladhope, Thomas Lauder of Todrig and Andrew Dickson in Buccleuch. Also in 1494/5 he is probably the Walter recorded being 'of Tushielaw' (since these lands were also held by his family) when he was surety for David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whithope. He was additionally listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Turnbull of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. It is unclear if he or Walter of Buccleuch was the Walter listed as Ranger for Ettrick in 1494–6 (with John as Deputy Ranger). It is unclear when he ended his position as Custodian for the Ward of Ettrick, since it is difficult to separate him from Walter of Buccleuch (his cousin's son), who held a similar role around 1500. In 1499 he was assigned the lands of 'Laudehop' (presumably Ladhope on the Yarrow), with the pledge being the Laird of Buccleuch; he also acted as pledge for Walter of Buccleuch in some other lands. He may also be the Walter of Tushielaw who was 'coronator principalis de Ettrik' according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, when he was liable for the fines of David Scott, Adam Scott and James Laidlaw; it was stated that since he had no means within the Sheriffdom of Selkirk, the charge was to be transmitted to the Sheriff of Peebles. He was also listed as 'Walterus Scot de Howpaslot' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He had a 'letter of reversion' for the lands of Appletreehall with Alexander Lord Home in 1502. Also in 1502 he served as surety (along with Robert of Stirches) for Patrick, son of Adam 'in Hardwodhill'; also mentioned is Alexander Scott, probably his brother. In that same year he served as surety for his brother Alexander, who had remission for several thefts (from John in 'Valis' and from David Pringle out of 'Fechane') and for Adam Turnbull in Hornshole. Additionally in 1502 William in Broadmeadows had remission for several crimes, including injuring him at Tushielaw (when he was described being 'de tuschelaw') and he was surety for Adam 'in aldinershope' (probably Annelshop) and Adam in Tushielaw (who may have been related to him). In 1504 he was one of the 'Bailies in that part' appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in lands in Annandale. Also in 1504 he was fined at the Justice-aire in Dumfries for failing to give suit for his lands of 'Rig' (i.e. Caerlenrig). In 1504/5, along with David Hoppringle, George Hepburn and William Middlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which were sold to Robert Scott of Stirches. In 1506/7 he was 'tutoure to the Larde of Bukcleuch' (the young Walter, who had just succeeded) when he gave in his tutory accounts. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Ladhope in Ettrick Forest. He was still 'tutor' in 1509, when he was said to be the closest male relative. In 1509 he was on the panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. He is probably the Laird of Howpasley called to represent his lands at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh in 1510. In 1510 he was fined along with 35 others of 'destroying the Woods of Ettrik-Forest'. Also in 1510 he was recorded in a pledge by Margaret, wife of James Scott in Falside. He was recorded as part of an assize in Edinburgh in early 1513. He married a daughter of Elliot of Larriston (perhaps Elizabeth, based on the names of his daughter Janet's children). The gift of wardship of his lands and marriage (meaning the financial gains from the contract etc.) of his daughter went to James Lundie in 1517. His daughter and heiress (at least for some lands) was Janet, who appears to have firstly married John Baird, Lord Posso (who died in 1527) and secondly married Thomas MacDowell; she transferred Midshiels and Appletreehall to her uncle Robert in 1532/3. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He is one of the most prominent local Lairds who died at Flodden – 'Of the first Sir Walter, e're was of that Roum, He was a man of Credit and Renown, He married Elliot Daughter to the Laird of Lariston' [CWS]. Walter (15th C.) name of 2 men recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, in addition to Walter of Howpasley. 'Waltero Scote' was left 3 sheep and 'magno Waltero Scot' was left 20 shillings. Walter of Whitchester (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he was surety for Thomas Brown in Minto. It may be that this is an error for Robert of Whitchester. Sir Walter (1470s–1504) 8th Laird of Buccleuch, grandson of Sir David, who he succeeded in 1492, his father David having died first. He was the only child of David and Jane Douglas, daughter of the Earl of Angus. He must have been the Walter of Branxholme receiving the lands of Mangerton in a sasine of 1484/5 (with George Fairneylaw as notary). In his grandfather's last testament he was granted £40 and 11 oxen and made a 'tutor' of William Turnbull of Minto. In 1492 he succeeded to the lands of Branxholme, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Milsington and Kirkurd. However, he received sasine of half of Branxholme, together with Eckford and Langton only in 1500, the lands having been held in ward by the Crown for 7 years; this suggests he only reached majority in this year. He was still superior of the Barony of Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) recorded in sasines of 1493 and 1495. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1494/5 he acted as surety at Jedburgh Justice-aire for George Young, who had been captured at Minto. In 1494 he obtained a decree from the Lords of Council regarding the earlier plunder of his grandfather's lands and house at Buccleuch. He may be the Walter who leased the lands of Whitshiels (near Langholm) in 1494. He is probably the 'Walteri Scot' who was made custodian of the Ward of Ettrick in at least the period 1496–98 (although there may be confusion with Walter of Howpasley); in 1496 he was liable for the fines of Adam Scott and others and he was given the rental of 'Aldanehop' for his fee as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. In 1499 he was tenant of Deloraine and 'Warldishop'. In 1500 he was infefted in the lands of Grahamslaw by the Earl of Bothwell, and also his uncle Robert of Allanhaugh resigned Whitchesters into his hands as security for a loan. He was granted the lands of Whithope (in the Barony of Hawick) in a charter of 1502. Also in 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, failing to 'give suit' for his lands of Branxholme, Lanton and Eckford (as well as his lands of Buccleuch in Selkirkshire). Additionally he was surety for William Dalgleish in Braidhaugh and for John Cockburn in Milsington. His name was mentioned in connection with negotiations for the marriage of King James IV with Margaret, daughter of Henry VII of England in 1502/3, and he witnessed the infeftment of Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest at Galashiels in 1503. Also in 1503 he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. In 1503 he witnessed 5 sasines relating to Queen Margaret's attorneys, done at Methven, Menteith, Stirling, Linlithgow and Galashiels. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford, who was widow of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk. She long outlived him, being burnt within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter ('Wicked Wat'). A 2nd son was William of Whithope. He was said to have been one of the few nobles to escape from Flodden, but this seems more likely to have been his son, Sir Walter. His widow and son are recorded being assigned the lease of Deloraine and Warleshope in 1504; she had liferent of these farms in 1510. Walter of Synton (d.c.1500) probably son of George, he is usually referred to as being the 7th of Synton. However, there is sometimes confusion with his grandson, Walter. He is mentioned in family writs in 1487 and flourished during the reign of James IV. Some early family histories (e.g. in Scott of Satchell's book) say he married a daughter of Cockburn of Henderland and secondly a daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk, but this does not seem to be correct. His son was Robert of Stirches and later of Synton (however, the relationship between the Scotts of Synton, Stirches and Headshaw are confused in these generations). Scott of Satchells says that with his 2nd wife he had 4 sons (Robert of Whitslade, William of Huntly, James of Satchells and Thomas of Whitehaughbrae) and 8 daughters 2nd wife, all of whom married (the daughters to 'Black Ormiston', Langlands of that Ilk, Turnbull of Tofts, the Laird of Alemoor, Scott of Falnash, Middlemas of Chapel and Scott of Kirkhope), but again this seems to be confused – 'It was in the fourteen hundred eighty seven, Walter the first of Whitslade then, Was Hardin's elder Brother, He married a fair comely Dame, Daughter to the Laird of Riddel' [CWS], 'For Walter he was George's Son, The elder brother of William of Hardin, This Walter Scot ye's understand, He married Cockburn a Daughter of Henderland, And betwixt them they got one Son, The Lady died when she was young, Their Son Walter did to Riddel ride, And took the Lairds Daughter to his Bride, His Father Walter was not an old man, He married another Daughter of Riddels then, And left Sinton unto his Son, And then in White-slade he sat down, Betwixt him and Margaret Riddel was procreat Twelve Bairns that was all married' [CWS]. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of James of Hassendean (probably the same as James of Kirkurd) who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Robert of Hartshaw. In 1499 he gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope to be assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where 'Hartschaw' was (perhaps an error for Headshaw). Probably the same Walter was feued the east steading of Langhope in 1510, and was the son and heir of Robert who feued the west steading of Gildhouse (also called Dodbank) in the same year. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1510) probably descendant (perhaps son) of John of Headshaw, son of Walter of Synton. He is recorded as 'of Eidschaw' when witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for lands of Mangerton going to the Scotts of Branxholme. In 1484 he was 'Walter Scot de Edschau' when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1484/5 he also witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters. His son David leased lands in the Ettrick valley in 1486. In 1487 his son Robert bought the lands of Boonraw from James Newton of Dalcove, and he was one of the witnesses to the sasine (this Robert appears to be the same as Robert of Stirches). In 1493 he was 'of Edschaw' when he was allowed to 'compone; for being associated with 'the thieves and traitors of Leven'. In 1493 and 1494/5 his son Robert was surety for Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig. He is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He may be the same Walter of Headshaw recorded in 1502 when he had a remission for stealing 8 oxen and 4 horses from Robert Lauder. John Scott of 'Valis' acted as surety (and hence may have been a close relative). Also in 1502 his son Walter had remission for stealing sheep from farms at Yair, Selkirk, Cauldshiels and Broadmeadows, with James in Ashkirk and Robert of Stirches acting as sureties. In 1502 he and Walter in Synton (his son) were sureties for John in Walls and also in 1502 he was surety for William in Fenwick. Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw is recorded in 1510, so surely his descendants. His sons may have been: Philip, his heir; David; Simon of Dryhope; Robert; Walter; and Thomas. Walter (15th/16th C.) described as son of Walter 'of Edschaw' (i.e. Headshaw) in 1502. He had remission for several thefts, specifically stealing 80 sheep from William Ker at Yair, 60 sheep from Robert Brown and John Turnbull at Selkirk, 60 sheep from the Abbot of Kelso and Ralph Ker at Cauldshiels (this incident perhaps also involving Adam Turnbull in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton), 80 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this probably also involving Adam Turnbull, as well as David 'the Lady' in Stirches), 60 cattle from Ralph Ker at Whitlawhouse, a horse and goods from Alexander Pringle, 2 horses from a house in Selkirk, another horse from Selkirk Castle, a grey horse from William Ker in Whitmuir, a heifer from John Scott of Haining, 6 oxen from Haining, and a horse and 4 oxen from the Hospital of St. Andrew in Peebles; also for resetting David Turnbull, John Somerville, Christopher Taylor, Edmund Taylor and the 'traitors of Leven'. James Scott in Ashkirk and Robert Scott in Stirches acted as sureties, the remission being described at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His daughter may have been the Janet who married Walter of Whitehaugh. The Walter in Headshaw who was recorded in 1532 and 1533 is probably his nephew. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being 'in le newhalburnhed'. Along with Thomas Brown in Cavers he was surety for George Turnbull in Weens (who was one of the men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh). He was presumably tenant at Burnhead, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Burnhead or Over Newhall. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when John Elliot in Foulshiels was convicted of stealing 100 sheep from his farm at Hartwoodburn. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean. At the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 he had remission for stealing 7 cows from William Wood in Williamhope, 2 horses from William Wood in Broadmeadows 14 cows, 4 horses and various goods from Thomas Denholm in Blackgrain, 24 sheep from George Bonniton in Whitlaw House and Greenhead, and 28 sheep belonging to the Abbot of Kelso and William Lowry in Cauldshielhouse. His surety was John in Hassendean, his brother. He may have been related to William and John, sons of James of Broadmeadows, who were recorded at the same Justice-aire. Walter of Midgehope (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for resetting David 'de francia', especially in the theft of cows from Glensax. Walter Scott of Howpasley (who also held Tushielaw) was his surety and hence perhaps related. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (15th/16th C.) younger son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester, with his mother being Elizabeth Tweedie. His mother's 'tocher' had been the lands of Wester Deanshouses in Newland Parish, Peeblesshire. In 1519 he sold his interest in these lands back to the Tweedie family. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Adam. Along with his father he is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for 'fermes' of their steadings in Ettrick Forest. He may have been son of Adam who was son of Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. Walter (15th/16th C.) had the 'fermes' of Shaws and Berrybush remitted to him in 1513. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the 1526 remission for Borderers involved in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being 'in the Haucheid', which is probably the Haughhead in Eckford Parish (owned by William Scott in 1588), although it could be the Haughhead near where the Boonraw Burn joins the Teviot. His sons William and Adam are also listed. Walter (15th/16th C.) probably the son of James of Ashkirk, who was listed in the remission given in 1526 to a large number of Borderers for attacking the Earl of Arran. He was probably also related to the John of Ashkirk who was killed in 1526. He was recorded being 'in Ashkirk' in about 1530 when he assigned half of Lilliesleaf Mill to his brother William and his wife Beatrix. He may be the Walter 'in Askyrk' who witnessed documents for the Scotts of Headshaw and for the Scotts and Veitches of Synton in 1531. He was listed in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. He was described as 'in Askirk' when part of an inquest at Jedburgh in 1533 regarding lands at Longnewton. In 1535 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Synton and another for Walter of Headshaw. He is probably the deceased Walter in Ashkirk whose widow Margaret Falside and son and heir Walter are recorded in Selkirk in 1539 acknowledging receipt of interest from the subtenants in Ashkirk and Falside. Sir Walter 'Wicked Wat' (1499/1500–1552) 9th Laird of Buccleuch and Branxholm, son of Sir Walter, whom he succeeded in 1504, with a reinfeftment of his lands in 1516 and a 'retour' in 1517. In 1508 he had a charter of Branxholme and Kirkurd. His 'tutor' when he was a minor was Walter of Howpasley. In 1512 he was feued the lands of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, along with his mother Elizabeth Ker. He was probably made a knight on the eve of Flodden and is said to have been one of the few Scots noblemen to have escaped the battle. Throughout most of his life there was conflict with the Douglases and the Kers of Cessford, as well as many Border raids. In 1515/6 he and his mother Elizabeth had a 'notorial transumpt of papal indulgences' seeking a condessor to absolve them from all crimes and sins. In 1519 and again in 1524 (confirmed in 1525) he was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, but also 'Melroseland', Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir and East Teviotdale; this was said to be for the 'divers diligent labours and travails' that he and his family and friends had done towards the Abbey, and the appointment was hereditary afterwards. In the 1524 charter he was assigned the farms of Northhouse and Thirlestane for his fee. In 1523 he and his wife Elizabeth Carmichael had a regrant of the family charter of the Barony of Eckford. In 1524 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh over a dispute with the Queen-Dowager over lands in Ettrick Forest, but he managed to escape. Later in 1524 he was part of an unsuccessful coup in Edinburgh, along with the Earls of Angus and Lennox and others. In July 1525 there was also remission to a group containing him (and William, Master of Glencairn) for a breach of peace and crime committed in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and that they help in 'repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers'; on the back of this document is an obligation to them for 'the slauchtir of Duchemen, etc.' In 1525 he was part of a bond among Border Barons to assist the Earl of Angus in keeping the peace. In 1526 he was pardoned (as leader of a large number of Borderers) for his role in gathering 'in feir of weir' in Edinburgh and then attempting to capture the Earl of Arran at Stirling (the events probably taking place a couple of years earlier). Also in 1526 he led a group of Scotts, Elliots and their followers to try to capture the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. This battle against Angus and his local supporters (the Kers and Homes) led to the loss of many men, and also the death of Ker of Cessford, which fuelled the later feud with the Kerrs. He was exiled for this act, but had remission along with several other Scotts and Turnbulls in 1527. There was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Synton, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. He was summoned to appear in Selkirk in 1527, according to a royal breve. He was fully pardoned in 1527/8 (probably because the young King had encouraged him in the attack at Skirmish Field) and was made Principal Cupbearer to the King, as well as Warden of the western part of the Middle March. In 1528 he was charged, by the King and his Lords who were at Jedburgh and Melrose, to show his support to the King; he came 'in ane ledderin cote and ane blak bonet on his heid' ready to obey the King's commands. And in 1529 there was also royal ratification of an Act of Parliament stating that he had come to Melrose specifically at the request of the King and so was innocent of treason. In 1527 he had an agreement with James Murray of Falahill to end the feud between the Scotts and Murrays. In 1528 he was 'oversman' to the arbitrators chosen to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. Also in 1528 he had a discharge from the King for paying the non-entry fees for the Lordship of Bedrule; he also had the right to arrange the marriage of the heir of Bedrule. He infefted his son and heir David in all of his lands in 1528. In 1528/9 he had a 'discharge' from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for his wardship and related fees and 'non-entry' fees associated with several local Scotts. In 1529 he also received Angus's former Lordship of Jedforest. About the same time he also had remission for 'breaking ward' from Blackness Castle. In 1530 he came 'in the King's will' for the murder of John, Lord Flemming, and was fined for not entering 6 men for the same crime. Shortly after the raid on Border thieves, which James V arranged in 1530, he slew the 'verrie crewall Thief' Robert Johnstone 'to gratiffie the King', but this led to a feud with the Johnstones. In 1530/1 he received the hereditary office of bailie of the monastery of Melrose. In 1531 he was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle (for unspecified crimes), his surety being Sir James Hamilton. In 1532 there was remission for Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier for the 'tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knycht, in cumpany with Inglismen, and tresonabill inbringing of thaim within the realme'. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. Also in 1532 he is probably the Sir Walter who, along with Robert, made a public complaint in Selkirk about John Hepburn 'pretended rector of Hawyk' who had claimed teinds from them and then acted to have them excommunicated. In 1532 the Earl of Northumberland burned Branxholme Tower and he made a retaliatory raid into England, laying waste Northumberland as far as the River Beamish, with a force of 3,000 men. In 1533 he complained in Selkirk that a precept from Alexander 'Carmag', to remove him from certain lands 'had na officiar nemmit ... was of na strencht norcht valour'. In 1534 the King discharged him of the bond he had made for the good behaviour of Adam and Gavin Turnbull. His charter for the lands of Westhouses and Easter Mains of Hassendean was revoked by the King in 1535, as well as his charter of the superiority of the lands of Harden. This was for supposedly helping Lord Dacre burn Denholm and Cavers in 1535, for which he was briefly imprisoned; his estates were only restored in 1542/3 (as ratified by Queen Mary in 1545). In 1538 he was accused of 'intromitting' over lands in Jedforest that had previously belonged to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1539 he issued an instruction that Douglas of Cavers should not deal with certain (unspecified) lands. Also in 1539 he had a bond (along with his son David and Robert of Allanhaugh) with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas, son of Adam. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 there are records of payments made to the 'King's shepherds' in his lands of parts of Ringwoodfield, Broadlee, Philhope, Bellendean, Buccleuch and Eskdalemoor; this was presumably since he had temporarily forfeited these lands to the Crown. In 1540 the was in ward when the King gave him permission to pursue legal actions, particularly against Janet, daughter of Walter of Howpasley. Around 1540 he (along with Robert of Wamphray) was released on condition that he help keep peace on the Border, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges; he also agreed to take on the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if Lord Maxwell did not take it, and also to assist Lord Bothwell at Hermitage. In 1540/1 several other noblemen served as caution for him when he was prisoner in Edinburgh Castle. Then in 1541 he appeared in Elgin as instructed by the King and was odered to stay north of the Spey and later to remain within Dumbarton. Also in that year he raised an action against Scott of Allanhaugh (who must have been a close relative) for attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff. Furthermore he was accused of being responsible for the death of Englishman Jenkin Pott, along with Dand Ker. He could be the Walter who was 'provost for the time' in 1541/2 in Selkirk. In 1542 he was also accused of stealing the King's own sheep from the lands of Melrose Abbey; presumably such activity led to his later nickname 'Wicked Wat'. Also in 1542 there was a letter summoning him to appear before the King. Another letter of 1542/3 certifies that his livestock and goods, which had been held by the Captain of Crawford are to be returned to him. Also in 1542/3 a letter from Mary, Queen of Scots, entitles him to speak and deal with Englishmen; this is confirmed in 1547, with permission for him to 'intercommune with the Protector, army, and council of England'. In 1543 he was made hereditary Keeper of Newark Castle (through the patronage of Cardinal Beaton, who was related to his 3rd wife). In 1543 he signed the 'Secret Bond' with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English plans for the infant Queen Mary (to marry Prince Edward of England). Also in 1543 he was chosen as Provost of Selkirk. He led large Scots contingents at Ancrum Moor in 1544 and Pinkie in 1547. It is said that it was his suggestion that the Scots fight on foot at Ancrum Moor, this leading the English to imagine they were abandoning the battle and thus to mount a disatrous attack. However, he was also imprisoned twice in Edinburgh for opposing Margaret.

In 1544 the Abbot of Newbattle gave 100 merks for 19 years to him and his son William for the 'grete plesouris and steid done and to be done' for defending the abbey's lands and steadings from 'thieves and broken men'. Also in 1544 he made an arrangement with Marion Pringle, widow of Andrew Ker of Primside over rentals on her lands of Broadmeadows. In 1544 he was granted lands in Ettrick Forest (including 'Gawlayschellis', and in 1546/7 was granted the tower at Hassendean (and other lands) by Melrose Abbey. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. Also in 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. In 1547 he aroused the enmity of the Kers of Cessford, who instigated Lord Grey to lead a raiding party, which burned and pillaged Hawick, Selkirk and his lands in the valleys of the Ale, Yarrow, Ettrick, Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick, as well as killing his mother in Catslack Tower. In 1547/8 he was involved in a bond of loyalty to the Crown along with the Kers. In 1548/9 he was granted the lands of Easter Craik, which had been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston; this was for service defending the kingdom against the English and 'for the great losses and burning of his lands'. In 1548 he had a letter from Mary of Guise (the Queen Dowager) supporting him in all endeavours, in return for his 'band of manrent'. Also in 1548 he received ward of the lands belonging to Turnbull of Minto, until the heir was of lawful age. In 1549 he was (re)appointed Provost of Selkirk. In 1549 he petitioned the Lords of Council for the right to post summonses at the market crosses of Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Haddington, Hawick and Melrose for Walter Ker of Cessford, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others who had helped the English in the spoliation of the Borders, and also of attacking his lands at Newark, within Ettrick Forest and in the Borthwick valley. He was made Warden of (half of) the Middle Marches in 1550 (between Minto Craig and Craik Cross) and also Warden and Justiciar of Liddesdale in 1550/1, with permission to hold courts and in pursuing fugitives 'burn their dwellings, and put their families to fire and sword'. In 1550 John, Archbishop of St. Andrews had a bond of maintenance with him, in response to his bond of manrent. In 1551 there were letters from the Queen, to be proclaimed at market crosses, in support of his work as Warden, and an Act of the Privy Council brought by him for the same purpose, laying down rules that were expected also to be imposed by the English Wardens. Also in 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh', his name appearing first. In 1551/2 there is a 'letter of inhibition' by him against Walter Ker of Cessford and others to prevent them disposing of property to avoid paying his claimed damages. In the middle of 1552 he had a letter excusing him of attendance at inquests etc., on account of his duties as Warden and since he was 'now past the dait of lx zeris'. He was slain on Edinburgh High Street by Ker supporters and is buried at St. Mary's in Hawick. The gravestone of his natural son, Sir Walter of Goldielands, eulogises thus: 'the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh vithin ye nicht being vnaccvmpaneit vith his friendis or servandis onlie except tva of his dependeris attending on him not respecting nor svspecting thair intentivne: This happinit in September the 53 zeir of his age ye zeir of God 1552'. He married 3 times and had several children, including: Sir David, who died unmarried; Sir William of Kirkurd, who died just a few months before him, but whose son Walter succeeded; Walter; David of Stobicote; John; Grizel, who married William, 7th Lord Borthwick, and later John Cairncross of Colmslie; Dorothy; Janet, who married John Cranston of Cranston, and later Robert Scott of Haining; Margaret, who probably married Robert Scott of Thirlestane; and Christian. One of his illegitimate sons was Sir Walter of Goldielands. Another daughter may have been Jean, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh and later Gavin Eliott of Stobs. In 1519/20 he entered into a marriage contract to marry his daughter Janet, (or failing her, another daughter, Christian, or any other woman he named!) to John, son of James Gledstains of Cocklaw; however, it is unclear who married Gledstains in the end. The contract also stated that if Cocklaw was inherited in the female line, then the heir should marry his son John. In 1551 he was appointed 'tutor-dative' to his nephew and heir Walter, son of David. But he was succeeded by his grandson, Sir Walter (so there is some confusion here). His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Bartholomew Carmichael of that Ilk; she died before 1530, after giving him his eldest 2 sons. In 1530/1 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, sister of one of his bitter enemies, and widow of George Turnbull of Bedrule. This marriage ended soon after in divorce, with no children. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to received a sum of money. His third wife was Janet, daughter of John Betoun (or Beaton) of Creich; she was the model for the 'Ladye' of the 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' and survived her husband by 16 years. Her sister also married Sir Walter's son Sir William ('Whitecloak') – 'Bards long shall tell How Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the streets of high Dunedin Saw lances gleam, and falchions redden And heard the slogan's deadly yell – Then the chief of Branksome fell' [SWS]. Walter (16th C.) witness to an instrument in Aberdeenshire in 1537, relating to lands in the Lordship of 'Keig and Monimvsk'. Walter (16th C.) recorded in a transaction in Selkirk in 1541/2 as the 'well known man Walter Scot provost of Selkirk'. He is probably the same as one of the other local Walters. Walter (16th C.) listed as being 'in the Hanyng' in the 1526 pardon that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is there listed between William and George, tenants of Phaup, who may have been related. He was 'in Haining' when he witnessed documents in Selkirk in 1528 and 1529/30. He is also listed as 'in Haining' when part of an inquest in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the younger son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden, and who acted as 'tutor' to his nephew Thomas in the 1530s. In 1531 he was 'tutor of Haining' when his cousin John of Myres gave him his lands in Lilliesleaf. This was further confirmed in 1531/2, with Robert Turnbull (also tutor of Howden) as one of the witnesses. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme. He was 'tutor of Haynyng' in 1534 when his lands were described as lying to the east of Howden. Also in 1534 he promised to bind himself to Thomas Graham and John Brown. In 1535 he witnessed a couple of documents in Selkirk. When Thomas succeeded to the Haining in 1538, he requested payment of a fee as tutor. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539 and was also on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. Perhaps the same Walter in Haining occupied the Crown lands of Haining and Hyndhope in 1541. In 1542 he (along with Walter in Headshaw) is mentioned giving advice to Robert regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Roberton (16th C.) son of John of Roberton, who was mentioned several times in the 1520s. He is recorded in 1535 in a charter executed at Selkirk in which he sold Roberton and Howcleuch to his 'brother-german' Stephen 'in Valis' (probably 'Walls' in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) and Stephen's son John. Also in 1535 in Selkirk he asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his part in the killing of his brother John Hunter; the circumstances of this killing are not given. In 1536 he was 'son and heir of the deceased John Scot of Robertoune' when he received money from Michael Scott of Aikwood for the lands of 'Hirdmenstoun' (presumably Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was not able to write and so signed 'with my own hand at the pen'. He probably had no children of his own. Walter (16th C.) 2nd son of George of Borthaugh, by his 2nd wife, and younger brother of John (who had a different mother). There was a dispute in 1528 over the succession to the estates of Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and 'the Wallis in Drynisdaile' (probably the place now called 'St. Michael's Walls', in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father swore on his deathbed that he never had dispensation to marry his 1st wife, who was his cousin. The panel ruled in favour of his brother John, but gave him the '40s land of the Quhomnis, and 40s land of Woltoun Greyne', along with a 10-shilling land in 'sum uthir peciable and proffatable place'. These were probably 'Whames' and somewhere around 'Wiltonburn' perhaps. Walter (16th C.) son of John, Burgess of Selirk. In 1532/3 he was given sasine of half of his father's land, which was one quarter of East Haining, with his mother Margaret Scott to be reserved a redemption. He may be the same Walter who held lands in East Haining in 1543. Walter (16th C.) baker in Edinburgh. In 1541 he was tenant in 'Kirksteid of Farmynhope' in the Yarrow valley. This was adjacent to Dryhope. He was thus probably related to Scotts in that area. He was baker to James V and Mary of Guise. Probably the same baker in Edinburgh had a son Alexander (d.bef. 1551), whose grandson, Alexander of 'the Dene' (i.e. Dean village) was involved in legal cases over property in Gray's Close around 1600. Walter 'Wat' of Synton and Stirches (d.c.1561) eldest son of Robert of Stirches and Synton. His brothers were William and probably David. He was known as 'Watty Fire-the-Braes'. He is referred to as the 9th or 10th Laird of Synton, but there appears to be much confusion with his grandfather, Walter. There is also confusion over precisely who was the first Scott of Harden, but it may have been this Walter (or his father Robert, or brother William). He is probably the 'Walteri Scott de Styrkschaw' whose brother William was a witness to the 1507/8 document relating to the tower in Hawick 'between the bridges' for the Scotts of Whitchesters. He may be the Walter of Synton who was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor in 1509. He is probably the Walter, son of the deceased Robert, who is recorded owning a 5 merk land in Synton in 1510 (in an indenture for neighbouring lands between the Erskines and Kerrs). He transfered the lands of Harden to his brother William, according to a sasine of 1512, as confirmed in a charter of 1535 (except apparently for one acre of land at the eastern side). In 1517 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and the Gledstains. He was probably the Walter of Synton who appeared before the Lords at Edinburgh in 1524/5 to swear an oath to keep the peace in support of the Earl of Angus, who was Warden, and the Walter 'of Syntoun' who was listed on the pardon of 1526 for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran. Additionally he was named in the letter of treason, nominally written by King James V, for his role in the Skirmish at Melrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. However, in 1526/7 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. And there was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. Also in 1527 he witnessed the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. He was part of the arbitration panel to decide on the dispite succession of the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He was also probably the 'Walter Scot in Syntone' recorded in a discharge of 'non-entry' in 1528/9 between the Earl of Bothwell and several local Scotts; there he was holder of the lands of Boonraw and Outersiderig, as well as Alemoor. He was mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to attempt to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs, and also mentioned in 1535 in the valuation for lands of the Archbishop of St. Andrews. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvod' and in 1530 witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. In 1531 he, along with his brother-in-law Adam and Walter Veitch were involved in a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he acted as an arbitrator for Isabel Murray in a dispute with her son Walter in Headshaw. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. He may be the Walter 'in Sintoun' who in 1537 was warned to remove himself and his servants from some lands belonging to Andrew Ker of Greenhead; his procurator was Thomas and another Walter was among the witnesses. He also witnessed the installation of Simon Scott as Rector of Rankilburn. He was witness to a charter of 1540 in which Simon Scott of Fenwick resigned lands of Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden. He may be the Walter 'in Syntoun' recorded in 1541 as tenant of half of the lands of Huntlee, as well as Whitehaugh Brae, Langhope and Dodbank (in Ettrick). In 1544 he witnessed a transaction for Sir Walter of Branxholme and Marion Pringle. In 1547/8 he was one of the supporters of Sir Walter of Branxholme when they had a bond, along with the Kerrs, who had sided with the English at Pinkie and burned Hawick, etc. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep good order and deliver up criminals. Also in 1550 he was one of the 2 curators for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step-son of Sir Walter of Branxholme). In 1551 he was surety for Robert Ormiston of New Hall (later of Old Melrose) and Robert's nephew James Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1553/4 he was listed (transcribed 'of Lyntoun') among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1561 he was (along with Thomas of Haining and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance; his son Robert appeared in his place and promised to produce 'Hob Flescheour', who was accused of theft in Berwick. He married Marjorie, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland, and secondly married a Riddell (perhaps Margaret, daughter of James of that Ilk). In some early histories it is claimed that he (or his son perhaps) married a Riddell who was his father's second wife's younger sister, It was probably his son John who was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. His eldest son John (by his first marriage) probably predeceased him. Robert, a son to his 2nd wife, was probably the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Stirches, while a 3rd son, Thomas, was probably ancestor of the Whitehaughbrae branch. His son Walter (although this could be an error for his grandson) is recorded in 1561 when he entered Sandy Fletcher for crimes against an Englishman. Scott of Satchells also suggests other sons (William of Huntly and James of Satchells), but these seem unclear. His 8 daughters were said by Scott of Satchells to have married (in order): the Laird of Black Ormiston; Langlands of that Ilk (possibly James if this was the mid-1500s); the Laird of 'Tofturnbull' (although it is unclear where this is, perhaps a Turnbull of Tofts); the Laird of 'Ailmour' (presumably Alemoor, although it is unclear who this could be); the Laird of Falnash' (presumably an Elliot); the Laird of 'Chapel-Middelmiss' (possibly William Middlemas of Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish); a daughter who is missed out; and the youngest who firstly married Philip Scott of Kirkhope (brother of Robert of Thirlestane), secondly Walter Scott of Woll (and not William, as stated in one source, although it is still unclear who this was) and thirdly Alexander Chisholme of Parkhill (who did in fact exist in the late 16th century). He may have been referred to as 'Auld Synton', and is supposed to have died at the age of 90. It is suggested that he gave up the lands of Synton (although not the designation) to his eldest son John, and then lived himself at Whitslade, which he inherited through his first wife. His 2nd wife died at Whitslade in 1585 – 'He was a worthy Gentleman, And kept a great Menzie: There was ninety years past o're his head Before that he did die' [CWS]. Walter (16th C.) recorded being 'in Assindane' (i.e. Hassendean) in 1537. This was in a (poorly preserved) document in the Selkirk Protocol Books in which he was a witness for a transaction involving Katherine Scott and her sister Janet. Adam was another witness and may have been related. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded as 'in Hassindene' in 1564 when his son James was one of the men tried (along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others) for the murder of David of Hassendean. Walter (16th C.) recorded being 'in Fausyd' (i.e. Falside) in 1537, in a document also mentioning Alan Pringle, Margaret Pringle and messenger John Cob. Walter of Stirches (16th C.) recorded as 'Walter Scot of Styrkschaw' in 1528/9 when he was a witness to a discharge of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, related to several local Scotts. Walter of Synton is mentioned there, showing that they were not the same man (which is confusing). Walter (15th/16th C.) successor to Philip of Whitehaugh (and Heap). He succeeded to Wester Heap in 1532. He married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Headshaw. His sons were: William, who died unmarried; and Walter, who sold the estate to his uncle Robert of Headshaw. Walter (d.bef. 1535) owner of 3 husbandlands in Denholm. His widow Janet Scott had sasine of these land in 1535, at that time occupied by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. The 'bailies in that part' were William Cranston and James 'Spuin'. Walter 'Wat' (d.bef. 1550) recorded as being called 'of teviddaile' in 1550 when his son William took sasine for the lands of Colifort in the Slitrig valley. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William 'callit Wille of Todsschawhauch' who was a resident of Whames at the same time. He was 'in Todschaw haucht' when his son Adam witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Walter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as 'Waltero Scot in Hawick'. He may be related to some of the near contemporary men who were 'in Hawick'. Walter (16th C.) Bailie for John Wemyss of that Ilk. He was recorded in a memorandum in Perthshire in 1554. Allan was a witness and possibly related. Walter (16th C.) tenant in 'Ladinvrguhard' or 'Ladynvrquhard' (i.e. Leden Urquhart) in Perthshire. In 1556 he was surety in a legal document relating to the yearly payment of grain from these lands. Walter (16th C.) became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1559/60. He was a 'sclater' and his 'Dutie given to Lord Setoun, provost, be right of his office'. Walter of Dryhope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when, along with Sir Walter of Birkenside (and Howpasley), they were to enter into ward in Edinburgh a man from Laidhope. Perhaps the same Walter of Dryhope was in 1599 list among other Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but may be the same as a contemporary Walter. Sir Walter 'Wat' of Goldielands (1531/2–1596) natural son of 'Wicked Wat', to an unknown mother. He was sometimes referred to as 'the Laird's Wat'. It is said that his father built the tower at Goldielands for him, but if so this must have been shortly before his murder in 1552. He led the Scotts during the minority of the heir to Buccleuch (possibly for an extended period, since there was no heir of age for more than 30 of the subsequent years). He must thus have been powerful and important locally, so it is odd that so little is known about him. He is probably the 'Walter Scot sone naturale of umquhile Walter Scot of Broxholme Knycht' who is listed among Scotts who appeared before the Privy Council in 1562 to promise to end their feud with the Kers. He appeared personally as leader of the Scotts when they made a bond to keep the peace with the Kers of Cessford and others in 1564. He and James Gledstains of Cocklaw presented a number of Hawick residents at a court case in 1574, possibly related to a raid. Also in that year he was one of the witnesses to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme (being transcribed as 'of Gorlandis' and 'Gordelandis'). Additionally in 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. He was probably the 'Laird's Wat', who was present at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. Also in 1575 he had an assurance with Lord Borthwick. In 1577 he was referred to as the effective leader of the Scotts in a letter from Walter Ker of Cessford to the Regent Morton. In 1576 he was cautioner for several Borderers accused of rieving and in he was a representative of Johnsone of that Ilk in an agreement between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (he was surety for several men). He was then found liable for the fines, which, if he failed to pay, would be taken from his goods or lands. In 1579 he was Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose, having been appointed by James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was tutor to the young Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch) when he gave possession of the lands of 'Elestoun' (or 'Illistoun') to Robert of Haining; in 1580 he was in duspute with this same Robert, who claimed that, as Provost of Selkirk, he had appointed Robert as Depute Provost. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580, the Earl of Morton (Walter of Branxholme's legal guardian) made a promise on his behalf for the behaviour of 'Branxhelme's men dwelling in Teviotdaill'. In 1580 he was the Bailie of Buccleuch who raised a party to follow those who had raided the Gladstains' farm at Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded and captured along with about 40 others, when they were set upon by a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots on their return through Liddesdale. He had to arrange to pay Lancie Armstrong, Laird of Whithaugh, for their release. But he, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council, and the attackers were all denounced as rebels. Also in 1580 he is recorded serving as Provost of Selkirk (presumably in place of the young Sir Walter of Buccleuch) when Robert of Haining complained that he had reneged on appointing him as Depute Provost; in 1581 he was recorded as Provost when a man was imprisoned in Selkirk Tolbooth. In 1580/1 he was referred to as 'baillie, and appointit to answer for the landis and tennentis of the Lard of Bukcleuch'. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Also in 1581 he was among a list of Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1581 he promised to the King to answer for the behaviour of the men dwelling on Walter Scott of Buccleuch's lands and in particular was also directed in 1581 to find caution for Walter of Headshaw and associates, who had failed to appear. However, that same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with his cautioners being Robert and Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw, the amount being £2000. Later Paul Doig of Coldoch was his cautioner in case he should 'brek the assurance' for crimes committed by the Scotts on Dand Elliot of Braidlie by Robert of Headshaw and others. Additionally in 1581 he was allied with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them to the Privy Council by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; he was clearly acting as chief of the Scotts at that time. He was denounced as a rebel in 1583 for non-appearance, when he was recorded as 'chamberlain of Atrik Forrest'. He was 'Wat Scot of Goldelandis' among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About the same time he led the signatories on a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in about 1588. He had a 'Band of Association' in 1589 with about 50 men of his clan; this proscribed any Scotts from taking land from each other, transgressions going before a panel of 5 of their number, a similar rule even applying of he himself encroached upon any of his kinsmen's possessions. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. In about 1590 he was listed among a large number of landed men in the Borders and in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk and he himself acted as cautioner for Robert of Burnfoot, Walter of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1591/2 his sons Walter, David and William were listed among 200 Scotts and others accused of stealing 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy's lands of Drumelzier and Dreva; it was later declared that the men were not tenants of Walter of Buccleuch, but chiefly dependent on him, in the absence of the Laird of Buccleuch, and since he had already appeared before the Privy Council, the men were ordered to pay the Tweedys for what had been taken. Also in 1591/2 he acted as surety for William Elliot of Hartsgarth. In 1592 he was instructed (along with Gideon Murray) to demolish Harden and Dryhope, because of Walter of Harden's involvement in the Falkland Raid. In 1594 he is described as 'cosin and deputie' to Sir Walter of Branxholme in an indenture that he had with his English counterpart, servant of Lord Scrope. His son was also Walter and was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie; however, some have suggested that this was him, but being about the age of 64 at the time it seems improbable. He died later in the same year that the rescue of Kinmont Willie took place. He was buried in the vaults at St. Mary's, and his tombstone was removed in 1863 for preservation in the Museum. There are actually two stones, one headed 'Valter Scot his Genealogie' where he is recorded as 'Valter Scot of Govdilandis', son of 'Sir Valter Scot the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh'. A second stone, cut in high relief records 'HIS QVALITIES', namely 'Heir lyis bvrit visdome & virthines Heir lyis bvreit trevth & honestie Heir lyis bvreit fridome & gentres Heir lyis bvreit manheid & cheritie Heir lyis bvreit lairgenes & lavtie Heir lyis bvreit hap and experience Heir lyis bvreit pietie & diligence Glorie be to God for althings'. Both stones were stencilled after discovery by Sir James Murray. Another stone bears his arms, with the Buccleuch arms crossed by the bar of illegitimacy. The name of his wife is not known. He was succeeded by his son Walter and had other sons including David and William. He may also have had an illegitimate son, Charles of Crumhaugh, as well as a daughter who married Robert of Glack (but this may have been a later generation). A record of 1620 mentions Robert, 'brother natural' to Sir Walter of Goldielands (his son), showing that he had another son, Robert – 'The laird Watt did weil indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himsell . . . ' [CPM]. Walter (d.c.1553) son of David and nephew of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, to whom he was heir (although this seems confusing). His uncle was appointed as his tutor in 1551, but died the following year. Assuming there isn't simply an error, he must have died about the same time, since his cousin, also Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd, succeeded to the Buccleuch titles. Walter (d.bef. 1555) son of Michael of Aikwood. It is claimed in one genealogy that he was the eldest son, but his brother William was recorded as their father's heir in 1541. In 1543 he was infefted by his father in his half of Kershope (on Ettrick). He was recorded in 1555 when his brother Robert of Bowhill was served heir to his half steading called 'Westsyd de Kershop' in Ettrick. Walter (16th C.) son and heir of Robert in Howford. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between him and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who was niece of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). His own 'gudschir' (either grandfather or perhaps uncle) was recorded being George in Blindhaugh. It appears that Marion Dalgleish was his stepmother and hence the marriage contract was with his step-sister. In 1539 he was still not old enough to marry, and it is unclear if the marriage took place. Walter of Harden (d.c.1563) possibly son of William 'Boltfoot', 1st Laird of Harden. However, it is unclear if there really is an extra Walter between 'Boltfoot' and 'Auld Wat o Harden'. If he existed, he only lived for a couple of years beyond his father. Satchells suggests that he married a Riddell, daughter of his step-mother. His sons were Walter, 'Auld Wat o Harden' and William 'in the Mott'. Sir Walter (1548/9–74) 10th Laird of Buccleuch, succeeded his grandfather in 1553/4, his father Sir William of Kirkurd ('Whitecloak') having died first. His 'retour' of 1553/4 as heir to his deceased grandfather Sir Walter, mentions an impediment to his inheritance on account of the enmity of the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire towards his kinsmen and friends. In 1554/5 it is recorded in a sasine that his tutor was Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is stated in one charter as achieving his majority in 1561. He signed a bond with the Kers in 1564/5, attempting to end the family feud (it contains the names of many of his supporters and retainers of the time, including Sir Walter of Goldielands, who appeared personally); it is promised the Scotts and Kerrs will 'leif in perfite amité, lufe, and Cristiane nychtburheid', and marriages are arranged between his sister Janet and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as his father's sister Janet with George, son of Andrew Kerr of Faldonside. However, another feud errupted with the Elliots in 1564, perhaps sparked by the murder of David of Hassindean. This led to raids into Elliot lands in Liddesdale and counter-raids on his lands in Teviotdale, including the burning of Hawick in 1565. In one such raid he and his men slew 7 Elliots and Croziers, while some of those from Liddesdale raided the Hawick area, killing one man and stealing cattle. In 1565/6 he was made Captain of Newark Castle. He was a devoted supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, raiding England with Kerr of Ferniehirst, expecting the Regent Moray to have been assassinated. In retaliation the Earl of Sussex and Lord Scrope blew up Branxholme and laid waste the lands around Hawick. In 1568/9 he signed another contract with the Kerrs relating to the murder of his grandfather; this time Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, James Kerr of Corbet, Walter Hogg and their kin agreed to come to the church of Melrose to apologise, and the grandson of Sir Andrew was to marry Elizabeth Murray, his sister. His armorial seal of 1568 is the first to show supporters, in this case 2 bucks. In 1569 he signed the bond for suppressing thieves on the Border and in that same year was served heir to his uncle David in Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. In early 1569 he apparently (according at a case before the Lords of Council 4 years later) despoiled some of what was left of Melrose Abbey, carrying away a great deal of the 'stanis tymmer leid irne and glas of the said kirk'; he sold it to some burgesses of Selkirk, Dame Isobel Ker of Cessford and others, but claimed he was preserving the Abbey from the English army and promised to spend the same money to repair it. Also in 1569 he was obliged to enter someone in court in Dumfries. Additionally in 1569 he was found liable for the sureties for the Elliots of Falnash, Gorrenberry and Dodburn, who had not appeared, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay. He brought a 'letter of inhibition' against the teinds of the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean in 1570, suggesting some local dispute. Also in 1570 he signed a bond on behalf of his kin, friends, etc., for keeping the peace on the Border. He had Branxholme Castle rebuilt in 1571. He was a principal leader in the 1571 raid on Stirling to seize the Regent Lennox, where he was captured and was for a while imprisoned in Castle Doune. In 1573 he was re-appointed as Captain, Constable and Keeper of Newark Castle and as Bailie and Chamberlain of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. Also in 1573 he served as surety for some Borderers and signed the 'Band of Roxburgh'. He was responsible for paying an English 'bill' of £3600 Scots after Ralph Ker broke ward in England. In 1574 he was witness to a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers relating to the lands of Denholm. At a very young age (in 1567/8) he was contracted to marry Margaret, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She continued the rebuilding of Branxholme after his death, later married Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and died in 1640. His children included: Sir Walter, who became 1st Lord of Buccleuch; Margaret, who was executor of his will (and was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this would appear to be confusion with her great aunt); and Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston. He was only 25 years old when he died. His 'testament' (registered with the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1574) describes the numbers of sheep and cattle he owned on his various farms, as well as mentioning several Hawick residents, and is an invaluable record of details of local farming and business life 4½ centuries ago – 'The good Lord Walter was Sir William's Son, The better in Teviot-dale shall never come' [CWS]. Walter (16th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument of sasine in 1569 for the lands of Crook; he is 'Walter Scot there', meaning he resided near Crook.

It is possible he is connected with the nearly contemporary Scotts in Orchard. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1593) son of Philip. He is probably the Walter, son of Philip of Headshaw who is listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he must have been quite young at the time. He is listed as being 'in Edschawe' in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 when he declared that John Riddell of that Ilk and William Scott of Harden were his arbiters in his dispute with Elizabeth (probably an error for Isabel) Murray. He is also described as 'in Eteschaw' in 1533 when he was part of a panel at a Jedburgh inquest for a dispute over the lands of Longnewton. In 1535 he complained that his dispute with his stepmother Isabel Murray had not been resolved 3 years earlier; this makes it clear that he was son of Philip of Headshaw (and Philip's first wife). In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he is recorded being 'in Edschaw' and occupying the lands of Hartwoodburn. He also in 1541 assigned his brother Robert one quarter of Hartwoodburn. His 'brother german' Robert is recorded in a Selkirk document in 1541/2. In 1542 he is mentioned giving advice to Robert (probably his brother) regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. In 1542/3 his 'sergeant' William Donaldson had 2 of his horses appraised in Selkirk. He witnessed a transactions for Thomas in Haining in 1543/4. He is 'of Edschaw' among a group of Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen in 1550 to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1561. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is recorded as of 'Edschaw' in a panel of 1564 to hear the case involving Scotts and Elliots accused of killing David Scott of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he is probably the 'Guidman of Eidschaw' who was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. His son William was warded in 1571 and was also recorded swearing allegiance to the Crown and Regent in 1572/3, with James Langlands of that Ilk as surety. In 1573 he served as surety for several Borderers. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. Also in 1579 he was named as an executor for the children of the deceased Robert of Palace. In 1580 he signed a bond with William of Whitehaugh, assigning to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called 'the Pleucht Tylth', along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton. Also in 1580 he witnessed an arrangement for certain payments to be made to the children of the deceased John of Blindhaugh. Additionally in 1580 his cautioners John Thomson and Richard Brown (both in Headshaw) made payment for him of £30 to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw for 10 bolls of oats. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stirches. Also in 1580/1 he sold a horse to Walter in Ashkirk, but the other Walter was unable to pay and so offered to enter him into a husbandland in Ashkirk. In 1581 he was accused of leading a group who attacked 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braidlie as they rode past Headshaw, cutting off the hand of one, and seriously injuring the other. He was among a long list of Scotts summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1581, but failed to do so the first time, with Walter of Goldielands then ordered to find caution for him. Also in 1581 he and Dickson of Ormiston acted as cautioners for the Irvings of Bonshaw (and could not write his name on the document); this was discharged in 1582. In 1583/4 he and his brother William were among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. His servants John Johnston and John Thomson are also listed in a citation in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King's use. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He could be the Walter 'of Ordschaw' who was denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and James Langlands for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He is probably the Walter who married a daughter of Sir William 'Whitecloak' of Kirkurd. He had 2 sons: Robert, his heir; and another, possibly Walter, who was father of Robert of East Groundistone. He is also probably the Laird of Headshaw whose daughter Janet married Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter (16th C.) recorded as 'in Bellhauch' when he was one of 32 men to sign the 1569 bond for suppression of Border thieves. His name occurs between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Scott of Tushielaw, so he was probably local. Walter (16th C.) Hawick resident described as 'gled Wattie Scot' in the will of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed £18 by Sir Walter's estate and listed along with many merchants and others. Walter of Hassendean (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He probably served as factor or similar, along with several other men whose fees were exactly the same. He may be the same as the tenant in Hassendean recorded in 1564. He is listed as 'alias Wattie of Hassindane' in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement involving George, son to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. Walter (16th C.) became a merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1575 and a Guild Brother in 1577. Walter of Synton (d.bef. 1589) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Walter as Laird of Synton. He was recorded (along with his brothers Robert, William and James) as the 'young Laird of Syntoune' in 1557 when he was involved in an attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes. He could be the Walter, recorded as 'sone to Wat Scot of Syntoun' (even although he was grandson) in 1561. Either he or his grandfather was the Walter listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. There is some uncertainty in these generations. He married Christian Riddell of that Ilk, and was said to have died without an heir. However, he was succeeded by George, who Scott of Satchells suggests was his son (which seems unlikely, given the timing), but is more likely to have been his grandson. In a feu charter of 1567 for lands in Haddington, George was 'son and heir apparent of Walter, junior in Sintoun', but in the receipt for his feu duties George was described as 'son and appeirand air to Walter Scot of Syntoun'. His heir George is recorded as 'in Synton' in 1570 and again in 1572 when he sold the lands in Haddington. Walter, son of Walter of 'Suyntoun' was witness to a sasine in Melrose in 1574. He may be the Walter, brother of George of Synton who in 1580 had a lease of the lands of Wollhaugh from Isabella Turnbull widow of John of Blindhaugh. His grandson Walter was served heir to his lands of Whitslade in 1605. Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley (d.c.1580) eldest son of Robert of Howpasley. He witnessed a charter in 1549 in which his father granted his lands of Appletreehall to the Turnbulls, also witnessed by his brother Robert. He is recorded as younger of Howpasley in 1562/3. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he appeared in Hawick before the Warden and Sir Walter of Branxholme, serving as surety for 23 tenants in Outersiderig, that they would answer to the laws of the Lord Regent. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he served as surety in 1571, 1573 and 1576 and was warded in 1571. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. Also in 1574 there was a 'reversion' with him for the mill of Easter Burnfoot, with William of Harden and James of Whitslade. His father appears to have died before 1567, but he did not succeeded to Howpasley until 1578/9 and also held the lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire. In 1580 he and William of Tushielaw appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton's claim on lands in 'Ilistoun'. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1580/1; he is there described as 'of Birkinsyd'. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1580, although he did not become infeft in his lands until 1588. Another son may have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Sir Walter 'Watt' of Tushielaw (d.c.1618) eldest son of William of Tushielaw. In 1563/4 he and his father were ordered to replace the sheep that they had stolen from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot. He signed the bond for suppressing the Border thieves in 1569 and was witness to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574. In 1573 he is referred to as being 'in Hartwodmyris' (and son of William of Tushielaw) when he was to present William Porteous 'in Borthuikbra' for trial in Edinburgh, as well as Littles from Midgehope; it is unclear if he was related to the later Scotts of Hartwoodmyres. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578 he was 'younger of Tushielaw' when was pledge for 'Archie Kene' Elliot. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he later swore to the Council that he had entered into ward 'Archie Kene' Elliot. Also in 1578/9 there was a complaint by Patrick Murray of Falahill, that he and his accomplices had illegally taken over the lands of 'Skaddoneis' (perhaps 'Scaddow Rig'). Additionally, tenants in Gattonside complained that he and his supporters (including his brother James and his son Walter, as well as James, William and Dand in Selkirk) attacked the farm at Gattonside, breaking barns and stealing corn; failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He was still recorded as being 'in Hartwodmyires' at that time. In 1579/80 he was accused of being involved in an 'intrigue' with Grizel Scott, wife of William, Lord Borthwick (and daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme); this was also claimed to be 'incest', suggesting that he had married another daughter of Sir Walter. In 1581 he was still 'younger, of Tuschelaw' among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he witnessed a 'letter of slains' in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. Additionally in 1581 he was 'in Hartwodmyris' when along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley) he supported William of Tushielaw (his father) and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; William in Hartwoodmyres is also listed. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1584 he was a cautioner for a number of men (from around Heriot). He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He resigned his lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1588 (presumably to grant a new charter). He is mentioned in 1589 when his servant Robert Elliot 'in Borthuikbra' refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Also in 1589 he and his brother James signed a bond with other Scotts to settle differences amongst themselves. He is listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590 and also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 William Stewart of Traquair acted as surety for him and he himself was surety for Philip of Dryhope. He gained Gamescleuch in 1591. In 1592 he had a charter, ratified by Parliament, for the lands of Tushielaw, including Coom Law and Gamilsheugh, making it clear that other claims on the lands were to be disallowed. He is listed in 1594 among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands; his sons Robert, James and John are also listed. In 1599 he was surety for himself and his sons Robert, James and John to 'observe the King's peace'. He is probably the Scott of Tushielaw listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1601 he is 'the Goodman of Tushellaw' listed among men of an assize to decide cases brought by the March Wardens. He and his son Robert signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. In 1603 he witnessed a 'bond of manrent' between Francis Armstrong of Kinmont and Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1603 he complained about a gang of Armstrongs raided his farms of 'Dudhop', 'Medop' (probably Midgehope), 'Woulschop', Tushielaw and Kirkbank on several occasions in 1586, stealing cattle, sheep, horses and goods. In 1607 he was 'gudman of Tuschelaw' when he was witness for a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose; his son John was also witness. In 1607 he was also paid bolls of malt by the tenants of Lessuden. Additionally in 1607 he was the first named in a long list of men charged with trying to stop James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 there is a court case involving him and his eldest son Robert with Alexander, Earl of Home over an agreement involving the lands of Cacrabank in 1597; there it is clearly stated that his wife was Elizabeth Gledstains and also that neither father nor son could write. Also in 1609 he brought an action against Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants for resetting Walter of Headshaw and others; this was related to the feud with the Scotts of Thirlestane, which had resulted in the death of Walter of Gamescleuch (brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) at the sword of his son John. In 1610 Robert of Headshaw, and Walter, fiar of Whitslade (for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) had a bond for not harming him or his sons Robert and James. Additionally Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son John had a similar bond. Also in 1610 there was a complaint against his servant Martin Johnstone, claiming that he and another man raided the farm of Nether 'Liverhay'. In 1611 he complained that Francis Armstrong of Kinmont was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst. In 1612 the Privy Council also asked him and Sir

Robert of Thirlestane appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. He was one of the signers of the bond of 1612 to keep peace in the Borders, which his son Robert also signed. In 1614 his son John had remission from the King for the death of Walter of Gamescleuch, and had his ex-communication lifted in 1615. However, in 1616 he ran off with Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane's daughter, Grizel, marrying her at Bellingham. The Presbytery records show that the couple were to appear to confess their sin, with the Laird of Thirlestane to be absent that day. It has been suggested that he was killed a few months later by a group of Scotts (including Simon of Bonnington), but this appears to be confusion with the murder of Walter, tenant in Essenside (a younger son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden). He is recorded as still alive in 1617 and is also mentioned in a charter of 1618 when his lawful son Robert received lands at 'Wairdlawrig' in Selkirkshire from John Lord Hay of Yester. He married Elizabeth, daughter of a Gledstains of Cocklaw. His son Robert was 'of Tuscholaw' in 1619, suggesting he was deceased by then. His son and heir William is recorded in a 'letter of inhibition' with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1619 (but this may be an error). He is probably the Walter of Tushielaw to whom the reversion of half of Glenkerry and Midgehope were resigned by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1620 (although he may have been deceased by then). It is suggested in some accounts that he was succeeded by another Walter, however he was most likely succeeded by his eldest son Robert (unless 2 generations of Walters are compounded). His other sons were: James of Boyken and Glenrath; and John of Mackersway, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch. Both James and John took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. Walter (16th C.) recorded as 'in Todrig' when he witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, unless he was Walter, son and heir of the Laird at that time, George of Todrig. Walter 'Wat' of Eldinhope (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1576 when he relieved a surety. He appears as 'Watt Scott of Eldinghope'. It seems likely that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, probably related to the Scotts of Buccleuch (who held these lands). Walter of Ashkirk (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He may be the son of Walter in Ashkirk and Margaret Falside recorded in 1539 when he and his mother are recorded acknowledging receipt of interest on his deceased father's lands in Ashkirk and Falside from their subtenants. In 1580 he paid John in Kirkhouses redemption money for the lands of 'Ediehauch', 'Ediebray', 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. He is probably the Walter in Ashkirk who in 1580/1 declared that he was unable to pay the £20 Scots for a horse from Walter of Headshaw and is he could not pay him soon, would enter him in a husbandland in Ashkirk, at that time occupied by Richard Brown. In 1580/1 he set to John in Aikwood the 'knaifschip and bannock' of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years; one of the witnesses was Walter Shortreed, recorded as his brother (perhaps his brother-in-law). In 1581 the husbandland he had wadset to John in Kirkhouses was resigned, and he instead assigned to John 2 pieces of land called Salenside Croft and 'Skakriggis'. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1581/2 he acknowledged that he had received payment from James, son of John in Kirkhouses, giving him tack of half a husbandland (previously occupied by Adam Hislop) in Ashkirk. In 1593/4 he and Alexander of Clerkland were cautioners for John Veitch, heir apparent of Dawyck, not to harm the Tweedies. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts of Ashkirk. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Palace in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement regarding payments to the children of John of Blindhaugh. In 1581 his wife Margaret Scott, widow of William of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of Shielswood and half of Burnfoot Mill to her son William. It is unclear whether he was related to the earlier Scotts of Palace. Walter 'Wat' (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with 'Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild', 'Syme Scot thair' and 'Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok'. He was presumably related to the other men listed, all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the 'letter of slains' for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Walter (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded as 'sonne to wmquhell Thomas Scot in Hawick, zounger' in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. It seems that his father was Thomas, and probably also his gradfather. Walter (16th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Ashkirk and John in Kirkhouses. Walter of Howpasley (16th C.) probably son of Sir Walter of Birkenside and grandson of Robert of Howpasley. He succeeded his father in 1580, but was probably then a minor, since he did not become 'infeft' until 1588, when he also succeeded to the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall (which had been 'in the King's hands' for more than 7 years). He was probably the Laird of 'Howpaslot' listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is probably the Laird listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Gledstains, Redheugh, Braidlie, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale; however, he may have still been a minor at that time. In 1590 his cautioner was Walter of Goldielands. He was probably Laird of 'Howpaislott' when the 'Roll of the Clans' was drawn up around 1590 and the 'Goodman of Howpaislott' listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He may have had a brother who was at the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may have been father of William and/or the husband of 'Lady Howpasley' who was involved in the slaughter of sheep in 1616. He is recorded in 1591 as the possessor of the lands of 'Gallowlaw' in the Barony of Hassendean, charged by the Baron, James Cunningham, to produce charters for these lands. He was probably succeeded by William, who may have been the last of the direct line of Scotts of Howpasley. Walter (16th C.) son of Michael of Vogrie. In 1581 he had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in 'Cartho'. He was to receive certain lands in Stow from Thomas Pringle in Stow (grandfather of his wife-to-be). John in Kirkhouses was a witness, and possibly related. Walter of Stirches (16th C.) granted the 6-merk land of Stirches in a charter of James VI in 1575. He is described as son of the late Robert (presumably of Stirches), who was 2nd son of the deceased Walter of Synton. He is listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. Walter of Chamberlain Newton, Walter of Harden and the Laird of Synton are all listed separately, showing that he was distinct from all of them; however, it is unclear what his relationship was with other nearly contemporary Lairds. He is probably also the Walter of Stirkshaws who along with William of Hartwoodmyres was under caution in 1592, with Gideon Murray as surety. It is possible he was Walter, younger of Synton (son of George). He may also be the Walter 'of Styrkschawis' who witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining in 1579 (also witnessed by Walter of Harden and Walter of Headshaw). He may also be the Walter of 'Styrk Schawis' whose brother Robert witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. He may be the Walter 'in Styrkschawis' who in 1580 received redemption money from his 'gude brother' David Fairlie for a tenement in Selkirk. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with George of Synton over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundistone, with his chosen judges being William of Whitehaugh and Walter of Todrig. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, and also a separate arrangement between the pair. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. He is probably the Walter of 'Stirkschawes' (transcribed in one version as 'Sterchehewis') who signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds in 1602. Walter of Catslack (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to the later Scotts of Catslack, but perhaps he was father of William. In 1592 his cautioner was Archibald Douglas of 'Stannypeth' that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Adam was also listed. It is possible he is the same man as the later Walter of Catslack. Walter (16th C.) described as 'in Dalserff' when his will was registered in Hamilton Commissariot in 1593. Walter (d.bef. 1601) 'sklater' in Edinburgh. He became a Burgess in 1559/60, his 'Dutie given to Lord Setoun, provost'. In 1601 his 2nd son George became a Burgess of Edinburgh. Walter of Synton (d.1608) eldest son of George of Synton. He is probably the Laird of Synton who in 1599 was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. His brother George became a saddler's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610. His brother John was involved in a sasine with Robert of Satchells in 1609. In 1603

he was on the list of 'pretended tenants' ordered to leave their lands by James Cunningham, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1605 he redeemed 500 merks on these lands of Outersiderig with William Elliot of Falnash. He is 'Waltir Scot called 'Old Walter' in Synetone' in 1608 when he was listed as part of a group of Scotts and their followers who rescued 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1610 (apparently after his death) he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; he is there referred to as 'Old Wattie'. George Langlands of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His son George was served heir to his lands of Outersiderig and Boonraw in 1610. He married Isobel, daughter of Douglas of Whittinghame (probably William, 3rd of Whittinghame, or perhaps Sir Archibald his son). Their children were: George, who succeeded; Anne, said to have married Capt. Gledstains of Whitlaw (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, who probably died unmarried; Elspeth; and Christian. His daughters are mentioned in his last testament. It may have been his widow who was summoned by the Presbytery in 1615 'for abusing the minister, Mr. Alex. Hog, publicly, by words and countenance, on Sabbath, betwixt the sermons, in the audience of the congregation'. She was probably also the 'gudewife of Sintoun' who received communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks in 1615, rather than her own church at Ashkirk, resulting in rebuke for both ministers. It is unclear what the nature of this dispute was, but presumably a doctrinal difference with her minister (Alexander Hogg) – 'Then Walter Scot was George Howcoats son, He married Dowglas a daughter of Whittinghame' [CWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Bowden, who rented Northhouse. He is recorded in 1582 as witness to a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme; other witnesses include William, son of George in Northhouse and John Gledstains of Winningtonhall. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (d.c.1584) described as 'in Fairnyhirst, within the Stow' when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1584. Walter (d.c.1593) Burgess of Dysart. His will was recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1594. He was brother of John, who was also a Burgess there, and had wills registered in Edinburgh in 1594 and 1605. Walter (d.c.1594) mason and Burgess of Dysart, whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1594. He was distinct from his contemporary in Dysart, whose will was registered in the previous year. Walter of Deephope (16th/17th C.). Said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of Blindhaugh (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably related to the neighbouring Scotts, e.g. the Woll branch, who owned the lands of Blindhaugh later. He is probably the 2nd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull who in 1544 was designated as the successor to his father's lands of Broadlee, a part of Blindhaugh. Walter (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1598 to the lands of 'Montquhanny' in Fife, belonging to his sisters Margaret and Elizabeth. Walter (d.bef. 1612) tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 his nephew William complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh not paying him. Walter 'Watt' of Gamescleuch (d.1609) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He may have been the brother of Robert of Thirlestane recorded in 1581 when he was witness to a sasine for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. He may be the brother of Robert of Thirlestane who had a 'letter of slains' from William Burnet for killing his cousin John Burnet a decade earlier. He was probably also the brother of Robert of Thirlestane included in a list of those involved in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. He was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 he was probably the Walter, brother of Robert of Thirlestane listed among Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. In 1602 he was among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands at 'Fechane'. He is probably the Walter of Thirlestane who in 1603 was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He may be the Walter 'of Thirlstane' who was in the gang of Scotts that forcibly released 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Also in 1608 he was among the relatives and friends of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound not to harm Archibald 'of Dephoip'. He was slain by John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw, an incident that may have been the inspiration for the 'Dowie Dens of

Yarrow'. They had a duel on a field to the west of Yarrow Kirk, known as 'Deuchar-swyre'. It is said that he went there as a mediator in the arranged combat between his nephew Robert, and John, son of Walter of Tushielaw. There followed much legal process before the local Presbytery and the Privy Council. John Scott's pardon by James VI is recorded in 1614. He married Marion (or Janet), daughter of Sir Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and had an only surviving son, Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. Simon may have been another son and his daughters were: Marion, who married Rev. Robert Martin in 1617; and Margaret. Walter of Woll (d.c.1617) first noted in 1606, he is suggested (by Keith Scott) to have been descended from the Scotts of Haining. However, the identity of his parents is not known. His brother John of Ashkirk was said to have been among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded in 1608 when his brother John, and several others, attacked and maltreated some residents of Selkirk. He is there recorded as 'Waltir Scot of Well' and his half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) is also mentioned. In 1609 he was 'in Woll' when he had a charter for the lands of 'Blindhauch . . . , Braidley, Castelsyde, Leiphill, Rynnes, Rycroft, Roundhauch, Sandiehauch and Langupmedow' in the Barony of Ashkirk. He married twice. By his first wife he had: Robert, who succeeded; and Francis. He secondly married Catherine Ormiston, and their children were: George; and Katherine. In 1617 his eldest son Robert was appointed as tutor to his younger children George and Katherine (half-siblings of Robert), by which time he was deceased. Walter of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, he was recorded in 1592 and was also known as being 'of North Bowhill'. Also in 1592 he was 'Wattie Scott in Bolhill' when he was signatory for a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiels. He had brothers Robert (of the Southside of) Bowhill, William (who was at the rescue of Kinmont Willie) and James. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother William was also listed. He was succeeded by his eldest son Robert in 1609. Walter of Huntly (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Huntly, who was said to have been in the raid that rescued Kinmont Willie. He was part of a gang of Scotts (from Bowhill, Thirlestane, Synton, etc.) who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment in Selkirk in 1608. His brother William is also mentioned. He was also upon an inquest in 1612. However, in 1616 James of Huntly is recorded (perhaps his brother), suggesting he was deceased by then. He could be the Walter 'elder of Huntlie' listed in a court case before the Privy Council in 1627, when a band of Scotts were accused of harassing the tenant of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1599 among Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. He was then 'of Eidshaw'. He is transcribed being 'of Edieslaw' in a 1603 document when a large number of Scotts and some Turnbulls and Elliots were given a summons to remove themselves from land that was claimed by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn to be wrongfully possessed. He may have been the 2nd son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw (if so he could have been father of Robert of Easter Groundistone). In 1609 Robert of Headshaw and a number of other men were bonded not to reset him and several others while they were 'at the horn' for not signing an assurance not to harm Walter of Tushielaw. And later the same men were fined for resetting him and the others, this being part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter 'brother-german to Robert Scott of Hirdschaw' was recorded in 1621 when his son Harry became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Walter of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) one of the 'pretended tenants' who James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn (and Baron of Hassendean) tried to evict in 1603. He could be the 'Wat Scot of Whithauch' who signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the younger son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded to the estate on the death of his unmarried older brother, William. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. He sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert of Headshaw. However, he was probably still called 'Walter Scott of Quhytehauch' in 1627 when there was a complaint against him to the Privy Council, that he and a band of other Scotts (from Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly) had forcibly removed the tenant from Hartwoodburn. He apparently claimed a right to these lands, and felt compelled to take matters into his own hands, occupying the farmhouse 'all in armes, with hagbuittis and pistollettis', and threatening to debar anyone who tried to come there; it is unclear what happened as a result of the summons against him and his compatriots. Also in 1627 he gave caution to the Privy Council for John Geddes, Burgess of Dumfries. It is also hard to understand how he might fit in with the genealogy given by Scott of Satchells. Walter 'Wat' (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Borthaugh in 1569. He signed the bond to keep the peace on the Border. Walter 'the Hawk' of Whitslade (d.c.1610) son of Robert. He lived the earlier part of his life at Stirches, like his father. He was probably the first to style himself 'of Whitslade'. His nickname was said to be 'on account of his sharpness and activity'. He had a charter in 1575, in which he was described as son and heir of Robert, who was 2nd son of Walter of Synton. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he was listed among the supporters of the Earl of Crawford who attacked Ruthven Castle; he was also listed in a complaint made by Margaret Erskine, Lady Ruthven against Crawford and his followers in 1583. He may have been the Walter of 'Whitslaid' who signed the Buccleuch Band in 1589. In 1590 he was 'of Quhitslaid or Stirkschawis' when listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Harden, he had a letter of pardon from the King for 'intercommuning with Francis' Earl of Bothwell. He was listed among 200 Scotts and associates who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. It is said that his brother Robert went on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he (probably incorrectly transcribed as 'William') was one of the large list of men given a 'summons of removal' from their lands in Hassendean by the Baron at that time, James Cunningham. He is recorded in a 'retour' of 1605, as heir to his grandfather Walter of Synton, in the lands of Whitslade. In 1608 Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him and 2 of his sons, that they not harm Archibald of 'Deiphoip'. He married a daughter of Douglas of Cavers. His sons included: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Thomas of Todrig, who married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, with prenuptial contract in late 1613 (by which time he was deceased); probably Robert, who was on the Carlisle raid in 1596; probably George, recorded as brother of Walter in the 1620s when there were court proceedings with Robert, younger of Satchells; and James, who in 1620 married Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg and held lands at Eildon – 'Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came And warriors more than I may name; From Yarrow-cleugh to Hindhaugh-sweir, From Woodhouselie to Chesterglen, Troop'd man and horse, and bow and spear; Their gathering word was Bellenden' [SWS]. Walter of Northhouse (16th/17th C.). Scott of Satchells gives him first on the list of 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. He could be the Walter, brother of 'Will' of Northhouse who was involved in a raid on Stobs in 1608. Satchells says he was 'the first Gentleman descended from the Family, in a former Age', although it is unclear exactly what this means. He could be the Walter 'callit Nothis' appointed in 1622 to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch in administering justice in the Middle Shires. Walter of Chapelhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch. He was said to be half-brother to the Laird of Chisholme; it is unclear who the Laird was at that time, but Walter Chisholme married Ann, daughter of William of Chapelhill in the latter part of the 16th century, so perhaps 'half-brother' means brother-in-law. He may be related to James in Chapelhill, who was listed among fugitives in 1618. Sir Walter of Goldielands (d.aft. 1627) son of the 'Laird's Wat', he was probably the Walter of Goldielands who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. Although some have suggested this was his elderly father, Scott of Satchell's says that relative to the Bold Buccleuch it was 'Gaudilands his Uncles son', which means him rather than his father. He was listed in 1591/2 as a son of Walter of Goldielands who was part of a group of 200 Scotts and others who stole 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy's lands of Drumelzier and Dreva. He is 'younger of Goldielandis' in 1593 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as 'Walter Scot sone to Wat of Gaudylandis' in a 1594 list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1599 he may be the Laird of Goldielands listed among Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. In 1600 2 lawyers complained that he had not paid the 'feu maills' on the lands of 'Stow in Woddell' (i.e. Stow of Wedale, the old name for Stow) that he occupied; in the following year they complained that Robert Turnbull, Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, hd not registered their complaint. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who was among the 15 Border lairds who were removed from their homes in 1608 for being 'ringleaders suspected wither of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses'; he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were sent to Cupar in Fife. In 1610 he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he signed a bond at Jedburgh for keeping peace on the Border, along with several other local men. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded as the 'Guidman of Goudelandis' who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1617 by 2 Englishmen, who had apparently been imprisoned for 18 weeks without trial; later the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained that he had failed to pay to keep the men in prison. Additionally in 1618 William Oliver 'in Lanyburne' (possibly Langburnshiels) complained that he had directed some men to unlawfully apprehend him; the Privy Council said that he and his accomplices should be denounced as rebels. These generations are quite uncertain (Keith Scott disagreeing with Tancred, for example), with some details confused, e.g. he did not marry Jean Riddell, since that marriage was with his son, who was also Walter. It has also been suggested that he died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter, son of his uncle Charles; however, this seems like it refers to a later generation. He must be the Sir Walter of Goldielands referred to in a 1670 court case in which his son Walter demanded copies of earlier instruments of sasine relating to Goldielands (which existed in the former Hawick Town Clerk's 'protocol book'); in 1620 he was infefted by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in the lands of Goldielands and Westcoterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to his son Walter, retaining the 'liferent' for himself. His 'brother natural' Robert is also mentioned in 1620. He is probably the Sir Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1627 as owner of 'the Ladyland' near Hawick (since his son Walter was not referred to as 'Sir'). His wife's name is unknown, and there are also no records of other children. However, it is possible that his wife was the 'Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt' who was recorded on a document of 1666 describing the division of the burial space in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey among various Rutherfords. Sir Walter 'the Bold Buccleuch' (1565/6–1611) 11th Laird and later 1st Lord of Buccleuch, only son of Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He succeeded his father in 1574, and although he was a minor, he had special dispensationfrom the Regent. There was a precept of sasine for him inheriting his father's lands that were held by Melrose Abbey, including the Monk's Tower in Hassendean, Ringwoodfield, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Northhouse and Thirlestane, as well as the office of Bailie of Melroseland. In 1574 he also was formally served as heir to the lands of his great-uncle David and his great-grandfather Sir Walter (these being legally necessary because of inheritance during the minority of previous generations). This included the Baronies of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd, as well as Lanton, Whitchesters, Rankleburn, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Whithope, Dryden, Commonside, Girnwood, Borthaugh, Grahamslaw and lands within the Regality of Melrose. His 'tutor' was his great-uncle, James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was asked to make Walter of Goldielands responsible for the behaviour of 'Branxhelme's men dwelling in Teviotdaill' in 1581). He became one of the most powerful barons of his time, was noted for his bravery, and is often regarded as the last of the Border rievers. He was constantly involved in attempts by the crown to keep peace on the Border, and went in and out of favour, including brief exile in France. He is recorded (presumably his agents) bringing a 'letter of inhibition' against Cavers Kirk for non-payment of teinds in 1577 and in 1588 he was confirmed in the 'tack' of the teinds of Hassendean and Cavers Parishes. In 1582 he and his accomplices were accused by the men of Bewcastle of stealing 200 cows and 300 goats and sheep. In 1582/3 he received remission from King James VI for crimes for which he had been imprisoned in Blackness (but escaped). In 1585 he had a bond with Robert of Allanhaugh, resolving a feud, partly the result of him being involved (during his minority) in the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh. Also in 1585 he raised a force of Scotts to join the Earls of Angus, Mar and Bothwell (his step-father) against the Earl of Arran and James VI at Stirling Castle. In 1586 he was involved in raids into England, along with Bothwell and Maxwell. Also in 1586 he is recorded as 'baillie principall' of the Regality of Melrose. Additionally there was an order from the Privy Council for him and William, Lord Hay of Yester to resolve their feud and stop invading each other's lands. In 1587 the English Warden wrote that he led a band into Redesdale with 200 men (in daylight, with his pennant and a trumpeter belonging to the Earl of Bothwell), burning the woods and killing a man. In the same year he was briefly imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle for a raid against the English (perhaps the counter-attack following Sir Cuthbert Collingwood's raid into Teviotdale); John Murray of Blackbarony and John Carmichael of that Ilk were his sureties once he was released. Additionally in 1587 Robert of Haining acted as his cautioner, that he would appear before the Privy Council 'and underly sic ordour as salbe imputt for the weill and quietnes of the Bordouris' and he and his supporters (except for the Scotts of Ewesdale) submitted to arbitration to settle differences with James Tweedy of Drumelzier and his followers. In 1588 he had a commission to protect Selkirkshire and was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Also in 1588 the English Warden complained that he and the Lairds of Chisholme and Whithaugh led about 100 Scotsmen on a raid into England, killing 4 men. A letter of 1589 from the King commended him for his loyalty and invited him and his followers to Edinburgh. However, in 1590/1 the English Wardens were complaining about raids that he had led into England. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. He was knighted in 1590 and in that year had an order to relieve the King of certain 'bills' of English complainants; it was stated that he was formerly 'Walter Scott of Branxholme', but was 'Sir Walter, now of Bukcleugh', suggesting that the 'Buccleuch' designation formally accompanied his knighthood. John Murray of Blackbarony served as his cautioner in 1590. He received permission to travel to France to alleviate his gout in 1590, and had a letter from James VI in 1591 allowing him to stay in Edinburgh and Leith until the weather improved to allow him to sail. He would have been the Laird of Buccleuch when listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. He was appointed Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591 (and reappointed in 1594), obtained a Lordship of Crichton and Liddesdale in 1595, and was Warden of the West Marches. In 1591 he signed a bond to support the King against Francis Stewart, 5th Earl of Bothwell (his step-father), and also in that year received a pardon for 'intercommuning' with the Earl of Bothwell. He had a letter of protection from the King in 1591, declaring that all actions against him should be suspended and his lands protected, while he travelled to England and France. However, it also appears that he had fallen out of favour again, being stripped of his new responsibilities and effectively exiled overseas for 3 years, his cautioners for £10,000 being Sir James of Balwearie and William of Abbotshall; however, he returned after 15 months, with a letter allowing his return written by the King in late 1592. In 1591/2 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonston of that Ilk when there was a complaint that he had led 200 Scotts and others to steal 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy's lands of Drumelzier and Dreva. In 1593 he sided with the Laird of Johnstone against the Laird of Maxwell at Dryfesdale Sands (and later sided with Maxwell against Johnstone). Also in 1593 he was accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England. In 1594 he had a commission (along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Robert Ker of Cessford) to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. Later that year he gained many of the titles and estates forfeited by the Earl of Bothwell and was reappointed Keeper of Liddesdale; he wrote a letter confirming his position to the English Warden Scrope in 1594, which is signed at Hawick. He is recorded in a confirming charter of 1595 as still being superior of the lands of Kirkurd in Peeblesshire. Also in 1595 he had a 'bond of manrent' with the Beatties and another with John Veitch of Dawyck, both signed in Hawick. In 1595/6 an English letter describes how he strengthened Hermitage Castle and 'has drawn most of the Ellots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extraordinarie number in house'. In 1596 Sir James of Balwearie was surety that those for whom he was responsible would 'observe the King's peace and redress all skaiths committed'. He acquired his nickname particularly after the rescue of 'Kinmont Willie' from Carlisle Castle in 1596, when he led 80 horsemen on a daring raid into England to free a reiver who had been treacherously captured. There followed much arguing, including letters between the two monarchs, with the English wanting him delivered up, and meanwhile an English force razing Liddesdale, then his force raiding into Tynedale (where 36 men were captured and hanged). After further complaints by Queen Elizabeth and the English Wardens, he was warded in Berwick as a 'pledge' for several other Scotsmen. He remained in Berwick for half a year and was later received by Elizabeth and is said to have impressed her, she stating 'With ten thousand such men, our brother in Scotland might shake the firmest throne of Europe'. Although considered a hero locally, Lord Scrope described him as 'ever the chief enemy (and still is) to the quiet of the border'. In 1596 there was a complaint that 'with his trumpeter and 500 men' he attacked the house of Bankhead on Esk, taking prisoners as well as goods. In 1597 he served on Parliament as a minor baron. There is an indenture, signed by him at Copshawholm in 1597, to deliver 5 Scotsmen to the English Deputy Warden. In 1597 he is also supposed to have personally led a party that rode into Tynedale on the Sabbath, burning 20 houses and killing 14 men who had taken home booty from Scotland. He signed an agreement in 1599 with the Elliots of Redheugh and Braidlie to bury their differences. Also in 1599 he was regranted his local lands, with Branxholme being erected into a Barony. As Warden, he had bonds with both the Armstrongs and the Elliots to be answerable for any complaints from England about the inhabitants of Liddesdale. In 1599 the Earl of Angus (William Douglas) wrote that he refused to enter his pledges for keeping the peace until the other Border lairds had done so. He spent several months in Paris, again for his health, with a letter of safe conduct being issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1599. Around 1600 he challenged Robert Ker of Cessford to combat; it is unclear whether either party was injured, but it could not have been serious. He was out of the country in 1602 when Robert of Haining acted as his procurator. In 1603 he was one of a large number of men issued with a 'summons of removing' by the Earl of Glencairn, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1604 he is recorded gaining lands in Hassendean from Robert Scott of Hassendean. On the accession of James VI to England he raised a regiment that fought under Maurice, Prince of Orange in Holland; this was probably filled with men who would formerly have been rievers in the Border country. He remained in Holland until the truce of 1609. He was elevated to a peerage in 1608 (after a Commission was struck by the King in 1606). In 1608 he had a letter of release and remission from the Privy Council for his efforts maintaining peace on the Border. About 1610 he was involved in a dispute with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he was involved in a dispute over ownership of Haining mill with Robert, younger of Haining. Additionally, in 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace within Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1611 he was appointed a member of the Privy Council, but died that same year. He married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford, according to a contract of 1586. Their children included: Walter, the 1st Earl; Margaret, who married James, 6th Lord Ross and secondly Alexander, 6th Earl of Eglinton; Elizabeth, who married John, 2nd Lord Cranstoun; Jean, whose pension is mentioned in her brother's testament; and possibly Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston (but she was perhaps his sister). By Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland, he had an illegitimate daughter, Jean, called 'Holland's Jean'. He also had an illegitimate son, John, probably the Provost of Crichton. He was the first Scott of Buccleuch whose arms carried the star above the 2 crescents. He most likely died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary's. His testament and inventory of possessions still exist – 'Lord of Buckcleugh into the Scots Border, Was high Lord Warden, to keep them in good order' [CWS]. Walter (d.bef. 1620) possibly son of William of Allanhaugh, or otherwise related to the Allanhaugh Scotts. He could be the Walter, 'brother germane' to Robert of Allanhaugh, who witnessed the bond of 1585 in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is probably the same Walter 'in Ellenmouth' included in a list of about 180 men given a 'respite' in 1594 for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1606 his 'brother-german' John purchased the lands of Hobsburn and Weens from Thomas Turnbull; in this document he is referred to as being 'of Allanmouth'. He is described as 'in Allan Mouth' and already deceased in 1620 when his son Walter became a brewer's apprentice in Edinburgh. He may have been succeeded by John. Walter 'Dand's Wattie' (16th/17th C.) failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance, as well as that of 'Simmy's Hob' in Hawick, suggesting that he was a local man. His father was presumably Andrew. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1628) son of Walter. He appears to have been a military man, and probably served in Holland. The circumstances for which he was knighted are unknown. In 1608 he was 'younger of Quhitslaid' when he witnessed a bond for Sir Robert of Thirlestane and was 'fiar of Quhitslaid' when he acted for Sir Robert in 1610 (along with Robert of Headshaw) in 2 bonds not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He probably succeeded his father in about 1610 (and is easy to confuse with his father). In late 1610 he and his son Thomas (unless this was his father and brother) were bound not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates; Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as cautioner. In 1613 he was in trouble with the Presbytery for non-attendance, he 'allegit that he haunted some kirks now and then; but that he could not come to his own kirk because his seat quilk he wont, and his fellous, to sit in was taken from him by the guidwife of Synton'; this could either have been Isobel, widow of Walter of Synton, or possibly his daughter Isabel, wife of Francis of (the new Harden branch of) Synton. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Along with Robert of Headshaw he was a cautioner for a bond of 1619 involving the Hays of Smithfield. In 1620 he had a bond with Thomas, son of Robert Turnbull, called 'of Bedroull'. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for the lands of Ettrickhouse (essentially holding the lands in collateral for a loan). He is recorded in the period 1622–25 when his brother George was involved in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but she died without issue. He secondly married a daughter of Sir John Scott of Newburgh (and sister of the next Sir John of Newburgh). His children included: Robert, who succeeded, but died at Marston Moor; Sir Walter, who succeeded his brother and died at Inverkeithing; Thomas, the 3rd son to succeed; George, whose daughters Elizabeth and Anna were served heirs to his lands of Linton in 1670; Isobel (or Isabella), who married Francis, son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden in 1624; and Elizabeth (or 'Bessie'), who married Robert Scott of Girnwood. He is said to have died at an advanced age – 'Their Father brave Sir Walter Scot, The chief of Chivalry, In the sixteen hundred twenty eight year, At Whitslade he did die' [CWS]. Walter of Whitehaughbrae (d.1621) son of Thomas and probably grandson of Walter of Synton. He may have acquired Whitehaughbrae from Thomas of Todrig. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He died without an heir and the lands passed to Thomas of Salenside (probably his cousin's son). His genealogy is treated extensively by John Scott of Rodono (although there may be some confusion over multiple men of the same name owning the lands). Walter 'Auld Wat' of Harden (1540s–c.1629), usually referred to as 'Auld Wat o Harden', since he reputedly lived to be 80. He was son and heir of William of Harden (or perhaps grandson of William if there was another Walter in between). He took part in the group of about 200 Scotts and their followers who broke into the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. He is mentioned in a 1559 charter of the lands of Harden between Alexander, Lord Hume and his father. He was also Laird of Todshaw, Mabonslaw, Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielswood. He accompanied Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and was renowned as a riever. He was descended from the Scotts of Synton and succeeded his father in 1563. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. He apparently received the lands of Gilmanscleuch after his youngest son was slain by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch in a hunting match (although this story seems confounded with that of his son Walter in Essenside). However, in 1579/80 he was accused along with Elliot of Redheugh and Elliot of Hoscote of committing a raid on Coquet Water. The Elliots (then allied with the English) raided his property at Hoscote in 1580. Also in 1580 he complained to the Privy Council (along with the Countess of Bothwell and James Gledstains of Cocklaw) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. There is a contract between him and James and John Langlands in 1588 over teinds from Harden and Todshaw. In 1590 he is listed on the 'Roll of the Clans'. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Whitslade, he had a letter of pardon from the King for 'intercommuning with Francis' Earl of Bothwell. He took part with Bothwell at the 'Falkland Raid' in 1592, when they tried to capture the King. Because of his role in this he was denounced as a rebel and his houses at Harden and Dryhope were ordered to be destroyed. In 1592 or 1593 he helped Bothwell to plunder lands in Tweedside, reportedly carrying off 4,000 sheep, 200 cattle, 40 horses and £2,000 in goods. In 1591/2 he was listed among a large number of Scotts who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva. He was listed along with his brother William among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he witnessed a bond of 'manrent' in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branxholme. Also in 1595 he was among Elliots, Nixons and others complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding raids into England. He is also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Also in 1596 he was accused of leading a raid along with Willie Elliot of Larriston and the young Laird of Whithaugh and 60 men, who took 300 head of cattle, 20 horses and goods from 'the Leabecke at Wilkinskarre'; in another complaint the same year it is said that he headed a group of 400 men in a raid on Gilsland. In 1598 he was 'put to the horn' at the instigation of Sir John Ker of the Hirsel for non-payment of profits arising from Borthwickshiels, and remained officially a rebel for about a year 'in proude contempt of his Hienes, and in manifest defraud of the said complainer'. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. In 1599 he was responsible (along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill) for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale), for which they received remission in 1604. In 1602 he signed the new 'General Band' among Border Lairds. Also in 1602 he and Gavin Eliott of Horsleyhill were cautioners for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he was among a list of 'pretended tenants' served with a summons to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by James Cunningham. Also in 1603 he had a charter for the land of Pirntaton, near Stow. He was regularly bound over in large sums to keep the peace, threatened with outlawry, etc. Later in life he helped keep the peace, e.g. taking part in an important meeting of Lairds in Jedburgh in 1612, and signing the bond to keep the peace. In 1610 Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) stood as cautioner for him and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called of Todshawhill, and his associates; the nature of this dispute with his neighbours is not clear. There was also a feud with the Scotts of Bonnington, who held lands on the Ettrick Water; while fishing there his son Walter was killed, leading to him gaining the lands of Singlie, Ern Cleuch, Newhouse, etc., and then Lady Bonnington complaining about being harassed by him and his supporters in 1617. He and his son William were described in 1617 as 'chalmerlanis and baillis to Waltir, Lord Scot of Bugcleuche, haveing the cheif commandiement within the haill boundis of the countrey of the Forest'. A stone bearing his initials and those of his wife (and the date 1628) used to be on the bridge at Ettrickbridge, which he had built there. His wife is supposed to have served him his spurs when the meat supply was dwindling. In 1576/7 he married Mary (or Marion) Scott, daughter of John (not Philip as often stated) of Dryhope; she was also called the 'Flower of Yarrow'. It is said that he agreed to provide 'horse meat and man's meat' for a year and a day, as well as the plunder from the next Michaelmas moon; there is unfortunatrely no evidence to support this story. In 1598 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswood of that Ilk (and she died about 1629). His sons were: Sir William, who succeeded; Walter in Essenside, who was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse; Hugh in Greenhead, also called 'of Deuchar', who started the Scotts of Gala and married Jean, daughter of Sir James Pringle of Gala; Francis 'in Howfuird', who was ancestor of the Corse Scotts of Synton and married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade; and possibly George of Castlesyde. He also had many daughters: Margaret ('Maggie Fendy'), who married Gilbert Eliott of Stobs ('Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'); Esther, who married Elliot of Falnash (perhaps Archibald) and later George Langlands of that Ilk (although it is unclear if this matches up with what is known about the Langlands family); Janet who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade; Isobel, who married James Johnstone of Westerhall; another daughter possibly marrying Scott of Tushielaw; another daughter marrying Geddes of Kirkurd; another daughter marrying Porteous of Hawkshaw; another Margaret (only child with his 2nd wife), who married David Pringle of Galashiels and later Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun; and probably an illegitimate daughter who married Robert, son of Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill, and progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Oakwood Mill. The Museum has a porridge pot said to have belonged to him (donated by A. Black in 1872), as well as a lock and key from Old Harden House – 'Not even the Flower of Yarrow's charms In youth, might tame his rage for arms. And still, in age, he spurn'd at rest, And still his brows the helmet press'd' [SWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Todshawhaugh. He is listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He could be the Walter of Todshawhaugh listed in 1628 among men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his land. He was accused along with John Currie

(also from Todshawhaugh) and James Donaldson in Cavers. He could be the Walter 'in Hawik, called of Todshawhauch' who led a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced; his son George is also listed there. He was also recorded as 'in Hawik, called of Todschawhill' in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates; the nature of this dispute among local landowners is not clear. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Catslack. He was father of James (d.1679), who was Minister at Kirkton 1615–19. He may also have been father of William in Catslack, who was served heir to the lands of Easter Moormaw in 1607 (previously belonging to the brother of his great-grandfather, John, Vicar of Hawick). In 1620 he complained about Alexander Stewart assaulting him at the house of Walter in Catslack, striking him 'upoun the face and luggis with a grite rod and with a drawn whinyer gaif him ane deep and deidlie straik and wound in the breist', then threatened to shoot him. Additionally they claimed that Alexander, along with John (son of David Stewart in Glen) regularly harassed him with 'hagbutis and pistolletis'; the Privy Council declared the Stewart men to be rebels. Also in 1620 he was recorded as Walter 'in Slak' in a complaint, along with his brother Adam and William 'of Slak'; this was Alexander Stewart in Phaup complaining about being unfairly imprisoned. Separately, he and William complained about the Stewarts and vice versa, with him being represented by his brother Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh. Walter of Todrig (16th/17th C.) probably son of George of Todrig and grandson of the first Laird of Harden, William. He may have been the Walter 'in Todrig' who witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568 (when his father would still have been Laird). In 1579 he is recording paying Robert of Allanhaugh £100 Scots for the annual rent of the lands of Raesknowe; additionally he received payment of £50 Scots from Andrew Riddell (brother of Walter of Riddell) for the annual rent of his lands of Todrig, this was with the consent of his wife Margaret Ker and her mother Elizabeth Ker ('conjunct feuars of his lands of Todrik'). In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stirches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. In 1581 he leased the lands and steading of Shielswood from William Scott in Burnfoot. Also in 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. Additionally in 1581 he is recorded in a dispute over the sale of a horse of his in Selkirk. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581/2 he gave a sasine for half the land of Todrig 'with tower, fortalice, houses, biggings and yards' to Joanna, daughter of 'Dand' Rutherford of Grange 'in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent'. This suggests perhaps that he or his son married this Helen Rutherford. The sasine was given with the consent of his mother, Elizabeth Ker (and hence it is unclear if she was his mother or mother-in-law). He was a signatory of the clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in a charter of 1594 renting Ferniehirst Mill and its lands from Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also said to have been in the raiding party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. In 1606 he held the lands of 'Hardenhead' from Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst through a 'wadset', and in 1610 was referred to in revocation of a contract by Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam. In 1607 he had a charter (probably a confirmation for the lands of Todrig) from James, Lord Hay of Yester and another in 1619. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced. He was claimed to have been wounded in about 1616 when the Scotts of Bonnington killed Walter in Essenside. In 1617 his 2nd son Walter was a 'near kinsman' of the deceased Walter in Essenside whose widow complained to the Privy Council about the Scotts of Bonnington still being at large. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his son Walter was also mentioned. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1619/20 he and his son William had a warrant for the arrest of Robert Ormiston of Old Melrose (perhaps for encroaching upon their lands). In 1620 there was a further charter for holdings in the Todrig estate, which mentions his brothers Robert and William. In 1620/1 he gained half of the lands of Trinlyknowe from Alexander Pringle and his wife Bessie Scott; the full lands appear to have gone to Andrew Riddell of that Ilk in 1622.

He is also mentioned in the Commissioners' Court for 1623 when Thomas Hood (from Ancrum) was accused of stealing cattle belonging to him from 'Plassadge' in England (Plasketts perhaps?), and also Michael Birny (in Fairnilee) found guilty of stealing 30 sheep belonging to him and his associates; his son Walter is also mentioned in 1623. It is possible that some of these events relate to 'Auld Wat' (of Harden, Todrig, etc.). His children included: William, who was his heir and married Isabella Livingston; and Walter, who was involved with the feud between the Scotts of Harden and the Scotts of Bonnington. In about 1630 he probably sold Todrig to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ladhope. He was recorded in 1599, when the Laird of Howpasley (probably William) who was surety for him, as well as the Laird's son John (who may have been related). He is listed being 'of Landhoip' and may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (c.1587–1633) 2nd Lord and 1st Earl of Buccleuch, son of Sir Walter 'the Bold'. In 1590 he was described as 'Walter Scot, younger' when he rented the West Mains of Hawick from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was warded with John Carey in 1597/8, as a substitute pledge for his father. He may have accompanied his father in the conflicts against Spain in Holland sometimes in the period 1603–09. In 1606 he was the 'master of Buccleuch' who had a feu charter of the Kirklands of Hawick (except for the Manse and Glebe) from William Fowler (Parson of Hawick), with the consent of his father, Walter, Lord of Buccleuch. In 1611 he had a letter from the Privy Council forbidding the holding of a horse race between him and the brother of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. The inventory of the estates when he succeeded in 1612 still exists. He was the first in his family for 140 years to succeed to the titles when of full age. He served extensively in Holland, but also lived for periods at Branxholme. In 1618 he was appointed by the King as a commissioner to keep law and order in Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1619 he was created Baron Scott of Whitchester and Eskdail and Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1619 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Liddesdale and the Debateable Land, as well as Eskdale (along with Robert, Lord Maxwell) for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. He purchased Synton from John Erskine, Earl of Mar in 1619. In 1621 he resigned the lands of Ringwoodfield (in upper Teviotdale) to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose (but the Scotts of Buccleuch held them again not much later). In 1621 he was at the meeting of the Scottish Parliament held in Edinburgh. In 1622 he was part of the local Commissioners' Court appointed to help keep the peace on the Border. Also in 1622 he was in dispute with the Marquis of Hamilton over lands formerly held by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell. Through the 1620s he continued as one of the joint English-Scottish Commissioners of the Middle Shires and was also member of the Privy Council. He had a narrow escape in his family's feud with the Elliots in 1624. He complained about the Elliots of Redheugh oppressed his tenants (on their former lands in Liddesdale), leading him to eject them, but after the Elliots regained lands through the courts they continued to plot against him. It is said that he overstretched his estate and so entered the service of the States-General of Holland in 1627. By 1629 he was given a commission as Colonel of a company in the Netherlands and was present at the sieges of Den Bosch, Bergen-op-Zoom and Maastricht. He was called home by a letter of King Charles I in 1631, but went back to Maastricht in 1633, after making a will in Scotland. He was still recorded as superior of the lands of Kirkurd in 1632. In 1616 he married Lady Mary Hay of Erroll, daughter of Francis, Earl of Erroll. His legitimate children were: Elizabeth (b.1621), who married John, Lord Erskine and Earl of Mar; Walter (b.1625), the eldest, who died aged 4; Francis (b.1626), Lord Scott, who succeeded; David (b.1627) of Canonbie; Jane (or Jean, b.1629), who married John, Master of Yester, who became the Marquess of Tweedale; and Mary (b.1631), who died unmarried. He also had at least 11 illegitimate children, including: Francis of Mangerton; William, also of Mangerton; John of Gorrenberry; Margaret, who married John, son of Robert Pringle of Stichill; and Janet, who married Andrew Scott of Foulshiels. He died in London, on his way home again from Holland. He was the last of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be buried in the family vault at St. Mary's Church (7 months later). His body was brought by ship from London, but driven to Norway in a storm, arriving at Leith 15 weeks later (with the journey described in detail by Scott of Satchells). There was a huge mediæval-style funeral procession from Branxholme to St. Mary's in June 1634 when 'he was caried be his honorable freinds and the maist pairt of the whole nobilitie from the said place [Branxholme] to his kirk of Hawick all on fut under a fair velvet pale and the ceremoni with the armes wes set doun by some of his freinds thaimeselffes with advyse of ane painter'. His armorial bearings were the first to have the supporters as 'two ladies richly attired'. His will and inventory still exist – '... And of Earl Walter, rest him, God! A braver ne'er to battle rode; And how full many a tale he knew, Of the old warriors of Buccleuch' [SWS], 'Earl Walter was Lord Walter's son, A Mars for Valour, Wisdom, and Renown, His courage durst a Lyon fear, His Frowns would terrifi'd a Boar' [CWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as 'the Earl's servitor' in 1620 when he was one of the witnesses for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch granting Goldielands to Sir Walter of Goldielands. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in 'Mylneholme' in 1622 when a Little was accused of stealing his sheep. This was probably the Millholm in Liddesdale, and he may have been an ancestor of the later Walter there. Walter of Howford (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1615 he married Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. He witnessed several documents in 1621. He sold Howford to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1686 it was stated that the representative of Scott of Howford was Scott of Coldhouse (hence presumably a near relation). It is possible that his widow was the 'Marie Scott lyfrenter of Cowdhouse' recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663. Walter of Midshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 when he was the first named in a list of Scotts charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His son Adam was also listed, along with Adam of Burnfoot, William, smith in Hawick, and William's brother Adam; he may well have been related to some of these men. Adam of Burnfoot paid caution of 100 merks. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scotts of Midshiels or of Howpasley. Walter of Tushielaw (d.bef. 1643) son of Robert, from whom he succeeded in 1633. He was specifically served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, with mill, and the lands of 'Conninglaw' and Cacrabank. He may previously have been called 'of Fawdshope'. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Robert (then still heir apparent to Tushielaw) when listed among Scotts and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was succeeded by his brother William in 1643, after (probably) having conveyed the estates to him in 1636. His children included: James, who was Brigadier in the Life Guards; and Robert. He appears to have granted his son Robert 'in Fauldishoip' his lands in 1636 (although this could be confusion with his brother William). Walter of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1619) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1573, when there was surety for him. He is listed there being 'in Chalmerlane Newton', along with his brother John. They were both sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot, who possessed half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton. Gavin Eliott of Bailielee (and later of Stobs) complained that they had attacked his servant on the other half of the farm. Following his non-appearance, his brother John was declared a fugitive in 1573; he and his mother were decalred fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Eliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It is unclear who their father might have been. In 1576 surety was found for him 'not to molest' Gavin Eliott. In 1579 his brother David purchsed a tenement in Hawick from Robert Johnstone from Annandale. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He is also recorded in 1588 when his brothers John and David were witnesses to a sasine for the Scotts of Howpasley for Midshiels and Appletreehall. He is listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. In 1592 his cautioner was John Hay of Smithfield that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He is included on a list of several Scotts and others whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham) was trying to remove from their lands in 1603. His son John had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule in 1619 (registered in 1624) by which time he was deceased. William 'of Newton' is probably his direct descendant (perhaps his son), and possibly also 'Syme of Newtoun in Hawick'. He may have been father of both William of Chamberlain Newton and John of Brieryyards (recorded as brothers in the 1630s). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant farmer in 'Crayk', i.e. Craik in about 1610, when he was listed among supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1618 when his brother Simon in Newton was served heir to him in the lands of Easter Craik. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being 'in Hawick' in 1610 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane served as caution for Robert of Satchells, who was bound not to harm him. Walter of Burnfoot (d.1640s) in Ale Water, probably son of William, or perhaps his brother. He was recorded in the Circuit Court records of 1623 when 2 men were found guilty of stealing a horse from him; there his lands are referred to as 'Burnfute upon ye Water of Aill'. Margaret, wife of probably the same Walter was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James 'Lethame' in Hawick Parish Church, in 1616 and later on the High Street. It seems unlikely that he was the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) in 1604, since that would have been too early (and perhaps that 'Walter' is an error for 'William'). However, he may have been involved in the ongoing dispute with the sons of the Earl of Bothwell, which lasted until the 1620s. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. His son Robert was served heir to him in 1641. It is unclear when he died. His name still appears in the county valuation of 1643, with the lands being valued at £400. However, he appears to have been deceased in 1632 when his son Robert was summoned (along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) to received payment for the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch. Walter (d.c.1616) 2nd son of Walter 'Auld Wat' of Harden, described as 'in Essenside'. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1614 there is a bond with his father Walter and brother William, relating to his future wife and the lands of Borthwickshiels, Alemoor and others. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth), daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield); in 1632 Elizabeth (by then remarried) renounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned lands to her son James. He was killed (according to complaints raised by his wife in 1616–17) by John Scott, brother of Simon of Bonnington, along with Simon, another brother Adam and 'Will's Sym' of Thirlestane who came 'bodin in feir of weir with lances, suordis, secreitis, plateslevis, quhingeris and utheris wappones invasive', attacked him while he was fishing on the Ettrick, and he died 48 hours later; it is also said he was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse, suggesting that John, brother of Simon of Bonnington, was of Newhouse. In 1617 Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, complained about her family being continually harassed by the Scotts of Harden, this presumably being a continuation of the feud between these families; her complaint includes a description of the events that led to his death, stating that the Scotts of Harden were being deliberately provocative by fishing in the waters belonging to the Scotts of Bonnington. He is probably the Walter 'of Ashinsyde' (i.e. Essenside) recorded in 1617 when William Scott appeared at the Privy Council in his name (even although he was deceased), as well as those of several other supporters of the Scotts of Harden. Also in 1617 his widow, Elspeth Hay, complained on behalf of the Scotts of Harden that Simon Scott of Bonnington and his supporters remained 'unrelaxed from a horning'. His widow, brothers Hugh and Francis and others involved were ordered to appear personally before the court in 1619. His widow later married William Scott of Salenside. In the period 1633–53 his daughters and heirs Jean and Margaret had an action raised against them by James, son of William of Salenside (and hence their step-brother, presumably over the inheritance of Essenside), with Sir William of Harden as their curator. These 2 daughters were served as his heirs in 1641, with him being described as the 2nd lawful son of Walter 'senioris de Harden'. Note that Keith Scott (and others) confuses details of his death (saying he was killed by Simon of Bonnington in 1620). Walter 'Wattie' (d.1616) son of 'Braidis Andro'. He was one of the 5 men involved with slaughtering Sir James Douglas' sheep at Howpasley in 1615, at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells. He and Ingram Scott met the others at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley. They killed about 40 sheep, with about 20 more lying wounded, it is said that the sheep were slain 'be streking of thair heidies, and cutting thame in tua throw thair bakis'. He escaped to the North with Ingram Scott, but the pair were captured and brought to Edinburgh Tolbooth. Although they denied knowing 'Jock the Suckler', when they saw him they apparently said 'Quhat now, Jok! How come thow heir – and quhairfoir ar thow wairdit in this hous?'. Their lawyer tried to argue that the relevant law only applied to horses and cattle, but the judge would have none of it. Along with Ingram and Geordie Scott he was hung in Edinburgh for the crime, with Jock essentially turning informant, but being executed later for other crimes. It appears that the trial may have been heavily stacked against them (with several of Drumlanrig's supporters on the jury, no evidence to place them at the scene except for the informer, and a law that did not technically apply to sheep in any case). Walter (16th/17th C.) Hawick man, described as 'at the Eist Port', who was one of the locals accused in 1612 by the Lord Advocate of charging too much interest on loans. He was described as 'of Eistport in Hawick' when he was recorded as a juror in the 1622 Commissioners' Court. Probably the same Walter 'at the Eist-port' was also on the 'leet' for the election of the Bailies in 1638. Presumably he lived near the East Port and his designation distinguished him from other contemporary Walters. Walter 'Jock's Wattie' (16th/17th C.) witness to a sasine for a tenement in Hawick in 1610. The land was going to Bailie Robert, son of 'Wat's Jock', who could therefore have been his brother. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts this was. Walter of Alton (d.bef. 1638) eldest son of Adam and grandson of Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1606. The 'Hob of Alton' who was Bailie in Hawick was probably his brother. In 1619 he witnessed a bond signed in Hawick between John, son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule. He is recorded as being 'called of Altoun'. His sons were probably Robert ('junior of Altoun', who succeeded and signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Haick in 1638) and William ('vocat de Altoun in Hassendene'). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater, along with Patrick Turnbull, recorded in a contract of 'wadset' in 1612. Along with Patrick Turnbull he is also listed in 1627 as the sometimes occupant of Templehall and Brewlands. Walter of Girnwood (d.c.1629) younger son of Robert, Laird of Shielswood, and brother of Robert. In 1617 he was recorded as Robert of Shielswood's brother among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is recorded in 1622 in an action with the Scotts of Buccleuch, regarding his removal from 'Toungrig' and other lands in Liddesdale. He was still alive in 1628 (and recorded being of 'Girnewood'), but died soon afterwards. His sons Robert and Walter were both minors when he died, with his brother Robert of Shielswood being appointed as their 'tutor' in 1629. His son Robert was served as his heir in 1636. Walter of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) said to have carried the Earl of Buccleuch's spurs in the funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. He was probably related to the later Walter in Wauchope, but how he fitted in with the family genealogy is unclear. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todrig. He is mentioned as part of the court case between the Scotts of Harden and Bonnington, over the death of Walter in Essenside in about 1616. In 1619 he was one of the people ordered to attend the court personally. He may be the Walter recorded along with William in a case in 1620 regarding the imprisonment of a man from Old Melrose. Rev. Walter (c.1588–1649) graduating from St. Andrews in 1608, he was admitted as minister of Castleton in 1612. Perhaps the same Walter, 'M.A.' was recorded as Schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1609. He may have been minister when a new church was erected; a stone built into the schoolhouse has the date 1621 and his arms and initials. He was minister in Castleton in 1618 when he complained that George Halliburton of Pinnacle had not paid him (as assignee to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs) the sum of 2000 merks and 100 merks for expenses. He is probably the 'Mr Walter Scot' who is recorded as possessor of Byreholm in 1632. He was owed money from the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He witnessed a document relating to the sale of Harwood in 1637. He signed the Covenant (against Episcopalianism) in Hawick in 1638. In 1649 part of Cromwell's army (under Generals Bright and Pride) stayed several nights at Castleton Kirk on their way back to England. There they broke the seats and communion tables, took the minister's books and lit their pipes using the parish records for the years 1612–48. There is no record of how the minister himself was treated, but he died later that same year. His brother's son Walter Scott in Norham was served as his heir in 1649, so he presumably had no children of his own. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew of Salenside. In 1613 he became an apprentice in Edinburgh to beer-brewer Thomas Scott (who may have been related). He is probably the apprentice of Thomas who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1635 and could be the Walter who became a Guild Brother in 1643 (however, there were 2 apprentices of the same name). Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Allanmouth. His father was already deceased in 1620 when he became an apprentice in Edinburgh to beer-brewer Thomas Scott (who may have been related). He is probably the apprentice of Thomas who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636 and could be the Walter who became a Guild Brother in 1643 (however, there were 2 apprentices of the same name). Walter of Headshaw (17th C.) signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. Robert 'sumtyme of Heidschaw' also signed. He could be the same Walter recorded in 1603 and 1609, who was a younger son of Walter and recorded as brother of Robert of Heaadshaw in 1621. He could also be related to the Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw recorded later in the century. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1651) 2nd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded from his older brother Robert and was in turn succeeded by his younger brother Thomas. He was served heir to Robert in 1645. He commanded a regiment of horse in the royalist army and was involved in the civil wars, probably being knighted by Charles II in 1651. In 1644 and 1646 and he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and in 1649 again for Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1645–46, 1650 and 1651. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is mentioned in 1658 in a case in the Regality of Melrose, in a lawsuit over money due for 'three trowps horse of Captan Walter Scott' to him, also involving Robert Ker of Faldonside, relating to 1650. He held lands at Drycleuchshiel and Redfordgreen, as well as Whitslade. He married a daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Ormiston, brother of the Earl of Traquair. His children included: Robert, baptised in 1647, who must have died in infancy; Walter, baptised in 1649 and also died in infancy; and Jean. He died at Inverkeithing, fighting against Cromwell (while his brother Robert had probably died fighting on Cromwell's side 8 years earlier) – 'Sir Walter Scot his brother, that At Innerkeithing was slain, It was into the year of Grace, Sixteen hundred and fifty one' [CWS]. Walter (17th C.) maltman of Hawick, who was on a list of 16 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. He could have been related to Bailie John, who was also a maltman in the next few decades. Walter of Glenrath (17th C.) son of James of Glenrath and grandson of Walter of Tushielaw. He succeeded his father in part of Nether Glenrath in Peeblesshire in 1627. In 1631 his supperior John of Hundleshope infefted him in other parts of Nether Glenrath, as well as part of Easter or Over Glenrath. He sold these to John Vietch, fiar of Dawyck in 1636. His sisters Bessie and Margaret renounced their claims to the lands in 1638 in favour of their other brother William, who was his heir. Col. Walter of Balweary (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Sir James. He was the last Scott of Balweary. He served in the army, spending much of his time on the Continent. He was Captain from 1629, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1649, Colonel in 1673 and retired by 1673. He may have been in the Army of the Covenant in the mid-1640s. Not long before his death he sent the seal of his family to Sir John of Ancrum. He never married and died in Flanders. He has sometimes been confused with Capt. Walter of Satchells. Walter of Braidhaugh and Arkleton (d.bef. 1661) 3rd son of John of Newark. He was also sometimes referred to as Walter of Harwood. It seems likely that he was a distant relative of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the detailed descent of his family is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son of John of Newark, who was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar; Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him, as well as his brothers James and William, and William in Fastheugh for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. He was tenant (and probably not owner) of Broadhaugh in the upper Teviot valley. He served as local Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in the period 1630–34 and probably through at least the late 1630s, with responsibility for 'Teviotdalehead' and Ewesdale. He was also Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir. He is also recorded in 1632 in a note from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch about fixing the roof at Branxholme, where he is described as 'in Braidhauche'. He was 'of Breidhauche' in 1638 when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. In 1644 he was bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch for the 4 kirks of Eskdale, Ewesdale and the Debatable Land, and was given orders by the Committee of War for Roxburghshire to convey soldiers from these parishes to the Master of Cranstoun. He purchased Meikledale and Meikledale-hope from Adam Cunningham in 1643 (when he was referred to as being of Harwood) and shortly afterwards acquired Arkleton from the same man. He was 'of Arkiltoun' in 1649 when he wrote a description of the Sheriffdom of Selkirk along with William Eliott of Stobs, and in the same year when he was listed on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire and Annandale. In 1651 he is referred to as 'of Arkiltoun' when his son Robert 'callit of Braidhauch' was granted 800 merks yearly in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a contract with Adam

Cunningham and the Earl of Nithsdale (as superior) relating to Meikledale, which was part of a legal case over ownership of those lands in the early 18th century. He married Agnes (or perhaps Anna), daughter of Turnbull of Minto. His son Francis succeeded to Arkleton and was also Chamberlain for the Langholm area. Another son, Robert, became Robert of Harwood. It is said he had several daughters, including one who married Maxwell of Broomholm (possibly Jean, wife of John Maxwell) – 'Robert he was a worthy Man, He was Son to Walter of Ercckletoun, Walter sprung from that same Stock, That was call'd John Scot of Newwark' [CWS]. Walter of Commonside (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Commonside. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Gowanlock and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1643. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Turnbull and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1648. Walter (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Haining and brother of Robert. He was described as being portioner of Guilan. Where these lands were is unclear. His son Lieut.-Col. Robert was the last of the members of this branch of the family recorded. Walter 'Gray' (17th C.) recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving skinner Andrew Deans and merchant Walter Robson. Walter 'Wat o the Buss' (17th C.) listed in 1642 among a large number of Borderers declared as fugitives. He was probably connected to Bush in Ewesdale and related to earlier Scotts from there. Walter of Huntly (17th C.) recorded in a case that came before Parliament in 1644. Katherine Kendell, widow of John Young, asked for him to be ejected from the lands of Hyndhope and provide her with the duties from these lands. He seems like to have been son (or perhaps younger brother) of John of Huntly, who was recorded in 1638. In an Ashkirk baptismal record of 1656 he is 'called of huntlie', which suggests that he no longer held the lands of Huntly; it appears right after a baptism for John of Langhope, who was from a related branch of the Scotts. He married Jean Scott and their children probably included: Andrew (b.1653); Janet (b.1656); John (b.1661); and Elizabeth (b.1663). In 1661 he is 'Mr' (although Huntly is not mentioned explicitly) and the baptismal witnesses were William of Synton and William of Headshaw. He is the last Scott of Huntly on record. Walter of Chapel (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, with lands valued at £668 in 1643. These lands consisted of Chapel itself valued at £390, as well as £200 of 'acres in Lilliesleaf' and 'Portions-croft' valued at £78. Note the potential confusion with Scotts connected with Chapelhill near Branxholme. He was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. Walter Scott of 'Burnside' was involved in 1640 with Sir Walter Riddell over the lands of Chapel, so this may have been him. He was probably the Laird of Chapel who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf Parish, still paying tax on £668. He may be the Laird of Chapel who was listed among the 48 landed gentleman to whom Walter of Satchells dedicated his 'Post'ral' in 1688. Walter of Foulshiels (17th C.) son of James, and brother of Andrew. In 1647 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of 'Fadounsyd' and 'Nether Whitlawhous'. In 1652 his estate was inherited by his 2 daughters, Elizabeth and Jean, one of whom, Elizabeth, married James Scott of Bowhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie, and their daughter Janet was born in 1648. Walter of Bonchester, 'Wat o the Dykes' (d.1653). It is unclear from which branch of the Scotts he came, although there is a tradition that the Scotts of Bonchester were related to the Scotts of Harden. It is also unclear what the 'Dykes' in his nickname referred to, but 'the Dykes' near Bedrule seems likely. He is probably the Walter described as 'of Dykis' in 1605 when Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him not to harm Patrick Storie in Spittal-on-Rule. In 1612 he is 'in Dykis' in a document listing local people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans; he was among those men who appeared to answer the charges. Probably the same Walter 'called of Dykis' was 'bailie in that part' to Andrew Ker, Lord Jedburgh, for a sasine relating to Harwood in 1631. He purchased Nether Bonchester in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh); these joint owners had previously had a wadset on the property that was not redeemed. He was recorded as owner of Nether Bonchester in 1643, when it was valued at £180. His eldest son was William, Laird of Galalaw. He was succeeded by Thomas, who is suggested to have been his 2nd son, but was probably his brother; his son William (and his wife Margaret Gledstains) gave over the lands to his uncle Thomas in 1653, according to a previous family arrangement. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Shielswood. He is recorded in 1632 when he feued part of the lands of Belses from Thomas, Lord Binning. In 1643 he was 'in Sheilswood' when his lands of Shielswood (in Ashkirk Parish) were valued at £260, and his lands in Belses were also valued at £130. He is mentioned on an inquest in 1643 and is probably the Walter of Shielswood listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. In 1636 he married Margaret Scott (although it is unclear which branch she came from). He had 2 sons and a daughter: Francis, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his brother; and Marian, who eventually also succeeded and married James Scott of Shaws. Walter (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Walter of Todrig, who was part of the raiding party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1629 he inherited the lands of Grange from his father William. His grandfather sold Todrig during his father's lifetime, this being to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, thus starting a new line of Scotts of Todrig. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter 'in the Wemyss', which is probably Weens. In 1653 he became a surgeon's apprentice with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh. Walter of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was surely related to earlier Scotts of Catslack, perhaps son of William in Catslack. He was probably father of John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 for the Parish of Hobkirk. He paid tax on £78 for his rental there. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he could have been father of the wright William who lived at Kirknowe in about 1700. Walter of Hyndhope (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1663 along with his brother Thomas. Walter of Dryhope (17th C.) recorded as Laird in 1669. He may have been brother of the previous Laird, Robert. He was succeeded by his brother, Philip. Walter 'Westport' (17th C.) resident of the Hawick, near the West Port. He was elected to the Council in 1648. He is also recorded in 1656 when he was cleared of the claim that John Scott made against him regarding a deal over 3 barrels of drink; he sold the barrels and was therefore presumably a merchant. He is recorded being 'at the west port' in 1663, when he was one of the owners of West Mains. Also in 1663 he was 'merchant, Hawick, indweller at the West Port, thereof' in a deed. He was listed among the Councillors in 1668. Presumably the same Walter is recorded in 1676 when he brought a 'letter of horning' against William Elliot of Philhope, with Henry Elliot of Harwood as cautioner (although part of the document is missing). He was probably Bailie in 1678 when Walter Hardie was fined for saying the 'Westport would be hanged'. In 1679 a woman was cited for accusing his servant John Moore of theft. He is probably the 'Westport' who witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland (along with 3 other former or present Bailies) in 1681. He may be the Walter of West Port whose servant Margaret Nichol was prosecuted for allowing Helen Moore to take meal from him in 1690. He was probably related to the other West Port Scotts, and may have been father of the later Walter of Westport, and possibly grandfather of Hawick's second known Cornet, James 'called of Westport'; James' father Walter was already deceased in 1706. He is probably the deceased Walter 'Westport' (unless there are 2 generations of Walters) whose son James married Sara Gledstains in 1719. Walter of Tinnis (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the period 1631–41. In 1642 he was named by the Privy Council to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives; he was recorded there as 'William Scot of Tinneis, curator to the Erle of Buccleuch'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Walter of Howpasley (d.c.1660) son of William of Fingland. He was brother of Robert and half-brother of Simon. When his brother died, he acquired the lands of Howpasley. After he died without issue, his sister Marion (wife of William Wilson in 'Gulzeanflat') was served as his heir and then Howpasly passed to Walter, son of his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Walter (d.bef. 1667) youngest son of Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. He inherited the lands of Howpasley, but died without issue and they went to his brother Sir Francis. His brother was served as his heir in 1667 (as confirmed in 1695), consistent with the claim that he died in about 1663, before his father. The lands he held included Rashiegrain, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch, as well as Howpasley. He is probably the same man as Walter of Ramsaycleuchburn. Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn (d.1650) probably related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh, he was also referred to as being 'of Harlawood', and hence is easily confused with the nearly contemporary

Walter of Harwood on Teviot. It is also unclear if he was related to the slightly later William of Hartwoodmyres. Scott of Satchells states that he was brother of Adam, who was father of the Walter of Whitehaugh who was alive in 1688; however, it seems clear that he was a generation earlier than this suggestion, since his own son Walter was documented to be uncle of the Walter of 1688, and hence he would have also been father of Adam. Satchells also suggests that his father (and that of the Adam whose existence is unclear) was William of Whitehaugh, whose existence is also unsupported by any evidence. In any case, the identity of his father in unknown. He served in Parliament for Selkirkshire 1646–47 and 1648–49. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was appointed as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. He is probably the 'Colonell' Walter who became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1647. He was a Royalist, who raised a regiment in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649 and fought against Cromwell's forces at Dunbar. In the correction to the will of Earl Francis in 1651, he is described as deceased when 200 merks yearly is allocated to his widow, Elizabeth Napier, and their second son, Walter. His widow Elizabeth Napier remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane and was recorded in a deed in 1673; her will was proved in Edinburgh in 1677 by their son Walter 'of St. Leonards and Harlawood'. In 1673 his daughter Anna Helena was served heir to the fifth parts of 'Waughtoun' in Prestonhaugh Parish, from her siblings Walter, Francis, Elizabeth and Margaret. In 1694 his daughter Anna Helena was served heir to Walter (presumably her brother), who was son of Walter 'de Quhythaugh' (presumably another designation of his) and gained the lands of Hartwoodburn. His children appear to have been: Walter of St. Leonards; Francis; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Anna Helena, who firstly Sir William Adair of Kinhilt and secondly Archibald Edmonston of Duntreath. He died at the Battle of Dunbar, presumably fighting against Cromwell's army. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Jean (b.1635); William (b.1638); Adam (b.1640); and James (b.1645). Walter of Goldielands (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (and not, as some genealogies state, son of Charles, half-brother of the first Walter of Goldielands). He was the last of the name to be acknowledged as 'of Goldielands' by the Scotts of Buccleuch (although there is also a record of Robert of Goldielands in 1638, and others given that designation, at least informally, later). He is hard to separate from his father, who was certainly alive in 1620, but was designated 'Sir Walter'. In 1620 his father had a charter from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, for the lands of Goldielands and Westcoterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to him (retaining the liferent). Also mentioned is Jean Riddell (probably daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk), to whom he was promised in a contract of marriage, the contract involving the lands of 'Pirntatoune' or 'Pirntaiton' (presumably Pintaton on Gala Water). He is probably the Walter of Goldielands (transcribed 'Gridlelands') who bore the 'pincell of black taffata' on a lance point in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638; the name 'R. Scott' beside his could indicate this was his brother, son or perhaps uncle. In 1641 he witnessed a document in Hawick for the Scotts of Thirlestane. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; in 1649 he is 'of Gawdilands and Stanesh', suggesting a connection with Stanedge (although the Scotts appear not to have owned it for at least another half century). In 1643 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d. He is probably also the 'W. Scott of Gowdielands' recorded as owner of lands in Cavers Parish valued at £400 in 1643; these lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is recorded in a county valuation of landowners in Hawick Parish in 1643 (as the 4th largest landowner) and on a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1649 he and Patrick Scott (writer in Edinburgh) were involved in a loan with James Crichton, renounced to Sir Patrick Hamilton in 1652. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £600. In 1655 he is recorded owing about £6800 to the deceased Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; this was for rental of the farms of Riccartonfoot, Prickinghaugh and Lawshill in the period 1634–47. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers Parish in 1663 and also paid more tax for lands recently acquired in Hawick Parish (from Cavers Kirk), as well as more than £500 for Goldielands itself. He was probably one of the 'curators' of Francis Scott of Davington, appointed in 1666. His descendants took the designation 'of Crumhaugh'. His lands appear to have passed to Robert Scott of Clack, son of his youngest sister (or perhaps aunt), as well as Lilias, daughter of his sister Jean. However, he was succeeded by Walter of Crumhaugh, probably his cousin. He may be the Walter of Goldielands recorded in a deed of renuciation and discharge with Walter 'in' Goldielands in 1673. Walter (d.bef. 1671) tenant in Ladhope. In 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679 and 1680 his widow had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He is probably the 'William' whose widow Bessie Scott was deceased in 1683 when her son-in-law Andrew Angus (Bailie of Selkirk) was her executor. Walter (17th C.) recorded as proprietor of Allanhaugh in a transcription of the 1678 valuation rolls. However, it may be that this is confusion with 'Altoncrofts and Alintoun'. If he was a Scott of Allanhaugh, it is unclear how he might have been related to previous Scotts of Allanhaugh. Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands (1631/2–1700) probably a son of Charles of Crumhaugh, who was son of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands. He succeeded his cousin Walter in 1675, inheriting several lands, although those attached directly to Goldielands passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He succeeded to Robert Scott of Glack and Lilias Scott (wife of William Knox), who were nephew and niece of Walter of Goldielands. These lands included half of Ramsaycleuch, Commonside, Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop and Langhaugh, as well as Crumhaugh. It is possible he was the Walter of Glack recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls paying £130 for lands in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1675 when he requested permission from the Hawick Bailies and Council to build a fence on top of the dyke separating his lands from those of the Common. He is Walter of Crumhaugh in 1678 when he paid land tax on £1116 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Scott 'off Gowddielands' listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He may have been the 'Goldilands, elder' on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the 'Goldilands, younger' being his son Charles). In 1696 he resigned these lands, as well as Trinity Lands, 'Corsback' and others, to Charles of Crumhaugh, his elder son. He married Janet (or Jean) Glendinning and her will is recorded in 1682. His children included: Charles, who succeeded, but appears to have died before him; Walter, whose descendants later became the representatives of this branch of the family; and William, who married Isobel Gledstains in 1702. John, recorded as 'brother of Goldilands' in 1689 may also have been his son. Note, however, that these generations are quite murky. His memorial stone was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary's Kirk around 1863 and reads: 'Here lyes Walter Scot of Crumhaugh Who deceased 20 day of December 1700 and of age 68'. Jean, who married Walter of West Port in 1700/1, was probably his daughter. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Elspeth (married to James 'Bleak'), who may have been a sister, with the other witness being William, doctor in Hawick, who may have been a brother or other close relative. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands, who (along with Robert of Tandlaw, who was thus probably closely related) witnessed a baptism in 1673 for Robert (perhaps his son or brother) and Bessie Miller. He also witnessed a baptism in 1678 for Walter of Harwood and 2 more in 1680 for William of Harwood and for Robert of Horsleyhill. He is Walter 'of Crumhaugh' in 1700 when, along with his son William, he witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his son); this was just a few months before he died. Walter of Minto (17th C.) another name for Walter of Harwood. Capt. Walter of Satchells (c.1613-c.1694) writer of 'A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot', a family history in doggerel verse, which was first published in 1688 and reprinted later. The words were dictated to school boys, it is said from Hawick. He was son of Robert Scott of Satchells and Jean Scott of Thirlestane, and may have been born on a farm in Eskdalemuir; however, there is no documentary evidence about his parents. Another suggestion is that his mother was a daughter of Riddell of that Ilk, although he himself says that he was a grandson of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He spent his youth herding cattle, then joined the Duke of Buccleuch's in 1629 (at about the age of 16) and supposedly served for 57 years (although he only says that when he was 73 years of age it had been 57 years since he entered service). He says that he first joined 'Cockburns Company' at the garrison at Caerlaverock. He was in the army of the Swedish King from about 1631 until long after the peace of Munster in 1648. He states that 'I have been through Scotland, Holland, and Sweden'. However, it appears that he was not permanently overseas and spent some of that time in Scotland. He is probably the Walter, heir apparent of Robert of Satchells, recorded in 1653 when he had a bond to desist from harming the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1654 he had an act of caution against Robert, son of Peter Scott of 'Cowdhome'; his signature is recorded in this document. He is probably the Walter 'of Satsheilles' (although it looks like 'falsheilles') who paid tax on £200 in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was also owner there in the 1678 county valuation, the lands being valued at £256. He says that he wrote (but it is not clear whether this is when he started or finished) at the age of 73; some have claimed that he was as old as 88, but this may be a misunderstanding, since he says he was writing in the year '88'. In part of the book he mentions his 'seventy and two year', so presumably that was his age when some it was written. The book was first published in Edinburgh in 1688, with a second edition in 1776, a third published in Hawick in 1786 and a reprinted edition in 1894, with extensive notes by John G. Winning. The family lost the lands of Satchells earlier in the 17th century, and so it is unclear exactly where he lived when he retired; the impression is that it was near to the old family lands and he says he was 'two or three Mile from a School', from where he hired boys to dictate. There is little documentary evidence about whether he had a family, although Dr. William Scott of Stokoe says that after returning to Scotland he married a young woman with whom he had a daughter called Gustava (after King Gustavus of Sweden, in whose army he had served). However, he is probably the Walter of Satchells whose wife Jean Pringle, widow of William of Glenrath, is recorded in a deed connected with a factory in 1663 (suggesting perhaps that he was married twice). His book does not mention any children of his. The only other known work attributed to him is a ballad about the Scotts of Whitslade printed in Caw's 'Poetical Museum'. His later namesake, Sir Walter of Abbotsford, was a great admirer of his work; it has been suggested that he was a prototype for Capt. Dugald Dalgetty in the novel 'A Legend of Montrose' and his 'Four and twenty gentlemen in their hall' seems clearly to have inspired the 'nine-and-twenty knights of fame' in 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel'. Despite his claim that he had no schooling and could not write, it is clear from his 'postral' that he was able to read, since he was familiar with classical literature (such as Homer and Virgil), and ancient chroniclers (such as Boece, Buchanan, Leslie and Spottiswood), as well as probably some early Scottish poets (such as Montgomerie) and hence he may have been being modest. He also says that he admired poets and although 'I understand, or know no forraign Tongue, But their translations I do much admire'. He also says explicitly that 'It's known as yet, I could ne're write, My reading is but small'. It may also be that when he was writing his book his eyesight was failing, since he says he was 'infirm and decrip'd with the Gout'. His work is split into 'The True History' (also referred to as 'Wat's Bellenden') and 'Satchells's Post'ral'. He describes in detail the raid in 1596, led by the 'Bold Buccleuch', where 'Kinmont Willie' Armstrong was rescued from Carlisle Castle; his grandfather was involved in these events and he surely talked with people who were there, since he was born less than 20 years afterwards. Some details, particularly of the earliest history, are clearly fanciful, and it has been stated by some that he is generally unreliable; however, it is equally clear that he also get many details correct, and hence he should be taken as a fairly trustworthy authority for at least the couple of generations before him – 'Captain Walter Scot, An old Souldier and no Scholler, And one that can write nane, But just the Letters of his Name' [CWS] (often written 'Scot'). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1649. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stevenson and their son Alexander was baptised in 1655. Walter of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William, whom he succeeded as last Scott Laird of Tushielaw (but must have been still quite young at this time). He was served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, including 'Counislaw' in 1670. He acted as cautioner for the Commissioners of Excise in Selkirkshire in 1682. He is recorded in 1681 when his son Francis became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1686 when his daughter Jean was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. He is recorded in bonds of 1682. He may be the 'Laird of Tishilow' recorded in 1700 when his brother John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh. He may also be the Walter 'uncle to Tushilew' who signed the marriage contract in 1678 between Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elliot of Harwood. His mother may have been Margaret Elliot and his uncle Francis Scott, who served as his cautioner in 1686. In 1688 he sold the family estate to Michael Anderson, who had married his sister. In 1689 he appeared before Parliament to give assurance that he would leave the country or live peaceably etc.; this suggests he was a supporter of the Jacobite cause, unlike his father. He may be the Scott of Tushielaw who in 1692 witnessed a sasine for Robert of Broadmeadows. Walter (17th C.) described as 'in Boghall' in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may have been ancestor of the later Walter of Boghall. Walter of Newton (17th C.) probably son of William, for whom John of Brieryyards was appointed tutor in 1638. He is probably the same Walter 'of Chamberlayne Newton' recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, his lands valued at £266 13s 4d; his lands in Hassendean Parish were also valued at £1378 4s 4d in 1663. He is probably also the Walter of 'Chamberlane Newtoun' recorded in 2 bonds in 1663 and the Walter 'of Newtoune' in 2 other deeds in 1663. He is also recorded in a record relating to Hassendean Parish in 1666. He and William of Burnhead seem to have been involved in a boundary dispute according to a document of 1674. He may be the Walter of Newton recorded paying the land tax on Lairhope, valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678 and paying tax on £1182 (presumably for Newton and neighbouring lands) in Hassendean Parish. He may have been succeeded by another Francis. Walter (17th C.) had a charter of the half merk land of 'Mounkland' in Clarilaw, from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He is described as 'in Monkland' in a record of major residents of Hassendean Parish in the mid-1600s. He could be a descendant of John 'of Monks-tower' listed by Scott of Satchells. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Walter of Woll (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of 'Wall' in Ashkirk Parish. The lands were valued at £533. According to Keith Scott's genealogy brothers Francis of Woll and James of Woll were owners at that time. It is therefore unclear how he fits into the family tree; perhaps he is another brother, who succeed between Francis and James, or else the name is an error. He is probably the Walter 'of Wall' who married Agnes, daughter of William Lauder (who was Bailie of Lauder) and widow of William Calderwood. He may have later held lands of Lochquarret and may be the man of that designation mentioned by Scott of Satchells in 1688. Walter (17th C.) married Marion Mark in Ashkirk Parish and had a son John (b.1650). Perhaps the same Marion Mark married William Dunlop in Ashkirk in 1656. Walter 'in Stobitcote' (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of lands valued at £260 in Cavers Parish; these same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of St. Leonards and Whitehaugh (d.1685) son of Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn, he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He may be the Walter 'in St. Leonards' who became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1656. He purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from Andrew Hay in 1656. In 1666 he gave his consent to a marriage contract of his nephew Walter to Bessie, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill; this included conveyance of Whitehaugh, 'Westerhead' (probably Wester Heap) and other lands to his nephew. He sold the estate of Whitehaugh to his nephew Walter of Headshaw in 1671 (perhaps when he came of age); however, it is unclear how the 2 Walter were connected. In 1669 he had a 'wadset' with William of Langhope (and his curator). He had a charter of Langhope in 1678 when he was referred to as 'now of Langhope'. He may be the Walter of Langhope who paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. However, these lands were sold to John Scott (possibly his son) in 1688. In 1670 he was Bailie to George, Lord Ross of Halkhead and Melville for a sasine in Linlithgow and another sasine to William Scott in Manuel. He was recorded in a deed of 1673 being 'of Saint Leonards'. Also in 1673 his sister Anna Helena was served area to the fifth parts of 'Waughtoun' in Prestonhaugh Parish belonging to him and his siblings Francis, Elizabeth and Margaret. He acted as Chamberlain (along with William Scott, Bailie of Dalkeith) for the Buccleuch estates in Dalkeith in 1673, and on his own for the years 1674–88. In 1675 he was cautioner for a bond by Sir John Nicholson to Walter, brother of Sir Lawrence Scott of Eyemouth. He is probably the 'Walter Scot Whithaugh' who witnessed a baptism for James Liddell in 1683. It is unclear exactly who he was or where the 'St. Leonards' refers to (most likely Edinburgh, but possibilities include lands in Ednam, Lauder or Peebles). His mother appears to have been Elizabeth Napier, widow of Walter of 'Harlawood', who had remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane, and he proved her will in Edinburgh in 1677; he thus seems to have been the same man as Walter, son of Walter of Hartwoodburn. It is also possible he was closely related to the Scotts of Langhope; his wife was Janet Scott and although it is unclear to which branch she belonged, it is possible she was sister of William of Langhope. His children included John, who sold the estate of Langhope to Adam Scott of Bowhill in about 1692. His sister Anna Helena, who inherited their father's lands of Hartwoodburn from him in 1694. A later Walter paid the land tax on St. Leonards in St. Cuthbert's Parish Edinburgh in 1726; this could have been his son. Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1667, becoming Laird of Burnfoot and Burnhead, which were still referred to in the service of heirs as Nether and Over Newhall. He is probably the Walter of Burnfoot who paid the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls on £312 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Burnfoot). He is recorded in a deed of 1673 being 'of Burnefit in Tiviot'. It is hard to separate him from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Ale. He was succeeded by his son Adam, who sold Burnhead to William Scott in Burnhead. Walter (d.c.1681) recorded as 'merchant in Burnfoot, in Lidsdaill' when his will was listed in 1681. The location of Burnfoot in Liddesdale is ambiguous and it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter of Burnfoot on Ale (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is hard to separate from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot. He succeeded sometime before 1669. He was mentioned as a landowner in a record relating to Hassendean parish in 1666. He could be the Walter of Burnfoot recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, listed along with owners of lands in Wilton Parish, when he paid tax on £312. He was recorded in a deed in 1673 (separate from another for Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot), along with his son William. He (or the other Walter) was recorded in 1677 when his son Walter became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh. He was still Laird in 1686, when he was one of those to whom Scott of Satchells dedicated an address. He gained Hartwoodmyres from Sir William Scott of Harden about 1690. In about 1710 he stopped the perambulation of Wilton Common by Langlands of Langlands, Scott of Whitehaugh and Scott of Falnash, questioning their authority to march the boundaries of the Common (recounted later, with the exact year uncertain). He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish who paid tax on 3 hearths in 1694. He was involved in financial dealings with the Scotts of Thirlestane and was involved in legal action to recover money in the 1690s. His brother Francis married Isobel Scott. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot, son and heir of Robert, who inherited Burnfoot on Ale in 1692; however, it is possible there is another generation of Walters and Roberts represented here. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale whose nephew Walter inherited the lands and started living there in 1715. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their son John was baptised in 1677. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Henderson and their daughter Elspeth was baptised in 1673. Walter (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Elliot, he was 'of Penchrist' in 1695 when his will was recorded. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in 'Weimes' (presumably Weens) in 1687 when the will of his wife Bessie Scott is recorded. He is also recorded being 'of Weins' in 1688. He was probably related to John, who was at Weens in 1694. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Another Walter was listed as a 'cottar' there at the same time. He could be the Walter 'in Burtoch' whose will was recorded in 1692, and probably related to George 'in Bortoch', whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh (d.c.1691) son of Robert of Easter Heap. He purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from his uncle Walter of St. Leonards. This may have been in about 1671, perhaps when he came of age. Capt. Scott of Satchells refers to him as a 'shepherd swain', living in 1688 when his book was published. His pedigree is given by Satchells as son of Adam, who was son of William, who was brother of Thomas in Wester Groundistone and son of Walter, who was son of Robert, who was son of Walter, the first Laird of Whitehaugh; however, there is no support for this, and it does not connect well with other early recorded Lairds of Whitehaugh. Nevertheless, given that Satchells was a near neighbour living at the same time, it is surely the case that some of this genealogy is correct. , i.e. that his father was Adam, although as brother of Walter of St. Leonard's, they would both have been sons of Walter of Hartwoodburn. There is a marriage contract in 1666 between him and Bessie, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill; this was with the consent of his uncle, suggesting that he was still a minor at that time, and the contract included conveying to him the lands of Whitehaugh, 'Westerhead' (probably Wester Heap) and others. It is stated in a later record that the marriage contract was with his uncle's permission because he was eldest son of the deceased Robert of Easter Heap. He was the representative of the Scotts of Headshaw in 1671. It is possible he was the Walter 'of Westerheape' recorded in a tack in 1673. He was succeeded by his son William of Whitehaugh in 1692 (with William having sasine for the lands in 1697, confirming him as heir to his father). Other children were: Robert, minister of Roberton; John; May (or Mary); and Isobel, who succeeded her brother William. He could be the Walter of Whitehaugh recorded in 1684 when he and Robert of Greenhill were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. His widow Bessie Scott, Lady Whitehaugh, had her will registered in 1696. She could be the 'Leddie whithaugh', who was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Her will was made in 1696, by which time she was 'diseased in body but sound in mind'. Walter of Raeburn, 'Wat Wudspurs' (d.bef. 1688). He was 3rd son of Sir William of Harden and Agnes Murray ('Muckle Mou'd Meg') and first of the Scotts of Raeburn. In 1661 he was served heir to his sister Janet. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He is mentioned in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and was a supporter of the suppression of the Parish. He acted as Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in Dalkeith and Lugton. He is mentioned in documents of the Regality of Melrose in 1670–74. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is recording paying tax for 'Ilerig' or 'Flerig' (presumably Eilrig) in Hawick Parish, as well as for Raeburn in St. Boswells (or Lessuden) Parish. He married Anne Isobel, daughter of William McDougall of Makerstoun (who may have been his cousin). He and his wife became Quakers (perhaps during the 1657 visit of George Fox to southern Scotland); as a result he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth and had his children removed from him by Sir William of Harden (his brother). He was moved to Jedburgh Jail, where he remained for more than 4 years. His children were: William (d.1699), who succeeded to the Raeburn estates; Walter, 'Beardie' (c.1653–1729), who was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the writer; Isabel; and Christian. Walter (17th C.) merchant of Hawick, recorded marrying Marion Armstrong in Edinburgh in 1652. It is not known how he was related to any of the other contemporary Scotts. He may be the Walter, merchant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1687. Walter (17th C.) described as 'our master stabler' in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 200 merks yearly. He probably worked at Newark and Dalkeith, where the Earl mostly lived, but it is unclear where he came from. He could be the Walter who was owed money for a year's fie from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1661. Walter (17th C.) probably a son of John of Brieryyards. He had a sasine in 1656 for a 'merk land in Hassendeanbank', which was probably Cockerheugh, which his father purchased from Thomas Turnbull in 1656. He is probably the Walter of Cockerheugh who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He may be the Walter who (along with John, probably his brother) witnessed baptisms for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687, and perhaps another for James Martin in Appletreehall in 1682. Also in 1681 he gave a disposition to John in 1681, probably assigning Cockerheugh to his brother. He is probably the 'Walter Scott Brearyeards' listed on the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Walter (17th C.) said to have been eldest son of Walter, and last of the Scots of Synton, who died unmarried. Instead he was probably eldest son of George, the last of the original Synton Lairds, with his brother being George of Boonraw. Walter 'Polesman' (17th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in 1660 transferring land containing houses and yards to Robert Scott, son of the late James Scott, also Burgess of Hawick. His byname is written 'Poalsman', and the meaning is uncertain (although a connection with the coble ferry is not impossible). Walter (1644–93) of Highchester and of Harden, eldest son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, he became Earl of Tarras. He was baptised by John Langands of Wilton. He was married to Mary Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, when he was just less than 14 and she was 11, apparently after he was kidnapped on his way to school. The marriage took place in secrecy at the Chapel of Wemyss, and without proclamation, which caused much debate at the time. It was dissolved by the Commissary in 1659, but ratified again when she reached the age of 12. He and his wife the Countess of Buccleuch were recorded in a tack of 1663 (although he was deceased before then). He was occasionally referred to as Earl of Buccleuch, but this title was not generally accepted. Instead, in 1660, he was created Earl of Tarras, Lord Alemoor and Campcastell, for his lifetime only (this followed a custom of granting such an honour to any commoner who married a Countess; the names of the titles came from lands held by his family). However, his young bride died after only about 2 years, leading to years of dispute over his entitlements to life-rents etc.; he finally renounced his claims to Buccleuch lands only in 1678. In about 1667 he went abroad, travelling in France, Italy and the Netherlands, and keeping a diary of his voyage, which survives. On returning to Britain in 1670, he visited the court, attempting to recover some of the £4000 annuity due from his marriage contract, but to no avail (and it is said that his descendants in the schoolroom at Mertoun used to be asked to work out the compound interest on 2 centuries of arrears!). He succeeded to Harden in 1672 (although there is some confusion here), with a charter in 1677 and confirming charter in 1683. He paid the land tax on land valued at £1074 in Wilton Parish in 1678 (formerly belonging to Scott of Harden and Eliott of Stobs), as well as £600 for Borthwickshiels. His lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £850 at that time. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire, charged with raising money for the King. He substantially renovated Harden House around 1691. The initials 'W.E.T.' carved on a fireplace at Harden probably refer to him ('Earl of Tarras'). He was tried for his part in the 'Ryehouse Plot' of 1683 (when several Scottish noblemen plotted to exclude the Duke of York from succeeding to Charles II) and support for the Duke of Monmouth (husband of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch), gave his confession and threw himself on the mercy of the King; he thereby implicated Robert Baillie of Jerviswood (who was hanged), as well as the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Polwarth. In 1684 he was called to give evidence in the trial of his uncle, Robert Baillie of Jerviswood. He was imprisoned for treason and had his estates confiscated. However, because of the 'great benefit that did arise by his full and sincere confession' he was rehabilitated, receiving a pardon in 1685, having his personal estate restored in 1686 and all his honours and lands restored in 1687 (including Roberton and Howcleuch Mill). He became one of the first to engage in the Revolution of 1688. He was also one of the main instigators of the petition that was successful in having Roberton Parish created in 1690, with the consequence that Hassendean Parish was suppressed. In 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He gained part (perhaps half) of the lands of Minto in 1691 from Rachel Ingles, widow of John Turnbull. In 1692 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. There is a letter from his sister Margaret in Hawick in 1693. He also survived a claim on the estates of Harden from his uncle Walter of Raeburn. He is recorded in 1694 having paid tax on 17 hearths at Harden House; he also held the estate of Borthwickshiels and his lands in (the former) Hassendean Parish at that time included Hassendean Mains. In 1677 he married his second wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Hepburne of Humbie; she became Countess of Tarras and appears to have later remarried to Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. They had sons: Gideon (b.1678) of Highchester, baptised in Edinburgh, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1681), who is said to have died young, but is probably the Thomas, son to Walter, Earl of Tarras, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1702; Walter (b.1682) of Whitfield, who later succeeded to Harden on the death of his nephews Walter and John; William (b.1682), who died before 1710; and Francis (b.1691), who died young. Their daughters were: Helen; Elizabeth; Mary, who married a Drummond; Agnes; Ann; and Margaret, who married Thomas Gordon. The succession of Harden after his death is complicated, but it eventually went to his second son Walter. His son Thomas is recorded becoming a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1702 (he may be a later Thomas than the one born in 1681). His testament is recorded in 1693. Walter of Harwood, on Teviot (17th C.) eldest son of Robert and Beatrice Gledstains (and probably not closely related to the nearly contemporary Col. Walter of 'Harwood'). He was also later known as Walter of Minto. Along with his father he is recorded in 1663 renouncing the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1667 his brother William became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1669 he was served heir to his father in Glendinning and other lands in Westerkirk Parish. He was recorded in 1669 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, appointed by William, Lord Drumlanrig; there was a dispute between him and the Bailies of Hawick over whether he had the right to hold his courts in the Tolbooth. In 1671 he he gave his consent for a disposition involving the lands of Hornshole between the Turnbulls of Minto and the Scotts of Brieryyards. He registered arms in 1672. In 1672 he was Sheriff-Depute when giving sasine to Sir Alexander Don of Newton for Altonburn and other lands. In 1672 he leased Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Park and the 'Steill and Henhaugh' from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was recorded in several deeds in 1673. In 1673 he and his eldest son Robert purchased a large part of the Barony of Minto from John Turnbull of Minto. However, they appear to have resigned these lands, which were then sold to Walter Riddell (as confirmed in 1681). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for 'Teviotdalehead' (i.e. Cavers, Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes) in at least the period 1671–77. He was referred to as 'also of Mynto' in a boundary dispute between Walter of Newton and William of Burnhead in 1674. In 1676 he served as caution for the Duke of Duchess of Buccleuch (and Monmouth) obtaining a licence to bring in 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland after the 'Thirteen Drifty Days'; he was fined when it was found that some were more than a year old, such imports from Ireland being prohibited at that time. In 1677 he was recorded leasing the farm of Todshawhill, as well as Branxholme Mains and Park. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is 'of Harwood and fallnesh' when he paid tax on £1550 13s 4d in Hawick Parish; these were probably the lands of Falnash and Harwood. In 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in the 1670s. He is probably the Walter of 'Hairwood' recorded in several bonds of 1682 and was served heir to his father Robert of Harwood in that year. William, his 'brother-german', became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1667. Another 'brother-german' may have been Gideon, who married Jeanette Elliot of Arkleton in 1677 (and was later 'of Falnash'). He may be the Walter, 'brother to Briereyards' who arranged for the boundary to be marked between his land and that of Charles Scott of Goldielands at the east end of Hawick. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, the eldest son; Elizabeth, who married Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge in 1693; Walter (b.1673), baptised in Hawick; Andrew (b.1678), also baptised in Hawick; and George (b.1681), also baptised in Hawick, who became a barber's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1698. The witnesses in 1678 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Horsleyhill. It is said that the family was ruined by his wife's extravagance and that Harwood was sold off. He is probably the Walter 'in Harwood' whose 'natural Daughter' married weaver John Jolly in Hawick in 1721. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Cook and their children included: John (b.1669); William (b.1675); James (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Andrew Cook (probably related to his wife) and John Scott (perhaps related to him). Walter (17th C.) recorded as a glover on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter and William are recorded separately as glovers on the same list. Walter 'Reid Wat' (17th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1671–77. He also leased part of Todshawhaugh in 1675. It is unclear whether his nickname referred to his hair colour or something else. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and could be descended from the earlier Walter of Chapelhill. Walter of Alton (17th C.) probably the Walter whose initials are recorded on the lintel of 'Auld Alton' house, along with those of 'A.M.' and the date 1675. He was married to Anna (or Emma), daughter of James Middlemas portioner of Raperlaw, as recorded when the pair were issued a 'letter of horning' in 1671. According to the marriage contract of 1669 he was brother of Francis of Gorrenberry; hence he may not have been directly related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included: Margaret (b.1683); and Thomas (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were Adam and William Scott (who may have been relatives), and in 1684 were James Byers and Robert Davidson. He is probably the Walter of Alton who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott (to whom he may have been related). In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Alton), as well as for Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably the same as the Walter of Alton recorded later in the 17th century, although it is possible there were 2 separate men here. He may be the 'Scot of Alston' recorded in 1684 among Borderers fined for their wives failing to attend parish church (i.e. for supporting Covenanters). He was probably the Walter 'of Altone' who in 1686 was granted by James VII a commission of the office of the Bailie of Regality of Hawick (this on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, the heritable Bailie, losing her right because of not taking 'the test'). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the disturbance at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk. He may be the same as 'Walter Scott of Alton in Raperlaw'. In 1690 in Edinburgh he married Helen Fisher; this was either his second marriage or there were 2 different Walters. He was probably the Laird of Alton in 1694 when

'Altone his hous' was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with tax paid on 6 hearths. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) recorded in a tack of 1673 being 'of Westerheape'. This is presumably Wester Heap and hence he may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Todrig (1630s–1722) eldest son of Thomas, whom he succeeded by 1691. He was recorded as son of Thomas in a deed in 1673. He acted as one of the 'curators' for Alexander Scott of Synton and was also tutor for Mark Pringle of Clifton (his cousin). He was probably the Walter 'fear of Todrig' who was recorded in 1682 as the nephew of Robert Pringle of Clifton's testament. In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire along with Thomas (probably his father) and in 1704 he was again a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was still recorded in the discharge of a loan, along with William Elliot of Harwood in 1707. It seems likely he was the 'Laird of Todrick younger' who was recorded paying tax for 5 hearths at Essenside in 1694. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism for John of Synton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fairnilee in 1682. He had one son and 7 daughters: Thomas, who succeeded; Jane (or 'Jean'), who married William Elliot, 3rd Laird of Harwood by post-nuptial contract in 1700 (she is described as 'Mrs. Scott' and so this may have been her second marriage); Elizabeth, who married Henry Elliot of Peel, brother of William Elliot of Harwood; Nelly, who married John Elliot, another brother of William Elliot of Harwood, and secondly married Rev. William Home; Janet, who married Mr. Purdom from Hawick; Christian, who married Edinburgh solictor George Dennistoun; Margaret, who married David Scott of Merrylaw; and Violet (b.1691), baptised in Ashkirk, who married in Lothian. In the 1691 baptismal record he is already 'of Todrige' and his wife is 'his lady', with witnesses Robert Scott ... (perhaps his brother) and Patrick Ker of Fairnilee (his brother-in-law) – 'Then Walter Scot now of Todrick, Since thou'rt a Gentleman, I'm sure thou'll not offended be, To be call'd a Shepherd's Swain; Thy father Thomas did the like, Since he to Todrick came' [CWS]. Walter 'of Altencrofts' (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, presumably connected with Alton Croft south of Hawick. He was probably different from 'Walter of Alton', although there may be confusion between the 2 farms. In 1678 he was 'of Altoun crofts & wyntoun' (or 'Altoncrofts and Alintoun') when his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110. In 1681 it was stated that 'the sons and grandson of the deceased John Scott of Gorrenberrie, and Walter Scott of Altoncrofts' were among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He seems to have witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (for John Wilson) in 1682. In 1688 he was baptismal witness for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1689 he had a daughter Janet (with Jean Dalglish) baptised, the record labelled 'fornicators'; the witnesses were James Graham in Altoncroft and Robert Cook. He may be the Walter of Alton Croft whose will was recorded in 1696; he was son of Robert and had a sister Marion, whose son William Wright inherited Alton Croft. Walter (17th C.) brother of Thomas, tailor in Hawick. In 1684 he was among those declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Perhaps the same tailor Walter was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1700 as a result of volunteering to be one of the Militia men for the Burgh. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish when it included Hassendean. He married Janet Grieve and their son William was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were Robert and William, who were probably either relatives or prominent Scotts in the area. Walter of Eilrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was presumably a descendant of Robert. Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1685) Hawick man, probably a merchant of some kind. Along with Walter Laing, he was a Town Councillor when the 'Steeple Loft' was arranged to be built in St. Mary's. In 1685 (by which time he was deceased) the pair had an agreement from the Town Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building this balcony. Bailie James (and his son Bailie Robert) may have been related to him. It is possible that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) recorded in 1693, along with his son, also Walter. In the service of heirs for John Ker of Cavers Carre, inheriting his uncle's Lordship of Jeburgh, is contained a reference to annual rentals of 300 merks, correspondong to 5000 merklands of Appletreehall, pertaining to the Walter Scotts, senior and junior 'de Chamberland-Newtoun'. He may be the same as the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1660s, and his son could be the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1730s. Walter 'the Butterman' (17th C.) said to be 'of the sort of Scotts of Robertowne'. In 1693 his wife was found guilty of stealing 'and litle new pann' from Mary Elliot and fined, sentenced to the stocks, imprisoned and 'sett att

the crosse for the space of two hours with the said pan about her necke'. He is recorded in the Town Book in 1694, saying he and his wife Margaret Wilson would leave the Town in connection to any theft if 'the least stouth yt but the worthe and value of ane horn spoone be laid to our charge and proven'. In 1696 the pair were found guilty of using 'ane fals key' to enter the home of their neighbour, Agnes Wood, to steal clothing and other items; they were sentenced to go to the stocks, then to be exiled from the Town, with anyone who helped them afterwards to be fined. Perhaps the same Walter, married Margaret Wilson, had a daughter Janet baptised in Hawick in 1672. It is unclear if he dealt in butter, or if his nickname referred to something else. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing 'ane little new pan'; as well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) resident of Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing 'and little new pan'. As well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Walter (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Walter was recorded as herd in Branxholme Town in 1703 when his son John was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were James Ogilvie and John, both tenants in Branxholme. Walter (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed separately from the Walter in Branxholme Town. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and John, who were also listed there. He is probably the tenant in Whitchesters recorded in the baptismal records for 1706. He is probably the Walter who (along with John) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. He married Janet Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1706), with witnesses being Alexander Thomson and Robert Scott, who were also tenants in Whitchester. Other children to couples of the same name include Margaret (b.1715), Agnes (b.1718) and John (b.1724). Walter (17th C.) smith who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) listed among the 'Deficients in Hauick Parich' in 1694. He appears to be at 'The Tour of Hauick' and is 'called Poor' (which appears to be a nickname). He may be related to John 'called o the Toor' in Hawick in 1609. Walter (17th C.) shepherd at Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Perhaps the same Walter at Drinkstone witnessed a baptism (for Archibald Riddell in Borthaugh) in 1704. He may be the Walter, servant to William, tenant in Drinkstone, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709, and who lived at Leaheads. Walter 'Chief' (17th/18th C.) listed as renter of half the farm of Overhall in 1694, with Adam leasing the other half. The pair continued to rent half of the farm in 1696 and 1698. He must have been related to this Adam, as well as to the James, who was leasing half of Overhall in 1690 and 1692 (for whose widow, Margaret, he served as cautioner). His nickname may have given rise to the name for the 'Chief's Pool' in the Teviot near there; we can only speculate about whether it might have been his favourite swimming hole or fishing spot. James 'the Chief', who died in 1778, was surely a descendant, perhaps his son; this James was born in about 1700 and described in 1764 how he was at Overhall from his birth until 1741, after his father was deceased. Walter of Langshaw (d.c.1695) son of Francis and grandson of Patrick of Kirkstyle. Sir John of Ancrum was his uncle. In 1690 he was served heir to his father's lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, 'Calfshaw' and 'Langshaugh water' in the Parish of Hawick. In 1695 his brother Thomas was served heir to their father's lands of Langshaw, suggesting that he may have been deceased by then. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He may have been a descendant of the Walter of Wauchope who was said to have been involved in the 1634 funeral of Earl Walter. He is described as 'in Wauchope' in 1665 when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood lands and in 1677 when he witnessed the 'bond of provision' for Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1688 Walter of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him and Hugh of Gala. He was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge in 1688 and 1693 and witness to a bond by Dame Magdalene Nicholson (widow of Stobs) in 1690.

He was recorded being 'in Wawchope' in a bond of 1682. There was a 'letter of horning' for him and Henry Elliot of Harwood by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' (Gervald perhaps) in 1695. In 1700 probably the same Walter was also witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig. He married Janet, daughter of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester, who was sister of James, writer in Jedburgh. Their sons were: Adam, tenant in Wauchope and purchaser of Stanedge; and William, later of Stanedge, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. There is no reason to believe he was directly connected with the later Scotts of Wauchope. He is probably the Scott of Wauchope commemorated on an elaborately carved through-stone once visible in Hobkirk kirkyard, erected by Thomas of Stonedge in 1741; the inscription apparently indicated that he was a relative of Scott of Buccleuch. He is probably also the 'Wauchops Walter Scot' mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Walter 'Auld Wat' (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1705 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for William Douglas of Bonjedward. The entry appears to say 'called old Watt'. He may have been related to Douglas' wife Beatrix Scott. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Appletreehall in 1705 and as tenant there in 1711. His children included Walter (b.1705) and William (b.1711). He was probably related to William, who was also tenant in Appletreehall in 1711. Walter (d.1717) Beadle of Hawick Kirk. In 1708 he was the 'Beddal' who presented the illegitimate child of Margaret Brydon and William Scott to be baptised. He is recorded receiving his salary in the first year of the oldest existing Session financial records in 1711, but it is unknown how much earlier he had served. He was 'Beddell of ye parish' in 1715 when he witnessed a posthumous baptism for a child of merchant Thomas 'Huison'. In 1716 he was recorded as 'beddel in Hawick' when he witnessed the baptism of Robert 'Old Mortality', son of Walter Paterson of Burnflat; it seems that he might have been related to Walter Paterson's wife Margaret Scott. He also witnessed another couple of baptisms in 1716. His son John succeeded him as Beadle at the end of 1717. He was listed as deceased and 'sometimes Beddell' in 1719 when his daughter Agnes married gardener Andrew 'Colwort' (or Collier). Walter of Nether Bonchester (1650–1733) eldest son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester. He succeeded his father as 3rd Laird in 1680, with the charter and sasine for Nether Bonchester being issued by the superior William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1681. He was witness to a sasine of 1693 for Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge. He also witnessed a sasine for Hobsburn in 1693. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1699 he was entered as a Burgess of Hawick, with the payment being in the form of one of his best ash trees for the Town to use to rebuild the bell-house of the steeple of St. Mary's. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for cooper William Turnbull. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included: Walter, who succeeded; James, who was a writer in Jedburgh; John, who was transported to America (and may sometimes be confused with John of Ashtrees); and Janet, who married Walter Scott, farmer in Wauchope. The Hobkirk Parish 'mort-cloth' is recorded being used for his burial. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wauchope in 1681, when he had a bond with Walter Lorraine in Harden, loaning him £3, signed at Hartshaughmill. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter 'Beardie' or 'Bearded Wat' (c.1653–1729) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Raeburn. Having Jacobite sympathies, it is said that his nickname came from a vow not to shave until the Stuarts were restored. It is said that he was a good classical scholar. It is also said that he took up arms for the Jacobites and Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch saved him from the noose. He became manager of the estate of Makerstoun, through the connection of his mother, who was a McDougall. He was listed as 'brother to Raeburn' in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He was a guardian to his nephew Walter, 3rd Laird of Raeburn and also managed that estate for a while. He is probably the Walter, brother of the deceased William of Raeburn who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He married Margaret, daughter of Campbell of Silvercraigs. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Baillieknowe; Robert of Sandyknowe (1699–1775), who was grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford; William, farmer at Easter Muirdean, near Kelso; Mary; Christian; and Margaret. He died at Kelso and was buried at the Abbey there. Walter of West Port (b.c.1670) possibly 2nd son of Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Walter 'westport' recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he was the 'Walter Scott Sone to Goldielands' who rented the farm of Castlehill from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696. He married Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1701 (possibly a cousin, or otherwise this may be the only connection with the Crumhaugh and Goldielands Scotts). At the end of that year their son Walter was born, and he was to become the first Scott of Wauchope. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the other West Port Scotts, including Hawick's second known Cornet, but the precise relationship is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son and heir of the deceased Walter of West Port, merchant in Hawick, who is recorded in 1716, with a bond he had in 1709 with Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) for the lands of Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish. These generations are quite uncertain; he may be the same as Walter 'in Crumhaugh and Goldielands', or perhaps distinct, but partly confounded with him in some accounts. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son Robert was baptised in 1699, with witnesses Walter Scott and Thomas Beattie. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Howpasley. His son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1703. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702 when his son James was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter in Cavers had a daughter Isabel baptised in 1709. Walter 'Laird' (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam. He was probably related to James, 'Laird' (Hawick's first known Cornet, perhaps his brother), as well as John, Robert and the erlier James, who were all also nicknamed 'Laird'. He may be the son of Thomas who was baptised in Hawick in 1678. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield and another for John Dryden, smith an Newmill. He was also tenant there (along with James) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. In 1713 he and James, both in Nether Southfield, witnessed a baptism for another James Scott in the same place. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for James, who was also tenant in Nether Southfield. He may be the Walter who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He is probably the Walter who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Dand and James Gray from Whitlaw. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Binks in Cavers Parish in 1709 when he married Isobel Beattie. His wife was from Hawick Parish and was 'servitrix' to Bailie Graham. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Alton Croft in about 1710 according to evidence given in 1767 about the pasturing of livestock on Hawick Common. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was a servant in Acreknowe in 1722. In 1711 he married Helen 'Boa' (or Bowie). Their children included William (b.1713), John (b.1719) and Walter (b.1722). Bessie (b.1724), with the mother's name just given as 'Helen', may also be his child. The witnesses in 1722 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and Walter Purdom. Walter of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'Walter Scott of Mirrielaw' when he rented part of Whithope in 1698. He was surely related to the slightly earlier William and the later Walter. He could be the Walter who was at Whithope in 1703 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was an elder of Roberton Kirk according to parish records from 1707. In 1713 he was 'of merrila in the parish of Robertoun' when one of his children was baptised in Hawick (suggesting that he was indeed farming at Whithope). In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain. Probably the same Walter 'of merriela' married Margaret Grieve and had a son Walter, who was baptised in Hawick in 1713. The witnesses in 1713 were Water Grieve in Branxholme Park (perhaps related to his wife) and William Ogilvie in Craik. Walter (1670–bef. 1741) described as 'in Crumhaugh', and 'in Goldielands', he was 2nd son of Walter and Janet Glendinning. He was thus brother to Charles and uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (with whom he is easily confused). In 1700 he was 'in Goldilands' when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He is probably the Walter 'in Crumhaugh' who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism in 1705 for innkeeper William called 'of Goldielands' (who was probably related to him). He also witnessed baptisms in 1707 for William Henderson, younger in Flex and Glover James Scott, and in 1708 for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch (which his family probably owned at that time) and for Walter Grieve, tenant in Colterscleuch. In 1709 his servant James Hogg got married. He may be the Walter 'of Crumheugh' recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands were valued at 400 merks. In 1712 he was 'in Goldilands' when (along with Andrew Riddell) he witnessed a baptism for Walter Glendinning. In 1716 he was described as 'now in Hawick' when he had a sasine for Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish, which he had been promised by Walter Scott of West Port (who was surely a relative, but demonstrating that they were not the same man). He was probably the Walter 'of Crumhaugh' who in 1716 witnessed a baptism for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh. In 1717 he and Gideon of Falnash witnessed a baptism for John Watson, Clerk to the Rgality. In 1720 he was 'uncle to Mr Scott of Crumhauch' when he witnessed a baptism for another Walter, tenant in Newbigging. In 1721 he was 'uncle to Crumhauch' when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier (with his nephew Walter 'of Crumhauch' also being a witness in the same year). In 1728 he was granted a disposition by James Burn for the lands in Hawick called 'Croftangry'. He may be the Walter who in 1729 witnessed a baptism (along with John Elliot) for William Elliot in Crumhaugh. He is probably the Walter of Crumhaugh who in 1734 was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to sort out the rebuilding of the Bailies' seat in St. Mary's. He is probably the Walter who in 1731 witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging and Anna Scott (his daughter). He may be the 'Walter Scott, Crumhaugh, a Councellour' who was mentioned in 1735 as one of the keepers of the keys to the Charter Chest. He firstly married Christian, daughter of Robert Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1708, aged 34; her memorial stone was examined by her great-grandson Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1851, and uncovered during renovations to St. Mary's Kirk about 1863. Their children included: Anna, the eldest daughter, who married Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging; Charles (b.1696), who died young; Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick, who succeeded and became the 1st Laird of Wauchope (although he appears sometimes to be confused with Walter, son of Walter of West Port); Joan (or Jean, b.1702); Robert (b.1704), baptised in Hawick, who became tenant in Crumhaugh and died without issue; Margaret (b.1706); and Charles (b.1708), who also died without children. The witnesses in 1696 were Charles (probably his brother) and Henry Orrock, in 1700 were Walter of Crumhaugh (his father) and Walter's son William (i.e. his brother), in 1702 were Robert of Tandlaw and John 'called Uncle John', who were presumably relatives, and in 1704 were Walter and James Glendinning. The baptism in 1706 was in Ancrum Parish, where he is described as son-in-law to the Laird of Chesters. The 1708 baptism in Hawick was witnessed by carrier David Minto and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. His second wife was Elizabeth (or Bessie) Scott, the marriage being recorded in Hawick Parish in 1709; she was sister to Walter Scott of Cockerheugh, and he was described as 'Uncle to Crumhaugh'. Their children included Walter (b.1712), a wright, who was deceased by 1743. The witnesses in 1712 were Andrew Riddell (tenant in Goldielands) and Walter Glendinning. His wife Elizabeth occupied the mill at Croft Angry as 'liferentix', and her step-son Robert eventually inherited it; she could be the 'Leadye Croumach' recorded in 1737 when the Town Council paid for sending 'a sodger and passenger and letter' to her. Walter of Clarilaw (17th/18th C.) probably son or nephew of Robert of Lies. Some time before 1700 he purchased Ashieburn, which became the seat of this branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son William, He could be the Walter recorded at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter of Shielswood (17th/18th C.) eldest lawful son of James of Shaws and Marion Scott of Shielswood. He is recorded in 1705. In 1712 he and his father sold Shielswood to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (and his son Gilbert). It is unclear what subsequently happened to him. Walter 'Black Walter' (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. His nickname is recorded in several baptisms. He married Christian Simpson and their children included: Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1703); Christian (b.1707), a daughter; Margaret (b.1710); and Isobel (again, b.1711). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and baker William Hodge. Some other children baptised around the same time may also be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Betie' (presumably Beattie) and their children included John (b.1703) and Margaret (b.1709). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Lymiecleuch in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1715 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), shortly after his master. Walter (1682–1766) 2nd son of William, who settled at Milsington. He moved to Girnwood in 1712. He re-leased the lands of Girnwood from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1723 he married Jane, daughter of Philip Scott of Oakwood, and she died in 1776, aged 74. Their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1724), who married his cousin Elizabeth; Philip (b.1727); perhaps another son, whose name is not known; Jean (b.1732); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1734), who married her cousin William;

Walter (b.1736), who succeeded as tenant with his brother Thomas; and Thomas (b.1742), co-tenant of Girnwood with his brother. Janet of 'Greenwood', who married Robert Elliot, tenant in Hermitage, may have been another daughter. Grisell (b.1726), daughter to Walter in Girnwood, was probably also his daughter. Walter of Woll (d.1744) eldest son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott of Harwood. His brother was Gideon, tenant in Ladhope. He was 'younger, of Wool' in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Gideon). He was 'y[ounge]r of Woall' in 1696 when he rented the farm of Whithope in the Borthwick valley from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was 'younger of Wooll' when on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and in 1701 was 'younger of Woll' when he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden. In fact his father resigned the lands of Woll to him when he married in 1694. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for the lands of Ettrick Forest for at least the years 1702–14, taking over from John of Woll (presumably his father). He was 'younger of 'Wooll, baillie to the dutchess of Buccleugh' in 1704 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and was also probably the 'younger of Well' on the Commission for Roxburghshire in the same year along with his father John. And along with Walter Scott of Harden he gave 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1705, this forming part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. He was presumably a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was also a 'curator' for Alexander Scott of Synton. He received Borthwickshiels and Roberton through a 'wadset' with Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1705 and he was proprietor of these lands in 1720, when it is recorded that he arranged for an exchange of grazing rights for the convenience of the minister of Roberton. He was still 'younger of Woll' when he had a court case with Gideon of Highchester over ownership of lands, with the adjudication in 1707 ruling that Harden, Todshaw, Borthwick Mains, Roberton, Howcleuch, Alemoor belonged to him (as well as lands elsewhere). In 1711 he was one of the original members of the short-lived 'Honest Country Club'. He was probably the Walter 'of Waalls' who had a bond with Walter of Whitfield and William of Thirlestane in 1715, and 'of Wooll' in 1724–26 when the 3 were tutors of John Scott of Harden and made claims on the Harden estate. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He may have been the Walter 'of Woall' recorded in 1737 in a document relating to sums owed by the late Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1694 he married Elizabeth (or 'Eliza'), daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He had 4 sons and 2 daughters: William, who succeeded and was Sheriff of Selkirkshire; Robert, baptised in 1696 (not 1676, as stated in some genealogies) and settled in Tomneymore (or Tamnymore), Londonderry; John (b.1702), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1711), baptised in Selkirk; Isobel; and Jean. In 1711 he was living 'at present' in Selkirk, where his son was baptised by the Rev. Lithgow of Ashkirk; the witnesses included Andrew Pringle, brother to the Laird of Clifton and Haining and several town officials of Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Alemoor. He was recorded there in 1711 and 1713, was at Easter Alemoor in 1716 and at Alemoor again in 1720. He was 'younger in Almure' in 1713, suggesting that his father was also Walter. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Walter (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Christian (b.1716); twins Thomas and Bessie (b.1717); and Robert (b.1720). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being 'in Hawick' in 1731 when his son Walter became a wright's apprentice with Alexander Turnbull in Edinburgh. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant to Hawick minister Rev. Robert Cunningham. He is recorded in 1720 as 'servitor to Mr Rot Cunningham', the Minister of Hawick. This was when he witnessed 2 baptisms (along with John Scott, the Beadle) for 'Fornicators' and another (along with surgeon William Cunningham) for weaver John Anderson. Probably the same servant Walter (along with William, son to Rev. Cunningham) witnessed baptisms in 1720 for Walter Henderson, for shoemaker Robert Porteous, for weaver Robert Jolly and for merchant Andrew Turnbull and witnessed at least a handful of other baptisms in 1722. Some baptisms were witnessed along with Beadle John, who way have been related to him. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1721 he married Agnes Gledstains in Roberton Parish. He could be the Walter in Milsington in 1722 when his son Archibald was baptised in Roberton. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newmill. He married Helen Rae and their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1726. The witnesses were Robert and William Thomson. He is probably the Walter who (along with Robert Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Thomson in 1731. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Wester Alemoor in 1734. His children included Helen (b.1733) and Mungo (b.1734). He could be the same as the earlier Walter at Alemoor, if this was a second marriage; otherwise he was that Walter's son or other close relative. Walter (b.1696) eldest son of Walter 'Beardie', and grandson of the 1st Laird of Raeburn. He became tenant farmer at Baillieknowe. He married Janet, daughter of surgeon Thomas Inglis. Their children were: Robert (b.c.1731); William (b.c.1732); Mary; and Janet. It is said that this branch of the family emigrated to America. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Selkirk. In 1727 he was 'late tacksman of the mills of Selkirk' when he had a receipt for money he gave to repair the mills of the Burgh of Selkirk. Walter (18th C.) tenant in Eldinhope in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Newbigging. He is probably the Walter in Newbigging who witnessed baptisms in 1708 for John Wilson in Newbigging, in 1711 for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield, in 1713 and 1714 for James Sanderson in Newbigging, in 1714 for William Williamson in Whitchesters and John Hobkirk also in Whitchesters, in 1718 for John Nichol (who lived at Allanhaugh Mill), and in 1719 for weaver John Stevenson. He is recorded 'in Newbigging' in 1723 when he became an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was tenant in 1726–32 when James Robson was shepherd at Newbigging. He was also a Burgess of Hawick. He could be related to James, who was tenant at Newbigging a century earlier and Walter, who was there about a generation later. In 1716 he married Anne (or Anna), eldest daughter of Walter Scott, uncle to the Laird of Crumhaugh. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); and Robert (b.1731). Other children probably born to the same parents were Robert (b.1717), Christian (b.1722) and Helen (b.1723). The 1720 baptism was witnessed by Walter, uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh (his father-in-law) and James Davidson in Newbigging, the 1722 baptism by Gilbert Elliot in Winningtonrig and James Grieve in Commonside, the 1725 baptism by 'Mr. Venice preacher' and Gilbert Elliot in Winningtonrig, and the 1731 baptism by another Walter Scott and John Glendinning. He may be the Walter in 'New...' who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Branxholme in 1728. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1725 'for making the lifting brod' (i.e. collection plate) in the Bailies' Loft of St. Mary's. And in 1734 he put up the 'brest in the bilife's loft'. He was either a joiner, or possibly this was the contemporary Beadle of the same name. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott 'Whitegates' in 1712 and for candlemaker George Turnbull in 1713. It is possible he was the Walter who witnessed a baptism for his brother shoemaker John in 1722. He was a Councillor in 1727 when he was ordered to refrain from using the 'counsellors' seatt in the baillies' loft, in respect of his twice breaking prison' after being convicted 'of a riot, and arreisted'; he may also have been removed as a Councillor. It is possible that the same shoemaker Walter who witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert (along with merchant George) in 1747. Probably the same shoemaker married Margaret Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in Hawick in 1704 and their children include John (b.1705). He also witnessed a baptism for carrier James Boyd in 1705. It seems likely that the same shoemaker married Margaret Davidson (from Wilton Parish) in Hawick in 1706, with children James (b.1707), Margaret (b.1709), Francis (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), Isabel (b.1716), William (b.1718), Elizabeth (b.1720), John (b.1721) and Mary (b.1725). The witnesses in 1707 were John 'Whitegates' and writer William Rucastle, in 1712 were John 'whitegates' and tailor John 'casae end', in 1714 (the single witness) was Henry Orrock, in 1718 were glover John and shoemaker Robert Oliver, in 1720 were wigmaker John Norville and John in Ormiston, and in 1725 were glover John (again) and wigmaker Robert Miles. Walter (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1721. Their children included Margaret (b.1727). Walter (18th C.) resident of Fenwick in 1722. He married Jean Turnbull and their children included William (b.1722) and Jean (b.1728). The witnesses in 1722 were gardener Andrew 'Colwort' and wright Walter Dalgleish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Rae and their children included Helen (b.1726). Walter of Bonchester (d.1743) son of Walter of Nether Bonchester. He farmed along with his father until 1724, when they ended their partnership. He then farmed at Wauchope along with his brother-in-law Walter Scott, tenant in Wauchope. He succeeded his father as 4th Laird in 1733. In 1726 at Doorpool he married Helen, only daughter of Adam Turnbull, tenant at Doorpool; she was sister of Rev. William Turnbull, minister of Abbotrule. Their children included: Walter (b.1727), who died young of smallpox; Thomas of Bonchester (b.1729), who succeeded and sold the Bonchester estate; Adam (b.1731), who went to the West Indies and married Mrs. Thorpe; Margaret (1733–38); Rev. William (b.1735), minister at Abbotrule and Southdean; Agnes (b.1735), twin of William, who remained unmarried and lived at Gallahill, near Jedburgh; Janet (b.1737), who married John Rutherford, saddler in Jedburgh; Helen (b.1740), who died young; and Walter (b.1741). He was recorded in a document of 1756 (by which time he was surely deceased), between his 2nd (surviving) son Adam and Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law). His farm diary from the period 1730–43 is in the National Library of Scotland. Walter of Harden (d.1719) elder son of Gideon of Highchester and Harden. He inherited the Harden and Highchesters estates following the death of his father in 1707 (although some accounts claim he inherited the estates from his cousins). He must have been a minor when he succeeded, since the estates were run by his 'tutors' in the period 1710–19, their 'sederunt books' being in the National Archives. He continued to be referred to as 'of Highchester' until the death of his cousin Robert in 1710, when he succeeded to Mertoun and the rest of the family estates (becoming the 8th of Harden). He appears to have become bankrupt, resulting in the sale in early 1719 of his lands of Harden, Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw, Borthwickshiels, Roberton, Howcleuch, Easter and Wester Alemoor and others. On his death Harden passed to his brother John. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He is recorded in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps a relative), who also lived there. He was also at Hawick Shiel in 1705 and in 1706 when he witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawick Shiel. He and Simon Miller were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was in Hawick Shiel in 1709 when his won child was baptised. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel around 1710, along with Simon Miller; this was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. He and Walter Nixon were tenants there in 1712 when they witnessed a baptism for William Hislop. He is probably the tenant called Scott mentioned in 1717 when he had 'ploghd. up an march corner hott standing upon the nortt side of said Common, opposite to the toun of Nethr Southfield'. In 1718 he and Walter Nixon (both recorded as tenants in Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for Matthew Charlton. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1705); and Walter (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and glover John Hart and in 1709 were Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Walter (d.bef. 1738) doctor in Hawick. He is described as an 'apothecarie in Hawick' and 'chirurgeon' in some baptismal records. For example, in 1707 he witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull, 'oye' to Rev. James Kerr of Abbotrule. He could be the apothecary of this name who witnessed a baptism for Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1697. He married Sara Middleton and their children included: Hugh (b.1703); Gideon (b.1706), perhaps the druggist in Hawick; Mary (b.1710); James (b.1719); and Elizabeth (b.1723). The witnesses in 1703 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Shiel in Stobicote, in 1706 were Gideon of Falnash (who may therefore have had the child named in his honour) and Adam Elliot of Arkleton, in 1719 were John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and Thomas Shiel ('apprentis to ye sd Walter') and in 1723 were 'Mr' Charles Telfer and 'Mr' John Purdom. He is described as 'surgeon in Haick' in 1738, when his son William became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same Walter (with no occupation given) who was still alive in 1731 when his son Walter became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh. He was probably the surgeon in Hawick whose daughter Sara married another Walter (eldest son of Philip, Chamberlain to Scott of Harden) in an 'irregular marriage' in 1720. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, e.g. James, who was also a surgeon in Hawick at the same time. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshaw in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1715 when his son John was baptised. There are lots of other children baptised in Roberton Parish around the same time who could be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Jean Lillico in Hawick in 1712. Their children included Bessie (b.1713) and William (b.1715). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Woodburn in 1716 and 1720. His children included John (b.1716) and Walter (b.1720). Walter (b.1683/4) born in Drinkstone, which he left when he was 20. He was tenant of one quarter of Burnfoot on Ale in about the 1740s. In 1764 he was 'indweller in Hawick, aged 80', when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of Wilton Common. He was also one of the men who perambulated the boundaries in 1764 and recalled the marches being walked in about 1705. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (1689–bef. 1743) son of Charles and Rachel Langlands. He is easy to confuse with his uncle Walter, whose name was also associated with Crumhaugh. In 1717 he inherited the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others, which had been in 'non-entry' for 18 1/2 years; this suggests he was a minor when he succeeded his grandfather. He may be the Walter of Crumhaugh (unless that was his uncle) who witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Elliot in 1718. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 when the new Hawick Schoolmaster was appointed. He is probably the Walter 'of Crumhauch' who (along with Bailie George Martin) witnessed a baptism for workman William Inglis in 1721; in the same year the other Walter 'uncle to Crumhauch' also acted as witness to a baptism. He also witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1721 (along with Gideon of Falnash) for Robert of Burnhead and his wife Agnes Scott and others in Hawick in 1722 for miller Robert Elliot, for Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He was living at Midshiels in 1722 when one of his children was baptised. A rent book exists for the period 1717–45, with him as landlord to John Moffat of Garwald, so he must also have owned property elsewhere (unless this was a different Crumhaugh). He is probably the Laird of Crumhaugh who lived at Fenwick in the earlier part of the 18th century (according to information given in 1767). He could be the Walter who in 1728 witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Fenwick. In 1716 in Cavers Parish, he married Beatrix (or Beatrice), eldest daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash (who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for decades); she was described as 'in Broadhaugh' at that time. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: an unnamed child (b.1718); Charles (b.1719), who succeeded; Gideon (b.1720) in Priesthaugh (sometimes written as 'Priesthope'), whose daughter Beatrice married Walter Scott of Wauchope; Mary (b.1721); and Archibald (b.1724). He may also be the Walter, married to Beatrix Scott, whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included Rachel (b.1722) and Archibald (b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were Gideon of Falnash and Rev. John Douglas of Kirkton, in 1720 were Robert of Burnhead and Robert Cleghorn, merchant at Dalkeith, and in both 1722 and 1724 were Robert of Burnhead and Robert of Falnash (his brother-in-law). His wife Beatrix had 'liferent' of the lands of Crumhaugh, as well as Harwoodhill and other lands. He is probably the Walter whose second sister Margaret married Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers (and later Rotterdam). Walter 'Crooked Wat' (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Herd in the years around 1710. He was known as an honest and diligent shepherd, and was called 'Crooked' because of his crook, not that he was dishonest. He could be the 'Walter Scott herd', married to Bessie Turnbull, whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1704, with witnesses George Scott 'litster' and Bailie Patrick Richardson. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Horselee in 1720 when his daughter Betty was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Janet (b.1723), William (b.1730), and Janet (again, b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also be his children. Walter (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Philip, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Harden (and may be the same as Philip in Oakwood). He could be the Walter, son of Philip and Grissell Bruce, who was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1688. In 1704 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary with George Borthwick in Edinburgh. In 1720 he was called before Hawick Session for his 'irregular marriage' with Sara, daughter of Hawick surgeon Walter Scott. He and his wife became apothecaries (or 'chirurgeons') like his father-in-law. Their wedding took place in Edinburgh, and may have been performed by an ex-Episcoplalian clergyman, rather than being an elopement; the wedding was witnessed by John Scott of Hawick, who may have been a relative. He was 'Junior Chyrurg:' in the baptismal record of 1730. His children with Sara Scott included: Philip (b.1723); William (b.1724); Walter (b.1730); and John (b.1731). The witnesses in 1723 were Bailie James Burn and cooper John Aitken, in 1730 were Bailie John Scott (probably related) and Francis Ruecastle, and in 1731 were John Scott and John Montgomery. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Simpson and their children included: Margaret (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1711). The witnesses in 1711 were carrier James Simpson (who may have been related to his wife) and flesher Thomas Waugh. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson (probably a relative of his wife) in 1707. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1715 in Ashkirk he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1716. The witnesses were John Scott 'Whitegates' and weaver Robert Turnbull. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Easter Parkhill in 1718 when his son William was baptised. Walter of Bewlie (17th/18th C.) several letters from his sister Helen survive in the period 1725–28. Walter of Whitfield and Harden (1682–1746) third son (and second surviving son) of Walter of Highchester and of Harden, Earl of Tarras. He served as factor for the family estates on the death of his brother Gideon in 1707. In 1713 he received a five-pound land of Bewlie as part of his marriage contract with the daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He was involved with Walter of Woll and William of Thirlestane (his future father-in-law) in a bond of 1715. He was Laird of Whitfield when he purchased the lands of Harden, Highchesters and Mabonlaw from other family members in 1720 (although he did not inherit the titles until later). There are dispositions to him in 1720/1 from Lady Mary Sharp, Lady Agnes Scott, Margaret Scott and Lady Mary Drummond, the female representatives of close branches of the family, relating to debts on Todshaw and Roberton. He was 'of Whitfeild being at present at Hardon' in 1721. He sold Whitfield and Mervinslaw to Walter Scott, brother of William of Thirlestane in 1723. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He is referred to as 'of Whitfield' throughout the 1720s, but also lived at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot; however, he was 'of Heychesters' in 1732 and 1733 when he had children baptised in Roberton Parish. He was one of the 'tutors' for his nephew John of Harden, and was involved in a legal battle over consequent claims on part of the Harden estate about 1724–26. His nephew John of Harden granted him the lands of Harden (including Mabonlaw and Highchsters) in 1731, with the instrument of sasine registered in 1732. The Harden titles eventually fell to him on the death of John in 1734, and he became the 10th Laird (sometimes referred to as 9th). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. His lands in Smailholm were valued at almost £2000 in the 1740s, his Roberton lands at £775 15s 4d, the lands of Whitfield in Wilton Parish at £482 12s 8d and his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish at £333. He was the Laird at the time of the 1745 Jacobite rebellion, and was apparently a supporter who was at the Battle of Prestonpans. A story is told (recounted by John Anderson, blacksmith at Ettrickbridge) about his narrow escape from the dragoons, who tried to capture him when he returned in disguise to Oakwood, and were also in wait for him at Woll and Harden; although the story seems too detailed to be an invention, it is still hard to believe this of a man in his 60s. He supposedly was caught trying to board a ship in Newcastle, when a simple-minded tenant of his recognised him, but he ended up with only a heavy fine, resulting in the loss of Howford, Helmburn, Bailielee and other lands. He married 4 times: firstly to Agnes, daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield in 1709 (this perhaps being the marriage recorded in Wilton in 1708), but she died only a few years later; secondly Agnes, daughter of William Scott of Thirlestane (with whom he had a daughter, Christian, b.1721, baptised in Roberton Parish) in 1719; thirdly Anne, daughter of John Scott of Gorrenberry (to whom he had his heir, Walter) in 1724; and lastly Christian, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden in 1736. He paid for the bell of St. Mary's to ring in 1723, presumably for his wife Agnes or a child, and paid for renting the Town 'litter' for his wife's funeral in 1730 (presumably Anne). His younger children (with his 3rd wife) included: John (b.1729), who died young; William (b.1730), also died young; Francis of Beechwood (b.1732), baptised in Roberton; Jean; Helen, who married George Brown of Elliston in Edinburgh in 1756; and Ann (b.1733, or 'Annie'), recorded in a land sale of 1790. He also provided for the daughters of his predecessor John of Harden in 1731. He is probably the man referred to as 'Walter Scot, old Whitfield' in 1764, in recounting him lying 'on a heathery know within the moss, or on a green know at the side of the moss, cracking to the workers' who were cutting peat on Wilton Common in some earlier decade. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1720 he was living at Orchard when he married Elspeth Laidlaw. Probably the same Walter was herd at Orchard in 1728 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers. It is possible that the same Walter was still at Orchard in 1737 when his son Robert was baptised. Walter (1692–1765) second son of William of Thirlestane and great-grandson of

'Auld Wat' of Harden. He became a wine merchant in Leith. His attorney was Robert Shortreed of Essenside when he had a sasine for Wauchope from the superior James, Lord Cranstoun in 1750; this was a 'heritable bond', although it is unclear who else was involved or if he was related to any of the other Scotts associated with Wauchope. He married Martha, daughter of Cunningham of Balboggie and also married a second time. His children included: Thomas, minister of Cavers; Walter (d.1765), a surgeon in the 10th Hussars; and Euphemia. Walter (18th C.) servant to John Elliot in Goldielands. Perhaps the same Walter was 'Servitor to our Minr' in 1717 when he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in Newbigging. He may be the 'servant' who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Mitchellhill (workman in Branxholme Town) and for Walter Inglis (servant in Crumhaugh). In 1725 he was living at Borthaugh. He may be the Walter who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, who lived at Borthaugh. He could also be the workman who in 1742 witnessed a baptism for Robert at Goldielands (who may have been related). In 1721 in Hawick he married Helen Turnbull, who was also a servant to John Elliot. Their children, included: Helen (b.1722), baptised in Wilton; Janet (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Margaret (b.1727), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1725 he was 'workman in Goldilands'. He married Agnes 'Huison' (or Howison). Their children included Walter (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1727). He could also be the Walter, married to Agnes 'Whitson' whose child John was baptised in Wilton in 1717. The witnesses in 1725 were John Elliot in Goldielands and Andrew Leithead in Crumhaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1713, 1724 and 1727. Along with William Scott and James Irvine, he tenanted 1/3 of the farm. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary of the same name who also lived at Wiltonburn. In 1727 he is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William at Wilton Burnfoot. In 1713 he married Mary Cockburn, who was from Alton, the proclamations being recorded in Wilton Parish. Their children probably included: James (b.1722); Mary (b.1724); Helen (b.1726); George (b.1726); William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1730); and Walter (b.1733). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter Scott and James Irvine and in 1727 were William Scott and Andrew Irvine. It is possible he was the Walter who was recorded witnessing several baptisms in the 1720s and 1730s, suggesting he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1721, 1724 and 1732. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1724 for the other Walter at Wiltonburn. He married Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Bessie (b.1718); Helen (again, b.1719); William (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); Helen (again, b.1727); William (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were William Scott and James Grieve, in 1724 were John and Walter Scott and in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden. Note that there appear to have been 2 contemporary men of the same name living at Wiltonburn. One of them probably witnessed baptisms for William in Wiltonburn in 1736, 1737 and 1739. Walter of Howcleuch and Wauchope (1701–86) son of Walter and Christian Bennet of Chesters. Some accounts have him as son of Walter of West Port and Jean, who was daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; it may be that there are two men compounded here. It seems that in 1725 he married his cousin Rachel, youngest sister of the then Laird of Crumhaugh, Walter Scott (however, there could be confusion here); the couple paid extra to the Hawick Kirk Session, presumably for a quick wedding. He leased Commonside shortly before his marriage, and lived for most of his life at Commonside House. He certainly married Rachel, daughter of Francis Elliot of Fenwick, and (as stated on the family gravestone at St. Mary's) had 2 sons with her: Walter (b.c.1728) of Wauchope; and Charles (b.1728) of Howcleuch. Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728, with his mother's name listed as Rachel Scott (and the witnesses being 'Mr. Millar' and John Scott), making the identity of the mother confusing. He is probably the Walter 'at Commonside' who witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741 and 1744 (suggesting he was Kirk Elder, responsible for the Teviothead area). In 1739 and 1744 he witnessed baptisms for fiddler Robert Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. In 1747 he was also 'at Commonside' when he witnessed a baptism for Charles of Crumhaugh (who was surely a relative of some sort). He became a prominent man in the district, whose advice was often sought out. Like other men in a similar position, he also acted as a money lender. In 1755 he bought Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from Rev. Simon Halliburton. He was probably the Walter of Commonside recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He is probably the Walter at Commonside who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hutton in 1762. In 1765 he was 'of Howcleuch elder' when named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. He was 'Senior' of Commonside in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He bought Wauchope in 1767 at public auction (from James Cranston, 6th Lord Cranstoun), thus becoming the 1st Scott Laird of Wauchope. However, he did not live at these estates he had acquired, but gave them to his 2 sons, Walter and Charles. Walter inherited Wauchope, while Howcleuch went to Charles. In 1784 he retired from farming and gave over his property to his 2 sons, presumably dying not many years later. In 1785 he still paid the land tax on Howcleuch. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary's. Walter (18th C.) married Jean Rutherford in Kirkton Parish in 1730. Walter of Raeburn (d.1707) eldest son of William of Raeburn. In 1703 he married Anne, 3rd daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Isobel; and Anne. In October 1707 he attended a dinner in Selkirk with other local landowners and got into a dispute (perhaps over the Union) with Mark, youngest son of Andrew Pringle of Crichton. They fought a duel with swords and he was killed, the location being afterwards known as Raeburn's Meadow. His killer fled abroad, becoming a merchant in Spain and later British Consul there. Walter (18th C.) married Anne Scott in Hawick in 1716. Walter (18th C.) married Ann Scott in Cavers in 1724. Walter (18th C.) 'indweller in Hawick' when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick Shiel. His wife was 'Maray Gladstons' and their son Robert was baptised in 1726, with witnesses James Grieve and John Scott. Perhaps the same resident in Hawick Shiel in 1728 married Margaret, daughter of 'Dand' Gray, tenant in Weensland; their daughter Margaret was born in 1741. Probably the same Walter in Hawick Shiel had a daughter Janet baptised in Cavers in 1732. Walter (18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas of Whitslade and brother of John. He is probably the 'brother German to the Laird of Whiteslade' whose child Helen 'begoten in fornication Within ye paroch of Askirk' was baptised in Hawick in 1716. The mother of the child was Elizabeth, daughter to carrier Robert Wilson, it was presented for baptism by tailor Walter Kay and the witnesses were John Scott 'Whitegates' and weaver Robert Turnbull. In 1727–29 he was involved in legal proceedings with Walter Scott of Whifield (later of Harden), probably over debts incurred by his brother John. In 1734 he was described as 'late of Whitslade' when he was accused for the 5th time of refusing to undergo penance and was excommunicated by the Synod. He must also have been related to the Dr. Robert, who lived in Hawick, possibly his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at 'Wester P...' (probably Parkhill) in 1733 when his daughter May was baptised. He is probably related to other Scotts who were at Parkhill. He could be the Walter who was at Milsingtonshiel in 1741 when his son Henry was baptised (and was therefore perhaps related to the earlier James at Milsingtonshiel). Walter (18th C.) wright in Hawick, youngest son of Walter, who was brother of Charles of Crumhaugh near the end of the 17th century. His mother would have been Elizabeth Scott. He is probably the wright who witnessed baptisms for workman Thomas Stoddart in 1725 and for Bailie James in 1730. He and mason John Turnbull built the 'Schooll and House to the Schoollmaster of Hawick' in 1728, with receips of payment received in 1732–35. He may be the Walter, wright in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1743 he was described as a wright when he registered a sasine for a tenement of land 'and onstead of houses in Hawick' to his brother Robert, these lands having been 'disponed' in 1730. He is perhaps the wright called Walter who witnessed a baptism (for Robert Oliver, shoemaker) in 1738, others for mason Andrew Wilson, Bailie Gideon Ruecastle, 'messenger' William Wilson, tailor John Turnbull and weaver Andrew Simpson in 1743. He may have been deceased in 1743 when his brother Robert gained the lands of 'Croftangry' from him; whether this is the same as the 'tenement' mentioned above is unclear. He could be the wright called Walter recorded in the list for paying tax on 18 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the wright in Hawick who had a child Christian with Janet Shiel in 1725, the baptism labelled 'Forn:' and with witnesses tailor James Gledstains and mason Andrew Turnbull. Walter (18th C.) brother of William of Thirlestane. In 1723 he is described as 'in Sourhope' when he purchased Whitfield and Mervinslaw from Walter Scott of Whitfield. He seems likely to be the same as one of the other Walters. He may be the Walter of Whitfield who held the lands of Whitfield, Mervinslaw and Todshaw (perhaps in wadset with John Murray of Philiphaugh) during the process for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time these lands were valued at £482 12s 4d. Walter (b.1700) farmer at Commonside. He leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates, along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, in 1733 (taking over from the Murray family). His father had married Christine Bennet of Chesters, and he was uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer. Since there was another Walter who farmed Commonside at about the same time, some of this information may be confused. He also appears to have been confounded (e.g. by Tancred) with Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope. He could be the Walter in Commonside, married to Helen Hogg, whose daughter Rachel was baptised in Hawick in 1726; the witnesses were William Harkness and William Scott. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Elizabeth ('Bettie' or 'Bessie') Scott in 1721. Their children included: Anne (b.1728); and Elspeth (b.1730). The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were Bailie Walter Purdom and Bailie Scott 'Senior' (who may have been related). Walter of Burnfoot (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 when he and Anne 'Stotherd in Flexs' had a child baptised in Hawick. The baptism was labelled 'Fornic:', so they were not married. The witnesses were Walter Purdom, as well as William and James Tudhope. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot and whether this was Burnfoot on Teviot or Ale. Walter of Cockerheugh (d.bef. 1743) son of John, he was a descendant of the Scotts of Brieryyards. In 1705 Isobel Waugh appeared before the Wilton Kirk Session to confess to being pregnant with his child; she sat in the place of repentance and paid a small fine, with him paying £4 Scots as a penalty. He inherited Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) from his John in 1721. The 1720 records for Wilton Parish state that 12 shillings was collected for 'Walter Scott of cockerheugh for his proclamation', presumably meaning his marriage. His sister married Walter Scott ('Uncle to Crumhaugh') in 1721 (this probably being the next entry in the Wilton register, for 'Walter Scott in Havick'). In 1722 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for carrier Henry Paterson and in 1724 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for James in Whitehaugh and Janet Scott (and hence may have been related to one of them). He sold Cockerheugh to the Duke of Roxburghe in 1734. However he is still 'of Cockerheugh' in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism for James, miller at Crawhill. He is described as 'late of Cockerheugh' in a record of 1743, involving Adam Scott and Anthony Turnbull of Knowe. Walter 'Wyndheid' (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed as 'taylor in Hawick' in the 1723 baptismal record and 'Walter Scott Wyndhead' in 1725. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of James Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); and Janet (b.1733). The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Scott 'Wyndhead' and smith James Scott (who were perhaps related to him and his wife). In the 1732 baptismal record he is listed as Walter 'wynhead' and the witnesses were carter William Elliot and John Elliot. He was probably also related to the later 'Wattie o the Wyndheid'. He is easy to confuse with another tailor called Walter, who married Bessie Scott. Walter of Merrylaw (18th C.) perhaps son of the William who was tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 or Walter of Merrylaw who is recorded around 1700. He leased Eilrig from Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1730 and leased the lands of Craik and Whinneycleuch from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. His lands of Merrylaw were valued at £133 6s 8d in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Rev. William was probably his son. Walter (b.c.1700) ploughman in Hawick Parish. He worked at Goldielands from 1715, serving several tenants (except for 5 years) through until 1767 when he moved to Langlands. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of Hawick Common; he was said to be in his 60s and married at that time. Walter (b.c.1710) eldest son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He served in the Horse Guards. In 1732 he married Jane, only daughter and heiress of William Robson of High Stokoe, Northumberland. They had about a dozen children, those surviving being: Dr. William (b.1733) of Stokoe, who compiled a family tree of that branch, including information on the Scotts of Synton, Whitslade and Todrig; Patrick, a doctor who settled on the Isle of Man; Mary, who married John Best; and Jane, who married

Paul Blakey. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1737 he married Janet Aitchison, who was from Wilton. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gray in 1728 and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1741. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Minto in 1743. Walter (18th C.) described in 1743 as 'late Baillie Depute'. He was probably the Baron's officer within Hawick. His wife was Agnes Paisley (or 'Paslaw') and their children included: Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); Thomas (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); Agnes (again, b.1738); Agnes (again, b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); Jean (again, b.1743); and James (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were writer James Weir and mason Andrew Turnbull, senior. Walter (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Gardner. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); Thomas (b.1726); Janet (b.1732); Agnes (b.1737); and John (b.1740). The witnesses in 1726 were shoemaker John Scott and candlemaker John Scott and in 1740 were glover John Scott and merchant James Sanderson. Walter (18th C.) son of Walter in Synton Mill. He is recorded in a legal disposition of 1759. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitehaugh in 1729 and at just 'Wilton' in 1737. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1729); Adam (b.1732); Anne (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); Elspeth (b.1740); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife, perhaps the Laird of Whitehaugh and his brother the minister) and in 1737 were James Simpson (soon to be minister of Wilton) and Thomas 'Cayle'. It is possible that he was the cousin of William of Whitehaugh who was formerly tenant in Wilton and given some money according to the 1750 will of William of Whitehaugh; his sister Elspeth (wife of merchant William Tudhope) is also mentioned, and it would seem likely they were siblings of James (tenant in Borthaugh, residenter in Peebles and wright in Hawick), perhaps children of James and granchildren of Robert of Easter Heap. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnfoot in 1735 and 1737. He married Bessie Leyden in 1734 and their children included: Helen (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); Margaret (b.1740); and Jean (b.1743). The witnesses in 1735 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). He may be the Walter who inherited Burnfoot on Ale from his uncle Walter, started living there himself in 1715 and moved in 1737 after he sold Easter and Wester Burnfoot to Laing; this Walter was born in about 1695 and gave evidence in the court case for the division of Wilton Common. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthaugh in 1741. He married Euphan Telfer and their children included Walter (b.1741) and John (b.1745). The witnesses in 1741 were Walter 'Stot' and another Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) recorded at Crook in 1745 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He may be the Hawick carrier who in 1762 was granted land in Wilton Parish, but on the south side of the Teviot (hence possibly near the Sandbed) by Rev. Henry Erskine of Roberton, acting on behalf of Rev. Patrick Cunningham; the land had previously been possessed by James Irving. Owning this land in Wilton meant that he was included in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in about 1765. His wife's surname was 'Leaden' (presumably Leyden) and their children included: Adam (b.1745); and William (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were wright Robert Pringle and Kirk Officer John Telfer; Pringle had a child baptised on the same day, and he reciprocated as witness. The witnesses in 1747 were weavers William Roger and William Turnbull. Walter (18th C.) listed 'in Finesh' (i.e. Falnash) when the paid the window tax (for 11 windows) in Hawick Parish in 1748. He may be the same as one of the other Walters (e.g. Walter of Wauchope and Howcleuch, who farmed at Commonside and married a Scott of Falnash). In 1743 he was 'In Falnash' when he witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to the Teviothead area). In 1744 he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter at Commonside) for fiddler Robert Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1743 as 'Soldier'. If this is a nickname, then he may be a descendant of the earlier John 'Young Sodger'; however, it could be his occupation. He married Elizabeth Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1743, with witnesses Kirk Officer John Telfer and shoemaker William Scott. The same couple may also have been parents of Charles (b.1741), with witnesses workman John Gledstains and Kirk Officer John Telfer; he was recorded in 1741 as tenant at Crumhaugh (and so may be related to earlier Scotts of Crumhaugh). It is possible (although unlikely that he is the same man as the tenant in Newbigging, whose wife was also Elizabeth Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newbigging in Hawick Parish. He may have been related to the Walter who was at Newbigging a generation earlier. He could be the Walter, tenant in Newbigging, who was admitted as a heritable Burgess of Hawick in 1756. His wife was Elizabeth (or Betty) Scott and their children included: William (b.1756); Archibald (b.1758); Ann (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1758 were William Rae and William Mair and in 1762 were 'student' John Laurie and Walter Cavers. He is probably the Walter from Newbigging who witnessed baptisms for another Walter (perhaps a relative, married to Agnes Laidlaw) in 1760 and 1761. He is probably the deceased Walter 'late in Newbigging' whose son James died in Hawick in 1798. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Millholm in Castleton Parish. When there was a large gathering of seceders at Snaberlee in the early 1750s, he tried to claim the collection for the poor of the Parish, but the case was thrown out by Sir Gilbert Eliott in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter of Boghall (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boghall in 1739, 1742 and 1748, and was recorded there in 1757 when he witnessed a baptism for Richard (perhaps his son) and Mary Rutherford. He married Janet Dickson in 1736, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Richard (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); Richard (again, b.1745); James (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). The witnesses in 1739 were George and Walter Scott (who could have been related), and in 1742 were Robert Scott (perhaps related) and George Hood. Walter (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He is one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott (probably related), recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He paid tax on 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the Bailie Walter recorded in 1755 when the costs of a meeting in his place 'when getting the new stocks' were 6 pence. 'Bailie John' was also there and possibly this was also a Scott and perhaps related. He may also have been the Bailie Walter paid for work on the 'book-board in the tolbooth' in 1755 and given part payment for building the Herd's House (suggesting that this Walter may have been a builder of some sort). He married Christian Deans and their children included: James (b.1735); William (b.1738); Jean (b.1741); Jean (again, b.1744); Beatrix (b.1746); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant William Oliver and ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the deceased Bailie and skinner recorded in 1811 when his son William died. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Whitfield in 1748. He married Ann Storie in Kirkton in 1745. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1748), with witnesses being another Walter Scott and James Dryden. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Jane (or Jean) Scott and their children included: Henry (b.1757); Walter (b.1759); and Andrew, William and Mary (b.1761), baptised on the same day. The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert (merchant) and Andrew (shoemaker), who were probably related to him. Walter (d.1810) tailor, nicknamed 'Wattie o the Wyndheid'. He must have been related to the Walter 'Wyndhead' recorded earlier in the 18th century. He was probably the tailor of that name who was recorded as son of the deceased John 'Wyndhead' on the 1810 death register. His shop was located near the top of what became known as Walter's Wynd (after him). The death of his daughter Margaret is recorded in the Parish register for 1805. He could be the tailor in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia; if so then he was born in the 1770s. Walter (18th C.) only son of Francis, wig-maker of Hawick. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1760. Walter 'Black Wat' (18th C.) Cornet in 1765. It is possible he was related to the earlier 'Black Walter'. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Robertson (or 'Robison'), who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1767); Archibald (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam (b.1776); Ann (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1784). The witnesses in 1767 were wright James (probably a relative) and shoemaker John Oliver and in 1772 were another Walter and James. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) founder of a joiner's firm on Buccleuch Street, Walter Scott & Son, established in 1750. He may be the Walter who provided the coffin for William Scott of Whitehaugh in 1750. The firm moved into the former Grammar School building around 1886. It is possible that he could be the Walter son of Hawick surgeon Walter who became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1732. He is probably the wright who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter in 1766. It seems likely that he was the same wright Walter who married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Laidlaw in 1760 and had children: Walter (b.1761); Margaret (b.1762); William (b.1765); Thomas (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1776). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1766 were baker John Osburn and weaver George Paterson. He could also be the wright Walter whose son George was a weaver listed on the ballot for men to serve in the Militia in 1797 and 1798. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Laidlaw in 1760 and their children included William (b.1760) and William (again, b.1761). The witnesses in 1760 were another Walter from Newbigging and cooper Robert Paterson and in 1761 were Walter from Newbigging (again) and William Scott. It is possible that his wife was the 'Agness Scott spouse to Walter Do. Newbigging' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. Walter (18th C.) married Marion Knox in Wilton in 1770. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Donald in Hawick in 1772. Walter of Raeburn (18th C.) son of William, he was the 5th Laird. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Rutherfurd of Edgerston' among the voters of Roxburghshire and was also a voter in Selkirkshire. He paid the Horse Tax at Raeburn in the 1780s. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of lands in Lessuden Parish. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his son William, junior of Raeburn). In 1772 in St. Boswell's he married Jean, 3rd daughter of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. She was the sister of his sister's husband. Their children were: William (1773–1855), who succeeded; Robert (1774–1837); Barbara (b.1776); Hugh of Draycott, Derby (1777–1852); Walter (1779–1802); and John (1781–1832), who was in the Indian Army. Walter (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. In 1761 he married Catherine Turnbull (from Hawick), the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hawick Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish, with the last one in Hawick), included: Charles (b.1762); Euphan (b.1764); Robert (b.1765); John (b.1770); Helen (b.1772); Walter (b.1775); and John (b.1776). The witnesses in 1772 were John Lillico and Walter Rae and in 1773 was also witness for Walter Rae (at Whitfield). Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Kirkton, where he took over from Thomas Wilson in 1786. There he taught a young John Leyden. However, after only a year or two he moved, apparently for a better position elsewhere and was succeeded by Andrew Scott. He was Schoolmaster in 1787 when his daughter Peggy was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Perhaps the same Walter, from Hawick, was an unsuccessful candidate for Schoolmaster at Eckford in 1767. Walter of Harden (1724–1793) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1746. He may be the 'Harden's son' for whom Schoolmaster William Dyce received a fee for boarding in 1734. In 1748 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. He is the 11th Laird (sometimes called the 10th) of Harden. He sold part of the Harden estates in 1751 to pay his father's debts. In 1754 he had a charter to the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1747–65, then serving as cashier of Excise in Scotland until his death (this excluding him from having a vote in the elections). There are documents of 1756 and 1760 in which he was promoting the idea of a twice weekly mail service between Edinburgh and Border towns. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (and is probably the 'John' of Harden in the Selkirkshire list) and was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire. He was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time his lands of Harden, Highchesters and Mabonlaw were valued at £775 15s 4d. In 1779 he sold the liferent of his property in Belses, as well as Mabonlaw and 'Whinny park' to Charles, younger of Woll (although with feu-right to John Pringle of Clifton). In 1785 he paid the land tax on lands in Yarrow Parish, as well as Oakwood in Selkirk Parish. In about 1788 he was owner of the lands of Harden in Wilton Parish, as well as part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 he is listed as one of the voters in Roxburghshire, being described privately as being a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch in the election and having married a sister of the Earl of Marchmont, 'but has been struck out of the Earl's settlements on account of a political dispute with him'. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, although deceased by then) as owner of Harden, West Highchesters, 'Dunsbush', Mabonlaw and 'Highchesters Whinny-park' (valued at £814), as well as part of Bewlie (valued at £465 5s) and lands in Maxton (valued at £163 10s) and Smailholm Parishes (valued at £1808 10s). His 1754 marriage to Lady Diana Home Campbell (daughter of Hugh, 3rd Earl of Marchmont and Baron Polwarth) gave the Polwarth title to the Scotts of Harden. Their children were: Walter, who died young; Hugh, who succeeded; Anne (d.1819), who is recorded passing land to her mother and brother in 1797; and

Diana. His widow, Lady Diana, lived at Woodside near Kelso. Portraits of him and his wife were painted in 1756. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797. Walter of Wauchope (1728–96) son of Walter in Commonside. The identity of his mother is unclear, since his baptism states that she was Rachel Scott (who is suggested to have been from the Crumhaugh Scotts), but the by the inscription in St. Mary's Kirkyard states she was Rachel Elliot of Fenwick. He was baptised in Hawick in early 1728, although some accounts say he was born in 1726. In 1767 he purchased Wauchope and Longhaugh, the money being supplied by his father (and the arangement being that he had to yield the properties to his father if he wanted). On the death of his father he became the 2nd Scott Laird of Wauchope. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. In 1768 in Hawick he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope. His wife was known for her artistic and poetic abilities, and was the subject of a verse-epistle from Burns. It was said that he did not share many of his wife's interests, and had 'rather a morose temper'. She died in 1789 and he secondly married Beatrix, daughter of Gideon Scott of Priesthaugh, who died in 1807 at Priesthaugh. He farmed at Wauchope from shortly after his father purchased the estate in 1767, and took over ownership more formerly when Walter senior retired in 1784. He was recorded as owner of Wauchope in 1788, the estate being valued at £1433 6s 8d. He was taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1786–89, for having horses in the period 1786–94, for having a male servant (a footman) in 1786 and in 1792–94, and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. He was Laird of Wauchope when Burns visited in 1787. Having no children of his own, he was succeeded by his brother Charles. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary's. Walter, W.S. (1729–99) eldest son of Robert of Sandyknowe, and descended from the Scotts of Raeburn. He became Writer to the Signet in 1755. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He was the inspiration for Saunders Fairford in the novel 'Redgauntlet'. In 1758 he married Anne, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford. Their children were: Robert, John, Robert and Walter, who all died young; Robert (b.1767), a Naval Captain, who died unmarried; John (1768–1816); Sir Walter of Abbotsford (1771–1832); Thomas (1774–1823), who died in Canada, and whose son Walter was the only nephew of Sir Walter; Daniel (1775–1806); Anne and Jean, who died in infancy; and Anne. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Tandlaw in 1758. He married Janet Grieve in 1755 and their children included: Robert (b.1758); Jean (b.1759); Helen (b.1762); Walter (b.1764); Robert (again, b.1766); William (b.1769); James (b.1771); and George (b.1773). The witnesses in 1758 were Sir Gilbert Eliott and George 'Mercel'. Walter (18th C.) resident at Borthwickshiels when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1763 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1765 when his daughter Beatrix was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter was at Parkhead in 1767 when his daughter Kathrine was baptised. There are many other children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Walter (1736–1818) 3rd son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Thomas he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy later passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. He was recorded as farmer at Girnwood on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs at Girnwood in 1797. Walter of Newton (18th/19th C.) probably Laird of Chamberlain Newton. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism, along with Patrick, younger of Alton; this was for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott, suggesting that Janet may have been related to him. His lands were valued at £238 in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Agnes Watson and their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Anne (b.1737); Francis (b.1739); John (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743), who married John Scott, who succeeded to Whitehaugh in 1759; and Susanna (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie John and writer James Weir. In 1767 his daughter Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth) married John Scott of Whitehaugh; she was his eldest daughter and co-heir. Perhaps he was son of the earlier Walter of Newton. George 'brother to the laird of Newton', who signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood, may have been his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Borthwick and their children included David (b.1744) and John (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Nichol, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes.

He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (d.1771) from Roberton, he was one of 3 applicants for the position of Schoolmaster at Nisbet in Crailing Parish in 1768. He was selected, started immediately, but died 3 years later. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (or 'Betty' Ekron in 1765. Their children included: Isabel (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768); Alice (b.1769); and James (b.1771). The witnesses in 1766, 1768 and 1771 were merchants Andrew Scott and James Ekron, who were probably his father (or brother) and father-in-law. Based on the naming convention his parents were probably Andrew and Alice. He could be the merchant Walter who (along with merchant Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William Philip and Mary Scott in 1772. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Margaret Dryden in 1763. Their children included: James (b.1765); William (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1767). He was at Woodburn in 1769 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1778); Walter (again, b.1786); and Janet (b.1788). Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Abbotrule in the 1770s. His children included: Peggy (b.1773); James (1774); and Jeanie (b.1776). He may be the Walter who married Nelly Turnbull in Abbotrule in 1772. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary local teachers. Capt. Walter 'Wattie' (1742–1809) eldest son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and Christian Anderson. He was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. He was born at Midshiels and died without issue. He may be the Capt. Scott of 'Gaudilands' whose daughter Charlotte was 'begotten in fornication' with Isobel Scott in Longtown in 1766 and christened in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1768 he married Helen Anderson and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1771. Walter (18th C.) married Mary Wallace in Wilton Parish in 1767. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1769); James (again, b.1775); Robert (b.1780); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1781 were Walter Scott and Archibald Scott (who were surely related). Walter (18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1776 and 1779. His children included Robert (b.1776) and Janet (b.1779). Walter (18th C.) Church Officer in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for innkeeper John Kennedy. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Coldhouse in 1780. He married Isobel Gray in 1780 and their son Charles was baptised later the same year, with witnesses 'Mr' William Scott (perhaps the minister at Southdean) and James Scott. Walter 'Reid Wat' (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was tenant farmer of Crumhaughhill. He is recorded as 'Red Watt' in 1781 when his daughter Ann died in Hawick. He could be related to the earlier man with the same nickname, who was tenant in Chapelhill. He is recorded as tenant in Crumhaughhill in 1797, paying tax on 6 farm horses. It is said (by Robert Murray) that he was involved in smuggling and one day was accosted by an armed exciseman, with a swordfight ensuing, when 'the trunk of farmer was laid open, nothing daunted at that, he held his hand upon the gushing wound, and with the other defeated his opponent'. Perhaps the same Walter married Margaret 'Robison' and had children Adam (b.1776) and Ann (b.1779) baptised in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) resident of Commonside. He married Sarah Paterson and their son James was baptised in 1782, with the Associate Congregation as witnesses. He was at Highchesters in 1786 when his daughter Nelly was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident at Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William (b.1792) and John (b.1796), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, were probably also his sons. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1793 he married Helen Irvine. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs and 3 farm horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hood in Wilton Parish in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) surgeon in Hawick, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. There does not appear to be any other record of him, unless he is the same man as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn. His son Thomas was described as a 'hosier' when he died in Hawick in 1808. Walter (18th C.) listed as footman at Waughope in 1792, when he was working for Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) from Ewes, he served as Schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the period 1795–99. It is possible he is the same as one of the Walters who was a schoolmaster earlier elsewhere. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant in Wester Essenside. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation 'Subst.' suggests that someone else served in his place. His name appears again in 1798 and in early 1799 John Cook from Lessuden acted as substitute for him, as confirmed in the amended list for Ashkirk Parish in 1799. Walter (b.1770s) servant at Drinkstone. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Walter of Merrylaw (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He is probably the son of Rev. William born in Southdean in 1767. It is unclear how he acquired Merrylaw, or whether he had a direct connection to the earlier Scotts of Merrylaw. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Isabel (or 'Tibbie') Ainslie in 1795. She died in Hawick in 1840, when he was recorded at 'Kirktown Coat'. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His daughter Betty died in 1808. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Boonraw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 horses. He is probably the Walter who married Janet, daughter of Robert Ormiston, tenant at Boonraw, and who emigrated to New York state in about 1825. It is possible he was the Walter recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Reid in Wilton in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Rulewater, he was a ploughman at Craik in about 1820. In 1822 at Harwoodsikefoot he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Elliot and Magdalene Thomson. Perhaps the same Walter was ploughman at Craik according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He and his wife emigrated in 1824, bound for Lord Selkirk's Land (i.e. Manitoba). It is unclear who his parents may have been Walter (18th/19th C.) owner of 2 horses at Newbigging in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He may have been a descendant of the Walter who was at Newbigging earlier in the 18th century. The elderly Catherine (nee Hume) at Newbigging in 1841 may have been his wife, with William and the younger Catherine his children. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Priesthaugh in 1785–94. He is also recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He may have been son of Gilbert, tenant of Priesthaugh earlier in the 18th century. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Walter (d.bef. 1809) wright in the Hawick area. The death of his brother, tailor John, is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be the same man as the founder of the firm of Walter Scott & Son. Walter 'Cannie Wattie', 'Wat the Sauter' or 'Napier's Wat' (1753–1849). A tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch, he lived in the Salt House at the West Port. He was also for a time the servant of Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge. He was a carrier of salt etc., with his yard at the entrance to the Workhouse, later becoming a farmer near Orchard. He lived to the age of 96. His name appears to sometimes be given in error as 'Robert'. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of 'Part of Patrick Cunningham's Lands', valued at £28 1s. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters, and perhaps related to John, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham's lands. By about 1874 his lands had been divided among Alexander Laing, Alexander Michie, James Mudie, the heirs of John Hargreaves, the Roman Catholic Church, James Kyle, the heirs of William Scott, John Fiddes Wilson, Mrs. Agnes Oliver, Walter Grieve, the heirs of Mrs. Charles Scott, John Wilson, the heirs of William Wood, Janet Brown, Mrs. Rodgie and James Oliver; this gives an indication of the extent of the lands. Walter (b.c.1780) local farm worker. He married Ann Purdom in Cavers in 1813 and their children included: Mungo (b.1815), baptised in Hawick Parish; Mary (b.1817, Hawick); and John (b.1822, Cavers). In 1841 he was living at Greenbank Haugh in Roberton Parish with his children John and Mary, along with the older Isobel Purdom (probably his mother-in-law) and young Thomas Hogg. Next door was pauper Isobel (perhaps his sisiter) and his son Mungo. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at 'Roadside' in 1791. He married Betty Douglas, and their son Robert was baptised in 1791, with witnesses Hector and Peter Blaikie. Walter (1761–1843) born at Parkhill in Roberton Parish, he was son of William and Margaret Hobkirk. A family legend states that they are related to 'Old Mortality' (Robert Paiterson) through Margaret Scott at Burnflat (and this could have been Paiterson's mother). He could be the 'Walter Scott, Parkhill', who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He moved into Hawick and worked as a handloom weaver, living in Wilton. In 1797 he is recorded living at Lokieshedge, when one of his children was baptised 'before the Antiburger Congregation'. In 1785 he married Elizabeth (1762–1844), daughter of John Biggar from Wilton. He was living at Dovemount (about 34 Princes Street) along with his wife and probably 2 grandchildren in 1841. Their children were: Margaret (b.1785); William (b.1788), who became a businessman in New York; Catherine (b.1789); John (b.1791); Robert (b.1793), who moved to Ohio; Margaret, 'Peggy' (1794–1867), who also moved to Ohio; Charles (b.1797); Walter (b.1799), who married Elizabeth Renwick and lived in Hawick; Sarah (b.1805); and Sarah (1807–88), who married Richard Purdie in Hawick. He died at Dovemount. Walter (1764–1837) 2nd son of William in Milsington. In 1793 and 1795 he was recorded at Milsingtonhaugh and at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798 and 1800. He was later tenant of Girnwood. In 1792 he married Mary Wilson. Their children (baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1793), also tenant in Girnwood, who married Ann Laidlaw; James of Allanshaws (b.1795), who succeeded his uncle William as tenant at Milsington, and was also a cattle-dealer on the Crescent; Walter of Newton (b.1798), who married an Elliot of Harwood; Annie (b.1800); Thomas (b.1802), who went to America; and Henry, who farmed at Eilrig and died in Hawick. Walter of Whitehaugh (1769–1841) eldest surviving son of John of Whitehaugh. He trained as a surgeon and practised for many years. He could be the 'Mr Walter Scott whitehaugh' who witnessed a baptism for James Scott (perhaps a relative) and Mary Turnbull in 1793. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still 'junior of Whitehaugh'. He was probably the Walter of Whitehaugh who subscribed to Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed in 1835–41 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He was also listed among the local gentry on Pigot's 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his younger brother James, together with Christian Chisholme and 2 female servants. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. He is buried at Whitehaugh Aisle 'in this spot selected by himself'. He was described as 'a gentleman who, according to his means, scattered his charities widely but without ostentation, and lent a helping hand to many who remained in ignorance of their benefactor'. It was said that engineer John Scott Russell, son of the minister of Allars Kirk, was given his middle name after him (although that may have been for Russell's mother). Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Renwick in Hawick in 1794. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Tait in Kirkton in 1802. Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Redford and their children included David (b.1809) and Francis (b.1811). Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). Walter (c.1780–bef. 1851) grocer and spirit merchant of 6 Sandbed. He is probably the Walter listed as a grocer at Buccleuch Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and a 'victual dealer' in 1837. He was still on Buccleuch Street in the 1841 census. He married Isabella Anderson and their children were said to include: Margaret (b.1803), who married grocer John Hume; Charles (b.1805); greengrocer Thomas 'Sly Tammie' (b.1810); Charles (b.1814), probably died young; Isabella (b.1816); and Christian (b.1818). However, they are surely the couple of the same names whose children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (b.1805), Robert (b.1808), Thomas (b.1810), Janet (b.1812), Janet (again, b.1814), Isabel (b.1816), Christian (b.1818) and Walter (b.1821). He is secondly said to have married another Isabella (Hogg), and their children were: Charles, also a spirit merchant; Jessie (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1829), probably died young; Walter (b.1831), chemist in Durham; Robert (b.1833); Mary Ann (b.1835); and Andrew (b.1839), Burgh Assessor. The recorded children of this couple, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). His widow Isabella was living at 8 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and 1861, and continued the grocer's shop. He is probably the Walter Scott, 'Newroad' whose son died in 1829. He may be the 'servant' of William Oliver ('Auld Cash') who witnessed his will in 1808. Sir Walter of Abbotsford (1771–1832) world famous writer. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Walter and Anne Rutherford, but on account of ill-health, spent much of his childhood at his grandfather's house at Sandyknowe in the Borders, where he recuperated from polio. He was descended from 'Auld Wat' of Harden, and learned much about Borders history and lore in his youth. He wrote a great deal of poetry and effectively established the form of the historical novel. 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel' is set at Branxholme, and many other books have a local flavour, if romanticised somewhat. His 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border' (1802, with subsequent volumes and enlarged editions, first published in Kelso) was instrumental in preserving many Border ballads and establishing them as international literature (although again he is critised for rewriting some of them himself). He helped popularise the 'shepherd's-check' trousers, which assisted the development of the Borders knitwear industry. He made 7 annual trips into Liddesdale in the 1790s. He was appointed as Principal Clerk of Session in 1806, and was created a Baronet in 1820. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for the first real Scots dictionary, compiled by his friend John Jamieson. Several legal letters to him are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His authorship of the 'Waverley' novels remained a secret for 22 years, being revealed in 1827. He subscribed for 2 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Although by all accounts amiable to all classes, he was not locally popular among the ordinary Borderers, partly because he was a Sheriff and also an anti-Chartist. He was an instigator of the 'Carterhaugh Baa' in 1815, and around Hawick and Selkirk was rumoured to have helped intice the Gala men to switch sides, dramatically decreasing his popularity there, which would only get worse because of his anti-Reform political views. It was said that he managed to placate an angry mob when passing through Selkirk on his way home. However, he was harrassed by a crowd in Selkirk at the 1830 election (with his servant being chased through a house and gardens before esacping) and his carriage was stoned during the 1831 election in Jedburgh, apparently by a group of about 1,000 Hawick weavers (although some reports dispute this). There is also a story about him being harrassed at the election in Selkirk (when it became clear that the Liberals would lose by about one vote), with someone trying to spit in his face as he made his way to the safety of the inn. With financial support from the Duke of Buccleuch, he led efforts to preserve Melrose Abbey. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. He wrote the lines 'Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The glaring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along the wild and willow'd shore', and Hawick is further mentioned in the 'Lay ...' in the lines 'Dimly he view'd the Moat-hill's mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round; In Hawick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night'. In 1797 he married Margaret Charlotte (who he met by chance at Gilsland, and married 4 months later), daughter of Jean Charpentier of Lyons. Their children were: Walter, 2nd Baronet (1801–47), who died without issue; Charles (1805–41), died in Tehran; Charlotte Sophia, who married John Gibson Lockhart; and Anne (d.1833). He was buried at Dryburgh Abbey and his house at Abbotsford became a museum. His court-room on Selkirk square is also a museum. The Gothic-style Scott Monument on Princes Street in Edinburgh was built 1840–44, is 200 feet 6 inches high and contains a marble statue of the writer at the base. There is also a Doric column topped by a statue in Glasgow, as well as the life size statue in Selkirk square. A celebration for his centenary birthday was held at Branxholme, with a procession, speeches, toasts and songs. He was apparently editing the memoirs of Rev. Dr. John Young of Hawick when he was suffered some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. He went to the Mediterranean to recuperate, but returned to die at Abbotsford. The Museum has at least a couple of documents with his signature, as well as what is purported to be a lock of his hair, presented in 1859 by Alexander Scott from Glasgow. Scott Crescent in Burnfoot was named after him in 1952 – 'O Scott! with whom, in youth's serenest prime, I wove with careless hand the fairy rhyme' [JL], 'Then he will see our Laureat wight, The first he ever made a knight, The great Sir Walter, our delight, The Bard o Caledonia' [BY], 'Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in 'Dryburgh Bowers', Whose genius hallowed every spot In this dear land of ours' [JT], 'Fu' weel I trow that Selkirk Can never be forgot, Her fate, her sang, her Shirra, Immortal Walter Scott' [JBS], 'Like a loved ghost thy fabled flood Fleets through the dusky land; Where Scott, come home to die, has stood, My feet returning stand' [ALg]. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Newcastleton according to Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Walter (b.c.1769) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed in Pigot's

1825/6 and 1837 directories as a wright there. In 1841 he was living at about 41 North Hermitage Street. Walter (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His father-in-law Robert Anderson died in 1819. He may be the Walter who married Isabella Anderson and whose children include Margaret (b.1803), Charles (b.1805), Thomas (b.1810), Isabella (b.1816) and Christian (b.1818). Capt. Walter (1778–1857) 4th Laird of Wauchope, son of Charles, he was descended from the Scotts of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797, but by 1798 had paid £10 to avoid military service. He was also listed as 'Wat Scott Junr. of Waughop' in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He succeeded his father in 1808 and farmed at Wauchope. He was a representative on the council of Heritors in Hoblirk Parish even before he succeeded. He was responsible for the roll of men aged between 17 and 55 made in 1803 in response to the threat of invasion from France. He raised nearly 100 men during the French invasion scare of 1803, which became the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers. He was captain of this unit during the False Alarm of 1804, and rode to collect men from Liddesdale, arriving at their head in Hawick before daybreak. When the unit disbanded in 1809 he became first Captain of the (1st Regiment) Roxburgh Local Militia. He and his father were listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls in 1811 he is recorded as owner of parts of Wauchope, called Common, Hawklawtongues (or Wauchope-head), Wauchope-rig and Wigg. There is a story told (in Lang's 'Stories of the Border Marches') of how, on the road to Hawick in 1813, he came upon an old man who had been recently attacked, and with the help of a local ploughman (William Little) tracked down the robber, who was later hung for his crime; the report in the Scots Magazine for 1813 states that the man attacked was 101 years old, and that the attacker was sentenced to transportation for robbery. It is said that he was generally slow to make up his mind, but known for his common sense and an authority on parish business. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1828. He was nephew of Walter Dickson, merchant of Edinburgh, and so was related to the Hassendean and Hawick Dicksons. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed as 'Independent', and the house had 3 servants and in 1851 was listed as 'J.P. Landed Prop.', employing 2 labourers. Also in 1851 he examined the memorial stones of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in St. Mary's Kirk, including that of Christian Bennet, who was his great-grandmother. He was said to be a keen supporter of the Hobkirk Baa, riding on his grey horse to encourage the 'uppies' side. In 1812 he married Marion, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Shorthope in Selkirkshire. Their children were: a daughter (b.1813), who probably died in infancy; Charles (1814–17); Thomas (1816–62), who succeeded and changed his surname to Macmillan-Scott; Walter (1817–44), who worked for the East India Company; Charles (1819–95), who farmed at Lintalee, and succeeded his uncle Archibald to Howcleuch; Archibald (1822–62), who died in Malta; and Anne, who also died in infancy. He died at Wauchope and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. A portrait of his wife Marion was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon. Walter (b.c.1780) labourer at Greena according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Walter (b.c.1780) shepherd at Roughleeneuk according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Southdean Parish. He may have been related to George and William, who were at Roughleeneuk at about the same time. Walter (b.c.1780) servant at Hassendeanbank according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. A note states that he 'has had three Children' and 'lame of an arm', suggesting this might excuse him from being selected. Walter 'Wat o the Knowe' (b.1786/7) claimed to be a descendant of Walter Scott of Goldielands, he farmed at 'the Knowe' (now Bowanhill) near Teviothead. His family had previously been farmers at Newbigging on the edge of Hawick Common. His sister Agnes married mason John Armstrong from Wilton Dean and he had another sister who was grandmother of William Murray, gardener at Borthwickshiels. He was recorded at 'Hendersons Knowe' in 1841. In 1851 he was a farmer of 630 acres at Bowanhill, employing 3 labourers, and in 1861 it was 650 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was still there in 1868. His toddy ladle is in the Museum, and he is buried in the aisle of St. Mary's (with special permission of the Duke of Buccleuch). His housekeeper's headstone at Teviothead is curtly inscribed 'Tibbie Bell, Wat's housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69'. He died unmarried. Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Henderson's Knowe on the 1841 census. He may have been related to Henry and Francis, who were labourers in the same place in 1799. Walter (b.1790/1) farmer at Wiltonburn. He is probably son of the earlier Walter from Wiltonburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 450 acres. His wife was Elizabeth and children included Margaret R., Walter, Elizabeth, Douglas, Walter D., Williamina J.N. and Ann T. Walter (b.c.1790) farm steward at Todshawhaugh according to the 1841 census. Walter (1790/1–1853) born in Cavers Parish, he became a shepherd at Singdean. He had been shepherd at Hyndlee to James Davidson, also called 'Dandie Dinmont', and was a keen fox hunter. He married Elspeth 'Eppy' Telfer, who died in 1881, aged 80. The couple had 5 boys and 5 (surviving) girls: Walter (b.1820); Helen (b.1822), who married Andrew Amos; James (b.1824); Margaret (1826–43); Jean (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); John (b.1832); William (b.1834); Anne Elliot (b.1836); Christian E. (b.1840); and Eppy (b.c.1842). 2 of his sons were also shepherds and another was a gamekeper. He is probably the Walter at Singdean appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of family there 1835–41. It is said that he came across a French doctor who had settled in Scotland after the Peninsular War, and from him learned the secret of a herbal plaster that could cure cancer. This cure became quite famous at the time, and people would come from all around to try the cure. One particular story concerns the apparently successful treatment of a huge tumour on the wife of a tradesman from Galashiels. His son Andrew was shepherd at Twislehope, and carried on the secret. It is possible he was the Walter born to Walter in Kirkton in 1790. He and his wife were buried in Newcastleton. Walter (b.1792/3) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 15 acres there. His son was a teacher at Hermitage and he also had a daughter Esther. He was appointed an elder of Castleton Kirk in 1832. He is listed as male head of family at Netherraw in 1835–41. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1822 he married Janet Roxburgh in Hawick. Walter of Newton (b.1798/9) 3rd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood. He is said to have married an Elliot of the Harwood branch, possibly Helen in Hawick in 1838; this seems likely to have been Helen (b.c.1794), daughter of Walter in Hermitage. His daughter Margaret Ann married Andrew Scott, who was afterwards of Newton. He is probably the cattle-dealer of that name recorded on the Crescent along with James (who would have been his brother) in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1000 acres at Satchells. In 1861 he was farming 385 acres at Newton and employing 10 people there; his wife was Helen (b.c.1797), from Newcastleton, and his nephew George Ballantyne was farm overseer. He was still recorded at Newton in an 1868 directory. His wife Helen 'Elliot or Scott' was recorded as owner of Newton in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Walter 'Watty', 'Wattie Scott the Cairrier' (d.1857) owner of a carriers business in Hawick. His stabling and yard were at the west side of where the Liberal Club was built, 78 High Street; this was referred to as 'Wood Yard' in the 1841 census, and he shared the premises with another carrier, James Best. His firm carried general goods to Berwick and elsewhere. He may be the Walter listed in 1837, leaving from the Grapes for Glasgow every other Tuesday, and for Langholm every other Thursday, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. He may be the Walter listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He was also listed in 1852 going to Carlisle, Langholm and Longtown every Monday and Wednesday, Jedburgh and Kelso on Mondays and Fridays, and Selkirk, Melrose and Galashiels on Tuesdays and Fridays. His son, also Walter, was Cornet in 1859. Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick. He married Eliza Borthwick. He liked to recount astonishing tales of his own strength at harvesting and in the wars. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer on the Back Row, in 1851 he was a 'Chimney Sweep' living on the Howegate and in 1861 he was an agricultural labourer at 'Loan South Side No. 1'. His wife was Agnes and their children included Mary, Robert, James B., John and Isabella. He died in Hawick Poorhouse. He could be the 'Muckle Wat' who was the subject of a short poem presented by W.N. Kennedy, nominally said to be from his son – 'My blessings on you, Muckle Watt! For sooping lums to keep me fat'. Walter (1801–47) son of Sir Walter, he was 2nd Baronet of Abbotsford.

His wife was Isabella (or 'Bella', from Selkirk) and their children included Andrew, Thomas, Christian, Betty, Aaron, Walter, Bella, Robert and Betsy. Perhaps he was Walter, recorded as mason at Todshawhaugh in 1865 when he donated to the Museum 'shilling of Elizabeth found in a field near Harden, brass coin of Queen Anne. 1 copper coin'. Walter (b.1812/3–92) son of Thomas and Christian. He was a joiner on Buccleuch Street (No. 4), like his father before him. He was listed as a joiner on Buccleuch Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his sister Jean. He later married Christian (or Christina) Lillico in 1853 and their children included Thomas and William. He died at Allahabad, Bengal. Walter (19th C.) recorded being 'of Haggishaugh' in 1865 when he donated to the Museum a pair of spectacles that had belonged to 'Old Mortaility'. He was also 'of Haggishaa' in about 1874 when he was recorded as owner of part of Burnflat. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (1820–84) born in Roberton Parish, son of Thomas and Agnes Leithead. He worked as a fuller in Wilton. His sister Janet married James Black. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Place and in 1861 at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Beattie (from Selkirk), who died in 1891, aged 65. Their children included: Thomas (1849–1924), tweed manufacturer, who died in Toronto; John Beattie (b.1852); and Robert (or 'Bob', b.1864). In the 1880s his son Thomas was living at Ellabank with his widow Mary. He was said to be 61 when he died (probably in error) and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Walter (19th C.) married Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1838. Walter (19th C.) married Ann Best in Hawick in 1837. Walter (19th C.) son of John, his mother being a Deans. He was last of more than a century of tenants of the same family at Hummelknowes Mill. He was recorded there in 1851, as farmer of 26 acres, living with his brother John, who was miller at Hummelknowes. He left the farm in 1855, moving to Ormiston. He was farmer at Ormiston Parkhead in 1861. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: John (b.1846); William, J.P. (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Walter (b.1852). Walter (1819–99), J.P., born in Hawick, he spent most of his life in Langholm. He attended school in Hawick and served 2 apprenticeships there. In 1841 he was a journeyman skinner living on the Crescent. He was one of the first Precentors in the Free Kirk in Hawick, but then became a member of the Evangelical Union (i.e. Congregational Kirk) in Hawick. He married Joan Paisley in Hawick in 1842 and they lived in a thatched cottage near the Mill Path, which was completely flooded in 1846. He moved to Langholm in about 1850, walking all the way, and starting up as a skinner. There he was the main instigator of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Langholm, loaning the congregation the use of the 'bark hoose' before the church was built and also being the first Elder. He was a Temperance supporter, as well as member of the School and Parochial Boards. He was a Justice of the Peace and also Commissioner for Dumfriesshire. He lived at Holmfoot, which he left to the church when he died. He and his wife were buried at Staplegordon. Walter (1822–1892) son of William, tenant farmer at Girnwood. He took over from his father as farmer at Girnwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded in the tenancy by his niece Hannah Davies, who purchased the property. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 600 acres at Girnwood and he was still there in 1868. He was probably the 'Mr Scott, Girnwood' who in 1871 donated to the Museum a 'very fine stone hatchet', found in Hoscote Burn. Walter (b.1831) son of grocer and spirit merchant Walter, with his mother being Isabella Hogg. He was a chemist and druggist, being in Galashiels in 1859 and was at Ladhope in 1861, with his brother-in-law David Scott Park visiting. He later worked in Durham. In 1859 at Hawick Free Kirk, he married Ellen Cabourn Park, daughter of David Scott Park. Walter (1835/6–1892) son of grocer Thomas and Mary Helm. In 1874 or 1875 he was co-founder of Lyle & Scott's, along with William Lyle. He was described as 'a gentleman of long practical experience in the trade, havingheld important positions with eminent manufacturers here for years'. They built the firm up from modest beginnings into a huge concern, largely through his efforts. He married Margaret Law (who died aged 24), with whom his children were: Walter, died young; Thomas, died aged 23; and Margaret, who married John Elliot of Selkirk. He secondly married Helen Porteous, with additional children: William P., Cornet in 1893; Robert P., killed in France in 1917; James; Isa Watson, who died young; and John P. He died at Craigview, Denholm. Walter 'Hawick Wattie' (1844/5–1904) born in Hawick, said to be from a good family, he was a stockingmaker by trade. He was employed in Elliot's shop for many years, but became a homeless wanderer. He roamed around the local countryside for many years. He was said to be 'a good-natured, humorous man, with a fund of song and anecdote'. Always seen at Border fairs, he was often the worse for drink, and well known to local Magistrates. William Peffers immortalised him in a poem – 'Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock. For daily bread he jist relies On kindliness o' country folk' [WP], '... They're Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in' [WE]. Walter (1845–1919) born at Synton, son of William and Mary Scott. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Walter Ross 'Wattie' (1926–2006) son of Andrew and Bunty, who had moved to Canada, he was born in Winnipeg, but soon returned to 'the Nitton'. He was widely stated to be the best Hawick R.F.C. player who was never capped for Scotland. He was Greens captain 1948/9 and 1952/3, won 30 sevens medals and regularly played for the South of Scotland, being renowned for his strong handoff. He spent his life in farming and was also a keen curler. An enthusiastic Common Riding supporter, he first followed during the War years, was Acting Father in 1970 and served as President of the Mosstroopers and Callants' Clubs. He married Joey (who was a teacher at Wilton School) and had children John Ross (Honorary Provost), Terry (also Acting Father) and Jill. Warin (13th C.) listed on a panel in Kent when the goods at Chileham, belonging to the late wife of Alexander Baliol were valued. His name occurs as 'Warin Scot', but it is unclear if he could be related to local Scotts. William (12th/13th C.) probably son of Richard and great-grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He attended the court of Alexander II, and is recorded as witness to a charter of Walter (grandson of Walter, Steward of Scotland) between 1207 and 1214. He may be the same William who witnessed charters by Walter the Steward to Paisley Abbey, a payment of rent for Paisley mill, a gift of a church in Ayrshire, a gift of lands in Perth and another related to Coldingham Priory, all perhaps in the 1220s; he is there recorded as 'Wilelmo Scoto'. He may also be the William who witnessed a grant of lands in Strathblane around the 1240s. He was succeeded by Sir Richard, generally considered to be his son, who was probably the first Scott to own lands anywhere near to Hawick. It is possible that another son was Walter, who held lands in Peebles and signed the Ragman Rolls along with Richard in 1296. William (13th C.) recorded as William 'le Scot' in 1233 in Strafford (perhaps Stratford). He was tailor of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, and was commanded to be given the house in Bordeaux that had been taken from him by the Seneschal of Gascony. William (d.c.1243) recorded as 'William Scot' and William 'of Stitchill'. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Worcester in 1218. In 1226 he was presented as Bishop of Durham, but this was objected to by King Henry III, and the election was quashed by the Pope in 1227. He may have been father of Robert Stichill, who was later Bishop of Durham. It is unclear if he was related to any other Scotts. William (13th C.) listed in Lincoln in 1252. Along with his wife 'Hawisea', he had a writ 'ad terminum'. William (13th C.) connected with Coldingham. He had a gift of 7 acres in Ayton in an undated charter. Sometime before 1235 he was witness to a charter for a gift of land in Coldingham and in 1258to another involving land in Falkirk. William (13th C.) recorded as 'le Escot' in Cumberland in 1254. William (13th C.) recorded in Essex in 1259, when his daughter Matilda gave money for an assize. He was 'Walter le Scot of Mapilderstede'. William (13th C.) mentioned in 1261, when his son and heir John 'le Escot' was listed in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. William (13th C.) recorded as being of 'Parva Jernemue' (i.e. Little Yarmouth) in 1262. This was in a set of pleas from several counties, given at Canterbury, involving John Baliol in Suffolk, in which he and others were fined. William (13th

C.) recorded as 'Willelmus Scot de Inethal' and 'Willelmo Scot in Ethal' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were probably in the area near Stanford, where the court was held. William (13th C.) recorded having a house 'in vico Sancte Genovefe' in Paris in 1288/9. He may have been a student there, but there is no other information about him. William (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He thus swore fealty to Edward I, along with 9 other people of the same name, although he was the only one from Roxburghshire. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main line of the Scotts of Buccleuch. One possibility is that he was a son of Sir Richard of Murthockstone (whose father was also William) who also signed the Ragman Rolls. William (13th/14th C.) from Glasgow, he was recorded in 1301 when he delivered letters to the Queen from the (English) Sheriff of Roxburgh regarding expenses. He may have been related to Robert, who was recorded at the same time. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'William [Les] cot' when he was on a jury in Lanark in 1302/3. He is presumably different from other Williams. William (13th/14th C.) servant to Sir John of Kingston. In 1303/4 he took letters between King Edward I and his master. William of Dundonald (d.1305) taken prisoner at the siege of Stirling in 1304. He was beheaded the following year. He may have been from the county of Cunningham. William (13th/14th C.) mentioned along with Robert in 1307/8 when they were paid for being messengers of the English army. They delivered something between Cumnock, Ayr and Lanark. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (13th/14th C.) recorded at the house of Raymond Lull in Paris in 1309/10, testifying to the orthodoxy of Lull's writing. He was already B.A. by then, and hence presumably training as a cleric; he is recorded as 'de Scotia'. There were others also listed, including 2 men called John 'Scot'. He may be the same as another William, with a different designation in Scotland. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as a 'hobelar' (i.e. light horseman) in the English garrison at Berwick in 1312. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as Regent Master of Arts in Paris in 1317. It has been suggested he is the same man as william 'de Lillisclest' (i.e. William Lilliesleaf). William (13th/14th C.) recorded on an inquest in 1322 regarding the lands of Jedburgh Abbey and Restenneth Priory. Perhaps the same 'Samiele de Wylttona' was witness in 1365/6 to a charter relating to the lands of Glenbervie in Aberdeenshire. William (13th/14th C.) probably resident of the Kintyre area. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls when he was paid for renewing the mill and kiln at Tarbert in 1326 and for completing the park at Tarbert in 1326. William (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls regarding the 'fermes' of Haddington in 1327, 1329, 1330 and 1331. William (14th C.) recorded living 'in vico Sancti Victoris' and paying univrsity taxes some time in the period 1329–35/6. His designation is given as 'Scoti' and he may be the same as William de Edinburgh or William de Cupar. William (14th C.) recorded as a one of the 'palefridarii' (probably some kind of horseman) for Edward III. In 1379 he was granted an annuity of 2 pence per day on account of being maimed while in service. William (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–84, when an annuity was paid to his heirs from the East Mill of Haddington. He may have been related to the nearly contemporary John, who was also associated with Haddington. Sir William of Balwearie (d.bef. 1406) son of Sir Andrew. He had a confirming charter as 'domino Willelmo Scot de Balweary' in 1393. He married the sister of Constantine of Lochore, Sheriff of Fife. In about 1400 he granted Philip Halket (whose daughter may have been married to Wardlaw of Wilton) lands in Pitfirrane and other places. He was succeeded by Sir Michael. William (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1404 when he gained the lands of 'Nemphlar' in Lanarkshire, which were resigned by his mother Janet Lockhart. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. William (14th/15th C.) brother of the Laird of Balwearie. In a charter of the Duke of Albany (probably about 1410), he was granted lands in Fife by his brother. He was probably brother of Sir Michael (who was Laird around that time) and hence a younger son of Sir William of Balwearie. William of Glack (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, information about these generations is very uncertain. William (14th/15th C.) Chplain of the King of Scotland. He was envoy to Scotland of the University of Paris, Rector of Culter and Vicar of Innerleithen. In about 1432 he became Rector of Biggar, exchanging it for Innerleithen with Thomas of Peebles. He was described as 'secretary, orator, familiar domestic and continual commensal' of the King, 'priest, M.A., of Paris, who reads canonical hours with the king and has studied canon law for about four years'.

William (15th C.) recorded in 1430 when he witnessed a charter for lands in Lanarkshire for Melrose Abbey. He was a Chaplain, probably with the Abbey. He could be the William, Master of Arts, who was empowered by James I to deliver letters confirming the treaty with English ambassadors to the Bishop of Durham in 1424. Perhaps the same 'magistri Willelmi Scott' was Master of the Hospital of St. Leonard's near Lanark in the period 1428–31 according to the Exchequer Rolls. Perhaps the same William was a Chaplain who, along with other Scotsmen, had a warrant in 1448 for safe conduct to pass through England on their way to Rome. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. His son John was also listed, as well as Adam. It is unclear how they were related to other contemporary Scotts. William (15th C.) witness to the 1447 sasine for the sale of the Cousinlands to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is described as a presbyter and perpetual vicar of Westerkirk. The other Scotts who witnessed the document were all close relatives of Scott of Buccleuch. William (15th C.) customs officer in Arbroath in 1447 and 1450, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454 he had a sasine for the lands of 'Manuell Macnab' near Strathearn. Probably the same William gave the payment in 1435 for the communities of Montrose and Arbroath. He may have been ancestor of the Bailie of Montrose of the same name recorded in 1507. William (15th C.) father of John, resident of Surrey. In 1459 there was a command from King Henry VI for John to get sasine of his lands, since he hd proved his age. William (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1456 when he was repaid for an advance to John Dalrymple in Bruges. William 'Will' (15th C.) recorded in 1474/5 when he compounded with the King for a remission for the slaughter of 'Johnne Crossate'. He was said to have a 'letter of slains' with the injured party. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Foulshiels (15th C.) probably 3rd surviving son of Sir David, mentioned in the 1471/2 marriage contract with the sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. Alternatively he could be the 4th son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (or the 2 men could be compounded). He was witness to a charter by Robert of Haining in 1476, and may be the William who (along with John) witnessed a document for David of Buccleuch relating to Kirkurd in 1475/6. He was probably deceased by 1488, since he is not mentioned in the list of heirs in the Crown charter for the Barony of Branxholme in that year. He may have married in 1472 and have died without issue. It is unclear whether he was actually 'of Foulshiels', or if this was confusion with the later William of Foulshiels. It is also possible that he was the same as the Rector of Southdean or the same as the uncle (who was declared a rebel) of the later Robert of Allanhaugh. He was stated to be the son of David in 1478, when he took over from his father as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. According to the Exchequer Rolls he served as Ranger until at least 1484. He held a 'stead' at Cacrabank for his fee; at the same time John Murray represented Yarrow ward and James Pringle the ward of Tweed. He also leased Tushielaw in 1484 and is probably the William who had the lease of Deephope in 1486. He was recorded as deceased and former Ranger in 1490, with his arrears mentioned. It is possible he is the William of Tushielaw from which Robert Elliot had remission in 1493 for stealing a horse. William (15th C.) recorded as 'rectore de Sowdone' (i.e. Southdean) when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Mangerton at Branxholme in 1482. He is 'domino Willelmo Scot rectore de Sowdone' (not as recorded in one place 'Foudoun') when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5 for the lands of Whitchesters being given by Sir David of Branxholme to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He also witnessed a resignation of the same lands shortly afterwards. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1491/2 he was the priest who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott, and who was to choose the priest who would say mass when he died. It is possible he was the same man as William, described as 'decanis tevidalie' named among other priests at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Branxholme, perhaps even a brother or cousin of Sir David. William (15th C.) lord of the manor of Stapleford Tawney in Essex. In 1485, along with his son John senior, he was named in an indenture regarding their lands. His name was written 'Scotte'. William of Goldielands (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 when his son William was allowed to 'compone' for rieving crimes. It seems likely that he was related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connection is not known. He is the first known Scott of Goldielands, but whether he was closely related to the later ones is not known. William (15th C.) son of William of Goldielands. At the 1493 Justice-aire held in

Jedburgh, he was allowed to compone for stealing 12 goats from Fastheugh and for associating with English thieves. His surety was Robert of Whitchester. William 'Gyde' (15th C.) recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother John, as well as other 'traitors of Levin', to raid the farm of Harehead. He may have been related to other Scotts with the same nickname. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, along with 'Wantoun' Walter Dalgleish. William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting the pair, with his surety being Walter Scott of Howpasley. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, when he was fined for non-appearance. He was listed being 'de rone', but it is unclear where this was. William (15th C.) recorded in 1497 when he had remission, along with 'Johnne Scot and Johnne Scott' for the slaughter of 'Johnne Fischare', fleeing to England, and other crimes. It is unknown to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Sir William of Balwearie (15th C.) son of Sir Michael. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Moncrieff and his children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Alexander of Fingask; Euphame, who married Sir John Arnot of that Ilk; possibly Catherine, who married James Sandilands of Cruvie and William Wood of Bonyntoun; and a daughter who married Robert Brown of Fordell. William 'Will' (15th/16th C.) one of the 4 men selected by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. It is possible he was the same William listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. William (15th/16th C.) son of David of Tushielaw, brother of Adam 'King of Thieves'. He is recorded in 1502 when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with him and 2 Armstrongs (Archibald and Ninian) for their 'Stouthreifs, Slaughters, Burnings, and other crimes'. He is probably also the William 'in Thirlestane' in 1502 who 'came in the King's Will' for violently occupying the lands of Thirlestane, without having a lease from Patrick Crichton of Cranston-Riddell; Walter of Buccleuch served as surety. This case suggests some ongoing dispute over the lands of Thirlestane (foreshadowing what would come later). His brother John would later become Laird of Thirlestane. He may also have been related to John of Thirlestane, who is recorded earlier. William (15th/16th C.) son of James of Broadmeadows. He is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 receiving remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. His surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. In a second case he had remission for injuring Walter Scott of Tushielaw and for stealing a horse from James Arres, 44 sheep from John Lauder in Philiphaugh and 7 cows from the younger Laird of Ormiston; the surety was again John in Hassendean. In a third case he was 'in braid medois' when he had remission for stealing 26 cows from William Murray in Wester Hailes, with Alexander, Lord Home as his surety. John, also listed as son of James of Broadmeadows, also had remission at the same Justice-aire, and was therefore his brother. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1503 in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. Adam of Roberton presented him as as suitor for his lands (presumably of Roberton) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurred earlier but was scorred out. He is perhaps related to the Scotts of Roberton, and could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is said to have been Abbot of Melrose 1504–06, according to Scott of Rodono (although his name does not appear on lists of the Abbots, so this is unclear). William (15th/16th C.) one of the 'bailies in that part' appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in his father's lands in Annandale. The others were his son Robert, along with Walter of Howpasley and Stephen. It is unclear who he was and whether he was closely related to the other appointed bailies. William of Fenwick (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. In 1502 he is probably the William 'in fenuik ' who, along with Robert in Synton, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. He was also 'in fenwik' when he had remission for stealing sheep and cattle from Bowden, with his surety being Robert in Synton and for stealing sheep belonging to the Kers from the farm of Cauldshiels, with his surety being Walter Scott of Headshaw. Probably the same William was tenant at Fenwick in 1510, when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh and John of Haining, suggesting he was probably closely related to some of those branches. He was also recorded as 'de Fennyk' in 1510 when he was a pledge for Stephen, who leased Deephope and Mount Common. He could be son of Walter of Fenwick, recorded in 1484/5, and probably related to Simon in Fenwick, who is mentioned in 1528 and 1540. William (15th/16th C.) described as 'in Hawick' in 1510 when (along with George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh) he was surety for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who had been involved in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. This may be the same William 'in hawic' who is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1502 receiving remission for the slaying of Simon Chapman; the same William is recorded in the records of the Justice-aire in Jedburgh being declared a fugitive for this same crime. He is likely to have been related to the Scott branches in Headshaw, Goldielands, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining (since they are all mentioned in the same case). Probably the same William 'in Hawik' is among the men listed in the remission of 1526 for the attack on the Earl of Arran led by the Homes; after him are listed John, Thomas, John, Thomas, Philip and Steven, 'brether to the said Johnne', some of whom may be close relatives. Bailie William (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick being given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (d.1532) of Balwearie, so of Sir William. He was one of a small number of Scottish noblemen taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He sold off some of his property to pay the ransom. He married Janet, daughter of Thomas Lundy of that Ilk. Their children incuded Sir William (who succeeded), Thomas, Catherine (married James Sandilands of Cruvie and then William Wood of Bonnyton) and Marion. William of Whithope (d.1523) younger son of Sir Walter, 8th Laird of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1515 he had a charter of Whithope from James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He died without male issue and his brother Walter was his heir. William (15th/16th C.) named as 'bailie' in 2 instruments relating to lands in Lauchsanye in Aberdeenshire in 1521. William (15th/16th C.) merchant in Irvine. He was recorded in an instrument relating to the customs of Ayr in 1528. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as being 'in Fawlishope' (probably 'Phaup' in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. George was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. William of Ormiston (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as the person who 'sought instruments' in a transaction where Philip of Headshaw assigned his lands of Hartwoodburn to his 2nd son Robert on his death. He was uncle to Robert and hence presumably brother to Philip of Headshaw. He could be the deceased 'Wlc of O...' recorded in 1537 in relation to the lands of Todrig. He may be the same as William 'in Hartvood' who in 1536/7 accused someone of selling stolen skins. He may be the William in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a bond in 1541, involving William in Bowhill and 'master' Michael. He may also be the William in 'Hartvodburn' listed along with John in Aikwood ('Dustyba') and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. William (16th C.) described as 'in Hilhous' in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators (along with Robert of Howpasley, William of Harden, Walter of Synton, John of Roberton and Simon of Fenwick) to decide on the succession of Borthaugh lands. William of Foulshiels (16th C.) son of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, probably 'Wicked Wat'; he was probably an illegitimate son, since Sir Walter's eldest surviving son was Sir William of Kirkurd (with the same name). In 1532 he had a charter for the lands of Foulshiels (in Selkirkshire). The later John of Foulshiels was probably his son or grandson. The earlier William, son of David of Buccleuch, may not be directly related (but this is uncertain). It is possible he was the same as Sir William of Kirkurd. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Sundhope (in Yarrow) in 1533 when he witnessed a document about the murder of John Wilson, who probably also lived at Sundhope. William (15th/16th C.) uncle of William, who was son of Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1535 the yonger William was given remission for associating with him, since he had been declared a rebel, as well as for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull; it is unclear how much earlier these crimes took place. He must have been brother of the earlier Robert of Allanhaugh, and hence a son of Sir David of Branxholme. It is also possible that he was the same as William of Foulshiels, or some other contemporary William. Sir William of Balwearie (d.1532) elder son of Sir William and Isobel Moncrieff. He was taken prisoner at Flodden in 1513. He sold some of his lands of Strathmiglo to purchase his ransom. He became a Commissioner to Parliament in 1524 and was appointed as a Justice. In 1532 he was nominated to the College of Justice, but die later that year. He married Janet, daughter of Thomas Lundy of that Ilk. Their children included: Sir William, who succeded; Thomas of Pitgormo (c.1480–1539); and possibly Marion, who married Alexander Scott and George Henderson of Fordell. William (16th C.) recorded being 'in Faldishoip' (i.e. Fauldshope) in 1534/5 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was 'in Feldishoup' in 1535 when he witnessed another document in Selkirk. In 1536 he was 'Voll Scot in Fauldishoup' when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Roberton and Michael of Aikwood. William of Hassendean (16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd, or alternatively a grandson of James. He was heir to his brother (or uncle) John, succeeding in 1530. He is listed as being 'in Halsyndene' (i.e. Hassendean) in 1526 among the Borderers given remission for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran (note that William, brother of Adam in Clarilaw, is listed separately, suggesting there were 2 closely related Williams at that time). In 1527 he is among the Lairds, under Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field; he is there 'of Hassindene'. He is recorded being pardoned in 1528, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, Robert of Howpasley and William Turnbull of Minto. He may be the William who was one of the Bailies appointed in 1528 to infeft David, son of Sir Walter of Branxholme in his lands. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He resigned the lands of Falside (in Yarrow) to William, son of Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532, as ratified by Queen Margaret in 1539. Probably in 1532 (note that Fraser makes this the 19th year of the reign of James VI, which must be incorrect) he had a Precept of Chancery for keeping his lands, after having forfeited them for supporting Sir Walter at Melrose (presumably in 1526); these lands were Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Easter Hassendean and 'Deidrig' in the half Barony of Hassendean. He was part of an inquest panel held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1534 he purchased the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw from Gavin Elliot, the letter of reversion being sealed at Hassendean Kirk. In 1536 he granted Thomas Turnbull 'in the Tronyhill' lands on the east part of Eastern Hassendean. He is recorded about 1537 in a 'letter of reversion' by David Scott in Clarilaw for the lands of the Mains of 'Capitrig' near Hassendean tower. In 1538 Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat had remission for stealing from him, specifically 2 letters of reversion for the lands of 'Coppitrig' which were kept in his box in the house of Nicholas Rutherford in Edinburgh. There was also a payment of £10 to the Lord High Treasurer for the remission granted to Thomas Turnbull for oppressing him. He was given the lands of Falside (again) in Selkirkshire in 1539. And it is probably the same William 'in Hassendean' who had a court dispute in 1540 with Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawflat, over 'wadsets'. They were also in dispute over a 1536 marriage contract between his eldest daughter and heir (although it is unclear how this could have been, since he appears to have had sons) Elizabeth and George, heir to the same Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same William was witness to a sasine in 1551 confirming the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham; his son David is also mentioned. David probably succeeded him, while Adam of Burnfoot and Walter may have been other sons. He probably married Elizabeth, the elder daughter of George Chisholme of that Ilk. William of Alton (16th C.) recorded in Scott of Satchells' doggerel family history. It is stated that 'John Scot of the Monks-tower' was 'brother to old William Scot of Altoun'. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton (if he actually existed). William (16th C.) described as 'in Layk' in 1535 when he was charged with stealing cattle from Arthur Douglas and Thomas Fresall 'in Efflesche' (probably Effledge) and also Marion Davidson in the same place. It is unclear where 'Layk' might be. William (16th C.) recorded in Elindhope in 1539 when he complained in Selkirk that James Stoddart had taken violent possession of his lands of 'est Eldinhoup'. However, Stoddart counter-claimed that he had 'wrongfully manured and sowed my lands'. William (16th C.) smith who became a Guild Brother in Edinburgh in 1538, with his duty paid to the 'Fabric of the Church'. Sir William of Kirkurd, 'Whitecloak' (d.1552), 2nd son and eldest surviving son of 'Wicked Wat'. He became heir after the death of his brother David, but predeceased his father. In 1532 he was granted the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire, resigned by William Scott of Hassendean; this was ratified by Margaret, Queen of Scots in 1539. In 1539 he is 'feuar of Fausyd' when he and his father Sir Walter had their official give notice of removal to Thomas (son of Adam) and Robert of Howpasley. In 1541 he is recorded as 'secund sone to the lard of Bukcleuch' when he claimed tenancy of the Crown lands of 'Hawtherne' in Yarrow. He took part in Border expeditions with his father and was present at Pinkie in 1547. In 1549 he entered into a bond of 'man-rent' with Mary of Lorraine, the Queen Regent, in which he was to receive the same fees and profits received by the deceased John Melville of Raith. Later in 1549 she granted him a pension of £100 Scots as a result of the damages he sustained defending 'contrair oure auld inimeis off Ingland'. In 1550 he was listed as one of the 2 curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, his step-brother (i.e. son of his mother by her first husband). He married Grizel Betoun, sister to his step-mother (they were both daughters of John Betoun of Creich with different mothers); after his death she remarried Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony. His children included: Sir Walter, the 10th Laird; Janet, who married Sir Thomas Kerr of Oxnam and Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and secondly Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth and was buried in 1618; Elizabeth, who married John Carmichael of Meadowflat, having previously had marriage contracts with Thomas, 2nd son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as with John, grandson of Sir Andrew Ker of the Hirsel; and another daughter who married Walter Scott of Headshaw. John, recorded in 1632 as 'brother naturall' to Sir William Murray of Elibank was probably another son. There is an existing inventory of his estate when he died, which was only a few months before his father was murdered on Edinburgh High Street – 'Sir William Scot of Branksom call'd White-cloak, He was son to Buckcleugh, call'd wicked Wat, As Fortune smil'd or frown'd, Content that Worthy was' [CWS]. William (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He is recorded as 'junior' (suggesting there was a senior William in Irvine) and gave in his reports with Robert, who was surely related. William (d.bef. 1563) Burgess of Arbroath. In 1563 his son John had a contract with James 'of Prynleis', relating to lands in Fife. His wife was Christine, eldest sister of John Cockburn of Wester Newton and his son John was her heir. William 'the Boltfoot' of Todrig and Harden (d.c.1561) 2nd son of Robert of Stirches. Scott of Satchells says that his father was George, but that is probably incorrect. He was renowned as a fearless horseman and for several daring deeds. His nickname derived from a lameness caused by a wound received in battle. However, there may also have been negative stories told about him, since Scott of Satchells says 'Why should ramping Liars blast his Fame, And say that he was not a Gentleman; He wanted nothing of Gentrie, But only the title of Dignitie'. He is probably the 'Willelmo Scott, fratre germano Walteri Scot de Styrkschaw' who witnessed a document in 1507/8 relating to the tower in Hawick 'between the bridges' for Scott of Whitchesters. Originally of Todrig, near Synton, he acquired Harden in 1512, from his brother Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws, as confirmed in a 1535 charter from the Lord of Home. As well as Harden the lands included Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielswood; 1 acre at the east end still belonged to Walter, but that was also transferred according to another confirming charter of 1559 (although it is possibly 1550), in which his son Walter is named. He also had the lands of Hoscote confirmed in 1525; these were subject of a letter of 'warrandice' with George, Lord Home in 1535. In 1530 he swore before the widow of Stephen Lauder (who had also held lands at Todrig) that he owed Lauder no more than a merk. In 1533 he was 'in Toddryk' when (along with John there) he witnessed a document relating to a murder at Sundhope. He is probably the William 'in Hardene' who in 1532 acted as an arbitrator for Walter in Headshaw in a dispute with his mother Isabel Murray. In 1535 he was tenant in Todrig when William Lauder (then Laird of Todrig) acted to have him removed. He received the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick in 1540 (finally consigned in 1556). He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he is listed right after Walter of Synton, and his brother David (possibly 'Lady', tenant in Stirches) is right afterwards. 1528 he was one of the Scotts who acted as arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw's dispute with Elizabeth Murray. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with Adam of Burnfoot and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1550 he (and his wife Elizabeth Ker) had a sasine for estates at Todrig. Also in 1550 he is 'in Todrig' when, along with his son and heir Walter, he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Harden with Alexander, Lord Home. He is probably the William 'in Harden' who witnessed a Riddell document of 1551. Also in 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. In 1553 he and his wife were also mentioned in 2 documents of John, 4th Lord Hay of Yester. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. And in 1555/6 he is probably the William in Harden who was summoned by Alexander Lord Home to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive redemption money for Hoscote. He firstly married Mary, daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk (possibly Robert); she was mother of only one child, his successor, Walter, who may have been 'Auld Wat o Harden'. However, there is dispute over these generations, some accounts placing an extra Walter (d.c.1563) between him and 'Auld Wat'. He secondly married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee, possibly a widow of Riddell of that Ilk, perhaps John; Scott of Satchells says that this daughter married his son, which seems to be an error, but presumably a story like that was told to him, and hence may apply to some other family member. With his 2nd wife he had at least 2 sons: Robert of Burnfoot (in Ale Water); and George of Todrig. He probably died at Todrig – 'The Laird and Lady of Harden Betwixt them procreat was a son Called William Boltfoot of Harden – He did survive to be a man' [CWS], 'To tak' the foord he aye was first, Unless the English loons were near; Plunge vassal then, plunge horse and man, Auld Boltfoot rides into the rear' [SWS]. William (16th C.) son of Adam, who lived at Kershope on the Ettrick. In 1533 he complained that Robert of Howpasley and Philip in Dryhope had 'violently stolen' goods from Kershope and he charged John Murray of Kershope with seeking restitution. He is probably the William 'of Kershop' who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1536, relating to the lands of Friarshaw. William (16th C.) recorded being 'in Haining' when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. He may be related to John, who was in Haining in about 1534. William (16th C.) priest mentioned in the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with several other clergymen. Since he is designated 'Mr.', he presumably already had his Masters degree and was a fully qualified priest. But his precise status in Hawick, relative to the other clergymen mentioned in the Charter, is unknown. William (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. William, son of William Scott is also listed as having 11 particates (and could be his son). One of these men is the 'said William' who also held 3 particates of land on the north side of Hawick. William (16th C.) recorded being 'in Hartwoodmyres' among the witness listed in 1539/40 for the instrument of sasine at 'Fawsyde' (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert 'Elwand') purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; Simon, James and Roland are also listed and some may have been closely related. He is probably the Scott in Hartwoodmyres who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Also in 1541 he was 'of Hartvod myris' when he witnessed part of a marriage contract between a son of Robert of Allanhaugh and a daughter of John of Thirlestane. He could be the William recorded in 1542 when he asked Simon Shortreed (Vicar of Ashkirk) to produce 'the evidents of his father' and give sasine of a tenement to him. It seems he is distinct from the contemporary William in Hartwoodburn. In 1562 both he and William in Tushielaw witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley (making it clear that they are different men). However, it is still possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. His son Thomas was also a witness in 1562. Also in 1562 he assigned to his son and heir John his steading of Gamescleuch 'callit Eittriksyde', including a condition to follow the arrangements already made with Simon in Thirlestane; the witnesses included Robert of Howpasley, Adam of Wamphray, William in Tushielaw and William's son Walter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as part of an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill and Alexander Tait of Pirn. John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, stated that he (William) 'inhabited and manured ... le forest steid called Craggischank and received the benefits of the same ... throughout a period of 12 weeks'. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Allanhaugh (16th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded as heir apparent of Robert in Allanhaugh and was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1 along with John, son of Walter of Synton; sureties were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he had remission for associating with his uncle William (then a rebel) and for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull. In 1541 his father infefted him in hie 6 merklands of 'Quhyisester treis' in the Barony of Whitchesters, as part of his marriage contact with Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane. He appears to have succeeded his father in about 1557. In 1557 there are several renters (from Melrose Abbey) of lands in Ringwoodfield who may have been his sons, assuming he was 'the guidman of Alanehauch' at that time. They are: 'Young Robert', who rented Brugh; Simon and John, who rented Stobicote; and Adam 'of Alanehauche', who rented 'Rigwodhat', and was presumably either a son or brother. He was probably succeeded by his son William (or there may have been an additional Robert between). William of Aikwood (16th C.) son of Michael of Aikwood. In about 1529 he and his father gained half the lands of Bowhill from his cousin Isabel Murray. He was younger in Aikwood in 1530 on a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods; John in Aikwood was also listed. In 1540/1 he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down, with his father Michael and brothers Robert and Walter as other witnesses. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Aikwood in 1541. He may also be the William in Bowhill who in 1541 bound himself with others, including 'master' Michael (probably his father) and notary Ninian Brydon; William in Hartwoodburn was a witness. He was succeeded by his brother Robert. Robert's sister Elizabeth (who would then also be his sister) had a marriage contract in 1580. William (16th C.) recorded in Catslack in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk, along with several other Scotts. He was surely related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. William (16th C.) 3rd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 he was designated as the successor to his father's lands of Leap Hill and Langhope. Perhaps the same William was recorded as a 'young man' and in 'Blyndhaucht' in 1561 when he purchased a house and yard in Selkirk. He also witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk in 1561. Bailie William (16th C.) witness to a bond of 1546 for Elliot of Redheugh and others entering several Elliots (of Thorlieshope etc.) as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was described as 'balye of Hawik' and may have been the same as one of the contemporary Williams. Sir William of Balwearie (16th C.) son of Sir William and Janet Lundy. During his father's lifetime he gained the lands of Innertiel and was known as 'of Innertiel'. He married Isabel, daughter of Patrick, 4th Lord Lindsay of the Byres. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle, progenitor of the Scotts of Ancrum; and Catherine, who married Laurence Mercer of Aldie. William (16th C.) recorded as 'Wyllm Skott' in 1548/9, when he was taken prisoner by the English when they burned the Laird of Buccleuch's tower in Hawick. He thus may have been a servant of Scott of Buccleuch. William (16th C.) tenant of Whames, listed in 1549 among the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned by a group of English and Kers. He is probably related to John, who was also in Whames at that time, and another William who was there in 1580. He may be the Scott of Whames (with no forename given) 'descended from the North-house', who is listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. William 'Willie' (16th C.) younger of Branxholme, he supposedly led the raid to avenge 'Jamie Telfer of the fair Dodhead' and was killed in the process. Unfortunately, it seems likely that he never existed. William (16th C.) took sasine for the lands of Colifort in 1550. He was described as being son of the deceased Wat 'of Teviotdale'. He was probably related to Hob, who was convicted of rieving crimes in 1564 and also lived at Colifort. He is probably the 'Wyll of Collefurde', whose son 'Reid Wyllie' witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1585. William (16th C.) described as factor of 'Sanct Columbes Inche', i.e. Inchcolm, in a legal instrument of 1550. The other factor was Lady Methven, and the pair agreed to accept certain amounts of grain from 2 men called Tyre. William (16th C.) described as being 'in Hawick' in 1557. He occupied 'Soltracroft', as well as 'Blakatis ayker', for which he owed rent to Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. His son and heir apparent Robert is also mentioned. In 1565/6 he had another lease of lands from Trinity Collegiate Church, specifically for 'Soltra-croft', 'Blacatis-aker' and 'Campiouncroft'. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. He may be the 'Wilelmum Scot in Hawik' who was on the 'retour' panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1553/4. He may be the Walter 'in Hawik' who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1545, involving Patrick Kelso and his wife Christian Scott; he is probably related to the George in Hawick who bought a tenement in Selkirk from the same Patrick Kelso and Christian Scott. He may have been related to the earlier and later Williams who are also 'in Hawick'. William (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1555/6, in right of his wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Uddart. The duty was paid to the 'Fabric of the Church'. Sir William of Balwearie, Balvey and Innertiel (16th C.) son of Sir William and Isabel Lindsay. He was recorded in a legal instrument in Edinburgh in 1552, along with his son and heir Michael. He married Helen, daughter of Sir William Lauder of Hatton and his children included: Michael, who died before him; and Sir William, who succeeded. William of Bowden (d.bef. 1582) recorded in about 1557 when he rented Northhouse from Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Probably the same William 'of Bolden' was listed in 1553/4 among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was deceased in 1582 when his son Walter witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme. William (d.bef. 1561) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1561 his son and heir George paid entry to Patrick Murray for his lands. This was with the assistance of his friend Walter. In 1562 his son George (and George's wife Janet Veitch) paid additional entry money to Walter and Walter's son Walter. William of Chapelhill (16th C.). His daughter Ann married Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He was surely related (perhaps father) to Walter of Chapelhill, who was listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. William 'of Gluk' (16th C.) probably 'of Glack', he was witness to a 1556 document relating to Nether Harden. His brother John was also a witness. He was surely closely related to the later William of Glack, or perhaps even the same man. William (16th C.) became a cutler Burgess of Edinburgh in 1562, in right of his wife, Dorothie, daughter of smith John Walter. William (16th C.) became a merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1565, by right of Bailie William Paterson, 'who is souertie for stob and staik'. William 'Will' (16th C.) recorded in 'Montbernger' in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He acted as surety for 2 Elliots who had previously been entered before the Council. He was also listed in 1581, among a large group of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1581 he witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. He is listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. In 1590/1 he was William 'in Montberneger Wester' when John Hay of Smithfield acted as his surety. He was in 'Wester Momberngear' in 1592 when James Lawson of 'Carnmure' was his surety for not resetting those who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is likely he was the same as another contemporary William. He could be the same as William of Montbenger, whose son Robert was appointed as tutor to his brother James of Newholme's grandchildren. William 'in Hawick' (16th C.) referred to by Scott of Satchells as 'William in the Mott' when listed among the 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. He was apparently a brother of a Walter Scott of Harden (probably 'Auld Wat o Harden') and was son of either Walter of Harden (who died c.1563) or of William, 1st Laird of Harden. He held lands beyond the West-Port in Hawick (presumably named for proximity to the Mote), these being given to him for his service to Buccleuch (according to Satchells). He was living in 1591. He was probably the brother of Walter of Harden listed (along with his brother) among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. He may be the brother of Walter of Harden listed among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. Scott of Rodono suggests that the earlier Scotts of Todrig were descended from him. It is possible that the same William 'in Hawik' was involved in a precept of 'clare constat' and gave the associated instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas inheriting the lands of Crook from his father William Douglas in 1592; he was acting as Baillie for the Lordship of Melrose, i.e. the agent for the Commendator of Melrose, James Douglas of Lochleven. He should not be confused with William Graham, 'William of the Mote', a prominent Englishman of the same time, who lived at Liddel Mote. William (d.1579) probably a resident of Edinburgh. Along with a man called Turnbull, a schoolmaster in Edinburgh, he was executed for composing 'rhyming libels' about the death of John Stewart, 4th Earl of Atholl. These supported the rumours that Atholl had been poisoned at Stirling by the Earl of Morton (James Douglas). They were executed at Stirling. William (16th C.) brother of Robert of Raesknowe. In 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his brother Robert was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.bef. 1582) tenant in 'Braidle' (probably Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish) recorder in 1581/2 when his son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Probably the same William 'in Braidlie' was recorded in 1606 when his son and heir George was involved in a land dispute in Selkirk. William of Deloraine 'Cut at the Black' (16th C.) listed as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. He was said to be a brother of Scott of Haining, a branch that was descended from Hassendean, and he himself was the progenitor of the Scotts of 'Scotstarbet and Elie, now called Ardross'. William of Tushielaw (16th C.) probably son of Adam 'King of Thieves' (although Satchells suggests there is a Robert in an intervening generation). He could be the William listed as a son of Adam of Tushielaw in the 1526 remission for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran; the sons listed are Robert, John and William (in that order), and so it is also possible that Robert was the eldest son of Adam and that he (William) succeeded his older brother, or could alternatively have been Robert's son (consistent with Satchells' version). He could be the William 'in Tussilaw' who witnessed a transaction for Elizabeth Gledstains in Selkirk in 1533. It seems likely he is the tenant in Tushielaw and Cowanlaw recorded in 1541, who may also have occupied Mount Common ('alias Deiphope'), as well as Cacrabank (along with his mother, who may therefore have been the widow of Adam). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was 'in Tuschelawe' in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley. Also in 1562 he and his son Walter witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. He acted as surety for William Cranston of that Ilk in 1563, along with his son and heir apparent, Walter. Also in that year he was accused by the Queen's Advocate of theft and reset from Robert Elliot of 'Bellelie'. He was also fined for the noncompliance of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill for similar crimes. He and his son Walter took sheep from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot; in 1563/4 they were ordered by the Privy Council to replace the stolen sheep. In 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several men (including Scotts) of sheep-stealing and another that dealt with the murder of David of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may have married Grizel, daughter of Robert of Thirlestane (although that could be Walter, his grandson, unless there were 2 similar marriages). In 1573 his son 'Wat in Hartwodmyris' was to present William Porteous 'in Borthuikbra' for trial in Edinburgh and he himself entered the Littles of Tushielaw Mill and others. In 1574 he witnessed a discharge between the Douglases of Cavers and the Cranstons of that Ilk. In 1580 he and Sir Walter of Birkenside appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton's claim on lands in 'Ilistoun'. In 1581 he and Robert of Aikwood were the 'byndaris' in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain; his son Walter in Hartwoodmyres was also mentioned. He is probably the William listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1582 he is recorded as having witnessed the delivery of some documents by William and David (sons of Adam of Allanhaugh) to Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the 'Scot of Tuschelaw' listed in Monipennie's c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border lairds. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; William of Midgehope (ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill); James of Hundleshope; and John, who killed the father of John Govane of Cardrono. William (d.c.1564) tenant in Leith whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1564. It is possible ne was the 'Mr.' William who in 1558 had an instrument resigning his lands in Leith Wynd and arranging renunciation of some financial obligations. William (d.c.1567) described as servitor to Cuthbert Ramsay, Burgess of Edinburgh, when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1567. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. The will of his wife Helen Udwart was registered in Edinburgh in 1565/6. William (16th C.) younger son of Sir John of Thirlestane. He was recorded as brother-german of Robert of Thirlestane in 1567 when he witnessed the marriage conract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. He could be the 'Wylle of Thirlstane' who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. William (d.c.1572) maltman at the West Port in Edinburgh. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1572/3. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. He is recorded as William, son of Walter of 'Eidshaw' when warded in 1571. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, suggesting that he had been suspected of being a supporter of the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the 'Williame Scott of Eidschaw' recorded in 1571/2 when he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. Sir William of Balwearie (16th/17th C.) son of Sir William and Helen Lauder. He served as surety for the Elliots in the register of the Privy Council on two occasions in 1573. He claimed in 1573 that he had not received John Elliot of the Park, and had a bond with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He married Janet, daughter of John Lindsay of Dowhill and was succeeded by his son Sir James. Other children probably included: Margaret, who married John Melville of Raith; Barbara, who married Thomas Fothringham of Pourie; Robert; George; and Agnes. He is probably the Sir William of Balwearie whose wills are recorded in Edinburgh in 1575/6 and 1578. William (16th C.) described as 'in Harden' in 1574 when, along with James 'in Quhitslaid', he paid back a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot to Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside. The same year they also paid back a loan to Sir Walter of Branxholme for lands at Easter Craik and also in Ettrick. He was presumably tenant farmer of lands at Harden, perhaps related to the Scotts of Harden themselves. Probably the same William in Harden had his will recorded in Edinburgh in 1575. William (d.bef. 1580) Burgess in Selkirk. In 1580 his widow Marion Gledstains was recorded as 'conjunct feuar' of half a croft of land in Selkirk. Alexander Gledstains, elder, was one of the witnesses. Also in 1580 his widow Marion Gledstains was listed among those who owed money to Janet Gledstains. William (d.c.1580) described being 'in Lumbanye' in Abernethy Parish when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1580. William of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his widow Margaret Scott resigned some liferents to their son William. His lands were probably Burnfoot on Ale, but is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot. His wife resigned her rights of lifrent in 'Scheilliswod with half the miln called Burnefuytmilne with pertinents' in Ashkirk, which seems to confirm that this is Burnfoot on Ale. His wife had by then remarried, to Walter in Palace. A number of cautioners were appointed, who lived at Eddenside, Burnfoot and nearby places. William of Flex (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Rough-hope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. William (16th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. In 1581/2 there was a dispute with another Bailie over whether a man had been apprehended and put in the tolbooth. William 'Will' (16th C.) 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. According to Scott of Satchells he was the 2nd son of Walter, with his older brother being Robert of Whitslade and his younger brothers being James of Satchells and Thomas of Whitehaughbrae; however, this seems to be confusing generations. In 1550 he had a 'tack' for the lands of Langhope. He was described as William in Huntly when listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1580 he was 'in Huntlie' when he and his brother George in Synton gave their consent for Robert, son of their deceased brother James in Whitslade, to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Robert in Aikwood (this confirms that these 3 men were brothers, and hence all sons of John, younger of Synton). Additionally in 1580 he was meant to pay certain amounts to the 5 children of the deceased John of Blindhaugh; David Fairlie took the bond to stand as cautioner for him. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He was also in Huntly in 1581 when (along with George of Synton, Walter of Goldielands, Robert of Haining and others) witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son, also William. Furthermore, in 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and William Scott in Burnfoot, with the dowry being 400 merks, while his daughter received liferent of Shielswood. And in 1581 he agreed to take Marion Scott (daughter of the deceased John in Blindhaugh) into his household (suggesting that he may have been a close relation). He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the William 'in Huntly' who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589 (and was also mentioned 'in Huntlie' in a case involving theft of a horse by neighbours in Hutlerburn). He was listed as 'Will Scott of Huntlie' on the roll of landed men of Scotland in about 1590 and was on an inquest in 1592. He was probably ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly, being succeeded by Robert of Huntly, who was at the Carlisle raid in 1596. William (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as 'alias William with the teyth', presumably referring either to his teeth or to a tythe. John Sinton stated that he had stolen 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning's house that belonged to '[blank] Coltarte'. The instrument was witnessed at the house of William, younger Burgess of Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as son of John 'late in Quhomes' (i.e. Whames) 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. He was probably related to (or perhaps even the same as) the William recorded as tenant in Whames in 1549. William 'Will' of Allanhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Robert of Allanhaugh recorded in the Register of the Privy Council for 1581. He was recorded as 'Willie of Allanehauch' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, where he is assigned 'the Kirkland, his awne rowme'. He may be the 'Williame Scot in Alanehaucht, now duelland in Hawik' who was mentioned in 1581 (along with Robert of Allanhaugh) as one of the men forgiven for the murder of Hawick resident George Scott 3 years earlier. Also in 1581 he was 'Will of Alanehaucht burgess of Hawik' when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; Robert of Raesknowe and Robert's brother William were also witnesses. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was on an Inquest of Service in 1592. He was signatory (along with Roger Langlands of that Ilk and Allan Deans in Hawick) of a bond of 1594/5 drawn up by James Gledstains of Cocklaw and involving local Turnbulls and Elliots; he is there referred to as 'callit of Allanhauch', suggesting that he no longer held the lands there. He may have been father of Walter 'in Allanmouth' and his brother John, who are recorded in the early 1600s. Either he or a brother of his was probably on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. William of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1585) son of Adam. He probably died before his father and was succeeded by his son Robert. Note that this is Burnfoot on Teviot. William of Chamberlain Newton (16th C.) listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Chamberlain Newton. William (16th C.) brother to 'Scot of Hassinden', as well as brother of Philip. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time. William 'Reid Wullie' (16th C.) son of Will of Colliford. He is recorded in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is listed as 'William Scot, sone to Wyll of Collefurde, callit Reid Wyllie'; it is a little unclear whether the nickname referred to him or his father (who is recorded in 1550). William (d.bef. 1583) smith in Edinburgh. He was already deceased in 1583 when his eldest son James became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother in Edinburgh. He could be the smith William who became a Guild Brother in 1538, with his fee going to 'the Fabric of the Church'. William 'Stand-in-the-rain' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'callit Stand in the Rayne', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. One can imagine how he got his nickname. William 'Will', 'Minedirt' (16th C.) recorded on a list of Borderers accused of crimes in 1586/7. His name appears as 'Will Scott, callit Mynedirt', with the meaning of his nickname being unclear. William (16th C.) brother of 'Braid's Andrew'. The pair were included in a long list of men from the Borderers who had absented themselves from court, but were given one last opportunity in 1586/7 to find cautioners. Probably the same man was 'Willie Scott, called the Braid's Will' recorded in 1587/8 among Elliots and Armstrongs (probably from Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. William (16th C.) tenant in Kirkhope. The will of his wife Jane Scott was recorded in Edinburgh in 1581/2; she was described as 'sometime spouse' to him. He presumably lived at Kirkhope near Selkirk. William (d.c.1591) described being 'in Cottartoun of Gourdie' in Angus when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1591. William (d.c.1594) tenant in Haughhead in Eckford Parish. In 1588 he had a feu charter for 'my lands if Hauchheid' from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh. This gave him rights to the mills, rivers, fishing, dovecotes, etc. In 1594 his son Mark had a 'precept of clare constat' as his heir in the same lands (which would later be held by the Halls). He may be a descendant of Walter, recorded being 'in the Haucheid' in 1526. It is unclear how he might be related to other Scotts. William (d.bef. 1595) resident of the Edinburgh area. He was already deceased in 1595 when his son Robert became a saddler's apprentice in Edinburgh. William 'Little William' (16th/17th C.) resident of Selkirk recorded in 1590. He was 'called Litle Williame' on a list of men promising not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. 'Litle James', Burgess in Selkirk, was also listed and perhaps related. William of Todshawhaugh (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being 'of Totchahaugh' and among the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch. He was said to be descended from Scott of Borthaugh. He was surely related to Adam of Todshawhaugh and his son Walter, recorded in 1594. He may be the William 'alias callit Wille of Todschawhauch' who was recorded as a resident of Whames in 1549; at that time Walter was tenant of Todshawhaugh, and so probably related. William of Abbotshall (d.c.1600) probably son of Thomas. In 1595 he made an agreement with his cousin Sir James of Balwearie that his own son James would inherit the Scott lands of Balwearie, Innerteil, Strathmiglo and Glendock if Sir James' line were to fail. He infefted someone in lands in Pittenweem in 1598. He was described being 'of Abbotishall, par. of Kirkcaldy' when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1600. His son James was served as his heir in 1606. William of Glack (16th/17th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Glack. He was brother of John, portioner in Hundleshope, and hence was either son of James of Hundleshope or perhaps Sir Robert of Eskdale and Thirlestane. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1585 he was 'of Glak' when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He may be the Laird of 'Glak' who was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council and who was listed among several Border Scotts in the 'Roll of the Clans' of 1590. He was probably the William 'in Clack' stated by Scott of Satchells to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1596/7 he was 'in Glak' when part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked ploughmen from Peebles; they were denounced as rebels for not appearing. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with his brother James 'in Jedwartfeild' and Arthur of Gamescleuch. In 1599 he was 'in Glak' when James of Bowhill was cautioner for him not to harm the provost, bailies, council and community of Peebles. Also in 1599 his brother Thomas was recorded among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He was 'in Glak' when among the men listed (along with Walter of Headshaw) whom Sir Robert of Thirlestane was bound not to reset in 1609. This was part of the dispute between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Probably the same William 'of Glak' was cautioner for his brother John of Hundleshope in 1618, promising that John would not molest the Moffats of Granton. William (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother David acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and David among 200 Scotts and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Dreva. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. William (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1557 he was 'Vil Scot of Migerhoup' when he paid rental for Fawhope to the monks of Melrose. However, there is some confusion, since he was presumably the William 'in Megehop, son of the deceased Wat Scott' who occupied lands in Ettrick and Rodono in 1556. He may also have been called 'Will' of Hartwoodmyres (although there is possible confusion with his son here). He was succeeded by his son William, who was at the rescue of 'Kinmont Willie'. William 'Will' of Hartwoodmyres (16th/17th C.) listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' of about 1590. He is probably the William 'in Hartwodmyris' who in 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts, perhaps including Walter in Hartwoodmyres (son of William of Tushielaw), who was also listed. In 1592 Gideon Murray of Glenpyet was surety for him 'to answer for all attemptattis committed or to be committed by himself and those for whom he is liable'. In about 1593 he and Walter of Stirkshaws were under caution, with Gideon Murray as surety. He was also said to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was in 1599 listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was denounced as a rebel for not paying £14 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He may have been son of William of Tushielaw, and therefore the same as William of Midgehope (this is unclear, although a close connection with the Scotts of Tushielaw seems clear). He was probably succeeded by Robert. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Midgehope and grandson of William of Tushielaw. He was said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, with Scott of Satchells describing him as 'Grandsir to this Laird of Horslyhill'. He was succeeded by his son Robert, Bailie of Hawick. William of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1592 when his cautioner was James Stewart of Tinnis. This was among a long list of conditions imposed by the King following the Falkland Raid. He was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands at 'Fechane' in 1602; his brother Thomas was also mentioned, as were Scotts of Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. Also in 1602 Sir John Murray of Ettleston and Gideon Murray of Elibank were ordered to remove him from the lands of 'Feithane. In 1603 he and his brother attacked the same lands again, having been declared rebels. William of Howpasley (16th/17th C.) succeeded Walter, who was probably his father. In 1595 he, along with John Rutherford of Hunthill and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were 'put to the horn' for failing to pay to the Sheriff their 'blench ferms and castle-wards'; in 1599 there was a complaint about the Sheriff (James Douglas of Cavers) for not prosecuting the men. In 1599 he is probably the Scott of Howpasley who was surety for himself, his son John and Walter of Ladhope. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He is on a list of several Scotts and others who the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) tried to oust from their lands in 1603. In 1605 Alexander Scott ('Lang Sandy') discharged him from his obligation in the annual rent of the lands of Wark. There was a 'horning' of 1607 requiring him to remove from 'Longhauch, Ramseclewis, Diksone's Reid, Howpaisley and Schawis' by the superior of the lands, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was followed by an action in 1610 against him and James Gledstains for not paying taxes on some of the same lands. He may have been the husband of Lady Howpasley who instigated the slaughter of sheep there in 1615 (in which case he was already deceased). In 1620 the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained to the Privy Council that money was still owed for furnishing him (the deceased William) with food and drink during his several years in prison; Walter, Earl of Buccleuch and John of Synton had at that point still not paid the minimum 900 merks promised (out of an estimated total bill of 2600 merks). Howpasley is said to have passed to Robert and Walter (cousins of Patrick of Tanlawhill) and then to the Scotts of Thirlestane and later the Scotts of Crumhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1596, as eldest son of the deceased Nichol. William (16th/17th C.) son of James 'in Hawick'. In 1595 he became a skinner's apprentice with Samuel Wilson in Edinburgh. William (16th/17th C.) referred to as 'called of the Know' in 1608. Along with his brother Robert, Bailie of Hawick, and their surety James Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, they appeared for themselves and for their brothers George and David, with a bond not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick. It is unclear what the nature of the dispute was, but the minister left 2 years later. It is also unclear whethere this 'Know' was the one at Teviothead, in Hassendean, perhaps at the

Tower Knowe, or elsewhere. There were also several Bailie Roberts around that time, and it is unclear which one this is. William (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and brother of Robert of Haining. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother of Robert of Haining witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he witnessed 2 agreements between his brother Robert of Haining and his wife, Dame Janet of Haining. In 1581 he witnessed a transaciton for his brother Robert of Haining. He was listed among the members of the rescue party for Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1608 he was part of a gang of Scotts who freed 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull) from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. It is possible that he was the same as William of Deloraine, supposed to be a brother of Scott of Haining. It is also possible he was the William in Haining who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581, invovlving Robert of Haining. He is probably also the William in Haining who in 1581 witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He is recorded as 'Willie Scott, man to Young Wauchop', meaning he was probable a servant of Thomas Turnbull, younger of Wauchope. William (16th/17th C.) servant of Sir James Ker of Crailinghall. In 1628 his son James became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Huntly. In 1608 he was one of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. Perhaps he was the 'Will Scott of Huntlie' who was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace' in 1599. Perhaps the same William 'of Huntley' was in 1603 among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. William (16th/17th C.) nephew of Walter, tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh had not payed him following being found guilty of charges 2 years earlier. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) elder son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Janet Scott of Headshaw. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his younger brother Walter, who sold the family lands. It is possible he is the William who was 'tacksman' of the Parsonage of Wilton in 1568–69 and jointly with James Langlands in 1570–72. In 1580 he signed a bond with Walter of Headshaw, who assigned to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called 'the Pleucht Tylth', along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton; Walter of Stirches was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stirches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. He may be the same William of Whitehaugh recorded in 1612 and 1619, but this is unclear. William (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood. He was brother of Walter of Bowhill, as well as James and Walter. He was tenant in 'Scotstaines' or 'Schostanis' (although it is unclear where this is). Scott of Satchells lists him among those who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1596/7 as 'in Brokhill' when he was part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked some ploughmen of Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. In 1599 he and his brother Walter of (North) Bowhill were among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Robert, Walter and James, together with John 'in Quholplaw' were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of 'Wowmet' (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). In 1602 he assisted the Scotts of Bonnington in the eviction of the Vietches from Fechane. In 1608 when he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly took 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and John Turnbull, his half-brother) from confinement by the Selkirk Bailies; his brother James was also part of the gang. He may be the 'tutor of Bowhill' listed among Scotts and others accused in 1612 by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. He may be the William of Bowhill whose son Andrew was infefted in the lands of 'Crocecant'. He may also be the William 'callit of Bowhill' who in about 1618 was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest; his son Andrew was also listed. He may also be the William 'in Bowhill' who was pursued at the Privy Council for non-payment in 1620. William 'Muckle Willie' (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to a bond of 'manrent', signed in 1595 in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branxholme. His name (unfortunate by modern standards) is given as 'William Scot callit Mekill Willy'. Given the status of the other witnesses, it seems likely he was a prominent Scott, and hence probably the same as another William. William (16th/17th C.) son of James in Hawick. In 1595 he became an apprentice skinner with Samuel Wilson in Edinburgh. William 'Will' of Northhouse (16th/17th C.) mentioned along with his brother Walter and others in 1608. A complaint was made against them by Jean Scott, widow of Gavin Eliott of Stobs and his female heirs, stating that the Scotts had taken 'all the evidents and writs', threatening to burn them if their demands were not met. He failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Presumably this was related to a dispute over lands, but the details are not recorded. In 1610 Gilbert Eliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that he was attacked by him and his brother Hob in Hawick, with drawn swords, and they would have killed him if not for some of the inhabitants of the Town. He may be the William, son of the deceased George in Northhouse, who in 1582 witnessed a transaction at Branxholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'in Harden' in 1612 when he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of overrcharging interest on loans. However, his name is omitted from the list of those who were charged. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Harden at that time, but it seems unlikely he was the same man as William, younger of Harden, who was already well established at that time. William (16th/17th C.) son of John of Newark. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother James for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Fastheugh who was an associate of John of Newark. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was charged with apprehending him and John of Newark for their 'unrelaxed' horning. It is possible he is the same man as William in Fasteheugh, but seems to be distinct. William of Roberton (d.1622) son of John, who was probably in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie. In 1610 he was served heir to his father's lands of Roberton and Howcleuch. He was succeeded by his son James, last of Roberton. William of Burnfoot on Ale (d.c.1622) probably descended from the Scotts of Harden. Keith Scott suggests he was son of Robert; however, he may be the William, son of William, who in 1581 was given the lifrent of his widowed mother's lands of Shielswood and Burnfoot Mill for a payment of 350 merks and a quantity of lime. He then leased his lands of Shielswood to Walter of Todrig for a period of 5 years. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, with the dowry being 400 merks, while his wife received liferent of Shielswood. In a separate transaction he gave his future wife 'half his miln called Burnefuyt Mylne with multures, suckens and knaifships in liferent'. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He was listed being 'of Burnefute' along with Robert 'alias Rob Scott of Burnefute' among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. He was among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. He was witness to Walter Scott of Stirches as heir to his father in 1592. He was said to have been at the Rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed ('with our handis at the pen') a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He had a confirming charter of the lands of Burnfoot and Wester Essenside in Ale Water in 1609. He may be the William 'called of Burnfute' who in 1610 was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. He may be the 'Walter' (if the name was given incorrectly) of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond in 1604 by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) for '6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient's life' for his faithful service, to be given once Francis regained the King's favour and returned from exile (which never happened). In 1612 the Privy Council records a complaint by the Earl's sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick, against him and his brothers Walter and Robert, stating that 'ather of the saidis partyis lyis at avait [await] to tak theair advantage of utheris' and should appear before the Council. He was described as 'in Burnfute in the Water of Aill' when he (along with several other Scotts) signed the bond of 1612 to keep the peace on the Border. In 1617 he was 'in Burnefute' among several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is also mentioned in the

Circuit Court records of 1622 in a bond of security for 'Geordie Jonsoune of Eschinsyd'. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter. William of Fingland (d.c.1610) son of Robert of Thirlestane and younger brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Walter of Gamescleuch (who was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw). He may be the William of Thirlestane who is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He probably took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was included in the list of Scotts and others who the Scotts of Thirlestane and their tenants were bound not to reset in 1609; this was part of the family feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. His son Simon (possibly illegitimate) is also listed. Other children included Walter and Robert, neither of whom had male issue (but both of whom held the lands of Howpasley). In 1610 he was ordered to pay £10 for the non-appearance of his kin in relation to the assurance against the Scotts of Tushielaw. He must have died soon afterwards, since his son Simon is described as son of the 'late William Scott, who was brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane' later in 1610. Either he, or a closely related William, also received the lands of Merrylaw. He had 2 daughters, one of whom, 'Mariota' (probably Marion) was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley in 1662. William 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Branxholme' in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case on the death of John Elliot 'in Redden' while in custody in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. William 'Willie' of Satchells (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Jean and Robert of Satchells, or otherwise a close relative. One possibility is that he was from an earlier generation, e.g. brother of Robert of Satchells (and hence Catp. Walter's uncle). He was one of the men accused of involvement in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley in 1615. He is described as both 'callit in Satchellis' and 'callit of Satscheillis', so it is uncertain whether he was Laird or tenant. It also seems likely that he was related to Capt. Walter of Satchells (possibly his brother) and the Robert described as heir apparent to Satchells in 1622–25. He rode out from Hawick with 'Marion's Geordie', meeting Jock Scott 'the Suckler' at the foot of the Eilrig Burn, and there he was 'muffellit' (i.e. disguised), before they proceeded to kill or maim 60 sheep. He did not undergo trial in 1616 along with 'Marion's Geordie' Scott and Wattie and Ingram Scott, perhaps simply because he was not captured, but disappeared to 'the North'. William (16th/17th C.) listed by Satchells as being 'in Lies' (i.e. Lees) among the 'pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He was referred to as 'alias Milma' (probably the same as Moormaw), and he was also called 'of Catslac-Know' and descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He is probably the same man as the William 'in Catslak' who in 1607 was served heir to his great-grandfather's brother, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, in the lands of Easter Moormaw; this connects him to many others Scotts, even if the precise connections are unclear. He appears to have had a decrete against Robert of Burnhead and others for money relating to 'eister ...' [possibly Moorwaw] in 1607. He may be the William 'of Slak' who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1620 by Alexander Stewart of Phaup, apparently demanding the imprisonment of Alexander Stewart until he produced another Stewart; Andrew, surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh appeared for him to answer the complaint and caution was set for him, Walter (also in 'Slak'), Andrew, Burgess of Edinburgh, Adam, brother to Walter, and their wives and families. Also in 1620 William in Catslack complained that Walter's house he was attacked by the Stewarts from Phaup. The Stewarts complained that he and Walter set upon Alexander Stewart, giving him 2 wounds in his side and then harassed him daily with pistols; he made a counter claim that Stewart struck him, while Stewart complained he had benn wrongfully declared a rebel for non-appearance, since he was too injured to attend. In 1621 he was 'of Catslak' when, along with his father-in-law Andrew of Salenside, complained that after Alexander Stewart was released from imprisonment he resumed his attacks, wounding Andrew outside Selkirk. An earlier 'William of Leis' (with no surname given), who witnessed a sasine for William, Lord Borthwick in 1461, may have been related. He was surely related to the later Walter in Catslack, who was father of James, minister at Kirkton and Ancrum (Keith Scott suggests he was brother of Rev. James, and hence son of Walter, but there is no evidence for this). Sir William of Elie, Ardross and Grangemuir (1545/6–1628) son of John of Orchardfield and Elizabeth, who came from the Scotts of Balwearie. He was Director of Chancery in 1592 and served as Clerk of Session. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Hamilton of Priestfield and later married Isabel, daughter of David Durie of Durie and thirdly Jean, daughter of Sir John

Skene. His children included: John; James, who was Clerk of the Exchequer; Janet, who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Dishington of Ardross; William; Isabella; Sir William (again), who married Helen, daughter of Robert Lindsay, Lord of the Byres; Helen, who married William Stewart, 2nd Lord Blantyre; and Eupheme, who married Sir William Cochrane, Earl of Dundonald. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He is recorded in 1619 in a 'letter of inhibition' brought by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. This may be an error, since Robert was the son and heir of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. It is possible he is the same as the contemporary William of Hartwoodmyres (which had been an earlier possession of Walter of Tushielaw). It is also possible that he was the same as William in Phaup, whose son Andrew in Broadmeadows is recorded in 1627. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He was also recorded as 'fiar of Quhithauch' when he was witness in Hawick in 1619 to a bond by Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton. He may be the William of Whitehaugh mentioned by Scott of Satchells as being brother of Thomas in Wester Groundistone, son of Walter of Whitehaugh and father of Adam. However, this is uncertain, since William, son of Walter of Whitehaugh must surely have been dead by this time, with the estate probably by then in the hands of his brother Walter of Whitehaugh or Robert of Headshaw. On the other hand, he may be the William 'callit of Quhitslaw' (possibly mistranscribed) who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He may be the also John 'in Quhithauch' recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when accused of hurting Gilbert Helm. William of Howford (d.bef. 1621) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably son of Robert. He is recorded as being 'of Howfoord' in 1607. He was succeeded by his son Walter. William of Burnhead (d.c.1640) eldest son of Robert of Burnhead (or alternatively suggested to be 3rd son of Robert of Burnfoot). He may have been tenant of Burnhead, rather than Laird. His brother Adam married Bessie Langlands, daughter of John, the minister of Wilton. He is said to have served in Holland in the Scotch Brigade, during his father's lifetime. Douglas' 'Baronage' states that he 'was an officer in Holland, and served under the brave Walter Scott, Lord Buccleuch, against the Spaniards in the year 1604, when that cohort of Scots performed many glorious actions against their enemies'. He married Margaret, daughter of Nicol Cairncross of Hislop or Calfhill and had an only son and heir, Robert. William (16th/17th C.) described as 'Will Scott in Weyms' in Rulewater (presumably Weens) when John Young was accused of stealing some of his sheep at the 1622 Circuit Court. He could be the William 'dweller in Weyndis' who witnessed the 1607 sasine for John Scott gaining the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir apparent of Walter of Todrig. However, in about 1630 his father sold the lands of Todrig to another branch of the Scotts. He may be the Walter recorded along with William in a case in 1620 regarding the imprisonment of a man from Old Melrose. He married Isabella Livingston and had a son Walter. William of Dryhope (16th/17th C.) son of Philip of Dryhope. He was recorded in 1612 when Robert Horsburgh complained to the Privy Council that he and another 10 or so men came to his house in Peebles struck him and pursued him. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Philip when listed among Scotts and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He is also recorded as 'lawful son' of Philip of Dryhope in a charter of 1618. He probably succeeded his father Philip, and was succeeded by Robert, possibly his son. He is recorded in a 'letter of poinding' in 1628, with Samuel Cockburn of Henderland as his cautioner. He was succeeded by Robert, probably his son, who was in turn succeeded by Walter, who may have also have been his son (hence Robert's younger brother), and then Philip, the last Laird, may have been his son too. William 'Young Gillie' (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. When produced by the Bailie before the Privy Council in Edinburgh he was charged 200 merks caution, in order to appear again if required; presumably this means he was not sent off to the wars. The caution was paid by John Short, skinner and Burgess of Edinburgh (who probably had some connection with Hawick); he is referred to there as 'son to Robert Scott, late bailie of Hawik', although there are several possibilities for which Robert this was. It is unclear what his nickname meant. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.c.1638) brother of John of Brieryyards. In 1638 his brother was appointed as tutor to his son Walter, by which time he was already deceased. He was probably father of the William, nephew of John Brieryyards, who is recorded in 1633 and 1637. He is presumably related to other Scotts of Chamberlain Newton, e.g. the William recorded in 1581. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1643) son of William and nephew of John of Brieryyards. In 1633 (and again in 1637) he was served heir to his father's brother in the lands of Brieryyards and 'Braidleyis' in the Barony of Hassendean; these were 100-shilling lands of old extent, and included a mill. He may be the Scott, 'liferenter of Newtoun' who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter 'Mariota' was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiels (and of Bewlie), probably in the 1650s. William (16th/17th C.) smith in Hawick, recorded in 1628. He was listed among Scotts of Midshiels and Burnfoot who were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His brother Adam was also listed, but otherwise there is no clear connection with any other Scotts. William (16th/17th C.) Bailie in Selkrik, who is recorded in 1630 being 'of Pellaris' or 'Pillaris'. He gave sasine for a tenement there. Probably the same William 'in Pittaris' signed the bond among Border Lairds in 1617. In 1621 he was on a list of Selkirk men who James Mitchellhill claimed had assaulted him and destroyed his crops. William (d.c.1647) son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In 1621, along with his brother Gideon and his mother Bessie Naysmith, there was a complaint about the murderers of his father (2 Elphinstones) still being at large. Along with John and Robert, probably his brothers, he wrote a copy book, which exists in the National Library of Scotland and was described by J.A.H. Murray in the Archæological Society Transactions in 1861 and in 'Leisure Hour' in 1870. In 1647 his immediate elder brother Adam was served as his heir, implying that he had no children to succeed him. John of Gilmanscleuch was probably also his brother. He may well be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Mangerton (d.c.1649) local landowner of the mid-1600s. He was an illegitimate younger son of Walter, the 1st Earl of Buccleuch, and assumed the title of Laird of Mangerton on the death of his brother Francis in about 1640. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will. He was also owed rental for the lands of Tinnis in the inventory of the deceased Earl. In 1643 he was listed as owner of lands in Cavers Parish, which were later acquired by the Buccleuch estates, with a value of £1000; he also held land in Castleton Parish valued at £1800 (including Thorlieshope, which was later sold). In 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and again in 1649 for Selkirkshire. In 1643 and 1644 he was described as 'in Newark', suggesting that he lived there rather than at Mangerton (or perhaps that he was related to the Scotts in Newark). He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for 'the Forest' (i.e. St. Mary's Parish) in the period 1640–48. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He married Elizabeth, a daughter of Sir Archibald Murray, 1st Baronet of Blackbarony. He granted the lands of Mangerton to his eldest son Francis in 1648 (but Francis was probably a minor at this time). His daughter Elizabeth married John, eldest son of Patrick Scott of Langshaw. His widow Elizabeth submitted the accounts for Ettrick Forest to the Earl of Buccleuch for the year 1648–9. She was probably also the 'Lady Mangerstowne' recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (although perhaps really dating from earlier), paying about £1750 for 'towrefeild', 'towre' and other lands in Castleton, as well as £260 for lands in Cavers Parish and £2440 in Wilton Parish; these entries were listed under Hawick Parish, and were probably associated with the Scotts of Buccleuch. William of Salenside (d.bef. 1653) also referred to as 'in Salenside' in 1632. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Robert and was probably son of Thomas of Salenside, who died around 1636. His father granted him possession of Salenside during his lifetime (while his brother held Whitehaughbrae), but the properties were later sold to Sir William of Harden. He is mentioned several times in the period 1636–43. He is recorded in the Ashkirk Parish records as one of the Lairds helping to collect money for plague victims in 1648. He married Elizabeth Hay, who was the widow of Walter Scott, 2nd son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden (who was murdered). His eldest son was James, who raised an action against his step-sisters. Another son was Thomas. William (17th C.) son to John, Burgess of Hawick. His father was already deceased in 1634 when he became an apprentice with wright Andrew Hastie in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their children included John (b.1636), James (b.1639), Margaret (b.1642), Walter (b.1645), William (b.1652) and Robert (b.1655). The witnesses in 1639 were Robert (perhaps a relative) and Adam Murray. William 'at the Cross' (17th C.) one of the signatories of the Covenant in 1638. There is some confusion here, since there was also apparently a separate Bailie of the same name. Yet he was reelected as Bailie in 1638, when he is referred to as 'at the Croce'. He was also the William who was Bailie in 1640 when the 'Act of Bailies and Council' was signed (although a separate William, Councillor at that time, also signed). He presumably lived near the Mercat Cross. He was elected to the Council in late 1648. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He was distinct from the Bailie at that time, who had the same name. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Margaret Riddell and in 1640 their daughter Helen was born, with George Scott and Andrew Riddell as witnesses. William (17th C.) tenant at Headshaw Mill. In 1640 he was accused by the Kirk Session of Ashkirk of carryng a sack of meal on his horse on Sunday. At about the same time he was 'Wm. Scott, Headshawmill, elder' when he was removed from his eldership in Ashkirk Kirk for 'his squabbling and brawling on ye Sabbathday'. William of Tushielaw (d.c.1663) son of Robert and younger brother of Walter. He may have been related to the earlier William in Fauldshope. In 1624 he was 'in Faldishop' when his son William had a sasine for Broadmeadows from the Murrays of Philiphaugh and in 1627 he was 'in Falishope' when his son William made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He was 'of Fauldishop' in 1633 when he resigned the lands of Broadmeadows in favour of his son Andrew. He succeeded his brother Walter to the Lairdship of Tushielaw in 1643. He was a Burgess of Selkirk and was appointed to the Committee of War in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1648 Andrew of Broadmeadows (who may have been his son) gave a sasine to him and his son William for the lands of Broadmeadows. He was fined in 1662 after the Restoration and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He is said to have married Grizel, daughter of Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this may be confusion with his father Walter or great-grandfather William; she could possibly have been the Grizel recorded paying the land tax for Craighaugh in Dumfriesshire in 1671. His children from his first marriage were: Andrew, who purchased Broadmeadows; and Walter in Cacrabank. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Govane of Cardrono and they had one son, William of Broadmeadows. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £156. These were probably the lands of Wester Clarilaw, which were owned by William Scott of Burnhead later in the 17th century. He was surely related to that branch of the Scotts; however, Robert Scott of Burnhead is seprately recorded in 1643 (as owner of Burnhead, with land having the same value). He may be the same as the later William of Clarilaw, and hence son of Robert of Burnhead. William (17th C.) son of James of Glenrath and grandson of Walter of Tushielaw. He was heir of his brother Walter in the lands of Glenrath. His sisters Betty and Margaret renounced their claims to the lands in his favour in 1638. His son James eventually succeeded to some of Glenrath. Sir William of Harden (d.1655) son of 'Auld Wat', he married 'Muckle Mou'd Meg', whose real name was Agnes Murray of Elibank. In the ballad version he chose to marry Meg (the ugliest of 3 daughters) as an alternative to the gallows, after he was caught raiding her fathers sheep. His marriage contract of 1611 still exists, witnessed at Crichton, East Lothian and saying that they both bind themselves 'be the south and treuth in thair bodies to solemnizat and compleit the haly band of matrimony aither of thame with others'. He also gave her a charter of the rents of Stichill in 1611. In 1606 he received the lands of Tarras. He was Sheriff of Selkirk and also held land in the counties of Dumfries, Selkirk, Berwick and Peebles. In 1610, as 'apparent of Harden', he acted as cautioner for George Langlands of that Ilk in a dispute with Walter in Hawick (called of Todshawhill). He is recorded in a contract for the lands of Harden and Hoscote in 1612, when he was still heir apparent of Harden. He also gained the lands of Kirkhope in the same year. He may have been the 'William of Todrig' recorded in a contract with Kerr of Oxnam about 1614 and another with Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh in 1616 (although these could be an error for 'Walter'). Also in 1616 he witnessed the sale of parts of Hassendean and Horsleyhill by the Earl of Home to Gilbert

Eliott of Stobs. In 1617, along with his father and several supporters, there were complaints against him by Lady Bonnington (whose husband Simon Scott was involved with the murder of his brother Walter), claiming that they had harassed and attacked her family. In 1619 he was stated to be the Lieutenant to the Captain of the Border garrison (Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam). In 1620 he complained about a debt with Walter Stewart of Kirkland. In 1620, along with his father, he had confirming charters for the Harden estates. He also had a charter for the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire, with the superior being Walter Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was probably the William of Harden who had a charter for Langhope in about 1620. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch (essentially holding them in collateral for a loan). In 1625 he was appointed Sheriff Principle of Selkirk. He carried the arms of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in the funeral procession between Branxholme and Hawick in 1634 and was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl's will. Also in 1634 he was one of 2 representatives of the young Earl of Buccleuch who travelled to London to hear the King's decision in an ongoing land dispute with Francis Stewart. He was also appointed as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis, and was one of the trustees for Mary of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1636 he received a long term 'tack' for Aikwood, where he may have resided; he possessed significant lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire to enforce subscription to the 'Confessions of Faith', and he signed it himself in Hawick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Ripon in 1641. He received his knighthood in 1641 and was also in that year appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire. In 1642 he was made (or reappointed) Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament 1643–44 and 1644–46. In 1642 he was served heir to his father in his lands of Over and Nether Cliffhope, Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Wormscleuch and Abbotsike, as well as the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton, lands in Stow and others. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift', and was appointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. He was appointed as a Colonel of the Horses for Roxburgh and Selkirk, i.e. he commanded the cavalry in the Teviotdale Regiment, and was Lieut.-Col. in a regiment of about 1,200 men raised by Buccleuch, which fought at Philiphaugh. In 1643 he was also appointed as a 'commissioner for the establishment of manufactories'. In a 1643 county valuation he was the third largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after Buccleuch and Langlands), his lands valued at £814, and he also held lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £600 (this being Borthwickshiels, which was later in Roberton Parish) and teinds in Lessuden Parish (for Ellieston, valued at £420). Also in 1643 he promised the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshiels to his son Gideon and his future wife Margaret Hamilton. He was also in 1643 served heir to his great-grandfather William of Harden's lands of Hoscote (this clearly establishing him as great-grandson of the first William of Harden). In 1644 he and Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers were commended for organising tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to help repel the Royalist forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, and in 1648 and 1649 also for Roxburghshire. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1647. In 1648 he was appointed along with the Earl of Buccleuch, as well as his son (Sir William) and others to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He bought Mertoun House in around 1649, which would become the principal seat of the Scotts of Harden in the next generation; in 1649 he gave a disposition of the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig to his eldest son Sir William. Also in 1649 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, 'for paines taken in Parliament in the Town's affairs, gratis'. In 1649 he and Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws wrote an account of the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh, which was published in 1908 as part of Walter MacFarlane's 'Geographical Collections'. His support of the Royalist side led to him being fined by Cromwell in 1654. In 1611 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. They had 5 sons and at least 4 daughters: Sir William, who succeeded; Sir Gideon of Highchester, whose descendants eventually succeeded to Harden; Walter, who started the Scotts of Raeburn; James, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane; John, progenitor of the Scotts of Woll; Elizabeth (or Elspeth), who married Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead; Margaret, who married Thomas Ker of Mersington;

Janet, who married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and Susannah, who married Gideon Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. He secondly (in 1633) married Margaret, daughter of William Ker of Linton, but had no further children – 'Doon in the depths o' the auld gray castle, Shut in alane wi' his thouchts to wrassle, Wull Scott sat on the cauld stane fluir, And kent that his hopes o' the morn were puir' [WL]. William of Synton (d.1661) eldest son of Francis, the first of the Harden Syntons. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1643 and was on the Committee of War in 1648 for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire and in 1649 for Selkirkshire. The keystone of the burial enclosure of the Scotts of Synton in Ashkirk kirkyard is inscrived 'W S 1646', which are probably his initials. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1661 he (along with William of Headshaw) witnessed a baptism for Walter and Jean Scott. He is probably the William 'of Sintone' recorded in a deed in 1663 (even although deceased by then) regarding a factory. In 1647 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Scott of Headshaw. Their children included: Francis (b.1649) and William (b.1652), both of whom may have died young; John, who succeeded (and was either eldest son or 3rd and eldest surviving); Grizel; Isobel (b.1659), who married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae; and Elizabeth (b.1661). Most of these children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish. The witnesses in 1652 were Sir William (probably of Harden) and Thomas (perhaps of Whitslade) and in 1661 were Thomas of Whitslade and William Gledstains 'of ...' (probably of that Ilk). His brother Francis was appointed as tutor to his eldest son John in 1662. If John was the 3rd son (as Keith Scott states), then there may have been an additional son William, recorded in 1670 as 'brother-germane' to John of Synton when he became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh. Sir William of Harden (1617–1699) son of Sir William and 'Muckle Mou'd Meg'. He was known as 'Little Sir William' and was referred to as being 'of Oakwood' during his father's lifetime. Along with his wife Christian Boyd, he took custody of his brother Walter's children to keep them from Quakerism. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643 and 1644 and served along with his father also for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named (along with the his father, Sir William of Harden, and the Earl of Buccleuch) on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He received the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig from his father Sir William in 1649. He was one of the Commissioners to Parliament for Selkirkshire appointed in 1649. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was one of the trustees of the Buccleuch estates during the minority of Mary in the 1650s and then for her sister Anne. He was knighted in 1660, like his father before him. As a supporter of the Covenant, he was fined £18,000 in about 1662. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was listed there as one of her curators. He is probably the Sir William who paid tax on £500 land tax for Eilrig in 1663 and also the Sir William who paid the land tax on Elliston in St. Boswell's Parish in 1663 and 1678. His grieve is recorded in discharges over annual rents with treasurer of Selkirk in 1665 and 1667. About 1666 he was appointed one of the 'curators' of Francis of Davington. He received Parliamentary ratification of his lands of Borthwickshiels in 1672. In 1673 he matriculated his arms. He was also recorded in several deeds in 1673, one involving his son William. He inherited Hartwoodmyres in 1677, but sold the lands to Walter Scott of Burnfoot about 1690. He is recorded in 1673 acting as one of the commissioners to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1676 he inherited his father's lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire, as well as Hoscote and Hartwoodmyres. In 1677/8 he received the lands of Roberton, Howcleuch and Borthwickshiels Mains for 'non-entry'. In 1678 he paid tax on land valued at more than £5000 in Selkirkshire (with his son responsible for more lands), as well as almost £2000 of land in Smailholm Parish. He is recorded in deeds of 1682, including in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was indicted in 1682 as a Covenanter supporter, with his wife being accused of attending conventicles. Like his nephew, the Earl of Tarras, he was imprisoned in Edinburgh. In 1683 he appeared in court again in Jedburgh, and was carried off to imprisonment in Edinburgh Castle. The proceedings against him dragged on, and he was eventually released on bail paid by Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. However, he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1684 and after the Restoration was knighted by Charles II. He was also further fined that year (along with his son and other Teviotdale Lairds). In 1686 he gave a charter to

Walter, Earl of Tarras, his nephew. On 1687 he and his wife were acquitted of stealing 'a litle girl, called the Tumbling-Lassie, that danced upon the stage', actually freeing her from what amounted to slavery. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. Also in 1688 his servitor James Scott was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh; this was because he 'has been verie charitable to the poor of this cittie albeit his deceased father in law has left nothing to the poor'. His Chamberlain was Walter Langlands in at least the period 1689–94. In 1690 he was one of the local Barons who were appointed to the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. In 1641 he married Christian, daughter of Robert, 7th Lord Boyd of Kilmarnock. His wife was served as one of the heirs to her sister Helen Boyd in 1647. His children were: Sir William, who succeeded; Robert of Iliston, who succeeded his brother; Christian, who married William Kerr of Chatto; and Margaret, who married Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. Another daughter may have been Sussanah, who married Gideon Ogilvie (but that may have been his sister). His will is recorded at Lauder Commissariot in 1699. William of Faldonside (b.bef. 1648) recorded in 1648 as already deceased when his son Robert became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son Robert with Margaret Preacher was baptised (and labelled as conceived through fornication). The witnesses were Robert Deans and David Scott (who was probably a relative). William of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of Robert who was 'Baillie and Portioner in Hawick' according to Scott of Satchells. He was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was probably the first of his family to be referred to as Laird of Horsleyhill. He was granted Weensland, along with Shaws and Burnflat in 1653, including rights to use Hawick's Common. He sold the Tolbooth to the town in 1657. He was listed as a member of the Town Council in 1660. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was listed as being 'of Husleyhill' when fined £1,200 for being a supporter of the Covenant. He is probably the William recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in Hawick and Hassendean Parishes; he paid tax on £304 for his lands of Weensland, 'Acoth haugh' (possibly Usuch Haugh) and Shaws, as well as £637 for Horsleyhill. He was also mentioned in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He may also have been the William Scott recorded as a Bailie in 1638, and the William who was on the Town Council in 1668. However, there are at least 2 generations here, and so it may be hard to separate them. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert (with William being the grandson). His other children included: Janet, who married Harry Riddell in 1659; and Bessie, who had a marriage contract with Walter Scott of Whitehaugh in 1666. William of Headshaw (d.c.1690) eldest son of John of Headshaw and grandson of George of Synton. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1643, along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. He is recorded in the Buccleuch archives in 1646 for the accounts of the deceased John of Headshaw. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and may have been the William, 'younger of Heidshaw' who was on the Committee for Selkirkshire in 1649. He was served heir to his father John in 1653 and had a sasine for his father's lands of Headshaw, Dryden and others in 1655. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for his brother Robert of Langhope in Ashkirk in 1656. In 1659 he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). In 1661 he (along with William of Synton) witnessed a baptism for Walter and Jean Scott. He paid tax on £1028 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £1160 18s 4d in 1678. He resigned the lands of Headshaw and Dryden to his son John in 1686. He witnessed several documents for the Lairds of Todrig, Whitslade and Synton in the period 1688–90. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. He must have been the 'Scot of Headshaw, elder' who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, but died shortly afterwards. In 1647 in Dunfermline he married Jean Halket, sister of Sir James Halket. Their children were: John, who succeeded; William (b.1648); Elizabeth (b.1651), baptised in Ashkirk; Mary (or Marie), who married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles, and she became heiress on the death of her brother John; and Thomas (b.1656), also baptised in Ashkirk. In the 1651 Ashkirk baptismal record his wife's surname is 'Hackit', with witnesses 'Sir Walter . . . ' (perhaps Scott of Buccleuch) and 'Sir Thomas . . . ' (perhaps Ker of Cavers Carre, who married Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane). The witnesses in 1656 were 'Sir Thomas C. . . of . . . ' (probably Ker again) and Thomas Scott (perhaps of Whitslade). Sir William of Clerkington (d.1656) son of Lawrence of Harperrig. He was an advocate, becoming Clerk to the Privy Council and one of the Clerks of Session. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1623. In 1633 he was appointed one of the 'Tutors Testamentary' to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch's will and serbed the same purpose for Francis, the 2nd Earl. In 1634 he carried the 'defunct's Standard' in the funeral procession for Walter, Earl of Bucleuch. He was served heir to his father in 1638. He was knighted by Charles I in 1641 and appointed a Lord of Session in 1649. He also served as a tutor to the young Mary, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1651 his 2nd lawful son William was one of the witnesses to corrections to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His son Lawrence was served as his heir in 1657. Sir William of Aikwood (17th C.) recorded in a Melrose Regality document of 1669, referring to an agreement over teinds going back to 1650. He could be the same as Sir William of Harden. William (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for 'both-meall' (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was presumably a merchant of some sort. In the same year perhaps the same William was ordered to pay £6 for the 'liberty of the burgh' (i.e. becoming a Burgess), 'fourtie shilling being deduced for the buttis bigine'. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Bessie Armstrong. Their children included George (b.1643), James (b.1646), Margaret (b.1648), Thomas (b.1650) and Walter (b.1652). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Bessie Scott. Their children included John (b.1651). William of Galalaw (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Nether Bonchester. He is recorded in a list of Hassendean landowners in 1666. He paid tax on £156 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678 in Hassendean Parish. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw. Following the death of his father Walter in 1653, he gave Nether Bonchester to his uncle Thomas, according to a previous family arrangement. His daughter Bessie married Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, according to a marriage contract of 1663. He became a Burgess of Hawick in 1664. He was father of Adam, whose marriage contract in 1671 with Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Alexander Cunningham, states that he was granted the lands of Galalaw (i.e. was his heir). He may have been related to the much earlier David 'of Gallowlaw'. William (17th C.) son of John 'of Badenyairds', which seems likely to be a transcription error for 'Bridieyairds', i.e. Brieryyards. In 1659 he became a surgeon's apprentice to Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh. William of Bonnington (d.bef. 1684) recorded in 1684 when his son William became a goldsmith's apprentice in Edinburgh. His lands were Bonnington in Lothian. He was the eldest son of James of Bonnington and married Elizabeth Eliott of Stobs. He appears to have acted as a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in Dalkeith in 1661–62, when he is described as 'fiar of Bonnytoun'. He died before his father, and by then only had a single child, Margaret, who married James Cockburn. His daughter 'Magdalena' was served heir to his wife Elizabeth Eliott in 1662. William of Tushielaw (17th C.) probably son of Andrew, he is said to have succeeded when still a minor, most likely in the 1660s. In 1651 he was given 400 merks yearly during his lifetime in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; he is described there as 'eldest sone to Andrew Scott of Tuschilaw, our servitor'. In 1659 he was 'yownger of Tushillaw' when he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). In about 1670 he was succeeded by Walter, who was the last Laird; although it is suggested (by Keith Scott) that Walter was his son, it also seems possible that he was a younger brother. He may be the William of Tushielaw who married Margaret, daughter of Francis Scott of Synton. David and Francis, 'brothers of the deceased ... Scot of Tushellaw' were recorded in a court case in the Regality of Melrose in 1676. This suggests he was dead by then, and these were his brothers; however, the succession around that time is complicated, and so it is possible the 2 men were his uncles. William (17th C.) recorded as Bailie in 1678. He may be the same as William of Brieryyards. Probably the same William served as Procurator Fiscal during the 1670s. William of Coldhouse (d.c.1686) mentioned in 1666 in a record relating to Hassendean Parish. He is probably the same as 'William of Cowdhouse and Tandlaw' and is probably related to the later Robert of Coldhouse, perhaps his father. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Coldhouse). It seems likely that his mother was the 'Marie Scott, liferenter of Coudhouse' listed in 1643. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Hartwoodmyres (17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Hartwoodmyres. He is probably the William 'of Hartickmyres' who was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow

(gratis) in 1643, along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. In 1663 John Armstrong (possibly a factor or similar) was recorded paying his land tax of more than £600 in Wilton Parish, but he is likely the 'Hartwoodmire' who also paid tax on £26. He was also recorded in 3 deeds in 1663. He is recorded in a list of major residents of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of those who wanted the parish suppressed. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663 and as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1666. In 1667 he was a Commissioner of the King's Bounty. He was also farmer at Borthwickbrae in 1670 and in 1672 was leasing the west end of Branxholme Muir (from the Scotts of Buccleuch). He appears to have been the last of the Scotts of Hartwoodmyres, but may be related to the Coldhouse Scotts. In 1677 the lands of Hartwoodmyres went to Sir William Scott of Harden. He could be the deceased William of Borthwickbrae whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £960. In 1682 'the aires of [William] Scott of Hartwoodmyres' are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. His brother Robert was a shoemaker. In 1673 he was charged with striking his brother Robert, apparently because Thomas Brown had called him a 'yallanger', presumably this being the result of a drunken mix-up. Probably the same merchant William is on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be the same William as the merchant listed 'eist the water' in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Possibly the same merchant William was a witness in 1700 (along with glover John) for flesher Robert Renwick and for tailor John. William (17th C.) married Isobel Porteous. In 1676 he is recorded being 'forn: in Ashkirk' when his son John was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were William Laing and Robert Cowan. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683. William (17th C.) listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He is distinct from William of Clarilaw (who is also listed), but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill along with Adam (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Hartwoodmyres who leased part of Branxholme Muir in 1672. William (17th C.) recorded as 'eister' on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be the same as one of the other Williams, possibly the later William 'eist the water'. William (d.c.1686) glover in Hawick. He is probably the William listed along with Walter as glovers in the trial of men for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair in 1673. In 1675 he was one of the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was thus likely to have been a member of the Town Council. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for William Laing and in 1685 another for carrier William Aitken. His will is recorded in 1686. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it included Hassendean. He is recorded in Clarilaw in the baptismal record of 1688. In 1680 he married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Jean (b.1681); John (b.1683); Margaret and Janet (b.1685); and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were Andrew Donald and James Douglas and in 1688 were John Armstrong and Thomas Henderson. His daughter may be the Margaret, daughter of William, who married George Fletcher in Roberton in 1718. Perhaps the same William was resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1679); Jean (b.1681); and Isobel (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were James Law and Robert Noble and in 1687 were Robert Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and John Noble. William (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is said that 'they were taken prisoners, stripped almost naked, and treated more like beasts than human beings'; they were imprisoned in the open in Greyfriars Churchyard for months, so that transportation was initially seen as a sign of hope. William (17th C.) recorded in Newton in a baptismal record of 1683, when Hassendean was part of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Shiel and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and Janet (b.1685). The witnesses in 1683 were Robert Scott (who was probably related) and William Lamb. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (which it contined Hassendean). He married Janet Little and their children included Archibald (b.1686). The witnesses were Patrick Dodds and Archibald Little (who was surely related to his wife). Bailie William (17th C.) recorded as one of the 2 Hawick Bailies in 1688/9 and again in 1692. In 1689 weaver Thomas Turnbull was fined and sentenced to the stocks for insulting the other Bailie and saying that he 'hade no power to sitt in judgement or hade courtes at this tyme'. It is unclear if he was the same man as William of Brieryyards or some other William. Perhaps the same William was Bailie in 1678 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, and also witnessed a baptism for the same family (along with 3 other former or present Bailies) in 1681. William (17th C.) smith listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was taxed for 2 hearths. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) see William of Burnhead. William (17th C.) resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was separate from the Laird of Burnhead (also William at that time), but probably related to the Robert who was also listed as a householder there. William 'Bellman' (d.bef. 1696) acted as Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was stated to be 'officer in the sd. towne, from almost his infancie to his dying day'. His son Alexander was later Burgh Officer, appointed in 1696, by which time he was deceased. William of Broadmeadows (d.bef. 1695) son of William of Tushielaw and his 2nd wife, Margaret Govane. He and his father had a wadset for Broadmeadows from his half-brother Andrew of Broadmeadows in 1648 and the lands were fully resigned to him in 1667 (the sasine being preserved in the Walter Mason collection). In 1658 there was a transaction to protect his estates from predation. In 1676 he had a decree to build a loft on the south side of the west aisle of Selkirk Kirk. He is probably the Laird of Broadmeadows who was mentioned by Scott of Satchells in 1688. He married Helen, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; Gideon, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1683; Andrew, who became a barber and wigmaker's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1684; Isabella, who married John Balfour of Kailyie; and Jean, who married John Murray, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh and later Lord Bowhill. In 1695 his daughters Isabella and Jean were his heiresses and resigned Broadmeadows to John Balfour and his son Charles Balfour. William of Brieryyards (17th C.) Bailie in the 1680s and 1690s; he may have been the Baron Bailie, rather than a Magistrate of the Town. He must have been related to the earlier James and John of Brieryyards. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Stewart. In 1689 a man is recorded being fined for insulting and questioning the authority of him and the other Bailie. He was Baron Bailie of the Regality of Hawick (i.e. the agent of the Baron) in 1693, when Walter Ruecastle was fined for assaulting him. He was probably the 'late baylyea' listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the Laird referred to in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as 'Breariyeards his house', when he was taxed for 4 hearths. He may be the 'baylie', married to Bessie Scott, whose unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1683; the couple's other children may have included William (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681), James (b.1684), Agnes (b.1685) and Francis (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were 'Mr' Walter Gledstains and William Purdom. William (1645–1739) 3rd son of Thomas of Todrig. He purchased the lease of Milsington farm in about 1670, starting more than a century and a half of continuous residence there by the same family. He was thus also the progenitor of the Scotts of Girnwood and Singlie. He may be the William 'in Wilsongton' whose son Thomas was witness to an instrument of sasine for Elliot of Harwood in 1694. He is probably the William who paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths at Milsington in 1694. He was a petitioner in support of having the Whitslade lands 'disjoined' in 1714. He probably married a daughter of James Eliott of Stobs and Margaret Elliot of Redheugh. His children included: William, tenant in Milsington; possibly Thomas; Walter, who settled at Girnwood; Robert, who settled at Singlie; and James, who was a notary in Hawick. He is buried in Ashkirk (and lived to a very old age, unless the date of his death is a mistake). He is probably the 'William in Milsinstoun, a Gentleman of Note' mentioned by Scott of Satchells. William (17th C.) son of William of Synton. In 1670 he was recorded as 'brother-germane to John Scott of Sinton' when he became apprentice to surgeon-apothecary George Sterling in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been related to the earlier William of Salenside. Perhaps he was the William who married Isobel Scott, with their son Robert baptised in Ashkirk in 1690; the witnesses were Thomas Wallace and William Dunlop. He may be the Scott, tenant in Salenside from about 1702–18, whose son Francis gave evidence in the court case for the division of Wilton Common in 1764. William (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was listed separately from William in Ashkirk. Perhaps he is the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may have included (although there may be 2 families here): Isobel (b.1690); Margaret (b.1691); Janet (b.1692); George (b.1694); John (b.1697); John (again, b.1699); and John (again, b.1700). Additionally William (b.1702) was child of William 'tenent in Essinside' and Margaret Scott; although the surname is omitted, this seems likely to be the same man. The witnesses in 1690 were Francis Redford and John Minto (both at Easter Essenside) and in 1694 were John Minto and John Stewart. He could be the William who is recorded collecting money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He may be the resident of Kirkton Parish whose son James was baptised in Cavers in 1696. He may also be the William in Newton whose son Adam was baptised in Kirkton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at Peelbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Francis, who was tenant there. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1706 a child of his was baptised in Wilton Parish. William (17th C.) tenant in Netherraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Park in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was separate from the merchant of the same name who was also listed, but may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for baxter James Lands in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Slaidhills in 1702 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'indweller in Walls in Teviotdale' who was factor to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in an undated document, probably from the early 1700s. 'Walls' may have been 'Woll' or 'Wells'. William of Raeburn (d.1699) eldest son of Walter 'Wat Wudspurs', he was the 2nd Laird of Raeburn and grandson of Sir William of Harden. His brother Walter was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. In 1685 and 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Walter of Satchels dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him. He claimed the Harden estates against Walter, Earl of Tarras, in a court action starting in 1691. But the estates were inherited by the Earl's eldest son Gideon. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He contributed £300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and was succeeded by his son Walter. Other children were: John, who died unmarried; and Isabella (or Isabel), who married Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. In 1702 his widow married John Scott of Synton. William of Langhope (b.1654) son of John of Langhope, and descended from the Scotts of Synton. He succeeded on his father's death in 1666, being served heir in 1669. He had a 'wadset' with Walter of St. Leonards in 1669, and lost the lands of Langhope to Walter in 1677. Margaret Scott of St. Leonards, with whom he had a disposition, may have been his mother, and it is possible that Walter was his brother. He is probably the same as William 'in Langhope' who was involved with decrees for the lands of Langhope with Adam Scott and others. In 1684 he was said to have helped warn Sir William, younger of Harden, that soldiers were on the way to arrest him. He is mentioned as 'Will Scott of Langup' in Scott of Satchells' 'postral', published in 1688. His name appears on inquests in 1686, 1693 and 1699, still using the designation 'of Langhope', even although he had sold the lands. He had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk in 1690 and 1691, regarding annual rents. In 1692 he was a curator for his sister-in-law Janet Scott when he requested the Burgh of Selkirk to repay a debt owed to her and his wife Isobel of £15 2s. William 'Corkie' (b.1655) son of James and Bessie Douglas, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1682 he was find for 'ane egregious and unchristian ryot and blood, committ by him upon Bessie Douglass, his moyr, and John Scott, his broyt, and Mary Scott, his sister'. William (b.1656) son of John 'Westport'. He was baptised in Hawick, with his mother being Janet Robson, and a notation that the birth was the result of fornication. Probably the same William, son of John, became an apprentice to skinner William Brown in Edinburgh in 1674. William

'Bee' (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. His nickname presumably distinguished him from 'Corkie', who was a contemporary tailor in Hawick. In 1683 Marion Thomson, wife of carrier Robert Scott was fined for assaulting him, Robert was also fined for assulating him, while he in turn was fined for assaulting Robert 'and in threatening him at his door with ane drawne sword'. William (17th C.) recorded in 1680 as 'Flex' when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas and Isobel Coltart. The other witness was John in Whiteyetts. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Presumably he farmed or lived at the Flex. William (d.c.1690) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Falsyde and their children included: Margaret (b.1683), who married Walter Hume; and Anne, who married James, tenant in Stobicote. His wife secondly married Robert Thomson, tenant in Newmill and had at least 3 more children in the period 1694–1701. She could be the Margaret Falsyde recorded 'eist the water' in the 1694 Hearth Tax Roll for Hawick. William (d.c.1697) doctor in Hawick, probably son of Robert of Harwood, and hence brother of Gideon of Falnash. He is recorded as 'brother-german' of Walter of Harwood in 1667 when he became an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh. He served as a Bailie in Hawick in the 1670s. Probably the same William was listed as an apothecary when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; this was for Elspeth Scott, with the other witness being Walter of Goldielands, suggesting a close family connection perhaps. He leased the 'old Glebe land' in Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was 'Wm. Scott of Harwood, apothecary' on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: William (b.1679); Margaret (b.1681); an unnamed child (b.1683), who presumably died; James (b.1684); Agnes (b.1685); and Francis (b.1687). He is also probably the William 'of Harwood' recorded in 1680 when he and his wife 'Isobel' Scott had their daughter Marion baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert of Glack and Walter of Goldielands. The baptism of Francis was witnessed by the Town Clerk, Walter Gledstains, and James Gledstains. He could be the William, apothecary in Hawick, whose brother Gideon was served as his heir in 1697; presumably this was because none of his children had reached maturity. William of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Jardine in Hawick Parish. The other witness was Robert, who was probably related. It is unclear how he fits into the succession of Scotts of Whitehaugh, but he may be the same as the son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded in the 1690s. William (17th C.) tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the 'Walter Scott of Mirrielaw' (if this was an error in the name) who rented part of Whithope in 1698. William (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was recorded at 'birkhill' in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Bank in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear exactly where his farm was. William (17th C.) resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was 'wt the kilne' and paid tax on 2 hearths. William (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the William in Appletreehall whose wife Janet Shiel's will is recorded in 1687. He may be related to the later William, tenant in Appletreehall. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Scott and their children included (although there may be 2 families here): Agnes (b.1688); James (b.1694); James (again, b.1697); Ann (b.1703); Jean (b.1705); Agnes (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Isobel (b.1710). The witnesses in 1694 were John Easton and Mungo Scott (who may have been related to either him or his wife). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Weensland. An unnamed child of his was baptised in 1696. The witnesses were James Gray and Walter Paisley (probably the miller at Weensland Mill). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children included William (b.1697). Agnes (b.1698), baptised in Wilton, with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. Bessie (b.1689), Adam (b.1691) and John (b.1700), baptised in Ashkirk, to parents with the same names, may be the same family. The witnesses in 1691 were Walter Scott and Robert Pringle. The witnesses in 1697 were Robert and Adam Scott. He may be related to the William who was tenant in Wiltonburn in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Lees in 1698. His wife was Isabella Morton and their children included William (b.1698). The baptismal witnesses were Adam Morton (surely related to his wife) and Robert Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as cottar in Birkwood in 1698. He married Isobel Renwick and their children included: George (b.1691); Gilbert (b.1698); Mary (b.1703); and Bessie (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were Thomas Wallace and Robert Taylor. William (17th/18th C.) from Wilton Parish, his son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700. The witnesses were John and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield. William of Horsleyhill (17th/18th C.) son of Robert and grandson of the previous William. He succeeded Robert, probably in the late 1680s (even although Keith Scott's genealogy misses him out). He was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. He may be the 'Laird of Horslihill' who paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick in 1694. In 1696 there is a record of Francis Scott 'brother-german to William Scott of Horsliehill' becoming a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh. He could be the Laird of Horsleyhill who was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He appears to have been succeeded by his brother Francis, and so presumably had no male heirs. William (17th/18th C.) boatman of Langlands. He became a Burgess of Hawick in 1691. He owned the land on which the Grammar School was built, at the Sandbed, from at least 1693. He sold it to Robert Langlands of Langlands in 1701 (who was presumably a relative of the Laird). In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was listed as being 'in Boathouse' on the Langlands estate. In 1709 he is probably the William who appears to be 'Boatman in Couble haugh' when his daughter Mary was baptised in Wilton Parish. In 1711 he was listed as 'Boatman' when his son Will witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) probably 3rd son of Walter of Crumhaugh, and hence brother to Charles of Crumhaugh and Walter in Goldielands. In 1700 he was described as son of Walter of Crumhaugh when the 2 of them witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his brother). He was described as son of the deceased Walter of Crumhaugh in 1702 when he married Isobel Gledstains in Hawick. He could be the Hawick innkeeper 'called William of Goldielands' whose son Walter was baptised in 1705, with witnesses Walter in Crumhaugh (who could thus be his brother) and Michael. William of Nether Bonchester (17th/18th C.) recorded as owner of lands valued at £180 in Abbotrule Parish in 1707. 'William' may be an error for 'Walter', who was Laird at that time. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. His servant Walter had a child baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) wright who lived at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a bill for repairing Wolfelee House in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitchesters, where his recorded in 1706. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and James Falsyde. Probably the same William in Whitchesters had a daughter Bessie baptised in 1696, with witnesses William Bell and Alexander Thomson. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Appletreehall in 1711 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier William who lived at Appletreehall, as well as Walter who was also a tenant at Appletreehall in 1711. William of Clarilaw and Burnhead (d.1714) eldest son of Robert, who was tenant in Burnhead. He may be the William, son of Robert and Bessie Turnbull born in Hawick in 1651. He was also known as William of Burnhead when he was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He and Walter of Newton seem to have been involved in a boundary dispute according to a document of 1674. He was William of Clarilaw in 1678 when he paid land tax in Hassendean Parish for £182 for Wester Clarilaw, as well as £156 for 'the lands of Burnhead'. He is probably the William of Clarilaw recorded in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was also 'of clarilaw' in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. In 1691 he was leasing part of the lands of Branxholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He purchased Burnhead (the family lands) from his distant cousin Adam Scott of Burnfoot in about 1692. In 1692 he paid the teinds to the Duchess of Buccleuch for his part of the lands of Clarilaw. He was probably the Laird who paid tax on 3 hearths recorded as 'Burnhead his hous' in 1694. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch (in name of John Scott of Pitlochie) for the years 1681–4, for Branxholme, Wilton and Whitchester. He acted as Chamberlain to the Earl of Lothian for the period 1689–1705. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and was probably the William of Clarilaw who was a Commissioner in 1704. He is recorded being 'of Burnehead' in 1705 when his son John became a feltmaker's apprentice in Edinburgh. Probably the same William of Burnhead is described in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish in about 1720. He may have lived at Clarilaw rather than Burnhead. He married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Wedderstain (or 'Wathersone'), merchant of Dalkeith; she was one of 2 daughters who were 'heirs-portioners' of their father and in 1675 she granted her half of the lands in Dalkeith to John Learmonth. She may be the 'Lady Burnhead' for whom the funeral bells of St. Mary's were rung in 1729. Their children included: Robert (b.1680), baptised in Roberton Parish, who succeeded; Eupham, who married Thomas Watson, 'writer' in Hawick; William (b.1682); Margaret (b.1684), who married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick; Jean (b.1686); Peter; John (b.1688); and other daughters. One of these was probably Agnes, who married James Scott in Calfield in 1721. In 1729 the funeral bells in Hawick were also rung for 'Burnhead's sister', who (since this was after his own death) could thus either have been his sister or his daughter. The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were John of Lees and Adam (who were probably both related to him) and in 1686 and 1688 were Adam and Robert (who were probably also Scotts of the Hassendean area). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. In 1684 he was charged at a court in Jedburgh with not attending his parish church for 2 years and fined the equivelent of 2 years' rental, corresponding to £156 Scots. His sister-in-law Helen Stewart was also accused of attending conventicles. Sir William of Harden (d.1707) succeeded his father Sir William. He had been engaged in the rebellion of the Earl of Argyll. In 1684 there was an attempt to capture him, but word was gotten to him while he was curling with Riddell of Haining and others, so he escaped. He was captured later in Newcastle, but had a remission in 1685. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1687 when still 'younger of Harden'. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688 (as well as another oart to his father). He was appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1689, serving until 1693, when his seat was declared vacant because he had not signed 'the assurance'. In 1678 he was 'younger of Harden' when he acted as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. In that year he was also 'younger' when he paid tax on land valued at more than £2400 in Selkirkshire. And in 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, along with his father. He was still 'younger of Harden' in 1695 when he contributed the large amount of £2000 to the Darien ill-fated Company. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. Also in 1700 he was granted the rights as heir-male of Synton on their resignation by Archibald Scott of Boonraw; it was stated that he was descended from the ancient family of Synton. In 1701 he had a bond with Walter Scott, younger of Woll. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. And in 1705, along with Walter Scott of Woll, he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest. In 1673 he married Jean, only daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton (and she later remarried Sir William Scott of Thirlestane). Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. His wife may have been the 'Dame Jean Scott, lady Harden' listed among the contributors to the Darien Scheme in 1695. His testaments are recorded at Lauder Commissariot in 1708, 1715 and 1728. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1703 he married Margaret, daughter of James Scott 'Colifort'. Their children may include James (b.1706) and Robert (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, glover. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the lands of 'Kirktoun' in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isobel Hardie in 1708. In 1719 his widow Isobel Hardie married carrier Robert Aitken. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Howcleuch in 1710 when his daughter Isobel was baptised and in 1712 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same William was in Harden in 1714 when his son John was baptised. William of Brieryhill (d.1718) son of Adam of Galalaw, and brother of Alexander of Galalaw. He married Jean Scott. In 1718 he was deceased when his brother Alexander presented his daughter Agnes for baptism in Hawick Parish. He is recorded being 'of Brierie-hole' and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Burnhead and wigmaker John Elliot (brother to Robert Elliot of Rigg). Margaret (b.1715) may also have been his child. It is unclear if the later Dr. William of Brieryhill was a descendant. William (b.1686) son of John 'Cloaks', who was also called 'Whitegates'. The Parish records describe how 'in ye commonrideing night' of 1707 he was 'togither a considerable time alone in her Mothers Stable' with Margaret Brydon, as witnessed by Robert Scott 'called Wyndhead'. He also went to her house, and finding the doors close and the family asleep, climbed in the window. In 1708 the illegitimate child, John, was baptised in Hawick, by which time he had already fled the country. The witnesses in 1708 included David Miller and James Gray in Whitchesters. William (17th/18th C.) described as 'elder in Branxholmtoun' in 1717 when along with John Scott (elder in Branxholme) he was appointed to collect money from Branxholme, Branxholme Town and Castlehill. He may be the William recorded in Branxholme in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for John in Branxholme. Probably the same William (or his son) was tenant at Branxholmtown when he witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1710, 1712, 1713 and 1715. On 2 occasions he witnessed a baptism for John, carrier in Branxholme Town, who may have been related to him (and once the other witness was John in Branxholme, who may also have been related). He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in the period 1712–17 (and was probably related to the Robert, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was still farming 1/5 of Branxholme Town in 1718. In 1720 he was 'in Branxholmtoun' when (along with James Crow) he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scoon in Branxholmtown. He may be the William 'in Branxolm', married to Margaret Scott, whose children included James (b.1703) and James (again, b.1706); the witnesses in 1706 were Andrew Ogilvie and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. It is also possible he was the William 'son in law to John Scott tenant in Branxholm', who married Anna Laidlaw (perhaps as his 2nd wife), whose son Robert was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. William of Thirlestane (b.1663) eldest son of James, who was brother of Sir William of Harden. He was 2nd Laird of Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the more familiar ones in the Ettrick or near Lauder), succeeding in 1687. In 1684 he married Christian Don. They had 13 children (mostly baptised in Yetholm): 4 who died young; Agnes (b.1690), who married Walter Scott of Harden; Alexander (b.1691), who became a doctor and succeeded to Thirlestane in 1729; Walter (b.1692), a wine merchant in Leith, whose son Thomas was minister at Cavers; John (b.1693); Patrick (b.1695); Christian (b.1696); Andrew (b.1697); Gideon (b.1699); and Isabel. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Easter Burnfoot. His daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was 'W... in Roughheugh Mylne' in 1709 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (1679–1744) eldest son of William, he was tenant in Milsington, like his father. He was 'Younger in Milsintoun' in 1733 when his oldest son was baptised in Roberton. He is probably the William 'in Milsington' who is mentioned in a lease from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1731 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood (who had married his cousin Jane Scott). His children were: William (b.1733), also tenant in Milsington; Thomas (b.1735); Henry (b.1736), baptised in Roberton; Walter (b.1740); Robert (b.1742), baptised in Roberton, a doctor in Lasswade; Jean; Elizabeth, who married her cousin William, son of Walter Scott in Girnwood; and Janet. William of Stonedge (d.1730s) brother of Adam, who had been tenant of Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased Stonedge and Howa farms. He was son of Walter, tenant of Wauchope. He may have been the William who was an elder of Hobkirk in the early 1700s. He was recorded as being 'in Hopsburn' in 1709 in a document relating to repairs to Wolfelee House and also involving the tutors of Stonedge. In 1724 his brother transferred Stonedge and Howa farms to him and 6 years later he purchased most of the rest (the eastern part) of the Stonedge estate from Gilbert Eliott. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch, appointed to cover the Liddesdale estates for the period 1714–24. He married Susanna, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshiels. Their eldest daughter Margaret married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee, in Edinburgh in 1727. His son was probably Thomas, who was recorded as 'of Stonedge' in 1732, although he may not have succeeded his father until later. He (or his son Thomas) later sold the estate to Robert Lisle. His widow was probably the 'Lady Standlidge' who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1698 his son Walter was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses John Douglas and William Rae. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Cavers Parish. In 1699 he married Christian

Nichol in Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was married to Elspeth Elliot and their daughter Helen was born in 1701. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for fellow tailor John Little. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Wiltonburn in 1711 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Along with Walter Scott and James Irvine, he tenanted 1/3 of the farm. It is possible he is the same man as the earlier William associated with Wiltonburn (if this was a second marriage, perhaps). William (17th/18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for weaver Robert Rodger and for merchant William Black, and in 1709 for carrier Henry Paterson. William 'Will' (17th/18th C.) son of William the boatman at Langlands. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for James Irvine, tenant in Wiltonburn. William (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Skelfhill' in 1711 when he married Janet Aitchison in Hawick Parish. She was widow of John Scott 'younger in Falnash' and the wedding took place at Falnash, officiated by Rev. Bell, the minister of Cavers. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts who farmed at Skelfhill. In 1712 he was 'tenant in Falnash'. His children with Janet Aitchison included: John (b.1711); and William (b.1712). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Scott in Skelfhill (who was surely related) and Robert Pringle in Caverton. He could be the William, tenant in 'Falenesh', whose only lawful son William in 'Dueslees' (probably Eweslees) had his will recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1730. William (d.1726) weaver in Hawick. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for smith Thomas Huntly. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to hear an apology from fellow weaver Thomas Lunn for calling him certain unspecified names. Probably the same weaver William married Bessie Douglas and had children including Charles (b.1723), Helen (b.1725), Isabel (b.1726) and Thomas (b.1726). He was already deceased when his son Thomas was baptised. The witnesses in 1723 were Bailie George Martin and carrier Robert Aitkin and in 1726 were weavers John Swan and John Scott (who may have been a relative). William (d.bef. 1721) listed as 'sometimes in Deanburn haugh'. In 1721 he was already deceased when his daughter Bessie married workman John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servant to Alexander, Laird of Synton in 1717, when he witnessed a baptism for his master. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Sanderson and their children included: 'Francies' (b.1717); Elspeth (b.1720); and Walter (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) Elder of Bedrule Parish. In 1722 he was selected to attend the Synod on behalf of the Parish. It is unclear where he lived. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in 1719 as servant to William Miller, weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson, 'servitrix' to Rev. Robert Bell of Cavers. Their children included: Francis (b.1722); James (b.1724); and Janet (b.1724). The witnesses in 1722 were students John and Robert Cunningham. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Dryden, recorded in relation to a debt in Selkirk in 1723. This is presuably the Dryden near Ashkirk. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Sundhope in Yarrow. He was deceased in 1753 when his widow Janet Inglis (indweller in Philiphaugh) had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. William (d.c.1730) tenant in Eweslees, son of William, tenant in Falnash. He was the only lawful son and 'in Dueslees' in 1730 when his will was recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries. William (18th C.) son of John, skinner in Hawick. In 1717 in Edinburgh, he became an apprentice baxter to Thomas Rutherford. William (18th C.) son of Charles 'in Palacehill'. In 1720 his father was already deceased when he became an apprentice clockmaker to Patrick Gordon in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) resident at Ashybank in 1723, 1724 and 1730. He married Janet Turnbull in Cavers in 1723. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Bessie (b.1724) and James (b.1730). William (18th C.) resident at Newton in Wilton Parish in at least 1725–1739. He married Christian Hoy and their children included: Mark (b.1720); Thomas (b.1723); John (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); Mark (again, b.1732); William (b.1734); George (b.1736); and James (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were Robert Scott (who may have been related) and Robert Storie, in 1727 were Alexander Moor and James Dryden, in 1732 were Robert Scott (again) and Robert Storie (again) and in 1739 were George and Walter Scott. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts associated with Newton. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. William (18th C.) resident of Ettrick Parish. He was living at Annelshope in 1728. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Marion (b.1728) and Walter (b.1731). William (18th C.) married Katherine Halliday in Cavers Parish in 1731. William of Whitehaugh (d.1750) son of Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh. He was served heir to his father in 1692. A sasine of 1697, granted by the Duchess of Buccleuch, infefts him in Whitehaugh as heir to his father Walter; this was for 'the east part of the lands of Whitehaugh, with the tower, fortalice, manor-place, houses, biggings, yards, parts, pendicles, and pertinents', and additionally for 'Wester Heip, Greenside, Westside of Whitehaugh, and Deanhead, with the mill and mill-lands thereof, whole houses, biggings, yards, tofts, crofts, parts, pendicles, privileges, and pertinents'. He was probably the Laird of Whitehaugh who in about 1705 was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. He may be the person meant by 'Walter [sic] Scot of Whithugh' on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. His brother Robert was minister at Roberton. The pair of them witnessed a baptism in 1721 for James in Whitehaugh (who may have been related) and another in 1727 for James Scott and Janet Scott in Borthaugh (the same couple). He also witnessed a baptism for the couple in 1724, with his brother performing the ceremony and other witnesses being James (the child's grandfather), John (the child's uncle) and Walter of Cockerheugh. He gave 4 silver communion cups to Wilton Kirk in 1728, including the family motto 'Vincit Amor Patriæ'. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme, younger of Stirches and in 1747 and 1748 others for the Wilton Minister, James Simpson. His estate was valued at £648 10d in the 1740s. He paid the window tax in Wilton Parish in 1748. In 1705 he is said to have married Ann, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. However, it was actually Anne, daughter of Rev. John Rutherford of Yarrow and Christian Shaw (grand-daughter of Rev. John Shaw of Selkirk), who were the great-grandparents of author Sir Walter Scott; the marriage is recorded in Roberton Parish and they lived in George Square in Edinburgh, with Sir Walter Scott telling a story about their shaggy dog. His wife's will was recorded in 1765. He died without any children and outlived his brothers Robert and John, as well as his sister May. He was succeeded by his sister Isobel (in the liferent of Whitehaugh), and then by their 2nd cousin John. His 'testament dative' from 1750 survives, with his sister Isobel being stated to be his only living sibling and 'executrix dative'; it lists many merchants and others in Hawick with whom he had done business. He gave more than £5 to the poor of Wilton Parish, and the same amount to Walter, 'late tenant in Willtown', as well as money for his widow, Anne Rutherford. Sir William 2nd Baronet of Thirlestane (d.1725) only surviving son of Sir Francis. He became a member of the Faculty of Advocates in 1702. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as 'younger of Thirlestane', as well as in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was involved in a bond with Walter of Whitfield (later of Harden) and Walter of Woll in 1715. Later the 3 were 'tutors' to John of Harden, and were involved in legal proceedings over their consequent claims on part of the Harden estate in 1724–26. Known as a man of great learning, he is believed to have written the words for 'The Blythesome Bridal' and wrote several verses in English and in Scots dialect, as well as poems in Latin (24 of which appeared in 'Selecta Poemata' in 1727). In 1699 he married Elizabeth Brisbane, Mistress of Napier, only surviving child of Margaret, Baroness Napier of Merchiston and John Brisbane. Their son Francis assumed the name Napier and the appellation 'of Merchiston'; his great-grandson, Lord Francis Napier would live at Wilton Lodge for several years. His first wife died in 1705. In 1710 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, widow of Sir William Scott of Harden. William (d.bef. 1727) recorded as Laird of Wauchope. His daughter Margaret married William Elliot in Edinburgh in 1727. He was probably related to the Scotts who had long been tenants at Wauchope, but unrelated to the Scotts who purchased the estate later in the 18th century. William of Raeburn (b.1704) son of Walter and father of the next Walter. He was the 4th Laird of Raeburn and owner of lands in the Borthwick valley, including Eilrig, which he (or his agents) leased to John Chisholme of Stirches in 1719. He paid the window tax in Lessuden Parish in 1748 and his lands there were valued at £558 in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1743 he married Jean Elliott. They had 2 children: Walter, who succeeded; and Anne, who married Thomas, 2nd son of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. William (d.c.1755) younger son of Francis of Davington. It is said that he had tenancy of a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch, connected with the once powerful status of his Thirlestane ancestors. He farmed at Holm and then Beattock. He married Marion Veitch in 1721. Their only son was William, who farmed at Beattock and then moved to Moffat, marrying Jean Carruthers, but dying without issue. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1733 he was at 'W: burnfoot' (i.e. Wester Burnfoot), which was probably at the foot of Wilton Burn. He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms in 1737 and 1739 for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn. He married Jean Scott in 1723, as recorded in Wilton Parish; she is probably the Jean, son of Walter Scott who married William, as recorded in Hawick 2 weeks later. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1724); Bessie (b.1727); Christian (b.1729); Margaret (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter (perhaps his wife's father) and John (perhaps his own father), in 1727 were Walter Scott and William Elliot, in 1729 were John and Walter, in 1733 were Walter and James and in 1735 were Walter Scott and William Lamb. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1732 when an unnamed child of his was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Eilrig in 1736 when he had a child baptised. William (b.c.1714) born at Wiltonburn, where his father lived while he was tenant of a third of Mervinslaw. It is unclear which Scott associated with Wiltonburn was his father. He was at Wiltonburn until the age of 24, and then spent about 1739–48 at Whitfield. He was in Synton Parkhead in 1764 when he gave brief evidence about the use of Wilton Common. Probably the same William was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1736 and 1739 and Whitfield in 1741, 1743 and 1748. He married Bessie Scott in 1734 and their children (mostly baptised in Wilton) included: William (b.1736); George (b.1737); William (again, b.1739); Charles (b.1741); John (b.1743); Janet (b.1746); Margaret (b.1748); and Margaret (again, b.1750), baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses in 1736, 1737 and 1739 were another William and Walter, in 1741 were William Scott and Robert Cowan, in 1743 were William of Coldhouse and Robert Easton and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) son of Hawick surgeon Walter. In 1738 in Edinburgh he became apprentice to tailor William Clerk. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Elizabeth (or 'Betty') Baldie (or 'Baldy'). Their children included: James (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); and Elizabeth (b.1740). William (18th C.) tenant in the Flex in 1743. In that year he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Reid, who was also a tenant at the Flex. He may be related to the later tenant of the same name at the Flex. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitfield in 1744. He married Jean Paterson and their children included: Robert (b.1744); Walter (b.1748); and Jean (b.1750). The witnesses in 1744 were Alexander of Galalaw and Robert of Coldhouse (suggesting a relationship with those family branches). William (18th C.) servant 'to the Laird of Cromoch [presumably Crumhaugh] near Hawick' mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750 (although the entry is apparently deleted). He married Jean Clow, daughter of Henry, barber in Callander. William of Africa and Ashieburn (d.c.1733) son of Walter of Clarilaw, and probably descended from the Scotts of Burnhead. In 1733 he was succeeded in Ashieburn by Rev. James Scott. In 1788 he (or a descendant) is listed as former owner of 'Part of Nether Ancrum, called Africa'. William (18th C.) tenant in Hislop. In 1728 in Hawick Parish he married Margaret Scott in 'Hairgrain'. William (18th C.) wool inspector appointed by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures and stationed in Hawick from about 1729. There was a legal battle between him and the Magistrates of Hawick over his indolence and high rates, and he was replaced before 1733. William 'the Pether' (18th C.) packman from Deanburnhaugh. One of his daughters married shepherd David Scott (whose daughter Christina married gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford) and another daughter married George Scott (joiner at Deanburnhaugh). Rev. William (1699/1700–86) eldest son of Walter of Merrylaw. He was tutor to the family of Sir William Johnston. In 1736 he became minister of Kirkpatrick-Juxta. He married Grizel, daughter of Rev. Gabriel Gullan of Dryfesdale. His children were: Elizabeth (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); Walter of Merrylaw (b.1767); and Rev. Gabriel, his successor. One of his daughters married a Johnstone of Corehead. William (18th C.) resident in the lands of Buccleuch in 1733 when his son James was baptised in Roberton Parish. William 'the Auld Mason' (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being shepherd Robert. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and John, shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He was a resident at Falnash Mill. William (18th C.) resident of

Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cairns and their children included Janet (b.1759) and Agnes (b.1762). The witnesses in 1762 were James Scott and James Cairns (who were probably related to him and his wife). William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Town Treasurer recorded in 1763 when money was being raised to pay for the new bell for St. Mary's Kirk. He was still Treasurer in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Meikledale (1693/4–1772) 3rd son of Robert of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also farmed at Rowanburnfoot, near Canonbie. He went into partnership with Benjamin Bell to drove cattle, being very successful for a while, but being ruined by a distemper outbreak. He purchased Meikledale in 1731, but sold it to William Laing in 1750. He was 'of Muckledale' when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1741. In 1722 he married Katherine, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children were: Capt. James of Forge in Canonbie; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Bell; Mary, who never married; Susanna, who married Gilbert Richardson; Catherine, who married John Carruthers; and William, Ann, Agnes and Helen, who probably all died young. He may also have had a son Francis, who went to the East Indies. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1721 and 1723. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Janet (b.1721); and Alexander (b.1723). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as servant in Overhall in 1723 when he married Bessie Turnbull, who was 'att Hawick miln'. Their children included Andrew (b.1724) and Robert (b.1727). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Easter Alemoor in 1725, 1727 and 1732 and Alemoor in 1736. In 1724 he married Bessie Riddell in Wilton, the marriage also being proclaimed in Roberton. Most of these children, baptised in Roberton Parish, were probably his: Thomas (b.1725); William (b.1727); John (b.1730); Marion (b.1732); William (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); and Marion (again, b.1740). He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Alemoor at about the same time, e.g. Gideon and Walter. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Rigg in 1729 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Stobicote in 1738 when his son James was baptised. William (18th C.) recorded as 'younger in Sinton Mill' in 1734 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably related to Thomas, who was in Synton Mill a little earlier. William of Coldhouse (18th C.) son of Robert of Coldhouse. As part of his 1743 marriage contract he was infeft in his father's lands of Little Drinkstone ('commonly called Tanlaw') and Tanlawrig ('commonly called Cowdhouse'). He represented his father in the court case for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He could be the William who married Jean Paterson in Wilton in 1743; their children included Robert (b.1744), Walter (b.1748) and Jean (b.1750). He is also recorded in 1743 as a baptismal witness for William Scott in Whitfield in Wilton Parish (unless this was an error for Robert of Coldhouse, who witnessed a baptism in Wilton a few months later). William (b.1709) 2nd son of Gideon and Agnes Elliot, his grandfather being John of Woll. He was tenant farmer in Kirkhope. In 1761 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. Their children were: Gideon (1762–1841), farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells; Robert (b.1769); and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Suter. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1730, 1732, 1737 and 1741 when his children James, William, Agnes and Charles were baptised. Sir William of Ancrum (d.1769) 4th Baronet of Ancrum, son of Sir John. He was a Lieutenant, of Barrel's Foot Regiment. He paid the window tax for Ancrum House in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He died without issue and was succeeded by his nephew John Scott Nisbet of Craigentinnie. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Cavers itself in 1737 when his daughters Ann and Katherine were baptised. He was also living in Cavers in 1741 when his son Adam was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Colterscleuch in 1753 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be related to the later William, servant at Colterscleuch. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Hobkirk in 1742, and their children may have included: William (b.1743); Mary (b.1756); and Walter (b.1761), who was a weaver in Wilton. William of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1748 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. He paid for 14 windows, but it is unclear whether this was for Hummelknowes or somewhere else. It is also if this was an error for

John, who was miller there at about this time, or if this is even a different family entirely. Robert, who paid the window tax there in 1753 was probably his son. It is possible he is the same man as William of Burnhead, who is recorded owning Hummelknowes a few decades later. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Langside in 1757 when his daughter Bettie was baptised in 1757. It could also have been his child who was baptised in 1761 (with no names recorded). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gordon and their children included: Isabel (b.1756); Helen (b.1759); Janet (b.1761); and Margaret (b.1766). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker James Chisholme and Alexander Bunyan (Kirk Officer) and in 1766 were tailor John Scott (perhaps a relative) and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1767 he married Mary Anderson, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Janet (b.1768); and Cicilia (b.1770). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included Euphan (b.1771) and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Thomas Grieve and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He was recorded as a shoemaker in 1776 and 1778, one of the earliest on record in Cavers Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1776) and Jean (b.1778). William (18th C.) probably son of John, younger of Gilmanscleuch. He sold the family property to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He could be the 'poor miller at Ettrick bridge, a man of austere manners and great strength as well his sons' mentioned by the Ettrick Shepherd as the representative of the family in 1806. William (1727/8–61) Schoolmaster in Castleton. His gravestone depicted a man carved in relief (presumably William himself), holding a bible in one hand and a rose in the other, wearing a wig and a long buttoned coat. His wife Mary (1732/3–60) was also buried in the old kiryard. Dr. William of Stokoe (b.1733) eldest son of Walter and grandson of the last Thomas of Todrig. He settled at Stamfordham in Northumberland. He compiled a pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe (used by Keith Scott in his 1923 book), which included information on their ancestors, the Scotts of Todrig and Whitslade. In 1759 he married Martha, daughter of Rev. Edward Fenwick, Vicar of Kirkwhelpington and they had 2 surviving sons, Walter and Edward Fenwick. William (18th C.) married Margaret Glendinning in Ashkirk in 1743. William of Woll (d.1785) eldest son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1744 (note that some accounts of these generations are quite confused). He was trained as an advocate and served as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. His estate was valued at £595 in the 1740s. He paid the window tax for Woll in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. Also in 1761 he was described as Sheriff Depute of Selkirkshire in a document regarding election of the Commissioners to Parliament. In 1764 he was named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. He is recorded as witness to an Ashkirk marriage in 1766; Charles 'at Woll' was also mentioned, this being his son. He is recorded as proprietor of Woll on Anslie's 1773 map. The Walter Mason Collection preserves correspondence with William Ogilvie in 1777 over shares of 'the Moss' and submissions between him and the Duke of Buccleuch in 1777 and 1778. He was taxed for having a male servant (Andrew Leggat) in 1778 and 1779. He married Jean, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows and Janet Plummer, who was a daughter of Plummer of Middlestead and Jean Kerr of Sunderland Hall. He inherited the lands of Broadmeadows through his wife, and she died in Hawick in 1797. They had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: Elizabeth (b.1741); Agnes (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Charles (b.1744), who succeeded; Isobel (b.1745); Margaret (b.1748); Janet or Jean (b.1750), his eldest surviving daughter, who married James Grieve and Rev. Benjamin Dickison; Elizabeth (b.1751); Andrew; Walter (b.1755); John of Midgehope (b.1757), father of William of Teviotbank; William (b.1759); and James (b.1760). It was said that his 5 daughters were all 6 feet high. The witnesses to the 1744 baptism were Alexander of Synton and John Sinton. A letter of his to Walter Scott of Harden from 1781 is in the National Archives. His wife 'Mrs. Scott of Wall' paid tax for having 2 female servants at her house in Hawick in 1786 and 1 in 1788–91. William (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Hugh (b.1740); John (b.1740); James (b.1742); Jean (b.1744); Mary (b.1744); Jean (again, b.1745); Violet (b.1756); and Wilhelmina (b.1759). The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Robert (b.1738), Rachel (b.1741) and Marion (b.1750). William of Thirlestane (18th

C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. However, this could be an error, since there was no Laird of that name at this time. William (1733–97) son of William. He was tenant in Milsington, like his father. He was recorded as owner of a saddle horse in 1785–94. Either he or his son was the William recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses, and also paid dog tax on 3 non-working horses at Milsington in the same year. He was 'Mr. Scott in Milsingtown' in 1771 and 1773. In 1760 he married his cousin Betty, daughter of Walter Scott in Girnwood. Their children were: William, who also farmed Milsington; Walter (b.1764), baptised in Roberton, who succeeded as tenant in Girnwood; Henry (b.1767), baptised in Roberton, who had a family and moved to America; Robert, a manufacturer in Hawick; Thomas, who went to America and drowned at sea; Jane (or Jean, b.1762), who married James Richardson (who was 1777 Cornet) in Hawick; Elizabeth, who married William Miller; Janet (b.1771), baptised in Roberton; and twin sons Robert and Thomas (b.1773), baptised in Roberton. William (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. The word 'fornication' was included on the register. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Burnet, who was also from the same parish. William (18th C.) resident at Parkhill near Chisholme in at least the period 1764–75. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Agnes (b.1762); James (b.1764); William (b.1766); Mary (b.1771); Janet (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). There are several marriages in Roberton at about the right time that could be his. William (18th C.) resident at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1775 when his son Alexander was baptised in Roberton Parish. Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Hawick, who owned Brieryhill. It is unclear if he was a descendant of the earlier William of Brieryhill. He had sasine for the lands of 'Brieriehole' in 1739. His lands were valued at £81 3s 10d in the 1740s. He was one of the instigators (along with Robert Langlands of that Ilk and James Scott of Easter Heap) for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time his land was still valued at £81 3s 10d. In 1776 and over the next few years he had a few cases written up in the Edinburgh journal 'Medical Commentaries'. These related, for example, to a mason who had a wounded thigh and a servant girl who passed 'fatty substances'. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish as being 'of Brirhole'. In 1787 and 1788 he was a bachelor in Hawick who paid tax for having a female servant. In 1787 the death of his servant Janet Rodger is recorded. In 1788 he was listed as owner of Brieryhill in Wilton Parish, which was valued at £81 3s 10d. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip. He was listed as a surgeon when he paid the horse tax in Hawick in 1794 and 1797 and the dog tax in 1797. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he may have been a son of the earlier William of Brieryhill. It is possible he is the surgeon of this name who medically examined some of the men balloted to serve in the Militia around 1800. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott 'Soldier', for merchant Andrew Scott and for carrier Walter Wilson in 1743, for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757 and (along with fellow shoemaker Andrew) for shoemaker Thomas Weens in 1765. He witnessed further baptisms in 1781 and 1784. He married Helen Gray and their children included Helen (b.1742). The witnesses in 1742 were baker Robert Scott (who may have been related) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was at Billerwell in 1758 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Dorothy (b.1753) and John (b.1761) may also have been his children. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1785, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. It is possible he was the gardener who witnessed a baptism for tailor William Turner in 1766. He could be the William whose children Thomas (b.1790) and James (b.1791) were baptised in Minto. William (18th C.) mason in Castleton Parish. He opened up the vault at Hermitage, discovering the supposed dungeon where Ramsay was starved to death. His son William was also a mason, as well as author of 'Border Exploits'. William (d.1794) shepherd at Priesthaughshiel. He died in the 'Gonial Blast' of January 1794, which killed several other shepherds in southern Scotland. William (18th C.) from Roberton, he was Schoolmaster at Hownam. He was appointed at Hownam in 1762 and held the position for at least 35 years. During this time there were disputes with the Session over his conduct (including premarital relations with his wife). He served as Session Clerk and Precentor, and although removed briefly in 1763, he was reinstated within a year. His qualifications were also questioned. In 1769 an examination by the Minister found that he had a rough temper and was often absent, 'leaving care of the school to others'. However, he was not removed and remained until at least 1797. He married Betty Burnet in Roberton in 1762 and their children, baptised in Hownam, included: Janet (b.1763); Nelly (b.1764), Walter and James (b.1771); and James (again, b.1771). William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1763 and 1766 when his daughter Ann and Helen were baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be related to the earlier William who lived at Highchesters. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1771. He married Jane Scott and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Christie and their son Thomas was baptised in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Robert (b.1783). Bailie William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was 'present Magistrate' in a baptismal entry of 1786. He is probably the Bailie William recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 2 work horses. He married Margaret Goodfellow in Hawick in 1775 and she died in 1811. Their children included: Robert (b.1776); George (b.1778), probably the son of Bailie William selected by ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; James (b.1782); unnamed (b.1785); Robert (again, b.1786); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1776, 1778 and 1791 were ex-Bailie Andrew and shoemaker Henry (who were probably relatives) and in 1786 were ex-Bailie Andrew and shoemaker Robert. He is probably the 'Ballia William Scott Mealmarket' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William of Burnhead (1723–1794) only surviving son of Robert and Agnes Scott, he was baptised in Wilton Parish. His maternal grandfather was Gideon of Falnash. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). He appears to have been involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the teinds of Clarilaw and Broomlands in the 1760s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1764 he subscribed to Sir Robert Douglas' 'Peerage of Scotland'. He was listed among others who claimed rights to peat and turf on Wilton Common in 1764; in the court proceedings for the division, he swore to the authenticity of a document written by his wife's father, Gideon of Falnash. He was also one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He later had a share of part of Hassendean Common when it was divided. There are documents of 1762 and 1765 relating to a dispute over the sale between him and Thomas Turnbull of Knows over the lands of 'Easter Crawhill, commonly called Easter Burnfoot'. An inventory exists of his 'Lands formerly called Kerswill of Hassendean now called Clarilaw' in 1767. In 1775 he wrote to Gilbert Eliott of Otterburn, describing the genealogy of the Elliots. He paid tax on a male servant (a footman or groom) in the period 1778–90, and for both a gardener and coachman 1791–94. He also paid tax for having a female servant in 1785 and 1786, 2 in 1787, 1 in 1788 and 2 in 1789 and 1790. He was taxed at Burnhead for owning a carriage in the period 1788–95 and horses in 1785–94. In 1788 his lands included Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw, Pinnacle and Lees, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot and Crawhill, all in Wilton Parish, and also Hummelknowes in Cavers Parish. He was also listed as owner of these lands in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although already deceased by then). When he died unmarried, the estate passed to his sister Margaret and then to his aunt Eupham's son William Watson. There is a document listing the finances of his lands of Burnhead and Hummelknowes, at the time of his death. William (1747/8–1820) tenant in Parkhill. He may have been son of the William who was tenant earlier. In 1759 in Roberton, he married Marion, daughter of James Clerk, tenant in Whitslade, and she died in 1798, aged 68. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several related people. William (18th C.) married Mary Michie in Hawick in 1786. William (18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1787 his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish and his son William in 1791. William (18th C.) recorded as servant to Mr. Scott of Wauchope in 1790 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1790 he married Katherine Hume. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Wilhelmina (or 'Mina') Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1788); Agnes (b.1790); John (b.1792); Wilhelmina (b.1794); William (b.1798); and James (b.1800). The baptisms were all recorded together in 1801, with John Henderson as a witness. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin's House on 1797, along with John. He was taxed for 2 farm horses, and so was probably the senior farmer. Willie from Martinshouse was probably a descendant. He could be the William who married Janet Beattie in Ashkirk Parish in 1761 and whose son John was baptised in 1768 (with his designation perhaps reading 'Martin house' and the witnesses being the Associate Congregation). William junior, recorded at Martin's House on the 1801 ballot for the Militia, may be his son; if so, then Charles, also there on the same list, was probably also his son. William (1729/30–1812) tobacconist in Hawick. He is probably the tobacconist of that name who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1787–90 and 1794. He seems likely to be related to the later tobacconist of the same name. He is probably the tobacconist William who was selected in 1755 to accompany the 'burleymen' and 'spademen' to mark the boundaries of the Common. He is probably the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children included: Sarah (b.1768); Francis (b.1769); Isabel (b.1771); James (b.1773); and Isabel (again, b.1775). Francis and James may be the tobacconists of Hawick in the early 1800s. He could be the son of Francis and Jean Miller baptised in Hawick in 1727. His death is reported at the age of 82. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Kedzie and their children included: George (b.1773), probably the joiner in Deanburnhaugh; Walter (b.1776); John (b.1778); and Jean (b.1779). William (1749–1810) son of William, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was a shepherd and later a land steward. In 1777 he married Janet Jack in Crailing Parish; she died in 1836, aged 82. Their children included: William (b.1779); Robert (b.1781); Jane (b.1783); Janet (b.1784); Mary (b.1786), who married John Blair, emigrated to Australia after being widowed and died at 'Haning', Armidale, aged 93; James (1788–1855), who was a ploughman; Richard (1790–1874), who married Jane Byers; Margaret (b.1793); Catherine (b.1795); and Walter (1796/7–1812). He is variously at Nisbet, Eckford, Town-o-Rule (in 1786) and Hallrule (in 1788 and 1790) when his children were baptised. The family are buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. William 'Keek i' the Kirk' (18th/19th C.) father of the landlord of the King's Head, mentioned in the 1823 Parish Records. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Scawmill in 1797. He married Sarah Farr and their son Edward was baptised in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) contributor (from Jamaica) in about 1800 to the local fund to support the war against France. He must have been from one of the local branches of the Scotts. He could be the same as Dr. William. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Margaret Currer from Cavers Parish. He is recorded as 'Mr' and his bride as 'Miss', suggesting he was a landowner perhaps. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shielswood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with James. They owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas was also there at that time and so presumably a close relative. Rev. William (1735–1809) 4th son of Walter of Nether Bonchester and Helen Turnbull (sister of Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule). He was younger brother of Thomas of Bonchester. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1760. He became minister at Ravingstondale in 1762 and was translated to Abbotrule in 1764. He was the last minister of the former Parish, reading the 'Decreet of Suppression' in 1777 and finally moving to Southdean in 1785. He was then minister at Southdean until his death. It is said that in 1791 a ghostly rider appeared to him and 2 other ministers (or perhaps the elders) at about the same time that Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule died. It is likely he is the 'Mr' William who witnessed a baptism for Walter (resident of Coldhouse) in 1780. He is recorded at Southdean on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 2 work horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Sybil, daughter of John Henderson of Lockholm, Westmorland (although her name is also given as Hewitson), and she died in 1822. Their children were: Walter (b.1767), who had 2 sons, William and John, neither of whom had male heirs; John (b.1769), who had at least 8 children, but no grandchildren; Thomas (b.1773), who died without offspring; Adam (b.1775), insurance broker in London, who assumed the surname 'Scott-Elliot' when succeeding to Arkleton through his wife; Anne Nancy (b.1771, possibly also called Dorothy), who married Mr. Reid and later Charles Baxter of Edinburgh; William; and Robert Hewitson (b.1785), who died young. He wrote a description of Southdean Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account. A Southdean poet, Thomas Oliver wrote about the suddenness of his death – 'I saw him from the kirk descend, And in five hours his life did end'. A monument to his memory is in Southdean kirkyard. William (1739–1814) son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliot. He farmed at Singlie, like his father. Among his employees (for a time) was James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He paid the Horse Tax at Singlie

Their children included: Robert (1773–1844), tenant in Todshawhaugh; James (b.1775), a doctor in the army; William (1776–1855), also an army doctor; George (b.1779), who went to Africa with Mungo Park, and died there; Henry (1780–1852), an Edinburgh hatter; Elizabeth (1782–1847), who married David (or perhaps Robert) Henderson of Abbotrule; Jane or Janet (1784–1800), who married Elliot of Flat (probably John); Gideon (1786–1839), who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Thomas (1788–1858), Captain in the army and tenant at Shielswood; Margaret (d.1800), who drowned along with her sister and 2 of their companions while bathing in a deep pool in the Ettrick; Isabella (1791–1800), who also drowned; John (1795–1853), youngest son, who was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd and became a distinguished surgeon in Edinburgh; and Jessie, who married Rev. David Scott of Newcastleton. William (18th C.) labourer in Hawick Parish. He married Betty Philip and their children included: John (b.1774); George (b.1776); and Robert (b.1784). The witnesses in 1774 were the whole congregation and in 1784 were William Philip and mason Robert Philip (surely related to his wife). William 'Wullie the King' (18th/19th C.) landlord of the King's Head. His children were 'Andrew the King' and 'Nelly the King'. His wife was Janet Dickson (possibly a daughter of Nellie Dickson, a former proprietor of the same inn). He probably lived in a pended house on the High Street near the Cross Wynd, known as 'Wullie the King's'. He is probably the William recorded on the 1841 census as a publican at around 30 High Street – 'Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird' [HI]. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Roughleeneuk, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He was probably related to George and Walter, who were also at Roughleeneuk at about the same time. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1796 he was recorded as servant at Colterscleuch and householder at Lodgeknowe when his unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.bef. 1809) from Girnwood. The death of his daughter Lizzie is William (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Cavers Parish in 1787. recorded in Hawick in 1809. He is recorded as 'Independent' in 1841, when he was living at about 9 Langholm Street in Newcastleton. His sons William and Francis were carters, and he also had a daughter, Agnes. William of Friarshaw (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was also owner of parts of Midlem. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scott-Douglases of Friarshaw, and it may be that his name is an error. Dr. William (1773–1834) son of John and Elizabeth Thomson. He served as a surgeon in the sugar plantations of Barbados, being based at Content, St. Thomas on the island of Barbados. He amassed a fortune, some of which he left to his nephew John White, miller of Hawick Mill. He could be the surgeon William listed in Hawick on the subscription list to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Eliza Tucker in the West Indies, but retired to Edinburgh, although later moving to Paris. He is buried at Pere la Chaise cemetery in Paris, and a portrait of him exists, with one hand missing. William of Raeburn (1773–1855) son of Walter. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1819 he married Janet, daughter of Mr. Arres, farmer at Farmington (although it is also said she was from Kirkton); she died in 1835. He died without issue, and the lease of Milsington went to his nephew James. William (1772–1846) son of Gideon and Mary Scott, he was born at Parkhead in Roberton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Wilson, who was from Hawick; the marriage was proclaimed in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. They had a son James (b.1797), who worked as a railway engineer in Liverpool, along with his brother William; his great-great grandson was airship pilot George Herbert Scott. He died in York. In the 'Local Historians Table Book' of 1841 it is described how more than 20 years ealier he had a run in with Robert Elliot, 'Little Hobbie o the Castleton', who lived at Byreholm. He was described as 'an able, stout, brave borderer, who stood 6ft. 3in. high' and had been spreading stories to harm the reputation of his diminutive neighbour. Elliot took him upstairs in his house, showed him pistols and swords and challenged him to a duel, at which he fled. If he existed at all, then he may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Woll and Sunderland Hall (1778–1820) eldest son of Charles of Woll. In 1801 he was 'Mr William Scott (In first Regt Edr. Vol)' on the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish; this meant that he was already a volunteer and hence excepted from selection for the Militia. He was promoted to Captain in the Selkirk and Galshiels Volunteer Infantry in 1803 and was Captain during the False Alarm of 1804. He was referred to as 'younger of Woll' during his father's lifetime; he was so listed along with his father among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was still 'younger of Wool' when listed as a Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Commissioner in 1819. He trained as an Advocate and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1811. His family had inherited Sunderland Hall through marriage. He went to Canada and there in 1815 married Alicia, daughter of Richard John Uniacke of Mount Uniacke (who was Attorney-General for Cape Breton and Judge of the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia). Charles was also listed there and probably his brother. He was probably related to the earlier and later Williams who were from the same place. He could be the William, farmer at Martin's House, who witnessed a baptism in 1836 for William Knox. William (b.c.1780) servant to John, tenant at Ashkirk Mill, according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. William (b.c.1780) servant at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. in Minto Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was separate from the farm servant of the same name who was also there in 1801. In 1806, at the desire of Lord Dalkeith, he performed some excavations at Hermitage, uncovering a paved floor and finding a large key. When the school at Burnmouth was closed during harvest time he travelled the country lettering new tombstones, and deciphering old ones. He collected historical artefacts, and was an expert on local traditions. He published 'Border Exploits' in Hawick in 1812 (2nd edition 1832) and also 'Beauties of the Border' (1821). He was recorded as Schoolmaster at Burnmouth among heads of households 1835–41. He was listed as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Burnmouth in Pigot's 1837 directory. He married Isabella Veitch from the Bedrule family. He had 3 sons, one of whom, Andrew (b.1800), became a Professor at Aberdeen University, while another, Thomas, was a teacher at Beith and Kirkcaldy in Fife. He is probably the William (aged 77) who is recorded as Schoolmaster at Burnmouth in 1841, living along with his wife Janet (presumably a second wife). He died after accidentally being thrown from a cart and is buried in Castleton. David Anderson wrote a poem after he died – 'No more will be sculpture the stone for the dead, No more show the young the pure path they should tread, No more, lonely Hermitage, will he pourtray Thy clear sparkling waters and battlements grey' [DA]. William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Lillico in Wilton in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the William whose heirs were recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874. William (1795–1859) clerk with Wilson's, who was known as a local poet and a strong temperance supporter. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, and had 10 of his own poems included in Ruickbie's 'Poems' (1826). He wrote some lines about the talents of his contemporary, James Hogg (of 'Teribus'). He was also a close friend of the local poet Elliot Aitchison, as well as Andrew Leyden, brother of the poet and linguist. He was a competitor in the contest for poems of the Auld Brig in 1851 (writing under the pseudonym 'Doubleyou Ess'), and also contributed to the local press. A poem on the celebration of the Duke of Buccleuch's birthday apparently earned him a job as a clerk at the Dalkeith colliery. He later moved further away and died in Belfast. His daughter Margaret Isabella Sarah was the first wife of Sir James A.H. Murray, while another daughter, Elizabeth Jane married George Easton. His long poem 'The Sportynge Dominie; or, a Sang o' ane Gray Catte' was published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859, when he was said to have 'now left this country and gone to Ireland'; this poem contains many examples of dialect words from the mid-19th century. William (b.c.1785) butcher of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 the family were living at Synton Lodge. In 1826 he married Mary Scott (c.1806–80), daughter of John and Helen Scott from Selkirk Parish; there are thus a lot of Scotts in this family tree! the Scotts (thu-sko's) n. important family in the Hawick area since at least the 13th century. The origins of the surname are murky, since in the earliest times there were many men known as 'le Scot' (or similar) in English or other records, indicating where they came from, while they may have alternative designations in other records. The noble family of this name gained extensive lands around Branxholme about 1440, and became more powerful as the Scotts of Buccleuch, being involved in rieving, rivalries and politics since then. Uchtred 'Filius Scot' seems likely to have been an ancestor, whose family are said to have come from Galloway. There are some claims that Scotstoun in Peeblesshire may have been an early family possession. But in any case, the original local home of the family was at 'Rankilburn' (essentially synonymous with Buccleuch and Bellenden) near the head of the Ale Water, later moving to Branxholme, and then Dalkeith and Bowhill. The 16th century was a time of great power struggles, with feuds fought with both the Kerrs and the Elliots, as well as alliances with less powerful families, such as the Chisholmes, Dalgleishes, Gledstains and Turnbulls. A letter of remission of 1526 lists no fewer than 60 men of this surname. There were separate Scotts in Ewesdale and Eskdale until incorporated into the local clan by Sir Walter in 1596 (although it is also stated that they descended from the Thirlestane branch). Upper Teviotdale, the Borthwick and Ale valleys were the strongholds of the family for centuries. The Dukedom of Buccleuch became one of the richest in Scotland and the main Scott seat is now at Bowhill. Several minor branches of the Buccleuch family have been important within Hawick, including Scotts of Goldielands and Allanhaugh. The Scotts of Harden have an ancient history, and are now represented by the Lords Polwarth. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were prominent Hawick townsmen for centuries, as well as Scotts of Alton, and other local branches include the Scotts of Crumhaugh, of Whitehaugh, of Goldielands, of Burnfoot, of Hassendean, of Synton, of Todrig, of Whitslade, of Woll, etc. Around the 16th and 17th centuries there were property-owning Scotts in Hawick, called 'o the Mote', 'o the Toor', etc., who were probably branches from younger sons of local Lairds. Around the 18th century there were also tradesman-class families within and around Hawick, e.g. the Mill Port Scotts, the West Port Scotts (probably related to the Crumhaugh branch), the East Port Scotts, the Scotts at the Cross, the Scotts of the Wyndheid, the Ormiston Scotts, the Scotts of Hummelknowe Mill, etc. The family motto is 'Amo' (I love), the arms of the Scotts of Buccleuch are a 6-pomited star and two crescent moons on a blue diagonal band (also described as 'or, on a bend azure a mullet between two crescents of the field') and the crest is 'a stag reippant, proper'. A huge amount of family history is contained in the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, which are preserved in the National Archives of Scotland, much of which was transcribed by William Fraser in 1878 – 'He was gloved and mailed, he was booted and spurred, For a Scott must ride at the lightest word' [WHO].

In 1861 his household included a governess, a nurse, a cook and 3 other female servants. He became a Lieutenant in the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers) when it formed in 1860. At various times it was either synonymous with Hunthill or may have been essentially the same as what would later be called Kersheugh or Ferniehirst. The 'baronie de Scraysburgh' is recorded in 1456. Once a prominent settlement, a document of 1544 records that a company of Englishmen 'ventred vpoun the gratest towne in all Tieudale called Scraisbrugh a towne of the Lord Hunthyll's' where they took rich spils, a great amount of livestock and 38 prisoners. It was caused by 2 acts of the General Assembly in 1732, principally regarding the powers of the congregation to appoint ministers. The dissent was led by Ebenezer and Ralph Erskine, who were from Berwickshire (and related to Harry Erskine, minister at Roberton). The Seceders called themselves the Associate Synod, and gathered strength until they split over whether members of their church could conscientiously take the Burgess Oath, which talked of supporting the 'true religion at present professed within the realm'. This led to the formation of the Burgher and Anti-Burgher kirks. In about 1738 it was stated that in Hawick Parish the Seceders did not register their baptisms, this amounting to about 3 per year. This fraction grew, however, particularly from the late 1750s, when Thomas Boston's Relief Church started with support of most of the Jedburgh established church congregation. The customs within the secession movement were generally stricter than in the established church, e.g. it is stated that at local weddings in the 18th century the bridal party danced back to back. Some locals attended the associate church in Midlem before the Green Kirk (Anti-Burghers) was built in the 1760s, followed by the East Bank Kirk (Burghers) in the 1770s.

He also published 'Spider's Wings – A Collection of 50 Poems', as well as organ and choral church music. He arranged the music for the revival of 'The Gutterbludes' in 2000, matching the lyrics to some of Adam Grant's other music, as well as writing 3 entirely new pieces and an overture. He acted as musical editor for the 2001 edition of 'The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection', providing some accompaniments to new songs and revised accompaniments to a few of the old. There was formerly a farmstead cottage there. Robert Fowler was there in 1743. The farmer recorded in 1797 was James Davidson (the name may be humorously applied because of the water in the area).

In 1861 he is recorded living at Minto Cleuchhead, farming 375 acres and employing 13 people. He served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Mr. Selby who, along with George Pott of Dod, first suggested building a bridge and roads to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He was listed as a Steward at the Common-Riding Races of 1836. His right to be a registered voter was questioned in the House of Commons investigation into 'Fictitious Voters' in 1837. He was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was still recorded as farmer at Hassendeanbank in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, servant to Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto; her diaries are in the National Library of Scotland Manuscript Collection. His children included Robert (who farmed at Hassendeanbank), Gilbert R. and William. His wife is probably the 'Mrs. Selby, wife of the factor on Minto estate', who is said to have helped the young James 'Dictionary' Murray to learn Italian and German. Robert (18th/19th C.) factor at Minto. His son Ephraim was also factor there, while his daughter Mary married hosiery manufacturer Peter Wilson. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Robert (b.1840/1) son of Ephraim. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 434 acres and employing 15 people at Hassendeanbank, although only 20 years old. He was present at the famous otter hunt of 1863, led by Dr. Grant of Hawick. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. Sir William (c.1556–1638) son of Sir John, he was Governor of Berwick and one of the Border Commissioners. In 1603 he was sent to deal with the Armstrongs and other Liddesdale men who were regarded as trouble-makers, burning many Border towers in the process.

the Selgovæ (thu-sel-gō-vI) n., pl. ancient Celtic tribe which existed in the Borders during and after Roman occupation. Their territory consisted of the middle and upper Tweed basin and its tributaries (including the Teviot) and extended to the Solway (and was probably the origin of that name). One of their headquarters was at Newstead near Melrose, called Trimontium. The other 3 towns mentioned by Ptolemy were Carbantorigum, Uxellum and Corda, and all are unidentified. The Votadini were the tribe to the east and north, and the Novantae to the west. However, it is unclear whether the Selgovæ were part of the Votadini or distinct. They were effectively conquered by the Romans in 79–80 C.E. (the word is though to mean 'hunters').

seliceset (se-līs-se') pp., poet. ceased – 'An' whan they wer come intill the schip the win' seliceset' [HSR] (the word is obscure, perhaps a variant of 'silenced').

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. town 11 miles north of Hawick, being the Ancient and Royal Burgh of Selkirk, built high above the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, which was the seat of the county of Selkirkshire. The town has for centuries been on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh. It was already an established mediæval town when David I established and abbey here in 1113 (although the monks soon moved to Kelso), with a castle and hunting forest following in the same century. Selkirk became a Royal Burgh perhaps in the 13th century and the Scottish Parliament met here in 1204. James V granted part of the royal forest as a common, and the town may have had the largest common in the country. The town has a mediæval plan, built around the market square, although the top part of the old town was levelled in the 1960s. It was burned by the English in 1418 and the inhabitants robbed in 1502 by Englishman Sir John Musgrave, with the help of Adam Turnbull (tenant at Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton). It was burned by the English again in 1543. A nearby massacre of Montrose's Royalists took place by Leslie's Covenanters in 1645. Sir Walter Scott was Sheriff here for 33 years. His statue sits in the square, and there are also memorials to Selkirk natives Mungo Park, Tom Scott and J.B. Selkirk, as well as the 'Fletcher' statue by Thomas Clapperton. The Pant Well monument is from 1898, although the well was in use much earlier. The old Court House dates from 1803 and has a 33 m (110 ft) spire. The County Buildings and Court House are linked to the Old Jail under the main road. Originally known for shoemaking, specialist tweed industries and latterly other light industries are now the main employers, with the mills on the low ground of the Ettrick haughs. Selkirk Common Riding is at least 400 years old, involving the Riding of the Marches as well as a commemoration of the return of 'Fletcher' from Flodden (another version states that Walter Brydon, the Town Clerk, was the only one surviving from the town's 80 volunteers). Records of the 'ryding off the comon' go back to at least 1516/7. Ceremonies include 'crying the burley', bussing the Burgh Flag, fording the River Ettrick, and the 'casting of the colours'. An article on the history of the ceremonies (by Alexander Hogg) was published in the Archæological Society Transactions in 1867. Part of it was filmed around 1900 by Hawick man David Gaylor. The 'Sutors o' Selkirk' and 'Flowers o' the Forest' are the traditional songs. The town's coat of arms shows a Madonna and Child, although there are claims it originally represented a dead woman with suckling child found at Ladywoodedge when the remnants of the local men returned from =Flodden. Population (1991) 5,922. J. Walter Elliot has written several books on the history of Selkirk – 'Then up with the banner to Selkirk men's honour, That sounded o'er Britain eight ages and more . . . ' [JH], '. . . And threaded his way through the oakwood brown To the diamond roofs of Selkirk town' [WHO] (the origin is possibly Old English for 'hall church' or 'church by the shiels'; Teries often talk about going 'ower ti Selkirk'; it is 'Selechirche' in about 1120, 'Selkryke' in 1415 and 'Selcrige' in 1597 in a letter from Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; it is marked 'Selkirck' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and 'Selkirk' on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. Adam (13th C.) cleric who took his name from Selkirk. In 1268 he was witness to an act of Bishop Gamelin of St. Andrews. He may be the same as one of the other priests called Adam, e.g. de Golin. Herbert (d.1164) Tironensian monk, sometimes referred to as 'Herbert of Selkirk'. He became the 3rd Abbot of Selkirk in 1119 and persuaded the King to allow the monks to move to Kelso by 1127. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1147 and remained in that position until he died. He was thus Hawick's bishop for about 17 years. He was Bishop around 1150 when he confirmed the gift of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Hugh Selechirch' during the reign of Alexander II, when Petronella, daughter of 'Adam Harang' granted lands in the Borthwick, which were said to be adjacent to his house. His name may be 'selech' rather than 'Selkirk'. Hugh (13th C.) priest who was already Master in the early 1290s when he witnessed a charter for lands in Perth. He became Archbishop of Brechin by 1298. He witnessed an act of Bishop Nicholas of Dunblane in the early 1300s. He was presumably a graduate in Canon Law, since in 1309 he was appointed to investigate the Order of Templars in Scotland. J.B. see James B. Broon. Rev. Matthew (c.1642–1728) graduating from Glasgow University in 1662, he was chaplain to Douglas of Bonjedward in the 1670s. He may have preached at a field conventicle organised by Lady Douglas of Cavers in 1680. He was said to have been assaulted for his support of 'the Indulgence' in the late 1680s. He became minister at Crichton in 1690. He married Agnes Cunningham and his children included Matthew, Robert, James, Janet, Agnes and Lawrence. Peter (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2. His name is given as 'Petrus de Selekirke'. William 'Wullie Dunlop' (1811–93) possibly Hawick's shortest man. Born in Lauder, he lived in Gala until he was 16, but then spent most of his life in Hawick. At age 15 he developed severe joint pains, leaving him quite stunted. He worked as a seamer, and reared game cocks as a hobby. His walking stick is in the Museum.

Selkirk Abbey (sel-kurk-aw-bee) n. former abbey in Selkirk, with no visible trace remaining. It was founded around 1113 by David I, with 13 monks brought from the reformed Benedictine Order in France. It was founded in honour of St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and received a large amount of the surrounding lands. The location of the abbey itself was probably the old kirkyard of Lindean by the Batts (i.e.'Abbot's' Burn). It is unlikely to have been a very substantial structure, since by 1128 the abbey was moved to Kelso. A roll of the abbots is: Radulf, 1113–17; William 1117–19; Herbert 1119–28.

Selkirk banni (sel-kurk-baw-ni) n. Selkirk bannock, a type of round fruit loaf made in Selkirk (also written 'bannae'; cf. curny banni).

Selkirk Castle (sel-kurk-kaw-sul) n. former castle in Selkirk, probably dating to the early 12th century. It was frequently used by Scottish Kings in the 12th and 13th centuries, mostly as a royal hunting seat, but also holding occasional parliaments there. A new castle was built in 1302, including a drawbridge and portcullis. In 1304 it appears to have been captured by the Scots, but was back in English hands 2 years later, and in 1310 the English King, Edward II, stayed there for several days. After Bannockburn the office of Constable of Selikirk passed to Turnbull of Philiphaugh. From the Turnbulls it passed to the Murrays and later to families in Selkirk, who were 'of the Auld Peel'. Its ruins are near the end of Castle Street (formerly the 'Peel Gait') on Peel Hill, in the grounds of the Haining, where the motte and some associated earthworks can be made out. The 'castrum de selkirk' is recorded in 1502, when Walter, son of Walter Scott of Heandshaw was accused of stealing a horse from there.

Selkirk Common (sel-kurk-ko-min) n. common land of the Burgh of Selkirk, lying to the south-east of the town and containing a racecourse. There is a long history of dispute over ownership of these lands, which were once very extensive. There is a triangulation pillar there ('Selkirck comon' is marked on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and 'Selkirck Comon' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Parts of the Borthwick valley and areas around Ashkirk have shifted back and forth between Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire over the centuries, with some Parishes being split between both counties, or having disjoint parts in one or other county. A 2 volume history of the county was published by T. Craig Brown in 1886. The population was 4,021 in 1755, 5,388 in 1801, 5,889 in 1811, 6,637 in 1821, 6,833 in 1831, 7,990 in 1841, 9,809 in 1851, 10,449 in 1861, 14,005 in 1871, 25,564 in 1881, 27,353 in 1891, 23,356 in 1901, 24,601 in 1911, 22,607 in 1921, 22,608 in 1931 and 21,724 in 1951.

the Seturdi (thu-se'-ur-di) n. Common Riding Saturday, beginning with the end of the Ball and greeting the dawn with song-singing at the Mote, and then a last dancing of the Reel in front of the Tower. There is usually a short rest before the Drums and Fifes rouse the town at 8 a.m., walking from the West Port to the Horse. At 9.30 a.m. the mounted procession proceeds to the Park, where the Principals stand in their stirrups and sing 'Teribus' at the end of the Avenue, before laying wreaths at the War Memorial. They then ride through the streets and are led from the Horse to the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. They then proceed to the Moor via the Duke's Wood, the Flex, Wulliestruther, Pilmuir Rig and Pilmuir Field. The riders once again do a circuit of the race course, and the Flag is displayed as on the previous day. There are more races and events there, but shorter than on the Friday. The Cornet takes the Flag from the roof of the Committee room at 3 p.m., after which he leads his mounted supporters back to the Town Hall via Crumhaughhill, being met at the top of the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. The cavalcade then proceed along the High Street for the Handing Back ceremony at the Town Hall. The Cornet returns the Flag to the Provost 'unsullied and unstained', and displays it one last time from the balcony. As the Cornet lowers the Flag the Saxhorn Band play 'the Invocation'. At the end of the tune the Cornet re-plants the Flag and the Big Four say their last farewells to it and the crowd, the Left-Hand Man and then the Acting Father being last to leave the balcony. After this the men are usually carried shoulder-high to the Tower to dance the Reel again. The 'Greetin Denner' has been traditionally held on the Saturday evening and the Principals usually visit the Shows, or in recent years go back to the Moor to see the live bands. It is unclear how far back the Saturday traditions go, with the first clear record being in 1744 when it was written that the Cornet was 'to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after'. In older times the Saturday proceeded similarly to the Friday, with the Races and Games at the Haugh (with the Dinner between), but with a shorter programme. There was also a more formal Dinner on the Saturday, and the formal end of the Common Riding was the Kirking ceremony, which happened on the Sunday afterwards. The Drums and Fifes first took part in the Saturday procession from 1889. The tradition of riding the boundaries of the newly acquired Wilton Lodge estate was began in 1890, but in 1892 was replaced with a visit to the Lodge. The Drums and Fifes and Burgh Officer were first involved in the Saturday procession from 1890.

His wife Bell died in 1811. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-frame maker of the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His wife was Mary Ann, and their children included Robert, William, Walter, James, Isabella, John, Jane, Elizabeth and George. His wife ran a grocer's shop according to the 1851 census, but it is his name that appears as a Teviot Square shopkeeper in Slater's 1852 directory. By 1861 he is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer at 1 Fore Row. He is probably the James who donated 2 silver coins and 5 copper foreign coins to the Museum before 1865. John (d.bef. 1765) tenant farmer at Mackside. In 1763 he and his son William purchased Easter Howlands (later called Dovemount) from Charles Tudhope. His heirs were involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. His only surviving son was William (b.1749). However, these Hobkirk baptisms may also have been his children: Janet (b.1735); Ann (b.1737); Adam (b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1741); Robert (b.1744); Thomas (b.1745); and Isobel Elizabeth (b.1747). John (b.c.1780) labourer at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.c.1810) from England, he was a joiner in Hawick in the mid-19th century. He personally visited public houses on Saturday evenings (along with his beadle) to make sure that no drink was served after the prescribed hour. He once fought off a gang of drunken young men who tried to steal the communion cups from his bedroom in the Old Manse; it was said that he moved the entire congregation to tears when recounting the events in his next sermon, and that this was remembered long afterwards. He is believed to have started one of the first Sunday Schools in Scotland at about the same time as Samuel Charters in Wilton (as mentioned in the British Chronicle or Union Gazette for 1786, although no names are given). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. His servant Andrew Elliot witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick in 1789. He moved to become minister at Corstorphine in 1789. In 1782 he married Alison, daughter of

James Russell of Ashiestiel, and they had 4 children, including: Thomas Boston (b.1784); Jean (b.1786), who died in infancy; and Jean Boston (b.1788). It seems likely that he named some of his children after the earlier minister of Ettrick, Thomas Boston. He died only a couple of years after leaving Hawick. Vivian 'Viv' (1935–2012) born and bred in Hawick, he was named after Cornet Vivian Grieve and lived at 4 different houses on Dickson Street. He took up public singing only after a Burns Club singing competition in the late 1970s. But he soon became a fixture at the Common Riding, club dinners and wherever there was a sing-song. He realeased a CD 'Naturally Sharp' in 2001 and another with Drew Gibb. His regular party piece was 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best', which he sang annually at the end of the Thursday morning Hut. He married Betty and had children Lorraine, Michael and Natalie. He was 'William Sharp, Esq; Hartsgarth' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784 and in 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89. He was recorded as owner of Hartsgarth and Langhaugh in the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, the lands being valued at £466 13s 4d. He married Jean, daughter of Robert Elliot, farmer in Hermitage. Their children included: Ann (b.1772); John (b.1783); and Sally (b.1784), who for some reason was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (19th C.) He was a Liberal, with strong views on home-rule, the South African War and law reform. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 on the opening of the new Public Library in Hawick. He made the presentation of Tom Scott's 'Return from Hornshole' at the 1898 Colour Bussing. He served in a judicial capacity in the House of Lords and the Privy Council until 1929, although without any obvious distinction. He also served on many commissions and public inquiries. He published two unconventional autobiographies, 'Letters to Isabel' (1921) and 'The Other Bundle' (1927), as well as legal works, biographies and 2 plays in verse. He was succeeded as 2nd Baron Craigmyle by his son Alexander. Rev. William Berry 'Willie' (1775/6–1856) eldest son of George, minister at Abbotshall, he studied at St. Andrews University and was licensed to preach in 1799. His brother 'Robbie' was minister at Teviothead and then Ewes. At St. Andrews he shared a room with Thomas Chalmers, who became leader of the Free Kirk Disruption. He acted as assistant to Rev. Thomas Elliot at Cavers in 1801 and later in that year was ordained as assistant minister and successor at Roberton. However, he demitted in 1812 when he became the new minister at Langholm. During the intervening period he assisted the previous minister, James Hay, who had retired for his health, but recovered and took up his duties again in 1812. He remained at Langholm until his death. He was an anti-Reformist, in 1817 calling those from Langholm who wrote a Reformist petition 'idle, profligate miscreants'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza, youngest daughter of Henry Scott of Deloraine in 1813; she was the 'Bonnie lass of Deloraine' in a poem of the Ettrick Shepherd's, and along with her sister Margaret, they were the prototypes for 'Minna' and 'Brenda' in Sir Walter Scott's 'The Pirate'. Their children were George, William, Henry, Margaret, Jane and Elizabeth. He wrote 'Five Single Sermons' (published in Hawick, 1810), 'Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical' (1859) and a sermon in Gillan's 'Scottish Pulpit'. It is said that when he signed the Confession of Faith he added a flourish which looked like 'E.E.' perhaps meaning 'erroribus exceptis' ('excepting errors'). William 'Bill' (b.c.1805) weaver from England. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841 he was living at Hawick Kirkyard, in 1851 on the Fore Raw and in 1861 at 11 Kirkwynd. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, Janet, James, Molly, Jane, William and Betsy. William Clegg (b.c.1835) son of weaver Bill, he was a printer in Hawick. He married Jane Young, daughter of commission agent James Hunter. Their children included: Ella Young (b.1870); and William Clegg (b.1871).

Shawbrae (shaw-brā) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. It is probably asociated with the modern Shaw Hill. 'Longhaugh and Strawbrae' [sic] is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot, with 'the Shawbrae pasture-ground' recorded as part of the boundary of Elliot's lands.

Shawburn (shaw-burn) n. farm near the stream of the same name in Lilliesleaf Parish. T. Jeffrey was farmer there in 1868 – 'And whiles we've daundered up the glen Where flowers nod by Shawburn, And where the blossoms grow sae white On many an ancient thorn' [FL].

Shaw Burn (shaw-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running past Lethem to join the Jed Water. Near the head of the stream is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary ditch. The stream passes 'Wattie's Spindles' and Hilly Linn. On the west side of its lower stretches are the remains of a small building on a terrace.

Shaw Craigs (shaw-krāgz) n. rocky hill on the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes, just north of Lethem. It reaches a height of 300 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. It also contains the remains of a fort and settlement, now within a clearing of the forest. It may be of early Iron Age date, with later construction phases, since it consists of different walls and ramparts, covering about 90 m by 50 m. It has also been suggested that the last period of construction may be post-Roman (also written 'Shaw Craig').

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands near Hawick, with precise location unknown. It is listed among the Baron's lands in Hawick in 1615. It is also listed in the 1627 valuation of the lands in Hawick Parish, between Weensland and 'Trowhauch' in the list, and hence probably somewhere in that area. It is described as 'three lands callit the Schawis' and 'paying presentlie 12 bolls; estimat to 8 bolls in stok and 2 bolls in teynd' annually (it is 'Schawis' in 1615).

the Shaws (thu-shawz) n. area around Shaws Under Loch, south of Shaw's Hill, between the Ettrick and Ale valleys. There was once a farm here owned by the Waughs, called Ettrickshaws Farm on modern maps. This may be the Shaws held by Walter Scott (along with Berrybush) in 1513. It may also be the 'Schawis' tenanted by the Laird of Cranston in 1541, valued at £10 and 'in rental' £22. It is possible this was the 'three merk land of Shaws' granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1653. It was owned by John Ker in 1678 and by Charles Scott of Woll in 1785, and valued at £204 3s 4d. A stone cist and bones were discovered here in about 1865, at the nearby 'Sleepy Knowe'; the excavation was described by Dr. James Brydon in 1869. There are several other local places called 'Shaws' (it is 'Schawis' in 1513 and 1670 and 'the Schawes' in c.1680; it is marked 'Shawis' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Shaws (shawz) n. farm to the east of the B6399 where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It is probably 'Le Schewis' which in 1428/9 was granted to Archibald Douglas of Cavers by William, Earl of Angus, and 'le Schawis' when granted to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later. It was probably the seat of the Elliots called 'the Shaws' in the 16th century. In 1541 the tenants was Robert Elliot and the lands were valued at 5 merks. 'Hob of the Schawis' (an Elliot) is recorded in 1569, Gib Elliot of the Shaws in 1578 and Adam Elliot in the Shaw in the 1580s. Gavin Elliot of 'the Schawis' was there in 1611. Robert Henderson and William Watson were there in 1694. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it was combined with Newlands, the farms together covering 245 acres, bounded by Roughley, Cleuchhead, Toftholm, Netherraw and Millburnholm, and including some land on the west side of the river; the farmhouse seems to be in much the same place as the modern one, and woods are also shown, including young alders, between the farmhouses. George Turnbull was a mason there in 1799 and William Hardie a labourer in 1801. In the latter part of the 19th century the tenant was Mr. Ballantyne and the farm extended all the way to Steele Road. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm (it is 'lye Schawis' in 1472, 'Schawis' in 1541, 1569, 1574 and 1578, 'the Shawes' in 1581, 'the Schaw' in 1586, 'ye Schawis' in 1623 and 'Shaues' in 1694; it is marked as 'Shawis' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Shawes' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Shawes' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Shaws' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands probably near the head of the Borthwick and Teviot valleys. In 1610 James Douglas of Drumlanrig complained that William Scott of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk had not paid taxes they owed him on his lands of 'Ramseclewis, Howpaisay and Schawis'. It is unclear precisely where this was.

Shawshiel Rig (shaw-sheel-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, essentially being the lower south-west part of Arnton Fell, between Newlands and the Steele. There are remains of a turf-walled building and field systems there. It was presumably once the shiel for Shaws farm.

He was also listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1699 his wife Bessie Dickson accused Janet Rae, wife of John Douglas, with enticing their daughter 'Isobel Sheine' (about 12 years old) to steal 'meal, bear, and flesh' from his house, witnesses saying that some of the items were so heavy that they 'made her pouch wagg and shogg'. He was also recorded in 1703 as a 'fisher' in Hawick. He married Margaret Elliot and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1686. Other children may have included John (b.1791) and William (b.1793). Probably the same John secondly married Bessie Dickson and their children included: William (b.1701); Robert (b.1703); and Nicholas (b.1705). He was for a while landlord of the Irish Harp pub in Baker Street. He was living at Baker Street in 1868 when he donated a coin to the Museum. His coffin apparently had to be taken out of the window in Baker Street, because it was too large for the stairs, and his funeral was said to be about the best attended in Hawick up until that time. Sherwinlaw (sher-win-law) n. hill and place name somewhere near Jedburgh. Later Christiana, wife of Gervase Riddell, gave a third of her lands of 'Hernwingeslawe' to the monks of Jedburgh. 'Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe' swore fealty to Edward I in 1296; the same man was 'de Sherewyndelawe' when he had his lands restored later in 1296. It is possible that this is the same place as Shirenscleuch near Bellendean, but it is more likely it is an ancient form of Mervinslaw. Sir 'Joceto de Scherwynlaw' was witness to a charter relating to Kelso Abbey in about 1328 (recorded as early as the mid-12th century, the origin may be from Old English 'sceorf', meaning 'steep slope', plus 'wynd', or from the local dialect 'shirrew', meaning 'field mouse').

His brother William and son John are also listed, their surname being recorded as 'Schewill'. David in 'Hoppiston' and David in 'Langrau' are also listed. He could be the same Andrew, 'alias Dand', who was listed in 1502 along with David, being among Turnbulls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote recorded in 1684 for failing to appear in Jedburgh when cited. Margaret Lorraine (who was married to a Shiel, perhaps even him) and Grizel Lorraine were also cited, and all of them wer probably Covenanters. Andrew (b.1798/9) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he is recorded as joint farmer with his younger brother John and nephew James. They were farming 250 acres and employed 14 people. Also living on the farm were his nieces Margaret and Elizabeth, and another nephew, Rutherford. He was still listed as farmer there in 1868. Anna (17th/18th C.) daughter of Margaret Lorraine, with her father probably being Andrew. She was listed (along with her mother and 2 other Shiels) in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. She was listed as 'dochter of the said Margret, now servitrix to the Lady Bonjeddart' (probably wife of William Douglas of Bonjedward). Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Mackside. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to take 'the Test'. He may have been related to Walter in Abbotrule and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Catherine (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. His surname is recorded as 'Schevile'. Alexander is listed right after him, and so probably related. David (15th/16th C.) listed in 1502 along with Andrew, being among Turnbulls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids from Rulewater. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at 'Hoppiston', recorded in the 1516 remission for many Turnbulls for assisting the traitorous Homes. The lands he farmed were in Rulewater, possibly Hobsburn. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Langraw in 1516, when he was listed among many Turnbulls for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He was probably related to the other Shiels who were listed there. David (16th C.) tenant in Fodderlee. In 1567 he was listed among men on lands under the superiority of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to crimes against Englishmen. He was probably related to the later John in Fodderlee. David (16th C.) recorded as 'youngar in Langraw' in 1567. He was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. David in Fodderlee was also listed and probably related. David (18th C.) listed as house servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when he was working for John Elliot. David (b.1826/7) grocer and spirit dealer on Mather's Close on the 1861 census. He was probably son of weaver James. He married Jessie Scott and their children included: James (b.1851); Walter (b.1854/5); George (b.1856/7); Margaret (b.1848/9); and Agnes E. (b.1861). Along with Thomas (perhaps his brother), he created fizzy drinks. Edward (16th/17th C.) tenant at Langhaugh in Rulewater, recorded in 1605. George (17th C.) resident of the Abbotrule area. He was a Covenanter who died in prison. George (17th C.) recorded paying tax on £52 for Langraw on the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same George in Langraw had his will recorded in 1688. Perhaps he is the 'George Scheel' who died in 1691 and was buried in Hobkirk Parish, his gravestone bearing a tailor's 'goose' and pair of shears, indicating that he was a tailor. He is surely related to Lyle, who was at Langraw in 1643. George (18th C.) resident of Rulewater. Part of his lands (along with 'Boston's half of Kirk-know') were listed among the possessions of Elliot of Wolfelee in 1788, and valued at £22 15s. George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the George who subscribed to the fund for the Slitrig Brig in 1776. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778) and Janet (again, b.1780). The witnesses in 1774 and 1780 were the whole congregation. His father James died in Hawick in 1787. George (b.1808/9) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living with Walter Ballantyne (possibly 'Wat the Drummer') and family on the Loan, along with John, who could have been his father. Sometime before 1865 he donated 2 coins to the Museum; he also donated an 'old Edinburgh almanac', 'an old Scotch coin' and 2 copper coins in 1866, Indian and Russian coins in 1867, an 'antique key, found at Coble Pool', books in 1868, further books in 1871 and an 'ancient book of plays, a piece of conglomerate stone from the Slitrig' in 1872, 'ancient china plate, some curious fossils, miner's lamp, two number of The Times of 1805 and 1815 announcing battles of Trafalgar and Waterloo' in 1874, 'Annual Register, 1781' in 1875, 'walrus tooth and engraving of Dr Livingstone' in 1876 and 'specimen of the gunpowder used for 81-ton gun' and 'several fossils, arrow head, and two French copper coins' in 1877. He was separately listed when he had remission for several crimes, including: burning Minto; being a supporter of Alexander, Duke of Albany; stealing many sheep from Minto Craigend and from several different people in Bedrule; stealing an ox from Fulton; and stealing 40 silver shillings and a stone of butter. His surety for these entries was the Laird of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was again listed being 'in bethroule' among a group of 8 Olivers who had remission for communing with the English. He may be the same man as 'Gilbert Schell' who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1469. Hector (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Along with the Laird of Bedrule he had remission for stealing 9 sheep from Matthew Dodd out of Dolphinston. His surety was George Turnbull in Hallrule. Hector (d.bef. 1579) mentioned in 1579/80 as a resident of Selkirk when his son Philip witnessed a promise for 'Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw'. Hector (17th C.) captured along with George of the Bog and presented for trial by Robert, Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches. They were accused of murdering James Paterson and William Gleghorn in Langlandhill and for raids on Peebles and Tweeddale as well as on the Captain of Edinburgh at Catslack in Ettrick Forest. He was probably executed along with George of the Bog. Hector (17th C.) son of John, tenant of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. In 1621, along with his father, he was pronounced as a rebel for cutting 'greenwood' in the woods of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1618 he and Jenet Sinclair (who had remarried the minister of Hobkirk, Rev. Thomas Thomson) and her son Andrew Brydon had a 'wadset' for the 2 acres of land in the Kirkhaugh beside Hobkirk Kirk. This was with the consent of Bessie Turnbull, who may therefore have been his wife. Hector (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Young in 1687 and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He is probably the cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included James (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1704). He could be the Hector who married Margaret Young in Roberton Parish in 1687. Hugh 'Hog' (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hobsburn, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. The Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance, although his crimes were not specified; his name is given as 'hoigis schevil'. Probably the same man was recorded as 'hugone schewill alias hoge' in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, among many men said to be guilty of the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for him failing to appear and he was declared as a fugutive. He was probably related to Andrew and David who are also listed. Isabel 'Tibbie' (1783–1878) inn-keeper who gave her name to a pub on the shores of St. Mary's Loch. She was daughter of Walter and Mary Grieve and born at Thirlestane Mill in Ettrick. When young she had been a servant with the Ettrick Shepherd's mother. In 1806 she married Robert Richardson (1783–1824), a molecatcher from Westmorland. They became tenants of a cottage near Chapelhope, at the upper end of the Loch of the Lowes. In 1823, shortly before her husband died, she moved to the coaching inn at the bridge between St. Mary's Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. The inn became famous as a meeting place for friends of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, including Sir Walter Scott and Professor John Wilson. She had all her mental faculties intact until her death, aged 95. The couple had several children, including: Thomas (1808–1890), who emigrated to Canada; Walter (c.1810–80), who also emigrated to Canada; Margaret (1812–52); William (1816–91), who remained at the family home; Mary (1818–96), who became Mrs. Michell, Crosscleugh and died in Hawick; and Dorothy (b.1820), who died in infancy. J. In 1906 he (along with Miss Joan, probably his daughter) contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (16th C.) tenant in Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme's farm at Blackgrain (in the Yarrow valley) according to his last testament of 1574. An inventory of the cattle there is provided in the testament. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Friarshaw. He was witness to the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw in Southdean Kirk in 1681. In 1691 he had a discharge with William Currer of Whitmuir. His will is recorded in 1694. James (17th C.) farmer in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded being at Easter Burnfoot when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1682 and 1688. In 1686, along with his son John, he rented the lands of Knowe from William Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for another James in Hassendean in 1687. He was recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1694 and his son John may be the resident of Midshiels at that time. He could be the James 'in Knowhead' whose will is recorded in 1689. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Riddell in Roberton Parish in 1681 and another for Walter Sanderson in 1683. He married Christian Miller in Roberton in 1681 and their children included: Margaret (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); William (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The witnesses were William Scott and James Shiel (probably the other man of the same name who was at Easter Burnfoot). James of Langraw (17th C.) witnessed a sasine for Hobsburn in 1693. Also in 1693 he is the James 'called of Tour, indweller' at Langraw who witnessed a sasine betwen Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichell. Probably the same James 'portioner of Langraw' was recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hobkirk Parish. He had twin sons who died in 1819. He could be the weaver of this name listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia in 1797 (with the annotation 'Serving'); his name appears again in 1798, and later that year he was sworn into the Militia, as confirmed in the amended 1799 list. James (18th/19th C.) horsedealer of Hawick. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the carter whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1808. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Greenbraeheads and Whitlaw. He is recorded at Greenbraeheads in 1841, along with his brothers John and Robert, and their mother Janet. He was probably son of Robert, recorded there in 1797. In 1861 he was farming there jointly with his uncles Andrew and John. James (d.1919) born in the West End, he became Registrar, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the Burial Ground for Wilton Parish in the latter part of the 19th century. He was the first Registrar of Wilton, following the Registration Act of

1854. His full time job was as foreman in one of the factories at Damside. In 1861 he is listed as Inspector of Poor & Registrar on Albion Place. His later office (and probably house) was at 2 Laing Terrace. He was also later Clerk and Treasurer of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. Probably the same James was a singer at the Colour Bussing and similar events. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Andrew and Janet Helen. James (19th C.) proprietor of the West End Bar in the latter part of the 19th century. He was also listed along with Steven, and Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, who were complained about in 1590 for a raid into England. Probably the same 'Jock Sheile' is accused along with Steven in another case of stealing from Sir John Forster's tenants in 'Cowperhaugh'. Probably the same Jock, along with Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliots, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as 'Jock Sheill Robin Ellott's man' in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven and several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsons of 'Lynbrigges'; his name was given before Steven's and so he was presumably the older brother. John 'Jock' of Kirkknowe (16th C.) recorded in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. His son was Hector. Either the same John or his father was recorded as 'John Schewill in Kirknow' in 1610 in an inquest for the succession to Appotside and Tythehouse. They were surely related to Walter of Kirknowe who was recorded in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as 'theiker' (i.e. thatcher) in 1704 when his son John was baptised, with witnesses gardener Patrick McLellan and weaver David Miller. Perhaps the same John was 'workman in Hawick' in 1706 when his daughter Bessie was baptised, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie George Martin. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. Based on the handwriting in the parish records, it seems likely he started in about 1697 and continued until around 1714. He married Margaret Shiel in Ashkirk in 1703 and their children included: William (b.1704); George (b.1706); and Dorothy and Elizabeth (b.1709). His only daughter was Janet, who married Richard, son of John Mair. He is probably the John whose lands in Hobkirk Parish were valued at £39 in the 1740s. He left his lands to his grandson, John Stephenson, according to a settlement dated 1749 and ratified in 1759. John (18th C.) recorded as herd in Shaws in 1785 when he was part of a legal case in Selkirk. Hawick character, with 'Leggat' probably being a nickname. A story is told of how he visited Franky Ballantyne's shop to get whisky, knowing that he had no money. He went with a bottle of water in his pocket, which he switched for a bottle of whisky when the proprietor demanded he put the bottle back when he could not pay. Leon (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Leonem Schavil' when he was on the 1517 panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Lyle (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after Routledges and Douglases who were probably local to the Cavers area. He was again recorded in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for his non-appearance. Lyle (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £52. His listed after George Turnbull of Langraw as 'Lyell Scheil there'. He is surely related to who held the same lands in 1663. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident in Bedrule. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 8 sheep from Thomas Phaup in Bedrule, with the Laird of Bedrule as his surety. Robert (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener at Alton in 1711. He married Janet 'Query' and their children included George (b.1756). Rutherford (b.c.1805) farmer at Ulston in Jedburgh Parish. He reported to the inquest in 1837 into election intimidation that there was an attempt to stop him voting in Hawick, and in fact he did not vote. Probably the same man donated to the Museum in 1863 'an adder killed at Hassendean'. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in Mynt' (presumably Minto) among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. John was also listed and so presumably a close relative. In another case he and Jock were accused of stealing from Sir John Forster's tenants in 'Cowperhaugh'. He was further accused in 1590, along with Jock, Will Elliot of the Steele and Jenkin Nixon of stealing from Roland Walker.

Additionally he and John were accused in 1590, along with Elliots, Nixons and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England, and the Steven, named along with John and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was presumably a local man, but it is not known where he was from. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Scheill' in Wauchope in 1605 and 'Thomas Schewill in Wauchup' in 1612 when he was witness to a sasine. Rev. Thomas (1630/1–1708) first minister at the newly created Parish of Roberton in 1689. Probably the same 'Mr. Thomas Shiel' witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (along with Gideon Scott of Outerside) in 1687, suggesting he was already in the area at that time. He was a member of the Assemblies in 1690 and 1692. He was probably the same as the former minister at Kirkbride in Dumfriesshire, who was admitted in 1655, but deprived in 1662. His whereabouts during the time of persecution are unknown, but it seems that he may have settled in the Hawick area and started officiating at Roberton in about 1689. This same minister was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was translated to Sanquhar in 1693, where he remained until his death (as confirmed by a Sanquar Session minute book, starting in 1696 and recording his demise in 1708), and where he is buried. There is a letter dated 1691 from 'R. Wylie, Wooll, to Tarras' (i.e. from the minister of Ashkirk to Scott of Harden) saying that he may be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Roberton is re-erected. There is also an assignation of 1692 in which he requests the stipend from Hassendean to which he claims the right. He was recorded as tenant of the farm of Todshawhaugh, leasing half in 1672 and 1673, all in 1677, until 1693, and being tenant in 1694 along with his son Thomas. It seems likely he was the 'Mr Thomas Sheill' who was taxed for having 10 hearths at Lintalee house in 1694 (although why he would have been there at this time is a mystery), as well as being also listed as 'Mr Tho. Sheill' when taxed for 3 hearths at Todshawhaugh (although this could feasibly be his son). The Thomas who married Grizel Dalgleish (daughter of a Westerkirk minister) and had a son Thomas in 1701 was probably his son (since he himself would have been about 70 at the time, and there was no 'Mr.' title written). His son William farmed at Todshawhaugh, as clearly stated in a 1696 record. However, there is no documented evidence about his wife and the births of his children. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Denholm. He is listed in 1684 among men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His wife Agnes Hall was also accused of attending conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, he was tenant at Todshawhill. He was recorded as tenant in 1694, along with his father, the minister. In 1699 he rebuilt the farmhouse there on a more convenient site. He was 'in Todshahill' when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1712 for James Scott in Stobicote, in 1713 for a weaver called Douglas and in 1722 for Walter Scoon in Branxholmtown. He was in arrears for the rent of Todshawhill in 1713–20. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for William Grieve, tenant in Fenwick. In 1728 he was 'Mr. Shiel in Todja...' when he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Elliot of Harwood. He is still recorded as the tenant of the farm in 1735. He could be the Thomas of Roberton Parish who married Grizel Dalgleish in Westerkirk Parish in 1701; she was probably daughter of the former minister there, Walter Dalgleish. The couple had a son Thomas who was baptised in Hawick and Roberton Parishes in 1701; one of the witnesses was 'Mr James Dalgleish', suggesting his wife's brother or other near relative was a minister, and it seems likely she was daughter of Walter Dalgleish, outed minister of Westerkirk. Other children born to a Thomas in Roberton Parish (mostly in Todshawhill) were: Jean (b.1717); Grisel (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1721); an unnamed child (b.1722); Rachel (b.1724); and Robert (b.1726). These seem likely to be the same father, although the gap between children is unusually wide, so perhaps he remarried. His servant Isobel Millar married Walter Scoon in 1720. In 1729 he is described as 'in Todshawhill' when his son James became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh and when his son Robert became a weaver's apprentice in 1741. He was no longer tenant by 1745. He was also a joint tenant of Linhope with Walter Grieve in 1729. A Wilton funeral was recorded 'at Togahill' in 1737, which could be for one of his children. James Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park describes (in 1821) how he was son of a Dumfriesshire minister, and had a brother who married the sister of the 'Bonnie Lass o Branxholme'. However, it is possible there were 2 generations confounded here. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as 'apprentis to ye sd Walter' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Hawick doctor Walter Scott. Thomas (1723/4–1812) buried in Borthwick Waas, his wife died in 1798. Their children included: James, who died aged 47, and whose son Thomas was Schoolmaster in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas, son of James and Jean Karr who was born in Bowden Parish in 1723. Thomas (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Thomas (1808–56) son of James and Margaret Common. He was a Teacher living at 'Slitrig Cavers' in 1841, probably being Master at Cogsmill School. He was then living with his mother, brother John and sister Mary. He became Schoolmaster at Hobkirk Parish School, perhaps just before Mr. Lightbody. In 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret in the Hobkirk Schoolhouse. He was listed as Hobkirk schoolmaster in Slater's 1852 directory. After his death his widow and daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge. However, not long afterwards his sister married the schoolmaster at Chesters. Thomas (19th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a copper coin of William and Mary. Probably the same Thomas, grocer on the Loan, donated 3 copper and 3 silver coins to the Museum in 1867. Tibbie see Isabel Shiel. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £78. He was surely related to John in Kirknowe, who was recorded earlier. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule listed in 1684 among those men proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. He may have been related to Archibald in Mackside and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Walter (18th C.) indweller of Thirlestane Mill in Ettrick. In 1779 he married Mary Grieve from the same place, with witnesses Adam Scott, tenant in Ramseycleuch and Robert Dods, weaver at Thirlestane. Their children included: Mary (b.1780), baptised by Rev. Erskine of Roberton, who married William Broadwood; William (b.1781); Isobel (b.1783); Alexander (b.1785); James (b.1788); Walter (b.1791); Joan (b.1795); and Elizabeth (b.1799). Walter (19th/20th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Cavers Parish. In 1906 he was among those who contributed to the fund for renovating Kirkton Kirk. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmum Schewile' in 1427 when he was on the 'inquest of retour' for William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick from his father. Presumably the same 'William Schewyll' was listed on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmo Schevil' in the period 1456–60 when he was Clerk of the Court for Ettrick Forest and was assigned the farm of Kershope. William (15th/16th C.) witness in 1514 to the baronial sasine for Hawick. He is listed as 'Willelmo Schewyll'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'William Schevill of Fodderlie' in 1618 when there was a bond in his name, involving Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, 'for two bolls cherittie meal, of the met and measure of Jedburgh'. He may be the same man as the William in Hartshaugh recorded later. William (17th C.) recorded as 'William Schievill, indweller in Hartishaid' (probably 'Hartshaugh') when he was witness to a disposition of 1630 between Francis Hamilton and Rev. William Weir. His name is transcribed 'Williame Schewill'. William (17th C.) tenant in 'Mossyd' according to the Register of the Privy Council in 1676. His wife Agnes and daughter Bessie were among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means that they objected to having an Episcopalian minister in their parish. He was probably related to the husband of Margaret Lorraine (also listed in 1676), who was also a Shiel (perhaps Andrew). It is possible he was the same as William in Mackside. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: Helen (b.1655); and John (b.1657). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their son Hector was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (d.bef. 1719) described as 'writer in Hawick' when his son Thomas became a skinner's apprentice in 1719. William (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. His 'servitrix' Janet Stothart married William Whillans in Hawick in 1714. He was rebuked by the Session in 1716 after the minister saw him 'coming home and holden on by a man riding behind him for drunkenness'. Also in 1716, he was witness to a baptism (along with servant William Brown) for wigmaker John Norville. It is unclear which inn he was associated with. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was brother of the Thomas who farmed at Todshawhaugh, and son of Rev. Thomas. In 1696 when he rented Todshawhaugh he is clearly described as son of the minister Thomas; he appears to have taken over from his brother Thomas about then (since Thomas is listed as farmer in 1694). He is recorded in 1694 when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Rulewater. He was still renting Todshawhaugh in 1698. He was rebuked by Roberton session in 1701 for allowing a 'mock' wedding to take place in his house on the Sabbath, between Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Esther Turnbull He could be the brother of Thomas, farmer at Todshawhill, who is said to have married a sister of the 'Bonny Lass o' Branxholme' William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Stobicote in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for apothecary Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same as the farmer at Todshawhaugh. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the Flex. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray in Whitlaw, along with Archibald Paterson in the Flex. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1705 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may have been his include Jean (b.1702), Margaret (b.1704), Margaret (b.1711) and John (b.1714). He may be the William recorded at West Middle in 1719 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1824 when his child with Betty Laidlaw died (also formerly spelled 'Scheil', 'Scheill', 'Schele', 'Schevell', 'Schevil', 'Schevill', 'Schewill', 'Sheel', 'Sheil', 'Sheill', 'Sheills', 'Shevell', 'Shield', 'Shiell', 'Shiels' and variants).

Shiel Burn (sheel-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Wilson's Pile and running roughly north-west to join Boghall Burn. It is now entirely within forest. The 1857 Ordnance Survey map marks a small settlement on its banks, of which there is now no sign.

Shiel Cleugh (sheel-klooch) n. small stream in Southdean Parish, whichroft Plantation, between the sites of Slack's Tower and Northbank Tower, and runs north to meet the Jed Water. There are lines of rig covering about 10 hectares on both sides of the cleugh, and aerial photography has revealed a possible farmstead, now buried in the forest.

Shielden Sike (sheel-sīk) n. stream in Liddesdale, just south of Burnmouth farm, between the Kiln Burn and Howden Cleuch. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined cottage there. Labourer John Lamb was there in 1835 and there were Elliots there in 1841, but it was abandoned before 1851. The area formerly had a fortified house, known as Stripshielden (it is 'Shelden' in 1835 and 'Sheldon' in 1841).

Shiel Rig (sheel-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, situated on the right, opposite the turn-off for Lethem. There are the remains of a group of 4 shielings, 5 pens and a stock enclosure there, just to the west of the forest. These are probably the remains of a mediæval steading. There is also a 300 m boundary bank to the south-west, near the Carter Burn (also written as 'Shielrig').

Shiels see Shiel

Shielshaugh (sheelz-hawch) n. farmstead on the west bank of the Ettrick Water just a little north of Oakwood, situated on the Shielshaugh Burn. Shiel Sike (sheel-sīk) n. stream in the Borthwick valley, which rises as the Red Cleuch near Redcleuch Edge and Cowbush hill, and joins the Dirthope Burn before running into the Borthwick.

Shielsteeds Hill (sheel-steedz-hil) n. Shielsteads Hill, small hill in southern Castleton Parish, just west of Kershope Bridge. It has been suggested that this might be the site of the shielings of Eadulf, which are noted in a 14th century charter confirming a 12th century grant of neighbouring land at Kershope.

Shielswud (sheelz-wud, -wood) n. Shielswood, area around Shielswood Loch and Shielswood farm, on the Ashkirk to Roberton road. This is the highest part of Ashkirk parish, containing the hills Cringie Law, Threephead, Smasha Hill, Gandiesknowe, Horn Hill, etc. William Turnbull was recorded at 'scheliswod medow' when Thomas Lauder of Todrig was accused of stealing from him in 1494/5. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Scott family from the mid-16th century and more recently became part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto. In 1581 Margaret Scott, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of lands there to her son William. William Scott then leased the lands and steading to Walter Scott of Todrig, promising also to finish building a stone house there, but the liferent went to his new bride, Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. The lands were valued at £260 in 1643 and owned by Walter Scott of Shielswood. It still had the same value according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and also in 1678 when it was owned by James Scott. The main house is listed as having 5 hearths in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 3 other tenants on the estate and one poor person. In 1712 James Scott of Shielswood (and his son Walter) granted the lands to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (and his son Gilbert) in 1712; it was then described having value 4 merks, 10 shillings and 8 pennies. John Oliver was herd there in about the period 1729–63 and John Nivison was also there in 1765. 'A Plan of the Farm of Shielswood' was drawn up in 1767 and less detailed one in 1829. In 1779 the liferent had been given by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Rev. Simon Haliburton, and it was still valued at £260. It was also described in 1780 as 'a four merk ten shilling and eight penny land'. William Scott is recorded as shepherd there and William Miller as farmer, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Hobkirk was a servant there in at least 1799–1801 (the house there is marked as 'Sheelswood' on Gordon's c.1650 map, Blaeu's 1654 map and Adair's c.1688 map, and is 'Shiels Wood' on Ainslie's 1773 map; it is 'scheliswod' in 1494/5, 'Scheilliswod' in 1581, 'Scheilliswode' in 1609, 'Schelliswoid' in 1616, 'Scheilliswood' in 1617, 'Scheilswode' in 1648, 'Sheilliswood', 'Sheill-wood' in 1695, 'Scheilswood' in 1690, 'Scheilswood' in 1692, 'Shilsuood' in 1694 and 'Sheilswood' in 1712).

By 1789 he was living at Currie in Borthwick Parish. Shiplaw (ship-lu, -law) n. area around the former cottage of 'Shiplaw Cross', near the cattle-grid on the Earlside to Hawthornside road. Cars often stop near here to watch the horses cross the road on the Bonchester Ride-out. There is another Shiplaw north of Peebles near Eddleston and Sharplaws outside Jedburgh and near Hownam.

Shiplaw Bog (ship-lu-bōg) n. marshy area to the north of Cogsmill school, presumably related to the old chapel near there.

Shiplaw Corse (ship-lu-kōrs) n. area on the side road between Hawthornside and Earlside. Also known as 'Chaipel Cross', 'Sheeplaw Cross' or 'Shiplaw Cross', the cottage here was the highest house in Cavers Parish. William Whillans (who had been blacksmith at the Flex) was there in 1725. Robert Wilson was living there in 1749. It was a shepherd's cottage from about 1780, when the shepherd was John Rutherford, whose descendants were blacksmiths in Bonchester. Adam Easton was there in 1792. The cottage was rebuilt in 1826, with the farmer about that time being John Elliot. Later it was occupied by a roadman, and in the mid-19th century the tenant was a Mr. Blake, when visited by Lady Scott of Spottiswood, who made a sketh of it. The house was destroyed by fire in 1902. It can be seen in a photograph of the mid-19th century, and is a late surviving example of country houses of an earlier era. It was a 1-storey thatched dwelling, built of rough, undressed stones, with the holes filled with mud. The walls were about 7 feet high and 3 feet thick. The name survives in the nearby plantation called 'Chaipel o Cross Plantation'; the 'Chapel of Cross' has been suggested to be a medieval chapel dedicated to the holy cross, but there is no evidence that there was such a chapel there, with its existence probably deriving from the name (the connection with a 'cross' is unclear, however, it is possible there was a wayside cross associated with the chapel at Cogsmill; it is 'Shyplawcross' in 1725, 'Sheeplawcross' in 1749 and appears to be 'Sleepracross' in 1792).

Shiplaw Cross see Shiplaw Corse

Shipley (ship-lee) n. Frederick (1889–1917) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jane Fraser. It is possible that 'Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe' of Roxburghshire, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, was an early owner; although this seems more likely to be Mervinslaw, it could have a similar etymology. The farmhouse was demolished when Alemoor Reservoir was built. John Scoon was farmer there in 1787 (also written 'Shiringcleuch', 'Shirings Cleuch', 'Shyreings Cleugh', etc.; the name may be related to the word 'shirins').

shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Sheriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title 'Sheriff of Teviotdale'. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply 'Sheriffs', a title they took officially after 1971 – '. . . qtsomever judge or judges, competent as shyrefs, commissioners, oyrs, for any offence qtsomever commit betwixt neighbour and neighbour' [BR1701].

In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. Shiriff o Roxburgh (shi-rif-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. hereditary title, synonymous with the Sheriffship of Teviotdale, and held for generations by the Douglases of Cavers. This was formally a royal appointment and the holder was the King's officer in the county. In the earliest times it may only have been a military leader connected with Roxburgh Castle, but later it became an office with administrative and judicial responsibility for the county. The first known 'vicecomite' of Roxburgh was Gospatric, mentioned in the founding charter of Selkirk Abbey. Henry Kerr was Sheriff in the 14th century, George Douglas, Earl of Angus, gained the title along with several lands in 1397 and Sir Archibald Douglas acquired the hereditary title by royal charter in 1412. A decree of 1620 abolishing heritable jurisdictions led to William Douglas of Cavers agreeing to part with the Sheriffdom (and teinds from Cavers Kirk) for the sum of £20,000 Scots. But in 1626, when only £4,000 had been paid, he refused to surrender the office, and Parliament agreed he could do so until the full amount was paid. In fact the family held on to the Sheriffdom until the final abolition of such offices in 1747. A roll of the Sheriffdom is: Gospatric, c.1125; Gervase Riddell, c.1138; Robert, son of Guy, 1147; John, son of Orm, c.1170; Herbert Maxwell, c.1200; Bernard of Hadden, c.1203 and 1227/8; John Maxwell, c.1214 and 1223/4–26; Adam Baggatte, 1237/8; Nicholas de Soulis, 1246; Aymer Maxwell, c.1250; Hugh Abernethy, c.1264; Thomas Cavers, c.1265; Thomas Randolph, 1266; Hugh de Pearsby, at least 1285–6; William de Soulis, 1289/90; Walter Tonke, 1296; Sir Robert Hastings, 1296–1307 (English); Sir Ingram de Umfraville, 1302 (Scottish); Sir Robert of Mauley, at least 1305–07 (Scottish); Aymer Valence, c.1310 (English); Sir Henry Baliol, around 1328; Galfrid Mowbray, 1334 (English); Sir William Douglas, 1335–1342; Sir Alexander Ramsay, 1342; Sir William Douglas, c.1343–46; Henry Ker, 1349; John Copeland, 1350–55; Henry Percy, 1355–57 (English); Sir Richard Tempest, 1357–61 (English); John Copeland 1361–63 (English); Sir Richard Tempest, 1366–72 (English); Alan Struthers, 1368–70 (English); Lawrence of Govane, 1373; Sir Malcolm Drummond, c.1389; Sir William Stewart, c.1390; George, Earl of Angus, 1397; Sir David Fleming of Biggar, 1405; Archibald Douglas of Cavers, 1412; hereditary title of the Douglases of Cavers until 1662 when Sir William Douglas was removed for not conforming; James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch, 1669; continuing with Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1689 until Archibald Douglas gave up the right in 1774 (also called 'Sheriff of Roxburghshire'; see also Shiriff o Teviotdale).

In earlier times the title usually went along with that of Keeper of Roxburgh Castle, and hence 'Sheriff of Teviotdale' and 'Sheriff of Roxburghshire' were synonymous. The Sheriff was responsible for raising and commanding the local militia, local defence, collecting taxes and administering justice. This title ended in 1747 when heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown. Archibald Douglas of Cavers (the 15th Laird) was the last Sheriff (see also Shiriff o Roxburghshire.

They were in earlier times referred to as 'cordiners', although the 'cordiners' made a request to form a separate incorporation in 1722; the cordiners were allowed to be a separate incorporation from 'those who make single-soled shoes'. However, they are not mentioned as separate bodies in later times, and so presumably merged again soon after. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. In 1836 there were 7 shoemakers in the incorporation, each paying 2 shillings admission fee. In local parades they would sometimes appear attired in the costume of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin, and were described as particularly splendid in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory parade.

It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. It was long part of the Buccleuch estates (it is 'Schorthope' in 1564 and 'Schorthoip' in 1609; 'Shortup' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

short-leet (shor'-lee') n. a short list – 'A deh ken if A've got the job, bit A'm on the short-leet' (this term survives, although the use of 'leet' itself seems to have died out).

Shortreed (shor'-reed) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in the 1526 remission given to a large number of Borders men for an attack upon the Earl of Arran; his son John is also listed. Probably the same Andrew was one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. He is probably the Andrew who owned a piece of land in Selkirk according to a document of 1530. He witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was also part of an inquest into the disputed lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. Most of the other men listed were local, and so he was probably from the family based near Ashkirk. Probably the same Andrew 'Shortreid' in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. In 1536 he was cited by Walter Scott (brother-german of Kerr of Sunderland Hall) for failing to produce Adam Gledstains at the market cross of Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Bessie Shortreed in 1658. Their son William was baptised in 1660. Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at Synton according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the Andrew who married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Bernard (15th C.) tenant in Essenside. In 1494/5 he had remission for theft of sheep from the Murrays of Sundhope. Adam Scott of 'auldinnis hop' served as his surety. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to William, who was also at Burnfoot. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when he was cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He is probably related to Thomas, who was also at Essenside, but distinct from David who was at Burnfoot. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1639. George of Essenside (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as an executor for the children of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace. George (b.1810/1) frameworker in Hawick who was originally from Jedburgh. He was living on Mill Bank Street in 1851 and on Langlands Bank in 1861. He married Ann, daughter of James Waugh, in Hawick in 1842. Their children included Jessie, James, Mary, George and Walter. Perhaps the same George was in Leith in 1868 when he donated several coins to the Museum. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1705, 1706 and 1711. He may be the James who married Margaret Shiel in 1692 and whose children included Robert (b.1695) and William (b.1704). He could be the James who is recorded as resident at Whitehaugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Renwick) for George Renwick in the Sandbed in 1697. He is probably the James who in about 1700 was tenant in Whitehaugh and step-father of Hector Cockburn; this means that his wife had previously been married to George Cockburn. James (1726–83) eldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Eliott, he was 'younger of Essenside'. He aquired part of Hermiston from George Johnstone in 1758, the lands being valued at £260. He was owner of Easter Essenside in 1759, and sold the lands to Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot in 1778, with the consent of his wife Helen Currer and the trustees for his creditors: Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Robert Laidlaw, tenant in Falnash; and Walter Scott of Wauchope. He was listed (by John Sibbald) among local farmers who had failed in 1778. He was struck off the list of freeholders of Roxburghshire in 1780, having lost his lands in the county. He married Ellen Currie (also recorded as 'Helen Currer') in 1754 in Ashkirk and they had a son, Thomas (b.1786). He is probably the same James 'late of Essenside' who was buried in old Wilton Kirkyard, his table stone stating that he died in 1783, aged 75; his wife Bella Currie was buried beside him, and died in 1808, aged 84. His wife may have been the 'Mrs. Shortreed' recorded as owner of 'Nethercroft, acquired from Langlands' according to the 1788 valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; the farm was valued at £20 and later owned by John James Scott Chisholme of Stirches. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1755); Isabel Margaret (b.1756); Betty (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); Jean (b.1762); George (b.1763); Jean (again, b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Ann (b.1767); Nelly (b.1769); Robert (again, b.1771); Mary (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Elliotie (b.1775); Andrew (b.1776); and Willie (b.1777). There may be 2 families here. John (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran's forces. He was son of Andrew. John (17th C.) married Margaret Thomson in Ashkirk Parish in 1631. John (17th C.) recorded being in 'Longsintoune' in 1679 when he had a discharge for payment with the treasurer of Selkirk. He was in 'Langseintein' in 1681 when he had a similar discharge. This was possible 'Long Synton'. John (17th/18th C.) farmer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 in Edinburgh his daughter Agnes married William Thomson, who was 'servitor to Bartholomew Brecher, bower'. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: William (b.1702); an unnamed child (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Andrew (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1717 and Borthwickbrae in 1720. He probably married Mary Hislop in Roberton in 1718 and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Janet (b.1720). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Rigg in 1729 when he married Margaret Scott. John of Greenhead (b.1705) son of Robert. He spent 1718–28 with his father at Whitfield and Todshaw. He presumably purchased the lands of Greenhead near Selkirk. In 1764 he was one of the people who gave evidence at the court proceedings for the division of Wilton Common. In 1783 he was pursued at the Court of Session for his contribution to the Selkirk poor rates. Robert of Greenhead, who paid the land tax in 1813 in may have been his son. John (18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Ashkirk Parish in 1735. John (18th C.) tenant in Oakwood in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same John was tenant in 'Hainingmote' in 1741. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Shortreed in 1771 and their daughter Peggy was baptised in 1788. Robert (16th/17th C.) local tenant recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. The farm he was connected with is not transcribed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Dalgleish and their son William was baptised in 1695. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their children included: John (b.1705); and Janet (b.1713). He is probably the Robert who was tenant of half of the farms of Whitfield and Todshaw, on the west side of the Cala Burn, from about 1718 until the 1730s. Robert of Essenside (b.1695) born in Wilton Parish, he became a Bailie and lawyer in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been son of James and Margaret Sheil. He may be the Robert 'shortridg' who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. His lands of Easter Essenside were valued at £365 10s in the 1740s. He is probably the Robert who paid the window tax at 'woolie' in Southdean Parish in 1748 (presumably he lived there temporarily). He acted as attorney for Walter Scott of Leith when he gained the lands of Wauchope in 1750. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1725 he married Elizabeth ('Bessie'), daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill and sister of William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. Their children included: James (b.1726), the eldest son; Jean (b.1727); and Thomas, who was a farmer. He may have been father of Margaret (b.c.1735) who married William Elliot of Whithaugh; she may be the Maragret who was baptised in Roberton in 1730. His sister Agnes may have married his brother-in-law Andrew. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Chatto in Ashkirk Parish in 1764. Robert 'Bob' (1762–1829) born in Southdean Parish, eldest son of farmer Thomas and Ann Maria Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He became Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He had musical talent and collected local songs and legends. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him on several trips in the Liddesdale area, gathering ballads etc. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s. He represented Weens on the Hobkirk Parish heritors council in 1803. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was a founder member of the Jedforest Club and was the 2nd Honorary Secretary. He built a house in Jedburgh, which was later British Linen Bank house. His sister Mary married William Aitchison and helped him run the Cross Keys Inn at 11 Sandbed. He was Substitute to Sheriff William Oliver, who wrote some doggerel verse about him – 'From chattering women all refrain, Let silence universal reign, While thro' the world I proclaim A friend in need is Bob Shortreed'. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Jedburgh lawyer James Fair. He had 2 infant children buried in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard in 1802. His other children included: Thomas, who also helped Sir Walter Scott, and followed his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club; John Elliot, bank manager in Wexford; Capt. William of the Bengal service of the East India Company; James Elliot, who succeeded his uncle to the Langlee estate and took the additional name of Fair; Col. Pringle of the Bengal Native Infantry; and Robert, tenant of Attonburn. Simon (d.1550) Vicar at Ashkirk, who was succeeded by James Ker. He s probably the 'Simon Schortreid' listed as a priest who witnessed an announcement by 'Walter Scot in Edschawe' in Selkirk in 1532. He also witnessed an agreement in 1531 between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton, another agreement regarding lands at Haining in about 1534 and an agreement regarding the 'Dean's lambs of Selkirk' in 1536. In 1536 he was 'ane discrett man my servand' to the Parson of Ashkirk Richard Bothwell, when Richard set him part of the kirklands 'callit the clewis and kempis knowis' for 3 years; the witnesses included John Mitchellhill, James Davidson and David Brownfield, who were chaplains (but it is not clear where). In 1537 he invested Simon Scott in the benefices of the Rectorship of Rankilburn; Andrew was one of the witnesses (and may have been related). In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and 'Chames'. In 1539 he witnessed a transaction where Thomas Scott in Haining warned certaint tenants to remove themselves. He was involved in a transaction for William Scott (probably relating to lands near Ashkirk) in 1542. In 1543 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk in favour of William (whose relationship is not recorded). Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Whitehillbrae (in Kirkhope Parish) in 1580/1 when Janet Turnbull (widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh) and William Allan assigned him their lands in Blindhaugh. Walter in Selkirk was one of the witnesses and may have been related. On the same day he confessed that he owed Walter money and was having to defer payment. He was also recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Blindhaugh in 1581 when the liferent was transferredto Walter, son of the deceased John Scott in Blindhaugh. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. He was probably related to David, who was also at Essenside. He may be the Thomas in Woll who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Thomas (1733–98) farmer at Easter Essenside. He was son of Robert and Elizabeth, who was daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill (ancestor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee). He also farmed at Wolfelee, Hyndlee, Lustruther and Jedhead, being one of the most extensive farmers in the Jedforest. However, he was financially ruined following the American War, and it is said the worry from this shortened his life. He was also said to have been the last man to carry out a Border raid, this after some English thieves had carried off some of his sheep; instead of appealing to the courts he crossed the Border and brought back his livestock, like had happened in earlier centuries. In 1750 he was 'in Woolie' when it is recorded that he was owed money by the deceased William Scott of Whitehaugh for a sheep. In 1757 in Southdean Parish he married Ann Maria, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule. Their eldest son Robert was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, while their daughter Mary married William Aitchison and was mother of the poet Elliot Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Mary (b.1759), Betty (b.1760), Robert (b.1762), Margaret (b.1764), William (b.1768), James (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771) and Patrick (b.1775). Thomas (18th C.) tailor at Falnash. He is recorded in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Hawick Parish, with his surname given as 'Shrotreed'. He was still at Falnash on the ballot in 1801. Thomas (1786–1842) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Ellen Currie. He married Isabella Armstrong in 1774. Their children were George, James, John, Robert L., William and Thomas. In 1831 he emigrated with his wife and 6 sons, settling in Guelph, Ontario. Thomas (1796–1826) eldest son of Robert, Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His great schoolfriend was Robert Lindsay Armstrong, later Director of the Mint in St. Petersburg. He was greatly interested in local history, publishing a pamphlet on the orchards of Jedburgh. He also collected Border ballads and helped Sir Walter Scott with 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border'. He was Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He may be the Thomas listed at Falnash in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He took over from his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club in 1820, retiring in 1826 because of ill-health. He never married and died at Camberwell. Thomas (b.1814/5) from Jedburgh, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Cross Wynd and in 1861 was living at 3 Brougham Place. His wife was Barbara and their children included George, Andrew, Jane, Jessie, Betsy and Barbara. In 1867 he donated a Spanish coin to the Museum. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as witness to an agreement between Walter Scott of Ashkirk and John Scott in Aikwood over Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded as brother of Walter Scott, perhaps meaning brother-in-law. He is again recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk in a further transaction of 1581. He may be the same William recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to David, who was also at Burnfoot. He was still recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk when he witnessed a transaction for him in 1581/2. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Walter (b.1702). Walter (18th C.) married Helen Currer in Ashkirk in 1754. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1633 (also spelled 'Schortred', 'Schortreid', 'Shortread', 'Shortred', 'Shortreede', 'Shortreid', 'Shortrid', 'Shortridge', 'Shortried', 'Shortrig', etc.).

Thomas Lunn (who took in the young African Tom Jenkins) was there in the early 1800s. Stockingmaker Michael Scott and family, along with labourer John Rogerson and his wife, grocer John Pott and labourer Thomas Hamsley and his wife, were there in 1841.

W.N. Kennedy's biography of Tom Jenkins suggests that the cottage was built for the Swansons and when finished in 1803 it became the residence of Tom Lunn, whose wife was sister of Capt. James Swanson; however the cottage existed before that, and so the description was perhaps of a renovation.

Sibbald (si-buld) n. Francis (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was a Vair and their daughter Jeanie was baptised in 1818. James (1745–1803) son of John, farmer at Whitlaw in Bowden Parish. His brother John was farmer at Borthaugh. He attended Selkirk Grammar School and then leased the farms of Newton (on Slitrig) and Whitehillbrae (on the Dod Burn) from Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. He spent much of his time studying botany and the classics, and failed as a farmer, giving up his lease in 1779. Learning the publishing trade rapidly in London, he moved to Edinburgh, helping his cousin the publisher Charles Elliot in his shop. In 1780 he purchased (from Mrs. Margaret Yair) the circulating library that had belonged to Allan Ramsay, and became a bookseller and publisher on Parliament Square. A young Sir Walter Scott was a frequent visitor to his circulating library and described him as 'a man of rough manners but of some taste and judgment, [who] cultivated music and poetry'. In 1785 he started to publish the 'Edinburgh Magazine, or Literary Miscellany' as a competitor to the 'Scots Magazine'. He himself wrote many articles on Scottish antiquities, as well as many other topics, such as the first serious review of Robert Burns 'Kilmarnock' edition. He went through mixed fortunes, running a paper mill, giving up his publishing business, setting up a short-lived Edinburgh newspaper, handing over the ciculating library (but later getting it back), spending some time effectively missing in London (when he wrote a book about the life of Jesus), and seeing the Edinburgh Magazine merge with the Scots Magazine. His best known work is 'Chronicle of Scottish Poetry from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a glossary' (1802), with the 4th and final volume being effecively a Scots dictionary. This is locally valuable for including words attributed to use in Teviotdale in his time. There is an etchings of him by John Kay, a portrait by an unknown artist (previously attributed to Raeburn) and he appears in W. Borthwick Johnstone's 1856 painting of Edinburgh literary characters. He died unmarried at his house on Leith Walk. James (b.1832) son of William. He was raised on a farm. In 1855 he married Agnes Hardie of Newcastleton, and the couple emigrated to Canada, settling in Bruce County. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters. He sold up his farm in 1890 and made a last visit back to Rulewater before joining several of his children to live out his days in Duluth, Minnesota. John (1714–85) eldest son of John and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Oakwood Mill. His brother was William of Pinnacle. He was tenant farmer of Whitlaw in Bowden Parish, where he paid the window tax in 1753. In 1764 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the lands of Wilton Common and value each plot. He married Margaret Grieve in 1743. Their children were: James (1747–1803) publisher of 'The Edinburgh Magazine'; William of Gladswood (d.1817) merchant and ship-owner in Leith; John (b.1755), who was tenant in Borthaugh; Agnes ('Nannie', b.1751), who married Henry Scott, tenant in Deloraine; and Jean (d.1815), who married John Lang, Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and was the lady who sent off her son's uniform to equip him in Edinburgh after the 'False Alarm' of 1804, as described in Sir Walter Scott's note 'Alarm of invasion' in 'The Antiquary'. In 1866 his descendant Robert of Liverpool donated to the Museum a 'pair of barnacles [spectacles] that belonged' to him. His accounts were described in an article in the Archæological Society Transactions in 1866. John (1746–77) younger of Pinnacle.

He was eldest son of William and Charlotte Cleland. He was a merchant in London. He married Anne Franks, and they had 1 son (Lt.-Col. William, who succeeded his grandfather) and 2 daughters (one of whom, Charlotte, married Archibald Scott of Howcleuch). The other may have been Ann, who married James Grieve, farmer in Branxholme Braes. John of Borthaugh (1755–1822) son of John and Margaret Grieve. His ancestors farmed in the Eildon and Bowden areas. He kept a journal from 1778 to 1785, while living with his father in Selkirkshire; excerpts were described in an article for the Archæological Society Transactions in 1866. He was recorded at Borthaugh on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse. His servant Alexander Tait was listed at Borthaugh on the ballot for the Militia in 1801 (although his name was incorrectly given as William, rather than John). He was a local Conservative supporter of the early 1800s who is said to have put pins in his coat-tails before voting in Hawick, to avoid being 'winged'. He married Jean Cunningham (from Ettrick) in Wilton Parish in 1804 and they had a large family, including: John (b.1805), who was running the farm in 1841; Jean (1807–65), who married poet William Wilson and emigrated to Pughkeepsie, New York; James (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1811), who was superintendent of the farm in 1851; Walter (b.1813); Agnes (b.1814); George (b.1816); Isabella (b.1817); and Helen (b.1819). It seems he must have been quite old when he had his family. John (1805–47) son of John and Jean Cunningham. He was listed as a Steward at the Common-Riding Races of 1836. He was farmer at Borthaugh in 1841, living with his sisters Margaret and Agnes. He appears to have been dead by 1851, when his brother William was running the farm. John (b.1835) son of James and Elizabeth, he was born in Leith. He was assistant gamekeeper on the Cavers estate, living at Effledge. He was said to be a terror for the Hawick poachers. On one occasion a gang came to his house to get him, but he was ill and his wife called David Honeyman, the head keeper, who was badly beaten up instead. Another story told is how he caught 3 poachers who had swam out to the island in Buckstruther Loch to collect gulls eggs; he bundled up their clothes, but instead of giving themselves up to him they ran off naked in the direction of Hawick. He is listed as a ploughman at Effledge in 1861. He married Margaret Best in Ashkirk Parish in 1857. Their children included: John (b.1857); Alexander (1860–1942), who died in Victoria, British Columbia; Thomas (1863–1948), who also died in Victoria; and Agnes (b.1865). Margaret (b.1845) daughter of William and Margaret Laidlaw. She helped her father with his duties as postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, and took over after his death in 1880. She also served as Clerk to the School Board and Clerk to the Heritors, and was one of the best known people in the Rule valley in her day. She was one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk She helped George Tancred with information for his Rulewater book. In 1901 she was living at Newington, Edinburgh. Peter (1835–85) son of William and Margaret Laidlaw, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked as a mason in Hobkirk and then in Hawick. He was visiting Howahill at the time of the 1841 census. In 1858 he married Mary (1827–1912), daughter of James Nichol. Their children were: William (b.1860); Peter (b.1862); Thomas (b.1864); Elizabeth Burnet (b.1865); and Robert Nichol (b.1872), who married Mina Inglis. Robert (b.1828/9) born in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a shoemaker at about 16 Howegate, with his wife Janet being a boot-binder. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children baptised there included: William (b.1757), probably the plasterer in Hawick; Samuel (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1763); Isabel (b.1764); George (b.1766); and Agnes (b.1768). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in 1808. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Margaret Oliver and their children included: Thomas (b.1834); Ebenezer (b.1836); and Elizabeth (b.1838). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Liverpool, who had once lived at Borthaugh. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a 'pair of barnacles [spectacles] that belonged to Mr John Sibbald of Whitlaw, who died in 1785, grandfather of the late John Sibbald, of Borthaugh'. Thomas (1863–1948) born at Effledge, son of John, who was an assistant gamekeeper there, and Margaret Best. He worked at Chatelherault, Kinmount, Croxton Park and Fawley Court, before becoming gamekeeper at Wells estate. He later moved to Victoria, British Columbia, where he died. He married Jessie, daughter of Alexander Anderson, forester on the Kinmount estate in Dumfriesshire. Walter (19th C.) resident of Liverpool. In 1866 he loaned family documents to Robert Kennedy, who described them in an article for the Archæological Society. William of Pinnacle (1719–98) 2nd son of John and Agnes Elliot. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. William (d.1815) plasterer in Hawick, who lived at the Sandbed. He is said to have been a descendant of the Sibbalds of Pinnacle and Whiterig and the earlier portioners of Eildon and Bowden. He was probably son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1757. He witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1792. He is listed as 'Plaisterer' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Weir, who died in 1835. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Thomas (1784–1808); Ann (b.1786); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1787), who probably married Walter Gillies and was a widow at 56 High Street in 1851 and 1861; Peter (b.1789); Mary (b.1792); Mary (again, 1793–1804); and William (b.1803), who became tenant on the Weens estate. The 1787 baptism was 'before the Congregation'. He may have earlier married Katherine Grieve in Hawick in 1778. He was 'Plaisterer Sandbed' in 1815. Lt.-Col. William of Pinnacle and Whiterig (1771–1835), J.P., only son of John. He succeeded his grandfather William in 1798. He joined the army in about 1794, becoming Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, transferring to the 15th Foot as Lieutenant-Colonel in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1817 and was also a member of the 'Border Bowmen'. In 1807 he married Susan, 6th daughter of Thomas Mein of Eildon Hall. They had 9 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1809–43), Captain in the 34th Madras Infantry; Thomas, Royal Navy Commander, who lived at Eildon Hall, Ontario; William (b.1814); James (b.1816); Archibald (b.1817); Charles (b.1819) who served as a militia officer during the Canadian rebellion of 1837; Hugh (b.1823), served in Bengal and also moved to Canada; and Francis Clunie, who served with the Royal Navy and was later a doctor in Sutton West, Canada. After his death the family lands were sold off. William (1803–80) son of Hawick plasterer William and Mary Weir, he was born in Wilton Parish and educated at Wilton School. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and in about 1823 moved to one of the Sclenty Hall cottages in Hobkirk, becoming a tenant farmer on the Weens estate. He then became a land measurer, in about 1840 was appointed Heritors' Clerk and in 1846 was made Inspector of Poor and Collector for the Parish. He later became Registrar and Clerk of the School Board and ran the Hobkirk Library, being a great lover of books. He was also Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk at one time. He served as a factor for the Weens estate for a while. The 1841 census lists him as a stockingmaker at Sclenty Hall, and at 3 Weens Cottages in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as 'Registrar of Births &c. Inspr. of Poor' at Weens Cottages. He was Chairman at the Burns centenary celebration in Rulewater in 1859. Later in life he was postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, probably from the late 1860s, succeeding Miss Renwick. His daughter helped him as he got older, and after his death she became postmistress. In 1823 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. Their children included: Helen (b.1823), who married James Short; Mary (b.1825), who was unmarried; William (b.1827), who was a frameworker in Hawick and died unmarried; James (b.1832), who emigrated to Canada and died in Minnesota; Peter (1835–85), a mason in Hawick; Thomas (b.1839), a joiner; and Margaret (b.1845), who helped her father and then became post-mistress (also formerly written 'Sybald').

Side (sīd) n. former tower just south of Newcastleton (or Copshaw). The earliest records are in a c.1376 rental roll, for 'Locus Willelmi del Syde' (8 shillings) and 'Locus Ade de Syde' (16 shillings). It is unclear to which family these men belonged. It is possibly also the 'Siders' recorded as an Elliot residence in 1498. It was home of 'Jock o the Side' in the 16th century, probably an Armstrong who was immortalised in the ballad of the same name. 'Chrystie of the Syde' is listed among Liddesdale chief's at the end of the 16th century by Monipennie and may have been Jock's brother. 'Sym' and 'Lancie' Armstrong of 'the Syde' are recorded in 1601 and John 'called of the Syd' in 1642. William Thomas was tenant there in 1694, with William Little, Thomas Ovens and George Hewitson also listed. Adam Henderson was tenant in 1706, when 2 of his servants were rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath. William Little was there in 1707 when summoned for having a 'penny wedding'. In a survey of 1718 it is stated that Shipshielden was also known as Side. The site may be the farmstead whose remains are on the east side of Kirk Hill, at the head of Ettleton Sike, or perhaps further to the south, as marked on Stobie's 1770 map. The farmstead has at least 3 buildings, a kiln-barn and several enclosures, although the remains of a tower have not been established. Another site, pointed out in the 19th century (and said to be marked by a solitary tree), which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Kirk Hill, has no traces of foundations (also spelled 'Syde' etc.; it appears on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Syid' and on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Syd').

The house was located roughly near the top of the present Churchill Road, with the approach from the main entrance at the top of Havelock Street. The architect was J.T. Rochead of Glasgow, and it was in the Scottish baronial style, with French elements. The house was used by Belgian refugees during WWI. It was demolished in 1946 when the council purchased the estate (being quite full of dry rot etc.). A window panel (with the Burgh crest) is preserved in the Museum. The gate lodge for the main house still exists, now numbered as 23 Havelock Street. A 'wedge-shaped perforated hammer of rough surfaced sandstone' found near here was donated to the Museum (see also Silverbuthall).

sillerless (si-lur-lis) adj., arch. silverless, impecunious – 'Then up wi' the purse an' the siller, Silverbuthall (sil-vur-bi'-hal, -haw) n. an area at the north end of Hawick, roughly corresponding to the old estate of Easter Heip, and now containing a housing estate. The name occurs as early as 1694, although spelling varies. The lands were part of the estates of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold to James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who was Laird there in the mid-18th century. Small enclosures were separately sold to James and Walter Knox, and later acquired by Archibald Dunlop and then John Scott Chisholme. Andrew Marshall was tenant there in 1711. John Blyth was living there in 1723, George Scott in at least 1728–32, James Scott in at least 1743–48 and Robert Smith in 1791. Thomas Hall was farmer there in 1797 and John Ferguson was a labourer there in 1799. The house there was lived in by banker William Oliver ('Auld Cash'), who died in 1808, when it was inherited by his nieces. The lands were valued at £80 in 1765, 1788 and 1811 (including the enclosures), when owned by James Scott. The lands were bought in about 1822 by James Scott, retired teacher from Yarrow, who died in the early 1840s. In 1841 there were 8 households living there. Small pieces of the lands were sold to Chisholme of Stirches and Robert Turnbull of Galalaw. A large part of the lands were purchased by Thomas Laidlaw in 1861, who had a new mansion built there (near the present Churchill Road), designed by J.T. Rochead, and including a lodge house (which still exists), with construction by local building firm George Tait. The house can be seen in an aerial photograph of 1933. This estate was acquired by the Council in 1945 for new housing in the north of town, with the 'prefabs' being constructed first, and the present day housing from the mid-1960s. It comprises Silverbuthall Road, Branxholme Road and adjoining streets. A 'wedge-shaped Hammer of sandstone' found there is in the Msueum (the word refers to the placement of the butts, i.e. archery targets, of Wilton Parish being sited near there, and the practice of having a silver arrow as shooting prize; it is 'Silverbothhall' in 1797 and 'Silverboothall' in 1808; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; see also Sillerbit Hall).

Silverbuthaa (sil-vur-bi'-haw) n. another name for the mansion house called Sillerbit Haa.

Silverbuthall Ludge (sil-vur-bi'-hal-luj) n. former gate lodge for the mansion at Silverbuthall. It was probably designed by J.T. Rochead (who designed the main house, which was built 1863–6), and survives at No. 23 Havelock Street, the corner with Wellfield Road. It is in a striking Scottish Baronial style, with a circular stair tower and conical-capped gatepiers. It is a grade B listed building.

the Silver Flush (thu-sil-vur-flush) n. former name for a spring at the lower end of the area where Newcastleton was built. It was said to be named after the 'palfrey' of a young lady (who was to marry the Laird of Whithaugh) stopped, with its silver bells being heard from some distance (as noted in 'Beauties of the Border').

the Silver Spurs (thu-sil-vur-spurz) n. annual race for married men at the Common Riding, since at least the 1840s.

Silver Street (sil-vur-stree') n. narrow street alongside the west bank of the Slitrig. It is one of the oldest streets in Hawick, although most of the present buildings are Victorian, and the name is not recorded before 1801. Up until the latter part of the 18th century it was part of the main road through Hawick, and houses there were referred to as on 'the King's High Street'. It was flooded in the great Slitrig flood of 1767, when several buildings were damaged. It became more of a back street with the erection of Drumlanrig Bridge in 1776, and moreso with the demolition of the Auld Brig in 1851. The banker 'Auld Cash' (William Oliver) lived there, and presumably had his banking office there too. A sketch of 'old court, Silver Street' exists by T.H. Laidlaw in the late 19th century. J.P. Alison designed alterations at Nos. 2 and 3. (the origin is obscure, with some suggestion that it is a reference to 'Auld Cash', similarity between his name 'Oliver' and 'Silver' perhaps not being a coincidence either; however, if the name is older than that, it may relate to the silver arrow prize at the Hawick 'butt's).

Sime (sīm) n. James Boyd (1865–1953) son of William of Galashiels and Ellen Boyd, and brother of William Boyd. He was a manufacturer who was on the Town Council in the early years of the 20th century and lived at Dunira. He became a partner in Pringle's in 1906 and resigned in 1929. He was one of the earliest players of tennis in Hawick and also shared an early interest in cinematography with David Gaylor. He fought in WWI, but when his brother died in 1917 he became Chairman of Sime, Williamson & Co. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's. On the 1891 census he was living at Ivy Bank, Fenwick Park, with his mother and his only sister, Ellen. He married Williamina ('Mina') daughter of dyer John Turnbull. Saida (??–??) gave a gift that helped build the Youth Centre in 1970. William Boyd (1867–1917) born in Galashiels, eldest son of William, who was partner in Sime, Sanderson & Co., Botany Mills, Galashiels. In 1889 he became partner in Sime, Williamson & Co., Weensland Mills. He lived at the Limes and then had 'the Coille' built for him. He married Margaret Elliot (sometimes incorrectly written 'Syme').

Simmie's Pottie (si-meez-po'-ee) n. popular name for a block of freestone on the east side of Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably 'Simmie' refers to the Devil.

Simpson (sim-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener at Langlands House in 1788, when he was working for Thomas Elliot. He was still gardener there in 1791, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 he was gardener at Teviotbank in Minto Parish, working for David Simpson. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Overraw, along with William, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Andrew (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Scott, and whose daughter Janet was born in Hawick in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He served as President of the Hawick Rotary Club, team doctor and President of Hawick R.F.C., Callants' Club President, Chairman of Douglas Haig Court Committee. He was also known as a popular reciter of Border poetry. Archibald (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as 'archibaldi symson'. Archibald (16th C.) Reader of Glasgow Diocese who supplied Lilliesleaf parish in the period 1575–82, the last pre-Reformation preacher to preach there. His name is spelled 'Symsoun' and 'Simsoun'. In 1575 Thomas Duncanson was Minister (also for Bowden, Langnewton and Melrose), i.e. he had most of the living of the parishes. In 1582 he is recorded as one of 6 preachers from southern Scotland who were deprived for 'abusing the sacraments', then excommunicated in 1588 and threatened with death in 1590 if they did not stop their practices. This may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation. Ashley (1973–) one of two women to publicly attempt to join Ride-outs in 1996. Bailie ?? Bailie of Hawick towards the end of the 19th century. Caleb (b.1711) son of James and Marion Stewart. He was 'of Know' in 1788 when mentioned as someone about to be added to the list of voters for Roxburghshire and said to be connected with Thomas Ogilvie and probably a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the election. He is recorded as 'David Simson of Know' when he was taxed in Minto Parish for having 2 female servants in 1789 and 1 in 1790; in 1791 he was 'of Teviotbank' when he was taxed for 2 female servants in Minto Parish. He also had a male servant at Knowe in 1790, 2 at Teviotbank in 1791–93 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. In the period 1792–8 he was taxed for owning a carriage and in 1789–97 for having 2 carriage or saddle horses. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is also recorded as owner of 5 farm horses. He was still at Know when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He had the house at Teviotbank designed by Robert Burn about 1791. He was listed as owner of the lands of Knowe and Knowetownhead on the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798 and 1799 (perhaps as a Justice of the Peace for the county). In 1791 he married Margaret, daughter of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. Their children included Gen. Sir James (1792–1868). His will is recorded in 1808 and his estate was granted to his widow Margaret, along with Rev. William of Edinburgh (his brother). After his death there was an ongoing dispute regarding money he claimed he was owed from the Nabob of Arcot and the Ameer ul Omrah. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. David B., F.R.C.O. (1886–1941) born in Kilmarnock and raised in Dundee. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David M. (b.1861) son of George, farmer at Bedrule. He studied engineering at Edinburgh University then worked in several positions, including as constructing engineer on the Edinburgh Suburban Railway. In 1887 he went to Beunos Aires, then in 1891 to Havana, where he was awarded the Spanish Order of Merit for working during the rebellion. From 1896–1906 he was chief engineer of the Buenos Aires Western Railway. Francis (b.1583/4) tailor and Burgess of Hawick. He gave evidence in 1660 as a witness to 'the alledgit abuse, disobedience, and irreverent speache, given and done bi Samuel Newbie to Robert Deanes, baillie'. He said that he and Samuel were watching others play 'at the Kyles' [skittles], when Samuel said that if he was not playing then noone would play, and threw stones at the game, causing the Bailie to send for the Burgh Officers. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for George Scott in 1671, along with John Scott, and another for John Blake in 1673, along with Walter Purdom. Francis 'Frank' (1888–1964) born at 10 Trinity Street, he was son of mill foreman Thomas B. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George 'Geordie' of the Raws (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Geordie Symsoun in the Rawis' when listed in 1576 among men who should not have been freed from ward. He is probably He the 'Gorth Simson' listed in 1583 among supporters of Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded as 'George Symsoun of the Raw' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He is recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. Probably the same George is listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is also recorded in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others had raided lands in England at King Water; others riding with him include Will Elliot of the Steele and Anthony Elliot of the Binks, suggesting he was from Liddesdale. He is probably the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. George (18th C.) factor to the estates of Scott of Harden in the period 1757–83. George (18th C.) son of Alexander, minister of Monymusk, he was made Honorary Burgess in 1751. George (d.c.1889) born at Oxnam Row. His father was David, while his grand-father George and great-grandfather John farmed at Bloodylaws in Oxnam Parish. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule from 1846, with his trustees continuing from 1889 until it was sold by the Eliotts to the Ushers in 1898. The farm was drained significantly during his tenure. This branch of the family often used the 'Simson' spelling. He married Emily Roy and their son was David M. Geraldine (1921–2010) great-great-granddaughter of Pringle's founder Robert Pringle, she was born in Edinburgh to James Muir and Francis Pringle. She was sent to Hawick while her father recovered from injuries sustained during WWI, and raised by her maternal grandparents at Woodnorton. She attended school in Aberdeen and was a 'land girl' there in WWII, travelling around on horseback. With her mother she ran Fetteresso Castle as a temperance hotel; her grandfather Robert Pringle came to live with them in his last few years. She married Maurice 'Chrystal' Simpson, who was minister of Alford's Tullynessle Church, and they had a daughter Maureen. The family later moved to Muchalls Castle, which they restored. She helped found the Architectural Heritage Society of Scotland and was a keen photographer of old houses. She was a long-time friend of the author Nigel Tranter. In about 2000 she returned to Hawick to present the family bible to the Museum, since she was essentially the last of the Pringle dynasty. Harold (??–) Council employee who was Common Riding Secretary from about 1966 until Reorganisation. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Mathison and their children included: Bessie (b.1697). He may be the James 'in ye toun of Hawick' whose son John married Janet Ker in Hawick in 1718. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed 'oust the water' in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott, 'brother to Goldilands' in 1689. He is recorded as a merchant in 1698 when he was a witness in the assault case involving John Scott, litster, and ex-Bailie Robert Wright. He was also witness to a baptism for shoemaker Robert Allan in 1709. He could also be the merchant who in 1709 was 'called Latn [or something similar] Simson' when his daughter Marion was baptised, with witnesses James Falsyde and Andrew Riddell. He may be the carrier who witnessed baptisms in 1711 for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott, in 1716 for smith John Scott and for William Sanderson (along with smith John Scott), in 1719 for gardener James Dunn and in 1725 for weaver Robert Turnbull. He is probably the 'tenent' who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for shoemaker Patrick Hardie. Probably the same James was recorded in 1731 when he was paid for 'lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the wither-kok in 1728'. His daughter Janet married weaver James Roger in 1724. He may be the merchant who married (assuming it was a second marriage, otherwise there are 2 generations here) Marion (or Mary) Stewart in 1706 and whose children included: Andrew (b.1707); Marion (b.1709); Caleb (b.1711); John (b.1713); Isabella (b.1716); Jean (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1707 were merchants Walter Scott and John Robson and in 1721 were Bailie James Deans and tailor Robert Wilson. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living at Ormiston. His children included: John and William (b.1714); William (again, b.1715). Probably the same James was gardener in Cavers in 1727 and 1729 and also at Cavers in 1736 (perhaps marrying for a second time), with additional children were John (b.1727), Katherine (b.1729), William (b.1731), Helen (b.1734) and Gilbert (b.1736). James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Boa in Minto in 1721. Her father was Patrick Boa. He could be the same man as the gardener in Cavers. Rev. James (1708–71) Minister of Wilton Parish 1738–71. He was son of John, minister of Morebattle. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1737 and presented to Wilton by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch soon afterwards. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton in September 1737 and another in February 1738, suggesting he was already in the area. He was ordained at Wilton in 1738 and remained until his death. Wilton Common was divided during his time as minister, with the lands of Priestrig being reserved for the minister. In 1748 he arranged for a piece of his land (near Burnfoot Mill) to be exchanged for a piece of the Duke of Buccleuch's 'Trinity lands', lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot. He is recorded paying the window tax at 'the mance' in Wilton Parish in 1748. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton for John Miller in 1759. In about 1763 his rebuke of dissenters during a baptism of a child of James Scott (farmer at Boonraw), convinced Scott to leave the established church, which led to the forming of the Green Kirk in Hawick. The oldest existing Wilton communion token is from 1763, during his incumbency. In 1764 he made a plea, during the legal proceedings for the division of Wilton Common, that his rents be properly valuated (so that he and future ministers might get a larger share of the common). In 1743 he married Anne Cranstoune, daughter of the minister of Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1743), who died young; William (b.1744), who became minister of the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh; John (again, b.1745); David (b.1747) of Know and Teviotbank; James (b.1748), perhaps also of Teviotbank; Anne (b.1748), who died young; and Andrew (b.1751), who also died young. The witnesses in 1747 and 1748 were William Scott of Whitehaugh and John Chisholme of Stirches, and in 1751 were Kirk Elders Robert and Walter Scott. James (18th C.) Bailie who, along with John Nixon, in 1793 presented a bible for use by subsequent Magistrates in St. Mary's Kirk. It was moved to the Old Parish in 1849 and was there for at least another half-century. He was also Bailie in the very early 1800s. Gen. Sir James (1792–1868) grandson of Rev. James Simpson, son of David Simpson of Teviotbank and Mary Eliott of Borthwickbrae.

He was educated at Edinburgh University and commissioned in the Grenadier Guards in 1811. He served in several campaigns, being severely wounded at Quatre Bras, and promoted through the ranks as he served in Mauritius, Bengal and Sind. He went to the Crimea as a Major-General in 1851, becoming acting senior officer and was promoted to General in 1852, along with receiving the G.C.B. He handed over command soon after and retired near Bury St. Edmunds. He was awarded many honours including the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour and being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick while staying at the Tower Hotel in 1856 after visiting his cousin A.E. Lockhart at Borthwickbrae. He was said to be the tallest officer in the British Army. In 1839 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir Robert Dundas, but she died in the following year. Sir Young James (1811–70) obstetrician who was the first to use pain relief during childbirth, as well as introducing other innovations. The maternity hospital in Edinburgh was named in his honour. He also had an interest in antiquarian research and mentioned Hawick Mote in one of his essays. Some of his books were purchased by the Hawick Archæological Society in 1871. James (19th C.) married Esther Beattie in Wilton Parish in 1839. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1674 he was fined for not allowing Bailie Purdom to take his horse to ride to Jedburgh on the Town's business. He could be the John who was married to Isobell Brown and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included John (b.1669) and Francis (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were John Scott and John Hardie. He may be the 'Jon Symson, skinner' recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote. He was listed in 1684 among many men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th/18th C.) son of James, he was a tenant in Hawick. In 1718 he married Janet, daughter of deceased gardener Robert Ker. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722, with witnesses John Cunningham (perhaps son of the minister) and (schoolmaster) John Purdom. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. It seems likely he was son of merchant James. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Patrick Hardie and in 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for James Rodger and Janet Simpson (probably his sister). In 1728 he was witness for Robert Renwick in Sandbed. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of William Little. Their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Janet (b.1731); Janet (again, b.1737); Margaret (again, b.1737); James (b.1740); and William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver James Roger and shoemaker Patrick Hardie. John (18th C.) recorded in 1751 as 'lying at the Point of Death in all probability'. This was in the Hawick Session records, where there was a discussion about what to do with 'the Horse belonging to the Session'. His connection with the Session is unclear. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Leyden. John (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he was paid by the Town Council 'for a standard for salt from Jedburgh'. It is unclear what his occupation was. John (d.1794) tailor in Hawick, son of Andrew. He could be the John (b.1746) son of Andrew and Margaret Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Dimpleknowe as owner of a saddle horse on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as a farm horse in 1797. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. John (19th C.) married Helen Beattie in Hawick in 1847. John (19th/20th C.) organist and Precentor at Kirkton Kirk from 1895. Mary (18th C.) midwife in Hawick. In 1759 she was a witness for the baptism of a child of dyker George Sandie. It is extremely unusual for a woman to act as witness, suggesting there must have been a special reason. Mary (19th/20th C.) ward maid at Hawick Cottage Hospital for over 30 years. When her health failed, the managers of the Hospital arranged for her to have free board and lodgings there. Robert 'Smith' (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is listed as 'roberti symson vocatis smyt'. He was also among men who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is listed as 'Robert Simson, callit Smyth'. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of West Riddell. A dispute with his servant Walter Stoddart from c.1823 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1825 a letter records how Walter Stoddart was hired as his servant at Hawick Fair and there are further letters about the age dispute. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton. Thomas (1833/4–98) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1916, aged 82.

Their children included Andrew (1860/1–1933), who married Euphemia (1862/3–1939). Probably the same Thomas was manager of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk, recorded in 1879. They are buried at Ettleton. William (16th C.) tenant in Overraw, along with Andrew, recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. William (18th C.) resident of Whitriggs. In 1784 he was on the Poor Roll of Cavers Parish, with the inventory of his belongings being 2 beds, 2 chairs, 1 dresser, 1 pot, 1 pan, 2 chests, 1 stove, 6 pairs of blankets, 1 pair of sheets, 3 dishes and 1 girdle. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Headshaw on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–1797. In 1797 he owned the grand sum of 13 farm horses and 1 carriage or saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He could be the tenant from about then who was recorded as an attender at Midlem Secession Kirk. He was probably father of William junior, who was recorded at Headshaw in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797; in 1799 he was 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish' and he was still 'Junr.' at Headshaw in 1801. William (18th C.) married Mary Lang in Minto Parish in 1790. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Junior' at Headshaw in 1797 when he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. He was still 'Junr.' at Headshaw on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably son of William, who was farmer at Headshaw. He was probably the William recorded at Headshaw on the subscription list for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was probably the William who farmed at Headshaw (and was an elector in Selkirk) and who Sir Walter Scott went to visit to convince to vote Tory in an election, although his landlord was Elliot of Minto (a Whig). Perhaps as a result, he was given the lease of Fauldshope by the Duke of Buccleuch. He could be the William, married to Euphan Laidlaw, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included John (b.1813) and Jessie (b.1819). William (b.c.1805) from Galashiels, he was a tailor in Hawick. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 29 High Street. His wife (who died before 1851) was Mary and their children included Walter, Helen, William, Robert and David. William (b.1809/10) from St. Boswells, he was a gardener at Linthill in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Margaret Hastie and their children included: Agnes (who married Thomas Ainslie in 1860); Isabella; Margaret; Robert; and John. William (b.1818/9) from Kelso, he worked for James Kennedy, bookbinder. In about 1870 he started his own bookbinders and printers at 9 Oliver Place. By 1886 he also had a shop at 3 Silver Street. His business was continued by his sons Ebenezer and Walter as E.W. & W. Simpson, which can be seen in a photograph of 1889. The firm was later incorporated into Deans and Simpsons. William (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastleton, who died at Burgh-by-Sands. He married Margaret Oliver, who died on the Isle of Wight in 1898, aged 29. Rev. William (1863–1946) born at Elves, Elgin, son of Charles and Margaret Edwards. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities. He was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1891, and was minister in Australia and New Zealand before returning to Scotland in 1904. He was minister at Downfield and then at Maud, before being traslated to St. Mary's in Hawick in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married Sarah Dare (who died in 1940) and their son William Nightingale was a doctor in Stow (formerly also 'Simson', as well as 'Simsone', 'Simsoun', 'Sympsone', 'Symson', 'Symsone', etc.).

Sinclair (sing-klār) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Adam Singlar' when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father's Lordship of Liddesdale. John was also a witness, and so perhaps related. Archibald (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1791–93, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as groom at Minto and in 1797 was a gardener there. Beatrix (16th C.) married William Alemoor and had children with him. She secondly married William Scott, brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. In about 1530 Walter Scott granted his brother William (along with her and her children with her first husband) half of Lilliesleaf Mill. Charles Lord Sinclair (1768–1863) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Rutherford. He succeeded to the family titles in 1776, becoming 13th Lord. He joined the Royal Scots Regiment of Foot at age 16 and in 1790 raised an independent company. He switched to the 15th Regiment of Foot and became Lieutenant-Colonel, quitting the Army in 1802, but becoming Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berwickshire Militia. In 1807 he was elected as a representative peer of Scotland then was involved with the Haddington Militia. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1802 he married Mary Agnes, daughter of James Chisholme of Stonedge. On the death of his father-in-law in 1812 he inherited the Stonedge estate. His wife died 2 years later and Their eldest son James became the 14th lord Sinclair. Their other children were: Matthew, who died aged 21; Charles, who became a Royal Navy Commander and lived at Eyemouth; and Susan. He secondly married Isabella Mary, youngest daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse in Roxburghshire and had 3 more children: John, who died aged 22; Eleanor; and Jane Elizabeth. He lived to the age of 95. Charles William Lord Sinclair (b.1831) eldest son of James, he was the 15th Lord. He was Colonel in the 57th Regiment, serving in Crimea, being present at Balaclava and Inkerman, in the Bosphorus, the Indian Mutiny and the New Zealand War, receiving several medals. He retired from the Army in 1878 and lived in Berwickshire, where he was a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant, as well as being a representative peer. Among his titles was also Laird of Stonedge in Rulewater. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1870 he married Margaret Jane Younger, daughter of James Murray of Bryanston Square, London. Their sons were Archibald James Murray and Charles Henry Murray, both of whom served in the Army, and they also had 3 daughters, Ada Jane, Margaret Helen and Georgina Violet. Charles 'Charlie' (19th C.) resident of Lintalee. He could be the same man as Charles, Lord Sinclair. He was instrumental in forming the new pack of Jedforest Hounds in about 1882. He served as Huntsman 1885–92. George became a Director at Pringle's in 1947. James Lord Sinclair (1803–80) eldest son of Charles and Mary Agnes Chisholme, from whom he inherited the Stonedge estate in Rulewater. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and in 1836 was referred to as being 'of Greenriver'. He was the 14th Lord Sinclair. He was Captain of the Grenadier Guards and became a Scottish representative peer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1830 he married Jane, eldest daughter of Archibald Little of Shabden Park, Surrey, and she died in 1887, aged 75. Their children were: Charles William, who succeeded; Archibald, who became a naval Commander; James Chisholme, in the Madras Civil Service; Lockhart Matthew; Mary Agnes; and Helen. Rev. James Harvey (b.1939) born in Glasgow, son of Alexander and Mary Sharp. He was educated at Craigton and Bellahouston and graduated M.A. and B.D. from Glasgow University (where he attended 1957–63). He was student assistant at Govan Old 1962–63, assistant at Port Glasgow Hamilton Bardrainney 1963–65, was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1963 and became minister of Rosewell is 1966.. He graduated Dip. Min. from Edinburgh University in 1987. He moved from Rosewell in 1987 to be Associate Minister at Selkirk, linked with Ashkirk and Caddonfoot. In 1992 he moved to Auchencairn and Rerrick with Buittle and Kelton. In 1965 he married Annie Roxburgh, daughter of Archibald Hastie and they had a daughter Valerie Margaret (b.1966). Janet (d.1667) married James Brydon and had a son Andrew. She later married Rev. Thomas Thomson, minister of Hobkirk. In 1618, along with her son Andrew and Hector Shiel of Kirknowe she had a 'wadset' over lands adjacent to the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk. This was registered in 1623. She was buried in Greyfriars churchyard in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded as being 'in Mynto' in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he 'came in the King's Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto'. This was probably a cache of English gold coins, hidden by Sinclair, but claimed by the King as treasure trove. Although said to be 'in Minto', the Laird of Bedrule was specifically his surety (while William Langlands acted for 2 of the others), perhaps suggesting that he was from Rulewater; the others were John Turnbull, Thomas Bell, George Turnbull and John Aitkin (with William Burn's name also given, but scored out). Perhaps he was the same John recorded earlier in 1493 when the Sheriff of Roxburgh was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh; this John was cited again at the Justicce-aire in 1494/5. Possibly the same 'John Singlar' was on the panel that met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Possibly the same 'Johanne Sinclair' was witness to the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; there he is 'Halis signifero', i.e. standard-bearer for Hepburn of Hailes. Perhaps the same 'Johannis sinclar in baronia de caveris' had remission in 1502 for the murder of John Moffat, with George Turnbull of Hallrule as his surety. Mary (b.1826/7) from Orkney, she was a teacher in Ashkirk. In 1861 she was teacher at 'ashkirk Female School', living with her cousin Barbara Hume. Thomas (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1618, he was presented as minister to Abbotrule Parish in mid-1618 and ordained there early the following year. However, he resigned before the middle of 1623, the reason being that he had 'gone to London with the Prior of Coldingham's children' (presumably as their tutor). A man of the same name is recorded in a deed of 1608 as schoolmaster at Oakwood; this could be the same man or perhaps a close relative. William (b.1818/9) stockingmaker in Hawick. He was living on Tannage Close in 1851 and at 6 Slitrig Bank in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included William, Alice, Alexander and Andrew. Although his main job was as a stockingmaker, he was hired as a compulsory attendance officer in Hawick in about 1873, following the requirements of the Education Scotland Act of 1872. He was thus the town's first truant officer! In 1861 he was at Teviot Bridge when he donated a copy of Beza's 1590 bible to the Museum. In 1877 he donated 'several fossils from Spittal' (written 'St. Clair', 'Sinclare' and 'Sinclar' in early times).

Singdean (sing-deen) n. farm and former hamlet between the 'Note o the Gate' and Saughtree. It is probably the place transcribed as 'Sougdon' (with a value of 12 merks) on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 roll it is listed as 'Sangdane', with the same value, and William Elliot being the tenant. There were originally separate farms of Over and Nether Singdean, which were part of the lands in upper Liddesdale held by Jedburgh Abbey. By at least 1632 the lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Adam Thomson was tenant there in 1694. The farm was included in those surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718; it covered 1770 acres, bounded by Hudshouse, Dawstonburn and farms belonging to other landowners, and with the farmhouse in the same location as the modern one. Walter Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, known for making a particular plaster that was said to cure cancer. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. Jeffrey reports that in the late 1850s a rudely carved stone cross, nearly 4 feet long, was found at a pass near here and in the possession of Mr. Stavert of Saughtree. In 1793 Sir Walter Scott passed here, and heard a coughing cow, which the judge in an earlier court case had ruled impossible. Thomas Armstrong was shepherd there in at least 1797–99 and John Oliver was shepherd in 1801. Walter Scott was shepherd from at least the 1830s until his death in 1853 and his sons Andrew and James after him. The farm was part of those tenanted by John Elliot until his death in 1897. William Telfe was shepherd in at least 1898–1901. The farm was let to S.C. Gibbons in 1910 and sold by the Buccleuch Estates to James Beattie in 1920. In 1940 a lorry carrying 75 sheep left the road and plunged down the hill near here. Robert Kyle bought the farm from Andrew Beattie in 1963 and in 1967 it was purchased by Andrew Stavert Turnbull. In 1973 the land was purchased by Mr. & Mrs. Harris, who 2 years later sold it to Margaret Thompson, who left it to het daughter Stephanie in 2007. Chista and Del Dobson purchased it in 2012 and developed the 'Alpnhaus' chalet for use as bed and breakfast accommodation (also written 'Singden' and 'Singdon'; the origin is probably Old English 'sengan denu', for 'valley cleared by burning'; it first occurs unambiguously as 'Singdane' in 1541, is 'Singdoun' in 1632, 'Singden' in 1694 and 'Sington' in 1799; it is marked 'Singden in Liddisdeill' on Pont's map of Teviotdale, 'Singlen' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Singdenn' on Blaeu's 1654 map of Roxburghshire and 'Singlenn' on the Liddesdale map; it is 'Singden in Liddisdeill' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Singdem' and 'Singdenn' on Gordon's c.1650 maps, 'Singden' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Singdon' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Singdean Burn (sing-deen-burn) n. stream in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale, rising on Fanna Hill and flowing roughly south-east to become part of the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.

Singdean Hope (sing-deen-hōp) n. former name for area near Singdean. It was reported in 1890 that a landslide here had blocked the Dawston Burn, choking the Liddell downstream and resulting in the deaths of a large number of salmon and other fish. The name presumably applies to an upper part of the Singdean Burn.

the Singdean Plaister (thu-sing-deenplā-stur) n. poultice developed by a family at Singdean, which was supposed to cure external cancers. The recipe was said to have been learned by shepherd Walter Scott (c.1790–1853) from a French doctor. It consisted of perhaps as few as 3 herbs, all (or most) of which grew commonly near Singdean and were dried in a 'keb-hoose' on the hillside. At one point the cure became so popular that the shepherd used to hide out when visitors came to the cottage. It was said that large sums of money were offered for the secret, but the family never divulged it. Walter Scott's notebook is in the museum in Newcastleton, but with the critical pages torn out. The secret was passed on to Walter's son Andrew and then to Andrew's sons Adam and Walter. A man called John Wood from Jedburgh, who also applied curative plasters, was said to possess the same recipe, but confessed that he did not know one of the missing ingredients. By 1940 it was said that the recipe was held by Miss Mary Scott, Fernlea, Bowden and later by a descendant in Arbroath.

singed sheep's heid (sinjd-sheeps-heed) n., arch. formerly popular dish, made by taking a sheep's head, burning the wool off it, and then serving it in various ways – '. . . there was a singed sheep's-head on the table which had been 'got up' for next day's dinner' [WNK].

singel (sing-ul) adj. single – 'there wasni a singel Teri among them', also used to refer to an item ordered in a fish and chip shop without chips – 'A'll hev a fish supper an a singel haggis' (note the lack of hard g). singel-end (sing-ul-end) n., arch. a one-roomed cottage – 'The single end next door was occupied by a Mrs. Turnbull and she was the mother of the original Turnbull of Haddon & Turnbull' [JeC] (see also yin-end).

singit (sing-ee', -i') adj., arch. stunted in growth, shrivelled – ' 'Let them alane, ye singit-like shurf',' adding in a more collected tone –

'Take tent, or they'll maybe bite yersel' [WNK], 'The Hawick meaning of singeet is lean, emaciated, ill-fed' [ECS], 'ye singit thing' [GW].

singit-lookin (sing-ee'-loo-kin) adj., arch. having the appearance of being puny or shrivelled – 'ye singit-lookin' wasp, shurf' [GW] (also 'singit-like').

Singleton (sing-gul-tin) n. A. telegraph and station agent in Newcastleton in the 1860s.

Singley (sinj-lee??) n. former farmstead at Singley Brae near Penchrise. It once formed part of Cavers estate, and is recorded being resigned by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. It is listed as part of Cavers estate in a charter of 1511. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It formed part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs in 1678 and was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (the origin is probably 'clearing made by burning' from the Old English 'sengan', to scorch, plus 'leah', a wood; the name is recorded as 'Senglee' in the 14th century, is 'Singlie' and 'Synglie' in 1511, 'Singlees' in 1678 and is transcribed as 'Finglio' in 1687).

Singley Brae (sinj-lee-brā??) n. area between Penchrise and the Maidens, on the slopes of the Pike. The Catrail passes down the slope, and there are earthworks and the remains of a farmstead nearby, presumably Singley farm.

Singlie (sinj-lee??) n. farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, roughly opposite Hyndhope, with Singliehill End a little to the west. It was Crown lands from at least 1456, being assigned to Turnbulls in the 1480s, Homes in the 1490s and the Kers of Caverton and Cessford in 1499. John Reid was tenant there in 1494/5 when accused of rieving crimes. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1502 it is recorded that 50 sheep were stolen from John Dalgleish there. In a rental roll of 1541 the tenancy was claimed by the Laird of Cessford, 'occupiit be the kingis gudis' paying £24 yearly. The lands belonged to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1543 when they were raided by a group of English and Scotsmen, taking 1400 sheep and 2 prisoners, with 2 people killed in the process. John Lauder was there in 1579. Sir William Scott was granted the lands by John, Earl of Annandale in about 1605, although they appear to have been purchased by Simon Scott of Bonnington in 1593, confirmed in 1607. Robert Scott, son of William in Milsington gained the lease in about 1712, and his descendants farmed there until about 1879 – 'There's daft Jock Gray o' Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o' the Inch; And when ye come to Singley, They'll help ye in a pinch' [DJG], 'The sun was low when they crossed the Ale, It was dark when they won to Ettrick vale, And the stars on Singlie had blazed an hour When the watchman challenged on Kirkhope Tower' [WHO] (also spelled 'Singlee', it was 'Singil' in 1456, 'Syngle' in 1468 and 1471, 'Single' in 1484 and 1490, 'seyngillie' in 1494/5, 'singule' in 1502 and 'Singylly' in 1541; it is 'Singill' and 'Sunglies' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and is marked as 'Singill E.' on Blaeu's 1654 map, with the stream being 'B. of Singil E').

Sinton see Synton

Sinton (sin'-in) n. county town of San Patricio county in Texas, named after David Sinton, major shareholder of the local pasture company that gave the land. His name in turn probably comes from the estate near Ashkirk.

Sinton (sin'-in) n. Adam (b.1819) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Isabella Scott. He worked as a grocer in Hawick, and later as a labourer at Watson's mill. Along with millworker John Forsyth, he was found guilty in 1865 of stealing coins from Hawick Museum, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Waugh, blacksmith at Chesters. Their children included William, Robert and Elizabeth. His wife is recorded as a widow in 1874. Alexander (12th/13th C.) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew who was granted the lands and title by William the Lion. He witnessed several charter for Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century. There was confirmation of lands in Hownam in 1195–98, a gift of lands in Lessuden in 1199, confirmation of lands in Clifton 1201–09, gift of several churches by King William 1204–07, a gift of Sorrowlessfield 1208–12, a dispute between Melrose Abbey and Earl of Dunbar in 1208, a charter for the lands of Fairnington in about 1214, lands in Lilliesleaf 1214–40, lands in Elliston 1220–43 and a gift of Maxton in 1226. He was succeeded by another Andrew. Alexander (d.1292/3) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew, the 3rd Sheriff. He may be the Alexander who had a charter of the lands of Todrig from Aymer de Maxwell in about 1260. His accounts as Sheriff of Selkirk are recorded in 1265 and 1288. He may be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Alexander of Moravia in 1280. He was mentioned as Sheriff of Selkirk in 1293. His wife was Marie, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as holder of the lands. In 1296 she complained that she had been a widow for 3 years, and pleased with the English King for her dower lands of 20 merks. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Isabella, who married Edward Keith and succeeded her brother. Andrew (12th/13th C.) appointed Sheriff of Selkirk by William the Lion. He is referred to as 'Andrew de Synton'. On his appointment he gave up the farm associated with Roxburgh Castle; this explains why Synton estate afterwards lay within Selkirkshire, even although it was surrounded by Roxburghshire. 4 generations of his descendants were also Sheriffs (as described at an inquest in 1305). In about 1250 he witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory, where he is recorded as 'Andrea de Sintun'. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (13th C.) son of Alexander. He was the 3rd member of the family to be Sheriff of Selkirk. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (d.c.1300) probably son of Alexander and brother of Isabella. He held the title of Sheriff of Selkirk as well as the Synton estates. In 1296 he was captured at Dunbar and sent to Fotheringay Castle as a prisoner, along with several other Scottish noblemen; his name was recorded as 'Andreas de Synton'. In 1298 there was a command from Edward I for payment to his jailors. However, he died in prison, and his heir was his sister Isabella (although separately suggested to have been his wife Isabel, so this is either confusion or there were 2 women with the same name). The family's history is described in an inquisition in 1305. Andrew (b.c.1816) son of William and Isabella Scott. He was born in Jedburgh, although his mother was from the Hawick area. He lived in Ancrum and Cavers Parishes. He worked as a road contractor, probably on the Wynd in Denholm. He married Margaret Dodds in Cavers in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1843); William (1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabella; Andrew; Helen (b.1854); James (b.1856); and twins Richard Thomson and Jessy (b.1859). He is probably the Andrew who in 1861 donated to the Museum an amulet found in a field at Cavers Mains. Bailie (18th/19th C.) said to have been the first druggist in Hawick. His premises were at 29 High Street, which became known as 'Sinton's Close'. Note, however, that the same property is labelled 'Linton' on Wood's 1824 map and so there may be confusion over the surname. His first name is unknown, but it is possible that he is the same man as Andrew Linton. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1720. He married Bessie Scott in 1707. His children included: Walter (b.1709); Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); and George (b.1720). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1725). George (d.1806) labourer in Hawick.

His daughter Alison died in 1790. Perhaps the same George married Margaret Beattie in Wilton in 1766 and in 1771 was living at 'Morrowshall', i.e. Morrishall. Their children included: Thomas (b.1771), who was a farmer in Laggan, Invernesshire; probably William (b.c.1778–1841), who married Isabella Scott and died in Jedburgh; and Allison (c.1780–90), who died in Hawick. He may be the son of John baptised in Ashkirk in 1737. He died in 'Lenton', which is probably Lanton near Jedburgh. George (18th/19th C.) from Leith, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1897 he purchased the grocer's business from Mary (nee Govenlock) Brodie. Helen (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Probably the same 'Nelly' was cook at Midshiels in 1791. Isabella (b.c.1285) either sister or wife of the last 'de Synton' Sheriff of Selkirk, she was the heiress of Synton. It is possible that 2 separate women are conflated here; in 1296 Isabella, wife of Andrew of Sinton complained about her estates being seized when her husband was imprisoned at Dunbar, and pleaded for 20 merks worth of land. She was married to Edward de Kethe (or Keith), who was Sheriff of Aberdeen and son of Sir William de Keith. Together with her husband she claimed the sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in 1305. Their children were Sir William, John of Inverugie, Catherine and Janet. James (17th C.) married Janet Govenlock in Ashkirk Parish in 1663. Probably the same James was recorded in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Anderson and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1689. James (17th/18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Wilton Parish in 1714, with the bride's name not given. Probably the same James was married to Bessie Henderson and had children Isobel (b.1715) and John (b.1716) baptised in Wilton. James (b.1702) son of John, he was born in Yarrow Parish. His brother John lived in Ashkirk and Roberton Parishes. He was at Deloraineshiel and Dodhead when some of his children were baptised. In 1728 in Yarrow he married Katherine Cairns. Their children, baptised in Ettrick and Yarrow Parishes, included: John (b.1729); James (b.1731); William (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Marion (b.1737); an unnamed child (b.1739); and Catharine (b.1744). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1726); and Ann (b.1728). James (c.1730s–1802) carrier in Abbotrule. He lived at Clesslee and at Strangeburnfoot. His wife may have been Margaret. Their children included: Peter; Thomas (b.1755); Margaret (b.1758); and James (b.1760). Probably he was the same James who also married Janet Oliver (from Unthank) in 1762, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: Mary (b.1763); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1767), born at Strangeburnfoot; John (b.1769) also at Strangeburnfoot; James (b.1772), who married Barbara Oliver; and Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1773). He died at Clessleepeel. James (b.1731) son of James, he was a shepherd in Yarrow Parish. He was living at Wester Deloraine in 1774 and Inner Huntly in 1778. He married Mary Fletcher (b.1740, who was from Hawick) in Ashkirk in 1764. Their children included: James (b.1766); Catherine (b.1769); Jean (b.1772); Helen (b.1774); William (b.1778). James (b.c.1772) son of James and Janet Oliver. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1780) probably related to the other Southdean Sintons. In 1816 he married Isabella Fleming, and she died in 1867. Their children were: Robert (d.1897); and William (d.1851). He died in the 1840s, probably at Bonjedward. James (b.c.1780) servant at Synton Parkhead according to the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. James (1805–61) labourer in Jedburgh, son of William. In 1851 he was a road labourer at Greenriver Garden in Hobkirk Parish and at Fulton in 1861. He married Margaret Hogg (1807–79) in 1836, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Jedburgh Parishes. Their children included: James (b.1836); William (b.1837); Walter (b.1841); John (b.1845); and George (b.1847). The family were living at Fulton when he died; shortly afterwards his widow and sons John and George emigrated to New Zealand, where his son William had already settled. James (b.c.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He published Leyden's 'Tour in the Highlands and Western Islands' (1903) and wrote 'Leydeniana' (1912). He also edited William Laidlaw's recollections about Sir Walter Scott, published in Hawick in 1905. His major local contribution, however, was 'Bibliography of works relating to, or published in Hawick' (1908), which he stated to be 'a work of great labour, and it has occupied my leisure time extending over a very considerable period'. This was a more focused extension to his 'List of books relating to or published in the Counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles', which appeared as an appendix to Sir George Douglas' 1899 'History of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles'. His Hawick biography contains information about newspapers, maps and music, as well as a thoroughly researched list of books. Skirmish Field (skir-meesh-feeld) n. meadow by the river Tweed near Melrose, which was the site of a battle of 1526. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch with about 600 Scotts, Elliots and supporters from Liddesdale and Annandale tried to wrest the young King James V (supposedly at the King's request) from the control of the Earl of Angus and his local allies the Kers and the Homes. Interestingly, Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) sided with Scott of Buccleuch, against his brother-in-law the Earl of Angus. Scott's men lined up on what was called the Charge Law. He failed in this attempt and lost 84 men in the struggle (including John of Ashkirk), while Andrew Ker of Cessford was also killed at a small eminence called 'Turn Again' (possibly by an Eliott of Stobs, although this predates their ownership of the estate). This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers, which lasted for decades. After the battle James Elliot was hanged for treason. In 1527 a number of local lairds had remission for mustering their supporters at this battle, specifically Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk, James Hoppringle, Walter Scott in Synton, Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Robert Scott in Howpasley, William Scott of Hassindean, John Scott of Borthaugh, Philip Scott in Headshaw, William Turnbull of Minto, Robert Turnbull in Hallrule, John Scott of the Walls, Simon Scott of Fenwick and Master Michael Scott. The battle is also known as the 'Battle of Darnick' and the 'Battle of Melrose'. The Waverley Castle Hotel, the first concrete building in Scotland, was built on the site (also known as 'Skirmish Hill'). Another nearby hill, known as 'the Charge Law' was where Buccleuch gathered his men for the attack, while 'Turn Again' is a small eminence where Scott's men rallied and Andrew Ker was killed. This event is said to have been marked by a standing stone, which still exists.

Slacks (slawks) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. There are still remains of the peel tower to be seen there, as well as signs of several other buildings, enclosures and agricultural development. Immediately to the south of the tower are the grass-covered footings of another pele (perhaps earlier). The farmstead and its enclosures was probably just to the south-east of the tower. Further to the south and west are extensive rig lines, partly erased by cultivation. A field to the north-west shows an old turf boundary and south of the peel is an old turf-walled enclosure, as well as several apparenty phases of boundary and enclosure banks. The lands were valued at 44 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. In 1541 Thomas and John were tenants of part valued at 22s, with Charles tenant of the remaining part valued at 11s. John Oliver was a tenant in 1544. William Oliver was recorded there in 1583. George, William and John Oliver are recorded as tenant farmers in 'Slacks' in 1669. Margaret Oliver was there in 1684. The 1694 Hearth Tax Return lists 3 hearths at 'Slaks'. But the settlement seems to have disappeared in the 18th century (also written 'Slacks' with no apostrophe; it is 'Slaikis' in 1538 and 1539, 'Slakkis' in 1541, 'Slakis' in 1544, 'the Slakkis' in 1571/2, 'Slakes' in 1583 and 'Slaxes' in 1694; it is marked 'Slack' on Blaeu's 1654 map on the south side of the river, roughly opposite where Southdean Mill lies, but is absent from 18th century maps).

Slack's Toor (slawks-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th century tower in Southdean Parish, located near the head of a stream off the Jed Water, to the north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. The peel tower had 3 floors, with a plan 12 m by 7.5 m (a little longer than other local towers). The gables are still standing. There are also signs of 3 buildings immediately to the north and 3 more to the south-east, as well as an earlier tower to the east, all part of an archæological survey in 1991. The area around the tower shows signs of a complex settlement, with extensive agricultural development. Just south-east of the tower are the remains of a farmstead, with some enclosures, presumably the farm of Slacks.

Slaidhill see Slaidhills

Slaidhills (slād-hilz) n. farmstead above Teindside, sometimes called the singular 'Slaidhill' and also formerly known as 'Slatehill' and 'Slatehills'. An earlier name for essentially the same area is 'Almondslands'. The lands were part of the estate of Teindside and Harwood owned by the Abernethy family from the late 14th to late 15th centuries. The lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1580 when there was a raid by Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 12 cows and oxen and 'left ane of hir servandis lyand for deid'. Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is 'Almonslandis alias Slaidhills' when listed among the Baron of Hawick's properties in 1615. It is probably the 'Steadhills' listed (along with Teindside, Harwood and Carlinpool) among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of 'exterioribus et interioribus de Slaidhills' and in 1683 the next Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in the same lands. William Elliot was tenant in 'outer slaidhills' in 1694. William Waugh was tenant there in 1699, with William Oliver, William Waugh and John Waugh recorded in 1701. William Scott was recorded there in 1702 and Thomas Pott in 1704. Alexander Hutton was tenant in 1707, with Thomas Rae as shepherd. James Miller was a weaver there in 1717. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch Outer Slaidhill and Inner Slaidhill are listed separately: Outer Slaidhill consisted of 366 acres, bounded by Branxholme Moor, Hott, Inner Slaidhill, Commonside, Woodburn and Chisholme; and Inner Slaidhill lay to the south and was not a Buccleuch property. Robert Elliot was tenant in at least 1740–43. Patrick Hume was also tenant in 1743, with Adam Hogg also living there. Thomas Miller was there in 1801. Christopher Grieve was there in about 1824. Robert Grieve was shepherd there in 1851, and weaver James Lamb also lived there. There was formerly a small community of weavers living there. About 350 yards north-east of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort on a rocky knoll. The inner area is about 205 ft by 105 ft oriented east-west, with an entrance on the north side. There are 2 other forts on Teindside Hill just to the south (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'slaed hyll', meaning 'the hill with the hollow in it', referring to the shape of the hill to the east of the farm, with the 2 apparent summits probably also explaining the sometimes plural form; the name occurs as 'Sleidhillis' in 1494, 'Slaidhillis' in 1581, 'Slaidhill' in 1585, 'Slaidhillis' in 1634, 'Sledhills', 'Slaidhilles' in 1664, 'Sledhill's in 1693, 'Slatehills' in 1701, 'Sclethills' in 1702, 'Slatehils' in 1740, 'Sclatehills' in 1743 and 1801 and 'Slatehills' in the 1851 census; it is 'Sliddhills' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Slatchills' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Slaidhills Moss (slād-hilz-mos) n. marshy region to the north of Slaidhills farmstead, in the headwaters of Vales Burn. It is printed as 'Slatchill Moss' in William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border', when he is describing the course of the Catrail.

the Slitrig (thu-sli'-reeg, -rig, -reek, -rik) n. Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). A description of 1649 states that it 'begins at Stenhouse Hope, and runs into Tiot, within the Town of Hawick'. It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the 'Auld Brig'. It could also be forded in Hawick near where the Slitrig Brig was later built. There was once a deep pool near the bridge and the rocks there were referred to as the Clints. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. It occasionally freezes; one story is told of the early 19th century when the road from Liddesdale was blocked with snow and the horses brought a coffin along the frozen river for several miles. The river rises in several headwaters, Flosh Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and then being joined by Langside Burn where the Slitrig proper starts. After that it is joined by: Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby's Sike; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Smaile Burn – '... Where Slitrig dances doon the glen' [JT], '... And the Slitrig aye filling wi' rain' [FH], 'Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature's charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet' [TK] (the origin is uncertain, 'rith' being Old English for 'stream', with the first element perhaps related to 'slite', a narrow opening, or 'slitan' to split, or even possibly 'slitter'; it is first mentioned as 'Slitrith' in Reginald of Durham's book on St. Cuthbert, where it is suggested that the name comes from the river abounding with fish, and although the connection with any words relating to an abundance of fish seems obscure, it is possible it is 'sliht', meaning animals for slaughter; there are a variety of earlier spellings, e.g. 'Slyttryk' in 1433, 'slittrik' in 1493 and 1502, 'Slytryk' in 1532 and 'Slitrik' in 1547/8 and 1649, but already 'Slitrig' in 1550; it is still 'Slidderick' in 1795, 'Slitrige' in 1821 and 'Slitrige' in 1839; it is 'Slittrick' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Slittrick R.' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Slittrik fl.' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Slitrig Bank (sli'-reeg-bawngk) n. house occupied by shoemaker Peter Wilson in the late 18th century, now being 1 Slitrig Bank. It was probably built a little before 1800 and was also known as Slitrig Cottage. It was the headquarters for the Napoleonic prisoners-of-war, and partitions in the cellar may related to this use. The house is shown in a painting of about 1813; this painting exists in a photograph, but the original is lost. The current house is 2-storeys with an attic, in a rectangular plan, built of whinstone rubble and with sandstone dressings. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Bank (sli'-reeg-bawngk) n. short street between St. Mary's and the Slitrig. It was named after the house of the same name, which is now 1 Slitrig Bank. The rest of the street was developed in the period 1850–55. A house there (probably the same No. 1) was the headquarters for the French prisoners of war in the period 1812–14, later the residence of George Scott the builder.

Slitrig Brig (sli'-reeg-brig) n. Slitrig Bridge, the name originally given to the main bridge over the Slitrig, built in 1776–77, and later named Drumlanrig Bridge. The funding was mostly by public subscription. The stone came from a quarry near Bedrule Kirk. The masons may have been John Haldane of Gala and James Wood of Hawick, both of whom were made Honorary Burgesses in 1776. When it was completed there was a public procession, with the Town Piper, the Drums and Fifes, the Cornet and Flag, the Magistrates, Councillors, etc., which paraded across the new bridge. The name is recorded as an address in Pigot's 1837 directory, presumably referring to houses around Silver Street or the Tower Knowe. The same name is also sometimes used for the bridge over the Slitrig at the bottom of the Kirk Wynd, more properly called the Slitrig Crescent Bridge. It may be that the 'Auld Brig' was also once known by this name – 'On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn . . . ' [DN].

Slitrig Cauld (sli'-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lynnwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill lade, 'the Back Dam' (not to be confused with Lynnwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Chaipel see St. Cuthbert's Chaipel

Slitrig Cottage (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood's 1824 plan of Hawick and in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 cansus for the house later called 'Slitrig Villa', where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (sli'-reeg-kre-sin') n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name 'the Crescent'. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first 'suburbs' of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert's Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, later premises of James Melrose & Sons engineers. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 17, 18 and 19 are grade C listed – '. . . The other dam, up Slitrig Crescent Where ee fed the ducks wi breid' [AY].

Slitrig Crescent Brig (sli'-reeg-kre-sin'-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the 'wire bridge' was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. An iron bridge was constructed in the early 19th century, but was destroyed in the 1846 flood, with part of it being lodged against the Auld Brig by the floodwaters. A replacement footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer's accounts as 'Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot' and is shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map. The present structure was built in 1864, consisting of a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark and is said to have been built in only 10 days. It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including 'the Kirkwynd Brig'. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (sli'-reeg-dawm) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick, also known as the Back Dam. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. Originally it was relatively short, but in the mid-19th century it was extended to join what was called Lynnwood Dam or Nixon's Dam. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills, Whiskyhouse Mill, and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyeworks. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Wulliestruther Loch to flow into the Slitrig. Several footbridges across the lade gave access to businesses and houses from the main road (the 1857 Ordnance Survey map shows at least half a dozen). Some of the first baptisms of the Brethren were performed in its waters. Much of the lade was covered over with concrete slabs in the mid-1960s. An explosion in the tunnel under Lynnwood Road (near the entrance to Lynnwood House) in the mid-1960s, caused by a build-up of natural methane, led to an understanding that unused tunnels needed to be filled. The lade was almost entirely filled in in the early 1970s when new housing was constructed in the area. The course of the dam is shown clearly on Wood's 1824 map.

Slitrig Dyeworks (sli'-reeg-dI-wurks) n. dying factory on Slitrig Crescent, also known as Turnbull the Dyers.

Slitrige (sli'-rij) n. another alternative spelling for 'Slitrig'.

the Slitrig Flid (utthu-sli'-reeg-flid) n. huge flood of 1846, which particularly affected the Slitrig. It should not be confused with the Great Flid of 1767. The high flood (sometimes also called the Great Flood) of 29th July 1846 commenced in the early evening with a torrential downpour and thunder and lightning for about 3 hours. The police warned some people to leave their houses at about 11 p.m. and the town bell was rung at midnight. The Teviot rose dramatically, but the biggest effect was on the Slitrig, which was 14–15 feet above normal levels, with trees, sheep, cattle, crops and carts carried downriver. Lynnwood Cauld, Slitrig Crescent iron footbridge and everal wooden bridges were swept away, and its level at Towerdykeside is marked by a brass plaque 1.5 m (5 feet) above pavement level. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Silver Street became part of the river, with the ground floors about 3-feet deep in water and river pushing down Buccleuch Road as far as the Free Kirk; water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port (where it gouged out a hole more than 10-feet deep), it flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed, where goods were carried away. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, covering the Avenue and Damside (Victoria Road) and being a continuous sheet of water all the way to Teviot Crescent, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. The cellars in Teviot Crescent were completely filled with water and several of the mills alongside the Teviot suffered damage. Further downriver the haughs were all flooded and part of the road at Burnfoot was washed away. The Town was in panic as people escaped flooded buildings and ran around trying to save property and belongings. A dramatic rescue of a small child from a house in Damside is one noted example, a baker named Connachie was rescued from his home under the Post Office, a window had to be broken at the Tower Hotel in order to free the horses in the stables and 2 horses belonging to William Watson were rescued from the Under Haugh. Fortunately there were no fatalities in Hawick. The flood subsided quickly, leaving huge amounts of debris, with the 'Market Place' being a sandbank, covered with large trees and 2 wooden bridges. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal, a house was carried off at Bedrule and Hobsburn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley (with whole fields and plantations being swept clean near Stobs), the Allan (where dykes and crops were carried away), Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere.
